Budgetary Position after Tax Changes

As these tables indicate, our position for the current fiscal year, 1968-69, would show total budgetary revenues of $10,105 million and total budgetary expenditures of $10,780 million, leaving a deficit of $675 million. Our net extra-budgetary requirements, apart from exchange transactions, I am now forecasting at $600 million for the year as a whole.

For next year, 1969-70, the tax measures I have proposed should bring the budget into balance. I forecast total budgetary revenues of $11,675 million and budgetary expenditures at $11,670 million. As far as can be estimated at this early stage, on a national economic accounts basis the budget would involve a surplus of roughly $250 million. Our extrabudgetary requirements, apart from foreign exchange transactions, will probably be in the neighborhood of $600-700 million.

In spite of its timing, I think it will be obvious to all, that this is no "baby" budget. It is a new budget, by a new government, but it is not an easy budget. It is one which, I believe, will ensure that we have a sound economic and financial base from which to move forward through a new period of balanced expansion and social progress.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, a great deal was said about a roster. Then, somebody had something to say about a rooster. Now I am going to talk about a roost, the ones on which the chickens have come home to roost. Today has been a very eventful day for those of us who live in North America. Down in Mexico City the finals of the Olympics have been drawing attention. There was a splashdown ending the latest example of advanced space travel. The three intrepid astronauts circled the globe and re-entered the atmosphere to land at a predetermined spot, under control. Here in Canada we have had our 1968 budgand all out of control.

[Mr. Benson.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was talking about those chickens coming home to roost. These chickens all started on their way in those erratic, desperate days in June and July of 1963 when we had the notorious "60 days of decision." We know that the budget proposals of the former member for Davenport were those-

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wish that hon, members would consult the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans). We all know what his reaction was on that occasion. He made a personal pilgrimage to Ottawa, from his position as revenue minister in Quebec, to protest et, which has proven the reverse, that federal in wrath and anger against the rather foolgovernment expenditures are still in orbit hardy proposals of the then minister of finance. He even went to the extent of writing to the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury protesting this nefarious act. Well, the reactions of the United States government—

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker-

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the former member for Davenport were here, wouldn't he make a strange bedfellow with the Postmaster General.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Postmaster General is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Kierans: All I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is that I have come home to roost.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the evening I might answer, as my colleagues have suggested, in the words of Winston Churchill, "Some chicken: some neck!" In any event, what we saw tonight was a savage budget. There must be a horrendous deficit when it has to be made up in a period of 18 months. I recall the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), then president of the treasury board, standing in his place and boasting that they were going to balance the budget. They had computers, and everything was going to go so much more nicely. The other day, however, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) had to announce there was somewhat of a shortfall in their estimates of expenditures—about $600 million. This is rather strange, in light of the progress payments being made to the provinces for these shared programs. Apparently the computers were out to lunch, or the people who were manning them were out to lunch. After all, no computer is any better than the brains and the hands setting up the program.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are now getting a figure of approximately $670 million, not $400 million, for the deficit. Of course we have not said anything about Expo; that is going to be paid for some time. In so far as inflation is concerned, the minister tonight read us some homilies in economic theory on priorities in all the things that a prudent government must do. But surely we should be in a position to believe the minister. Is this a Saul converted on the way to Damascus? After all, this is a very bitter pill that he is asking the Canadian public to swallow over the next 18 months, in order to cover this extremely large deficit.

The Budget-Hon. M. Lambert

Why has it come about? Back in 1964 and 1965, when the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were members of the administration, my leader, as premier of Nova Scotia, on repeated occasions spoke about priorities. The Hon. Duff Roblin, premier of Manitoba at the time, spoke about priorities in the fields of health, education and social welfare. Time and time again I spoke about the importance of this matter, but the prime minister of the day scoffed. The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) paid a little more polite attention when he was minister of finance. We got a grudging acceptance of the fact that inflation had become a major problem.

• (9:40 p.m.)

We are now told, Mr. Speaker, that this is Canada's prime problem today. Where did all this inflation start? Let us just look at the minister's tables. If we go back to April 1963 we find that the cost of living index was 132.3. Last August it had gone to 153.6, a matter of 21.5 points in five years. Do we wonder, Mr. Speaker, that bond prices have gone to the bottom? If hon. members would only consult the weekly Bank of Canada charts of long term interest rates and short term bills they will see that interest rates are at their highest level ever. This so-called softening of the interest rates of past weeks has now started to reverse itself.

The Canada Savings Bonds offer that is now being made is baited with a ruinous rate as far as the government is concerned. The government of Canada must borrow money at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, Mr. Speaker. Why? It is not to get new money but merely to stop the cashing in of old bonds.

With regard to government expenditure, when this administration's predecessor took over in 1963 the total level of federal government expenditure was $6.3 billion. In 1967 it was $10,671 million, and for 1969-70 the expenditure is estimated at $11,670 million. If expenditures keep going up at that rate they will have more than doubled in the period 1963-1971. In a short period of eight years federal expenditure will have more than doubled.

We saw a budgetary deficit last year, Mr. Speaker, of $870 million. This year it will be $730 million. There is going to be a further budgetary deficit over the following year because the cushion of $5 million is a mere drop in the bucket as a margin. Any little change in the economic climate can result in a substantial deficit.

The Budget-Hon. M. Lambert

In addition, the minister did not talk tonight about those refinancing requirements for which he is going to go to the money market. The minister talks about going to the market to finance deficits of $600 million and certain cash requirements. His own budget papers indicate that in fiscal year 1969 he is going to go to the market for $1,700 million of refinancing; and for the balance of this fiscal year, including the Canada Savings Bonds, he has to find another $835 million before April 1, 1969.

We should like to touch upon all of the matters that appear in this rather complicated budget, Mr. Speaker, which does require some care to follow through—for example, the estate tax changes, the gift tax changes, the taxes on life insurance companies and on financial institutions, the Customs Tariff and the income tax changes. I would simply at this point compliment the minister on the estate tax changes, the gifts between husband and wife and the question of annuities to husband and wife. I think there were some anomalies that were unjust in that regard.

However, Mr. Speaker, we are going to have a lot to say about the 2 per cent social development tax. For one thing, it is applied across the board. It does not matter whether one earns $3,500, $15,000 or $25,000, the rate is the same. As a matter of fact, for a person with a taxable income of $10,000 and who has a maximum ceiling of $120 per annum, the rate is much less than 2 per cent. So we see how this just society concept works in regard to this 2 per cent surtax. "It does not apply", says the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The just society has gone out the window. We will also have to see what the public reaction is in the various provinces. This tax is to cover the cost of medicare. This is the first instalment; next year there will be another one, if medicare is continued in its present form. Many of the provinces have stated that they are not going to come into the scheme. We will have to see what this conference between the Prime Minister and the provincial premiers will bring about on the question of medicare.

I would suggest to the Prime Minister that there are sufficient people to make it renegotiable on terms set out by the federal government, because we know that the provinces do have the right and the responsibility for medical care. Those people who have participated in longer term employment contracts

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

In addition, the minister did not talk might about those refinancing requirements or which he is going to go to the money arket. The minister talks about going to the arket to finance deficits of $600 million and extrain cash requirements. His own budget —that is, negotiated contracts—and those under longer term insurance contracts for medical plans will all pay this additional tax. They are still caught by their contracts, so they are going to pay twice for the same service.

I think there could have been a much more effective way of dealing with this whole problem, Mr. Speaker. However I will reserve that for some further comments that I will have to make. You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that I too have fallen victim to a certain virus, and under the circumstances at the present time I would simply adjourn the debate.

On motion of Mr. Lambert the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I wonder whether we might call it ten o'clock and also suspend for this evening the proceedings under standing order 39A.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the government house leader could give us some indication of the business for tomorrow and, after what we have heard, possibly give some ray of hope to our farmers by bringing forward farm legislation tomorrow.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The farm legislation will come forward just as soon as the Post Office Act is passed.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the minister has also suggested that we suspend with proceedings under standing order 39A. I wonder if there is unanimous agreement on this point?

Mr. Stanfield: One moment, please.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be no unanimous agreement to suspending proceedings under standing order 39A.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I thought that, since certain questions asked of the Minister of Fisheries were not deemed to be urgent, there would be an opportunity to raise the matter again this evening.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should bring to the attention of hon. members that apparently there is no unanimous agreement to suspending with proceedings under standing order 39A. I shall therefore put the question for adjournment, subject to the consideration of matters to be discussed under that standing order.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—MANAGEMENT OF CANADA'S FISHING RESOURCES—CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Minister of Fisheries when he would make a statement to clear up a misunderstanding that has arisen on the east coast with respect to statements that have been made about territorial limits and fisheries policies. I was dissatisfied with the minister's reply. He said he would make a statement at some appropriate time. After tonight's budget speech I consider it most important to hear a statement from the minister, and I feel we cannot wait until later to get some response from him pertaining to Atlantic fisheries.

On September 16 the hon, member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) asked the Minister of Fisheries when a statement would be made on this matter, and at that time he said it would be as soon as he got around to it. Those remarks are found at page 44 of Hansard. At page 48 of Hansard for the same date will be found the question I raised as to the abandonment of the salt rebate. The minister said that program had been abandoned because other programs were to replace the need for what were termed bandaid programs. We also heard quite a bit from the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson), who is in the house with us again this evening. I welcome him back after his long absence. He said that in the fisheries generally we needed long term policies and programs. Nobody disagreed with that and on September 20 the minister indicated that a long term program would be announced shortly in the house.

Today when I raised the matter with the Minister of Fisheries he said that at the appropriate time a statement would be made.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Fisheries why Liberal members have all but withdrawn from the house at this time? I see only three Liberal members, including one minister, and there seems to be some activity behind the curtain.

Mr. Monteith: Hear, hear.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. Hon. members must know that there cannot be any question of privilege during the late debate.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): With respect, on what rule is that decision based? Why can there be no question of privilege when the government withdraws its supporters from the house?

Mr. Perrault: There has been no such action by the government. I am a government supporter and no such instruction has been given.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It has been the practice of this house under the provisional rules not to have points of order raised during this debate.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I wish to know why Liberal members sitting on both sides of the house have withdrawn from the house. There seems to be something deliberate about that.

Mr. Perrault: That is a false accusation.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Then why are there only three members remaining?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I point out to the hon. member that the question by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate was to the Minister of Fisheries, and that minister is in the house. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the behaviour of government members this evening exemplifies the government's attitude towards the Atlantic fishery. The point I wish to make is that our Atlantic fishery, which is so important to the entire economy of Canada has been completely ignored by the present government. A number of hon, members have risen in this chamber on a number of occasions and directed questions to the government. Most hon. members from Newfoundland and most from the Atlantic region who have anything to do with fisheries have raised this matter in the house and been answered with laughter, with a shrugging of shoulders, and with the suggestion that the entire business of fisheries is to be taken as a joke. I say that unless the government takes a hard look at the Atlantic fishery hundreds of thousands of people in the Atlantic region will suffer, because we shall lose one of our basic industries in Canada.

Several hundred years ago the Europeans began developing our nation by exploiting the Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Atlantic fishery. From 1867 until 1949, when we became part of Canada, we in our part of Atlantic Canada received more attention from European nations with respect to our Atlantic fishery than we have received from Canada. That is why I take exception to the minister's attitude that we must wait until tomorrow, next week or next year before we obtain some recognition of our problems. We have been disappointed by the government's response to our need, not because we think we are entitled to preferential treatment, but because we feel that the Atlantic fishery ought to be saved and ought to become a great contributing factor to the well-being of the entire Canadian economy.

In Boston last week the Minister of Fisheries indicated that the government would not continue to prop up the Atlantic fishery. We are not looking for handouts. The attitude in this country that a fishery is something to be subsidized, to be propped up as a second class, inferior industry has continued so long that we are almost ashamed to stand up and talk about the Atlantic fishery. That attitude is prevalent on the government side of the house.

By that I do not mean to criticize the minister. We have had conversations with him and are satisfied that he is taking the problem of the Atlantic fishery seriously.

Mr. Perrault: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: But we are not so sure that that attitude is shared by his other colleagues on the government side.

I could become parochial and say that there are 25,000 fishermen in Newfoundland alone, to say nothing of the other fishermen in the rest of Atlantic Canada, who must receive government assistance or give up fishing. I am talking about professional fishermen who would find it difficult to enter other fields because fishing is their livelihood.

We feel there is something radically wrong when the ships of European countries can cross the Atlantic and exploit our fishing resources on our doorstep at a time when our entire fishing industry is in danger of failing. For those reasons I will not accept an answer from the minister tomorrow, next week or next year. We should like to hear an answer with respect to fishery policies now.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): First, I should like to congratulate the hon. member upon the energetic way in which he [Mr. Lundrigan.]

has put forward the case for a clear cut policy in the fisheries area. As a new minister, I have been impressed by the problems the industry faces. I have also been impressed by the amount of assistance the industry receives. I think this assistance is well placed, but it is considerable. For example, I find that the budget of the fisheries department is $50 million and that the gross value of the fisheries is of the order of $300 million. So the assistance actually amounts to about one dollar in six—in some areas it is substantially more than that. And when I say that the assistance given through the department is $50 million, I am not taking into account unemployment insurance payments, and so on. Obviously the government of the day is spending a good deal of the taxpayers' money in support of the fisheries. I think much of this money is well spent, particularly in the fields of conservation, research and the development of new plants and processes.

I would not like to leave the impression that the fisheries are uniformly in difficulty and throughout the Atlantic region. I think there is a great deal to be said in support of the contention that the fisheries are doing pretty well in 1968. Salt cod is an exception. However the federal government has taken the surplus from 1967, the carry-over from last year, and is considering what to do about selling cod produced in 1968. One of our problems concerns quality—our salt cod is not as acceptable to countries like Spain and Portugal as it was some years ago. We have to maintain quality as well as quantity if we are to regain our markets. My general expectation in connection with salt cod is that there will be as much marketed for a number of years to come as has been marketed in the past. But it is our job to make sure that we keep our share of the market, and quality is our problem here.

As to fresh and frozen fish, volume is up as compared with last year by about 24 per cent, that is, to the end of September. Volume in other words is up, while prices are being maintained to our fishermen. On this basis the incomes of fishermen must be higher this year than last year—and 1967 was a record year for Atlantic fishermen.

Thus, while the industry is encountering difficulties and is faced with declining markets, particularly in the United States, volumes are up and incomes are being maintained. I do not want to appear self-satisfied about this. We do need a fundamental policy; we need a policy which does not involve perpetual support, and which will stand up such as the United States, which will raise I am sure is known to the Minister of Fisherits duties against us if we continue to subsidize any industry, and this includes the fisheries.

FISHERIES-INQUIRY AS TO DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): This afternoon I asked the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) whether he had any plan to help the Canadian commercial fishing industry to make a profit for the Canadian economy as a whole, and whether he now considered the industry to be a net burden on the Canadian economy. In Your Honour's wisdom, you ruled the question out of order, and in view of the urgency of the matter I asked that it be debated at this hour.

First, I should point out to the minister that every fresh fish company in Newfoundland this year, with one exception, lost money. One fresh fish company made money. I should also point out to the minister that Newfoundland fishermen are now receiving exactly one half of what they received last year for their salt cod.

If he can get up in this house and say that the Atlantic coast fisheries are in good order, then I am afraid I cannot agree with him. As I said before, our fishermen are now receiving one half of what they received last year for their salt bulk fish. I might also inform the minister and this house that at present the Newfoundland fishermen have tens of thousands of salt fish in their possession and are unable to find buyers for them, even at the ridiculous prices that are being offered. I do not think this is indicative of a healthy fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces.

I have been in this house since September 12 and I do not mind saying I am getting a little sick of the attitude, by certain members of the government, with regard to the fishing industry in Newfoundland and in the Atlantic provinces generally. I agree with the previous speaker that the fact that only two or three government members have seen fit to remain in the house to hear us discuss this very important problem is indicative of their lack of interest in the fishing industry of this country. As a Newfoundlander I take strong exception to this. I take strong exception to the fact that government members have not our problems.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I have talked to the secretary general of against the criticism of importing countries the Federation of Fishermen, P. J. Antle, who ies and to my hon. friend, the Minister of Defence Production. I am told by Mr. Antle, who has a complete knowledge of the fishing industry in Newfoundland, that this will be the worst year yet for our fishermen since confederation. I am told by this gentleman that in the light of what has been happening in the past few years it will take a miracle to stave off disaster in the Newfoundland fishing industry.

> The federal assistance that was granted earlier this year will only delay the execution. Many fish plants are still in grave danger of closing. The same situation will prevail next year. What it adds up to is that the government is pouring millions of dollars into a bottomless pit. If, sir, this assistance is discontinued, as I believe the minister suggested in a speech in Boston, many fish plants in Newfoundland will be forced to close operations, with the result that 70,000 Newfoundlanders, 70,000 fellow Canadians of flesh and blood, who have the same desire to keep body and soul together as do the wheat farmers, corn farmers and white collar workersthese 70,000 new Canadians and their dependants will have to apply for relief to keep body and soul together. This is a sad commentary on Liberalism and on the federal government.

Mr. Jamieson: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

Mr. Carter: It is obvious that in the fishing industry in Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces generally we have reached a dead end. I have seen this in a large part of my riding. As the minister knows, fishing is most important to it. I have seen men come in from a day's fishing on the fishing grounds where they face the perils of the north Atlantic. Theirs is not an easy job; it is not a white collar job by any means. It takes guts, bravery and initiative to be a fisherman. I have seen these men come in with nothing, after being out on the fishing grounds for seven or eight hours. I do not think it is right that these people should have to go through these experiences. They are flesh and blood. They are entitled to their place in the sun and to seen fit to remain here and hear us speak of their share of the so-called affluent society that we now boast of in Canada.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I do not understand how Canada can boast of having a flourishing economy and a good society when a large number of our people—a large number of my people—are forced to suffer these hardships and the insecurity they must suffer because of the state of the fisheries. I am not wishing to make this into a political move on my part, but I would ask the Minister of Fisheries in all sincerity that he and the government take a stand on the Newfoundland fishery and the Atlantic coast fishery in general. I think our fishermen deserve this. I believe they should have it.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt the sincerity of the hon. member when he says that this year was the worst year for the fishermen in Newfoundland since Confederation. However, I do not agree with his statement. I would say that there are problems and there certainly is a problem in the salt cod fishery as he has stated.

As I said before the main problem is marketing. It is partly a problem of quality. The total demand for salt cod around the world is unabated; it has not been declining. We are not witnessing a long term decline in the quantity of salt cod demanded by offshore markets. But here is an industry, principally in Newfoundland, which is dependant on an offshore market, and an offshore market which is seriously affected by devaluation. Prices have dropped as a result devaluation.

I also understand that in some countries like Norway there has been more diversion of cod from fresh and frozen products to salt cod production and, therefore, to the salt cod market. These countries have been picking off many of the top grade, high quality, top price markets, particularly in western Europe. I mentioned Portugal and Spain earlier. These are examples.

We have a marketing problem. We certainly have a price problem and a quality problem. This spring the federal government moved to reduce the problem by taking off the hands of the trade about 20 per cent of last year's record production. There was a remarkable production in 1967, and there was roughly a 20 per cent carryover last May. That has subsequently been picked up; $2 million was set aside for this purpose. Only $1\frac{1}{2}$ million worth was left. This was taken off the market and some of it is on its way to Biafra.

[Mr. Carter.]

A long term policy, not a stop gap policy, is requested. I know there are continuing needs in Biafra and in other parts of the world. The protein content in dried salted cod is high. Salt cod is in demand because it is most acceptable from a food aid point of view. So, perhaps we can count on food aid programs to take some of our surplus off the market. This is a stop gap solution, and not a long term solution to the problem. I think that the members of the opposition, certainly the six members from Newfoundland, should also get together and give some thought as to how this problem might be solved on a long term basis.

I believe the problem is largely one of quality. Personally I think we must do something about marketing in a more concerted way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—ALCOHOLISM— FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN STUDIES

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I recently directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare the following question:

Can he tell us whether any division of his department is considering now or will consider in the near future the possible participation of the federal government, at the information level, in the serious problem of alcoholism in Canada?

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention, in raising this matter tonight, to criticize the government concerning alcoholism. I merely want to draw the minister's attention to this serious problem which is nation-wide but has never received a nation-wide solution. I am not asking for a statement justifying the past inaction of the government in that field, but rather an undertaking that in the future, some branch or other of his department will consider the possibility of providing some assistance.

Mr. Speaker, alcoholism is an acute social problem. It entails a considerable waste of money, it brings about a great number of industrial accidents and traffic casualties, it gives rise to many family conflicts and quarrels between husband and wife and is often the source of juvenile delinquency. This evil affects every area of the country and all classes of society. It is widespread, since the present number of alcoholics has been estimated at more than 250,000 in Canada.

In addition, it must be kept in mind that according to the experts in that field, every alcoholic does harm an average of five persons around him. If one multiplies by 5 the 250,000 alcoholics found in Canada one gets some idea of the extent of alcoholism now considered a national scourge.

Alcoholism is the only evil which harms man both spiritually and bodily. A man who, after over-indulging in liquor for a certain period of time, finally becomes enslaved to the habit, deteriorates in every way, physically, psychologically, socially and morally. His health is more or less ruined, his psychological resistance weakened to the point where he is no longer able to assume the smallest responsibility. He has gradually isolated himself from his surroundings.

From another point of view, Mr. Speaker, we see the federal government, like other governments, drawing a great deal of money from the sale of liquor in Canada. For example, an article published in Le Devoir on October 17, 1968, said:

The beer industry-

This only concerns beer, not wine or liquor. -has paid close to $250 million in taxes.

In 1966, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether the federal government had spent money to fight alcoholism in Canada. As shown on page 3047 of Hansard for March 23, 1966, the minister answered as follows:

In so far as the Department of National Health and welfare is concerned, expenditure on promotion of temperance and supporting antialcoholic programs was nil.

Mr. Speaker, the dangers of alcoholism in Canada are constant and increasing, for there are, as I said earlier, about 250,000 alcoholics in Canada, not counting about 235,000 heavy drinkers.

• (10:20 p.m.)

I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he plans to launch a federal campaign on education or an information campaign on temperance and the dangers of alcoholism?

Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should assume our responsibilities in that field. Not that I am blaming the present Minister of National Health and Welfare. I know he is a responsible man and I want to congratulate him on his work. But I would like him to do every-

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion governments to co-operate with the federal government in finding a solution, not merely a partial but a national overall solution, to fight efficiently the excessive use of alcohol.

Mr. Speaker, has any organization concerned with alcoholics made any similar request to the government? There again, I do not ask the minister to give me an immediate reply. I merely ask him to look into the matter thoroughly and encourage the members to develop an interest in it.

Is there a division within the Department of National Health and Welfare which deals with the causes or effects, or both, of alcoholism? If not, as I suspect, will there be in the near future? Does the government consider that the present number of alcoholics is a cause for alarm? There is another question we must look into. We must take a closer look-and I suggest this is urgent, Mr. Speaker, at the definite relationship between the rate of criminality, especially among young people, in Canada and the rate of alcohol consumption, as the two ills have the same cause. I have met several experts on the matter with whom I have had the opportunity of going into the question. I was able to ascertain there does exist a close relationship between the increase in the amount of alcohol imbibed and the growing rate of criminality in Canada.

I therefore think that it is up to the government, in order to tackle seriously the problem of juvenile delinquency in Canada, to protect Canadian consumers against a blatant publicity more or less organized. If the government takes to heart the well being of the population of Canada, I think it should include in its program, in co-operation with the provinces, an information system set on a national scale forewarning people of the damages alcoholism can bring to society and to individuals.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is no question but that the observations of the hon. member for Lotbinière with reference to how serious the problem of alcoholism is are quite correct. As the hon, member knows, we do support the provinces in the general health area through health grants, which in the past have totalled some $40 million a year. I think that to some degree this should enable the provinces to do more work in this particular area. I know also that not only are some thing in his power to urge the provincial provincial governments looking into this are contributing to the efforts necessary to combat excessive alcoholism.

The degree to which the federal government can support this fight at the national level is questionable, in view of the priorities we already have. Certainly within our own department I refer to such problems as the dangers of smoking, drug abuse and many others. At this time I do not foresee that over the span of the next year we will be able to expend considerable sums of money to begin a promotional and educational program of the magnitude necessary to have any real impact in this area. This may be regrettable, but unfortunately it seems to be the case. In no way does it indicate that we in the department do not regard the problem with the degree of seriousness that the hon. member does. We do; we think it is a very serious problem indeed. We hope that later on we at 10.25 p.m.

problem—and they too receive considerable will be able to get together with the provrevenue from the sale of liquor-but that inces on this question and perhaps make a many municipalities and other organizations more meaningful contribution toward combating excessive alcoholism.

> Apart from the contributions I have mentioned in the way of health grants, which I quite agree do not specifically go toward combating alcoholism, we have recently contributed $15,000—which I agree is a very small sum indeed—toward the administration and maintenance of the principal organization in the country that is combating alcoholism. This year they have requested an additional $10,000, a request which we have under consideration at the present time.

> The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Pursuant to provisional standing order 39A the motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this house stands adjourned until 2.30 p.m. tomorrow.

> Motion agreed to and the house adjourned

- (g) in the case of a corporation resident in Canada, be the greater of that proportion of its total assets that the amount of its liabilities to Canadian policyholders, as determined by regulation, is of its total liabilities, as determined by regulation, or the assets which are, pursuant to a law of Canada or of a province, required to be kept in Canada, and
- (h) in the case of a corporation that is not resident in Canada, be the aggregate of
 - (i) the value of its assets that are, at January 1, 1969, required by a law of Canada or of a province to be kept in Canada and
 - (ii) the funds derived from its Canadian life insurance business after January 1, 1969,

 - (a) on its estimated taxable income, or taxable investment income, as the case may be, for the year, or
 - (b) on its taxable income, or taxable investment income, as the case may be, for its 1968 taxation year computed as though the amendments proposed in this resolution were in effect for that year.
- 10.  - (b) has been outstanding for one year following the end of the taxation year in which it accrued, shall include in income for the second year after it accrued an amount equal to the debt unless the employer and the employee sign and file an agreement in which they elect to have their taxes computed as though the debt had been

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PREMIER AND CABINET OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to your attention and to the attention of the members of this house the presence in your gallery of a very distinguished group of parliamentarians from Prince Edward Island. Hon. Alex. Campbell, premier, and the members of his cabinet are here today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: When we see a delegation from that province come to meet us in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, we are always reminded of the great beginnings of this country and the importance of Charlottetown in the establishment between all parts of Canada of greater bounds of friendship and loyalty. We are always pleased when delegations from that province come to discuss other bonds that might make the country even more united.

NOTICE RESPECTING PARKING AREA IN ENGLISH ONLY

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We received a letter last night, the heading of which was given in English only, advising us that on Saturday, October 26, the parking lot adjacent to the building will be paved. Mention is made of gates and we are asked to leave our keys with the constable. It is signed D. V. Currie, sergeant-at-arms.

I wish to point out to the house that we did not understand this notice at all which, in fact, was written in English only. As this is often the case, we would appreciate, in order to comply with the requests, receiving bilingual instructions. Mr. Speaker: Order. I have taken note of the representations of the hon. member and I will see to it that the situation about which he is complaining is remedied.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon, member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether that question should be asked at this time. We have just reached the written question stage of proceedings.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council):

Polymer Corporation does not have any civil servants in its employ. Also, the corporation would not wish to furnish the information requested as disclosure of the number of employees earning $17,000 and more would not be in the best interests of the company.

DELIVERIES OF AIRCRAFT TO AIR CANADA

Question No. 74-Mr. Fortin:

- 1. Is there a delay in the delivery of aircraft to Air Canada and, if so, what is the cause?
- 2. How much did Air Canada lose in 1967 because of the delay in delivery of aircraft and are the suppliers responsible for the loss?

- 4. Is Air Canada still using JP-4 fuel and, if so, is this fuel as safe as kerosene?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. In 1968 aircraft deliveries have been in accordance with dates agreed upon with the manufacturer.

- 2. There was delay in delivery of certain equipment in 1967. The effect of this delay on the year-end financial results is difficult to assess precisely in view of the fact that the existing fleet was utilized to a greater degree in the interim, higher load factors were incurred, and the travelling public had to use less heavily booked flights at less desirable times of day. In view of the complexity of the contracts involved, the company does not consider it appropriate to disclose its actual position in the matter of the suppliers' responsibility at this time.
- 3. The amount, and the manner and method of any borrowings for 1968 is a matter under active consideration at this time between the government and the corporation.

In the view of the commission, the training time spent by public servants is a gain rather than a loss to the public service of Canada. The time devoted to training by the 690 public servants now attending French Language courses is 5700 man-hours per day of which 1950 hours will be on their own time. Students will attend classes for periods of 13 to 35 days depending on the level of instruction and the needs of the individual; thus the total man-hours that will be devoted by these public servants to French language training during the present fiscal year will not be known until the close of the year.

- 4. See 2(b) above.
- 5. See 2(b) above.

Note: The hon. member in posing questions 4 and 5 may have had in mind the public service bicultural development program in which 20 officials are attending for one year at Laval University and 10 at Toronto and York Universities, to follow varied academic programs. The total of salaries of the 20 officials attending at Laval in the French language will be approximately $325,000 for the period of their secondment in the current fiscal year. All 20 have moved their families to Quebec with assistance given by the federal government which it is estimated will cost $12,000 in the present fiscal year. Exact figures cannot be given until the end of the fiscal year.

NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED, RICHMOND CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 437-Mr. Beaudoin:

For each year since 1962, what was the number of unemployed living in the constituency of Richmond, and what was the average age of those unemployed for each year?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): There are no unemployment figures for areas of this size. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics produces unemployment statistics for Canada and the provinces only. The size of the labour force survey sample does not allow for the production of figures in any greater geographical detail.

Mr. Russell C. On September 25 last the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development announced the government's intention to review the program of industrial incentives for development areas, with a view to proposing legislation next year.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, on September 13 I placed question No. 57 on the order paper. It reads in part:

How many Liberal Members of the last parliament and Liberal candidates in the last election have been appointed to positions in government, civil service,— and so on. Forty days is a long while to wait for an answer. I know there are a great number who have been appointed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely in this computer age this government could tabulate the number, without making us wait for this length of time.

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE TO WESTERN FARMERS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by my hon. friend from Battleford-Kindersley, to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the serious situation facing western farmers as a result of restricted grain sales and unfavourable harvest conditions, which have led to there being large quantities of tough and damp grain and to serious deterioration of crops still out in the field. This situation gives rise to a need for immediate discussion in the House of Commons so that hon. members may present the fact and the government may tell parliament and the country of any steps it proposes to take to deal with this serious situation.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly address the house and the Chair in relation to the urgency of debate. The hon. member knows that discussion at this point should be limited exclusively to the question of the urgency of debate rather than to the urgency of the situation about which he complains.

Mr. Gleave: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe this matter is urgent. Questions have been asked repeatedly in the house over the last short while in an attempt to find out what action is being taken by the government with regard to the situation which has developed and is developing in western Canada. Weather reports indicate that this situation is not improving. In fact it is getting worse, and this will affect not only the area in which it is occurring but the whole economy of Canada.

The effect of these adverse weather conditions has been compounded by the slowdown in grain sales, which has limited the amount of cash going into the hands of farmers in the area. These two factors are building up to a situation which will have disastrous consequences, first for the people of the region, and second for the economy as a whole.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the arguments advanced by the hon. member in connection with the urgency of debate. I doubt whether there is any point in pursuing the matter further. It seems to me that citation 100, paragraph 4 of Beauchesne's fourth edition is pretty well to the point in the special circumstances here, and I ask leave of the house to read it.

A motion to adjourn the house under standing order 26, for the purpose of discussing—

And this is a particular case to which the learned author refers in this instance —"the serious situation in which the farmers of Manitoba are at the present time, on account of lack of feed for cattle and seed grain and no satisfactory result can be obtained from the government for relief", was ruled out of order because the subject matter thereof could be discussed either on the motion for the house to go into committee of supply or on a certain bill then on the order paper in respect to unemployment and farm relief.

I also refer to citation 100(8) which suggests that the matter should be one of a sudden urgency. From the questions which have been asked by the hon. member and a number of other colleagues in the house during the last few weeks I gather that this is not particularly or especially a sudden emergency but rather a very serious situation which has been continuing for a while, and because of this I doubt if there should be an adjournment of our debates at the present time.

I see that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir) appears to want to contribute to the discussion and I would not want to be placed in the position where he would wish to discuss the matter after I had made a ruling. If he feels that he should add a few words at this point I think he might be allowed to do so before I make a ruling.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the hon. member who has just spoken in referring to the emergency of the situation. Although it is true that this has been building up over a number of weeks the crisis has reached the point where there is no possibility, or very little possibility, of the crop being recovered. The year is going on, we are getting into November, and we expect winter instead of harvest conditions.

We have repeatedly asked the government to give priority to the cash advance legislation over other legislation that has been brought forward, and this has been refused. In the last few weeks we have had no opportunity to discuss this matter which has now become not only a regional problem but one that is going to affect the economy of the whole of Canada.

I respectfully suggest to Your Honour that this matter should be discussed today; because the farm credit act, even though it may come up after the post office bill is passed, does not deal with this particular situation. All it does is provide money to be lent to farmers, but it does not in any way alleviate their immediate lack of cash which we feel the government should be considering in this serious situation.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that this matter raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is a serious one; as is so frequently the point, this is not the issue here. Had the hon. member waited I am sure that later today he would discover that the wheat board, in its usual fashion, has the matter well in hand. So far as the handling of the difficult problem of damp and tough grain is concerned the wheat board is taking steps, in its usual fashion, to see that the greatest possible favour is given to the handling of damp grain.

The situation is so serious this year that it may not be able to handle the tough grain, but so far as urgency of debate is concerned it seems to me clear that the urgent thing is for this house to get on with the announced business of the house so we can then proceed with those pieces of farm legislation to which reference has been made.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, until the hon. gentleman opposite spoke I could fully understand the reasons for your expected decision, but the hon. gentleman transgressed the rules of the house in endeavouring to explain why the government has not acted up to now, and has now acted today through the wheat board.

If ever there was a serious situation it is this. The seriousness has been admitted by the hon. gentleman, and I appreciate that admission on his part. Anyone in this chamber who has not been in western Canada has no idea how serious the situation is. The hon. gentleman says we should get on with the rest of the business of the house. I say there is nothing more important, more imperative and more urgent than the dangerous situation on the prairies today.

I would like to see the Prime Minister, on behalf of the government, rise and say "We want immediate action in this regard." We want immediate action because in the last two or three days the situation has seriously accelerated to a point where the economy of western Canada is in danger. I would think this is one occasion when the government would not follow the course of forgetting about western Canada, and would give the house an opportunity to discuss this situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that there is urgency of debate on this question. On the facts of the matter there can be no dispute. According to the most recent reports of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, approximately 40 per cent of the crop in that province still remains to be harvested, and a good deal of the grain that has been harvested is in tough or damp condition.

As pointed out by the hon, member for Saskatoon-Biggar, a number of inquiries have been made in this house with regard to government programs to deal with the serious situation which faces the prairies. The normal answer given is that more time is required to determine the exact extent of the problem, and to see whether the farmers in fact would be able to harvest all of the crop on the prairies.

I think, as has been made clear within the past several days and as has been pointed out today, it will not be possible for many of the farmers on the prairies to harvest their crop. I confirmed this myself today in conversation with my constituents.

With reference to the remarks of the Minister without Portfolio, it seems to me there is no better opportunity than is being presented now to discuss some of the matters to which he referred. He referred to the actions of the Canadian Wheat Board. What we require is a discussion of the over-all situation. The minister referred to the necessity to get on with the legislation that is now before us. I suggest that this is only one part of the program required to deal with this situation. In fact there are many different programs which are required to deal with the problems facing the prairies.

I suggest this is a matter which could best be dealt with in a debate such as that proposed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. There are several problems. There is the problem of tough and damp grain, the question of assistance to farmers who are unable to harvest their crop, and the need to further encourage and assist the Canadian Wheat Board in respect of the sale and export of grain. Therefore I urge that the motion be allowed and that we have a debate on this subject.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have no alternative but to rise in the house at this time to support the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and so eloquently supported by the hon. member for Lisgar and the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

As you mentioned, Mr. Speaker, we as members have been putting questions to the ministry opposite regarding this serious situation that has been developing. We have seen the legislation which was earlier placed on the agenda for debate sidetracked on many occasions. Day by day the situation becomes worse. I think it is high time the regular business of the house is adjourned so we might debate this urgent matter.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that on a number of occasions motions similar to that which is before the house, having to do with a situation of national importance, have been allowed. Although it would seem that little purpose would be served by a motion of this nature in respect of crops that will not be harvested in some areas, I suggest the statement by the minister on behalf of the government is an indication that the Canadian Wheat Board intends to take only the normal action it is empowered to take in the circumstances.

Your Honour will remember that on a number of occasions concessions have been made to the wheat farmers in western Canada. If we are to override the quota system the wheat board has in use we must be in a position to permit the treatment of damp grain by the use of all our transportation facilities and the rerouting of the grain in the area. It seems to me this is something parliament could do by giving a direction.

[Mr. Burton.]

Because of the national interest in this matter I believe this motion should be allowed so that other steps can be taken in addition to those outlined by the minister, which I think we all welcome but which we all know will not solve the total problem. Surely parliament can give some direction in respect of changing quotas, and today is the day I suggest that we should give that direction.

Mr. Speaker: Let me suggest to hon. members that nothing that has been said following the motion by the hon. member has really changed the situation. I am still as convinced as I was in the first instance that this is a serious matter, and urgent; and if hon. members will allow me to do so I am prepared at this time to express an opinion and make a ruling.

I fully appreciate how urgent the matter is and how important the situation is to the country, and to members of this House of Commons. The decision before the Chair at the moment is whether the ordinary business of the house should be set aside for the purpose of discussing this situation. I must consider whether, within the near future, there will be an opportunity for hon. members to discuss this matter.

Reference has been made to the farm legislation which has come before the house and will come before it again later on. I am not necessarily impressed by this argument, but it seems to me that when we reach the budget discussion, which is a very general debate of much the same nature as the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, there will be a number of days for hon. members to discuss this most important and urgent situation. I think that might be a very good opportunity to go into this matter.

If there were a delay in reaching this debate perhaps the motion could be made again and further considered, but because of the fact that within a short period of time there will be this general debate I think it would not be proper for the Chair to allow a debate at this time.

ASSISTANCE TO MAPLE PRODUCTS' PRODUCERS

Motion No. 11-Mr. Fortin:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development of Canada and the Minister of Agriculture of the Province of Quebec since January 1, 1965, relating to the request for assistance to the producers of maple sugar and syrup.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is my information that there is no correspondence in respect of this motion. I wonder, therefore, whether it might be appropriate for the hon. member to agree to having the motion withdrawn.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer yes to the President of the Privy Council, provided there are no papers on the matter.

(Order discharged and motion withdrawn.)

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a matter of privilege in respect of notice of motion No. 24 in my name. It deals with a report in respect of fish and game laws as they relate to native Indian people. I have been asked to attempt to obtain this document in light of the current consultations which are taking place with the native Indian peoples. They desire to have as much information in their hands as possible in order that they may fully and thoroughly discuss the various aspects of the laws relating to them. It seems to me that the longer the answer is delayed the more disadvantageous the position will be in which the native people will find themselves in dealing properly with the subject matter of the motion.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I take note of the hon. member's representations and I hope to be able to give him an answer next week.

[English]

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a matter of personal privilege. Last Thursday I asked the Minister of Transport about the production of papers referred to in notice of motion No. 12 which was placed on the order paper on September 24. This has reference to the Roberts Bank rail controversy. The minister replied at that time that this material would be available soon. Since this is the earliest available time I should like to ask the minister the reason for the delay in producing this information in relation to this urgent matter. I mention this because I feel my privilege as a member and the privilege of those people I represent are being disregarded by a continued reluctance on the part of the minister to provide this house with this factual information.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): There are a number of reasons, Mr. Speaker, including the fact that there are many agencies involved which have to be consulted. I can assure my hon. friend that I believe this will be dealt with next Wednesday.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST OF PROFESSIONAL INSTITUTE FOR MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has acceded to the request of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada for a meeting of a delegation of the institute's officers and the Prime Minister to discuss and seek clarification on certain matters arising from Bill No. C-120 and, in particular, from the Prime Minister's statement to the house at the resolution stage.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received this letter from the institute the day before it was delivered to the press. At that time I considered whether this was conducive to obtaining the information really wanted. I was asked in the letter a series of questions concerning government agencies, and I referred this letter to those agencies in order that they might verify whether the fears or allegations referred to were well founded. When I receive a reply I will in turn reply and indicate whether I wish to see these gentlemen.

EXTERNAL AID

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PERCENTAGE OF NATIONAL INCOME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that despite the recent desirable increase in our foreign aid Canada still stands twelfth among the 16 western industrial nations in the proportion of the national income which is used—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask the question? He knows the purpose of asking questions at this time is not to convey information but rather to seek it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, I did not think the question I am about to pose would have meant as much to the Prime Minister without the preamble. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can inform the house of any plans the government has to increase foreign aid so that the goal he has expressed of 1 per cent of the national income may be reached by 1970; and will he indicate in what stages?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was the previous government's policy, as it has been the policy of this government, to consider this as a goal. Every year we are doing better. I believe the increase this year was some $50 million for foreign aid and for international development. We are still aiming in this direction, and perhaps in next year's budget we will discover new ways of finding more money so we can help more people in other countries.

MONTMAGNY, QUE.—REQUEST FOR DREDGING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Will the Department of Transport undertake shortly the dredging of the Montmagny basin to promote the economy of that area, as the shooting season for migratory birds on Ile-aux-Grues has now started and communications by water have become extremely difficult?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that this question should be put on the order paper, but if it is urgent, the hon. member could advise the Chair so that it can be discussed during the adjournment motion.

 $Mr.\ Lambert\ (Bellechasse):$ At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

MONTREAL—HEARING OF BRIEFS BY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I would like to ask the minister, for how many days was the urban task force scheduled to sit in the city of Montreal for the purpose of hearing briefs from groups or individuals concerning urban development and urban housing problems in this metropolis of Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it was scheduled to sit for two days, but if there are additional excellent briefs that should be considered we would be willing to consider additional time, or we will hear interested persons when we return to the Hull-Ottawa area about the end of the month.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question.

What steps has the minister taken to inform the public, the intermediate bodies as well as the federal and provincial members of parliament interested in that problem that public sittings will be held at such a date and time set aside for that purpose—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt very much that the question is in order because the hon. member is referring to something that has already happened.

Mr. Valade: I will rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker.

What measures does the minister intend to take in order to let the people, the intermediate bodies and the men in public life know when and where those public meetings will be held?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, public notice is given by newspaper advertisements. In addition we often send letters to organizations which we feel will be particularly interested in the subject.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister indicate to the house whether his task force on housing will return to Montreal, in view of the fact that they spent only two days there and three days in Toronto?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

FINANCE

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED SECURITIES COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will the minister advise the house whether the government has given consideration to the establishment of a national securities commission, in line with the request from a number of provinces and of several responsible financial bodies in the country?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for some time I have been very actively engaged in the preparation of a federal position on a national securities administration. There will be a meeting on Friday, as I have answered in written questions, of the continuing committee of officials on financial institutions, to discuss this matter.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to indicate when a decision may be reached and announced?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we have decided to introduce in this session of parliament a securities act, which we will be discussing with the provincial officials on Friday.

Inquiries of the Ministry AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO WESTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister without Portfolio from the province of Saskatchewan, in view of the fact that he made some observations a few minutes ago and apparently is looking after this side of the question. Will he say whether, in view of -and I do not think I overstate the situation in saying this—the devastation on the prairies, consideration is being given by the government to bringing in acreage payments for the small farmers? Second, will he add to the observations he has already made regarding the nature of action to be taken in so far as marketable wheat is concerned; that is, wheat that is damp and will not be saleable unless action is taken?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman asked the question of the minister in his alleged responsibility as minister from Saskatchewan. I have suggested to hon. members in the past, rightly or wrongly, that it is not in accordance with the rules to ask questions in this way. The right hon. gentleman referred to the fact that the minister spoke before, but my understanding was that he was speaking on the point of order. I would think this question should be answered by the responsible minister, or the minister who has administrative responsibility.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I direct my question to a minister who can be described as responsible—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that is, the Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all the ministers on this side of the house would fit into that category.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Olson: In direct response to the right hon. gentleman's question I would say that everyone in this house, and particularly members from western Canada, know there is no assistance program that is equal, or even near equal, to the farmer being able to harvest a good crop in good condition. However, there is a series of programs available this year which in the aggregate exceed anything that has hitherto been available to the grain producers of western Canada. No. 1: there is $127 million worth of crop insurance in force in the three prairie provinces this year, in connection with which the federal government has paid 25 per cent of the premium plus 50 per cent of the administrative cost.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: Second, on the basis of the estimates that we now have, there will be a minimum of $14 million paid out in P.F.A.A. payments.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Olson: It is impossible to give an estimate of the maximum until harvesting operations are completed this fall. Third, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is this. Isn't this a speech which might well have been made on the motion to adjourn the house, or when we are on a piece of farm legislation? I submit that it should not be made in the question period.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, speaking first on the point of order, all these programs are well known to hon, members—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the minister should not speak on the point of order but should perhaps complete his answer.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Third, this government has introduced—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the minister that he is now giving a complete review of government action over a period of time. I will allow the hon. member for Lisgar to ask his question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask a supplementary question because I have not received any answer to the original question. Would the minister, instead of giving voluminous approbation to the crop insurance program which my government brought in advise whether this government is going to give the [Mr. Olson.]

small farmers the acreage payment. Surely the minister can answer that question.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, my understanding of being responsible is to answer, and that is what I want to do. I want to tell the right hon. gentleman that all the programs we have add up to substantially more than acreage payments to the—

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There has been a ruling on the point of order. The ruling was that there was not one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister not agree that all he is doing is repeating the legislation that was brought in by the former government?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker. The advance payments, that we would like to bring in as soon as the opposition will let us pass the legislation, is a substantial improvement over previous legislation in this respect.

Mr. Ricard: Bring it in.

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Selkirk on a supplementary question.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): My supplementary question is to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say whether in addition to the existing program to which he referred, any extraordinary, special programs are to be undertaken to deal with this extraordinary situation on the prairies?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, my department and the other departments concerned are always considering extraordinary programs to meet extraordinary situations. But the hon. gentleman knows that this situation cannot be assessed until the harvesting season is completed, and there are many areas in western Canada where harvesting operations are now under way.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to which the minister can answer yes or no. Does he not think the farmers now need special assistance, in view of the horror tale which was unfolded last night?

Mr. Olson: Yes, sir; and I suggest the best way we can get it is to pass the farm legislation.

Some hon. Members: Bring it in.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Prime Minister. On September 18, in answer to a question, the Prime Minister stated that the government intended to proceed with negotiations dealing with offshore mineral rights, and they expected soon to lay a proposition before the provinces. My question is, since five weeks have passed, has the government presented such a proposition to the provinces, and will this house have an opportunity of dealing with this matter in the near future?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, in the very near future. It is a matter which has already been dealt with in cabinet, and we are waiting for the appropriate time to proceed.

Mr. Hees: Has the proposition been presented to the provinces, or will that be done in the near future?

Mr. Trudeau: In the near future.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF OUIMET ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I change the subject from agriculture to prisons, Mr. Speaker, and direct a question to the Solicitor General? Since matters affecting all phases of penology have been referred to a standing committee through the medium of the estimates, can the minister advise the house when we can anticipate receiving the report of the Ouimet royal commission which was appointed over two years ago? Has any deadline been set for the receipt of this report?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hope to receive the report by the end of the fiscal year.

Inquiries of the Ministry EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—DELAY IN USE OF HERCULES AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Don Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since it now appears that the Hercules aircraft we provided for the International Red Cross to carry relief supplies between Fernando Po and Nigeria or Biafra are unable to use Nigerian airstrips, I should like to know whether the minister intends to substitute the Caribou or some other lighter aircraft which could use the airstrips now in existence?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): So far as the Hercules are concerned that are awaiting clearance to fly from Fernando Po to Biafra, we fully expect that when the formalities are cleared with Equitorial Guinea these planes will fly. Difficulties have been caused by the fact that the established airstrips within the control of the federal government of Nigeria do not seem to be in proper condition to accommodate the large Hercules aircraft. I therefore communicated with General Wrinch the other day and asked him to inquire of the International Red Cross about the possibility of supplying other planes.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the discussion during the question period yesterday, can the minister tell us whether there has been an effort to obtain the views of the Nigerian government with regard to permitting Canadian Hercules aircraft to fly from Sao Tomé over Nigeria to Biafra?

Mr. Sharp: No. As I said to the hon. gentleman yesterday, we fully expect we will get these aircraft into operation between Fernando Po and Biafra.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs confirm a statement made by Dr. Arikpo in New York on October 8, in the presence of the minister's parliamentary secretary and several other members of parliament including the hon. member for Egmont and myself, to the effect that there would be no objection on the part of the Nigerian government to mercy flights from São Tomé to Biafra provided the Red Cross inspected the cargo?

Mr. Sharp: This question was asked yesterday, Mr. Speaker, and I said I was trying to ascertain whether this was so. Unfortunately geria is in hospital. He is ill. I am still pursu- the hon. minister, Mr. Speaker. ing my inquiries.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Does the statement mean the minister has now found the lost officials from Equatorial Guinea?

Mr. Sharp: We are pursuing the matter diligently, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Darimouth-Halifax): May I ask a further supplementary question. In the minister's consideration of alternative equipment for the movement of food and supplies that have been placed in depots, would he study the possibility of using rotary wing aircraft if the present landing strips or roadways are not suitable for the Hercules or Caribou?

Mr. Sharp: The situation in which we are now is that the International Red Cross has told us guite definitely they prefer that Canada supply the Hercules. This was the request we had from the International Red Cross. The Hercules, I believe, will be able to fly into Biafra territory if not into the federal Nigerian areas. We are now exploring alternative possibilities.

INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF EXPO EXPRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lionel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Does the minister or his officials intend to ask the SUTRI company to reconsider its decision to purchase Expo-Express, so that this means of transportation may become the property of the city of Montreal?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am now conducting an investigation on the matter, Mr. Speaker. It is possible that SUTRI may wish to withdraw. I will meet this evening the Minister of Trade and Industry of the province of Quebec in this connection.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce-

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Charlevoix wants to ask a supplementary question.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): I would the commissioner for foreign affairs of Ni- like to address a supplementary question to > Mr. Pepin: I mentioned that this was said. I am conducting an investigation.

> Mr. Asselin: Did the minister have any other discussions with officials of the city of Montreal, in order to confirm to them what he has just said?

> Mr. Pepin: First I want to meet my provincial colleague.

AGRICULTURE

APPLICATION OF FARM STORAGE POLICY TO EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Finance.

Can he tell the house why the measure he announced last night to provide help to the farmers who need larger grain storage facilities does not apply to the farmers in the province of Quebec and the Maritimes?

Mr. Speaker: That question could be put when the house studies the budget.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA-COURT DECISION RESPECTING LEASED RESERVE LAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. The other day I inquired about a decision of the Supreme Court of British Columbia relating to Indian reserve lands which is of extreme importance. I wonder if the minister has any reply he would like to make.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I have now had an opportunity of reading the judgment of Judge Kirke Smith. I understand that because of a dispute over costs the judgment has not been entered as yet so the period for appeal has not begun to run. However, the solicitor for the plaintiff will send to the department all the pleadings and relevant material connected with this case. Since the appeal date has not commenced to run, I must forgo expressing an opinion.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with regard to the same subject. I should like to ask the minister whether any application has been made to his department, since Indian reserve lands are involved, for his department to participate in financing an appeal.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether such a request was made by the people concerned, but I can assure the member that I shall look into the matter and give him an answer within a few days.

GRAIN—REPORT OF SCIENTISTS RESPECTING EXPORTS TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister inform the house of the results achieved by the commission of two senior scientists sent to Japan by the board of grain commissioners concerning the export and processing of Canadian grains?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I do not have a report from this commission, Mr. Speaker, but I have requested one. I will take the question as notice and give a reply to my friend as soon as I receive the report.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROPOSED TRAINING CENTRE FOR RETARDED YOUNG PEOPLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has any final decision been taken to make available all or part of the former Smithers experimental farm in British Columbia for use as a retarded young people's training centre?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the question could be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency, which is not readily apparent, the matter could be discussed at the time of adjournment.

Inquiries of the Ministry NATIONAL DEFENCE

PARTICIPATION IN DESIGN AND DEVELOP-MENT OF NEW PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister now in a position to inform the house whether the government has taken a decision with regard to joining the European fighter aircraft consortium. If so, what is that decision?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yes, we have reached a decision. As a matter of fact we are instructing our officials today to inform the European consortium on the multi-role aircraft that Canada will not participate in this project. With the current budgetary restraints and the high risk factor of this venture we have concluded that it would be inadvisable for Canada to participate.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this mean that a decision has been taken in respect to the long term and that Canada will withdraw from this type of fighter aircraft project completely?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member is always referring to fighter aircraft. We refer to it as a multi-role aircraft, so it is fighter, bomber and support aircraft.

Mr. Harkness: Might I ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I bring to the attention of the hon. member that he has asked one supplementary and that we are running short of time. The Leader of the Opposition is very anxious to ask a question.

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order if I may, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister answered the question. He merely referred to the type of aircraft. I am wondering whether he would now answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT PLAN FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I

Inquiries of the Ministry

directed a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, and it became clear on reading the reply of the minister that he had not understood the import of my question. I should therefore like to ask him now whether the intention of the Atlantic Development Board to bring forward a plan for the economic development of the Atlantic provinces this year has been abandoned. I think the minister will recall that the board was initially charged with the responsibility of arriving at a development strategy for the region, and this has not yet been done.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Atlantic Development Board is considering a long term program for the development of the Maritime provinces. That board has done a great deal for the Maritime provinces. The program is not ready yet and, therefore, has not been submitted to us. We expect to receive it one of these days—I do not know when—but in the meantime since there will be a change in departmental responsibilities, we will no doubt take this work into consideration.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport. In view of the uncertainty expressed by the minister in charge of regional matters, can the minister give maritimers some assurance that individual programs that might normally fit into the context of his colleague's plan will be brought on a little more quickly? Could he take some steps to make sure this matter is brought on at an early stage?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there will be maximum co-operation between the two departments concerned.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister inform the house as soon as possible when he expects to receive such a plan from the Atlantic Development Board?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I can try to find out when, but one thing is certain, as soon as we receive reports from the Atlantic Development Board we shall be glad to morning, has reported to me that board are finding out how much damp grain there is at the momer they are temporarily stopping the statement of the provided to me that board are finding out how much damp grain there is at the momer they are temporarily stopping the statement of the provided to me that board are finding out how much damp grain there is at the momer they are temporarily stopping the statement of the provided to me that board are finding out how much damp grain there is at the momer they are temporarily stopping the statement of the provided to me that board are finding out how much damp grain there is at the momer they are temporarily stopping the statement of the provided to me that board are finding out how much damp grain there is at the momer they are temporarily stopping the statement of the provided to me that board are finding out how much damp grain there is at the momer they are temporarily stopping the statement of the provided the provided to the provided have them published and make them available not only to the members of this house but also to the general public.

[Later:]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this might sound like a technical question, but I can assure you it is an important one. I address it to the minister responsible for forestry and regional development. When the minister refers to the maritime region, does he really mean the Atlantic region? This mistake has been made on a number of occasions, but there is a very sharp distinction between the Atlantic region and the maritime region. Would the minister bear this in mind in future statements?

AGRICULTURE

EQUALIZATION OF QUOTAS—MOVEMENT OF DAMP GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. What measures have been taken by the Canadian Wheat Board to equalize the quotas in the three prairie provinces? Also, what measures have been taken to give priority through the railway companies to the allocation of box cars for the movement of damp grain from shipping points that are still on units?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already given a reply to the house concerning the initiatives that have been taken in this matter by the wheat board. The board is doing some of what my hon. friend suggests it should be doing.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Does not the Canadian Wheat Board have any authority to set special quotas, such as might be required for damp grain?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I understand they do have, but the Minister without Portfolio, who was in touch with the wheat board this morning, has reported to me that the wheat board are finding out how much tough and damp grain there is at the moment, and that they are temporarily stopping the shipment of dry grain while checking into this.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO STUDY OF SNIFFING OF GLUE, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The minister recently indicated the difficulty of legislating against the use of glue and other commodities he mentioned at the time. My question to the minister is, has the government made a study of how widespread are these bad habits, and are these habits being carried on openly under some form of camouflage?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, a study is under way at the present time.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I did ask the minister whether these bad habits are being carried on openly under some form of camouflage, and my supplementary question to the minister is whether such ingredients could be sprayed on a flower and sniffed all evening?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that the time allotted for the question period has expired.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would arrange on another day of the week to have all his ministers present, in view of the fact that there are so many unanswered questions. This is not meant as a reflection upon Your Honour, because I think you have divided the time as fairly as you could, but there are many questions that we have been waiting to ask for some days. I know some ministers are lying around the House of Commons with nothing to do, and if this day could be arranged—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Bell: —we would appreciate it, perhaps some time later this week.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will see to it that next Wednesday all ministers will attempt to be present again.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I should like to take this opportunity, if you will be lenient with me, sir, to congratulate the Prime Minister and some of the ministers of his cabinet on wearing today the lapel pins of the province of Prince Edward Island. We hope this is a good sign for the prospects of the causeway to our province. We also hope the fact that only a very small minority of the ministers are wearing the pin is not going to be a bad omen.

Mr. Speaker: Order. On the same point of order perhaps I should allow the hon. member for Cardigan to ask the question that he has been trying to ask for 30 minutes.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—
MEETING WITH DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether he did meet earlier today with this distinguished delegation from Prince Edward Island that is presently in the gallery, to discuss the question of the causeway and, if a decision has been reached, would he care to make an announcement?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be no announcement made today in view of the time.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS AFFECTING RATES, ADMINISTRATION, SAVINGS BANK

The house resumed from Tuesday, October 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Kierans for the second reading of Bill No. C-116, to amend the Post Office Act, and the amendment (page 1623) thereto of Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, though there is a good case to support the amendment to refer this matter to a standing committee on transport and communications, in view of discussions which have gone on during the question period I think that all members of the house realize that farmers in western Canada face an extremely serious situation. I therefore would move, in accordance with one of the provisions of standing order 44:

That this house now proceed to Order No. 8, second reading of Bill No. C-133, an act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Mr. Speaker: I have serious doubts about whether this motion is in order. If hon. members wish to advise the Chair, I shall be glad to hear them. If not, I shall render my decision.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if Your Honour is prepared to render a decision perhaps it is in vain to argue. But may I draw Your Honor's attention to standing order 44. That standing order has been included in our rules and it must serve a purpose. It must be in there to be used on appropriate occasions.

Standing order 44 reads:

When a question is under debate no motion is received unless to amend it; to postpone it to a day certain; for the previous question; for reading the orders of the day; for proceeding to another order; to adjourn the debate; to extend the sitting of the house; to continue a sitting between the hours of 1.00 o'clock p.m. and 2.30 o'clock p.m. or 6.00 o'clock p.m. and 8.00 o'clock p.m., as the case may be; or for the adjournment of the house.

The motion of my colleague from Moose Jaw relies on one of the rights set out in this standing order, the right, when an order is under debate, to proceed to another order. The hon. member for Moose Jaw has the floor and his motion is properly before the house. I submit he has the right to be heard under standing order 44.

I have not found many references in Beauchesne to this standing order. Citation 195 in Beauchesne's fourth edition, which is too long for me to read fully, distinguishes between a substantive motion and other kinds of motions, such as those having to do with privilege, superseding motions, dilatory motions, and so on. The last paragraph reads:

Dilatory motions are designed to dispose of the original question either for the time being or permanently. They are the following: "That consideration of the question be postponed to (date)." "That the orders of the day be read." "That the House proceed to" (name another order); or "that the House proceed to the next business." "That the debate be now adjourned." "That this meeting be now adjourned."

I might also refer to the sentence by way of preamble to citation 189, which reads:

In the absence of standing orders to the contrary, the following motions may be made without notice:

There is a long list, and one of the items near the bottom of that list is, "for proceeding to another order;".

I submit therefore that a motion of this kind is provided for in standing order 44. Several other references in Beauchesne's fourth edition indicate that this standing order may be of use. I grant that it is used very rarely but, surely, because it has not been used for a long time does not mean that we are not entitled to use it on this occasion.

As the hon, member for Moose Jaw intimated, there has been considerable discussion about setting aside the post office legislation to deal with the advance payments legislation. As a result he moved his motion, and we are asking this house to make a decision on that motion.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I say briefly that I support this motion. I think it is in order, and I think it is a proper procedure to follow at this time. There has been much effort to have the government proceed with farm legislation. Standing order 44 I think is fairly clear. There was a reference on March 29, 1966, to this rule. At that time there was an application to proceed from government orders to private members orders. It was then ruled that such a proceeding could not take place because the application had to remain within the same type of order, or the same type of amendment that was then, or currently, under consideration. I do not have the case before me, but the inference was clearly to be drawn that if the motion were that the house proceed from one government order to another, it could be brought.

Mr. Speaker: I may advise hon. members that I am prepared to render a decision on good authority. If other hon. members wish to express their views on a point of order at this time, I shall hear them.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say very briefly that the Ralliement Créditiste is very happy to support the motion introduced by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg).

Our arguments are very simple and not very much inspired by the law but by plain common sense. We feel that the passing of Bill No. C-113 entitled: An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act is very urgent as compared to the Post Office bill which no one wants to see passed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for the expression of their views. Unfortunately, I do not think it is possible for the Chair to accept the motion proposed by the hon. member. It is true that the standing order referred to by the hon. member must be taken into account, but we must also take into account other standing orders, and particularly standing order 18(2) which reads:

Except as provided in standing orders 43 and 56, government orders may be called in such sequence as the government may think fit.

There are a number of other precedents that I might bring to the attention of hon. members. There is one precedent that is entirely on point. On that occasion a motion was brought under the standing order to move from one government order to another government order. The matter was not, as the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka said, a proposal to move from a government order to a private member's order.

I refer hon. members to the Journals of the House of Commons, 1966, page 543, where the following is to be found:

And the question being again proposed,—That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider a certain proposed resolution—

Mr. Fulton, seconded by Mr. Blair, moved,— That the House do proceed to another order, namely No. 12.

Mr. Speaker ruled as follows:

May I point out to the honourable Member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), that I cannot accept his motion because the order that is now before the house is a government order, and the other order that the honourable member now considers we should proceed with is order No. 12, which is another government order, and government orders may be moved only by the leader of the house. I would refer honourable members to standing order 18(2).

There is also citation 136, which reads:

• (3:50 p.m.)

"All motions referring to the business of the house should be introduced by the leader of the house."

By virtue of standing order 18(2) the government has full jurisdiction over its own orders.

Standing order 18(2) reads:

"Except as provided in standing order 56, government orders may be called in such sequence as the government may think fit."

Therefore, I cannot accept the honourable member's motion.

In view of this precedent—and in the circumstances this is the only one which I thought was necessary to bring to the attention of hon. members—I regret I cannot put to the house the motion proposed by the hon. member.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I rise to seek Your Honour's guidance in this matter? Does Your Honour consider, then, that while standing order 44, which is binding on this house, does indicate that a motion may be made without notice to transfer from one item of business to another, that this is a prerogative of a minister of the crown in the light of the wording of standing order 18(2) to which Your Honour referred?

Mr. Speaker: The point raised by the honmember is a point of argument which might have been raised before I made my ruling. I can only tell the hon member that there is a standing order, 18(2), which binds the Chair and all hon members, and that there are precedents by which I feel bound. I have quoted one of these precedents, and I have also quoted the standing order. There may be, to some extent, a discrepancy between the two standing orders; but in the light of previous rulings I have no alternative but to accept the interpretation which has been placed on these two rules by past Speakers.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment which is now before the house, that this bill to amend the Post Office Act, Bill No. C-116, be referred to a committee.

It is very difficult for me, and, I am sure for many other hon. members in this house as well as Canadians generally, to understand why a bill as important as this should not be referred to a committee. These proposals will affect everyone who buys a postage stamp. They directly affect many businesses, large and small. They affect all the publishing companies in this country, and there are many questions to be answered. I realize that the minister has provided all members with what we call a white paper outlining a good deal of the information. I also realize that many hon. members have been presented with briefs on this subject, and that the minister himself has received representations. However, there are were given this white paper and told: Here it a profit. is; I ask you to accept it.

No opportunity has been provided which would enable members to address questions to departmental officials. Neither is there any opportunity, really, for research to be undertaken; the opposition is not equipped with the type of research facilities available to the officials of the hon. gentleman's department. Yet we are asked to accept this document without question. As I say, we have all received briefs. But we have not had a chance to pool them all and discuss them thoroughly. So, I say again that I find it hard to understand why the minister is not willing to allow this important bill to be sent to a committee.

I have a few other observations to make. First of all, I should like to congratulate the minister on the freshness of his approach to the Post Office Department, the zeal, drive and initiative which he has brought to that department. I sincerely hope that this initiative, this great spirit of his, will permeate right down through the ranks to the men who deliver the mail at our doors. I congratulate the hon, gentleman on instilling this fresh outlook into the department.

By the same token I am rather surprised that the minister, who has had a tremendous background in the business world, and who has made an outstanding success of a private business he operated, should have introduced into this house the idea that you can charge more and provide less service. This seems an unusual idea to come from a man who was professor of economics, or director of the school of commerce at McGill University. I cannot imagine any company or corporation which was engaged in any competition whatsoever, proposing to raise its prices and give less service at the same time. But this is what the postmaster is asking us to accept. Can you imagine, for instance, the Ottawa Transportation Commission raising its fares and at the same time taking buses off the routes, or abandoning routes altogether? It is hard to imagine anything like that happening.

I congratulate the minister upon incorporating into this bill some of the recommendations made by the public accounts committee. These recommendations were made time and time again, but it has taken this new postmaster to incorporate them in a bill. One mail rates should be increased in order that suggesting rates that, from what we have many questions to be answered and we have the post office might at least break even in no opportunity to ask them in the house. We this operation, while not necessarily showing

> Then again, there was the suggestion by the committee—it was a suggestion rather than a recommendation—that the post office savings department be abolished. There was a third suggestion or recommendation to the effect that the Post Office Department be made into a crown corporation. I am sorry the minister has not taken this suggestion under serious consideration and recommended making a crown corporation out of the post office. Had he introduced a bill along these lines I believe it would have proceeded satisfactorily, and that the post office would have been placed on a sound, businesslike basis, with all the political atmosphere taken out of it.

What has happened in the last three years? How serious is this financial loss of which the minister speaks? Only three short years ago the post office showed a profit of $20 million. Even after deducting sums in respect of services supplied by other government departments, and adding a credit in respect of franked mail, the deficit amounted to only $11.5 million. The deduction included sums in respect of rents for accommodation supplied by the Public Works Department, a charge for accounting and technical services, contributions for superannuation, the Canada Pension Plan, and employees' compensation. Added on the credit side was $4.3 million in respect of franked mail sent by the departments and by members of parliament.

What has happened in such a short time? I realize costs have gone up. I appreciate the circumstances which have followed the settlement of the strike. But surely this does not account for the $100 million that the Postmaster General is talking about. Post office sales have gone up considerably during the last three years. Why should we be talking in terms of a $100 million deficit? Is the Postmaster General tacking on millions of dollars for depreciation of equipment? Is he adding on service charges for other departments? These are some of the questions we would like to ask in committee.

The other day I read in a newspaper that a Union Nationale frontbencher in the Quebec legislature nicknamed our Postmaster General a lemon squeezer. Here he is still squeezing of the recommendations was that second class lemons. This might be justified, but he is

We realize that the Glassco commission on government organization made certain recommendations concerning postal rates, but none of those recommendations suggested such sizeable increases in second and third class rates as the minister is projecting. The commission did recommend that revenues and expenditures in the post office should be related, and said tolls should be fixed at levels that permit recovery of total cost, but the commission found that the actual loss was mostly on second class mail, and the other classes were operating close to the break-even point.

I think the minister has gone overboard on some of these new rates. It appears that the loss on third class mail has been minimal. Therefore it is difficult to understand the action of the post office in providing a 663 per cent increase in this class. Again I say it is too much and too quick.

Let us look at the situation affecting the daily newspaper, that periodical which is all important to every Canadian. Everybody reads a daily newspaper in some form or another. The new rates will be five cents on the news portion and 15 cents on the advertising, and we must remember that daily newspapers have been paying about 30 per cent of their cost of delivery. The Postmaster General wants to jack this up to approximately 80 per cent, an increase of 165 per cent on the present rate. It is too much and too quick; and he wants this by April 1.

A lot of newspapers across the country have been conducting subscriber contests, increasing the number of their subscriptions for the coming year. Now they are in a position where they must honour their subscription rates, even though their postal delivery rates will be increased. In effect they are being asked to absorb this 165 per cent increase.

What will be the long-term effect on subscription rates? Normally they are now about $15 per year. I am told they will have to jump to nearly $25 per year, a $10 boost. I ask the Postmaster General, what would one do if he received a notice of a $10 increase for a newspaper subscription? I think one would be inclined to say, "Forget about it; I will pass it on to the customers who buy the advertised products. This government is responsible for throwing another log on the fires of inflation. This cannot do anything but increase inflation.

Let us compare what the Postmaster General is asking the other news media to do. Canadian magazines like Maclean's are going to be asked to step up their share of postal expenses by 136 per cent. Reader's Digest will have an increase of 100 per cent. But Time magazine, an American publication printed in the United States, which comes into Canada in competition with our own Canadian magazines, will be asked to increase its postal costs by only 59 per cent. I cannot understand this. Why should an American magazine get off as easily as that?

It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that whether we like it or not we will have to accept these increases that the Postmaster General has put before the house. With a majority government they will be carried. We will have to accept that, and everybody who goes into a post office to use Her Majesty's Mail service and buys a stamp will be obliged to take it at the new rate.

Businesses all across the country will have to absorb the increases. All customers of the post office will have to pay them, from the operator of a one-man business who mails out his month end accounts hoping they will be paid by return mail, so that he can meet his own already high bills in order to stay in business, to the large mail order houses, and even to the fellow who writes a letter to his sweetheart.

If we are going to have to pay these new rates we are entitled to better service. I am at a loss to know why the minister's predecessor and this government did not institute efficiency measures, did not step up productivity in the Post Office Department, and did not put into force those measures which the Postmaster General outlined on the resolution stage. Had all this been done, maybe we would not now have such large increases in the rates.

The Postmaster General said he would close down smaller post offices, amalgamate rural routes, establish distribution centres, instal mechanized mail handling, introduce will get my news over the radio or televi- containerization, have letter carriers use sion," two news media the operations of small trucks, and implement a new sorting which this parliament subsidizes. What will system in large urban centres. I am sure he happen is that newspapers will pass on this has in mind the zip code system which is extra cost to advertisers, and they in turn used with great efficiency in the United predecessors it might not have been necessary to introduce such drastic increases in postal rates.

With the new rates, Canadians will be in a position to demand service, but I have not heard the Postmaster General guarantee that we can be assured of next day delivery. The way mail deliveries have been going of late I am inclined to think we had better mail service when delivery was by stagecoaches. A letter mailed from within a radius of 60 miles of Toronto or in that general area might arrive in Toronto the next day, or it might not arrive until four days later. Sometimes a letter mailed from Toronto and addressed to my community of Guelph, 60 miles away, does not travel any faster than it did in the days of the stagecoach. Sometimes a letter mailed in England will reach my area more quickly than a letter mailed from Toronto. We will be looking forward to an improved service. We will be looking for next day delivery in all possible cases.

What will the situation be in respect of the five day delivery service? I wonder whether the officials in the department have realized that all our national holidays fall on a Monday. On Tuesday the poor courier will have to deliver the mail for four days, Friday, Saturday, Sunday and Monday. He will have to lug this around to my house and yours. Already he is complaining about having to carry a bag which is too heavy. What kind of service can we expect when the mail for a period of three or four days will have to be delivered in one day.

We might consider also the situation in respect of the retail stores, many of which close on Mondays. This is a situation which is very common across Canada. So, under the new system, in the downtown section of the cities a four day volume of mail will have to be handled on one day. I can conceive of many problems in respect of next day delivery; we are likely to have a two or three day delivery. What will the situation be with regard to doctors, lawyers, and others who depend on good mail service?

Then there is the situation concerning bills of lading. A railway car which is sitting on a siding cannot be unloaded until the bill of lading has been received. That car might be [Mr. Hales.]

States. He also mentioned the possibility of has ordered those goods will be in an unformaking the post office a crown corporation. tunate position because he will have custom-Had all these things been done long ago by his ers waiting. I am sure the answer will be that these places of business should be instructed to rent lock boxes in the post office, so that they would be able to pick up their mail daily. This will not solve the problem, because at the present time it is very difficult to rent a post office box when such boxes are in short supply.

> The statement given to us by the Postmaster General shows that for the year 1968-69 there will be a loss of $2½ million in respect of post office lock boxes. If we were to step up the use of these boxes we would probably lose more money. These are some of the situations which I believe will develop under the five-day delivery system, and if efficiency, productivity, and other things are not introduced into the operation and policies of the Post Office Department.

> Not too long ago an increase was introduced in relation to special delivery letters. A special delivery letter should be delivered to the addressee as soon as the post office receives it. I am told, however, that shortly after this increase in price became effective special delivery letters would go out on the regular route if the delivery in that area happened to be in the morning. If the delivery happened to be in the afternoon, the letters would be sent out by special courier. This is an example of where the price went up and the service went down. I am told this is what happened in this situation.

> I received a letter from a merchant—and he has the facts to back up his case—who told me that a parcel post package took six days to reach him in Guelph, mailed from Toronto. 60 miles away. During the Christmas period a person in Guelph must allow seven days for a parcel post package to be delivered in Toronto in time for Christmas.

> In closing I should like to say a few words about the philatelic division of the Post Office Department, and take this opportunity to thank the Postmaster General and the officials in his department for having produced a very nice looking and much appreciated memorial stamp in honour of the late Lieutenant-Colonel John McCrae. This was well received by the veterans of this country and I am sure by every Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hales: I am informed that this branch loaded with perishable goods. The person who of the Post Office Department has a turnover of about $1\frac{1}{4}$ million a year. Most of this represents a profit. Because of this one might be led to suggest that we should be turning out some of the most attractive stamps that could be made. I am sorry to say, however, that Canadian stamps do not compare with those of other countries. Take a look at the stamps of Jamaica, Antigua or some of the other Caribbean countries. These are beautiful stamps with clear and crisp colours, and a pleasing photograph. They are real treasures for anybody who is in the business of collecting stamps. I believe the Post Office Department could do a better job in the production of stamps, and I am sure that the philatelic branch will be imbued with the zest and zeal of our new Postmaster General, so that we will have some of the best looking stamps in the world. I see no reason why Canada should not have stamps that are as attractive as any in the world.

Finally, I should like to say that I am opposed to this very important bill being passed until it has been considered by a committee. I am also opposed to the principle of increasing charges and reducing services. It is not good business, nor can I understand why anyone would wish to do it. I am sorry the bill has not been introduced in another form. I would like to see the post office become a crown corporation.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we are now discussing the Post Office bill and, in my opinion, this discussion is taking a very interesting direction, to judge from the speeches made these last few days. In fact, the majority of the members are blaming the government for putting the cart before the horse.

Mr. Speaker, let us refer this bill to a committee. The minister already said some time ago that a group of experts of his department are studying the reorganization of the Post Office Department and rethinking completely the structure of that department, in case it were to become a crown corporation. If this measure is passed, it will render our discussion and this bill absolutely worthless, since the whole concept of mail service in Canada would be completely changed.

Mr. Speaker, the minister would like us to pass his Post Office bill in a hurry, before we learn the results of this study. I find the attitude of the minister rather strange; he is putting the cart before the horse and serving interests other than those of the Canadian people, since, if this bill is passed, the cost to the Canadian people will be increased, without knowing whether another study may not be undertaken in a year or in two or three years to determine whether or not the Post Office Department is to become a crown corporation.

Mr. Speaker, the matter is serious indeed. With regard the possibility of the Post Office Department becoming a crown corporation, I tried to obtain some information on the subject recently, but the minister did not answer when I asked him whether experts are really studying this matter. I would like the minister to confirm it now, since the question was declared out of order on October 22, as may be seen from page 1647 of Hansard. I therefore ask the minister again to tell us whether studies are really being conducted at this time, in order to ensure that this bill has a solid base.

Mr. Speaker, an article published in the newspaper Le Devoir dated May 23, 1967, reported as follows:

President Lyndon Johnson set up a special commission to study the reorganization of the U.S. Post Office Department and its eventual replacement by a government corporation.

We see the same conclusions, the same evolution, in many countries.

Here, in Canada, we had the Anderson report in 1965. The same article also mentioned this report, and I quote:

In his report dated September 27, 1965, Judge Anderson made the following comments: "While I was trying—

Here comes the interesting part.

"While I was trying to determine whether the postal employees' salaries were fair and reasonable, I began to ask myself whether it might not be indicated, in order to ensure better postal services in Canada and to meet the needs of the people who operate it, to hand over its administration to a Crown corporation."

Judge Anderson goes on to give the arguments in favour of turning the Canada Post Office into a Crown corporation:

- 1. Postal employees constitute a distinct and homogeneous group; they would readily constitute an appropriate negotiating group.
- 2. The postal service earns the major part of the income used to pay its employees.
- 3. Postal employees are, for the most part, semiskilled workers and because of this there is great similarity between their group and labour unions in industry.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Judge Anderson continues his eight-point demonstration to prove beyond a doubt that the problem in the Post Office Department is not one of deficit but one requiring the reorganization of its whole structure.

in 1966 the Montpetit report. I quote:

As a result of persistent uneasiness within the Post Office Department, the government set up a royal commission of inquiry on working conditions in the postal service, known as the Montpetit Commission. That commission submitted its report in Octber 1966. Amongst its 282 recommendations-

This excerpt reveals how disorganized the department is. The commission made several recommendations about the advisability of turning that department into a crown corporation.

All that goes to prove without any doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the problem now facing us is a basic one. It is a matter of whether the Post Office Department should remain and continue to operate as it does now, that is as a government department, or if it should be turned into a crown corporation with a mixed economy.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it would stupid for hon. member to pass the present bill when they know that before long everything will have to be done over again, because the present structure of the Post Office Department will be obsolete. It must be adjusted to the conditions of a modern economy.

Mr. Speaker, this point deserves a thorough study, so that it is possible to decide whether every dollar taken from the taxpayer is well invested and brings in the maximum return.

I think there is a great deal of waste in the federal administration. The budget speech of last night proved it clearly, with its deficit of $760 million; it is a proof that our economy is in recession. That is why Canadian taxpayers are looking towards this parliament from which they expect immediate solutions.

However, Mr. Speaker, they pass the time bringing in useless bills. Moreover, the minister has now the following alternatives: either act as an administrator or put money first and tell us: "The Post Office Department must at all costs avoid a deficit." Such a position could be justified; I admit, but if at the same time the minister interferes with the basic rights of each Canadian citizen to be informed, I say that he does not then merely deal with a moral problem but also with an administrative matter and that he must alter his positions.

What astonishes me, because I always held him for a trustworthy man, is that the minister is always trying to force the opposition to side with the financial powers, instead of sidcannot understand it. The opposition would L'Union, which is published in the Eastern

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we have also had have to be blind to allow a bill like this to pass.

> Mr. Speaker, my impression is that this bill has been drafted by high officials of the Post Office Department, who have abandoned their own rights as citizens, in order to enter the civil service. They have no political opinions other than those of the government which they consider to be the best, and they say to the minister that it is absolutely necessary to do this. Then the minister says: that is how it must be. Our minister is a blind man guided by other blind men and when a blind man is guided by blind men, only one thing can happen: people are knocked about and deprived of their fundamental rights.

> When we read the many telegrams we receive every day from all parts of Canada, when we read the briefs, the newspaper articles, and the letters we receive, when we meet people, we realize that, from coast to coast, there is a general outcry against the bill since it puts the cart before the horse, and asks us to take a stand even though we do not know exactly whether the Post Office Department should not change its constitution.

> I refer here to a very interesting editorial published in the October 17, 1968 edition of the Quebec newspaper Le Soleil, and signed by Mr. Raymond Dubé, an excellent journalist who confirms what I have just said, and I quote:

> From the strictly economic point of view, the attitude taken by the Post Office Department is understandable, but its position becomes absolutely unjustified and untenable when it places the economic soundness of a state-provided service above the respect for a principle as unquestioned today as the obligation for a democratic govern-ment to ensure that the whole population can fully exercise its right to be informed and to eliminate anything which may directly or indirectly interfere with that right.

> At this stage, I should like to state, with supportive evidence, that the bill now under consideration is interfering very seriously with this fundamental right to information of every Canadian citizen.

> Mr. Speaker, there is another point which I must make at this stage of the debate. It concerns the extremely critical situation of Canadian weeklies, and particularly those of Quebec, which are small papers with small resources and which, in many cases, are the only real source of information available to the population.

Mr. Speaker, I have here an editorial taken ing with the people. This beats me and I from the October 16 edition of the paper

Townships, signed by Mr. Marcel Rivard, a journalist from Victoriaville. I should like to read it to the minister, that he may know what the people think of him. All the hon. members have expressed the views of their constituents during our consideration of this bill, and I think the minister should know what the people of the riding of Lotbinière think of his bill. The editorial written by Marcel Rivard is entitled: "A stab in the back for the weekly papers".

The title alone gives us an idea of the atmosphere which prevails among the people. I quote the article in question:

The local weeklies seem prepared for an increase in the postal rates but they object to an increase which will triple the cost of their postal charges.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that under the present system, the government solutions can be but increases, increases and again increases of rates and taxes and it is always the little wage earner who foots the bill. Besides, as we saw again last night in the budget speech, the small wage earner will again pay more taxes for the benefit of the rich.

The bill introduced by the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) certainly does not find favour with the Quebec weeklies—and I should like the minister to listen to me—no more than with the dailies who will have to cut out their Saturday delivery. And Mr. Rivard continues:

Who will suffer from that bill, if it passed such as it is, if not principally the rural areas?

I have to mention that Marcel Rivard writes in several weeklies of the Bois-Franc and the eastern townships areas.

And that is why the weeklies including the eastern townships newspaper L^*Union , do not agree with Mr. Kierans.

In fact, it is believed, and rightly so in some quarters, that the new Postmaster General considers his department as a business which must at any price show a significant profit at the end of a fiscal year—

And I add: even at the expense, of the Canadian citizen even if he knows it.

—as to the weeklies, they think that it is exactly the opposite—

For more than a decade, we have seen state television take away from them a more than significant portion of the so-called "national" commercial advertising—

Through state television which we finance with the taxpayers' money.

—because, with its system, television has crept in every area in Quebec and its penetration rate in the homes is quite high. However, the question is whether state television has succeeded in taking away the exceptional role of the weekly which is to reflect the life of a community; it has not, and never will—Of the two, the television and the weekly, which is then the stronger?

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Marcel Rivard replies quite objectively.

The weekly paper.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) made a very interesting and well documented speech. He explained the situation I have described, from another point of view. He listed a number of weeklies which are faced with problems and, here again, the minister makes no answer and keeps urging us to pass his bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is unthinkable that, in 1968, we have to tolerate a government which, to the knowledge of everybody, proves dictatorial to the point of imposing its views upon the people, in order to pave the way for a socialist regime.

Mr. Marcel Rivard continues and I quote:

It would seem that is not his intention, even less that of the minister Kierans, since the new legislation as introduced, without any precise wording, in the House of Commons constitutes—that is what is unfortunate and inadmissible—a stab in the back for the weeklies, a mortal wound for some of them.

And if tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, some weeklies, such as L'Union des Cantons de l'Est, le Nouvelliste, Le Courrier-Sud, L'Echo l'Abitibi, La Frontière—and many more since there are over 150 in Quebec alone—are forced to fold, the population will have a right to say: If we lose our regional means of information which created a certain climate in our area and among us a feeling of friendship, which preserved our strength and vitality, it will be the fault of the nice and big Liberal party, it will be the fault of a nice and big majority government, it will be the fault of a group of Liberal members who will have lacked the courage to rise in the house to protest against measures that they know are drastic ones. They keep their seats and remain silent although they know what repercussions they might have. That pleases me to a certain extent because it shows the population that only members without any financial ties, free as the air they breathe-there are fourteen in the house, the members of the Ralliement Créditiste-who can stand up for private enterprise and the people in general.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

easy for them to rise and speak. They have the right to do so because we live in a democratic country. Let them rise and say what they think of the Postmaster General, what they think of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I received in my office a telegram from Le Soleil and three times, telegrams from the Quebec Chronicle Telegraph. I also received telegrams from L'Union des Cantons de l'Est, from La Tribune, from Le Nouvelliste of Trois-Rivières and as the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste said, from nearly all Quebec newspapers. All members are aware of that situation. We do not want the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government to think that we will accept that without any protest.

Mr. Speaker, we must wake up. It is about time that we assume our responsibilities in that field as in others. The minister said today, and I will conclude my remarks with that: I urge you, hon. members of the opposition, to pass my bill to reduce the cost of public information, so that the Post Office Department can balance its budget and make some profits like private enterprise. I implore you, help me to save my department from failure. And in a year, to the day, the same minister-if he is still in Ottawa, and I doubt, because his popularity is rapidly declining-will say to us: I beg of you, vote my estimates to make up for my deficit. That is what we have seen last night.

A few months ago, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance, now Secretary of State for External Affairs, (Mr. Sharp) told us: I beg the hon. members of the opposition to give me the authority to borrow money to make up for my deficit, and I guarantee that with an increase of 5 per cent in taxation, we will not have any deficit.

Last night, a speech of more than 11,000 words was needed to repeat this rubbish that we have known for a hundred years: I beg of you, vote my estimates, we have a deficit of $760 millions.

Mr. Speaker, I have taught school at the primary and secondary levels. I even taught children in an occupational centre, that is mentally retarded children. I would not go so far as to say that the house is made up of mentally retarded people, let me be clear on that; but I say that the house reacts in the same way before such tremendous deficits, and the government seems to think that we of the opposition, are completely irresponsible.

Mr. Fortin: Some government members are At this stage of the debate, I want to tell the now trying to interrupt me; it would be so government that it must reconsider its decision without any political sentimentalizing, because the Post Office bill would stab the weeklies in the back. I therefore ask him to review his decision, bearing in mind the well informed speeches of the members of the opposition and the incalculable representations made every hour and every day of the week. I ask him to pay particular attention to the thousands of letters we receive. I ask him to acknowledge a principle has never been disputed, that of an objective information in a democratic land.

> Consequently, we would like, as would the whole population, not only from Lotbinière or the eastern townships in Quebec, but from all Canadian provinces, to see the minister, for one or two more months, refer the matter to a committee, to which members of the government party, Progressive Conservatives, New Democrats and the Ralliement Créditiste could invite witnesses. For example, such newspapers as Le Soleil, Le Nouvelliste, the Quebec Chronicle Telegraph, Le Manitobain, or others as Le Patriote and Les Quotidiens du Québec Inc. could be asked to express their opinions, so that officials would have plenty of time-since they like that-to study the possibility of transforming the Post Office Department in a Crown Corporation. If we do not do it today, we shall have to start all over again tomorrow. So, why not get at it right away?

I am therefore asking the minister to reconsider seriously his decision and to comply with the wish of the opposition thanks to his majority and to his authority, by referring the bill to a special committee which could thoroughly study the matter, and make the right to information prevail, while enabling the Post Office Department to provide an intelligent service without a deficit.

I believe that both are reconcilable Mr. Speaker; I think that it is possible to have a Post Office Department which would not incur a deficit and a right to information which would be respected and protected; in my opinion, both are possible. However, up to now, it seems to be impossible. Why? Because we do not take the necessary means and do not discuss the matter. What about the Montpetit report published in 1966 and the Anderson report published in 1965? What about the Carter report and the Royal Commission of inquiry on Banking and Finance?

What about the Glasgow report? Those enquiminister? With the results that their reports have been shelved. Years have passed, governments have passed and the said reports still are there accumulating dust.

When the government becomes conscious of a gathering storm, when it feels that the atmosphere is unsettled, that people are dissatisfied then some representative of the government stands up and with a big smile, like the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, (Mr. Pepin) he tells us that a royal enquiry commission will be established. Then they appoint judges, or people like Mr. Jean-Louis Gagnon, an ex-communist, and they conduct an inquiry to quiet the storm. Once people are satisfied, they say: Ottawa is The government is happy. An enquiry has been made. Some people climb on the gravy train, at the expenses of the taxpayer thanks to incredibly high salaries. Those inquiries cost $20,000 or $25,000 a year. I am told that it even costs $100 a day to delve into a matter, to solve a problem, to study it, to read briefs, receive them, hear the witnesses and, once the inquiry is closed, hundreds of thousands of dollars are paid out again. The printers are paid to publish the reports. We saw what happened to the B & B report for instance, and the Glassco report, the Carter report, the Porter report. They were consigned to oblivion. When the storm is over and peace has been restored, there is a rush to put away on dusty shelves a report which deals with a specific situation. Meanwhile, restrictive, negative measures are introduced which give nothing to the Canadian people, which on the contrary deprive them of the daily bread to which they are entitled, which is known as information, and which is a fundamental right in a democratic society.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the situation is extremely serious at this point, and if the minister maintains his absurd and untenable position, tomorrow we will witness an information crisis, a crisis involving the right to free speech, to freedom of the press. Who knows whether tomorrow perhaps the freedom of the press may not be attacked by the same majority government? Who knows? Perhaps the right to vote may be attacked by the majority government since that same government is buying votes. Who knows? Maybe this very government will attack the freedom Post Office Department being assessed for of the press or the freedom of expression.

Mr. Speaker, I think the situation is ry commissions have costed millions of dol- extremely serious. It should not be considered lars and with what results, I am asking the as a sentimental issue but rather as a matter of reasoning. As to whether or not it is more important that the Post Office Department should pile up deficits or that the right to information should prevail and should be fed, I then say that priority is self-evident and that we must keep on feeding public information rather than cut it to the heart as the minister is doing, arguing that the question of money must come first so that he may tell the opposition next year: Would you please, I beg you, vote more credits for me because my plans did not materialize and I come back with empty hands and facing another deficit.

> As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I tell the minister he has no conscience if he comes back one year from now—it is obvious that the bill will go through since this government is authoritarian—and if he asks us to vote credits for him, because his department shows the usual yearly deficit. I will tell him then that he is unscrupulous and that he has made a complete about-face.

> I should like the minister to consider that. All members, even the government members, would be glad to sit on a special committee to examine more thoroughly the situation in the Post Office Department so as to update that department and render it more profit-earning, in order to serve more adequately the Canadian people, since after all it is always the Canadian people, the Canadian citizen, the little man who has to pay for the damage done by a high-handed majority government.

[English]

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this amendment, Mr. Speaker, because I feel very strongly about the impact of this bill on the Canadian people. The proposals contained in Bill No. C-116 will have a direct bearing on all Canadians, rich or poor, and will hit their pocketbooks. In common with other legislation so far produced in this just society, this bill will hit the low income Canadian the hardest. At the outset, I should like to concur in the remarks of my colleague the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) made in this house on Monday. I, too, question the accounting procedures of the Post Office Department, and wonder if the financial picture is as bleak as it is being painted.

Several questions come to my mind. Is the charges which should be assumed by other departments of government? Has every operation of the department been thoroughly studied, and the waste and fat cut out? I will be the first to admit that costs have gone up—and this seems to be a way of life under this government.

As a businessman, however, I also know there is no pat answer to eliminating a deficit. It is fine to say, "I will just raise my price". I believe the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) will agree, however, that it is equally important to re-examine operating expenses, to eliminate unnecessary expenditures, but without reducing the quality of the service you are giving your customers. This is why we, on this side of the house, have proposed that this bill be referred to a standing committee, where the whole operation of the department can be analysed and suggestions made to eliminate any unnecessary expenditures, to develop and promote new sources of revenue and new types of service.

Many suggestions have just been made by my colleague the hon, member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) and I feel these are worthy of consideration. If this bill is pushed through the house in its present form, it will mean reduced service for large sections of the Canadian public, especially the rural mail subscriber who cannot afford to pay the increased subscription rates that will result. In my opinion, this is just another in a series of retrograde measures by which the post office has steadily cut down its service to the Canadian people. In no other field have Canadians experienced so drastic a reduction in service, coupled with an enormous increase in rates. In no other field do Canadians pay so much more for so much less.

If this bill becomes law, Canadians, in this age of expansion and acceleration, in this swinging society, will end up with a mail service that is slower, less frequent and less convenient than that enjoyed by a previous generation in the horse and buggy age. In return for this service, we will be asked to pay an exorbitant rate which has increased in inverse proportions to the service provided. One cannot help but wonder if the post office millenium will be no mail delivery at all, at enormous public expense.

Some of the statements made by the Postmaster General in support of this bill have been confusing, to put it charitably. Last week, in answer to a question in this house he said, as reported at page 1150 of Hansard:

—our present subsidy to newspaper publishers amounts to approximately $37 million.

[Mr. Thomas (Moncton).]

• (4:50 p.m.)

I have tried, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot understand this statement. Surely the minister will admit that if any subsidy is involved it is being given to the rural mail subscriber, not the publisher.

Let me quote from an editorial in the Moncton Transcript for Wednesday, October 16. This editorial is captioned "Let's keep the record straight!", and is as follows:

In order for the publisher to receive the subsidy, he would have to charge the rural mail subscriber the same as the carrier delivered subscriber and pocket the difference between what it cost to deliver by mail and by carrier. But this he does not do and Mr. Kierans does not seem to understand this fact.

This is not an isolated editorial opinion. The implication is plain: if this bill passes and the so-called subsidy is reduced, any increase in mailing costs will be passed on to the subscriber in the form of increased rates, though these higher rates will still not meet the increased cost of delivery. We have heard various estimates of increased cost, some being as high as 400 per cent, but it seems fair to say that the increases will be so great that subscription rates will be raised by as much as 40 per cent. This could mean a drastic drop in rural subscribers, with severe effects on weekly papers and those dailies which have a large rural subscriber list.

The Globe and Mail for Friday, October 11, reported that this could be a death blow to such papers. It could mean that papers of this type would no longer effectively cover rural Canada. This would be another of those retrograde steps to which I referred earlier; and if the reduction of the so-called subsidy to the rural subscriber puts the price of the newspaper beyond his reach, the government alone must bear full responsibility.

I find it hard to accept the position that the rural mail subscriber must pay the whole shot for his daily or weekly newspaper. Does not the fact that the government is prepared to pay the deficit of the C.B.C. out of general revenue establish the principle that the right to be informed in this country does not have to be borne by the individual alone? Why should there be a distinction between different forms of news dissemination? The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) has expressed this very well, and I echo his sentiments.

Running all through the defence of this bill by hon. members on the government side of the house, Mr. Speaker, is the inference that the effect of the legislation will be to soak the corporations, the publishers, the mail order houses, the businessmen. The Postmaster General has already announced increased rates for third class mail to become effective November 1. The inference has been that this will eliminate a lot of junk mail, or at least force it to pay a larger share of the costs involved.

This is fine; if the new rates do eliminate a lot of this nuisance mail, I will be the first to congratulate the Postmaster General. But my concern is for the legitimate mail order houses, those firms that have played such a large part in building rural Canada, and are even yet an integral part of the Canadian way of life. Under these new rates they get a double jolt—the double whammy, as my colleague from Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) so aptly put it. The cost of mailing their catalogues will show a large increase, and the cost of mailing merchandise orders to their customers will be increased approximately 50 per cent. Now, how will they absorb these increased costs of doing business? I suggest to you, sir, that they will not absorb them but instead pass them on in increased prices to the consumer.

So here we have it: No matter how you try to camouflage it, the end result will be the same. In the final analysis, the public pays. Let us not try to fool anyone. The net result of this bill will be to increase the cost of living to those who can least afford to pay it—the average consumer. This is why we on this side of the house feel so strongly that this bill should be submitted to a committee for a full and complete analysis of all the problems involved. We cannot understand the minister's great haste to ram the bill through the house. Why does he not want a thorough study of the department? To return again to the editorial from which I quoted earlier:

Further, Mr. Kierans does not seem to want to have these points brought to light by committee study. In spite of repeated opposition demands he has steadfastly refused to refer this matter to a Commons committee where all this would be revealed.

Canadians have long wanted a majority government which would be a strong government. Is this an indication that instead of a strong government they have an autocratic government?

The Postmaster General's argument seems to stand on one premise—that every department of government must pay its own way. I submit that this is a false premise. There are certain services that every Canadian is entitled to, and if necessary these must be subsidized out of general revenue. This govern-recognized this principle in the case of the C.B.C., the C.N.R. and the Department of National Defence. Can the government now say to the Canadian people: "You can only use the postal services if you are able to pay for them"?

After listening last night to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), it is apparent that this government expects the small wage earner to pay the whole cost of the just society. But surely he should have some choice as to how his money should be spent. Let the Postmaster General prevail upon his colleagues to cut out some of the waste and trash from the C.B.C. The millions saved could be applied to the postal deficit, and he could earn the thanks of thousands of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business, as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

SOCIAL SECURITY

EXTENSION OF EXEMPTION PERIOD FOR MIGRANT AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of extending from 25 to 40 days the exemption period for social security, unemployment insurance deductions and taxation deductions presently allowed in the case of migrant agricultural workers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to a motion which has very important implications for that part of the country from which I come and, indeed, for all employers of agricultural labourers and workers throughout Canada.

In speaking to this motion, Mr. Speaker, I should first like to review very briefly some of the background that led up to the regulations with which this motion is concerned. In the 1930's massive unemployment swept across our country, placing hundreds of thousands of workers in a very unenviable position and causing them undue hardship. As a result, Mr. Speaker, successive governments sought some means whereby this hardship could be prevented from recurring, and in their wisdom in August, 1940 a system of unemployment insurance was introduced in Canada. The unemployment insurance commission was set up to administer the plan, Mr. Speaker, and in July 1941 employers ment, and every government before it, has began to make the required deductions from workers' wages. However, it was not until just recently, in July 1966, that further deductions from workers' wages were made for the purpose of the Canada Pension Plan.

• (5:00 p.m.)

At the beginning, these regulations, privileges and benefits were made available only to workers in industry, and they exempted groups of workers in agriculture, logging and so on. When farm organizations saw the disadvantage under which agricultural workers laboured, agricultural workers in the meantime being more difficult to obtain because industrial production had increased in this country, those farm organizations sought some avenue whereby they might make applicable to farm workers benefits similar to those that had been given to industrial workers. Accordingly they presented briefs to the government of the day, and eventually these plans were made available to agricultural workers. Effective on January 1, 1966, at the time when the Canada Pension Plan was introduced, agricultural workers had to pay deductions from their wages.

The second page of the pamphlet distributed by the government when the Canada Pension Plan was put into operation reads in part as follows. The heading is, "Employment Not Covered", and this relates specifically to my resolution. Underneath the heading are found the following words:

Employment as a migratory worker—in occupations like farming, fishing, trapping, hunting, logging—where you work less than 25 days a year for the same employer or where you earn less than $250 a year from the same employer;

In April, 1967, the unemployment insurance legislation was extended to cover agricultural workers. The directive which was sent to all employers of farm labour on August 24 reads in part as follows:

-Unemployment insurance regulations-

-and this refers to agricultural workers-

—have therefore been changed to bring them in line with the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan as they pertain to the payment of contributions for casual agricultural workers.

A temporary or casual employee in agriculture or horticulture is one who earns less than $250.00 in cash wages and works for less than 25 days in a calendar year. Effective immediately such an employee is not insurable.

Plans such as this that apply to agricultural workers have been in operation for two seasons. It is time for government officials charged with the administration of such plans to make an assessment of the success of their operation. I propose to outline to hon. member some of the results which have become apparent in these two years of operation, and I wish to suggest ways in which improvements may be brought about.

I must say that government officials charged with the responsibility for putting into operation these plans took steps to make farmers well acquainted with the way in which the schemes would operate. Employers of agricultural labour do not quarrel with the provisions that are made for those who work permanently on farms—that is, for those who work a whole season. Farmers are happy to see such workers receiving benefits. My resolution has to do only with migratory workers.

At meetings sponsored by the departments of agriculture in the provinces the government made its position clear. I myself attended a meeting in our organization to familiarize myself with the farmer's part in the operation of this plan. Officials from the Unemployment Insurance Commission and from the area taxation offices came to these meetings, explained the plans to farmers, and heard complaints and objections, which were many. As a matter of fact I felt sorry for officials who tried to explain this complicated legislation to our farmers. The standard answer from these people to farmers' objections was, "We do not make the laws; we only interpret and enforce them. You will have to talk to your member of parliament".

I am now speaking to the government and asking it to recognize our farmers' problems. With the utmost sincerity I plead with members of the government charged with administering these plans to heed what I am about to say.

First, the farmer lacks training in accounting, yet he is obliged, under the regulations, to keep all manner of records. He must show the wages paid, the days worked, how much is attributable to board and meals, since these items are counted as wages, and in addition, he must make deductions with respect to unemployment insurance and the Canada Pension Plan as well as income tax.

I know many farmers who are skilled in raising crops; yet they have not the remotest idea of accounting procedures or how to keep the simplest records. Also, the farmer just has not the time to devote to all these tasks. He himself will be labouring during the harvest season and he may not have time to look after his casual labourers. The farmer hires his labourers, some of whom may work only a day or two, and quit. He must replace those workers by going to the marketplace. In my area the farmer will be looking for tobacco workers. In addition, farmers in my area have the task of curing tobacco.

One might ask: Why does the farmer not hire clerical help? It is not practical to hire clerical help for two months of the year; it does not make sense. Also, clerks are just not available. I have heard of accountants who hire themselves out to farmers; yet when the crisis comes, when the accountants are most needed, they are not available, not being able to spread themselves among all the farmers who have retained them. Farmers have neither the time nor the experience to handle that type of work. Even though the farmer may retain an accountant, he must still keep detailed records to turn over to that accountant.

There is also the matter of the lack of education, and the language problem. In the area I represent we have a great many socalled new Canadians whose mother tongue is other than English or French. Though they may converse reasonably well in English they have the greatest difficulty in understanding printed directions and instructions which arrive on their desks in reams almost every day.

Mr. Nesbitt: Seven copies.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Perhaps the language difficulty is our greatest difficulty. I talked to one young farmer who had a successful farm, a modest home and a good income. But he was overwhelmed with the paperwork that daily came to his desk and he said quite frankly, "I do not know what all this means. They are going to come here and fine me because I could not fill out these papers." That farmer just could not understand what he was required to do.

Farmers resent being a collection agency for the government. In addition, they resent having to police the plans I am talking about. Many migrant workers bitterly resent having deductions taken from their wages. As a result the farmer is forced to make the deduction his worker does not like, and thus the farmer becomes a policeman enforcing the plan.

What is the effect on the workers themselves? I am speaking only of migratory pathetic. However, they said—and this seems workers, the people who go in for the harvest reasonable enough—that the scheme had only season. But there are others who help at these been in operation for one year and that it was the high schools and retired persons. These people resent the deductions and it is difficult for the farmer to induce them to work for him. And at the end of the 25 days, when he must deduct these sums from their wages. what happens? These workers quit their work and move to the next farm. Twenty-five days are exempt, you see; so they work for a new employer and are not required to submit to the deductions. The government therefore is not really making any money out of this. The department is not getting anything now, because the majority of these people will not work for more than 24 days before they move

Consider the situation in which the farmer is placed. His crop is in the field, and something must be done in order to recoup the money invested in it, to repay a bank loan which might amount to as much as $25,000. These farmers are placed in an unenviable position.

A word about the effect on students. It seems eminently unfair to deduct from a student's wages sums in respect of these special plans, when he is working only to finance his way through college or to build up savings which will enable him to enter college. On the one hand, governments are taking money from students, while on the other it is making available student loans to help finance their education. These people will never benefit in the majority of cases from the contributions they make and in any case the sums contributed are negligible.

The solution lies in the resolution I have offered to the house and to the government for consideration, a motion which asks that this exemption be extended from 25 to 40 days. This would allow all agricultural crops to be harvested without the red tape which the present situation entails. I am not asking this as an individual, or because half a dozen farmers have urged me to raise the matter. I am speaking on behalf of the whole of the agriculture industry.

I have before me briefs which the Ontario fruit growers and the Ontario tobacco growers have presented to the Department of National Revenue in Ottawa asking for consideration of the proposal I have made this afternoon. The department listened with great respect to the arguments presented to them, and I feel the officials and others were symtimes, including housewives, students from not government policy to make any changes in legislation until it had been given a fair trial. I think the time has now come to make an assessment based on the facts I have laid before the house, facts which can be demonstrated in any number of instances.

In order to elaborate further as to the difficulties faced by farmers, may I be permitted to read into Hansard part of the brief which was presented to the department? How much time do I have left?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There are about four minutes left.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): This is what the brief said:

It cannot be denied that to comply with the terms of The Canada Pensions Act, far more extensive farm records will have to be maintained. This will principally affect sharegrowers as well as farm owners. The bulk of the work will occur during harvest when the time for the bookkeeping can least be afforded. While large farm operators may well be able to cope with such problems, the smaller farmers, who form the bulk in numbers, will be hard pressed to do the necessary work.

Producers will be insecure in their labour force, not knowing at the time of hiring whether an employee will quit before the 25 days or $250 limits are reached.

This refers to the $250. I am suggesting that we forget the amount of money and simply give a 40-day exemption. The brief goes on:

At hiring, the farmer must decide whether to deduct Canada Pension Plan contributions or not. Will he be able to collect retroactively if he does not and the employee goes over the minimum? He must calculate allowance for board and lodging once $250 is reached. In all the general stress and strain associated with harvest, the time available for proper keeping of detailed books becomes a question of considerable importance.

The ethnic groups also have a problem in that a number of farmers have difficulty with English and French languages.

Some of this is repetitive and I do not think I will burden hon, members with more.

In December of the same year the tobacco growers presented a second brief demonstrating their concern. In addition, I have here a petition signed by 204 farmers from different parts of Ontario, after my motion had been placed on the order paper. This is what one farmer had to say about the situation, and I quote him because it sums up what so many farmers think about this plan. I refer to Mr. Jack Gilchrist on whose land near Guelph the international ploughing match is held. This article appeared in the London Free Press of Saturday, October 12: legislation in the form of workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance and Canada pension deductions for hired labour.

Jack Gilchrist has become disenchanted with the extra workload placed on farmers through [Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand).]

The article goes on to say that in order to be relieved of all the bookkeeping and red tape in connection with hired help Mr. Gilchrist has placed his herd under contract to another man. The article says, quoting Mr. Gilchrist:

I am now relieved of all this bookkeeping. There's so much red tape with hired help (the deductions) its driving farmers out of the business.

Perhaps that is an exaggeration, but it certainly describes the feelings of the majority of farmers in this regard. The results of the changes proposed would be to remove some of the irritations which I have outlined. It seems to me that a good law should accomplish its purpose without causing undue vexation to those who are called upon to submit to it. These laws and regulations as they now apply to farmers do the opposite and create in farming people a disrespect for laws and regulations. The government has a responsibility to remove as many of these irritations as possible.

It might be argued that by taking the course I suggest the government would lose considerable revenue. But every farmer is willing at the end of the year when his crop has been harvested to fill out the T-4 forms in connection with income tax which show the total earnings of all his employees. Revenue authorities can then easily determine whether or not an individual should pay. The amount which the Unemployment Insurance Commission would lose is negligible, since this applies only to migrant workers. I am glad the parliamentary secretaries to some of the departments are here to listen to what I have had to say. I hope I have pleaded my case earnestly and sincerely, and I trust hon. gentlemen opposite will take note of these things because I can assure them they will hear more on the subject.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): I wish to give general support to the motion moved by the hon. member from Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles). I have two or three points to mention and I hope I can do so in a constructive fashion which might strengthen the motion.

• (5:20 p.m.)

First of all, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand. By this motion he is carrying on the tradition of his predecessor, the former member for Norfolk, Mr. Jack Roxburgh, who along with members industry and many other industries that were on both sides of the house expressed the concern of the farming industry to government and parliament. I am pleased to see that his successor is carrying on with the same type of arguments and constructive proposals that characterized Mr. Roxburgh.

The motion itself is somewhat broader than the argument used by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand. I think it is pretty difficult to deal with this matter in isolation. By that I mean it is difficult to do anything constructive by referring only to the regulations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, which were used as the basis for my hon. friend's remarks. As I say, the motion itself is much broader than his remarks.

It calls for-extending from twenty-five to forty days the exemption period for social security-

Within that context I am sure it is really referring to the Canada Pension Plan and to unemployment insurance deductions as mentioned by the hon. member. I wish to emphasize, as he did, that here we are dealing only with itinerant farm labourers, not with permanent farm labourers who benefit from the provisions of these social measures. They received a real benefit when they were covered by the Canada Pension Plan in 1966, and when the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act were extended to cover them on April 1, 1967.

Both these programs were also welcomed by their employers. They put farmers in a position where they could compete more effectively in the labour market for good, responsible farm help. I had some particular knowledge of these matters. In 1967 I worked with hon, members on both sides of the house to express the serious concern of the agricultural industry with respect to deductions for income tax purposes, the filing of T-4 forms, and deductions for unemployment insurance benefits.

The April, 1967 issue of The Grower, a monthly publication of the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association, carried an editorial dealing with the serious situation facing the farm industry at that time. It was headed "Battle of T4 Form," and was in these words:

Consternation and frustration reign in the fruit and vegetable industry these days-

It would be fair to include the tobacco also concerned.

as the battle of the T4 form mounts in fury. It's the farmer against the bureaucrat, although the latter is only doing what parliament com-manded him to do. It has to do with the difficulty of making out unemployment insurance forms and Canada Pension Plan forms where casual labour canada relistor rain to the struggle is between the casual labour work force and the government. The farmer is in between. If he tries to obey the regulations he is caught up in a mountain of paperwork. One grower we know had 500 forms to make The report is that one auditor, operating in the Simcoe area where tobacco, apples and strawheavy in the use of casual labour, had 10,000 T4 slips to handle and check. Even a ten year old boy picking strawberries has to declare he doesn't want coverage. Some refuse employment when asked for unemployment insurance number or their social security number. Others accept employment but give fictitious names and addresses. It all mounts up to a gigantic mess. To the grower it is a headache especially for those who are making a conscientious effort to comply. The result is a mounting demand for action at least to the point where the bureaucrats and the representatives of the farm community can sit down and draft a system that will work and that will not add to the difficulties already clouding the farm labour picture-

The growers are not fighting the law. It is the red tape that annoys, plus the very evident fact that many in the ranks of the casual labour force refuse to accept farm employment when the labour shortage is at an all time high. Apparently the demand is not for elimination of existing regulations but for the development of a simple system in which the paperwork can be materially reduced.

That was the situation, Mr. Speaker. With the co-operation of members on both sides of the house, and with guidance and stimulation from all agricultural organizations—I will not name them here because I believe they were all involved—the matter was pressed home to the government.

This is a matter which extends to somewhat broader proportions than the motion before the house. We have to keep in mind the practical difficulties that exist. The Canada Pension Plan statute can only be amended under the circumstances set out in that act. It can only be amended by this parliament with the consent of a certain proportion of the provincial governments. I think it will be of no practical benefit to the farm industry if we or the government were to persuade the Unemployment Insurance Commission to do what my hon. friend has suggested. It would be a good step to take but it would not solve the situation because farmers would still have to make deductions for Canada Pension Plan contributions. They would still have to file T4 forms and make deductions for income tax purposes. These three matters would have to be tackled together.

We cannot move ahead with these three matters all at once. However, I understand, and I would like the responsible minister to make an authoritative statement on it, that preliminary consideration is being given to amending the Canada Pension Plan. This will require involvement with the provinces, and the amending of it cannot be foreseen in the immediate future.

Many helpful things were done for farmers in 1967. Representations were made to the minister of national revenue who now is our present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). The situation that the sponsor of this motion has outlined very graphically, and which the editorial from which I have quoted demonstrates very clearly, is an absurd situation in respect of the filing of T4 forms and forms having to do with income tax deductions. That situation has been corrected, but it seems to me it could be improved. As my friend suggests, I think I would prefer to see a 40 day period rather than a 25 day period. However, in 1967 there was a very great advance in this area when the minister of national revenue on June 12 said this:

Changes in income tax reporting which will reduce the paperwork required of employers were announced today by National Revenue, Taxation. Effective immediately salary and wages paid by employers need not be reported on T4-T4A Supplementaries when the amount paid to an individual in the year totals less than $250.00 if neither income tax deductions nor Canada Pension Plan contributions are required to be withheld.

Then, in dealing with employers in agriculture, the release reads as follows:

In addition, employers in agriculture are no longer required to make income tax deductions when total wages paid are less than $250.00 a year, or the number of days worked by an individual in a year is less than 25. These limits already apply to C.P.P. contributions.

I mention this really to underline what I said previously. The release from which I have just quoted I believe indicates that the exemption applies, providing that neither income tax deductions nor Canada Pension Plan contributions are required to be withheld. So, if Canada Pension Plan contributions are required to be withheld beyond the 25 day period, as is the case as I understand it now, then of course it would be meaningless or of little practical value I believe to extend the exemption period for either income tax purposes or for the purposes of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

[Mr. Honey.]

With the major advance on the part of the minister of national revenue in June 1967, members of this house and representatives of the agricultural organizations persevered in the matter with regard to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. At that point there was the ridiculous situation that the Canada Pension Plan statute and the Unemployment Insurance Commission regulations provided for a period of 25 days, but the farmer was still tied to the Unemployment Insurance Commission regulation which required him to make the deduction and which required the casual employer to have a book, be registered, and so on.

Representations, therefore, were made to the commission and to the responsible minister, at that time the minister of labour, and later to cabinet. In August of 1967 the Unemployment Insurance Commission regulations were brought into line with the Canada Pension Plan regulations and the income tax regulations. At that point we had at least made a major advance to the point where the three programs were all in step.

I have here the release dated August 24 from the Unemployment Insurance Commission, which is essentially the same as the release from the Department of National Revenue which I read. I join with the sponsor of the motion in the hope that we will be able to move the 25 day period ahead to a 40 day period in these three programs.

I should like to close these remarks by saying that I hope members of this house on both sides, who represent the agricultural industry, and others who are interested in good legislation and the reasonable application of government programs, will in fact assist the government and particularly the responsible minister—the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro)—in his negotiations with the provinces, so that the statute may be amended. Then we would be in a position to move the three programs ahead, in unison.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that I can support the resolution of my colleague from Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles). I was very delighted to hear the remarks of the parliamentary secretary in which he indicated there is government approval in principle of the idea. I think perhaps members on all sides of the house will be pleased about this, because it is not only members on both sides of the house who represent tobacco areas who are interested in this, but also members on both sides who represent fruit growing areas such as the Okanagan valley, parts of the province of Ontario and other specific parts of Canada which are affected.

From what we have heard it is clear that it was the intention of the government in the first place, for reasons we have heard already, to give exemptions to transient and migrant labourers who work during the harvesting of seasonal crops. The only difficulty was that the magic number in this case was 25, which obviously was arrived at incorrectly. I agree that it was a good idea that this be given a year's trial; but apparently either the civil servants gave poor advice to the government or were given poor advice themselves. because the magic number 25 should have been 40 in the first place. I believe it is evident that this has caused confusion, because it has been pointed out that migrant labourers, particularly those who come here from the West Indies are promised so much money and are not willing to remain for more than 25 days. This has been dealt with very adequately, and I do not intend to pursue the matter.

The only area in which there is disagreement is in respect of the number 25, which should be increased to 40. I am glad to hear the government is considering changing this. I am glad also to see here at the present time a number of members of the previous parliament who discussed this matter with the then minister of national revenue, the present Minister of Finance. The minister pointed out at that time that it would be necessary to obtain the consent of the provinces in this regard. At that time, when the members of the tobacco board were here in Ottawa discussing this situation, members of the house were critical of the procrastination with regard to getting the matter through before this crop season. There is, however, plenty of time between now and next spring to clear up this situation. I do not foresee any difficulty.

The parliamentary secretary said he hoped that hon, members on all sides of the house would do their best to see that the provincial governments give their consent. I am quite sure he did not mean that very seriously.

I suggest that all the responsible minister would have to do would be to have his secretary contact the ten appropriate officials of the provincial governments, and consent could be obtained in a couple of hours. I cannot imagine any provincial government objecting to something it has already approved in principle, particularly if it is only the 25 day period that is found to be inappropriate for the reasons we have heard. Between now and next spring I hope the minister will be able to make the ten phone calls. If amendments are necessary I am sure they will receive the immediate approval of this house. As Your Honour is aware, when appropriate amendments are placed before this house they are approved, sometimes in two or three minutes.

I have no additional remarks to make to those presented very ably by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) and the parliamentary secretary. I hope this matter will be expedited.

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention and interest to the speech delivered by the mover as well as to those of the two members who spoke before me.

The notice of motion now before us reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of extending from twenty-five to forty days the exemption period for social security, unemployment insurance deductions and taxation deductions presently allowed in the case of migrant agricultural workers.

That motion has perhaps not struck or influenced me the way it did some other members. Maybe I am influenced, which is normal, by the opinion of my fellow citizens in my area, in the constituency I represent. While I think that the mover and the two hon. members who spoke before me deserve our congratulations, I feel that in our region the farmers and the farm workers cannot see that motion in the same light as its mover or other Canadian citizens who live in regions other than mine. I think that we must always consider all those policies from a regional and a global point of view. All the same we get our inspiration from what we see around us.

The hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) made a very fine speech. Reviewing the background of that legislation, he detailed very skilfully the results obtained in barely a year, as well as those he knew from his personal experience, as I have just learned.

On the other hand, I think that we should think not only about the workers who are in that situation but also about some farmers who live in other regions.

It is well—and I agree with that—to think about the lot and the problems of our students, about the lot of the migrant workers who come from other countries for a while, as mentioned earlier by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), when he told us about those workers from the West Indies who come for a relatively short period of time and then go back home.

On the other hand, if we are to help these sectors of our society, then we might, again consider making changes through more special legislation. Why consider helping students and these people who come from outside the country on a relatively short term basis? Why think of dealing with their problems by a motion which concerns our agricultural industry?

These workers and students work also in other fields here in Canada, and they face the same difficulties. That is why, in my opinion, we should consider helping these people more fully and more generally by means of other amendments.

Before making more concrete comments on this motion, I must say that I was struck by a point made by the sponsor of this motion. He said that the farmers could not keep account books, journals of operations, or deal with other paper work of that sort. I think that we should not be too insistent in asking not only the farmers but the businessmen of the country to deal with that bothersome paperwork. However, I believe—because I know some of them—that there are a great many serious farmers in our country who are capable of adopting an accounting system and keeping books for their operations.

Some of our farmers have a good educational background and are intelligent enough to keep books as well as the neighbourhood grocer or other small traders.

I had the opportunity a few days ago to discuss that motion with some farmers of our region and with some agronomists who are in daily contact with the farmers. Therefore, I can say that in our region in general the farmers are not pleased with that amendment nor the farm workers, I would say. I make no difference between the farm worker and any other worker in my region, and I think the same thing is true everywhere in Canada.

Why make those distinctions? They do not help more that group of citizens we all sincerely want to protect. I think that the basic principle of our government and the party is to try to make of the farmer a first class citizen who will be able to make an income comparable to that of any worker in industry, and our party intends to take the same stand with regard to our farm workers.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski).]

Here is the opinion of a farmer with whom I discussed that matter last night. He said that the farmer who, in our region, can be considered a big farmer might not be as big compared to others elsewhere in Canada who go in for farming on a larger scale and in more developed areas. In any case, that man can be considered a serious farmer and a big farmer in our region. He told me that, at the present time, the period of 25 days for a total maximum amount of $250 was considered profitable, for the farmer as well as the worker.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The extension to 40 days would be less advantageous for the farmer. It would be to the advantage of the so-called big farmers. For example, in our area, in the lower St. Lawrence region, we know that the hay season lasts from four to five weeks. After that period of 25 days, the farmer can give unemployment insurance stamps to his workers and get workers, day-labourers more interested in working for him, since 40 day periods are very few indeed in farming in eastern Quebec. The same is true for the harvesting periods. We think that in our area especially, with the new developments which will undoubtedly follow the agreement entered upon between the federal and provincial governments last May, farming will thrive and will profit more from the legislation now in

I was discussing that question only yesterday with another man from our region, and he agreed with that. This act concerning the agricultural worker is an exceptional measure, and when it was adopted, we took inspiration from representations and reports made by farming associations.

A period of 40 days. So, many agricultural workers in my region will no longer be insurable. In our area, many farmers who are already registered to take advantage of that legislation will keep on losing interest.

A member of the C.F.U. told me the same thing. He told me that they wanted, in addition, the agricultural workers to be treated like other workers everywhere in Canadian industry. He told me that he could not see any advantage in that 40 day period; the big farmer will be protected, while the worker will not. This is how, in my opinion, we must endeavour to maintain a certain balance between the protection we granted to the farmer and that given to the worker.

Does that mean our workers, labourers and day-labourers are not protected under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I know, for example, that even a few years ago, at my office, I used to hire a worker for half a day and I would give him a 1-week stamp. It was an advantage for him. I never heard a worker complaining about such a situation. Why would the agricultural worker, the labourer or the day-labourer working part-time on the land complain about it? At the present time, a worker in eastern Quebec can, when he is free and unemployed, go and work three weeks to grow or harvest sugar-beets at Saint-Hilaire. He can then spend two or three weeks, for example, at Saint-Jean to harvest tomatoes and then, another three weeks somewhere in Ontario to gather the tobacco crop. During the winter, he can again be lucky enough to work a few weeks and be in a position to draw unemployment insurance instead of being simply on social welfare, as so often happens.

We know that the first condition to draw unemployment insurance benefits is to have paid 30 contributions and collected stamps for 30 weeks, within the two years prior to the claim. Therefore, we must have made 30 contributions and have worked during 24 weeks out of the last 52; eight contributions must have been paid in the course of the previous year. These are, I believe, the details. That is the spirit of the law. It must be looked at, according to the spirit of the motion. And so, a farm worker could not benefit from the law, according to the example I have just given.

Last week, I met a Quebec farmer; I would say that he is one of the most dynamic and most intelligent. We discussed this matter and I took note of some of his views; I have come to the conclusion that as the motion stands, it is not advantageous for the small farmer who, once again, will be victimized by the application of that law should it be amended as provided for by the motion.

I also agree with the previous speaker; as I understand it, he said that it was a most complex business to face the situation on three fronts at once: social security, the Canada pension plan and income tax deductions.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—ALLEGED ALTERATION IN HANSARD REPORT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege affecting Hansard and an answer therein recorded which came from the right hon. Prime Minister. I am referring to page 1936, the bottom of the left hand column. I asked the Prime Minister a question with regard to foreign aid provided by Canada. The Prime Minister is recorded as having said the following, and I am particularly referring to the last sentence of his answer at the bottom of the column:

We are still aiming in this direction, and perhaps in next year's budget we will discover new ways of finding more money so we can help more people in other countries.

I am quite confident in my mind, Mr. Speaker, and I have not the slightest doubt that that is not what the Prime Minister said; that the Prime Minister said "We will discover new ways of levying more money so we can help more people in other countries."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: And the difference, Mr. Speaker, is very significant. That answer astounded me at the time because it seemed to me to have a very definite edge to it. It warned the Canadian people that they would have to pay more taxes. The word was "levying", Mr. Speaker, and it was changed. That changes entirely the meaning of the Prime Minister's answer and I submit, sir, that this is an abuse of the editing privilege that members of the house have. I hope the Prime Minister will see to it that this is corrected and that the true answer is put in Hansard.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am perhaps not getting the inference, subtle or otherwise, of the point of privilege. I can only say that my memory is of having used "finding". I do not know that any correction was done. If I did say "levying" I am quite prepared to leave it at that, but I confess that when I made the answer, Mr. Speaker, I did not have any of this distinction in mind. I do not believe any correction was made, in my name or otherwise.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that is the Prime Minister's statement. I suggest that in his reply he used the word "levying". If he now states that he is prepared to say to Hansard that the original word is to be reintroduced, that satisfies me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, quite frankly I find myself in agreement with the hon. member for York South.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: I suggest in all seriousness to hon. members opposite who may joke about this that the integrity of Hansard is as important as the integrity of forecasts of estimates is important.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I say in all sincerity that the sense I had of what the Prime Minister said was that the government might be able to raise or levy more money for this purpose. It was not that it would find ways to raise additional money for this purpose. So I must rise in support of the hon. member for York South on this point.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, my recollection again is having used "finding". "Levying" is a rather more sophisticated word, and as hon. members know I do not use sophisticated words.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: I can put my feeling on record. I wanted to convey to hon. members

Ministerial Mission to Latin America of the opposition and to the people of this country that all our good intentions, in this as in other fields, have to be paid for; that any progress which this country makes in the field of external aid or internal development has to be paid for, whether by borrowing or by levying taxes. Borrowing has to be repaid eventually, too.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we might not allow the matter to stand where it is at the present time. My understanding of what the Prime Minister is suggesting now is that if Hansard is actually to the effect that the word "levying" was used, he would have no objection to the official record eventually carrying the word "levying" rather than the other word referred to.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, I was really indicating that I have no quarrel with the opposition on this, but I do not want any inference to be drawn that we have corrected Hansard. My recollection is that I used the word "finding" and that is the word I am prepared to stand by, but there should be no inference drawn that anyone in my office corrected Hansard. If that is the case I will apologize to the house tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wanted to say something along the lines of what the Prime Minister has said. My suggestion is simply that it is very easy to go to the Hansard take, and whatever the word is that is reported will be the word which will appear eventually in the official record.

Mr. Lewis: On that point, I tried Hansard and of course they are not permitted to let me see the original transcript.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to have confidence in the Speaker to that extent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

THE MINISTRY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MISSION TO SOUTH AMERICA

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, hon members will recall that last May I announced that the government had decided to send a special ministerial mission to Latin America.

I wish to announce today that this mission will leave Ottawa on Sunday, October 27, on an official visit to Venezuela, Colombia, Peru, Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Mexico and two countries of Central America—Guatemala and Costa Rica—in that order. It will be back in Ottawa on November 27.

While making plans for that mission we tried to make representative the wide field of Canadian interests in Latin America. To that effect and so that the ministers will not have to be away from their normal responsibilities for too long, five ministers will be included in that mission. They are the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene), the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) and the Hon. Otto Lang, Minister without Portfolio. Most of the time two of these ministers will be present in each country visited.

I have said many times, and I repeat now, that the government considers our relations with the countries in this hemisphere as being of high priority. The mission which will visit nine of the Latin American countries shortly is to be considered not only as an indication of our anxiety to strengthen our bilateral relations with these countries, but also as a clear demonstration of the importance we attach to our relations with all our neighbours, and especially with those of our hemisphere.

[English]

The mission will be equipped to pursue all important aspects of our relations with Latin American countries, political and cultural as well as economic and commercial. It will enable ministers to have direct talks with Latin American leaders, and it will give them an opportunity to see at first hand something of what is happening in those countries. Ministers will make a voyage of exploration during which they will not only make Canada better known but also during which I hope they will lay the groundwork for better understanding of Latin America on the part of Canadians.

Perhaps most important, the experience gained will be invaluable in assisting the government to determine what new avenues may now be opening up for closer relations with Latin American countries, both bilaterally and with respect to our common interest in the world at large.

The work of the mission is part of a review of Canadian policy toward Latin America which is already under way. I am confident that this review will demonstrate that there is real scope for strengthening Canada's relations with Latin America to the mutual advantage of both. The ministerial mission which is about to depart will help the government to determine what the real possibilities are and how best to proceed.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not want the Prime Minister to think I am being facetious, but I should commence by saying that we will hardly notice the absence of the ministers from the house.

With regard to the import of the Prime Minister's statement, I think we all approve of the establishment of closer associations with the countries of Latin America. I hope the ministers will have in mind the possibilities of establishing closer trading relationships. I believe that in the course of time, if not immediately, our country will be confronted by the need for exploring the possibility of becoming part of a larger trading union than is presently the case. I hope the ministers will have in mind the possibility of closer and more permanent trading associations with the Latin American countries.

I do not know whether the Prime Minister has in mind the possibility of Canada entering the O.A.S. or anything of this sort, but whatever reservations we might have in this connection I am sure we all approve of improvement in understanding between the Latin American countries and our own, and the importance that we must all attach to the fact that we share this hemisphere and that we have an important role to play together.

We will wish the ministers the best of luck in connection with this mission, and hope we will eventually see them again in the House of Commons.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not think one needs more than a sentence or two to say that we entirely approve of and are delighted with the initiative taken by the government. It is obvious that this mission can do a great deal of work, and I have no doubt the ministers will find ways of improving our relations with Latin American countries and opportunities for later exchanges, both cultural and economic.

As my second point, Mr. Speaker, I may suggest it would be worth while for the government to consider sending a similar mission to the Caribbean countries which are members of the Commonwealth as well as being countries in this hemisphere, and with which our commercial and cultural relations can be improved a great deal.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues I hope this is not the first step toward membership in the Organization of American States, something which should not occur at this time. But it should be the first step in strengthening relations with all countries in the hemisphere that are smaller and less powerful than our powerful neighbour to the south.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment briefly on the statement the right hon. Prime Minister just made on the special ministerial mission to Latin America and two countries in Central America.

We are very pleased to hear this because, personally, I feel that compared to the assistance Canada has given other regions of the world, we have sadly neglected South America.

According to the information we have and the news we get, the ministers will be visiting countries where there is quite a subversive ferment. If it so desires, the ministerial mission can bring some hope of better days to those peoples, through the support and direct assistance Canada can give them.

As mentioned by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), I suppose that the mission will take this opportunity to study the possibility of Canada entering the O.A.S. in order to establish closer relations between our country and the countries of America which, in fact, are located in our continent.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I know it is the fault of my bilingualistic inadequacies, but I did not really suggest that the minister should explore the possibilities of entering O.A.S. I did not really express any views in that regard.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR THIS DAY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know an invitation has been issued for a ceremony at six o'clock this evening, on the occasion of the unveiling of a portrait of Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. I have had certain consultations and I believe there will be general agreement, on account of this occasion, that the house make an order dispensing with private members' hour for this evening, on the understanding that all motions will retain their place and that the day will not be lost in respect of private members' hour.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TELEVISION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF TASK FORCE ON EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, last Monday, in response to an inquiry from the hon. member for Selkirk, (Mr. Schreyer), I said that I hoped to be able to make a statement on educational broadcasting this week, and if the house is agreeable, I should like to do so now. However, I must apologize for having sent a bit late that statement to the leaders of the opposition as a result of a misunderstanding.

[English]

In view of the importance attached by provincial governments to the development of educational broadcasting facilities, I should like to inform the house that the government intends to introduce legislation, as early as possible in the current session, to establish a Canadian educational broadcasting agency for this purpose.

A task force is to be established immediately, which will include representatives of the Privy Council office, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, the post office -which now includes the core of the proposed department of communications—the department of the Secretary of State, and others, to advise the government on a number of important aspects of this problem, including the details of the proposed legislation and the method of financing the new agency. The task force will ascertain provincial requirements and priorities for the provision of Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a facilities, and will carry out research and planning to ensure the most rational development of these facilities in relation to the country's broadcasting and other communications systems, with particular attention to the rapid pace of technological developments. Technical advice from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will be sought when appropriate.

The task force will also consider and advise on the most practical means of satisfying the most urgent provincial requirements pending the enactment of new legislation. In this connection the government will be prepared, if necessary, to consider issuing a formal direction to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, under section 39(2) of the Broadcasting Act, to provide required educational broadcasting facilities on an interim basis, which would be transferred to the new agency when it has been established.

[Translation]

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that these decisions are consistent with the present apportionment of powers under the constitution which gives the provinces full authority in the field of education whereas communication systems, including broadcasting, fall within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

It is proposed that the Canadian Radio-Television Commission will issue to the agency that will be set up, broadcasting licences to be used in connection with provinciallyapproved programs. This arrangement will enable the provinces to retain their basic responsibility with regard to the preparation and production of programs. However, since the actual broadcasting of these programs remains a responsibility of the federal government, there will be no need to change the long-standing federal policy of not issuing broadcasting licences to the provinces or their agents.

[English]

The task force which will be established to assist in the implementation of this new program will have as one of its primary tasks to pursue earlier discussions with the provinces to work out the details of the program, including the extent and timing of the federal government's financial participation, which will be limited to the support of its own responsibilities under the proposed arrangement.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the matter of very considerable importance to fall we held rather extensive hearings in the Canada as a whole and to all the provinces, and a matter about which the government of and assistance to the arts, wherein we the province of Quebec has expressed particular interest and concern. It is my hope that the procedure outlined by the Secretary of State will facilitate a cordial settlement of the various points of view which have been expressed, and allow this matter to proceed satisfactorily.

I must say, however, I personally have some doubts about this idea of turning over the negotiations, discussions and arrangements with the provinces to a task force, particularly in view of the concern which has been expressed by one province. I am not persuaded at this moment that this is the proper approach. The Secretary of State has expressed his apology for the shortness of notice in respect of this statement, and I accept his apology. Surely the procedure he has suggested is not satisfactory in view of constitutional importance which is attached to this matter, at least by one province.

Let me at this time content myself by emphasizing an aspect of this matter of which I am sure the Secretary of State is aware. I refer to the procedure he suggests should be followed. Without trespassing too far let me say we have noticed lately that those who are seized with finding solutions to federal problems have coalesced.

I do not think the federal government should adopt a procedure which unnecessarily gives encouragement to and provokes that kind of reaction.

In all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, I would urge that the government of Canada proceed with these discussions in a different way, one which fully recognizes the importance the provinces attach to a full discussion of these problems. The federal government should not simply relegate the matter to a task force appointed by it.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, like the Leader of the Opposition I wish to express the view that the advent of E.T.V. is a matter of great importance to the cultural and educational enrichment of Canada. On balance we welcome the statement which the Secretary of State has just made. However, I want to express some feeling of disappointment it is thought necessary to resort to the procedure of setting up a task force. This is disappointing in view of the fact that last not get stuck for that. The situation is the standing committee on broadcasting, films received weighty and well articulated briefs from provincial departments of education and adult education associations, and one would have hoped the minister would have been confident enough, armed with these briefs, to proceed a little more quickly.

However, I commend the minister, since he is going to set up a task force, for giving it terms of reference that will really help him to appreciate all the ramifications of the problem. In particular I welcome the reference at the middle of page 2 of the statement, wherein the minister says he is prepared to issue a direction to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that it soon provide facilities to the departments of education of the provinces so they can quickly set about providing television to the classrooms across the country.

I am sure the minister is well aware that some of the provinces, at least, and adult education associations in the provinces have a deep sense of frustration over what they regard as a long drawn out delay in setting up in this country an E.T.V. capability and the necessary facilities therefor.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) for the speed with which he assumed that responsibility.

I would add that doubtless many problems will stem from E.T.V. and the powers conferred by the constitution. Still, thanks to wisdom and knowledge, the Secretary of State will command respect for his views.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, although at first glance the statement of a minister may look like a step forward, it should not be forgotten that in Quebec it will be considered as another federal intrusion in the fields of exclusively provincial jurisdiction. The statement reads in part as follows:

-however, since the actual broadcasting of these programs remains a responsibility of the federal government, there will be no need to change the long-standing federal policy of not issuing broadcasting licences to the provinces or their agents.

Why add that sentence? If the licence is required to safeguard the special interests of a province and, amongst others, those of the province of Quebec, let one be issued. Let us to improve the cultural level of its citizens.

Quebec will always jealously guard its rights in that field, and that is why I think this is a good thing for the other provinces. As usual, we agree about that, since there are no special problems with regard to the other provinces. As concerns Quebec, however, if the federal government has a surplus of money which it can put to use in this field, let it give this surplus to Quebec and let that province organize its own cultural and educational programs.

TRADE

TABLING OF REPORT OF ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE BOARD

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I shall make my statement tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, but may I table today the French and English versions of the report on the activities of the Adjustment Assistance Board?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave of the house to table the documents to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS-INQUIRY AS TO INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. With respect to the legislation on farm improvement loans and the urgency which the government attaches to the implementation of all legislation relating to farm credit, I ask the minister when he will be prepared to announce the establishment of an interest rate, or the formula for the establishment of an interest rate with regard to farm improvement loans, in view of the fact that the legislation was passed through this house about two weeks ago.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer this [Mr. Matte.]

same, in the field of radio, with Radio- question. The Minister of Agriculture indicat-Québec. Information, and especially educa- ed in his statement to the house the basis tion, benefit from television and radio broad- upon which we would be discussing the rate casting; they are, at the present time, the of interest with the banks. Discussions are most important and essential means of com- presently going on, and we hope to announce munication from which a nation can benefit the interest rate immediately after royal assent.

> Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What is the holdup on this piece of legislation, in view of the fact that it has now passed this house? Why is it not in effect? This program has been out of existence since June 30, and in fact the Minister of Agriculture informed the house that it was all prepared last February.

> Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, it is true that the legislation has been prepared for a long time. It has gone through the normal process in this house. I am not sure of this, but I think it has completed the normal process in the other place and will soon receive royal assent. In the interim, as the Minister of Agriculture mentioned to the house, we have been discussing with the banks the rate of interest which will be proclaimed, I hope, on royal assent.

> Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Finance, now that he has his budget speech out of the way, will be able to give his attention to this matter and announce to the house and the country the rate of interest at which farmers will be able to borrow money under this program. I urge that the minister do this, in view of the great urgency of the matter.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that this will be done at the first possible moment. The importance to us as a government, and I am sure to the people of the country as a whole, especially the farmers, is that the legislation should work, which means that the interest rate is established at a level that is fair and equitable to the farmers of Canada and yet encourages the banks to promote the use of this particular legislation which has proven so useful to the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister has had a long time to discuss these matters with the banks and other lending institutions, may we express the hope that the government will in fact produce some action and that the first possible moment will prove to be the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Benson: We will, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether at the time of making an announcement in regard to farm improvement loans he will also be in a position to indicate to the house what the rates will be on the Farm Credit Corporation loans?

Mr. Benson: It is very difficult for me to announce this until the opposition shows a willingness to proceed with the legislation, at which time I will try not to disappoint them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—SUPPLY OF ARMS BY RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that a cargo of military equipment provided by the U.S.S.R. has recently been landed in Nigeria, has the Canadian government made or will it make representations to the government of the U.S.S.R. recommending that they should join with other nations in bringing about an end to the supplying of arms or military equipment to the combatants on either side, with a view to putting an end to the deadly conflict in that country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The government of the Soviet union knows the Canadian views upon the subject, which have been expressed very eloquently by the Prime Minister. I do not think there is any need for us to go any further than that.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, at this time when we speak so highly of the United Nations and what it has done may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what possible reason there is for the government of Canada to continue a sit-down strike against bringing this matter of a cease fire in that country before the United Nations. Is there any objection being raised by any country to bringing before the United Nations the matter of a cease fire between Nigeria and Biafra?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have answered similar questions on previous occasions, but perhaps I could draw attention to the statement made just yesterday by one of the distinguished leaders of an African nation, who suggested that we should be very careful as a country not to intervene in the internal Prime Minister take the necessary steps so 29180-125 affairs of any member country, particularly one in Africa.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then may I ask the minister, when did he develop this peculiar predisposition? He did not have it regarding the situation which has existed in Rhodesia. Why does he have it in respect to a situation which affects the future of the world so seriously?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the supplementary question is argumentative.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he looks under his bed for General de Gaulle every night?

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PRIMARY LANGUAGE OF SENIOR CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, since the present government has made bilingualism in the public service a priority, and in view of the Speech from the Throne and the new legislation on the official languages, I put on the order paper question No. 53—which was answered yesterday—about six crown corporations. I asked how many senior civil servants earn $17,000 and more and I was told that there were 225.

I am coming to my question, Mr. Speaker. There are 225 English-speaking and 14 French-speaking senior officials.

I therefore ask the Prime Minister to tell me if that situation will soon change because it seems that it will go on for ever.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have already indicated in what direction we are heading and what progress has been made. However, there is still much more to do, and that is why we will be very happy when parliament passes the bill on the official languages, because then we will be able to deal with other projects.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Yesterday afternoon, two constituents of mine presented themselves at the main entrance of the parliament building and were unable to secure the assistance of a Frenchspeaking or a bilingual person; would the that French-speaking persons will be on duty at the entrance of the parliament building?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's representations have been noted.

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question—which is not supplementary—to the hon. Secretary of State.

It concerns a statement on educational television he made earlier. Would the minister tell the house whether he intends to ask the provinces to send him their suggestions and their opinions on the matter, either by letter or otherwise, before he establishes another federal research commission?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): This is precisely one of the things which are included in the terms of reference of the task force which has been set up in this regard. However, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the hon. member that all the provinces have been invited and that most of them have accepted to give evidence before the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts which, during the last session, heard numerous representations.

Mr. Valade: I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Does the Secretary of State intend to ask the provinces to appoint a permanent delegate to that research agency?

Mr. Pelletier: The matter has not been considered, Mr. Speaker, we have not set up the task force yet. When we get to that stage, and when the time comes to select the personnel, I will be able to answer the hon. member.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the hon. minister.

When the minister says that most of the provinces have accepted the invitation, can he tell us whether the province of Quebec did too?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker the province of Quebec has not answered our invitation to appear before the parliamentary committee, [Mr. Laprise.]

but through one of its ministers, it has already made a very brief but rather significant comment.

Mr. Marcel Masse, a Quebec minister, said: These portions of the White Paper which propose what I have announced today open the door to a concrete co-operation between the federal and the provincial governments.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Does the minister not think that it would be greatly preferable if he communicated with the government himself in order to know its views, rather than leave the matter in abeyance and interpret a speech in his own way?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, a question is put to me and I try to answer. On the other hand, it is the first time that the hon. member makes that suggestion, but I am taking note thereof.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

ALLEGED LEAKS RESPECTING REPORTS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the alarming leaks which have been coming in recent days from the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism I wonder what steps the Prime Minister and his government are taking to prevent this damaging appearance of perhaps even inaccurate material from the commission.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the house knows, the proceedings of a royal commission which is still engaged in the preparation of its report are a matter for that commission, and royal commissions are established in such a way as to have the degree of independence from the government which is required in order to make their own research and prepare reports in conformity with their own views. Therefore I do not think it is proper for us to intervene in the procedures and proceedings of a royal commission. They are in full control of them or, to use another expression, they are the masters of their own proceedings.

I can only say that until yesterday—and I do not believe any communication has arrived today—this commission has not communicated with my office to indicate that we should be doing something about the leaks. I will add, however, that I am distressed about the matter, and I have asked the Solicitor General to use whatever means he can to see whether any question of theft arises. If we can find the guilty party we will certainly want to punish him.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the considerable delay which has already occurred in the publishing of successive copies of this document, and in view of its importance in the light of the legislation before the house at present, can the Prime Minister and his government take any steps to accelerate the publication of these important documents?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are all anxiously awaiting the publication of this report. The leak concerns the third report and it seems to be a fairly clear infringement of the Copyright Act, in view of the fact that it seems to be a leak concerning a document which is nearly ready. The point is that it is only the commission which can decide at what point of preparation it will publish its report. Of course I have spoken to the cochairmen of the commission and told them that it was our desire and that it was in the interests of the country to have the report as soon as possible. I conclude from the fact that the third volume has been leaked in this particular way that probably the second and third volumes are very close to publication.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I want simply to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the position of this government that the royal commission be left to take the decision whether any effort will be made to investigate and find the source of this problem.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I know the members of the commission are aware of this matter, because one of them has already made a public statement about it. I have discussed with the law officers of the crown, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General steps that we might contemplate. But once again, we cannot tell the commission what they should be doing; I am waiting for advice from them. If they feel that anything useful can be done then we will discuss with them any possible steps that might be taken.

For the information of hon. members, Mr.
Speaker, perhaps I should say that though this appears to be fairly clear infringement of d'escalier".

Inquiries of the Ministry

copyright in regard to property belonging to the crown, the steps that could be taken to redress the matter are not easily available in law in the sense that they might not be as effective as we might like. Perhaps the most effective solution would be to try to find whether there has been any theft, and if so to pursue the matter in that direction. I repeat that I have discussed any steps that should be taken with the Solicitor General.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I know I do not understand sophisticated language. What is the nature of the copyright in connection with a prospective report from a commission? I am just asking for information, Mr. Speaker, so we can understand exactly what it is the Prime Minister has in mind. If there has been any breach of copyright, then there is a law available to deal with it. Surely the Prime Minister is not suggesting that they are going to apply the sealing wax to people who submit their ideas about what is in a report.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can see that the right hon. gentleman is not informed about what was published in La Presse. If he obtains a translation then perhaps he will see that this is not a matter of someone giving his idea about what is going on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker-

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that the right hon. gentleman wishes to raise a supplementary question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would remind the right hon. gentleman when speaking about language that I remember last February hearing the Prime Minister say in this house: "Nous avons perdu la confiance de la chambre". When the Prime Minister's words appeared in Hansard they were: "We have lost the vote". I knew sufficient French as I listened to him to know the difference.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the point of order should be pursued further.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is afterwit, what we call in French "de l'esprit d'escalier".

AGRICULTURE

CORN—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO ONTARIO GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister now report to the house what plans he has in mind to assist the corn growers of southwestern Ontario who are presently suffering a near disaster, and are suffering more and more each day? In this regard can he also tell the house how the conversations with the United States government are proceeding in connection with exercising some control over the importation of United States corn?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has asked several questions.

Mr. Nesbitt: Just two.

Mr. Olson: First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that in his budget speech the Minister of Finance indicated that the government is going to provide for accelerated depreciation on storage facilities, which will be helpful in the long run in view of the corn marketing problem at the moment in southern Ontario.

In reply to the second part of his question I would say that negotiations have been going on with United States officials, and I expect that perhaps within a few hours, but certainly very shortly, I will be in a position to make an announcement in connection with the import competitive factors involved in the marketing problem.

REQUEST FOR ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION ON GRAIN DRYING EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Would he agree, in light of the harvesting conditions in western Canada and the large volume of tough and damp grain stored on farms, to adding a further provision for accelerated depreciation on equipment that is used for grain drying?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must admit ignorance with respect to what equipment is used for grain drying—I believe it is elevator equipment—but I would be very pleased to look into the matter. In my hon. friend will meet with me privately and inform a poor fellow from a small town what equipment is involved, then I would be pleased to look into the question.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question for clarification, Mr. Speaker. I am referring to grain dryers that farmers purchase for use on their farms before the grain is stored in bins. Would the minister allow some accelerated depreciation on this equipment, as well as on storage equipment?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I have great sympathy for the farmers of western Canada and for the particular problems they have at this time, and I would be pleased to look into the matter that has been raised by the hon. member.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister with regard to this problem. Is the minister now in a position to say that special quota privileges will be given to farmers who are attempting to harvest damp grain this fall, such as was the case in 1953 when conditions were very similar to those of this year?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this question should be directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who reports to this house for the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe the minister has already announced that the wheat board have taken extraordinary measures to deal with the extraordinary situation created by this tough and damp grain.

Mr. Horner: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the government going to make special delivery quotas available to farmers who are now harvesting damp grain, such as was the case in former years?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, It appears to me that the situation today is very different from that of previous years when such steps were taken. In previous years the damp grain was found in certain areas only; today the situation is fairly broadly generalized. Therefore up to now we have felt that there is no possibility of doing what was done in the past.

Mr. Horner: A further supplementary. Are the wheat board and the minister's department making grain drying facilities available at the terminals to aid in drying the grain?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I answered this question the other day when I said that on October 15, 1968 the Canadian Wheat Board issued an instruction that priority should be given to the shipment of damp grain to terminal positions. I announced that four or five days ago.

[Later:]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that some specialty crops in western Canada, specifically flax and rapeseed, will suffer considerably if they are left out for the winter, is any thought being given by the hon. gentleman's department or by the wheat board to making special provision in order that these crops, which are not large in volume, may be moved quickly to the dryers?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that some measures have been taken by the wheat board to give priority to the moving of damp grain. I will find out whether they apply to the grains mentioned by the hon. member.

CHEESE—REDUCTION IN FLOOR PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lee Grills (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since the floor price of cheddar cheese is being lowered by 5 cents a pound—from 47 cents to 42 cents—on November 1, has any action been taken, or will it be taken, to relieve producers who find themselves in an impossible position, perhaps being forced to close their doors? The price of milk, as the minister knows, is exactly the same—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked his question.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have had a number of meetings with members of the house and representatives from the cheese producing industry, particularly the processors. The lowering of the floor price from 47 cents to 42 cents a pound effective November 1 is something that has been well known to the industry for a long time. The reason for it is that some of the cheddar cheese produced in the wintertime is surplus and is costing the dairy industry around 15 cents a pound to export from Canada. The policy has been announced that we need to discourage the production of more cheese in this season, when we produce against the surplus stock.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Grills: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If that is the case, is any consideration being given to some reimbursement for diverting commercial milk to butter plants and thus maintaining the staff of cheese plants in employment and relieving the cheese situation by helping manufacturers?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this problem arises with processing plants that are exclusively producing cheese. As the hon. member knows, this is a problem of particular concern to some parts of Ontario. I believe it is up to the provincial officials to make arrangements for the transfers during certain seasons, because they have control of that matter and of the pooling of fluid and manufacturing milk in Ontario.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is he now in a position to name the members of the consumer advisory council, as Dr. Leighton was appointed on July 17?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, but I am very optimistic that I shall be able to name them within two weeks.

Mr. Skoreyko: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the federal-provincial conference is scheduled for next Monday, is the minister able to table the agenda for that conference?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, when I announced the holding of the conference on October 28 I said the conference would explore areas of federal-provincial co-operation in fields of credit, consumer protection and trade practices. However, since this is an exploratory conference the arrangement and agreement among governments have been that a detailed agenda would not be published.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED MEETING TO VALUE ASSETS OF DOSCO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development [Translation] who answers in this house for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. In view of conflicting and argumentative statements released in recent days by Charles E. MacCulloch of the Dominion Coal Company and Douglas Fullerton, chairman of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, in reference to a proposed meeting to negotiate a value to be placed on Dosco's assets, can the minister advise the house when such a meeting will take place?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, a meeting? I do not understand. A meeting with whom?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Between Devco and Dosco.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This I am not aware of, Mr. Speaker, but I shall obtain the information and transmit it to the hon. gentleman.

HARBOURS

ROBERTS BANK, B.C.—CONFERENCE AS TO RAIL LINK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wished to direct my question to the Minister of Transport but I see he is not in the house although his name is on that paper whose title we cannot mention. I know he will miss his daily Roberts Bank question and regret it. Was the meeting on Tuesday with Premier Bennett of British Columbia and other officials about the Roberts Bank rail link closed to the public? Perhaps I might direct my question to his parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Baldwin: Perhaps the premier could give his opinion of the budget.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I fail to see the urgency of the question. If there is urgency the hon, member might give the usual notice.

Mr. Rose: Am I permitted a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I will take the supplementary question as notice.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys).]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DISPOSITION OF "GRANDE HERMINE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Duquet (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Now that Expo is over, could the minister tell us what are his intentions concerning the replica of the Grande Hermine? Does he intend to have it taken to the Cartier Brébeuf park?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Duquet: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

EXPO '67

INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF EXPO EXPRESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I put a question to the hon. minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, regarding Expo-Express. The minister seemed to say that the tenderers had to withdraw their tenders. He also said that he was to meet his Quebec counterpart.

Could the hon, minister make a detailed statement today on this important matter of the sale of Expo-Express?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I believe the best thing would be to read two sentences from the news release given out this morning after the meeting.

They—the two ministers—acquainted themselves with the representations made by the city of Montreal. They have taken due notice of the de facto situation created by the sale made by the Canadian Corportation for the 1967 World Exhibition to the Société Urbaine des Transports Rapides Inc. of Montreal, following public tenders.

The two ministers had received information which led them to believe that nothing prevents negotiations between the interested parties. They share the hope that the needs of Montreal as well as of the other parties can be met equitably and satisfactorily.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

As a result of that statement, can the minister confirm that the city of Montreal will buy Expo Express?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to that text, which is extremely clear.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—COURT DECISION RESPECTING LEASED RESERVE LAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question that arises out of the brief presented to the government yesterday by the premier and cabinet of Prince Edward Island? What answer did he give the government of Prince Edward Island in regard to its urgent demand that tenders be called within a month for the resumption of the causeway project?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the premier presented to members of the federal government, including myself, a very interesting brief and we promised to look at it, study it and take into account the arguments therein in reaching a final decision, which we hope will be made in the very near future.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister accept the calculations put forward by the government of Prince Edward Island to the effect that maintaining a fleet of vessels to provide an adequate ferry service would cost upward of $1 billion over the next 60 years?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Simcoe North.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO REPLACEMENT FOR WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I put it to the acting minister on September 20, as found on page 270 of Hansard. The question was:

—what program is being devised to take the place of the winter works program which has been discontinued—

At that time the acting minister said that he would refer the question to the minister for answer within a few days. We have not yet received an answer, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no new program is being devised to replace the winter works program, but we are accelerating as much as we can our special training Inquiries of the Ministry program and we are concentrating as much of that training as possible in the winter months. For example, in the province of Ontario we have increased our allotment for this year by $15 million, which is roughly three times the amount spent in Ontario for winter works.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. First, may I ask the minister whether he has received representations from the advisory committee on manpower retraining for metropolitan Toronto that in that area there has been a drop in referrals to the federal government's adult training program? Second, could the minister inform the house why there is this cut-back in retraining since in view of recent statements it is expected that there will be increased unemployment during the winter?

Mr. Speaker: The second part of the supplementary question asked by the hon. member is argumentative.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Could the first part of my question be answered, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEachen: I have had representations from the group the hon. member mentioned, and I repeated to that group, as I have repeated in the house, that we have increased our expenditures in Ontario by $15 million this year. That is not a cut-back but a growth in expenditure.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister say whether he has also increased the allocation for manpower retraining in the province of Quebec?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have increased the budget, I think, to $60 million from a previous amount of $48 million for that province.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think we should go much farther along this line. Perhaps the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond wishes to ask a supplementary?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I ask as a supplementary question why the hon. member from Quebec, whose constituency I will not name, was not aware of an increase even though he is a government supporter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—COURT DECISION RE-SPECTING LEASED RESERVE LAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) asked me whether any application had been made for my department to participate in financing an appeal on a British Columbia superior court ruling on rented lands.

Representations were made to the department asking that it help pay the cost of an appeal on that ruling. The matter is now under study with the Department of Justice. As soon as a decision has been reached, I shall advise the hon. member.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, on page 48 of today's order paper you will see question No. 300, which I put there on September 27, about the authorization granted to a Cypriot ship, registered at Tamagusta, to sail between Montreal and Newfoundland. In the absence of the Minister of Transport, I would ask the Prime Minister if he could give us an answer. In view of recent events, I am wondering if it was not the Christina, a ship owned by Mr. Onassis of Greece—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon, member is not allowed to make a speech at this time.

Mr. Dumont: I will ask my question, Mr. Speaker, if you will let me.

I would like the Prime Minister to tell us if it was not the Christina which was preventing—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dumoni: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon, member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont) on a point of order.

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Speaker, yesterday, on a similar question put by the member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) you allowed comments to be made. I merely wanted to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if he had been kept by Mrs. Kennedy's husband from meeting her?

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has Canada any indication that NATO secrets or other information essential to national security have been compromised in the security scandal recently revealed in West Germany?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the answer to the question is no, but I should like to check.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. Is the government now able and prepared to table in the house the report of the royal commission on security which has been promised?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the same question was addressed to the Prime Minister who gave a clear answer at that time, if I recall correctly.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he is in a position to explain to the house how it is that a London daily paper was apparently able to print facts about the report of the commission on security and make reflections on the R.C.M.P. before the report has been tabled? In view of the interest which the Prime Minister has expressed about leaks from the B and B commission, I should like to know whether the hon. gentleman has taken any interest in these apparent leaks from the security commission?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am always interested in that sort of subject. I would think that here again, as in the case when a similar question was addressed to the Prime Minister, the Solicitor General would be taking whatever action he deemed necessary.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact that it is not the Solicitor General's day, I hope some responsible person in the government will bring this matter to his attention.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF ACREAGE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture. It is a follow-up to a question I placed before him two weeks ago concerning the serious economic situation faced by western farmers as a result of loss of markets and inclement harvest weather. In view of these conditions, will the minister give consideration to making acreage payments to help in this emergency?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I gave a detailed answer to a series of questions yesterday which dealt with almost the same subject as does this question. If the hon, member will look at the replies I gave yesterday I think he will feel satisfied that we have a good program.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I should remind hon. members that we are running short of time.

Mr. Southam: A supplementary question. If the minister is giving consideration to this important matter, will he consider increasing the acreage payment to a maximum of $300 rather than the $200 currently provided for?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT ON DISPUTE WITH TECHNICIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Can he advise us whether he has yet received the report of the conciliation board which was set up to look into a dispute between unions representing technicians of the C.B.C. and the corporation itself?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I received the report officially yesterday.

Mr. MacEwan: When does the minister intend to make this report public?

Mr. Mackasey: Under section 31, subsection 2, of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act I have the right to return recommendation that it be amplified or that measure will, of course, depend on the time certain areas be treated in greater depth. I have followed this course and therefore the report will not be published until a new version is officially brought to my desk in a matter of a few weeks.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—REPORTED WAGES BELOW PREVAILING RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. On October 2 I asked the minister whether contractors working on urban renewal schemes were permitted to pay wages below prevailing rates as is now the case in St. John's, Newfoundland. Is the minister now in a position to answer my question?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member indicated at the time, this is indeed the case. I have found that the particular project to which the hon. member has referred involves $2,200,000 of federal funds. These funds were advanced by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and due to a technicality in the law the usual provision that prevailing rates should be paid was omitted. I may say I have informed C.M.H.C. that this is not my concept of justice or of the act, and I have suggested that in future they have regard to the principle implied in the hon. member's question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council whether he can indicate the nature and order of business for this week and next?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It would be the government's intention to call the post office bill until the house has reached a final decision on all its stages, thereafter to call the remaining stages of the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act, and then to call the second reading and subsequent stages of the prairie grain advance payments bill. When these three measures have been disposed of we propose to begin the debate on the budget and to spend the balance of next week on the the report to the conciliation board with a budget debate. The actual time of calling any one, and is subject to any unforeseen contingencies.

Mr. Baldwin: Do I understand that it is the intention of the government that the house should deal with the post office bill before we can deal with the farm bills and that we will not be allowed to deal with the budget until the two farm bills have been completed?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Of course, if in the course of a particular debate we reach a decision on a stage in one or other of these three pieces of legislation, it will be up to the house whether to continue with that or go on to another bill. Certainly it is the hope that a decision will be reached on all three bills at an early date and that we can then proceed to consideration of the budget.

Mr. Baldwin: As a supplementary question, would the house leader give some consideration to discussing the matter of an extra sitting so we can get to these very important farm bills so essential to the economy of western Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will welcome any opportunity to discuss with hon. gentlemen opposite a procedure whereby we can effectively get through the program in this house.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS AFFECTING RATES. ADMINISTRATION, SAVINGS BANK

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Kierans for the second reading of Bill No. C-116, to amend the Post Office Act, and the amendment (page 1623) thereto of Mr. Macquarrie.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, since the minister is new to this house one can understand his enthusiasm in wanting to exhibit his wares, his experience and his many abilities by trying to produce legislation fairly quickly for consumption by members of the house. But it has seemed to me and to other hon. members that so far the minister has not received the best of advice from his senior civil servants and colleagues. I refer first to the advice given him with respect to the pay of rural mail contractors during the recent postal strike.

I give full marks to the minister of at least being flexible enough to pay attention to [Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

taken by the house to deal with the preceding representations from both sides of this house and elsewhere and change his mind with regard to the advice he had previously been given. Likewise, after receiving representations from all quarters of this house and many other places with regard to cancellation of six day rural mail delivery, the minister again exhibited his flexibility of mind. He listened to those representations and made the necessary change so that six day rural mail delivery will continue.

> Because the minister has exhibited a great deal of flexibility of mind and shown his willingness to listen to reason and sensible representations, I am quite surprised he has not followed the example of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who, when he was minister of finance in the last parliament, agreed to send a very elaborate piece of legislation amending the Bank Act to the standing committee on finance and economic affairs. Representations were made to the finance committee, witnesses were called and, if I recall correctly, the minister accepted some 40 amendments moved by members representing both sides of the house.

> On another occasion a former minister of transport, Mr. Pickersgill, now head of the transport commission, presented an elaborate piece of legislation, the National Transportation Act. It was a complex piece of legislation with many ramifications, but after it received second reading Mr. Pickersgill agreed to send it to the committee on transport and communications and, as I recall, he accepted over 70 recommendations made largely by opposition members but some also made by government members.

> That sort of thing is parliament at its best. It is true that it does not get much publicity in the press because it does not raise disagreeableness. But that is the way this house should operate. Although the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) appears to have made up his mind I still hope he will consider the excellent examples set in the past by his colleagues and friends.

> The minister may reply: It is quite true that the Bank Act and the National Transportation Act were sent to committees but they were very complex bills; the postal bill is much less complex. To that I say that in view of two pieces of advice already given the minister which did not seem to be too good. and in view of the fact that the minister himself has reversed certain initial decisions. a case exists for sending this bill to a committee.

Senior post office officials may be very explained it. He has mentioned November 1, competent to advise the minister on the tech- and I understand that some of the proposed nicalities of letter carrying, delivering and so new rates will go into effect next February or on but I submit that they are not competent March. Certainly a few weeks delay in pasto advise him on the public's wishes regarding this essential service. This has been demonstrated all too well so far. More than that, these senior advisers, I submit, are not competent to weigh adequately the long range effects of the minister's proposals with respect to rate increases.

Many representations have been made by weekly newspapers, daily newspapers and other organizations. I have one in front of me from the graphic arts industry. No doubt the minister has received these representations and so I will not take up the time of the house to go into them. However, these industries and the press have indicated that there may well be very disagreeable effects over the long-range as a result of the minister's proposals.

Recently I received representations from what I would describe as a weekly newspaper although in fact it is published twice a week. This kind of publication will not receive the same advantages under the proposed legislation as papers which are published only once a week. But for all practical purposes this kind of publication is a weekly newspaper. Things like this should be examined carefully.

Reference has already been made to an editorial written by Claude Ryan, who is well known to members of the house. In it he pointed out the danger to Canadian publications. I do not feel that the minister's advisers in the postal department are really able to advise him as well as other people in this country on the possible damage to Canadian identity by the loss of Canadian publications as a result of his proposals. Canadian identity is an important thing in our country at present. There is the possibility of the loss of valuable editorial opinion from the smaller papers.

We have seen recently how the big newspaper chains are growing. An example is the acquisition of the Gazette by one chain. The big daily newspapers seem to be falling into just two hands in Canada, and in the future we may well need the valuable opinion of smaller newspapers simply because the larger ones will have fallen into two hands which, I might add, may be a dangerous situation.

For these reasons the minister would be well advised to let this bill go to a committee. sage of the bill could be entertained. As a matter of fact, if the minister would agree to send it to a committee he might suggest directly or indirectly through the committee chairman that a deadline be placed on the committee hearings.

Perhaps the minister is still considering sending the bill to a committee. If he does the committee could consider something else, although this might be gone into during committee stage in the house. I refer to the question of proper accounting by the postal department. I do not profess to be a chartered accountant although I have had some training in that regard, but the post office method of accounting seems strange. Of course government methods of accounting are always peculiar, particularly railway accounting, but the post office accounting is odd. All mail that goes out from government departments under frank is charged to the post office, which gives the appearance that the Post Office Department is bearing all this weight for other departments.

This is not a proper costing method. I believe it should be looked into. This point has been alluded to by other hon. members in this debate. My feeling is that we are not being shown a really accurate picture of the finances of the post office. The minister speaks of the great losses. There probably are losses, but I am wondering whether they are being accurately presented and whether they may not be as great as it is suggested they

The suggestion is made that we should pass this measure and get on with the budget. These proposed postal increases really are nothing but another aspect of the budget because these increases in effect subsidize other government departments. This certainly has an effect on the general finances of the country. I cannot see the need for haste in this regard.

The wishes of the people in the rural areas with regard to the six day week have been made very evident. I congratulate the minister for acceding to the wishes of the public in this regard. About 60 per cent of my constituency is urban and the other 40 per cent is I cannot understand his rush. He has never rural. Never during the 15 years I have been ters, as I have had concerning this matter. I have had more than 1,500 letters regarding the proposed five day delivery service. It is true that about 65 or 70 per cent of these were from people in the rural areas, but there were a substantial number from people in the urban areas. They objected to the loss of the Saturday delivery. I believe this is something which should be considered much more carefully by the minister before he reaches a final decision.

From the representations which have been made to me, it would appear that people do not object too much to increases in the postal rates if they can be justified. On the other hand, as has been mentioned earlier, the newspapers, both daily and weekly as well as bi-weekly and others, object very much because they feel they will be forced to raise their prices or advertising rates. Of course we know who will have to pay for the increase. It will go right back to the public. The minister may reply that if the rates do not go up in this manner then the cost will fall on the public in another way because the treasury will have to pay. I submit there is a greater inflationary pressure involved when advertising costs are passed on to the public than when the treasury is asked to make up any deficit in the Post Office Department. There may be room for argument in this regard, but I submit that this is indeed the case.

There have been many suggestions to the effect that our post office is very efficient. I believe that over the years the Canadian post office has been a model of efficiency compared with those of other countries, for example, the United States. This, however, can be said no longer. After consulting with a number of hon, members I find that their experience has been similar to mine. My home is in Woodstock and my experience in the past 15 years has been that letters mailed in Ottawa in the evening have been delivered in my city in the morning. During the past year I have found that sometimes this would be the case but that on other occasions letters would be delivered in three or four days. I find that other members have had exactly the same experience.

The minister is proposing an increase in the rates while the efficiency of the service is going down rather than up. If the rates are increased I hope we will see a more efficient

If tions on any subject, including capital punish- for one reason or another the minister does ment, the flag debate and many other mat- not wish to send this bill to a committee for detailed study—and I believe that his officials are not qualified to advise the minister in respect of many of these matters—then I would hope that at some date, perhaps in six months' time, he would review this matter very carefully. The bill no doubt will be passed in due course. Therefore I suggest that he might undertake to review the whole matter at a later date, particularly in respect of the legitimate suggestions which have been made by responsible people.

I do not think this whole matter should be brushed aside on the ground that some people are engaging in some sort of small-time politics. I am sure the minister realizes that all members of this house are not always interested in playing some kind of small-time politics. Most members on both sides I believe have a genuine interest in improving conditions in the country.

Members of this house are faced with what I consider to be a most unsavoury proposal by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). In the 15 years I have been here I have never seen anything like it. We are told that until we pass the post office legislation we will not have the budget debate and indeed will not have an opportunity to return to the farm legislation. To say the least, this is a very shocking statement. I notice that the President of the Privy Council is not present at this time. I dislike making remarks of this nature about a minister when he is not present.

Since the Postmaster General seems to be reluctant to send this bill to a committee, I suggest that perhaps we might vote on the amendment and conclude second reading. When we reach the committee stage we might then have an opportunity to obtain some of the information we desire. Although we would prefer that the bill be studied in a standing committee of the house, at least in committee of the whole we might be able to obtain some answers.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment briefly on the proposed amendment to Bill No. C-116, to amend the Post Office Act. As we all know, the amendment before the house would have the result of referring the bill to the standing committee on transport and communications. I fully support the amendment. It must be clear to every member of the house who has listened to the debate that the proposed legislation should have a thorough review. It seems to me that it would be very foolish to push this legislation through in haste and then find we have created more problems than we have solved.

• (4:10 p.m.)

At this time members are receiving communications from their constituencies which make it crystal clear that there are many side effects to this legislation about which we should have some information before we make it law. There is nothing wrong with the idea of a committee examination of this legislation. Surely this is the way democracy works. We have all heard both inside and outside of this house what people think about this legislation and how it will affect them. Many of them have asked for a review by a committee. They want to express their views and explain their positions. Frankly, I am of the opinion that they should be given every opportunity to do so. Every organization in this country should be given the opportunity to express to the Postmaster General its feelings as to the effect of this legislation. It is for that reason I plead with members of the house and the Postmaster General not to be stubborn but to allow the referral of this matter to a committee where a proper study can be made.

Quite frankly, I am not opposed to an increase in postal rates in certain categories. Practically every member of this house is, I believe, of the same opinion, that an increase can and should be effected. Let me point out, however, that to increase rates and reduce services at the same time is not the way we in Canada wish to see postal services operated. Some increases in postal rates will have a very detrimental effect on certain segments of our population. It is not my intention to repeat the details that have been pointed out by hon. members before but there are one or two aspects of this legislation I intend to draw to the attention of the minister.

It seems to me that sometimes we do not pay enough attention to the effects that certain legislation will have on the rural areas. I represent a riding in British Columbia of which a large part consists of rural communities. That is one reason I want this legislation to be reconsidered by a committee. We should certainly determine whether these rate increases are to be passed on to the consumer, particularly whether the increases in newspaper rates will in turn be paid by the rural readers.

From the information I have received from my own constituents and from other people in Canada I gather there is going to be a very sharp increase in the cost of newspapers, and I refer primarily to daily newspapers. I am told that the Nelson Daily News has been in contact with the department and has indicated that the newspaper rate is going up by at least 25 per cent. This increase will be paid primarily by the people in rural areas who must receive their papers by mail.

I subscribe to a number of daily newspapers. When I am at home I like to read the papers of larger urban centres like Vancouver. This increase in postal rates will almost completely eliminate my subscriptions to these newspapers. Surely this must be true of many people in Canada if this increase is to be passed on to the consumer. These people are not going to be in a position to pay the increased rates. The fact is as simple as that.

One example of this feeling was expressed in an editorial in an Ottawa newspaper. It was suggested there would be a $20 per year increase in cost to rural readers. The members of this house know what will happen. Hundreds of these rural subscribers will cancel their subscriptions. Whatever enjoyment can be obtained by reading these newspapers will be denied to those people who live in rural sections of Canada. I object very strongly to this.

People living in rural areas are the last to receive adequate television and radio coverage, the last to get good roads and educational facilities, but they are the first to be hit by increases of this type. Surely we should examine thoroughly all aspects of this legislation in a committee. These people should be allowed to make representations to us. We should have another look at the legislation to determine whether there is something we can do.

There is no doubt that the Postmaster General and his staff examined this legislation before bringing it before the house, but surely they did not thoroughly examine the problems which will arise. Had they done so they would not at the last moment have announced to the country that the government had changed its mind in respect of rural Saturday delivery. At the outset the government indicated it intended to stop Saturday delivery throughout Canada. When the Postmaster General began to realize the problem this would create in rural areas he changed his mind. So as far as I am concerned, Saturday mail delivery in urban areas should also be continued. It is sheer and utter nonsense to introduce a sharp increase in postal rates while at the same time curtailing service in certain areas.

These are some of the answers we should have before we pass this legislation. How is it going to affect the postal workers? What effect will it have on the over-all employment picture? What effect will it have on the earnings of postal employees? These are all problems which face members of this house and we should know the answers to these questions before we are asked to vote intelligently on this measure.

I should like to bring this fact to the attention of the minister. There is a need for an extension of postal services in an area of my riding. I refer to the Castlegar-Kinnaird area. These communities have grown rapidly. Most of the mail is received by the Castlegar post office and distributed from there. This is a fairly densely settled area. There should be greater postal service in this district. I ask the minister to consider this situation and provide the greater service which I think we should have in this modern day and age.

There are one or two more points I wish to make before resuming my seat. We have talked about the rates of increase in the various postal categories. As I said before, some increase is certainly warranted; it has to come. But, again, the rural people are hit the hardest. For example, we have had an overall increase of roughly 25 per cent in respect of money orders. The minister indicated this some time ago. People in rural areas do a great deal of buying through catalogues and the local post office and they have to foot a big chunk of this increase. They have to pay the additional charge simply because they live in rural areas and do their shopping through the mail.

One can go right down the list of postal increases and find that the people hardest hit are those who live in rural areas. These are the pioneers of this country who have moved into the wildernesses, hacked down the trees and built communities. These are the people who have helped build this great nation in which we live. This is why I ask the Postmaster General and members of the house not to be in such a terrific hurry to pass this legislation. Right now there is more urgent legislation on the order paper which could and should be debated in the house.

I appeal to hon. members, when this amendment comes to a vote, to vote to refer the question to a committee where every aspect of the problem and the side effects thereof can be taken into consideration before the legislation is passed. I do so because this measure may cause far more headaches than it will cure.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to urge the minister to consider sending this bill to a committee for study. I have been interested in following the career of the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) and have had the opportunity of meeting and getting to know members of his family who have some very far advanced ideas. I was impressed with the approach of the Postmaster General to the operation of the post office, but I would think that if he were sincerely interested in really doing something for it he would refer this legislation to a parliamentary committee so that he might gain enlightenment on whether the post office should be a department of government or a crown agency. I think there is a great deal of merit in considering this proposition because one would be able to say: We will subsidize certain aspects of the problem but the over-all operation must pay for itself. This, of course, has not always been true of crown corporations, but it has been true of those countries which have set the postal department apart from other departments of government and have made it a crown corporation or operated it as a separate agency.

I do not think we in Canada have done too badly with our post office. Over the years we have developed it into a highly satisfactory service. In my part of the country we have in the last five years been plagued with a decrease in mail and postal services. This has resulted from the discontinuance of the operation of mail service cars to many rural areas. Many years ago, when the railway first went into northern Ontario, letters would be sent by train from one point to another and post office employees sorted the mail on the trains. If a letter was going only 20 miles the sorter in the car would see that it was put off at the next post office.

It is now possible, with our modern technology and advancement, for a letter addressed to someone in the next town 20 miles away, to be put on a train in northern Ontario, carried to Toronto, sorted there, reshipped to Kirkland Lake or Timmins and reshipped from there in another mail bag. In some cases it will take 30 days for a letter to reach a person 20 miles away. Therefore I question whether we have really improved this service very rapidly when we have not

This is also a problem in the United States. In that country all sorts of systems have been tried to speed up the delivery of mail. Sorting the mail while in highway transportation has been tried. I understand that a gyro-stabilized truck is used whereby the body of the truck moves with the contours of the road. I am told they have not been able to find employees who can work in these trucks because people become sick operating under these conditions. We have not been able to replace the railroads in this regard. This is just one example of the changes that have been made in the delivery of mail. They are not always advantageous.

Some of the suggestions made by the Postmaster General-and I agree with the previous speaker in this respect—are probably necessary and some of them may even be advantageous. But I believe we still have not really faced the problem—and the minister will have to face it-of what does and does not make the service pay. Then we have to be honest about cutting out those things that do not make the service pay and considering those that do make it pay.

First class mail was a problem six months ago. It is not any more a problem now than it was at that time. It was an immediate problem when we were considering raising the postage rate for first class mail. First class mail is not the culprit. We are not getting as good a service as we did. The new proposals would reduce the service in all areas and vet we would have to pay more for it. It really will not make any difference to Eaton's catalogues. It will not make any difference to our throwing away what I might call household mail, or perhaps even to the mail members of parliament send to their constituents, which we think has some merit. The same thing applies to Eaton's; they believe their flyers have some influence on the recipients, but this is not always the case.

However, this change in service will make a great difference to those operating a business and using first class mail where other services are not readily available. There are many such areas in Canada. There are in this country many areas where mail is still the main source of communication and five-cent, first class, mail is the means of communicafor business purposes. They have to operate more than the money they cost.

through the mail and they are the ones who will be penalized.

We have talked a great deal about some of the changes that could be made. Yet Time magazine and Reader's Digest, those pseudo-Canadian magazines, are costing a great deal more than the minister will gain by way of increasing the postage rate of first class mail. These are just two items in the total picture.

I believe the committee should make a decision on this question. We are all aware that the status of Reader's Digest and Time magazine was a political decision which really had nothing to do with good housekeeping or good bookkeeping. Therefore the minister should not be greatly influenced by that argument, because as I understand it he looks at things on a dollars and cents basis. The argument that was used in respect of Time and Reader's Digest does not fit into that category.

The minister will probably not give much consideration to the arguments which have been put forward by those interested in maintaining the delivery in rural areas of dailies and more particularly weeklies perhaps because he may consider them to be based on sentimental rather than economic reasons. We know that three newspapers have closed down, one of them being the Family Herald and Weekly Star, perhaps not as a result of the anticipated increase in postal rates but because they had been operating on a very slim margin. For city dwellers this may not matter much one way or the other, but for those who have been raised on the farm and who are living in the farming community The Western Producer, the Family Herald and Weekly Star and the Winnipeg Free Press Weekly have been more than just newspapers. For many years they have served many functions on the farm. I suppose they were more useful on farms than anywhere else. They were read from cover to cover. When one got up in the morning one could light the fire with them. I see there are some hon. members here who remember to what uses these newspapers could be put. They played a great role in helping the farmer doctor his cow if she was sick. A farmer could increase his wife's culinary achievements by pointing out to her new recipes contained in these papers, and his children could read the tion by which business is conducted. These comics. There was something in them for people are not able to take advantage of some everyone, and a sentimental value was of the less expensive means of communication attached to them which I think was worth

I believe I pay $18 a year for a subscription to a local daily paper. With the proposed change it will now cost me $35. I know there are other people in the area who buy the same newspaper. Let me give the house an illustration. There is a small community which has been served by the railroad but this branch line is now being closed. The post office there is having some difficulty in providing mail service to the community. If the people there are lucky they will have mail delivery twice a week. However, before their mail reaches them there is a delay of perhaps three or four days. If anyone reads a newspaper in that area it will be a week or a week and a half old before he gets it. I believe the newspapers will find a great curtailment in subscriptions from that rural area.

Many changes should take place in the Post Office Department. Over the years I have been pleased to see that there has been a change in patronage in the operation of post offices and I think the Conservatives may be given some credit for it. I know this practice will continue but it is not as flagrant as it used to be. Post office officials are becoming more and more aware of their responsibility in recommending who should be appointed to be in charge of local post offices, who should get contracts and whether or not tenders are sufficiently high to sustain the required service. Formerly the tender system, particularly with regard to rural mail, was notorious in that a person could make a bid which would be accepted by the Post Office Department although it was well known that the bidder could not deliver mail with a horse and buggy at the price at which he bid. In many cases the local offices are now assisting people in their bids so that this problem does not exist to such an extent. We are also not running into the problem of a change in local post offices after an election which puts a new government in office.

I am still concerned about the number of requests that have come across my desk from people in my area asking for a new post office. I find that one has to go through the procedure of asking for a survey to be made to ascertain whether or not a post office in that area would bring revenue and whether premises should be rented or built. It seems to me that the officials in the Post Office Department are sufficiently well trained and able so that a member of parliament should not have to go through the process of asking for a survey to be made but should be able to write and ask them for a copy of the survey which they have made. This information should be brought up to date continually if the department is to be run in a businesslike way.

One person writes to me periodically asking that a count be made for the establishment of a postman's route for house delivery. Of course, sometimes this is a shady business. The mayor of the town may be opposed to a postal route in that area because he thinks that if people received their mail at home they would not walk by his store and he might be out of business. This is a pretty old-fashioned philosophy but the mayor may make so much fuss that the Post Office Department does not wish to oppose him after he has appeared on television and explained his point of view. These are the things which the minister should consider changing if he wishes to bring the act up to date.

I believe that the department should operate separately as a crown corporation or as a separate agency which would report periodically to parliament. I do not wish to become involved in the operation of the Post Office Department any more than I have to, and I hope other hon. members also feel that way. All we would have to do then would be to decide to what extent we want to subsidize such an agency, and instructions would be given by parliament toward that end.

I believe that referring this matter to a committee will assist the minister in deciding on the over-all direction which the Post Office Department should take. Judging from the remarks which the minister has made since he has been appointed Postmaster General and, even more important, before he came to this place, it is apparent at least to me that he has a business sense and wants to run the department in a businesslike way. If that is so, parliament should have the opportunity to decide on what kind of department we want before we give the Postmaster General the task of developing it. Therefore I hope the bill will be referred to a committee. I support the amendment.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) and his government, in spite of all the representations made to them, are determined to keep to the main lines of Bill No. C-116. As everyone can see, they will only concede some points with regard to second class mail to the recalcitrant members of the Liberal caucus. As for the rest, the guillotine of the Post Office Department is to work to the full.

In spite of everything, the question remains open. The minister is impatient to see this bill passed, but if he wants a quicker solution, let him refer the bill as soon as possible to a committee in order to get some good suggestions.

I must first point out the brutality of the suggested increase in rates for second class mail, and particularly for the dailies and the weeklies sent from here and elsewhere in Canada.

Regardless of any other consideration, that increase, by its size alone, is unreasonable. I might be allowed to mention that, if this new rate is enforced, contrary to our demands, it will mean a further expenditure of $75,000 a year for one daily alone. Up to now, postal charges accounted for about 2.9 per cent of the whole management budget of a newspaper; in the future, they will account for more than 6.4 per cent. This has been decided without previous warning, without any awareness of it nor the least consideration for contract commitments which, in some cases, bind the newspapers for a period of time overlapping the coming into force of the new postal rates. We cannot remember of any economic sector being hit as brutally as this one, these last few years, by a government. We cannot remember of any Canadian government which has behaved in such an inconsiderate manner towards the daily press and which resorted to similar means to express its opinions. Even the size of the additional charges which the Postmaster General and his colleagues are about to impose on some newspapers shows the rash contempt for the role of those communication media.

I am now quoting from a brief under date of October 17, sent to the hon. Minister by Les Quotidiens de Québec Inc.

In a democratic system, the citizen has a right to be informed. It is the role of the press and in particular the written press—to collect and circulate information.

But the net result of the measures now contemplated by your department to solve an administrative problem is to interfere with that right of the citizen to be informed and with the freedom of the press to publish the news.

We therefore submit that those reforms must be postponed so that a more exhaustive study can be made of the problem which makes them necessary and the advisability and terms of the possible application of efficient and fair corrective measures.

That a government should dare to increase so much in a single year the rates for such a vital service as this one is in itself a real scandal that can never be deplored enough. The Postmaster General is trying to justify his bill by mentioning the disastrous deficits that the mailing of newspapers entails each year.

In that regard, I would like to say three things. First of all, I question seriously the calculations on which the Postmaster General's argument is based. He said recently, at a meeting with newspapers editors, that shipment by mail of a daily newspaper like Le Devoir or La Tribune of Sherbrooke, for example, was costing the government $385,000 a year, for a total of about six million copies.

Evidently, those figures do not stand up. Furthermore, the member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) gave to the house the example of the London Free Press to place this vital question in its true context. The minister's officials established arbitrary averages which do not take into account all the operations involved in the administration of a newspaper as, for example Le Devoir, or La Tribune of Sherbrooke, averages which are misleading and unfair, in fact.

Let us take the example of the many thousand copies of Quebec newspapers distributed every day which are carried to Quebec City at the expense of their editors, whether they are for mail delivery by mail or by newsboys, or for newstands sales.

At the point of arrival, some are deposited at the post office, for delivery by the Post Office Department services, some are either directed to the depositary or delivered at their destination by carrier. In these last two cases, the cost per copy is averaging 25c.

How can the Postmaster General reach a cost of 65c. per copy in his calculations, when his services are in most cases doing less work than the newspapers to ensure delivery to other categories of subscribers or readers in the same area? The hon. member for Lambton-Kent said in the house that the averages put forward by the Postmaster General seemed suspicious to him, and I agree with him.

Liberal members have the duty to inquire further, instead of admitting with closed eyes that the averages put forward by the minister are correct. He has handed out to the members a lengthy document full of figures to support his argument. This document gives comparative figures on the first and third class mail tarifs in various countries, of Rivière-du-Loup, Sherbrooke, which the United States. It would seem that, Saint-Hyacinthe, comparative figures on second class rates in the United States and in Canada. Yet, the Post Office Department was supplied with those figures. They proved beyond a doubt that the proposed increase in Canada was simply extravagant compared with the one adopted in the United States.

The American government decreed an increase of approximately 15 per cent over a three-year period; this increase was supposedly reasonable. Canada stupidly accepts a total increase of 200 per cent over a year, when barely a year ago the rates were roughly the same in both countries.

Is this how the Postmaster General and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) intend to encourage dynamic Canadian publishing? Which of the American or Canadian publishers have the most difficulty in firmly setting themselves up under the American sun?

The Liberal government also intends to adjust the rates applied to two American publishers. The member who spoke before me mentioned this. I mean, the Reader's Digest and Time. But we can see to what extent he follows his traditionally prudent and servile reflexes when he attacks really powerful institutions.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[Mr. Dumont.]

In the case of dailies, they will have to pay in postal charges nearly three times more than what they are paying now, that is $6,-250,000 as compared with their present expenditures of $2,250,000. As far as the Reader's Digest and Time are concerned, the government draws in its claws. These two publications pay at this time $422,000, they would be paying $747,000, that is only 80 per cent more. I hate making comparisons, I find them odious in many respects, but we disapprove of a government that compels, us to do so, because it is unfair.

The Postmaster General has feigned to be a prince in continuing the rural mail delivery service on Saturday. We rejoice with the residents of rural areas for this major concession. This concession, however, does not solve the problem that would create for thousands of subscribers to a newspaper, the general suspension of the mail delivery on Saturdays, in urban centres.

Would the Postmaster General accept, for example, that in centres such as Chicoutimi, Rimouski, Nicolet, Drummondville, by accident, this document does not give Trois-Rivières, Thetford-Mines or Plessisville, at least the post offices would be opened on Saturday mornings, so that citizens could go and get their mail? Will he find another way to deliver the mail to them on that day? Would he be ready to provide for newspapers deprived of a delivery service to which they are undeniably entitled, financial compensations to permit them to plan otherwise?

> The Postmaster General admitted the other day that every citizen is entitled to an equal service from his department. He must recognize, in consequence, that this principle is equally valid in the case of citizens and concerns using postal services for the delivery of their goods or products. The compromise announced by the Postmaster General solves only a small part of the problem deriving from the proposal to eliminate the Saturday mail. Will the victims have to yield once more to the purpose set by the Postmaster General without any means of redress, any compensation?

> In his desire to nationalize the operations of the postal service, the minister is trying to reach a necessary objective. In his desire to bring rates to a more realistic level, he is equally partially right. But on the basis of such legitimate objectives, he goes astray in acting with a precipitation that can but betray the superficial character of his investigations on this question. The postal rate problem is a capital and complex matter. It must be thoroughly considered by parliament and the public.

> Should the Postmaster General succeed in having this bill passed at full speed without accepting to make a more thorough investigation, as required by the opposition, he may be sure he will have dealt a treacherous blow to many institutions who deserved better than that. He will not be forgiven for having shown himself as a lamb with the outsiders and as a tyrant with his own people. The same reprobation will encompass the sheep that will follow him without further scrutiny, and those sheep, Mr. Speaker, are those Liberal members who do not even care to rise in the house and say something. Yet, when these Liberals were elected, the daily newspapers were their best propagandists. Today, only the members on this side of the house, namely we from the Ralliement, who are the official opposition from the province of Quebec, are giving the example of good work, and yet the newspapers barely say a word about our just contributions. Nevertheless, since we feel this bill is unjust, we rise in spite of the fact that this is a majority govern- district—where television is non-existent and ment, and we are standing for newspapers, radio almost non-existent too. Such a situalike the Sherbrooke Tribune, that never say a tion exists in the northern part of the district word about us, newspapers reaching places like Plessisville and Thetford Mines and newspapers like Le Devoir. Those newspapers had hoped for the coming into power of this majority government. As for us, accustomed as we are to be accused from all sides, we still say that Bill No. C-116, as introduced by the Postmaster General, is unjust and that is why we ask that it be referred for a more thorough consideration, so that the necessary amendments may be made.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, as some of my colleagues who stated their views on this motion, I would like to underline a few other points.

When, on October 8, the minister brought in his resolution, I had already mentioned the unpopular reaction about Bill No. C-116. I remember that when I stated my point of view, no newspaper mentioned it and this is why we are somewhat astonished at such an insistence by those who, in this house, are going to the aid of the newspapers which objected; they have just understood that they should object. The alarm was sounded right away and they have just understood that we were right when we objected and that it was not just empty words. I would like to take up certain statements of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) who is not here at the present time. I would have like him to be here.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières is well known for his verbal acrobatics, and he hurled yesterday some untimely invectives against the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette). However, we are used to that, and we simply continue to express our views freely.

For this reason, I remain very happy to belong to a party whose members are truly free and can express and reflect exactly the views of their constituents. The hon, member for Trois-Rivières has told us that he holds to the basic principle that those who use the service are the ones who should pay. We should determine who these users are. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières seems to think that the users are those who send newspapers, parcels and letters; however, that is not the only point to be considered. The fact is that newspapers are not a luxury; the publishers and those who receive newspapers must pay the cost.

There are areas—and this is the case in my of Champlain, La Tuque and up to Parent. The newspaper is then the only means of information for the people of these areas. As a matter of fact, every family does get a newspaper; newspapers are very popular there. It is already rather expensive for the people to have to pay $20, $25 and $30 for the subscription to their newspaper. If the cost of the service is going to be passed on to the readers—as obviously the cost of subscriptions will be increased after this legislation has been passed—it is once more the people who will have to pay. Therefore, at first sight, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières seems to be sensible when he says that the users will foot the bill, but if you take a closer look at the situation, you realize that the users are everybody. So, let us be careful in that regard.

I come back to the arguments which I put forward early in October to the effect that it is truly a public service and that if the Post Office Department used to pay its way, why can it not do so today? We should seek the reasons which make the Post Office Department uneconomical. What are the true reasons? If the Post Office Department acts as a milk cow for other departments, of course it will show deficits. Planning or administration may be lacking, then let us consider the matter further. That is why we support the motion to refer this bill to a committee. because the question should be considered in depth, we should get more information and find out what methods are used in the operation of the Post Office. I should like to see an attempt made so that the Post Office Department would become economical. In my opinion, what prevents it from paying its way is simply mismanagement. We should correct that mismanagement instead of increasing the cost of the postal service.

As the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) suggested yesterday, if, at least, we were sure that next year we shall not be told: Unfortunately, the Post Office Department once more is in the red, the postal rates will have to be raised again. If, indeed, we were sure that the service will pay its way, but even that certainty is not available. Past experience demonstrates beyond doubt that this never happens and that the rates increase constantly.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, any animosity or partisanship should be set aside, and the possibility of the bill being examined under all its facets in committee should be seriously considered, so that we might decide on that bill only once in possession of all possible information. Such was the particular point I wanted to stress.

When will we be given an explanation why the expenditures of such or such department are included in the Post Office Department budget, why the Post Office Department which once yielded profits is no longer making any, in a word when we shall know the specific reasons for those deficits, we shall then be able to judge in a much more objective way, since all those to be hurt by that legislation, all the weeklies—as was pointed out by my neighbour, the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin)—and the dailies have sent us a number of protest telegrams. So, all what was said by those who complained, who showed that this bill is running counter to something quite popular, all that should indeed be taken into consideration.

And I should like to mention at this stage the serious periodicals which do not have a large number of subscribers and which therefore must ask a high subscription rate. They would need a larger circulation which is impossible at the present time for the very reason that the cost price is too heavy. Now, we must not forget that some of those periodicals are doomed to disappear, especially the French-Canadian periodicals. The French-Canadian periodicals in America only have 6 million subscribers. The problem is still more serious when one thinks of the French-Canadian periodicals which will have to disappear. It would be most inappropriate at the present time to encourage their disappearance, when French Canadians urgently need culture and information. It is certainly not the time to stop their publication. I would like to state some precise examples. Let us take the case of the magazine Relations which is considered as serious and noteworthy. It is not popular, in the sense that it does not have a large distribution, but for a population of a few million, it is normal that the more a magazine is serious, the more the number of its subscribers is limited, since it is not essentially popular. Now, this is the problem we should consider. It must be kept in mind that this measure will affect the entire population since everyone subscribes to, or buys newspapers, and once again the people will foot the bill.

Secondly, French periodicals will be particularly affected since they do not have enough subscribers to stay in business.

So, for all these reasons, I believe that we should think twice before doubling, or tripling indeed, the postal rates. Let us forget about partisanship and consider the possibility of other solutions.

Here is once again my solution. We should know exactly what causes such deficits, in what specific cases the Post Office Department must come to the financial assistance of other departments and why. Through this information and the restoration of sounder, more reasonable and more scientific management, perhaps such increases would not be required.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of delivering a speech because I did so yesterday. I simply wish to put a question to the minister.

Would the minister tell us at this stage what progress has been made towards the setting up of a task force the purpose of which was to determine whether or not the Post Office Department should become a Crown corporation? Has the task force been established? If not, when does he expect to set it up? If so, can he give us some idea as to the progress made in the discussions?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Those questions should be asked in committee, Mr. Speaker, but I have already answered them. That task force is already in existence.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the minister should not hesitate to provide further details so that the members may know what stage has reached the study of the problem arising from the Post Office Department.

MOTION TO EXTEND SITTING

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

That the ordinary hour of daily adjournment of this house this day be extended beyond 10 o'clock p.m. until 11 o'clock p.m.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS AFFECTING RATES, ADMIN-ISTRATION, SAVINGS BANK

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-116, to amend the Post Office Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-116, to amend the Post Office Act.

On clause 1-Oaths.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: May I point out that we shall not proceed with the adjournment proceedings this evening. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, in the past week years, are a very real necessity of life to all we in this house and people in the people in this country, as they are to all people country have twice experienced action by in every country. It is true that we have this government which has very ma-television and radio to give us the news, but terially increased the cost of living of most people, in addition to listening to the every Canadian. The first such experience radio or watching television, want to be able was the announcement in the postal measure to sit down quietly and study the news at before us that postal rates will be very, very their leisure. There is nothing that takes the much increased. The second serious rise in place of the newspaper, and people like to the cost of living that we have experienced in the past week was on Tuesday night, when the Minister of Finance announced that there would be a 2 per cent increase in income tax, which the government tried to glorify by calling it a social development tax. Of course everybody knows it is not that at all; it is simply a 2 per cent increase in personal income tax and is no more and no less than a measure to bail out a government that has completely lost control of its expenditures, and requires the taxpayer to bail it out, at very great cost to himself. As I say, Mr. Chairman, both these measures have very much increased the cost of living to the ordinary citizen.

Our experience has usually been that when there have been price increases to the consumer, the ordinary citizen has received an increase in service; that is, you pay more but you get more for it. But this measure is quite the reverse. Postal services will cost the Canadian people a great deal more, and they will receive far less service than they did before the increase.

Why should we suddenly be shouldered with this very, very steep rise in costs? A very short time ago the postmaster general of that day told us that the Post Office Department was paying its way and showing a surplus of many millions of dollars. Now, a short time later, quite the reverse is the case. The answer of course is that as in the case of general expenditures, as expressed through the budget as a whole, where costs have risen astronomically during the past five years and are today completely out of control, the Post Office Department has lost control over its expenditures and the taxpayers of Canada have to bear the brunt of the government's inefficiency in this important department.

One of the most important increases in cost to the Canadian people, aside from the fact that they will have to pay more for every letter they post, every parcel they send through the mail or any way in which they use the post office, is the sharp increase in the cost of that very important news medium, the newspapers. We all know that newspapers today, as they have been for many, many absorb the news in this way.

As we know, Bill C-116 greatly increases the cost of distribution of our newspapers, whether they be dailies, semi-weeklies, triweeklies or weeklies. We also know that as in the case of all other costs of production, the greatly increased costs of distribution which will be imposed by the government through so materially increasing the postal rate of newspapers, as well as other things that go by mail, will be passed on, as in all other cases, to the consumer, the person who receives his newspaper.

The publishers of our various newspapers, our dailies, tri-weeklies, bi-weeklies and weeklies, have through their representative associations asked this government for the right to appear before the appropriate committee of parliament, in this case the committee on transport and communications, explain their case to the government, and have indicated that they are prepared to answer all questions that the government would like to ask about their operations.

Unfortunately, as was expressed in the vote that took place between five and six o'clock tonight, the government has refused our newspaper publishers the right to appear before this committee and explain their point of view.

An hon. Member: Majority rule.

Mr. Hees: The hon. member says, "majority rule." If the hon, member wants to look back in Hansard of last February, he will see the Prime Minister's eloquent words when he said, in effect, "We are your masters and", in so many words, "you will do what we tell you to do."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: I want to tell government members that this is exactly the attitude adopted by another Liberal government in 1956, when Right Hon. C. D. Howe said he would have a certain measure, the pipe line bill passed by July 1.

clause 1 of Bill C-116, an act to amend the Post Office Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I was just trying to better educate some of the members on the government side, and show them the great similarity between what happened in 1956 and what is happening today. This government does have an over-all majority, and the majority does rule; there is no question about that. All the government has to do is to call in the members. It can vote us down, it can ram anything it wants down our throats, it can impose closure. This government is the master of parliament.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Pringle: As a new member, Mr. Chairman, I am humbly respectful of the experience of hon, members such as the hon, member for Prince Edward-Hastings and of other hon. members, but if the majority rules, I wonder how we got into all these problems during a majority opposition.

Mr. Hees: You did not have a majority opposition; you had a minority government, in case you do not know about it. That is how ignorant some of the members on the government side are.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I would ask the hon, member to revert to the matter of the bill before us and I would ask all hon. members not to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Hees: I will be glad to do that, Mr. Chairman and I will finish by saying that one year after the pipe line debate, that great majority government was defeated, and the man who rammed that bill down our throats was defeated by over 3,000 votes. I want to tell the minister this, so he can look forward to it in the future.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Béchard): I hope the hon. member has said all he wanted to say.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I think you will agree that I was continuing with my speech in which I dealt with this measure, but I was

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would interrupted and asked some questions for remind the hon, member that we are on clarification by some hon, members on the government side, so I felt obliged to give them an answer. Mr. Chairman, we on this side are not arrogant.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: We give information when it is asked for, as a complete opposite to what goes on on the other side of the house.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to continue my speech I will be very pleased to do so. I should like to deal with the hardships that are encountered by some of our newspapers. First of all I will start with the daily papers. In the second class mail classification, daily newspapers will be charged 5 cents a pound on news content, and 15 cents a pound on advertising content. No other publication in the second class mail group pays a higher rate on advertising content than it does on news or editorial content. In this regard I want to ask the minister a question which I hope he will answer. Why are newspapers being charged 15 cents a pound on advertising when magazines—notably Time and Reader's Digest-will pay only 5 cents a pound? I claim this discriminates against daily newspapers, and is, in fact, a tax on daily newspaper advertising.

I would like to hear an explanation from the minister as to why this unsatisfactory and unfair situation has been brought about by this government, and by the minister in charge of these operations. I hope that very soon he will take the opportunity to rise and explain the reason for this. Perhaps he would like to do so now.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, I will answer the hon. member's question when we get to the clause in which this matter is dealt with. Now we are on clause 1.

Mr. Hees: The house can appreciate the minister's reluctance. He has a right to delay answering that question, but when the time comes, I think he will slough over it and hide it under something else. We had a minister at one time who was very good at that, and then he was defeated. Mr. Gardiner was very good at that.

An hon. Member: Would the hon. member resign at once.

Mr. Hees: Yes, and I certainly did. This is something I do not suppose the hon. member would ever have the courage to do if he felt he disagreed with his party. He would continue to be a rubber stamp.

is very unfairly hit is the biweekly and triweekly newspapers of this country, because they have been classed as dailies, and they have to pay the same distribution rate as do the daily newspapers. The big metropolitan dailies, with a large urban circulation, and usually a comparatively small rural circulation, are able to cover a great deal of their costs by the revenue from their urban circulation, which does not have to be delivered through the mail. But for biweekly or triweekly newspapers, which have a relatively small circulation, a very large proportion of which has to be delivered through the mails on rural routes, this would be a great hardship. These newspapers are denied the free zone that is accorded to the weekly newspapers, so they are very unfairly dealt with, and very hard hit. As I have said, the people who will have to foot the bill in the long run are the recipients of these biweekly and triweekly newspapers, very important organs which give our people the news they want to receive.

Finally, there are the weekly newspapers which have to pay a very much higher rate for distribution. So we can see that this department is not sparing any readers of news in Canada, because everyone who receives newspapers from now on will have to pay a higher price for them, raising the cost of living very materially. As I have pointed out, these newspapers are a necessity, not a luxury. I say the government has arrogantly refused to allow the newspapers of Canada, the dailies, the biweeklies, the triweeklies and the weeklies, to be represented at a hearing of the committee on transport and communications, to put forward their point of view and to explain why they believe they and those who read those newspapers will be unfairly treated.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister said over and over again that he wanted the people of Canada to become more involved in the process of government. He wanted them to know more about government. He said on the hustings and in the shopping plazas, that he wanted the people of Canada to become more involved government.

An hon. Member: So they are.

Mr. Hees: This is not the case. We see how ridiculous this situation has become, because to become involved in government you must be able to talk to the government. You must be able to converse with the government and

Now, Mr. Chairman, the second group that to learn what it has in mind when it expresses opinions about something. You should not simply be talked to by government, which is obviously the intention of the minister who is in charge of this bill. That is what the government has told the minister to do. The Prime Minister and the members of the cabinet have told the minister to refuse to allow the newspapers of Canada, through their associations, to appear before the appropriate committee of this house, the standing committee on transport and communications, to answer questions and to put forward their point of view.

• (8:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: How can the minister do

Mr. Hees: That remark shows how ignorant my hon. friend is, because this kind of procedure has been used in parliament for many, many years. It was used extremely well by Mr. Pickersgill when he presented to this parliament a very complex bill about a year ago, the transportation bill. That bill, like this one. had many complicated clauses and was very controversial. But Mr. Pickersgill had the good sense and judgment to send it to the appropriate committee, where witnesses, and all those who wanted to appear, were heard. As a result, Mr. Chairman, of the hearings before that committee, a very excellent bill emerged. The members of the committee gained a great deal of information from those experienced in transportation matters in this country, thereby enabling this parliament to pass a bill much more valuable to the people of Canada than would otherwise have been

Over and over again, Mr. Chairman, controversial bills have been sent to the appropriate committee and people who wanted to appear have been heard. As a result, the legislation was improved, and a far better bill passed by parliament. However, Mr. Chairman, we are now back to majority Liberal government. It is the kind of government that is determined to jam legislation down the throats of the opposition. Hon. members opposite have the votes; the members of the house can be called in at any time, or closure can be brought down, because they have a majority. But let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that the last time the Liberals did that they were defeated one year later, and this is what is going to happen four years from now. Let me tell this minister that the last minister who did this, C. D. Howe, was defeated by an unknown by no less than 3,000 votes. I say to the minister that if he wants a career in this parliament, then I suggest he pay some attention to history and learn what has happened to those who in the past did what he is trying to do today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think at this stage I must remind all members of the committee of standing order 12, paragraph (3), which reads as follows:

When a member is speaking, no member shall... interrupt him, except to raise a point of order.

Mr. Hees: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières on a point of order.

Mr. Mongrain: Would my hon. friend allow a question at this time?

Mr. Hees: Certainly.

Mr. Mongrain: Could my hon. friend tell me whether, when he was a minister of the crown and his party was in power, he always referred his bills to committee of the house?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, my answer is that any time I brought in a bill that was in any way controversial, and with regard to which anyone wanted to make representations and express their opinions, that bill went to a committee. I want to thank my hon. friend very much for posing that question, and if any other member has a question to pose I would very much like to answer it.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman-

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, my time is limited, but since I should like to answer the hon. member, perhaps he would wait until I have finished, and then I shall accommodate him.

Mr. Ouellet: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The hon. member does not want to receive a question now.

Mr. Hees: My time is running out, Mr. Chairman, so perhaps the hon. member will wait till I have finished my remarks.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Ouellet: It has to do with-

Mr. Hees: I said, my time is running out and I will answer the hon. member's question immediately I have concluded.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Another rule of this house states that when an hon. member does not want to answer a question in the course of his speech he remains standing. Therefore the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings has the floor.

Mr. Hees: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to tell hon. members that I will answer questions for as long as they want to ask them. However, I do want time to finish my very fair and constructive address.

I would strongly urge the Prime Minister, the man who aims at leading the "just society"—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: I said, Mr. Chairman, the man who aims at leading the "just society". I would ask this man to stop it being derailed so early in its journey, and to make it possible for this country to have a more just society, instead of a very unjust society where people are not allowed to come before a parliamentary committee—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret the interruption but I have to ask the hon. member once again to come back to the bill under study, Bill No. C-116.

Mr. Hees: I will end, Mr. Chairman, simply by making an appeal to the Prime Minister. I appeal to him to reconsider this refusal to allow the publishers, through their associations, to appear before a committee of this house. I ask him to let them appear and answer questions. After all, the Prime Minister said that he wants the people of Canada to participate in government. Let us have him show that he really meant what he said on the hustings, that he did not just want communications to be one way, but that he wants it to be both ways.

However, Mr. Chairman, through the action of the Postmaster General the Prime Minister is saying that he does not want this communication to be both ways. He wants to tell the people of Canada what they are going to do. He also wants to tell the members of this house what to do. Other governments have welcomed the opportunity to let representations be made to committees. If this is done in this case, I feel sure that these publishers will be able to make it very clear why the only fair thing to do is greatly to revise the measures that are being put forward by this minister, measures that are going to cost the Canadian people a very great deal more out of their pockets year by year.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that these postal increases, and this latest 2 per cent tax that has just been announced in the budget are something for which the people of Canada will not stand. They are something they should not be asked to absorb at a time when costs are already far too high. They are the result of the gross mismanagement of our financial affairs that has been perpetrated on the people of this country by the government.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might be permitted a few preliminary remarks before addressing myself to the first clause that is before the committee. During the last four days hon. members have posed a number of questions that I think could be answered very quickly.

Before doing this, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make two points. The hon. member for Kootenay West asked how this legislation is going to affect postal employees. I think I can give a better answer by reading a telegram I received this morning: It says:

• (8:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Best wishes for the passing of your bill. The post office must be operated on a business-like and economic basis. Let us hope that the study on the crown agency proposal is speeded up.

[English]

The telegram was signed by someone well known to all Canadians, W. L. Houle, President National du Syndicat des Postiers du Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Kierans: Those who work for the post office, including all union employees, have made known how they feel about this bill.

I wish to talk about definitions. One hon. member argued, as did the press, that the deficit on second class mail is a subsidy. Some said that I called it a subsidy to the publishing industry. In reply I wish to quote from Webster's dictionary, where a subsidy is defined as——a grant of funds or property from a government, as of the state or a municipal corporation, to a private person or company to assist in the establishment or support of an enterprise deemed advantageous to the public; ... A subsidy may be a simple gift or may consist in the payment of an amount in excess of the usual charges in establishing or maintaining a service,—

The example given is, carrying the mails.

An hon. Member: Tell us about Time magazine.

Mr. Kierans: The hon. member for Hillsborough asked about benefits to be gained from expanded all-up services. I am glad he asked that question, because the answer surprised me also, as I am sure it will surprise the hon. member. The extension of all-up service to first class mail over 8 ounces will result in an additional 2.5 million ton miles being carried.

The hon, member for Edmonton West asked why urban dwellers should not be entitled to deliveries on Saturday, in light of our decision to continue with Saturday service on rural routes. It must be kept in mind that the rural post office is almost a post office on wheels. The patron receives his mail from it and posts his letter in the rural mail box. From the carrier he buys stamps or money orders. If the route does not operate on Saturday, the rural route patron has no service whatsoever. Generally speaking, it is advantageous to maintain such service, since there is no source other than the mobile post office from which he can obtain newspapers, an important point to consider.

The urban dweller on the other hand has access to sub post offices on Saturday. If he wishes to purchase stamps or money orders, he can do so. If it is absolutely necessary, as might be the case with a business, lock boxes may be rented as an aid to delivery. Also, the urban dweller may receive newspapers from a newspaper carrier boy, or from a store. Consequently, the curtailment of service in urban centres does not inconvenience the urban dweller nearly to the same extent that a curtailment would inconvenience the rural dweller.

The hon, member for Hillsborough asked about the imbalance of newspaper and periodical traffic between this country and the United States. The Post Office Department keeps records of the mailing of newspapers, as does the United States post office. Consequently there is no problem in arriving at the exact number of copies of publications which are addressed to either country. A check is kept by both administrations.

The hon, member for Hillsborough also asked a question about sorting of mail on rural routes. It has never been comtemplated that mail would not be sorted, since that would be to our disadvantage generally. Obviously, mail will be collected. The collection, sortation and dispatch of mail will be maintained over the week end.

The hon, member for Surrey asked what happened to our programs of modernization and technological progress. I think I mentioned in my opening statement that the mechanization of our new post office buildings is as advanced as anywhere else. The containerization of mail in our new postal terminals in cities like Winnipeg and Edmonton, say, compares favourably with facilities of similar size anywhere else in the world. In addition, we are sharing in the costs of developing certain aspects of postal mechanization on a tripartite basis with the United States and England. Also, since we have membership in the universal postal union, which has 137 members, we share our development information with other countries, and they in turn pass on their developments to Canada.

The hon, member for Surrey asked about the cost of handling money packets. He wanted a comparison of postal rates, and the rate charged by private security services. We do not insure the full amount of the money packets that we may handle, and no comparison is possible. But private services charge a great deal more than we do. We charge $1.75 per money packet, but we do not guarantee the amounts involved.

The hon. member for Surrey inquired about printed matter rates with Great Britain, as compared with the rates between the Americas and Spain. I might point out that the printed matter rate between Britain and other countries of the world is the internationally regulated printed matter rate. This comes within charges prescribed by the universal postal union. The Americas to Spain printed matter rate extends to our domestic third class mail, as prescribed by the convention of the Americas and Spain postal unions, to which Canada is a signatory.

The hon. member for Surrey also wanted to know the deficit applicable to special deliveries for 1967-68. It was $73,000. Special delivery, however, could be regarded as part of our first class service. It provides a preferred delivery facility.

The hon, member for Saskatoon-Biggar talked about weekly farm newspapers. I might mention an example involving one large weekly paper. The newspaper or magazine salesmen concentrated on this because of the lucrative returns it brought. For instance ties easier from an administrative point of a 5-year subscription cost $7. Whether the subscription was a new one or a renewal, the salesmen pocketed $6.30 of the $7, or almost 90 per cent. The remaining 10 per cent is turned over to a subscription clearing house which keeps the permitted 70 cents and forwards the order to the company. In other words, the economics of this industry must be changed because the paper itself receives not a single cent from the subscription rate.

Mr. Woolliams: The Saskatoon wheat pool picks up the tab.

Mr. Kierans: If hon. members want me to name the paper, I will.

Mr. Woolliams: It is the Western Producer.

Mr. Kierans: Later, when we discuss this bill clause by clause, I shall ask a colleague of mine to present an amendment which will have the effect of striking out lines 24 to 34 on page 4 of the bill, in effect stretching out the impact of the second class increases.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Kierans: Could the hon. member wait a moment, until I have finished perhaps?

Mr. Noble: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I asked the Postmaster General a question last Monday and he promised to answer it when he came to this part of the debate. Perhaps I should repeat my question. Could he tell the committee why there will be a split rate for daily newspapers and a flat rate for all other publications, save second class mail.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Kierans: The question the hon, member has posed is: Why are we charging advertising rates on newspapers and not on magazines? I think the answer is fairly simple. It is that the magazines are under severe pressure from United States magazines and their competitive position is nowhere near as strong as that of the majority of our daily newspapers in this country, with their monopoly position.

Mr. Noble: What about the weekly newspapers?

Mr. Kierans: The purpose of section 1 is simply to give specific authority for delegation of this power to the postmasters in order to make a number of ordinary, routine activi-view. When this power has been delegated, a postmaster in Orillia or in Shippegan, Nova Scotia can witness testimony by a claimant that he has lost a money order, or if he wants to lay a claim under the Bankruptcy Act on behalf of the post office and file it with a trustee, he would be empowered to make such an affidavit and swear to it. This is a simple administrative change which will reduce some of the frustration and improve administration.

Mr. Hees: Can the hon. gentleman answer the question I put to him. I asked him why newspapers were charged 15 cents a pound on advertizing while magazines were not and the minister said it was because newspapers were not facing the same intensity of competition as were magazines. Does he not consider that there is fierce competition between, for example, the Toronto Star and the Toronto Telegram or between the Ottawa Citizen and the Ottawa Journal which are fighting tooth and nail against each other?

Mr. Kierans: But the newspapers in question are all paying the same 15 cents, so the competitive position vis-à-vis each other does not change.

Mr. Hees: But are not all newspapers in Canada fighting tooth and nail against the radio and television stations for the advertizing dollar?

Mr. Kierans: We do not carry radio or television messages. We do carry newspapers which weigh up to one pound, for which we get as little as one third of one cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Again I ask the minister whether he considers that the competition faced by Canadian magazines is as tough as that which the daily newspapers face, when they have to fight radio and television competition for the advertizing dollar? The answer is obviously, no.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask the minister one question arising out of something he said? He talked about a subsidy to the publishers, and gave a definition of subsidy. Is it not fair to assume that the subsidy is really not paid to the publisher at all, but is actually directed to to a fair extent, though, and this bill will as a the consumer? Its benefits are received by matter of fact be, on balance, of genuine help subscribers either to daily or weekly newspa- to the magazine industry because of the effect pers, if there is in fact a subsidy paid. This is of changes in the third class mail as a result the point which is made by some of the lead- of which the advertizing man will have to ask weekly. Would the minister not agree in this regard?

Mr. Kierans: No, I would not agree. In point of fact we carry a newspaper which costs 6.81 cents to deliver, and at the present time we recover less than 1 cent. As it is we are only demanding 2 cents as a minimum, and this still leaves a subsidy of $39 million to the entire class. If the newspapers choose to pass it on, that is their responsibility. I do not know what they will do.

I might point out that when we go to buy a newspaper we pay 10 cents a copy, whereas a subscriber might be able to buy it for as little as $10, $12 or $13 a year. This is a policy which the newspapers have adopted, so as to acquire additional circulation in order that their advertizing rates can be increased. If they want to continue to do that, it is their responsibility. But my responsibility is to see that we make some kind of an appropriate charge for the work we are performing.

If the hon, member wishes to argue that the newspapers have simply been passing this benefit over, and that we should therefore continue these uneconomic rates because the consumers are getting the benefit of them, why should the postal services make any charge for anything? Why should there be any pricing policy at all?

Mr. Hees: The minister answered my original question by saying that the magazines are up against much tougher competition for advertizing dollars than are the newspapers of Canada. I ask him: Does he consider that the dailies face less competition from the television and radio media than the Canadian magazines which compete with magazines from the United States?

Mr. Kierans: The advertizing dollar is divided in a number of different ways. What has changed in Canada is that a greater proportion of it now goes to television and radio. This affects newspapers, it affects magazines and it affects the third class mail. The particular position of the magazines is not one in which the daily newspapers find themselves. Like the newspapers, the magazines have this struggle for their percentage of the advertizing dollar. The situation is now improving ing newspapers in Canada, both daily and himself: How much of my dollar will I place in television and radio, how much in newspapers and magazines, and, now, how much of the dollar I have spent on direct mail will I continue to spend on direct mail?

• (8:50 p.m.)

The point I wish to make is that magazines share with newspapers the competition for the advertizing dollar, but there is one special type of competition which magazines have to face. The daily newspapers have a market that is not seriously damaged by the Chicago Tribune, the New York Times or the Los Angeles Examiner, whereas any Canadian magazine has the tremendous competition of all the additional runs of all the American magazines that come in here. If we taxed their advertizing dollar, we being bound by the postal union convention to admit all magazines—the only alternative to placing terminal charges on imported magazines is to get out of the postal union—then obviously we would be doing a disservice to Canadian magazines.

Mr. Hees: Does that mean-

The Deputy Chairman: Order. To be fair to all hon. members who want to participate in the debate on clause 1, I think other hon. members should wait until we reach other clauses of the bill, at which stage they can ask their questions.

Mr. Orlikow: First, Mr. Chairman, I want to disagree completely with the principle that the minister has enunciated as if it were one of the ten commandments, namely that all of a sudden after 100 years or more the Post Office Department must operate in the black, and that there is something immoral or illegal about subsidizing postal service. I do not say that we must subsidize postal rates, or must subsidize them to the extent which we are doing at the moment, but the minister seems to have come to the conclusion that there must be no subsidy.

If we had applied this principle to the country as a whole it would never have become a country in the first place. It never made economic sense to build the transcontinental railway, but if we had not built it there would not have been a Canada.

An hon. Member: Speak on the bill.

Mr. Orlikow: It is true that we have a majority government. It is true that members opposite form the government but, Mr. Chairman, members on this side of the chamber were elected to come here and express the views of their constituents, and I do not intend to be howled down by the kind of spectacle we have had tonight, with all that prolonged clapping. I have lots of patience. If the members over there and the yahoos in the top corner want to applaud other speakers, I will just take my time; but I am entitled to my say. I listened to the minister. I will listen to him again, and to anybody else on that side who wants to speak, although I must say it is damned seldom that they do get up to speak. However, I am sure members on this side will listen to them, but I think we are entitled to the same consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orlikow: Thank God I don't have to account to members over there for what I say. They can account to their constituents and I will account to mine.

We have had subsidies in every sector of the life of this country. We have industries in Ontario and Quebec which would not have existed for a week if we did not have a tariff structure, paid for by the people of western Canada, so that the prices which those industries get for their products permit them to operate. We could buy goods cheaper from the United States, but we have a tariff because we decided that we wanted an auto and a steel industry in Canada. We also have subsidies for farm products.

All I am saying is that there is nothing wrong with subsidies for postal rates, if we think there is a social purpose for them. That is something the minister has not begun to think about.

Speaking from memory, and I do not think I am very wrong, I understood the minister to say that only 25 per cent of the first class mail that goes out is sent by the ordinary citizen, by the mother writing to her daughter or son at the other end of the country, and that 75 per cent of the first class mail is posted by business organizations. That is true; nobody questions it. But surely the minister and all members of this house know that every business organization which faces an increase in postal costs, or in any other costs, will recover that increase from the consumer. When the minister increases first class postal rates from five cents to six cents per letter he is in fact imposing another tax on the ordinary consumer, and I am not satisfied that we need to do that.

I now wish to deal with the question of the cost of second class mail. I don't think I need tell the minister that I am not very friendly, politically or personally, with the Thomson publishers, the Sifton publishers, the McConnells, or whoever publishes the Montreal newspaper. They are much more accustomed to supporting his party than my party. They are not very poor. They have done very well. They have done very well, partly because of the fact that for 17 years or more we have left untouched the postal rates for mailing newspapers and magazines.

I am not for a moment suggesting that those rates must never increase but, Mr. Chairman, I believe that if we are to have a country which has a national identity it is necessary that we have living newspapers, effective newspapers and magazines.

I would like to know whether the minister has really given consideration to what this kind of increase means to newspapers, not so much to daily newspapers because the bulk of their circulation is not delivered by using the mails, but the weekly newspapers, the small town, rural newspapers. How many of them will survive, with the kind of increases which the minister is proposing, increases which run from 200 per cent to 300 per cent?

Last week I had a talk with the editor of the Manitoba Co-Operator. There are some Liberal members in the house from rural Manitoba. I am sure they know much more about the Manitoba Co-Operator than I do, but the editor of the newspaper told me that the mailing charges for a 20 page issue have been $148 and those charges will now be increased to $375. I am not a professor of economics, as the minister used to be, but I can quickly calculate that that increase is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 250 per cent.

I am told that the Western Producer is in the same boat. I am sure the farm union newspapers are also in the same boat. Important non-profit organizations which form such an integral part of our democracy, our democracy about which the Prime Minister has so frequently and eloquently spoken, will not be able to function as effectively as previously. Non-profit organizations, trade unions, cooperatives and professional organizations will have to curtail the frequency of the publications that they issue.

At present university publications such as the quarterly put out by Queen's, the magazine put out by Dalhousie, and the University of Toronto quarterly are hanging on only by the skin of their teeth. None of them is making money. In fact, all the time, they teeter on the brink of going out of business. I suggest to the minister it is extremely likely that what he proposes will drive the last nails into the coffins of those publications. Is that what the minister wants? I don't think many members of this house want it.

What about the other non-profit organizations? Some days ago the minister received a delegation consisting of editors of labour newspapers who discussed their problems with him. The editor of the machinists union paper pointed out that their publication, which is sent to every one of their 37,000 members in Canada, has been mailed at a cost of $154 per week, but under the new regulations the cost will go up from one fifth of a cent per copy to two and a half cents per copy. This is an increase from $154 a week to $925 a week. What this means is that in all likelihood the union will cut back on the publications it sends out to its members. I suggest to the minister this means that the membership will be less informed than it has been up until now. It will be much less knowledgeable about the problems of the union and the industry.

The situation will be similar in respect of many other unions in this country. The minister heard representations by the editor of the Canadian Labourer, the official organ of the Canadian Labour Congress, which publication was in the same situation. I am sure this is the position of many professional organizations, not just trade unions. It will include credit unions, co-operatives and organizations such as teachers associations, medical associations, nurses associations and so on.

What about the newspapers? I do not hold a brief for them in any way. It may be that the time has come when the charges against them should be increased. But, should they be increased in the amount the minister proposes? I suggest that many of them in all likelihood will be forced to the wall. I do not have the figures—the minister may have them-about the large number of weekly newspapers in every province of Canada which have gone out of business in the last 15 years. I am certain the increases the minister has in mind will mean that another batch of weekly newspapers will be forced out of business. Is this what we want? I am not suggesting the rates should remain as they are; over a general period of five years or more? I think this could be done. I believe the minister is so determined to prove he is an efficient administrator and is so anxious to get things done that he believes he should proceed full speed ahead, and damn the consequences.

When we talk about an increase in rates I am very curious as to how the minister can explain and justify what I consider to be some very peculiar effects of his proposed increases. I shall try to quote exactly from the financial statement and the details of this proposed rate adjustment which the minister sent to every member of parliament. Here we have a page headed "Summary of Volume Revenue, Cost and Deficit, Second Class Mail, 1967-68". The deficit in respect of delivering daily newspapers is estimated to be $5,637,-000. The percentage of the cost for delivering daily newspapers which we collected is 30.1 per cent.

The minister is proposing some very drastic increases. The deficit under his proposal will be reduced from the $5,600,000 to a figure of $1,600,000. He proposes to cut this deficit by $4 million in one year. The average costs which will be collected for delivering daily newspapers under the new rates quoted by the minister will be 79.8 per cent. In other words, from 30 per cent, he goes up to almost 80 per cent. That is a very substantial increase.

I am sure the minister is aware of this, but I should like to bring to the attention of members of this house that Mr. Ryan, the editor of Le Devoir, one of the best newspapers in this country, has stated that if the minister proceeds with his various proposals the position of Le Devoir will be almost completely untenable and that the possibilities of its continuing in existence are pretty slim. That is sufficient comment about what the minister proposes in respect of newspapers. The minister shakes his head. If I am mistaken and if Mr. Ryan has been misquoted I would be very happy to hear anything more the minister may have heard from Mr. Ryan.

I should like to turn now to some publications which are very important to this country. I have in mind Reader's Digest and Time magazine. In this regard I should like to quote again from the same statement. The amount the post office has collected from Reader's Digest for mailing this magazine to subscribers across Canada is, percentagewise, just half of what is collected from the daily newspapers. In other words, we have been fell swoop? Why can rates not be increased collecting 15.7 per cent of the cost and we had a deficit which the taxpayers of Canada paid in the amount of $982,000. Under the new proposal we will collect the grand total of 31.3 per cent of the cost. From the newspapers we will collect 80 per cent, but from Reader's Digest we will collect 31.3 per cent. I mentioned that previously the deficit was $982,000. It will now be cut to $800,000. I wonder what magic Reader's Digest has, that it is to be allowed to retain this very favourable position.

> Let us turn now to Time magazine, that great organ of the Liberal party of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Orlikow: Last year Time magazine paid 21.8 per cent of the cost of delivering its magazines to its subscribers in Canada. The deficit last year, according to the Postmaster General—these are not my figures; they are the minister's figures—was $864,000. Having proposed these Draconian increases, what does the minister propose for the daily newspapers? Time magazine, the organ of the Liberal party, will be paying a fantastic amount. They will be paying 34.7 per cent of the cost of mailing Time magazine, compared to 80 per cent for the daily newspapers. Last year the deficit in respect of delivering Time magazine was $864,000. This year the minister says we will only lose $721,000.

Mr. Woolliams: It is still ridiculous.

Mr. Orlikow: In reply to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings the minister spoke of the difficulties of the magazines. This is true. The Canadian Forum, the Canadian Commentator, and the Queen's Quarterly are in great difficulty. I did not realize, however, that the Luce publication and Reader's Digest were in such difficulty that they needed a handout from the Canadian people. I believe in free speech and I believe in freedom of the press. If Time magazine wishes to portray the Prime Minister as a new Messiah, that is its right. If Time magazine wants to say that we never had a better government than the present Liberal government, that is its right, but I object to the taxes gathered from the almost 50 per cent of the Canadian people who voted against this government-my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says the figure is more than 50 per cent-being used to pay a subsidy in order to get Liberal propaganda into the hundreds of thousands of homes across this country. Surely the minister is a competent man and can devise methods of getting rid of deficits. I am sure he can devise something a great deal more equitable than what he is proposing tonight.

I await, with a good deal of interest, an explanation in respect of this strange and mysterious subsidy which I consider to be completely unjustified.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has raised a number of points which I should like to explain. I hope I do not forget one or two of them. He has suggested that I feel it is absolutely necessary that the post office operate in the black. The fact is, as all of the evidence shows, that the post office, with the best intentions in the world, is going to have a deficit of $39 or $40 million next year.

It is my belief the post office should charge those people for whom it renders service. As a fact, the hon. member for Three Rivers said yesterday very clearly that this is not a tax, that it is—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh; Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

Mr. Kierans: The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) said yesterday that it was not a tax but rather charges.

[English]

These are charges to the people who are using the services. They are not like taxes which are imposed and where an individual has no alternative but to pay them. These people can choose not to use the services. If they use the services of the post office, the post office wants to be paid something approaching an appropriate cost.

The Reader's Digest and Time magazine cannot be compared to newspapers, because they are not in the same class. Let us compare them with the class of publications in which they belong, which includes all magazines, weekly and urban newspapers. Without selecting 1, 2, 11 or 12 out of this class, the average cost is 33 per cent. It so happens that the cost of handling Time magazine is above that average and the cost of handling Reader's Digest is below that average. These magazines are all assessed according to the format, the weight, the circulation and so on. It happens that the two of them cost 31.3 per cent and 34.7 per cent, yet they come out exactly even. There is no discrimination in favour of or against them.

Let me make it quite clear that we do not compare magazines with newspapers. I cannot single them out and put them in the newspaper class, because they are not in that class. I have listed them separately because they have specific Canadian editions and are published in Canada on a pattern very much different from other publications. This is an issue I am quite willing to discuss, but we are forgetting something.

I made an announcement earlier this day that a colleague of mine would be presenting an amendment. This amendment will have the effect of stretching out the rules which most people seem to feel are too severe. We intend to stretch out these increases over a period of time, specifically over another year. This will apply particularly to the rates in respect of newspapers, mainly weeklies. The remarks of hon. members would indicate that this class of publication is in a particularly perilous situation financially. These publications pay only 9 per cent of the cost of carrying them. This is now only going to be 13.5 per cent of the cost. I submit with all deference that the people of Canada should know that they are paying subsidies, and that is what these are, in one way or another.

It is true that the hon. member mentioned number of names of publications. He referred to the national machinists union publication. This union distributes approximately 40,000 copies, once each week, across Canada. It is published in Washington and there is some editorial comment added for Canada. The computation of this is 40,000 copies, 52 times a year, or approximately 2 million copies. We were receiving from $9,000 to $10,-000 for carrying these copies. I asked them what they charged for their weekly publication or bulletin and I was informed that it is $1 per year. They said it was very worth while and that it contained a number of articles of interest to all members. I suggested the net effect of this charge would allow them to recover their entire stamp bill by adding 83 cents to the annual cost. Is that labour union publication worth $1.83 for 52 copies a year? I think it is.

The hon member mentioned a number of farm publications, including Farm of the Week. Representatives of that publication have been in to see me. The actual cost of carrying Farm of the Week for a year is $150,115. And this is an audited cost as a result of a four year study by people inside the post office and P. S. Ross and Partners, a management consulting firm outside the post office, for whom I will vouch. Do you know what this paper paid us last year for postage? They paid us $3,489 to carry that publication 19 times per year. I asked representatives of that firm what they charged for this publication and I was informed that for 19 issues they were paid a nominal subscription rate of $1.50. In effect their cost is 25 cents, or 98 per cent or 99 per cent of our cost for distributing this publication. I suggested that instead of charging 25 cents, if they added 35 cents and charged 60 cents per year it would cover the cost of distribution.

If a publication is not considered as a vehicle for attracting advertising I think we should make a reasonable charge to the people who subscribe to it. The Western Producer was mentioned.

Mr. Woolliams: I mentioned it.

Mr. Kierans: We carried 8,561,592 copies last year. The average weight was 6.31 ounces. The cost of carrying them was $574,000 and we received from the Western Producer for this service $59,000. If the Western Producer wanted to charge an amount for this publication which would cover our cost of handling it, it would cost an additional 1.4 cents a week. They now charge $1.50 per year. I do not know how many people get it for less, under what terms or conditions, but it may be distributed in certain cases for less. An additional 1.4 cents per week would be roughly 80 cents per year per subscriber.

Someone mentioned the Free Press Weekly Farmer. Thank the Lord that this particular postmaster cannot be blamed for putting the Family Herald out of business. This publication went out of business some months ago, I think long before or perhaps shortly after I was nominated. I do not think these people could have seen this coming.

• (9:20 p.m.)

With regard to the Free Press Weekly, 22,-676,000 copies were carried last year. The Free Press Weekly, as everybody knows, belongs to an extremely wealthy gentleman.

Mr. Woolliams: Be careful; it's Liberal.

Mr. Kierans: That's right; I doubt if they are going to speak to me after this. But a good deal of static comes from Mr. Malone of the Free Press Weekly. If I mention co-operative papers I should give figures of all the papers. I have them for representative [Mr. Kierans.]

groups. The cost of carrying the Free Press Weekly last year—I do not imagine Mr. Malone will agree with these figures, but he can come down and see P. S. Ross and us—was $1,622,000. Our postage revenue from the Free Press Weekly was not $1,622,000; it was $112,000.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Kierans: If the people of Canada are going to give a subsidy to the Free Press Weekly, I think the people of Canada should know it. It is $$1\frac{1}{2}$ million.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Kierans: Incidentally, this is another paper that, by putting up its subscription rate by a very modest amount, and by not giving 100 per cent of that subscription rate to the people who sell the subscriptions, could quite easily meet the increased cost of postage. We are dealing with a rough situation, a situation which has not been handled, as the hon. member mentioned, since 1951. In 1951, going back over what transpired at that time, the Post Office Department tried to put on a rate of four cents a pound, and it was forced to yield: I do not know why. It was forced to vield, even though we had a majority government in 1951. Perhaps it was forced to yield because of external pressure; I don't know. There has been enough of it, believe me.

However, this paper did not raise the subscription rate from 2 cents to 4 cents a pound; it raised it from 2 cents to $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound. Since 1951 the cost of everything has been going up, but not the amount that we the people of Canada, and we in the post office, have been charging for the services for which we could rightfully charge, and for which people are willing to pay.

We all talk of fiscal responsibility. We all talk of the need to balance budgets. We all talk of the new needs in respect of regional development, satellite communication, and keeping research going in Canada. I think that by attempting to bring my particular budget as close as I possibly can to balance, the government and the members of this house will have that much greater freedom to choose the new directions in which the country wants to go.

The Chairman: The Chair recognizes the hon, member for Winnipeg North on a question.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the details which the minister gave in his reply to me. I think he has given the kind of information which people in the country and members of the committee have wanted from the beginning in respect of this measure. I believe I made it very clear in my remarks that I was not opposing any or all increases for second class mail. I am sure I said that the rates should have been increased earlier. It seemed to me that what the minister does when he increases the rates is to say to many publications, "Do you intend to continue?" I suggest to the minister that many publications, particularly those put out by non-profit organizations, trade unions, co-operatives and professional organizations, will decide that the cost of those publications which is usually part of the cost of membership, is so high that they simply cannot afford to continue, and they will go out of business.

A similar situation would exist with regard to newspapers. I agree completely with the minister, that it is unreasonable for the people of Canada to subsidize the Siftons by $11/2 million a year. God knows, I have fought them all my life and I shall continue to do so. I do not know how long they will support this government. That is for the minister to worry about, not me. But let us face it; even the Prairie Farmer is required to increase its subscription rate by 50 per cent to 100 per cent. If it does that, a large percentage of its subscribers will decide to stop subscribing to this weekly newspaper. Of this I am certain, and we have the record; the minister has already mentioned the publication in Montreal which went out of business in recent months, and this was one of many. The result will be that a number of publications will go out of business in the next couple of years.

I say to the minister that too many publications, even if they are Liberal publications, have gone out of business in recent years. We do not want that, we want to encourage them. I suggest to the minister that what he ought to be proposing is an increase over a period of years so that the publications and their subscribers can live with these increases, rather than die with them.

I want to say just one more thing, Mr. Chairman. When the minister compares Time and Reader's Digest with other magazines in Canada, I do not know whether he is being serious. I do not take him seriously. One might as well compare the lion and the lamb. To compare Time and Reader's Digest with most Canadian publications, even with MacLean's is just too ridiculous to even consider.

The minister asked, in effect, should we subsidize the Siftons by $$1\frac{1}{2}$ million a year? The answer, of course, is very simply no. The minister is saying we should not subsidize the Siftons by $$1\frac{1}{2}$ million a year, but we are going to subsidize two American corporations by what I believe is more than $$1\frac{1}{2}$ million a year.

I suggest to the minister that if he really wants to get down to business he can find a way, even though some of his colleagues who were here before him made a mistake—I think I am putting it mildly when I say that—by permitting those two publications to be classified as Canadian publications rather than American, which they really are. It is not too late, and the minister and his department can, if he wants to, find a way to—

The Chairman: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I recognized him on the basis that he wanted to pose a question in respect of the minister's remarks. In fairness to other members of the committee, if the hon. member has a question he should put it to the minister, otherwise the Chair would like to recognize another hon. member.

Mr. Orlikow: My question is, and I close on this note: Cannot the minister and his officials find a method by which the people of Canada will not have to subsidize Reader's Digest to the tune of $800,000 in the next year, and Time magazine to the tune of $721,000? My calculation is that this is exactly the $1½ million by which the minister does not want to subsidize the Sifton interests.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, with the billion items that the Post Office Department handles, we have to run this on some sort of classification basis. Obviously the kind of classification system is that dailies is a class, weeklies is a class, magazines is a class, and so on. The only way in which I could recover all the money from two, three or five out of hundreds of magazines, and cover them 100 per cent, would be to charge all of them 100 per cent of the cost. I am charging that class 33 per cent for particular reasons.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: What are the reasons?

Mr. Kierans: Because the whole magazine industry is in a very difficult situation because of its particular competition. We had the O'Leary report, and all kinds of reports about that particular industry. We want to encourage that industry to develop. It seems from all appearances to be growing somewhat stronger. I am asked whether in a certain class I am going to single out certain weekly newspapers because they are Tory, Social Credit, or for whatever other reason. Will I in a certain class single out this or that magazine because it is a U.S. magazine such as the Reader's Digest, which is doing a tremendous job in Canada with the number of people it employs, its record of business and so on? I am not discriminating against a class; I am discriminating between classes by saying to the daily newspapers that although they have the peculiar situation of urban and rural distribution, this particular rate will apply to them.

I will say to the weekly newspaper that, as the hon. member has pointed out, they are in a difficult situation, they are running a marginal business, and this is taken into account. I say again, I am not discriminating against members of a group. The class as a whole is charged 33 per cent. It happened by accident that the two classes come out to the average of a class.

Mr. Chairman, is the first clause adopted?

The Chairman: No, not yet.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I will certainly not repeat what I have said in the earlier stages of the debate on this measure. I should like to thank the minister for answering my question about the mail service being two and a half million ton miles. This is a most impressive expression. As I was looking over his statistics I noticed that the air mail over eight ounces was one of the few items in the whole draft which showed a favourable balance of about three quarters of a million dollars projected for 1968-69. That will be gone. I may say that when I asked the other day about U.S. publications I was not asking the Postmaster General to count the number that came in. I was impressed by the figure that was given as to how much it would cost the Canadian postal workers to sort these U.S. publications, this very precise figure in table 12, and I am still impressed by the prevision of that interesting little calculation.

It will be difficult to deal adequately with this very complex measure in committee of the whole. It is a source of great regret that the people vitally concerned and the people with an intimate knowledge, which members of the House of Commons could not possibly have and which I doubt the minister's officials would have, are not able to present their case directly to a committee. I regret also the suggestion which has been made that this very important matter must be dealt with in an expeditious way because of the deadline which the minister has placed in his legislation. I may say that, considering the parliamentary timetable and the presentation of this particular piece of legislation to this house, the imposition of the deadline of November 1 was, to say the least, a little presumptuous.

I feel that we must ask general questions because we must deal with this particular piece of legislation against the background of some fundamental changes which the minister on his authority has already taken action upon, or made decisions upon. This is why it is going to be extremely difficult to confine oneself to the legislation that is set before us. For instance, I would be interested in having the minister's revised estimate on the savings which will result from what I suppose we will now have to call the semi-Saturday closing. I would like to know how much he anticipates the Post Office Department will now save with the limitation of the service to rural Canadians, and the exclusion of urban Canadians. I would like to know also the effect of the change upon his projection in reference to personnel. I am interested also, as I looked over some of his figures and some that I have found in annual reports, in the drastic increase in the deficit on the first class mail operation. We seem to be zeroing in on the second class with a vengeance, and yet proportionately the increase in the first class mail in the last three fiscal years has been phenomenal.

I should also like to know whether the Postmaster General has any changes in mind, other than that which he told us a while ago he would have a colleague move. I am wondering if he has found a way to respond favourably to the suggestion and indeed the pleas of the church press, as we know he has yielded to some persuasion in other matters.

Another matter which has already been alluded to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North is the question of the learned journals. I think this is an extremely important matter. The minister is a former academic and he knows it has been a grim struggle to keep learned journals, such as quarterlies on science and the humanities, going. They have asked for relief from a particular section of the proposed bill, and I would hope that even at this late date the Postmaster General could find room for another change in his attitude, and in the direction of his legislation.

[Mr. Kierans.]

It would be a tragedy if the University of Toronto Quarterly and the Canadian Journal of Political Science were to perish while Time magazine flourished. Surely we have sufficient ingenuity in this highly computorized age to cope with the situation. I may say that I listened carefully to the minister's reply to the very serious and searching question put to him by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. However, like Agrippa, I was not persuaded. It seems to me that with the ability which he personally has and all that he can command from his colleagues and others, some way could be found to deal with this matter. I must plead at this late stage that some way be found of preserving the academic press in this country. We know how the Canada Council is so frequently asked for help. We talk so much about our Canadian identity, we talk so much about trying to enhance our university standards and to enrich our intellectual life, that to inflict upon our struggling academic journals the kind of things they have complained about is shameful, and I use that word advisedly.

I am wondering also whether the minister, who has been talking in rather general terms about newspaper publishers and their place in society, has given any thought to the matter which the hon. member for Oxford raised earlier in the discussion. We find that one arm of the government, if I may use that expression, namely the Canadian radio and television commission, is looking at one of the media and is referring to the consolidation of ownership and control. I wonder if in this whole elaborate process of sorting out newspapers, defining what is a Canadian newspaper and setting up elaborate rates, this very important thought might be considered.

I hope we will be given some further elucidation. Passage of the bill may take longer in committee of the whole than in standing committee, but many matters remain to be answered. We will have to put questions as we go along, about, for example, on the white paper and the reports. Further explanation is required of the deplorable situation in which the post office finds itself.

I hope the minister will retain the flexibility he has displayed hitherto, Mr. Chairman, and it might well be that he will convince himself that not all wisdom is his, bright as his corner is. We want to assist him in this matter, but this will be difficult. That is why the challenge upon us to assist in the passage of this legislation is all the greater.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to speak at great length on this bill. The concept enunciated by the Postmaster General—that the post office be made to pay its way—is a very interesting one. In view of the state of the country's finances as announced by the Minister of Finance on Tuesday night, it would appear that the Postmaster General can follow no other course than the one he is on at present.

However, Mr. Chairman, it is now evident that the increases in postage rates that he has announced will pose serious problems for several voluntary health and welfare agencies. For example, all members of parliament have been made aware of the impact that will be made by the postage rates increase on the key tag service that is carried on by the war amputees of Canada.

This association, The War Amputations of Canada, organized in 1948, embarked upon a self-help program to provide sheltered employment for war amputees and to produce revenue to finance welfare needs of seriously disabled persons and their families. In recent years this organization has also provided financial and other aid to children and elderly civilian amputees.

The key tag service, which all of us enjoy and to which I presume most members of parliament subscribe and find useful, requires the mailings of some six and a half million key tags at reasonable postage rates every year. The announced increase in third class rates to five cents per letter on November 1 represents an increase of $66\frac{2}{3}$ per cent. The operating profit of this organization, Mr. Chairman, is minimal, owing to the necessity to operate on a sheltered workshop basis, thus providing much needed employment for disabled veterans. However, this increase of $66\frac{2}{3}$ per cent means higher production costs than those faced by ordinary businesses.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary for us to add further to the burdens of our war veterans, who have already carried more than their fair share of the load on behalf of all Canadians and in defence of freedom everywhere. The dominion president of The War Amputations of Canada has asked that the Postmaster General consider the creation of a special classification for voluntary health and welfare organizations which offer a product to the public. This would include such organizations as the Canadian Tuberculosis Association, which distributes the Christmas seals we will soon be receiving in the mail, the Canadian Society for Crippled Children, which at Easter time distributes Easter seals, as well as the key tag service.

The president of the war amputees has suggested, Mr. Chairman, if such classification is not feasible, that parliament approve a financial grant similar to that suggested by the Glassco commission for second class mail. This grant, the president states, would be in the form of a rebate based on extra mailing costs arising out of the increase from three to five cents in the third class rate.

I am pleased to endorse this special request of the war amputees of Canada. I hope that the minister has had an opportunity since receiving this brief from the war amputees to give the matter consideration, and that he can give us some indication of what his department is planning to do to financially assist in some way this very worthy and needy group of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would have a few brief remarks to make about the discussion now going on.

First of all, I would like to point out that the hon. members for South Shore and Hillsborough (Messrs. Crouse and Macquarrie) have made constructive contributions to the debate although they might not bear any relation to the questions which arise with regard to that bill if it is to be studied in a general way.

I wish to recall just the same what the learned member for Hillsborough said when he tried in his own way to refer to the principle mentioned by General de Gaulle to the effect that one must go to the bottom of things without allowing oneself to be influenced by personal interests or any partisan consideration whatsoever, which has a lot to be said for it.

Starting from that principle, Mr. Chairman, I find absolutely shocking the figures just quoted by the minister. In fact, some newspapers and publications receive extravagant subsidies from the government at the expense of all taxpayers and there is no comparison between the subsidies granted by the government to one newspaper or another. He just said that some newspapers take advantage of those indirect subsidies and charge a very inadequate subscription rate, and I again use the word "shocking" to qualify the advertisement rates which are of another order, indeed.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Anyhow the government must practise some distributive justice in granting direct or indirect subsidies.

We have noticed also in this house, Mr. Chairman, that the minister has made certain concessions up to now to please my hon. friends the members of the opposition. He has taken into account the suggestions made by his colleagues, the members on the government side of the house, as well as some of those made by the members of the opposition. Perhaps he will be willing to make other concessions as the debate continues on specific clauses. I am not sure, but I think that he has already shown some indication of good will.

However, we always come back to a principle which we must not forget and which some of our hon. friends in the opposition seem to overlook, and that is the question of who is to pay for the services provided by the government.

This afternoon, I heard a member of the Ralliement créditiste or of the opposition say: If the minister raises the postal rate for newspapers, the subscribers are the ones who will pay the cost. Let us say, for the benefit of the discussion, that it is true. Would it be more fair for the government to impose on all taxpayers, poor or rich, the deficit of the Post Office Department? Is that distributive justice? It is a fact, though. Does it not compel the government to impose the burden on those who profit by these subventions, namely the publishers as well as the subscribers, rather than on all taxpayers who, in many cases, do not earn high wages? In my opinion, distributive justice always brings us back to the principle that the users of a service have to pay for it. But there is more than that, Mr. Chairman.

It was mentioned earlier that this surcharge could be distributed over a period of two, three or four years, but I say that in two, three or four years, it will be too late for the government to make both ends meet. Now I come to the essential point.

The increase in mail rates was discussed in detail with reference being made to specific cases which in my opinion are definitely of minor importance. We must not forget what is essentially at stake, and nobody in this house will suggest that what I say is not entirely true. All Western countries are now going through a painful financial crisis and we have seen what happened in Great Britain where the pound sterling was devaluated and all kinds of problems occurred.

We have seen stable countries, like Denmark, forced to devaluate their money. France, another stable country, which was tied to the gold standard, today encounters many difficulties. One has only to read the papers or confidential documents to realize this. The United States had to raise their income tax by 10 per cent. A great many Western countries had and still have to contend with a very difficult international situation.

In recent months we have seen that Canada has been able to get successfully through this international financial crisis and in doing so has earned the admiration of all the countries in the world. But on what condition, Mr. Speaker? On condition that we inspire confidence to foreign and Canadian investors, who otherwise might wish to invest their money elsewhere, if they were able to get a better return there. Therefore, the sine qua non condition of the investors' confidence is, first of all-students of economics know-that the government should balance its budget as much as possible. I say again that, under the circumstances, to avoid disastrous inflation in Canada, the measure proposed by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) is indispensable, even though it is painful, even though many of us will have to pay their share, even though many of the members of the opposition find it distressing.

It is not the only indispensable one, Mr. Chairman, because it touches upon only one aspect of the problem. Still, it is a step in the right direction, and I am sure that those who are concerned with the commonweal, will overlook their personal interest in seeking additional publicity in the newspapers. They will recognize that if we are to inspire confidence to foreign investors—as well as our own-who are interested in the development of our present businesses and in setting up new ones-which will help to reduce unemployment in Canada—the government must set the example of austerity in its own administration and adopt legislation to ensure that its own services pay their own way.

It is by taking into account that primary consideration about which, in my opinion, all hon. members are concerned, that we will make sure that the Canadian economy will remain healthy and that there will be less unemployment. We must all have the courage—and I agree with what the hon. member for Hillsborough said—to forget our personal considerations, our partisan considerations and think about the primary interest. We must all accept to make sacrifices so that Canada will not know the slowdown that other countries have gone through.

Taking that into account I strongly support the bill introduced by the Postmaster General.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I have two brief comments to make on what the minister has said. It seems, from the minister's answers, that he has been playing eeny, meeny, miny, mo in a bureaucratic jungle and has had a hard time making up his mind about anything worth while.

The field has been well covered and the debate has been good. I want to examine briefly what the Postmaster General proposes to do to our postal services. I am reminded of one who now is in a safe haven who said that if advertising were removed from newspapers, articles would cost less in the marketplace. He forgot to say that reading a newspaper would then become the prorogative of the rich, only, instead of costing 10 cents, they might cost about $1 each. Also, they might be then controlled by only money Barons and the government, which would certainly be bad for the Canadian people. They would not know what went on.

It seems passing strange that the post office, which showed a profit of $20 million just before the Liberal party came to power a few years ago, now suffers from a deficit of over $100 million after five years of Liberal rule. It is claimed that newspapers have paid only about one third of their delivery costs. The new rate is 5 per cent on news and 50 per cent on advertising. This means the Postmaster General will increase this rate to 75 per cent, or a total increase of over 150 per cent.

What will be the effect of this? Newspapers will have to increase their subscription rates and their advertising rates. This places a tax on dissemination of knowledge, a tax on knowledge and of current events. Business will have to increase the costs of its goods by an amount equal to the increase in advertising rates, and the poor taxpayer will have to pay the shot for the cost on news.

I am wondering about cases when newspaper subscriptions have been purchased for a few years ahead. How many of these cases are there, and who is to absorb the loss?

I am wondering why Maclean's should pay an increase of 136 per cent, Reader's Digest 100 per cent and Time magazine 59 per cent. The Postmaster General tried to explain the advantages of his arrangement, but with no success. He said, "This matter fits into that compartment and this other matter fits into another compartment." He did not convince anybody of the correctness of his assertions.

Perhaps the minister would tell us why he has imposed a tax on education, since this disturbs me. This tax is being imposed on professional magazines, on journals which doctors, dentists, and veterinarians receive, on journals which bring the results of modern scientific research to the professional man. Journals to do with science and education, religious magazines, law, and the arts will all cost more. The hon, member for Winnipeg North has already put this on the record.

Meeting the other day under the auspices of the Royal Society of Canada, 67 learned societies discussing items of common interest passed the following resolution unanimously:

-the representatives of sixty-seven learned and professional societies wish to draw to the attention of the Postmaster General the apparent discrimination against members of the scientific and learned professions which would result from the application of provisions of clause 11(1)0 of Bill C116 to publications of the aforementioned societies.

Now in my own field, just as an example, the Canadian Medical Association Journal issues 22,000 copies weekly to members in Canada and contains scientific material originating in Canada, material dealing with the work of clinical and medical scientists. The journal is devoted to promoting the advancement of medical knowledge. The government supports a health resources fund. On the one hand it wishes to provide training to doctors, under the health resources fund, and on the other hand it wishes to tax scientific knowledge that is brought to these doctors by journals like the Canadian Medical Association Journal. This is also the government that introduced medicare.

In 1967 the Canadian Medical Association lost $19,443 on the publication of the association journal, and expenditures on postage under the second class rate amounted to about $20,000. But to the end of September of this year losses amounted to almost $65,000 mainly because of a decline in advertizing by circles. I do not want to guess what the postage costs will be under the amended act, but let me say this: a voluntary association such as the Canadian Medical Association cannot long sustain substantial losses and steadily rising costs. Does the minister not realize what he is doing to the dissemination of scientific knowledge, the very thing we need so badly in this country, when there is a brain drain to the south. I would like the minister to take a long look at this and refrain from hurting education and scientific knowledge in Canada, because we are having a hard enough job competing with our friends to the south, and with their medical and scientific journals.

As a matter of fact, this proposal of the government carries us back in some ways to the stagecoach days. The minister mentioned Orillia, and I was happy to hear him mention that town. As a graduate of McGill he would know that the great humorist Stephen Leacock lived there. Anyway, a letter sent out on a Friday might not get to its destination until the following Tuesday-or if the mail were particularly heavy, it might not be seen until Wednesday. This carries us right back to stagecoach days. Is there any other country with our standard of living which is running a five-day-a-week mail service? I would like to know.

The minister has yet to explain to my satisfaction why the technology of the post office and its use of modern methods have not kept pace with the need. I believe that when the Liberal party came to power the department was showing a surplus of $20 million. Why in the world was not more done in the scientific field to make use of advancing technology, bearing in mind the fact that the mails are used more today then ever before? I am not blaming the minister for this, because he was not responsible then.

In the scientific field the proposals here will certainly do untold damage to dissemination of scientific knowledge. The bill will do damage to many doctors who get their information on research, and the latest treatment methods, from the medical journals. Then again, why is the minister being so unfair to the post office at a time when the government is subsidizing the C.B.C. to the extent, I believe, of $150 million? The corporation carries the same kind of advertising as do the newspapers. In my opinion this is ridiculous. The minister should have done a lot more research in this field. People would like to pharmaceutical companies, which have been have the answers to these questions. They subjected to such criticism in government would like to be told of a better way instead of increasing the cost and cutting the service to the Canadian people.

Mr. Skoberg: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the minister on his appointment to the office he holds. Second, I would like to extend my sympathy and condolences to himself and his party on the lack of feeling displayed in this situation by denying the right of individuals to appear before the various committees and make their case.

I would like to repeat something of what I started to say the other day when the honourable knock came on the honourable door, and I would appreciate it if in due course the minister answers some of the representations that have been made to him. He has received a delegation from representatives of trade union journals. As I was finishing the other day I referred to the fact that these publications suggest there will be a 500 per cent increase in their mailing charges. No doubt the minister will give a reply to this. It may be that the amendment which the minister has prepared will cover some of the points I wish to raise, but for my own satisfaction I would like an answer on certain issues.

It is suggested that the increase in mailing costs will go from five-twelfths of a cent per copy to 2.5 cents a copy. I would like the minister to confirm or deny this. This means that for a total of 37,000 copies mailed from Toronto the cost will increase on an annual basis from $7,398 to $44,400. I submit that this is a considerable increase in over-all costs.

It is suggested that the United States is suffering from the same difficulties with its post office, but the problem there has been alleviated to some extent by progressive postal rates.

I would also like to add my voice to those who have spoken on behalf of the war amputees, and the situation which they face as a result of the proposed mailing increases. It is suggested that they will suffer an increase of approximately 663 per cent.

Correspondence has been received along the same line from the Canadian Council of Professional Engineers. They point out that one provision of the bill——clearly implies that when a periodical devoted primarily to the sciences, agriculture, etc. "is published primarily for the benefit of the members of a particular profession," viz: those who can really benefit from such a publication and in most need of same, it shall not be eligible for the advantages of second class mail.

I would like to know if this is entirely correct.

Another point I would like to bring forcefully to the attention of the minister concerns the effects of the proposed postal rates as described by the President of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association. I would like to know whether this association has had an opportunity to present a brief to a committee or to the minister.

They suggest that the main burden of the increases in second class privileges will fall on newspapers in cities of 10,000 to 20,000 people, particularly in areas like North Battleford where the local newspaper has a large rural circulation and where it is impractical to distribute it other than by postal delivery. Does the minister agree with this?

Another point they have made is that under the proposed legislation the big dailies and their week end inserts are given certain privileges. The minimum charge per newspaper changes from 2 cents per pound in one area to 2 cents per copy. That in effect quadruples their cost of mailing, but dailies at the 5 cent per pound rate would only increase their cost from 4 cents to 5 cents per pound or a 25 per cent increase.

Of course the point they are bringing to the attention of the minister is the difference between the 400 per cent and the 25 per cent. I feel certain the Postmaster General can appreciate the situation in which they find themselves, if these are the actual figures and facts. We also realize the main problem is in respect of the semi-weekly and tri-weekly newspapers in market centres of more than 10,000. It would appear in the areas where semi-weekly and tri-weekly papers are recognized as daily newspapers that these papers find themselves in an untenable position. I am particularly concerned about this because of the fact that these papers represent a great many people. In fact their membership represents the major proportion of the membership or subscribers of papers which are members across Canada of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association.

I am sure the representations of these people should have been heard, if they were not heard. If they have not been heard, then I wonder why the minister did not inform them in time so that they would have an opportunity to present a good submission before him. If there was a general hearing or a private hearing before the minister at any time since the bill was introduced, I believe they should have had an opportunity to make their representations.

There are a few points which I should like to ask the minister to consider. Can he give us some assurance that he will take another look at the publications to which I have referred. I do not believe that rigidity in the bill at this particular time is something which medical, professional and union publications should be expected to bear.

The minister has mentioned that this is a small increase from the standpoint of the individual who is subscribing to the particular papers. I suggest, however, that we should not consider this as just one particular item. Every increase on every item in respect of consumer costs, and the interest rates with which the farmers will now be faced, contributes to the increase in the over-all cost of living index. This brings about a spiralling increase in the rising cost of living. It is not a matter of saying that this is just one item, it is the many things put together that we must take into consideration.

I would ask the minister again, when he answers later on, to inform us whether the railways were deliberately left out of the mail carrying contracts or whether they asked to be relieved from such contracts. I am sure this could be handled under one of the items which are before us.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity, now that my turn has come, to say a few words about such an important and controversial bill.

I am convinced that the Postmaster General is not happy to lead such a delicate and difficult attack against Canadian voters, I am perfectly aware that the minister has inherited a very difficult post. I am ready to sympathize with him to a certain extent. I even ask myself if the previous government which ignored the findings of the Montpetit Commission is not responsible for the present minister's increasing difficulties.

I suppose that it is not too late however to ask the minister to show better understanding and I think that, in the name of common sense, we will be able at this stage of the bill to score a few points in the public interest.

I noticed this afternoon that government members were overjoyed by the defeat of the amendment. However I am convinced that all members are not willing to impose such course, the minister is perfectly right on certain points, but I wonder how high increases as those proposed can be generalized.

I have not yet agreed that the Post Office Department must pay its own way at the expense of the quality of services rendered to the people. It has become generally accepted in various administration that one department can show a deficit which can be covered by others or out of the consolidated revenue

I suppose that the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) must consider in the first place the services to be rendered to the community before trying to make his department profitable. As he is now bringing in the bill, the present minister is only considering whether his department is economic, and I wonder if he is right. I understand that he is used to handling figures and he is well versed in financial matters, but I would like to assure the minister that the Canadian people do not understand so easily the importance of an increase.

I cannot refrain from defending the situation of weeklies, since we are lucky enough to have in my constituency four weeklies which are quite well organized and render tremendous services to the people. I quite agree with the hon, member who said yesterday that those weeklies are even more useful than television and that if the bill is passed, we shall be deprived of a number of weeklies, which would be unfortunate indeed. On behalf of those weeklies, in my district as well as all over Canada, I tell the minister that I hope he will be sensible enough to change his position and to give particular consideration to this class of mail which is absolutely necessary in all areas so that they can get adequate information.

A little while ago, I asked the minister a question to which I would very much have liked to receive an answer. I asked him if, in view of the information received to the effect that Saturday was the worst day of the week to cancel postal delivery, another day of the week could be considered? I should like the minister to consider this, if he has not already done so. I should think that Wednesday, for instance, in the middle of the week, would be less damageable. I am not saying that it would suit everyone, but somehow I feel that a day in the middle of the week would be more acceptable to everyone. I make this suggestion because I think the members of the opposition should not be conheavy increases on small taxpayers. Of tent to say no, for the fun of it: they should try to suggest an alternative. I thought of this suggestion, and after discussing it with several people, it seems to me a day in the middle of the week would be less inconvenient than Saturday.

I am pleased to say to the minister that I appreciate the fact that he reversed his decision on rural delivery. It must be remembered that in my riding alone, for instance, out of 36 parishes, 30 do not even have postoffice boxes. Well, it is obvious that from the day this legislation comes into force, 30 municipalities will not be able to get any service on Saturday; it is too bad and it is regrettable. That is why the fact of selecting another day than Saturday would seem more acceptable I think than the measure before us.

• (10:20 p.m.)

I should also like to say to the minister that as a new member of parliament, and I do not want to miss this opportunity, that I am a little surprised and even disappointed at the carelessness with which all these commitments have been made by the government, or the party, that took office on June 25. They were assuring us they would cut expenses and limit the increase in taxes. Therefore, I am most unhappy to see that after five or six weeks at the most, they have already announced a tremendous increase in postal rates.

The budget has revealed another, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) assures us that the ceiling on the interest rate will disappear. I wonder whether this is the just society we were led to expect. I am sorry, and others in the house with me, to see the government increase taxes that way.

Once more, I appeal to all members of the government party, because I do not think they are happy with such a large increase. The extension of the reimbursement of the deficit over a period of a few years has been refused, on the grounds that, three or four years from now, nothing will have been gained.

I would rather see the increase distributed over two, three, four or five years, which would make it less painful this year. Perhaps, with time, we would arrive at the same increase, but people would know in advance and could accept it more easily.

Again, I take this opportunity to invite all the hon. members to plead with the minister to show greater understanding for the electorate and the whole Canadian people. I have to do that. Naturally, much has been said. Some hon. members have a talent for expressing this sort of thing better than I can, but I the daily and the think the minister understands me. I also think the hon. members understand me and, into this category.

in my opinion, every one of them should plead for a slightly more humane policy than the one expressed in this bill and a more humane attitude on the part of the minister.

I hope this exhortation will lead the minister to be a little more understanding, and perhaps allow the Canadian people to accept a raise somewhat less steep than the one which the minister is now suggesting. I also hope that some consideration will be given to reducing expenditure in other departments, so that the Post Office Department, which is in the first place a public service, may be more protected than it seems to be at present.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

I have heard my hon, friend say that there are four weeklies in his riding. Is he not convinced, supposing that two of them should go bankrupt, that the other two would manage much better and would be able to pay their due to the Post Office Department?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I shall reply to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) that I would not at all like to see two weeklies go bankrupt.

The question he is asking leads me to think that he already foresees the bankruptcy of the two weeklies; that would be very unfortunate.

The attitude of the present government might lead some weeklies to bankruptcy. That is the reason why I intervened in the debate and asked the minister to change his mind, so that weeklies will not be forced to go bankrupt.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I would like to address two points to the Postmaster General. In his definition of weekly and daily newspapers there is a class of newspaper he has not considered, and that is the triweekly newspapers usually published in small towns. Often they are only overgrown weeklies, and they are not in the class of large city newspapers. The postal rate on one of these newspapers of which I know is at present $30 a month. Under the new rates it will be $120 a month. This is a substantial increase. There are not many of these papers, but there are a few and I think they have probably not been considered. So I would suggest to the minister that he make another classification between the daily and the weekly category. I believe that many small town newspapers would fit has already been said about scientific journals in this country. Not only will they be subject to increases, the same as all second class mail, but apparently the privilege of second class mail which, so far as the Canadian Medical Journal is concerned has been accorded since 1911, will be taken away from them. There are at least 56 journals that fall into this category. They are only of interest to people in various professions to whom they are sent. As the minister stated, magazines are in general under intense competition from the United States journals. This competition exists perhaps to an even greater extent in the scientific world. Canadians spend quite a large amount on medical and scientific work and bursaries. In medical research alone the bursaries for the coming year amount to approximately $26 million. The final production of all these people working on various research projects is usually a paper of a scientific nature. Often the waiting list for the publication in U.S. and other journals of papers prepared by these people is three or four years, at least in the field with which I am familiar.

The Canadian Medical Journal is already making plans to reduce its publication by half. Many of these journals have to reduce the outflow, and the area in which our research people can project their views. If there was ever any indication of a necessity for a subsidy in the mails, surely it is in this area because television does not publish a scientific paper or a new article. It is most important that we give as much help to our scientists as possible. Without the dissemination of knowledge, much of the scientific work for which we have already paid will be lost, because unless a scientist can publish his paper in a journal which has a scientific audience it is of little value to anyone.

Another thing which I would like to say is that we might consider closing down our scientific journals in Canada because the United States has so many of them. There is such a vast outpouring of scientific knowledge in the United States that it would overwhelm us. However, I would like to point out that many of the scientific journals are published in both English and French, while the United States journals are only published in English. While it might be said that much of our scientific knowledge for the French speaking people in this country could be garnered from France, we do have to recognize that science in western Europe is somewhat different from Secondly, I should like to reinforce what as already been said about scientific journals this country. Not only will they be subject increases, the same as all second class ail, but apparently the privilege of second ass mail which, so far as the Canadian Mediass mail which will be much the poorer for it. I make a very strong plea to the Postmaster General that if we ever needed a subsidy it is in the scientific field. He should seriously consider this.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the suggestion which has come from the last speaker and from many others before him. I think we have to accept the fact that it is generally considered that statutory rates should be limited to publications which contain news or articles of general interest to the public. This is set out in one of the clauses in the bill, Mr. Chairman. The general public includes those concerned in religious, scientific, literary and educational fields. However, another consideration must be taken into account here. Clause 11 (1) (o) provides that——in the case of a publication described in paragraph (b) or (c), it is published primarily for the benefit of the members of a particular profession—

One of the hon. members who spoke is a doctor. He has been an economist and subscribes to the professional economists journal. I imagine the hon. member for Hillsborough also subscribes, because it is a sister journal. The actual cost to that quarterly as a result of this increase will be roughly $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents per issue per subscriber. I do not know whether the association will raise our membership due by \$1 to cover what, in effect, will be an increase of about 14 cents a year, but I imagine that the hon. member for Hillsborough—certainly I will—will continue to be a member.

What we are trying to do, Mr. Chairman, is to restrict subsidization by the people of Canada of publications that are of general interest. I have every sympathy for these journals and also for the medical journal. The medical journal may have to increase its costs by something in the order of $1 per year per member as a result of this rate increase, and I am sure the doctors can well afford the difference. If the journal is what the hon. member said it was, of medico-scientific value, then it is in the doctors own interests to subscribe to it.

I do not think doctors would refuse to subscribe to the journal, Mr. Chairman, because the Post Office Department suddenly demanded a reasonable return—nowhere near 100 per cent return, believe me, but a reasonable return—on its actual costs, or an approximation of those costs. On the other hand, there may be many people who want a subsidized medical journal, and perhaps the answer is for the hon. member for Hillsborough and myself to increase our donations to the economists and political scientists in this country.

In regard to the situation mentioned by the hon. member for South Shore, there is a case of interest to all of us. We are all aware of the tremendous work that war amputees are doing to sustain themselves and to be independent. They provide a service to the people of Canada, and I think most of us return a cheque to them in the envelope they send us. Perhaps this year our cheques should be worth a little more, in which case it would enable them to meet their problem.

The hon. member for South Shore suggested that parliament itself might vote a grant to the war amputees organization. Although this debate has been drawn out over the last four days, a number of points have emerged of which the Canadian people were not previously aware. One of them is that there have been all sorts of hidden grants made to all sorts of bodies to meet increased costs. Some bodies might have been able to meet those costs independently, but some do find difficulty and have to present their case to the people. Having received support in the past the people naturally have sympathy for the particular activity concerned.

It is not part of the function of a department that provides services to continue hidden subsidies, whether to the National Arts Council or to other bodies, when there are crown corporations or bodies that are chiefly concerned with the matter. In the case of the arts council the Secretary of State is involved. The deficits of such bodies are taken into account when their annual grants are made in a recognized forum. We know very well that a subsidy is being provided, whether that subsidy is to some consumer co-operative movement, to the National Arts Council, to the Winnipeg ballet, or what have you. But, we do not want hidden any more the subsidy in postal rates.

A distinction must be drawn. We have talked about the definitions of Canadian newspapers or publications. These publications are put out primarily for the benefit of the members of a particular profession, whether they are in the field of agriculture, medicine, economics or political science.

An hon. Member: It might be the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

Mr. Kierans: Yes. The Canadian Medical Association Journal will be in there, so will the Canadian Hereford Digest which does not affect me. The United Church Observer will not be included in the list of specialized publications, since it is of general interest to its membership at large, as distinct from a bulletin put out by a particular parish in the United Church.

Similarly, the Canadian Boy is the official publication of the Boy Scouts of Canada, and is of general interest to the entire movement. On the other hand, a certain group in Montreal or in St. Boniface if it put out a publication, would not come under the general definition. Yet all these publications have been contributing to the problems of the post office.

Many hon. members have asked, "How did the post office suddenly get in a mess?". Well, it is not in a mess.

Mr. Dinsdale: But it will be.

Mr. Kierans: It has a deficit of over $99 million because members of this house on many previous occasions have refused to accept their responsibilities, either when they were in power or in opposition. The 1951 bill was emasculated, and between 1957 and 1962 no bill came forward. A bill was withdrawn in 1964, and another defeated in 1967.

Hon. members have asked me to meet with members of every association, and I dare say nobody in this committee of the whole is not aware of certain worthy cases which might be brought to mind. The point is that when anyone cries for a balanced budget, any individual who comes forward says, "Do not balance the budget at our expense".

It has also been said that increases range up to 300 percentage points. When you start at 10 per cent and increase the rate by 50 per cent, you arrive at a final figure of 15 per cent. Yet if costs go up by 10 per cent in one year, they go from 100 per cent to 110 per cent. I admit that this is a radical attempt to bring the post office into the land of common sense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Kierans: I will guarantee the figures I have laid before the house. They are the result of four years of intensive work by people inside and outside the department.

• (10:40 p.m.)

I also say that if this legislation is not passed this house will be responsible to the Canadian people for a deficit next year of $130 million. The Canadian people can think of very many choices for making far better use of $130 million than to continue to subsidize those who use these resources.

Mr. Chairman, we have not yet got past clause one, though we have ranged widely across this bill. I think this is about the third time we have done this.

An hon. Member: Stick around for a while.

Mr. Kierans: I think I can sense something of the unhappiness of the Canadian people about the manner in which parliament sometimes functions.

Mr. Baldwin: If we had considered this in committee we would have been finished by now.

Mr. Kierans: But nothing would have come out in the committee that you do not already know. All of you have been quoting from every brief that has been made.

Mr. Baldwin: We would have been able to test the accuracy of your statements.

Mr. Kierans: Well, you have not found out that anything I have said was untrue, although this was put into doubt by the hon. member for Edmonton West the other evening when he said that because a minister said a thing it was not necessarily the whole truth of the matter.

I am not accustomed to having my word doubted publicly or privately. However, I did not rise on a question of privilege. If that is the fashion of speaking which the hon. member adopts, so be it; let him speak that way. But try and show that some of the figures or information presented to this house are wrong. Try to do so with the help of the tremendous resources which you have behind you—and which have been using you to create a considerable delay over the passage of a bill which the people themselves recognize as being timely and appropriate.

Mr. Woolliams: We have just listened to a most surprising explanation. In fact, I shall have to leave undelivered the speech I was about to make in order to answer the minister. When the hon, member for Edmonton West said we could not accept all the facts given by the minister he was not calling into question the minister's integrity or honesty.

All we wanted from the minister was to get the facts.

Mr. Mahoney: You already have the facts.

Mr. Woolliams: Oh, you will have your chance. You have been sitting around without saying a thing since you were elected the member for Calgary South. The minister has set out certain facts and told us that those costs were correct. If he had nothing to fear, why did he not allow this matter to go before a committee, where members of the opposition and members of his own party could have asked questions? After all, it was his own supporters who in caucus last week complained that this was an unreasonable piece of legislation. Had the hon, gentleman followed the course suggested to him he would not be in difficulty now, and he would not have to make explanations tonight.

After all, we asked only for what was reasonable. We said: Let this matter be brought before a standing committee. The minister has set out certain facts. But we all know the manner in which costs can change in one way or another.

Take the case of railway costs. There are some fixed costs and some changing costs. You can draw up a balance sheet and say these happen to be the costs; the costs happen to be this or that, or the costs can change. There can be floating costs. We wanted to find out what the costs really were so that we could have gone into a standing committee and asked intelligent questions of witnesses.

If the minister had sent the bill to a standing committee we could have heard from the people who are in the business of publishing daily and weekly newspapers. They could have said, "The situation will affect us this way, or that way." We could have questioned them. Then we would have had the facts, instead of having them swept under the carpet as the minister has done.

I am surprised that the minister has taken this attitude because we heard of the new deal for his party, we heard that it was going to function with efficiency. But this is a case where they will not allow the use of a committee so that we can get the facts and intelligently accept or reject the minister's case. What the minister is saying is, "There is a loss allocated to the daily and weekly newspapers of $37 million, and I have got to make it up."

Tonight he was asked a question about subsidies and he replied, "We are not going to subsidize the publisher." I say that the country is not subsidizing the publisher at all, and the minister knows that. It is subsidizing the subscriber, the consumer. It is the little man in the country who is buying a daily or weekly newspaper who is subsidized.

I am sure that this is not a new argument to the Liberal backbenchers who have been clapping like trained seals all night. They made this argument themselves.

Some hon. Members: Oh. oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: I realize that they want to howl me down. They made the same argument in caucus to the minister last week. Now they are applauding something they don't even believe in.

There is one thing I will say to the Liberal backbenchers, that the daily and weekly newspapers of this country will know who their friends were. They will know the people who went along with this thing, just because the minister wanted it.

Mr. Mongrain: Would my hon. friend allow a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly I will allow a question.

Mr. Mongrain: Is there anything that prevents the hon. gentleman from asking his questions of the minister here tonight?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would have thought the hon. member would have understood the point I was making.

An hon. Member: What is the point?

Mr. Woolliams: If you had come into this house with your mind as open as your mouth you would be better serving this parliament.

Now I come back to answer my hon. friend opposite. I am not interested in asking the minister questions. I want to ask questions of witnesses. I want to question publishers who have been in the daily and weekly newspaper business, and in the magazine business. If the bill were sent to a standing committee we could hear from representatives of Time magazine and Reader's Digest. Then I could find out who was being discriminated against. I want to ask questions in a standing committee of those people who have been in the weekly newspapers and periodicals? After the point I am making. I hope I have made that point very clear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: It takes a while for it to sink in.

Mr. Woolliams: It certainly does. Now we come to the question of subsidies. We know, and the minister and the governement know that the extra cost is going to be passed on to the newspaper subscriber. Take the case of the Calgary Herald and The Albertan: If the subscription costs to their rural readers is now $12, $14 or $15 and the new postal increases are passed on to them they will have to pay $40 to obtain newspapers in the rural areas outside the city of Calgary. The same will apply in the city of Edmonton. The same situation will exist all across the nation.

This is the evidence we wanted to bring out in a standing committee. The Canadian people want to hear more evidence about the figures the minister has produced. We want to know how those figures were arrived at. We know what happened about the figures in the budget. Even with the use of the great modern equipment, they were only out $400 million or $500 million. I know I might hurt the sensitivity of the minister in saying this, but if they can make a mistake like that, then it is quite possible that this minister could be out in his figures. Let us have a committee examine the facts so that those facts can be brought forward in this house in an intelligent manner, so that parliament and then the people will be able to determine whether the figures the minister has now set out in the rate studies are proper.

The minister says there has been some disregard for parliament because we dare debate a bill. What is this bill all about? It is a very important bill. This government is prepared, as another member said, to give a bonus to the C.B.C of $150 million. The daily newspapers, the weekly newspapers and periodicals of this nation disseminate the news across the nation. That is what parliament is all about. This is probably the most important bill that will come before parliament. After all, the most important thing in a democracy is an informed public. How can the public become informed if the people do not have an opportunity to read the daily newspapers, the business for a certain length of time. That is all, we have found out during this debate that we do not influence the Liberals. They stand together back to back, block to block.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: And they clap at their own idiocy. The people we influence in this parliament, whether we speak from that side of the house, this side of the house or even in that corner where they clap so much, are the Canadian people—public opinion. When public opinion is influenced, that is what democracy is about. When a government cannot stand the heat, it gets out because public opinion has found that it is wrong. We have seen governments retreat. The last Liberal government was a retreating government. This government says it is going to bull its way through, no matter what. That is the attitude of this government.

I should like to put on record the opinion of the daily newspapers. I am sure the hon. member for Calgary South received a letter from the daily newspaper in our city. This is the newspaper opinion I should like to quote:

Postmaster General Eric Kierans continues to display a lamentable misunderstanding of the significance of his proposal to increase newspaper postal rates by 100 per cent on news content and 300 per cent on advertising content.

It is interesting to note that we are increasing our rates on second class mail by 100 per cent and 300 percent, while the United States—and I am taking into account the concentration of population—has only increased its rate by 13 per cent or 14 per cent.

It is the subscribers who get their newspapers by mail-rural subscribers in particular-who will bear the brunt of this tremendous jump in cost, not the newspaper.

The minister really has said to the daily newspapers that the farmers are not entitled to their mail. We know that the other minister has handed over the farms to the chartered banks of Canada because of the interest rates. Now this minister has taken away the weekly and daily newspapers from the farmers by these costs. The quotation continues:

Yet Mr. Kierans complained in the House of Commons on Tuesday that the present post office 'subsidy' to newspaper publishers amounts to around $37 million.

Does the problem not boil down to one thing, the financial priorities? It is fine for this government to squander $54 million on the national arts centre, which will cost this we should subsidize the consumers or sub- we can pass that?

scribers of the daily newspapers of the nation in the amount of $30 million. We squander $54 million, and another $3 million per year to operate this arts centre, and when will it be finished? The Prime Minister has suggested that we cannot knock this down now because it has cost the nation too much money.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: That is their attitude. An hon. member has said "order". He has been out of order mentally and physically since he came here.

Newspapers do not recover production costs from subscriptions; they rely on advertisements for their revenue.

An hon. Member: $145 million for the C.B.C.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Someone said "Hear, hear". Obviously he is getting good coverage over the C.B.C. I should like to ask the government how it is that the C.B.C. can come to this government, when we are worrying about deficits in this country, and ask for moneys in the way of loans which will never be paid back, without the approval of parliament? If that is not discrimination-and I have some respect for the C.B.C. because it was created under a Conservative government-

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: This is discrimination against the daily and weekly newspapers in preference to the C.B.C., so far as the dissemination of news is concerned.

May I call it eleven o'clock, sir?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It now being eleven o'clock I shall rise and report progress and seek leave to sit at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, while the Postmaster General is leisurely considering his answers to all the questions put to him today, I should like to ask the house leader nation perhaps $3 million or $4 million a year to consider bringing the cash advances bill to operate. That is fine. But it is not fine that before the house first thing tomorrow so

Business of the House

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it is just one week ago tonight that hon. mem- he have the opportunity to speak when I am bers opposite had the opportunity to pass denied the right to speak? I am very happy these farm credit measures, but they refused to do so. If hon, members opposite will stop their filibuster and pass the post office bill, and then co-operate in the remaining stages of the amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act; then if they are really keen on having the cash advances measure put through, perhaps we can do so.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order, sir.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

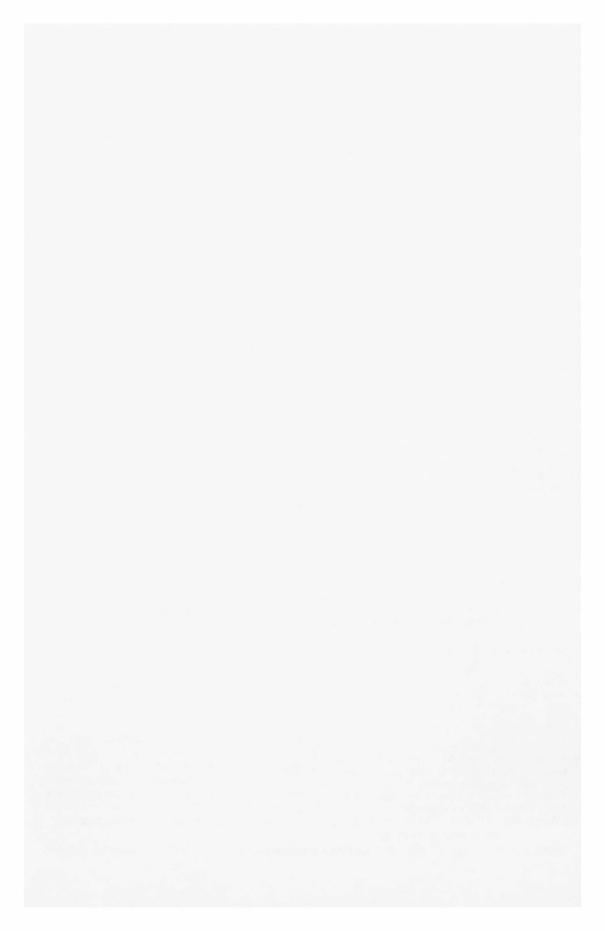

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, why should that you have sat down, because if that hon. member has the right to speak, then someone on this side should also have the right to speak. There is no filibuster on this side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

That minister, Mr. Woolliams: "Mr. Goebbels", the minister of propaganda, knows there is no filibuster. He is just doing this to refute a reasonable argument.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order,

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

UNVEILING OF PORTRAIT OF FORMER PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: Hon, members are aware that last evening a pleasant function for all concerned was held on the occasion of the unveiling of the portrait of a former prime minister, Right Hon. Lester Pearson.

made by a member of the Hansard editorial star and not by anyone in the Prime Minister's office, and I do so gladly. May I say I never suggested that the Prime Minister himminister, Right Hon. Lester Pearson.

Arrangements were made to take a verbatim report of the proceedings, and it is my suggestion to the house that the report be made a part of today's Hansard. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For document referred to above, see appendix.]

PRIVILEGE

MR. SPEAKER—STATEMENT ON ALLEGED ALTERATION IN "HANSARD" REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have now had an opportunity to look into the alleged alteration of Hansard, raised yesterday as a question of privilege by the hon. member for York South.

I have ascertained that as claimed by the hon, member for York South there has been an alteration in the Prime Minister's spoken words. The words "levying more money" were changed to "finding more money". Upon further inquiry it has been ascertained that the changes were made by the editorial staff of Hansard on their own initiative. Neither the Prime Minister nor his staff were consulted in making the alteration. The explanation given by the editor is that in his view the phrase "finding money" appeared to be more idiomatic than "levying money". This, of course, is a matter of judgment. Obviously the editor's opinion has not met with the approval of all hon, members of the house. At the same time I am sure most members will acknowledge that editorial changes normally tend to improve verbatim reports.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I see the hon. member for York South shaking his hands. I wonder whether he is going to withdraw his insinuations.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I do not at all blame the right hon. gentleman for suggesting that I acknowledge the fact that the change, which I think was substantial, was made by a member of the Hansard editorial staff and not by anyone in the Prime Minister's office, and I do so gladly. May I say I never suggested that the Prime Minister himself was responsible for it. I am delighted as a member of this parliament to learn that the staff in the Prime Minister's office was not responsible, and I gladly acknowledge it.

Mr. Trudeau: I am very glad for the acknowledgement, but I read in Hansard of yesterday that the hon. member said this was an abuse of the editing privileges which members of the house have. I think this was a very clear inference, and it was supported by the Leader of the Opposition. Now we find that neither I nor my people had done any editing on this, and I think the accusation was quite wrong.

Mr. Bell: Why don't you quit while you are ahead?

Mr. Trudeau: If this were the rule the hon. member followed he would never quit, because he has never been ahead on this. I said yesterday that I would stand by any word I used because I really did not see the significance of the point of order one way or the other. I am prepared to say I am very glad that the editorial staff of Hansard makes my grammatical errors appear less obvious. I have no objection if they do the same thing for members of the opposition, but I have been told that I have been using an undefendable editing privilege. Now the answer is that I have not, so I suggest that the hon. member for York South and the Leader of the Opposition, who agreed with him, admit that they made a mistake in suggesting I had misused editing privileges. Let us see him answer that.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rose yesterday to Statement on Alteration in Hansard Report indicate that my recollection of what the a Prime Minister had said was the same as that of the hon. member for York South. We now find I was right in this regard, from what you have reported this morning, Your Honour.

I did not understand I was making any imputation against the Prime Minister; I was stating my impression of what the Prime Minister had said. The Prime Minister yesterday disputed what the hon, member for York South said, indicating his recollection was that he had used the word "finding". My impression was that he had used a different word conveying to me a different sense; and with all respect, Mr. Speaker, the word "levying" does convey quite a different impression in this context than the word "finding". I want to make it very clear that I do not want to be associated with any imputation against the Prime Minister. I don't think I have anything to withdraw.

Mr. Trudeau: What about the words about the integrity of Hansard?

Mr. Stanfield: The integrity of Hansard is the sense of reporting accurately what the Prime Minister had said. I don't want to continue this, but I think it is clear now Hansard did not report in fact what the Prime Minister had said, and I think the matter should be dropped there with the explanation you have given, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I don't really quite know what the Prime Minister is after in his interjection. I said very clearly that I was very happy to acknowledge that neither he nor any member of his office staff had made the change. I remind the house, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday instead of the Prime Minister saying, as he ought to have, that he did not quite remember, that maybe I was right but he did not remember, he said very emphatically his memory was that he used the word "finding".

I have expressed and acknowledged clearly my satisfaction as a member of this house that neither the Prime Minister nor anyone of his office staff had made the change. To that extent I believe the Prime Minister's statement yesterday that he had not made it, and I certainly am happy to know the fact today. But if I apologize, as I did, for having suggested anything to the contrary, I think the Prime Minister has an even greater duty to apologize to the house for being so emphatic about the word that was used in Hansard yesterday, which was wrong and which gave a completely different meaning to his statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether we should pursue the matter further. We have had explanations indicating that perhaps everybody was right yesterday.

Mr. Baldwin: The Prime Minister is just more sophisticated than he thought he was.

SUGAR

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house that the United Nations Sugar Conference, which was reconvened on September 23 in Geneva, was successfully concluded October 23. The conference adopted the text of a new International Sugar Agreement for the consideration of governments with a view to bringing it into force on January 1, 1969. This follows a number of attempts to negotiate an arrangement to replace the former International Sugar Agreement which lapsed on January 1, 1962. The new agreement is for a period of five years, subject to a review of its economic provisions in the third year.

The new agreement provides for export quotas to be adjusted when market prices exceed or fall below specified price levels from 3.25 to 5.25 U.S. cents per pound, f.o.b. Caribbean Port. Other provisions include supply commitments by exporting countries as well as importer undertakings regarding access and limitation of imports from nonmembers. The supply commitments are of particular importance to importing countries such as Canada since they are designed to ensure that consumers will not be called upon to pay excessive prices in periods of world scarcity of sugar.

The purpose of the new agreement is to achieve a more orderly world sugar economy in the interests of both exporting and importing countries. It will protect the interest of Canadian consumers in the event of excessive prices, such as occurred in 1963, and at the same time will benefit many developing countries, including those of the Commonwealth Caribbean, by improving the returns from one of their chief exports. The government fully supported the negotiation of this agreement, which represents a major achievement of international co-operation.

[English]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, the house is interested in hearing this report on the United Nations sugar conference. I am at a loss to know why it has taken six years for this conference to be reconvened after it had lapsed in 1962. I wonder why Canada did not make a greater effort to have this conference called and concluded long before now. This report does not tell us what is the government's stand on this matter. It simply says that Canada has agreed with other nations to enter into negotiations. As I understand it, Canada has until some time in December to decide whether to sign it.

In the past Canada has not been a signatory to this world sugar agreement. I do not understand why. It seems as though we have been more willing to buy sugar on the open market as cheaply as we can from whomever we can including Cuba, and that we have not considered those Commonwealth friends of ours in the Caribbean who produce sugar and have been eking out a very meagre existence from the sale of sugar. I am sure the people in the Caribbean would much sooner receive a fair price for their sugar production than be given a handout in the form of external aid.

I hope therefore, when the time comes to sign this proposed document, Canada will see fit to become a member of the world sugar market.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the hon. member for Wellington who has just spoken, in welcoming this announcement. I do not claim to be an expert on the subject of sugar, but we all know that sugar is an important commodity for consumers. The minister in making his statement emphasized the value of stability of prices and supplies for consuming or importing countries such as Canada.

I should like to emphasize the importance of this commodity to the exporting countries. We all know of the tremendous poverty which exists. Among the countries which are suffering from extreme poverty are those which are producers of sugar supplies. Any stabilization under a national agreement would be of very great importance to these countries.

We therefore welcome this announcement. We hope the government will proceed to deal favourably with the proposal which as we see it will be of benefit to all concerned in this matter. We hope this will be the precursor of more international arrangements. The deep problem of poverty in the world will not be solved by handouts alone, although economic aid is important. It will be solved by expanded trade, and this is the way to achieve it.

SUPREME COURT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING APPEAL PROCEDURES

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-8 (from the Senate), to amend the Supreme Court Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—DELAY IN USE OF HERCULES AIR-CRAFT—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the urgent need of making Canadian Hercules aircraft immediately available to the churches and other relief organizations now engaged in flying supplies from Sao Tomé to Biafra in order to provide urgently needed supplies to the starving children in that area.

Perhaps I may address the Chair on the question of the urgency of debate. I am well aware that what is now to be discussed is not the subject matter of the motion but the question of urgency of debate. I believe I can establish this urgency. I am well aware that this matter is generally under discussion by the standing committee on external affairs and national defence, but I intend to point out to Your Honour that the specific emergency which is dealt with in this motion is under the immediate control of the government, and cannot await the deliberations of that committee.

The general background of this matter is well known to the house, and I will only mention the outstanding matters which have to be considered when considering the urgency of debate. There is reliable evidence that upwards of 6,000 are dying daily in Biafra, mostly children, and that the provision of supplies to relieve this starvation is an urgent matter. Surely that requires no argument.

More than two weeks ago the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and I visited São Tomé and Biafra. We inquired as to what should be done by way of relief. We discovered that the nightly airlift from Sao Tomé to the airstrip of Uli within the Biafra-occupied region was the most efficient operating means of getting in supplies. This is being operated by Caritas International and the Protestant churches as a non-political activity using aircraft loaned, among others, by the Swedish and West German governments, and chartered by the church organizations.

When we asked the man in charge, who happens to be a Canadian, what was the greatest need to increase the supplies he replied "Hercules planes are urgently needed, as their capacity is in the neighbourhood of 20 tons per trip." This can be compared to roughly 10 tons per trip in respect of the planes now being used. He also indicated the Hercules have adequate cargo doors to enable loading and unloading more quickly. He said "I would give my eye teeth for even one Hercules".

Upon our return we reported this to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in New York on October 8. About this time the minister announced that the government of Nigeria had agreed to the flying in of supplies to Biafran-held territory by a Canadian aircraft in conjunction with the International Red Cross, and stated that the Canadian government had indicated its willingness to make this Hercules plane available.

At a meeting on the same day in New York, October 8, at the United Nations offices of the Nigerian government—the meeting was arranged by the Department of External Affairs—Dr. Arikpo, the distinguished foreign commissioner of Nigeria, stated in the presence of representatives of the Department of External Affairs, the minister's parliamentary secretary, several other members of parliament on the delegation to the United Nations, the hon. member for Egmont and myself, that the Nigerian government was willing to permit the Canadian government to loan aircraft to the Red Cross for the operation of the emergency airlift into Biafra.

At that time, knowing the urgent need of the churches' operation from Sao Tomé for Hercules, and the efficiency of this operation, I specifically asked Dr. Arikpo whether this consent extended to Hercules aircraft made available for the churches' operation from Sao Tomé. Dr. Arikpo replied with perfect clarity that it did, subject to one proviso only, that the Red Cross would provide someone to inspect the cargoes of the airlift, and would provide insignia for the aircraft so used.

We all know that since that time the Canadian government has sent two Hercules to Africa—perhaps it is three, but I understand two have been flown to Africa—one of which I understand is in Lagos, which it was proposed should be used to transport supplies into the Nigerian-occupied sections of Biafra. Another aircraft is at Tenerife island to be available to go to Fernando Po, and another is in Brazil. I believe this aircraft is still in Brazil, ready to fly over as required.

These plans have proved to be abortive. It has been suggested that the landing strips in the areas of Biafra occupied by Nigerian forces are not suitable for landing in Nigeria, or the Nigerian military authorities are unwilling to give their final consent. The difficulty in respect of the airlift from Fernando Po seems to lie in making contact with the government of Equatorial Guinea. But there is one avenue left, and that is the one from Sao Tomé. That avenue has proved in the past the most successful and promising outlet of all, and in this respect a very strange situation has arisen. On Tuesday last I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question, and he said in reply:

—I have not been able to confirm that such statement—

That is the statement by the foreign minister of Nigeria that he would agree to the flights from Sao Tomé if supervised by the Red Cross.

—is true, but I am still making inquiries.

I asked him again on Wednesday and on that day the Secretary of State for External Affairs repeated that he was trying to find out whether this was so, but that unfortunately the commissioner for foreign affairs for Nigeria was in hospital.

I find it very difficult to understand why the minister needs to delay in finding out whether or not Dr. Arikpo made the statement which I have asserted he did make. If the minister does not believe the hon. member for Egmont and myself when we make this assertion, surely he can confirm this from his officials in New York, his parliamentary secretary and others who were there. I suggest there is no need to wait for consent, because it is there.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that I must bring these remarks to a conclusion shortly, and I shall. I appreciate that the consent of the Red Cross is required, but surely the minister, who can arrange to send 100 or so armed personnel, can arrange with the Red Cross to send the one or two men necessary to Sao Tomé to carry out the inspection there. That was the only condition.

I am sure that in a desperate emergency, when children are starving by the thousands, the Red Cross will not delay its co-operation, and I am quite sure I speak for the church organizations who are running the supplies in when I say they will do all they can to cooperate. This is a matter in which death and agony increase day by day, and each and every day wasted is a day in which more thousands will die.

While the minister hesitates about confirming something which happened nearly three weeks ago, of which I suggest there is firm and credible evidence, and while he hesitates to establish the necessary co-operation with the International Red Cross, the one most promising means of sending in supplies is not used. It has even been suggested that we are going to bring back the Hercules and provide smaller aircraft that can fly into Nigeria.

Canada's good intentions will be made a mockery unless there is immediate action. The government must not postpone until the committee has reported, or postpone from day to day, perhaps for weeks, the provision of the urgently needed Hercules in the Sao Tomé operation. I suggest the reason for this debate is not only that the matter may be clarified, but also that this house may express its views on a matter deeply affecting Canada's humanitarian purpose, deeply concerning public opinion and deeply affecting Canada's reputation for efficiency.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I will not take very long in speaking tance that we take action not in two days' on the urgency of this motion because I time or in two weeks' time but today, to believe Your Honour has already heard a make sure that our Canadian aircraft can point from the hon. member for Greenwood. But I would like to indicate to the house that what we are faced with is in fact a matter that is of great interest and one that will undoubtedly cause considerable suffering not only to the people of Biafra and Nigeria but also to the people of this country. We have become well aware in the weeks that have passed that a tremendous amount of public interest and concern has grown in this country.

I would refer Your Honour to citation 100 (2) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which says in part:

The "definite matter of urgent public importance", for the discussion of which the adjournment of the house may be moved under standing order 26, must be so pressing that public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention.

May I emphasize in particular the last phrase which reads "must be so pressing that public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention". It is particularly in this area that we must think very seriously of the motion proposed by the hon, member for Greenwood. For the last two and a half weeks there has been an unusually keen public interest in the activities of our government with regard to the relief operations for Biafra and Nigeria. When the government was finally able to arrange with the government of Nigeria the use of our Hercules aircraft I think all Canadians breathed a great sigh of relief that we would now be able to take a forward step to relieve the starvation of many thousands of people both in Biafra and in Nigeria. Since that time two and a half weeks ago many thousands of lives have been lost. Perhaps it is a little too callous to suggest that part of the reason is that we have not been able as yet to put our Hercules aircraft into service. How many lives were lost can never be determined, and now we face future uncertainty.

Whether it is a matter of 6,000 or 10,000 lives lost a day, each day as it goes by spells untold suffering for the people in that area. We know from personal experience, and we are not alone in this, that there are facilities that could be used tonight if our Hercules aircraft were available. We believe there is some danger that if further delays occur in the possible use of the Fernando Po route, these aircraft may have to return to this country. It seems to be of the utmost imporvery full and excellent statement on this serve the purpose for which they were sent,

Delay in Use of Aircraft for Biafra that is to alleviate the suffering and starvation in Biafra and Nigeria.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make two points to Your Honour which, to me at least, suggest there is clearly urgency of debate in addition to the urgency of the matter with which the motion deals. May I remind Your Honour that on a number of occasions several of us in this house asked the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether they would not consider sending the Hercules aircraft to Sao Tomé pending the various consents which they are trying to obtain with respect to the use of the Hercules via Lagos and Fernando Po. In every case the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs insisted that the arrangement through the International Red Cross had to stand and that they were not prepared to send the Hercules to Sao Tomé for use by the church relief organizations. We have therefore had the spectacle of planes, which for the last number of days could have been delivering urgently required supplies to Biafra, standing idle in Lagos, in Cerife and on Ascension island doing nothing.

I would also remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the other day when the Secretary of State for External Affairs was asked by a member of this house why the Hercules were not being used, he informed this house that there was an additional reason, namely that the airstrips in occupied Biafra did not appear to be good enough to receive the Hercules. If my memory serves me correctly, and I think I am accurate, he added that they had to consider whether to pull the Hercules back and replace them with other, smaller planes.

Mr. Speaker, the main reason I rise today in support of urgency of debate of this matter is the fact that this operation can be undertaken either today or over the week end. According to the answer which the Secretary of State for External Affairs gave, and according to reports, it is quite possible that the government, in line with its determination that the Hercules only be used through Fernando Po and Lagos by the International Red Cross and by no one else, will decide that these planes will be brought back home and we will have to start the whole thing over again by sending planes back to do this urgent and humanitarian job of providing relief.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the the minister that the planes will be returned has been quite well made by the member for [Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

home makes this matter of immediate urgency for debate in this house so the government may have its mind changed as a result of discussions in this house, and so these planes which are waiting helplessly and uselessly now may be used as they ought to have been used from the first day, through Sao Tomé for the delivery of supplies to starving thousands in Biafra.

Mr. Speaker, if I may put this as strongly as I can, I ask you to permit the members of the opposition to tell the government today that so far as we are concerned we will not stand for the return of these planes to Canada. They can be used. There are church organizations in Sao Tomé that have already flown supplies into Biafra, and they are eager to have these planes. It is nothing but the most arid, irrelevant and hard headed obstinacy which prevents these planes from being used for this humanitarian purpose and that lets them stand idle and useless instead. We have to express this view today, not tomorrow or on any other day, because Monday may be too late.

Before I sit down may I say, Mr. Speaker, that it would have been desirable if the Secretary of State for External Affairs had been here. He is not here today, and on Sunday he leaves for a very necessary mission to Latin America which, if my memory serves me right, will keep him away for a month, from October 27 to November 27. So the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs today cannot possibly be a reason why this should not be debated today. If this parliament is at all meaningful in the life of the people of Canada and in the life of peoples throughout the world, and if our job as parliamentarians has any purpose at all, then the discussion of this urgent matter of providing necessary relief for starving thousands seems to me to transcend any other subject which may come before the house today. The likelihood of these planes being returned home makes it all the more urgent that we debate the matter now, and not even an hour from now.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the motion of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

I do not intend to talk at length of the obvious likelihood contained in the answer by urgency of the matter, for I think that point Greenwood and those who spoke after him. However, I should also like to insist on the debate taking place today, Mr. Speaker, because although the government has not misled us deliberately, it has not clearly stated its intentions concerning the humanitarian help it has been asked to give to Biafra, and it seems to be stubbornly refusing to help that country. The government seems to have agreed to lend its Hercules aircraft to help the Nigerians rather than the Biafrans, although, according to the information we have received in the committee on external affairs and national defence, the need exists rather on the Biafran side.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, one knows that other organizations such as Caritas and the World Council of Churches can go to Biafra. It may be that the Hercules are too heavy to use the landing strips in Nigeria, but if the other organizations can go where the disorder is most serious, I think that the government should consider using the Sao Tome base to send relief where it is most needed. We are told that the two Hercules are ready to take off, but no one does very much except drink beer.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think that we should study the matter today in order to find out exactly what the government intends to do. It is unfortunate, as stated by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is not here today, but I think that his colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) could be here within a short time to tell us the government's plans.

Mr. Speaker, we learned this morning that there is a possibility that the Hercules might be brought back to Canada instead of being sent to Biafra; I feel that perhaps we should consider replacing the Hercules by lighter planes which could land on the runways in that area.

What we want to know today is whether the Canadian people are not directly involved in the urgency of this matter. I feel that the Canadian people are entitled to know what is being done with their money and what humanitarian steps are being considered. Of course, we are not asking the government to go and wage war in that area, but we are asking it to help those who are hungry, who are sick. In fact, we are told that thousands of people are dying each day from starvation and disease. If the government used the planes which are in readiness, we could help Delay in Use of Aircraft for Biafra these people and save a large number of lives.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I believe the time has come to act and to know clearly what the intentions of the government are in this regard.

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the great importance of this motion I wonder whether the Prime Minister would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to come into the house, in spite of the fact it is his day off, so he could give us his views on this important problem.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I should like to address myself, Mr. Speaker, not to the merits of the issue as other hon. members have, but to the only question which should be considered at this time, that is the procedural question of whether there are other opportunities available for this matter to be discussed. I should like to remind you, sir, that according to citation 100(3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, the following distinction is made:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

On October 7, by means of a motion I moved, the estimates of the Department of External Affairs were referred by this house to the standing committee on external affairs and national defence. As Your Honour knows, since then that committee has been engaged in a very active consideration of the events in Nigeria. It is not open to me at this stage in the proceedings to go into what the committee has been discussing, but I believe it is quite clear there is every opportunity for hon. members, if they are interested in this particular aspect of the situation, to have it discussed within the framework of that particular committee. This committee is still meeting; therefore there will be every opportunity in the committee for the question to be discussed.

Perhaps the only other citation which is of interest in this procedural discussion is citation 288 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

Committees are regarded as portions of the house and are governed for the most part in their proceedings by the same rules which prevail in the house.

mittee, this is the area of parliamentary prodiscussed. By a specific motion this house has chosen the committee as the place to deal with this particular question. If I may borrow some of the terminology used by the hon. member for Greenwood, it seems to me it would be making a mockery of the proceedings of the committee, and indeed of the standing orders of this house, to suggest that a matter which has been so actively pursued during the last several weeks before that committee should be taken away from the committee and dealt with in this chamber. The subject matter before the committee provides the fullest opportunity to go into all aspects of the question. I think we can take notice of the fact that this has taken place.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is not the urgency of debate necessary to adjourn the ordinary business of the house. If there be urgency in the subject matter which is referred to in the motion of the hon. member, then he and others who have supported him should be active in seeking a discussion of that matter within the standing committee on external affairs and national defence.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): It is often said, Mr. Speaker, that parliament is in disrepute. Parliamentary institutions everywhere in the free world are under attack. Here we are, under circumstances that touch the hearts and minds of humans everywhere, with occurrences taking place that we have it within our power to do something about, regardless of the attitude of those people who live in countries adjoining Nigeria, and we stultify ourselves by the rules. It was never intended that a government should hide behind the rules when a matter as emergent as this is taking place. There are no arguments that can be advanced. The government is adamant in inaction and refuses to give the members of this house an opportunity to speak. This is the clear import of the words of the hon. gentleman who just preceded me.

Surely there are members in this house supporting the government who are prepared to take a stand on an occasion like this when a principle is at stake. This nation's prestige is at stake. Canadians everywhere ask "Why don't you do something? Can't you get this government to act?" Parliament has been stultified and hamstrung. The hon. gentleman

It is clear, therefore, that since the estimates are still being considered by that committee, this is the area of parliamentary proceedings in which the matter should be discussed. By a specific motion this house has chosen the committee as the place to deal with this particular question. If I may borrow says "Why don't you go to a committee?" Parliament is supreme, and a committee is simply an adjunct. Surely, regardless of the rules, the government will at least take a stand instead of pussyfooting around, procrastinating, promising action for three weeks and doing nothing.

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, the question before us is the urgency of debate. About three weeks ago this general subject matter was referred to the committee on external affairs, of which I am chairman. Since then the committee has met almost daily, meeting two or three times a day sometimes, and has heard a great many authoritative witnesses among whom were some suggested by the hon, member for Greenwood and his colleagues. We are still awaiting a brief which the hon. member for Greenwood says is essential for the preparation of our report. The report is being prepared now and will be considered by the steering committee on Monday. If at that time we have the cooperation of the hon. member for Greenwood and others on both sides of the house, we hope to have the report available for debate early next week.

As a result, I find it difficult to understand why this motion has been put. In any event I do not think it should be proceeded with, since there is no urgency of debate.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert spoke sincerely of the importance of parliamentary institutions. Important to our parliamentary institutions are committees and the development and maturing of our committee system. Entertaining this type of motion would do a great deal to undermine the development of our parliamentary committee system. I do not understand the purpose of the motion, when one considers that the external affairs committee, on which there are 30 members of all parties, has sat for three weeks considering the matter which the hon. member now wishes to have debated by this house.

Mr. Brewin: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does the hon. member not think that it is important today, tomorrow and Sunday, to move emergency supplies?

Mr. Wahn: Naturally I consider that important. Supplies should be moved at the earliest moment, but I do not think the procedure suggested by the hon. member for Greenwood will advance us very far toward that goal.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, without doubt the situation in Nigeria and Biafra is urgent. It was urgent some time ago, urgent enough to bring the committee on external affairs into emergency session. Hon. members of the New Democratic party have pleaded eloquently, and have described the urgency of the situation in Nigeria. Nevertheless, here we are concerned with the urgency of debate, and it is for Your Honour to decide whether such a debate is a matter of urgency weighty enough to adjourn the normal proceedings of this house.

It has been said that this matter is before the committee on external affairs. Though it is an urgent matter, it is interesting to note that the N.D.P. members have not made any concrete proposals before that committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member that he ought not to discuss the deliberations of the committee itself.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I am sorry, sir. I was carried away. The urgency of debate-

An hon. Member: Let me help you.

Mr. Siewari (Cochrane): I need no help from the hon. member from Nova Scotia.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is casting reflections on a Nova Scotia member. I am a Nova Scotian, and at no time did I make a remark about helping the hon. member. I think the hon. member owes an apology to every individual in this house from Nova Scotia. The hon. member ought to identify whoever he is addressing his remarks to.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have listened to arguments in favour of and against the motion, but should any other hon. member wish to talk about the procedural aspect of the matter I will not stand in his way. I may tell hon. members that, having heard arguments, I am now ready to exercise my prerogative and render a decision, but I see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wishes to continue the debate.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, addressing himself to the question of urgency of debate the President of the Privy Council if I understood him cor- tunity for this debate to take place. There rectly, dealt with two main points. Perhaps I will be no opportunity next week or the week might be permitted to deal with them in re- after. There is an urgent need to make use of verse order. His second point was that these aircraft tonight, tomorrow night and committee on external affairs and national defence. I submit that the chairman of that committee, the hon. member for St. Paul's, has answered that argument by saying that the committee can deal with this matter some day next week, at the earliest. I submit this is a matter of urgency, and by that I mean it is urgent today, tonight, this week end.

May I also say that the commtitee did not dispatch the Hercules aircraft. The government dispatched them after the Secretary of State for External Affairs had announced the matter in the house. The use of Hercules aircraft was raised on the floor of the house. In this motion we are not dealing with the entire problem, but only with the use of the aircraft that have been dispatched and are not being used for the purposes for which the Secretary of State for External Affairs said they would be used.

We are led to believe that these aircraft will be brought back, and that has created a new emergency that is of urgency this very week end.

As the right hon, member for Prince Albert correctly said, the other point raised by the President of the Privy Council relied on the technicality of the rules. He said the matter should not be raised under standing order 26 if it could be debated at some other opportunity. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there will be further opportunities for debate; we shall continue with the budget debate in a week or so, and that will provide an opportunity. But, as has been said by speaker after speaker, the urgency is today. I submit that the hon. member for Egmont was quite correct is saying that citation 100(2) of Beauchesne's fourth edition is fully appropriate when it says that the issue must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if the matter is not given immediate attention.

The hon, members for Greenwood and Egmont have said these aircraft could be used tonight to save lives. There will be no pressure for that to be done if this matter is debated next week or the week after. I therefore contend that this issue ought to be dealt with here, where it arose and where it has been dealt with thus far. The government itself sent the aircraft, and the government is responsible to parliament itself.

I also contend that there is no other opporthis matter ought to be left to the standing Sunday night to fly supplies into Biafra. We

Delay in Use of Aircraft for Biafra must have a clear statement from the government that these aircraft will not be brought back with their mission unfulfilled.

Canadians are concerned, as is evident from the many young people who were in the minister's office the other day and who are on parliament hill this very week end. Their concern reflects the concern of all Canadians. We must act at once and I think we ought to debate the matter, not next week or the week after, but at once, this very day.

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. The anguish and deep concern hon, members on this side of the house feel is no less than the anguish and deep concern felt by hon. members on the other side. Yet I do not think a debate here will answer the matter. The action the government proposes to take, an action I support, will ultimately solve the problem. It is not to be solved by having hon. members score debating points or discussing this matter further.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to unduly prolong this debate. I would just like to quote briefly two authors who insisted upon the sovereignty of this parliament and the importance for every member to express his views on a question as significant as the one which is facing us now, the matter of Biafra.

It is essential that the majority should be neither brutal nor tyrannical, that it should not abuse its power to go ahead without taking into account the respectable minorities which it meets on the

This is somewhat the problem opposing Biafra and Nigeria.

The law ought not to be the expression of an unreasoning will: "It is first and foremost-suggests Mr. Esmein, well-known author-a rule of justice and public interest.

That is why I fail to understand the stand taken by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), who hides behind legislation in order to curtail the sovereignty of this parliament when we know full well that the government makes decisions with regard to Biafra and Nigeria without any consideration for the proceedings of the committee, indeed it had taken some before the said committee had met.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is of vital importance, of national and even international urgency that this sovereign parliament be informed of this matter. Since the government agrees to account to this parliament, the matter must therefore be placed before parliament.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Again, I thank hon. members for their contributions to the debate. This is obviously a very difficult decision to reach because it involves a matter of great importance and concern, I know, to all hon. members.

The hon, member for Greenwood has made a very strong case in support of his motion, and he was ably supported by other hon. members who have taken part in the procedural debate. The hon, member for Egmont has referred the Chair to a citation which is quite to the point, that is citation 100(3) of Beauchesne. I wonder, however, if the Chair can ignore the fact that as a matter of special importance and immediate urgency the whole of the Nigeria and Biafra situation has been referred by this house to a special committee. As hon, members have indicated, this committee is sitting now, and I assume it has the power to consider the special aspect of the problem which was raised by the hon. member for Greenwood in the course of his contribution.

Normally I would not think it sufficient to refuse such a debate for the simple reason that a forum existed in a committee of the house, but the situation is essentially different in this case because the house by its own special order agreed that this question of Nigeria and Biafra should be considered by a special committee.

In the exercise of its supremacy, the house has decided that this is what should be done, and I find it extremely difficult to disregard a special instruction to the committee that the situation referred to by the hon. member for Greenwood is, generally speaking, to be considered by that committee.

One of the prime purposes of a debate obtained or agreed to under the terms of standing order 26 is to permit hon, members to seek reports or to advocate specific action on the part of the government. This, it seems to me, has been done effectively by hon. members. It is obvious that the debate has ranged far beyond the usual procedural limitations on such a discussion, when contributions should be limited specifically to the question of urgency of debate rather than to the urgency of the matter itself. Hon. members, in particular the mover of the proposed motion, the hon. member for Greenwood, in my humble view have gone somewhat beyond those limitations, have pointed out to the government the urgency of the matter and have sought some action on the part of the government which they feel should be taken. This was the approach followed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. In other words, it seems to me that the hon, members who would normally have taken part in this debate have had spokesmen express their views on their behalf and that perhaps not very much would be gained by having hon. members repeat the representations they have already made to the Prime Minister and to the government.

In view of these circumstances I hope hon. members will agree with me that it is not possible for me at the present time to grant the proposed motion.

FINANCE

SALE OF SHORT TERM TREASURY BILLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It relates to a report that the government has sold treasury bills of 11 days duration to the extent of $100 million. Would the minister care to explain why it should be necessary to issue these bills of such short duration, as it seems to indicate an alarming shortage of cash?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what happens almost every year in the early part of November is that a great many Canada savings bonds are cashed in and the cash from the new bonds does not become available to the government until a couple of weeks later. Incidentally, tenders have simply been called for this $100 million. The bills will not be sold until next week; the announcement was made yesterday. In order to get through this period when we are paying out money for Canada savings bonds which are being redeemed in very large amounts, and to protect the government's cash balances, we are issuing these short term bills.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not wish to press the minister unduly, but does not this shortage of cash leave the government in a vulnerable position, particularly should external or other difficulties be encountered? Does not this reliance upon short term money to the extent indicated leave the government in a vulnerable position, and might not difficulties arise in this connection?

Mr. Benson: I think not, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. gentleman knows, the government sells treasury bills all the time. The cash balances in November are lower because of the redeeming of Canada savings bonds, but I really think there is no difficulty of the kind suggested.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, does this situation not arise, at least in part, because this year a disproportionately large number of Canada savings bonds are being converted into the new issue and that early sales are not producing cash but merely represent an exchange of bonds?

Mr. Benson: What happens is that the early sales do produce cash but most of that cash does not come in until after the bonds have been converted. So there is a play of a week or ten days during which the government's cash balances are run down.

EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—DELAY IN USE OF HERCULES AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the assurances given to this house that Nigeria will not object to planes being flown from Sao Tomé to territory held by Biafra, will the Prime Minister consider dispatching immediately the Hercules aircraft which are now standing idle so that relief may be brought to Biafra without delay?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs told the house a few days ago that he was attempting to receive from the Nigerian authorities assurance that they would have no objection to our having the Hercules used by the churches as opposed to the International Red Cross. These discussions are continuing. We cannot, of course, force the mind of the Nigerian authorities. Our position throughout has been-and I believe hon. members of the opposition agreed with it-that once authorization was obtained by us from the Nigerian authorities they would in turn authorize the Red Cross to operate. That was a good solution. Now that there are difficulties with the Red Cross the opposition is suggesting that we use the churches. We would have to obtain the same permission from the Nigerian authorities with respect to the churches as we did with respect to the Red Cross. This is the way we are proceeding. We still believe it is important that we do not disregard international law and that we do not follow the advice of the right hon, gentleman from Prince Albert who feels that rules in this matter are of no importance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I never made any such suggestion. The Prime Minister is hiding behind such statements as an excuse for inaction. I was speaking of the rules of the House of Commons and suggested that they were never designed to be used by this government to stultify and prevent the Canadian people doing what is necessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear from the right hon. gentleman that this government is invited to disregard the rules of this house when it sees it is convenient to do so.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Would the Prime Minister tell the house whether or not a determined effort is being made to check the statement I have made on a number of occasions, and which has also been made by the hon. member for Egmont, that on Tuesday, October 8, the High Commissioner for Nigeria agreed to the supplies being flown in from Sao Tome with one condition only, that they be inspected by the Red Cross? Why is further consent needed? Will the Prime Minister tell us that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is an escape hatch for the government.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are making determined efforts to proceed in this way if the government of Nigeria indicates its consent. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated, the Commissioner for External Affairs of Nigeria is in hospital and it is very difficult to communicate with him. But my belief is that if the Nigerians ask the Red Cross to inspect the cargoes supplied by the churches and if the Red Cross is agreeable to do that, we will certainly find no difficulty. We will be very happy to proceed in this way.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I wish to direct to the hon. member for St. Paul's as chairman of the committee. Would the hon. member undertake, as chairman of the committee, that when the report is brought in next week he will move a motion for concurrence by the house so that the house and the country can find out who is hiding and who lacks intestinal fortitude?

MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Mr. David Speaker, in view of the fact that before the house meets again the Secretary of State for External Affairs will have left the country, and in view of the fact that we urgently need to hear from him in some detail about negotiations or arrangements being made, either through the Red Cross or with the government of Nigeria, to bring about an effective relief action, either from Fernando Po or Sao Tome, will the Prime Minister not make the Secretary of State for External Affairs available to the house some time later today in order that he can make a clear statement so there will not be this tremendous uncertainty and confusion about what seems to be a very basic concern of many Canadians as to the whole operation of our relief effort? I am sure the Prime Minister would be anxious to have the Secretary of State for External Affairs make that kind of explanation to the house.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not leaving the country on Sunday as the hon. member suggests. He will be here next week to answer questions or make statements as the need arises. During the time he is not here, and if it is a matter concerning the whole nation, I would be prepared to answer in his place.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): We are very glad to note that the minister will be here next week but there is this element of urgency of time. I think it is very important that a statement be made today. Even a matter of two or three days can be very important. We have already lost somewhat over two weeks and I am sure hon. members on both sides of the house would like this matter resolved as quickly as possible.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question concerning the Hercules aircraft, but the Prime Minister said something a moment ago that puzzled me and, if you will permit me, I would like to clear that up first. The Prime Minister said that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be here next week, but the Prime Minister's statement yesterday on the ministerial mission to Latin America indicated that the mission would leave on Sunday, October 27, and he named the Secretary of State for External Affairs as one of the ministers who would be on that mission.

Mr. Trudeau: I would be glad to clear that up, Mr. Speaker. The statement went on to say that we were naming five ministers to that mission in order that at any one time there would be at least two there. I indicated that the ministers would be replacing one another during the course of the mission in order that not too many of them would be absent from the house at any one time. The ministers leaving on Sunday will be the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, which means that at a later date the other three ministers I named will be replacing them in a kind of shuttle service.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Abitibi.

Mr. Lewis: I thought I had Your Honour's permission to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member for York South rose on a point of order and he now wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: That is what I was trying to convey, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the Prime Minister or the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, whichever one can tell us, about these attempts to get Nigerian consent through Dr. Arikpo in New York. When the Nigerian foreign commissioner was found to be in hospital in New York did our Department of External Affairs use our high commissioner in Lagos to get some kind of answer to this problem? Surely the Prime Minister is not depending only on the foreign secretary for Nigeria who is in New York?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are in constant and intense communication with our high commissioner in Lagos who, I may say, is doing an excellent job in a very difficult situation. I should like to put on record very clearly our position on this matter, if I may do so once again. It is that we are trying to act in a way which the Nigerian authorities will not consider hostile, and will not regard as an intervention in the internal affairs of that country. We may be right or wrong in not wanting to be hostile to Nigeria, but this is our position.

We want to act in a way which does not constitute an infringement on Nigerian sovereignty. We do so because the rules of international order mean something to us. We do not believe we should intervene, as one African leader described it at the United Nations, in a way which would be determined by the imperialist press or by opportunism. This being our position, Mr. Speaker, we decided to act. We first invited the Canadian people to act as generously as they could as individuals to relieve suffering anywhere, including Biafra. We encouraged them to do so.

But as far as the government of Canada's action is concerned we only consented to put our aircraft, our official planes and our air force apparatus at the disposition of the Red Cross when the Nigerian government said that that was all right, that it would not be interpreted as a hostile act. If the same agreement can be obtained as regards the churches—

Mr. Brewin: It has been obtained from Dr. Arikpo.

Mr. Trudeau: But that is the difficulty; to arrange that the Nigerian government is able to make sure that the cargoes going through under the control of the churches will be authorized by the Red Cross. The negotiation now is between the Red Cross and the government of Lagos.

I will go on record again as saying that as soon as that has been obtained, as soon as the Red Cross has been given the green light by the Nigerian government to inspect cargoes, the planes will fly in any direction and from any point of departure. Here again, however, we are in the hands of the agreement to be reached between the Red Cross and the government at Lagos. Our authorization lies there. I state again that probably if the Nigerian government makes this arrangement with the Red Cross, if the Red Cross is there to inspect the cargoes, and if this is done with the authority of the Nigerian government, our planes will fly from Sao Tome, Fernando Po or anywhere else.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned I should like to ask the Prime Minister to finally assure this house that the government will not recall the Hercules planes and that they will be used from Sao Tome as soon as this, to me, unnecessary agreement is finally received.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect I must disagree with the expression "unnecessary agreement". If we do not obtain the agreement we will then be performing a hostile act.

Mr. Lewis: It is unnecessary because you have it already.

Mr. Trudeau: I have it, sir, but apparently the people on the spot are not able to operate in that direction. But, to answer the question, it is not our intention to recall the Hercules aircraft, at least not within the next few days. On our own initiative we offered to supply Buffalo aircraft because apparently they could be of more service. It is our intention to supply some type of plane. It is not our intention to withdraw the Hercules if we find they can be of service.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is very simple and to the point. Would the Prime Minister reconsider his position and ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to come into the house today? If this cannot be arranged, will he assure the house that the minister will be here on Monday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Since Canada is considered a friend of both parties involved, that is Biafra and Nigeria, has the government intended or does it intend to facilitate a meeting in Canada between the two parties in order to end the conflict?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must have learned through the evidence given before the committee that both parties have already met on several occasions. In fact, they have met in African countries and they were unable to reach an agreement, because the lawful government of Lagos states: "We are ready to negotiate about the forms of federalism, provided the country is not split up".

On the other hand, the Biafran authorities say that they want to separate and that they do not trust the unity of that state.

Since the meetings between the parties have remained fruitless, I do not see in what way it would serve the case of humanity to open discussions here, when the discussions which took place in Africa or in other friendly countries bore no fruits.

It is easy, Mr. Speaker, to speak about a cease-fire, but this means that we are asking the government of Nigeria to accept the division of its country. Obviously, Nigeria does [Mr. Trudeau.]

not agree to a cease-fire under such conditions.

As far as the question of knowing whether a cease-fire with Biafra being integrated into Nigeria should be looked for, I may say that the Biafran authorities themselves have refused that solution. Therefore, I wonder what new solution will be proposed.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Prime Minister for the purpose of clarification. Is the government of Canada now making representations directly to the government of Nigeria so that the Red Cross may be given clearances from the government of Nigeria?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot answer that question with absolute certainty. Once again our authorities in Lagos have been asked to implement the policy I have just announced. I am sure they are in communication with the Red Cross. I do not know exactly what exchanges have occurred between them. But the Red Cross authorities know we have the aircraft. They know we have supplies and they know we are prepared to fly them from one place to another. It is up to them to obtain agreement from the Lagos governmental authorities.

Mr. Stanfield: I most sincerely ask the Prime Minister whether he or the Secretary of State for External Affairs would make direct representations to the government of Nigeria not in an unfriendly way but for the purpose of assisting the Red Cross in obtaining the necessary clearances.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes. I am discussing this very matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have discussed it with him this morning before coming into the house and I am due to meet with him after the house adjourns.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a couple of related supplementaries. Earlier the Prime Minister seemed to imply that an agreement which was reached earlier with the Nigerian authorities is now being reneged on in Lagos. Is this the situation which now exists? If so, this surely must be a strange situation in international arrangements. In view of the fact that the minister is not here today and is not scheduled to be here on Monday, and in view of the fact this would mean that a period of four days would elapse before we could have an explanation from him, would the Prime Minister arrange for it to be the way hon. members heard it in for the minister to be here some time today to give us a statement in some detail?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the minister is not here because he is in his office working actively on this very question. I feel it is more useful for him to do that than to be here in the house to answer questions.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Does the Prime Minister realize that a delay of three of four days in waiting for a statement from the minister on this matter may mean 20,000 Biafran lives?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get some clarification from the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the answer he just gave the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), are we to understand that he no longer believes in mediation between the two parties concerned?

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the confusion I think the Prime Minister was not able to answer the part of my question with regard to whether or not Lagos is in fact reneging on the agreement.

Mr. Trudeau: No, I would not make that accusation against the government of Lagos. Hon. members apparently have referred to a statement which was made to the United Nations by the minister of external affairs of Lagos. Apparently there is some problem in respect of knowing how this will be interpreted by the government of Lagos. Frankly, at this point I cannot speak for them. I repeat that we have been endeavouring without success to clear it up both at this end by talking to the commissioner, who is in hospital and at the other end by obtaining a confirmation. Here again, however, I must repeat that the negotiation is essentially a matter for the Red Cross and if the government in Lagos chooses to interpret the words spoken in New Mr. Speaker, I have not received that York in a different way than they are interpreted by hon. members, then of course there is nothing we can do about it. I am not saying ber yesterday and I have received representathat this is what is being done. I am saying tions from several members on this side of that it is the policy of the government at the house. I am having the matter examined Lagos which has to be translated into action at the present time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

New York.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Could the Prime Minister explain about whom he is concerned in respect of his reference a few moments ago to the imperialistic press?

Mr. Trudeau: I was quoting the representative of the government of Mali at the United Nations. I was indicating to hon. members that our concern regarding the internal affairs of Nigeria, as defined by the Organization for African Unity, was well founded and that the case in that respect for internal affairs had been made by the government of Mali by saying that la presse impérialiste et les philanthropes opportunistes—I believe the phrase was-of our countries should not try to interfere in Nigeria. In other words, they are telling those who, under the guise of humanitarianism, are trying to tell Nigeria how it should settle its internal affairs; that they are acting in some direction of imperialism rather than in a sense of real concern.

Mr. Aiken: Is the Prime Minister in accord with the philosophies of the government of Mali?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think we should enter into a philosophical debate at this point.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION ON GRAIN DRYING EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has received representations from the minister of agriculture for the province of Saskatchewan and, if so, will he now accede to the request to allow farmers accelerated depreciation on grain dryers?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): representation in this regard. However, I did receive a representation from the hon. mem-

TRADE

WHEAT-NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING SALES TO CHINA AND RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce at this time in view of the Prime Minister's advice that that minister will be out of the country for some time. In view of the tremendous importance of wheat sales to the prairie economy, can the minister now state when negotiations will get under way with Russia and China regarding the remainder of our present contracts with these two countries?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it is traditional to give this information. I regret that, but it is better that I do not do so.

Mr. Southam: Would the minister advise whether or not any new, large wheat sales are in prospect which may alleviate the serious economic problems now facing western Canada?

Mr. Pepin: New what?

Mr. Southam: New, large wheat sales. Are there any new, large wheat sales in prospect?

Mr. Pepin: As I have said three or four times in the last ten days, this is not the market place. I have said that one of the conditions of success in business is not to announce your intentions in advance.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—PURCHASE OF COUNTER-MORTAR RADAR EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs perhaps I could direct my question to the Minister of Defence Production. Will he request a reconsideration by officials of NATO of the decision to bypass the purchase of counter-mortar radar equipment developed by the National Research Council of Canada in favour of comparable but inferior equipment developed in the United States?

Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I will be Minister of Transport. [Mr. Benson.]

glad to take the question as notice and refer it to my colleague, the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. MacLean: Will the minister indicate what representations, if any, were made to the government of the United States regarding its interference in NATO purchasing to ensure the sale of a less suitable United States product?

Mr. Jamieson: As I said, I will take the question as notice and discuss it with the Minister of National Defence.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA-CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING CEASE FIRE UNDER UNITED NATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister kindly inform the house whether the government has consulted the governments of Kenya, Uganda, Tanzania and Zambia and the Gold Coast on the question of obtaining a cease fire in Nigeria through United Nations action? If so, would he indicate what the response has been?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will check on this matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and find out whether there have been any such conversations. When the hon, member referred to the Gold Coast I felt he was perhaps thinking of some other country. The Gold Coast no longer exists.

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—REMOVAL OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the honourable Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the representations made by the Chambers of Commerce and intermediate bodies, especially those from the eastern townships, is the Department of Trade and Commerce considering the removal of the toll on Champlain bridge in Montreal?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of question comes under the jurisdiction of the

INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF EXPO EXPRESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could he advise the house of the results of the talks he had yesterday or the day before with hon. Beaudry, Quebec Minister of Industry and Commerce, concerning the sale of Expo Express, and how the legitimate interests of the city of Edmonton in that connection are to be protected?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I answered that question yesterday, at least in part, Mr. Speaker.

As far as we are concerned, we respect the legal procedures already undertaken. The SUTRI company was considered the highest tenderer, the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition collected the deposit made by that company, and normal procedures are now under way.

However, outside of that, I said yesterday that there was a possibility of reconciling all the parties concerned. Obviously, if all the parties are reconciled, and more particularly those of the city of Edmonton, it might then be possible to come to an agreement allowing SUTRI to desist from its present legal obligation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

What is the attitude of the Canadian government and the management of the corporation with regard to the proposal made by the city of Montreal to reverse the decision to sell Expo Express by public tender or, at least, to invoke the principle of annulment?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, what I have just said implies that we do not agree with that attitude.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO BIENVENU INTERESTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with a report to the effect that certain elements of the Bienvenu empire have collapsed and the relationship with British International Finance (Canada) Limited to which the government granted a licence to operate the Bank of Western Canada. Is the minister undertaking an inquiry into the whole matter in the interest of according a high degree of protection and security to Canadian investors?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have been looking into this situation to determine the effect this might have on corporations which have insurance under our deposit insurance provisions, set up by the previous government a year or a year and a half ago. I will make a report to the hon. member shortly, but after a cursory examination I do not think there is any danger to depositors covered by our deposit insurance. I should like to make absolutely sure and then answer the hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Thank you very much. In view of the tangled web of financial manipulation which was apparent at the time of granting the charter to the Bank of Western Canada, what is the present position of that charter, particularly having regard to what has happened to these financial corporations connected with the Bienvenu interests?

Mr. Benson: I believe that the position of the Bank of Western Canada is, as my hon. friend knows, that it is being wound up. Its charter will lapse unless action is taken by the government to reinstate the charter. Otherwise the charter will just not be in use.

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING STATION CKVR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Transport, with whom it might be of interest to have an eyeball to eyeball confrontation this morning, perhaps I might ask the Prime Minister to inquire of the Minister of Transport whether he will make a statement at an early date in connection with allegations regarding television station CKVR in Barrie?

On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I thought the right hon. gentleman was about to give the house some indication of the situation and thereby let the public know what is happening.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was only going to ask the Minister without Portfolio to bring this question to the attention of the minister.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister without Portfolio when the Minister of Transport is going to be in the house?

STUDENT LOANS

REQUESTS FROM PROVINCES FOR EXTRA FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Has he received a request from any province for an extra allocation of funds under the Canada student loans plan and, if so, what has been the response of the federal government to such a request?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have received requests from several of the provinces for additional amounts under this plan. We have, as the hon. member knows, a fairly large amount of money unallocated which we normally allocate after discussions with the appropriate ministers and after we find out the needs of the various provinces. When speaking to the ministers of the various provinces I indicated that funds would be made available for loans that are made under the criteria upon which the provinces have agreed among themselves. We will provide funds even if it requires that we come back to the house with a very short bill in order to take care of this matter.

AGRICULTURE

CONSIDERATION OF PRODUCTION OF LOWER QUALITY HIGHER YIELDING GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Will one of the responsibilities of the grains council be to look into and possibly recommend the growing of low quality, high yield grains?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I hope that is one of the first subjects the council will take under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, my question-

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret that the hon member for Hamilton West cannot ask his question now because there are a number of supplementaries.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement by Mr. Shuttleworth of the Board of Grain Commissioners that the regulations might be relaxed, is the government in fact planning to relax the regulations pertaining to grades of grain that have not until now been allowed in Canada?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, that statement is also related to the relaxation of the rules so we could allow some farmers in the maritime provinces to try a new variety of grain called "Opal". But we have reason to believe that there is very little or no possibility of this grain degrading the high quality standards that we have in western Canada. I am sure that Mr. Shuttleworth's statement was related to that matter.

Mr. Korchinski: Is this-

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is now becoming a debate. The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HOUSING

HAMILTON, ONT.—HEARING OF BRIEFS BY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank hon. members for their concern. I would just like to say, with great respect, that a note was passed to me yesterday in appreciation of my efforts to draw Mr. Speaker's attention to myself. The note said that if I continued these efforts much further I would lose ten pounds, and I do not think I can afford to do that.

My question is directed to the Minister of Transport, but I believe this is his day off.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Alexander: I see that the Acting Minister of Transport is here, the Minister without Portfolio. In view of the representations that have been made by many people in Ontario who are doubtful about what is happening with the housing task force, I ask the minister whether the task force intends to attend Hamilton to hear briefs on housing and, if so, when?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the schedule of the task force hearings has been made public. I do not know whether there is a specific date for Hamilton. I do not believe there is. But I will be pleased to relay the hon. member's concern and interest to the Minister of C-116, to amend the Post Office Act-Mr. Transport.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to conclude from the minister's answer that Hamilton is not on the task force list for-

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker? Because of the peculiar situation of Hamilton in terms of its population and because of the uniqueness of the area, would the minister consider revising the itinerary in order that Hamilton may be placed thereon and briefs may be submitted to the task force? I believe the type of briefs submitted would be of help to the task force.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon, member will agree that the problems of one city are in many ways similar to those of other cities. The task force has a very tight schedule to meet. It simply cannot go everywhere. However, I will certainly bring the hon. member's representation to the attention of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the continued absence of the Minister of Transport from the house, both on days that he should be here and days that he should not, will the Prime Minister consider making the Acting Minister of Transport, the Minister without Portfolio, the minister of transport, because at least he seems to want to come here and is not afraid to answer questions on this very important matter?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed the following bills to which the concurrence of this house is desired:

Bill S-9, an act respecting British Northwestern Insurance Company.

Bill S-11, an act to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS AFFECTING RATES, ADMIN-ISTRATION, SAVINGS BANK

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 24, consideration in committee of Bill No. Kierans-Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-116, to amend the Post Office Act. When the committee rose last evening clause 1 was under consideration. Shall clause 1 carry?

On clause 1-Oaths.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, when I called it eleven o'clock last night I was in the middle of some remarks in reference to this bill. In summary, I had dealt with the question of the important functions of daily and weekly newspapers and periodicals. I pointed out that they represented an important function of democracy, that they were very essential in order to shape public opinion. This is part of our democratic process and is partly how we carry out our function as parliamentarians, because it is through us that the newspapers reflect public opinion and changes come about in government.

Yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North referred to the figures published by the Postmaster General in the Canada Post Office financial statements and details of proposed rate adjustments. I refer to these figures because last evening the Postmaster General seemed to take the position that to have this question reviewed by a standing committee would be somewhat ridiculous because he had already set out the figures.

Let us look at the figures of the Postmaster General. With regard to daily newspapers the deficit, which is paid by the nation, was $5,-637,197, and under the new proposal the Postmaster General hopes to reduce this deficit to $1,632,333. It would appear from the figures that the weekly newspapers have come out of the situation a little better, that is, they fared better than the daily newspapers. The deficit paid by the nation in respect of weekly newspapers was $2,106,669. Under this proposal the Postmaster General hopes to reduce this deficit to $2,024,808.

It is the general feeling of the weekly newspapers that these figures do not reflect the true situation because some weekly newspapers are distributed through the mail and some are carried by agents. The main burden of the increase in second class mail rates will fall on newspapers in cities of 10,000 to 20,000 people, particularly in areas of western Canada. This burden will fall on newspapers in areas like North Battleford where the local newspaper has a large rural circulation and it is impractical to distribute the newspaper other than by postal delivery. Most dailies rely to a major extent on carrier distribution; mail rates are not a major factor. In other words, the weekly newspapers feel they are discriminated being against, particularly when they service small areas.

I remind the minister that the weekly newspapers perform an important function for the government. This is true of many weekly newspapers, particularly those such as one in my riding of Calgary North, the Rocky View and Market Examiner, which is published in the city of Calgary and is distributed to rural areas and small towns. Many of the bulletins which the government wishes to publish are published as a service by these weekly newspapers free of charge to the government. Therefore they are performing a service for the government and some consideration should be given them in that regard.

When one looks at the whole picture one realizes that this is where a committee should have examined the true set of facts. As the hon, member for Winnipeg North said, the deficit in delivering Reader's Digest was $982,388 and for Time, $864,000, but even under the new proposal these two U.S. periodicals will fare the best. Of course the Postmaster General said last evening that one cannot compare Time magazine with a daily or weekly newspaper. Nevertheless they are still competing for the advertising dollar in Canada. The deficit on the delivery of Reader's Digest will still cost the nation $800,570. The yearly deficit on Time magazine was $864,362, but under the new proposal it will still be $721,527.

I think it would be very interesting to have these figures examined by a standing committee. I ask again: What is the minister afraid of, even if there were to be a delay of 30 days in coping with the deficit in his department? We heard this morning how these committees were going to function. It is to be the beginning of a new era. The funny thing about the philosophy of this government is that when it wants to sweep things under the carpet it does not use committees but when it wants to sweep other things under a different kind of carpet and keep them out of the House of Commons so as not to embarrass the government it refers them to a committee. What kind of nonsense is this? The government cannot have it both ways. Either these com-function at all. According to the methods adopted by the committees, it seems to me that a committee headed by a government chairman and with a government majority will sweep things under the carpet anyway.

which following words Perhaps the appeared in the Star Weekly of July 31, 1965, were not far wrong. This is what was written in reference to the Liberal government:

What did the government do? It exempted Time and Reader's Digest from the very tax that was supposed to curb foreign looters of the Canadian advertising dollar.

Now the minister is doing it once again and it shows in his own figures. I would like to see them analysed and carefully scrutinized by a standing committee. The article went on to say:

But Senator O'Leary left his fellow senators—and the country—a disturbing thought to ponder: By voting for the exemption of Time and Reader's Digest from the magazine tax, parliament "is voting for the proposition that Washington has a right to interfere in a matter of purely Canadian concern, and voting a probable death sentence on Canada's periodical press, with all that can entail for our future voyage through history".

In other words, there is discrimination because people who are competing for the advertising dollar in Canada are being discriminated against. Although these two periodicals have a Canadian section they are really published in the United States. I have nothing against United States periodicals coming to Canada. I do not have such a prejudice but I want fair play for Canadian daily and weekly newspapers and magazines and periodicals published in Canada. These two United States periodicals are receiving special treatment. It may be a little refreshing to hear talk about how Sifton Press made about $1 million but even Sifton Press, which over the years may have been liberally inclined, to put it mildly, did not fare as well as did the Reader's Digest and Time magazine because both these periodicals taken together will be subsidized by the Canadian taxpayer to the tune of $14 million.

Many sharp words were used with regard to the Postmaster General. I feel most sincerely sorry for him. He is the instrument to pilot this bill through for the government. Hon. members will recall that he was the last to be appointed to the cabinet. I believe the Prime Minister let the cat out of the bag today when he referred to the imperialistic press. I was going to say this anyhow but it only confirmed and corroborated what I was thinking. Some publishers who are very libermittees will function properly or they will not ally inclined have told me that they have a feeling-and this is why I have some sympathy for the Postmaster General—that the Prime Minister has a dislike and mistrust of newspapers. In the swinging era, as he calls it, with half the cabinet here and half the legislation dealing with the Post Office Act cabinet away he would rather be on television and would rather run the country by himself through television than allow the news to be disseminated through daily newspapers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: In that regard I have some sympathy for the Postmaster General because he is doing the job for the Trudeau government in the Trudeau way and he is the unfortunate instrument to pilot this bill through against a lot of pressure with regard to discrimination against our daily and weekly newspapers.

Perhaps the old thinking still exists in the new era, and to prove this let me repeat some of the Prime Minister's statements. In March, 1963, in a very famous article in which he dealt with the philosophy of the Liberal government, which is so evident in the way in which this bill is being piloted through the house, this is what he said about his Liberal friends:

Say anything, think anything you like. But put us in power, because we are best fitted to govern.

He also said: "What idiots they all are", speaking about the Liberals. This is what he called them, not I. Now he uses the same philosophy in this House of Commons in appointing the Postmaster General to pilot this legislation through and to thrust it on the country whether or not it wants it.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, it is one o'clock and there are still a few questions to be asked on this clause. May I call it one o'clock?

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock, the house took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Chairman, a number of questions were put to making the submission to the Postmaster the minister. I do not know whether he wants General that I think some of these changes to reply before a few more questions are are rather severe.

asked. Probably he could add another question or two to the list which he no doubt has before him.

We have had a fairly lengthy debate on the but I think there are still a number of guestions which have not really been cleared up by the Postmaster General. It is my intention to try to get a little more information before we allow clause 1 to pass. I want to point out that when we started the debate on the post office bill the Postmaster General indicated that a large number of changes would be made. Since that time we have seen the pleas put forward, mainly by opposition members, gradually soften the stand he had taken. One of the issues is related to rural delivery, which is vital to my area. I am very happy to learn that apparently the Post Office Department is going to continue delivery of mail to rural areas on Saturday. The minister also suggested that there would be a graduated increase in some of the rates to be charged under clause 4. We have not been told what this scale will be but I presume we will learn that when the clause is before us.

There are several other points I should like to draw to the attention of the minister before we proceed. I feel it is true, as has been stated, that the newspapers are certainly getting a subsidy. However, it is a subsidy that is passed on to the consumer. In my area the people are going to have a substantial increase in the cost of their daily newspaper because it is delivered by mail. I believe this is one of the few areas in British Columbia where over a quarter of the total circulation of this newspaper goes through the post office. An extremely heavy burden by way of postal charges will be borne by this newspaper. I refer to the Nelson Daily News. I am certainly fed up with having the people who live in the 62 rural communities in that area called upon to pay a 25 per cent increase in the cost of their reading material.

As I indicated yesterday, there is no doubt in my mind about what is going to happen. Many of them will be forced to drop their subscriptions. As we heard last night, we are subsidizing two United States magazines to the tune of $1.5 million, $800,000 for one and $700,000 for the other. I have no hesitation in saying that if anyone deserves a real subsidy it is the people who have pioneered and live Mr. Harding: Just prior to the recess, Mr. in the rural areas. I have no hesitation in

I should like to ask a few questions regarding the effect of these new postal regulations on the postal workers involved. I am speaking of the men and women who belong to the postal unions and do the distributing and sorting of the mail. I presume that the Postmaster General and his staff have done a great deal of research on this problem. I cannot visualize anyone coming into this house, with all the facts and figures on the circulation of mail, who has not done a great deal of work on how these measures will affect the workers involved.

It appears to me that we cannot have a sharp reduction in mail service without some lay-offs. If one day's delivery is eliminated, as is going to be done in the urban areas, it would seem that some postal workers will have to be discharged from the service. I may be wrong. I should like to ask the Postmaster General to advise this house what the cutback will be, if any, in the total number of postal employees throughout the country. In plain words, are there going to be any postal employees discharged and, if so how many?

I should like to ask the Postmaster General how many man-days will be saved by eliminating the sixth day of delivery service in urban areas? I presume he has this information too. What will be the average saving by the Post Office Department in this regard? May I also ask the Postmaster General what specific measures he has in mind whereby employees of the department will, in five days, do six days' work? Obviously they cannot do in five days the work they have been doing in six days. If staff is to be reduced the seriousness of the problem will be aggravated. What has the minister in mind to maintain services at their present level?

• (2:40 p.m.)

[Mr. Harding.]

Will workers be forced to speed up their work or will the department hire extra staff to take care of the increased work load? Also, has the minister talked with representatives of the unions about this matter? What is their attitude to the contemplated change in employment conditions?

Yesterday a question was directed to the Postmaster General in regard to bi-weekly newspapers. I did not hear his answer. Looking at the report of yesterday's proceedings I gather that newspapers published twice a week are to lose most of the concessions which were available to weekly papers. It seems to me that in this regard newspapers in the category I have mentioned have been placed in the same category as daily newspapers in that they have lost free mailing privileges, something the dailies did not enjoy but which the smaller weekly newspapers did.

Small, weekly newspapers will be seriously hurt as a result of the increases the minister has announced. Without doubt other questions will be asked. I should appreciate hearing some answers from the Postmaster General to the questions I have asked this afternoon.

Mr. Kierans: Perhaps I might reply to some of the questions which have just been raised. The hon, member asked if we consulted with the officials of the unions. May I remind him that last night I read a telegram from the president of the postal carriers union, Mr. Houle, in which he said he felt happy about the bill. He wished us all speed and congratulated me for it. I might say that that is also the position of Roger Decarie who is the leader of the other union in the Post Office Department. Both men have been consulted and informed about the bill, and they are extremely happy that we are working toward the concept of balancing the budget and charging for the service rendered to the people of Canada.

It was announced some time ago that by working five days a week we expected to save $13 million. We have never contemplated laying anyone off, and neither I nor my officers want to cut back to a five day contract any six day contracts at the expense of our rural mail carriers. Normally, when a worker is asked to work for 40 hours a week instead of 45 hours he takes home the same pay. In any event, we expect to save over $13 million.

The hon, member for Hillsborough and the last speaker asked how it is possible to cut back 1,499 jobs and still not lay anyone off. May I remind hon. members that when you have a staff of 48,000 there is considerable attrition owing to retirement, job changes and so on. Among 32,000 public service employees the attrition rate is about 2,000 employees per year. Also, the jobs of many letter carriers will be redundant. We have instituted a policy of holding down the expansion of positions. We already expand at the rate of 1,100 openings per year and it is hoped to fill jobs which become open with those whose positions are declared redundant. None of this comes into effect, of course, until February 1, so that we have considerable time in which to plan. Taking into consideration normal attrition and the expansion of certain job categories, we feel that full and efficient use will be made of the people affected by this change.

Semi-weekly and tri-weekly newspapers are considered, for our purposes here, as daily newspapers. They have never had prezoning privileges, and in that sense nothing is being taken away from them.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on behalf of some who have hardly been mentioned so far, the residents of the north. They live in extreme isolation, keeping in touch with the outside world mainly by newspaper. They have little access to radio or television and often cannot be reached by road. The amenities we in southern Canada take for granted are non-existent for these people. I am speaking particularly of the residents of northern Alberta. Their main link with civilization is by way of a newspaper.

The new rates announced with respect to daily newspapers will mean that the cost of these newspapers will be increased. In some instances newspapers will more than double in price. For example, newspapers which sell yearly for $15 will now cost $35 on a subscription basis. I am referring to one newspaper in particular.

Mr. Kierans: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is he thinking of the Edmonton Journal?

Mr. Yewchuk: Yes. Many who live in our isolated northern areas live almost on the poverty line and cannot afford to have the cost of their newspaper doubled. Is it fair to penalize such people, when one considers that newspapers are their main link with civilization?

It is true that many weekly newspapers are published in the north, and many of these will not be affected by the increased rates. But such newspapers do not carry the daily news and daily happenings in the world at large. I submit that special consideration ought to be given to those living in isloated areas.

I submit that periodicals and weekly publications such as religious magazines also ought to be considered. Generally speaking they are non-profit publications. Increasing their postage rates will have an adverse effect. After all, the dissemination of religious news is good for the country and for its inhabitants. An increase in second class mail rates will certainly have an adverse effect on those publications. They are non-profit making. Their publishers also desire the widest possible distribution in order to reach as many people as possible. Some of those who are receiving such publications at the present time may not be willing to increase their payments. This is another case which I believe should receive special consideration. To sum up, I make a plea for special consideration for those living in the north and for those who are receiving religious publications.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, my main reason for speaking on this bill is to protest not only against the proposed increase in the postal rates but against the policy of the department in closing down a large number of rural post offices, particularly in the prairie provinces.

I say "departmental policy" deliberately. I refrained from calling it the minister's policy because I believe the minister is a hostage of his own department and officials. He is a captive of his bureaucrats and he has been sold a bill of goods by them which he has swallowed hook, line and sinker. He is now trying to sell the same bill of goods to the Canadian public. Actually this bill of goods is a red herring to cover the excessive spending of the government over the past several years. The minister has been conned into using his department as a vehicle for replenishing the federal treasury in lieu of a direct tax by the Minister of Finance. In other words, it is being used as a vehicle for the imposition of a hidden tax on the public of Canada.

I was surprised last night to hear some of the remarks made by the Postmaster General. I do not have time to refer to all of them. In my view the most astonishing remark he made is that reported on page 2003 of Hansard where we find the minister saying:

It is my belief that the post office should charge those people for whom it renders service... These are charges to the people who are using the services. They are not like taxes which are imposed and where an individual has no alternative but to pay them.

I would say that an individual has no choice but to pay the tax which the minister is imposing. If the policy advocated by the minister had been followed over the years, I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether the west would ever have been developed. Remote areas have always enjoyed postal service. For the minister to say that everyone who uses the service must pay for it implies discrimination. I believe there has been a change in government policy as announced by the Postmaster General. It has a familiar ring. Not loo long ago the Minister of National Revenue who is also, I believe, in charge of our national parks, made a statement along exactly the same lines. He intends to increase the charges to Canadians who use the national parks and he said at that time that the people who use the parks should pay for them. How in Heaven's name would our parks ever have been developed if this policy had been adopted by the hon. gentleman's predecessors in this house? I say we are being asked to approve a hidden tax, and the Postmaster General is using this legislation to make the Minister of Finance look good.

I am sure that had the Postmaster General been in this house prior to the last election he would agree with me that spokesmen for the government did not use the same argument in connection with the medicare bill which was being put through. I think it is ridiculous for the Post Office Department to say now that those who use the service should pay for it. If that is right, then why not let the people who use the C.B.C. pay for it? The principle could be followed right down to the old age pensioners. I represent a large area of western Canada where people have been paying for the C.B.C. ever since the service was started to the tune of $20 a year. Yet they are not able to get television service even though it is possible to provide it there. Using the same argument, the people who use the services of the R.C.M.P. might be expected to pay for them. To me, it is a ridiculous argument.

Again, as reported on page 2016 the minister had this to say:

But try and show that some of the figures or information presented to the house are wrong.

I hope in a few moments to show the minister that some of the information provided to this house by his officials is wrong. I have written proof of this. The hon, gentleman went on to say:

Try to do so with the help of the tremendous resources which you have behind you and which you have been using to create a considerable delay over the passage of a bill which the people themselves recognize as being timely and appropriate.

The minister was addressing members of the opposition. In other words, he was implying that we have powerful resources behind us, and I assume he meant that the daily press is trying to help us. Very few of the daily newspapers support the party to which I belong. If the minister will recall the last election he will agree that the daily press supported the party to which he belongs. For my part, if I were sure that the charges which the minister is imposing would be absorbed by the daily press I would say: Let them stew in their own juice; they deserve to do so for supporting this government.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

I suggest too that the rural people of Canada do not agree with the minister. They do not recognize these postal increases as being fair and appropriate. In fact, I should like to read to the minister an article which appeared in one of the daily newspapers which he implied were supporting us, By no stretch of the imagination could the Winnipeg Free Press be thought of as supporting the Conservative party. This very interesting article appeared in the issue of October 21. It is headed "Mr. Kierans' Statistics" and I think the minister should hear it all. It reads:

• (3:00 p.m.)

Postmaster General Kierans has been attempting to justify his proposed increases in second class mail rates by statistics which purport to show that this operation of the post office has been heavily subsidized and those who have been using it have been getting the service for much less than it costs to provide it.

Like any statistics, those of Mr. Kierans are open to quesion and interpretation. For example, the post office must carry first class mail and must provide facilities for handling it. The increased personnel and equipment needed to handle second class mail must, by comparison, be relatively slight. From second class mail the post office receives revenue. If this mail were discontinued, the post office would not save much in operating costs and certainly would lose the revenue it now derives from second class mail.

Everyone to his own statistics; Mr. Kierans' could probably be used to show that far from being subsidized, second class mail is paying its own way.

This is one of the reasons that the opposition wanted this bill to go to a committee.

But if the Postmaster General wishes to insist that there is a subsidy, then it is not a subsidy to newspaper publishers. It is a subsidy for the benefit of readers of newspapers and journals who live in remote parts of Canada. These are the people that a subsidy, if there is one, benefits. They are the ones who will be hurt by increases in mail rates.

The article goes on to give a comparison of the increase in the United States postal rates with the proposed postal increases in Canada. The increase in the United States is about 13 per cent. In Canada the increase varies between 100 per cent and 275 per cent. The minister had better start reading his daily newspapers before he makes another statement that the public recognizes this bill as one which should not be delayed.

The minister stated, as recorded on page 2015 of Hansard:

Although this debate has been drawn out over the last four days, a number of points have emerged of which the Canadian people were not previously aware. One of them is that there have been all sorts of hidden grants made to all sorts of bodies to meet increased costs.

How gullible does he think the Canadian people are? He is trying to convince them Now they say it is 30. I presume the departthat the additional revenue he seeks to raise will be paid by the publishers. Such is not the case. Many of these articles have clearly shown that it is the subscriber who will be the ultimate payer of the increase. As I said before, it is another hidden tax and it is also contributing to inflation.

The policy of the department to close rural post offices under the criteria enunciated by it over the past several years is, I submit, a penny wise and pound foolish policy. It is a poor argument. The minister has been sold a bill of goods and has swallowed it hook, line and sinker. To prove my point I shall refer to two pieces of correspondence I received from his department, one almost a year ago to the day, dated October 16, 1967, and the second one dated October 15, 1968. I may add that these are just two pieces of correspondence out of possibly 30 or 40 that I have received in the same vein. I wish to refer to three statements in the most recent piece of correspondence. The first is:

Because of changing conditions throughout the country, revenue post offices in many of our smaller communities are no longer required.

One year ago the correspondence I received

I should perhaps first explain that early this year, this department initiated a program to close smaller post offices throughout the country that had outlived their usefulness.

I would like to know how these officials are so all-wise that they know when these post offices have outlived their usefulness, and how they know that these offices in smaller communities are no longer required. Such a statement does not apply to the area I represent. Post offices are required there and have been required for the last 60 years. The situation in ranching country has not changed very much.

I draw attention to another statement contained in the letter that I received this month:

-one of the basic requirements now governing the establishment of post offices is that there should be a minimum of 30 families.

Let me compare that with the policy the minister has swallowed, the policy enunciated by his department one year ago. In 1967 his department said:

Our efforts in this regard have been concentrated mainly on offices where the number of householders using the office on a full time basis is below 20-

One year ago they said the criterion was 20. ment has closed all post offices across the country that had less than 20 subscribers but is now jumping the number by 10. Possibly next year it will be increased by 10 again. Eventually it will dispense with rural post offices.

The 1967 letter also said:

It is not our intention to deprive the patrons concerned of an effective postal service but rather to institute, where possible, a better service than presently in operation or at least one which is equal in all aspects.

That was pretty hard to argue against a year ago. Let us see what they say now:

The economic situation is therefore such that we cannot justify retaining this office.

They say nothing whatever about service to the people. I should like to give an example of the closing of rural post offices, and I told the minister that I will prove to him that members of this house have received wrong information from his department. This is in regard to the closing of two post offices in one particular area at the same time. It is ranching country. The particular letter reads in part as follows:

It is an unfortunate fact but this office like many others throughout the country has gradually decreased in usefulness and has now reached the stage where it has outlived the purpose for which it was originally established ... In addition, there are no stores or other business places at Battle Creek and since the residents of the area are travelling regularly to Merryflat in order to do their shopping and conduct other business, they can at the same time conveniently attend to their postal requirements.

I would like to describe at length the fight I had on this matter and the advice that the then postmaster general got from his departmental officials. Hon. members will have noticed that I used the names Battle Creek and Merryflat. The officials said they were going to close the Battle Creek post office because people there had to go to Merryflat to do their shopping and conduct other business. It did not take me very long to point out that Merryflat, where the officials suggested the residents should go for their mail, was an ordinary ranch house. Anyone who gave the minister such information should be fired because he is being paid with Canadian funds and has given the minister information.

I could read another article from the Winnipeg Free Press, which supports the minister's party. I do not think it is necessary to do so, but the minister was very annoyed that one of our members suggested the other night that he was giving false facts to the house. I do not think the statement made by the hon. member on this side was intentional, and I do not think the officials of the minister's department are little tin gods. They can make mistakes the same as anyone else, and the place to find out is in a committee. So said the Winnipeg Free Press in an article published on October 20. It said that inasmuch as the government's proposed increases on second class mail do not take effect until 1969, there would appear to be plenty of time for study of this proposal by a parliamentary committee. Why not? Why all the rush?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I should like to point out to the hon. member and the members of the committee that the subject of referring the bill to a committee was settled by a vote of the house. I must ask the hon. member, therefore, to restrict his remarks to clause 1.

Mr. McIntosh: All right, Mr. Chairman, but I can still wonder. In respect of the closing of rural post offices I can only say that this shows a lack of understanding on the part of the officials of the department concerning rural needs. The formula which states that there now must be 30 families while a year ago it was 20 families does not take into consideration the needs of the people. I see that the previous postmaster general is giving advice to the present Postmaster General. The present Postmaster General will need more advice than that if he wishes the people to swallow what he intends to do.

I say that the present minister is a captive of his officials and a hostage of his department. The need for postal services in our rural areas is as great today as it is in the urban centres and possibly greater at the present time under the circumstances. The preceding speaker, my friend from northern Alberta, gave some indication of why it is essential that people in the rural areas receive their daily newspapers. Those who live on ranches are isolated. I believe that the officials have been very shortsighted in advancing this policy. On the prairies the people who reside in urban centres—we call them distribution centres but perhaps in the east they are called cities—are there mainly to service the rural areas or those engaged in agriculture. The Postmaster General by his actions is taking away this service.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

The present action of the department in closing rural post offices curtails this service and makes it more difficult and more costly for the agriculturalists to operate. When the officials of the department use the revenue factor as their reason for closing rural post offices they fail to take into account the value of the products produced by these ranch and farm operators who undoubtedly contribute more to the federal treasury through taxation and other means than do a like number of urban dwellers in eastern Canada.

To carry the department's economic argument to the extreme, I would ask why this department bothers to service any of the rural areas of Canada where the cost factor per capita, according to the reasoning of the officials, is much greater than it is for servicing urban areas. The cost factor for servicing the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories on a per capita basis is much greater than it is for servicing metropolitan Montreal or Toronto. Again using the department's economic argument I ask, why service these two areas?

I say that the Post Office Department is not a revenue producing department. Rather it is a service department and should retain that function. I suggest it was never intended to be a revenue making department but rather a service department for the people of Canada. I suggest further that if this department is intended to be a profit making department the opening up of our western provinces and the north will be curtailed.

I suggest that the first consideration of the department should be the service it gives to the people of the country and not the amount of profit or revenue it can obtain for the federal treasury. The people of Canada want this service and have always paid for the service through direct or indirect means. As I said before, if there is excessive spending in other areas by this extravagant government, the Post Office Department should not be used as an instrument to raise additional funds to offset the uncontrolled spending in other areas. I say that the minister should have second thoughts before he imposes this indirect tax upon the people of Canada because if he does I am sure that in the future he and his party will be sorry.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I am persuaded by the approving look of hon. gentlemen on the other side to make a very short contribution to this debate. I hope it will be the last one so far as we are concerned. I always wanted to know how to get approval from the other side and now I know. Because of the initiative of this party which provided the extra hour last night it is our hope that this bill will be passed through its stages today. I hope the government might take this idea into consideration when the situation is ripe.

May I say first of all that the hon. member for Athabasca said some of the things I had intended to say. He now represents part of the constituency I had the honour to represent for many years. There is a problem in that section of the country. The people there do not receive television programs although they do receive some radio programs. They depend on the written word. How can we get to the people of the north information about the misdeeds this government continues to commit unless newspapers are made available all through the north country?

I was very struck by what the minister said about balancing the budget. The Minister of Finance is desperately reaching for that idol. The Prime Minister said that he stands for a balanced budget. I gather this is the hope of the minister in respect of this department. He nods his head.

I should like to quote some authorities whom I will identify in a little while. This is a statement with which the minister probably will take issue:

Among other things, it is inconceivable that politicians should continue to dread budgetary deficits and that, even when resorting to them, they should continue to pay homage to the sacred cow of a balanced budget.

The minister obviously is paying homage to the sacred cow. His colleagues are doing the same thing. The statement I have quoted appeared in the Montreal Star of Thursday, May 14, 1964, under the heading "Manifesto For The Nation." This manifesto was drawn up by a group of French Canadian intellectuals, only one of whom was over 35 years of age. Two of these intellectuals were Mr. Marc Lalonde and Mr. Pierre-Elliott Trudeau. Perhaps the minister has a right to change his mind and now believes that a balanced budget is a sacred cow which should be worshipped.

I should like to direct attention to a little exchange which took place between the minister and me last night. I raise this not only for its importance in this particular issue but because of its importance in the future. As reported at page 2016 of Hansard I said the following:

If we had considered this in committee we would have been finished by now.

The minister replied:

But nothing would have come out in the committee that we do not already know. All of you have been quoting from every brief that has been made.

Then I rejoined:

We would have been able to test the accuracy of your statements.

I think the minister appeared to take a little exception to that. I shall not infringe on your ruling, Mr. Chairman. The chairman knows the scrupulous and desperate anxiety with which members of this party defer to his rulings on all occasions while some opposite hang around the fringe and perimeter of illegality.

I should like to put this forward as a conjecture. The house has made a ruling. We are bound by the rules and there can be no question of challenging them. But this is a situation which may recur in the future. I utter these words with this in mind. I say, purely on an objective basis, that if this measure had gone to a committee it would have required only a week of committee hearings in a form that I suggest would have been similar to an examination for discovery. This would have provided an opportunity to test the accuracy of the statements which have been made.

I have every respect for the integrity of the Postmaster General and I have the greatest respect for the integrity and knowledge of the officials of his department. It is a fact, however, that the government was elected as a result of a combination of circumstances. It was elected because of the changes in the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, because of a certain amount of political deceit in respect of budgets, and two or three other intangible factors that I will not go into at this time. However, it happens that the government represents 45 per cent of the people and will be here for another four years. That is a fact of life. We are going to be here for four years as well, and if we are to do the things that should be done we must get along and co-operate. We do not have to accept everything the government asks for and the government does not have to accept everything we suggest. If good legislation were proposed, even by the devil himself, and I think he sits in different forms on the other side, we would approve it and expedite its passage. We would see that it was passed as quickly as possible. However, we must know the facts.

public accounts committee some years ago when Mr. Wilson was the deputy postmaster general. He appeared before that committee and gave an excellent exposition of the facts. At that time we dealt with this particular subject. We questioned him for several hours during which he went into statistics dealing with first, second, third and other classes of mail. I think he convinced the members of that committee of those facts, and this was reflected in the report which was filed and became part of the records of this house. Mr. Wilson in effect said that from time immemorial the policy of the Post Office Department regarding first, second, third and other types of mail had been such and such. He dealt with the question of subsidies, which the minister has now refined. He calls it a subsidy and we accept that, but we refer to it as indirect taxation.

In any event, when a custom is changed it has been traditional to grant an opportunity to be heard to those people who will be affected. In other words, they should have their day in court to make their views known. The minister has said he has received briefs. We have all received briefs and representations. I like to challenge a man who has made a statement by asking him to give the basis on which he has made the statement.

I read the Glassco commission report regarding the post office. That commission gave high marks to the Post Office Department in respect of its method of selecting statistics in relation to costing. That commission had some doubts about the entire situation and these doubts were expressed in that report. The report suggested that this whole question should have been more carefully studied and that it might have been possible to obtain more precise information. If I remember correctly the report suggested this in respect of second class mail.

The hon, member for Calgary North related this matter to railway costing. In parts of North America railway experts are deeply involved in costing techniques. They are trying to decide how to allocate costs as between main and branch lines and different types of services. This is precisely the same problem which faces the Post Office Department and which it is, within the limits of its capacity, attempting to solve. This department is trying to allocate costs in relation to first, second,

I had the honour to be the chairman of the side, of asking these officials about the techniques they use.

Are the techniques used by the Post Office Department of a similar nature to those used in other parts of the world or are they better? These are the things we would like to find out. It might well be that we would come away from the committee hearings quite satisfied with the methods used by the department in working out these costing statistics. That being the case we would then be faced only with a simple issue, namely, is the government right in changing these longstanding practices and introducing other practices?

Let me say as convincingly as I can that if this procedure had been followed this debate would have been concluded a week ago, the farm bills would have been passed, and we would now be deeply engaged in the budget debate. There are areas where it is essential that we conduct an inquisition in the form of a question and answer session. Certain things cannot be accomplished in any other way.

It is my suggestion that if the principle I have attempted to outline were adopted on both sides of the house the business of the government would be expedited. Let me leave the matter at that point. I think everything else has been said which could usefully be said during this debate. I did want to put those remarks on the record before the conclusion of this debate.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, I think there is one other speaker. Following him I should like to conclude this debate.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I should like to ask a question for the purpose of clarification. I understood the Postmaster General to say that bi-weekly and tri-weekly newspapers have always been classed as dailies. I just phoned Mr. Irwin McIntosh, the president of the Canadian Weekly Newspaper Association, and this is not his understanding. He thought the decision was made on the basis of content rather than the number of times each week a newspaper was published. I should like the minister to clear up this point. Are the daily newspapers facing a 400 per cent increase in rates?

Mr. Kierans: What I said in connection with bi-weeklies and tri-weeklies is that they have never had pre-zoning privileges and therefore these privileges were not being and third class mail. I think it has done a taken away. For purposes of definition we are pretty good job, but I would like the oppor- in a sense classing newspapers which are tunity, as would many other members on this published more than once a week as daily newspapers. This fact can be found in another clause of the bill.

The general newspaper class, as hon. members will realize, is now paying about 30 per cent of the cost and will, after the passage of this measure, be paying 80 per cent. This is an increase of about $166\frac{2}{3}$ per cent or 170 per cent, but not 400 per cent.

Some remarks were made in connection with the north, particularly in relation to the Edmonton Journal. Let me point out that the total circulation of the Edmonton Journal is 134,000. In the year 1967-68 10,000 copies daily were delivered by mail. The actual cost to us was $204,763, of which we recovered $89,000.

Let me point out something else in respect of the Edmonton Journal. It receives one service that is being maintained rather than discontinued. As the hon, member knows, the Post Office Department has been flying these copies to the north at no extra charge. This is a service we will continue in the interests of the people of the north. We are not cutting down this service in any way at all. I have here a study with respect to the rural routes. Every time we close a post office or a sub post office, we do it only when we can provide a better service, and that is a rural route, which is a post office on wheels. In other words, we may close down-I am thinking of an example in the eastern provinces—three out of four small post offices and we add 2.8 miles to a rural route, where everybody gets service right to his door. The people are extremely happy about this. Why are we doing this? I have here the figures that have come to us as a result of this study: 2,430 of these post offices have an annual revenue of less than $445 a year.

I am not the one who makes the judgment, Mr. Chairman. It is the people who use a post office of that nature who make the judgment. All they buy in a year is $445 worth of stamps. The actual cost of the post office may vary anywhere from $1,100 to $1,200 or $3,000. But when we do close it down, we provide an alternative service, a better service, and in nine cases out of ten the people are extremely satisfied.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, would the minister allow a question at this time?

Mr. Kierans: No; I think you have had your say.

Mr. McIntosh: The minister has just made a statement which I do not think is correct. He said that wherever they close down a post office—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. McIntosh: All right; I will ask the question later.

The Chairman: The Postmaster General has the right to answer a question if he wishes to do so, but if he wants to continue he should be allowed to do so.

Mr. Kierans: If the hon. member wants to ask a question, fair enough.

Mr. McIntosh: That is what I said in the first place. The Postmaster General just made a statement in which he said it is the policy of his department, whenever they close down a post office in rural Canada—I believe he said eastern Canada, but I assume he meant all of Canada, or he wanted the Canadian public to believe that he meant all of Canada—they would provide a rural route. That is not correct. The minister should ask his officials about this, and he would find that what he said is not correct. In the southern part of my constituency, the southwestern part of my constituency, the southwestern corner of Saskatchewan, where there are many ranchers, the Postmaster General does not give them rural route delivery service.

Mr. Kierans: Wherever this is feasible.

Mr. McIntosh: It is feasible there.

Mr. Kierans: Let me answer the question. We had in Alberta a post office, and the 15 families of the area sent me a letter. They are along the United States border and they wanted this service maintained. When I examined the costs of this post office I found they were in excess of $1,200 or $1,300. The actual use those 15 families had made of that post office was exactly $82 in an entire year.

Mr. McIntosh: You have the wrong principle.

Mr. Kierans: The wrong province, but it is all part of Canada.

Mr. McIntosh: The wrong principle, I said.

Mr. Kierans: This was decided, yes. Hon. members keep referring to this question and saying that if this measure had gone before a committee—your predecessor, Mr. Chairman, said this was out of order—the matter would have been settled a week ago. It was settled yesterday afternoon, but it was also settled for me this morning when I heard the right hon. member for Prince Albert say that he wanted something taken out of committee. The right hon. member was referring to the committee dealing with the Biafra situation. He did not want it in the committee; he wanted it discussed here in this house because this is the supreme parliament. I am in complete accord with the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, does the minister not realize that any committee report must come back to this house and must be decided upon by this supreme parliament?

Mr. Olson: Tell your colleagues so they will know, too.

Mr. Yewchuk: I wanted to clarify a point, Mr. Chairman. In the comments I made to the Postmaster General and hon. members of the house I was not complaining that the service had been cut down; I was complaining that when the new rates go into effect a newspaper will cost a resident of the north more than twice as much as it does now. My question was whether the Postmaster General would give special consideration to this group of people.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, I think the question is very debatable. It is: Who is being subsidized here: Is it the person who buys a subscription to a newspaper, or is it the advertiser? The Edmonton charges the people who live in Edmonton $31.20 a year for buying that newspaper at the newsstand. They sell 135,000 out of their 145,000 copies on this basis. They charge people living outside their immediate delivery area—that is the other 10,353 subscribersnot $31.20 but $15. Why have they done this? They have done it because they have not had to pay the 2 per cent to the news vendor or the two cents per copy to the post office. They have paid us one third of a cent and one quarter of a cent. But our people, through rain, hail, sleet, snow and all weather conditions, deliver this newspaper on 312 or 315 days of the year. These people want to be paid, and all we are asking is the minimum 2 cents a copy, which is exactly what the Edmonton Journal gives to the people who sell the paper on a commission basis.

Our people refuse to subsidize this kind of activity any further, and I do not think the people of Canada expect this subsidy to be borne by the 28,000 or 32,000 people who work among the 48,000 member family of the post office. I do not think the people of Canada expect this subsidy to be borne by those groups. If they wanted to pass on the whole increase, they would have to put up the subscription by $17.39. This would bring it up to $32.39. But people living throughout the north will get the newspaper delivered to them by aeroplane. There is a little additional cost involved in that.

I am not telling the proprietors of the Edmonton Journal how to run their business, but I imagine their decision will be something like this, "We will pass part of it on to the subscribers; maybe $5, maybe $10." It is still less than the normal price. Then they will say, "We will increase our advertising rates, because we want to keep these people on our circulation list." That is the whole basis of the exercise, so they can charge the kind of advertising rates to cover their circulation, but it will not all be passed on.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister a very brief question. I might say, by way of explanation, that he stated that a number of rural post offices had been closed because the residents of the area were not using them and the revenue was very small. I know for a fact that many small post offices that have been closed in my area, particularly summer post offices, were used very extensively by the public; but the public brought the postage stamps with them from the city, from Toronto, Hamilton, or whatever city they came from, they received their mail at these post offices and mailed their letters from them, but in fact the record of the use of the post offices is not there. This is one of the complaints I have had in connection with the method of determining whether a post office is sufficiently used. I would like to ask the Postmaster General whether a check of incoming mail is made before a small post office is closed, in order to determine whether the post office is actually being used.

Mr. Kierans: In answer to the last question, yes, this is done. We make special arrangements by keeping post offices open during the summer months. With regard to the rest of the question, these people can always mail their letters. There are perfect facilities anyway, even if the post office or local revenue office is closed for receiving and mailing. Our way of judging this is by the number of people who use it to buy stamps, to send parcels or do whatever may be required.

[Mr. Kierans.]

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Aiken: What happens if they do not buy stamps?

Mr. Kierans: They do not use the post office.

Mr. Aiken: Certainly they use the post office to drop letters into the mail box.

Mr. Kierans: The box will stay there.

Mr. Aiken: I do not accept that argument. What I am trying to say, in a reasonable way, is that many of the summer post offices are used for mailing and receiving letters. People do not necessarily buy their stamps because sometimes they bring them with them. It is unfair to judge the use of a post office by the number of stamps bought and the number of money orders made. The minister gave his answer and I will not pursue this any further, but I want to point out to him that in several of the cases brought to my attention, in which there has been a reversal of the policy and a post office was closed, it has been found, on looking into the matter further, that in fact the post office had been used, but that this did not show up in the sale of stamps.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few more comments. I appreciate the Postmaster General's conjecture that the Journal would probably raise its rates by only $5, and I recognize this is a possibility. I also want to point out that the service is provided in many isolated areas in my constituency by aeroplane, which comes in every two weeks or once a month. I can imagine what it would be like to get one month's issue of the Journal, and the price which the Journal has quoted me is $35 a year, rather than $20. People in the north would then be paying more for old papers than people living in large urban areas would pay for daily newspapers.

Mr. McIntosh: I asked the minister a question to which I did not receive an answer. My inquiry was as to the criteria upon which the minister or his departmental officials determine that a post office has outlived its usefulness, and the purpose for which it was originally established.

Mr. Kierans: By the use that the local patrons make of that particular unit.

Mr. McIntosh: I wonder if the minister has also taken into consideration, in his economic argument or that of his officials, the amount of revenue derived from the taxation of the people employed in ranching and farming in those areas, or does he only consider the direct revenue derived from the post office? If this is so, how do we serve the people on the ranches and the farms in the remote rural areas in western Canada? I say again that this is a penny wise and pound foolish policy which will bring disaster to the Canadian people.

Mr. Skoberg: I will deal specifically with clause 1 concerning the filling of vacancies in the post offices and the letting of contracts. Everyone realizes that the public generally believes that the Post Office Department is filled with people who have obtained their positions through political patronage. I believe that recently there may have been some change in that practice and I should like to know whether or not the Postmaster General would give us his views regarding some of the changes in the policies of his department.

Mr. Kierans: This is all under review, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Skoberg: Am I correct in understanding from the minister's remark that there is still political patronage in the Post Office Department?

An hon. Member: You know better than that.

Mr. Korchinski: I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman. Now that the minister indicated that consideration will be given with regard to the setting up of post offices, and as to the amount of revenue which they may bring in, and now that he has the former postmaster general right beside him, I wonder if he could look over some of the records to see how many post offices have been established in areas where the revenue is small, as compared with the number that have much larger revenues. What was the consideration in setting up the former. I wish he would do that in view of the fact that he said he would scrutinize the costs very closely. I can refer him to several cases with which I am familiar, which have come up last year, and regarding which I had considerable correspondence with the former postmaster general and officials of other departments. I asked for the reason for constructing post offices in areas which bring small revenue and where expenses are greater.

There does not seem to be any fairness in the administration. Without opening a whole can of worms I should like to point out to the minister that if he is going to scrutinize the cost he should look into correspondence with the former postmaster general.

Mr. Kierans: I will, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Orlikow: I should like to direct one question to the minister. He has told us that the reduction from the six day to the five day service will not mean a great reduction in staff because in the period of a year, with the normal attrition and with the large staff the department has-I think the minister spoke of 48,000 employees—this could be handled. I do not have the figures with me, although I am sure we can get them by the time we deal with the minister's estimates, but I am given to understand that in some of the larger post offices, such as in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver, to mention just a few, there has been consistently and, I can say, regularly a very large number of temporary employees who are not included in the complement of 48,000. Can the minister tell us what is the average number of extra employees in the course of the year, and how many of them who have been working almost continuously will be laid off under the proposed legislation?

Mr. Kierans: We have a great number of continuous casual employees in peak periods, such as around Christmas time. I think we will continue to need them for the special services which they can render us at particular times. There is nothing more that I can say about this.

Mr. Orlikow: Is the minister saying that he cannot tell us how many of them there are? Let us forget about the Christmas period. Are there 3,000, 5,000 or 8,000 who work more or less regularly, and will these people be laid off as a result of the reduction in service?

Mr. Kierans: I have said no. The casual people whom we hire around Christmas time, and at other times, are just part-time or seasonal employees and they do not figure in the numbers which the hon. member for Winnipeg North and I are discussing. As I tried to explain, no one is going to be laid off, because we would normally expand by 1,100 people by next year and we will probably lose about 2,000 next year. So it is easy to move the 1,499 employees into the positions that have become open with the planning which we do in the department.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister does not get the point I am making. Today is October 25: How [Mr. Korchinski.]

many casual employees are working in the Post Office Department in Canada on this day? Is it 1,000, 2,000 or 5,000?

Mr. Kierans: As the hon. member realizes, not even the senior officers in the department could give him an exact number because it varies from day to day, depending on the work load. But I would think there are about 2,000 people normally involved in the kind of position which we call casual.

Mr. Skoberg: One of the questions which among others I put to the Postmaster General the other day concerned the decentralization of post office facilities. I wonder whether or not the Postmaster General at this time believes in the complete decentralization of all post office facilities for the sorting of mail. Does he consider that decentralization is in the interest of the country as a whole, and what is his view regarding congestion in this area?

Mr. Kierans: This is probably one of the major problems being presently considered by the task forces, one of which is inside the department and is headed by the former deputy minister whose long experience of 40 years gives him a practical knowledge of the problems, and the other being an outside task force. They will consider how far we should go in decentralizing the services.

Clause agreed to. Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3-Rates on letters.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Macquarrie: Of course, Mr. Chairman, this is one of the crunch items in the bill. I doubt if after all the points we have made from this side, without too much avail but with great sincerity, there are many items in this long bill on which we will take a controversial stand. What has irked people about this measure, apart from the differentiation in respect of newspapers, has been this question of increased cost to patrons of the postal service at the very time when there was a decrease in service. This has been the basis of our opposition.

We have never adopted the point of view that there should be no increase in rates. In the light of the dismal figures that have been presented to us, this would be a preposterous attitude to take. We are not satisfied, however, with the combination of the dimunition of service and the rather significant increase in rates.

Now we have made our case. We have said that the inadequacy of the committee of the whole for the examination of this measure was clear. A combination of parties in this house representing 53.1 per cent of the voters of Canada has indicated the belief that this very important matter, in the light of the great protests, should have been examined by a committee. This has been denied us. We have to accept the massive vote of those who represent 45.2 per cent of the voters of Canada. We recognize we will have difficulty in dealing in this particular forum with this measure in the way we think it should be dealt with.

I have noticed in recent weeks, since this postal matter has come to the fore, not only a great deal of correspondence but a type of representation which has disturbed me, and which should impress the Postmaster General and concern him. There are suggestions from many parts of the country that the type of service being rendered by the Canadian post office is questionable. The other day I had a letter from a Boston relative—every maritimer has a relative in Boston—that he had received a postcard mailed from the Cabot trail when he was on a summer visit. This was not too bad: But it was the summer of 1966 that he had been on this visit.

Similarly, some extremely important and attractive material was sent out from a certain political headquarters under second class mail on October 11. It arrived in Vancouver on the 19th, 20th, 21st and 22nd. One thousand of these same attractive and important items were sent under first class mail on October 11 as well, but did not reach Vancouver until the 21st. I would not call that "all up" at all; I would say that was "all down". I hear from the people in various post offices that there is a little anxiety. Then, of course, although the minister was quite unperturbed about it, I have heard from many places that the flood of mail arriving in order to beat the minister's deadline has in fact caused delays.

Unfortunately we have reached the stage, unless someone invites protraction of the debate, where there is no need for protracted discussion of this bill. If an invitation is issued implicitly, then we will be prepared to accept it. I should like to say I am sorry that the government house leader found it necessary last night to use the expression "filibuster". This is not the kind of thing that makes for good parliamentary operations. We have had this matter before us for five days. On one of those days we had only one an hour and twenty minutes to discuss it. On another, we had a little over two hours.

This is a very important matter which affects every single Canadian. Some of these people do not know today how much they are going to have to pay. They are working under forced draft. We have a deadline here which, as I said before, is presumptuous. After certain changes were announced, we have had further changes. I do not know that the minister has assured us what kind of service we are going to get from this semi-Saturday business. I represent a constituency that is three quarters urban and one quarter rural. About one quarter of my people will get mail on Saturday, while the other three quarters will not. A great many of these people live in suburban areas but work in the city. They live in a sort of rural area, so I suppose some people will get mail on Saturday while others will not get mail until Monday. At the same time, their place of interest and their place of work is, in fact, an urban area.

We have been upset by the fact that all arguments from the press, and from the learned journals, have been turned aside. We have to face the fact sadly that, while we believe we represent in this instance a majority of the people, because of the realities of the parliamentary system our point of view is not going to prevail. I should like to say, very simply and very briefly, that in the light of the decreased service, the imposition of increased rates at this time is not a good thing. I should like to say that the minister's approach to this problem is highly improper. His lack of sensitivity and concern for the feelings of the people in many areas, as well as his imperturbability, will create a great many problems for the Post Office Department in the months ahead. We have warned him, we have told him of public reaction. It is incumbent upon him to listen or not to listen. If we are not as loguacious in our arguments as we could be, even if we are a minority in this house, this is not to be construed for one moment as any weakening of our opposition to this most unpopular, this unnecessary measure.

I should like to emphasize, however, that when you recover a relatively small proportion of your costs, a normal increase in rates is obviously not going to keep pace with a normal increase in your costs which would be, in some cases, as much as ten times as high. Therefore, having taken account of these various changes I will ask a colleague of mine to move an amendment with respect to paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of subclause (2) on page 4 of the bill.

Mr. McIlraith: In accordance with the remarks of the Postmaster General I desire to move that we strike out subparagraphs (a), (b) and (c) of subclause (2) on page 4 of the bill. Accordingly I move:

That Bill C-116, An Act to amend the Post Office Act, be amended by striking out lines 24 to 34 on page 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

- (a) on a daily Canadian newspaper,
- (i) for the portion thereof not devoted to advertising, four cents a pound during the period commencing April 1, 1969 and ending September 30, 1969, four and one-half cents a pound during the period commencing October 1, 1969 and ending March 31, 1970, and five cents a pound thereafter;
- (ii) for the portion thereof devoted to advertising, nine cents a pound during the period commencing April 1, 1969 and ending September 30, 1969, twelve cents a pound during the period commencing October 1, 1969 and ending March 31, 1970, and fifteen cents a pound thereafter;
- (b) on a weekly Canadian newspaper, four cents a pound during the period commencing April 1, 1969 and ending September 30, 1969, four and one-half cents a pound during the period commencing October 1, 1969 and ending March 31, 1970 and five cents a pound thereafter; and
- (c) on all other Canadian newspapers and Canadian periodicals, four cents a pound during the period commencing April 1, 1969 and ending September 30, 1969, four and one-half cents a pound during the period commencing October 1, 1969 and ending March 31, 1970 and five cents a pound thereafter.

The hon, member for Gaspé seconds the motion.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, does this mean that the increase in expenses has been spread over one year?

Mr. Kierans: The bill does not come into effect until February 1. The newspapers knew about the changes. From the beginning of this month they will have 18 months in which to act. I can tell hon. members that some newspapers have written to their subscribers advising them not to take out subscriptions second class mail rates or the subsidy to the for more than three years until everything

Mr. Woolliams: In view of the minister's statement last evening about farm newspapers, and particularly in view of his answer to do with the advisability of bringing this matter before a standing committee for further investigation, I think it is proper for me to read the following extract from an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press:

Publishers of the Free Press Weekly, Canada's leading farm weekly, denied entirely the state-ment of Postmaster General Kierans that his department is heavily subsidizing their publication.

This has to do with farm papers.

Mr. Kierans' statement is 'Quite irresponsible and utterly misleading'-

That is not my statement. It appears in the Winnipeg Free Press, according to the publishers.

Mr. Kierans does not explain how he arrives at this conclusion-

That is why we are asking that this matter be referred to a committee so that it can be looked into.

—or what arithmetic he employs to substantiate such a ridiculous charge. To say that his department is out of pocket by a million and a half dollars each year by delivering the weekly paper through the government monopoly on mail service is quite inaccurate. If the post office is out of pocket on this account it is nothing like the figure Mr. Kierans claims.

Last year the Free Press Weekly paid the post office $112,000 for postage. If the paper ceased publication as the Family Herald and many other farm papers have been forced to do in recent years, it could only result in a further loss of revenue to the post office.

Mr. Kierans in arriving at his conclusion does not explain what he charges up against these expenses.

We don't know. Nobody knows.

Similarly according to figures released by Mr. Kierans' department he tries to argue that it costs his department more to deliver a farm paper in rural areas than it does to distribute national magazines in city areas, where large organizations of sub post offices and extensive letter carrier staffs are involved.

Kierans is well aware but failed to state that all remaining farm papers in Canada including the Free Press Weekly operated at a loss last year.

This serious situation in Canada is largely due to the heavy loss of advertising revenue to the broadcast industry in recent years,-

The minister has not taken this aspect into consideration in this bill.

—which this government year after year sub-sidizes to the tune of well over a hundred million dollars.

When the government talks of the need to hold down prices and wages, it is hard to understand how they can justify such an enormous increase of 300% in their charges and which will have to be borne by farmers all across Canada.

Would the minister mind commenting on the position taken by one of the leading weekly farm newspapers of western Canada? I am sure the other western weekly farm newspapers will go along with the position that has just been outlined. Also, would the minister mind commenting about the Western Producer, a newspaper which has been financed by the Saskatchewan wheat pool for a number of years. How has the minister arrived at his figures? The newspaper people want to know that. They want to come before a committee and hear the facts.

Mr. Kierans: Several weeks ago one of the editors of one of the weeklies came down to see me and I explained in great detail that we did not consider second class mail a marginal operation, as the Free Press Weekly and other newspapers seem to suggest.

The newspapers say that we, the post office, are calling at private homes anyway, and delivering first class mail, so why not deliver the weekly or daily newspaper at the same time. It is not an extra charge, since the postman is going to the home anyway.

That is not the way we made our cost analysis. We have marginal operations in the post office but they do not come under first class, second class, third class or fourth class mail. Marginal operations come under selling postal money orders or running a postal savings bank. These operations are marginal to the business of transporting mail.

The Free Press Weekly and other associated newspapers in the Free Press Weekly publications chain may suggest that it costs us nothing to carry a paper, but I suggest to the hon. member that he take a look inside a postal carrier's bag. The carrier may have 100 first class letters in the corner of the bag, the rest of the bag being taken up with Free Press Weekly publications.

Actually, I think P.S. Ross and Partners, and others who pursued the subject, were too kind to the publishers who used the second class mails. Consider a newspaper like the Toronto Star. We send it to Vancouver for one third of 1 cent, and the Toronto Star may weigh as much as 2 pounds. At the same time it costs 5 cents to send a first class letter the same distance. When hon members suggest these facts have no bearing on our overhead I say that the entire sorting process inside the post office must be considered. For one thing, there is a difference in the way that letters and newspapers must be handled. A great volume of letters can be handled in a relatively confined space; but newspapers you must spread out horizontally. This takes up a great deal of room, and many more people are required to deal with them and to carry them.

In my view the figures which have been quoted are not unjust. They confirm what has been found in studies. I said in the house last night that the Free Press Weekly paid us $112,000 in postage last year. I say again that it cost the post office $1,623,000 to deliver 22 million copies of the Free Press Weekly through heat, snow, slush, rain and what have you. For that we were paid $112,000 from the Free Press Weekly.

Mr. Woolliams: Did the minister work out his figures on a pro rata weight basis?

Mr. Kierans: No, it was on a per item basis. We considered a first class letter and a second class newspaper as an item.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: In other words, it was not on a weight basis. Then the argument about a letter taking an inch of the bag and a newspaper taking 20 inches does not hold water.

Mr. Kierans: What I wanted to say is that a post office bag with a thousand letters in it is worth $60 to me. A post office bag with 100 newspapers in it would be worth 60 cents.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister explain this to me: the government is subsidizing the C.B.C. to the extent of about $145 million a year. In this connection we have heard all the arguments about safeguarding Canadian culture. If it is proper in the one case to provide this bonus, why is there such reluctance to do so in the case of the weekly and daily newspapers? Can the minister put forward any logical argument, because the position he is now taking savours of discrimination?

Mr. Kierans: The hon. member may have provided an excellent argument for reducing the deficit of the C.B.C. but not one for maintaining the deficit of the Post Office Department, which is my responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Then I assume that when the estimates of the C.B.C. come forward the Postmaster General will stand up and say: I fought the cabinet in connection with these mate reduced, as a responsible minister of the Crown, I will resign.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I noticed on reading the minister's comments last night that he did not take too kindly to one of the points I made earlier in this debate. I want to say that I have not changed my position by one iota. The fact that a table is provided for our use is no proof of the truth of what is contained in that table. I maintain that, not only in connection with this department but in connection with other departments, we have a right to examine the criteria upon which estimates of revenue and cost are based. We have a right to question these things because, after all, as I have indicated, the burden is on the minister to prove, not on the opposition to disprove.

I want to hear why small newspapers outside the exempted class should have to carry the full weight of the increase in the cost of transporting them, especially when ordinarily do not have any important volume of carrier sales or street sales. Take the average newspaper in a city; only a relatively small proportion of its circulation is carried by the post office, and in future these papers can spread their increased postal costs over the whole of their operation.

Newspapers such as the church press are in a different position. They cannot cushion the effect of this proposed increase. The whole of their circulation is handled by the minister's department, and the effect of the increase will be subscription rates out of this world. I do not know what the minister's answer will be. If he tells us that the church press must absorb the total cost of the new rate in the same way as a daily newspaper in one of our major cities, a paper which carries hundreds of thousands of inches of lucrative advertising per month, I can only reply that this represents a great disparity in treatment.

Since we are faced with a time element I shall touch only briefly on one particular question I raised the other night having to do with the reduction of mail service in urban areas, and the effect which can be expected on certain people who seek to meet legal obligations. I refer for example to the immigration regulations, or to the white paper on anti-dumping and the draft bill dealing with that subject-and the minister was one of those who approved it.

If the minister would look at these measures he would see there are provisions by done by the fancy footwork which permitted [Mr. Woolliams.]

estimates, and if I do not get the C.B.C. esti- which the period allowed for appeal to parties interested runs from the date a decision is made. Now comes the question of communications-communication by mail. As the result of the minister's proposals, those who live in cities will lose three or four days as compared with those who live outside. I do not understand how the minister can discriminate in a way which affects legal rights-and these are legal rights. At an appropriate time before the passage of this bill I should like to have the minister's answer on this point.

> Mr. Kierans: My department has already been in consultation with other departments, for example with the Department of National Health and Welfare, to make sure that city dwellers are not harmed in any way by, for instance, the late arrival of welfare cheques which might arrive on a Saturday, when there would be no city delivery. We hope they can be mailed a day or two earlier to make sure they arrive on a Wednesday, Thursday or Friday. I am grateful to the hon. member for having brought this aspect to my attention. My officials have already taken note of the point he has made. We shall certainly contact the department of immigration to ascertain just what are the difficulties outlined by the hon. gentleman, and what we can do to offset them.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister will need to get in touch with virtually every department, because there are any number of regulations containing provisions similar to that which I have described, provisions which are "made in Ottawa" with no consideration for the rest of the country. This is a consequence of the bureaucratic mind at work.

Mr. Kierans: We shall do something about it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Let us mitigate the effect and not add to it by the type of action the minister proposes to take.

Mr. Kierans: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish to comment briefly on a question I raised yesterday, one which I believe to be important—and I do not intend to blame this minister for mistakes committed by some of his predecessors and colleagues, in days before he came to the house. I refer in particular to the tremendous injustice to the Canadian publishing industry which was

Time and Reader's Digest to be classified as if Maclean's climbed to the point where it had Canadian magazines. I suppose it is impossible to retrieve directly, what we let go. At the same time, after we approved the increase in rates which the minister is proposing, we shall be subsidizing the distribution of Reader's Digest to the extent of $800,000 a year, and we will be subsidizing the distribution of Time magazine to the extent of $721,000 a year. As I pointed out to the minister yesterday, that is $1\frac{1}{2} million. precisely the amount the minister says he is not prepared to provide as a subsidy to the Sifton interests. I may say in parenthesis that I am not intervening on the side of Brigadier Malone, the publisher of the Winnipeg Free Press, to say the minister is wrong.

I recognize the difficulty that the minister is facing. He said, with some justification, that he cannot name certain magazines. You cannot increase the rates for Time and Reader's Digest without increasing the rates for all magazines, and if that were done many, if not most of the magazines with small circulation would go out of business. However, I notice that the minister and his department have been able to make regulations and rules distinguishing between groups of publications. There are daily newspapers which are distributed mainly by carrier boys, with some distribution by mail, and there are weekly newspapers which have less than 10,000 circulation, and so on. There are different rates for these.

I wish to make a suggestion to the minister. I am not going to move it in the form of an amendment because my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who is much more expert than I on what is permitted under the rules, has told me that if I tried to move this as a private member, the amendment would be out of order. However, I suggest that the minister change the regulations to provide that his proposed rates apply as scheduled, except in the case of weekly magazines having a circulation of more than 200,000 and monthly magazines having a circulation of more than 800,000. I suggest that these should pay twice the scale of the new rates.

If the minister were to accept this suggestion, then the only magazines which would pay the increased rates would be those which are making substantial amounts of money. I do not intend to name them, although I do not think this would be wrong. For example, a circulation of more than 800,000 it would have to pay the double rate, I suggest. By this method the minister could save the taxpayers half of the $$1\frac{1}{2}$ million which we will use to subsidize what I consider to be American publications. What does the minister think about this suggestion?

Mr. Kierans: I think it is a very ingenious suggestion, but happily we do not have to reach any decision today.

Mr. Macquarrie: Before the vote is called on the amendment I wish to say I am impressed by the last remark of the minister. This part of the measure is to go into effect on April 1 next. It therefore seems strange that we are faced with an amendment, the effect of which we cannot sort out, and time is not afforded for careful consideration of it in consultation with the people involved. I do not know what these changes will do to Canadian newspapers both small and large.

I welcome the amendment as an improvement; but I am reminded of the fable of the farmer who would not cut off his dog's tail: He did it a bit at a time because he was a gentle man. This is an amelioration, but I would like to refer it to the people involved, the publishers of newspapers, who will have to decide what this will mean as an increase to their subscribers. I underscore that point again because that is where it will all end. It will not end on the desks of the very well off publishers, whose names have been bandied around today. It will end with the people who read newspapers.

As I say, the amendment is an improvement, but this whole clause is an elaborate one. It requires far more consideration than we are able to give it here, and I am wondering if it has been given all the consideration that the minister should give it. He stands steadfastly by his statistics, but I notice an item in his white paper in the footnote to statement No. 11, which says:

It is not possible to anticipate accurately the real impact of the proposed legislation on second class mail volumes and the profitability of the service.

Of course it is not possible. Now we have some changes that we must consider. I wonder if the minister will tell us whether he has any other amendments to move. Has he reached a different decision with respect to the learned journals, with respect to the Queen's Quarterly, the Dalhousie Review, and the other publications described in clause 11(1)(o)?

changes and proposing no further amendments. With respect to some of the learned other people are interested, we will simply be prepared, and indeed be proud and pleased to pay an additional small amount for the particular journals in which we are interested. I thank my hon, friend for his kind remarks saying that the amendment is an improvement. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. Harding: How often does the international postal agreement come up for review?

Mr. Kierans: Every five years.

Mr. Harding: I notice that while the United States sends over 69 million pieces of mail, of various periodicals to this country, Canada exports just over 17 million. There is a deficit of some 52 million pieces, which means a loss to Canada of $$3\frac{1}{2}$ million. I think this is a field which the department should review. It seems to me that we are subsidizing many American periodicals which are in direct competition with Canadian publications. Again I ask, when do these international postal agreements come up for review?

Mr. Kierans: They come up every five years. The Post Office Department, representing the government of Canada, has made strenuous representations to the executive of the International Postal Union that some relief be given, particularly in the area of second class mail where there is an unfavourable imbalance. The next meeting at which this report will be presented will be in the fall of 1969 in Tokyo, and we hope we can make our views prevail. We hope to try to recover this $3½ million.

I might say that the total flow is about $6 million, and we recover about $2½ million by offering special rates to attract these publications to mail in Toronto rather than in Chicago. Our only recourse if we wanted to add terminal charges, say if we wanted to impose a postage rate of X number of cents on Life magazine, would be to get out of the 137 nation International Postal Union, and of course this would be a disaster for all of us.

o (4:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: The hon, member for Annapolis Valley.

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Earlier in this debate I spoke on second readlistened to all the arguments which have been

Mr. Kierans: We are making no other presented, pro and con, and I have listened to the explanations of the minister during the several days we have spent on this bill. I do journals in which my hon. friend, myself and not intend to speak on the generalities which have been discussed this afternoon. However I wish to mention a point which to me does not seem to have been considered. It might be thought of as being rather parochial, because it has to do with the province of Nova Scotia and the position of the Halifax Herald in Nova Scotia. Before I reach this specific item I should like to congratulate the minister—to use his own words of a few days ago-for either his sober second thoughts or for his second sober thoughts in respect of the Saturday postal service in rural areas, and the matter of strike pay which is now looked after more equitably by the inspectors in the field.

> The change in respect of the rural mail delivery on Saturday is certainly an improvement and meets many of the objections from this side of the house and across the country. This afternoon another area about which the minister has acted positively, after suffering a barrage of criticism, is with regard to the immediate impact of these substantial or drastic changes concerning second class mail. After giving the minister all this honey and frosting I hope he will be in a receptive frame of mind when I come to my particular points.

> While we have been discussing this bill there is something about which I have been a little perturbed. Allegations have been made about the pressure lobby, the newspaper publishers association, which is not a great friend of those of us on this side of the house. However, I understand that the newspaper publishers association intends to meet on Monday to discuss this bill. I understand further that because of their constitution, it was impossible for them to meet as a body to consider this bill and to make representations as a body.

The minister may very well say that he has heard a great many things and has had many audiences with various newspaper publishers of Canada, individually. Undoubtedly he has spoken to many of them in his office. I believe the other day he met with a group of maritime publishers and spent some time with them. I am sure also that he has spent varying periods of time with other individuals. I believe the publishers association of Canada, even though we do not agree with it too often, is a body which should be listened ing and have not participated since. I have to. As I understand it, because of their constitution the members of this association are meeting on Monday to consider this bill and to discuss their official representation to the minister.

further. Neither shall I rehash the arguments in respect of the constructive suggestion that this bill be referred to a committee.

Even though the newspaper publishers association did not hold a brief for us in the last election, I understand this association has been hamstrung because of its constitution and has been unable to meet as a body until Monday, even though individual members have met with the minister. In view of this and in view of what the hon. member for Hillsborough said earlier concerning the staggering impact of clause 4, perhaps the minister would consider standing this clause. It may be that after their meeting the members of the newspaper publishers association may come back and sing hosannahs to the minister for having preserved the Saturday delivery and for having staggered the impact of the drastic increases. There is not a member of this house on this side who really knows what their reaction will be. This is strictly gratuitous advice, but I believe that if we do not get this bill through before five o'clock we should stand clause 4 and then we could go through the other clauses quickly. This would give the association all the necessary time to look at the impact of these rates and make their official presentation to the minister. That, in general, is all I wish to say about clause 4. I have something more particular which I should like to say with regard to the Halifax Herald.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, I met with the president and general manager of the Canadian newspaper publishers association one evening and spent a few hours with them. As the hon. member suggests, they explained that they were acting unofficially for their association because of a restrictive clause in their regulations. They wanted me to meet on Monday with as many directors as were interested. The following Monday for another hour and a half I met with 13 of the directors from coast to coast, from Halifax to Vancouver. They reiterated that they were not making a formal presentation but said "Here it is." I think they have presented their views. I do not expect them to sing hosannahs to me on Monday. I should like to ask for the adoption of this clause.

Mr. Nowlan: May I thank the minister for that extension of the information I have. I appreciate that perhaps his views would not change, even if he met with these people officially. If he is satisfied that he has their full views, I will not press the matter any further. Neither shall I rehash the arguments in respect of the constructive suggestion that this bill be referred to a committee. Because of the fact that these rates will not take effect until April 1, I will not repeat the arguments which already have been made.

I should like to refer now to the subject which really moved me to rise in the first place. I wish to be parochial and refer to a provincial area, the area of Nova Scotia. Since we are on this clause I believe this is the proper time to be parochial. I wonder whether any consideration has been given by the minister and his officials to another rate being struck for newspapers that in effect deliver their own publications. It is only sorted, carried and distributed by the postmaster and the postman in the post office of distribution. I do not know whether this situation applies in many other parts of Canada, other than the maritimes, and particularly Nova Scotia.

There are 33,000 mail subscribers to the Halifax Herald. If we believe the classified ads the total figure is over 40,000. During the recent campaign there was a good deal of talk about economic disparity. As the hon. member for Hillsborough mentioned these rate increases will perhaps be partly absorbed by the newspapers but will at least be partly passed on to the subscribers. If these rates should be passed along completely to the subscribers, then the economic disparity in an area already cut off may be worse. This applies certainly to the Atlantic area and to the Halifax Herald which delivers its paper from Halifax to Sydney, and then the Sydney post office perhaps distributes them to the rural mail contractors.

I should like to know what justification there is for charging the same rate to newspaper publishers that deliver their own mail to the point of distribution, and those newspaper publishers which drop the newspapers off at the Ottawa post office, for example, for distribution in Montreal. Perhaps this is true of the Toronto Globe and Mail which comes from Toronto to Ottawa. I am wondering if this situation has been considered and whether the establishment of a special rate would help to alleviate the burden on newspapers in Nova Scotia which depend on mail subscriptions, but which, because of the small size of the province, have set up their own trucking services to deliver the mail from Halifax to various points of distribution where the local postman delivers it to the door.

I am not standing here today to hold up this measure. Without making any criticism about the just society, or any other remark of a provocative nature, I should like to ask the minister what his response has been to these logical complaints and positions which have been stated? What has been the response?

Mr. Kierans: This has been considered. Every newspaper in Canada delivers its newspapers to us under the terms and conditions we have worked out. This has never at any time been charged against the cost we actually assess against the newspaper company. I may say in respect of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, a subscription now costs $14. A subscription delivered by mail costs $32. Our cost of $9.50 is passed on to the subscriber. This amounts to $23.50 which is well below the $32. I appreciate the hon. member's point, but this is a practice which prevails across the country.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I did not understand the minister's reply. Did I understand him to say that a newspaper I dropped into a mailbox in Halifax which is carried by the Royal Mail, or the Postmaster General's department—perhaps I should use that term so as not to be provocative and upset any tender hearts across the way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: Don't get me upset, because time is running out. Is the same price charged in respect of newspapers dropped in the mail at Halifax for delivery to Sydney and in respect of newspapers which are delivered by the publisher to one distribution point? I cannot understand why this should be so, in view of the fact that in one case the mail is transferred by department vehicles and employees and is sorted and delivered, just as is the case in respect of first class mail? Is that same price charged in respect of newspapers delivered from, say, Halifax to Sydney by the publisher for distribution by the Post Office Department to the rural areas?

Mr. Kierans: We do not work out the cost of delivering newspapers on the basis of one newspaper dropped in a mail box. We work out a cost of delivering newspapers across the country on the basis of 6.81 cents and we are asking by this bill to increase this amount by 2 cents.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister is a reasonable and a logical man. Will he not agree with me that my proposition is sound? It is cheaper [Mr. Nowlan.]

for the post office department to receive the Halifax Herald in Sydney for distribution in that area than to receive it in Halifax and have to deliver it to Sydney for distribution? This is the situation in Nova Scotia because of the size of the province. Many newspaper publishers deliver these newspapers to a main distribution point.

Mr. Kierans: I agree with the point made by the hon. member.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps I will not receive much response to this question, because of the lateness of the hour, but does the Postmaster General not think it would be a good idea to strike a special rate for newspapers when there is a bulk delivery to the point of distribution?

Mr. Kierans: The majority of newspaper companies across Canada do this and they have been given full credit for the costs they have incurred.

Mr. Nowlan: Do I understand that the minister would not entertain an amendment to strike a special rate to cover this situation?

Mr. Kierans: No, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Baldwin: No.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Baldwin: No, we want a standing vote.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Baldwin: No, we are not-

The Chairman: Order, please. Does the hon. member for Peace River have something to say?

Mr. Baldwin: We are not disposed to accepting clause 4 or the amendment. I gather we are still on the amendment, are we not?

An hon. Member: It was passed.

The Chairman: I did not detect that the hon, member had said anything from his seat. Is there some objection to the amendment?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Amendment (Mr. McIlraith) agreed to: Yeas, 53; nays, 12.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Clause 4 as amended agreed to: Yeas, 47; nays, 24.

• (4:50 p.m.)

On clause 5—Invitations to tender where amount over $1,000.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I asked the other day whether the Post Office Department terminated rail mail contracts, or whether the railways themselves terminated their own contracts and served notice that they wanted to get out of the mail handling business. I think the question should be answered at this time because it falls under the clause with which we are dealing.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, the answer is no. Nobody wants to get out of the mail handling business; everybody wants to get into it.

Mr. Skoberg: Then I would respectfully suggest that this is where the over-all problem of the unity of Canada comes into the question. Hon. members know that if the postal department decides it is going to cancel a mail rail contract, immediately following this the rail line which is affected applies for the abandonment of that particular service. I respectfully suggest to the Postmaster General that he give serious consideration to this factor, because it is the start of a chain of events and carries on down the line.

Mr. Kierans: I will, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 12—Coming into force.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, clause 12 determines the coming into force dates of certain clauses of this bill. It is noted that the increases for newspapers and periodicals and mail of that kind do not come into effect until April 1, 1969, but that the minister would have the new 6 cent first class rate come into effect on November 1, 1968.

As the minister knows, some of us have delivery of the mail on Saturday to residentried to persuade him not to go to this 6 tial areas. Even so, there are bound to be cent rate. It has even been suggested from many cases of privation.

this corner that he might have settled for a 5 cent rate across the board. The decision, of course, has been made by the action of the committee in adopting clause 3, to which I was opposed. I wonder whether the minister would relent at least to the point of not having the increase for ordinary people, in respect of first class letters, come into effect until the same day as the increases for mail of other classes, namely April 1, April Fool's Day, 1969.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, I would dearly love to have those rates that are coming into effect on April 1 come into effect on November 1. I would prefer to do it the other way around. However, this is impossible. In the clauses of the bill which have been passed thus far there is a wholesale regrouping of the second class mail structure. A number of publications which at the present time enjoy statutory privileges will no longer enjoy them; others move into third class, and so on. This entire restructuring of the second class mail will take my officers several months to sort out, and of course a great deal of information will have to be given to the publishing associations and people affected. I regret very much that I cannot accept the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, believing that the minister still has a heart somewhere inside him, I wonder if I can try another request.

An hon. Member: It is not a heart; it is a water-pump.

Mr. Baldwin: He is awaiting a heart transplant.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They are doing that in Montreal these days. Nowhere in this bill can we reach a parliamentary decision on the question of the suspension of the Saturday delivery service. The minister does that under his authority as Postmaster General, with all the rights and privileges pertaining to that authority. There has been a fair amount of discussion of the matter, however, and the minister has relented so far as rural areas are concerned. He knows that some of us still feel he might reconsider the position of people in urban residential areas. I recognize that he has taken certain steps to try to make sure there will not be inconvenience caused by nondelivery of the mail on Saturday to residen-

It may be possible for the government to make sure that pension cheques go out early in the week and are not held in the post office over the week end, but there will be all sorts of other cheques from private sources, and so on, which are bound to be received on Monday instead of Friday, and in many cases this will result in privation. The date the Postmaster General has set for the inauguration of the five-day delivery service is February 1. There does not seem to be any way in which we can decide this question by vote. It seems strange to some people that one man can decide this question, and not parliament as a whole. But, hoping the minister is still in a frame of mind to consider various aspects of this question, will he reconsider between now and February 1 the question of continuing the six day delivery service in residential, urban areas?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, this question does not strictly come under this bill, of course. I will discuss it further with my hon. friend opposite. I believe that on balanceand I will certainly try to convince him of this-the demand for this service is not commensurate with the amount of savings that can be made by restricting delivery to five days a week in urban areas and the alternative uses to which we could put those savings. In other words, we feel the savings of about $13 million from this service would be much more profitably used, whether this will be in the field of the arts or an additional initiative in the fields of health or education; but all these choices would then be open to the government and the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, if the minister is interested in ways in which some of this money could be used, may I remind him that when I stand, as I do quite frequently, and ask that something be done for retired civil servants, many of these retired civil servants are retired postal employees. Perhaps he will as a cabinet member become interested in this subject and try to get his fellow ministers to deal with this important issue. We hear all the time about what can be done with money that we save, but we have a very difficult job getting any of that money used for some of these purposes.

The minister is counting upon the support of the postal workers in connection with the whole new régime he is establishing. I would remind him that some of the most disappointed people in this country are retired postal [Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

workers, and I ask him to become interested in this ancillary but very important question.

Mr. Kierans: I certainly will, Mr. Chairman, and I look forward to an opportunity next week or the week after to have lunch with my hon. friend, at which time he can fill me in and tell me exactly the arguments I will need to support the cause he has just put forward.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I express my thanks to the Postmaster General for the invitation. I hope I do not sound ungracious when I say that I must still call "on division" on this clause because I do not like what it does.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans).

We are now studying clause 12 which stipulates that clause 3 on postage rates for letters will come into force on November 1 next.

We know that quite often when there is insufficient postage, the addressee of the letter has to pay a fee, and when the letter is refused, the addressor of the letter is fined. I do not believe this occurs very often, but with the new postage rates, it may occur more often.

I should therefore like to ask the minister whether he intends to provide for an adjustment period, perhaps two weeks or a month, to avoid misunderstandings and inconveniences in cases where a five-cent stamp may be used inadvertently—we have done it for so long—and thus avoid penalties for a certain length of time after the act goes into force. What does the hon. minister intend to do in this regard—

Mr. Kierans: It is stipulated that the act will come into force on November 1.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I ask for an indication from the house leader of the program for next week?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is our intention to call first on Monday the third reading of the bill which we have just passed amending the Post Office Act, and then call for the completion of the committee stage of the farm credit bill and the third reading of that bill, followed by the consideration of the prairie grain advance payments bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PERMIT PEACEFUL PICKETING

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-3, to amend the Criminal Code (modernization of law of picketing).

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is proposed as an amendment to subsection (2) of section 366 of the Criminal Code of Canada. The purpose of the bill is to permit the peaceful picketing by any number of people for the purpose not only of communicating information but also of persuading other employees and people having business dealings with a struck company to support the cause of picketers, particularly in the case of a lawful

At present section 366 of the Criminal Code prohibits intimidation by means of violence, threats, disorderly conduct and by watching or besetting.

Subsection (2) of section 366 provides an exception in applying the concepts of watching or besetting. It asserts that a person does not watch or beset within the meaning of section 366 if he "attends at or near or ap- present, both in liberal and non-liberal socieproaches a dwelling house or place, for the ties, have always recognized this truth. The purpose only of obtaining or communicating information".

As the law now reads there are two major flaws in it. The first is that a judge may reasonably decide that in the case of an otherwise legally conducted strike any number of pickets exceeding one is a form of intimidation. This is so because subsection (2) begins with the words "A person who attends at or near". My proposed amendment would remove the possibility of such a decision. By replacing the singular "person" with the plural "persons" no ambiguity on the question of numbers permitted in a strike is possible.

The second flaw in subsection (2) as it now reads is that it asserts that one does not watch or beset if one's purpose is only to obtain or communicate information. The legal force of this reading is that if men on strike, in addition to imparting information, seek actively to persuade others to follow their example, they can be charged with watching or besetting.

My proposed revision of subsection (2) would make it a legitimate purpose of picketing to persuade or to attempt to persuade, without violence or attempts at violence, others to do or not to do something.

I would like to speak briefly on the justification for the proposed changes. In suggesting that the law make clear the right of any number of men to join a picket line, I do so primarily because a number of people acting jointly for a common cause do affect the thinking of others. To see one man demonstrating may arouse little interest and even less concern. But to see 50, 100, 1,000 or several thousand will, in the thinking of most men, provoke a much more serious response. When confronted with a large gathering, all but the most hardened are moved to ask themselves: Why do these men assemble? What is their purpose? Is their cause a just one? Shall I support them? Should I join them?

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that my point here is not that numbers alone provide a reason for concluding that the purpose of any particular assembly of men or any specific picket line is a just one, but rather that such gatherings do suggest that many men think they are acting for a good and just purpose and that others, especially those directly affected, are much more likely to give serious thought to the question at issue.

Peaceful demonstrators in the past and at early Christian martyrs, seventeenth century reformers, nineteenth century democrats and twentieth century workers—each of these groups sought to evoke a positive moral response among others by peacefully gathering in large numbers and thus provoking consciousness of a serious problem, a just cause, or a way of life. I submit that the law of Canada should recognize this important human fact and clearly establish its legal propriety.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The second major effect of my proposed amendment can be defended even more briefly than the first. By giving to strikers the right to persuade others to act in a legal manner, we will simply be doing what ought to have been done long ago. One of the defining characteristics of a free society is the right to influence others' actions by means of reasonable arguments. Those who seek to persuade men of the rightness of their cause should not be restricted to the right to communicate information; they should also have the right to argue for its moral propriety. Facts alone are insufficient grounds for moral choice. Facts must be linked by supporting reasons. A free society, therefore, must make it a legal right for workers as well as others to persuade as many as they can that their cause merits support. To deny this right to these workers is to deny them a fundamental freedom. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge support of my bill.

Mr. Charles Turner (London East): As a new member rising for the first time in this house, Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate you sincerely upon your appointment to this office. I certainly agree with other hon. members that Your Honour is particularly well qualified for such a position. I should like also to congratulate Mr. Deputy Speaker on his appointment, as well as upon the fine manner in which he is carrying out his duties. I am very pleased also to extend to the deputy chairman of the committee of the whole my sincere congratulations.

The bill before the house today presents many problems. In my opinion, the effect of its passage would be to eliminate many of the serious problems trade unions face today. The right of workers to join a union has been spelled out in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and in various provincial labour acts. I should like to quote early Christian martyrs, seventeenth century section 3, part I of the Industrial Relations reformers, nineteenth century democrats and Disputes Investigation Act:

Every employee has the right to be a member of a trade union and to participate in the activities thereof.

The number of workers in private industry and government enterprise who belong to a trade union in this latter part of 1968 totals almost two million. Relationships between labour and management on the whole, in my opinion, are quite good. Certainly in some industries we have labour problems. There have been many reasons for these problems. There has been the introduction of technological change, which has been badly needed to increase efficiency and to place industry in a competitive position in world markets. There has been a desire on the part of employees for better working conditions. Perhaps worst of all, there has been virtually no valid communication between employees and employers. These problems did not develop overnight but have been accumulating over the years. They lead to long and costly strikes or at least threaten to lead to strikes. I suggest that management and the unions may find the government settling, once and for all, these day to day problems.

It is true there will always be areas of conflict. It is for this reason we have collective bargaining. However, there is no sense conducting bargaining in an atmosphere of hostility. Management and labour must learn to live together and to communicate. It is time that management and labour realized their responsibilities, or governments will have little alternative but to be more forceful in introducing the solutions to keep industry alive. It is true that on occasion there are strikes. It is true also that many people think there are too many strikes. If management and labour bargained in good faith we could eliminate strikes which, in turn, would eliminate picket lines. It has been said often that nobody wins a strike. What is the working man or woman supposed to do when companies force them into a strike position? Many companies work employees long hours of overtime before the strike date. The products made during this working period are taken and stored in other parts of the city, so that when the strike is called the company can still operate because it can still fill all its orders from this supply of goods.

The collective bargaining process is now about 70 years old. I am told that the process was invented in England some time before the turn of this century. The procedure is highly sophisticated, highly developed, and I might add works exceedingly well. However, there is room for improvement. In my 25 years of experience with the collective bargaining process, I have found that union members turn to the picket line only as a last resort, and after the majority of the members have voted in favour of strike action in a democratic manner by secret ballot. Usually by this time the companies and the unions have exhausted all ideas for a settlement and all legal channels have been explored by the parties to the disagreement.

I urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) to discuss with his colleagues, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), the possibility of amending section 366, part II, in order to provide that pickets will be allowed to be as numerous as the union desires, so long as they behave peacefully and within the law. There is no law in this land that prohibits peaceful demonstrations. The picket is there to protect his or her job. These people try to persuade others, whether they be employees, customers or clients of the employer, not to cross the picket line. In so doing, they hope to secure a settlement from their employer. All the picketer is requesting is his share of the economic pie, which he helped to create, so he can give his family a decent standard of living and an education.

In the riding of London East, Mr. Speaker, there are thousands of union members, many of whom I know personally. They are all good, responsible and peaceful citizens. They work hard and try to buy a home, educate their children, pay their bills and are always ready to stand up and be counted when any community project is undertaken. When their union contract expires, they look forward to management negotiating in good faith. through the process of collective bargaining, to reach a just settlement. They hit the picket lines only as a last resort, because they have no other choice. They expect the picket lines to be honoured; but when trucks try to run the picket lines, violence is caused.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Our society expects a man to marry, rent or buy a home, bring children into this world and clothe and educate them; he is also expected to buy all the things that are displayed in stores and supermarkets, buy a car, take a yearly vactation—even on a buy now and play later basis—contribute to the church and community efforts, as well as pay federal, provincial and municipal taxes. All this adds up to one thing, Mr. Speaker: money, or the weekly pay cheque.

The worker is expected to be able to pay his way in our society; but when his contract expires and his union negotiates in good faith for a just settlement, when he is not offered a raise in pay to take care of his expenses and the rising cost of living, he has no alternative but to go on strike and face days of walking back and forth on the picket line. This is not the only thing that faces the striker; he has to face falling behind in his payments on his home, his car, his furniture, and so on. And, if a strike lasts long enough, there is the possibility of losing his home, his car, his furniture, etc.

The working people of this country, Mr. Speaker, take great pride in being good Canadians, and we must not forget that unions and picket lines have helped immensely in the creation and building of this great nation, so that all Canadians may enjoy a better way of life. They spend hours on the picket lines, and the result of their walking eventually is a settlement which affects all the business people of the community in which they live.

As a member of two railroad brotherhoods that have been in existence since before this great Canadian nation was created, I maintain that we are constantly confronted with making decisions at picket lines. We resent having to be faced with investigations, discipline and threats of loss of pension because we will not cross picket lines.

If parliament were to make this change in the Criminal Code, it would be the first important step toward encouraging management and labour to bargain in good faith and create just settlements. Strikes are unfortunate, Mr. Speaker; each time one occurs, every one of us regrets it, including the strikers. But when strikes do occur the strikers should have the right to be given the opportunity to picket in a proper way. They should not be threatened by injunction orders that only help to create bitterness—a bitterness that has resulted in unfortunate arrests and prison sentences during the past few years.

If this law were to be changed, pickets would be limited to perhaps two or three at each gate, because this is all the unions would need. The trouble begins when the companies try to move goods or scabs in or out of the plants and word gets around; then we have mass picketing and consequent violence when the pickets move to protect their jobs. The police are called and this usually depletes the number of available policemen for other duties; so the police department has to call in policemen who are off duty or working other shifts. This all adds to the city tax bill, as the police have to be paid for working extra time.

During the post office strike in London there were never more than six or eight pickets on duty, working a three or four hour shift; consequently there was no trouble.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we must all remember that the workingman or woman of this nation pays over 60 per cent of the income tax received by governments. He has no loopholes to avoid taxes, because it is all taken from his cheque before he receives it. Workingmen and women of this nation buy the products of their labours, and pay the full retail price. They are quite willing to pay their way, but they must have some guarantee that they will receive their fair share of the economic pie, so that they can live and play with dignity in the new just society.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, the legal results of such an amendment seem to me, at first glance, to be very clear. At the present time, picketers are, I think, free to give information to other people, who are in turn free to decide whether their relations with the picketers could in any way affect their contractual and working relations with the employer.

The proposed amendment would give picketers the right to try to persuade persons who have signed a contract with an employer to violate their contractual obligations. I wonder whether there is not some way other than picketing to persuade our fellow-Canadians.

According to the act, picketing is used to communicate information, to receive or give information. That is where the provision of the act is obsolete because in this day and age it is possible to use many other means of information without having to meet in groups in the street. There is television, the telephone, the newspapers which can be received in every home in Canada every day, and many other means of communication.

Now, this is an attempt to include the right of persuasion which is a real right and I think that the workers should have that right. On the other hand, I wonder if striking workers who want to persuade their fellow-workers or some of their fellow-citizens could not, as is done in other circumstances in other fields, simply ask them to a public hall to inform them, influence them or even visit them at home if they agree.

In many cases, such a permission would be granted to them. I know very well that if workers in my area were going through that ordeal—and being on strike and having to picket to seek justice, in the case of a legal strike, is an ordeal—and asked me and friends of mine permission to meet me in my home, as an ordinary citizen, and explain their problems so that I can understand them, so that I can take sides with them, to help them defend their cause, I, as the majority of responsible citizens, would accept to receive in my office or in my private home those workers with problems to be settled.

In my opinion, the decision on the advisability of such an amendment would rest with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) rather than with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). The Minister of Labour and the Minister of Justice could get together as they have probably had occasion to in such cases, in order to update our legislation.

Furthermore, since this amendment could affect public order in general as well as the ownership and civil rights in the provinces, a change such as that proposed in this bill would require consultation with provincial representatives in order to determine the border-line between provincial and federal jurisdiction with regard to those ever so complex labour relation problems.

The legal implications of this bill could lead to further complications. The sponsor of the bill (Mr. Broadbent) and its supporters in general have often taken this opportunity in this house or elsewhere to express their viewpoint in this respect. Generally speaking, this problem is a matter for the provincial rather than the federal government.

However, in their opinion, the federal government could look after it by changing subsection 2 of section 366 of our Criminal Code. Thus, the matter of watching or besetting, which is allowed under this section, could be defined so that our courts could no longer limit the number of people involved in picketing and punish the picketers and the labour unions, if they attempted to get the support of others.

That is why the Minister of Labour has often been asked to discuss with the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) the possibility of amending subsection 2 of section 366. Then, when a strike is legal, there could be as many pickets as the workers choose or deem necessary, provided civil rights and public order are respected and demonstrations are peaceful. As it stands, the law provides only for the communication of information and, in this regard especially, it is archaic.

Not only should this article be changed—if I refer to the debates in this house—so that pickets can get or give information, but it should also clearly stipulate that the pickets have the right to persuade or take the means to persuade the employees or any other person to adopt or to refrain from adopting such and such an attitude, provided the means of persuasion conform with the law and the general good of society. Besides, it must be admitted that this is the purpose of picketing.

As someone said a while ago, strikes—how true—are always unfortunate. They upset the economy of the area in which they take place. They, at times, upset the economy of the whole country and, in addition, they create difficulties for the worker himself, through loss of income and other benefits.

It is obvious that we must constantly try to modernize our legislation, not to make things more difficult for those labour unions which are asking for justice, but to simplify the solution of conflicts between management and labour, in order that it may not be too prejudicial for our economy and that the lot of workers will increasingly be improved.

Finally, it is clear that, in a democracy such as ours, any citizen who wishes to indicate that he supports strikers should also be entitled to do some picketing.

Some time ago, the Ontario government established a royal commission of inquiry on labour relations. As most members know, the report of the royal commission, of which hon. Yvan Rand was chairman, dealt at length with picketing during strikes. This is how the members of the commission summarized their views on the subject at the end of the chapter on picketing.

Except in cases where otherwise provided, lawful picketing becomes a direct and important measure connected with a legal strike and necessary to support it; it should be limited to the plant, the workshop the head office or the headquarters of the strikers; it should never take place anywhere else. Any other kind of picketing should be forbidden.

The primary objective of this bill, as can be inferred from its subtitle, is the modernization of the law of picketing.

It is true that our labout legislation is derived from the English law, which goes 29180—131½ back a hundred years and more. It is obvious that such laws have to be updated quite often as the years go by.

Nevertheless, we all know that, on the whole, in federated countries such as ours, the principle of the distribution of powers between federal, provincial and local governments is respected.

In practice, jurisdictional problems are unavoidable. The United States and their capital cities cannot escape this rule, no more than Ottawa and the provinces.

The text of our constitution seems clear. Nevertheless, legislative power in the labour field has been subject to quite a number of disagreements between the Canadian parliament and the provinces.

I believe we can refer here to subsection 13 of section 92 of The British North America Act, which reads as follows:

Property and civil rights;

On the other hand, subsection 16 says:

Generally all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province.

Therefore, the power to legislate in the labour field comes under provincial jurisdiction.

• (5:40 p.m.)

It is obvious that the parliament of Canada can legislate on that matter when federal employees, industrial and commercial undertakings, shipping, the navy, railways, canals, telegraphs linking the provinces, air traffic and broadcasting are concerned.

Those undertakings come under the jurisdiction of the federal government according to section 91 of our constitution; that explains the adoption of our national labour code a few years ago. However, even if it is sometimes difficult to take into account the theory of the unoccupied field and that of the unexercised power, it is always good to think of entering into a dialogue with the provinces.

The first legislative measures passed in Canada were, as I said earlier, adopted from the British law for Canada. In the provisions of our Criminal Code regarding violence, threats and assault, section 366 defines illegal picketing and allows peaceful picketing following the many requests made by the Canadian Labour Congress. This section completes, so to speak, section 410 which recognizes the right to strike.

The background of sections 366 and 410 illustrate, in my opinion, the evolution in the federal government, political parties, management and our main labour unions, as well as their tendencies with regard to collective bargaining. Up to now, in my opinion their work has, at least in part, been successful and I think that the government continues to work in that direction, so that our legislation in this field will always be up to date and really modern

We all know about the specialized team or teams in labour relations which consider this problem regularly. In 1967, we received a preliminary or progress report by a specialized team coming under the office of the privy council. Those who considered the report—all the members have probably done so as well as our colleagues of the New Democratic party—find that it is already an important step, because it gives us all the elements of the problem in the field of labour relations.

We note also that in December 1967—and this makes us believe that it was carrying on its work, in advising the government on progress to be made in that field—the task force looked into all the aspects of the problem. Its members developed a serious program of research. They met the representatives of workers and employers, as well as senior officials of the government. They even studied foreign systems, to get inspiration from them and develop that best system existing in that field.

The whole results are presented in matters concerning labour relations and divergent economic and social objectives. As for the rights and responsibilities of the parties concerned, when the matter concerns legal structures—if one refers to page 19 of the report—we note that this task force looked very seriously into legal structures relating to labour relations in Canada.

In my opinion, under the present circumstances, it would be advisable to leave that problem to our government, to our Minister of Labour who is one of the most dynamic ministers devoted to their task that we have known up to now, in short, a minister who does not forget the workers and has shown his mettle. We could let the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Labour help the government to modernize our labour legislation.

In my opinion, our colleagues of the New Democratic party to which the mover belongs has a tendency to forget sometimes as I mentioned earlier that we are—

[Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): I regret to advise the hon, member that his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to talk for a few moments on this bill because I represent an area that has a mixed economy, an area where the preponderance of people are engaged in the agricultural industry.

I wish to point out that people in agriculture have never been able to strike whenever they felt an injustice was done to their industry. Considering present levels of income, and conditions generally that exist in the west, I think that today they would have every right to strike, picket, and withhold their products from the market. However, I have never been one to advocate that type of thing because I feel that when food is necessary it must be distributed. I think 99 per cent of the farmers subscribe to that approach.

However, farmers are sometimes placed at the mercy of some other segment of the economy. They must pay the price, regardless of whether they are able to defend themselves. Sometimes they lose their entire holdings. Sometimes they have to stand by and watch a lifetime's work go by the board, because they have to accept the decision of other bodies.

As I say, I represent a mixed economy. Some of my constituents work in mines and in lumber mills, and I can safely say that there are occasions when it is necessary for workers to strike and picket. Recently a strike was settled in my area following negotiations over a period of time. But sometimes negotiations break down. The public resents the fact that on occasion a great deal of pressure is placed on other segments of the economy that indirectly must pay the price of a settlement.

I also know that members of unions on strike have often expressed the opinion that they wished they did not have to strike. This is no revelation; the public generally is aware of it. I cite the example of the longshoremen's strike, where a handful of people tied up a whole economy, with the result that the country's balance of payments may be adversely affected. When such a situation occurs the government of the day is in a very awkward position because it cannot come out and definitely take the side of management, nor can it oppose the position taken by the workers. The government finds itself on the horns of a compulsory arbitration or something else, the dilemma.

Even today if you mention that strike to farmers in western Canada their blood boils. They are the people who will eventually have to pay the price for settling it, and the rest of the economy will also suffer. There must come a time when we will have to decide whether the public interest is more sacred than the interests of a few people who, perhaps not of their own volition, become involved in arguments that cannot be satisfactorily negotiated.

Management must accept its share of responsibility. It has not done so on many occasions, but I think that generally speaking the public now realizes that after every round of strikes inflation sets in and all of us are involved in the problem. We will be resuming the budget debate in a few days time; and one of the big arguments in it will concern inflation, a problem for which governments over the last 20 years could be condemned. When inflation rises we can always attack the government.

I believe one reason that we sometimes find ourselves in this difficulty is that quite often a little group is left out of the merry-go-round, and as a result there is a power play. It seems that everyone wants a little bigger slice of the economy. No one seems to be able to strike a balance. I believe the Rand report provides us with a good reason for thinking. It would seem to me that in this country we should have now reached a point where we can face up to our responsibilities, whether we be part of management or part of labour, and whether we belong to the white collar group, the blue collar group or some other group. I think we should all be prepared generally to accept more responsibility. If we are ever to stop needing strikes and picketing we must recognize that there is a dispute involved in respect of which there must be a decision.

If I should become involved in an accident and there should be a lawsuit I know that I have a right to appeal the decision to the highest court of the land. Finally when a decision has been reached, whether or not I as an individual believe it is a proper decision, I know that that is the decision and that there is nothing I can do about it, even if I section. We experience absolutely no problem grudgingly feel an injustice has been done. I in getting the two groups, the farmer and the think both management and unions must urban dweller, to work together. Their probsome day accept this fact. Whether we call it lems are alike.

fact is that there will have to be a judicial body set up to make a decision when a large segment of our society is involved in a dispute. We must have such a body which can sit down and resolve the situation, so that the other people who are involved in our economy will not suffer. It is ridiculous that 20 million people should have been involved in the longshoreman strike.

On one occasion when I visited Poland the officials in one of the departments were asked "What about strikes" and they replied "What are they." Yet every worker in that area had complaints. We have our freedom and we must be careful that we do not abuse it by employing methods that are available to us because of our better standard of living. Generally speaking, I believe there have been hundreds of strikes that would never have materialized if there had been negotiations.

It is interesting to note that this bill was introduced by a member of the New Democratic party. I wonder what position that party would take in the type of situation I have described. How can one be on both sides; how can one stand and say he is for this and that and everybody? We certainly do not wish to tie the hands of any worker. I have done my share of work in my lifetime. and I do not want to be put in the position where I would not be able to speak for myself or have someone else speak on my behalf.

I certainly believe, however, the time has come in this country when it is important that we look at the other side of the coin in relation to the effect these things have on the economy. If we run the economy ragged, there will not be any need for picketing. We must realize that sooner or later someone will have to stand up in this house and say the things that perhaps government is not willing to say. Someone, if not a whole party, must be willing to stand up here and say some of the things which many of the people of this country are thinking.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I should like very briefly to say to the hon. member who preceded me that the agriculture economy has its destiny in its own hands. In the constituency I represent we have a 50-50 split between the farming section and the urban

We know that this public bill, as it actually says, is intended to give a right of persuasion. We know also that in the last year we had the Declaration of Human Rights which gives to human beings the free right of expression. I suggest that the whole purpose of this bill is to give to individuals the right of free expression.

I would like to ask that we have the question put.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the last two speakers. This bill, introduced by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), I believe involves an amendment to the Criminal Code.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The labour code.

Mr. Francis: There is no question in my mind but that this is a federal responsibility. It is equally clear that the bill as introduced in its original form by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) in a previous parliament dealt with the restrictions placed upon picketing. I find myself in a good deal of sympathy with the amendment. The present exemption in the Criminal Code deals with a single person. It is obvious that this is much too restrictive in a number of circumstances. It is obvious that this is not the type of amendment which can be made singly in the general context of labour relations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members business has now expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

HOUSE OF COMMONS-UNVEILING OF PORTRAIT OF FORMER PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: Mr. and Mrs. Pearson, Mr. for External Affairs for Canada. At present Mr. Speaker Deschatelets, Mr. Lewis and Mr. Laprise, hon. Senators, hon. members, distinguished colleagues, ladies and gentlemen, on behalf of the members of the House of Commons, and if Mr. Speaker Deschatelets will authorize me to do so, may I say on behalf of the members of the Senate, I welcome you to this truly significant and historic occasion. It is a particular pleasure to extend very warm greetings to our guest of honour, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, and to Mrs. Pearson.

The presence here of so many of your former colleagues, Mr. Pearson, is evidence of the high regard and esteem in which you are held by those who served Canada with you in parliament.

[Translation]

Ladies and gentlemen, this ceremony gives the parliament of Canada the opportunity to recall the high points of an illustrious career dedicated to the service of Canada. It gives us the opportunity of expressing to you, Mr. and Mrs. Pearson, our respect, our admiration and our affection.

[English]

I will now call on the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, Mr. Stanfield, to come to the rostrum.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Prime Minister, Mr. and Mrs. Pearson, ladies and gentlemen, I have a long speech here, as Mr. Pearson himself noticed. I am going to read it with great care because I do not feel it is really safe to praise Mr. Pearson fully and without restriction. Since he is still alive and since I cannot be sure that he will not come back to politics, I have had to prepare my remarks for today with unusual care.

This is an appropriate occasion to honour Mr. Pearson. Twenty years ago tomorrow he was elected first to the house. This is United Nations day, and the flags that are flying remind us of Mr. Pearson's role in the field of foreign affairs, of his work aimed at international peace and development, of his activities as President of the General Assembly of the United Nations and as Secretary of State

Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, he heads the committee on international development policies, which is affiliated with the World Bank. Today we pay our respects to Mr. Pearson for the part he played in these many roles. Certainly, his contribution in the field of diplomacy and international affairs is well acknowledged. So able was he in any area of negotiation, that any who have dealt with him have had to be most careful, for fear of losing their shirts without even being aware of it.

> It is no light task to praise a former Liberal prime minister while he still lives, yet we must all recognize that he was prime minister of Canada when this country faced difficult times. During his day as prime minister his task was not as nice and easy as it is for the present one. Mr. Pearson made it his special purpose to encourage unity and understanding in Canada, something that most other countries never achieve in full measure. Under his leadership we went a long way in Canada toward achieving unity and understanding.

> In a very real sense his career coincides with the growth and maturing of Canada. Having been born in a manse, which is in a village that has since become a metropolis, he decided, after floundering around in an academic and athletic career, that it was easier in the public service. He began in a relatively minor role and became during the years a respected and creative mediator acknowledged around the word, as well as being a man greatly respected in his own country.

> We are not, of course, on the same side of the House of Commons, but I feel honoured that I have been invited to attend here and express, on behalf of my party, and above all personally, to Mr. and Mrs. Pearson my own gratitude for his services to Canada to date, and my congratulations, as well as those of countless other Canadians who have always admired Mr. Lester Pearson. (Applause).

> Mr. Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Stanfield. I wish at this time to welcome Mr. Diefenbaker, whose delay for just a few moments was caused, I understand, by his studying the roster for tomorrow.

I should now like to call on the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre-Elliott Trudeau.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Pearson and Mrs. Pearson, fellow parliamentarians, ladies and gentlemen. As some of you who were here a fortnight ago realize, I am not really making my debut as a portrait unveiler. I did so on another occasion, and I might say in passing that if the right hon. gentleman is in trouble with the roster I would be pleased to explain its intricacies. But in more senses than one, this is a first for me. It is the first time I have unveiled a portrait of a former President of the General Assembly of the United Nations, it is the first time I have unveiled a portrait of a Nobel Peace prize winner.

The world has benefited from Mr. Pearson's endeavours in international affairs. As Canadians we all share in the pride which Canada feels because of the work Mr. Pearson has done in the international field. If Canada is well known in the world today, if it is known as a country which has striven for peace and justice and which has given a great deal of effort and courage to the finding of ways in which peace and prosperity can be shared in a better division across the world, it is in large measure due to Mr. Pearson.

I think it is characteristic of the man that, having shared the burdens and cares which bedevil the prime minister of one country, he should have decided to go on in international affairs to use his retirement as an opportunity to work on a global scale for the betterment of the condition of man everywhere. I think it characteristic that he should have agreed to head a task force for the World Bank in the area of international development-an area which is extremely important for the peace of the world and one in which we are sure Mr. Pearson will make a great contribution. As leader of the government of this country, bedevilled to some extent by the difficulties which the Leader of the Opposition mentioned, I can say that I hope Mr. Pearson and I will remain friends for a long time, because it is pretty important in this day and age of international difficulties to have a friend with good contacts in the World Bank.

[Translation]

I should like to say that I am deeply moved to be called upon today to pay tribute to Mr. Pearson because, as you know, I entered politics under his wing, under his guidance, and to a large extent I owe to his wisdom and his advice a better understanding of politics. And if you will allow me to say, I think I am in a position to know also that his school was a good school.

I should like to add that Mr. Pearson made an extraordinary contribution, not only to the world of international affairs, but to our own national affairs. He came at a turning point in our history. I would say that he gave a new dimension to Canadian politics, a dimension which is singularly appropriate at the beginning of the second century of confederation.

Because of his great understanding and deep respect for his fellow men, which leads him to put the individual above institutions, he came to realize that at this turning point in our history we could build a great deal upon people, our country's greatest asset.

In a sense, our first century was a century of development, during which we harnessed our natural resources, invented new media of communication. I think that he felt that our second century would be built largely upon the men and women who make up this country.

[English]

Mr. Pearson understood, and still understands that our second century will be another mission of the people who inhabit our country. I think he has shown us, better than any other prime minister before him, the important values which are attached to the individual.

[Translation]

He came at a time when it was extremely important to grasp that great wealth which was ours on account of our bilingual make-up and our various cultures. He knew how to give this country leadership based on that reality.

[English]

For these things, Mr. Pearson, we want to express to you our gratitude; for having shown us that with your skill as a diplomat, and as a statesman, with your great feeling as a humanist, you have been able to lead us, able to lead this country, in the right direction for its second century. You have shown us that this country is built on respect for all these values which Canadians share. I want to say it is a great honour for me today to unveil this portrait of such a distinguished Canadian.

Mr. Speaker: On behalf of the parliament of Canada I accept with gratitude this gift of the government of Canada. This fine painting by an excellent Canadian artist will forever honour and grace the walls of this august building.

I would like now to call on our guest of honour, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, former prime minister.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Prime Minister, Mr. Stanfield, Mr. Diefenbaker and ladies and gentlemen, I must begin by thanking the Prime Minister for his very kind and generous words, and for unveiling me. I thank him also for being here with us this evening. I think of him, however, not always as a prime minister but as a man who used to be my parliamentary secretary when I was prime minister, and whom I had on duty three days a week. Those were the days when the rosters were informal and unofficial.

I should also like to thank Mr. Stanfield for his courteous and friendly observations, which were balanced eloquently by caution and generosity. But I should have told him in advance that he really had nothing to worry about; that is, it is possible for him to praise me if he so desires, because I have forever left politics, at least Canadian politics. Indeed one commentator was unkind enough some time ago to say that nothing became my political life like the leaving of it.

It it a great and rather intimidating pleasure to be on this platform with my successor and predecessor. But I am delighted and honoured to have on this platform my predecessor, Mr. Diefenbaker, with whom I have been associated a long time. Our association seems to become friendlier and more intimate now as the days go by. I have not yet come across him walking in Rockcliffe park, because I probably get up a little earlier than he does. I want to tell him how sorry I was not to have been able to be present two weeks ago, for reasons about which he knows, when a similar ceremony was held to honour him as a prime minister. It would have been rather nice, as I believe he indicated himself, if we had been able to hang together. I think perhaps we ought both to congratulate ourselves that, if we have not done so yet, at least we have not hanged separately.

This of course is my first hanging. I have been at other ceremonies of this kind here, but this is the first time I have been hanged myself. I should like you to know that the condemned man enjoyed a hearty breakfast this morning. My sense of pleasure and honour in being here is increased by the fact that I see around me so many of my old parliamentary colleagues and friends.

I do not know whether I should comment on the picture. I am of course a well known art critic. I might say that as you go around the halls and look at the other pictures of prime ministers you might say that this is sort of half way between the sober and sedate of the past and the swinger of the present. Between the sober and the swinger you have the sloucher. But I assure you, this is the way I wanted it done and this is the way the artist—and I should like to pay my tribute to him-insisted it should be done. He wanted to paint me not as Cromwell was painted, not warped, but wrinkled and old. He caught me in that easy pose where I am preparing to do what comes naturally—perhaps going out and rake the leaves, which is much better than being raked over the coals.

In referring to the costume and the picture generally, I might say that this was done by design on my part, as well as on the part of the artist. This reminds me of an American lady journalist—and when I tell you what she said you will agree that she was no lady—who once wrote a column about me. After giving space to my intelligence, achievement and character she ended up by saying, "As for his clothes, they look as if he speaks to them each morning before he goes to the office, and says "if you want to come with me, hang on". This is the reason I was very careful to wear a short black coat and striped trousers this evening.

[Translation]

As the French say: C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas bon.

[English]

And I like it this way. It is customary on occasions like this also to say that the artist did wonderfully well considering the material he had to work on. I should like to put it this way: The artist had magnificent material and made the most of it. Anyway, if I do not perhaps in that picture look like a prime minister should, there are those who will say today that perhaps I was only a prime minister by accident. Mr. Diefenbaker would say, happily, I became the prime minister by accident.

Let me say that I like this picture and I want to add my thanks to the artist. I wish he could have been here with us today.

I am going to conclude my remarks by doing something which I think is right on an occasion like this. I am going to quote some poetry. This was written in 1727 by a very well known man of his day who has had a revival in recent years. His name was John Gay, and he wrote the "Beggar's Opera". If Mr. Benson were here I could safely say that he is well acquainted with him.

John Gay in 1727 wrote a little jingle, about the artist who was asked to paint a picture of some lord. This is what he has the artist say, in poetic form, to the lord before he showed him the picture:

Those eyes, my lord, the spirit there, Might well a Raphael's hand require, To give them all the native fire. The features, fraught with sense and wit, You'll grant are very hard to hit, But yet with patience you shall view, As much as paint and art can do.

Then after the painting was shown to the lord John Gay wrote this about the artist:

"Observe the work", my lord replied,
"Till now I thought my mouth was wide,
Besides, my nose is somewhat long;

Good man, for me, it seems all wrong".
"Oh! pardon me (the artist cried)
In this we painters must decide.
The piece ev'n common eyes must strike,
And warrant it's extremely like."
My lord examined it anew,
No mirror now seemed half so true.
When thus happily he wrought,
Each found the likeness in his thought.

In my thoughts the likeness is admirable, and the honour of having it hung in the halls of parliament, as well as the honour of being with so many great Canadians in these sacred parliament buildings, is a very great one indeed. It makes me feel both humble and very proud. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: On behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Pearson, the Pearson family, who are here today, I thank you for your presence here, ladies and gentlemen. On your behalf I offer again our warmest congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Pearson, our warmest and sincere wishes for health, happiness and long life.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: It has not been customary to require the C.B.C. to disclose details of contractual arrangements between the corporation and sponsors of programs. Question No. 354-Mr. Valade:

- 1. Did the B.B.G. transmit to the new Radio-Television Commission, its Executive Committee or any one of its members, the enquiry report which led to the dismissal of Pat Burns, the radio commentator, and to the suspension of the licence of the radio station in Vancouver which employed him?

- 3. What reasons were given for cancelling the operating licence of the radio station in question; what was the date of cancellation of the licence and what were the station's call letters?
- 4. Have any of the owners or principal share-holders of the station which had its licence cancelled, since obtained another operating licence and, if so, in whose name has such licence been issued?

On April 8, 1965, the Board of Broadcast Governors announced its decisions which included the following: Vancouver, B.C.: Application by CJOR Limited for a licence to operate broadcasting station CJOR, Vancouver, B.C., after March 31, 1965.

Recommendation: (a) For Denial. (b) The board further recommends that the Minister of Transport grant a temporary authority, which authority shall be subject to the provisions of subsection 5 of section 12 of the Broadcasting Act, to CJOR Limited to continue operating a broadcasting station on the frequency of 600 Kc/s with a power of 10,000 watts for a period not extending beyond October 31, 1965, and that in the interim the Minister of Transport accept applications from other persons for a licence to operate a broadcasting station, which would serve the city of Vancouver, B.C., using the frequency of 600 Kc/s.

Reasons: The board, having examined the record of performance, is not satisfied with the past operation of the station by CJOR Limited. The board has no confidence that CJOR Limited can as a licensee exercise sufficient supervision and direction of the station to ensure its operation in the public interest or compliance with the policy now proposed by CJOR Limited.

TAXATION OF SHAREHOLDER PENSION PLANS Question No. 415—Mr. Ritchie:

- 1. Has the Minister of National Revenue issued a directive within the last ten days declining to accept for registration pension plans primarily for the benefit of shareholders and their families?
- 2. Will the Minister advise the House why this new policy has been inaugurated under which traditionally exempt pension plans would now be subject to taxation?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. A statement along the lines of the one in question was included in a set of guide lines issued recently by the director, review and registration division, compliance branch, Department of National Revenue, taxation.

2. The guide line in question reinstates, in part, the administrative practice which prevailed until 1959, which denied registration to a pension plan covering only shareholder employees, the executive group or those in the higher earning brackets. The absence of this rule has facilitated tax avoidance. The guide line reflects the considered opinion of the departmental officials responsible for the registration of pension plans that a plan which primarily benefits the controlling shareholder and excludes other employees of a corporation cannot properly be regarded as an employees' pension plan for the purposes of the Income Tax Act.

2. The government has appointed one director to the board of Panarctic Oils Ltd. The director representing the government is Mr. John A. MacDonald, deputy minister of Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The board of Panarctic Oils Ltd. consisting of 14 directors, is composed of one director essentially in respect of each million dollars subscribed by an industry participant or participant group, one director representing all farmers having agreements with Panarctic, and the government's director. Panarctic's shareholders agreement provides that at the government's behest, the board shall be increased to 20 members and the government may increase its representation on the board to nine members, in accordance with its grant to Panarctic being 9/20th of the initial financing.

3. No. The management of Panarctic is responsible to its board of directors. Government control, as may be required, is effected by its representation on that board.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council would inquire why it is taking so long to get an answer to question No. 4, having to do with the pensions of retired civil servants.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I will, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—TERMS OF REFERENCE OF OBSERVER TEAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. I ask it at the risk of sounding like a pious bleeding heart, which is a classification the Prime Minister now has made. Will the right hon. gentleman check whether a condition of Canada accepting a place on the observer team in Nigeria, that of being able to make its own decisions about what it wanted to see and what route the team would take to get there, is being adhered to?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fairweather: Will the Prime Minister agree that the attempt by the observer team to seek the village where 500 died was a legitimate objective of the team, and will Canada seek assurance from Nigeria that our representative on the team is not subject to the threat of a whipping by Colonel Adekunle?

Mr. Speaker: The first question is probably argumentative. The second question is in order.

Mr. Trudeau: I was about to say yes to the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker. In respect of the second part, I think it is partly facetious. The part about whipping certainly is not a serious question.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—REPORTED OFFER OF HERCULES
AIRCRAFT BY CANADIAN COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a question on the same subject, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware of an offer by Pacific Western Airlines to dispatch that company's Hercules planes to assist in the delivery of supplies to Biafra? If so, what is the government doing to encourage and assist this company in giving its aid in this way?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of this offer, but I recall having said several weeks ago that there were other Hercules planes apart from those under Canadian government colours, and that if the churches or the Red Cross could charter these I would consider it to be a very welcome step.

Mr. Lewis: In view of reports that our Hercules planes are now ready to fly from Fernando Po into Biafra with supplies, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether our planes have landed at Fernando Po and will be able to take off, in view of some information that there may be a strike of air traffic controllers on the island?

Mr. Trudeau: With regard to the last part of the question concerning labour troubles in Fernando Po, I must say that I have no information. I do know, however-and I believe the house has learned of this over the week end—that we have finally had clearance from the Guinean authorities and will be able to land at and fly from Fernando Po. We sent an external affairs official from one of our European posts to Fernando Po. He will be there to clear up any matter that might involve government information or decision. He is there now. One plane has actually landed there. It was brought in I believe from Ascension island, and has been made operationally ready to fly.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister inform the house whether among the supplies carried by the Hercules there is self contained ground control radar equipment which is badly needed at the airstrip at Uli? If not, would he be prepared to have such dispatched to the airstrip so it could be used to assist in the landing of planes there.

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I do not know whether such a unit was on board the supply plane. I will check to find out whether this is necessary. If it is, surely we can supply it.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a further supplementary question. If necessary the minister may take this as notice. I wonder whether he can advise the house now if it is a fact that the Hercules aircraft are equipped to make a drop of supplies in Biafra and could quite effectively do so.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Yes, of course they are equipped to make a drop, but the purpose of the operation is not to make a drop but to land and get down with something like 20 tons each trip.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister what cargoes are contemplated for the return flights once the food cargoes are permitted into Nigeria. Has there been any consideration as to cargoes for return flights?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there has been no consideration of which I know. I do not know whether the hon. member has anything in mind, but I suppose if any Canadian families or church groups were to volunteer to adopt Nigerian children, that might be contemplated.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the government had considered flying Biafran children out of the areas of hostility and establishing areas for the treatment of malnutrition outside these hostile areas of Biafra.

Mr. Trudeau: This is another suggested purpose for which I suppose the government would be prepared to use the planes if they were being flown out without any cargo, but this is the kind of initiative that perhaps churches or individual Canadians might want to take.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY U.S. NATIONAL AT UNIVERSITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. It has to do with a United States revolutionary who spoke at the University of British Columbia. I refer to Jerry Rubin. Has the minister or the mounted police, who are subject to his direction, endeavoured to ascertain why it was that this individual appeared on the C.B.C. on October 23 and stated, among other things, that he not only wore the Viet Nam flag around his neck but crossed into Canada carrying live machine gun ammunition? Furthermore, I should point out that he said he recommended that Canadians remove this government and overthrow it.

[Mr. Lewis.]

I should like to know how such a person gets through immigration and comes into Canada. Everybody knows his record in endeavouring to foment revolution, or, in any event, dissension which will lead to revolution. What has the minister done about this, and would it be possible to communicate with the C.B.C. to ascertain whether such a person should be denied the free publicity which the C.B.C. provides?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, without in any way treating the matter frivolously, the right hon. gentleman has asked me questions which apply to three or four departments. In so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, we have received no communication from the attorney general of British Columbia on the subject. If the right hon. gentleman wants to pursue the question as it relates to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, my colleague the Solicitor General is in his place. I might say in terms of revolutions, we had a very successful one on June 25.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was not a revolution; it was a catastrophe.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, let me direct my question to the next minister who is here in an endeavour to obtain his views regarding this matter.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the right hon. gentleman is not only asking for the minister's views. He should be asking for whatever information the minister can give at this time.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad to take the question as notice, because as it is posed it is really a statement giving a lot of information certain parts of which I did not have before. I will be glad to look at the whole form of the question and bring forward an answer on the part of it which relates to this department.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister is always very explicit.

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. In the statement he made on the week end he Inquiries of the Ministry spoke about the amendment to the Criminal Code with reference to birth control. Is the government now contemplating dividing and separating the omnibus bill with reference to amendments to the Criminal Code?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would consider Bill S-22 of the last session, which contained the amendment in question, he will find that this was not in the omnibus Criminal Code bill but was in what was then known as the omnibus health bill. I expect that the bill will be introduced in the other place some time this week.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. When will the amendments to the Criminal Code be brought in? Will it be before the Christmas recess?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROPOSED QUEEN ELIZABETH OBSERVATORY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Arising out of a question asked previously in the house and statements by ministers to the effect that the matter was under consideration, would the Prime Minister say whether a decision has yet been made as to the tabling of the study on the Queen Elizabeth telescope project?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would ask that question when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in the house.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED CRITICISM BY MANITOBA SUPREME COURT JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General, notice of which I have given him. I would like to ask the minister whether he is giving consideration to criticism of the R.C.M.P. made in Winnipeg by Mr. Justice Freedman concerning the case of Mr. Arthur Percy Leon Ballegeer, in which the judge said that an R.C.M.P. constable had succeeded in "wilfully...frustrating the due process of law. What the constable did was wrong and unjustifiable."

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the question could be placed on the order paper, unless there is in it an aspect of urgency which is not apparent to me at the present time.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

CULTURAL AID TO FRENCH SPEAKING CANADIANS OUTSIDE QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In the light of the statement made last week by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), could we know whether the proposed special government program to give cultural assistance to the French-speaking minorities in Canada will require the passing of new legislation?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot reply to that question; we are in the process of considering the ways in which this assistance to the minorities can be efficient. It may be that we will require special legislation, under the terms of existing legislation. One thing is sure: we certainly do not want to go about it in a way which could be considered as tampering with the constitution.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the hon. Prime Minister.

Have all the interested provinces been consulted in this regard?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, will a similar program be established for English language groups which are in a minority position in the various bilingual districts?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is a program which will not necessarily be tied to the concept of bilingual districts. It is something the Secretary of State is exploring on his own. That is why I answered to the previous question that it may be done independently of any legislation. If it can be done under present agencies or present arrangements, it might be done in that way.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the Prime Minister express the hope that the province of Manitoba would participate in an imminent meeting of the Canada-France joint cultural commission, and has the government of Canada consulted with the government of Manitoba regarding participation by that province in this meeting of the cultural commission?

Mr. Trudeau: On this particular meeting I would have to find out, Mr. Speaker. I know it has been the declared policy of this government, and it was stated quite clearly in our white paper published last February, that when we do have commissions or delegations which are dealing with subjects that are partly of concern to the provinces, we try to get representatives from the provinces to assist as members of the Canadian delegation. In the Manitoba case I will have to inquire.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING SELF DETERMINATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Was the Minister without Portfolio stating government policy over the week end when he stated in effect that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should get out of the way of self determination of the Indian people?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this aspect of government policy has not been defined as yet, but I would say that if this is what the minister said it sounds like a very nice idea.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Would he encourage an investigation of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by a committee of Indians, as was suggested by an Indian spokesman over the week end?

Mr. Trudeau: My apologies to the hon. member, but would he please ask the question again?

Mr. Southam: Would the Prime Minister encourage an investigation of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by a committee of Indians, as was suggested by an Indian spokesman over the week end?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Prime Minister accepted the statement made by the minister as probably being a good idea, and since the latter is one of the ministers in charge of that particular department, why does the Prime Minister not ensure that the minister gets the department out of the way and lets self determination take place?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Yewchuk: I had a supplementary question also intended for the right hon. Prime Minister, but since Mr. Speaker ruled the previous question out of order I will not put it.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister and ask the right hon. gentleman whether his hint in Halifax of solicitude for the rich in a reduction of the income tax constitutes a cabinet leak, and if so what disciplinary action will he take against himself?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it does not constitute a cabinet leak because there has been no decision on that matter in the cabinet, but I do like to throw out ideas for discussion.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. While his colleagues are pursuing their arduous and difficult explorations in the south, is it his intention to issue a third edition of this unmentionable document to fill in the blank spaces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I am glad the hon. member has found the document so useful. I appreciate his acceptance of the general technique involved, and I will be glad to assist him in any way with necessary changes.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a supplementary question?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): No, a related one.

Mr. Speaker: I would rather hear a supplementary question than a related question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE CLOSING OF SOME RESEARCH STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence in view of the statement by the chairman of the Defence Research Board to the effect that the board may have to close some of its eight research stations, and in light of the fact that research projects sponsored by the board during the last number of years have resulted in a great many valuable contracts for Canada. Can the minister assure the house that this penny wise and pound foolish course will not be followed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that this is an urgent matter. It seems to me that it could be placed on the order paper.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I have a related question which I would like to address to the Prime Minister in the same general field. I did not want to say it was a supplementary question, sir, because you cast some doubt on the validity of my first question.

I would ask the Prime Minister whether he or one of his ministers would be prepared to make a statement on the very important policy question concerning the future of Canadian scientific research, in the light of the rather disturbing evidence that was given in the Senate committee on science on this matter.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker; that is a very important subject and we are working on it very actively. It is a matter of seeing in what way the cabinet secretariat or the Privy Council office can be reorganized to help us formulate a more efficient science policy and to make sure that we can work hand in hand with the science council. I have had meetings with the president and vice president of the science council, and I am having another meeting today. The hon. member will be pleased to hear that a new report of the science council will be given to me today and will be made public in the very near future.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I would like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement to a startled and crestfallen meeting of his party in Halifax on Saturday to the effect that patronage is now dead so far as his government is concerned, does the government intend to adhere to this very fine principle when making the appointment of the president of Air Canada in the near future?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Prime Minister might wish to reply to the question without referring to the introductory remarks of the hon. member.

 $\mathbf{Mr.}$ Hees: I will skip the introductory remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can understand the hon. member's concern. I would say the audience was startled; they were not crestfallen but startled, because this is not usual in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Since this very unexpected but welcome turn of events has taken place, may we now expect appointments to be made to the Senate from parties other than the Prime Minister's?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a supplementary question but it is a related question.

Mr. Hees: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There are a great many people in the country who would like to hear the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might place the question on the order paper.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): I should like to ask the Prime Minister, if he is not in a position to make a statement concerning the appointment of the president of Air Canada can he at least inform the house whether it is the intention of the government to divide the executive function between a president and a chairman of the board?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think it would be proper for me to make this announcement.
[Mr. Trudeau.]

This is something that will be considered with the board itself, and will be considered in the light of the names that will be recommended by the board for appointment. I can say to the house now what I have said before, that I have been very actively engaged in seeing possible candidates, not all of them Liberals, for such an appointment. We expect to be able to act very soon, and the action we will take on the names will be related to the action we take on the restructuring of the executive and the board itself.

Mr. Hees: A further supplementary question. Was that the reason for the long line-up in front of the Prime Minister's office this morning?

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST OF PROFESSIONAL INSTITUTE FOR MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have another question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, which arises from the right hon. gentleman's answer to a question asked on Wednesday by the Leader of the Opposition. The Prime Minister said that in due course he would reply to the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada indicating whether he would grant an interview. Can the Prime Minister give a firm undertaking today that he will grant this delegation an opportunity to discuss the problems raised in their letter?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In my answer last week I indicated I would study the first part of the question after I had heard from the various governmental departments that seem to be implicated in the letter. I have had no such reply yet.

Mr. Baldwin: Does the Prime Minister not feel that in view of the fact this organization represents some 12,500 public servants, his reluctance to meet them might be destructive of morale in the public service?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think so. In view of the fact the letter was sent to me one day and appeared in the press the next day, I thought perhaps the president of the institute was merely trying to make a point. If he made it, then I am in the process of finding out whether the point was well made or not.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR YUKON TERRITORIAL JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. It is a follow-up to one on which he gave a partial answer about two weeks ago. Has the Department of Justice resolved the problem relating to Judge Parker's chairmanship of the mediation commission in British Columbia? If so, what has been the outcome?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I have asked Judge Parker to tell me what he intends to do, whether he intends to accept the chairmanship of the mediation commission in British Columbia or whether he intends to remain a judge of the Yukon territorial court. I expect to have an answer.

THE MINISTRY

REPORTED DISAGREEMENT RESPECTING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister investigated the breakdown in cabinet secrecy which has resulted in the publication of discussions held in cabinet prior to the presentation of the budget, concerning the ceiling placed on the 2 per cent social development tax?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): What makes the hon. member think anything that actually happened was leaked, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I would call your attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we have the roles reversed. I do not believe that the government can ask questions of the opposition.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Apparently the Prime Minister has forgotten that it was he who mentioned it, not I. Since the report was widely publicized that cabinet ministers reacted against the $120 ceiling, I would ask the Prime Minister who amongst his cabinet are the reform minded ministers.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon, member will recognize that the question as asked is not in order.

29180-132

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to advise that the hon. gentleman is on our daily roster.

SPORTS

RECOGNITION OF ACHIEVEMENTS OF CANA-DIAN TEAM AT OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I wonder if I could address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Having in mind the achievements under difficulties of Canada's Olympic team, will he consider making some gesture of recognition to them for their efforts?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, I am very pleased today to make at least the gesture which is suggested by the hon. member and say that the Canadians who performed down there did a very good job, the best they could to represent Canada. As to any further recognition, I shall be glad to discuss the matter with the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

REQUEST FOR INCREASED ALLOWANCES FOR MARRIED PERSONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the many representations I have received from the voters in my riding, could the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration tell the house whether he intends to raise the indemnity given to married people enrolled in retraining courses according to the number of dependents they have?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question could be put on the order paper and, if it is urgent, the hon. member could give me notice of the question, if he wishes to discuss it on the adjournment debate.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH THE VATICAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is for the Prime Minister. May I ask the right hon, gentleman whether an appointment to the Vatican having ambassador status or the equivalent is imminent?

Inquiries of the Ministry

There is a lot of static on my machine. Could I hear the question again?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): May I ask the Prime Minister whether an appointment to the Vatican, having ambassador status or the equivalent, is imminent?

Mr. Trudeau: This is part of our review of external affairs, Mr. Speaker. It is an idea that we have been considering, but there is no imminent announcement to be made in connection with the matter.

NIGERIA—CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING CEASE FIRE UNDER UNITED NATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): On Friday, Mr. Speaker, I gave the Prime Minister a list of countries and asked if the Canadian government had been consulting them about possible action in the United Nations. I wonder if the Prime Minister has an answer. I might add at this point that after very careful consideration I am no longer interested in the reply of the government of the Gold Coast.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member has cleared up the matter of his antiquated geography. With regard to the other states, there have been discussions between representatives of these countries and representatives of Canada at the United Nations. We now learn from them that the position is that they are not recommending any action in this regard. Apparently some of the officials at the UN representing other countries might have said at one point that they thought something should be done by way of a cease fire. However, my information now is that none of these countries, excepting of course those who recognize Biafra, are recommending that we propose a cease fire in the United Nations.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government of Canada considering taking action through the third committee of the United Nations?

Mr. Trudeau: Under what heading, Mr. Speaker?

[Later:]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in relation to the question asked of the Prime Minister earlier, may I ask him whether the representatives of Canada at the United Nations are discussing with representa-

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys).]

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): tives of other nations the possibility of raising the Nigerian-Biafran tragedy through the means of the third committee, which is concerned, as I am sure he knows, with social, humanitarian and cultural affairs. The question could be raised under any heading like the suffering of children, the death of children, and related conditions that are now a fact in Nigeria and Biafra.

> Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member ask his question?

> Mr. Lewis: I did, Mr. Speaker. The right hon, gentleman suggested earlier that he did not know how the matter could arise in the third committee, and in my question I thought I would indicate how easily it could

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CHURCHILL, MAN.-NEGOTIATIONS ON DEVELOPMENT OF TOWN SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Has he anything further to report on the question asked by the hon. member for Churchill on October 17, in connection with negotiations between the Manitoba government and the federal government concerning the development of a townsite at Churchill, Manitoba?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have something to report on that. I am not sure whether it is a repetition of something I said a few days ago, but in any event I will say it now in this place.

After having met the premier of Manitoba, there was an exchange of correspondence. I wrote to him indicating that certain proposals that had been made by him were under review by us. If in the meantime he wanted to communicate with anyone in the federal government, I gave him the channels through which there might be further discussion.

I do want to make it clear that the ball is now in our court and that the cabinet will be receiving from the Minister of Public Works, very soon according to my information, proposals about measures that can be taken with regard to the city of Churchill.

I hope nothing in my previous answer left the impression that we were waiting for the government of Manitoba to act. I want to make it clear we hope to come forth with some proposal very soon.

ATOMIC ENERGY

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN FRENCH AND CANADIAN AGENCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister give consideration to making public the non-secret portions of the agreement concerning exchange of nuclear power information between Canada and France? If not, could a statement be made about the reason for non-publication of the agreement?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter was dealt with several days ago by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I will ask him whether he has anything further to add.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I am not satisfied with the answer, and I will debate the matter at ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORTS BY PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the President of the Privy Council in his position as house leader. Is it the intention of the minister to refer the last two reports of the Auditor General and the public accounts of Canada to the standing committee on public accounts?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member on his re-election as chairman of the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I hope to be in a position to make an announcement in the house in a few days with regard to the proposed business for the committee.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA-REQUEST THAT FOOD SUPPLIES BE RESTRICTED TO CIVILIAN POPULATION

On the orders of the day:

Speaker, I should like to direct a question to help ambushed or beleaguered defenders in 29180-1321

Inquiries of the Ministry

the Prime Minister. As the urgent concern of all Canadians is presently directed to Biafra, and as no evidence to my knowledge has been presented by the official observation team or the self-styled experts indicating starvation among the members of the Biafran army, can the secretary of state or the Prime Minister assure this house and the Canadian public that Canadian food being airlifted to Biafra in Canadian armed services aircraft will be supplied only to the starving civilian population and not commandeered by the army to be used to further the war effort?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as very important notice to the minister for external affairs.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister has been explaining some of the confusion that arose in Halifax, could he tell the house whether it was a cabinet leak when he allegedly asked, in answer to a request from a group that waylaid him-and I am not in any way approving of that-whether they would in fact have supported the sending of food supplies to Nazis who were starving during the war at Stalingrad? May I ask the Prime Minister what was the nature of the philosophic consideration that brought forth that emission?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of the question I can assure the hon. gentleman that it had nothing to do with a cabinet leak. I am happy to hear that the right hon. member wants to hear my philosophic considerations, because in his usual spirit of fair play he does not want to be misled either by editorials or by headlines.

In my discussions with these students and young people, who in no way waylaid me but were protesting peacefully, and with whom I was very glad to have an exchange of views, I made the point that intervention in wars by third parties sometimes had larger consequences than the third parties had contemplated at the outset. I gave various examples of such situations. Apart from the Vietnamese I gave several examples, such as the Russians being surrounded at Leningrad, the Nazis being surrounded at Stalingrad, the French being surrounded at Dienbienphu, and probably I would have cited Custer's last stand had I thought of it.

I gave several such examples and said that Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. for a third party to intervene in some way to Inquiries of the Ministry some part of the globe might entail involvement in a civil war, and I was asking them to reflect on that. There was no intention in my mind, as the right hon. gentleman realizes, of comparing them to the Nazis, to the Soviets, or to the French at Dienbienphu.

Mr. Deifenbaker: Then the Prime Minister admits that it was in fact an ill timed and ill considered comparison?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I think what was ill timed was the headline, and I merely suggest that if the right hon. member is interested in speed reading he should not stop at the headlines.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —I read the statement that was made, and no amount of weaseling on the part of the Prime Minister can explain it away.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the same remarks made in Halifax and his reference to feeding Nazi troops around Stalingrad, does the Prime Minister not realize that Canada was involved in a war at the time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

HOUSING

PARTICIPATION IN TASK FORCE BY MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister advise the house whether the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Winnipeg South, is now a member of the task force on housing; and could he tell us how that minister was able this morning to participate as a member of the task force and to question the briefs that were being presented?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio has been requested to assist the Minister of [Mr. Trudeau.]

Transport in every way the Minister of Transport sees fit.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this include sitting as a regular member of the task force, or is it to be the practice that Liberal members in various cities will be made in some way ad hoc members of the task force?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention that there be such ad hoc members. The task force has been set up on a basis that would permit it to proceed as efficiently as possible on this question of housing in order to reach its conclusions as quickly as possible. The Minister of Transport has taken initiatives that I think are aimed at that end.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster):
A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister call the Minister of Transport off this housing trip and see that he is present here on Wednesday to answer questions about his personal conduct—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Bell: —which has been challenged in and out of the house?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HAMILTON, ONT.—HEARING OF BRIEFS BY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I did ask a question of the Minister of Transport on Friday of last week which in his absence was handled by the Minister without Portfolio. However, in view of the urgency of the matter I will have to direct my question to the Prime Minister. All Hamilton is waiting for the answer. Perhaps the Prime Minister could advise the house whether in fact any studies took place over the week end to determine if the task force is or is not going to visit Hamilton, Ontario.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In accordance with a series of instructions I gave my colleagues, including the Minister of Transport, I do not think there will be a minister here to answer for that department except on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. I wonder whether the city of Hamilton could possibly wait until Wednesday to hear this answer.

Mr. Alexander: In view of the statement the right hon. gentleman has made, I wonder whether he would undertake to see to it that an answer is given, preferably a favourable answer, for the benefit of all Hamilton on Wednesday.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROGRAMS TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I wish to direct this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Does the minister's department have any special programs designed to help alleviate the heavy burden of increased unemployment in the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think what the hon. member is requesting is a statement, which should be made, if at all, on motions.

Mr. Lundrigan: Yes. I was really asking for a yes or no answer. My supplementary question was to be this. Will the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions in view of the fact that on Thursday he made reference to Ontario and Quebec in connection with the work of his department?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I do not think it will be necessary to make a statement on motions to cover this point.

Mr. Lundrigan: On Thursday, Mr. Speaker, the minister did refer to a considerable increase in departmental expenditures for Quebec and Ontario. I think it would be in order for the minister to advise the house what is in store for the Atlantic region, bearing in mind the heavy burden of unemployment there.

Mr. MacEachen: The question asked last week had reference to the cancellation of the municipal winter works program. As the hon. member knows, a very minor proportion of the total expenditure under that program was spent in the Atlantic provinces. Over the years we have concentrated our expenditures in the Atlantic provinces on occupational training and retraining, especially of the unemployed. The program undertaken this year certainly represents much greater expenditures than could possibly be made, or have been made, under the municipal works program.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. It arises as a result of your reaction to the original question asked by my hon. friend from Gander-Twillingate. I should like to point out that for a number of years we sat in this house and heard hon. members by the names of Pearson, Martin, Pickersgill and Chevrier putting the same type of question day after day after day.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly make his point of order?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My point of order is that there are many precedents for the type of question which was posed by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. Why, at this late date, after so many precedents have been set in the house by distinguished members who are no longer here—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a late date. It is a new date.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour? Can the minister say whether the regulations under the Canada Labour (Safety) Code have yet been put into effect? In particular, can he say when the provisions of this legislation will be operative in the province of Manitoba?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I do not wish to mislead the hon. gentleman. I should like to take this question as notice and give him detailed information on Wednesday.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED SITUATION IN WEST GERMANY— REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a question for the Prime Minister. On Thursday the Secretary of State for External Affairs undertook to check whether NATO secrets or other information essential to national security have been compromised in the security scandal recently revealed in west Germany. In the light of the serious developments over the week end, will the Prime Minister now report to this house whether our national security has been compromised in this connection?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have no report to make as yet. I expect the appropriate minister will make it as soon as he has the information.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): I think it was on October 16 that the hon. member for Red Deer asked the Prime Minister whether the report of the royal commission on security had been received. I believe the right hon. gentleman told us he had not received it. I wonder whether he will now tell the house whether he has received this report and, if so, when it will be tabled.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Later this week I am to meet with the members of this royal commission, and I expect them to submit either a final or an interim report; and, if questioned, I shall be glad to let the house know what happened.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Would the Prime Minister explain to the house, if he is in a position to do so at this time, how it came about that a London daily paper was apparently able to print facts about the report of the commission on security and make reflections on the R.C.M.P., before the report has been tabled?

Mr. Trudeau: This question was asked on October 16. I told the house at that time that I was not yet in a position to control what appeared in London newspapers.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON FARM INTEREST PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that many farm areas have experienced successive crop failures as a result of frost, snow and poor harvesting conditions, may I ask whether consideration is being given to placing a moratorium on interest payments particularly in connection with machinery and land purchases?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I wonder whether the hon. member would mind addressing that question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Korchinski: Might I ask, as a supplementary question, whether consideration is being given by the government to providing cash advances with respect to crops lying in swath?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

IMMIGRATION

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF QUEBEC DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Now that legislation is being introduced in the Quebec legislature to set up a department of immigration with stated policies, can the minister advise the house whether there has been consultation between either himself and his opposite number in the Quebec government, or between corresponding officials, to see that the policies of the two departments do not work so as to counter one another, but rather that they dovetail?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have had no consultation with any Quebec minister on this subject nor, I believe, have any of my officials had consultations, recently at least. I understand there is a desire to have such consultation, and I look forward to having it.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—LOANS TO INDIANS FOR VESSEL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. The hon, gentleman is not here today but perhaps his parliamentary secretary could answer it. Does the recent proposal to make loans and grants available to British Columbia Indians for the construction of more fishing vessels conflict in any way with the minister's intention to limit the number of salmon fishing boats on the Pacific coast?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

SALT COD—INQUIRY AS TO DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): In the absence of the Minister of Fisheries perhaps the Prime Minister could answer this question. Is it the government's intention to propose a deficiency payment in connection with salt cod this year, in light of the fact that fishermen are receiving less than 50 per cent of the price they received last year?

Post Office Act

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that questions on matters concerning the Department of Fisheries will be answered tomorrow in the house.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the minister is here.

Mr. Lundrigan: As a supplementary question may I ask the government of Canada to stop codding around with the Atlantic cod.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF ADVISORY COUNCILS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Have the advisory councils on manpower and immigration, which were to be established under the new legislation, been appointed yet?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the new manpower advisory council and the boards have not yet been named. I am currently working on this problem, and I hope we will have the council in operation at the earliest possible date.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS AFFECTING RATES, ADMINISTRATION, SAVINGS BANK

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-116, to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize that we are now at the final stage of this legislation so far as this house is concerned. I realize too that it is not very often that a bill which has passed all previous stages is defeated on third reading, but it can happen. However, the make-up of this parliament is slightly different from that of the last one so that defeat of this measure at this stage is perhaps too much to hope for. But it does seem to me it is still appropriate to ask the government to give further consideration to some of the objectionable features of Bill C-116.

I hope we have made it clear that we support many of the provisions of this legislation. As a matter of fact, the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) is actually implementing some of the suggestions we have made about second, third and fourth class mail paying their own way. However, it is still felt by many of us that it is unfair to eliminate Saturday delivery in urban residential areas. We also feel that even if the government wants to establish one rate for first class letters, whether they are drop letters or carried across the country, that rate might be 5 cents instead of 6 cents. Furthermore, with respect to some of those changes of which we approve we think there is a case for considering further some of the details, particularly the times when some of the changes are to come into effect.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, even during the week end since the approval of the bill in committee stage many, perhaps all of us, have been receiving communications by mail and telegraph urging further consideration of the measure. We are still appealing to the minister to make the particular changes that we suggested. We do not like its provisions for increased charges and reduced service. Therefore the least the house might do is to put off the passing of this bill until a later date and so I move as an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather):

That Bill C-116 be not now read a third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months hence.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I say very briefly that we intend to support this amendment. We are not satisfied that the minister and the government have made a case. We are not satisfied they have answered the questions put from this side of the house during presentation of the case for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, both on second reading and in committee of the whole.

They have not answered the questions with regard to the archaic method of tendering. They have not, despite our questioning, established the basis upon which the figures were arrived at that were presented by the minister and the government in order to substantiate his proposals. They have not met the direct challenge put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) on Friday, by which the statements of the minister were met head on and refuted.

They have not answered the clear case made by members on this side of the house that the increases in the rates will in effect constitute a form of indirect taxation, not a charge falling upon corporations but an indirect form of taxation falling upon a great many individuals, which of course will add substantially to the high cost of living. They have failed dismally and completely to make a case for the changes, and we propose to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

but unfortunately my attention was obviously attracted somewhere else and I did not see the violation. I suspect that the hon. member is referring to the fact that hon, members should not come inside the house or move outside the house while a vote is being taken. This may be the violation to which the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is referring.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I deny there was any violation. I voted from my seat.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a further point of order, Mr. Speaker, possibly the Secretary of State for External Affairs would like a thorough explanation of what the rules are concerning a vote.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know that they cannot move from one seat to another while the vote is being taken. Perhaps that is the point the hon. member is making. I would point out to hon, members that two hon. members were involved, one from each side of the house. It was not too conspicuous and I did not bring it to the attention of hon. members. The point of order raised by the hon, member gives me an opportunity to remind all hon. members of the standing order on this point.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBLE CLASSES. AMOUNT OF CAPITAL, INTEREST RATES, ETC.

On the order:

House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-110, an act to amend the Farm Credit Act-the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Kent-Essex on a point of order.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is to respectfully request once more that the government give consideration to bringing forward at this time a non-controversial bill on agriculture, namely, Bill C-113, in order that we may deal with it at this time.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much that this is a point of order. The hon, member will have Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The violation to refer me to the standing orders indicating as a point of order. It is a question which I assume might be legitimately asked of the government house leader, and he may want to reply to it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would be glad to bring forward at eight o'clock this evening the bill amending the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 15, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-110, to amend the Farm Credit Act—Mr. Olson—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-110, to amend the Farm Credit Act. When the committee rose on Tuesday, October 15, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 1-"Farmer."

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I rise to deal with this bill at the present time and to bring to the attention of hon. members what I consider is a very grave problem, particularly so far as the agricultural industry is concerned, concerning the manner in which legislation is presented.

There was no doubt from the very outset that Bill C-110 would be controversial because some principles are involved on which we wish to question the minister rather closely. An attempt is being made by the government through this piece of legislation to broaden the base on which farmers can borrow money, and to increase the amounts. Some of these provisions we consider very commendable. However, there is also a principle involved here in that the government by the order of business it has set is creating a definite hardship to the agricultural community of this country.

We have asked on many occasions that a change be made in the government program to allow Bill C-113, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, to be considered. However, on every occasion the government has indicated that it is prepared to deal with that bill only if the opposition will allow Bill C-110 dealing with the Farm Credit Corporation to pass through all its stages. I fail to see why the welfare and the economic well-being of farmers should be tied up by an attempt by the government to force its will on parliament. I fail to see, as a member sitting on this side of the house, any great advantage that the government can derive from forcing these bills through the house in the order it has indicated it wishes to proceed with them.

It is a very serious proposition for a farmer in the west faced with the hardship of muddy fields and grain so wet that it is not fit to be harvested. It is lying on the ground and there is so much mud that the heavy machines cannot harvest the crop. He wonders where the money is going to come from to pay his obligations to the bank, to the machinery companies and to the government, and where he will find the money to feed and clothe his family during the winter months. Surely we who sit here in parliament represent the people of Canada, and when we observe the tactics which the government has employed in regard to this legislation we realize it is certainly not serving the farmers of this nation.

I see no great difficulties involved in changing the order of these bills on the government program. We could have had Bill No. C-113 out of the way and have dealt at length with Bill C-110. We consider the action of the government nothing less than blackmail. What it said to us in effect was: If you wish to deal with Bill C-113 you must deal first with Bill C-110 in all its stages. May I assure you, Mr. Chairman, and through you the members of this house that we are not too concerned about whether this is an advantage or a disadvantage to the government. What we on this side of the house are concerned about is the welfare of the farmers whom we hope to serve. I feel that we are doing Canadian farmers and Canadians as a whole no service when we hold up solutions to economic hardship because of the jockeying for position which takes place in parliament.

So I wish at this time to place on the record of this house the opinion of the opposition that the government is doing no service to the farmers of this country when it takes action to prevent them from obtaining the monetary assistance they so desperately need.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be very wrong indeed for me to accept the remarks of my hon. friend who in fact said that the amendments to Bill No. C-110 are not important.

 $\boldsymbol{Mr.}$ $\boldsymbol{Danforth:}$ I did not say they were not important.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member did not say exactly that but his words were to the effect that some kind of blackmail was going on so far as the government is concerned with respect to the order in which these bills are coming forward. I would like to remind hon.

[Mr. Speaker.]

gentlemen opposite, in the most charitable terms at my command, that we regard the amendments to the Farm Credit Act in Bill C-110 to be of the greatest importance to the farmers of Canada from Newfoundland to Vancouver island. There is no particular magic in putting this bill ahead of any other bill because it is very difficult to ascertain the relative importance of these bills. Their importance depends on where in Canada one lives and what one's status is with respect to the provision of loans. I think it would be pretty hard to argue with a farmer in Nova Scotia, eastern Quebec, British Columbia or anywhere else, who has been waiting for his loan from the Farm Credit Corporation to be approved, that it is more important that legislation on cash advances on farm stored grain be approved first when he is waiting for increased capitalization. This is the situation that we face today.

The argument of hon. gentlemen opposite that the government has not given top priority to farm legislation is in complete contradiction of the facts. The facts are that until Tuesday, October 14, apart from the time required for the budget speech and for supply, which hon, gentlemen know is mandatory, all the time was used for debates on farm legislation. There is no logical reason why hon. gentlemen could not have made their arguments once. However, some hon. gentlemen opposite spoke four or five times on clause 1. They could have made their arguments and then let the house decide whether or not to pass the amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation legislation. These amendments could have been passed long before now.

I want to say that no wrong tactics, no blackmail and no pressure at all are involved. In case hon, gentlemen did not know it, I point out that the Department of Agriculture is responsible for agriculture all over Canada and not simply in the prairie provinces. We want all of these bills passed. We think it is essential. I know that hundreds of applications to the Farm Credit Corporation are now pending. We know now that the capitalization of the corporation, which is $40 million, will have expired before we can transfer funds that will permit us to approve these applications.

Mr. Horner: It has not yet.

Mr. Olson: It will if we accept these applications. We cannot proceed, in view of 29180—1334 what has been done in the past, until we have this increase in capitalization. Today the capitalization is $40 million and under the act we are not allowed to commit any more than 25 times that capitalization or $1 billion. More than that would be committed if the applications we have right now were approved.

There is certainly no intention on my part or on the part of the government to cause any delay. We had thought that long before now these amendments and the farm cash advances legislation would have been passed. However, the situation is such now that it is unfair to suggest any wrong motives are involved in trying to get these Farm Credit Corporation amendments passed. We need them. I have tried to explain; I have pleaded with the opposition that we need them. In any event, the house leader has said that at eight o'clock tonight we will deal with Bill C-113. Then hon, members will have an opportunity to debate it. I want to say that even if that bill were passed tonight it would not in any way change the fact that the Farm Credit Corporation amendments are extremely important to the farming community in Canada. We do not have any more money to make commitments until parliament approves the bill.

There are many other important amendments, changes in the rules, the criteria and the qualifications, that are also improvements in this legislation. The opposition will have to take the responsibility for holding up these improvements. I believe the opposition will also have to assume responsibility for one other factor, namely, that after the government has given top priority to the farm legislation the government cannot go on with it. If hon, gentlemen opposite are not willing to pass this legislation, that is up to them. They will have to take responsibility for it. There are other essential pieces of legislation dealing with other departments with which we have to deal. Hon. gentlemen must know that the budget has been presented and the budget debate is to begin soon. They should know too that there are important changes in various pieces of legislation related to the budget.

Mr. Horner: You are not filibustering your own legislation now, are you?

Mr. Olson: All these measures ought to be passed. We are willing to do everything we can to get this legislation through. We have to remember that top priority has been given these measures in so far as the time of this house is concerned and those who hold them up should take responsibility for doing so.

a question. He referred to the capitalization of the Farm Credit Corporation. There is a capitalization of $40 million and the corporation is allowed to commit 25 times that amount. Since the Farm Credit Corporation has now been in operation for a number of years and farmers have been repaying loans to the corporation, can the minister say if these payments go into a revolving fund or are they made to the Receiver General of Canada to go into general revenues? When this act was passed originally, was there a time limit on when the government would have to put more money into the capitalization of the Farm Credit Corporation?

Mr. Olson: Several questions have been asked, Mr. Chairman. It is a fact that the payments on loans that have been made in the past have been made to the corporation. Of course, the corporation has payments to make on loans from the Minister of Finance. If I understand the situation correctly, there is a steady increase in the amount of the assets of the corporation from the earnings on these loans that have been made.

Mr. Peters: Am I correct in assuming then that the Farm Credit Corporation really has a revolving fund from which it makes loans and that this fund is increased when payments are made?

Mr. Olson: I have been trying to listen to the questions and get advice on the precise techniques, which makes it a little difficult. What the hon, member is saying is true in part. It is a revolving fund because payments come back into it and a large portion of these payments is available for further loans. Of course, the fact is that applications for new loans far exceed the repayment of loans outstanding.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): We on this side, Mr. Chairman, are glad to see that the minister has finally come to the point where he is showing a little co-operation with the opposition. Had this been done earlier I am sure these two bills would have been passed long since.

The legislation we are considering today, a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act, while of the utmost importance to the farming industry in providing credit to establish and equip necessary economic units, does little to assist our farmers out of the dilemma in which they now find themselves. There is [Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Peters: I should like to ask the minister hardly any segment of the agricultural economy today that is not plagued with rising costs, lower prices and lack of markets. In addition to all this, farmers have been forced to meet competition that is either government subsidized or the result of overproduction of many agricultural commodities produced by other nations. In so far as grain is concerned, we see the corn producers of Ontario turning to the government in desperation and asking the government to do something about the importation of surplus corn from the United States. So far as I know, these farmers have had no reply to date.

> In so far as wheat and other grains grown in the prairie region are concerned, we have the opinion of the president of one of the leading grain companies in the west that there is little likelihood of the crop delivery quotas for this crop year exceeding five bushels per specified acre. Mr. Runciman, president of the United Grain Growers, also predicted that the best western farmers could hope for by way of income from grain sales until May of 1969 is $10 per acre. When one considers the cost of working the land, seed, fertilizer and harvesting, one hardly needs to mention that this amount falls far short of the cost of production. Yet somehow the farmer is expected to pay his living costs, interest and capital payments on land and machinery, taxes, repairs and other expenses too numerous to mention out of this inadequate income.

> If the farmers are forced either to sell their grain for feed at fire sale prices or turn to the production of beef, pork or poultry to supplement this meagre income, one need not be an agricultural expert to predict what will happen to the whole agricultural industry in the coming years. Under these circumstances there will simply be overproduction of every farm commodity, in the depression years the farmers had to grow more for less in order just to survive.

The proposed amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, which I am pleased to see the government has finally agreed to bring in at eight o'clock this evening, could be of some immediate assistance but certainly they are not a long range solution to our agricultural problems. The fact that the government has consistently refused to announce what will be the interest rate on farm credit loans or to give the house and the country any inkling as to what formula the governor in council will use under section 16A of the act in setting the interest rate leads one to believe that the interest rate for long term credit will be a fluctuating one. It also leads us to believe that it is not the government's intention to hold the rate at a level that our farmers can afford, but to squeeze the last possible dollar out of an industry that at the present time is fighting for its very survival.

I believe it is important to Canada that the agricultural communities in our country prosper along with other segments of our economy. To enable them to do so the government can play its part by continuing to make long term loans at 5 per cent interest.

We believe—and I think the minister will generally agree—that our farmers are among the most efficient in the world. However, I would point out to the minister that they are being forced to compete with producers in other countries whose governments have accepted farm subsidies as permanent policy. I would also point out that the interest that the government will be negotiating with the banks under the Farm Improvement Loans Act has no relation whatsoever to the interest that the government on its own should be charging the farmers for long term loans under the Farm Credit Act.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, it is not too much to ask the government to maintain a 5 per cent interest rate for long term loans to farmers. This would average out over the years at very little, if any, cost to the government. Action of this kind could be a very vital factor in helping the industry achieve stability and the necessary economic well-being.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take a great deal of time but I should like to make one or two points. The first is that I think the minister should have referred the bill to the standing committee. This would have presented an opportunity to review the effect of the bill upon our farmers who find themselves in a rapidly changing agricultural economy. Some of the farm organizations could have been asked to appear before the committee to outline the needs of our farmers today, giving the picture, as it were, from the other side of the fence.

I do not in any way question the administrative ability of those who have been in charge of our farm credit programs, but it is well on occasion to get the point of view of those who are participating in such programs, those who, one might say, have to carry the load and pay the bills. They should be given the opportunity to outline the good points and the points that require changing.

At the present time some of our farmers who have formed themselves into groups require tremendous amounts of credit which were unheard of a few years ago. At the same time, single farmers who are just starting operations require credit on different terms; they require supervision and money lent to them at a lower rate of interest.

Another point that concerns me about this bill is that from now on the interest rates will be set by the governor in council. This decision is going to be taken away from parliament, from those who sit in this house representing farmers. In this regard I take away nothing from the minister who, like me, represents the farmers in his constituency.

The farmer has made a very considerable contribution to the economy of Canada. I have in front of me a news letter published by the Department of Agriculture which goes to great length to detail what the farmers of Canada have done for the country as a whole. I was president of the Farmers Union and could not have done a better job in putting the case for the farmer. However, when one reads what the Department of Agriculture says the farmers have done for Canada and compares it with what the Department of Agriculture and the government propose to do to the farmers in the terms of this bill, one wonders whether hon, gentlemen opposite are sitting in the same seat. According to this newsletter the department has this to say:

To put it another way, an average hour's earnings by a worker in the manufacturing sector in 1946 bought 1.9 pounds of pork chops. In 1967 the same hour of work bought 2.8 pounds. Creamery butter (the number of pounds that can be purchased with an hour's wages), over the same period jumped from 1.7 to 3.4 pounds; eggs 1.4 dozen in 1946 to 4.4 dozen in 1967; milk 5.8 quarts to 8.3 quarts; potatoes 21 pounds to 43 pounds; and sugar from 8.3 pounds to 25.7 pounds. But at the same time the percentage of the consumer's dollar accruing to the farmer declined from 57 in 1950 to an average of 42 in the 1960's.

The newsletter goes on to say:

The non-farm sectors of Canada must be reminded that it is in their financial interests to promote the prosperity of the farmer.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, it is in "their" financial interests, not in the interests of the farmers. It goes on to tell our farmers:

You have become bigger and you have gone into debt to equip yourselves to do a proper job in the industry which you know best and which you alone can operate.

So, Mr. Chairman, we are looking to the farmers. Nevertheless we propose to increase the interest rates on the money the farmers have to borrow to continue to do these wonderful things for the consumers. The newsletter goes on to relate that our agricultural exports average about $1.8 billion a year and our imports about $1 billion, leaving a net trade balance in our favour of about $800 million, It concludes:

If agriculture is to take its rightful place we must have deeper mutual understanding between our rural and urban peoples, and this means greater appreciation of each other's strivings and achievements.

• (4:40 p.m.)

It is a wonderful document. I could go on to say more about it. It tells of the goods and services which farmers buy, the purchasing power that they channel into the industrial and manufacturing community of Canada. In these circumstances one would think that in a bill such as this our objective would be not only to make more money available but to make sure that it is available at rates which the industry could afford. One would judge by the statements made in this pamphlet that the industry which it describes cannot afford to pay high interest rates. That is the only con-clusion one can reach. This legislation gives us an opportunity to bring some real, long term aid to farming, if the government wishes to take it.

Those who borrow money under this act will be paying it back for a long time, most of a working lifetime. If a load is placed on them they will be carrying it for a long time. They have no other way out. I think we have not gone far enough in establishing a coordinated credit policy in our approach to this problem.

We read here that total farm productivity has increased by some 67 per cent in the last 24 years. Capitalization has increased by 50 per cent. Thirty years ago, 63 per cent of the input of farmers was represented by labour costs. Today that figure is only 25 per cent. These are some of the things we should be taking into account when we begin planning a credit program for agriculture, and that is what we are doing here. My concern is that the provisions set out in the present bill do not meet the requirements of the industry and that a credit program is not being planned and developed in a manner which will keep the industry in a healthy condition. We are facing tremendous changes not only in the size of holdings but in the type of production. The industry will need money with

So, Mr. Chairman, we are looking to the farmers. Nevertheless we propose to increase the interest rates on the money the farmers in difficulty; we are not doing them a big favour.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak again on clause 1 of the bill but after the severe scolding and lecture the minister gave members on this side of the house, I think the record ought to be cleared up. At the resolution stage, I asked the minister to agree to this bill being referred to the committee on agriculture. He did not assent to this course and his defence was that there were other and more important pieces of legislation before the house which had to be cleared up. He had to give way to the post office legislation.

If the hon, gentleman had referred this bill to the committee two weeks ago a lot of the information we require could have been obtained. Oh, I know the minister is about to rise to tell us that the committee had not been constituted.

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Chairman, I-

Mr. Horner: I listened patiently to the hon. gentleman and now I should like him to listen patiently to me. He may speak after I have finished, if he wishes to do so.

It is the duty of the minister to listen to what opposition speakers say and to take their advice into account. Instead, the hon. gentleman lectured us and told us to be good boys. He thought this legislation was needed, and we had to pass it. If we had allowed the government to pass farm legislation increasing interest rates by as much as 2 per cent, what would the farmers have said to us when we went home? They would have said: Why did you not advise the Minister of Agriculture that this is wrong and detrimental to the industry?

The minister gave a perfect example of what I mean by skating around the question when he replied to the hon. member for Timiskaming. He was asked whether the Farm Credit Corporation was set up on the basis of a revolving fund. Well, said the hon. gentleman, it was in part. Why did he not say yes or no? We have had the same kind of answers all along so far as farm legislation is concerned—hum and ho. How does the minister expect us to do our jobs when we are given that kind of assistance?

We are not attempting to hold up this legislation. At the beginning of the session we urged that the bill be sent to the standing committee but the minister would not agree. done so by sending the bill to a committee. It was said that the money was urgently He has not aided us with regard to the needed, but when the question was asked interest rates. More than two weeks ago we whether the fund was on a revolving basis passed the farm improvement loans bill and the minister told us that it was in part. He did not say how this affected the interest or how it affected the capital. He did not say yes or no. If he wishes to speed up the passage of legislation he would do much better to encourage and inform members of the opposition rather than scold and lecture them.

No one is more concerned about the agricultural industry than the members of this party or, indeed, all members of the opposition. The minister has it in his power to do something for the agricultural industry. We have hopes that with our assistance he will indeed help that industry. He must understand that we are here to help him, that we are here to encourage his department to do those things which agriculture needs, to assist him in his battles with cabinet colleagues over high interest rates, to strengthen his hand in his talks with the leader of the house as to the importance of this legislation and the need to place it before the house with some degree of continuity.

All last week the post office bill was debated in this chamber. It was discussed continuously until it was finished. The last time this subject was debated, clause 1 was ready to go through. Now we have spent another hour during which we have listened to a lecture by the minister in connection with who was holding up what. For a while, in fact, I thought he was filibustering his own bill. Now the question has arisen: which bill is of greater importance? The hon, gentleman knows that the cash advance legislation is of immediate importance to farmers. But the measure before us concerns long term credit and we would be doing less than our duty if we did not thoroughly examine any proposals affecting long term credit brought forward by this or any government. This is what we have attempted to do.

In his news letters the minister has described the grave conditions facing agriculture all across Canada. We are well aware of the fact that every day small farmers are going out of business and that the family farm is slowly disappearing. We have to examine this bill to see what it provides to stabilize the small farm, to halt the continual drift from the small farm to vertical integration.

since then have been waiting patiently for the interest rates and the formula governing them to be announced. The other day the Minister of Finance said he thought that bill had been passed by the Senate, but the Senate is still discussing it and the interest rates will not be announced until the act is proclaimed.

What are they waiting for in the Senate? They are waiting for the former hon, member for Assiniboia to make one of his roaring speeches in defence of the farmers. When I made inquiries they told me they were waiting for him to get back from the west to make a speech on that bill.

We have been given no real set of regulations. That legislation is practically following the same pattern of previous legislation. During the June election we were told that that legislation was supposed to have been dealt with last February, that the banks had agreed to an interest rate last February, and that everything was copacetic. But two weeks after the passage of that bill by this house no formula has been announced for the interest rates.

We are going to have to deal again with the question of interest rates on clause 5 of this bill. I can tell the minister right now that he will have a stormy session on clause 5 unless he is prepared to enlighten us to some degree on what the interest rates will be with respect to the other bill. Surely he does not want us to buy two pigs in a poke and then go back home and say, "We did the best we could but we did not know what we were passing and what the minister was asking for.". I would like the minister to clarify his "in part" statement with regard to the revolving fund and how he expects that this bill, particularly with the high interest rates he has in mind, will maintain small farms in existence. I would also like him to explain what is meant by the phrase in the regulations defining an economic unit. Again I ask the minister to explain his words "in part" with regard to the revolving fund.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Charman, it is somewhat analogous to a revolving fund. I want to be precise in the answers I give. It is not exactly like a revolving fund because the act sets out the maximum amount which the corporation The minister has not really aided us in our may have outstanding at any time with the concern with this problem. He could have Minister of Finance. At the present time that amount is $1 billion, 25 times $40 million,

This money is borrowed by the corporation on specific repayment terms. Loans are made to farmers on specific repayment terms and their repayments are used by the corporation to repay the Minister of Finance. However, the amount of the principal recovered from the farmers is much less than the amount of funds being lent so that the ceiling of $1 billion has now been reached. So it is true that in part-I have to say that to be accurate-some of this money can be used as a revolving fund whereby repayments that are made are available to be lent to other farmers. But my hon, friend will have to bear in mind that that is not exactly right because we have specific commitments to the Minister of Finance as well, and of course the amount of money that comes back from the farmers and is used for those specific commitments does not form part of a revolving fund from which new loans can be made. One cannot repay the Minister of Finance and lend that same money again, and so the answer I gave was absolutely correct.

Mr. Horner: Well, if it was correct it was understood by nobody but the minister himself. Will the minister clarify this point? If the ceiling has not been reached is the amount recovered from farmers immediately plowed back into other farm loans?

Mr. Olson: Any money that comes back from the farmers is used immediately to lend to other farmers unless-and this is the point my hon. friend missed-we need that money or a portion of it to meet a specific commitment to the Minister of Finance to pay off a loan from him.

Mr. Horner: I have the report here but I cannot find the table at the moment. For example, in 1951 and 1952 the government borrowed money at 3 per cent to be lent under the Farm Credit Act. I presume that a large amount of that money is now coming back to the government. If no loans had to be repaid to the Minister of Finance, am I correct in assuming that this money could be lent again to farmers?

Mr. Olson: I am advised that the $15 million which the corporation borrowed from the Minister of Finance in 1951-52 is repayable to the Minister of Finance in full in 1970, but all of the other loans that the hon. member will see listed on page 24 of the report are amor-

Mr. Horner: Does the corporation receive which is the capitalization of the corporation. an amount back from the farmers that is relatively close to the amortization due each

> Mr. Olson: These loans are amortized on different terms and so it is difficult for me to give a precise answer, but my hon. friend can be assured that whatever money the corporation has in excess of its commitments to the Minister of Finance is available for further loans to farmers.

> Mr. Horner: Now we are getting to the crux of the problem. How then can the minister say it is a revolving fund? In essence the government has not set up 25 times $40 million solely as a revolving fund from which money can be lent to the agricultural industry.

> Mr. Olson: That is why I had to qualify the answer I gave. It is analogous to a revolving fund but not precisely because of other commitments which the corporation has to meet. The request now is to raise the ceiling from $40 million to $56 million, which will increase the maximum amount to $1,400 million. As long as this is authorized by parliament as capitalization, when the corporation pays back whatever amount it happens to owe the Minister of Finance it will immediately have that much additional authorization. It may not have the money. It may have to go back to the Minister of Finance and borrow it again, but each time we raise the ceiling this raises the amount of capital authorized to the corporation.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: In that case we are by this bill raising the capital authorization by $400 million. Am I correct in assuming that all loans—I am referring to page 24—borrowed from 1953-54 onward, after this ceiling is in effect, would not necessarily have to be paid back at the new rate of amortization?

Mr. Olson: I am sorry; I do not quite follow the hon, member.

Mr. Horner: In other words, could this be applied as part of the increased capitalization?

Mr. Olson: Well, as I explained, the corporation is required to pay to the Minister of Finance a portion on each loan. We can obtain that information for you. The important thing is that they are amortized so that a tized loans. We pay a portion back each year. portion is paid back each year from the time they are taken out. But the paying back of any portion does not alter the new authorized limit which, hopefully, will be $1,400 million. That is there. We will have to go back to the Minister of Finance from time to time if we wish to have the maximum amount of money available for lending to farmers.

Mr. Horner: What I have been trying to entice the minister into telling us is what part of the available money lent under the act is in fact that portion that is revolving. I hope he will correct me is I am wrong, but I can only assume that about 98 per cent or 99 per cent of the money lent is not revolving and that perhaps 1 per cent or 2 per cent would be.

Mr. Olson: I think we must first of all agree on what we mean by revolving.

Mr. Horner: I mean a situation in which the Farm Credit Corporation does not find it necessary to obtain another loan from the Minister of Finance. It took the money it borrowed at 3 per cent, 3.2 per cent or 3.25 per cent, and so on down the line, 15 years ago. What portion of that is revolving? Is it 50 per cent? I said 2 per cent. I believe it is very important that the committee should know what portion of that money really is revolving so that we will have that information when we deal with clause 5 of this bill.

If the Farm Credit Corporation borrowed this money from the government at one time at a rate of 3 per cent, 3.2 per cent or so on down the line and has that money for its use—and I am sure the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo will agree with me in this regard—I would not think the corporation would attempt to milk the farmers with this money. I would not think the Minister of Agriculture or the officials of his department would charge an exorbitant rate of interest on this money.

Mr. Olson: I believe the hon, gentleman has overlooked the fact that the corporation owes the Minister of Finance very nearly $1 billion. In fact, all the money we have borrowed from the Minister of Finance has either been repaid or is outstanding. The money that comes back from loans from time to time is there for the corporation to use before a repayment is due. In respect of the corporation having any earnings, increased capital or surplus in excess of operating costs, there may be a little but it is so little that it cannot be relied on as capital to be lent again to farmers.

Mr. Horner: It would appear I was quite correct in assuming that a figure of about 2 per cent is in fact the percentage in respect of the revolving fund. Now the minister brings in the question of administrative costs. At page 20 of the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation for the year 1968, dealing with interest rates on money lent to farmers it shows $43,202,515 as the amount of interest earned on mortgage loans to farmers. Then it shows that an amount of nearly $42 million in interest on loans from the government of Canada is deducted. Then we come to the crux of the problem. If the amount of interest paid to the corporation by the farmers is greater than the interest paid to the government, then we have the problem of whether the government should finance the corporation in respect of the administration costs.

understand that the government finances the operating costs of the eastern feed board that was established a couple of years ago. Last year this board had operating costs something in the order of $500,000. A new Canada grains council is to be established in respect of which the government is to pick up the operating costs. The national dairy commission is another body in respect of which the government picks up the operating costs. In respect of crop insurance the government pays 25 per cent of the administration costs. I am very gratified that the government is picking up these costs in respect of other boards. Nothing is so important today as farm credit and therefore I would certainly like to think that in respect of this most important corporation the government would not shrink from its duty of picking up the administration costs of that board also. I would certainly recommend this to the minister. If this is done, then I see no real necessity for an increase in the interest rates as provided by this bill.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, may I refer the hon. gentleman to a line slightly farther down on that page where it states that the net operating loss provided for by the Department of Agriculture under vote 70 is $3,809,176.

Mr. Horner: I am quite aware of that figure. But we were talking about money. In answer to the hon. member for Timiskaming the minister said that this in part is a revolving fund. At that time I was aware that it was a very small part, but I wanted to draw this from the minister. Surely it is a very small part indeed. I said 2 per cent and no one denied that. I think I am being generous in saying it is that much. The minister's last remarks on the question of money were to the effect that the corporation owes the Department of Finance nearly $1 billion which must be paid back but that it can obtain further loans from the Department of Finance. Then I brought up the matter of interest. I did not deny that there would be expenses in respect of salaries, employee benefits, pension plans, travelling expenses, office accommodation and so on. This is all included in the figure of $3 million which the Minister read.

I mentioned five different agricultural programs which the government now assists with regard to their operating costs. Surely the government is prepared to finance the operating costs of this board which is much more important than the other five. I hope the minister will enlighten me in this regard. I will be content if the minister will say that the government believes it can finance the operating costs of the Farm Credit Corporation. If the government would say it has always felt that it should pick up the operating costs of the Farm Credit Corporation I would be satisfied. If the minister would say that I would no longer be concerned about the interest rates that he, through the governor in council, is going to attempt to charge. Before this measure carries perhaps the minister would comment and indicate whether the government is prepared to pick up the operating costs of this corporation.

Mr. Olson: As the hon, gentleman knows, any deficit that the corporation incurs is picked up by the Department of Agriculture. In 1958 it was $3,809,176.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I had the principle of this matter in mind, I realize that the Farm Credit Corporation is in effect a child of the federal government and as such the government has to pick up the losses. I wanted the minister to enunciate his policy in respect of the principle. Will the government pick up the operating costs of the dairy commission, the eastern feed board and part of the crop insurance program? Does it now or will it pick up the operating costs of the new grains council which the minister referred to as a hallmark in the history of agriculture last week in Winnipeg? I am not sure that is exactly what he said, but he made some such grandiose statement as to the purpose it would serve.

Let me say that the Farm Credit Corporation and its employees have done a tremendous job. It is far more important than the [Mr. Horner.]

other five boards put together. In respect of the future of the agricultural industry today, the question of available capital is of utmost importance. All I want the minister to say is that he believes in the principle of the matter. I would even agree to his adding the word "if", because I am in a congenial mood today. Will the minister say that he firmly believes that if the government has to it will pick up the operating costs of the Farm Credit Corporation?

Mr. Olson: I will go further than that, Mr. Chairman. I will say that this has been done ever since the F.C.C. has been in existence. Whenever there is a loss it is picked up.

Mr. Horner: Fine. I will accept that.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, when Bill No. C-110 was first discussed, I had considered it my duty to point out the unfairness of the preferential treatment granted to some companies last year under Bill No. C-191, because we know that the bill exempted them from the excise tax of 12 per cent when buying trucks, tractors and various equipment for forestry and mining operations, as well as when buying pipes and other articles needed to install and operate natural gas or oil wells.

However, Canadian farmers are still paying 12 per cent on the full purchase price of a truck and they also pay 12 per cent in hidden taxes on several farm machinery, whatever type of operation they have. Whether they are poultry farmers, pork producers, cattle breeders, they need appropriate buildings to operate adequately.

The farmer is still subject to the famous 12 per cent tax for all materials used for the construction and maintenance of these buildings.

There was a time when it was possible to disguise favours. Now, with mass media, farmers are well informed and know what to believe. In the present case, farmers in the riding of Portneuf which I represent are disgusted, because they are fully aware that Bill No. C-110 which the government is about to introduce is more or less a legislation that will fleece them. They are afraid of the consequences of the bill before us which will enable a few individuals to set up rates of interest.

Farmers realize that the Farm Credit Corporation, which has rendered many services in the past, is becoming a collection agency.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that since Bill He was speaking of the then minister of No. C-222 was adopted on March 21, 1967, the ceiling has been removed on interest rates on bank loans. By removing that ceiling, the government allowed the banks to do what they did, that is to lend at rates of 7, 8 and 9 per cent; and there is nothing to keep them from going up to 12 or 13 per cent.

Strangely enough, this bill singularly resembles Bill No. C-222. As you will recall, the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) found that bill objectionable at that time. Allow me to quote a few of his statements. We all remember how good a parliamentarian he was and how he made himself heard quite often on this side of the house. The present Minister of Agriculture said, on March 17, 1967, as reported on page 14125, and I quote:

There is only one aspect of this Bill No. C-222, Mr. Chairman, that I want to discuss, and that is the lifting of the statutory interest limit on bank loans. I was not a member of the committee, but I know this matter was discussed in the committee and I know some of the reasons advanced for authorizing the banks to go above the 6 per cent.

Now, we do not know what rate of interest will be charged to the farmers, that is left to the discretion of the minister.

It was suggested that all chartered banks in the country would then be able to provide a far wider range of credit requirements to Canadian citizens.

The minister added:

I do not accept that contention-

-and a bit further, the minister continued in the same vein.

It seems to me that all that is going to happen or the practical application will be that the banks will be charging-

-a higher interest rate-

-for all the loans they have out now at the statutory limit of 6 per cent. One effect of this move is simply going to be to raise the cost of living, the cost of operating at the manufacturing level and the wholesalers' level, so the ultimate result will be an increase in the price structure.

The honourable minister continues further as given on page 14128:

I suggest that many people seeking loans will pay more than 6 per cent on them after this bill becomes law.

The minister really knew what he was saying, he was really aware of what was coming

And I quote again:

The minister means that will not necessarily happen.

finance.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I am not naive enough to think that loans to entities of the kinds I have mentioned will remain at 6 per cent after this bill becomes law.

I close with the quotation of a statement made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture who said again at the time, as shown on page 14126 of Hansard:

If you include this increase in the cost of manufacturing operations and throughout the whole distributive system, then I suggest there will be a significant increase in the cost of living as a result. I think this is one of our primary responsibilities and something we need to be concerned about.

Mr. Chairman, will the bill now under consideration not contribute to an increase in the cost of living? We may wonder, after listening to the quotations which I have just read, if the ambition of the minister would not have impaired his judgment a little, in view of the fact that for the province of Quebec in particular, the net income per farm unit which amounted to $1,941 in 1951 decreased to $1,600 in 1967, because the price of the goods used by the farmers increased by 60 per cent, while the farm revenues increased by only 17 per cent.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this is hardly the time to raise the interest rate ceiling on the price of farm machinery, and, at this stage, I should like to remind the hon. Minister of Agriculture of the tremendous difference between eastern and western farming. In my opinion, the results seem better and easier to get in the west. Perhaps is it because of the type of breeding, the size of the farms? It may be the climate which helps tremendously.

At any rate, during my last trip to Alberta, I learned that the hon. Minister of Agriculture owned 250 heads of cattle. Since that has happened more than a year ago, it is possible that this number has increased. I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture, but I should like to remind him that the situation in which the eastern farmers find themselves, specially those who demonstrated on parliament hill a year ago, has grown even worse.

It is true that 8,000 producers of fluid milk can make a go of it, but it is quite different for the 50,000 producers who sell their milk to the processing plants. As concerns those who have delegated representatives to the hill last year, as I say, the situation is always the same.

the word of their wives and children, a few day, thus endangering their health.

Among those workers, we can mention the hon, member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté). Hon, members will remember that he was elected to this house in a by-election in the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska and that he looked unwell when he arrived here; in fact, he hurt all over. He was very tired and his absences from the house proved that he had been hospitalized several times. He is completely well today. His health has improved because he did what most farmers want to do. He got rid of his business. When he saw that he could not sell his land, it took him just three weeks to get rid of all his livestock. Three weeks after his election to parliament, he had sold 30 milch cows as well as 45 other young livestock for a total of 75 heads of cattle. If my figures are incorrect, I hope I will be called to order.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like government members to make their comments because up to now, with a few exceptions, we have only heard the opposition. A while ago, I noticed the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) in his seat. He represents a rural constituency. I would like him to tell us about the impressions of farmers in his region.

I also noticed, a moment ago, the member for Lévis (Mr. Guay). We know that Lévis is now a designated area. With the excuse that the industries are in bad shape, the legislation adopted to that effect will be used to bring benefits to the industries, by way of tax reductions or low interest rates. Now, will the farmers of Lévis have to pay higher interest rates to help for the industries of the same region to gain advantages?

Mr. Chairman, I would also like the hon member for Laval (Mr. Roy) to let us know his views. He is an agronomist or a rural economist, you may call him what you wish. He is still an employee of the Coopérative Fédérée.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I remind my hon. colleague that I am not an employee of the Coopérative Fédérée and I would ask him to withdraw his comments.

An hon. Member: It is quite unfortunate.

true that the hon. member for Laval is not a [Mr. Godin.]

Several of these farmers have succeeded in full-time employee of the Coopérative Fédébuilding a business for themselves, thanks to rée, but as he was one formerly and his services have been retained to take in charge have succeeded by working 18 to 20 hours a certains projects of the Coopérative Fédérée. I always consider him as a man who has excellent ideas to suggest to his fellowcitizens.

> Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laval can communicate with 340 co-operative managers in the province of Quebec, who in turn, can communicate with their 40,000 members in a few days. I would also like the hon. member for Laval to let us know the general views of most of the farmers of the province of Quebec. Are the farmers asking an increase in interest rates on their loans? Since the hon, member for Laval has always been at the service of farmers, is he still in a position to render them a service by stating their opinions in this house?

> Reference was made to a just society, Mr. Chairman, before the election. The Prime Minister is now considering the publication of a White Paper which will discuss the cost of living in Canada. Then we hear about inflation that must be stopped, about prices that must be stabilized. We also hear about stabilizing salaries but, in view of the situation, the Minister of Agriculture would have everything to gain by taking steps to prevent the farms from falling into the hands financiers.

> Before stabilizing salaries and profits in trade and industry, let us first stabilize the interest rates on the loans made to farmers. It is true that the government guarantees those loans, but it is also true that the government will not make any payments until the farmer has lost everything he owns.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, the Farm Credit Corporation has already rendered untold services, but today that same corporation is becoming a collection agency. That is why I ask the minister to reconsider his position and to amend the bill in such a way as to ensure the security of all those who will have to apply to the Farm Credit Corporation for help.

In short, Mr. Chairman, let us pay tribute to our dear departed, before election time, but in the meantime let us pass legislation to maintain the living.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I might not Mr. Godin: I apologize, Mr. Chairman. It is have risen at this time to make a small contribution to the debate but for the fact that for the last two or three weeks the minister in this respect. On September 30 we spent and the house leader seemed to take advan- two hours dealing with the resolution stage of tage of every opportunity they had, as did the the legislation concerning the Farm Credit Minister of Finance on one occasion, to indicate to the house and the country that the next day debate on the resolution was real reason the farm legislation had not been passed was that the opposition was holding it up. I think this is also the impression the minister tried to convey to the house a few minutes ago. He did this on several occasions during his journeys to the west; he made statements to the press to this effect.

For the sake of the record I want to mention a few things that have gone on. I think the minister will have to agree that we are not dealing here with one piece of legislation. I believe there was agreement between the government and the opposition that the four agricultural bills would be discussed at the same time. In other words, what we have been discussing has been four pieces of legislation. We have just gone through a period—

Mr. Olson: It is three pieces of legislation.

Mr. Korchinski: It is the farm improvement loans bill, the Farm Credit Corporation bill, the farm machinery syndicates credit bill and the cash advances bill.

Mr. Olson: Not the cash advances bill.

Mr. Korchinski: This is exactly what has happened.

Mr. Olson: To make it perfectly clear, Mr. Chairman, there was no understanding at all that the cash advances bill was to be included in the package of bills we were to put through at the same time.

Mr. Korchinski: Immediately after.

Mr. Olson: Yes, immediately after, and we have not yet reached the "after".

Mr. Korchinski: Then I withdraw the statement that the cash advances legislation was included in the agreement. But the fact is that the cash advances legislation was discussed in the house. The minister is trying to lump together all the time we have spent discussing farm legislation in the house, and I think he is including that bill or is leaving the country with that impression.

We have had placed before us four items dealing with farm legislation. The minister knows, because he was chairman of the rules committee, that at the resolution stage there is an opportunity to take up to five hours to debate a resolution. For the sake of the record I want to indicate what has happened Corporation. Shortly before six o'clock the resumed and after a total of three hours and forty minutes of debate the bill was introduced. On Wednesday, October 2, we spent one hour on amendments to the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. On Thursday we spent four hours and ten minutes on the resolution stage of the farm improvement loan legislation, and on Friday, October 4, we spent two hours on the cash advances legislation.

On October 7 we went on with second reading of the farm improvement loans legislation, followed by clause by clause debate the next day and the following day. We completed that on the third day by giving the bill third reading. On September 30 we spent two hours on farm legislation, on October 1 we spent two hours and forty minutes, on October 2, one hour, on October 3, four hours and ten minutes, on October 4, two hours, on October 7, two hours and ten minutes, on October 9, one hour, on October 10, four hours and twenty minutes and on October 15, three hours and twenty minutes. Out of the whole time spent in debate on these bills the minister took up four hours himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Korchinski: Yet the minister is trying to suggest to us that it is we who are holding up this legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Has the minister only spent four hours on them? It seemed like ten.

Mr. Korchinski: He was certainly longwinded. Yet he is trying to leave an entirely different impression. May I point out that on many occasions we have tried to extract from the minister some sort of formula. If he had come out with it and had given us his own thinking on the matter—never mind what the banks have in their minds-if he had given us an idea in February and told us what the formula was prior to June 25, we might have saved a lot of time in this house. I say now that we are quite prepared to pass the cash advances legislation after a limited debate. There are perhaps one or two suggestions we may want to make to improve that legislation, and the same is true of the farm machinery syndicates credit bill.

three items of legislation following the 24 hours of debate we have spent on them even though the minister took four hours of that time. If we divide the 20 remaining hours by the three items of legislation, we can say we have spent less than seven hours on each. Let us consider that there are three opposition parties, so each party got less than three hours. Surely we are entitled to that much time.

Mr. Horner: Sock it to him.

Mr. Korchinski: I see I have a good cheering section behind me. I think the minister was guite aware of the fact that we have introduced no less than three amendments on this side of the house hoping to be able to pin down the interest rate to something that the people would understand and not leaving it to the whim of the minister or of the banks. I think this is important.

I make no apologies to the house or to the country for taking some time in trying to keep down the rate of interest. We have made similar efforts with regard to farm credit corporation loans. One thing we know for sure is that interest rates will increase. Are we not to stand here and fight against it? Are we not to be able to make a presentation, as did the hon. member for Crowfoot a few minutes ago, to try to see whether the revolving fund could not be used to the advantage of the farming community? Surely we should have the right to do this. We know that prices of farm land will be inflated. This will be a natural consequence of the minister's action in placing a limit of $100,000 on farm credit corporation loans. Are we not to be able to stand in defence of the small farmers? Are we not to be able to say a few words in defence of retaining the old farming units which have been there for years and years? Surely we in the opposition must have that right. As a matter of fact, I am very surprised that no one on the government side seems to realize that these farm units will disappear. I think something is wrong there.

As the government takes over, the credibility gap is widening. For years the farming community did not always believe what was said by the Liberal party. I can remember the time when a former prime minister promised $2 for wheat in Saskatoon. Yet now we are only getting $1.20 for wheat in elevators. How can the minister and the house leader stand here and try to accuse the opposition of

We would be quite prepared to pass these knows this is a falsehood? I say that the credibility gap is widening and it will continue to do so unless the minister tells us what are the actual facts.

> I have every right to express my opinions when I see many United States corporations coming into this country and gobbling up much of our farm land. I wonder who will own this country in the end? It has been true for several years that corporations from the United States have been moving in. They have moved in as far north as my constituency. They are not too concerned about making money, or so it appears, because money is no object to them. They outbid everyone in the community and often they gobble up ten farms at a time. They hire entrepreneurs who operate the farms for them. At that point money is no object to them. What they are interested in is the final price of that land when they want to sell it. What the minister is doing by this piece of legislation is to let the land fall right into their hands.

At one time we were very concerned with trying to help the small farmers. The attitude of the Farm Credit Corporation was that when a farmer possessed more than a certain amount of land it was very difficult to get a loan from them. I also have had dealings with the corporation and I tell you that in its attitude it has gone back to the days when one used to have to prove to the old farm loan board that one did not need the money before being able to obtain it.

These United States corporations can write off any losses they suffer here against their operations in the United States. I do not know what is happening there and I have not gone into their books but I do think it is strange that these people can come here and operate with the type of equipment they havemoney is no object to them-and yet their purpose is clear to the government. Their purpose is to wait for the time when the value of the land will go up when they will make a profit on it.

The minister cannot convince me that this will not happen under this bill. Have I not the right as a member of parliament to take some time in debating the bill? I think I have. I think the minister should speak to some of his own supporters who will tell him the same thing, as I have. I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia is well aware of what happened in his area long before it happened in mine. I do not know how many times the minister has made arrangements with the holding up the legislation when everyone corporation, but I think everyone is making deals with the idea that eventually he will obtain money from the Farm Credit Corporation. One makes a down payment and signs an agreement and the money will be paid in six or seven months time, whenever the Farm Credit Corporation is ready to advance it. This is the type of agreement that all the people I know have made. They have been advised by their lawyers to do so. So it is not a question of having to have the money by tomorrow.

• (5:40 p.m.)

We could have sent this bill to a committee of the house. We could have discovered the weaknesses in the bill and improved upon it. Everyone knows that as soon as the snow falls no more money is paid out because all the claims are being processed. There are no more surveys of the land; the assessors do not go out after the snow falls. Why is the impression being left that we are holding up this measure when we know that during the winter the corporation just does a clean-up job on the applications? The agreements are signed in October but the money does not come through until well into May. This is what has happened in the past. There is no rush for this legislation, and the minister knows it.

On one occasion I asked the minister how much money was left in the fund and when it would be depleted. I believe he said in two or three weeks. If the farmers realized that something good might come out of a committee study I am sure they would not mind waiting two or three weeks more. Surely we should make this study in the interests of the farm community. Instead, the minister lectures the opposition about holding up this measure. We are bad boys.

The minister is not breaking new ground with this measure. This is old legislation and we are only adding to it. We know what has happened. We warned the former minister of agriculture what would happen when he increased the capitalization, and now we are increasing it again. The minister has his eyes open on some occasions but he likes to talk to the newspapermen and leave the wrong impression. I feel the minister will have to admit on this occasion that this measure could have been sent to a committee without too much loss of time and that the whole bill could have been improved. It is a lot of nonsense to leave the impression that we are holding up the measure just for the sake of holding it up.

Mr. Peters: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I can endorse many of the statements made by the member who has just spoken in so far as two points are concerned. The first one is that we should have sent the bill to a committee. Second, it is not really going to make that much difference to any farmer whether or not we pass the bill now or six months from now. The Farm Credit Corporation has a considerable rigamarole to go through, such as surveying the land and checking titles, and I have found that this sometimes takes a year. On some occasions it has taken two and a half years.

I am not particularly concerned whether or not we pass this measure now. I feel that the minister raised a number of very interesting problems this afternoon that should have been discussed in a committee. One of them relates to the capitalization of the Farm Credit Corporation. We are raising the capitalization from $40 million to $53 million, but I am not sure just what that means. I gather this is a little like setting up a bank. You put in some money and the bank can borrow against that. However, the corporation is not borrowing against that money because the corporation gets the money from the federal government; they do not borrow the money at all.

Mr. Olson: I can help the hon. member by simply telling him the statute clearly sets out that we cannot owe the Minister of Finance more than 25 times the capital.

Mr. Peters: I know that, but the $40 million is only a figure.

Mr. Olson: It is the amount parliament has approved and we are asking parliament to increase it; that is all.

Mr. Peters: I still do not see what relationship the capitalization has. We might as well have operated by designating the corporation as an agency rather than passing an act. The corporation could have been an agency of the Minister of Finance. Then, when the corporation received money it would have been paid to the Receiver General of Canada. This bill will not really solve any problems except the one caused by the fact we have committed more than the $40 million.

Let me give the minister an example. Let us suppose the corporation has a billion dollars out which it has borrowed from the Minister of Finance under the act. Obviously the corporation has some payments coming in. Suppose the corporation paid the Minister of Finance the amount of money it borrowed, but the amount of money coming back from the farmers was twice the amount it owed in that current period. What does it do with that extra money coming from the farmers on outstanding loans? It is my opinion that money would go into the consolidated revenue fund. We do not really have a revolving fund at all.

The minister said he was willing to pick up the costs of the corporation. We do not now pick up all the costs because the cost of the Farm Credit Corporation amounts to about $6 million. There is some profit on the money borrowed from the Minister of Finance, and that amounts to between $2 million and $3 million. The total assets will amount to about $3 million. All we are doing really is picking up half the operating costs.

If we had this bill before a committee we might consider, in the light of experience, changing the method of financing the Farm Credit Corporation. If we could establish a revolving fund, we might find we had done very well some years and less well other years. In looking over the amounts the corporation has borrowed from the Minister of Finance, I would say it did not do badly until about 1965. There have been periods when the corporation has borrowed at a greater rate than 5 per cent but most of the borrowing has been at a considerably lower rate than that. It was not until 1967 that the rate on the borrowing reached 6 per cent.

If the minister is not going to pick up all the operating costs but is going to pick up some through the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, he is going to be left with $3 million. This seems to be a fairly static figure in so far as the profits of the corporation are concerned. I am sure it would represent a little more than 1 per cent of the borrowings that will be made in the current year at more than 6 per cent. By using the profits of the corporation, we could reduce the rate to 5 per cent and we would not really be in need of this borrowing.

I think the crux of this bill hinges on the rate of 8 per cent. Some of my farm friends have said that it is really their business to decide how much they can pay for credit. I think it is not really their business because we have a responsibility not to pass legislation which will result in the elimination of many farmers. Since we made the Farm Credit Corporation fit in with the veterans farm legislation we have been working on a very close tolerance. If you look at the page of the corporation's report which indicates the age of the farmers applying for these loans, you will find that things are not going to get any better and probably will get much worse. The number of loans made in the age group 35 to 54 has increased by almost 80 per cent. If the maximum period of the loans is 29 years, the borrower will be at least age 64 and at the most 84 years before repaying his loan. I suggest that this means we are skating very close to the line. I point out that 2.7 per cent of loans granted to farmers over 60 have a 30-year repayment period. This means that these farmers will be in their 90th year before they make their last payment.

We have made large loans to the farmers to enable them to increase productivity. I suggest we have been very fortunate during the last 20 years in sustaining a very small cost to the Canadian public in administering these loans. The cost of operating farm credit I would say is less than $40 million during the last 20 years, which works out to less than $2 million per year. Therefore I suggest that the cost borne by the taxpayer is very small indeed.

When we were amending the Bank Act we were asked to free the ceiling so that the interest rate on loans could come down to 4 per cent. At that time the minister was on this side of the house and he was skeptical of that statement. Many of us are still skeptical because we find interest rates considerably above 6 per cent. The increase in interest rates has forced many people to borrow money at rates they cannot possibly afford. Bankruptcies are taking place in the service industries in agricultural communities. Every time I return home at week ends I find auction sales taking place. Farmers are selling out.

There are two reasons for these sales. A farmer may be capitalizing on his investment over the years and is selling his land to make a capital gain. However, many farmers are selling out because they have reached the stage where they must either liquidate their holdings or expand their operations. I have talked to many people engaged in the manufactured milk industry, farmers who are in their 60's and they are now told that they must buy a bulk milk cooler and embark upon bulk handling. This involves an expenditure of $20,000, and it is impossible to borrow $20,000 from the Farm Credit Corporation at 5 per cent. If the rate were even 6 per cent this would more than double the number of farmers involved, the percentage being so close to the margin.

The farmers have been asked to increase their production, which can only be done by expansion of holdings and enlargement of facilities. For this purpose they have been lent money. I think that the Farm Credit Corporation officials should be very proud of the job they have done in supervising credit, advising on credit matters, and in many cases discouraging people from borrowing money when it was obvious that the granting of a loan would be a catastrophe for the farmer concerned.

We as Canadians are obliged to have some say in the development and progress of the Farm Credit Corporation, and it is my opinion that no service will be done to small family farm units in Canada by allowing the minister to set the interest rate by order in council. If the minister is allowed to do so there will be the same relationship between the borrowing of money from the Minister of Finance and the loans that the Farm Credit Corporation will be able to make.

In 1961 when we discontinued the old farm loan board and set up the Farm Credit Corporation we decided that an interest rate of 5 per cent could be carried by the borrowings that the minister was making. The minister was borrowing money at that time at around 4 per cent, and this allowed for a 1 per cent margin to enable the corporation to make a reasonable profit on its operations. The minister is probably borrowing money today at 7 or $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. If the Minister of Finance is going to float his bond issue at 61 per cent over 14 years, then he will have to borrow money for the Farm Credit Corporation at a higher rate than that. This is going to mean that the farmer will have to pay about 8 per cent if the Farm Credit Corporation is going to continue to carry itself.

If the minister intends to carry the cost of the corporation's operations in the department itself, then obviously he will have to amend the bill. He has said he will carry it and the only way he can do so is by amendment. At the moment the corporation is carrying a large portion of its expenses from its own income. This has a great bearing on the rate at which you can borrow money, the rate at which you lend it, and the administrative cost of making such loans.

If single unit family farmers will be required to borrow money at more than 5 per cent interest, then the situation will be calamitous. To operate any other sort of business the turnover on capital investment must be at least three and a half times. No small business could operate today unless it could produce a gross return on capital investment of at least three and a half times. Our farmers are lucky to get a gross return of one half their capital investment. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), Indian Affairs—request for reconsideration of Departmental reorganization; the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Duquet), Northern Development—inquiry concerning the fate of the replica of the Grande Hermine; the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), Nuclear Power Agreement—Canada-France.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on the order paper, namely, notices of motions.

SHIPPING

SUGGESTED REVIVAL OF CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of reviving the Canadian merchant marine.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion has been on the order paper before and has been the subject of debate in the past. I have in mind the full development of an integrated merchant marine policy which would include the ownership, building and operation of ships in Canada. As I have indicated, we have discussed this subject on numerous occasions over the years. I pay tribute to Mr. Howard Green, a former member for Vancouver-Quadra, who was always an advocate of a Canadian-owned merchant marine and a full shipbuilding policy.

Suggested Revival of Merchant Marine

The current circumstances that bring this subject to the attention of the house are, first of all, the remarkable new concepts in transportation which are now becoming apparent. We envisage, as everyone knows, the shipping of bulk cargoes across continents and around the world on a land bridge basis. Western members have been talking about Roberts Bank. We have ideas about transportation and containerization in the east, and if we ever get the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) in the house we have questions to ask about what he is planning on the east coast in this regard.

The second circumstance which makes an approach to this subject imperative is the acute difficulty that the shipbuilding industry is experiencing in Canada. The industry has always known trouble but now it is facing an extremely tough situation. The west coast yards are in the doldrums and every yard on the east coast is faced with serious decisions. I mention now a matter which arose during the last election campaign because I think it gives us the key to the problem today. The yards along the St. Lawrence were forced to lay off men because of their failure to obtain contracts and because of the lack of government business. The minister of manpower at that time was faced with serious embarrassment. He was put on the spot. The Montreal Star of June 17 last reported the minister's reaction as follows:

Manpower minister Jean Marchand says Canada made a mistake in selling its merchant marine after world war II and that he will do everything in his power to restore it.

And, later:

"I will strive with all my might", concluded Mr. Marchand, "to revive the merchant marine of Canada."

This is the first occasion on which both the owners and the shipbuilders are substantially united in an approach toward a fully integrated marine policy. The history is well known. We know that in the early days of this country Canada was a great seafaring nation, the fourth largest in the world. My home town of Saint John, the constituency I have the honour to represent, was in the forefront. We were proud of the ships and of the ship owners in that city as they made contact with the entire world. The trend which became apparent was that in years when there was some government assistance and times were good, the shipbuilding industry was healthy. But when the government was uninterested and when economic conditions were adverse, the shipbuilding industry fell into the doldrums. The situation changed as the government's economic policies altered.

The story is best illustrated by an article which appeared in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of September 5. After recounting the history of Saint John the writer said:

It was a shift in the financial centre of gravity of Canada that moved shipbuilding inland with it, and in turn an evolution in trading patterns and national policies that virtually stripped Canada of its merchant marine.

A nation with one of the world's longest coastlines, more dependent than almost any other on foreign trade, has let both its shipbuilding and its shipping go by default to others.

One of the leading exponents of a creative policy in this regard is Mr. P. B. Papachristidis who is well known as a shipbuilder and operator. He outlined the problem when he spoke in Montreal on October 22, 1968, and I quote the following from his speech of that date:

What is needed in this respect is not the advise of experts. It is rather a profound soul-searching by our legislators, governmental officials, and the people of this country. We should ask ourselves: Is it possible for all other nations to be mistaken in their considerations of a national merchant marine? Or perhaps we Canadians are wrong? The investigation and the study of this problem are as simple as that.

In the course of another speech he said that Canada's difficulties in this area arose "because we do not have a maritime conscience." Another way of putting this would be to say we are a nation of landlubbers. The figures of employment in the shipyards reveal a desperate situation; they show a decline from 17,000 to about 9,000 now. The point has been reached at which Canada has a marine fleet smaller than that of Switzerland. Indeed, Mr. Onassis is operating more ships than the Canadian navy and merchant fleet combined.

I say that despite its recent announcement—and I realize that hon. members on the government side will be standing up in their places to talk about the extended study of the merchant marine question which is going on—the government is stalling once again in connection with this matter. They have had review after review. Two or three have been going on within the department. The transport commission has been studying the subject. And now they are to carry out yet another investigation.

As Mr. Papachristidis has said, this is not the time for experts. It is a time for the legislators to stand up and be counted. Another thing which annoys me in connection with the Canadian Transport Commission is that they have their own expert staff-one of them is a former member of this house-yet immediately something crops up they engage the services of a group from Toronto to act as their experts on this subject. To me, this does not add up. I believe we should follow a fully integrated marine policy with owners, operators and workers sharing in it equally. There should be full consideration of the shipping, ship repairing and shipbuilding industries. We must consider the training of our seamen. We must adopt the full measures necessary to meet our navigational problems on the coast. I include in this marine policy the great lakes and deep sea problems.

• (6:10 p.m.)

The pilotage commission has made its report. Legislation of a piecemeal nature is forthcoming which I understand refers to the great lakes. While this is a help it will not do a complete job. As I mentioned, the Canada Shipping Act is under review, and an expansion is going to take place in our study of merchant marine matters. But when are we going to hear the results? I suggest it will be 1970 before these matters come up again. The workers in Quebec, the maritimes and on the west coast must have something more than reports, reviews, studies and research.

When the former minister of manpower and immigration was under pressure during the recent election campaign, when people were breathing down his neck and he became excited, he made certain promises. That was a horse of a different colour then. Now the Liberals have been returned to office and to take the pressure off they call everybody together and say, "We have the answer. We will simply expand the study now taking place. That will give us two or three more years of grace. Hopefully these shipyard workers will go to another industry and that will be the end of the matter."

I put forward five suggestions that could be considered. They have been proposed by others as well. First, I suggest that there be a concerted long term government policy. The shipping industry and the shipbuilders have to know where they fit, even if it is not the best place in their own interests.

Second, there must be full protection of their interests. The Canadian people involved in this segment of our economy must at least be placed in a competitive position with foreign interests. This applies to seamen, to pilots, to shipbuilders and to the difficulties now being experienced on the great lakes Suggested Revival of Merchant Marine with foreign interests, particularly iron ore companies who have moved in with their own vessels.

Third, we would require a new policy of strict nationalization so far as ship construction is concerned. We must have a greater appreciation of the difficulties of shipbuilding. Every effort must be made to ensure that all companies deriving income of any nature from our Canadian economy be required to build their ships in Canada. I take a hard line on this. I think that the C.P.R., Shell Oil, and other companies that are going outside Canada to have their ships constructed should be required to have their ships built in Canada. You may call this a restrictive policy if you like, but many of these companies are getting direct transportation subsidies and I think it should be incumbent upon them to build their new vessels in Canada.

Fourth, I think that a full policy of depreciation, perhaps upwards of 200 per cent, is one of the best answers in the interests of the shipbuilders. I understand that for the first time ship owners and shipbuilders are in substantial agreement that a depreciation policy would be in the long term interests of both.

Fifth, I believe that low cost financing should be made available to those engaged in any sort of marine activity. Low cost money is available for many other segments of the economy. We are at present discussing bills to assist the agricultural economy. We are all in favour of them. I ask, why cannot shipbuilding and shipping operations have the same assistance through low cost financing, with government guarantees?

These are my suggestions. Hon, members will recall that I have placed them before the house previously because this subject is a particular interest of mine. In September of this year I read an interesting article in Ship-Shore News headed "Canada Should Build Our Own Merchant Fleet." It read in part:

During the second world war, Canada showed that it still had a maritime potential second to none. Its sailors earned the admiration of the world's navies.

There is no hidden "mystique" about the ocean that should give us any feeling of incompetence of the globe's trade routes.

All branches of shipbuilding, water-borne transportation and industry served by it, port authorities, and the fishing industry should unite to persuade Ottawa—where sits the government of the world's second largest country—to encourage the building of a Canadian merchant fleet.

I sum up by saying we must have a fully integrated marine policy. New concepts of Suggested Revival of Merchant Marine transportation and the serious losses being experienced in our shipbuilding industry bring home this need more urgently than ever. The ship owners and shipbuilders are united, except perhaps on some details, with respect to an approach to the problem.

I have pointed out the history, the good times and the bad, the ups and the downs. I have said that a definite government assistance policy is needed. Our shipyards on the east and west coasts are in desperate shape. We simply cannot stand by and wait. I have put on the record the promise made in Quebec by the former minister of manpower and immigration during the heat of the election. His was one promise that was made clear during that campaign.

Expanding the present review with another commission and hiring another bunch of experts does not make sense to me. We do not need the experts. All we need are legislators, hon, members who will stand up here tonight and be counted on this matter. When government members get up to talk out this motion with their set speeches, as we know they will, as we know they have done for years, I suggest they should think twice, particularly those of them from Quebec who have an obligation to carry out what was said during the election campaign. I suggest that they should stand up and demand that this policy be referred to the transport committee where we can review the entire matter and make our recommendations in the proper way.

Mr. Lachance: Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Bell: Yes.

Mr. Lachance: In order to revive the Canadian merchant marine, does the hon. member favour a system of subsidies to Canadian ship owners instead of to the shipbuilding industry?

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that question because I know he is interested in this subject. I do not have the final details. I have been careful about that. I do not know whether we should put the figures in a computer and come up with something. I merely say, and I welcome this opportunity to repeat myself, that the ship in substantial agreement on a large term policy to meet the marine problems of this counowners are also shipbuilders. This situation cost, as estimated by ship owners, is in the exists along the St. Lawrence and in the maritimes.

• (6:20 p.m.)

The details do not bother me. I think low cost money and some method of depreciation are the answer. I am not afraid of the subsidy that will be involved. All other nations subsidize their merchant navies. We will have to subsidize this industry. At present we are subsidizing practically every other industry in the country. It is ridiculous for us to require that our shipbuilding industry and shipping operations must stand on their own two feet. I have taken the liberty of answering at length in the hope of being helpful to the hon. member.

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park): Mr. Speaker, before commencing my submission I would indeed be lax if I did not commend the hon, member for presenting the motion which is before us. I understand he has brought forward similar motions on many other occasions, but obviously to no avail. I believe that finally his efforts shall bear fruit.

Canada's merchant fleet has had a long, shaky history, sometimes successful and many other times troubled. Initially wooden sailing ships were built in Canada by both the French and English settlers mainly for the purpose of fishing and for use in local trade because of the maritime policies of both the French and English régimes. When they were permitted to trade with foreign countries the merchant fleet increased more rapidly. The development of central Canada and settlement of both the western part of the United States and Canada, together with the construction of Canadian railway lines, helped stimulate shipping and ship construction especially on the great lakes.

The peak of Canadian shipping was reached in 1880. Since then there has been a constant decrease until at the present we have only one ocean-going vessel under Canadian registry. This has come about because of the present legislation whereby Canadian coastguard trade is open to vessels on the registries of all commonwealth countries on the same terms as vessels of Canadian registry. This has made it difficult for ships of Canadian register to compete. owners and shipbuilders are for the first time Because of the various subsidies, tax credits, and so on, the cost of operating a vessel of United Kingdom registry is substantially less try. Whether they differ in detail or not, I than the cost of operating a similar vessel think we should remember that many ship under Canadian registry. The difference in vicinity of $100 million. This has discouraged Canadian registration. It has created chartered foreign flag shipping which has been a burden to our nation in the form of an adverse trade balance estimated to be $125 million annually. This is reported in the "Shipping Register and Shipbuilder" for 1963. This amount has increased in recent years.

I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Vancouver Sun of Tuesday, February 13, 1968, written by Ron Rose, Sun staff reporter. It reads as follows:

Advocates of a merchant marine say it costs Canada $150 million a year for outside carriers of our exports and imports.

They also say there are other compelling reasons for a merchant fleet: providing careers for young men attracted by the adventure of life at sea; the need for a sea-lift in combating brush-fire wars of the hydrogen bomb stalemate; and not least, the question of national prestige.

Even the emerging nations are busily building fleets of their own.

If these funds which I have stated are being lost to foreign trade were spent directly to subsidize Canadian ocean shipping lines, this would be a major stimulation in the bringing about of a healthy Canadian industry. The present policy represents a gift to foreign interests from which the Canadian economy derives no benefit.

Figures compiled from Lloyd's Statistical Register show that distribution of world shipbuilding has undergone some significant changes. Since 1938 Japan has increased its share from 14.6 per cent of the total to 22.7 per cent in 1961, a relative increase of 50 per cent. Sweden's share has increased from 5.5 per cent to 9.3 per cent, a 70 per cent relative increase. Britain, on the other hand, has dropped from its 1938 percentage of 34 per cent to 15 per cent in 1961. Germany has come close to regaining its prewar share of 15.8 per cent. Canada is not even listed.

At this time I should like to make some comment about the merchant fleet of the Soviet Union today. I wish to refer to an article which appeared in the Gazette of Monday, January 8, 1968. It reads as follows:

At present the Soviet merchant fleet includes 1,300 vessels with a total tonnage of over ten million tons. In the main, these are new ships—80 per cent of them were built in the last decade. The U.S.R. fleet is the sixth in the world, and is steadily being replenished with new, technically improved ships. Its cargo carrying capacity is increasing by about a million tons a year.

An important role in the replenishment of the Soviet merchant fleet is played by home shipbuilding yards, which have of late built a large series of dry cargo ocean-going turbine ships.

Suggested Revival of Merchant Marine

We might compare that with what we are doing in this regard. The building of a merchant fleet I believe would be a big shot in the arm for the shipbuilding industry and all the allied industries that depend on it. It would provide for expansion of our share of world trade and would play a creative role in enlarging Canada's exports. It would permit opportunity for the technical renovation of an important sector of our heavy industry and provide useful and much needed employment for thousands of Canadians. We have all heard of the disparity in respect of the eastern seaboard. This would offset some of this. As previously mentioned, I submit that this would help liquidate our chronic deficit in our balance of international payments, one of our major economic problems.

Now I should like to refer to an article related to a statement made by Leonard McLaughlin, president of the S.I.U., which verifies the statement I have made. This appeared in the Gazette of Thursday, April 25, 1968, and reads as follows:

A number of Canadian companies were interested in bringing their ships under Canadian registry, and such a move would bring benefits in taxes, employment, gross national product and balance of payments.

"We think it is fantastic that a trading nation of our calibre...has no ocean-going fleet at all."

Canada, which geographically is bounded by the Atlantic, Pacific and Arctic oceans, as well as having an inland network of lakes and rivers, needs a deep sea merchant marine of satisfactory tonnage at least sufficient to assure a more substantial transportation of its exports and imports.

I am happy to say that I believe our government is aware of this problem and, through the water transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission, has recently embarked upon a feasibility study of a deep sea merchant marine. This study was authorized by a cabinet decision and elaborated on in a press release of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) dated August 27, 1968. This study is not unlike corresponding studies proposed by the committee on shipping of the United Nations conference on trade and development; nor is it unlike the United States study which is currently under way and which is reported in the Journal of Commerce of Thursday, June 20, 1968.

In this study it is suggested that consultants be engaged to supply quantitative and qualitative information with regard to "in house" expertise on all aspects within their competence and likewise secure evidence of Suggested Revival of Merchant Marine effective access to external expertise in so far as this may be necessary. It is felt that probably external needs are most likely to arise in the practical commercial aspects of international shipping operations. Central to the whole project will be a cost-benefit study which would analyse the potential benefits accruing to Canada from the operation of a deep sea fleet in terms of tax revenue, employment both ashore and afloat, balance of payments, creation and preservation of technical and managerial skills, and evaluation of the benefits in relation to the cost to the nation in terms of possible financial assistance. In the course of the examination, the policies of foreign nations in respect of subsidization of ocean shipping by direct grants, preferential tax treatment and other forms of financial and commercial incentives shall be considered.

• (6:30 p.m.)

The terms of reference as set out are as follows:

The purpose of the study is to assist the Canadian Transport Commission in the discharge of its statutory responsibility to:-

"inquire into and recommend to the minister from time to time such economic policies and measures as it considers necessary and desirable relating to the operation of the Canadian merchant marine commensurate with Canadian maritime needs;"

Its essential requirements are:-

(a) To measure the competitive potential of a privately owned Canadian flag merchant fleet in Canadian ocean trades.

(b) To estimate the public cost of practicable means of encouraging development of such a fleet to different levels of participation.

(c) To evaluate the resultant benefits to the Canadian economy of any such development.

It is in five parts, Mr. Speaker. First, there is a cargo flow study; second, a vessel type study; third, a cost study which is divided into two sections, namely a private sector and a public sector. The fourth part is a carrying capacity study, and the fifth is a cost-benefit study, which is the focal point of this whole series.

Communications on this subject, for my hon, friend's information, should be in the hands of the water transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission by not later than November 15.

It is regrettable that this proposed study does not include, as part of its subject matter, outside the scope of the section of the National Transportation Act in pursuance of which the study is being conducted. I refer especially to section 15(1) (f).

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think we have a quorum in the house at the present time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I shall have to seek instruction.

For the edification of the house, and more particularly for the hon. member who has the floor, I should like to read citation 60(1) from Beauchesne's fourth edition as follows:

Any member may direct the Speaker's attento the fact that there is not a quorum present. The Speaker will proceed at once to count the house, and if there are not 20 members present, including himself, the Clerk will take down the names, and the Speaker will then adjourn the house without question first put until the usual hour on the next sitting day.

I now direct the Clerk to take a count.

And on the count being made, more than 20 members were declared to be present.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the hon. member for High Park to continue.

Mr. Deakon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I was interrupted I was referring to section 15(1)(f) of the National Transportation Act which states:

(f) inquire into and recommend to the minister from time to time such economic policies and measures as it considers necessary and desirable relating to the operation of the Canadian merchant commensurate with Canadian maritime marine,

The counterpart of this provision appeared in the former Canadian Maritime Commission Act, which included a reference to the shipbuilding industry. It should be noted that in its re-enactment in the National Transportation Act, all reference to shipbuilding was omitted. The effect of this omission was to remove from the Canadian Transport Commission the direct statutory responsibility for shipbuilding.

I respectfully submit, nevertheless, that notwithstanding this statutory handicap, steps should be taken by the government to enable the proper authority to inquire into ship construction in Canada. If this were done, together with the present study by the water an inquiry into ship construction. I have transport committee and the recent initiation inquired about the reason for this and have by the federal government of a thorough been informed that in view of the water study of Canadian maritime laws, we would transport committee such a study would be be able to revive the Canadian merchant marine; protect Canadian interests and be reinstated in our rightful position as one of the world's major users of shipping.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to speak on the motion which has been presented to the house with considerable eloquence and conviction by my colleague the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell). I feel there should be no difference in opinion on the part of hon. members of this house in respect of the advisability of passing this motion, which simply calls upon the government to consider the advisability of reviving the Canadian merchant marine. Surely no one would argue that this is in any way an indication of an opinion that would be embarrassing to the government.

As an hon, member who represents a constituency in an Atlantic province, partially located on the Atlantic ocean, I have a great interest in the general well-being of the shipping industry and the seafaring industry. If there is any doubt as to whether we are qualified as a seafaring nation so far as the Pacific and Atlantic are concerned, the minute we consider our inland waterways, the St. Lawrence river and the Great Lakes that doubt must immediately disappear. Surely then we become a seafaring nation at least in our own estimation.

If I am correct in this assumption there should be no question in the mind of anyone, or any doubt about the desirability of the government's obtaining the opinion from this house. Surely there should be no question about the necessity of talking this motion out, so as to avoid a vote. Two members of the administration are listening at this time to the expressed opinions of hon. members. I should think this would be something the government would desire, rather than not wanting an opinion on the subject.

There is one other point upon which I am sure we can agree, and that is that we are an exporting nation. A large portion of our exports from the Atlantic and Pacific coasts must of necessity be moved by sea. Since these goods must be transported by the sea, surely a consideration of the advisability of reviving the Canadian merchant marine is a matter in respect of which we can all find agreement.

The hon, member for Saint John-Lancaster spoke with great knowledge about this subject, as he has done before and likewise, the hon. member who spoke immediately before me indicated that he has done his homework. talked out. The house leader for the govern-

Suggested Revival of Merchant Marine resolution. It seems to me we should forget the fact that this is a private member's motion and realize that there is no necessity, as suggested by an hon. member, to talk it out.

• (6:40 p.m.)

I appeal to the members of the government who are listening tonight to let this matter come to a vote. Surely to goodness they are not going to allow this motion to be talked out, when-in my opinion-there is no need for any difference of opinion in this respect. If hon, members opposite would examine the resolution, they would find that it simply calls for the government to consider the advisability of reviving the Canadian merchant marine. What is wrong with considering the advisability of reviving the Canadian merchant marine? I have great respect for the two members of the government within sound of my voice tonight, and I hope they will be glad to take back to their colleagues the message from the house that the government should consider the advisability of doing something that in my opinion could not help but be in the interests of all Canada.

It is not my intention to delay the house and speak at length on the details of what might be done in this regard. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster has gone into the details, as have previous speakers. The principle involved is one on which there should be unanimous agreement in the house, namely, that it is advisable to consider the reviving of the Canadian merchant marine.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman. could I ask the hon. member a question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. Flemming: Of course.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have a quandary, and perhaps the hon. member can assist me. While I recognize the merits of his proposal, I know there are certain viewpoints on this side of the house that favour his point of view, and I also know that a number of hon. members wish to express their views on this question. The hon, member does not wish me to cut them off, does he?

Mr. Flemming: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not have that in mind. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster seemed to be of the opinion that the resolution of necessity must be talked out. It seemed to me that we should by mutual consent decide that it would not be He knows his subject and is supporting the ment is here, and he is a gentleman of great Suggested Revival of Merchant Marine influence, although sometimes his influence on this side of the chamber is not as great as it is over there. There is of course a variation in the degree of influence he exerts.

I see no reason why we should not take a vote on this motion. Why is it necessary to do something because it has been done for the last 100 years? I see no reason why we should do something only because it has become the custom that a private member's motion be talked out; in other words, that it must be defeated. This is the effect of what happens with a private member's motion, because once it is talked out it goes to the bottom of the list and is never reached again until you are greyer than I am. Therefore I hope we will have a vote on this motion.

Mr. Richard J. J. Durante (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that I agree this is a very important question, but unfortunately the members of the party to which the originator of the motion belongs do not consider it to be a very important question, because there are only two members of that party in the house at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Durante: I would like to commend the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) on the intent of his notice of motion, which I personally feel has considerable merit. However, it should be clearly understood that although at this time I want to go on record as supporting the intent of the motion, I do not necessarily support the idea that the Canadian merchant marine be revived. I say this because I wonder whether this is not really what the hon, gentleman has in mind in presenting his motion.

The notice of motion states that the government should consider the advisability of reviving the Canadian merchant marine. I would like to inform the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster, and the house, that this government is presently conducting a Canadian deep sea merchant marine feasibility study. I would like to make reference to a press release dated August 27, 1968, in which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) announced an expansion of studies already launched on the question of a Canadian deep sea merchant marine.

It is my firm personal opinion that this government should not embark upon any prochant marine, unless that program is truly with which the program may deal. I am pleased that this is the policy of this government, which is confirmed in the terms of reference for the Canadian deep sea merchant marine feasibility study. These terms of reference include, among others, the following: First, to measure the competitive potential of a privately owned Canadian flag merchant fleet in Canadian ocean trades; second, to evaluate the resultant benefits to the Canadian economy of any such development.

The feasibility study will compare the daily cost of owning and operating Canadian ships to the daily cost of similar, typical foreign flat ships engaged in the same trades. I am confident that when the results of this study are received we will be in a much better position to determine whether we should revive the Canadian merchant marine. This government should ensure that as a nation we concentrate our efforts on those areas in which we are best suited. For example, Mr. Speaker, would we be able to be as competitive in the world market if we had our own merchant marine? Would the costs of building and operating our own merchant marine permit us to remain competitive on the world market, or would such costs make it necessary to increase the price of our commodities to such an extent that our export trade would suffer? Surely we must dedicate ourselves to increasing export trade, not decreasing it.

Then again, Mr. Speaker, there is little point in having our own merchant marine unless we use it to export our own commodities. To what extent would we lose out in world trade if such were the case? Would our wheat and lumber exports, for example, be as extensive as they now are if we could not guarantee, as we now do in many cases, that those commodities will be shipped in the vessels of the purchasing nation? There is every evidence to indicate that some countries are experiencing difficulty in exporting their commodities because they insist that those commodities be shipped in their own vessels. The consequence is that eventually the goods are given away at fire sale prices or are permitted to stockpile completely out of proportion.

Mr. Speaker, for fear that it may be misconstrued that I am unalterably opposed to a Canadian merchant marine, I had better present my views in favour of such a move but, I gram, including revival of the Canadian mer- must reiterate, in favour only if it is economically feasible for us to participate. Neverthebeneficial to the Canadian people or beneficial less, regardless of the feasibility study report to that segment of the Canadian economy results which, by the way, are expected in 1970, it seems incongruous to me that a country such as Canada, with one of the world's longest coastlines, does not have an effective merchant marine.

Mr. Bell: Hear, hear.

Mr. Durante: Furthermore, a nation like ours, more dependent than almost any other on foreign trade, should never have let its shipbuilding and shipping go by default to other nations. This situation is even more lamentable in view of Canada's proud history as a seafaring nation. In the years following confederation, the statistics show that Canada ranked fourth among the ship-owning nations of the world. As recently as the second world war, Canada ranked third behind the United States and Britain as shipbuilders.

Today ships of foreign registry have captured significant portions of our trade, and to counterbalance the economic disadvantages of owning and operating a merchant marine, which I cited earlier, I would like to suggest that for every ton of shipping that is transported in other than Canadian vessels a certain number of jobs for Canadian seamen and a certain number of Canadian dollars are sacrificed.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I reiterate that I think it is unfortunate that since 1947, when Canada's ocean-going merchant fleet numbered 155 vessels, in has been reduced to only four vessels with a gross tonnage of 65,000 tons. I hope that the results of the feasibility study will indicate that it is economically advisable to place Canada once again in its correct posture regarding shipbuilding and shipping.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to speak in support of the notice of motion, and I was interested to hear the remarks that have been made by hon. members on both sides of the house. I do not rise tonight as an instant expert on the problems of either the merchant marine or the shipbuilding industry, but I think in this debate we have heard a sufficient number of views to suggest that perhaps this subject is of great interest to a great many Canadians. As a member from the west coast of Canada, which formerly possessed a sizeable and flourishing shipbuilding industry, I have some real interest in the question. I met by Japanese ships. What kind of ships would like to tell the house also that on a are these? Certainly they are not the 10,000

Suggested Revival of Merchant Marine campaign this issue was raised more than

I do not think it is any longer true today that our pool of skilled men from the industry can remain in Canada if we do not have a shipbuilding industry to employ them. They are constantly being drawn away to the United States. For example, frequently in Vancouver newspapers we see advertisements encouraging skilled people in the shipping trades to go to Seattle where they will find employment.

We do not have employment for these people to the same extent we once had, and I think this is a sorry situation. I realize that the development of the Canadian merchant marine is not the same as assisting the shipbuilding industry on the Pacific coast or anywhere else in Canada, but the fact remains that since world war II the Canadien merchant service has been gradually disappearing. The way in which it has been allowed to atrophy is shameful. Almost any kind of manufacturing industry in Canada should be treasured, because most of our exports-and we are among the world's most active traders -are in primary products, and they are usually less than one tenth as productive in terms of employment of workers than our secondary industries.

Our Pacific coast region is developing very substantial trading arrangements with Japan. I have figures for the last three years which I should like to read from the Canada Japan Trade Council Newsletter in which it is said that Canada sold to Japan in 1965 goods to a value of $316,187,000, in 1966 to a value of $393,892,000, and in 1967 to $572,156,000. On the other hand Canada bought from Japan in 1967 goods to a value of $304,678,000. What I would like to know is how much of this trade is being carried in Canadian ships. I would hazard a guess that not an ounce of it is.

Members of parliament have undoubtedly heard about the controversy surrounding the Roberts Bank superport. Federal and provincial funds have been poured into it and all railroads are interested, and ready to turn the whole planning of the mainland upside down to get the business. What is the business? It is $1 billion worth of coal that is to be sold to Japan in the next 15 years. Canadians are going to build a brand new port, extend rail lines and change the whole character of the region to deliver B.C. coal to a B.C. port to be great number of open line shows during the ton Liberty ships that we saw during the war.

Suggested Revival of Merchant Marine These are super carriers up to 100,000 tons, or ten times the size of the Liberty ships. On the drawing boards are ships almost five times that large. Who will build these vessels? Not us. Who will sail in these vessels? Not Canadians. Perhaps we may be able to specialize in building certain kinds of ships. We cannot beat the Japanese in all types of shipbuilding but we might be able to specialize. The building of grain boats and off-shore drilling rigs, and generally vessels for the transport on inland waters of grain and ore should be encouraged. We have allowed our exports to be carried on foreign ships, and ships that are hiding their true ownership under a registry of a country other than Canada.

In the last five years we have seen our employment in the shipbuilding industry on the west coast dip from 2,700 to less than 700. Why have we allowed this to happen? I am not interested in allowing our country to be limited to the role of an adjunct or an ancillary to the United States. Why can we not emulate our great good neighbour to the south in developing and protecting our merchant marine and in seeing to it that at least half our trade is carried in Canadian ships manned by Canadian crews?

I do not wish to be guilty of talking this motion out, I should like to leave that to members on the other side of the house. Therefore I will skip a great deal of the material I wanted to cover. A number of the points of view I was about to put before the house have been eloquently expressed by other hon. members, but I should like to leave the house with two thoughts. Certainly we are interested in the study which we learned the other day is to be made into the Canada Shipping Act. We are certainly interested also in the feasibility study by the Department of Transport. I would agree that no one would be interested in proceeding to develop a merchant marine if it were not in Canada's best interests. It would be ludicrous to do this purely for purposes of nationalism.

It has been shown in the past that it was in Canada's interest to have a merchant marine, and I think that, after all the stalling has been overcome, the study will probably indicate the same thing. I hope so; and I hope this is the beginning of a new active role for the Canadian merchant marine, and the end of an old passive one.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am distressed that I have been given only one minute by the hon. member [Mr. Rose.]

who has just sat down in which to make a few points on the shipbuilding industry in Canada. It was a great mistake on the part of many of the long-winded speakers who preceded me to attempt deliberately to kill this motion, when others have opinions to express.

I should like to point out in the very short time remaining that any nation which has ports such as Canada has must have a ship repair facility, and to keep the ship repair facility in operation, we must construct ships in the slack periods.

It is necessary to point out that a new shipbuilding policy is required, because at present, despite highly skilled workers the productivity per man hour in the Canadian shipbuilding industry is only three quarters of that in the Japanese yards. I think the hon. member who introduced this motion should bear in mind that the five points he mentioned were nothing more than the old story of more subsidies and more government expenditure for the shipbuilding and ship owning people of this country. He said nothing about increased productivity.

Perhaps the hon. member should have directed his remarks to the industry itself, and encouraged it to take a serious look at its productivity, rather than asking the government to spend more on supporting a presently inefficient industry. If this country is to have efficient shipyards, shipbuilders themselves must take the responsibility for performing their work on the same sort of factory and mass production basis that is now used for production of automobiles. We cannot continue in the old way which results in the cost of ships in Canada being well over double that of those built in shipyards in Asia.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being seven o'clock the house will now adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Since I was the member most concerned in this matter, and in view of the facts which happened in my riding, I wish to tell the house that if the New Democratic party member representing a riding whose name I cannot remember had not caused the house to lose ten minutes by inquiring about the quorum, the bill could have come to a vote before seven o'clock.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AMOUNT, RATE OF CALCULATION, ETC.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-113, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when this measure was at the resolution stage it was given a fairly full discussion on its merits, the resolution having revealed a good deal of the contents of the bill. I think it is clear that it is an extremely useful measure and that it will do a great deal to assist the prairie farmer to obtain needed cash at this time. The principle of the bill is very simple. The amendment contained in it will double the amount of money which is obtainable by way of cash advance. This is the central portion of the amendment contained in the bill.

The maximum amount available will be increased from $3,000 to $6,000. The amount calculated per bushel of wheat, oats and barley will be doubled in each case. The other amendments contained in the bill relate basically to the change in regard of the unit quota in that all quotas, the unit and ensuing quotas, will be treated in the same way. The grain, therefore, which a farmer has on hand will be all available to him in calculating the advance to which he is entitled. In the same way, the grain he delivers, whether on a unit or on quota, will be used to repay the advance.

I think a great deal has been said about the merits of this bill within these last few days. I would not want, Mr. Speaker, to say a great deal more at this time and in any way slow the passage of the measure, now that it is again before the house.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I in no way want to hold up the passage of this bill, Mr. Speaker. I should like to convince the members of the government of the genial mood in which members of the opposition are today.

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act

In essence, we gave permission for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to visit the constituency of Pontiac this evening. Forgive me if I remind hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that the cash advance legislation would not have been dealt with this evening unless we had worked out an agreement to enable that to be done. I know the Minister of Agriculture took it upon himself to visit the old constituency of Pontiac this evening. It was in this constituency that my father was born, and a great many Horners live there today. In fact, if one looked at the telephone book for that area, I am sure he would find more Horners there than in any other part of Canada. While I may well be a neighbour of the Minister of Agriculture in western Canada, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to consent to putting aside the farm credit bill this evening so that the cash advance legislation could be considered. In this way, we have permitted the Minister of Agriculture to visit my father's birthplace.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I remind hon. members that our intention this evening is to consider Bill No. C-113. The hon. member has had the floor for some time but has said very little, if anything, relating to this bill.

Mr. Horner: I accept your words of wisdom, Mr. Speaker, in directing me back to the course which I must follow. I would be the first to admit I was going astray. I should like to say, in the hope that you will forgive me, that I could not help but draw the attention of the house to the fact that we westerners, some of us at least, did originate in the east, and we are happy to know the Minister of Agriculture is paying some attention to the problems of eastern Canada. I would be the first to congratulate him for that effort.

Now, if I may turn my attention more specifically to Bill No. C-113, I may say that back on October 4, which is quite a while ago, I directed a number of criticisms at this measure. However, I am not going to remain rigid or fixed in the positions I took at the resolution stage. On October 4 the minister and I got into a discussion with regard to the availability of cash advances and the ability of the farmer to repay those cash advances. I keep referring to the measure as cash advances, which is the common expression in western Canada, but actually it is the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act

The interpretation of the act in the past was that a farmer would receive 50 cents on the dollar per bushel of wheat delivered, the other half dollar going to repay the advance under the legislation. On October 4 the Minister without Portfolio, who in effect is an honorary parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), said that under the proposed bill farmers would be paid a cash advance of $1 per bushel, and that the repayment would still be at the rate of 50 per cent of that amount. The minister will correct me if I interpret his remarks wrongly but I think that he said that the farmers would repay at the same 50 per cent rate per bushel delivered under their quota. I and a number of other members of the opposition fail to comprehend how this system would fully repay the cash advance within the year, particularly if the quota remained at a staid and solid six bushels per

The minister also said on October 4 that he would kindly consent to send me a table that would fully explain this system. I would inform you, Mr. Speaker, that the minister did do this, and I should like to take the liberty of referring to the table he sent me. In the speech I made on October 4 I cited the example of a farmer with 1,000 acres, a six bushel per acre quota, delivering 6,000 bushels of grain and receiving a maximum allowance of $6,000.

My first question to the minister is this. The minister gives an example of a farmer with a maximum allowance of 4,000 bushels of No. 2 wheat with 800 acres. If the table is based on a six bushel per acre quota, I cannot conceive how the farmer is, first going to deliver 4,000 bushels.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Would the hon. member look at the lower half.

Mr. Horner: The minister says I should look at the lower half of the table which stipulates a maximum allowance of $4,800. If the farmer receives only $1.30 a bushel he will repay his advance at the rate of 65 cents per bushel. So how can he deliver 4,800 bushels and hope to repay $4,800 on a repayment schedule of 65 cents per bushel? The farmer is bound to have a carryover. That is the first point I would like to make.

As was explained on October 4, Mr. Speaker, if a farmer does have a carryover this obtaining a further cash advance the following year. In other words, he will only be permitted to borrow the difference between what he owes and the maximum allowed to him the following year.

There, Mr. Speaker, is where the crux of the problem lies. If the minister would stand in his place this evening and say it is quite conceivable that that farmer would have a larger quota than six bushels per acre delivered, then perhaps I would rest more at ease, because the farmer might be able to repay his debt if that were the case. However, the minister has not said that, and even with his tables I do find real difficulty in understanding how he makes provision for the farmer to repay within the year the amount he is allowed to borrow.

If the minister tells the house that any amount the farmer is unable to repay will be carried over to the next year, then that is one thing. But how with a six bushel per acre quota can the farmer repay the total amount borrowed? The bill provides an increase in the maximum amount lent of from $3,000 to $6,000, and I am trying to establish whether this amount is the yearly maximum. Is this the maximum amount a farmer can borrow and repay in one year, borrowing the same amount the following year, or is it merely a built in debt that we will allow the farmer to incur? With a maximum loan of $6,000 will the farmer be required to repay $3,000, or half the loan outstanding, and carry over the other half from year to year? If that is the case, then I would ask the minister in all seriousness how good his legislation is.

All farmers, Mr. Speaker, want to repay their loans, and I defy anyone in this house to stand up and say that statement is wrong. This increase from $3,000 to $6,000 may capture the vision of a number of people, but surely the minister is not creating any false hopes in the hearts of our farmers. Surely they will be given the opportunity to repay within the same year. Unless the minister is prepared to increase the bushels per specified acre quota referred in clause 3 (2) of the bill, I cannot see how any farmer can repay within the year the maximum amount lent of $6,000.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I believe that should the quota be increased from six to eight bushels it is conceivable that a farmer operating within the quota system as we know it could borrow $6,000 on 800 acres, deliver the maximum amount and would be an obstacle in the way of his repay very nearly all he had borrowed. This is where we must come to grips with the bill before us. In present circumstances does it really give the farmer a better opportunity or is it holding out a false hope? In other words, are we saying: We shall lend you so much money, but the circumstances are such that you will scarcely be able to pay it back.

I do not think there are many farmers actively engaged in the industry who do not wish to be solvent, who do not wish to use borrowed money profitably and who do not wish to repay their loans. There may be a few, but 99 per cent of the farmers who borrow money wish to use that money profitably and to repay it when due. Does the minister envisage that under a 6-bushel quota a farmer who borrows the maximum amount, having an ample amount of grain to entitle him to do so, will be able to repay his loan on the basis of 65 cents per bushel of wheat—wheat which, this year, is worth $1.30 a bushel? Can he pay his loan back within the year? This is the most important question which faces us as we discuss this bill.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): It is with some satisfaction that I see this bill before us. I do not think "satisfaction" is the right word. What I am really trying to say is that this bill is badly needed. I hope we shall be able to get quotas large enough to enable farmers to repay the money they borrow under the provisions of this legislation within the current crop year.

I have no quarrel with the government's proposal to double the amount that can be borrowed. The situation is so desperate that I do not think I can quarrel with any provision which the government might make, whatever its form, to advance to farmers some interestfree money in order that they may be in a better position to meet their obligation in the current crop year. From my own observations, and those of people who live around me, I know the money will be badly needed. Look at the reports of farm management services. There is plenty of evidence there to show that you cannot operate a grain farm in western Canada on a six bushel quota.

Having placed this bill before the houseand I expect that in due time it will pass-I trust the government will not feel that nothing more remains to be done. There are serious weaknesses in our marketing structure, as a result of which we are not able to move or from the cash advance. We would be right sell the quantities of grain we must sell if we back where we started before this measure are to benefit from the productivity of our was passed, presuming it is the intention of farms. The selling program affects not only the house to pass it. In itself, this would not western Canada but other parts of Canada as disturb me much, perhaps.

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act well, and I hope this will be kept in mind. I saw a gloomy report the other day in the paper by, I believe, Mr. Runciman, president of the United Grain Growers, in which he painted a depressing picture of the marketing of grain in the coming year. I hope the prospects are not as bad as he forecasts. I see by some press reports that there is a possibility of making sales to China. I hope the wheels are turning and that arrangements are under way.

That is all I can say with regard to this particular measure. Let us get it passed. Let the farmers have the cash and then let us get on with the real job, which is marketing the product we grow so well.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I spoke on this legislation when it was first introduced. At that time I welcomed the introduction of a bill of this nature. However, I expressed hope that the minister, in consultation with his officials, might be able to give us the answers to certain questions. And I had hoped, too, that he might volunteer these answers in order that the questions need not be repeated.

There is still doubt in my mind as to what will really happen under this legislation. Take the case of a farmer operating 500 acres. A six bushel per acre quota would normally mean delivery of 3,000 bushels. The farmer would then be entitled to $3,000 as a cash advance. However, under present conditions, with feed wheat selling at $1.01 the farmer in question would have to repay his loan at the rate of 50 cents a bushel. At the end of the year, even if he had delivered his six bushel quota, he would have repaid something like $1,500, plus $200 on the additional quantity. In other words, his debt would amount to

What happens in the following year? In normal circumstances he will be entitled to $3,000 operating on the same scale. But he has yet to repay $1,300 of the previous year's loan. In these circumstances, to all intents and purposes, we are dealing with a "one shot" bill, if the farmer concerned has to repay his debt in the following year, that is, if the amount he still owes is to be subtracted Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act
• (8:30 p.m.)

The other thing I am concerned about is what happens in the case of a farmer who, the following year, has no crop or who gets hailed out. Again the Wheat Board would normally provide a quota of six bushels an acre and instruct the farmer, "Deliver your wheat because we have now provided you with a six bushel quota at that particular quota point. Where is your wheat?" Is the farmer going to be penalized and subjected to an interest rate and, if so, what will the interest rate be?

This raises another problem. If the farmer refuses to take the cash advance he might be able to catch up with the payments. As pointed out by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) each farmer wants to be able to repay cash advances. In our operation on the farm we take cash advances but we try to clear up our indebtedness to the Wheat Board. This is the way we like to operate, and it is the way all farmers like to operate. Regardless of the fact that there is no interest rate on an advance, we want to be able to start off again with the idea that if we need a cash advance we do not have any encumbrance against the operation. Will the farmer be continually hounded by the Wheat Board until he pays? In a disaster year will he be penalized an additional amount by way of interest? My reasoning leads me to that conclusion.

What will happen if a farmer decides to quit farming? Are we going to accumulate a lot of debts? If that happens over a period of years there will be people who will say that cash advance legislation as originally intended was fine, but now a lot of debts have been incurred.

In the case of a farmer who dies, will his widow be burdened with an additional debt? Will she have to repay this debt immediately? I hope the minister will give us an indication what the attitude of the department will be. Perhaps he would care to deal with these questions before we go further.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it is with some interest that I witness the introduction of this legislation tonight. It brought to my mind that not too many years ago members of the group who sit to your right were dubious about the proposition then put forward that cash advance legislation should be implemented. These people, who were doubting Thomases only 10 or 11 years ago, were horrified at the thought of the problems that would arise as a result of the introduction of that proposal. The fact that there were people who had the courage to advocate and introduce this type of legislation is something for which the prairie farmers can be very thankful, and it is a measure of tribute to those people who had the foresight to see what could be done through a measure such as this that now we have the government of the day, composed of the one-time doubting Thomases, embracing this proposal and taking it to their bosoms as their own.

I support the legislation that is before the house tonight. It is much needed, in light of the situation presently facing prairie farmers. For some time members of our group have pressed for priority for this bill. On more than one occasion members of our group, and members of other groups in the opposition, asked that this bill receive priority among the group of farm bills that is being considered by the house. However we were always answered with the assertion that this bill would be considered only after the farm credit bills had been passed. I am happy that tonight the government has reversed its stand and agreed to our proposal that this bill be proceeded with prior to the passage of the farm credit legislation which, as is well known, has some rather controversial features.

In light of these facts which are recorded in Hansard, I found it puzzling the other day to note that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) while in Regina made a statement to the Leader-Post which is not in accordance with my recollection of the facts and with the facts recorded in Hansard. I am sorry the minister is not in his seat tonight. I would have liked him to be present when I pointed out his statement in the Leader-Post of October 18, as follows:

Federal Agricultural Minister Olson in Regina Thursday accused the opposition in parliament of delaying "major help" to Saskatchewan farmers who are having a tough time harvesting because of bad weather.

Mr. Olson said in a Regina interview that legislation to double the cash advances on farm stored grain has been before parliament for many days but despite his appeals the opposition has not allowed it to pass.

"It could have been passed ten days ago. This will mean major help to prairie farmers," he said.

So far as I am concerned this statement by the minister is not in accordance with the facts of the matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Burton: I admit, Mr. Speaker, that the amount of the advance is being increased and is being extended to include the unit quota.

At the same time repayment terms remain virtually the same, and in fact are being eased slightly with respect to the unit quota. This poses some serious problems with respect to repayments in years when the marketing situation is tight, such as was the case in the last crop year and is the case during the current crop year. I suggest the solution toward which the government should be working is to develop a plan for a guaranteed minimum delivery quota for grain, with provision for purchase of farm stored grain and payments for storage involved.

I also note that on numerous occasions government spokesmen have fallen back on this measure when questioned about steps contemplated to deal with the current emergency situation on the prairies. I would point out that while this measure does help to alleviate the effects of the tight marketing situation, it does not help alleviate the harvest and crop conditions now prevalent on the prairies. It does not apply to grain unthreshed in the fields. It does not compensate for costs of drying tough and damp grain, and the extra harvesting costs involved this fall. It does not help compensate for the deterioration of crops expected this fall.

I hope the government is considering other measures which will compensate farmers for some of the serious problems which have arisen this fall, which are beyond the control of the farmers, and of which the farmers should not be expected to bear the full brunt.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about this bill. I wish to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), or whoever is responsible, for presenting this bill today. This legislation has been needed for a long time. I am very happy that finally it has come up for our consideration, and I therefore give it my wholehearted approval.

So far as I am concerned, anything that provides more operating capital for the farmer is a good thing. However, this measure, along with the three farm credit bills, is only a temporary measure in respect of the situation confronting the agricultural industry. As a reaction to the crisis affecting the economy of the agricultural community, this is a step in the right direction, but by no means is it any sort of a long term solution.

I should not like to see the minister going facing western agriculture is one of marketaround patting himself on the back and ing which this bill is designed to help and not thinking that he really has done something one of production at the moment.

great for the farmers at this time. I do not believe he will be in a position to do this until he has brought in a measure of some type to equalize the income of farmers with that of the people in the rest of our society. If we are not to be faced with a crisis situation I believe it is important that we have a long term policy.

I have three suggestions concerning things which I believe must be done. First of all, prices for farm machinery must be stabilized in some way. Second, I believe a way must be found to dispose of farm production. Third, and more particularly, an aggressive world-wide sales policy for wheat is required. I would like to see the Minister of Agriculture, hand in hand with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to pack a suitcase and knock on the doors of Mrs. Ghandi in India, Mr. Kosygin in Russia and Mr. Mao Tse-tung in China and say, "Hello. I just want to introduce myself. I am the agricultural minister from Canada. I am here to see whether I can be of any assistance to you. In particular I have a sackful of wheat here in my bag and I would like you to take a look at it. We have some good wheat to Somebody might like an approach of this type, and buy something from us. Just as it is the case in respect of anything else, if one does not go out aggressively to seek markets people are not likely to come forward to buy the product. I should like to conclude my statement at this point.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this bill I must say that there can be no argument concerning the need of western farmers for legislation of this type, because their need for money cannot be disputed. I wholeheartedly support this legislation. I also wish to congratulate the government upon bringing this bill forward urgently. The bill which was discussed this afternoon is not nearly as urgent as is this bill.

I believe a word or two might be said concerning the condition in which this country finds itself because of the marketing problems. I might point out that marketing encompasses the total concept of a commodity in all its phases, such as planning, promotion and distribution. The role of the ultimate consumer must be emphasized in respect of the final disposition of the product. The problem facing western agriculture is one of marketing which this bill is designed to help and not one of production at the moment.

the producers of which will benefit as a result of the passage of this bill. We have been growing a high quality, good baking, type of wheat for many years. Gradually through the years the high quality wheat has become less necessary to the consumers throughout the world, due to the improvement in milling techniques and the upgrading of local wheat grown throughout the world. We must evaluate our markets. We must evaluate the new synthetic sources of protein. The basic price of wheat on the world market will be governed by the international grains agreement. The operators of farm plants may have to pay less attention to the matter of the price received per bushel, and give more attention to a greater net return per acre. As land costs and fixed costs rise, input costs rise and as a result output per acre is the single method by which one can meet these demands.

Our production units must be tailored to fit our marketing system. This will involve factors such as quality, type, volume, demand and consumption. Although fixed regulated prices under the international grains agreement give little benefit to either producer or consumer on either side of the demand or supply situation, Canada should examine the pricing mechanism. We must remember a well known sales law, that it will cost more to recover a lost account than to maintain it at a somewhat lower level. There is no hope of having a profit if an account is lost.

On the whole, competition has provided a high standard of living. Throughout the world today we see a great upsurge in United States and Russian exports. Our competitors are entering our market system. As producers we may be somewhat insulated from the marketplace. We must increase our sensitivity and encourage the producers to supply the consumers. I believe we should take a look at the world feed grain situation. Although wheat throughout the rest of the world is considered to be a good food for livestock, in Canada we grow very little wheat for feeding purposes. In western Canada barley is produced at a high level, but in recent years there has been little research done in respect of high yield barley. Barley does give a high energy output. It has always taken second place to wheat in land use and marketing importance.

Throughout the world there is a great and growing demand for feed grains. I should like to read some statistics which have been produced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics concerning the export of feed grain by the major exporting countries. In the year 1960

We might examine one of the grains, wheat the producers of which will benefit as a result the passage of this bill. We have been rowing a high quality, good baking, type of heat for many years. Gradually through the ters the high quality wheat has become less excessary to the consumers throughout the orold, due to the improvement in milling through the upgrading of local wheat the world total was 23 million metric tons and in 1966 it was 42 million metric tons. The United States increased its share of the world market from 11.5 million metric tons to 21.7 million metric tons to 21.7 million metric tons to 21.7 million metric tons of the world market from 11.5 million metric tons to 21.7 million metric tons and in 1966 it was 42 million metric tons. The United States increased its share of the world market from 11.5 million metric tons to 21.7 million metric tons and in 1966 it was 42 million metric tons to 21.7 million metric tons and in 1966 it was 42 million metric tons to 21.7 million metric tons and in 1966 it was 42 million metric tons.

There is a growing market for feed grains throughout the world and I believe we should be aware of this. It would appear that in western Canada barley is one of the crops which could best meet this demand. There should be an attempt by the producers of western barley to meet the competition brought about by the importation of corn for eastern feeders. All segments of marketing must increase their efficiency in order to meet the challenge. As a nation we are expending relatively little energy on our marketing problems. We need more grain salesmen to operate as Fuller brush men to knock on doors and energize our marketing forces in areas where we may have been deficient in salesmanship.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) mentioned that we have had large grain sales in Russia, but that we have had little salesmanship. Situations like this must be remedied, and marketing research has to be encouraged. We do very little in marketing but we expend considerable effort in production. We have only started with our marketing system.

Finally, and most important to the producers of our western grains, we must make them aware of what the markets will accept, and the government must make efforts to assist these people to grow grains for which they will find markets. While it is not clear, I hope that the newly formed grain council of Canada will take a step in this direction, because unless we improve this marketing situation the farmers will again be obtaining and cashing these cash advances every year.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I will take only a moment or two, as I have a very simple question to ask the minister. Let us assume in theory that a farmer has obtained all the cash advances he can obtain, and at the end of the crop year he finds he has sufficient grain, but because quotas are not high enough he is unable to deliver an amount of grain which would allow him to repay his loan. Will the minister indicate whether under those circumstances it would not be appropriate to charge that farmer interest on the unpaid balance until he has had an opportunity to fill a quota which would allow him to repay the loan?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I must advise the house that if the minister speaks at this stage he will close the debate.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, several hon. members have asked the same question posed by the last speaker, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir), regarding the consequences of a repayment not equalling the advances during the course of a year. It may be that I delivered my table to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) too late, or perhaps a little too early. I did not give him a great deal of time to look it over and I apologize to him for that.

Under the provisions of the bill, or the act as amended if the bill becomes law, a farmer receiving an advance at the rate of $1 per bushel of wheat, who may in fact not be able to repay the total amount if the quota does not open sufficiently for him to do so, will not have to pay interest on that unpaid balance. If the farmer took the maximum advance there would at the end of the crop year be an amount still owing by him on that advance, under the circumstances outlined by hon. members. It is certainly not our intention that there would be any interest payable on that amount at that time. The amount which he still owed when the crop year ended would of course be taken into account when the the ensuing year advances in were determined.

Mr. Horner: Would the minister permit a question at this point? He has referred specifically to his table and to my remarks. I take it from this table that by the words "4,000 bushels" the farmers will be limited in this sense to 4,000 bushels, because the quota failed to open any more than that. Let us be clear as we go along. I would assume that this situation occurred because the farmer had no more grain than that. I followed your tables and I am basically very strongly opposed to them. I want to be abundantly clear as to what this means.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): There are two examples in the table. I do not think I should refer to them because only the hon. member and I have the advantage of having them before us.

Mr. Horner: I have referred to them.

29180—135

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The position is that the farmer can go into the next crop year with a balance still owing on his account. That balance will be taken into account at that point in calculating the next advance. The maximum which he may obtain by way of advances never changes—that is to say, in the next crop year.

If our hypothetical farmer had an 800 acre farm he would be eligible in the first year to $4,800. Let us say that in the course of that year he paid back $500 less than $4,800. He would then go into the next year owing $500. His maximum would still be $4,800. At that time he could obtain an additional $4,300. Of course no interest would be paid on the $500 between the time the year ended and the time the next year began, but his obligations would continue to be as they are now, that is to deliver wheat as the quota opens in repayment of his advances.

There were some comments by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) about the difficulties facing a farmer who ends a year not having paid what he had borrowed. Let me point out that it is entirely up to the farmer to choose between the maximum and a smaller amount. If a farmer wishes to take an amount which will be repaid in a shorter period of time, he may do so.

This bill and these changes are particularly meritorious because they allow the flexibility which will permit a farmer, who wishes to take a larger advance, to do so. The farmer under this act can actually take an advance which involves more wheat than may be deliverable on the six bushel quota, which previously always cleared his indebtedness. Under the new plan a six bushel quota will not be adequate to clear this indebtedness. In that case the advance will actually be carried forward.

I am surprised to see how conservative in thinking some of the members opposite are when they say it is a bad thing. It seems to me this is a particularly strong part of the measure because it allows this specific credit advantage to the farmers in this way.

Mr. Korchinski: Perhaps I could ask a question at this point. In the event there is a carryover of an indebtedness because of a crop failure, a crop being hailed out or for any such reason and a farmer does not have credit to deliver his quota to the wheat board, will he then be charged interest on that amount in the following year.

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The straightforward and simple answer to that is that a farmer is not in default on the amount owing until the wheat board finds him in default. So, in fact, the situation remains really as it is now. The administration of the act falls largely within the discretion of the wheat board, and I think in this regard we can count a great deal on that discretion.

In the other example the hon, member has given, if a man quits farming or he dies his farm changes hands, the advance owing is a debt on the estate. This is money which he received, and it certainly is a debt.

Mr. Korchinski: Would the minister go back to the original question I asked? Will a farmer be penalized by way of interest in the following year if he does not have a crop at all? This is what I am getting at.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I think I answered that. A farmer is not charged any interest unless he is in default, and he would not be in that position unless the Wheat Board in fact decided he was in default. I think that is the simple answer to the proposition.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister—

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I think it might be simpler if I made a few remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. We will proceed into committee in a few moments, and I think it would be useful to let the minister make a statement.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I really want to say only a few things more at this stage, Mr. Speaker. We made it clear, and certainly I thought I had made it clear in my remarks when introducing this measure, that we did not see it as something of an entire answer to the existing problems. We certainly do not see it in that light. That it is, however, an extremely worth-while measure I think is beyond doubt.

When my colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) made reference to the delay in the bill proceeding through the house he had in mind, as hon. members know, the manner in which long debate on other measures had proceeded on occasion when hon. members fully knew that this bill could go forward. If there are any additional questions, I think I can handle them appropriately at the committee stage, so I will conclude there, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, before the minister resumes his seat—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The minister has closed the debate and we will proceed immediately into committee, which is the place in which to ask questions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

On clause 1-

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, before clause 1 carries—and I do not want to hold up this legislation one bit longer than is absolutely necessary—I should like to ask the minister a question. I will rephrase the question I asked the minister earlier. For my satisfaction, and for the satisfaction of the committee at large, could the minister explain the table that he handed to me as I came into the house this evening wherein he refers to the maximum amount deliverable as being 4,000 bushels in the first year. Is that because of the quota limitation, or because of the amount of grain the farmer has? It is a simple question, because I want to fully understand the table.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, the very simple answer is that the examples, as can be seen, indicate that in both cases, for the farmer with an 800 acres farm the maximum theoretical advance is $4,800. In the first example the farmer has on hand 4,000 bushels of wheat, and therefore the maximum advance is $4,000. In the second example he has a great deal of wheat on hand, and naturally the maximum advance is $4,800.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to pose the question I was going to put to the minister before second reading was given to this bill. I know that the Wheat Board is giving some study and thought to the whole question of the revision of the quota system, and modifications thereof. I wondered whether the Wheat Board is giving any study or thought to the possibility of developing a plan for a guaranteed minimum delivery quota such as I referred to in my remarks in the debate on second reading.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Wheat Board is giving consideration to very many things, but naturally the kind of thing to which the hon. member opposite is referring would more likely be a matter of government policy, and the government is certainly looking at the whole picture of the farmer situation as well.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I want to come back to the question that I raised earlier. What is going to happen when there is a carryover of indebtedness into the following year and the farmer, through no fault of his own, is hailed out, or through drought or any other disaster that may befall him has no grain to deliver? Will the farmer be able to sign a declaration to the Wheat Board, and will it be authorized to accept the declaration that he has no wheat, and therefore the farmer will not be obliged to pay a penalty on the amount of the indebtedness the following year, even though the board does provide a quota for the following year?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): As I indicated earlier, Mr. Chairman, this is really a matter for the administration of the act and therefore lies in the discretion of the administering body. The indebtedness is there. There is a point at which the farmer could theoretically be in default, and it will really be a question of how the act is administered.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, the minister is a renowned lawyer and well versed in the law. Surely he should be able to give us an idea as to what the position of the farmer will be in this situation. I know it is very difficult for a lawyer to try to think in terms of a farmer, but I wish the minister would for once put himself in the position in which the farmer will find himself when he does not have any grain to deliver, would like to be able to repay the indebtedness but, because he was hailed out, snowed under or whathave-you, will not be able to deliver. I ask the minister this question: Will this farmer have to pay a penalty that year, when he has no grain and nothing on which to live?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, I can only say what I said before. That is, in effect, that I depend upon the wheat board not to persecute a man in that position. That is really the simple answer. In other words it will be entirely up to the Wheat Board whether that man will be penalized or not.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, there have been times in the past—and it was brought to my 29180—135½

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act attention at times in the position which I occupied previously—when this sort of thing has happened under the cash advances program; that is, the Wheat Board has said in effect, "There is a quota open. You borrowed so much. It has not all been paid back. We want you to haul in wheat and pay us the rest." I know that in the circumstances which I described a very considerable amount of pressure was put on the farmer to do just that.

Unless the attitude changes substantially, I think the answer to the question of the hon. member for Mackenzie is that the farmer will be in some kind of difficulty. Let us not have any illusions in this regard. I am not saying whether it is good or bad, but I think this is the answer that should be given to the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, further to the question I asked previously, can I now ask the minister whether the government is giving any consideration to the development of a plan to provide for a guaranteed minimum delivery quota in each crop year.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): As I indicated previously to the hon. member opposite, he will have to wait for government policy in its own good time.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a couple of questions to the minister. First of all I would like to go on record as being, naturally, in favour of Bill No. C-113. The doubling of cash advances will certainly help many farmers through this difficult period of restricted deliveries. My hope of course is that market conditions will improve so that there will be no problems about repayment, and there will be less need for cash advances in the years to come. This is the only real solution to the farmer's problem of a shortage of cash.

I am happy to note that in the first two and a half months of this crop year our exports of wheat and flour are running about 26 per cent higher than they were in a similar period last year. I urge all those in the business of selling our wheat to explore every possible market for our grain.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I have the following suggestions to make. I think provision should be made for cash advances on grain that is still on the fields. In Saskatchewan at least, and in the other prairie provinces also, much of the grain will not

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act be harvested until springtime unless a miracle takes place in November. I understand that in at least one previous year—

Mr. Horner: In 1959.

Mr. Douglas: —cash advances were made on grain which was still lying in swaths and stooks, and the experience with the repayment of these cash advances was very good. I can see no reason why this should not be extended again this year. I should like to point out that these cash advances are not regarded as loans to farmers. The hon. member for Crowfoot spoke of them as being loans or money borrowed. They are regarded as cash advances and therefore as income for income tax purposes in the year in which they are received.

Personally I think there is a great deal to be said for regarding them as loans which would not be taxable until the grain was actually delivered, which could be in the next income tax year instead of the year in which cash advances were made. I suggest that the appropriate government department should look into this matter to see whether this regulation could not be changed, so that cash advances would not be regarded as income. For example, if they are made in 1968, they would not be taxable that year but only when the grain is delivered, at which time the full value of the grain would be regarded as income.

Those are the two suggestions I should like to make to the government.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I thought I was the only one pursuing this line of questioning, but now that I have had some assistance from the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar I do not mind asking the minister for some further information. On several occasions I myself have taken out cash advances when the delivery of grain in the winter months has not been too good, owing to road conditions. At that time I have received a very nice letter from the Wheat Board suggesting I should make the delivery within something like 14 days, or else I would be penalized. Will this practice be continued in cases where farmers find themselves unable to deliver grain? Will the government intercede on behalf of these farmers? Can the minister clearly indicate that there will be a regulation to the effect that farmers will not be required to pay interest on the loan on grain which is not delivered on the date specified?

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, certainly the government would be very happy to consider any changes in the regulations which may be necessary, upon the experience gained once the bill has been implemented. I do not think the experience of the hon. member opposite necessarily indicates any grave difficulty. He indicated he received a very nice letter from the Wheat Board and I presume he wrote a nice letter back to the board, so that more or less answered the question. I think that is probably the hope for the future.

Of course the hon. member for Assiniboia has stated a true fact when he indicated that these loans are not so much money that is borrowed as a prepayment for the wheat which remains on the farm.

Mr. McIntosh: Why then are farmers charged interest on their own money?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Accordingly, no interest is charged on it. The hon. member for Assiniboia also made what I consider to be a very worth-while comment in drawing to our attention the problem of grain lying unharvested on farmers' fields. We are conscious of the previous example in this regard. Of course we are investigating this whole situation, but it is really premature now to even seriously consider that matter at this time.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I think now is the time to pause on clause 1 and to serve notice of our grave doubts about the practicality of the minister's suggestion. I will attempt this evening to convince every backbencher in the house of the lack of mathematical feasibility of repaying these loans. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to all hon. members, that I wish all backbenchers, and particularly those on the government side, would give me their attention for just a moment to allow me to convince them to be guided by their own judgment and not by any supreme being, nor by any group of exalted rulers. I will attempt to put forward arguments to portray my point of view to the minister, who is in effect piloting this bill through the house.

I have been a member of this house for 11 years but never have I seen before such mathematical wizardry as that which the minister has engaged in, and this in the light of the budget presented the other night. I suggest there must be a special place in the cabinet for the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, if he can supplant the Minister of Finance in mathematical wizardry. Some hon, member suggests that I am getting political. Mr. Chairman, that is the farthest thought from my mind.

That the Grath Attribute Payments Act the start of the start of the start. If this is the intention of the government, that the farmer should go into debt the start of the start of

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: I attempted throughout the whole of last week to bring this bill before the house, and in fact I took great pains to point out to the minister that on October 4 he made a statement which is recorded at page 827 of Hansard. In this regard let me compliment the hon. member for Assiniboia on the comments he just made, with regard to the difficult time which the farmers have been experiencing with their harvests.

After a thorough examination, the minister said the following:

I will undertake to deliver a sheet of complicated calculations to the hon, member for Crowfoot. I might say for the time being that the amount carried over is absorbed in the new year so that it is dealt with immediately—

I should like to emphasize the words "new year".

—so that it is dealt with immediately at the beginning of the new year.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I will not go any further with the statement made by the minister on October 4, 1968. Today is October 28, 1968, at 9.21 p.m., and I have now seen this calculation by the minister. I was thunderstruck. I have been a member, as I have said, for 11 years and I have never seen such an attempt at mathematical calculation as this. I am going to read through this calculation very quickly. It is suggested that under the bill the maximum advance for a farmer with an 800 acre quota would be 4,800 bushels, or $4,800. He would only have on hand 4,000 bushels of No. 2 wheat. His rate of repayment would be based on a price of $1.30 per bushel for No. 2 wheat, basis Red Deer, Alberta. The amount taken to repay the cash advance would be 65 cents or about half of the $1.30. A lot of backbenchers should realize that the wheat is valued at $1.30 and the rate of repayment would be 65 cents per bushel. I should have said at the beginning that, under this bill, for every bushel a farmer has in storage he is given $1 by way of cash advance. The amount therefore taken to pay back the $4,000 cash advance would be 6,154 bushels.

The delivery unit would be 400 bushels and the quota would be 3,600 bushels. The amount owing after a complete crop year would be $1,400 or something over 2,000 bushels. This Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act represents over half what the farmer had at the start. If this is the intention of the government, that the farmer should go into debt every year, if that is the extent of the confidence of the government in the agricultural industry, let the minister stand up and say so, and then I will understand him.

Let us proceed further to step 2 in the minister's table. The next year the farmer has a great crop. Let me be very generous in saying this. According to the minister's statement the farmer harvests 12,000 bushels of No. 2 wheat. His maximum allowance for advance under this bill is 4,800 bushels or $4,800. The repayment is based on the same assumed price. Here we have to take into our calculations the extra $1,400 of debt from the previous year which, in effect, would represent 7,385 bushels.

Then, here is where I wanted to ask the minister a question. The delivery unit would be 400 bushels. The minister's calculations, presented to this house in all sincerity, indicate that an eight bushel quota would allow the farmer to deliver 6,400 bushels. Now, is the minister saying that this year we might well have a six bushel quota but that next year there will be an eight bushel quota? Is the minister saying that this government, in all its wisdom, will combine an eight bushel quota with a plentiful crop? I doubt it. The minister says that even after that, even after a farmer had delivered on the eight bushel quota, if a nine bushel quota did not open, the farmer would still owe $380 in the next

I want the minister to go back and read the debate that took place between the hon. member for Mackenzie, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and myself on October 4. We explicitly pointed out our belief that if the minister advanced $1 a bushel and the farmer only had to repay half of what he received, the farmer would invariably go into debt every year. Rural members and backbenchers on both sides of the house might well ask, what is he getting at? I want to make it abundantly clear that under the act as it is now the farmer has a right to obtain a cash advance of $3,000 interest free on grain in storage.

In 1959, an amendment was made to cover grain in the field, not necessarily harvested. During the election campaign members of the government said they were going to double that; they were going to make it $6,000. However, they do not give the farmer the right to pay this money back in the same

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act year. In effect they are giving the farmer the right to go into debt more deeply every year to the extent of one quarter, or perhaps even a half of the cash advance in a period of four years. If a farmer is faced with ever increasing costs and remains on a six bushel quota, then within four years he will consume $6,000 in the form of cash advances. Then he will have no avenue to which to turn.

I say to the minister in all sincerity that he should examine his table closely. The late president of the United States, when he was dealing with Khrushchev at the time of the Cuba crisis said, "I don't want to put his back to the wall; I want to give him an avenue through which he can escape." I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that the government wants to give the farmer an avenue through which he can escape. Surely the government does not want to put the farmers in a corner, then have them throw up their hands and march on Ottawa because they are in debt up to their ears to the federal government.

I am sure the minister does not want to place the farmers in that position. I am sure no backbencher in this house wants to place the farmer with his back to the wall. The table the minister presented suggests that next year the farmers will be on an eight bushel quota. What makes him confident of that? The year after, he says the farmers will be on a nine bushel quota, and all will be well. They will reap this glorious promise that he and his Prime Minister made in June of this year. Surely, he does not expect us to buy that, when the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is in South America trying to sell wheat. Those countries have never been our biggest customers. I urge every member in the house tonight to consider the position. Nobody seriously entices a person to borrow money he cannot possibly repay. Perhaps an enemy does, but certainly not your friend. This is what the bill will do, unless the minister accepts one simple amendment and then sees that the provisions in the bill are carried out.

I have studied this bill from all angles ever since the minister made his statement on October 4. I want to make it abundantly clear that we have not been holding up this measure since October 4. We have been accused of holding up other measures, but we have not even seen this one since October 4. As I say, I have studied the matter and there is only one simple solution to this whole position in which the farmer will be placed. The solution is to allow the farmer to borrow $1 per bushel for every bushel in storage, but to repay it at only 65 cents a bushel.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Any backbencher who is skilled in business realizes what the bill is going to do to the farmers. It will entice them in their dire periods of need to borrow the maximum and to repay the minimum allowable under the bill. I say to every businessman in this house, to every member with any knowledge of the manipulation of the dollar bill and sound credit, that this bill is based on a faulty premise.

I know the minister fairly well, perhaps better than he knows me. I have a brother who graduated from law school with the minister and I have a great deal of regard for the minister because of the high respect in which my brother holds him. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I would urge him to seriously consider the position in which this bill will place our farmers today.

I have a simple solution, Mr. Chairman, which may get the farmers out of this position. I am not going to move an amendment now, but I do want the minister thoroughly to consider this point between now and the time we reach clause 3. I put this forward for the consideration of all rural members of the house, no matter to which party they belong. I am going to suggest that in line 6 of clause 3 as it appears at page 3 of the bill the word "six" bushels per specified acre be changed to read "eight" bushels per specified acre.

In light of the table of the minister it might be said that this is a simple amendment; how can it solve all the evil that the hon. member has attempted to portray? I say to hon. members of this committee, through you, Mr. Chairman, that it can help alleviate the problem, provided the government sells eight bushels per specified acre. If this change were made, then a farmer with 800 acres could borrow $4,800 and would be able to deliver 6,400 bushels of wheat. I am not saying that this is a perfect amendment because it is not, but it does at least give the farmers some opportunity to meet their operational costs.

The minister's table indicates that in the second year the government, through their good graces and offices, hope to give the farmers an eight bushel quota. I say to the minister that if he and his cabinet colleagues have the courage to make this eight bushel quota good to the farmers in the first year, then if they want to say to the farmers that in the third year they will have a nine bushel quota, all well and good, Mr. Chairman, it made by the hon. member for Assiniboia. One will not be turned down. But the provision in the bill to increase the maximum loan from $3,000 to $6,000 is not soundly based unless the farmer is given ample opportunity to repay the amount borrowed.

I can see no way to repay the loan, Mr. Chairman, other than by decreasing the amount allowable from $1 per bushel to 75 cents a bushel, or increasing the allowable acreage. In the amendment that I am going to propose I prefer the farmers to receive the advantage of $1 per bushel, but to give them every opportunity to repay the loan on an eight bushel per acre quota.

I urge the minister seriously to consider this proposal because I think the position in which he is now placing the farmers will be a dangerous one in the years ahead.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Crowfoot has raised an interesting point, particularly in connection with the suggested eight bushel quota amendment, about which I should like to comment at this time.

Speaking on October 4, as reported at page 819 of Hansard, I am reported as follows:

I would like to make a suggestion about a change in the act. I understand that in the old act there is a limit on borrowing. You can borrow only up to a six bushel quota. I wonder whether this might not be raised to an eight bushel quota. I believe this would be more realistic, in view of the costs involved in prairie agriculture today.

The government may The government may very well say we will have trouble getting rid of six bushels, and this may be true. But if government money is invested in wheat it would take a load off the shoulders of the farmer and improve farm economy. It would assist the farmer and those depending on him, and it would tie up some government money in wheat, which would give the government a more direct interest in selling wheat.

I should like to hear the minister tell the committee what solution he has for solving the problem. For example, to be facetious about it, is he praying for drought in Russia or China? Is he indicating that at some time there might be an increase in the price of wheat, that the farmers will receive more money and be able to repay it at a quicker rate? I should like to hear the minister tell the committee how this problem can be resolved. If he has trouble, I am sure the hon. member for Assiniboia might have some comment to make in this respect.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I believe I heard the minister say that this money should not be considered a tive to move much more wheat; that has been loan. I think he was endorsing a suggestion clear in our statements all along.

Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act of his reasons for not describing it as a loan was because no interest was involved. Did I hear the minister correctly and did he say no interest was involved?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): That is right.

Mr. McIntosh: Then would the minister look at section 5 (1) (b) of the act, which reads as follows:

(b) upon default, he will repay to the board the amount in default, without interest prior to default but with interest at six per cent per annum after default.

If no interest is involved, Mr. Chairman, then what does that provision mean?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, naturally the question with which I was dealing was that of interest in general, not interest payable after default which is a totally different issue. That was what my earlier response had reference to.

I am most astonished this evening to hear hon. members opposite actually complaining because the cash advance bill is going to allow the farmers to borrow too much money and to repay it at too slow a rate. I would have imagined almost any other attack from the opposition, Mr. Chairman. I think it must be a good bill when they are put in the position of attacking it in this fashion.

I must also say, Mr. Chairman, that while the hon, member for Crowfoot was speaking I thought several times I would have to rise on a point of privilege. I let the opportunity go and it did come out all right from that point of view. However, the next time he asks me to send him a table, if I have the time I shall write him a book. His trouble is that he has not been quite ready to believe that in fact the result of the bill is exactly that which it sets out to do, namely that the farmer can indeed borrow an amount that is much greater than he has been able to borrow before. The farmer will actually be in the position where, when deliveries are slow in a particular year, he will not be called upon to repay the total advanced to him in that year, and in that sense will carry over the amount advanced as a matter of calculation to the next year. That is perfectly true and I think perfectly laudable. Certainly it is our objecPrairie Grain Advance Payments Act

• (9:40 p.m.)

Recent history does not indicate that one should be unduly pessimistic, as hon. members opposite seem to be, because of an immediate problem such as the one this year. As to the examples referred to by the hon. member for Crowfoot, may I say that the contents of the table were meant to illustrate a variety of situations and were not intended to be identified as one year, or another year, or years in succession of each other. It is certainly true that under this bill a farmer may obtain these increased amounts if he wishes to do so. I emphasize this point to those who are concerned lest a farmer may borrow more than he can repay. The amount is up to the borrower. If he chooses to borrow this money without interest, he can do so, provided he has sufficient grain on hand. When he repays the loan, he does so at 50 per cent of the initial payment. In many a year he will not repay the total advance unless he has delivered approximately a nine bushel quota, if he has taken the full advance. Then again, if a farmer chooses at any time to repay the advance he is entitled to do so; the act enables him to do so, specifically, under section 5 (2).

The concern expressed by hon. members opposite is difficult to understand when it is concern about a farmer being lent too much money and being made to pay it too slowly—and when there is no interest for it at all.

Mr. Horner: The minister's remarks are certainly apropos. But he will recall that at the beginning of my comments I specifically asked him what he meant by the 4,000 bushel maximum in the table he sent over to me. I asked whether it was the number of bushels on hand, or the number of bushels which the farmer chose, or the number of bushels his quota allowed him to deliver. The minister said it was the number of bushels on hand. Therein lies the difference between us.

At no time in recent history, the minister says, have there been two low quota years running year after year. That is what the minister suggested. I am not in any way afraid that farmers will be unable to repay their loans, but I do not want a farmer to feel that he is way over his head and has no means of repaying them.

Under the present arrangements a farmer can borrow $3,000 and can repay that amount. I ask the minister: Is this much better? We are giving him a huge maximum and very little opportunity to repay. Eventually, over a period of years, he builds up a debt, and in time he will only qualify for a loan of $3,000, the amount he can get today. If the minister wishes to contradict this statement I shall be glad to hear him do so. But on the basis of the bill today, on the basis of a six bushel quota, a farmer builds up a debt of $3,000 at least, and carries it with him unless at some time or another the government increases the delivery quota, and at the same time he is blessed with a bountiful crop. But I say, Mr. Chairman, that very often the reverse is true. Moreover the quota expands when farmers do not experience such a bountiful year. It is easy for a quota to build up to ten bushels if there is a poor crop in the west, but it is difficult for a quota to build up beyond six bushels when there is a heavy crop.

I am not saying the bill is altogether wrong. I am not saying I intend to vote against it; I do not. But I am trying to point out the dangers. This bill will place the farmer at no real advantage year after year. The minister can deny this if he wishes to do so. I hope he will. I hope he will say that the bill will place the farmer at a definite advantage year after year, because he will undertake to sell an eight bushel quota. But even on the basis of an eight bushel quota, a farmer taking the maximum will still, in the following year, have to sell a nine or ten bushel quota in order to repay. The minister can sit there in the greatest sublimity but I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this bill is not sound mathematically. This is the opinion I had before the minister gave me his tables. It is the opinion I held on October 4, and I have not changed it.

Clause agreed to.
Clause 2 agreed to.

On claue 3—Undertaking by the producer.

Mr. Horner: I want to say nothing more—

An hon. Member: Holding up the bill.

Mr. Horner: Somebody over there immediately says I am holding up the bill. They think it is my duty to give everything swift approval. Well, the last time this bill came up in the house was on October 4. Today is October 28. Who held it up in the meantime?

An hon. Member: You did.

Mr. Horner: Someone says we did. It is the duty of the government to bring measures before the house. I did my best to encourage the government to bring it before the house, but they did not do so.

I have said whatever I could, and dare the minister to defend his table on an actuarially sound basis, because it will not stand up. If a farmer is in need of money he will borrow more under this bill than he is capable of repaying according to the quota system. I defy any mathematician to prove this statement wrong. So, without any further remarks, I move:

That on page 3 in line 6 the word "six" be deleted, and the word "eight" inserted in its place so that the line will read "of eight bushels per specified acre".

• (9:50 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the change envisaged in this amendment would have the effect of imposing an additional burden on the treasury and therefore is not in order.

Mr. Horner: On the point of order raised by the minister, Mr. Chairman, I went to great lengths to point out that it was the ability of the farmer to repay with which I was concerned. The amendment would allow a loan to be repaid that much quicker. It places no additional burden on the treasury. As the hon member for Assiniboia said, it is not in fact a loan, it is a cash advance on the farmer's own wheat, on his own money.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On another point of order, I wonder if perhaps we might have the committee rise, to report to the house with a view to arriving at agreement to extend the sitting for another hour this evening, so that we might complete the bill?

Mr. Horner: Let us have a ruling on the amendment first.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that I rise and report progress?

Mr. Baldwin: I suggest that we have a ruling and vote on the amendment, and after the vote we might be amazed at what progress we would make.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Amendments in committee are governed by the terms of the resolution which precedes the bill. The pertinent phrase in the resolution reads as follows:

—to permit the calculation of advance payments on grain deliverable under unit quotas, and for other related purposes. Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act

There is no specific price listed here, and so therefore there is no amount involved. For that reason I have to accept the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Horner) negatived: Yeas, 41; nays, 70.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4 and 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Transitional.

Mr. Korchinski: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest a way whereby the government can save some money by not paying administration costs as stipulated under the present situation. The amendment I shall propose will make it possible for farmers to take two cash advances. The minister has overlooked the fact that administration costs were $150,000 last year. There was a transfer of undistributed amounts of $6,000, and the cost to the treasury was $90,000. Some 45,000 cash advances were taken last year and at $2 a piece $90,000 could be recovered if a second advance were necessary. I therefore propose the following amendment:

That section 6 of the said act be amended by the addition of the following subsection:

6 (a) In any year where the producer has not taken the maximum permissible, he may, upon repayment of the original advance payment, reapply for a further advance payment up to the maximum amount allowable under the provisions of this act.

Amendment (Mr. Korchinski) negatived: Yeas, 41; nays, 72.

Clause agreed to. Title agreed to. Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now, or at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: By leave now.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Baldwin: I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, would the house leader give us some indication concerning the intentions, honourable or otherwise, for tomorrow.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would have hoped that the official opposition would have permitted third reading of the bill with which we have just dealt tonight. I can only hope that hon, members will not unduly prolong the debate tomorrow on the bill in respect of which they profess to be so interested.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

An hon. member says that if I make more remarks like that they will prolong the debate. That is interesting. Notwithstanding threats by hon. members I think we will call third reading of the prairie grain advance payments bill and then proceed to the committee stage, and one would hope third reading, of the farm credit bill. Then we would deal with the resolution concerning the C.N.R. financing.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The house leader seems a bit downhearted because we have only dealt with second reading, and six clauses of the bill in the committee stage. We moved two amendments and not one was accepted in any shape or form. With the amendments we suggested and the progress made I thought we had done very well this evening from eight o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we should not become involved in a debate at a time when the opposition house leader has asked for the business for the next day and when this business has been announced by the government. It would be easy for this to be done without argumentation or debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when the news leaked out almost a month ago that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was proceeding with a reorganization there was virtually unanimous condemnation from one end of the country to the other. This decision was made without consultation with representatives of the Indian community. Despite the assurance of the minister that these changes are purely administrative and will have no effect on services provided for the Indians in Canada, this condemnation instead of subsiding has accelerated.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

During last week end a conference was held at Glendon college in Toronto at which were present representatives of Indian communities, as well as the department. I have been informed, as I am sure the minister has by his officials, that the deputy minister of his department was heckled and jeered at that conference. This is not surprising. Ever since the end of world war II we have been spending more and more money, ostensibly for Indian needs; yet the more we spend and the more we do the more complaints we hear from Indian communities. I think the reason is perfectly clear. In the past 100 years we have developed a completely authoritarian approach to Indian affairs. We, the great white fathers, tell the Indians what is good for them, and whether they like it or not they must accept it.

In recent years the ministers, and we have had a new one almost every year, have told the Indians that things are to be different. They have been told that the government intends to listen to them and get their advice as to what they want. Each minister has been put in the position where more and more decisions are being made, not by the Indians but by departmental officials. These decisions are not even being made by the minister.

This administrative change again means a further centralization, rather than a decentralization of this administration. This is now the case, rather than discussions with the provinces and a placing of responsibilities on the Indians for decisions, in consultation and co-operation with the provinces, as suggested by the Indian and Eskimo Association. This was also suggested by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) in a letter to the former prime minister, and I must say in language much stronger than I am using tonight.

We are getting more centralization, and more decisions will have to be made here in Ottawa rather than by the Indians and representatives of the department in the field. This whole structure is being reorganized without consultation. No one knows how we can develop an economic program for the Indians without developing a social program. We now have a biologist in charge of human development. I am sure he is a very worthy gentleman, but he is a man without the required knowledge, training, and experience to work with people. He is now in charge of human development.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Yet we are told by this minister—we get a different story, of course, when we listen to the Minister without Portfolio—that this is purely a bookkeeping device and one which ought not to concern the Indians. Well, it does concern the Indians. They are protesting and I think they are justified in protesting. I think they must continue to protest, as we must, until this minister does what other ministers have promised to do, and that is to start listening to the Indians instead of continuing to listen to and to obey what the bureaucrats in Ottawa tell the minister he ought to do.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should simply like to suggest to the hon. member that he should begin by reading the newspapers.

In the whole history of Canada, ever since the federal government has taken an interest in the problems of the Indians, consultations with the Indians have never taken place. Now, since July 15, 1968, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development branch has embarked upon a series of consultations with the Indians in all the provinces. We have held ten consultations with the Indians so far, and we will have finished the first round of 19 consultations at the end of December. Never in the past were the Indians consulted and I hear the hon. member say that we do not consult them.

However, as far as the reorganization of the branch is concerned, it was logical, following a decision taken by the House of Commons in 1966, to create a Department of Indian Affairs. Formerly, there was an Indian Affairs Branch, in 1966, it was decided to set up a Department of Indian Affairs and the decision taken a month ago by the cabinet and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was aimed at giving the status of a department to the Indian Affairs Branch. We wanted in that way to give even more importance to Indian affairs. However, since it was a purely administrative decision, we explained it here, and none of the criticism expressed until now dealt with the fundamental value of the reorganization.

All we heard about was the lack of consultation. There was no lack of consultation, because the reorganization concerned only the personnel in Ottawa.

We did not deal with the Indians, either with the reserves or the bands, any differently. We kept exactly the same structures. With regard to consulting the Indians and giving them new responsibilities, I can assure the honourable members that, as a result of the consultations we have had with them until now, it is obvious that under the terms of the new Indian Act, we will give them more authority, on both the reserve and band levels, in order to enable them to control their own destiny and to participate in their economic and social development.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

No government, Mr. Speaker, has cared as much about the social and economic emancipation of the Indians, and we intend to continue in that direction.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—INQUIRY AS TO DISPOSITION OF "GRANDE HERMINE"

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, when I put a question, on October 24 last, to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), with regard to the repatriation of the replica of the Grande Hermine to Quebec, please believe me it was not without reason.

This ship was built two years ago. It was one of the main attractions of La Ronde at Expo '67. Then, it was supposed to be taken to the historic Cartier-Brébeuf park which is to be built in Quebec City.

Of course, due to uncontrollable circumstances, we were unable to repatriate it when Expo '67 closed down. This ship stayed all winter long at La Ronde in 1967, and it stayed at Man and His World in 1968, because the Cartier-Brébeuf park was not yet ready.

The history of the Grande Hermine speaks eloquently for itself, so that I need not elaborate on the matter. I do not intend either to hold the present minister—and much less his predecessor—responsible for such delays. However, I should like to mention certain reasons, because I feel that if circumstances did not lend themselves to transporting the ship to Quebec, someone was responsible for the situation.

I feel that the city of Quebec is not excusable, under the circumstances, for not having done the utmost to hand over to the federal government, as agreed the land expropriated for the Cartier-Brébeuf park.

I therefore feel justified, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my electors, on behalf of the whole population of the city of Quebec—who, first of all, hope to see Cartier-Brébeuf park become a reality and, secondly to see the replica of the historical ship called Grande Hermine installed in the estuary of the St. Charles and Lairet rivers, historical site where Jacques Cartier wintered in 1534 and us know what his department intends to do with regard to the Grande Hermine for the coming months, and what it intends to do so that the ship can be repatriated to the city of Quebec and, especially, to the Cartier-Brébeuf park.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the member for Quebec East, I merely wish to tell him that the stay in Montreal of the Grande Hermine which was an attraction at Expo '67 and at Man and His World in 1968, has come to an end, and that we now want to move it to Cartier-Brébeuf park in Quebec City.

However, circumstances known to the hon. member, that is the fact that we still do not have at our disposal the necessary land in the Cartier-Brébeuf park to build permanent facilities for the Grande Hermine, force us to berth it temporarily at Lauzon, so that it will not be too far from the park when it is ready.

We are still waiting for the city of Quebec to let us have the land. I know that the municipal authorities intend to expropriate it and as soon as the land is handed over to us, we will immediately undertake the final development of the Cartier-Brébeuf park, in order to set up permantly the replica of the Grande Hermine on the historic location where Jacques Cartier had his winter quarters, as the hon. member said so well, in 1534 and in 1535.

ATOMIC ENERGY-REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN FRENCH AND CANADIAN AGENCIES

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, on October 15 of this year the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced that an agreement had been entered into between Atomic Energy of Canada and the C.E.A. of France providing for co-operation and exchange of information on research and development of heavy water moderated nuclear reactors. Although he made a long statement on the development of nuclear power reactors, the minister said practically nothing about the agreement itself. On subsequent occasions when he was asked for details of the agreement, the minister said it was secret and would not be published.

Only three things were mentioned in the public statement: First, that there was an exchange of information of commercial value; second, that it does not include the full design

1535-in asking the honourable minister to let details of specific power stations such as at Douglas point; and third, that the French are very interested in Canadian nuclear power systems. We do not know and we were not told what real or imagined benefit will come to Canada from this agreement; whether there is any real expectation of selling nuclear power plants or just a pious hope; how much Canada is receiving for the sale of 20 years of research. In this context I should point out that in this year alone the research program of A.E.C.L. will cost Canada $68 million. We do not know if we are selling all our research or only part. We do not know what safeguards are written into this agreement and the previous one for the sale of plutonium. It should provide for the peaceful use only of material and information. This was stressed strongly in the previous agreements between Canada and India and between Canada and the United Kingdom. The fact that they do not have bomb development programs made those situations different from that of France which, in fact, has.

• (10:20 p.m.)

In the previous agreements it was stressed that the international atomic energy agency should supervise any part of an agreement concerning the sale of plutonium or the sale of information. We are not told whether in this particular case the international atomic energy agency has any part to play.

May I now turn to the reason for secrecy, if there is one. First, it is very clear that there is no military security involved. We do not have any bomb technology to sell. Second, there is no technology in the agreement itself. In other words, this agreement is concerned with information, but the information itself is not in the agreement. How, therefore, can any technology be made public or any secret or any confidential information passed when that cannot possibly be in the agreement? There can surely be no secrecy or confidentiality on that ground.

the design details of certain nuclear power plants are excluded, but we do not know what is included in this agreement. Since there is no military secrecy, and no technical secrecy, the only thing left is the financial consideration. We do have some vague idea, Mr. Speaker, what the financial consideration amounts to. At a press conference outside the house it was revealed that the United Kingdom paid $700,000 for the information it received and that France was paying slightly more. Now, what slightly more amounts to, I have no idea. I suppose it time because to do so we would have to could be a million dollars.

How much have we spent in the last 20 years on research? It was estimated nearly a billion dollars. The only conclusion to which I can come is that the government does not want us to know what it has done. I have an overwhelming feeling that we have given away one of our most expensive and prized possessions, our nuclear technology, and received nothing in return. In ordinary parlance, one would call it being sold down the river.

I conclude by acknowledging that the sale of nuclear power plants has become a very competitive business. We have to protect ourselves. We cannot give away our business secrets nor our technology; that goes without saying. I wonder if this is not exactly what we have done in this case? In trying to protect the confidentiality of this information from other people, we have refused it to the Canadian people as well. We do not know whether this agreement is a valid one. There is no reason on earth why it should be secret. We have asked on several occasions that the government either publish the agreement or the essential parts of it, or at the very least make a statement indicating what is contained in the agreement. This statement could be made in such a manner that if there are secrets or confidential material in the agreement, that part would not be revealed. I think in a matter of this magnitude the Canadian people have some right to know whether or not the government has made a fair deal on their behalf.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) as well as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) I shall attempt to answer this question tonight. The hon, member asked the question of the Prime Minister and repeated it here tonight. He wants the non-secret parts of the agreement made public. I think it is unfortunate when we are dealing with atomic energy, with all the fury that it is capable of bringing upon people when it is not used for peaceful purposes, to leave a sinister connotation such as is left by the hon. gentleman's question. I am certain he had no intention of doing that. I think there is no clear assertion that the conditions of the agreement will never be made public. They could not be made public at this secure the consent of France.

The fact of the matter is this, that Canada has been very cautious indeed in the sale of atomic fuels, as my hon. friend has already pointed out, and commendably has required stringent guarantees in respect of the peaceful use of such fuels. We are not dealing here with the sale of a fuel; we are dealing with the exchange of information between two nations. I think we are fortunate in that we are blessed with one of the greatest potential sources in any nation in the world of that particular type of fuel. France is in a position where it is among the first ten nations today in energy consumption, based upon income of people, and therefore constitutes a very promising market for our fuel.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, they are using a method that is different from ours. It is thought in Canada, where we want to obtain the largest possible sale of fuel in the future, that an exchange of information will probably popularize the type of fuel that we have for sale and the method that we have adopted. This is an information exchange between Canadian scientists who will go to France and French scientists who will come to Canada. As a matter of fact, I am informed that two or three persons have already been exchanged.

I think that in this fuel lies a fantastic future. It is being suggested that by 1980 over 30 per cent of the energy on this continent may be atomic energy. There is a very wide opinion among scientists today to the effect that we have just begun to touch the fringes of atomic energy, that it has much greater scientific potential than other forms energy.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in respect to this nation a good market is indicated for the future for the sale of fuel, and the type and method we are using, which is water cooled instead of gas.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): However, the chief reason, Mr. Speaker, is that no consent has been obtained at this time from France to make public the agreement. If the matter were pressed, then possibly the minister would endeavour to obtain such agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) presented the first report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, and moved that the report be concurred in.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the standing committee on public accounts has inquired regarding the reference to that committee of the volumes of the public accounts. With the leave of the house I should like to move the following motion in order that this request may be carried out. I move, seconded by Mr. Sharp:

That the public accounts, volumes I, II and III for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, laid before the house on January 9, 1967, and the report of the Auditor General thereon, and the public accounts, volumes I, II and III, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1967, laid before the house on January 22, 1968 and the report of the Auditor General thereon, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF AGREEMENTS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of the house to table, in French and in English, a number of agreements which recently have been signed by Canada subject to ratification, or which have been entered into force for Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING UNIVERSAL APPLICATION OF BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-122, to amend the British North America Act, 1867, (Canadian Bill of Rights).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon, member shall have leave to introduce this bill?

Some hon. Members: Explain.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the British North America Act of 1867 by adding thereto as part of the federal constitution with regard to the power of parliament a Canadian Bill of Rights, in substitution for the act of parliament, chapter 44 passed in the year 1960. This latter statute has been, to a certain point, ineffective from the fact that it is not part of the Canadian constitution, and its application has been rather limited because most of the time the decisions of the courts have been to the effect that its provisions apply only to legislation adopted by parliament since its coming into force.

In other words, what this bill seeks to achieve is a practical universal application of the bill of rights.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTED YEAR OF SERVICE BY YOUTH FOR PEACEFUL PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

the house to table, in French and in English, a number of agreements which recently have Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether his [English] government has given consideration to requiring a year of civil service similar to the NIGERIA-REPORTED INTERFERENCE WITH military service in other countries, but devoted to peaceful ends?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Our government has not given consideration to that, Mr. Speaker, but it is an idea I have discussed in conversations with some ministers as a very imaginative one, and something that might be done in the future in this country.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the government given consideration in connection with this idea to the phasing out of the Company of Young Canadians?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing near the planning stage in regard to this idea of a year of civil service by the youth of this land. This is just an idea that was discussed in conversations.

Mr. Stanfield: But it is an idea that is being discussed, Mr. Speaker, within government circles?

Mr. Trudeau: I said it was a matter that had been discussed in conversations between myself and a few ministers. We discuss a number of ideas of all kinds and natures. This was not meant as government business, but rather as a conversation. I do not claim any privilege on the conversations between privy council members, because it is not the kind of idea that would be taken for discussion.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question.

Can he state flatly that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) was not talking on behalf of the government last night when he spoke of peaceful conscription for the young people of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, he was not speaking on behalf of the government, Mr. Speaker, since I told the Leader of the Opposition that the matter had not been discussed or decided at the government level.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OBSERVER TEAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs has received any direct report from the Canadian members of the observer team in Nigeria regarding the interference they are reported to have encountered from General Adekunle, also known as the Black Scorpion. In any case, has the government taken or is it contemplating taking any action arising out of this disturbing incident?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I expect that I will have a report on the incident directly from General Milroy, who is the chief member of the Canadian observer team. I have only one comment to make; that is, I believe the work of this observer team is so useful, not only in reporting on the conduct of the federal troops, but under circumstances of civil war, I do not think any incident like this would cause us to withdraw.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I say, in view of the minister's answer, I am not for one moment suggesting that we should withdraw from the team. What I am sure we are all interested in knowing is whether the government is planning to obtain from the government of Nigeria a firm undertaking that such interference will not again occur, and that the team will have full freedom of movement.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the evidence that was given by General Milroy—perhaps I can be excused for referring to the committeeindicates that he personally had no interference, and I hope that reports we receive indicate that there is in fact no interference.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister discussed with the Nigerian government the enlargement of the terms of reference for the observer team, as urgently proposed by the team itself in its report of October 15?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brewin: A further supplementary question. As a result of this discussion does it appear that the terms of reference are likely to be enlarged?

swer from the Nigerian government, Mr. sure might be taken off our national parks? Speaker.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the widely reported threat of a whipping by Colonel Adekunle constitute in the minister's mind a threat to the free movement of the observer team?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, while I have very great confidence in the newspaper that reported this incident, I think we should all wait until we have a report from the Canadian observer.

NATIONAL PARKS

QUEBEC-NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the honourable Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

As shown on page 392 of Hansard of September 24, 1968, the minister made a statement with regard to the non-existence of national parks in the province of Quebec, while the federal government during the last decade spent $225 million in other states of the Canadian federation.

Could the minister tell us when he will issue the statement which he had promised us?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to make a statement. However, I must wait for the answer of the Quebec government, and I hope that Quebecers will one day be able to enjoy national parks.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Does the honourable minister imply that the Quebec government is to be blamed for the delay in recuperating the $60 million which is due by the federal government?

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister has recognized the urgent need for additional national parks, including parks in Quebec and Ontario, would he also consider reviving the recreational parks program that was discontinued by the Liberal

REQUEST FOR EARLY REPORT BY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. As all Canadians would like to see our athletes make the best possible showing in international competition, and as this costs considerably more money than is now available for adequate coaching and preparation-

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hees: I am coming to the question, and I thank hon. members for their interest. In view of this, would the Prime Minister request the task force that is presently looking into this matter to speed up their deliberations, so these additional finances may be made available as soon as possible? Also, would the government consider making tax free all donations toward financing our athletes preparing for international competitions?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer that question, I would advise the hon. member that the task force has these very matters under consideration and is trying to come forward with its report as quickly as possible.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While this deliberation is going on and it will probably go on long after the hockey season starts, would the Prime Minister and the government give consideration to putting our three gold medal winning horses on the payroll, as a former Liberal government did a few years ago?

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister advise the house why it was necessary to set up a task force at additional cost when we already have the advisory council—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

Inquiries of the Ministry
AGRICULTURE

CORN—INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he use his good offices to make arrangements for the Minister of Agriculture to appear in the house today so he can make his announcement concerning corn marketing? I ask this question of the Prime Minister in view of the statement by the Minister of Agriculture last Thursday in reply to a question from myself on this subject. The minister then said:

I expect that perhaps within a few hours, but certainly very shortly, I will be in a position to make an announcement in connection with the import competitive factors involved in the marketing problem.

The minister has not had an opportunity to make his announcement in the house, the price of corn is falling every day, and it is very important that this be done.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will use my good offices with the Minister of Agriculture to make sure he is here for the question period some other day this week.

SHIPPING

CHURCHILL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EXTENSION OF SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Prime Minister, if the right hon, gentleman has time for me at all. I have directed similar questions to the Minister of Transport on two occasions, and he has taken them as notice. The Prime Minister was also asked a question on this subject. The parliamentary secretary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has had the floor for some minutes and he has not asked his question yet.

Mr. Korchinski: I have been at this question for two months, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask whether the report on the extension of the season in Churchill will be provided to the house; whether this is to be a secret type of report, or whether it is to be an interdepartmental report.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall be pleased to discuss the matter with the Minister of Transport when he is back in Ottawa from his tour in connection with the important question of housing.

[Mr. Speaker.]

An hon. Member: What about tomorrow?

Mr. Trudeau: He will not be here tomorrow.

GRAIN

REPORTED SALES NOT UNDER WHEAT BOARD REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce perhaps my question could be taken as notice by the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt. What action is the government taking to investigate allegations of wholesale evasion of Canadian Wheat Board regulations and black marketing in grain outside the ambit of the board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I will be very glad to take that question as notice.

NATIONAL SECURITY

JAMES EARL RAY—ALLEGED POSSESSION OF FORGED CANADIAN PASSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is directed to the Solicitor General. Does the minister know the name of the young lady employed in the public service of Canada who was very friendly with James Earl Ray, the alleged assassin of Martin Luther King; and was an investigation made to determine whether she or anyone else helped Ray obtain a forged Canadian passport?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I do not know the young lady, and I do not know what foundation there is for the hon. member's question, unless it is based on his acceptance of the stories appearing in today's newspapers.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask a supplementary question.

Mr. MacEwan: You're slipping, George.

Mr. Woolliams: I want to congratulate the Solicitor General upon his purity. Seriously, I wonder if the Solicitor General would be prepared to make a report with regard to the alleged forgery of the passport. Would he be prepared to table the documents that led up to the issuance of the forged passport?

Mr. McIlraith: The difficulty with the hon. member's question is that he is making a great many assumptions. I presume he is referring to a story in this afternoon's newspaper. If he is, and wishes to be more precise in his question, I will be glad to make inquiries about the matter. I know nothing about it.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further supplementary question. Will the minister make a statement on whether the passport in fact was forged? If so, would he table the documents that led up to the forgery?

Mr. McIlraith: No, I am not prepared to give a categorical answer to the question at this time. I do not believe it is proper to do so. If an investigation is going on or if one has been going on, it is not for me to disclose details of any investigation that may be going on in any criminal case until the matter is completed. I want to look at the question very carefully before saying whether I would answer.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the minister not say if there is in fact an investigation going on with reference to the forged passport? If so, when it is completed would he give the details to the house?

Mr. McIlraith: No, and I would not answer the latter question this time.

THE MINISTRY

REQUEST FOR PRESENCE IN HOUSE OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax): My question is for the Prime Minister and arises out of a question put by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster yesterday. I should like to ask him whether, in light of the allegations about conduct that are being made in the country, he could use his good offices to make sure the Minister of Transport is here at a very early date?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes; I am informed he will be in the house on Thursday.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE ON LAND ACT APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that the deadline for registration for certain benefits under the Veterans Land Act is October 31, and in view of the fact there are certain servicemen whose qualifications for these particular benefits are under review by the Department of National Defence, will the minister keep an open mind and leave the expiry date open in so far as this particular group of servicemen is concerned? I refer particularly to the members of the P.P.C.L.I. band which formed part of the Korean force in 1953.

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this date of October 31, 1968 was established by an act of parliament in 1962. The Department of Veterans Affairs has given ample publicity to the deadline. I should add that the efficiency of the publicity is evidenced by the great number of applications we have received in recent days. I do hope that all veterans who expect to qualify will do so before October 31. As to keeping an open mind, the minister always tries to keep an open mind.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that applications that were made were turned down by the minister's department because of a certain ruling in the Department of National Defence, and in view of the fact that this ruling is now under review, surely the minister does not feel this group should be disqualified if their applications are not accepted by October 31.

Mr. Dubé: The department and the minister will try to treat all veterans with justice and equity.

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF ALLOWANCE ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Now that the committee on veterans affairs has commenced its work, may I ask whether the government has yet decided to refer to that committee the War Veterans Allowance Act in order to make amendments and improvements thereto?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dube (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. The committee will be studying the estimates; following that they will deal with the Woods report and then make a report. This should keep the committee busy for quite a few meetings.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the time comes that the government refers the Woods report to the committee, would it consider adding along with that report the [English] question of the War Veterans Allowance Act?

Mr. Dubé: That is a possibility, Mr. Speaker, but it has not been decided yet.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO REGULATION OF CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is related to a question asked a short time ago with regard to federal support that may be given to Canadian athletics.

Having in mind the continuing and recent reports of increasing disease associated with cigarette smoking in Canada, and the fact that a further 8,000 young Canadians start smoking every month, what consideration is the minister giving to controlling the promotion of this dangerous product, at least in the field of television advertising?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It appears to me that what the hon, member is asking for now is a statement of a nature that in my view should normally be made on motions.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare would consider referring the entire question of cigarette smoking to the committee on national health and welfare.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that matter is under consideration.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether Hon. Lionel Chevrier was stating government policy last week when he forecast that within five years, Canadian assistance to the French-speaking countries would exceed $100 million?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that the question, as put by the hon. member, is in order. Members can put questions concerning a statement made outside the house by a service.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SERVICE TO URBAN AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the recent postal legislation that drastically increased postal rates, will the minister now consider giving postal delivery to urban areas that are now frozen?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): No. Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

REPORTED HAZARD FROM WATER USED IN THERMONUCLEAR PLANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that the water used for cooling our thermonuclear plants is creating a hazard to our fisheries, does the minister plan on taking any action in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt whether the question is the type that should be asked at the present time. The hon, member might give some thought to placing the question on the order paper.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION AS TO ADMISSION OF RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house whether, during this session of the United Nations, Canada will join other nations in presenting a resolution with a view to allowing Communist China to become a member of the United Nations?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The government policy has not changed with regard to Communist China. This question is about to be studied but I can say that in matters relating to the United Nations in general, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is going to the United minister, but not by a member of the public Nations this afternoon to discuss several problems.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Has the government decided whether ing this announcement based upon a decision Canadian delegation will vote abstain from voting on the admission of Communist China?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the questions that I will be discussing with the Canadian delegation when I visit it this afternoon and tomorrow.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house whether the Canadian government has made progress with regard to the setting up of diplomatic relations with Communist China as mentioned during the last election campaign?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we are beginning better to understand the implications of the question. We have not yet had direct contacts with any Chinese representatives.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CHANGE IN STATUS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will confirm that it is the intention of his government, through the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, to announce in Halifax today that the Atlantic Development Board is to be reduced to the status of an advisory body.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that asking what the minister will announce later today is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. Is it the policy and the intention of the government of Canada to change the status of the Atlantic Development Board to that of an advisory board?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this question is under advisement by the minister and his department, and he will have an announcement to make at some time.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary

Inquiries of the Ministry

Minister inform the house whether, in makor taken, the minister and the government are rejecting the recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada that the Atlantic Development Board ought to act as the planning and administrative agency in co-ordinating federal area development programs in the Atlantic provinces?

> Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, again the question is hypothetical; the announcement has not yet been made.

> Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is government policy. Now, come on.

> Mr. Trudeau: Why? Because it is in the newspapers?

> Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is under consideration. Dont give us this hypothetical

> Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether, if and when such announcement is made, it will be made in the house or outside?

> Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid that supplementary is purely hypothetical.

> Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Prime Minister had a change of heart from his election promise that the role of the A.D.B. would be expanded appreciably?

> Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative, and I do not think is in order.

> Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is prophetic.

> Mr. Lundrigan: Then may I rephrase my question. During the election compaign quite a bit of emphasis was placed on the role of the A.D.B.

> Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister of forestry announces his intentions with respect to the Atlantic Development Board, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will undertake that the house will also be given a general statement as to the machinery that is being set up and the question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime plans that are being made to deal with regional disparities, particularly in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the minister has stated on other occasions that as soon as these plans are in an advanced state of preparation he will make an announcement to the house.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister give the house an undertaking that such a fundamental change in the status of the Atlantic Development Board will not be made by the government until there has been a suitable opportunity to discuss the matter in the house?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, again the question assumes that the change will be made. This is not an assumption that is based on any statement made by the minister.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that yet another province has announced its intention of establishing the office of ombudsman, and in view of repeated assurances from the government in previous sessions, could the Prime Minister tell the house whether it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation to establish the office of parliamentary commissioner during this session?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no such legislation is contemplated for this session. The Minister of Justice does act as an ombudsman, and he is considering the possibility of appointing a specific officer called an ombudsman.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REQUEST FOR NON-DISCRIMINATION POLICY IN NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the Supreme Court's reaffirmation of its decision in the Whitfield case, is the minister giving consideration to adopting a policy on non-discrimination so that companies doing business with the government or receiving permits from the government for development projects in northern areas will be required to agree to a policy of non-discrimination on the basis of race, colour or religion?

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the importance of the question, but I wonder whether the hon. member would not rather expect a statement on motions. Otherwise the question should be placed on the order paper.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

EXCHEQUER COURT RULES OF PROCEDURE IN ENGLISH ONLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, but in his absence I would like the Prime Minister to take it as notice.

I am informed that that there is no French version of the rules of procedure in Exchequer Court. Does the Prime Minister intend to take immediate action to correct that situation, since all French-Canadian students must now study those rules in English.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making representations to the minister, but if he wishes to ask a question, I suggest that his question should be placed on the order paper. However, if there was some urgency, the matter could be discussed at the time of the adjournment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—SAFETY OF CANADIAN AIR CREWS FLYING IN SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since Canadian airmen are now flying or soon will fly to and from an airstrip in Biafra that is subjected to daily bombing and intermittent artillery fire, will the minister inform the house of the details of agreements between the government of Canada and other governments or authorities, or between the International Red Cross and other governments and authorities, guaranteeing the safety of Canadian air crews?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This question is purely hypothetical.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure everyone in the house will agree that the hon.

member's question is very important. During discussions on this question it has been assumed there is no risk for our airmen. There is. The Canadian government is taking every precaution it can take. The general arrangement is that the flights are to be under arrangements made by the International Red Cross with the Nigerian authorities—

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house is most anxious to hear the minister, but I think the minister owes it to the house to revert to motions. I am sure he will obtain unanimous consent. Then there will be an opportunity for various spokesmen to make the adequate responses which need to be made.

Mr. Sharp: I have just one sentence to add to my answer. I was saying that the arrangements for the flights are in accordance with the arrangements made by the International Red Cross with the Nigerian authorities. Actually the commander of the aircraft himself is responsible for the safety of the crew.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us whether Hercules aircraft so far have flown into Biafra, or into the Nigerian sector?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. The aircraft is at Fernando Po. The first flight has not yet been made.

Mr. Forrestall: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When does the minister anticipate the first flight will be made?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it will be as soon as the commander of the aircraft believes it is safe to make the flight.

RESEARCH

INQUIRY AS TO REVIEW OF SCIENCE POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the fourth report of the Science Council of Canada made public today concerning national science policy, is action being taken at the Privy Council level to review current science programs?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker. For some time there has been a review in progress on current science policy.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask whether consideration is being given to reviving any cancelled programs?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that specific consideration is being given to acts of revival, but we are looking at the entire matter.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister, as was promised by the Prime Minister yesterday, prepared to make a statement to this house regarding price support or deficiency payments with regard to Atlantic cod this week?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, before making a statement we are awaiting submissions from the Atlantic provinces in this regard.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR PRESIDENT OF ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of the minister's meeting this morning with the president of the Armstrong Indian Association, will the minister make a grant available to Mr. Hector King, president of the association, as a means of encouraging direct involvement of the Indian peoples in the political process?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member this question might well be placed on the order paper.

INDUSTRY

 $\begin{array}{c} {\tt NEWFOUNDLAND-PROPOSED} \ {\tt ASSISTANCE} \ {\tt FOR} \\ {\tt LINERBOARD} \ {\tt MILL} \end{array}$

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Can the minister confirm whether the government is reconsidering its announced intention to provide $20 million in aid to a linerboard mill of Canadian Javelin Limited which is proposed for Newfoundland?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been under discussion or under consideration for some time.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister didn't answer my question. Can he confirm or deny press reports to the effect that the government is reconsidering its announced intention to provide some $20 million in aid to this proposed plant?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the hon, member cannot ask the minister to confirm or deny reports.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ARDA REPORT ON INDIAN POVERTY AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of the publication in a Toronto newspaper of excerpts from an ARDA report on Indian poverty areas, the government previously having declined to make these excerpts public, will the minister now table this document in the house?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have read the article in which it is stated that I received this document a long time ago.

I received the document at my office scarcely a few days ago. I have read it. It is a confidential document concerning another department: the Department of Forestry and Rural Development.

[English]

Mr. Southam: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it correct to say that this report is highly critical of the paternalism of the department of Indian affairs?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the department is criticized by many people, but there are the Indians.

[Mr. McGrath.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a debate between the minister and the hon, member. I recognize the hon, member for Fundy-Royal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST-REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Speaking in Montreal the minister said that the solution to the Middle East question will have to be found within the area itself. Is it now the position of the government that direct negotiations must take place between Israel and the United Arab Republic?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is our hope—I believe this hope is shared by all members of the United Nations-that a settlement will be found within resolution 242, under the distinguished guidance of Gunnar Jarring. He is dealing with the question of direct confrontation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO ACQUISITION OF TANKER AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Since it is seven or eight months since a special study was conducted, is the minister in a position to say whether a decision has been reached with regard to the replacement of the C-141? Is the government to acquire aircraft which can refuel in the air our new support CF-5's?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the question as asked is a matter of urgency. However, the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we must first decide whether there is a strategic requirement for our procuring a tanker. If there is, then we shall have to make an assessment of what is also a lot of persons who agree that there available and we shall have to begin negotianever was a government more concerned than tions. We have not done that yet because so ours with the economic and social progress of far the CF-5 has been considered a tactical aircraft.

[Translation]

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand from the minister's answer that the government is now reassessing the role of the CF-5?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): No. So far as procuring a tanker to refuel the CF-5 is concerned, we shall have to determine whether to go for strategic mobility or tactical mobility. I was saying that so far we have not made that decision.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister tell the house whether his department is preparing a new white paper? We have not had one for six years, and we should like one to explain some of these mysterious matters over which he presides.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I contend, Mr. Speaker, that some time is still required for the first one to be digested.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the assessment of the strategic or tactical role of the CF-5 the first such assessment the minister's department has initiated since the purchase inquiry for some C-141's over one year ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member would be the first one to admit that the question is argumentative.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, the question was on the order paper and the department answered it to the effect that it did place an order for the aircraft. It is not an argumentative question.

Mr. Speaker: It is a question of argument whether it is argumentative or not.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence who needs the time to consider this six year old report; the minister and his department?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): My implication, of course, was that the opposition needed the time.

FINANCE

CONSULTATION RESPECTING PROPOSED SECURITIES COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Following the federal-provincial meeting which took place on October 25, 1968, with regard to the creation of a Canadian securities commission, does the Prime Minister intend to make a statement and to table in the house the studies made in this respect, so that the members of the house may be well informed on this important matter, since they profit by all the information they receive?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these meetings between senior officials of the federal and provincial governments are still proceeding. The matter is still under consideration and we are not yet ready to draft legislation.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Jack Horner (Crowfoot): I wonder if I might ask a quick question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have already gone beyond the period of time allocated for questions.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we were told that the Minister of Agriculture is not on the roster today or on Monday, and all during this question period we were told that he was busy in his office. This is the reason we have been given for the change in the question period, but I would point out that during this question period the Minister of Agriculture was floating behind the curtains while he could have been in the house. Surely the Prime Minister will allow him into the house on the days he is not on the roster.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might take a moment of the house's time at the beginning of fish and food month to say to the right hon. Prime Minister that I congratulate him on today receiving the gift of a salmon from the Minister of Fisheries. I want him to know that the members who are here ing to offer their services to him if he has any doubt as to the proper preparation of this fine sea food.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can only say this is a fishy point of order.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AMOUNT, RATE OF CALCULATION, ETC.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-113, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBLE CLASSES, AMOUNT OF CAPITAL, INTEREST RATES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, October 28, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-110, to amend the Farm Credit Act-Mr. Olson-Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Monday, October 28, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 1-"Farmer".

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, now that the minister is with us, and apart from the wider platitudes with respect to clause 1 of this bill concerning credit, could he make his announcement, which he said last Thursday he was going to make in a matter of hours, concerning corn marketing and the result of his conversation with United States officials? Farm broadcasts on the C.B.C. both yesterday morning and today indicated that his longawaited announcement was expected momentarily. I am sure members of the committee would give the minister unanimous consent to make his announcement if he is now able to do so.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might be permitted to ask unanimous consent to do whatever is necessary at exactly four o'clock. At that time I would like to read a press statement.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, in his reply the minister made a suggestion that will be welcomed by most hon. members. I am wondering whether you could use your good offices from the Atlantic provinces are only too will- with the Speaker so that the minister may be able to revert to motions and make his announcement at four o'clock.

> Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, maybe the procedure that ought to be followed is to revert to motions, but I should point out that it will take me only two or three minutes to make my statement at that time. It may take less time to make the statement than to go through the process of reverting to motions with the Speaker in the chair.

> The Chairman: We have half an hour before the time of the announcement, and I think I will probably be able to work out an arrangement in the interval.

> Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, clause 1 covers the main aspects of the bill. It seems to me that the main objection to this legislation is the government's plan to change the fixed rate of interest on loans and have it set by the governor in council. I feel that the 5 per cent interest rate should be retained and that the government should, if necessary, subsidize the interest rate. This matter has been raised on numerous occasions in the house. We would not be doing anything that had not been done previously. Again I would like to point out to the minister that in last year's annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation it was shown that interest rates were subsidized. Further, in last year's main estimates for the Department of Agriculture a sum of $3,809,176 was included which I understand was mainly to take care of the excess of interest costs accrued by the Farm Credit Corporation. In view of the difficulties the agricultural sector of our economy is experiencing this year I see no reason why the department should not carry this subsidization forward for at least the next year or

• (3:30 p.m.)

There is another point I should like to make. The bill before us will increase the amount of money available for borrowing through the Farm Credit Corporation by approximately $400 million. Last year an amount of $194.5 million, I believe, was lent. If an amount of $3.8 million was required to subsidize the interest rates on the 1967 and 1968 loans, the amount needed to subsidize this additional $400 million over the next year or two, whenever the amount is used up, will not be excessive. I say to the minister and to the government that this is a very small price to pay to provide some degree of stability to the farmers who need these loans. I suggest has been given that loans have been approved again, as I have on other occasions, that we pending this legislation or anything else, make this subsidy available to the farmers, particularly in the coming year.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Chairman, I have a question I should like to ask the minister at this time rather than deal with it on a specific clause. It has been some months now since farm credit loans have been available to farmers. During this interval a number of loans have been approved in principle. In fact a number of these loan contracts have actually been signed except that the rate of interest is not indicated in the contract. Has it been the policy of the department to sign contracts for farm loans leaving the rate of interest open but approving the loans? It seems to me that this certainly is not a very good way to conduct business, particularly when there are farmers whose approved loans are being held up.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, any approved loan includes the interest rate and the rates and amounts of repayment along with the dates.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): But do the old rates of interest not apply until the new bill is actually passed? In respect of loans that have been approved in the last two or three months is it the policy of the government to require that the rate of interest be according to the new legislation rather than the old legislation which has been in effect?

Mr. Olson: In response to the hon. member's question, all loans that are approved are in fact contracts. The terms set down in those contracts carry on to the expiration of the contracts. If the hon, gentleman is asking whether any interest rates on existing contracts will be changed, the answer is no. Whatever they are they are until termination.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): The minister does not understand my question. I know of several cases in which the loan has been approved, the money has been granted and the rate of interest to be charged under that loan contract apparently has not been specified while the new legislation is pending. The contracts have been signed and the loans have been approved while the interest rates to be charged hypothetically in the future are held in abeyance until this legislation is passed.

Mr. Olson: I am advised that all loans that have been approved carry the interest rate in effect at the time of approval. If an indication there is a misunderstanding of what was intended.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): I will be very pleased to refer one case in particular to the minister.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, earlier I raised a point concerning subsidization. Probably I should put a question to the minister. Have we subsidized the interest rates on any loans and, if so, will this subsidization carry on for the full period of the loan?

Mr. Olson: In respect of all loans that were granted at the statutory limit of 5 per cent, whatever the difference between that 5 per cent and the actual cost of the money to the corporation is could be construed as a subsidy. The Department of Agriculture in its estimates makes up the deficit of the corporation each year.

The difference between the rate of interest at which the contracts have been let-5 per cent for the first $20,000 in many cases and an economic rate beyond $20,000—and the cost to the corporation I suppose is a subsidy. But those contracts will carry on to their termination and certainly the estimates of the Department of Agriculture will have to provide for the deficit to the end of those contracts.

Mr. Harding: I have another question, Mr. Chairman. What is the total of the loans that have been subsidized in this fashion? Is it $194.5 million?

Mr. Olson: I am advised that they have been subsidizing greater or lesser amounts depending on what the cost of the money has been since 1959.

Mr. Harding: Would the total be $194.5 million?

Mr. Olson: I think it would be far in excess of $194.5 million, but it would take us a minute or two to try to get an approximation of the amount.

Mr. Harding: If we can subsidize an amount of approximately $200 million in loans why can we not continue the same policy with regard to the additional $400 million which we are preparing to advance to the Farm Credit Corporation now?

Mr. Olson: The reason is that we would have to find the money by way of taxation. While it may be desirable to subsidize certain sections of the agricultural community, and indeed we do in greater or lesser degree, the point here is that I am of the opinion that there are far more desirable ways in which to subsidize agriculture than by being so selective in respect of subsidization that only those who borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation would be subsidized.

The policy changes from time to time. I would be the first to admit that. It seems to me, however, that if we have massive subsidization by way of interest rates of only a minority of the farmers in Canada—in this case it is about one out of four commercial farms which have loans from the Farm Credit Corporations—this would be discriminatory at least in some sense.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I should like to pose a question and perhaps make a suggestion which might facilitate the passage of this legislation. I am sure the minister realizes that the members on this side of the house are very much concerned about the rate of interest that might be charged to the farmers under this legislation particularly, as has been pointed out many times, because it is long term in its application. May I suggest that when we reach the clause of the bill which deals with the proposed change in the interest rates the minister should give us a very detailed statement as to the formula he believes will be used, the method of its application, what we can expect as the interest rate in the view of the government under this proposed legislation and whether or not the interest rate will be reviewed periodically for adjustment upwards or downwards as the case may be. Would the minister consider giving us such a statement? I am sure it would facilitate the passage of the bill and make unnecessary a series of amendments to be proposed by the opposition in this regard.

Mr. Olson: That item could more properly be discussed under clause 5. However, I think the formula is very simple.

Mr. Danforth: I do not think the minister understood me. I am well aware it comes under clause 5. All I am asking the minister at this time is whether he is prepared to give us a detailed statement when we reach clause 5.

Mr. Olson: The formula is so simple I can give it now, although I have already given it. The interest rate will not be more than 1 per [Mr. Olson.]

cent above what the money costs the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Horner: Would the minister indicate whether that is short or long term money?

Mr. Olson: It is comparable term.

Mr. Horner: Comparable term; that is long term or short term?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, there are ways of calculating comparable terms in respect of what the Minister of Finance has to pay for money and the money that goes out as loans under the Farm Credit Corporation. We would take an average of a comparable term.

Mr. Harding: To follow that up, what would the interest rate be today? Surely the minister knows that. If you were to go out on the market today what would be the interest rate? You say it would be 1 per cent above that.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that the last loan made to the corporation by the Minister of Finance was at $6\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.

Mr. Harding: What was the date of the last loan?

Mr. Olson: It was October 1, 1968.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, let me deal specifically with clause 1. I have some concern as to how the criterion is to be set down in respect of individual shareholders of corporations, having in mind the provision, principally occupied in farming. I have some concern in this regard because of a clipping from a recent copy of the Western Producer. This is an article from Madison, Wisconsin, and it warns that corporation farming would cause higher grocery bills. The article spells out here the penalties that would apply if corporation farms displaced family owned farms in this country. They would be considerable. The article goes on to suggest that a heavy burden of taxes would be borne by consumers to relieve crushing social problems as displaced farmers move to already overcrowded cities. It concludes by suggesting that a farm official has warned that the movement of nonfarm corporations into agriculture is not an idle threat.

I should like to know how the criterion is to be set down in so far as the definition of the words "principally occupied" in this clause is concerned.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that "principally occupied" means simply that. The man must be principally occupied be farming and that he must work at it full in making his living from the occupation of time. Does it mean that the farmer who cannot live all year round but only during seven

Let me also reply to the hon. member for Red Deer and advise him that we are checking out the matter he raised in respect of a specific case. As soon as I have received a report I will make a further reply. According to the information passed on to me, this is contrary to the regulations.

Mr. Skoberg: To follow that up in reference to the phrase, "a farming corporation where that individual is a shareholder of the corporation", the minister has suggested that the man must be principally occupied in farming and the majority of his time must be spent in that occupation. I am quite sure the act does not spell it out in that way or in so many words. There is no indication that he would have to spend upwards of 50 per cent of his time in farming occupations.

Mr. Olson: The man must be occupied in farming.

Mr. Skoberg: Who will set down the criterion and who will police this particular part of the measure?

Mr. Olson: The F.C.C. officials in the field will make an assessment and I am sure an applicant for a loan would also have to make a declaration that this is the fact.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, like the member who spoke before me, I feel that the definition in clause 1 is not clear, that it is ambiguous.

The minister must know that the work of the eastern farmer is not necessarily the same as that of a western farmer. In short, our farmer cannot operate his farm the whole year round. In fact, he might leave his farm for three or four months during the winter to work elsewhere.

If I refer to the meaning given to the words "farmer" and "farming corporation" and if I go by the answer given earlier by the minister, I must take it that whoever wants to get a loan must engage in farming only and exclusively. But that definition cannot apply to the farmers in eastern Quebec, because at least 50 per cent will never be able to meet the conditions outlined in clause 1 of Bill No. C-110.

I would like to know if, in reply to a cipally occupied" do apply, however, and we question put to him earlier, the minister really said that the farmer's sole occupation must be farming and that he must work at it full time. Does it mean that the farmer who cannot live all year round but only during seven or eight months on his farm income will be penalized or discriminated against when he tries to get a loan for his farming operation from the corporation the minister wants to set up?

Since I have the floor, I would like to ask another question. I would also like to know if the type of investigation made by the federal government with regard to loans made to Quebec farmers will change. Last year I had the opportunity of seeing in my office farmers who had applied for a federal loan; in almost every case, the federal government investigators simply went to the provincial Department of Agriculture to check the farmers' records, and if the standards of the provincial Department of Agriculture were not met, the farmers were refused those loans. I would like to know if the federal government investigation will be carried out independently from that usually made by a provincial investigator for a farm loan granted by the province.

Often, in eastern Quebec, the federal investigator consults the files of the provincial Department of Agriculture and merely by referring to that file, when he realizes that the request of the farmer was turned down by that department, he automatically refuses the request for a loan filed with the Farm Credit Corporation.

I therefore say to the minister that this bill will not serve the interests of the farmers of eastern Canada, because if one goes by the definition given in the bill, as soon as a farmer does not work on his farm twelve months a year he is not eligible under clause 1 as a "farmer" whose main occupation is agriculture and, therefore, he is unable to obtain a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation.

I wonder if the minister could enlighten us in this regard.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member I would like to say that the Farm Credit Corporation have never excluded anyone for taking employment off the farm in off seasons. Indeed, grain farmers do not work on their farms the entire season, and they are not excluded. The words "principally occupied" do apply, however, and we mean by these words that it must be his principal occupation. The majority of his time must be spent in that occupation, and his income in particular must come from the occupation of farming.

So far as the other question is concerned, I would like to advise my hon. friend that the F.C.C. makes an independent assessment of the situation with regard to every application in the province of Quebec and everywhere else. But it does, of course, as do all agencies of this nature, obtain whatever information is available in order to make as accurate an assessment as possible of the credit standing of the applicant.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On clause 4-

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 4 I am particularly interested in subclause 2 (b) (i) which provides as follows:

(i) in the case of an individual, where in the opinion of the corporation the experience, ability and character of that individual are such as to warrant the belief that the farm to be mortgaged will be successfully operated.

I am particularly concerned about the fact that throughout this bill there seem to be provisions made under various clauses—I shall deal later with another clause which further amplifies my contention—whereby it will be possible for corporations or business enterprises, whose main purpose is the investment of capital rather than the promotion of agriculture, to move into the agricultural field using government money, having qualified under this act. I simply ask the minister whether this is the intention of the bill.

Under a previous clause the minister defined "farmer" as being an individual whose principal occupation is farming. But later in the bill we see that money may be lent to a corporation of which only one shareholder is engaged in farming. The only qualification is that he be principally engaged in farming and be 21 years of age. He may have three partners of any age who may be engaged in any business, but because of their financial investment they are a part of the corporation. I bring this matter to the attention of the minister at this time because it seems to me that if this is the interpretation to be placed on the bill it is designed to bring about vertical integration rather than to extend credit to individual farmers.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I reply by saying that I cannot accept the argument that this will make it easier for corporations, the [Mr. Olson.]

shareholders of which are not farmers, to obtain funds from the F.C.C. for the purpose of setting up a farming unit. In clause 4 (2) (b) (i) there is spelled out the definition of an individual who would qualify under the bill. The provision is:

—where in the opinion of the corporation the experience, ability and character of that individual are such as to warrant the belief that the farm to be mortgaged will be successfully operated—

And so on. The purpose of this amendment is to relate these characteristics to the individual shareholders of farming corporations as members of co-operative associations, since it is recognized that these are qualities of individuals as distinct from the qualities of the incorporated body. Therefore we think this provision ought to be in the bill so that the opinion of the field men of the Farm Credit Corporation can be taken into account in assessing the individual's capabilities as a potentially successful farmer, rather than the corporate entity, even though the loan may be made to the corporation. We also believe that this will assist family farms, rather than hindering them, in competing with corporate farms, because it will give them availability to larger amounts of credit within the family.

Since it is four o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might be permitted to read a press release respecting corn.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to allow the minister to make the statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Danforth: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I request that if the minister is allowed to make this statement we be allowed the same latitude in commenting on the statement or questioning the minister on it?

The Chairman: Yes. I would like to suggest to the committee that we follow the procedure that is normally followed when Mr. Speaker is in the chair. I will recognize a spokesman from each of the opposition parties, if there is one who wishes to speak to the statement, and we will try to limit the discussion in this way.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, a few extra copies of the statement have just been brought in. Perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite would like to have them. There are some in English and some in French.

Effective October 30, the federal government will apply value for duty on United States corn imported into Canada. This will ensure that corn will not move into Canada at prices below the U.S. support level of $1.05 U.S. per bushel. We have made this move after full consultation with the United States in accordance with our international trading obligations. I am confident that our action will bring a considerable measure of stability to the current corn marketing picture. I am pleased that we have been able to do this before quantities of U.S. corn have been imported into Canada at prices below their support level.

• (4:00 p.m.)

While the application of value for duty will bring considerable immediate benefit, there is no thought that it represents a permanent solution. Very fundamental marketing problems still exist for our corn growers in southwestern Ontario. For our part, we are continuing to pursue every possible avenue for answers to these problems. In the final analysis, however, producers themselves must play an active role in bringing about solutions. As I have said before, the means exist by which producers could relieve the marketing problem by creating a corn marketing agency under provincial legislation. Such an agency would be able, through more orderly marketing of Canadian corn, to stabilize and strengthen corn prices.

I also wish to note that other recent federal government action has included accelerating the depreciation allowance for farm storage facilities and the guaranteeing of storage space for corn in downstream elevators.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, the minister through his statement today has finally conceded the truth of the contention by the farmers of Ontario that corn has in effect been dumped into this country from the United States—

Mr. Olson: No, I did not.

Mr. Danforth: —and action has at this late date been taken by the government to apply value for duty on United States corn imported into Canada, although only to the extent of the U.S. support level of $1.05 a bushel.

The minister did not state how this affects the 8 cent duty already established against United States corn, a rate which was unable to protect our market. We would like to know whether the 8 cents a bushel duty will continue in addition to the value for duty provision or whether one will be substituted for the other.

It is unfortunate that for the most part the damage has already been done to the Canadian market this year. A tremendous amount of Ontario and Canadian corn has already been harvested and sold through normal market channels. The minister's announcement will be cold comfort indeed for those farmers who have already been forced to dispose of their crops. Through its action even at this late date the government has finally recognized that the contention of the producers was valid.

The minister himself says this is only a temporary measure. I hope, therefore, that active consideration will be given immediately to methods by which the Canadian market will be protected for the 1969 crop. Surely the producers of this crop are entitled to a fair market return for their investment and labour, as are those who work in other segments of the industry.

These arrangements could certainly have a stabilizing effect on the corn market in Canada—I am not saying they will—and might stabilize sales at better than the current price. But the lateness of government action and its limited scope indicate that the over-all picture for corn growers in 1968 will be a gloomy one.

Mr. Gleave: Might I ask the Minister of Agriculture a question? What does this announcement really mean in terms of a stabilized price for producers? Is the minister in a position to answer this question? I am not speaking facetiously.

Mr. Olson: I realize that this is probably against the rules under which we normally proceed but perhaps I could reply by saying this. I omitted to tell the committee that $1.05 works out at around $1.28 in Canadian funds making allowance, according to our calculations, for 8 cents duty, 8 cents exchange and 7 or 8 cents in transportation costs.

Mr. Gleave: The important factor, now that the government has taken this action, is what this really means to the producer. I talked to some of the corn growers when they were here, as I am sure the minister did. One figure they gave me for production cost was $1.27 per bushel. They quoted that figure as being the actual cost of production. I think it is fairly reliable though, of course, costs of production figures vary, as any of us who farm know. So the action proposed, taking into the account the information the minister has just given us, would just about bring the price within a cent of the cost of production.

In accordance with the assumption just made, it would not leave the farmer anything by way of a profit or net return.

However, I say quite frankly that I think the government has moved to meet the situation at least in a temporary way. I judge from talking to these farmers that their situation is as serious in its way as the one farmers face in western Canada. I hope the government will now move seriously and quickly, either on its own or together with the province, to stabilize the price of corn at a level which will enable growers to operate successfully and, to use the term we normally use, economically. Some of the things which might be done are mentioned in the press release.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to tell the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) that we welcome his statement concerning the application of value for duty on United States corn imported into Canada, since this solves in part the problems raised by a great number of Ontario farmers as to the price of Canadian corn and the dumping practised by the United States.

However, Mr. Chairman, we maintain that this measure is incomplete, because it is not drastic enough. Let us say that it is a makeshift, since it does not involve a complete solution designed to protect Canadian production.

For instance—and I should like to point this out to the minister—we face the same problem as concerns the Canadian celery production and the potato production in eastern Canada. I think it rests with the minister and his officials to look into the problem immediately, so that we are not faced with urgent situations as the one that arose a few days ago about corn.

I also want to thank the minister for having given us the French version of his statement; we are pleased to mention this, because most statements made in this house are usually delivered in English, without a translation being handed to us.

Mr. Chairman, our anti-dumping legislation must be drastic. That is why I am puzzled at this announcement of the Minister of Agriculture, because it creates a buffer situation which will have to be faced again some time from now. I understand that our economic situation, like that of other countries, changes constantly, and that we must adjust to it.

That is why I think that when the government intervenes too late, when the damage has already been done, remedial measures must be taken. That is why I ask the honourable minister whether he anticipates the introduction of measures providing for a compensation for the losses incurred by the farmers during the crop year 1968. I notice that no such measure is provided in his statement.

In closing, I should like to call the attention of the honourable minister to another subject which is not really related to this discussion but which comes under his department. We would greatly appreciate it if he would tell us soon whether the Canadian Dairy Commission might issue new milk quotas and raise the present quotas for the farmers concerned. I know that in the Lotbinière riding, for instance, many farmers are deprived of revenues to which they are entitled for the simple reason that the policy of the Canadian Dairy Commission at the present time is restrictive.

I think that, at the present time, it is an urgent matter for eastern Canada, and although I praise the minister for his work with regard to western farming, I should like him now to turn his attention towards the eastern farmers and to take drastic measures with regard to the dumping of some American goods.

[English]

Mr. McCutcheon: Would the minister permit one brief question?

The Chairman: Order, please. I do not want to be too severe, and perhaps by leave of the committee we might allow the hon. member for Lambton-Kent one question. The understanding was we would hear from the official spokesmen of the various parties and then revert to the bill. Is it the will of the committee that the member be allowed to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCutcheon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister mentioned in his statement that corn would be roughly $1.28 per bushel, having regard to the exchange and all the other factors. Cash corn in Chicago has been $1.07 but Canadian corn has been much lower. In fact, was the minister not saying that United States corn in Canada would be $1.28, not necessarily Canadian corn.

Mr. Olson: The answer, Mr. Chairman, is yes. But I am of the opinion also that the possibility of what is referred to as free United States corn coming into Canada at substantially lower prices than the United States support level is causing a depressing effect on our market in Canada now. By putting on a value for duty we are not going to change the price immediately but all the the traders who are in the business will know their competitors will not some day, two weeks or some time from now within the navigation season, be able to obtain corn at a substantially lower price than they are paying Canadians now.

I am fully aware of the fact there are other problems, as I mentioned in the statement, with regard to competition in Canada, such as competition for drying and storage facilities because of the congestion at harvest time. We do not claim to have corrected that problem by this action. However, it will put a floor under the competitive factor in so far as United States corn is concerned. I hope that will have a stabilizing effect.

Mr. McCutcheon: I do not want to impose, but the price relates to No. 2 corn, does it?

Mr. Olson: There is no grade mentioned in the statement.

The Chairman: Order. The committee will now revert to the consideration of Bill No. C-110. Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. Burton: Unfortunately I had to be out of the house for a few minutes when clauses 2 and 3 were being considered. I wonder whether I might have the permission of the committee to revert briefly to these clauses in order to ask one question on each of them?

The Chairman: Does the committee grant leave to revert for the purpose of two questions by the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: Clause 2 deals with the security for mortgages and loans. I should like to draw the attention of the committee and the minister to a letter which the minister has received and of which he will be fully aware. However, I do want to raise the matter in the house. This letter was sent to the minister by the National Farmers Union and relates to the security arrangements. It is dated October 8 and is from the president of that organization. Copies of it have been made available to some members. It reads:

We have been concerned in the past about the security demanded by Farm Credit Corporation to back its loans, which appears to be in excess of what seems essential.

In our submission to your government on March 7 of this year, we gave the example of a farm wife in Saskatchewan who was required to sign away her rights under the provincial homestead act on the home quarter section of land which, in addition to two other quarter sections of land, was required by the Farm Credit Corporation as collateral for a loan of $12,000 for the construction of a farm home. It is our feeling that security of this type exceeds the need.

Furthermore, there appears to be a conflict between the federal and the Saskatchewan homestead acts in this instance.

We would appreciate some assurance from you that the proposed amendments would be broad enough to eliminate the need for the wife of a farmer to be dispossessed of her rights guaranteed under provincial legislation where such rights exist.

I would be interested in having the minister's opinion on this representation that was made to him.

If I may, I should like at the same time to ask my question on clause 3. I understand that this provision raises the capital of the corporation to $56 million and also has the effect of raising by $400 million the amount of money that may be lent by the government of Canada to the Farm Credit Corporation. How long does the corporation, in its forward planning, expect this additional amount of money will be adequate to meet its lending needs in so far as can be foreseen at this time?

Mr. Olson: In reply to the hon, member's question on clause 2, I do not believe that the matter the hon, gentleman raised regarding the provision that a wife sign away any of her rights applies to this clause. From time to time borrowers wish to rearrange their holdings and make substitution for the security on the mortgage to the corporation. The purpose of clause 2 is to make it clear the corporation has the power to agree to such exchanges without the necessity of proceeding by way of an entirely new loan. That is the purpose of this amendment.

With regard to the provision of the Saskatchewan homestead act which requires that a wife agree to sign any mortgage being placed on the home quarter, it should be noted she does not sign away her rights nor is she dispossessed of any rights under the homestead act. She gives priority to the claim of the mortgage, and only to the extent of the interest of the mortgagee in the property. Since the loan given is as much in the interest of the wife and family as it is of the borrower, there can be no injustice in this requirement, and any individual person or institution must have the wife's signature if a for a debt.

This requirement is not peculiar to Saskatchewan. In Ontario, for example, a wife must bar her dower rights in order that a valid first mortgage can be registered against the home unit.

So far as the second question is concerned regarding clause 3, we estimate that the additional fund, together with the repayments that will be coming in from loans already extended, will last about two and a half or three years, although we cannot estimate that precisely.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. Danforth: I am still convinced in my own mind, although we have a statement to the effect that loans will be made only to individuals whose principal occupation is farming, that other clauses in the bill circumvent the purport of this clause. It is my contention that this provision is an admirable vehicle for vertical integration. If I were so inclined I could take advantage of it for vertical integration. There is another clause in the bill which states that the Farm Credit Corporation may lend to a farming corporation, and only one shareholder need be principally occupied in the farming operations of the corporation. The only other qualification is that he must be 21 years of age.

• (4:20 p.m.)

To bear out my argument in this regard I point out that there is also a provision in the bill that will delete a regulation under the act which stated that an individual had to have five years' experience in farming. Under the proposed amendment to the act a man who proposes to take up farming does not even require five years' experience.

Therefore, my contention is that it is possible for a group of businessmen to come within the terms of the act by associating with one individual who is over 21 years of age and willing to undertake the profession of farming, the only other qualification being that they must satisfy the corporation that as a group they will be able to carry on an economic farm operation. Although there does seem to be sufficient protection under clause 1 and clause 4, further clauses in the bill give the Farm Credit Corporation the power to make loans to establish strong, vertically integrated corporations, formed as business or capital investments to carry on the business valid first mortgage is to be taken as security of farming, an occupation that the act was designed to help.

> Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the hon, gentleman's question is, I think, to be found in clause 1 which states that the corporation cannot lend money to anyone who does not qualify as a farmer as defined in clause 1.

> Mr. Danforth: All that the clause says about a farmer, Mr. Chairman, is that he is an individual whose principal occupation is farming.

Mr. Olson: The clause goes on.

Mr. Danforth: I know it goes on. It goes on to define what a farmer is. It goes on to say that a farmer is an individual who is the owner of farm land and that he must be 21 years of age. I contend that a corporation could thus qualify. The clause defines a cooperative farm. A co-operative farm has to satisfy the corporation that it is being carried on as an economic unit.

Clause 1 and, by interpretation, later clauses of the bill make it possible, I suggest, to carry out the type of farming operation to which I have referred. It depends on how the Farm Credit Corporation interprets the regulations. The clauses of the bill set out in no uncertain terms that the corporation may make loans to farm corporations. Clause 10 provides that a loan may be made-

(b) in the case of a farming corporation which, at the date the loan is approved by the corporation, only one shareholder has attained the age of twenty-one years and is principally occupied in the farming operations of the corporation-

Under clause 1 a farmer is defined as an individual whose principal occupation is farming, or who could be established on a corporation farm as a farmer. All that is required is the fulfilment of the rest of the qualifications so as to satisfy the corporation that the farming business will be an economic one when carried on in this fashion.

According to other provisions in the bill such a corporation may borrow money only as long as it shows to the satisfaction of the corporation that such money will be used for farming purposes. I am wondering whether the minister is aware of this and whether he can point to any further safeguards which are not apparent to me and may make such a proposition impossible.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, clause 1 defines a farmer as an individual whose principal occupation is farming. Then it goes on to say that a farming corporation will be defined by regulation. I think the hon. member realizes that the majority shareholder in such corporation must be a person or persons who is or are primarily occupied in farming. The change from a family farm corporation to a farming corporation allows for the kind of arrangements to be made that I mentioned some time ago. It allows people who are not closely related to take advantage of efficient farm operations and to compete with large commercial corporations in the farming industry.

Mr. Horner: May I interject a question here that perhaps the minister can clear up? Is the minister saying that somewhere in the bill there is a clause that provides that the majority shareholders of a corporation must be actively engaged in farming? Is there a clause that specifically spells that out? According to clause 11, the direct opposite is the case. According to clause 11 only one person has to be a farmer.

Mr. Olson: This will be dealt with by the regulations. I would advise my hon, friend that the holding would perhaps be substantially above 51 per cent.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, in spite of what the minister has just said, in the clauses of the proposed bill there is provision that the corporation may make loans to any shareholders who are principally occupied in, or shortly to become principally occupied in, farming operations. If I wish to invest capital in a farm corporation and I am not engaged at the time in an occupation or trade but am receiving even small remuneration from corporate farm holdings, then under this act I can classify myself as a farmer since I derive a source of revenue from farming. Therefore I still contend that under this act no definite provision in this regard is made because the one provision, in my considered opinion, completely nullifies the other regulations as stipulated.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, according to the clauses of the bill a farming corporation must be one that is defined by regulation. This is not new; this has been the case in the past. I did mention to my hon. friend from Crowfoot that 51 per cent of the shares must be held by practising farmers. He need have no fear of the regulations with regard to this matter; it could be substantially higher than that figure.

question on that point? What is the thinking under this act three individuals approach the 29180-1374 behind this figure of 49 per cent or some lesser amount in order to bring non-farmers within the terms of the bill?

Mr. Olson: One of the main reasons is that there may be in a family corporation a minor who has been willed or in some other way bequeathed an interest in the farm. If there were no provision in the regulations in relation to a minority interest in a farm on the part of someone who is not an active farmer, then active farmers or an active farmer in a family corporation would be prohibited from making application for a loan. This will be very much of a minority interest. By restricting this matter it seems that we shall be doing the other members of the family who are active in farming a service by not prohibiting them from making an application.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: By permitting junior members of the family corporation to enter into agreements with the Farm Credit Corporation is the government not creating a loophole which will allow businessmen and others not particularly interested in agriculture to borrow money and invest it in land? Could businessmen not join together, buy up farm land and hold on to it as an investment? Farm land has become more valuable, and many have bought it purely as an investment.

Mr. Olson: I do not think that would happen because the regulations and instructions to those administering the legislation will be such that we shall avoid that happening. I might explain to the hon. members for Kent-Essex and Crowfoot that except for the provisions of this legislation young members of a farm family who wanted to apply to the corporation for a loan would first have to find cash to buy out other interested members of the family. To remedy this situation is one reason for the provisions of this legislation.

With regard to the second point raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot, I can assure him that we do not intend to let land speculators use F.C.C. money.

Mr. Horner: It is hard for anyone to read intentions in a man's mind. A farmer might buy land, hold on to it for a while and sell it three or four years later. No one knows a man's ultimate intention when he applies for a loan.

Mr. Danforth: Perhaps I can make my Mr. Horner: Would the minister permit a point clear by citing an illustration. Say that Farm Credit Corporation and borrow $100,000. This is possible. These individuals would, of course, form themselves into a corporate farm. Conceivably, another three men might become interested in an adjacent property and with respect to that property the six individuals could form themselves into a syndicate. As a syndicate they could borrow up to $100,000 for the purpose of establishing, say, a grain dryer. The result is that we then have a vertical corporate enterprise that has borrowed up to $200,000 of the government's money at a stipulated rate of interest for a long term.

Under the present proposal it seems that only two of the individuals concerned would have to be farmers. If six men were involved altogether it would mean that less than 50 per cent of the corporate members would be actively engaged in farming. It seems that the minister's proposal will enable businessmen to move into agriculture. Let me say at once that I am not averse to business or capital moving into this field. Nevertheless, it could well be that individuals who now find it hard to farm might even find it harder under the new legislation.

Mr. Olson: I hope my answer may clear the matter in my hon. friend's mind. Those who make such applications must be occupied principally in farming. The case of corporations is clearly defined. It has been said already that well over 50 per cent, perhaps up to 75 per cent, of the shares in the corporation must be held by those actively engaged in farming.

In the hon, gentleman's example, three farmers acting together might, under this legislation, borrow up to $100,000 from the corporation. In the case of a syndicate the loan would be three times $15,000 or $45,000, to set up a grain dryer. These amendments are to allow farmers to form themselves into co-operatives or corporations. They will then be able to form large units and buy all the necessary equipment to make farming an economic proposition. In fact, farmers will be able to compete with those whose principal occupation is not farming and who enter farming on a commercial basis. We hope that our amendments will result in making it easier for farmers to farm and to form themselves into co-operative corporations so that they can farm economically and successfully.

Mr. Skoberg: I am sure we all think that for the good of our country we must have successful farmers. Nevertheless, I have my doubts about the legislation and I think the Farm Credit Corporation and borrow $100,- fears expressed about farming being taken 000. This is possible. These individuals would, over by corporations may become a reality.

May I direct the minister's attention to clause 4(2)(b)(i), which begins with the words "in the case of an individual, where", etc. How much practical knowledge do the field men who make the final determination with regard to F.C.C. loans have? I expect other hon. members have heard what I am about to say. Rightly or wrongly, some farmers maintain that the field men employed by the corporation have no practical knowledge of agriculture. It is true they have been to university and have qualified for the jobs they have been asked to fill. All the same, they have had little experience of practical farming. Is practical knowledge a requirement when men are asked to fill field positions? Let me say I am completely in favour of agricultural schools at which people can obtain agricultural degrees. Nevertheless, a man's practical experience ought to be considered.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, we do require our field men to have practical experience in farming. Many of our field men have university degrees in agriculture. They have attended agricultural schools and specialized in various subjects at those schools. When they are engaged by the Farm Credit Corporation they are given further training in management and are told their functions and the purposes behind the administration of the act. I think we have a proud record in the quality of personnel administering the act in the field. The specific answer to the question is that they must indicate that they have had some practical experience in farming.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Skoberg: I am a little disappointed that we do not have the regulations before us because as far as I can see they really form the basis for the bill. I hope that the men in the field will not be placed in the position of putting different interpretations on what the regulations mean or should mean. Will the regulations be clear enough to spell out exactly what is required in this regard?

Mr. Olson: The regulations made under any act, and this bill is certainly not unique, are always written after the act has been passed. That will be done in this case. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the regulations, directives and instructions to the field men will be drafted and given in such a way as to carry out the letter, intent and spirit of the act.

[Mr. Danforth.]

Mr. Danforth: The minister has given us an undertaking that the last annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation will be placed at the disposal of the standing committee on agriculture. Presumably this bill will have been passed and proclaimed in the interim. Will we then have an opportunity to examine the regulations in detail and satisfy ourselves that the problems we are faced with are being met?

Mr. Olson: Certainly, Mr. Chairman. When the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation is referred to the committee we shall be willing to attach a copy of the regulations drawn up following passage of this bill. Obviously they will be drafted as quickly as possible following passage of the bill. I can foresee nothing to stop the committee inquiring into the regulations.

Mr. Danforth: Then I am satisfied.

Mr. Gleave: Clause 4(2)(b)(i) reads:

—in the case of an individual, where in the opinion of the corporation the experience, ability and character of that individual are such as to warrant the belief that the farm to be mortgaged will be successfully operated—

I hope the corporation will place some emphasis on this part of its operation. Rightly or wrongly, evidence in certain instances has forced me to the conclusion that in recent years the corporation has placed considerable emphasis on the amount of security demanded. It bothers me to think that a senior farmer, in order to get a younger member of his family established in farming, is faced with a demand that he mortgage most of his holding. I would like to hear the minister's comment on what the policy will be. I expect that if I were responsible for the affairs of the Farm Credit Corporation I would want as much security as possible. However, excessive security demands should not be made.

I should also like to ask the minister how many supervisors the corporation has to assist the type of individual envisaged by this clause? I know the corporation has competent men in the field to assess loans. Does it have men specifically trained to assist a farmer after he has received a loan and to help a group of farmers within a given area in matters of farm management? Such an area might extend over 100 or 150 miles. Does the corporation train staff for this purpose?

Mr. Olson: I suggest that the hon. member could more satisfactorily ask those questions of witnesses who will be called before the agricultural committee when the corporation report is referred to it. However, I should advise him that there are approximately 275 advisors who are trained in assessment and supervision. I should also advise him that all of them are trained in farm management practices.

Mr. Gleave: Is the minister seriously suggesting that all of the staff which the corporation uses to make loans are competent to give a farmer advice and help year by year or month by month and assist a young farmer with the operation and management of his farm? Surely he is not seriously suggesting that all the staff are in that category?

Mr. Olson: I certainly do not want to leave the wrong impression. The figure of 275 is not the total personnel of the Farm Credit Corporation. We have 275 field men and all of them are trained for purposes of supervision, assessment and farm management. So far as competence is concerned, that is a relative thing. No doubt one could find farmers in all parts of Canada whose competence and managerial skills would be equal, or superior in some cases, to those of F.C.C. personnel. Further, we have an advisory committee composed of competent farmers, or what we hope are competent farmers. In any event, we regard them as competent farmers. That committee gives us advice on how the regulations should be applied from time to time.

It is difficult for me to give a positive answer on the relative degree of farm managerial skills possessed by any one or by all of the corporation's personnel, but I am satisfied it has a good field staff and we are doing all that can reasonably be done to keep the standards as high as possible.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Gleave: I am sure you are doing all that can be done, but I am trying to point out that I believe there is a hole in the operation. If it really is the intention to carry out the supervisory role, to really do something in respect of a program for the younger farmer who is entering the field and make credit available on the basis of the individual rather than on the basis of massive security, I think you will find that you have not a large but rather a limited number of people who are capable of effectively carrying on this type of work. I do not believe you have them, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Olson: I do not like to disagree with my hon. friend at this point when we are getting along so well, but I must tell him rather frankly that I think we do have them.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I should like not only to address some brief remarks to the minister at this stage, but also ask him a few questions concerning farm credit.

We are talking about the regulations and personnel of the Farm Credit Corporation. In answer to a question which I had put on the order paper concerning the administration and the administrative staff of this corporation, I was given some figures—I do not remember them, but they could be checked—showing that the Farm Credit Corporation is a sort of Anglo-Saxon reservation.

First of all, I should like to ask the minister, if he has the figures with him, to confirm or deny what I say and to tell me that is how the Farm Credit Corporation, like other crown corporations, incidentally, applies the bilingual policy of the government.

In the second place, Mr. Chairman, I would like to specify that we earnestly hope that the style of the regulations enacted after the passage of the bill will be simple, comprehensible and will fully indicate all implications of the legislation, especially from the financial point of view.

I therefore conclude my brief comments by asking the minister to make a very great effort so that bilinguism will become an actual fact in the public service, especially in the Farm Credit Corporation.

[English]

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, in my earlier remarks concerning this credit legislation I made reference to a situation which developed in my own area this year when hurricanes and disaster plagued the farmers in part of Grey county. At that time I asked the minister whether there was a policy whereby the corporation might grant a moratorium in respect of future payments if any of these farmers, because of the disaster, are not able to make their payments on farm credit loans. I point out that I asked the minister whether he would consider matching a provincial government grant or matching dollar for dollar the money raised in the area by friends and neighbours. I am wondering whether the officers of the corporation in that area, or the corporation generally, have any policy with regard to extending the time in which these farmers may make their payments if there should be farmers who find themselves in difficulty.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I am advised that we do not do this for an area. We do not declare a general moratorium in respect of payment for a whole area. But with regard to individuals in an area where a natural disaster, if one may call it that, has occurred, very sympathetic consideration is given to applications that payments be deferred.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to comment on the question raised a few moments ago regarding the competence of the departmental examiners. I have had some experience in working with these people in my own riding. I have found them to be most competent. I have seen evidence that they knew far more about the farming business than did some of the applicants for loans. I believe it is very much to their credit that they should have this much knowledge and experience.

A method is used in the United States that might be worth mentioning here as something which might be applicable when consideration is being given to further revisions of this act. Under the land bank system in the United States loans of this kind are made by a board in each community. The board is composed of experienced farmers from the area. These farmers have the power and authority to grant the loans in conjunction with the government representative.

This type of arrangement makes it possible for the farmers themselves to give to a new farmer the kind of assistance and advice that has been mentioned. In this way the loan board in effect goes farther than just providing money. It is in a position to provide both experience and assistance to a man who may be in need of it. I have watched this type of operation in the United States and it would appear to be a most effective way to handle this problem. This might be something we could consider in respect of our own Farm Credit Corporation at some time in the future.

Mr. Olson: All I wish to say in response to the hon. member's comments and suggestions is that I am advised by the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation that they are familiar with this organization in the United States.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Kent-Essex and the hon. member for Crowfoot have attempted to obtain from the minister the assurance that nothing in this bill will encourage the greater entry of corporate farming into the Canadian scene. I know the minister has given the verbal assurance that it is not the intent of Bill No. C-110 that this situation should come about. However, when one looks at certain provisions in the bill-I refer particularly to clause 4, subclause 2(b), and clause 11-one cannot help but feel a little uneasy because it would seem there is more than adequate provision here. There would appear to be a large loophole in the bill which would enable the Farm Credit Corporation at some future date to extend loans in a massive way, if there should be a change in policy to that end, to large companies which wish to become involved in argicultural production. For example, in subclause 2 (b) (ii) we see the following:

—in the case of a farming corporation or a cooperative farm association, where in the opinion of the Corporation the experience, ability and character of those shareholders or members who are principally occupied in the farming operations—

I shall stop there because the implication is clear that certain shareholders need not be principally occupied in farming operations. It would seem equally clear in clause 11 that there is again reference to a loan being extendable to persons or corporations which have not become involved in agricultural operations but merely have the intent to do so at some future date.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I merely want to point out to the minister that with the passage of this legislation there will be a great onus on him to live up to the words of assurance given a few days ago and again today, that in fact this bill is not intended to encourage in the slightest way a greater entry of corporate structures into farming and agricultural production. I realize that the minister can get up again and say that all he can do is reaffirm that this is not the intention of this legislation or this government. But let me point out to him that the wording of the proposed legislation is such that it certainly creates a loophole big enough for a team of horses to be driven through.

Mr. Olson: The hon, member anticipated the answer. I gave an undertaking that this legislation was being brought forward for the purpose of assisting family farm units to compete with the invasion—I think that was the hon, member's word—by commercial enterprises into farming. I have to rely on the explanation I gave. As is mentioned in the bill, the corporations are those limited type of corporations as defined in clause 1, and this will be spelled out in so far as the shareholder's interest in the corporation is concerned. It will be spelled out in the regulations. Those shareholders, except for the very few or the minority which I mentioned a few moments ago, will have to be principally occupied in farming. They will have to be persons actively engaged in operating farms.

Mr. Korchinski: Now that the minister has gone that far I should like to know exactly where we are drifting. My opinion is that we are moving directly toward corporation farming. The minister has given us the assurance that he is trying to stave off this movement. I hope he can be successful. He suggests that the prime interest must be in agriculture. How does he intend to move toward this goal? Does the minister intend to require that so much money must be gained from farming? If that is so, how will the regulations apply in a bad year when everyone knows darn well that he is not going to make any money out of farming? These people are likely to find occupations in which they can make some income. It is in these years that people want credit from the Farm Credit Corporation.

The minister has not convinced me that we are not moving toward corporation farming. What are we going to do about those people who find themselves in this twilight zone, if you like? We will find many people in this position. This is not a laughing matter. The minister thinks it is funny because he is smiling.

Mr. Olson: No, he does not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Korchinski: Let me tell the minister in all sincerity that there are many people who are honestly trying to make a living from farming. They dearly want to be able to do so. They need credit. What will happen is that someone here will decide whether they should be given credit or whether they will have to get out of farming.

Mr. Olson: Perhaps I could reply to the hon. gentleman by reminding him that over the years this matter has been controlled satisfactorily in relation to the provision that an applicant must principally be occupied in farming. This is not going to change. These words have to be added in order that this will apply to individuals who are also in corporations, family farm corporations and so on. That is not going to change.

If because of adverse weather conditions or anything of that nature someone finds it necessary to obtain some income from farming, the regulations will not be any more severe than they have been in the past. This is something that must be looked at every year, I suppose in some part of Canada. The same rules and the same spirit, if you like, will be followed in making allowances in respect of applications. I am sure my hon. friends will agree that these people have done a very satisfactory job in the past in this regard.

Mr. Korchinski: Those are fine and dandy words—great phraseology. The man involved in agriculture who is trying to eke out a living on the farm finds himself in direct competition with the service station and machine shop operators.

An hon. Member: Ha, ha.

Mr. Korchinski: Someone said "ha, ha". I do not know whether that came just from the Toronto section or from the Liberal section. I suggest that the Liberal party better have a caucus and realize that there is a problem in agriculture. One thing members opposite had better learn is that the farmers are not fleecing the country; they are feeding the country. Let us face up to that fact. The hon, member who was trying to be funny a few moments ago had better remember a few things. Farmers are not farming because they want to be generous. Every one of these farmers would like to live in the same kind of house the people of Toronto live in, but nobody seems to be worried about that aspect of farming. They are worried about the kind of houses that people in Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa live in, and they spend a great deal of time working on their problems.

Perhaps this worry is justified, Mr. Chairman, and that is fine. However, if you are living in a log shack I suppose that is fine too because people think you are doing so for the benefit of the country. This is supposed to be a just society. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is about time the heehaws stopped on the Liberal side. The Indian communities have a just right to complain about what they are up against. They are not living in beautiful homes such as—

An hon. Member: Order, order.

Mr. Korchinski: Someone has said "order, order". I wish there were some order but there is no order in this just society. This minister right now—

[Mr. Olson.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. There should be order in the committee, and I ask the hon. member to kindly come back to the consideration of clause 4.

Mr. Korchinski: I will gladly come back to the clause, Mr. Chairman. All I am suggesting at the moment is that if we do not consider the situation in which these people find themselves we might as well throw this whole bill out the window. If we are not at all concerned about the welfare of these people or bringing up their standard of living, I should like to ask the minister what is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. Olson: Let me assure my hon. friend that this is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. Korchinski: Those are nice words, but does the minister really believe what he says?

Mr. Olson: Yes, he does, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Korchinski: I have to accept the minister's statement. The point is that in a few years' time when we see these huge United States corporations taking over all our land in Canada and a large number of people drifting away and we go with our hats in our hands to the minister, I am sure the minister will simply suggest that we wait. I asked the Prime Minister today whether consideration was being given to a moratorium on the interest rate, and he said no.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. For the second time I would ask the hon. member to restrict his remarks to clause 4 of the bill, which we are discussing at the moment.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have to say very much more. I believe the minister has already got the message. The minister is very well aware of what is happening in the farming industry. I may have been slightly off base in my remarks with regard to what is intended in the bill, and the Chairman has called me to order, but I did not intend to do this. However, this discussion gives me a forum to make my point. I believe the minister will accept the fact that we are quite prepared to go ahead with certain aspects of the legislation but we must point out certain matters to him. The minister has been bragging about the legislation and saying we are the only ones stopping if from being the salvation of the farmers.

We are quite prepared, as I say, to go ahead with certain aspects of the bill but there are matters which have to be dealt business himself. Therefore in the example with. The minister will be in real trouble in a few years' time when American corporations and others enter the agricultural field. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture really wants to be helpful in this regard but finds himself in a position where his hands are tied because he is trying to be too helpful to too many people at the same time. I do not think he wants to help the wrong people. I believe he is sincere about what he wants to do for agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Korchinski: I am glad to receive applause, Mr. Chairman. I think the minister knows what the problem is and I want to express it before anybody else does. But if he does not do anything to solve the problem I will be the first to criticize him. I say that he is doing nothing to prevent corporations entering the agricultural field and swallowing us up. This is a question which the minister has to consider seriously.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to focus his attention on lines 30 to 40 of clause 4 as they appear on page 3 of the bill. I ask the minister to visualize the following specific case. Let us say that a packinghouse company or a food processing company of some kind decides to set up a subsidiary operation and hires the services of a competent farm operator by allocating to him a share interest in the operation. Such a person would have the experience, ability and character necessary to impress the Farm Credit Corporation, and on the basis of his qualities and experience they would be prepared to make a loan. Does the minister not agree that in a circumstance such as this it would be not only conceivable but quite likely that a corporate enterprise of this kind, provided it engaged the services of a known and experienced farm operator, could very well qualify for a loan in so far as the provisions of this clause are concerned-

Mr. Olson: The fact is that all the clauses have a bearing in respect of making an application for a loan. In addition to the provision the hon. gentleman has outlined, such a person would also have to be the owner or would have to control the corporation through holding substantially more than a simple majority of the shares in the corporation, and indeed he would have to qualify under clause 1 of the bill as an individual whose principal occupation is farming. He would have to be in the corporate farming the hon, gentleman has outlined I think a person trying to use the credit facilities of the Farm Credit Corporation would fail in many respects.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5-Interest.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, clause 5 has been debated quite a bit already. We have attempted to induce the minister to give us some information with regard to the formula to be adopted in respect of the interest rate. The minister went part way today in dealing with this question.

Basically, there are three major parts to the bill: first, it will allow farming corporations to obtain loans; second, it will increase the interest rate by about 2 per cent on all government loans; and third, it will make provision for Indian bands to borrow money from the Farm Credit Corporation. I am really simplifying the bill but I think it can be broken down into those three important points. The interest rate that will be payable on these loans is the most important point.

The bill is basically a poor one and clause 5 does not improve it at all. The bill moves generally in the wrong direction. We have seen the report of the Economic Council of Canada. While I do not agree with their comparison of the agricultural industry in Canada with those of other countries, the report does point out that our agricultural industry needs to catch up and maintain pace with the United States, and to do this we must have a greater influx of capital at an interest rate the agricultural industry can afford.

We have tried to learn from the minister what rate of interest will be permissible under clause 5 of the bill. He said this afternoon that the formula would have to be flexible. He said earlier in the debate that it would be a prescribed rate. I gather from the minister's answer that it will be prescribed for six months and then adjusted in accordance with government borrowings, or prescribed for a year and adjusted to government borrowings. The minister has not told us how long a prescribed rate will be in effect. Will it fluctuate every month? Will it fluctuate with every borrowing of the Farm Credit Corporation from the Minister of Finance? The minister has not given us the answers to these questions.

In this regard one should study the borrowings of the Farm Credit Corporation. These are listed on page 24 of their annual report.

One can readily see that the corporation is making several borrowings a year from the Minister of Finance at varying rates of interest. Will the prescribed rate correspond with the borrowings from the Minister of Finance? The minister said this afternoon that it would not be more than 1 per cent higher than government borrowings. Then he said it would not be more than 1 per cent above the rate at which the corporation borrows from the Minister of Finance.

This raises a very interesting situation. During the debate on the Farm Improvement Loans Act the minister said he believed that the government guarantee to the banks was worth 1 per cent. He also led us to believe that the interest rate finally arrived at between the government and the banks under the Farm Improvement Loans Act would be 1 per cent or not more than 1 per cent above government borrowings. If I am wrong, the minister can correct me.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Let us take the figure the minister gave this afternoon, namely, that the last corporation borrowing from the Minister of Finance was at an interest rate of 6.75 per cent. In fact the report has it listed as 6.8 per cent, but it does not really matter. One per cent above that would be 7.25 per cent, nearly 3 percentage points above the rate at which the Farm Credit Corporation is operating today when lending money to farmers. This is what we are debating today.

Can the agricultural industry absorb a 3 per cent hike in interest rates by the Farm Credit Corporation? The danger is that this bill will simply make tenants out of farmers who borrow from the corporation. Everyone knows that people who borrow money on a long term basis are often fortunate if they can repay the interest on what they borrow, let alone part of the capital. We must be careful about passing this clause because by supporting an interest rate close to 8 per cent we may be making tenant farmers out of everyone who borrows from the corporation. It is true that some believe farmers should just rent their land anyway and never pay for it. The former minister of agriculture from Alberta suggested this in one of his speeches. He suggested that the Farm Credit Corporation might own the land and that the farmers taken out. should pay so much every year for it-in would pass from father to son.

[Mr. Horner.]

I still believe that farmers want to own their land. There is a greater sense of security and well being attached to owning a farm rather than renting it on whatever basis. We must be very careful about passing clause 5 and approving an interest rate which might prevent farmers paying back anything more than the interest on their loans. The industry faces increasing competition from synthetics. But despite fierce competition on every side, $1.5 billion worth of our exports are produced by agriculture. Agriculture is a major part of our economy and parliament has to create a climate in which it can survive. The amount of the interest rate of farm credit loans will signify whether the government really believes in the industry, really believes it is a necessary part of this country.

Hon, gentlemen opposite have said that the government guarantee to the banks is worth 1 per cent. They have said that the interest rate on farm improvement loans from the banks will be 1 per cent above the rate at which the government borrows. This could well result in bank loans to farmers being made at a lower rate of interest than the corporation is offering.

I believe the Financial Post stated last week that in the course of the coming year the government would be borrowing to the extent of $2 billion and was prepared to pay as high as 6.75 per cent for the money. Over a billion dollars worth of government bonds have just been issued at the highest interest rate ever recorded. Even if we agree to the minister's prescribed rate, it will still be a fluctuating rate. With the government continuing to squander our money hither and yon, interest rates are bound to increase, as the article in the Financial Post suggested, and new borrowings will be made at an interest rate of something like 6.75 per cent. In fact, interest rates generally have gone up since the budget. Some may say: 7 per cent is not a bad interest rate, considering the times. But if we pass this clause we shall place farmers in a position where they will have to face escalating interest rates periodically while no corresponding increase is apparent in the prices of the products they are selling. The farmer has only two courses open to him. Either he can go out of business or he can try to increase the size and efficiency of his operation hoping to stay ahead in the struggle to meet expenses and repay the loans he has

Having this dangerous situation in mind, I essence, a rental. On this basis the land propose to move an amendment to clause 5. My amendment will spell out the rate of interest by providing that loans made to per cent. Loans of amounts greater than $40,-000 may be made at such prescribed rates as the minister may wish to approve. I put this forward because I am concerned about the lack of any fundamental base for interest rates today. Even in the last two weeks interest rates on government borrowings have gone up by something like .2 per cent and are continuing to climb as the government wastes money.

Under the arrangements as they stand today there are in effect two interest rates with which borrowers from the Farm Credit Corporation are concerned. There is the 5 per cent rate to the individual borrower who borrows less than $27,500 and the rate offered to those who borrow more than that, which is 1 per cent above the rate at which the corporation itself borrows from the Minister of Finance. In the farm syndicate legislation provision is made for another rate which is 1 per cent above the rate at which the corporation borrows from the minister.

Thus we find in the present legislation two interest rates. Eighty per cent of the loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation have been made at the 5 per cent rate. And over 50 per cent of the corporation's loans have been made in connection with the purchase of land. I firmly believe that farmers today still want to own their own land. For all the reasons I have outlined I move:

That in line 6 on page 4 in clause 5 the following be substituted after the word "rate":

Not more than 5 per cent where the amount of the loan does not exceed $40,000. For loans above this amount, at rates prescribed by the Governor in Council.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I put in a limit of $40,000 because, as I understand the bill, this is all a family farm or an individual can borrow. Corporate enterprises and other people may be eligible under this act for greater loans, perhaps at a higher rate of interest. The minister suggested that corporate entities would likely be more efficient and have more things going for them. This may or may not be the case. I certainly do not want to agree with him at this time. I do want to say that under the act as it is now there are two rates of interest, the lower rate being for the individual who borrows a limited amount of money, and this amendment interest charges on farm loans. sets up the same criteria that were in effect. I move that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Burton: In taking a look at clause 5 of individual farmers should be at the rate of 5 Bill C-110 I think we have to examine it very closely because of the impact of the changes proposed on the farmers of Canada and on the agricultural industry as a whole. We should examine what changes it does make. The provisions now in effect provide for 5 per cent interest on loans up to $20,000 under part II and 5 per cent on loans up to $27,500 under part III. Above these amounts, of course, the rates are prescribed by the governor in council. The new clause gives to the governor in council the power to set rates. It gives him a blanket authority to set the rates that will be applicable to loans made under the Farm Credit Act. I believe it has been admitted that this will mean higher interest rates to the farmers.

> Briefly, Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a look at some of the alternatives that are available to us. One step we might take would be to leave the interest rate structure as it is now or with some modification such as has been proposed in the amendment just moved by the hon, member for Crowfoot.

> I can recognize that there are some administrative problems in the present arrangement with regard to the differences in the rates at which money is borrowed by the government and transferred to the Farm Credit Corporation and the interest rates that apply to money lent to farmers for agricultural purposes. It seems to me that this is a problem that could be overcome without having to upset the entire structure as we have known it up to the present time. The legislation, of course, proposes to take away from parliament the right to prescribe what interest rates shall apply to farm loans.

> I think we should examine some of the implications involved. First of all, we should take a look at the cost of this change to the agricultural industry and to the farmers. The ultimate cost, if we take the entire amount of money that could be lent by the Farm Credit Corporation, could conceivably at some point in time reach as high as $14 million per year for every 1 per cent the interest rate is above 5 per cent. This, of course, would have to be modified by the fact there are existing loans at the 5 per cent rate and also by other factors as well. I think we could reasonably conclude that in time this change in the interest rate structure could quite likely cost the farmers approximately $50 million in extra

> The essential point being advocated by those of us who are opposed to increasing the level of interest rates is that we are proposing that the principle of subsidization of the industry should be applied. This is really what would be involved in leaving the basic interest rate structure as it is. So far as I am concerned, I do not automatically advocate or approve subsidization simply because it may be of some benefit to an industry or a sector of the economy in which I or some other people may be interested. It seems to me a rational case does have to be established in favour of such subsidization.

Various approaches are used, of course, in deciding whether or not a rational case is established or can be established. One obvious approach would be to use what might be termed a cost-benefit analysis. In other words, this really means that if the benefits achieved through subsidization are greater than the cost involved to the country, then the justification is apparent. This method could then be readily approved and adopted by parliament.

I am sure the minister is fully aware of the reaction of farm organizations to the proposed change in the interest rate structure. I am really quite disappointed that the government has been unresponsive to the representations of farm organizations, nor has it provided an adequate opportunity for farm organizations to make their point of view known. I should like to refer to a communication sent by the National Farmers Union to the Minister of Agriculture some time ago and place some portions of it on the record. Mr. Roy Atkinson, president of the National Farmers Union, writing to the Minister of Agriculture on October 8, stated:

We are further concerned by the proposals under section $16\mathrm{A-}$

This is the clause now under consideration.

—which free interest rates permitting these to be prescribed by the governor in council. This, in effect, removes the ceiling on interest rates on farm loans.

Credit has become an almost indispensable need for farmers. Rising interest rates for Canadian farmers are therefore a serious factor. Canadian farmers cannot afford the present high rates of interest demanded by private lenders on the basis of the present demoralizing level of farm prices. While this, in itself, is of growing concern, it is particularly serious for our younger farmers. The dilemma in the present situation, of course, has been that banking institutions have not made available to farmers the 5 per cent credit and as a consequence they have become more vulnerable to the scalping rates of private finance companies.

The proposed amendments will certainly result in higher rates under the publicly-sponsored farm financing programs and in this sense legitimatize high interest rates for farmers. The consequence of this cost increasing factor, we feel, will serve to make farmers less competitive in the world markets and less competitive with those corporations which now threaten the livehihood of farmers through a growing trend toward vertical integration of food production. As a consequence, if interest rates are freed, we reiterate our request that your government subsidize the interest rates over 5 per cent under the Farm Credit Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act until such time as the money supply on the market will again make it possible for farmers to acquire their financial needs at the 5 per cent rate, and/or until such time as farmers receive adequate prices from the sale of farm produce.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Then the letter concludes by urging the minister to give earliest consideration to the matters raised.

This is one representation that has been made to the minister and I am sure others have been made as well. Certainly representations have been made to me as one member of the house on the subject of interest rates. I feel that the government should be more responsive to the urgent pleadings of farmers and farm organizations on the question of interest rates.

I should like to outline briefly some of the reasons for the approach that is being suggested on this side of the house. First of all, I think we have to examine the structure and fabric of the agricultural industry and note that this structure and fabric are in jeopardy. It is not a case of the old being replaced by a new, more positive and useful type of social and economic structure. What we are really witnessing is the disintegration of our rural society and our rural economy in Canada.

I suggest, that this will have very serious effects on all parts of the Canadian economy and on each and every person in Canada. This is evidenced in part by the reduction in the number of farmers across Canada, a fact well known to all members. This reduction in the number of farmers is in part due to the liquidation of uneconomic farm units, but it is also in part due to the impact of mechanization and technology. I suggest that at least part of the liquidation of farm units which has taken place in Canada over the past number of years has resulted from the needless waste of both social and economic resources in this country. In fact, as a result of serious negligence on the part of those responsible for public policy in this country we have been unable to find a more adequate program to deal with the problems facing our agricultural industry. At the same time may I make it quite clear that I feel that the Farm Credit Corporation, in conducting its operations, has made a useful contribution and has helped to prevent the problem from becoming even more serious than it is today.

I suggest that we need an agricultural industry that is capable of adjusting to changing conditions. At the present time the agricultural industry has great difficulty in accomplishing this objective. I suggest that it will have even greater difficulty in doing so if it is saddled with higher interest rates than those now in effect. The agricultural industry has been confronted with static and unreliable prices and price levels. At the same time it has had to meet steadily increasing costs which have risen some 4 to 5 per cent per year. The net result of this has been that the level of return to farmers has been insufficient and will not enable them to carry the higher interest rates that are now being proposed. The result of the present cost-price squeeze is obvious to all hon, members, and I think should be a matter of serious concern to all of us.

Reference has already been made to the need for greater capitalization in our agricultural industry. The Economic Council of Canada pointed this out quite clearly in its recent report wherein it noted, in the first place, that a major portion of the increase in agricultural productivity over recent years is attributable to increased capital and materials inputs. That is noted at page 98 of the most recent annual review of the Economic Council of Canada. At page 101 of the review, the Economic Council of Canada points out:

We believe that a high rate of future productivity growth in agriculture is necessary for the long term growth of farm incomes in Canada.

Here, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that policy with respect to capital and the ease of entry of capital into the agricultural industry is an essential requirement. It seems to me that the retention of the present interest rate structure, or at least the essentials of it, would encourage further capitalization in the agricultural industry.

I cannot really quarrel with the present basic concept of the interest rate structure applying to Farm Credit Corporation loans. This provides for a fixed level of interest rates for a basic amount of capital, at present $20,000 for part II loans and $27,500 for part III loans. As has been indicated by the nature of the amendment just moved, this set of figures is not necessarily fixed; it can be varied depending on current situations. However, it seems to me that it does ensure that a basic amount of capital is available to each farm unit, sufficient to enable it to carry the debt load that many farmers have to face. Once this basic capital requirement has been assured, then the farmer is in a better position to handle whatever higher interest rates may apply in the economy from time to time.

I urge the minister to reconsider his stand with respect to this clause. I also urge the government, while time still remains, to find a solution to some of the problems facing our agricultural industry, to take advantage of that time and to change the stand it is now taking in the house.

According to answers to questions provided by the Minister of Agriculture in the house, the report of the special task force which was set up will be presented in the very near future. I would urge that consideration be given to maintaining the present interest rate structure until we are able to review the agricultural situation in the light of the report of the task force. This would enable us to examine the entire operation of the agricultural industry.

I also noted in an answer to a question given a little earlier this afternoon that the minister said that the extra capital that would be available to the Farm Credit Corporation as a result of the amendments contained in this bill will be sufficient to meet the financial requirements of the corporation for some two and half to three years. This is not too long a period of time to continue to maintain the present interest rate policy.

For all of these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I hope that clause 5 as now set out in the bill will be rejected and that we will maintain the present basic interest rate structure either in the form in which it is now or as proposed in the amendment that has just been moved.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair has some doubt about the validity of the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Crowfoot for this reason: It seems to the Chair, having read the resolution which is to be found in Votes and Proceedings for October 1, 1968, that the amendment would amount to a new proposal. If there is any doubt about the matter perhaps it might be best to leave the decision to the committee.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, what was the date of Votes and Proceedings to which you referred?

The Deputy Chairman: October 1, 1968, page 87.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, at this time I have no alternative but to say a few words in support of the amendment the hon. member for Crowfoot presented to the committee this afternoon.

Mr. McIlraith: It is out of order.

An hon. Member: It is not.

Mr. Olson: In addition to the point that you raised, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the amendment goes beyond the terms of the resolution. I therefore doubt that the wording of the amendment is legal. However, I have no objection to taking the sense of the committee and having the matter voted on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Horner) negatived: Yeas, 34; nays, 61.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Southam: As I said a few moments ago, Mr. Chairman, I have no alternative but to make a few remarks on this clause of Bill C-110. I support the remarks of my colleagues. Their position is supported by ample evidence. As has been said on numerous occasions in this house, credit is a commodity. Since this bill has to do with interest rates, its present provisions ask us to buy a pig in a poke.

When anyone wants credit he goes to the marketplace to obtain it. When the farmer wants to borrow money he must pay interest on it. For that reason we ought to have something concrete in the bill; otherwise there is too much ambiguity. There is too much of a question mark in the minds of those engaged in agriculture in this country for them to be satisfied with this measure.

The previous speaker referred to the views of a leading farm organization of western Canada on this matter. The hon. members for Crowfoot, Essex-Kent and Mackenzie have put their attitudes very ably to the minister. He knows what they think about this legislation. I am obtaining a feed-back from the riding I represent, a dairy and agricultural district of western Canada. There are many small farmers in my area. The name of the riding, Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, suggests rivers, creeks and a broken-up terrain which is conducive to farming on a small scale.

Farmers in such areas eke out a living, as do the farmers represented by the hon. member for Mackenzie. All our farmers must have credit at reasonable rates.

The difficulties of our farmers have been particularly aggravated in the last year or two by the lapsing of the international wheat agreement. Their income has been reduced. In the last few months money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act has not been available and farmers seeking to borrow money in the marketplace have had to pay exorbitant rates of interest of 10 or 12 per cent. Naturally I support other opposition members in their attitude that we must have some type of formula governing the interest rates. We have a right to it.

The minister's philosophy with regard to this farm legislation will make the big farmer bigger and the small farmer smaller. Ultimately small farmers will be squeezed out. The minister's attitude is summed up by a sentence from the Bible to this effect: To him that hath shall be given and from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

I was disturbed and annoyed to hear the minister's suggestion while out west recently, that some members were blocking passage of the farm legislation. He referred to the hon. member for Crowfoot. The suggestion was that he and others in his party were filibustering and obstructing this legislation. Let me say at once that our remarks express the feelings of western farmers on the subject. When we place on the record our strong objection to buying this pig in a poke we are expressing the feelings of our constituents. Some of the minister's references seemed to be flamboyant and even facetious, and it was not fair of him to take that attitude. He himself is a farmer from western Canada and he knows how strongly the farmers object.

Again I suggest that the minister ought to reconsider this matter and arrive at a definite formula regarding interest rates along the lines proposed a few moments ago by the hon. member for Crowfoot. Unfortunately his amendment was defeated in committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. To permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' business, in accordance with section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTION TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional order 39A, to inform the house that the question to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight is as follows: the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont)-Inquiry as to Nigeria.

It being six o'clock, the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper namely private and public bills.

PRIVATE BILL

LONDON AND MIDLAND GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. C-101, respecting London and Midland General Insurance Company-Mr. Lind-Mr. Béchard in the chair.

• (6:00 p.m.)

On clause 1—Change of name.

Mr. Schreyer: Ostensibly the purpose of the bill, Mr. Chairman, is to allow the insurance company in question to undergo a change of name. On the surface that would seem to be simple and harmless enough but the question should be asked why it is that important and necessary to have a change in name as to warrant bringing a private bill before parliament.

From the evidence of the parliamentary agent for this company one is given to understand that the company would like a change of name because a similar name is used by other insurance companies elsewhere. So it seeks to change its name to Avco General Insurance Company. But one finds that other corporations exist in the United States with names very similar to that and so the picture is left quite confusing.

I suspect that the sponsors of the bill feel that a change of name would result in an improvement in the corporation's image. Therefore with that improvement the compa-

London and Midland Insurance Company successful in selling insurance policies to Canadian policyholders and as a result would have more money for investment in various industrial corporate securities, with the further result of an increase in profits redounding to the benefit of the company and its shareholders. That kind of reasoning is logical but at a time like this the question should be asked, what good purpose is served by this bill? In fact, what good purpose is served by the very existence of this particular insurance company?

This company is a Canadian subsidiary of an American parent firm which we are told is a corporation engaged in conglomerate ownership and management, a phenomenon that has been on the increase in the United States during the present decade. Admittedly if a corporation takes on a conglomerate form it begins to enjoy greater size and with it greater financial strength and durability against the exigencies of the economy. It is supposed to be able to withstand better the business cycles that we experience in our North American economy. There is nothing particularly wrong with that, but on repeated occasions over the past few years hon. members of this house have questioned the degree of usefulness of subsidiaries of foreign corporations that are allowed to operate in Canada.

If the existence of a subsidiary of a foreign parent meant there would be more capital coming into Canada for industrial development, there would be a point. But in this case it seems quite clear that the company in question, like other insurance companies, is merely taking investable funds or capital from persons through the sale of policies and then using that capital for investment as the management of the insurance company sees fit. In this respect it is in a sense a rather sterile operation.

This particular insurance company will be competing with other insurance companies, some of them wholly or in large part owned by Canadian shareholders. It will be competing for investable funds. It will be preempting other insurance companies and industrial corporations from securing more investment capital from the same people, that is to say, the Canadian public.

From the evidence that was given to the committee about a week ago, I understand this insurance company invests about 75 per cent of its investable funds, money on deposit with it, in Canadian industrial enterprises and the remaining 25 per cent in American ny, hopefully, would be able to be more industrial enterprises. In other words, 25 per London and Midland Insurance Company cent of the money it raises from Canadian policyholders does not go into investment for the economic, social and industrial development of our country. By decision of the management of the London and Midland General Insurance Company, 25 per cent of its investment funds flow out of Canada. I do not think that a change in name, if we consent to it, will make a substantial difference. In fact I fail to see what difference it can make.

Here is an opportunity to voice dissatisfaction with the practice whereby out of every $100,000 which this insurance company raises from the pocketbooks of Canadian policyholders 25 per cent goes outside our country for investment elsewhere and as such makes a zero contribution to the industrial development of our country. We talk about the scarcity and inadequacy of capital for development purposes in Canada. Small wonder that there is that scarcity when a leakage of this size is to be seen in the operations of only one company. Multiply this by the number of other insurance companies and mutual funds in Canada, almost all of which have a tendency to allow a fairly large leakage of Canadian investment funds into foreign markets, into the purchase of foreign securities and into the share capital of foreign enterprises, and one can see one of the reasons why we have a problem of inadequate amounts of capital for our own industrial development.

One hon, member of the standing committee on finance trade and economic affairs which examined this bill was able to bring out by questioning representatives of this company the fact that through the operations of the parent firm the company is able to invest in a great diversity of industry. But the question was never asked as to what extent the 75 per cent of its investable funds which we are told is invested in Canada goes into a particular industrial sector related to this insurance company through interlocking directorships, through affiliation of interests or which, in fact, are member companies of the same conglomerate parent. If there is any significant amount invested by the parent company-

• (6:10 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think at this moment it is important that I bring to the attention of the hon. member and other members of the committee that the sole purpose of this bill is to change the name of the insurance company to Avco Insurance Com-[Mr. Schreyer.]

member has departed from the subject of the bill. I would very kindly ask him to restrict his remarks to the matter of the change of name.

Mr. Schreyer: May I submit to you, sir, that if the representatives of this insurance company come before parliament asking for a change of name they must have some purpose in mind. Earlier in my remarks I suggested that the purpose they have in mind must be to improve either the operation of the company or change its image. If it is to improve the image then I suggest this means that the insurance company will be selling more policies. If it sells more policies then it will be receiving more investable Canadian funds. If it receives more Canadian investable funds then believe this is a matter which should be discussed in parliament because this company is a subsidiary of a United States parent and a member of the conglomerate whole which would be attracting more capital from the Canadian public.

The Deputy Chairman: I think it is desirable that we discuss the change of name. That is the only purpose of the bill. Again I ask the hon, member to restrict his remarks to the desirability or otherwise of changing the name.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, this insurance company is seeking to change its name, but we should ask ourselves what purpose or intent it has in mind in so doing. I submit to you that the insurance company must be seeking to improve its corporate image. If it is successful in this, then presumably it will be in a position to sell more insurance policies and thereby increase the amount of investment capital it is able to marshal. I suggest that if this insurance company does succeed in changing its name and thereby does get its hands on more investment capital, we must bear in mind that it would be investing outside this country at least 25 per cent of any increment of investment capital. This is a point which no one can escape.

The parliamentary agents for this insurance company have stated that 25 per cent of the investable funds which come into possession go into investment outside the country. If there is any increase in the amount of investable funds this company is able to realize, there would be a proportionate increase of investment of Canadian money outside the country. We are told by our own pany and in French to L'Avco, Compagnie ministers as well as by the economic experts d'Assurance Générale. I believe the hon, that Canada has a shortage of investable funds. That is a point which some of us from time to time like to contest. However, this is the information we are given by those who are supposed to be experts on the subject.

I make no apology whatsoever, Mr. Chairman, for referring to the fact that this insurance company is investing outside this country an amount of money which I suggest hon members should find unacceptable. About a week ago we were told by Mr. Watkins, the former chairman of the royal commission on foreign ownership which completed its work about a year ago and handed down its report several months ago, that in Canada the subsidiaries of foreign parent companies were still not being effectively controlled by the public administration of the country.

Mr. Watkins went on to suggest that the so-called guide lines for good corporate citizenship by some firms operating in Canada leave a good deal to be desired. He said that the guide lines in respect of good corporate citizenship for a company such as this one are still a Boy Scout approach and that it is important there should be enforcement of more effective guide lines for the operations in this country of the subsidiaries of foreign parents.

Now we have before us Bill No. C-101 the effect of which will be to change the name of this insurance company. I believe it should be apparent to all hon. members what the hope of the board of directors and executive of this insurance company is in this regard. Why would they bother with a change of name unless they thought it would somehow help them sell insurance policies in this country? This is precisely what we should not want to see happen because we have enough insurance companies now.

In many ways we are being asked to indulge in a sterile operation here in discussing a bill to change the corporate title from one name to another. I do not believe it is just as simple as merely a change of name. The officials of this company must have something else in mind. If what they have in mind is that this will enable them to obtain a greater control of Canadian investable funds, then I am opposed to the bill. It is as simple as that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I have followed the consideration of this bill in the standing committee. On behalf of hon. members on this side of the house may I say that we are satisfied that this change of name is justifiable in the interests of the company concerned.

London and Midland Insurance Company

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I notice that Bill No. C-101 is sponsored by the hon. member for Middlesex who I believe is a successful businessman in his own right. I notice also that it is seconded by the hon, member for Etobicoke, a new member of this house who also is a successful businessman in his own right. I see from the explanatory note that the sole purpose of the bill is to change the name of the company to Avco General Insurance Company and in French to L'Avco Compagnie d'Assurance Générale. I also read the proceedings before the finance committee and I note that the president of the company is H. P. Paterno, that the vice president and general manager is Ralph Green, that the solicitor of record is F. W. Rhodes and that the agent in Ottawa is David Alexandor.

• (6:20 p.m.)

If the purpose of this bill is simply to change the name of the company to Avco General Insurance company, it brings to mind that Shakespearean quotation:

What's in a name? That which we call a rose By any other name would smell as sweet.

I notice that the London and Midland General Insurance Company was incorporated on July 17, 1947 under the name of the Progressive Insurance company. Only ten years later, in 1957, by application to this house the name was changed to London and Midland General Insurance company. To follow that chain of events we find that the Delta Acceptance Corporation of Canada was incorporated on March 26, 1954. In the month of July, 1962, Delta acquired the outstanding share capital of the London and Midland General Insurance Company.

Reading from the statement of the parliamentary agent, I note that the purpose of this bill is to obtain cohesion in respect of the different companies that Delta Acceptance Corporation of Canada controls. We must take the sequence back one step further. We find that Delta Acceptance Corporation is owned by a United States company, the Avco Corporation of New York. This is the parent company and Delta Acceptance Corporation is the Canadian subsidiary.

When one thinks of the name Delta Acceptance or even the name Avco one must consider the term "acceptance" as being a financial term with reference to a company that lends money to borrowers, in many cases at rather high interest rates, but nevertheless lending institutions. We do not think of them as being insurance institutions.

London and Midland Insurance Company

The thing that strikes me in respect of Bill No. C-101 is the massive holdings this Avco group has. When I read the statement by Mr. Alexandor as to the holdings this strikes me very forcibly. He said:

In addition to London and Midland General Insurance Company the following companies are also subsidiaries of Avco Delta Corporation Canada Limited. Avco C.F.C. Limited which was formerly C.F.C. Finance Corporation Limited, Avco Delta Dominion Limited which was formerly Delta Acceptance Canada Limited, Avco Delta Quebec Limited, which was formerly called D.A.C. (Quebec) Ltd., Avco Finance Limited which was formerly The Crescent Finance Corporation Limited, Avco Highland Plan Limited, which was formerly called Highland Trail Plan Limited, Avco Delta Realty Limited, which was formerly Grand Prairie Investments Limited, Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada, Avco Delta Realty, Manitoba, Limited, which was formerly called the Northwest Mortgage and Finance Company Limited, Consolidated Finance Western Limited, Empire Acceptance Corporation Limited, General Finance Company Limited, Lorne Bruce Motors Limited and Waverly Finance Company Limited.

He ended by saying:

This latter company is presently making application for a change of name to Avco Security Canada Limited.

Then he goes on to say that some of the companies are in the process of being wound up. I guess this is to fit in with the general impression of a cohesive approach taken in respect of the numerous holdings of Avco Acceptance Corporation of Canada.

The question was asked by one of the committee members:

What does "Avco" stand for?

The parliamentary secretary then replied:

It is an abbreviation of Aviation Companies and through the years has sort of dwindled down to Avco, an abbreviation then later adapted as the name for Avco Corporation of New York.

We find that Avco has taken a strange course. It started off as a group of aviation companies and as it developed it embraced finance companies, insurance companies and other companies. In fact, I would think that the word "Avco" led the hon. member for Etobicoke to ask what the nature of Avco's business was. That brought forth this reply from the president of the company who must be very well informed about it:

Of course Avco Corporation, the parent company in New York, has become something along the lines that we now call a conglomerate to a very great extent, and the different types of manufacturing and business that it is in are very broad.

The word "conglomerate" is one we have been using quite frequently lately. I happen [Mr. Gilbert.]

to be a lawyer by profession but I never got into the corporate field. I have never incorporated a company. Most of my practice was in respect of criminal law and court work, although I did a little estate work. The word "conglomerate" strikes me very forcibly. The hon. member for Etobicoke, having wide experience in business, is probably familiar with it.

I understand there are different types of conglomerate institutions. There is a vertical type and a horizontal type. Quite frankly I am at a loss to determine whether this is a vertical or horizontal conglomerate. It has always been my understanding that a vertical conglomerate is one where you have a single business and you build on that business by acquiring the interests of other companies and thereby erect a pyramid of companies in a vertical way. This company appears to be a horizontal conglomerate. I am sure the hon. member for Etobicoke was surprised when he asked what this company participates in because he was given the answer that it spreads itself horizontally and has manufacturing companies, aviation companies, finance companies and insurance companies. It strikes me we should all be aware that this company is a conglomerate in the horizontal sense.

The parliamentary agent said in his answer to the hon, member for Etobicoke:

It starts with engines and airplane parts for both military and the new air bus and things of that nature, to research and development—quite extensively research and development—including the mechanical heart.

• (6:30 p.m.)

That is a very interesting observation. We are talking about the mechanical heart being developed by an insurance company that is now seeking to change its name. It operates in a wide variety of fields, including the manufacture of mechanical hearts. The president of the company continues:

One of our Avco research and development groups did the second heart transplant in the United States and in the world. It is also involved in ordnance, appliances, broadcasting.

In research it has the great piece of the re-entry vehicle which, incidentally, splashed down today. Part of that is part of Avco's research and development group. And of course it has very extensive financial holdings in such things as the Credit Card Company and Carte Blanche, savings and loan companies, the Avco-Delta group, which is 40 per cent in Canada and 60 per cent in the United States and which encompasses small loan companies, several life companies in the United States, automobile finance companies, home improvement finance companies and all related companies in the financial area.

The next paragraph is a very important one for myself, being a Torontonian, because it says:

In addition it owns Moffats, a manufacturer of appliances very heavily engaged in commercial appliances for apartment houses and commercial kitchens in Canada.

I always thought that Moffat was a privately owned company, that the Moffat family had started the company and developed it to a stage where it has become today one of the better known companies in the appliance manufacturing field. It came as a complete surprise to me to learn that the Moffats are no longer the owners of this company and that an American owned company owns that company in Canada.

As a Torontonian, and having friends who at one time worked at Moffat's, it came as a great surprise to learn that a Canadian company had developed to this extent and an American group had now taken it over and it is part of that group. Then the president of the company said:

It is also engaged in and owns Avco New Idea Farm Equipment Co., which manufactures farm equipment at Coldwater, Ohio, and Fort Dodge, and has a system of distributorships and dealers throughout Canada as well as the United States.

He continued by saying:

The financial area is pretty much under the Avco-Delta group of companies. The only casualty insurance company that Avco owns is London and Midland General Insurance Company at the present time.

So you can see the picture. Here you have a company, Avco, that started in the aeroplane field and then spread its tentacles into the different areas of business. It has gone into research and is developing the mechanical heart. It has gone into manufacturing and financial fields. This is its first penetration into the insurance field because, as was said before the committee, this is the first insurance company the Avco group has ownedand the words to be underlined are "at the present time." Hon. members can see why one would have a very genuine interest in investigating the name Avco, because of its origin in the United States, its incorporation in Canada and its wide holdings in the different areas of business.

This brings me to the point raised by the hon. member for Selkirk in his opening remarks. The hon. member asked what was the usefulness of this company, as set forth in Bill C-101. Here you have a company that has proliferated in many fields. In the insurance field it has acquired the savings of Canadians.

London and Midland Insurance Company and according to the statement made before the finance committee it invests 75 per cent of these savings in Canada and 25 per cent in other countries.

One does not like to be nationalistic in the sense that we should confine everything to Canada and close our borders to any penetration from outside, because we do welcome capital. It has been said many times that Canada was first built on English capital and is now being built on United States capital. It strikes me as strange that an American company would set up a subsidiary in Canada and then send back 25 per cent of the savings of Canadians to be invested in the United States.

When one looks at the economic picture he realizes that there is a very small amount of money exchanged in the inflow and outflow of capital between the United States and Canada. When I hear the Minister of Finance bemoan the fact that we are going to have next year an estimated deficit of $800 million, I feel it imposes upon me a duty to determine whether this and other companies should be permitted to send some of the savings of Canadian people across the border for investment. This is why I have stood in my place and asked these questions with regard to Avco; I do not like the trend. The question may be asked: What's in a name? This really brings forth the question: What is the purpose of this company changing the name London and Midland General Insurance Company to Avco General Insurance Company?

The parliamentary agent told the committee that the name London was a local name. It has the same name as the constituency represented by the sponsor of Bill C-101, because London is in the county of Middlesex. It is said that perhaps the name is a little too local and they want to make it Canadian in the full sense; they want to spread it right across Canada. It is also said that there has been a very unfortunate experience with regard to similar insurance companies in England, which have suffered bankruptcy or insolvency, and they do not want to be tagged with this terrible name "London". However, Mr. Chairman, I would think they would be rather proud to have the name "London". London happens to be the capital of England. London is the seat of parliament; this is where democracy has developed. I would think one would be very proud to use the name "London"; but this is not the strongly register my protest with regard to London and Midland Insurance Company land General Insurance Company to Avco Lotbinière. General Insurance Company.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I support my colleagues who tried earlier to find out the true reasons why this company is asking to change its name. Even if at first sight that does not seem very important, it remains that we must think of all the possible implications of such a change.

I would not like to stretch out my remarks on that matter-either vertically or horizontally-but allow me to stress a few points. The changes in the names of companies which are quite numerous have a special meaning in Quebec. It often happens that a company changes its name simply to give the people of Quebec a better impression.

I wonder whether that might not be one of the reasons which prompts the company to change its name, because almost one third of its investments come from the Quebec population. Yet the name London et Midland does not sound very well to the ears of Quebecers.

Is that not a way of trying sometimes—I am not accusing the company of doing so-to draw the sympathy of the majority of the people under false representations?

It might also be advisable to mention another fact related to that one. Many such insurance companies, while receiving a great deal of money from the province of Quebec, invest almost nothing there. Many Quebec people are not too well informed, and as soon as a company uses a name which, at first glance, seems logical, it is encouraged only for that reason, forgetting that the money thus paid to that company never comes back to the area. It was just said-

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I should like to conclude my remarks by saying that we must be concerned and find out the true reasons, which prompt the said company to change its name.

In my opinion, the reasons mentioned are valid but it should not be possible to continuously change names without any serious reasons.

[English]

Mr. Peters: I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am glad to see the influx of members for the discussion of this bill. The process of changing the name of a company by means of a parliamentary bill, Mr. Chairman, has been considered by yourself and others to be a very simple matter. However, I believe that a great deal must be at stake before a company would go through the various procedures in parliament in order to change its name. In so far as an individual applying for a change of name is concerned, I would think there would be good reasons for speaking on behalf of his party, said he saw changing the name. One reason might be the inability of one's friends or acquaintances to pronounce the name. In other cases, perhaps, the name would be undesirable socially or in some other sense.

You may or may not be a lawyer, Mr. Chairman, I do not know. I am sure if you are you will probably realize that if changing the name of a company were as small a matter as some seem to think, it would be done by means of letters patent. We have been able to divert some of these requests for name changes into the responsible department, so that they can be done by letters patent.

This particular company, however, has come before parliament for this purpose over a period of several years. I note that in the report to the committee the company says it desires the change in name because the name is the same as the London and Midland Insurance Company in England, and that company had gone into bankruptcy. This may be a factor. This fact certainly has not had much effect on the company because the London and Midland has been before us for some time, and when it first came before us it indicated there was a deficit in the surplus account. Not being a mathematician, I am not sure what a deficit in the surplus means. However, I suppose it means there was less money there than there was supposed to be. There was an indication the deficit was in excess of a million dollars. When anyone talks about a million dollars, he must be serious.

Since that time, and during this period when the company was trying to change its name, they were able to reduce the deficit from a million dollars to $53,000. I congratulate them on their ability to do that. The company also gave the impression the change of name was desired because there were a lot of companies in the insurance business with similar names. I have looked through the list of companies and there are, in fact, only about four with somewhat the same name.

I found the London and Lancashire, which is not quite the same. Then there is the London and Canada, and that is the extent of names similar to this company registered result of which young men who are just startwith the department of insurance. I suggest ing farming operations, or farmers applying the reason for requesting a change is not for their first loan, would be charged an because of duplication of names, but that interest rate of 5 per cent for at least a porthere is a much more important matter tion of the loan that the minister in his wisinvolved. Members of parliament have a duty dom, in consultation with the corporation, to ascertain that reason. I was impressed by a may decide. I suggest a figure of $10,000 or nothing wrong with the company. I am sure he does not see anything wrong because I do not think he has looked. I do not believe he has considered why the name is being changed and I am not sure he would be concerned if he did look. I think we, as members, have an obligation to look at it.

I think on another occasion, it will be very interesting to discuss the number of subsidiary companies connected with this company.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being seven o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-110, an act to amend the Farm Credit Act.

On clause 5—Interest.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, now that the amendment we proposed to clause 5 has been defeated, I am wondering whether the minister would be inclined either to propose an amendment himself or to accept one, similarly based on the provisions of the bill, as a remark made by the previous speaker who, $20,000 should be lent at that rate of interest.

This would provide a definite advantage to young men with farming experience who expressed the determination to engage in the business of farming. We are all interested in finding ways and means of keeping our younger people on the farm, especially those with technical training in farming who are expressing a sincere desire to remain in that calling.

I realize we have voted on the amendment that was proposed, but I am wondering whether the minister is inclined to consider such a proposal at this time.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to advise the hon. member that the rate proposed in clause 5, which amends section 16A, is a prescribed rate and may not necessarily be a high rate. The rate will be determined from time to time by the governor in council. The undertaking that I gave hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly the hon. member for Crowfoot, was that it would not be more than 1 per cent higher than the cost of the money to the corporation.

If this amendment to the act proposed in clause 5 is passed, Mr. Chairman, then in the future when budgetary considerations are not so stringent there will be this latitude and flexibility. It would be open to the governor in council to prescribe a rate that is somewhat lower than 1 per cent more than the cost of the money to the corporation. I suggest to hon, gentlemen opposite that this proposal leaves that option open, instead of spelling out the rate as an economic rate, as has been the case in the past in regard to certain operations of the Farm Credit Corporation.

An economic rate, Mr. Chairman, is by definition a rate that is sufficiently high to recover all costs; that is to say, the cost of the money, plus the cost of administration and a reasonable reserve for losses. With a prescribed rate the governor in council is not under the obligation to recover all costs. Indeed, any time the government feels that it would be not only desirable but expedient to do so, the governor in council may prescribe a rate that is substantially below a rate which would be 1 per cent above the cost of the money to the corporation.

Hon, gentlemen will also realize that arguments have been advanced during the course of debate on this bill that indicate it is not entirely advantageous to the farming community to have low rates of interest. The hon, member for Saskatoon-Biggar and several other members opposite have argued that

This would provide a definite advantage to availability of funds almost automatically young men with farming experience who inflates the price of land.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to show me in Hansard where I made such a statement. On a point of order, I believe the minister is right when he says this statement was made by somebody, but it was not made by me.

Mr. Horner: It was made by me and by the present Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Olson: If the hon, member for Saskatoon-Biggar says he did not make the statement, then I accept that. But I do know I have heard it said many times from that direction.

Mr. Horner: That is because you used to sit over there.

Mr. Olson: It came from that corner of the house. I suppose I have been persuaded by the admonitions of my hon. friends opposite, but I think statistics will bear out that there is a direct relationship between increased availability of funds and the price of land. The more funds that are made available, the higher the price of land. So this question must also be taken into consideration.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, another argument against holding a statutory rate substantially below current commercial rates is that it does not have equal application to all those engaged in agriculture. To be just, we must bear in mind that to date only about a quarter of the farming community of Canada has made use of the facilities offered by the Farm Credit Corporation. Therefore any heavy subsidy of the F.C.C. would be of benefit to only about a quarter of the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will not be offended if I suggest to him that the assurance he has given with regard to the level at which the rate will be set is really not worth very much. It is not worth very much in the sense that his assurance would not be binding on anybody else. There would be nothing to prevent even this government from deciding for some reason in, say, a year's time, that the rate should be above 1 per cent. The government would not be restricted by statute. I am not questioning the minister's good faith in saying this, Mr. Chairman, but he surely must realize that any assurance he gives the committee in this regard is of very limited value.

[Mr. Danforth.]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I have to say to and greater expenditures with lesser and lesthe Leader of the Opposition that nothing is absolute and forever.

Mr. Horner: A 5 per cent rate was till the Liberals came into power.

Mr. Olson: The undertaking that we give now is predicated on our expecting to be in office for a rather long term.

Mr. Stanfield: Before the minister gives any undertaking here tonight that is intended to be valid, in all sincerity I would suggest the committee would have no guarantee that the government would not decide in a year's time that there were compelling reasons for moving the rate above 1 per cent.

Mr. Olson: Except, Mr. Chairman, that 1 per cent above the cost of the money received by the Farm Credit Corporation from the Department of Finance does take care of the administrative costs of the Farm Credit Corporation, plus a fraction of a percentage point to take care of losses. That in fact meets all the conditions and intentions with regard to the Farm Credit Corporation as enunciated, not only by this government and the previous government but also by the government sympathetic to the views of the Leader of the Opposition. There is no intention at present of having the Farm Credit Corporation make a profit. Perhaps at some future time the government, through an order in council, might set interest rates that will enable the corporation to show a profit over and above its costs of operation. Nevertheless I suggest to my hon. friend that that would be a difficult decision for any government to take.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: Despite the minister's assurance, I say he is asking the committee for a blank cheque.

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Chairman, it is not a blank cheque. The rate may fluctuate, but the undertaking that it will not be more than 1 per cent above the cost to the corporation is not a blank cheque.

Mr. Stanfield: Last winter we heard an undertaking in this house, no doubt sincerely given, that expenditures would not exceed $10.3 billion. We know what happened to expenditures.

ser taxation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gleave: The minister argues against a low or subsized interest rate on the grounds that it would be selective, apply to only 25 per cent of all farmers, and therefore, in the minister's terms of reference, unacceptable. Yet we have a subsidy to dairy farmers who form a relatively small proportion of the farming community. We make subsidies available to a particular segment of the farming community where that is advisable, an example being subsidies paid under Wheat Reserves Act. Surely under this legislation we could make a subsidy available to any farmers who wish to avail themselves of it. The young, beginning farmer with limited money would find this most welcome.

Mr. Olson: One can rationalize in any way he chooses. We do more than the hon, member suggests. We pay part of the costs of crop insurance. Crop insurance is not available with respect to every commodity in every part of the country on the same basis, and my hon, friend knows that.

If we subsidized credit interest rates we should be making discriminatory subsidies available to different farmers in the same area who might be producing the same crop. That is a different situation from one in which commodities are selected in certain areas or under certain provincial administrations under shared cost programs, and so on. We have tried to meet emergency situations by way of government assistance, but no subsidy program has ever been perfect. We can make better use of the government's money if we try to make subsidies available to producers of the same commodities who grow them in the same region and under similar conditions.

Mr. Gleave: I can accept the minister's point of view. He wants to keep subsidies fair, and I think we all accept that. Our objective in this bill is to help the young farmer who is at a disadvantage in the credit field. Surely we ought to help the younger man who is beginning to farm. Is the minister saying that the government prefers to give everyone an equal chance? Is the farmer who is beginning, the farmer who is at a disadvantage, to try his luck with the rest?

Mr. Olson: That is not what I said. Surely Mr. Olson: Yet I notice that members of the the hon. member realizes that before any hon, gentleman's party are asking for greater farmer can take advantage of a subsidy with go into debt. I do not think we should be on sound ground in discriminating against those who try to paddle their own canoe.

Mr. Horner: Surely, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is suggesting that there ought not to be one rate for all applicants. The minister went on his high horse and said piously, "Surely you are not asking farmers to go into debt." The hon. member was talking about young farmers or disadvantaged farmers, whether they operate individual, family or corporate farms. The minister does not want them to have any advantage.

I refer the minister to page 20 of the Farm Credit Corporation's financial statement which proves definitely that in 1968 a surplus of $1,212,000 in interest was paid back to the government. The hon, member for Saskatoon-Biggar I suggest was trying to tell the minister that the principle well established under the old act ought to be carried forward into new legislation. The minister ought to give special recognition (a) to young farmers who are establishing themselves in the agricultural industry, either as newcomers or as farmers taking over from their parents and (b) to the fact that a special interest rate ought to be available to individual family farms. I think that is what the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar was driving at.

Certainly if the interest rate for corporate farms is higher than that available for preferred farmers, no one will quarrel. But the principle I have enunciated has existed for five or six years and I think the minister can say very quickly whether that principle is to be carried forward to the new legislation. The principle I refer to is that of two interest rates, one rate being applicable to the family farm, and the other to the corporate entity. Or is there to be one, uniform interest rate?

Mr. Olson: The corporate entity my hon. friend speaks of is a corporation composed of a small number of shareholders. There might be three; in any event, they are of limited number. In most instances corporations are made up of members of the family.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: Where does it specify that a corporate entity shall be made up of small numbers?

Mr. Olson: It does not say that and I have given my hon. friend assurances time after time that a very large majority, substantially [Mr. Olson.]

regard to interest rates he would first have to more than 51 per cent of the controlling interest by way of shares, must be held by an operating farmer, a person who is actually operating a farm.

> Mr. Horner: A person; what is the legal definition of a person?

> Mr. Olson: That is why we changed the definition from "person" to "individual" because we wanted to make sure under clause 1 of the provisions of the bill that the individuals within the corporation are looked at to make sure that they too are active farmers, operating farmers—an individual whose principal occupation is farming. I have explained all that.

> The other part of the hon. member's statement that there was in fact an excess of $1,-212,000 of interest collected, earned on mortgages to farmers, over the interest payable to the government of Canada, is true for 1968; but after this year that disappears and turns into a deficit, and the deficit escalates from this year on. I have no reservation or hesitation in telling my hon. friend that what we are doing is a most responsible action and in keeping with the spirit of the setting up of the Farm Credit Corporation in the first instance—that it was going to make money available to farmers in large volume, at cost. That is what we are doing.

> Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the minister did a fine job of skating around the problem. One would almost think he was a hockey player. I asked him a simple question to which he could answer yes or no: In effect is the principle of two interest rates going to be carried on under the Farm Credit Corporation? He went to great lengths to skate around that question, and he pointed out that I was using a table which may not be true in the years ahead. I did not go on and use the most optimistic figure. I could have read from page 20 of the corporation's report, that with appraisal and legal fees another $1,127,000 is considered income, and other income is given as $140,000.

> The total income of the Farm Credit Corporation with regard to interest and operational services, over interest paid to the government of Canada, is in fact nearly $2½ million. Taking into consideration what the minister said yesterday, that the government is fully prepared to stand the operational costs of granting the loans I point out, Mr. Chairman, that the government even in 1968, if you examine the figures on page 20 of the corporation's report, never had to stand the operational costs of the Farm Credit Corporation. Let me make it abundantly clear that never in 1968 did the government absorb all the operational costs.

All the minister has to say is, "Yes, there is room for a lower rate of interest for an individual, for family farms, for young farmers, than there will be for corporate entities." That is all he has to say—yes there is, or no there isn't. I want to get through this bill tonight; I don't want a long exercise in skating.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the present intention is that there shall be one rate of interest.

Mr. Horner: Therein lies the problem. A few minutes ago the minister said that the principle upon which the act was established will be carried forward. He failed to answer that question in the affirmative. He recognizes then that the principle upon which the act was founded to help the small farmer, to help the farmer not on an economic unit to acquire an economic unit, is changed. He has established once and for all that under clause 5, from here on the Farm Credit Corporation shall operate on one interest rate, with no special privileges to a young farmer, no special privileges to the family farm, and no special privileges to an individual farmer. They must borrow money at the same rate as a corporate entity, or as several farmers combined in a small corporation. Mr. Chairman, I believe the minister has failed to protect or safeguard in any way, shape or form, the well established principle that the family farm is a necessary entity and a very efficient farming enterprise. I want that clearly understood.

The minister shakes his head. He agrees with himself that the family farm is no longer an efficient enterprise, that no longer should it be given special consideration by the government. This is what he said by shaking his head to my remarks. If he denies it, I say to him stand up and say so.

Mr. Olson: I will do it as soon as the hon. member sits down.

Mr. Horner: He says as soon as I sit down; well, I am interested in hearing him. I will yield the floor.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, just to correct the erroneous impression my hon. friend mentioned about the original intention and 29180—138 principle of establishing the Farm Credit Corporation, I would like to remind him that the 5 per cent interest statutory limit, set when this act first came into being, was substantially above the interest rate that the minister of finance was paying for funds at that time—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: And the second thing about which I would like to remind the hon, gentleman is that most of the amendments are changes for the purpose of enhancing the position of family farms, and not the opposite, as he claims. Therefore those assertions are absolutely contradictory to the facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: The backbenchers in the Liberal party are such a group of trained seals—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: —they agree with the minister without knowing the facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: Let them deny this fact, that the Farm Credit Corporation was established in the year 1959.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: Nobody denies that fact, so we are in agreement on premise No. 1. I say to the minister, turn to page 24 of the Farm Credit Corporation financial report. What did the Farm Credit Corporation pay for money from the minister of finance in the year 1959? It paid 5.75 per cent interest.

Mr. Olson: Oh, no, read it right. It was 4 per cent.

Mr. Horner: For $21 million; for $10 million 5.75 per cent.

Mr. Olson: Four per cent.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Horner: The minister says substantially below—

The Chairman: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but it is in the interests of the committee as a whole that it allow the hon. member for Crowfoot to complete his remarks without unnecessary interference.

Mr. Horner: The point is that the minister said that at the time the government set the 5 per cent interest ceiling the corporation was in fact borrowing money from the minister of finance at a rate substantially below that.

An hon. Member: Why don't you read it right?

Mr. Horner: Read tomorrow's Hansard if you doubt what I am saying. Page 24 of the Farm Credit Corporation's annual statement states that in the year 1959-60—1959 was the year in which the act was established—the corporation of the day borrowed $13 million at a rate of 5.75 per cent. Is that substantially below the 5 per cent rate at which they were lending it out? To me it is not.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The minister went on to say that there is no attempt in this new bill to try to do away with the family farm or give preference to the family farm. For the benefit of all the backbenchers on the other side I wish to point to clause 8 in the bill. If they will read paragraph (b) they will see the word "farming" underlined. Then if they look at the opposite page they will see this supplanted by "farming corporation". The expression "family farm" is being removed and in its place we have "farming corporation". Now I ask you trained seals to judge who is right in this argument. The minister said the family farm shall be maintained and that in no way are they taking any different attitude toward the family farm than was taken when the act was first established. I ask you to look at the facts and then pound your desks and clap your hands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, those trained seals do not even recognize who their master is. They clap their hands when I say so. There are the facts. Let the minister defend them any way he likes or attempt to distort them in any way he likes.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct some comments to the minister concerning the interest rates he mentioned. He said that at one time money could be borrowed for less than the rate the Farm Credit Corporation was charging. I suggest that if this were true, and that if he were to carry his analogy a little further the income of the farmer should have gone up as much proportionately today as in that day. I suggest that this is not the case.

[The Chairman.]

I could not conscientiously go back to the people in my constituency and tell them that I have allowed a higher interest rate in respect of the Farm Credit Corporation without a voice of protest, because the income of the farmer has not changed that much; he is in a bind at the moment. The government may feel that it is expedient to increase the interest rate in this particular case. I would go along with this if the farm economy were in a viable economic condition. But since it is not, and since there does not seem to be any indication that it will be so in the immediate future, I suggest to the minister that we could at least keep these costs under control.

I am sure the minister is aware, because of the large amount of capital required for an efficient farm unit in this day, that in effect farms nowadays have a perpetual mortgage on them. One might consider that an additional 2 per cent on an amount of $40,000 in one year represents $800. I realize that this is not paid during all the years of the mortgage, but in any event it is a substantial increase. I hereby register a protest against this increase on behalf of the people in my riding who, because of a lack of grain sales, are not in an economically sound position.

Had the minister or other representatives of the government sold the amount of grain they should have during this past year, things might have been better. However, this is not the case, and for this reason I protest.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, the minister has stated very strongly that the interest rates shall be the same to all individuals who borrow money under this act. Is it not true that the minister must qualify this statement? The only case when the interest rates will be the same to all individuals will be when these individuals all borrow the money in the same period of time. If the bank rate should change, the governor in council is empowered to change the interest rate. Therefore in a period of two or three years we may have three or four different interest rates, and farmers who borrow money in that period in effect could be paying four different rates of interest rather than the same rate, as the minister indicated.

Mr. Olson: I agree with the hon. member that the rate can change from time to time; but the rate to any borrower at any given time will be the same. Therefore we are on common ground.

Mr. Danforth: The minister also indicated that over a period of time the interest rate could go down instead of up. This of course is something that could be anticipated; but this has not been the history so far as the farmers are concerned. They have not found that the costs go down. Is it not a fact that under the terms of this bill as now proposed, if the rate of interest should be changed to 1 per cent or 3 per cent, because the farmer has entered into a contract with the corporation at a specific time at a specific rate of interest he will not be allowed the new rate and will have to pay the full amount for the entire period of the contract.

Mr. Olson: In response to my hon. friend's direct question the answer is very simple. A contract is a contract.

Mr. Danforth: In other words they are hung up.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson).

Would the minister not agree that, in view of increased interest rates and the excessively high cost of farming equipment, within a short time the small farmer could lose his farm?

Will he not agree that the small farmer might, at some point, lose his farm because his financial obligations are so high that he cannot meet them?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Well, I do not know that I can answer directly the question as to whether a farmer will lose his farm because the interest rate is too high. I suppose any farmer or any other businessman who has extended himself to the point where the interest charges to service his debt are in excess of his ability to meet them runs a risk. But this is not unique to farmers.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the honourable Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) does not recognize the fact that there could come a time where, due to increased administration costs and the high cost of living, some Quebec farmers might lose their farms because they cannot sell their produce or else they sell it at low prices.

I should like the minister to comment on this.

29180-1381

[English]

Mr. Olson: Wherever that occurs because of depressed market prices, whether in Quebec or in any other part of Canada, it is so. I suggest to the hon. member that it is not a problem that is specifically confined to the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is any sort of answer.

The question is not only whether the products are not sold in Quebec, in Ontario, or in British Columbia, but whether the farmer will be able to stow a profit at the end of the year under the new legislation introduced by the minister, after having covered his costs and sold his products at a profit.

I do not think it is any sort of an answer to tell me that the problem does not only exist in Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that the minister seems to be evading questions rather than answering them.

[English]

Mr. Olson: In direct reply, as it concerns this bill and particularly this clause, I should like to advise the hon. member that in the year 1967 the corporation took back only 11 properties out of a total of 64,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, could the hon. member tell us, from his fine statistics, how many farmers had to abandon their farm during this same period?

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Olson: We would have no way of knowing how many farmers decided in their own minds that they wanted to sell out and retire their debts. We have no way of knowing how many liquidate or for what reason.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, if a farmer made a loan at the going rate of interest and subsequently the rate fell, would he have the privilege of renegotiating this loan? If he did so it would be an advantage and would make this bill more acceptable.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, it would be somewhat difficult in answer to that question to say that the farmer would be able directly to refinance with the Farm Credit Corporation. Certainly if there were a retirement of a loan at some higher interest rate than was being charged at a given time the possibility would be open for him to refinance at a lower rate.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Having regard to this question of rigidity, as far as this bill is concerned, Mr. Chairman, it strikes me of particular interest to hear what the minister has said about the impossibility of making provision for special areas of the agricultural community. I should like to remind him of some of the remarks he made in past years about this topic. On June 2, 1964 at page 3873 of Hansard for that day we read these words:

—there should be provision made for supervised credit primarily for young farmers in low income families. We know there are many very ambitious and capable young men who have the talent to go into the business of farming as a lifetime occupation but are unable to do so because there is not enough credit available for them at the outset to set up an economic farm unit. The raising of the maximum limit alone will not solve this problem.

Mr. Asselin: When did you change your mind?

An hon. Member: When he changed his seat.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): In 1966 when we were again dealing with farm credit legislation the minister is reported as having said at page 4324 of Hansard for that day:

The situation is perhaps not so difficult for well established farmers, who have accumulated the necessary capital, but it is extremely difficult for a young farmer to obtain this amount of capital. If the young farmer does not obtain the capital he is unable to obtain the productivity necessary to provide a reasonable standard of living; his net income is not sufficient.

If we refer to the records of the Farm Credit Corporation we find that the regulations applicable to young people who wish to start farming have perhaps been a little too rigid.

If that was true then, how can the minister justify this legislation in relation to exactly this same point? It is not even as strong in this regard as the previous act, because it omits certain wording which did at least place the onus on the government to give consideration to young farmers or family farm units?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should suggest to the hon. member for Red Deer that it might be advisable for both him and me not to read too many of our own speeches.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Speak for thyself, John, not for me.

Mr. Olson: Let me say in all seriousness, and I do not intend to quote other speeches, [Mr. Olson.]

there have been things said in the past when we were defending a certain position. Fortunately for me, almost all of the principles on which I enunciated a position have remained constant.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: Stow that. The minister cannot even say that with a straight face.

Mr. Olson: The minister is laughing because of something else he is thinking. Let me say to the hon. member for Red Deer that we have corrected that problem in respect of young people. Young farmers can get established as a result of moving up to 90 per cent the credit available under this act. Let me also say to him that there are other reasons, and I have explained this in detail on several occasions during this debate, that it is not advisable to have an especially low rate of interest. The main reason is the inflation of land costs. These costs go up almost in direct proportion to the availability of these loans. I am sure the hon. member does not want provisions put into this act which would discriminate against certain people. As soon as you make more money available to a greater number of people, for some strange reasonit is not so strange if you understand the practicalities of this—the price of land goes up. That is not a service to young people.

The increasing of the amount available to 90 per cent of the requirements from former levels for the establishment of these units is of great benefit. That is why I said these principles I enunciated some time ago are still valid.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Let us try this one on for size. On April 12, 1965 as recorded at page 237 of Hansard for that day the minister said about the increase in the value of land—and we were not talking about credit that——credit is no longer the answer. We have now to provide our farmers with an opportunity of repaying some of the credit extended to them during the past few years.

All the minister is saying is that we are not going to increase the facilities for repaying the credit that is extended. We are going to make it more difficult because we are going to make the act so rigid that the benefit of the doubt in respect to interest rate fluctuation will not go to the farmer.

Let me refer to another point that is very relevant to this debate at this time. Again I refer to the minister's words, this time on June 6, 1967, and this can be found at page

1210 of Hansard for that day. He spoke about the necessity of providing funds for the Farm Credit Corporation, and referred to the fact that the Bank of Canada was used by the government to provide at least part of $1,520,000,000 to the C.M.H.C. Then he said:

If we are to be faced with this kind of deficit or national debt in Canada, I would certainly hope that the minister—

That was the minister of finance at that time.

—will expand a practice which has been started. I hope he will obtain a larger share of that money from the Bank of Canada.

Has the minister contemplated using the Bank of Canada to provide some of these funds, and allow this money to come back, as was discussed yesterday, on a revolving basis so the interest rate can be kept down instead of accelerated by this kind of policy?

Mr. Olson: What I said about making provision so farmers could repay this debt is just as valid today as it was then. I suggest the hon. member should recall some of the actions this government has taken since June 25 along precisely these lines. Let me remind the hon. member of the action we took this afternoon so far as corn producers are concerned. That is one of the steps we have taken, along with many others.

That is not what is now considered in Bill No. C-110. We are dealing with credit facilities under the Farm Credit Corporation. I am rather proud of the fact that there are amendments involved in this act which will make it easier and more beneficial to the agricultural community in general and some of the young farmers and family farms in particular.

• (8:50 p.m.)

I would also like to say to my hon. friends opposite that one of the purposes of making some of these amendments is to reduce the deficits about which my hon. friend spoke, because we think this is in keeping with responsible government.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Chairman, if the minister is speaking about increasing the amount of credit that will be available to farmers, I would agree with him. But we are talking about credit alone not being the answer. We are talking about the cost of this credit. All we will be doing is allowing the farmer to come under increased pressure that will raise the cost of the credit, and make it less possible and practicable for him to repay a loan.

For this reason it seems to me that the question is still what it was when the minister enunciated it in 1964, 1965 and 1967; that is, we must do something to hold down the cost of credit. That is what this argument is about; it is about the interest rates that the minister refuses to bring under any kind of control or regulation, in so far as concerns giving the farmer the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I will be less than a minute in what I have to say. The latest information which we had from the minister this afternoon was that for a loan to the Farm Credit Corporation the interest rate was 6.45 per cent, and loans to farmers are 1 per cent higher than this. This brings the interest rate to almost $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent; in fact, to 7.45 per cent.

There is a crisis in agriculture today; probably one of the worst we have had in many years. At this time, when many farmers are in need of assistance by way of a loan, we are taking the ceiling off the interest rate, which means another burden loaded on the farmer who is in the unfortunate position of having to borrow money. I recall that during the debate some days ago the minister indicated that he felt interest rates were coming down. I think the mere fact that he has introduced in this piece of legislation the idea of taking the ceiling off the interest rates is a clearcut indication that the government knows very well that interest rates will remain high. I think it is also a clearcut indication that this government has not a hope of controlling inflationary interest rates.

That is the government's admission to this house and the people of Canada, namely that they are in serious trouble as far as costs are concerned. We should have a real drive on curtailing costs, the cost of money and the cost of everything else. If this drive were made by the government we would not be in the position tonight of having to take the ceiling off interest rates and loading a terrific burden on those farmers who have to borrow money at the high rate the minister is going to set.

The Chairman: The hon, member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, just before clause 5 carries—

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few brief remarks.

I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) a few questions earlier, but he did not seem ready to answer them. In fact, he knows the answer but he cannot give it because his hands are tied. It is quite obvious, Mr. Chairman, that this measure will increase the operation costs of the farm. It is quite obvious that this measure will increase the administration costs and, in that regard, I agree with the previous speaker.

I therefore ask the minister once again to admit that this measure will eventually result in the disappearance of a great number of family farms in Quebec to the benefit of the bigger operators and that high finance will be able to put under its control the same farmers who can barely survive now. I am asking the same question as before, hoping to get a satisfactory answer this time.

[English]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I have just one quick question under clause 5 and interest rates.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, may I reply to the hon. member for Lotbinière? I thought I had answered the hon. member when I said we do not expect that this provision will get rid of the smaller farms. Indeed we hope that the amendments in the bill will make it possible for smaller farmers or groups of smaller farmers to be competitive with the larger commercial enterprises that may have developed around them. We hope this measure will be beneficial and not harmful.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, there is one very quick and simple question I would like to ask before we get off interest rates. I believe it has been the policy, and the minister can correct me if I am wrong, that in a year in which a farmer for one reason or another has had a difficult harvest-take this year for example—and is unable to get his crop off the land due to weather conditions, and because of this is unable to meet his commitments to the Farm Credit Corporation, the corporation will charge him an increased interest rate of one half of one per cent on the amount of money he has failed to pay off, charging him, of one half of one per cent. reject the very principle of the bill.

[The Chairman.]

This is a simple question: Is this practice going to continue, in the light of the difficult harvest this year, or will the minister be generous in his setting of the new interest rates, and will the new interest rate encompass all situations?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I answered that question earlier today in reply to the hon. member for Wellington-Grey, to the effect that the Farm Credit Corporation does give consideration, and I may say sympathetic consideration, to any individual farmer who has been adversely affected by some natural cause, whether it be hail, flood or what have you.

Mr. Horner: Rain and snow.

Mr. Olson: Yes, rain and snow also. While we do not declare a moratorium on interest rates or payments for an area, it has been the practice, and we will continue that practice, to receive sympathetically applications from individual borrowers who have been caught in adverse conditions.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I would not want to delay the business of the house either. I am as anxious as everyone here to see this bill passed.

Lastly, I should like to put a specific guestion to the honourable Minister of Agriculture. I admit, as he does, that this bill is not bad and that, on the whole, it is quite acceptable.

However, with regard to the interest rate, this is where the trouble starts, if I may be allowed to use this phrase. The honourable minister said that it was not possible nowadays to recover sums of money at a 5 per cent interest rate. We quite agree with him. But, has he considered the fact that the government could pay the difference between 5 and 7 or 8 per cent?

The farmers, at least those in the area with which I am quite familiar, want to know what will be the cost considering the present farm situation. They seem quite concerned about this legislation. In fact, they want all honourable members to know that the farmers would like this interest rate to be established and maintained at a reasonable level. for the period in which he has failed to pay it I think that some members even suggested a off. In other words, if he fails to pay it off percentage, provided that the minister one year they charge him an increase, over specifies the rate of interest and sets a maxand above the amount they are already imum. As he refused to do so, we have to

Could the government not accept a compromise as to the rate of interest, so as to truly serve the agricultural class which is going through a difficult situation?

As far as other clauses of the bill are concerned, I think they are acceptable and I even recognize their merits.

[English]

Mr. Olson: What I have tried to explain is that the Farm Credit Corporation supplies these credit facilities to the farmers of Canada at cost. What I have also said many times is that the interest rate will not be more than 1 per cent above the cost of the money to the corporation from the Minister of Finance. That changes from time to time. I think this is as precise as it is possible to be and I hope my hon. friend will accept it as a satisfactory answer for the time being, because it is in fact in keeping with the original intent that it shall be a service provided to the farming community at cost.

• (9:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, if I am allowed a remark, I must say that this is not very clear. Will the minister say whether or not he intends to set the rate at 5 per cent?

[English]

Mr. Olson: No. Quite obviously, the rate was 5 per cent and now we are changing it to a prescribed rate. So it will not be 5 per cent.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Just a few words, Mr. Chairman.

It has just been said that the bill before the house is excellent for the farmers-

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Asselin: Since the beginning of the session, Mr. Chairman, we see on your left "yes men" who applaud anybody and anything.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Asselin: They have learned very quickly to approve anything which is done by the government, whether it is good or not and I leave them to their illusions.

If the hon, minister does not put a ceiling on the interest rate and leaves it to the corporation to set a margin of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, his bill declare a moratorium applicable to a whole will be inoperative. Even now, I do not know area because in any given area there are any farmer in eastern Canada who has the farmers whose operations are different from means of borrowing money at the rate suggested by the hon, minister. If the rate is set at 7 per cent, some farmers will be in such dire financial straits that they will be forced to leave their farms. Indeed, when we speak of a 7 per cent interest rate, they know full well that they will not be able to benefit from the provisions of the act.

As the farmers in eastern Canada, and especially those in Quebec, have an average income of $2,000 to $2,500 a year, how does the minister expect them to be able to borrow at a rate of 7 or 7½ per cent to improve their farming operations?

I say that the minister could at least assure the house that, this bill having been passed, should interest rates become exorbitant and prohibitive-which as I said a while ago would make this act inoperative and inefficient—the governor in council would set a maximum interest rate in order to allow the farmers, especially those of eastern Canada, to benefit from the act.

I ask the minister to adopt flexible rules enabling him to intervene from time to time and put a ceiling on the interest rates, so that the farmers might benefit from the bill he introduced to the house.

[English]

Mr. Olson: Under the prescribed interest rate provision the governor in council may set the interest rate at any level.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Did I understand the minister to say that under certain conditions a farmer's payments can be extended for a year without additional charge? Does the minister not feel that the circumstances this year-the frost and the bad harvest conditions-warrant such consideration?

Mr. Olson: The minister did not say deferment would be possible without any charge. I think there has been a charge of one half of one per cent in the past. I did say, though, that consideration has been given to individual applications for deferment in any year when an applicant, through no fault of his own, was deprived of his income. To date, in many parts of western Canada, there has been no harvest because of severe weather conditions. In my view this would certainly be a reason for making such an individual application to the corporation.

It would not be prudent, in my opinion, to obtained a satisfactory harvest. As I have said, we shall continue the practice of giving consideration to the position of farmers who have been affected adversely to the point at which they have no income of their own in a particular year.

Mr. McCutcheon: I understand from the minister's remarks earlier that a farmer pays roughly 1 per cent above the cost of money to the Farm Credit Corporation. Is there any undertaking that the money will be transferred by the Minister of Finance to the corporation without a surcharge? In other words, is there a possibility that one day a tightfisted minister of finance might feel it was desirable on his part to become a hero and charge the corporation one half or one per cent more than the rate at which he had been able to raise the money? I hope I have made myself clear.

Mr. Olson: I think the hon. member has done so. The Minister of Finance sets rates from time to time with repsect to loans to crown corporations. The hon, member used the word "tight-fisted" but I do not think any minister of finance would set a substantially higher rate than the cost of the money to him. I do not think this would happen at any time.

Mr. McCutcheon: Does the minister say, then, that the money is turned over without a surcharge?

Mr. Olson: No, I did not say that; I said it was a very, very small charge which the minister of finance makes. It is not easy to determine precisely what the cost is, because there are different rates in public issues for different terms, and rates have to be averaged out to some extent in order that the corporation would be paying a rate comparable to that which the Minister of Finance has to pay. However, we expect that the corporation will have the use of this money at almost the same rate, taking into account the calculations which would need to be done to make provision for a comparable term.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Clause 5 agreed to: Yeas, 77; nays, 53.

On clause 6—Agreement re loans to Indians on reserves.

Mr. Horner: Clause 6, Mr. Chairman, is a new clause in which I am pleased to see the Farm Credit Corporation, even poorly in a [Mr. Olson.]

those of their neighbours, and who may have Indians. However, I feel the government has failed to recognize a very serious problem in the country today. I say this as a member for the constituency of Crowfoot. I should like to answer the slur that was cast upon the name of Crowfoot here the other day by the Prime Minister. My constituency is named after a great Indian chief, Chief Crowfoot. The Blackfoot Indians now live within the constituency of Crowfoot. I want to make it abundantly clear that it was Chief Crowfoot who signed the peace treaty with Colonel Macleod and said, "There will be peace as long as the rivers flow and the grass grows on the prairies". It is an honour indeed for me to carry his name into this chamber.

> I cannot help but rise to point out the inequities in this particular clause. There are many of them. I say to the minister that it is a hollow gesture to give the Indians the opportunity of borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation. It is a gesture, however, which will get the government and the department of Indian affairs off the hook; that is what it will do. When an Indian tribe or band goes to the Indian affairs branch and says, "We want to borrow money", the branch will be able to tell them to go to the Farm Credit Corporation.

An hon. Member: Good.

Mr. Horner: Some members on the government side clap their hands, but they know not why they clap their hands. I am very serious about this particular point. Clause 6 of this bill says, in effect that three white men are equal to a whole tribe of Indians. Sit in your seats now and clap your hands.

An hon. Member: I cannot hear you.

Mr. Horner: This bill indicates that three white men are equal to the total number of people of the Blackfoot reserve. This is a serious matter. There is a hush in the chamber now when hon. member know the facts; they are not so happy. They realize what they are doing. Is this equality? I say to the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, that this is nothing but a hollow gesture.

I may say that the Indians on the reservation in my constituency have already borrowed $100,000 to form a cattle co-op. The minister should know this, and I think perhaps he does. They are buying steers and selling cattle; they are making money with that cattle co-op. However, only a small percentage of the Indians on the reservation are bad bill, make a small gesture toward the in that co-op, not more than a third of the whole tribe on that reservation. They have made good use of the $100,000. Clause 6 limits to $100,000 the amount an Indian band or tribe on a reservation may borrow. According to one of the following clauses in the bill three individuals, other than Indians, can borrow $100,000.

I say to the minister that this principle is wrong. It is disgraceful in a day and age when equality is considered just and fair. I say it is wrong in a just society; I say it is wrong in any kind of society in the twentieth century. I have already moved an amendment to clause 5 of this bill and I am prepared to move an amendment to clause 6. No one on the government side supported my amendment to clause 5.

An hon Member: Nobody will on clause 6, either.

Mr. Horner: A member says that no one will on this clause, either. I want every one of you on the backbenches on the government side to realize what the amendment I am moving is going to mean. It is going to mean that three people, other than Indians, shall not be equal to a whole Indian band as this clause suggests now. If you disagree with the hon. member for Crowfoot you will be saying that you believe three people shall be equal to that number of Indians. In essence, this is the matter upon which you will be voting. I want each and every one of you backbenchers, you trained seals, to weigh this in your own mind and not be guided by everything the minister suggests or everything the Prime Minister suggests, especially when the Prime Minister has no regard for Crowfoot.

I have a very high regard for Crowfoot. I have visited the monument that is near the town of Gleichen, Alberta, where Chief Crowfoot and Colonel Macleod signed the peace treaty. I was there—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: Perhaps hon, members are a little too eager to laugh. I was there with Chief Yellowfly who is now the administrator, and Mr. Adam Solway who is now the chief of the reservation. I was very much impressed by the high respect—

An hon. Member: Heap big respect.

Mr. Horner: That remark only belittles the hon. member making it, and I will not name him. I was there and I was very much impressed by the high regard in which Chief Crowfoot was held. I was greatly impressed by the attitude of these Indians toward the act of Chief Crowfoot when he signed the peace treaty with Colonel Macleod. The Indians all over western Canada at that time wanted to rise to the battle call of Gabriel Dumont and Louis Riel at the battle of Batoche. The Indians all over wanted to answer that call, but Chief Crowfoot stopped them.

The Chairman: Order, please. I would invite the hon. member for Crowfoot to return to the provisions of clause 6.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that you and other hon. members will forgive me for getting carried away for a minute. I happen to represent a constituency that is named after a great Canadian, and I suggest that this clause is a disgrace to this government and the minister. The Minister of Agriculture comes from western Canada and formerly represented part of the area of which I speak.

The proposed section 17A reads as follows:

With the approval of the governor in council, the corporation may enter into an agreement with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—

I see the minister in charge of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is now in his seat. I am pleased he is taking part in this debate. I would ask him whether he thinks that a band of Indians could be considered equal to three people who are not Indians.

Mr. Perrault: That is nonsense, and you know it.

Mr. Horner: Someone says that is nonsense and I know it. I would ask him to read clause 6 (4), to be found on page 5 of the bill. If what I said was nonsense then I would be interested to see how he votes on the amendment that I now propose to move. I move, Mr. Chairman:

That all the words after "shall" in line 3, page 5, paragraph (4) be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "be determined by agreement between the corporation and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, with the approval of the governor in council".

This amendment does not seek to do anything drastic, Mr. Chairman; I want everyone to abide by it. If the department of northern affairs and the governor in council believe that an Indian band should be limited under the act to a loan of $100,000, then they may do so. But let them be brave enough not to make a public declaration that three people who are other than Indians are equal to one Indian band. Let us be gentlemen in a land where we pride ourselves that we put equality above all else. Let us be just in this supposedly just socety.

I am not saying that the limit should be $200,000 or $300,000, Mr. Chairman. All I seek to do is to remove the limitation that this clause now places upon an Indian band. Clause 6 (4) reads:

The total amount outstanding of loans that may be made to any one band under this act shall not exceed one hundred thousand dollars.

I would ask these backbenchers who vote for the government on every amendment to look a little further at this bill. In clause 10 it is provided that three people who are other than Indians on a reservation can borrow up to $100,000. I am not suggesting that Indian bands should be able to borrow more money than they are capable of repaying; I am suggesting that there should be no limit imposed at all. The limit should be decided by their ability to repay, following thorough discussion of the matter with the Minister of Agriculture and the Farm Credit Corporation. They should decide whether an Indian band in a particular part of Canada should be able to borrow $75,000 or that an Indian band in another part that is a little more viable can borrow $125,000 or $200,000.

An hon. Member: Let it be.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, someone says "Let it be". I cannot let it be so easily. To me this means a lot. I have seen the reputation of these trained seals who vote with the government no matter how just an amendment might be. I ask them not to make a hurried decision on this matter. Do not let it be said that the Liberal party believes that one band of Indians on a reservation is considered equal to three non-Indians not on a reservation.

I am heartened to see the minister of Indian affairs now talking this matter over with the Minister of Agriculture. If there is any doubt about it I would be willing to discuss the question. If the minister has any doubt about my amendment let him stand clause 6 and we can move on to clause 7. We would agree to this if the minister requires further time to discuss the matter. No one is more congenial on this point than I. But I ask hon. members opposite not to rush into a decision, particularly when they tell the people of Canada that they believe in a just society with equal treatment for all. They may be in deep trouble if they move hurriedly on this question.

The Chairman: Order. Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment? The hon, member for—

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman-

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order to clearly indicate to you that as chairman of the committee it is for you to make the decision who has been recognized for the purpose of taking part in this debate. It is not for the minister of Indian affairs to rise in his place and indicate that some other member should be given the floor.

The Chairman: Order, please. That was precisely what the chair was doing. I was having some difficulty recalling the name of the riding. The hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I support the spirit of the amendment that has just been moved by the hon, member for Crowfoot, To the eloquence that he used in putting his case to the Minister of Agriculture I wish to add words of support. I do not know how the Minister of Agriculture, levelheaded man that he is, could possibly allow this blatant discrimination to creep into the drafting of Bill No. C-110. There is something about the amendment moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot, as I heard him read it into the record, that is not quite acceptable to me. Not having it before me it seemed that no specific reference was made in the amendment to the position of Indian bands themselves. In his amendment the hon, member sought to omit any reference to a limit of $100,000 on loans to Indian bands, leaving the amount to the discretion of the minister and the department of Indian affairs.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment should have provided for consultation or tripartite consideration among the Farm Credit Corporation, the department of Indian affairs and the Indian bands themselves. That is the vital point of the hon. member's amendment.

• (9:30 p.m.)

To return to a consideration of clause 6 and the amendment moved by the hon. member, ${\tt I}$ ask the Minister of Agriculture what possible justification there is for limiting loans to Indian bands. No doubt the minister knows that on sizeable reservations three, four or five farm operations may be carried on simultaneously. In my old constituency of Springfield there exists an Indian reservation with a population of between 2,000 and 2,500 people. In 1966 the reservation made plans to carry on three or four different kinds of farming operation. Four or five Indians were to be in each group or co-operative, and each co-operative was to engage in a different kind of farming operation. One group within that band might raise livestock, another grow grain and a third engage in yet another form of farming, and so on.

Limiting the amount available to one band to $100,000 will have serious practical consequences. It would be much better if the limit of $100,000 were to apply to each group of farmers within a band. That way the blatant discrimination of clause 6 would be removed. I recall what the hon. member for Crowfoot said about $100,000 under this bill being available to three farmers working together. I submit that a similar provision ought to make a similar kind of loan available to any three or four Indians working together as a group within a band. I ask the minister to remember that in the near future we shall see three, four or five different agricultural operations carried on within the same band. Why should any one of these groups be subjected to legislation that is more restrictive than that applicable to similar sized groups of non-Indian people. I ask the Minister of Agriculture specifically to answer this question when he replies to the mover of the amendment.

In conclusion may I say that so blatantly discriminatory is this provision that if it were before the United States congress there would be rioting in the streets of United States cities.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about the amendment which has just been moved.

Although I do not fully agree with the provisions of the bill under consideration, I feel that those contained in the amendment are not much more acceptable since for two or three days we have been discussing Bill No. C-110 in this house to prevent the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) from setting the interest rate of the Farm Credit Corporation, because we feel that it belongs to the house to do it.

However, under that amendment, the minister is being asked to determine, in cooperation with the bands, the amount that can be loaned to each band. I realize that that is rather contradictory and that we should find another formula.

I cannot suggest one at this time, because the matter has just been introduced in the house. However, I would like to ask the hon. minister whether, in fixing this maximum of $100,000 for each reservation, he took into consideration the population of each reservation? Obviously, all the reservations do not have the same population.

For my part—I shall not say it too loudly—I think $100,000 can certainly help the small reservation of Blue Point. There are only a few farmers in that area, and they will certainly be satisfied if they can get $100,000, just like the Indians on larger reservations. That is the main point which I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, because he suggests the sum of $100,000 for all reservations, whatever the size of their population. The minister should at least set a percentage, for example for a farmer operating a farm on a given reservation but, in any event, I think that more precise provisions are certainly necessary. The minister at least showed his good will by fixing a sum.

The house wants a sum to be determined and an interest rate to be fixed. The minister is on the right track, but I do not think this legislation goes quite far enough in making precise provisions for each particular case.

The hon. member who moved the amendment said that fixing a sum of $100,000 he was considering a reservation equal to three white men. Now, on the basis of the reservation located in my riding, I think that the amount of $100,000 is worth more for a reservation than for three white farmers, because the latters' lands can be mortgaged. As far as Indians are concerned, their lands will not be mortgaged under the law.

I would like to put a question to the minister. He is now discussing with another member, but I would like him to tell me how this amount of $100,000 will be guaranteed.

The bill reads as follows:

Where an agreement has been entered into pursuant to subsection (1), the Corporation may make loans under this act to farmers and bands—

In my opinion, the terms used are somewhat confusing, because the Farm Credit Corporation will have to secure some guarantees. Could the minister tell me whether it is whether the corporation will lend, as it sometimes does, to the council of the band, so that the latter can accommodate the farmers, or whether it will lend directly to them.

If it lends to farmers, it is strange to read in the bill that:

—the Corporation may make loans under this act to farmers and bands referred to in that subsection without obtaining a first mortgage on farm lands or on farm lands and chattels.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, that worries me a bit, and I wonder where the corporation will get guarantees should it make loans directly to the bands. If it makes a loan to the band council, as in the past this money will be managed by the council. I should like the minister to give us some information in this regard.

Concerning the amount now set at $100,000, I feel that the act is not explicit enough; all the reservations should be taken into account. This may be quite suitable in my area, but in the case of large reservations it will certainly not be. I agree with the member who moved the amendment in this regard, and I feel that the minister should give us additional information to throw light on that provision of the act. Otherwise, we shall have to support the amendment. I do not think the department should have the full responsibility of setting the amount of money to be voted for each of the reservations.

I bank on the minister to enlighten us on these matters and if, in the end, we get specific figures, the majority of the members may be satisfied, and the Indians can no longer say that the act is discriminatory.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to hold up the passage of this very important bill but I would like to make a few remarks in connection with those clauses that relate to the matter of making money available to Indian people. I also wish to ask the minister a few questions so that he can clarify certain provisions of the bill. I share some of the concern expressed by hon, members on the other side, and I hope that in his remarks the minister will clarify the situation for us.

I would first like to commend the minister and the government for including these changes in the bill. One of the important factors limiting or prohibiting the development of Indian people, and of resources on reservations, has been the lack of available capital [Mr. Gauthier.]

the council of the band or the government from sources that are available to other that will provide the guarantees, in short Canadians. If this capital were available Indians could get into business ventures of their own.

I hope that the changes in this bill are only a beginning in making farm credit sources, provided by federal legislation, available to the Indian people. I hope that the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, for instance, will receive further consideration from the minister, so that this source of lending will be made available to the Indian people. I hope that consideration will be given also to similar amendments with respect to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I know that the amending bill has already been passed but I urge that amendments be made so that that source of credit can be made available to the Indian people.

There are some 6 million acres of Indian land in this country, much of it very valuable. Much of it is on the prairies, about which hon. members have talked. Much of it is valuable farmland. I submit that much of it can be developed by the Indian people, if capital were made available to them. If this were done I can assure the minister that many Indians would get into farming ventures on their own.

I believe that Indians must participate in all aspects of Canadian life, whether social, economic or political. In the past there has been too much of a tendency on the part of the Indian people to go to the Indian Affairs branch, and look to it for everything. The Indian Affairs branch must not be all things to the Indian people. The Indian people must have sources of capital and of information available to them, sources that are available to other Canadians. Along this line I believe that the provincial governments also have a responsibility to provide services to the Indian people on the same basis as they are provided to other citizens.

Some of the sources of credit available to other Canadians from the provincial governments should be made available to Indian people. I hope that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will pursue this course when dealing with provincial ministers, and that the Prime Minister will pursue it in dealing with provincial premiers, to work out arrangements with the provinces so that they will expedite the provision of services to the Indian people.

This is a must, if we are to succeed as citizens in this country. We must have all the services made available to us that are available to other citizens. I know that there is a peculiar mortgage position with respect to Indian lands. Here again I commend the minister for taking the action he did in this bill, because I believe that he and the government must take responsibility in guaranteeing certain loans for Indians. We need a time cushion. We need a cushion so that we can develop, and eventually we must reach a position where we can take on the responsibilities that other Canadians share. We must not always be looking to the government and asking what the government can do for us. We must also ask what we can do for ourselves. But before we can do things for ourselves we must have available to us the sources of credit, services and other things that are available to other citizens.

I had not intended to launch into a lecture on this matter tonight, Mr. Chairman. I would like the minister to explain the meaning of subclause (4) on page 5 of the bill, referring to the maximum amount of loans available to an Indian band. Does this refer to the maximum amount available to a band for a band operated project, or does it mean that it is the total amount of money that would be available to a band, including the total amount individual Indian borrowers might borrow?

I said in my opening remarks that I shared some of the concern of hon. members on the other side. I hope that this $100,000 will not be too restrictive. I hope it does not mean that it applies only to individuals within the band. I would hope that perhaps if the Indians could get together and form a co-operative of their own they would have sources of credit available to them for individual projects. I would not like to see them limited in this instance. Perhaps the minister would give us an explanation on these points.

Mr. Olson: I have listened with a great deal of interest to the comments that have been made about clause 6 of the bill now before us. I thank hon. members opposite, and the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo on this side, first for their concern and second for their comments. With regard to the matter of including Indians and Indian bands within those qualifying to make an application to the Farm Credit Corporation, first of all I should like to answer the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo by saying that subsection (4) of section 17A under clause 6 has exactly the same effect for an Indian band as for any other corporation; that is, the maximum is $100,000. That $100,000 is for an indebtedness by the band as a corporation.

Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would wait until he hears the remainder of the explanation because it might take some of the smile off his face. Any number of Indians who live on a reserve or belong to a band, if they enter into a corporate entity or indeed into a partnership which is recognized by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, may borrow up to an amount of $100,000 for each group.

Mr. Horner: May I ask a question on that very point?

Mr. Olson: Just a moment. The hon. member did not even read this clause before he made his amendment.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of privilege. The minister imputed motives to me when he said I had not even read the clause. I was merely rising to ask him a question which would clear up the matter. He said that any group of Indians could become a corporate entity—

Mr. Olson: That is not a point of privilege.

The Chairman: The hon, member rose on a point of privilege but seems now to have shifted to a question. He may either state his point of privilege or wait until the minister has finished before putting his question.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I beg your indulgence to bear with me. My point of privilege arose out of the minister's remarks and the fact that he stated I had not even read the clause. In order to make it clear to him, I must pose a question. The minister stated as a matter of fact that any group of Indians could become a corporate entity, but under this clause can a band borrow more than $100,000?

The Chairman: Order, please. I fail to see the point of privilege.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I intend to prove what I said a moment ago to the satisfaction of all reasonable people. Three or more Indians who form themselves into a corporate partnership, with the approval under clause 1 of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, may borrow up to $100,000 per corporation. If you read subsection (5) you will note that in addition any individual Indian who is a farmer and who qualifies in respect of the security needed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development may borrow up to an amount of $40,000. If the hon. gentleman had read subsection (1) he would have noted—I shall not read it all—the following:

—loans to be made under this Act to farmers who are Indians on reserves and to bands—

I should like the hon. member to take note of the word "and". Then he might look down at subsection (5) where he will note:

The provisions of this act, in so far as practicable, shall apply to all loans made or to be made to farmers and bands—

If he will look further down in subsection (5) he will note this:

—shall be deemed to be a reference to the land that is being farmed or is to be farmed by the farmer or the band.

Mr. Chairman, with all the qualifications within this clause the situation is made completely clear. That was the intent of having it written in that way. All the facilities and services, without any discrimination whatever, will be available to the Indians in the same way they are available to anyone else in this country.

In reply to the hon, member for Kamloops-Cariboo I should say we have placed an upper limit, on any corporation or any entity, of $100,000. That is the maximum amount of credit that any entity can receive from the Farm Credit Corporation. That is precisely the meaning of subsection (4) under the act.

Mr. Horner: May I ask one question, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman-

The Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock—

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the committee rise and request leave to sit until eleven o'clock tonight.

Mr. Horner: If I might, I have one question—

The Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps I might rise, report progress, and then leave could be requested of the Chair at that point. Therefore, shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit at the next sitting of the house or later today.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 6(6), I should like to move that the house sit for one additional hour.

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) have unanimous consent?

An hon. Member: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, might I call attention to the fact that under the provisions of standing order 6(6) it is my privilege to move this motion and if the hon. member can get nine other members to join with him he can prevent the house sitting.

Mr. Peters: We know the rules. You do not need to lecture us.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I might be heard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is a question as to when this motion should be put and whether it should be put before 10 o'clock. Perhaps I might consult with the learned gentleman in front of me.

Apparently the precedent has been set in the past that a motion must be put before ten o'clock, and failing unanimous consent we will follow the normal procedure.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, would the government house leader indicate the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will call again the committee stage of the present bill. After that we will proceed to the resolution preceding the bill dealing with financing of the Canadian National Railways.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—NIGERIA—STEPS TO HALT SHIPMENTS OF ARMS

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, on October 17 last I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) the following question:

I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the $8 million loaned to Nigeria will contribute to pay for the bombs that England sells to that country to murder the Biafrans?

When I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question concerning the possibility for the Canadian government to intervene with England so that it may stop selling arms to Nigeria, he answers me that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already answered this question. When I put the same question to the Prime Minister, he told me that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had already answered that question. They remind me of Pontius Pilate who washed his hands saying: I am innocent of the blood of that victim.

The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will not ask England to stop selling arms are doing the same thing, as well as those opposite who talk and could be heard saying—

An hon. Member: Innocent.

Mr. Dumont: I will repeat the word, Mr. Speaker, because I heard it quite well. They said: Innocent. They are heard saying: We are innocent of the blood of those Biafrans who wanted to preserve their freedom of speech.

Those Biafrans wanted to escape the domination of the federal government that wanted to take over the oil wells located in Biafran territory. The smell of the oil wells of the Shell Company, the supplier of Great Britain which is unable to go through the Suez Canal allow us to realize that 3 million Biafrans are readily sacrificed to take possession of that area which is rich in oil resources.

Mr. Speaker, when a Prime Minister mentions the warmth and the affection between Canadians and Britishers in the introduction to an 8 page article which the Financial Time of London devotes to Canada, it is no doubt appropriate to denounce Great Britain for selling arms to Nigeria.

The Prime Minister stated: Canada has borrowed much from Great Britain. We have borrowed from its institutions, its traditions and its people. Whatever may be their origin, all Canadians will remain for ever grateful to Great Britain for what it has lent us.

The warmth and affection which characterize the relations between our two countries, both at the official level and at the individual level, are dear to the Canadian people as much as they are dear I am sure to the British people.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

It is not surprising that the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) would want to disguise the answers given in the house. Together they practise the ostrich policy; they bury their heads up to their ears in the sand so as to pretend that they know nothing of the existing genocide, under the pretext that we cannot support the Biafrans, because that corner of land is not recognized as a state. We will let millions of individuals die so that the Canadian people may remain eternally grateful to England; those hypocrite English whose only concern is to divide to better rule, without any concern at all for the human factor.

Besides, it is a historical fact. No federation established by the English has ever managed to survive because, living on their island, having in that country no worthwhile resources, those British people have to exploit other countries to survive, as they did in Canada and continue to do so now in Biafra.

The federal government of Nigeria, supported right from the outset by the two-faced British government, thought it would be able to bring this war to a happy conclusion in a few weeks, just enough time to humble the oil-possessing Christians.

It started out as an economic blockage, but an invasion quickly followed. That was not a bona fide war. It was, from the very beginning the onrush of a swarm of vandals—as those opposite—destroying anything that stood in their way, killing on sight any Biafran that happened to be there, plundering houses, churches and schools. In a year, Mr. Speaker, the Biafran war made more victims than the seven-year Viet Nam conflict. Why such fierceness? Because they want the Biafran people to disappear completely; 6,000 people die every day and the good Liberals agree to let this slaughter go on. This can be best proved by this article, and I quote:

—the Soviet MIGs, piloted by Egyptians, started to shower English bombs on Biafran towns and villages. Out of 68 raids, only two were aimed at military objectives; the rest of them were released over the civil population.

Small wonder that, in the face of such acts, the population should flees and fall back. Small wonder that, concentrated within an ever shrinking territority, that population should starve to death ... and all this with the complicity of a part of the world, and before the indifference or the helplessness of the other—

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Speaker, let us not be misled in this Biafran affair. We are not asking for the recognition of that small homeland. We want the Canadian government to protest against those countries which continue to sell arms to the Nigerians.

Exactly 34 days ago, I called the attention of the government to this problem. It therefore has on its conscience the death of over two million people assassinated to save the oil wells of England. And that genocide continues with the approval of our good friends across the way, who seem to have no other concern but trying to ridicule serious situations which should be brought to an end without delay. That is why I urge again the Secretary of State for External Affairs to support our request and prevent England from selling arms to the Nigerian federal troops.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who is at the United Nations right now to discuss those various matters, and without agreeing with the many statements made by the hon. member for Frontenac especially about England's participation in the civil war now raging in Nigeria, I want to quote to the hon. member the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau): Canada, under international law and within limits that we must respect, as well as within the framework of the United Nations and by means of international contacts, has done everything to put an end, if possible, to that civil war in which we cannot, of course, intervene directly. Besides, that is what the member countries of the Organization of African States have asked.

Thanks particularly to the help of the international Red Cross and to negotiations with Nigeria, the Canadian government does its utmost to give assistance to Biafrans and help them overcome their difficulties.

Mr. Dumont: The government is merely asked to protest against the sale of arms.

Mr. Forest: The hon, member is obviously referring to England. We owe a great deal to England but we are now an independent state and we have our own external policy. We surely cannot intervene in British affairs and they must make their own decisions.

As far as the war is concerned, I think that Canada, as the Prime Minister repeated many times in this house, has done its utmost to give assistance to Biafrans through the international Red Cross. It also endeavoured, through negotiations, to bring the war to an end.

- 7. Yes. (a) Due to the special nature of certain rooms which were used as classroom, library, office and seminar rooms. As an example, a rug and wall drapes were necessary for acoustical purposes. CANADA PENSION PLAN STAFF

Question No. 329-Mr. Coates:

1. What is the present strength of the Canada Pension Plan staff and has the staff been reduced in the past year?

2. Of the present staff, how many are earmarked to deal with claims for survivor benefits under the plan?

3. How many claims have been received to date for survivor benefits and of that number how many have been processed and what has been the length of time required to process a claim for survivor benefits?

4. Has the department received complaints from claimants as to the length of time required to process a claim?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The present strength of the Canada Pension Plan administration, including the head office and district offices is 385. This number has not been reduced in the past year.

2. Persons on staff in the claims section at head office are not exclusively assigned to the processing of applications for survivors' benefits. All applications, whether for retirement pensions or survivors' benefits, are processed as they are received. At present, some 25 employees are directly involved in the processing of applications at head office. However, assistance is also provided by field officers and others.

3. The distribution of applications for survivors' benefits is as follows:

For death benefit 7,054 3,611
For survivors' benefits (widows and orphans) 6.834 2.828

The period required to process a survivor's application, that is, from the time it is first received until it goes into pay is, on the average, about three months. A considerable amount of documentation is required, including proof of the death of the contributor, proof of his contributory earnings, proof of the dates of birth of the contributor and his survivors, proof of marriage, and proof of school attendance for orphans 18 years of age or more. It might also be noted that under the legislation the payment of benefits is made at the end of a month. Accordingly, an application may be approved at the first of a month but the cheque would not be issued until the end of that month. Survivors' benefits first became payable in February 1968. Retroactive payments are made when applicable.

4. Some inquiries regarding the length of time required for the processing of a claim have been received at district offices. Where delays beyond the normal have occurred, they are usually related to difficulties encountered in obtaining necessary acceptable documentary evidence to establish entitlement to benefits. Full explanations are provided whenever necessary.

The approximate percentages are (a) and (b), 98 per cent; (c) 52 per cent; and (d) and (e) 75 per cent.

Return tabled.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the answers to questions I would point out that the answers to two questions of mine have been held back in a manner that is inexcusable and constitutes, in my opinion, a contempt of parliament. The first question—and I referred to it the other day—is No. 57. On September 13, which was a month and 17 days ago, I asked the following question:

How many Liberal members of the last parliament and Liberal candidates in the last election have been appointed to positions in government, civil service, or to government boards since 25th June?

There can be no excuse for the failure to answer that question, except that the Secretary of State is not doing his duty but is flying kites outside the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The second question to which I refer is No. 275, as follows:

In the report of the Company of Young Canadians for 1967-68 there is an item that $489,019 was expended for consulting and professional fees during the year.

What are the names and addresses and amounts paid to each of the recipients of such payments?

Questions

I asked for that information in the month of July, and the answer was that the group had the answer but would not give it, even if it was in the annual report of the Company of Young Canadians, until parliament asked the question. Surely, sir, a matter such as this, with regard to which the government is in possession of the fullest information, should not be the subject of a denial of the answer to this House of Commons. In this respect there should not be a delay for a very long period of time because, after all, those who occupy positions such as the head of the Company of Young Canadians cannot act as sawdust Caesars toward parliament and its requests.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am much obliged to the right hon, gentleman for having raised the matter of question No. 57. As the house knows, it is within the competence of members under the rules of this house only to address questions within the administrative responsibility of the government, and I am glad to have the opportunity of bringing to the attention of the house difficulties which have arisen with regard to both this question, to question No. 71 in the name of the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates), and question No. 155 in the name of the hon, member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid).

In relation to question No. 57, neither candidates for election to the House of Commons nor members of the house are required to declare a party affiliation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: Now we have heard it all.

Mr. Speaker: Could we have order, please.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Consequently there is no record—

Mr. Hees: Even your own members are laughing at you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether hon. gentlemen wish to hear the answer. Consequently there is no record under the administrative responsibility of the government of Canada from which an answer to this question—that is, No. 57—can be drawn.

Motions for Papers

In relation to question No. 155, since persons appointed to the Senate, the bench, federal government boards, commissions, agencies, etc., are not required to declare whether they have ever been candidates in federal elections, there is no record under the administrative responsibility of the government of Canada from which an answer to this question can be drawn.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In relation to question No. 71, part 2 of this question raises the same problem as does question No. 155. I am having prepared a reply to part 1 of question No. 71. My hope is that it will give most of the information sought by question No. 57, and I hope to be in a position to answer that on Monday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, while all of us will believe the hon. gentleman when he says he has no idea as to whether they were Liberal candidates of former members appointed, all I can say is that this is in accord with the abolition of patronage in advance of the announcement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau); but that does not apply to question No. 275. I do not think I have the answer of the house leader to that question. Certainly all these specious and implausible arguments he has advanced cannot apply to the delay in answering that question, even though it is going to be embarrassing to some of those who sit opposite.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has misconstrued my remarks with respect to question No. 57, as he will see when he examines the record tomorrow. With regard to question No. 275, I will take that up with my colleague.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with regard to the questions put on the order paper.

On September 12 last, I put the following question on the order paper and I quote:

1. During the past three years, which judges of the Superior, District and County Courts, as referred to in Section 96 of the BNA Act, have been appointed to extra-judicial functions, such as sitting on Royal Commissions, and advisory committees?

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it should have been possible to reply to that question earlier. I put that question on the order paper almost

In relation to question No. 155, since perons appointed to the Senate, the bench, fedral government boards, commissions, agences etc. are not required to declare whether

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions Nos. 8, 12, 17 and 26 are agreeable to the government, subject to the usual reservations with regard to confidential papers and authorization from government authorities concerned.

Would Your Honour be good enough to call notice of motion No. 18?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

CONSTRUCTION CLAIMS, GREAT SLAVE LAKE RAILWAY

Motion No. 26-Mr. Schreyer:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all documents and correspondence exchanged between any federal department or Crown corporation and Mr. McDonald, lawyer, of the City of Regina, relative to the claims against the C.N.R. made by any one of the construction firms engaged in the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway.

Motion agreed to.

JOINT DEVELOPMENT OF ROBERTS BANK Motion No. 18—Mr. Rose:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, memoranda and other communications received by any member of the administration and prepared by any person in the Public Service of Canada since January 1, 1967, relating to the joint Federal-Provincial development of the Roberts Bank Port in British Columbia, including any railways connected thereto.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Minister of Transport. I think the hon. member will appreciate that this motion relates to correspondance between public servants, who are advisers to the minister, and the government. This type of correspondence has always been claimed to be privileged and not to constitute a public document. For these reasons I wonder if the hon. member would be prepared to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): No, Mr. Speaker. If there is going to be any argument about this I prefer to have the motion transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Motion No. 18 is transferred for debate pursuant to standing order 47.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 24 was on today's list, and I was asked by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) to move it on his behalf.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the hon. member I wonder if it could be allowed to stand for another day so I might have an opportunity of discussing it with him.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?
Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—PREMIUM REDUCTIONS BY PROV-INCES RECEIVING FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the policy of the government that a province which is receiving a contribution from the federal government toward the cost of its medicare program ought to reduce any premiums charged by it, and thus pass along the federal contribution to the subscribers?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): It would be the sincere hope of this government, Mr. Speaker, that our contribution toward medicare would be reflected in a reduction of the premiums that are paid by Canadians for medicare rather than having the funds used for other purposes.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has any province which has entered into an agreement with the federal government been asked to undertake such a reduction in its premiums?

Mr. Benson: I do not believe we have the legal right, under the medicare act, to require the provinces to do this sort of thing. However, I would sincerely hope it is their desire to pass on this saving to their constituents.

Mr. Stanfield: Was there ever any request made or agreement or understanding reached in a federal-provincial conference between the provinces and the government of Canada that the provinces would reduce any premiums in this regard?

Mr. Benson: No, but we believe the provincial authorities will be honest and decent toward their own electors.

Mr. Stanfield: I simply want an answer to my question. I take it the answer is no. I have a further supplementary question. Is it the policy of the government of Canada to direct the provinces as to how they should or should not raise their revenues?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman obviously knows the answer to that question. The raising of revenues within a province is the responsibility of the province. However, we trust that in the case of medicare, when so much has been said about how much it is going to cost the people of Canada, constituents fairly in this matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanfield: My last supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is this. Does the Minister of Finance really consider he is in a position to judge whether a province is treating its people fairly?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The last question naturally is not in order.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CHANGE IN STATUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, and ask him whether he is in a position to inform the house about the plans he has made with regard to the function and place of the Atlantic Development Board.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, if the constitution and the role of the Atlantic Provinces Development Board are to be modified, this will be done when the bill to create the department is examined.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. In view of the general statement the minister is reported to have made last night in Halifax, I think, is the minister in a position to tell this house something I have asked him on previous occasions, namely what establishments he is setting up and what plans are in progress for dealing with regional disparity, so that members of this parliament may know what is in store in this field?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, that question is of such a general nature that it would be simpler, in my opinion, for me to send a copy of my speech to the hon. member for York South. He will then understand what it is all about.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary question. In view of the fact that the issue is obviously very important, and my reading of the minister's speech last night will not help members of this house to know what plans there are to deal with the basic problem of regional disparity, when will the minister be at least the provinces will treat their own in a position to tell parliament what his plans are?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as soon as we are in a position to introduce in the house a bill or legislation creating the new department, we will be able to state clearly what we intend to do.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house when that date will be; this year, next year or some time in the far future?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the answer depends in part on the members opposite; so, I cannot tell.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL AID TO INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Since both the president of the National Research Council and the President of the Treasury Board, who of course until recently was minister of industry, have recently stated publicly they feel Canada must greatly increase its volume of industrial research in order to remain a competitive industrial nation, does the government plan in the near future to inntroduce measures which will induce this necessary and very large increase in industrial research in Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows, of course, of the great help we are giving to industrial research in Canada at the moment through grants.

Mr. Hees: But, Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware that both the president of the National Research Council and his colleague the President of the Treasury Board have said in so many words that what we are presently doing is not nearly enough to induce this necessary increase in industrial research?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: I suggest that the minister should better inform himself.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

AIRPORTS

VAL D'OR, QUE.-INQUIRY AS TO OPENING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell us when the inauguration of the Val-d'Or airport is to take place?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

POSSIBLE REPLACEMENT BY YOUTHS DOING NATIONAL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State. In light of the kite flown by the minister concerning a new youth policy and the explicit omission from his remarks of a reference to the Company of Young Canadians, does the government propose to disband the Company of Young Canadians and to substitute for it what might be called youth conscript or culture conscripts?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the right honourable member has mainly noticed the omissions in that speech. I was obviously speaking of projects.

Now, I did not mention the Company of Young Canadians as it is not a project but an achievement.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received from the provisional council of the company the recommendation of a person to be appointed as permanent director?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that this proposal is to be conveyed officially to us today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—COMMUNICATIONS RESPECTING RELIEF SUPPLIES FOR BIAFRA

On the orders of the day:

Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my ques- head of government? I ask that because the tion to the Prime Minister. During the past several weeks were any communications sent by the government to the military government of Nigeria regarding relief supplies and the allegation that has been made that these relief supplies could not get through to Biafra because of the fact that there was no Nigerian government agreement. Have there been any such communications? Has the Canadian government directly communicated with Major General Yakubu Gowon and asked that relief should be permitted to get through? If there have been such communications, would the Prime Minister not feel it would be appropriate to file the various messages in this connection?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am somewhat confused by the question, Mr. Speaker. Obviously there have been many communications with the federal military government of Nigeria. The whole question of bringing relief to the suffering people of Nigeria has been discussed several times. As the hon. member knows, there is a Hercules aircraft in Lagos. As the hon. member knows, there is also one in Fernando Po. I might take this occasion, Mr. Speaker, to announce that I have just received word that this Hercules left Fernando Po at 18.15 hours local time with 20 tons of food bound for Biafra.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: As to further aspects of relief for the suffering people of Nigeria, Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure that I understand whether the hon, gentleman wants to inquire about something else.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, what I am trying to find out is whether in the past six weeks the government of Canada has sent any messages to the military government of Nigeria in regard to the question of Canadian relief being made available to those in need.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have perhaps not sent messages directly to General Gowon; we have sent a great many messages through our officials in Lagos, and our high commissioner or his officials have communicated with the federal government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would not the Prime Minister think anyone with "a bleeding heart", to use his expression, would send a Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince message directly to the general who is the Inquiries of the Ministry general.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I restate the question by way of a further supplementary. I have been trying to find out whether there is any correspondence, and the Prime Minister has not answered that yet. I want to know the answer and I ask this directly. Did he ever send a message to the head of that government?

Mr. Trudeau: The right hon, member may be surprised at the answer, Mr. Speaker, but it is yes; I did send a message.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When?

Mr. Trudeau: I generally took the position, Mr. Speaker, that General Gowon who is trying not only to govern his country but fight a civil war as well should not be put under an imposition by me as a result of too many messages. I believe our high commissioner and his officials in Lagos can communicate with fruitful results with the government there. I did not take the position, either, that my intervention would be of such import that it would shake the world or alter the results of the civil war. But at one point I did send a message directly to the general.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When was that? Will the Prime Minister say approximately when he sent that personal message? Will he table that message, because I have found that one can get immediate replies from that government.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thought the right hon, gentleman was rising to congratulate me for having done what he suggested should be done. As to the exact date and content of the message, I shall acquaint the house with these facts at some appropriate occasion, possibly during the debate on the report of the committee of parliament on this matter.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I congratulate the Prime Minister and the government even at this late stage for having finally taken the 20 tons of food into Biafran territory. I wish to ask whether the Prime Minister has received a communication from the [Mr. Diefenbaker.]

20 tons of food, which now appropriately are World Council of Churches of Geneva, in being sent, might have been made available which they forward a request that Canadian much sooner had a message been sent to the Hercules aircraft be made available for flights from Sao Tomé?

> Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I know of no such request. I will inquire, but I think I can tell the hon. member in advance that it has been the position of the Lagos government that they will authorize the use of Canadian military aircraft and personnel by the Red Cross, but they are not prepared to authorize that use by the churches. I realize that this somewhat contradicts the information the hon. member believed was obtained at New York. We have how received specific word from the government of Lagos that they have authorized flights by the Red Cross, and that they do not feel it necessary to authorize flights by the churches. As the hon, member no doubt knows, the churches are making flights without the authorization of Lagos.

> Mr. Brewin: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of privilege I might say that the information was not something I thought I heard. I heard Foreign Minister Arikpo clearly make the statement that flights by the churches in addition to those made by the Red Cross would be permissible if under the supervision of the International Red Cross. I wish to know whether the government has been in touch with the International Red Cross to see whether they will arrange to supervise the flight of Hercules planes taking food supplies from Sao Tomé, in order that the maximum amount of supplies might be flown into Biafra.

> Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the question of the maximum number of flights is determined by the possibilities of taking off and landing. My understanding is that the Red Cross has asked for one Hercules, and for not more than one.

> Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are the Prime Minister's officials or the Prime Minister making contact with officials of the Red Cross in Equatorial Guinea to determine whether it might not be more effective to use additional Hercules aircraft? Having seen part of the operation I understand that additional Hercules aircraft would be tremendously useful at this time in the relief operation.

> Mr. Trudeau: I have been discussing this with the Minister of National Defence. Our understanding is contrary to that of the hon.

member. The government of Equatorial Guinea feels that we have one Hercules too many there. They feel one Hercules is about all they can handle at this time.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand from the Prime Minister's answers that his government has made direct representations to the government of Nigeria in order to assist the Red Cross to obtain the necessary permission from the government of Nigeria?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is no question of our having made such representation. There is a Hercules in Lagos now; therefore we have nothing of this nature to discuss with the government of Lagos.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Red Cross is having difficulty obtaining this permission, and since the Prime Minister initially took the position that the government of Canada would not make representations directly to the government of Nigeria to help the Red Cross obtain this permission, is my understanding correct that the government of Canada since then has made direct representations to help the Red Cross obtain permission?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that understanding is not correct. I think the Leader of the Opposition is alluding to some questions that were asked about flights from Sao Tomé. With regard to flights by the Red Cross, representations for these had been going on for quite some time. We made such representations to the government of Lagos and we finally obtained an answer that they would accept use by the Red Cross of Canadian military personnel. That was clearly defined, but that was several weeks ago.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether other hon. members might not have an opportunity to ask questions. However, I recognize the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: I have one more supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since representations were made to assist the Red Cross obtain permission, would the Prime Minister not consider making representations in order that certain church groups might also obtain permission from the government of Nigeria?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did. This question was discussed with the Nigerian government and I gave their answer a few moments ago. They said they would authorize Canadian military personnel and aircraft under the authority of the Red Cross, but not under the authority of the churches.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES FROM CZECHOSLOVAKIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the deep concern held in all parts of this house for the welfare of the victims of the Nigerian civil war, and in view of the world wide praise for the Canadian program to aid Czech refugees, can the minister tell this house the number of refugees from the Czechoslovakian invasion who have been assisted by Canada to date, and the total amount expended on their behalf?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: What's the matter. Aren't hearts bleeding over there?

Mr. Perrault: I do not know the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Though the hon member is asking for very specific information, my impression is that he is asking for statistical information, the type of information normally obtained by putting questions on the order paper. If there is urgency the hon member knows he can give notice to the Chair.

An hon. Member: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: The question has not been accepted, so no supplementary can be asked.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING PATRONAGE IN OTTAWA AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Prime Minister with regard to the statements he made in Halifax. Will the right hon. gentleman outline the government's position in connection with a statement on television last evening in which the Minister of Justice referred to the Solicitor General as the senior member in matters of patronage in and around Ottawa?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): On a question of privilege, I referred to the Solicitor General only as the senior member of the government in the Ottawa area.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Just one word, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the ruling you have given with regard to answers to questions. I put my question to the Prime Minister as head of the government with regard to the statements he made in Halifax, and I would repeat—

Mr. Speaker: The hon, member has asked his question. If the Prime Minister would like to reply in the usual way—

Mr. Hees: Let's have something better than that.

Mr. Speaker: Before the Prime Minister answers, perhaps I should explain that the rule to which the hon. member has alluded is that a question referring to a statement made outside the house should be directed to the Prime Minister, as has been done, and should ask whether that statement represents government policy.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, having asked the question the hon. member should allow the Prime Minister to answer.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer was given by the Minister of Justice. He was misquoted by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. The reason I did not answer right away was that I suspected there might be a misquote coming from the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, and probably a question of privilege too, I suggest to the Prime Minister in all sincerity that whether he intended it or not, his words carried the imputation that the hon. member who asked the question was quite likely to have misquoted the Minister of Justice, and I suggest the Prime Minister might wish to correct that imputation.

Mr. Trudeau: No correction, Mr. Speaker, because there was no such imputation. I was [Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond).]

suggesting that the hon. member had misquoted my hon. friend and the facts, as stated by the minister, indicate that there has been a misquotation. When I said there probably had been one I was merely basing my opinion upon the statistical average of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether we will make much headway by pursuing this matter further.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a question of privilege, I think the Prime Minister himself has clearly indicated that he does not know what went on last night, and I quote him as having just said—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The Prime Minister, referring to last evening's program, used the word "probably". This is an indication that he did not himself hear the remark made by the Minister of Justice and could not therefore impute motives in connection with any question. When seeking a reply from the Prime Minister, it is not "the usual" we want; it is the facts we want, and if the backbenchers of the Liberal party wish to continue in an effort—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made his point. I recognize the rule is that no improper motives may be imputed, and I am sure hon. members on both sides recognize this rule and wish to abide by it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Further to the question of privilege, I would be perfectly willing to allow the matter to stand where it is if the Prime Minister would get up and say that he actually witnessed the program last night; or if not, withdraw his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): On this question of privilege—

An hon. Member: There's the expert.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): No, I am not an expert as some ignoramus across the way has suggested.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not the way in which the House of Commons should conduct its business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon, member would kindly state his question of privilege as quickly as possible I shall give a ruling on it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I agree with you, Mr. Speaker; this is not the way to run the house and you have your hands full when you have characters like that to contend with. Since this session began the hon. member for York South has had to straighten out this individual over there who is the leader of this country—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member would realize how far these things can go. I would ask the co-operation of all hon. members—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): All right, Mr. Speaker. On this question of imputations being made, the hon. member for York South on two occasions has directed the attention of the house—and it is the same today—to the fact that the Prime Minister was imputing motives to hon. members. This is not correct. Today he was imputing motives to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. The right hon. gentleman reached this chamber in the same way as the rest of us, and he has no more right to impute motives than I have, or than any other member has.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member for Provencher also has a question of privilege to raise.

Mr. Mark Smerchanski (Provencher): I hope this is a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It arises on the same basis. It has been said there has been a lack of humanitarian consideration by our present Canadian government. I feel I wish to congratulate most heartily the Minister of Manpower and Immigration—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It would probably be easier to rule on this question of privilege than on the previous one.

Inquiries of the Ministry HOUSING

HAMILTON, ONT.—HEARING OF BRIEFS BY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I just wish to contribute something constructive to this swinging question hour. I notice the Minister of Justice is here, and that earlier he was speaking on behalf of the Minister of Transport. I should therefore like to direct a question to him. Has the minister any indication now, or can he confirm the fact, that the task force will be visiting Hamilton, Ontario; and, if so, when?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Yes, I can. The task force on housing plans to visit the city of Hamilton some time in November. The reason the exact date is not yet set is that the Minister of Transport wishes to weigh the briefs from all interested parties, including one from the city of Hamilton. We will certainly advise the hon. member so he can be there.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Could the Minister of Justice, who answered on behalf of the Minister of Transport, tell us if the task force or the study group will again sit in Montreal to hear other representations on housing? Since the group was supposed to sit three days and stayed only one day, does the government intend to ask it to return to Montreal?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport will take note of the hon. member's representations.

GRAIN

SPECIAL PROVISION FOR DRYING OF SPECIALTY CROPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In his absence I should like to direct it to the Minister without Portfolio. Is the minister now prepared to give me an answer to the question I asked on October 24 with regard to giving priority to the moving of damp grain and more specifically flax and rapeseed, which will suffer severe loss if left out over the winter?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Yes, Mr. Speaker; the Canadian Wheat Board is giving priority to the moving of damp grain. This has been indicated several times before in Hansard. This does not apply to tough grain because of the quantity of damp grain which exists. There is a special quota in existence regarding the seeds to which the hon. member referred. These therefore are being given priority as well.

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—REMOVAL OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Transport but, since he is absent, I shall put it to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the representations made by the Chambers of Commerce and by several intermediate bodies, from the eastern townships in particular, as well as the statements made by the Quebec government concerning the abolition of tolls on the eastern townships speedway, does the government or the Minister of Transport intend to abolish tolls on the Champlain bridge, which leads to the eastern townships autoroute?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question asked by the hon, member could easily be put on the order paper.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBLE CLASSES, AMOUNT OF CAPITAL, INTEREST RATES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 29, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-110, to amend the Farm Credit Act—Mr. Olson—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on Tuesday, October 29, clause 6 of the bill with an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot was under consideration.

On clause 6—Agreement re loans to Indians on reserves.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last night we were discussing clause 6 which contains amendments to the Farm Credit Act to make provision for Indians who are farming on reserves to make use of the services provided by the Farm Credit Corporation.

[Mr. Gleave.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May we have a little order in the committee, please.

Mr. Olson: I think there may have been some misunderstanding about the provisions of the entire clause because certainly it was designed in such a way that it would make the services of the Farm Credit Corporation available to the Indians, to corporations on Indian reservations and indeed to a band in the same way as they are available to any other citizens of Canada. There may have been some misunderstanding about that.

Based on the representations that were made last night, particularly by the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo, I am prepared to consider an amendment that has just been brought in which would further clarify the provisions contained in that clause. I wonder, therefore, whether I might ask that clause 6 stand for a few moments while we give consideration to this matter. Then we could return to this clause and perhaps suggest an amendment which I could have one of my colleagues move.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree that clause 6 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Regulations respecting interest.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, on clause 8-

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Might we have a little order in the committee, please, so that we can hear the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will attempt to make myself heard. A particular point is at stake in respect of clause 8. I should like members of the committee to consider this very carefully. In clause 8 there is a change from the existing act. The expression "family farm corporation" is being changed to "farm corporation", or corporate farming. In essence the family farm is being replaced by corporate farming. This is a very grave amendment. I hope that every member of the committee will attempt to understand its full meaning and intent, because the minister assured us that in fact 51 per cent of the shareholders of a corporation would have to be actively engaged in the farming industry. Nowhere in the bill is there such a suggestion. In fact, in clause 11 there is an indication that as long as one single member of the corporation is in fact actively engaged in the may not have been drafted yet, but if he business of farming or has the intent to become engaged in the business of farming the corporation will qualify.

If we turn to page 12 where it says, "in the case of an individual who is a shareholder." we see that it goes on to say that a farming corporation may become eligible if it is borrowing money for a member of that corporation who is an active farmer or has the intent to become an active farmer. If the minister would assure us that there would be ample regulation to make it abundantly clear that a very small proportion of the corporation would be permitted to be non-farming, then I believe such a corporation would perhaps be permissible.

• (3:30 p.m.)

In respect of an earlier clause the minister went on to say that the whole reason for this was to take in junior members of a family. By definition it is well understood that that is the meaning of the term "farm family". It means those members of the family who are not of legal age, but a farm corporation or a corporate farm means something altogether different. It includes the whole gambit of our society. As one member mentioned yesterday, it could include a marketing association such as a shopping centre or a packing plant which wanted to borrow money to buy land. It could well include speculators who want to use Farm Credit Corporation money to buy up land adjacent to towns or cities or manufacturing plants. This would allow these people to make a profit through speculation because of the increased value of land. They would not have to make a success of farming. I think this clause creates a loophole, and whether or not the regulations will plug that loophole I am not in a position to say. We have not seen the regulations and they may not be made public for months.

Let me draw the minister's attention to the act as it was. I presume this same provision will be in effect in the new act after it is amended. It states that the corporation has the right to make regulations for carrying out the purposes and provisions of the act without restricting the generality of foregoing sections. It states that the corporation can define the expressions "economic farm unit", "single farming enterprise", and "co-operative farm association". If the minister can clearly define those past regulations perhaps it will make it easier for us. I do not suggest he should tell us what the new regulations are because they could clearly define an economic farm unit, a single farming enterprise and a co-operative farm association, as well as a family farm corporation, we might rest assured that the provisions will be narrow enough to prevent what we have in mind.

Unless we have more details as to the regulations I can only say that there is a great loophole created by these amendments which will allow huge corporate entities to build up and take advantage of lucrative markets. I refer to what has been called vertical integration. We may be creating a loophole which will allow enterprising businessmen to make a co-operating farmer a partner and buy his land through the Farm Credit Corporation. That farmer could then stay on the land without using it until the adjoining town or a business needed it. In that way there could be speculation through the use of Farm Credit Corporation money.

I am concerned about those two situations, and I should very much like the minister to give us the existing definitions in the regulations in respect of an economic farm unit, a co-operative farm association and so on. If the minister will do that, perhaps we might find ourselves in a position to pass this clause. I think it is dangerous to bring this clause in as it stands.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, to alleviate any concern as to whether or not the regulations under the Farm Credit Act will be drafted in such a way as to benefit other than bona fide farmers, let me suggest that it must be kept in mind that whenever in this act the term "farm corporation" is used, it means a farming corporation as defined by the regulations. The definition will require that the control of the operations of the corporation and the preponderance of its ownership must be held by individuals who are principally concerned with the operation of the farming corporation.

Mr. Horner: Is the minister now reading the regulations?

Mr. Olson: I will present the regulations later. The regulations under the new act are not available. The regulations are always written after an act is passed.

Mr. Horner: That is the weakest excuse possible. The minister knows that this act has been in existence since 1959. I was asking him about the old regulations.

Mr. Olson: I want to point out also that the arguments of the hon. gentleman are not valid if he claims that clause 8 will allow anyone who is not a bona fide farmer to use the credit facilities of the F.C.C. for speculative purposes. That is very clear in my mind, and I take that to be the concern of the hon. gentleman. Let me alleviate that concern in his mind.

These regulations are available to the hon. member and I will send him a copy of them if he wishes. The term "family farm corporation" under the old regulations of the act prior to amendment is defined as follows:

—means a corporation the principal object of which is the carrying on of an enterprise devoted to the production of agricultural products and at least 95 per cent of the shares of which are owned wholly by persons that are related to one another either through blood relationship, marriage or adoption with not less than 51 per cent of the shares owned by the actual operator or operators of the farm;

These definitions are rather long, but if the hon. gentleman wishes I will read them. I would prefer to send him copy so that he can read them. What is now contained in the definitions no doubt will be carried forward into the new ones. We have not found it necessary to define a single farm unit because that is fairly obvious. If a farm unit meets the qualifications of an economic unit and is owned by one individual there is no need to define it further.

Let me draw to my hon. friend's attention the fact that the amendment makes it possible for the corporation to make loans to farmers who have decided for their own purposes to incorporate their business. There are all kinds of good reasons for doing so. Surely the hon. member would not wish to deny farmers the right to obtain credit because they had incorporated. Surely he does not wish to be in the position of saying, do not incorporate because you will be denied the credit that other farmers can get. This is contradictory to the argument the hon. member made yesterday that there is an intrusion into the farming enterprise by corporate entities. What we are doing now is providing the facilities through which farmers can compete with this intrusion, to whatever extent that assertion is valid.

Mr. Horner: The minister has assumed something I did not imply. I should like him to give the definition in the old regulations of an economic farm unit. He had the regulations in his hand.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Olson: I have them right here. An economic farm unit means:

—an area of farm land that, together with such buildings, farm equipment and livestock as in the judgment of the corporation are necessary for the efficient use and exploitation of the land as a farming enterprise, will, under the operation of the applicant, produce revenue sufficient to

(i) pay the cost of operation and maintenance of the land, buildings and chattels,

(ii) provide a livelihood for the applicant, and(iii) pay to the corporation within the time agreed the amount of the loan made to the applicant;

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the discussion that has taken place and would like to ask the minister why this change has been made. The family farm corporation was a satisfactory arrangement under the Farm Credit Corporation and allowed for a very large expansion of the type of operation that I am sure every member who represents a rural area is pleased to see. I refer to the father-son relationship within the farm unit. In many cases this is a registered and becomes partnership company.

I would like to know why this new definition has been written into the bill. I am sure we are all in agreement with the hon, member for Crowfoot-the minister, I am sure, is also in agreement with him-that we do not want to provide another loophole for the vertical integration of agriculture. All farmers are well aware of the fact that when they are pushed to the wall they often find it very easy to obtain money from business people in the community in order to set up a corporation. In this situation the farmer or farmers set up a corporation on the basis of shares being made available and they operate the corporation. I am sure the minister is not kind interested in promoting this operation.

What was wrong with the family farm corporation which was a father-son operation and bore a blood relationship which I am sure the Farm Credit Corporation regulations will not disallow? Representations must have been received by the department to warrant this change. If this is the case, perhaps the minister would tell us what they were and the reasons for the change having been made in the bill.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the explanation is as follows: Under the old act it was defined as a family farm corporation, and recently a number of neighbouring farmers have, for the purposes of efficiency; the purchase of machinery and the co-operative use of all the requirements in connection with farming, if I may use that phrase, grouped themselves together in a co-operative, partnership or corporation. The name of the entity is not important. They have grouped themselves together, and if they had done that under the old definition of family farm corporation and these people were not blood relatives, of course they could not take advantage of the facilities credit of the Credit Farm Corporation.

It is my opinion that these people are doing a service to themselves and the country by being more efficient in these partnerships, cooperatives or corporations, and that we should therefore amend the act so that this kind of operation and arrangement can be recognized and thus use the facilities of the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was always of the opinion that co-operative farm associations could legally be formed by a number of farmers grouping together. I may be wrong but I understood that people like the Hutterites in certain areas and the Mennonites in other areas have done this in the past. A number of persons in different parts of the country have done the same thing. There is in my area a very large farm corporation that is registered as a co-op with two major shareholders. I thought we had provided under a section of the Farm Credit Corporation act the right to co-operative associations to set up a legal program to allow for this type of operation.

I do not know very much about corporate structure but I presume this provision has something to do with the tax structure. If it has, it may not be a bad thing. But I am still of the opinion that we should keep the family farm corporation, with its blood relationship, because most of the amalgamation of farm land today has been carried out by people with a blood relationship.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is right in what he is saying, but a farming corporation, or whatever expression is used, certainly does not exclude a family from being the shareholders or members of the corporation. As I said a few moments ago, the purpose of this amendment is to apply the word "corporation" to a small group of farmers, three or whatever number more, who have incorporated to set up a legal entity, so they will not be excluded from the provisions of the act.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a brief question. Do any of the definitions in this clause have any association with that part of the act which indicates that those who are intending to farm will be granted loans by the Farm Credit Corporation?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is yes, but in practice it is that they are about to begin farming immediately on getting the loan.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am very sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I did not hear the last part of the minister's answer.

Mr. Olson: The answer to the question is yes, there are provisions for an applicant who is about to begin farming, but in practice it is that they are about to begin farming as soon as they obtain the loan so that they are financially able to do so.

Mr. Nesbitt: I ask a further question, Mr. Chairman, for clarification. I thank the minister for his explanation. Does the minister intend to make any provision to ensure that those intending to take up farming through a corporation or as individuals shall have had previous experience in farming?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, there is a provision in the bill which requires that the field man ascertain to his satisfaction that such an applicant has had farming experience. I am advised that the provision is in clause 4. It can be found on page 3 of the bill at approximately line 23 and continuing therefrom. The provision is as follows:

(i) in the case of an individual, where in the opinion of the corporation the experience, ability and character of that individual are such as to warrant the belief that the farm to be mortgaged will be successfully operated—

Of course, experience is involved there.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have one further question in this regard. I realize it is rather difficult to say whether a corporation as such has had farming experience. Is it the minister's intention that the principal shareholders of a farm corporation shall have had this experience? Will there be any provision as to the percentage of the members of the corporation who shall have had farming experience? Will this provision apply to the directors of the corporation which is being set up in the business of farming, to just one director, or to the shareholders of the corporation? What is the minister's intention in this regard?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I should have read the next paragraph of clause 4. I ask the hon. member to look at it. I quote from where I finished reading a moment ago:

(ii) in the case of a farming corporation or a co-operative farm association, where in the opinion of the corporation the experience, ability and character of those shareholders or members who are principally occupied in the farming operations of the corporation or association, as the case may be, are such as to warrant the belief that the farm to be mortgaged will be successfully operated;

• (3:50 p.m.)

I would also refer the hon. gentleman to the definition of farmer in clause 1, where I think it spells out fairly clearly that the F.C.C. will not only have the right but the duty to examine these characteristics of the individuals involved in a corporation. It is quite obvious that we cannot assess whether a corporation is going to be a good farmer. It is the individuals who are going to be farmers, with the experience and capabilities necessary to operate a farm.

Mr. Nesbitt: I thank the minister for giving a very complete answer to the question. It is a good thing to have these answers on the record. Sometimes it may prevent future arguments between officials of the corporation and those who make representations on behalf of farmers.

Mr. Gleave: I may be a little slow to catch this, but under the regulations to date we could be assured that when a loan was made to an individual to form a corporation, or to two individuals, those people were actually farmers. It was the policy of the Farm Credit Corporation to insist that they be farmers.

Mr. Olson: I can assure my hon. friend that that policy will be maintained, but I point out that the provision did not stipulate full 100 per cent income from farming but mentioned farming as the principal occupation. The collective judgment of the corporation in these cases has been based on a definition of something substantially higher than a simple majority.

[Translation]

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 8 which defines the terms "economic farm unit", "single farming enterprise" "cooperative farm association" and "farming corporation", I should like to ask the minister whether, as in the past, there will be conflict between federal and provincial loans to agricultural organizations. In many cases, for instance, we are told that the Quebec Farm Credit Bureau objects to loans being made by Ottawa. I have seen proof of that in my own riding.

Is there, at the present time, conflict between the legislation proposed to the house and that in effect in the province of Quebec for, unless I am mistaken, the province of Quebec alone has a Farm Credit Bureau, contrary to the other Canadian provinces. Is the government introducing this bill to help only the economic farm units in provinces other than Quebec, or in those of Quebec as well?

Will the agricultural units or corporations back home be able to obtain loans from the federal government as easily as western farmers. As I understand it, the legislation proposes to help farmers and farm associations in western Canada, namely in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba? Will possibilities be as good for the eastern farmers as they have been in the past. Will they continue to be in the future under the terms of this bill?

Mr. Chairman, the member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) is constantly rising to fight for the interests of the Alberta farmers. We know that. Others speak for the interests of Saskatchewan and Manitoba farmers.

I want to point out we do not oppose government aid to all farming associations and corporations or co-operatives out west. Still, we will fight with tooth and nail so that the eastern farmers, our agricultural societies such as C.F.U. and the co-operatives, it matters little, get the same benefits from this bill, from these loans, as the western farmers.

[English]

Mr. Olson: I wish to advise my hon. friend from Témiscamingue that the F.C.C. has more staff in the province of Quebec than in any other province, and that all the services are offered in Quebec in the same way and under the same rules and regulations as they are offered any place else in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, that is not an answer. Everyone knows that the minister has a large staff in the province of Quebec. However, the minister is aware of the fact that there are fewer loans made to agricultural organizations in Quebec than in western Canada. Even if there are more bureaucrats in the province of Quebec, that has nothing to do with milking cows or farming. What we want to know is whether there will be more easily obtained federal loans than in the past.

[English]

Mr. Olson: In my opinion there are two explanations. One is that in Quebec in addition to the F.C.C. there is a fairly active provincial agency which makes loans. In many of the other provinces there are no provincial agencies which make credit available to farmers. The other important point is that in some other provinces the agricultural sector is a major part of their whole economic structure, more so than in Quebec. I think it would be fair to say that in Saskatchewan agriculture makes up a higher percentage of the total provincial economy than does agriculture in Quebec.

Mr. Ritchie: I would like to point out that in making loans the experience and ability of an individual are taken into consideration. I think that is good, but with the advent of the family corporation consisting of father and son injustices may occur. I realize that the corporation's field men must necessarily cover their bets or percentage losses as best they can, but I submit that a father and son corporation, where the father is in his fifties and is well established in farming, will have a substantial advantage over a young farmer who may not be too well known in the neighbouring district and who may not have as much capital as his family counterpart.

Whenever land is offered for sale in my riding numerous people bid for it. I would like the minister to tell me how the corporation's field men will not discriminate against young farmers in these cases. Other than giving instructions to field men, what can be done to prevent the business of agriculture from losing young farmers who would eventually be successful but who at present are not well known to the field men?

Mr. Olson: I do not know if I can explicitly express how the field men are going to achieve what the hon, member has requested. but I would point out that in these amendments we are increasing the amount available from the F.C.C. to young farmers from 75 per cent of the assessed value of a farm unit to 90 per cent. I think that is a major step toward meeting the request that the hon. member has made.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: If I understand the minister correctly the reason for changing the words to play in the agricultural industry. After all, "family farm corporation" to "farming corporation" is that in clause 1 the word "person" has been changed to "individual". Under the type of farm. Therefore I sincerely urge the act as it now stands a farmer means a person whose principal occupation is farming. A person is a legal entity and could well include a corporation. If one were to read the definition the other way, a farmer would mean a corporation whose principal occupation was farming. In considering clause 8, the minister assured us that 51 per cent of the shares would be held by persons actively participating in farming. He went on to suggest that in the regulations the percentage would be much higher than that and would be nearly all of them. Why hide behind the regulations so far as the family farm is concerned? He suggested that in so far as the family farm was concerned 95 per cent of the shares must belong to blood relations. Could the minister give us some assurance that perhaps 95 per cent of the shares of these corporations must belong to members of the corporation who are actively engaged in the business of farming?

It is all well and good not to disclose the interest rate and to say that is has to be set later. We did not approve of this idea. Surely this problem is not nearly as touchy. Surely the minister can give us the percentage. Will it be 90 per cent, 95 per cent, 75 per cent or will it drop back to 51 per cent? I do not believe we are being overly inquisitive in attempting to elicit this information. I think it is only fair that the minister should try to enlighten the committee as much as possible during the passage of this bill. By so doing he will also enlighten the Canadian public as to the exact percentage of shares that would have to be owned by actual farmers in a farm corporation.

I have one other suggestion to make to the minister and I would like his comments upon it. I am not particularly eager to move another amendment. I am pleased to learn that the minister is giving some consideration to the amendment I moved last evening. We were pleased to allow clause 6 to stand in order that such consideration might be given. Could the minister not have added the words "family farm corporation" in this clause when he was making these changes? In other words, do not strike out the family farm but leave it in and add "farming corporation" if he so desires. Do not discriminate against the mainstay of agriculture in the past.

I believe the family farm will have a part it is only through the co-operation of the whole family that a success is made of this the minister would not leave "family farm corporation" in the clause and include "farm corporation" if he desires. I do not want to move an amendment but somebody on the government side could. It bothers me a little to have the family farm stricken from the clause. The minister believes in the farm corporation.

Mr. Olson: The answer is so simple I am sure it is obvious to the hon. member. Family farm corporations are included in farm corporations. It would be redundant to add those words. If it is a farm corporation or a family farm corporation, it is right in there.

Mr. Horner: It may well be in there and it may not. There may be a difference in the total number of shareholders permissible for a family farm corporation. Far be it for me to say that the bill is so well or carefully drafted that it can do without two extra words in it. It cannot be said that these two words are not absolutely needed. We may have to have three extra words so that the provision would read, and/or a family farm. I am sure the minister would find there was a difference in the regulations between the number of shares that would have to be held by blood relations for a family farm corporation and the shareholders of a corporate farm. I say to the minister that while they may be the same they are not necessarily the same. In order to encourage the continued existence of the family farm, I sincerely urge the minister and his associates to include those words-and a family farm.

I cannot emphasize this point too much. If the minister believes that the family farm has been the mainstay of the agricultural industry in the past and will continue to be in the future, I am sure he will accede to my request. If he does not believe in the family farm, if he wants to treat the family farm the same as the corporate farm, then let him strike out those words. I really do not believe he wants to do that. I really do not believe the members of this committee want to do that.

I am not moving an amendment at this time but I am pleading with him to add these words to cover the family farm. The amendment would be simple and could go through within three minutes. This is a very important point. No politician who has ever cam-[Mr. Horner.]

minister to consider the recommendation I one end of the country to the other was ever am making. As I have said, I am not eager to elected by disregarding the family farm. The move another amendment. I cannot see why minister knows it. He can say that these words would be redundant, that "farming corporation" includes a family farm. It may, but not necessarily. I urge the minister, therefore, to quickly draft an amendment to include these words. I do not want to move an amendment because when an amendment comes from this side of the house all the backbenchers on the other side seem to think they have to vote against it. All the members on that side of the house seem to believe that all the brains are on that side. I do not want to place the family farm in jeopardy. I do not want the credit for moving the amendment, I want the family farm to be covered by this bill. This is all I want. I urge the minister to have one of his boys quickly prepare an amendment so that the family farm will be preserved.

> Mr. Olson: The position the hon. member for Crowfoot is taking now, Mr. Chairman, I think was well expressed by the minister when we were dealing with clause 1. Clause 1 asserts that a farm corporation will be defined by regulation. We intend to put in the regulation a definition of the various kinds of corporations. I thought that was already clear to the hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Just on that point-

Mr. Olson: Wait until I make this explanation which apparently the hon. gentleman missed. The definition will make a distinction between shareholders who are related and those who are not in so far as share distribution is concerned. Indeed, the definition of the family farm corporation that is in the regulations now very likely will be carried into the new regulations.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: I do not want to belabour this point, Mr. Chairman. I remember debating this question earlier, and since I realized that was not the time to move an amendment to this clause I waited, as the rules provide I should, until clause 8 came under discussion. I then broached the subject. The minister may scold me, if he pleases, for not remembering what took place before, but I do remember the debate and the explanation given by the minister at the time.

We are now on clause 8 and I am making a paigned in the rural parts of Canada from final plea. The minister has said there will be definitions in the regulations which will distinguish between a family farm and a corporate farm. However, there is no provision in the act that the regulations will be changed. The act provides that the corporation may make definitions in regard to an economic farm unit, a single farming enterprise, a cooperative farm association and a farming corporation, but it does not say that there shall be a definition which will specifically spell out what is a family farm.

The minister says that certainly there will be a distinction made in the regulations. If he were to include in this clause, in addition to "farming corporation", the expression "a family farm", then a definition would have to be made in the regulations of both types of operations or both types of corporation, if I may put it in that way. Why does the minister not make this definition statutory and insert it in the act? I cannot understand his reluctance on this point. All he has to do is insert three words in the bill.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would help the hon. gentleman to understand the position if I were to tell him that we see no purpose in inserting redundant words in an act. I would also draw to his attention that clause 1, which has already been passed by the committee, provides very clearly that a farming corporation will be defined by regulation. What the committee accepted when it passed that clause was the amendment of the former clause which provided:

"farmer" means a person whose principal occupation is farming, and, for the purposes of Part II, includes a co-operative farm association and a family farming corporation as defined by regulation;

So the act originally provided that a family farm corporation would be defined by regulation. We are now deleting the word "family" for reasons that I have explained a number of times, and all of which I find valid.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I find it hard to understand the minister's reluctance to make this simple adjustment that would please everyone in the house and would be a very good thing for the minister to do.

I remember that last year in the house reference was made to a famous occasion in the fall of 1950. I remember that occasion very well because I had been elected to the house a few months before. Parliament had been called to deal with a railway strike. Mr. St. Laurent, the prime minister of the day, presented a bill which needed a simple adjustment but one which the opposition asked the prime minister to make so that there would be no misunderstanding. The prime minister agreed to this and promised that it would be done when the regulations were promulgated. Later it turned out that the prime minister's promise was not carried out, that it had no bearing whatever on the legislation, and the regulation was never passed.

Therefore, because of the importance of family farms to those who rely on them for their livelihood, and in view of the reasonableness of the request that has been made by the hon. member for Crowfoot, I would urge the minister to be reasonable. If he intends to make this change by regulation, then I would ask him to have the bigness and the generosity to make a slight change in the bill now so that there can be no doubt about it in the future.

Mr. Olson: The only reason for not doing so, as I hope hon. gentlemen opposite can understand, is that we would have to go through the entire bill and include those words because they appear nowhere else. Clause 8 relates to other clauses and to phrases that are used throughout the bill. Therefore there will be definitions of these words in the bill and in the regulations.

Clause 1, which the committee has already passed, provides that the government has the right to define a farming corporation. I have already given an undertaking that the distinction between shareholders of such a corporation who are related and those who are not will be made in the regulations. It is not a question of resisting something here; it is just that we want all of the words in the bill to make sense.

I do not want to repeat the reasons for changing the wording so that corporations that are composed not necessarily of blood relatives can be recognized by the F.C.C. This is why we have used the term "farming corporation" rather than excluding all but a family corporation. I think all of the reasons I have given are valid. Putting in one or two words does not worry me that much, but surely they should be useful words. Everything for which hon, gentlemen opposite have asked is already provided for in the bill and will be provided for by regulation. I have already given an undertaking to that effect.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, without arguing further on the subject, because I do want to get the bill through today, I move:

That on page 6, line 28, after the word "corporation" the following be added:

"and family farm".

corporation' and 'family farm' for the purposes of this act".

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, the reason I intervene is that I think this amendment must be made to the bill. It is not good enough to rely on the promises or wishes of a person when it comes to a question of interpreting laws. When you get down to the clinches the officials always interpret the words the way they want. Many times the will of parliament has been frustrated simply because, having passed a certain act, we did not tee up the regulations properly and the officials who interpreted the act completely discarded our reasoning.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, might I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Bigg: Yes.

Mr. Olson: What useful purpose would there be in authorizing us to make regulations to define a word that does not exist in the bill?

Mr. Bigg: I am explaining that now. What I am worried about is not so much the interpretation of words but that the money goes to the right people. In order to dot the last "i" of the bill and so that nobody will have any doubt about what we mean, I do not think it would be redundant to include the words "family farm". Stupid officials-and they do exist—could interpret the act to frustrate the will of parliament.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[Mr. Horner.]

When the government says, "You can trust us to look after the family farm" I want to know why the family farm is being written off. My statement is not based on guesses. I have been told this in clear words. I know this government does not intend to encourage the operation of inefficient units. If the family or corporate farm is not inefficient, why is it necessary to make money available in this manner? Despite the government's statements that inefficient units must be made more efficient and that we must lend inefficient units money, which may or may not be a subsidy, why is the agricultural industry in such dire circumstances today? I will tell you, Mr. Chairman. It is as the result of this government's policy.

The corporate farmers are not in trouble, but many thousands of small farmers are in and I know that. The large prairie farmers and the large dairy farmers are not in trouble

The sentence would then read "... farming trouble. I want to hear an assurance that small family farmers will be assisted as well as young boys who are just beginning to > Frankly, I do not trust any government that has gone so far in destroying our family farms. It is necessary for the government to instruct those who draft laws and regulations that at all costs the family farm is to be preserved. There is already on the statute books legislation covering acreage payments. That is of help to the small farmer. Agriculture would be stabilized if the government would implement a longstanding promise of all governments in Canada and introduce a two price system for grain. The government ought to look again at dairy policy and at the policy affecting mixed farms. If I can be assured that the young farmer who is just beginning to farm and the homesteader are to be helped under this legislation, I shall resume my seat and congratulate the minister. Unfortunately there are no indications that this will happen. I have letters on my desk from small farmers who are worried because they do not think they can survive until next seeding time. They are worried about the future for themselves and for their families.

> Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I am not worried so much by the phrasing of this particular clause as I am by the general tone and intention of the bill. Perhaps I might be permitted to read part of a script used by the Prime Minister in Winnipeg on June 6, 1968. Paragraph 3 reads:

> The government proposes to amend the farm credit legislation to provide for broadened applicability and to stimulate the entry into the industry of younger people. These amendments would provide increased coverage for farmers desirous of acting in partnership, would improve the ability of farmers to enter into agreements with their sons, and would facilitate the entry into farm ownership of young farmers who have demonstrated superior managerial ability. Action would also be taken to expand the activities of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act to provide for machinery Syndicates Credit Act to provide for loans on permanent installations, housing, specialized equipment for the joint use of several farmers, and for allied purposes. The provisions of the farm improvement loans would be expanded, and the operations of this act integrated with those of the Farm Credit Corporation.

> In that statement on farm credit there is no mention of any intention to encourage the expansion of corporate farms. Yet it seems that the main emphasis in this bill is on the corporate farm. There is no emphasis, it seems to me, on help being given to the younger farmer. In fact, the Ottawa Journal on September 14, 1968, forecast-

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, Mr. Chair- cent by a farmer whose principal occupaman, the only question before the committee tion is farming, and to the extent of 20 per is the amendment moved to clause 8. The cent by a son who may do enough to keep the amendment seeks to authorize the government to define the words "family farm". We not farming but something else. Can the have been all over the ground the hon. member is talking about dozens of times. I wonder whether we could address ourselves to the question before the committee.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I think the mover of the amendment wanted to introduce into this bill some of the sentiments expressed in the document from which I have just read. If you call me to order, sir, I will not proceed with my remarks. If you allow me to proceed, then I will.

The Deputy Chairman: I will ask the hon. member to proceed.

Mr. Gleave: Thank you. I was about to say that the Ottawa Journal forecast an interest rate of between 71 and 8 per cent. I should like to know how such an interest rate will assist the younger farmer. We should not remove from this bill a protection farmers have enjoyed, namely, guaranteed interest rates on certain loans. I doubt that we on this side of the house will support the bill unless that protection is retained. I ask, what is the good of the farm management service that is proposed here if the farmer's protection is removed? Without doubt that service could be of real assistance to farmers if the protection with regard to interest rates were retained.

Judging from the farm bills brought before the house the government's lending program is not at all integrated. In light of the government's apparent farm credit policy I submit it will not be integrated and will only add to the difficulties of family farmers who are already faced with grave difficulties. The government asks us to accept its farm credit program. Though the amendment may help matters I submit that if the government removes the protection which farmers have enjoyed it may be difficult in the future to put right the harm that may be done.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to address a question to the minister instead of making a speech. It arises out of some distinction in my mind between the definition in clause 1 and the reference in the clause we are now considering. In part of the constituency I represent it is possible for a farm to be owned to the extent of say 80 per farm up to date but whose main occupation is minister say whether in these circumstances such a farm family would qualify for 100 per cent benefit under this act or whether the borrowing would be restricted to 80 per cent because the principal occupation of the minor shareholder was not farming? I would appreciate an answer. This is a serious question and I have not taken up much of the committee's time.

Mr. Olson: I am not sure of the purport of the question. If I understood the hon, member correctly he asked whether or not an 80 per cent figure could be used if a young farmer, under the age mentioned in the bill, were a minority shareholder. Is that correct?

Mr. McCleave: Yes.

Mr. Olson: Well, if the principal occupation of the minority shareholder is farming the upper limit would apply.

Mr. McCleave: Suppose the young farmer is able to help his father for only part of the time and his principal occupation is something other than farming, does this restrict the amount which can be borrowed under the legislation?

Mr. Olson: Yes, it would, because we require that the principal occupation of those concerned be farming.

Amendment (Mr. Horner) negatived: Yeas, 34; nays, 76.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Olson: I wonder whether we could revert to clause 6. I should like to move an amendment.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we revert to clause 6?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 6—Agreement re loans to Indians on reserves.

Mr. Olson: In accordance with the arguments I put forward last night and today when I asked that clause 6 be allowed to stand, I should like my colleague, the President of the Privy Council, to move:

That subsection (1) of section 17A of Bill C-110, An Act to amend the Farm Credit Act, be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "17A. (1) With the approval of the Governor in Council, the Corporation may enter into an agreement with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the purpose of enabling loans to be made under this Act to farmers who are Indians on reserves, to farming corporations and co-operative farm associations the shareholders or members of which are Indians on reserves and to bands engaged in farming operations on reserves.'

This does not change the meaning greatly, but the amendment does make it quite clear that for the purposes of the act corporations of Indians who are farmers on reserves, cooperatives, farming associations whose shareholders are Indians on reserves, and Indian bands are included among those qualified to apply for loans under the legislation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I so move, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, there is already an amendment before the committee and I doubt very much that another amendment can be moved now. We do not intend to take advantage of the situation but I suggest that the committee might proceed to further clauses in order to permit my hon. friend from Crowfoot to consider whether or not he would be justified in withdrawing his amendment.

Mr. Olson: If the hon. member for Peace River would look at page 4, line 29, he would see that after the word "reserves" is added the phrase "and to bands engaged in farming operations on reserves". The amendment simply amplifies and explains.

Mr. Baldwin: I am not objecting to that. But the fact is there is already one amendment to clause 6 before the committee.

Mr. Olson: That amendment was lost.

Mr. Baldwin: I understand my hon. friend moved an amendment to clause 6-

Mr. Horner: Yes, that is so. No matter how sound the minister's amendment may be, it is out of order. If he wished he could move a subamendment to the amendment in my name to clause 6 now before the committee, but he cannot move a further amendment until the first is disposed of.

yours first.

[Mr. Olson.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. There is already an amendment before the committee. If it is the intention of the hon. member for Crowfoot to withdraw it-

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: I wish to facilitate the work of the committee to the best of my ability, Mr. Chairman, but before I withdraw my amendment I should like the minister to explain to me the purpose of clause 6. Subclause 4 refers to the total amount of loans. Note that the plural form is used. We are dealing with more than one loan. We are talking about the total amount of loans outstanding that may be made to any one band under this legislation. It says "under this act", not under any other clause of this act or under clause 6, the amount shall not exceed $100,000. This is what I should like to have a definition of. If it does not mean what it says or if I am reading something into it that is not there, I wish the minister would explain it. It refers to the total amount of loans to any one band. It does not say that the loans are made singly to one band. As I interpret it it says that the total amount of loans within one band shall not exceed $100,000. If it does not mean the total amount of loans within the band then I believe this should be clarified. The way I read it it says under this act and not under any particular clause. I am very anxious to get this bill through tonight and therefore I do not wish to belabour this point. If the minister can explain how I am misreading this then I might be prepared to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. Olson: The reason subclause 4 is there and the reason the expression "Indian bands" is used in the other clauses is so that the band itself, whether large or small, can in the name or identity of the band itself borrow up to $100,000. This gives them the same rights as any other corporation. Because there is some question concerning whether a band could be considered to be a corporation, cooperative, partnership, and so on, we have included in section 17A (1) of clause 6 and in two or three other places the provision that the band, as a legal entity, can in fact borrow as much as any other corporation. Clause 4 simply says that the upper maximum of $100,000 will apply also to a band. I repeat again that in addition to the funds that could be lent to a band as an entity-

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Mr. Olson: Very well, we will deal with Chairman, we are dealing with the first amendment.

Mr. Olson: Do you not want an explanation of why clause 4 is there and what it means?

Mr. Horner: Yes, but do not bother to read your amendment.

Mr. Olson: There was some misunderstanding by the hon, member for Kamloops-Cariboo about whether or not clause 4 limited to $100,000 that could be lent to the entire band. It certainly does not. I do not know how many, but there could be five, ten or 20 partnerships, corporations or co-operatives, or indeed individuals, within the same band. That clause is there simply to provide that the money is to be lent to the band in the name of the band. It is necessary that it be there because it is not clear yet whether a band itself could be considered to be a corporation, co-operative or partnership. That is the reason it was included.

Mr. Gleave: Why limit the amount to $100,-000? There are reserves of various sizes. In my constituency I have two reserves. One is large and the people there are fairly well advanced in farming operations. The other is small and the people there are not advanced in farming operations. I cannot understand why it is limited to an amount of $100,000. There might be a reserve which would need $500,000 for its development.

Mr. Olson: If there were a number of individual farmers on that reservation who made application for an aggregate $500,000 and if that was approved by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, they could be granted $500,000 in total.

Mr. Gleave: I think that is questionable.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support the amendment to subsection 4 of new section 17A. I do so because of what the minister said at the commencement of the debate. He said that the intention of the government is that our Indian citizens will be placed in exactly the same position as other Canadians who are engaged in the farming industry in Canada. If this is the intent of the minister and the government, I submit that under the terms of the clause as it now stands we are not achieving the desired objective.

I believe the government is in trouble with our Indian friends, first, because of its reputation as expressed by the saying that the white man speaks with forked tongue, second, because of our tendency to treat our redundant. It does not have to be there first citizens as second class citizens and, because subsections 1 and 5 specifically spell support the amendment put forward by the hon, member for Crowfoot because I think the clause speaks with a forked tongue, if I may use that expression.

I cannot refer to the amendment put forward by the minister, but he speaks of corporations and co-operatives. The fact is that on most reservations there are very few co-operatives. The co-operative movement is just beginning on reservations. There are very few corporations. The band council is the main agency for transacting business on the reservation. So in actual fact the $100,000 would be the maximum limit. I believe that if the committee and the minister would approve of this amendment we would be able to get over this obstacle and no ceiling would be placed on the activities of the band council in this regard. If it is the desire of the minister to place the Indian bands on the same basis as other farmers in Canada, this is one simple way to carry out that objective.

Mr. Olson: If the hon. member, who has had long experience in this connection, would read the bill carefully and particularly clause 6 he would find that it puts Indian farmers on exactly the same basis as every other farmer in this country. This is spelled out in great detail. Even if a co-operative should have 1,000 members who are other than Indians it could not get more than $100,000 from the corporation. That is clear. We are applying the regulations to Indians as individuals, as partnerships and as corporations exactly the same as everyone else in this country.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, on this point the minister has suggested that in fact this clause means all loans made by one band and not all loans within one band. This, in essence, is what he is saying. Therefore I suggest that this clause is redundant because subsection (1) says:

-farmers who are Indians on reserves and to bands engaged in farming operations on reserves.

It says "and to bands". Let us look at subsection 5 where it says:

The provisions of this Act, in so far as practicable, shall apply to all loans made or to be made to farmers and bands referred to in subsection (1)—

If we interpret subsection 5, which is difficult to interpret, in the way the minister interprets it, namely, that it is not all loans made within one band but loans made to one single band as a legal entity, then the clause is finally, because of the lack of consultation. I out that bands can borrow money. In answer to a question put by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, the minister said that after consultation with the department of Indian affairs and Indian band may well be able to borrow $500,000. I should like to read my amendment again for the benefit of members of the committee. It is:

That all the words after "shall" in line 3, page 5, paragraph (4) be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "be determined by agreement between the corporation and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, with the approval of the governor in council.

I should have added the words "and consultation with the band concerned". I will not delay the house by suggesting a subamendment to my own amendment, but in hurriedly drafting the amendment I left out those words.

I hope hon. members paid close attention to the minister's answer to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. He suggested that if a band came to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development it could obtain loans of $500,000. All I am suggesting is that we should not place a ceiling on one band. If we interpret this clause the way the minister wants us to interpret it we will not have one band forming an association. This is difficult to envisage.

The band on the reservation in my constituency would like to take over the farming of their own land. They have section after section of the very best land in south central Alberta. In order to give hon. members some idea of what I am talking about let me tell them that the crop on this reservation amounts to approximately 250,000 bushels, or about one-sixth of what the white man produces. These people have reached the stage where they want to become the farmers and farm this land as an Indian band.

The minister suggests there is a $100,000 limit and that this applies to the land owned or occupied by an Indian band. By adopting this provision we will be breaking up these Indian bands into four or five little co-operatives. They will have to do so in order to borrow $100,000 each. What are we trying to do, split them up and get them squabbling among themselves? There is no real purpose to this clause. It will force these Indian bands to divide and form small co-operatives. There will be one co-operative operating one section of land, another on another section of land and still another on another section. As one hon: member suggested, the minister is talking with a forked tongue. Whether he is doing that or not, he is talking with very little knowledge of how these Indian band would like to operate.

I urge the minister and the hon, member for Kamloops-Cariboo to support my amendment. I know full well that he is aware of the situation to which I refer. I do not have to converse with him about this problem and I know that he is in agreement with what I have said. This provision will drive these Indian bands to form five, six or seven different co-operatives in order to obtain $500,000 for each legal entity. All I am suggesting by the amendment is that we should not put a ceiling on the amount.

When you consider the ten sections occupied by the Blackfoot Indian band you must realize that $100,000 is not enough to buy the equipment to farm that area. That Indian band has no equipment at all at this time. Surely we do not want them to divide in order to take advantage of some white man's stupid regulation. That is just about the Indian will think about it. This is just more red tape created by government bureaucracy. Surely the minister can understand that.

It is my hope that the minister can accept my amendment which merely suggests that the amount of money allowable to an Indian band should be determined by agreement between the corporation, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Indian band. This is not an impossible request. I sincerely hope it will be accepted.

I shall not delay the committee any longer, but I hope the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo and the Minister of Agriculture will realize that this is a reasonable thing. I am sure they will both understand that if they vote against this amendment they will force these Indian bands to divide in order to take advantage of this provision. They will then understand that I was right in my suggestion. A measure with a limitation of this kind is not good in principle.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on clause 6 and the amendment thereto. I certainly think all hon. members will recognize this provision as a belated but welcome move. I can only consider for my own part that the government is trying to make a genuine move in response to considerable pressure for programs to enable Indians to improve their economic condition. There is no question that such measures are required to reduce the social and economic waste evident today in many parts of Canada on Indian reserves and among the Indian population.

Having said that, I want to note that it is regrettable it should be necessary to have a special clause in the act to enable its extension to Indian people on Indian reserves. It seems to me that the necessity for such a clause is one further example of the elements of segregation which are still present in our laws dealing with this group of people. I am fully aware that this general problem does not come under the specific purview of the Minister of Agriculture. However, I hope he will keep in mind the day when it will be possible to remove this special clause without in any way inhibiting the extension of Farm Credit Act facilities to people of Indian origin.

Assuming that legislative sanction is needed to deal with this matter, and I am not completely certain yet of the necessity for legislative action, I must say that the clause presented was inadequately conceived, inadequately thought out and inadequately drafted.

The first and major inadequacy is in respect of the role of the Indian person. In what respect does the Indian have any say in running his own affairs, as this clause is proposed? The scope of the agreement called for in subclause 1 between the corporation and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development-

The Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think there may be a general disposition in the house to waive private members' hour for this afternoon on the understanding, of course, that it will not be lost to private members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that private members' hour be suspended this afternoon?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBLE CLASSES, AMOUNT OF CAPITAL, INTEREST RATES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in com-

Credit Act-Mr. Olson-Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

On clause 6-Agreement re loans to Indians on reserves.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, the scope of the agreement called for in subsection 1 between the corporation and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is not clear, and I would like to have some further explanation from the minister. For instance, I would like to know whether the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will have complete control over the Indian person's affairs. Will the Indian person have any say in running his own affairs, or will this agreement result in one more extension of the department's powers over the affairs of the individual? Will the Indian person or group have to go through the usual bureaucratic red tape in dealing with the applica-

I have known of many cases where authorizations have been delayed until they were of no value to the persons applying for them. I can give one example that I saw during the past summer. This was an application by a farmer who lives just outside the reserve involved for authorization to purchase seed grain. The authority to purchase the seed grain was received by the Indian farmer after it was too late to use the seed in that season. Will the Indian agent or superintendent have effective control? Will everything have to go through him? Will the Indian person or group have any direct contact with the corporation?

Moving on to subsection 3, I point out that this subsection removes the necessity for a mortgage on the lands involved as security. I can understand that some provision would be necessary in this respect because of the present legislative provisions with regard to the status of Indian lands. Presumably this is one point that will be dealt with under the agreement mentioned in subsection 1. Possibly the agreement will provide for some related measure. But if subsection 3 waives the necessity for a mortgage, it raises still further questions as to the necessity for a special agreement between the corporation and the minister as set out in subsection 1.

Subsection 4 has already been discussed quite thoroughly with respect to the $100,000 limit on loans to a band. This applies, apparently, to all sizes and types of bands and mittee on Bill No. C-110, to amend the Farm band areas. I want to say that nothing the minister has yet said with respect to this subsection in any way refutes or denies the case that was presented in regard to the amendment now before us, that in fact there should be some flexibility in the determination of the maximum limit of loans available to an Indian band. I suggest that in fact the subsection proposed in the bill will have the effect of limiting the Indian people with respect to any decisions they wish to make as to the manner and form in which they shall carry on their farming operations. It seems to me there is room for further flexibility in this regard. To that extent I certainly go along with the spirit of the amendment as proposed.

However, Mr. Chairman, there is another aspect of this clause which I think deserves further consideration. It is with respect to the question of what say the Indian people will have in determining the amount of the loan for which they will be eligible, particularly in view of the great variation in the size of Indian reserves in Canada. I feel this is a very important question. I suggested last night in private conversation with the hon. member for Crowfoot, after he had moved his amendment, that in fact there was necessity for further consideration of this point and the hon, member agreed, as he indicated a few minutes ago. As a matter of fact, I was about to move a subamendment when I attempted to obtain the floor just a few minutes ago. Consequently I move:

That the amendment be amended by inserting between the word "corporation" and the word "and" the following: "the council of the band concerned."

Following the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot, subsection 4 would then read:

The total amount outstanding of loans that may be made to any one band under this act shall be determined by agreement between the corporation, the council of the band concerned, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, with the approval of the governor in council.

I so move, Mr. Chairman, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, it may come as a surprise to the committee that I should interest in Canada borrowed $100,000, and Cariboo, who had indicated support for would not be available for them. [Mr. Burton.]

suggestions made from this side of the house when he spoke of the tremendous amount of Indian land available for Indian farming. The amount of land available for Indian farming is in excess of six million acres.

When one considers that there are well over 2,000 reservations and well over 500 bands, one has to look very closely at the remarks the minister made last evening when he said, as reported at page 2197 of Hansard, that three or more Indians who form themselves into a corporate partnership are eligible to borrow up to $100,000. The question that comes to my mind is: Will they be treated as an individual partnership in the same way as individuals would be in any other form of business? If $100,000 is made available to the band, what is the responsibility of any three in that band who set themselves up as a corporate partnership? What is their responsibility to the band and as to the loan the band itself has received? In other words, will the corporate partners within a band be responsible for their share of the band loan? If this is the case, they can in no way be considered as an individual partnership, because in borrowing $100,000 as a corporate partnership they have set themselves up as an individual group within the band. In this situation, how will the minister and the department be able to hold them responsible for their share of the loan of $100,000 made to the band?

Does the minister consider, as he has already indicated, that not only is a band entitled to borrow $100,000 but any number of band members can set themselves up as corporate partners? If there is a band of say 600 members and they decide to divide themselves up into partnerships of three, you will have 200 corporate partnerships each applying for a loan of $100,000. The minister knows very well what this adds up to in the way of money.

I do not think the minister can legislate fairly by this bill in the form in which it is now before the house. He is telling the Indian people that this money is available but the question arises, where will the money come from if they decide to pursue to the utmost the course I have mentioned? If every band myself in this matter, but I assure all hon. individuals within those bands divided themmembers that I do have a concern in the selves into corporate partnerships of three, question because I represent in this house an the amount of money required just would not Indian reserve. I refer to the remarks made be available. I am, of course, exaggerating last night by the minister in his anxiety to the situation, but if such a request came from answer the hon, member for Kamloops- all the Indians in this country the money just

I repeat, that I do not understand how the minister can put forward the suggestion that a corporate partnership can be set up by any three Indian farmers and they can be held responsible for the $100,000 which may be borrowed by the band itself. I ask the minister under what form of legislation does he expect he can hold people responsible under these conditions?

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: This clause says:

With the approval of the Governor in Council, the corporation may enter into an agreement with the Minister of Indian Affairs—

That is a prerequisite to making loans to anyone on an Indian reservation. The reason is simply that we cannot take security on the land. I am sure that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will be consulting with the bands as to what kind of arrangement will be made. That is not the limiting but it is the controlling factor with respect to the extremes that the hon, gentleman mentioned.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I will avoid the extremes, which are also possibilities, and again ask the simple question: Under what legislation or what supervision can a separate corporate partnership be set up whereby its members, being band members, can be held responsible not only for the corporate partnership but for the over-all picture of the band? In other words, if the band borrows $100,000 are they, as individual corporate partners, also responsible for the band's share of the $100,000, or are they looked upon as individuals? If they are looked upon as individuals, in what position does this place the band?

Mr. Olson: If the hon. gentleman reads new section 17A (1) he will see that it says:

With the approval of the Governor in Council, the corporation may enter into an agreement with the Minister of Indian Affairs-

What the agreement will entail is of no particular concern to the Farm Credit Corporation. We want to make it as easy as possible for Indians who are farmers to obtain the same services as anyone else who is a farmer. If we get the security of the agreement it is not our concern how that security will be sustained either within the band or between the band. I am sure the band will be able to not have referred to a sum of $100,000. Therelook after this aspect of it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The minister is confident of what the band can do but once again I ask him a simple question. As the minister responsible for this legislation he should be fully aware what the legislation implies. In the event that a band borrows $100,000 and three individuals set themselves up as a corporate partnership can they, as individuals, be held responsible for the loan of $100,000 to themselves and also for their share of the loan that has been given to the band? Never mind the minister saying read this or read that. Can the individual be held responsible for a loan of $200,000 or can he not?

Mr. Olson: Anyone, whether he be a member of a corporation, a partnership or a band, and to whatever degree he has an equity in the entity, is in fact responsible for it. If three Indians who are farmers enter into a partnership and borrow $100,000 I suppose each one of them is responsible for one-third of it, indeed the whole of it if there is default on the part of the others.

If a band borrows $100,000 and there are 100 members in the band—there could be 500 members in a band but suppose there are only 100—there would be collective responsibility that could be reduced to an individual responsibility of $1,000.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): That is exactly what I was looking for. The person within a band who sets himself up with two others as a corporate partnership is no longer an individual according to the interpretation placed on this by the minister. In other words, despite the minister's effort to treat the Indian as an individual, on an equal basis with all other Canadians in this just society, he has said that the three individuals setting up a corporate partnership are no longer individuals because they are held responsible not only for their own borrowings but for the borrowings of the band as well. Therefore their individuality, as three men setting up a corporate partnership, is removed from them.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great concern to this debate and I am a little confused why a limit has been set in new section 17 (4). The minister indicated that what he was trying to do was to attempt to place the Indian on the same footing as everybody else. If so, of necessity he should fore, speaking to the subamendment it seems to me that this can be offensive from the Indian point of view. Whether a band consists of 50 members, 1,000 members of 5,000 members the minister has arbitrarily set a figure that can only mean there will be hardship. There can be no question about that because he has stated that a band can get only $100,000. Yet at the same time he says the government is trying to treat Indians just the same as anyone else. It cannot treat Indians the same as anyone else when it includes a provision like this stipulating that a band is entitled to only $100,000. If he wants to treat the Indian with some respect and appreciate his dignity I plead with the minister to consider the subamendment and the amendment.

If the minister accepts them he will be able to take cognizance of a band consisting of 1,000 people. I am not too well aware of the number of men, women and children that usually form a band, but does the minister not realize that when he stipulates $100,000 he is restricting whatever good this legislation may achieve? I plead with the minister to appreciate the fact that we are dealing with people. He is talking about corporate entities, partnerships and associations. We are dealing with people.

If we are going to move toward the just society, here is an ideal opportunity for parliament, and particularly the government, to be just. Let us recognize that a band can consist of 2,000 people. If we do not recognize that fact then I say this new section smacks of discrimination. It is offensive, and we do not want that record in the first session of this parliament. I ask Liberal backbenchers to pay particular attention to these amendments that are attempting to show there is discrimination. There is discrimination because the bill now says it does not matter how many people are in a band, and no matter what their capital projects are they can get only $100,000. I plead with the minister, let us not be offensive in new subsection 4. Let us be interested in seeing to it that this measure does have some merit.

Mr. Olson: There is no offensiveness in this bill at all. I would remind the hon. gentleman that what we are doing for the Indian farmers, and indeed for bands where farming is undertaken, is exactly the same as what we are doing for anyone else. For a corporation of people who are Canadian citizens other than Indians, if the corporation consists of 100, 500 or 1,000 members the limit it could get would also be $100,000.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Gleave: Did the minister consult with any of the Indian associations before this proposal was drawn up and ask them how they wanted to approach the matter?

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: What we are doing here, Mr. Chairman, is providing precisely the same provision for Indians as anyone else in the country. There is no special consideration for them but there is certainly nothing less than equal consideration.

Mr. Gleave: This is not an answer to my question. I am not thinking in terms of equality. I am simply asking whether the minister consulted with members or officials of Indian associations before this proposal was drafted?

Mr. Olson: I am advised that there has been consultation with the department of Indian affairs and officers of the Farm Credit Corporation have been on a number of reserves to make appraisals and assessments.

Mr. Gleave: I know that consultations have taken place with the department of Indian affairs. I would expect that representatives of the corporation had been on reserves. I am asking, was there consultation with any of the Indian associations?

Mr. Olson: Not with the Minister of Agriculture. I fail to see the purport of this question because what we are doing here does not make any special provision for Indians separately from any other citizen. What we are doing here is to write legislation to make available to Indians who are farmers precisely the same services as anyone else.

Mr. Gleave: My question was whether consultations had been had with Indian associations. The purport of my question was to ascertain whether the Indians had agreed to this particular procedure. I would assume that quite possibly it was in line with what these people wanted. However, their circumstances are different from mine, for example, as a farmer. I own land in individual right, but in the case of Indian bands the security would not be land as such but would be a different type of security. Surely this is a factual difference and it is the reason I asked the question to ascertain if there had been consultations and if the Indian people considered this provision was what they wanted.

Mr. Harding: Could I put a question to the minister concerning something which is puzzling to me? For example, I understand that five farmers can combine together as a corporate entity. If they do, I understand they will be allowed to borrow $100,000. Could each member of this group of five decide to go outside the corporation and borrow $40,000 on a separate parcel of land?

Mr. Olson: No.

Mr. Harding: The minister says no. The position, and I think it is a legal position, is that the band is a corporate entity, and if the band secures a loan of $100,000 how can any of the individual members of that group go outside the band and get a $40,000 loan?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has hit the point. He says an Indian band is a corporate entity. We are not convinced that an Indian band is, legally, a corporate entity and that is the precise reason subsection 4 is in there. It is the only reason.

Mr. Horner: I have one quick question concerning the interpretation of subsection 4 as it now stands. Would the minister agree that it would encourage Indians within a band to form separate co-ops or individual co-ops so as to take greater advantage of this measure?

Mr. Olson: We would hope the passage of this part of the bill would have the effect of encouraging the Indians to follow what they in their own judgment believe to be the best way of making their farm operations more efficient, whether that would be as individuals, small groups or indeed as larger groups. What should be drawn to the attention of hon. members is that this bill does give a substantial advantage in many ways to farmers who are Indians because in most cases there is no requirement to purchase land and all the money can be used for improvements. It is not for the corporation to set up, in my view, arrangements which would make the Indian less capable of obtaining funds to farm by himself if he chooses, to farm in partnership with two or three others if he so chooses. They have a right to make exactly the same choice as other people. The question was asked, what do Indians want? Indians want to be treated the same as everybody else in the country and that is exactly what we are trying to write into this bill.

Mr. Horner: The minister is quite right, Indian affairs has to be consulted that is what we are trying to write into this bill. This is exactly what we are attempting to do. I posed a question to the minister and he answered in a roundabout way but I future that he has made a mistake.

understood his meaning. I want to present to him the problem confronting the Indian band in my constituency. They have a huge amount of farm land. They are now renting that land to white men and the Indians get a share of the crop. The present chief has explained this problem to me. If a group of Indians were to decide to farm one section of that land, they have to turn over to the band council the same share as the white men are turning over from the land they are farming. This has a very detrimental effect on the initiative of the Indians to go into farming on any large scale. The amount paid to the band council is divided amongst those other Indians who do not have the initiative or do not feel they should get out there and be quite as industrious as others. If the whole band could borrow enough money to become farmers themselves, then this one-sixth share would not have to be returned to the band council.

It is for this reason that I point out to the minister that placing a limit of $100,000 on a band will force Indians to start farming in smaller co-ops and will not solve the real problem because it perpetuates the tendency to reward the least industrious Indians on the reservation and penalize the industrious. If the minister is resolute in his opinion that only he can suggest amendments which should be approved in this house, that is his privilege. He has the majority over there. It is really the duty of members on this side to warn the minister exactly what he is doing. I think we have done this. If the minister is so firm, so hidebound in his attitude toward the amendment which I moved and the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Regina East, then I suggest we cannot get blood out of a stone. We can only vote on the amendment.

I must say the minister is making a mistake. He has suggested a limit of $100,000 be placed on the band as a legal entity. This clause, as it now stands, does that. We are saying, do not put a limit on the amount that can be borrowed at the moment but go through the process of consultation with the bands concerned and with the department of Indian affairs. This does not sound too difficult, particularly when the department of Indian affairs has to be consulted in any case. I will not belabour the point. As I say, you cannot get blood out of a stone. I am sure the minister will realize in the not too distant future that he has made a mistake.

I will go one step further and say the whole bill should have been sent to a committee in the first place, as we recommended. If that had been done, representatives from the Indian bands could have told us exactly what they wanted. But the minister refused to send it to a committee. That was his first mistake and I am sorry to say it was not his last.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have been very interested to see the minister getting support from some of his backbenchers. His statement that he wanted to do the same for the Indians as he did for everybody else was very commendable. That is what all of us want to do.

There are a number of Indian bands with agricultural land in my area, and I would like to see them put in the position to develop those lands and become farmers. The minister has stated that a band is not a legal entity as we understand it, but it is as they understand it and it is also what they understand to be a co-operative. If we allow them to borrow the maximum of $100,000, the Indian bands will be limited to that amount.

In this clause the minister has not differentiated between people other than Indians who borrow from the corporation and Indian bands that borrow from the corporation. In the one case the loan is backed by a mortgage on the land. In the case of the Indians the loan is being backed by a guarantee on the part of the minister of Indian affairs. He really underwrites the loan, as farm improvement loans from banks are similarly underwritten. Instead of holding a mortgage the corporation has an agreement with the minister, acting on behalf of the crown, that the crown holds title to the lands.

If we were really interested in expanding the farming operations of Indian bands, we would not insist on a guarantee from the minister of Indian affairs in the case of a co-operative simply because the band, which I consider a legal entity, has not title to the and used by the band for reserve purposes. As a matter of fact, other lands used by the band which are not reserve lands are also held by the crown in the name of the Queen and administered by the minister of Indian affairs.

It is possible that Indians who are not connected with bands own their lands, in which case a mortgage may be granted. Since such Indians are not living on a reservation they will not be classed by the department as a band.

I suggest that if the minister really wishes to treat Indians in like manner to others, he will have to consider establishing an unlimited ceiling on the amount that can be lent by the corporation to Indian bands. This raises the problem whether or not the corporation should be lending money for this purpose to the minister of Indian affairs. It also raises the question whether or not the department of Indian affairs should operate its own agricultural financing for those Indians on reservations, rather than leaving it to the Farm Credit Corporation. I suggest that the amount that an Indian farmer living on a reservation can borrow should be limited to that amount that the minister of Indian affairs is willing to guarantee.

I think we have to recognize that most of our Indian population is living on reservations. They are members of Indian bands and are not classed as legal entities under the terms of the Indian Act, the Interpretation Act or this act. Therefore, in my opinion they cannot be included within the proposal that is put forth in this bill.

I suggest that under the terms of this clause it is not possible for Indians to establish a co-operative, as is the case under other clauses of the bill. Neither is it possible for them to establish a corporation and to apply to the minister of Indian affairs for a guarantee in return for the title to the lands under this financing procedure.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I shall be very interested in how hon. members vote on these amendments, particularly members who represent a number of native Indian bands. I shall also be interested to see whether other hon. members who have gone across the country saying that they are willing to give equality to Indians are sincere and will support the amendment and the subamendment which will establish the right of the minister of Indian affairs to give a guarantee beyond the $100,000 limit and to the value of the land that the minister will administer.

I think before this bill is passed the minister should consult with his colleagues on the question of what this final amount should be. I am not one of those who think that the department draws up regulations which accord with what they think the minister has said; they make regulations that accord with what the act says. If no other provision is made in this act, the amount lent to Indian bands will be limited to $100,000. The minister of Indian affairs will be unable to raise that limit by giving his guarantee. Neither could the Indians take advantage of the normal process under which co-ops, farm corporations and family farm units dictate the number of units that are involved. In my opinion the Indian farm population will not have the same advantages under this act as other farmers who are living off the reservations and who are outside the restrictions that are imposed on Indian bands.

I suggest that members on the other side of the house will have to consider seriously whether this restriction should be imposed on our Indians. The Indian affairs branch is investigating this whole question and they should be given the right to decide how Indian bands can take full advantage of this legislation in the same way as Indians who are not members of a band and can put up their own security and draw up to $40,000 in their own right. I am sure that many others will speak on this subject. I think that the best action they can take is to support the amendment.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I wish to direct a question with regard to the $100,000 that is available to any corporate farm. Specifically I wish to talk about how this provision will affect Indians. Does the minister not realize that in this bill Indians are faced with three penalties? The minister's remarks were nothing but windowdressing. Indians who engage in corporate farming are responsible not only for their own $100,000 but they must guarantee the band's share of money. In addition they must turn over one-sixth of their crop to the band. References to Indian partnerships are nothing but window dressing, and considering the remarks of the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo last evening I want to know whether he is satisfied with the minister's approach to this matter.

Mr. Olson: In this legislation no restrictions apply to an Indian that do not apply to any other citizen of Canada.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Yet a few moments ago the minister clearly said that individual Indians who engage in corporate farming are responsible not only for their own share of the money but for the band's share also. The regulations governing Indian bands require such farmers to turn over to the band one-sixth of their crops.

Mr. Pringle: Mr. Chairman, since I come from an area which contains many Indian reservations I am interested in this clause and in the amendment. I appreciate the arguments and recommendations submitted by members of the opposition, but I wonder whether we are looking at this matter in the correct light. Are we debating an Indian bill or a farm credit bill. Since we are debating a farm credit bill, is there not a danger that we may discriminate against those who are not Indians?

I am sure many hon, members have borrowed money. When corporations borrow money the words "personal guarantee" are frequently heard. The directors of a corporation guarantee a loan jointly and severally. If we remove the ceiling on any money that may be advanced to our Indian population, are we not discriminating against those who are not Indians and not entitled to the same privilege? Parliament can allot only so much money to the Farm Credit Corporation. The amount is not unlimited. I therefore suggest that we ought to treat everybody equally and not discriminate against those who are not Indians.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am confused by the minister's most recent remarks. Does he not consider the ownership of land as the basis for any guarantee that is given to the corporation with respect to money lent? Yet individual Indians in a band do not own individual parcels of land. Has the minister considered that? Is there not a difference under this legislation between the Indian who individually owns no land and a man who does own land?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Chairman, there is no difference so far as the law is concerned. The hon. member may know that because of provisions with regard to Indians in bands giving security we are making a provision that will enable farmers who are Indians to give security with regard to the land that they farm in virtue of other acts. In other words, as a result of action taken by the minister of Indian affairs, Indians will have access to services available to everybody.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that at all. I do not think the Farm Credit Corporation can obtain a deed to a piece of reservation land. That land is not held by the Indians themselves but by the minister of Indian affairs for the crown. Though an Indian may have a share in the band's land, his share of 10 acres, 150 acres, and so on, does not consist of this parcel here or that parcel there. He cannot put his land up as security. If I go to the corporation and ask for a loan I put my land up as security. If I rent a piece of land from ARDA or anyone else, I cannot put that up as security. How then can an Indian, who has no direct ownership of his land, put it up as security for a loan from the corporation? The individual Indian, as I said, has no specific right to any specific part of the reservation and I fail to see how under these circumstances an Indian will enjoy the same benefits that a man who is outside the reservation will enjoy. The minister seems to think that a guarantee by the minister of Indian affairs will be enough.

A loan of $100,000 to a small reservation will have a different effect from a similar loan to a large reservation. This is a matter that ought to be considered. Frankly, I do not think the effect of this legislation will be the same for everyone.

Mr. Olson: These amendments are to make sure that we respect the right of an Indian to his share, and so on. The hon. member knows we cannot take a mortgage on any part of the reservation, and that is why we are asking for an agreement to be substituted for a mortgage.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: If this is true, and that is what I assumed in the first place, what is the minister's objection to accepting a guarantee for an amount much higher than $100,000? In referring to the minister of Indian affairs he is really asking the Crown to make a guarantee. I should like to know why he thinks it should only be made to the extent of $100,000 rather than in terms of the size of the reserve, the number of people living on it, and similar considerations.

Some hon. Members: Read the note.

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Burton) negatived: Yeas, 43; nays, 56.

Amendment (Mr. Horner) negatived: Yeas, 43, nays, 67.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I should like to move.

That subsection (1) of section 17A of Bill C-110, An Act to amend the Farm Credit Act be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"17A. (1) With the approval of the Governor in Council, the Corporation may enter into an agreement with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the purpose of enabling loans to be made under this Act to farmers who are Indians on reserves, to farming corporations and co-operative farm associations the shareholders or members of which are Indians on reserves and bands engaged in farming operations to reserves."

Mr. Horner: This amendment is really redundant. It means very little, but I am sure that we on this side will accept it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: We are generous. I wish I could say the same for you.

Mr. Burton: So far as we are concerned this is a technical amendment to which we have no objection. However, I would like to point out that when questions were asked earlier about the scope or nature of the agreements envisaged between the corporation and the minister of Indian affairs they were not answered.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a communication has been received which is as follows:

> Government House, Ottawa. 31 October, 1968

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. J. R. Cartwright, P.C., M.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 31st October at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be, Sir, Your obedient servant, Esmond Butler Secretary to the Governor General.

RESEARCH

WINNING OF NOBEL PRIZE BY FORMER CANADIAN RESIDENT

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the house the fact that Dr. G. H. Kharana has been awarded the Nobel prize in medicine. Dr. Kharana is an Indian by birth. He was educated in India and at Oxford University. He came to Canada in 1952 and worked at research in the British Columbia Research Council until 1957, when he went to the University of Wisconsin and, as I have said, has won the Nobel prize for his outstanding work in the field of nucleic acid in the genetic code.

I am sure all Canadians will have a great sense of pride in the accomplishments of a doctor who worked for seven years in our scientific research centres and then went on to win the coveted Nobel prize in medicine. This is an indication of the high level of research that can be carried on in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should perhaps mention that the hon. member's statement does not qualify as a question of privi- on in Nova Scotia, and I think it was absolege, but I am sure hon. members were lutely necessary to make this statement. I pleased to hear the hon. member's statement.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACINNIS-REPORTED STATEMENTS RESPECTING PATRONAGE IN OTTAWA AREA

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from the question asked by myself in the house yesterday and the answers given by the Prime Minister. First of all I definitely recall, as do other members sitting in this vicinity, my original question. I quote only the latter part in order to draw attention to the very important words that have been left out, in which the Minister of Justice referred to the Solicitor General as the senior member, while being questioned on matters of patronage in and around Ottawa. The way it is reported in Hansard is "the senior member in matters of patronage in and around Ottawa." I would refer also to the remarks of the Prime Minister when he said he was misquoted by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Trudeau: What page?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): It is page 2216 of Hansard, the first column. The Prime Minister said he was misquoted by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. Then the Prime Minister

The reason I did not answer right away was that I suspected there might be a misquote coming from the hon, member.

The Prime Minister further referred to my record of asking questions in this house. I regret very much that I cannot allude to the answers that are provided. In addition the Prime Minister went on more or less-and of course this is open to interpretation-to say that he had not witnessed the program about which I was speaking. Then, as is reported in Hansard on the same page, that is page 2216, I referred to the use of the word "probably" by the Prime Minister in this connection.

The question originally arose because of statements made by the Prime Minister in Halifax when he alluded to practices carried would say, further, that there is now public Postal Facilities in St. John's knowledge of the support of the statement made by the Minister of Justice when he was being questioned on the matter of patronage in Ottawa. I say this is public knowledge because the Ottawa Citizen of yesterday quoted the Minister of Justice answering a question. For the benefit of the minister and the Prime Minister I would repeat the question that was put to the minister while on a television program:

During a CJOH interview, Doug Fisher, with his tongue practically sticking through his cheek suggested gently that since Turner was in the senior government spot of Ottawa M.P.'s, wouldn't he now be the one in charge of government patronage and handouts?

Said Turner, after maybe a half-second delay: "Whatever happens, I shall always consider George McIlraith the senior Ottawa M.P."

I call Your Honour's attention to the fact that the question put to the Prime Minister, despite the rules, was answered by the Minister of Justice. I take no exception to his answer, but it is clearly indicated in press reports that the direct question to the Minister of Justice was on the matter of patronage and no other question.

• (2:40 p.m.)

His answer, although he did not use the word "patronage"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, if I have to put up with this cheering—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that the hon. member should be given the opportunity to complete his statement.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, as I was about to remark, it is very difficult to get a point across when the group on my right which acts as nothing more than a cheer leading group in this house continues to interrupt. In finalizing my question of privilege in this regard I would refer hon members, especially the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Justice to the Ottawa Citizen of yesterday.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made a statement. He rose on a question of privilege, but it would seem to me it is more in the nature of a clarifying statement. I doubt very much whether anything could be gained by pursuing the matter further. Yesterday we had a very interesting exchange on this subject. I hesitate to do anything at this moment which might precipitate a further debate of the nature we had yesterday. There are a number of other questions of privilege of which I have received notice. If we are to proceed with the business of the house this afternoon we might go on with the next one.

MR. MCGRATH—POSTAL FACILITIES IN ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is as follows. On September 26 I wrote to the Postmaster General pointing out to him that while the city of St. John's had almost doubled its population in the past 20 years, postal service had not kept pace with this population growth and that we still have the same number of postal stations we had 20 years ago. Specifically I asked the minister to have his department examine the possibility of a new post office in the northeast area of St. John's.

My letter was sent on September 26. Today is October 31 and I still have not had a reply even by way of acknowledgement. My question of privilege does not relate to the obvious administrative inefficiency of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McGrath: —although I may say in passing that if this is the way he ran the Montreal stock exchange—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must ask the hon. member to co-operate by stating his question of privilege.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, as I just said my question of privilege does not relate to the administrative inefficiency of the minister. Rather it relates to a situation which arose in St. John's yesterday. A private citizen and well known Liberal said he was authorized to announce on behalf of the Minister of Defence Production that the government intends to improve existing postal facilities and to build a new post office to cover the northern part of the city.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: My question of privilege is that as an hon. member of this house I am entitled to information concerning the administrative plans of the government, and am entitled to this information specifically when it refers to my constituency; more especially am I entitled to it when I have requested it in writing.

In the past several months we have heard from the Prime Minister and the Postmaster General a great many hollow words about the ending of patronage and undue partisanship. It is evident from the facts of the case I have stated that the minister is allowing his department to be used as a tool for a propaganda campaign by the Liberal party rather than as a public service—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McGrath: —in the operation of which all hon, members of this house have a legitimate interest.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member had given me notice of his proposed question of privilege. It is the duty of the Chair, after having heard the statement by the hon. member, to determine whether there is a prima facie case of privilege and whether he should be allowed to make a motion for further action by the house based on the question he has raised.

No such motion was advanced. In any event I doubt very much whether there is more than a grievance, legitimate or otherwise. I doubt very much whether it is the type of grievance which should be considered by the house as a proper question of privilege, and I would have to rule along those lines. This ruling having been made, I suggest to hon. members that there should be no further debate on the question but rather that I should be allowed to call the next hon. member who has a question of privilege.

Mr. Carter: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I am speaking to the same question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat, please? I just made a ruling that there is no question of privilege; therefore there cannot be further discussion of the matter. I am sure the hon. member will want to accept the ruling of the Chair at this point.

Insufficient Staff for Committee Work [Translation]

INSUFFICIENT STAFF AND FACILITIES FOR COMMITTEE WORK

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege which concerns all hon. members in this house, not only the French-speaking members.

On several occasions since the beginning of this session, I have noticed the lack of interest shown about the committees with regard to the simultaneous translation and the translation of the proceedings into French. A quick inquiry showed me that there were not enough translators and interpreters available to meet at the same time the needs of the House of Commons, the Senate and the committees.

Again this morning, and that is the last straw, when the committee on external affairs and national defence met in camera to prepare its second report, the only interpreter in attendance could not do his work properly because the sound system was not working well.

Mr. Speaker, I am by no means blaming the interpretation service which does a very good job; I merely say that they are too few to meet the requirements of this parliament.

Consequently, I move, seconded by the honmember for Villeneuve (Mr. Tétrault), that the house adjourn the business of the committees as long as an adequate number of people has not been hired to ensure the efficient operation of the committees.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I thank the hon. member for having given me, as required by the standing orders, notice of his question of privilege, which gave me time to start inquiring into his grievance. I think the member is right in complaining about the situation to which he refers in his motion and in rising on the question of privilege.

I would ask him to wait a few days to give me the opportunity to study the situation a little more closely and then I may be in a position to make a statement in the house or, if it is satisfactory, directly to the hon. member, in order to improve the situation about which he rightly complains.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull) presented the first report of the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs and moved by leave that the report be concurred in.

Health, Welfare and Social Affairs [English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, early in the session the house established its list of committees, and today three committees are reporting to the house asking for leave to sit while the house is sitting. I am sure Your Honour is aware of the difficulty that has arisen as a result of the number of committees that are sitting each day. For example, for today there was a pretty full slate. I suggest that if each of these committees is going to report to the house and ask for leave to sit while the house is sitting, the situation will become impossible.

• (2:50 p.m.)

May I recall the incidents that arose earlier this week, when on two occasions a quorum was called in this chamber. Since on two occasions there has been difficulty in obtaining a quorum in this house, the situation might well become aggravated. I therefore oppose the adoption of this report. I ask Your Honour and the house leaders to reconsider the advisability of allowing a number of committees the indiscriminate right to sit while the house is sitting, since we have already experienced difficulties in having hon. members attend the house.

Committees ought to meet on specific days. Naturally, if delegations are brought to Ottawa from some distance away and are to appear before a committee, I concede there is a legitimate reason for that committee to sit while the house sits, and I might have no objection to allowing such a committee to sit for eight, ten or 12 hours in one day though normally I should be opposed to the idea of committees sitting while the house is sitting. Committee work has become exhausting for hon. members rather than edifying. The time hon, members spend in committee work represents a great part of the time they have available for all work, the result being that the operation of the house is interfered with.

If rules are to be changed in such a way that hon. members have no say in the changes, it seems to me no one will give credence to the proposition that hon. members must, as a primary duty, be in attendance in this house. Changes ought to be brought up in the committee on procedure and should be applicable to all committees; otherwise we might see an abuse of privileges enjoyed by committees.

[Mr. Isabelle.]

For that reason I am opposed to the adoption of this report today.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might address a few remarks to the house on this matter. The hon, member may not be aware of this, but there is in operation a consultative system among all parties of the house which is carried on by way of a coordinating committee set up for the purpose of co-ordinating the business before the committees. The hon. gentleman's party, in common with all other parties here, is represented on that committee. It is the express purpose of that committee to so regulate the business before the standing committee of the house that the situation he is concerned about will not arise.

I agree that if committees are indiscriminately called to sit at the same time, either before the house sits or while the house is sitting, difficulties may be created. To avoid that risk there is this co-operative arrangement to co-ordinate the work of the committees.

The purpose of the motion moved on behalf of the standing committee on privileges and elections is specifically as a result of that effort to regulate our business generally, so that our committees can sit. In other words the work is to be carried on as suggested by the co-ordinating committee, in which it is decided how our committee work can most effectively be carried out.

I hope the hon. member withdraws his opposition to this matter, since it is a co-operative arrangement that has been worked out among the various groups here.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the question before us has nothing to do with the committee on privileges and elections. It seems to me that the health and welfare committee has jumped the gun, and I am suggesting that this matter be held up until it can be decided by the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The house must give unanimous consent before a motion can be made for concurrence in the report. Since there is obviously not unanimous agreement I suggest that we do not proceed further.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS—FIRST REPORT

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland) presented the first report of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, and asked for unanimous consent to move that the report be concurred in.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have the same objection.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF OLYMPIC BRONZE MEDAL WINNER

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the house the fact that we have today in the Speaker's gallery Miss Angela Coughlan of the bronze medal winning women's free style relay team. I think we should extend a hearty round of congratulations to her as representative of the great achievements of all our medallists.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate all the excellent young athletes who have just finished representing Canada at the Mexico Olympic Games. They are the finest young athletes our country has produced and they have taken the time and trouble to carry the name of Canada before the eyes of the world, often at great personal expense.

For their achievements all Canada applauds them, and I and my government join in the applause. I should like to take particular notice of our fine teams of swimmers and equestrians, who produced five medals for us including one gold. To these athletes go our special thanks for an outstanding job.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN CANADIAN AND NIGERIAN AMBASSADORS TO UN

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I ask leave of the house to table an exchange of correspondence between the ambassador and permanent representatives of Canada to the United Nations and the ambassador and permanent representatives of Nigeria to the United Nations dated October 24, relating to the question whether the Nigerian government would or would not oppose flights into rebel-held areas from Sao Tomé by churches using Hercules aircraft.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Could I suggest that this be made part of the Hansard record today so we might all have the benefit of reading this material?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Would the minister indicate whether this is the total correspondence?

Mr. Sharp: Yes. This correspondence arises out of a question directed to me by the hon. member for Greenwood. I passed the question on through our permanent representative at the United Nations to the permanent representative of Nigeria. This is the ambassador's letter, and the reply.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this correspondence form part of today's record in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO REMOVE ATTEMPTED SUICIDE AS AN OFFENCE

Mr. Kenneth Robinson (Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-123, to amend the Criminal Code (attempted suicide).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Robinson: I am pleased to have the opportunity to introduce this bill. The section of the Criminal Code referred to presently reads as follows:

Everyone who attempts to commit suicide is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Obviously suicide itself is not an offence, and it therefore seems ludicrous that attempted suicide should be considered an offence. The purpose of this bill is to remove an attempt to commit suicide from the category of offences mentioned in the Criminal Code and to restrict it to the field of medicine, its rightful place.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

UNITED NATIONS

ABSTENTION BY CANADA IN VOTE ON SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him to inform the house as to the basis of Canada's abstention from a vote last night in the trusteeship committee of the United Nations general assembly. The motion before the committee would have enforced economic sanctions against South Africa and Portugal, and would have called on Britain to use force in Rhodesia.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Canada's abstention in connection with the resolution voted upon on October 30 in the trusteeship committee, which as the hon, gentleman knows is the fourth committee of the general assembly, arose from the fact that the resolution contained a number of unacceptable paragraphs, including calls for the use of force to which the government is opposed. We did not vote against the resolution because, despite some of its injudicious provisions, its objective was to express dissatisfaction with the present situation in Rhodesia.

Mr. Stanfield: I gather from the minister that the government was opposed to armed discussion with the United States officials [Mr. Speaker.]

intervention in Rhodesia. But what is the position of the government of Canada with regard to the call for sanctions against South Africa and Portugal?

Mr. Sharp: We doubt whether this is a practical proposition at the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government was awfully hopeful of success two years ago.

AGRICULTURE

CORN-VALUE FOR DUTY ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. On October 29 the minister informed the house that after full consultation with the United States, as he put it, he was able to announce a base price of $1.05 for U.S. corn entering Canada. In view of the statement appearing in the press today by Mr. Orville Freeman, United States secretary for agriculture, indicating that no agreement at all had been reached in connection with the Canadian move, can the minister tell the house with whom, in fact, the agreement he spoke of was reached?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I did not say we had reached agreement with the United States. I said we had held negotiations and discussions with the United States.

Mr. Peters: Can the minister tell us with whom his officials negotiated, if the discussions were not brought to the attention of the secretary for agriculture?

Mr. Olson: I think there is some distinction, at least, to be drawn between discussion and agreement. I said we had held discussions, not that we had reached agreement. The discussions took place between officials of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Trade and Commerce and other government departments concerned, and officials of the United States government.

Mr. Peters: In view of the statement by Mr. Freeman that the United States would consider retaliation or demands for compensation, will the minister stick by his commitment to the house to maintain the United States import level at $1.05?

Mr. Olson: We are prepared to continue the covering such questions as compensation or whatever they wish to discuss. I do not think it would be proper for me to give any indication of what we intend to stick by. The announcement made in this house represented government policy, and until we decide otherwise it will remain government policy.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Can the minister assure the house he will make the same arrangements in the case of vegetable oils imported into this country?

Mr. Olson: The hon. gentleman knows that the subject of vegetable oils and the possibility that such oils have been dumped into this country is now under active investigation by the Department of National Revenue.

SPORTS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the presence in the galleries of the brilliant athletes who represented Canada at the recent Mexico Olympic Games, does he intend to introduce, during the current session, legislation to help Canadian athletes in general who represent Canada at various international competitions at their own expense, as several athletes did in the recent Mexico Olympic Games?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Perhaps I might answer that question. The government does not contemplate legislation until it has had a chance to study the report of the task force.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Would his government consider instead creating a sports department?

[English]

Mr. Munro: That would be a matter of policy to be announced in due course if a decision of that kind were made.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, the minister answered that the matter would have to be taken under consideration. Could I ask him to do that?

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of the pertinent and effective words of the Prime Minister in drawing attention to the presence of Canadian athletes in the gallery and the fact that Canada, represented by them, has done as well under the circumstances as was to have been expected.

In view of the fact that international prestige is measured to a greater degree than ever by success at Olympics, and considering the number of members in this house who have been outstanding athletes, including the Prime Minister—we had wins in the swimming events; we didn't do so well in the diving-would the Prime Minister give consideration to setting up a committee of the house at the earliest possible date so that, as a result of recommendations made by it, young men and women across Canada may be placed in a position that by the time the next Olympics come around they will have had adequate opportunities for training and assistance which will enable Canadian athletes to multiply the number of awards secured by Canada during the Olympics just ended?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare just indicated there is a task force dealing with this matter. Its precise purpose is to go about the country and get information of this type. After it has been reported to the minister he will raise the question in cabinet and we will examine the most effective way of dealing with the problem.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is this task force to be chaired by the minister himself?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition should know that the task force has been in operation for three months under the chairmanship of Dr. Harold Rea. The other members are Miss Nancy Greene and Dr. Paul DesRuisseaux.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—STEPS TO SETTLE DISPUTE WITH TAXI DRIVERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In view of the serious troubles which developed yesterday in Montreal, does the minister intend to take steps to settle the conflict between the Montreal taxi drivers and the Murray Hill company concerning the transportation of passengers to Dorval airport?

I would also ask the minister to tell us whether he intends to appoint a mediator immediately, in order to end the monopoly of the Murray Hill company in Dorval, which is detrimental to the Montreal taxi drivers and contrary to the principle of free competition?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have a very long answer to this question, and I suggest that I either be given permission to revert to motions to read it or that the house agree to have it taken as read at this stage and included in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister has leave to revert to motions for the purpose of reading his statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, departmental policy in ground transportation at airports is founded on long experience in Canada and abroad. If adequate service to airline passengers is to be provided, ground transportation arrangements must be carefully controlled and planned to ensure service to meet fluctuating and peak demands and availability regardless of weather, or time of day or night.

Quite apart from the lack of availability, over-all higher costs can result to travellers unless the transportation is controlled and regulated in accordance with contractual arrangements, since an uncontrolled open door policy leads to skimming of the cream at busy times, with resultant inadequacy of service and over-all higher costs at other times. Also, services must operate in accordance with provincial and municipal laws relating to licensing and rate regulation.

Within the limits of these objectives it is departmental policy to provide the various types of commercial ground transportation that the public require by one or more concession or contractual arrangements, usually by a single concession. The four main categories are airline bus service, special limousine zone service, meter taxi service and common carrier public transportation service by bus.

[Mr. Valade.]

The concession arrangements at Montreal airport cover the airline bus and limousine service. The concessionaire also experimented with the provision of meter taxi service at the airport, but demand was slight and this particular service has been discontinued, although the matter is again under review. It should be noted in this connection that the bus and limousine service are properly licensed by provincial authorities. Further, any meter taxi service would require to be licensed by Dorval municipal authorities, and the taxi drivers from the city of Montreal who have been involved in the protest apparently do not hold municipal authorization for service at the airport. Common carrier bus service is not available to and from the airport but it is hoped that a responsible common carrier will, at some stage, demonstrate an interest in providing service on a normal commercial basis, as is already done at Toronto airport.

As regards the demonstrations at Dorval it is understood that these were organized by taxi drivers from the city of Montreal. With this group were associated a substantial number of students, whose interest in this subject is less clearly understood, particularly since as far as can be ascertained they do not understand and have not made any attempt to ascertain the facts regarding the nature of and reasons for present policy relating to airport ground transportation.

The demonstrations in the main took place on the road system approaching the airport rather than on airport property. Some violence developed on the part of demonstrators. There was no substantial damage to airport property, but there was some damage to vehicles of the company providing the ground transportation service to and from the airport.

The excellent co-operation and restrained conduct of municipal, provincial and federal police forces assisted materially in keeping the situation under control and preventing it from becoming worse. It is also understood that following the episode at the airport the demonstrators, or at least some of them, turned their attention to other objects in the metropolitan area having nothing to do with aviation.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: I think, Mr. Speaker, that the statement just made by the hon. Minister of Transport does not at all answer my previous questions when I asked him if the government intended to obtain the services of a

Inquiries of the Ministry mediator in order to try avoiding the serious members of the opposition parties can make troubles that have developed and are apparently continuing at the Dorval airport?

I am more worried about the fact that the hon. minister does not at all seem to realize the seriousness of a situation which did not develop suddenly and which, on many occasions, was a cause for grievances and correspondence between his department and the Montreal taxi drivers' association.

Furthermore, the hon. minister, in his statement, is trying to minimize the basic problem which is, on the whole, unfair competition against the taxi drivers in the field of free enterprise. Taxi drivers are obviously entitled to protest, Mr. Speaker, that there is at Dorval a monopoly being enjoyed by a firm called Murray Hill. This is the only such situation existing at air terminals all over the world. According to the information I have been able to obtain, no other air terminal in the world has been granted by the governmental or any other authority an exclusive franchise in the matter of transportation.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I cannot understand why the hon. minister has not shown a more conciliatory attitude and why he would not try to understand the basic problem which is, in fact, a monopoly enjoyed at the expense of other private interests, free enterprise and taxi drivers, many of whom have a family to support and must earn a living.

Mr. Speaker, I think this matter was brought to the attention of the federal authorities last year. The situation was not so serious then, because a great number of tourists were going to Expo '67. Now that the situation is normal again, I believe that the taxi drivers are in a position where they are unable to do their work and earn a decent living. This problem is basically human and it comes under the federal authorities.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister should immediately appoint a mediator to try to reconcile the parties, in order to find formulas which would enable the two interested parties to agree.

The statement of the hon. minister does not satisfy me; certainly, it will not satisfy the interested parties and I am afraid the situation might worsen.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): I would like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. 29180-142 comments on the statement of the hon. minister. If there are no more comments we will revert to questions and I shall give the hon. member for Shefford the opportunity to put his question.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make comments at this stage, since the question is often raised in the house and, as we can see, will come up again.

It seems to me that we should ask the interested parties, namely the Murray Hill company and the Association des propriétaires de taxis de la ville de Montréal, to appear before the committee on transport and communications, so that we might be informed on the two aspects of the question. After that we might make a better decision on the advisability of having a mediator appointed by the federal government in the present case.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development who curiously enough, it seems to me, is the minister reporting for the national capital. Having in mind the reported controversy between the Ontario officials and officials of the city of Ottawa respecting construction of buildings adjacent to the parliament buildings and the planning of the national capital downtown area, when will the minister make a decision as to the setting up of the parliamentary committee to consider all matters concerning the national capital? This committee was approved during the last parliament.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the slightest idea as to when this committee will be established, but it will certainly be done at the appropriate time and I hope it will be soon.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. Pending the setting up of the committee, will he find an appropriate opportunity to make a statement on member that we are on motions, and the behalf of the government and the people of

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker ,as far as the national capital problem is concerned, it is well known that there is a commission with representatives from the government of Ontario, the federal government and the government of Quebec. It is expected that this committee will report, and we shall then certainly be able to set forth the general policies concerning the national capital.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I preface my supplementary question by congratulating the minister on his very fine statement to the Atlantic provinces' council yesterday. In view of the fact that the provincial governments are co-operating in developing the economies of the Atlantic region has the minister received any representation or blueprint from the Newfoundland government in respect of the development in that area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that this question is supplementary to the previous question. However, the question has been asked and I will allow the minister to reply.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, I have not received any general plan concerning the development of Newfoundland.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the minister has indicated that he is going to need the cooperation of the provinces in developing this plan. Has the minister contacted the province in respect of the development which is planned for the next 15 years?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, before going as far as suggested, the department should at least be set up officially and the minister informed exactly of the powers to be conferred on him by the house.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has visited the city of Sydney and witnessed the wonderful job done by the government of Nova Scotia, is he now in a position to release the Devco report?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the most promising minister on the government benches, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Was the minister announcing the government's list of priorities for regional development in the Atlantic provinces when he stated in Halifax that the big push may call for a multi-million dollar deep water terminal, for faster highway links to central Canada, for cheaper power—perhaps tidal power—and if so when may we expect to see a start made on these necessary and worthwhile projects?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member knows, he must ask a question directly. He cannot ask the minister to confirm a statement made outside the house.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week I asked the Minister of Labour a question regarding the regulations under the Canada Labour (Safety) Code. I also asked him a question regarding the operation of this legislation in the province of Manitoba. He promised to answer on Wednesday, but yesterday things were pretty crowded and he did not get a chance to do so. I hope he has an answer today.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker the hon. member asked a question in two parts. The first was whether the regulations in respect of our safety code had been completed. The answer is no. On the other hand, the hon. gentleman will be pleased to know that we are working quite effectively in the province of Manitoba where we have visited 125 industries under federal jurisdiction. I have given priority to the establishment of regulations recognizing the dangers in the mining industry. We are working very assiduously in the Cape Breton area at the present time to complete all the regulations pertaining to mines in that area.

COMMUNICATIONS

CO-OPERATION WITH FRANCE IN SPACE AND SATELLITE RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question.

At the beginning of October 1968, at a meeting of the United Nations, he met the foreign minister of France regarding the cooperation of France and Quebec in the field of satellite telecommunication. He then promised to present a statement to the house on that matter. Therefore, I ask the hon minister whether such negotiations are under way between the representative of France and those of Canada, in the field of satellite telecommunication.

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada has made direct representations to the government of France on this subject.

NATIONAL SECURITY

JAMES EARL RAY—ALLEGED POSSESSION OF FORGED CANADIAN PASSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether a charge has been laid against anyone in reference to the passport issued to Mr. Ray and, if a charge has been laid, what court is it before and what is the nature of the charge?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add at the moment to what the Solicitor General said to the hon. member in reply to his question on Tuesday.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I did not ask this question of the Solicitor General. With the greatest respect, I understand the Minister of Justice is looking after the administration of justice in this country. Has a charge been laid against the person recommending Inquiries of the Ministry the application of Mr. Ray and, if so, what kind of a charge and what court is it before?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I cannot add to what has already been said by the Solicitor General.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): You couldn't find Hal Banks either.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker-

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon, gentleman is not going to ask the same question a third time.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, let me put it this way. Is the Minister of Justice on some ground of federal policy refusing to answer the question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On the same ground already advanced by the Solicitor General on Tuesday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, Mr. Speaker,-

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should think the hon. member would agree that this is becoming a debate.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on a point of order. I know about the rule in relation to ten o'clock, but it does seem to me that this kind of question has been asked on several occasions and ministers of justice have always given information. I am not asking about the court procedure, and I did not ask the question of the Solicitor General but rather of the Minister of Justice. I can only suggest with the greatest respect that this minister has something to hide.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

EDMONTON—REPORTED SHORT WEIGHT OF ICE CREAM BARS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in respect of a matter of long standing. What steps if any has the minister taken to deal with the complaint from Calgary lodged some months ago that fudgsicles—ice cream bars—made by the Woodland Dairy of Edmonton are half an ounce less than the quantity printed on the label, and the public is thereby being defrauded?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that we all return here at ten o'clock to discuss fudgsicles.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I say with respect that this matter has already been worked on, worked on and worked on through correspondence with no result, and this is the only place I know of where I can now refer to it.

Mr. Speaker: I fully recognize the situation and appreciate that the matter is of some importance and of some urgency. If the hon. member wishes to have the matter considered later on at the time of adjournment she might give me the appropriate notice.

FINANCE

SAVINGS BOND PAYROLL DEDUCTIONS BY CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES OF U.S. COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware that some Canadian subsidiaries of American parent companies are refusing to put into operation the payroll deduction plan for employees to buy Canada savings bonds?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): This, of course, is a voluntary matter, Mr. Speaker. I am not aware of the particular circumstances raised by my hon. friend but I would be very pleased to receive information from him in this regard.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I will supply the minister with the name of the company. Would the minister ask all these companies to put into operation the guide lines which the government announced some time ago in order that they may be good, corporate Canadian citizens?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to receive more information from my hon. friend. I do not think the guide lines dealt with Canada savings bonds, but I would like to encourage all companies in Canada to allow their employees to purchase Canada savings bonds through payroll deductions and, indeed, I have written a good many letters in this regard.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

THE MINISTRY

REQUEST FOR PERSONAL STATEMENT BY TRANSPORT MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. I express some concern and surprise in this regard and ask the minister whether he is prepared to seek the consent of the house to revert to motions at this time in order to make a statement concerning current reports involving himself, certain video recording equipment and Mr. Jeffrey Sterling, a Canadian with a substantial interest in the broadcasting industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that I must have some reservation about the question he is now asking. I would advise him that an hon, member has proposed, by way of a written question, a question along the same lines as the one now asked by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. I could not find my way clear to accept the question as asked because it is a well known rule of this house that questions cannot be asked which imply accusations of misconduct against any other hon. member. The only way this can be done is by putting the question directly by way of a question of privilege and, as the hon. member knows. along the lines of the precedents which are well known to the house, to make a specific charge. I am afraid that is the only way this kind of question can be asked.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with your ruling. I just wanted to clarify something and I certainly did not intend to imply any misconduct whatsoever on the part of the minister. I am simply asking the minister whether he would not wish to revert to motions in order to clear his own name. I did not impugn it; he impugned it himself.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in regard to what Your Honour has just said I find it a little difficult to see how under the circumstances it would be possible for the minister himself to be impugned as suggested. Perhaps Your Honour has not seen nor heard of these things, but I would ask you to take judicial notice of them. There are some rumours or stories circulating in connection with the Minister of Transport in his position as Minister of Transport. The hon. member is merely asking whether the minister will make a statement. The minister may quite possibly clear himself completely, and in the interest of the discharge of his duties to the house I think this should be done. There is no possibility of making a charge.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has risen on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have been given to understand that questions of this nature were accepted if they were written questions. For some reason or another these questions have been refused. The question now arises, what is the difference between this scandal and the past furniture scandal?

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—STUDY SESSION BY LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister been made aware of the wildcat walkout yesterday by longshoremen in Montreal, and would he advise the house whether anything has been done to correct the grievances complained of and to guarantee that the port will remain in operation until the end of the shipping season?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be aware of the fact that this was not a wild-cat strike but a study session in the true sense of the word in that the members met to discuss unusual suggestions of the employers to clean up the heavy backlog of cargo in the port of Montreal. This is the first work stoppage this year, which is a pretty good record. Further, the Minister of Labour does not consider his role to be such that he should be interfering every day in day to day disputes between management and labour.

Mr. Allmand: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has been assured that the port will continue to operate and there will be no further study sessions until the end of the season.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Mackasey: I cannot assure the honmember of that, Mr. Speaker. That is not my responsibility, but I can reassure the honmember that labour-management relations have never been as promising as they are this year, which I think is something to consider.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My understanding was that when the minister opened the washroom facilities on the Montreal waterfront last month everything was in order. Is this not the case?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, there were other sections of the rest room that needed opening and I should have invited the hon. member to open them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEwan: Next time I hope the minister will.

FINANCE

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED SECURITIES COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In connection with the federal-provincial conference on consumer affairs, will the minister advise the house whether a consensus has been reached with the provinces on the proposed federal securities legislation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the officials met for a one day conference and the discussions they had were extremely useful. I think progress can be reported on developing a consensus between federal and provincial officials.

Mr. Howe: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it still the intention of the government to proceed with the securities legislation this session and, if so, will the government now take parliament into its confidence, as it has the provinces, and let us see the proposed bill?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we do not at the moment have a bill to show hon. members.

ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES BUILDING HOMES FOR AGED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct this question to the

Inquiries of the Ministry

Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that the cessation of the winter works program will create a real hardship on municipalities which had planned on building homes for the aged with the help of these funds, does the government have any plans whereby they can assist in these worthy and urgent projects?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have no additional plans except the additional funds that we are putting into training and retraining programs this winter.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of, and is he doing anything about, the very serious and rising rate of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, we welcomed the statement by the minister on Monday that large amounts of money would be spent by his department in the coming winter. Could the minister tell us whether he is willing to make a statement in the house as to the nature of the expenditures and, if so, when this statement will be forthcoming?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to provide that information, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FERRY SERVICE, SAINT JOHN, N.B.-DIGBY, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the promise made during the election campaign that the new Digby-Saint John ferry service would come into operation soon. Could the minister now tell us whether we are to receive this service soon?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the C.P.R. has received tenders for the new ship but a contract has not yet been entered into. As my hon. friend knows, the arrangement that is being worked out with the water transportation committee of the Canadian Transport Commission is that the C.P.R. will acquire and provide a ship and the government will assist in arriving at an arrangement between the two parties. As far as [Mr. Noble.]

Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that the cessation of the winter works program will create a real bardship on municipalities which had planned bardship on municipalities which had planned further.

Mr. Comeau: Will the minister tell us how much longer we have to wait?

Mr. Hellyer: As long as it takes to build the ship and the terminal, approximately.

TELEVISION

QUEBEC—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier).

With regard to the Minister's statement as to the establishment of a federal educational broadcasting agency, would the Minister tell the house whether he received representations from the province of Quebec or from other provinces?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, we did receive representations. As far as I know, we did not get any from the province of Quebec but we received some from a few other provinces.

Mr. Andre Fortin (Lotbinière): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, could the Secretary of State not table the text of those representations for the future guidance of the members?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, this would be somewhat difficult. As a matter of fact, this concerns two provinces, represented by groups of officials from the Department of Education. They came to make verbal representations and discuss the matter with us, by word of mouth, so there are really no documents I could table in the house.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ST. LÉONARD, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO SURVEILLANCE ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): I intended to put a question to the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. McIlraith), but in view of his absence I shall direct it to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Turner).

We are told that the persons responsible government will assist in arriving at an arrangement between the two parties. As far as constant surveillance of the R.C.M.P. I should in respect of the capital markets. I cannot like the minister to tell us whether the services of the R.C.M.P. have been requested by the municipal authorities of Saint-Léonard or by the Quebec provincial authorities. If so, can he tell us the purpose of this surveillance?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice and discuss it with the Solicitor General.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Could the minister give the house a detailed report in reply to this question within the next few days?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I shall convey the suggestion of the hon. member to the Solicitor General.

HOUSING

REPORTED DROP IN STARTS IN SEPTEMBER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation report just released which shows an alarming drop in housing starts during September. Will the minister say whether there has been a change in the government's position as stated by the minister last August that Canada will achieve 185,000 housing starts in 1968? Is this still the government's objective and expectation?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will recall that the government took steps a month or so ago to make moneys available so that an additional 10,000 units could be started this year. At that time, as I recall it, the announcement was rather cynically received on the other side of the house. However, I am still hopeful that the moneys which are currently being made available by the chartered banks and other lending institutions, in addition to that which is made available directly by C.M.H.C., will allow us to achieve the very high figure which I had indicated earlier.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not wish to be unnecessarily persistent, but the minister stated he is hopeful. Is this still his expectation?

Mr. Hellyer: Sometimes there is a very fine line between hope and expectation. It is difficult to estimate because of the uncertainty Inquiries of the Ministry guarantee what the results will be. I hope, however, that we will achieve the high figure previously indicated. If not, I can assure my hon. friend that if he will allow me to carry on with the housing inquiry that is now under way in the interests of the Canadian people, we will try to bring forward remedial measures which will allow us to reach an even higher figure next year.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am not a particularly combative individual and I am sure I do not need to remind the minister that he need not seek my permission to engage in his present sojourn.

Mr. Hellyer: I had understood some of your followers were disapproving.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, might I take this opportunity-

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, this question is addressed to the minister and arises from a statement made in Vancouver to the effect that more research is needed into Canada's housing problems because the most important thing learned by the task force to date is how little we really know about the subject. Is it still the intention of the government to table the task force report within 30 days of the completion of hearings and to bring in housing legislation very shortly thereafter?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the answer is

Mr. Stanfield: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the annual rate of housing starts fell to 155,000 in the month of September, can the minister indicate whether the government is prepared to make more money available for housing if this becomes necessary in order to meet his objective of 185,000 units this year?

Mr. Hellyer: I hope this will not be necessary.

CHURCHILL-REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EXTENSION OF SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I answer a question asked Inquiries of the Ministry yesterday by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). The hon. member inquired about the extension of the season at Churchill. The answer is that the firm of Hedlin-Menzies of Winnipeg was engaged by the Department of Transport to conduct a study concerning the possibility of extending the season at the port of Churchill, Manitoba. It is expected that this report will be completed by mid-November. The report was not intended as a public document but when it is available further consideration will be given to the hon. member's request.

AIRPORTS

VAL D'OR, QUE.-INQUIRY AS TO OPENING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday notice was taken of a question asked by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Tétrault) requesting information concerning when the inauguration of Val D'Or airport will take place. The answer is that the airport has been operational since October 1, 1968. Some details, such as a concession agreement, have to be settled before the official opening. It is expected that these agreements will be completed in the near future.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Does the government plan to upgrade Prairie Farm Assistance Act payments to realistic levels in view of the severe loss of income in areas where there has been crop failure and inasmuch as the present farm legislation does not in any way remedy the situation or help the farmers who do not have crops?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there are no amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act under consideration to deal with the 1968 crop season.

SASKATCHEWAN-REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister the city of Saskatoon requesting the federal I can only assume that it has been noted. [Mr. Hellyer.]

government to take such action as is necessary to minimize the serious economic consequences of the existing harvest conditions in the province of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is neither in order nor acceptable from a procedural standpoint to ask whether or not a communication has been received.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED LAY-OFF OF SECURITY STAFF. ATLANTIC REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received an urgent communication protesting the imminent lay-off of 30 per cent of the C.N.R. security police in the Atlantic region? If so, what action is the government taking to preserve the jobs of these people and to ensure adequate protection of public property?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a communication has been received. I have not yet had time to refer it to the officials of the Canadian National Railways for their comments.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Would the Minister of Transport confer with the proper officials of the C.N.R. and ask them to reconsider their position?

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF RAIL SERVICE, TORONTO-NEW YORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister use his good offices to get in touch with the presidents of both our Canadian railways in an effort to ensure that railway passenger service is restored immediately between the city of Toronto and the city of New York? I ask this question in view of the fact that all passenger service has been discontinued between these two major cities and in view of the conditions at Kennedy airport, New York, both administrative and weather-wise.

Mr. Speaker: The hon, member has made a received a communication from the council of representation rather than asked a question. [Translation]

QUEBEC-INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION IN EASTERN TOWNSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lionel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Since the area between Drummondville and Saint-Hyacinthe would be an ideal place for an international airport and as he has received some briefs about the matter, could the minister tell the house if he intends to make a thorough study on the possibility of establishing such an airport in that area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member should place his question on the order paper.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REQUEST FOR NON-DISCRIMINATION POLICY IN NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Some time ago I asked him to look into an allegation of discrimination apparently indicated by a young lady regarding Eskimos. Is he now prepared to make a statement in that regard inasmuch as he did undertake to look into the matter?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having raised the problem of discrimination. I think all hon, members of the house would applaud his efforts. Since my answer is rather lengthy I would prefer to read it on motions on Monday. In the meantime, I will send a copy to the hon. member so he can be prepared. I want to assure the house that there is no evidence of discrimination but on the contrary there seems to have been a sincere attempt on the part of the previous and present Ministers of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to make sure that just the opposite is true.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—ANNOUNCEMENT OF POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Inquiries of the Ministry to the parliamentary secretary to the Postmaster General. Is he aware of an announcement made yesterday in St. John's by a private citizen to the effect that a new post office is to be built in that city? Was the private citizen in question authorized by the department to make this announcement? This private citizen, sir, was supposed to have been speaking on behalf of the Minister of Defence Production.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point or order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Carter: I would address my question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the hon. member has asked a question.

Some hon. Members: There was no answer.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Postmaster General is not here today.

Mr. Carter: I rise on a point of order, sir. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the policy of his government to have private citizens with no official status make announcements of this nature? This has happened twice in as many months in my riding. I ask the Prime Minister, is he responsible for the policy?

Mr. Trudeau: I have asked the Postmaster General to ensure that questions relating to his department will be answered tomorrow.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BREWIN-EXCHANGE OF CORRESPOND-ENCE BETWEEN CANADIAN AND NIGERIAN AMBASSADORS TO UN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. This is the first opportunity I have had to do so. Earlier this afternoon the Secretary of State for External Affairs obtained from the house leave to table correspondence between the Canadian ambassador to the United Nations and the Nigerian ambassador to the United Nations. This correspondence contains a reference to myself by name and contains an implication that I have misstated questions of fact to this house when I made a reference to an interview with Dr. Arikpo in New York. The fact is, as Hansard will show, that the letter from the Canadian ambassador does not Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. correctly refer to the statement made by me Speaker, I should like to address a question and the answer by the Nigerian ambassador is therefore meaningless. His answer in no way constitutes a denial of my statement.

Inquiries of the Ministry

The letter from our Canadian ambassador is dated October 24, 1968 and is addressed to His Excellency the ambassador and permanent representative of the mission of Nigeria to the United Nations. Perhaps I had better read it since it is quite brief:

Dear Ambassador:

My minister, the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, has asked me to enquire urgently about the role of the churches in respect of relief supplies. One of the leading critics of the government, Mr. Brewin, whom you will recall came to New York and met with Dr. Arikpo, claims that he was told that the federal government would not oppose flights into rebel held areas from Sao Tomé by churches using Canadian Hercules aircraft. This statement does not appear to have been made to Mr. Sharp himself but may have been made during the visit of certain Canadian parliamentarians when they met the commissioner for external affairs.

Mr. Sharp would be very grateful if you could let him know, as a matter of urgency, whether in fact such a statement has been made or whether the federal Nigerian government would be likely to permit such an arrangement.

I do not need to read the reply which in effect says that the statement was not made at all by the Nigerian commissioner or any other member of the Nigerian delegation. The statement attributed to me in this matter is completely inaccurate as could well have been ascertained by reference to Hansard. I made this statement publicly in this house and it is contained in Hansard. First of all, I should like to refer to page 1650 of Hansard, and quote the statement:

Mr. Speaker, this supplementary question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the difficulty in obtaining permission in respect of the airlift from Fernando Po, has the minister consulted with the Red Cross concerning the statement made by the foreign minister of Nigeria that there would be no opposition to flights in from Sao Tomé by the churches using Canadian planes if the Red Cross would supervise or at least look into the operation?

I point out to the house and to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is quite different from the statement attributed to me in the letter I have read. This is a conditional statement. This matter was referred to again, by me as reported on page 1939 of Hansard for October 23:

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs confirm a statement made by Dr. Arikpo in New York on October 8, in the presence of the minister's parliamentary secretary and several other members of parliament including the hon. member for Egmont and myself, to the effect that there would be no objection on the part of the Nigerian government to mercy flights from Sao Tomé to Biafra provided the Red Cross inspected the cargo?

[Mr. Brewin.]

Again, the matter was referred to as reported on page 2032 of Hansard for October 25:

Would the Prime Minister tell the house whether or not a determined effort is being made to check the statement I have made on a number of occasions, and which has also been made by the hon. member for Egmont, that on Tuesday, October 8, the High Commissioner for Nigeria agreed to the supplies being flown in from Sao Tomé with one condition only, that they be inspected by the Red Cross? Why is further consent needed? Will the Prime Minister tell us that?

On the three occasions on which I referred to this subject I made it quite clear that the statement made by Dr. Arikpo was a conditional statement based on agreement that the Red Cross would supervise the operation. I do not at all blame the ambassador, who happens to be a personal friend of mine, but the statement made in the letter made no reference whatever to the condition which I mentioned on each occasion that the flights be supervised by the Red Cross. I say to this house that so far as I am concerned, and there are plenty of witnesses who are ready to support this statement as reported by me and not as contained in the letter, the statement was in fact made in answer to a question by me to Dr. Arikpo publicly. I repeat the statement here. I say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that unless he is ready to accept my word on this matter I will ask that the matter be referred to the standing committee on external affairs where evidence can be received and sworn to, not only by me but by his own parliamentary secretary and others. I suggest that in future, when letters are sent out on matters as important as this, some effort should be made to make them accurate and fair.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the question was put by our ambassador in New York in the way it was in the letter. However, I should like to say to the hon. gentleman and to the house that if the question had been put in the other form, as it was put orally by me yesterday to Dr. Arikpo when I met him in New York, the answer would have been the same. He said he did not make any such statement. I have spoken to my parliamentary secretary about it and he denies that any statement in that form was made. If it would be of any value to the hon. member and to the house, I would be glad to put the question more precisely, quoting the words from Hansard. I did use them on the telephone to Mr. Ignatieff, but when he put the question in the letter he did not add those words.

I can assure the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that it would make no difference which way they are put, but I would be very happy to have another letter sent quoting him directly on the question. Therefore I hope there is no question of privilege involved. It was not done on purpose. It was not a question put to Mr. Arikpo with any intention of deceiving him. He understood the connotation perfectly.

May I just add that the fundamental reason that objection was taken to the flight from Sao Tomé is that the Portuguese government does not object to arms shipments going from that port, whereas Equatorial Guinea and the previous Spanish authorities permitted only food to be flown from Fernando Po.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this question of privilege to make one other point very briefly. What is involved here is not merely an innocent misrepresentation—I accept the minister's statement—of what was said by the hon. member for Greenwood. What is involved here is a very important point of policy of concern both to the members of this house and to the people of Canada. What is involved is whether or not the planes could have been used in a way other than the way they are being used.

When the minister rises and says that even if he had asked in another way the answer would have been the same, he is making certain that he is getting the answer that he wants. That is not the way in which this kind of negotiation can be carried on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether hon. members wish to pursue this matter further. The hon. member for Greenwood has made his point on the question of privilege. He himself has stated what was the situation and according to the rules of the house all hon. members are bound to accept the statement that has been made by the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to pass over the matter, but it seems to me that the statement that has been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs only compounds the matter. He now directly states that the statement that I made in this house several times and that I repeated today is not a correct statement of fact. He is accepting the word of these other gentlemen from Nigeria.

Because I think that my credibility and the credibility of other members of this house, including that of the hon. member for Egmont, is in question, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the question of the statements attributed to Andrew Brewin, M.P., and referred to in correspondence tabled this day by the Secretary of State for External Affairs be referred to the standing committee on external affairs and national defence.

I move that motion, Mr. Speaker, subject, of course, to Your Honour ruling that there is a prima facie case of privilege involved here.

Mr. Speaker: I have before me the proposed motion of the hon. member for Greenwood. I have some doubt that it is a motion of privilege; it appears to be more in the nature of a substantive motion. Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to have a look at the matter a little more closely and to seek guidance. I would then be in a position later to give a ruling on the point raised by the hon. member by way of a question of privilege.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the house is willing to have the government house leader indicate the nature of the business for the ensuing week so that we can be guided by this information.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the intention would be that on Monday next we would call the committee of supply and refer to it the estimates with respect to supply and services. If they are dealt with that day then the estimates of the Department of Public Works would be called.

On Tuesday the budget debate will resume, and that debate will be called the following three days, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. If the budget debate is not disposed of by then, the final day for the budget debate will be Tuesday, November 12.

I thought it might be helpful to hon. members if I gave them an indication of the work that remains to be done between now and the end of 1968. Including both today and Friday,

Division

December 20, there are 36 sitting days before Christmas. Two additional days will be gained if we continue over into the first part of Christmas week. Of this total, 16 days will be required to complete the business of supply. The maximum time provided for the budget debate is 6 days. Time must be made available for consideration by the house of the report of the special committee on procedure set up on September 24.

It is impossible to state conclusively all the bills that will require passage before the end of 1968. However, if the program for the January to July, 1969, part of this session is not to be badly jeopardized, before the end of 1968 we should deal with the following items: No. 2 on today's order paper, the budget resolutions and bills relating to changes in the customs tariff and anti-dumping; No. 4 on today's order paper, Bill No. C-120 relating to the official languages act; No. 6 on today's order paper, Bill No. C-110 relating to the Farm Credit Act; No. 7 on today's order paper, Bill No. C-112 relating to the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act; No. 13 on today's order paper, Bill No. C-102 relating to the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act; and No. 24 on today's order paper relating to C.N.R. financing.

It would be our hope, Mr. Speaker, that we could call the resolution stage only of item No. 30 on the order paper with respect to the freshwater fisheries so that the terms of the proposed marketing scheme would be available to provincial governments and other interested persons.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice will be bringing forward the bill to amend the Criminal Code, and we should like to make as much progress on that item as possible before the end of the year.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBLE CLASSES, AMOUNT OF CAPITAL, INTEREST RATES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson for the third reading of Bill No. C-110, to amend the Farm Credit Act, and the amendment (page 2238) thereto of Mr. Gleave.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Gleave) which was negatived on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there have been certain discussions among the various groups in the house and I think agreement might be found for a special order today dealing with the question of the budget, namely, that for the purposes of section 2 of standing order 58, upon the calling of government order No. 2, that is, the budget debate, as the second item of government business later this day this day's sitting shall be counted as the first of the six allotted days for the said debate, and that the provisions of standing order 15(4) shall apply to suspend the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business this day. If that is agreeable to the house generally I think we might make an order of the house to that effect, and after the order is made then call item No. 2 on today's order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed? Some hon. Members: Agreed. Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 22, consideration of the motion (page 1677) of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): some considerable length of time to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) make what should be an annual analysis in the budget of hazard a prediction at this time that within the financial state of the country. Usually this is made after careful preparation. We in the opposition merely get the opportunity of seeing the text of his remarks as he delivers it, and there is certain difficulty in replying to a budget speech. We can only comment on those features of it that are patently self-evident. For instance, the 2 per cent across the board increase in income tax with a ceiling of $120 is one of those features. Time has provided us with the opportunity of looking at the fine print of the budget and also to hear some of the minister's extra-curricular remarks in respect of the budget and the preparation thereof.

Let me say at the outset, having now examined the budget in detail and having heard some of the unofficial explanations, that I do not take back one word of what I have said about the budget. In fact, one should underline the criticisms that were advanced. As a matter of fact, I would not now be quite so generous with some of the complimentary remarks I made when dealing with the changes in the estate tax and the gift tax. We have now had an opportunity to see the fine print in this respect, and I must say the minister has dealt a very serious blow to a number of principles in relation to estate tax. He has now made generosity very onerous in so far as gifts are concerned.

I do not intend to deal with all the aspects of the budget. Many of my colleagues have undertaken a study of particular phases of it and in the next few days during the budget debate they will develop these criticisms.

The salient fact which came to light in the budget was the lack of credibility on the part of the government in respect of the financial position of the country. I must say now, after considering it for many days, that the government's position is no more credible than it was on budget night, and no degree of explanation can make it any better

We all know that the purpose of the budget is to present an analysis of the financial position of the country and the financial status of the government. It must be made after an analysis of the problems and the options open to the government to deal with such problems. The budget develops the means chosen by the government to deal with those problems and carry out government programs.

How does this budget measure up? I put it Mr. Speaker, on October 22 we listened for to hon. members that outside of imposing the heaviest increase in peacetime taxes in Canada, it will be a dismal failure. I would six months we are likely to get another hard jolt to taxation or we will have to face a further deficit of alarming proportions. It is my conclusion that the government has no more control over expenditures than it did before the presentation of this budget. Any budgetary forecasts which have been made are just as credible as previous ones.

Mr. Woolliams: He said he would balance the budget.

Mr. Stanfield: And he guaranteed it personally.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When we look at what was said it pays to go back to see what ministers of finance have said before as well as what the present Minister of Finance said about what the government was going to do to control expenditures and bring in revenue in order to balance the budget.

Let us go back to October 31 of 1967 to see what the present Minister of Finance said in reply to my former colleague who represented Carleton. This is recorded on page 3715 of Hansard for that day. He said:

The hon, member for Carleton spoke this afternoon about priorities and asked what are the government's priorities? Since we became the government we have instituted a system involving a five year forecast under which all departments are now submitting their objectives five years in advance.

Of what advantage is that, Mr. Speaker? These are just figures on paper, for what that is worth.

Mr. Woolliams: They are only out $400 million.

Mr. Benson: Four per cent; that is pretty good.

Mr. Stanfield: But 100 per cent wrong.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister then added:

Let me assure the hon. member that when it becomes necessary or when we deem it necessary or in the interests of the country to limit expenditures, this is not done in a haphazard method. I am sure he knows that, having had vast experience on the Treasury Board. What is done is that the proposed expenditures of each department are considered carefully and only selected items of the various departments are removed or revised.

If that has been the practice, why are we in the mess in which we now find ourselves? The whole new system of forecasting government expenditures and programs for five years with all the technocracy of the technocrats, the computers and paraphernalia that

The Budget—Hon. Marcel Lambert the minister has boasted about has brought the government to the position where they were wrong within a few months to the extent of $730 million in their expenditures.

Let me then move to page 3776 of Hansard for November 2, 1967. The then minister of finance, Mr. Sharp, in answer to the former hon. member for Carleton said:

No, Mr. Speaker. Estimates are simply a ceiling on the amounts which can be spent. They are not always spent, and they very seldom are.

The departments do not spend the estimates? Gracious me, they overspent them by $730 million this year and in the previous year they overspent them by $875 million.

Mr. Benson: That is almost as bad as 1958.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have used the figure $730 million, but the minister has yet to consider the supplementary estimates for 1968-69.

Mr. Benson: They are included in the forecast.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister says they are included but we will see when the final supplementaries come in at the end of March.

Mr. Stanfield: You will bring in a whole new set of supplementary estimates.

Mr. Benson: That will be next year.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On November 30, 1967, the former minister of finance made this forecast as reported at page 4905 of Hansard for that date:

The best preliminary forecast I can make of the yield next fiscal year of our revenues under our current tax laws—which of course at this early date is more uncertain than is usual in normal springtime budgets, is about $9,700 million. With our expenditures at the level of $10,300 million where we have decided to hold them, apart from medicare and Expo, our budget deficit would be $600 million. I believe we can and should aim to eliminate most of this deficit.

That was what the former minister of finance said on November 30. At page 5171 of Hansard for November 7 the present Minister of Finance in his famous intervention said:

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) introduced his supplementary budget proposals last week, he indicated that I would follow up on his remarks relating to expenditures and provide the house with further details as to the efforts the government has been making to restrain its planned expenditures for 1968-69 within a prescribed ceiling.

The Budget-Hon. Marcel Lambert

• (4:50 p.m.)

Then he said:

I am happy to honour that commitment tonight and to provide the house at the same time with information as to the steps which the government is taking to effect a substantial reduction in the rate of growth of the public service of Canada.

At page 5178, in the same speech, the Minister of Finance said:

There have been many demands from the opposition side of the house and from other quarters during recent weeks and months that the government reveal full details as to what cuts it is making and how it intends to achieve the containment of its over-all budgetary expenditures within this $10.3 billion ceiling.

On the same page the minister said:

The present indications are that main estimates as printed and presented will run somewhat in excess of $10 billion but less than the $10.3 billion mentioned by the Minister of Finance. Later, there will, of course, be unavoidable supplementary estimates to reckon with, throughout the course of fiscal year 1968-69.

The minister has just told me that his budgetary forecast for the balance of the fiscal year will not be subject to supplementary estimates, but back in December he said the figures he had given us would be subject to supplementary estimates. We know that. This is the normal practice; so why try to tell us that the figures the minister has given take into account supplementary estimates? They cannot. The minister cannot tell us what the supplementary estimates will be. Then he said:

These may well run the gross total of estimates, together with statutory appropriations, as high as $10.5 billion;—

He was a little short still, because his main expenditures are running higher than that. Then he said:

—but, as past experience shows, not less than 2 per cent of this authority will be destined to lapse unspent because of circumstances beyond the control of the departments concerned. The deduction of this lapse of 2 per cent or $200 million will bring the actual budgetary expenditure, we expect, for 1968-69 within the projected target figure, announced by the Minister of Finance, of $10.3 billion.

I shall have something to say about these percentage figures in respect of forecasts of expenditures and revenue and just how far the minister himself said he missed the target. Here is the real climax, Mr. Speaker. As reported at page 6663 of Hansard, on February 13 last the Minister of Finance, in answer to a question asked by the former hon. member for Ontario, Mr. Starr, had this to say:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to guarantee to the house that after the supplementary estimates are introduced during the year and the year has ended, with the normal lapses that always occur, we will hit our $10.3 billion ceiling and will balance the budget this year.

The man who was speaking is the Minister of Finance. This is why I say that the credibility of this whole budgetary exercise has been placed in jeopardy—indeed, not only in jeopardy but it has been completely thrown out.

Mr. Woolliams: There is no credibility; that is the answer.

Mr. Harkness: Guarantees are not worth anything.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I hope to read later from an interview the minister had on a well known television program. I understand that the word "guarantee" will be found blazoned across the minister's chest when he dies. That word has now been seared into his chest. Coming back to the points I made on budget night, Mr. Speaker, the government had to recognize certain problems that the country is facing. As I said, the purpose of a budget is to analyse the fiscal problems of the country, government programs, and to provide the means whereby we can deal with those problems.

What problems do we have? I will go through them very briefly. First of all there is the problem of sorting out priorities as between Canada's needs for health, education and social services. This has not been done, although now as a belated exercise the Minister of Finance has larded his speech with remarks about planning, priorities, and so forth. This is not the first time the government has done this because the last budget speech had something to say about priorities.

Mr. Stanfield: It is an annual speech.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As a matter of fact, when we suggested that something concrete could have been done about this situation we were pooh-poohed. I am sure my leader will have something to say about this matter when he participates in the debate.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, sir!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In addition, when it comes to planning these priorities it is obvious that the government has not a penny left for the construction of additional hospitals or for the training of additional doctors and nurses. Yet it not only insists upon but uses a blackjack to force the provinces into its own plan of medicare not that of the provinces, but its own plan of medicare. Yet the government has not made any provision for the provinces to be able to discharge their responsibilities. It is not the federal government that gets it in the neck when we are short of doctors, hospitals and nurses; it is the provincial governments. I am sure the Minister of Finance will not have a very easy time explaining the federal government's attitude to the ministers of finance of the provinces when he meets them starting on Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Woolliams: Poor fellow.

Mr. Baldwin: He has bought a large bottle of aspirin already.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is one of the problems the budget should have been able to sort out. Second, there is the question of inflation. This budget places no curb whatsoever on inflation. After all, there is a big deficit that has to be financed by bonds. Again we will be operating on government credit, and that is no curb on inflation.

So far as the 2 per cent tax boost is concerned I ask, where is it concentrated? It is concentrated on the production workers, those people who are earning under $8,000 a year. Many senior officers of major Canadian corporations have indicated that they anticipate that at the very next round of wage negotiations there will be a demand to cover precisely this point of income tax deductions at source. The working man is very conscious of this point of deducting income tax at source. It is brought home to him very quickly.

Mr. Stanfield: The postal increases, too.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will very shortly talk about the postal increases being tax increases too. There is another feature of the budget that increases the cost of business and contributes to inflation. I refer to the provision for a further acceleration of the payment of corporation tax. I will discuss that matter later. This will add to the cost of doing business, and therefore up will go prices. This will be a further, shall I say, push for inflation.

I must apologize to the house, Mr. Speaker, because the other night I used the figure, I believe, of 153.6 as the cost of living index for the month of August and I have found that my statistical information was incorrect.

Mr. Benson: That is not unusual.

The Budget—Hon. Marcel Lambert

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I find in the latest statistical summary of the Bank of Canada that the total index for consumer prices as of September was 156.4. As a matter of fact, 153.6 was the figure somewhere between March and April. In January of 1968 the consumer index stood at 152.6 and in September it was 156.4. We have already moved up 3.8 points and the year is far from finished. It will be interesting to see what the final cost of living index will be for this year.

• (5:00 p.m.)

We hear talk about inflation. I should like to make a brief reference to a statement which was prepared and delivered in an admonitory tone by the governor of the Bank of Canada in Victoria on October 17 this year. Let me read a few brief excerpts from Mr. Rasminsky's speech:

Taking the whole period since say 1960, our record with regard to costs and prices looked relatively good by comparison with other countries, rapidly than those of most of our major trading partners, including the United States. Indeed, by the autumn of last year we seemed to have developed an inflation psychology in this country. I tried to draw attention to this problem in a speech in Winnipeg last November. At that time I expressed the view that it was essential o break inflaionary expectations by making it clear beyond doubt that inflation would not be accepted as a way of life in Canada and that this was the most urgent task of public policy.

What has been the result? So far as this government is concerned, since last November to the present time the cost of living has gone up 5 points. I do not see any indication that the government has tried some of the things it might have. Because of the actions it has taken in the past years and some it did not take it has found itself powerless to deal with the problem of inflation. I think this is the number one problem in so far as the economy of this country is concerned. The governor of the Bank of Canada gave ample notice that this is the most urgent task in respect of public policy. Yet the answer by the government was that they had a leadership race and then had to go on the gallop for an election instead of being here to deal with these problems. All during that time we have seen inflation increase more and more rapidly. I wonder what we will see by Christmas time? I am sure there will be a real Christmas present in the stockings of the old age pensioners and those people who are on fixed incomes in this country when the final figures are known concerning the cost of living in 1968.

The Budget-Hon. Marcel Lambert

Mr. Rasminsky continued:

The worsening of our cost and price position does appear to have weakened our capacity to withstand the shocks from abroad that we have had to face. The first of these came on November 18 when sterling was devalued.

I do not intend to go into this speech, chapter and verse, because of the time limitation. I will not go through the tribulations in respect of our Canadian dollar over the past nine months. These things are well documented. I would recommend the speech of Mr. Rasminsky to all hon. members because it shows just how difficult it was to deal with this crisis. It indicates why Canada is particularly vulnerable as a result of the action taken by the previous administration which has placed us in such a difficult situation.

The other evening I referred to the equalization act of the United States and our undertaking to limit our foreign exchange reserve to $2.6 billion. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance what steps are being taken to bring about an easing of this situation particularly having in mind all the steps we had to take with regard to the shoring up of the Canadian dollar. We have linked ourselves closer and closer to the United States. As a matter of fact, last spring we converted $500 million of negotiable United States holdings into non-negotiable holdings. We are becoming more and more tied in with the policy and actions of the United States government. The sooner we can get away from the ceiling and the sooner we have more freedom of action, the sooner the Minister of Finance will be in a better position to deal with some of our own problems and we will not have to be tied to the United States go-cart all the

I can understand the action taken by the United States. I did not agree with it but I understand why they took the action they did in 1963 when the former hon. member for Davenport took the foolhardy action he did in his budget of 1963. The action taken by the United States was predictable. We got what we deserved in so far as government action was concerned. I should like to read one more quotation from what Mr. Rasminsky had to say:

Now that the problems connected with maintaining a sound external financial position have eased it is possible to concentrate once again on our other economic problems. I am afraid that none of them has gone away. Prices and costs are still rising too rapidly despite the emergence of considerable unemployment and unused capacity. The growth of the economy has been well within our potential for more than two years but so long as the strong upward trend in prices and costs continues, there are real risks in taking steps to accelerate the expansion of total spending in the economy. Our recent trade performance has demonstrated that Canada is still competitive internationally but it is also true that our recent exchange problems have shown how important it is to avoid any undermining of confidence by a further extended period of poor cost and price performance.

It is plain that in addition to following sound fiscal and monetary policies we need to do everything we can to increase the efficiency of the economy and to bring about more realistic attitudes toward the size of the increases in the incomes, all forms of income, which we can really afford to pay ourselves. There has been a good deal of discussion in recent times about guide lines for increases in incomes and other aspects of incomes and I have made it clear that I favour action in this area. I am not going into that matter further today except to say that the basic limit for the non-inflationary increase in incomes in any economy is not set by the authorities. It is set by our actual performance. The basic limit is the increase in real output per person employed. If we ignore that limit and settle for larger increases in money incomes all we are doing is guaranteeing that prices will rise.

Frankly, I cannot see that any action has been taken by this government which follows the course advocated by Mr. Rasminsky. The government has placed some sort of a temporary ceiling on the public service, but on the other hand it has also come forward with legislation to set up various tribunals and boards. We hear of other proposals which naturally will mean that the public service will be built up more and more. There is legislation before the house which says there shall be a tribunal with regard to dumping. We had the machinery board. There are a great number of others. I cite these merely as examples. Again the government is bursting through the ceiling it imposed on itself.

One of the other problems the budget does not solve is in respect of housing. In fact, because of the taxing of insurance companies less money will be available from that source for housing financing. There have been no reductions in costs with regard to housing. The minister could have reduced the sales tax on building materials. I heard him discuss this afterwards on television when he said that building materials should bear their fair share of the expenses. I could suggest a number of other areas which are more of a luxury in respect of which he could have done something with regard to housing. But, no; we are to have a continuation of the sales tax on building materials. The budget therefore failed to deal with the question of housing.

I turn now to interest rates. This budget has done nothing to encourage interest rates to come down. As a matter of fact, interest rates have gone up. I have before me a statement from the Bank of Canada issued on Wednesday, October 23. Of course it does not reflect the immediate post-budget reaction of the bond market. However, we have seen already what has happened to the long term average of the ten particular bond issues dated from July 1, 1969, through to September 1, 1992; thé rate is 6.86 per cent. The rate for half yearly treasury bills is 5.77 per cent. All one has to do is to look at the charts to see that the bellwether bonds, the 4½ per cents for 1983 are on their way up again. They are bound to be. As a matter of fact, we know what the reaction of the bond market was the day after the budget. Bonds dropped by at least two points. My telephone kept ringing for a couple of days afterwards as people in the bond business called to say that the reaction of the market was that people did not believe the government any more. If they could not believe the government, whom could they believe?

School boards and businesses that are trying to arrange long term financing have been left high and dry because the one authority in the country in which one should be able to believe is the federal government—the federal government sets the tone for the bond market—and it has completely missed the boat. Government authorities all along the line will feel the reaction, and this will be a further penalty that Canada will have to pay during the forthcoming year.

I have spoken about controlling government expenditures, Mr. Speaker. We have been told that government expenditures will increase by a further $800 million in 1969-70. According to the figures put forward by the Minister of Finance, we will have reached a total expenditure of $11,670 million by 1969-70. Naturally, I do not place too much credence in the accuracy of that forecast, except that it is likely to be an understatement. Why do I say it is likely to be an understatement? We know the catalogue of events with regard to the forecast of a balanced budget and the size of the potential deficit during last November, last February, last May and then in September. Now we come to this point.

In September, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) said that because migration (Mr. MacEachen)-I have to go tion and hospital insurance, the government had underestimated by some $400 million. The truth of the matter is that the postsecondary education program was implemented about two years ago. I recall the occasion, a Sunday night prior to the dominion-provincial conference, the federal government issued the terms of its proposal and that was it. University grants in the old form were gone. The vocational training program was gone. We were all to get this post-secondary education program. The government devised this program; they did not get any help from the provinces in working out the details. Within two years the government has underestimated the cost to it by $230 million. What sort of thinking is this? How well do

The Budget-Hon. Marcel Lambert

programs in particular, post-secondary educaprobably the brilliant suggestion of some backroom boy. I think perhaps the present Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) will have to bear some responsibility for this because the plan was commenced under his aegis. Now that he has been transferred to another ministry he is they think through these plans? The plan was would be a very serious problem for him at this time. This is another reason this administration is no longer credible when it makes statements with regard to the financial posiperhaps heaving a sigh of relief because it

tion of the country.

Then there is the problem with regard to hospital services. Perhaps the house will permit me to reminisce. I recall that when Hon. Donald Fleming was minister of finance the first dollar was spent under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act in July, 1958. The act had been passed in 1956-57 by the Liberal administration, but it was not workable. It was amended. I recall that Mr. Fleming told us privately or publicly, I do not recall the occasion, that within ten years the federal government share of this program would exceed $550 million a year. Well, he did not pull that figure out of a hat. Obviously he had been advised by his officials as to the cost of the project. What has happened? As a matter of fact, his figure of $550 million is perhaps just a mite low but for a ten year forecast it is pretty well on target. When it comes to forecasts, the former minister of finance (Mr. Sharp) stated some time ago that medicare would cost a billion dollars for a whole year's operation if all the provinces were included.

The present Minister of Manpower and Imthey had underestimated the expenses of two through these different changes-contradicted

The Budget-Hon. Marcel Lambert cost that at all. The forecast for this coming year, 1969-70, with everyone participating, is only $370 million for the federal government and not the $500 million that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) had said. We are told that while the doctors have recently increased their fees, actually they do not send in their bills quite as quickly as one might expect and therefore there will be a shortfall in the actual amount of money to be paid out. If this is the basis of the forecast for the cost of medicare, if the government of Canada is relying on the fact that doctors may not send in their bills quite as quickly as they might, then I do not know to what ouija board the minister is now going to refer. If that is the kind of reasoning that is used, I must confess that it really strains the credulity of anyone who has to assess the financial position. When hard-nosed bond dealers and financiers look at this sort of thing they say, "do you honestly think we can believe in anything like this?"

I know that my leader will be dealing with dominion-provincial relations because this budget will certainly affect that situation. All I am going to say is that this is a problem that faces the minister right now. I realize that when he goes into the question on Monday he will be the sacrificial lamb for this administration and will have to face the music. I apologize for the mixed metaphor, but the situation is so replete with all kinds of possibilities that the temptation is unavoidable.

I spoke the other night, Mr. Speaker, about the tax on individuals and said that the 2 per cent tax on individuals was savage. My colleagues will treat of that particular point in greater detail.

Then there is the tax on life insurance companies. The difficulty about the proposal made by the minister is twofold. First of all, no distinction is made between large, well established companies with vast investment portfolios and many small provincial insurance companies which for a long time had a rather tough time to build themselves up and have will speak at much greater length on this minister must recognize that last year the the Minister of Finance and said it would not point when the budget resolutions on the Income Tax Act come up.

> I would point out that many relatively small fraternal organizations will be taxed in the same way as major insurance companies. These fraternal organizations are self-help organizations. I belong to one and I know that many members on both sides of the house belong to them. They are, in fact, a form of financial co-operative or insurance co-operative for individuals. These co-operatives are to be taxed in a number of ways. One wonders whether this is the thin end of the wedge with regard to the taxation of co-operatives. A fraternal organization that has an insurance program is to me a financial co-operative.

> My last point, Mr. Speaker, which I merely put forward at this time, concerns the advance in payments of corporation tax. Last the minister's predecessor year when advanced by four months the payment of corporation tax, leaving a mere two month gap, we indicated that potentially this was the most dangerous aspect of the minister's budget. In other words, we thought it would have the greatest impact and this it certainly has. The minister has now gone the whole hog and as a result of this budget any business, be it a two man trucking outfit, a small plastering concern or the biggest corporation in the country, has to pay its income tax on the same basis as a wage earner where cash is actually deducted at source.

> In the case of most trading concerns, where are their profits? They are tied up in inventories and these have to be liquidated. They are tied up in accounts receivable that have to be collected. Yet these concerns are going to be taxed on their estimated profits that are residing in these book accounts. A small contracting firm will have to assess for tax purposes the contracts that it may have negotiated. In addition to finding working capital they will have to find cash to pay their tax.

A private individual in business for himself and unincorporated is given a whole year in which to pay his tax. The professional man, such as the lawyer or the doctor, has to pay his tax quarterly. So why should a man who is in business but incorporated not be given still not recovered the initial expenses, shall I an equal deal? Is the next step going to be say, that were involved in getting their busi- that all professional men and self employed ness going. Shareholders' money has been persons will be paying their income tax on an spent in order to do this but the companies estimated monthly basis? This is rather like a have not yet had a chance to recoup. Never- spendthrift going along gaily spending his theless, the minister is going to tax them. I money at the fastest possible pace. The government had a windfall, a once in a lifetime it is going to be $215 million.

Mr. Stanfield: The next step will be that we are asked to pay next year's tax this year.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We will conjecture on that, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps we will be called upon to prepay our taxes. Rather a case of pay now and work later.

On the basis of what I said the other night, Mr. Speaker, and what I have said this afternoon, although I could spend another hour on the deficiencies of this budget, in the interest of letting others have a go at this rather poor document I should now like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin).

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

This house regrets that the government has repeatedly deceived this house and the Canadian public as to the extent and gravity of the 1968-69 budgetary deficit and has destroyed its own credibility and that of the 1969-70 budgetary forecasts notwithstanding the heaviest peacetime tax increases and consequently rejects the government's statement of the country's financial position.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, this budget must stand as a colossal fraud. It is unenterprising and it is unfair. It is a budget for the privileged, not for the vast majority of Canadians.

This government was elected on the promise of bringing in the "just society". Yet its first budget puts the lie to that promise. Rather than moving toward the just society the government has moved to make our world more unjust than before. The Canadian people have a right to expect fairness and intelligence from their government, but instead of fairness and intelligence they have gotten injustice and bird-brained indifference.

This budget must stand condemned on two counts: first, because it asks the poor to pay for the government's errors and mistakes; second, because it completely misses the whole point of what is wrong with thee Canadian economy. At this time in Canadian history, a time of slow growth in our economy, the government insists on dragging its feet and pulling the economy down even farther. It is not as though the government has not received opinions on how it should conduct the affairs of the country or what sort of priorities should be established in the management of the nation.

Let us just look at two such opinions, Mr. Speaker. In the 1967 memorandum to the government by the Canadian Labour Contime advance payment of $285 million. This gress, the congress pointed out the danger of lagging growth rates and rising unemployment and urged the government to take all necessary steps designed to prevent the economy from seriously slackening off. They repeated this warning in their 1968 memorandum to the government when they said in their statement on economy policy:

• (5:30 p.m.)

-it now seems perfectly clear that our advice was ignored. On numerous occasions in the past year and a half the government in budget after budget has either increased taxes or reduced government expenditures or both. These actions ostensibly aimed at balancing the budget have served only to worsen the situation. There is no special virtue in a balanced budget although it is now apparent that its attainment ranks far higher in the government's list of economic priorities than does the attainment of full employment.

On the other hand, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has advised the government that it should adopt a tight-fisted approach, despite the prospects of an economic slowdown in 1969. The general manager of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, when speaking in Calgary on September 30, said in his annual business outlook review that our rate of economic growth would slow down early next year. He also predicted that the growth in gross national product, in real terms, would drop to 3 per cent in the first half of 1969. He also predicted a probable increase in unemployment. He said in his statement:

Given this outlook, it might appear logical for the government to move to stimulate business... Serious errors could be made if government policy followed this direction.

Obviously the chamber of commerce does not think that the logical course ought to be followed and neither, apparently, does the government. Clearly, the chamber of commerce is little concerned about unemployment in this country and it is obvious that the government has accepted that particular body's outlook. It is hard to know why the government supports this kind of position since, after all, the chamber of commerce represents but a small segment of the people of Canada. Also, that chamber has almost invariably been wrong in its economic predictions. Almost invariably it has opposed progressive measures in this country such as medicare, the Canada Pension Plan and so on. Its new windmill to tilt at is the Canada development corporation.

Let it be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that this is a chamber of commerce government and it is small wonder and no surprise that country are being asked to pay for the govthe Prime Minister received one of his greatest ovations from that group when he addressed them. The Prime Minister is the new darling of the chamber of commerce, particularly since in his Halifax speech he showed solicitude for the rich of this nation. He is the darling of that body which has seldom been right in its attitude toward the Canadian economy. As a matter of fact their record of being wrong is so consistent that they can be considered a most reliable guide, a compass, in fact, pointing south. Yet even the chamber criticizes the government for doing what any businessman does.

They talk about a balanced budget and look with disfavour on government borrowing. Yet a businessman's success in this country is often judged by how much he owes the bank. It is all right for a businessman to borrow capital with which to buy machinery and keep his business rolling. That is a good way for him to operate. Yet the government must not operate in a businesslike manner. Oh, no. The government must not borrow capital with which to keep our people at work. Is it not curious that people who expect businessmen to be businesslike give most unbusinesslike advice to the government, advice which they never would take for themselves?

Although this budget has not met with the favour of the ordinary wage earner of this country, it has been received with approval by businessmen. I wish to read some of the responses of businessmen, as reported in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record of October 23. One of them said:

It's a fair budget so far as the country is concerned, but it's a little rough on the average wage earner.

Another said:

It doesn't affect the investment business much because Mr. Benson didn't slap on a capital gains tax.

Another said:

The 2 per cent tax is not too onerous for anybody.

This guy should ask the ordinary guy on the street just how onerous the 2 per cent tax is. One businessman at least had the objectivity to say:

I would have liked to see a higher rate of taxation on people such as myself. It's sort of a punish the poor budget.

The ordinary man in the street has a meagre enough wage to work on. Increasing taxes beyond the present level will work hardships. Really, Mr. Speaker, this budget is a punish the poor budget. The poor of this ernment's mistakes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Saltsman: If we accept the argument that taxes must be increased—I do not accept it and will have something to say about it later-why must it always be the little guy who pays? The bulk of new money will be raised by the 2 per cent social development tax which hits hardest those least able to pay. Thus our present, unfair tax system is made even more unfair by such an unfeeling levy.

The Carter commission on taxation said that Canada had one of the world's worst tax systems in terms of the burden it imposed on the middle and lower income groups. The Prime Minister in his just society, with his coat-tail hangers-on, could have implemented the reforms recommended by the commission, thus ending the privileges which have enabled many of the richest individuals and companies in Canada to escape their just share of taxation. Instead, we have a rejection of the general principle of the commission that "a dollar is a dollar and should be taxed as such." The minister seems to have rejected explicitly the concept that a buck is a buck. He rejects the principle that taxes should be based on ability to pay and that tax rates should be determined by what a person earns and not how he earns it. By applying this principle and eliminating all tax concessions now enjoyed by a privileged class much more revenue could be collected without increasing tax rates, which already bear too heavily on the working classes of this country.

There were sighs of relief in the Canadian mining, oil and gas industries when the new taxes were announced. I am sure that many corporate heads slept more soundly because of the minister's solicitude for their welfare. The minister introduced a mere proposed tightening of depletion allowance regulations, hardly affecting over-all corporate tax positions.

For equity and economic reasons the Carter commission recommended complete removal of both the depletion allowances and the three year tax holiday for the extractive industries. If they had been taxed the same way as other companies are taxed, these industries would, according to Carter, have paid $150 million more in 1964 taxes. Perhaps they would pay more today if Carter's recommendations were followed.

basis, Carter also pointed out that increasingly capital in this country is being seriously nothing much seems to have changed-has misallocated. We shall not obtain maximum advantage from our resources as long as there are inequities in our tax system. The so-called just society has introduced a social development income tax with a ceiling of $120. Let me say in no uncertain terms that this tax is a regressive tax that will fall most heavily on those who are now paying to the maximum of their ability.

This 2 per cent social development taxand I must congratulate the minister on his coining of euphemisms—is in fact considerably more than the 5 per cent surcharge on personal income tax budgeted by the Pearson government in November. The difference is that the government's new tax will be levied on taxable income, which is much greater than the basic tax on which the 5 per cent surcharge was to fall.

Only the rich are better off. The ceiling for their social development payments is $120. Under the proposed surcharge it would have been $600. The setting of an upper limit on the impact of the 2 per cent tax means that the small wage earner will be proportionately much harder hit than those earning $10,000 and upward. In addition, the lid for any taxpayer, whether he earns $10,000 a year or ten times that amount, is the same. And because the 2 per cent tax has a special name and is not considered as part of the regular personal income tax, Ottawa will not have to share it with the provinces.

This is another aspect of the budget which I find most disquieting—the reaction of the federal government toward the provinces, the attitude of "I'm all right, Jake; you take care of yourself." It is an attempt to pass the buck, to avoid responsibility, and to say: We shall be all right; our revenues are increasing faster than our commitments for the future and we shall come out smelling of roses when we are ready for an election, and the provinces will not. In a country which is concerned about national unity and about reaching an agreement acceptable as between one part of the nation and another, the arrogance of this government must stand as a roadblock to the achievement of national unity.

The details of the budget show clearly that the new Liberal government—perhaps we should call it the old Liberal government seems to have because nothing much

Apart from considering taxation on a fair changed-under its new leader-again, perhaps we should say its old leader because re-established the tradition of reaction and conservatism in economic policy, and this after only four months in office.

> I am unhappy about what the speaker who preceded me said but I recognize the difficulty and delicacy of his position. Appreciating his problems, I congratulate him on his speech today. This budget and the present government are so conservative and so orthodox that it is extremely difficult for members of the official opposition to do very much about it.

> In the course of the budget speech the Minister of Finance said:

> Canada is in a period of widespread prosperity but with troubling problems of inflation and regional unemployment.

> I say to the minister: how fatuous can you get? The hon, gentleman has little cause for self-congratulation on the performance of the Canadian economy. In relation to its potential the economy is in trouble. We are experiencing the highest unemployment rate in five years and the figure threatens to go even higher. A news story in the Toronto Star on October 1 under the headline "Employment Outlook Dim For Late 1968" contained the following:

> Employment prospects across Canada for the fourth quarter are not as bright as a year ago, reports manpower services latest survey.

> In the Ottawa Citizen of September 3 the following appeared:

> Unemployment may become a more serious economic problem in Canada than inflationary pressure.

> This was reported on the objective authority of the Toronto-Dominion Bank. Despite the indications of the danger of unemployment, the government insists on ignoring all the signs. The economy is not expanding rapidly enough to take care of new entrants into the labour market. The Economic Council of Canada puts it this way in the council's fifth annual review. I quote from page 183:

> By contrast with the previous six years, the expansion of employment opportunities since early in 1966 has not been rapid enough to fully absorb the marked increase in the labour force. The rate of growth and demand in employment moderated after the spring of 1966 and unemployment rose from a level of about 31 per cent of the labour force to 4½ per cent in the fall of 1967, after allowance for seasonal factors. Subsequently, it ranged narrowly around this figure for a time, then moved above 5 per cent in mid-1968, partly reflecting sharply changed conditions in the summer market for students.

Bad as these figures are, they are even worse when examined on a regional basis. Again, a government which has said it is concerned about national unity should realize that a major threat to national unity is the feeling that Canadians in certain parts of this country are not getting a fair share. When unemployment increases to a nationally high figure, certain parts of the country are far more adversely affected than others. In the Atlantic provinces the figure is 7 per cent; in Quebec it is 6.2 per cent, and in British Columbia, 6.1 per cent. This is despite the fact that the growth of the labour force in the maritimes is only about 1.9 per cent as against an average of 4 per cent. The maritimes are being denuded of their people. The exodus from that region is becoming massive. Even when migration takes place, tragic as it is for an area, there is really very little that these people can go to elsewhere. The economic council follows up its previous statement by saying:

The level of unemployment in Canada has recently been significantly above that of the United States for the first time since the middle of 1963.

We are going very quickly backwards. It is a dismal record compared with that of our closest neighbour. Rising prices have not been contained and unemployment is one and a half times as high. Although the gross national product is expected, according to the budget, to increase by about 8 per cent in 1968, the minister did not bother to tell us the significance of that figure. In terms of real output per employed person it is only one per cent, one of the lowest growth rates among western nations. It is an abysmal record and one in which the government can take no pride in view of its years in office since 1963.

The past performance of the government leaves much to be desired and the present budget will not improve the prospects for increases in productivity. The first annual review of the economic council had this to say—and it is a point which the council has made over and over again:

Over the past decade, the Canadian economy appears to have experienced one of the slowest rates of growth of any industrialized advanced country in the world both in terms of average productivity and average living standards.

This is despite the fact that we employ more capital per worker than any other country in the world. Usually there is a close relationship between employment of capital and productivity. The assumption has always been that if a worker is given more equipment he will be able to produce more and, generally speaking, this holds true. It holds true except in one country—Canada.

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion (page 1677) of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).

Mr. Salisman: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party has for too long confused the Canadian public on the question of the need for capital in Canada. I think it has become quite obvious, especially since the York study on capital was issued, that the problem in Canada is not shortage of money but rather the misuse of capital in the absence of policies for investment in this country. The evidence of this has been available for a long time: it has recently been reinforced by the Watkins report.

Under the desperate urgings of the former member for Davenport the government commissioned a study on foreign ownership and structure of Canadian industry. It was not a revolutionary document; it was rather mild, and one gets the feeling that the people who worked on that study desperately wanted the government to accept it. But even that mild document was not good enough for this reactionary government, and the report became a foundling, joining the abandoned child of the Carter report. Now we have two voices, those of Carter and Watkins, crying out in defence of their reports. We have fallen over ourselves in a desperate effort to obtain American capital, with the result that we have oriented our whole domestic policy to that purpose.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who preceded me, rightly pointed out how we have subordinated most of our policies in a desperate pursuit of American money. And to what end? As one of the writers of the Watkins report pointed out in the Journal of Canadian Studies of August, 1968:

The report's conclusion . . . was that we had dissipated much of the gain from foreign direct inand that most of the blame for this state of affairs—and the solution lay squarely with governmental policy or the lack of it.

Professor Watkins, who headed the study, had this to say in the Executive magazine of August, 1968:

-we can say that without an appropriate set of government policies which create an efficient structure of industry in Canada, the benefits of foreign direct investment tend to be emasculated.

Most governments in the world resist invaders that would take over their country; but not Canada. The invaders did not even have to fire a shot, they did not have to build a Trojan horse; the government simply flung the gates wide open and took the marauders to dinner—and what a great feast was that dinner. They consumed 60 per cent of our manufacturing, 75 per cent of our petroleum and natural gas, 59 per cent of our mining and smelting, 97 per cent of the automobile industry, 97 per cent of rubber, 78 per cent of chemicals and 73 per cent of electrical apparatus.

But in this budget there is not one word, not one hint of any indication from the government of the danger facing political sovereignty in Canada or of the abject economic dependence they have forced upon this country. It is not just the need for policies designed for the Canadian culture; it is a question of productivity as well. The reason for the low productivity in this country is the presence of United States branch plants. Productivity is not a function of how hard a man sweats; it is a function of how well the resources of a country are used, and the resources of this country are not being used well because our government is taking no interest in their use. We in this country could be enjoying the highest standard of living in the world. We certainly have the resources for that purpose. We in this country should be producing enough wealth to pay for all those programs that are so necessary to a civilized country.

The 1967 report of the O.E.C.D. showed that of 14 countries Canada has the lowest productivity growth per person employed. We stand behind Japan, France, Austria, Italy, West Germany, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, the Netherlands, Belgium, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States. We cannot enjoy what we do not produce. We cannot solve the problems of poverty with balanced budgets and with government attitudes reluctant to make the economy more efficient and productive.

The main thrust of economic action in Canada should be toward policies of affluence and justice, toward increasing our wealth so that there will be more to share and more to provide the means of diminishing the appalling poverty in this country. Canadians were shocked at the forthright report of the economic council in its fifth annual review when it said:

Poverty in Canada is real. Its numbers are not in the thousands but the millions. There is more of it than our society can tolerate, more than our economy can afford and far more than existing measures and efforts can cope with. Its persistence, at a time when the bulk of Canadians enjoy one of the highest standards of living in the world is a disgrace.

move to ameliorate the conditions of poverty disgrace. In a report in the Toronto Star of October 21 the Canadian Welfare Council pointed out that 400,000 children live in squalour. The report went on to say that the first major study of housing conditions of welfare recipients in Canada indicates as many as 400,000 children live in shoddy, depressing and disease-ridden homes that lack even basic toilet facilities. On October 24, in the Toronto Telegram, the Canadian Welfare Council accused finance minister Benson and the federal government of just plain, damned dirty tactics. The executive director, Mr. Bates, said:

Mr. Benson was only attempting to mislead the Canadian public by calling the 2 per cent increase in income tax a social development tax. It is most unfair and most inaccurate because the budget does not say there is any social welfare program or social development program to go with such a tax. He claimed the label was part of an apparent campaign by the Trudeau government to discredit social welfare programs and to condition the Canadian public against the financing of any further such programs. It is just plain, damned dirty tactics-

It is not that the Canadian economy lacks resources to ameliorate these conditions. It is not that the Canadian economy does not possess the inherent ability to correct poverty and provide decent housing for its citizens. It is just that this government has refused to set priorities in our economy, priorities that are meaningful and productive for our people.

• (8:10 p.m.)

At a time when we cannot build enough houses for those who need them, construction goes on which we could very nicely do without. Retail chains seem to have no trouble meeting their needs. A recent report in the Globe and Mail states the Dominion Stores plans to open 200 more stores and Steinberg's intends to open 15 or 20 stores a year. Kresge plans to open five or six. It would seem that every major chain is expanding. There does not seem to be any lack of money for their expansion plans. It is too much to expect that those millions of Canadians who are badly in need of homes would agree that shopping centres should have first priority. Perhaps instead of camping in the office of the mayor of Toronto some of these people who need homes so badly might be bedding out at the shopping centres.

In the face of these problems of high unemployment, not enough jobs for the young people who are entering the labour force, a bad [Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Speaker, any budget that does not productivity performance in our society, intolerable poverty amidst the affluence of in this country must also be considered a some, the wrong priorities in terms of the needs of its people, what does this government propose to the Canadian public? It proposes a stand pat budget. It proposes to drag its feet. It proposes a balancing act, but it is a balancing act that will see the Minister of Finance take a tumble. Just as the former minister could not move his budget close to balance, just as his predictions on deficits were wrong, so too this minister probably will be wrong. If he balances his budget at all it will be at a cost of intolerable unemployment. The only time it makes sense to balance a budget is when the economy is operating at or near full potential. We are a long way from that.

> If the minister wants to balance his budget sensibly he should be introducing full employment policies, because only under full employment can a budget truly be balanced without disaster. Departures from potential output will cause the Canadian people to endure economic losses which can never be regained. At less than full employment the government's taxation expenditure system automatically produces a deficit. Revenue does not rise as fast as it would at full employment because individual incomes do not move up into higher tax brackets. Spending on welfare and unemployment insurance automatically increases as the economy falls away from full employment. Together these two effects produce some economic effects in the form of an automatic deficit any time the Canadian economy falls short of its potential output. The deficit that is produced in this manner is just about big enough to stop unemployment from worsening, provided consumer business and government spending stays steady.

A balanced budget is correct policy for stabilizing a fully employed economy, but at present the Canadian labour force is not fully employed. Indeed we are far from that goal, and the rate of unemployment is rising throughout the land. The Minister of Finance has responded to this problem with a budget aimed at economic contraction rather than expansion. He has cut the deficit this year and has promised to balance the budget next year. This policy ignores the need for a policy to revive employment, and it goes far beyond the idea of a balanced budget at full employment. It is a ridiculous growth impeding policy.

Canada does not allow the Minister of Finance to balance his budget when there is 5 per cent unemployment. If he attempts this policy he will be frustrated. Tax revenues will fall below expectation and payments to unemployment insurance will rise. The economy will fall even further away from potential and a deficit will appear.

Canadians cannot afford to lose goods and services which they might otherwise have enjoyed because the Minister of Finance is unable to distinguish between the means to achieve policy and the ends of economic policy. The government's budget is a tool of economic policy and the balancing of the budget is not an end in itself. The government has set the goal of achieving potential output. To do that it must use its policy instruments wisely, reverse the rise of unemployment and plan a deficit that will put Canada back on her potential economic growth path. If the economy were fully employed it would seem as the budget would be balanced automatically. A few years back in the 1950's when ministers were attempting to get a deficit they could not because the economy was operating at close to potential.

The minister might agree with what I say but argue that I am discounting the problems of inflation. Let me say at this time that I regard those problems seriously. I think steps must be taken to contain inflation, if only to avoid the kind of hysteria we have seen on the part of the government. The minister should tell the Canadian people that some price rises are unavoidable and that some prices have to catch up with other prices. As has been pointed out, many of our price rises are tied in with the United States. We should disentangle ourselves from the United States economy, so that we will not be so tied in with their problems.

In order to compensate for some of the inevitable price rises that will take place, I think the government as a matter of policy should be reviewing our pension programs, to see that they increase automatically, in order to take care of the difficulties and problems created for people on pensions. It is unfair for the government to suggest to pensioners that prices will be held and they will not be hurt. This government knows it cannot hold the prices beyond a certain point.

If the government were indeed to be truly fair and honest with the pensioners of this country it would make those adjustments, so that the people do not suffer from the price

The nature of the tax transfer system in increases. I believe the time is past when inflation can be controlled by macro-fiscal policies. It is not every part of the economy that is inflated. If a real attempt is to be made in this regard, specific policies must be instituted and specific measures must be taken. The government should create a prices review board to see that price increases are examined when they take place, in order to determine that they are genuine and that no price increases take place unless they can be justified.

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to place on the record some information regarding the dreadful cost of unemployment when it takes place in this country. The Economic Council of Canada, when it talks about the year 1960, says:

> The economy was capable of producing over 8 per cent more production and income than actually occurred. The increases in the major federal tax revenues stemming from an attainment of potential output would have been considerably greater than the implied rise in output itself. It has been calculated that personal income tax yields at the given rates would have been 12 per cent and corporation income tax yiels by more than one third. In the aggregate, such calculations indicate the potential output levels in 1960. Federal yields, had the rates been given effect, would have been over 18 per cent higher than the actual collections in that year, and the economy was operating substantially below capacity.

Although it is very difficult to translate this kind of information into current terms one thing must be obvious. We have suffered an enormous loss in production as a result of unemployment. It would appear that there was a potential loss of five per cent in the 1967 gross national product, accompanied by an over-all tax potential shortfall of over 10 per cent. In other words, we lost $6 billion in goods and services in 1967 and $1 billion worth of taxes more than the minister is attempting to raise in this budget.

The purpose of putting these facts on record is to indicate the outrageous stupidity of a government that tries to raise its revenues by contracting the economy and making every small taxpayer pay for its mistakes. With an expanded economy, tax revenues would be more than sufficient to take care of the needs of this government plus the additional programs that are so badly required in this country.

• (8:20 p.m.)

This budget explicitly rejects the Keynesian revolution of government fiscal policy used in promoting full employment of the labour force. It rejects the application of modern economic theory in the area of full employment surplus in attempting to achieve the full potential of the economy. The budget rejects also the Canadian white paper on employment and income of 1945 in which the federal government assumed complete responsibility for the full employment of the labour force and undertakes instead a deliberate policy of forced unemployment in Canada. The budget rejects the general philosophy of the Carter commission on taxation, that the first and most essential purpose of taxation is to share the burdens of the state fairly among all individuals and families.

Canadians are shocked when we say today that the government of this country created unemployment; but the government has created unemployment. I think Canadians should realize what their government has done. This budget rejects the goals of the Economic Council of Canada of full employment, of a high rate of economic growth and of equitable distribution of rising incomes. For these reasons this budget should be rejected by this parliament. I therefore move: seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and rejects in particular the 2 per cent income tax increase, with its $120 cut-off, which is an outrageous burden on those in the lower and middle income brackets and adds to the inequity of our tax system.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have my turn this evening to say a few words in order to criticize the budget that was presented to us.

Mr. Speaker, this evening I should have liked to have heard our expert on financial matters, the member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe), who certainly will have the opportunity of analysing the budget and of pointing out its weaknesses, not only for the benefit of the hon. members but especially to acquaint the people of Canada with the work that goes on in this house, and in particular with those things that keep happening every session. I shall therefore limit myself to generalities this evening, leaving it to some of my colleagues to analyse the budget in detail.

Listening to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), when he brought down his first budget—but not the first one we have had in this year 1968—I realized that the formula was always the same. Much emphasis, but very poor results. At the very beginning of [Mr. Saltsman.]

his statement, as will be found on page 1677 of Hansard, the minister said, and I quote:

The government and its strong parliamentary majority have come into office with many new ideas and a desire to look at our problems with a fresh perspective.

The wish he expresses, Mr. Speaker, every Minister of Finance has expressed before him; indeed, there is no lack of good will in the departments, or on the part of the minister and the government chambers. Further on, the minister tells us what is lacking, and I quote:

However-

—after having expressed that great desire, there is a "but".

—we have, however, many major commitments. These restrict our freedom of innovation and make it necessary for us to work out our new ideas over time.

I feel that those lines are full of meaning for the people of Canada, because the minister admits that he is not free to innovate as he would like to, that he will need time. How much time will he need? One year, two years, the whole period the present government is in power? That is precisely what the whole population is wondering about.

I think that the members who want more information about that budget had better deal directly with the senior officials since the minister is often their obedient tool, their spokesman. I do not see any in the galleries tonight but usually they are there watching. That is what makes the people say that Canada often has an irresponsible government. A democratic government that is not elected by the majority of the people cannot be responsible to the people and that is precisely the present state of our government of bureaucrats. If you add to them the spokesmen who are the ministers elected by the campaign funds of the financiers, who are even less able to represent the voice of the people, you have an idea of our bureaucratic dictatorship which some people still have the nerve to call a monarchist democracy.

It has become customary to get a new minister of finance for each budget, but great care is taken not to tamper with the government machinery. With each budget new actors in new costumes are seen but the director remains always the same. They claim that it is a brand-new play, but we readily realize that the original version goes back to one hundred years. And the Canadian comedy

This budget resembles all the others in that it levies new taxes on those who can least afford it. If we consider the budget speeches delivered since this government came into power, we see that a series of tax increases have been deducted from the wages of our family heads, thus reducing the purchasing power. Some will object that the people constantly require more services from the State; the government meets these numerous requirements by levying taxes, surtaxes and triple taxes, since the advocates of the new method of taxation start from the principle that the government does not give anything for nothing.

Some even say that the government does not create anything, and yet something is created here in Canada. In fact, chartered banks create monetary credit. Who gave them the power to manipulate, to multiply their assets 14 times, to create out of nothing, with a mere stroke of the pen, new credits which cost them nothing but on which provincial and federal governments may pay 10 per cent in interest, since the ceiling on bank interests has been removed?

The federal government only has been able to grant chartered banks the privilege of serving as substitute for the State. That means that only parliament had this power of creation. Then, why would the present government, through its agency, the Bank of Canada, not recover its powers, by giving back to the Bank of Canada the exclusive right of creation which it granted to chartered banks? By so doing, the government would kill two birds with one stone since, besides innovating, it would recover the tool enabling it to control its economy.

In this way, every year, through the Bank of Canada, the government would be able to take over and to administer the excess yields or the new credit in the country, which it could also multiply by 14, if necessary, like the chartered banks are doing now.

Finance started to look for money where it is banks that they disclose their hidden to be found, when he has to levy a new tax, reserves-which amount to more than a bilthat is, in the pocket of those who are lion dollars-on which they have never paid exploiting the country. We are continually any income tax. All that was done with the being told that Canada is the second richest approval of the former governments as well country in the world, and the minister him- as the present one. The same thing applies to goes on, as the parliamentary majority is 22, which is to be found on page 1678 of Hansard, and I quote:

> We have a labour force that is growing more rapidly than that of any other industrial country. It is also increasingly well educated and trained for work in modern jobs. Our natural resources are the envy of others and the basis of our industry and wealth. We have a large industrial capacity, much of it now relatively modern and little of it in serious excess.

> Although we are the richest country in the world and the one with the greatest natural resources, Mr. Speaker, we are also the one most deeply in debt, because foreigners control almost 80 per cent of our economy.

> That is why the minister said, as shown on page 1679 of Hansard:

> We do however face serious problems in organizing our economic advance and expansion, in managing it and in financing it. Both in our public and private activities these tasks are going to require the best brains and work that Canadians can devote to them. Great economic advance is open to us but only if we manage our affairs well.

> I think that when the minister said that, he was convinced that the greatest problem facing Canada today is that it does not control its own economy. In fact, our economy is controlled by foreign capital and interests which we merely serve. Mr. Speaker, that is not a very reassuring picture for the present administrators, nor a very honourable achievement for their predecessors.

> We the members of the Ralliement créditiste, maintain that Canada is rich enough, if it were to make logical fiscal and monetary reforms, to give its population a decent standard of living and that a Canadian government can administer the country soundly and rationally without imposing taxes the way it is doing today.

> The present government says that it is impossible and the people backed them up on June 25. We accept the verdict, but we now suggest to the government that even under its taxation system, the logical thing to do would be to begin by taxing those who can pay taxes or those who are in the most favoured positions.

As an example, I would say that the gov-I think it is time that the Minister of ernment should require from the chartered self said it in the speech he made on October the large companies, whether they are foreign or not, which are granted unreasonable privileges and leeways which are on the verge of complicity.

After all those loopholes and all that deliberate forgetfulness, the house is told that the Minister of Finance cannot make both ends meet and that the labourer rather than the profiteer must be taxed. According to the new minister, there should be no more talk about taxes but rather about social development. What a brain-wave that was, Mr. Speaker. It must be the result of much thinking on the part of officers of the Department of Finance where at least some financial experts can be found. But the minister should not get excited, because it will not produce the results he expected. The worker has known for a long time that a tax is a tax, and that the so-called social development is also equivalent to a tax which will take a little more out of his pay.

Not being a first rate expert in financial matters, I prefer to stand on safe ground when stating my case. I would therefore like to read part of an editorial published on October 23, 1978, after the budget had been brought down.

An hon. Member: 1968?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, 1968; it is a little sooner. Now I quote:

In spite of the wishes expressed during the last election campaign by the Liberal team led by Mr. Trudeau, to reduce government expenses, in order to bring down a balanced budget and in spite of the fact that government expenses were cut down since it came to power, the federal government will register a deficit of $675 million this year. In addition, the Minister of Finance had to levy new taxes and increase others to reduce the magnitude of that deficit. And so, an additional tax of 2 per cent, called the "social development tax", will be paid by all taxpayers. On the other hand, corporations will have to pay their income tax two months in advance;—

Should another minister take over the portfolio, I am afraid the companies—and I know whereof I speak, for I own a company—will have to pay their taxes a year ahead of time, to give a chance to the Minister of Finance. Can you imagine the headache for company directors.

—insurance companies now have to pay a corporation tax; banks and mortgage companies will see their non-taxable reserves reduced by half, while oil and mining companies will be subjected to controls on their non-taxable allowance, namely the depletion allowance. In short, this is a harsh budget which will affect the economic life of all Canadians.

Through these new taxes and the increased rate of certain others, the Minister of Finance (Mr. [Mr. Gauthier.]

Benson) is firmly resolved and expects to balance the budget for the 1969-70 fiscal year. He even optimistically forecasts a $5 million surplus revenue over expenditure. Faced with these predictions, the taxpayers are rightly perplexed and even pessimistic for, last March, the government had forecast expenditures of $10,225,000,000. A few months later, it realized that it would go $446 million over that figure. Announcing on Tuesday that the total expenditure of the government would be $10,780,000,000, Mr. Benson noted another increase in government expenditure of $109 million for the present fiscal year, and those are not yet the final figures for 1968-69. We note that there has been a net increase of $555 million over the estimates prepared eight months ago by the former minister of finance (Mr. Sharp). Taking into account the incredible mistakes in the estimates, which a company could not survive, what confidence can we have in the declared intentions of the government to restrain and retrench government expenses and to balance the budget? Mr. Sharp's estimates, last February, and the almost uncontrolled increase in expenditure compared with the said estimates, are examples characteristic of the efficiency of the plans of the government. Once more, therefore, the federal government, presents an inflationary budget which affects all the consumers whether or not they are poor. The loans he will have to obtain in order to make up for the deficit will increase the inflationary pressure and new taxes will increase the prices of consumer goods. The more the budgets are brought down at all levels of government, the more they look alike.

As I was saying a few minutes ago, this is always the same thing. Here is another excerpt of a Montreal newspaper with the heading:

The two percent increase is a hold-up.

The following, Mr. Speaker, reflects the opinion of the labour unions:

Mr. Louis Laberge, president of the Q.F.L., was commenting yesterday on the budget brought down Tuesday evening in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Edgar Benson.

Mr. Laberge did not go half way about it when he said: The two percent increase in income tax for individuals, with a maximum of $120 is indeed a hold-up at the expense of people with a low income by a government recently elected with misrepresentations about a "just society".

Should the minister want to know about popular opinion, let him read the newspapers.

On October 24, in La Presse we read:

"The small people again have to pay. The budget is always the same as the small people have to pay the shot—so was saying somebody, yesterday morning, on coming out of the Place d'Armes metro. This sums up the general impression of the people—

-of the province of Quebec and Canada.

I should like to read another item published in the October 23 issue of the Journal de Montréal:

Budget increased by $890 million

Before bringing down his first budget yesterday in the House of Commons and incurring the criticism which would inevitably follow, the Minister of Finance in the Trudeau cabinet, Mr. Edgar Benson, had a haircut and a light meal.

That I did not know.

His total budget is of the order of $11,670 billion-

An hon. Member: Say it again, he did not get it.

Mr. Gauthier: Indeed.

An hon. Member: Because of his meal, he was not wearing his ear-piece. Say it again for his guidance.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we are told that before bringing down his budget, the minister -had a haircut and a light meal.

I did not know that.

His total budget reaches $11,670 billion, or an increase of $890 million compared to that of 1967-68.

In order to bear such an increase, the Canadian people will be taxed for the second time this year. Minister Benson has also provided for a cut in expenditures—

And for doing away with haircuts, probably.

-a cut in expenditures-

Mr. Speaker, I think that these few criticisms voiced by the public through the press are justified. But what does the minister propose to do about all those tax increases, against all those taxes which burden the workers? What solution does he suggest? He states it again here, as reported on page 1681 of Hansard, and I quote:

1969-1970 Fiscal Outlook

It is difficult to forecast our position in the next fiscal year at such an early date as this, yet I feel I must make some effort to do so in order to develop the tax proposals that I think it is necessary to place before you tonight.

We intend to continue severe restraint-

He does not ask himself whether it is possible to collect more money in the country, but he proceeds right away to talk about restraint. They all think of that famous tax. It seems to be their only solution.

We intend to continue severe restraint upon those direct expenditure programs under the government's control—

This is rather serious.

—under the government's control, eliminating what is obsolete and permitting only the degree of growth that is essential.

We shall have to resist requests by members on both sides of the house, and from groups and individuals outside, to spend money for worthy purposes which we cannot afford to do along with the other things we are doing. It will also be The Budget-Mr. Gauthier necessary to maintain a virtual freeze on the size of the public service of Canada. We shall also seek the vigorous co-operation of the provincial governments in the same kind of restraint—

It is only then that he appeals to the provinces, I think.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member to remind him that the time allotted to him has expired, unless the house agrees to let him go on.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleagues and I will be through in two minutes.

In such circumstances, the federal government decides to meet the representatives of the provinces because we have always noticed that each time it wanted to take certain steps about the shared cost programs, as it did about the winter works program for instance, it acted first. It started by discontinuing winter works and then it informed the provinces that it would no longer grant subsidies. It has always been its way of interpreting relations between the two levels of government. I realize that when it is a matter of saying to the provinces: It is impossible, you will not do that, then it wants to consult the provinces. I hope that once it will at least heed the advice it so often gets in this house and consult the provinces more often. Then, it might get better guidance.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, we feel it would be more advisable, instead of reducing the subsidies paid to the provinces, that the expenditures for national defence be cut by 50 per cent and the interest on the national debt, which is unjustified and unjustifiable, be reduced.

In my opinion, the government should meet the financiers. I do not blame the present Minister of Finance himself; I mean the Department of Finance in general. Since its creation, legislation is being adopted to protect it. Let the minister go to these magnets of finance, to the chartered banks, and ask them for an extension of interest, a gift of interest, for two or three years. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the Minister of Finance did that, he would be elected Minister of Finance for at least ten years.

In conclusion, I therefore suggest this to the government: instead of cutting down useful projects or cancelling them, why does it not look for other solutions and other ways of saving, to balance the federal budget which, in spite of what the minister has told us, will surely have another deficit at the end of the year.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate to second the amendment moved by the member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) this afternoon.

I must say that the member for Edmonton West moved an amendment which, to my mind, is realistic with regard to the financial situation of our country.

The statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) when he brought down the budget was, I think, a parody of the statements made by the members of the present government during the election campaign. At that time, according to them, Canadian finances were faring very well. We were promised a balanced budget, thorough fiscal reforms which would do away with obvious inequalities and injustices in matters of taxation.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Today, we face a budget statement filled with contradictions with regard to what expenses are foreseen, and reductions of the moneys voted for non essential programs. There is a general lack of planning in government expenditures. Those contradictions on the financial state of our country have placed the government in a strained position and we wonder about the credibility of this government in financial matters.

On May 21 last, the present Minister of Finance stated that the Canadian budget deficit for 1967-68 would amount to $808 million, while on the 1st of June, the former minister of finance (Mr. Sharp) stated that there would be a deficit of $740 million, which would be adjusted to $785 million on November 30. Expenditures were 12 per cent higher than in 1966-67, while revenue had increased by only 8 per cent.

During the election campaign, Mr. Speaker, in order to secure the support of the Canadian businessmen, the minister kept repeating all over Canada that the new government would propose a balanced budget.

Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) made the following statement.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

[English]

The next budget will be a balanced one and every attempt will be made to hold the line on tax increases.

[Translation]

On June 6, 1968, the Minister of Finance, in turn, promised that a new Liberal administration would present a balanced budget. On June 18, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) declared also, at Fort William, that a new Liberal government would present a balanced budget.

What then has happened since June 25 that made this government hasten to forget its electoral commitments?

Mr. Paul Langlois (Chicoutimi): The budget is indeed well balanced.

Mr. Asselin: For next year it is far from sure. Would the honourable member for Chicoutimi have the cheek to get up and tell us, as the honourable Minister of Finance has done for the past six months, there is going to be a balanced budget when his estimates have shown discrepancies amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars?

Would the honourable member dare to get up and say on behalf of the Minister of Finance that the budget for next year will be well balanced notwithstanding the flagrant inconsistencies of his last budget?

Mr. Speaker, one will admit that a Minister of Finance can make a mistake, but a series of contradictory statements will never lead us to believe in the minister's good faith, and this budget clearly indicates that the Canadian people are entitled to question this government's credibility.

We have been trying for two years to make the government understand that it should cut its expenses drastically. Besides, cuts were promised to us on several occasions, when we made representations to the government.

We also asked the government to establish priorities with regard to expenditures in order to check inflation effectively. Unfortunately, this was not done and the budget is the result.

I wonder whether the minister has some notions of accounting or if his computers or his adding machines broke down, but the dif-On June 3, 1968, at Calgary, the former ference in the estimates lead us to believe minister of national revenue, who is now that all is not well in the Department of Finance.

> Mr. Speaker, a review of the budget in an Ottawa newspaper, on October 23, 1968 clearly shows that every time the minister has it is found in the budget which the hon. made forecasts, he has been utterly wrong.

Let us consider carefully that review which states: Six months ago, Mr. Benson said that government expenditures would not exceed $10,300 million for the current year and that the budget would be balanced through a minor tax increase. A month ago, in September, the government tabled the estimates for the current year which reached $10,670 million.

On October 22, the night he introduced his budget, the honourable minister stated that expenditures would amount to $10,780 million, or 4.6 per cent more than his estimates of six months ago.

However, federal government expenditures for the fiscal year commencing April 1 are estimated to range about $11,670 million, namely 8.2 per cent more than for the current fiscal year and 13.3 per cent more than the first estimates which amounted to $10,300 million. What does this mean in terms of dollars, Mr. Speaker?

Federal expenditures for the current year exceed by $480 million the estimates tabled six months ago. And the minister suggested that next year, government expenditures would reach $890 million.

This year's increase of $480 million represents an average of $33 for each individual on the labour market. The increase in expenditures for next year, will amount to $62 for each individual on the labour market. This year, the government will spend the equivalent of $744 for each individual on the labour market, that is $33 more than forecast last May. Next year, the government will spend the equivalent of $817 for each individual now on the labour market, that is, $96 more than forecast six months ago.

How is it possible to reconcile this enormous increase in expenditures with the statement of the Minister of Finance who, according to the Canadian press, said in Peterborough on June 5, that he would resign as Minister of Finance if the members of his party expected too much from the government regarding the increase in expenditures. Naturally, the minister has no alternative but to retrench government expenditure and fulfil the promise he made in Peterborough last June.

Mr. Speaker, we must now ask ourselves the following question: Who will pay for the about the statement made during the last incompetence the minister has shown in planning government spending? The answer was minister introduced last week: Taxes, taxes and more taxes. The small taxpayer will again be the one hardest hit by this budget.

Mr. Speaker, the minister called this a social development tax. In my opinion, it is more of a social injustice tax. When a taxpayer earning $5,000 is treated in the same way as one whose annual income is between $10,000 and $15,000 a year, this tax, which has a ceiling of $120, is, in my opinion, flagrantly unfair to the lower income groups. The government cannot be asked to tax the rich people. The other day, the Prime Minister said in Halifax that, in a forthcoming budget, he was considering reducing taxes for the people that are well off. Why not tax the rich ones? The Minister of Finance explained it in his last speech on the budget: it is feared that there will be a brain drain of highly paid people to the United States.

The poor people who have not fared better in life must remain in the country and be burdened with taxes that have been announced in the budget speech. In my opinion, this budget brought down by the minister of Finance is one that hits the taxpayers the hardest since the end of the war.

• (9:10 p.m.)

In his speech, the Minister does not indicate that the government will substantially reduce its expenditures. I said earlier that this is a budget of social injustice and to show you why I will give you some examples.

In 1969, the $550 exemption will be lowered to $300 for any child not reaching the age of 16 before the end of the fiscal year. At the present time, taxpayers are allowed a $550 exemption for a dependent child but this amount is brought down to $300 when the child is eligible for family allowances.

Another example would be the 2 per cent tax on individual income effective on next January 1. Whatever their income, Mr. Speaker, this tax is applicable to all taxpayers through an additional deduction of 2 per cent on their taxable income. However, as a favour to the more fortunate people, that tax will not exceed $120 a year. I repeat, this is a social injustice budget,

What will the workers say, Mr. Speaker, electoral campaign by the government now in office? What is this social development tax, given by hon. members during the day and Mr. Speaker? How much will a married man with two children eligible for family allowance, pay as a result of this increase? A person earning $3,500 a year now pays $102 in income tax and he will have to pay an additional amount of $16 because of this tax hike. A person earning $4,000 a year is now contributing $184, and because of the new tax he wil pay $26 more. A taxpayer now earning $4,500 a year and paying $275 in income tax will have to pay $36 more. Those earning $5,000 are now paying $376 and will pay an additional $46 due to the increase. The one who is earning $6,000 is paying $597; from now on, he will have to lay out $66 more. The one who earns $7,000 pays at the present time $842; he will now have to pay out $86 more, as of January 1st, 1969.

But the difference is not so great—as I said earlier-between those ones who earn $5,000 and those earning $10,000. As a matter of fact, those who earn $10,000 pay $1,644, but they will have to disburse only $120 more. It is not even twice as much as the ones who earn $5,000 a year! As far as those who earn $15,000 or $25,000 a year are concerned, they will pay the maximum, as I said earlier, of $120. Mr. Speaker, this tax which is called the "social development" tax by the minister is, to my mind, a "social injustice" tax. Once again, it will be the low-income individuals, the small wage earners who will pay the bill, because those who earn $8,000, $15,000 or $25,000 a year, do not care if they have to pay $120 more.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal government has brought down eight budgets since 1963, and has increased the personal income tax four times. One budget reduced taxes, naturally on the eve of elections, and three brought no change.

Personal income tax, Mr. Speaker, is saturated at all levels. There are provincial taxes, school taxes, municipal taxes and federal taxes and the taxpayers cannot bear any further taxation.

Thus, when mention is made of a social development tax, I say that the minister has made a big mistake. I say once more that it would be called the social injustice tax.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the new budget will create new tensions between the provinces and the federal government because the Prime Minister said in Halifax the other day that the provinces must not expect any share of the taxes collected by the federal government. God knows that right now they are faced with serious financial problems.

[Mr. Asselin.]

It is well and good to introduce legislation on the status of the official languages—I am in favour of that—but I think that the first reform needed is that recommended by the Economic Council of Canada, namely to amend the constitution in such a way as to set up new jurisdictions between the federal government and the provinces so that the latter can get the money that will enable them to meet their obligations in the social, industrial and economic fields.

If the Prime Minister really wants to improve the lot of the provinces, we advise him to propose at the next federal-provincial conference an amendment to the constitution, which will enable the federal and the provincial governments to come to an agreement, to discuss together the jurisdictions and fields of taxation so that the tension between the provinces and the federal government can be cleared up.

Mr. Speaker, if the federal government does not want in any way to give part of the incomes to provinces at the time of the next fiscal arrangements, where will the provinces get their money? Evidently, provinces cannot work miracles. Their only means of getting incomes is to do as the federal government does: levy taxes on taxpayers. And the taxpayers in Quebec or in Canada until the next fiscal year will be taxed even more because the federal government does not want to leave to provinces fields of taxation which belong to them and to which they are entitled.

Mr. Speaker, the needs of the provinces are extremely important and are increasing over the years.

In 1967, Quebec spent $591,614,300 for educational purposes out of a budget of $2.791,000,000.

An hon. Member: What is the contribution of the federal government?

Mr. Asselin: I will tell you later on.

For the construction of schools, the federal government pays certain costs. In 1967-68, the federal government paid $71 million to help the provinces in their construction plans for schools, while we know that the budget of provinces for school construction amounted to $125 million in 1967-68 and that the estimates for 1968-69 will he about the same. But provinces are not any richer than last year. The federal government is cutting down its contribution to $57 million for the 1968-69 year, a reduction of $14 million, whereas provinces-

An hon. Member: No-

Mr. Asselin: -my hon. friend says no. He should look at the figures over there. There is a difference of $14 million between 1967 and 1968. Let him iot it down. If he wants to refute my statement and if I am mistaken, I shall stand corrected, but the figures I have here have been audited by both the federal government and the province of Quebec.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, social security is a field in which, as has already been said, there is jurisdiction overlapping. We know that social security, under the constitution, comes under provincial jurisdiction and we are aware of the circumstances under which it has been given up to the federal government for a number of years. Now, the province of Quebec spent $464 million in 1967-68 for social security. In 1968-69, it will spend $407 million. The federal grants to Quebec for that item amounted to $10 million in 1967-68, but for 1968-69, no grant has been provided for.

I am glad that my hon, friend is coming closer in order to listen to me more attentively. He was too far away before.

Mr. Speaker, the same applies to all the Canadian provinces. The same difficulties and the same problems in the field of education are found in Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and all the other provinces. They are facing serious financial problems, and the federal government refuses to concede a single point with regard to the fiscal arrangements made with the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, there is another subject which I should like to deal with tonight, and I am very glad to see that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) is here tonight. I should like to talk about the tendency on the part of the present government since it came to power to interfere increasingly in matters under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

The other day the Secretary of State made a statement in the house concerning E.T.V. He said that his department would soon set department is planning to do, namely grant up a task force of experts to go around the licences to private companies to allow them the minister would be one of the last to contradict me when I say that education falls exclusively within provincial jurisdiction. Naturally, the federal government has rights with regard to means of communication. The honourable minister told us in his statement that his department intended to give licences to private companies to operate E.T.V. and that, at the same time, the province could not be guaranteed the same privilege, that is of having a licence to avail themselves of the services of E.T.V.

Recently, the Quebec premier protested against this further intrusion of the federal government in provincial matters at the federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa last February. Quebec said very clearly to the former government, which has been slightly altered, that E.T.V. fell within provincial jurisdiction. The federal government has jurisdiction over the means of communication. But why quarrel and create tension between the provinces with regard to education when the minister tells us in his statement that licences will be granted private companies? Still, he did not guarantee that the provinces, should they make similar requests to operate an E.T.V. system, would be treated by the federal government as it will treat the private companies.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Will the member allow me a question?

Mr. Asselin: Certainly.

Mr. Pelletier: I have already heard the member say three times that I said in this house that the federal government would grant E.T.V. permits to private companies. That assertion has just been made three times in a row and does not correspond in any way to the statement I made the other day; I wonder where the member got this information.

Mr. Asselin: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have to take the word of the Secretary of State, but many statements have been made outside the house, in addition to those made in this house or in the committees. Would the minister like to contradict me about what his country making inquiries on E.T.V. I am sure to go into educational broadcasting when the provinces are not even sure of getting licences?

Mr. Pelletier: That is precisely what I was asking the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

There has never been any question of granting licences to private companies for educational television and the hon. member certainly did not get his information from any statement I ever made in the house or outside.

Mr. Asselin: I am very happy, Mr. Speaker, to have the confirmation of the minister on that point. But could the minister assure the house that if a province asks a licence for operating educational television, the federal government would agree to grant it? Can the minister answer?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, there is no question about my having to answer. Evidently, the member speaks of a statement made in this house and which he has not read because it is said in that statement that licences will be granted to a federal and public agency, and to it only. Therefore I wonder why he puts that question and has been referring for the last fifteen minutes to a statement about which he obviously knows very little since the answers to questions he puts are included in this statement, made more than a week ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note the minister's statement as this confirms what he said in the house, namely that he would grant TV licences to companies and agencies. He just said it in this house. Therefore, the minister should consider giving the same opportunity to the provinces if they want to get a licence to operate in the field of educational TV.

Mr. Speaker, this of course is not the last time we see the government opposite encroaching on provincial matters. It did so in the field of medicare, and the Quebec taxpayers will probably pay a penalty for not participating in the federal plan, as they have to pay taxes to finance medicare on the same basis as the people in other provinces who join to this plan. When we have-

[Mr. Asselin.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Does the house agree unanimously to allow the hon, member to proceed with his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon, members and I think that the minister is even more magnanimous than those back-benchers who said that I should speak for a few minutes only. However, I shall not take too much of the time of the house to conclude my remarks.

The Quebec taxpayers, because they do not contribute to the federal government medicare program any more than those of some other provinces at present will have to pay taxes to help its cost. I do not suggest that this program is a bad thing, but the federal government, before putting it into force. should first have consulted the provinces so as to establish a plan meeting the conditions laid down by the provinces.

[English]

Mr. Benson: We had consulted provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: The minister says: We had consulted the provinces. However, some provinces said that they refused to accept the federal program, because they could not meet the four conditions imposed on them by the federal government.

I say that the present government wanted to act unilaterally and that the taxpayers of Quebec and other provinces, who do not now participate in the federal medicare plan will be penalized by taxes they will have to pay to the federal government. In fact, the 2 per cent tax might help the federal government to meet the expenditures of the medicare plan.

• (9:30 p.m.)

We would have preferred, Mr. Speaker, that in his budget speech the minister deal with some positive solutions and tell us about his plans for overcoming our unemployment problems. This is a problem not to be neglected as it is known that in the Atlantic provinces the unemployment percentage is

The Budget-Mr. Latulippe

4.3 of the labour force, 4.4 in Quebec, 2.5 in Ontario, 1.9 in the Prairie provinces and 4.5 in British Columbia.

The budget announced by the minister does not in any way indicate what solutions are contemplated by the government to solve this problem. This situation will, in my opinion, be more severe next winter because the present government has, without informing the provinces and municipalities beforehand, discontinued the winter works program which had been put into effect by our party when we were in power.

They would rather eliminate the program than providing work for those people in winter. Even if there have been some abuses in the past, some people earned money in winter time and could survive because they could work. But this winter the only course offered to them will be unemployment insurance, social assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think this a good way for the minister to tackle this unemployment problem, by ignoring it. If this government wanted to eliminate winter works, the only thing to do was merely to provide provinces and municipalities with an alternate solution. We ask the government to provide us one but it gave us no response.

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, we are fully justified in supporting the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West and I hope that among our Liberal friends, who during the election campaign showed compassion for the plight of the poor people, unemployed people in Quebec and in other provinces, there will be a few members to rise and support our amendment. The budget introduced by the Minister of Finance is completely unacceptable to the population as a whole, especially to the poor people; obviously, it is not in this way that the government and the minister will establish the main heads in order to set the great principles that will bring to Canada the just society the Right Hon. Prime Minister so often referred to during the election campaign.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to avail myself of this opportunity to say on behalf of the Ralliement créditiste what we think of the present administration, what we think of the past administrations, of the "smashed up" budgets. Since the end of the 1939-1945 war, we have known nothing else but "smashed budgets. We have had different Liberal and Conservative administrations and they were all administrations with a smashed up budget. They increased taxes, which in turn increased the cost of living and led the economy to an unsufferable unbalance, almost beyond remedy. So this economy's balance must be reestablished and I believe there is nobody among the members of this government who can offer solutions.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has no other solution than to increase taxes and the price of services. The price of services is rising at all levels of society.

The governments bleed the people dry to speak bluntly, and they benefit much more from loans than the individuals. The governments can borrow money at a much lower rate than the individuals. And because the all-round cost of living is allowed to rise, individuals have to borrow money at unconscionable interest rates, that are exorbitant and even criminal for society, for the individuals and for the families.

The governmental budgets, at all levels, announce increases in taxes. It is a universal disease. We call that austerity because international finance and leaders of all governments say so.

Tax increases please no one, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary, everybody is complaining privately or publicly. Each and every one grumbles against taxes, but strange contradiction, there is an almost unanimous belief that taxes are inevitable.

Mr. Speaker, let all of those gentlemen who claim taxes are necessary rejoice, because the government has once more fulfilled their wishes. Surely, it is the government's fault, but is is also our fault; in short, it is the fault of every member, every taxpayer who fails to take his own responsibilities. Taxes are claimed to be necessary, there are some who are always ready to let the others carry their burden. Many fight taxes with all their might but make every effort to avoid paying them as they should.

a wage-earner and when the pay envelope is legally searched by a good dozen thieves, before being given to its legitimate owner. Nevertheless, it is the public who pays. Then why do the taxpayers not request a reform which would abolish a good many taxes?

What is preventing the taxpayers from going on strike against taxes; there are strikes everywhere, in all sectors, all over Canada, but no one thought of going on a tax strike. I think one day we will have a tax strike and that day will be an abomination for Canada and other countries like ours.

Why do we not consider an administrative formula ensuring that public developments are financed by a single fact of accountancy, consistent with the realities of the considerable wealth and progress of our country? After all, financing is only a question of figures.

Mr. Speaker, can all 262 members and ministers of the Parliament of Canada, since the elections of June 25, 1968, mention a single measure of the government in favour of the people? On the contrary everything has been done in favour of capital.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Bonds worth $260 million at 5 per cent have been replaced by bonds bearing 6.5 per cent interest. Interest rates have been raised on loans to students and farmers and other Canadians in executive positions. The price of stamps has been increased, and personal income tax is being raised by 2 per cent. It is obvious that the same system is being maintained without any change. Capital income is increased and personal income is reduced through all kinds of increases, in taxes, prices and in the cost of living generally. The ceiling on the interest rate on bank loans generally, as well as on personal loans to farmers and to students guaranteed by the government is being removed. There is a constant and progressive protection of the national social capital and continual and progressive denial of the family and human capital. The present administration is exactly the contrary to what a good and a sound administration should be. Capital, which is only an instrument of production and financing, enjoys all privileges, profits, reserves and surplus which the Canadian people are deprived of, when in fact capital is created and legalized by the government of the people. That is complete nonsense.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

All this has been explained at length and in precise detail in the brief which I presented to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs on October 25, 1966. This brief has never been read nor studied by the committee, but it was printed as appendix AAA, on pages 2548-53 of volume II of the deliberations of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs on the occasion of the decennial revision of banking legislation.

I shall quote two paragraphs from the brief which will make your mouth water and will encourage you to read in full these basic papers on our past, present and future economic policy:

Every time the workers' salaries, are raised, every time interests on capital, are increased, the cost of living goes up generally and the economic position of people without income, work or capital is jeopardized and by the same token, the economic position of those responsible for them.

When the Bank of Canada was established in 1934, it set its rate of interest at 2 per cent for treasury bills and its loans to chartered banks. This rate remained unchanged for 22 years, from 1934 to 1956-57, in spite of the depression, the war and the post-war boom.

Mr. Speaker, one would wish to read all over again this basic report, which sets forth the main financial procedures in our economy which have brought about the present situation, so wonderful for the presidents, directors, administrators and shareholders of big banks and companies, but which also maintain our governments in permanent deficit and eternal debt, resulting in exhorbitant interest rates and causing many of our people hardship, insecurity or poverty, without the least hope of coming out of it except through a war or a revolution.

Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada, the eight Canadian chartered banks, the 800 largest companies, listed or not on the stock exchange, which show an annual net profit of $1 million, in addition to two or three times that amount in hidden, unpublished and untaxed reserves, come under the economic and legislative management of the Minister of Finance and of the government of Canada.

The directors of those companies are Canadian citizens the same as every other citizen in this country. If all Canadian citizens were aware of those facts, if all newspapermen, teachers and politicians would pass on those everyone turns towards him, even all the facts openly to every Canadian citizen, if other ministers and members of parliament, none of them were camouflaged, thinned out, disguised by an intellectual elite benefitting largely from such an unhealthy economy, do you think the people would bear any longer those deficit budgets and those unprecedented taxations?

The Budget-Mr. Latulippe

Here are the four most important ministers in the government of Canada in 1968, that is the ones mainly responsible for our economy and our administration.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not hold any particular portfolio but he must have an overall grasp of all departments and must generally direct the administration of the country to the benefit of the national social capital or towards the social development of the human capital of the family.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) must see to it that justice and legal understanding prevail between all the citizens of Canada, bar none. But the first step, Mr. Speaker, is social distributive justice, that of the primo vivere, that is the right to live, the right to live one's life.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has contacts with all the citizens of Canada, without forgetting any, because all the citizens are linked together by the exchange of all the products of industry, agriculture, mining or the other necessities of life for each and every citizen of Canada.

The Minister of Finance is perhaps the one who has more to do with all the needs of the citizens of Canada because no one can move without needing money, currency, credit or capital. Everything works with money and the Minister of Finance holds the highest authority with regard to the whole machinery of money, the issuance of money, the chartered banks, the Bank of Canada and the setting of the interest rates.

The principal tool of the Minister of Finance, with regard to the administration of Canada, is his famous annual budget, a tool which he tries to use to regulate the circulation of money according to the needs of all the citizens of Canada.

The Minister of Finance operates a kind of suction and force pump through which he takes money from those who have too much economy of the country has been oriented and gives it to those who have not enough. toward the national social capital benefits in He is the main regulator of monetary cir- institutions to the great detriment of the because he is the one who pays their salaries, out of taxes collected from Canadian citizens. out of income taxes or taxes on profits.

We should not worry about the complex task of the Canadian Minister of Finance. Indeed it is not more difficult for him to balance his yearly budget than for any single person, father, farmer or small businessman. He has at his disposal all the information and all the qualified personnel to balance his budget.

As everyone, he must apply the regular formula of any sound administration: income, expenses and profits. As everywhere else, there should be enough income to make up the expenses and leave a margin of security, surplus or reserve. What is good for the corporations is equally good for the government and for the individual, whether he be a bachelor or the head of a family in Canada.

It's always the same administrative formula: revenues, expenditures and profits. You have to concentrate on this formula once you start talking about administration, budget, political economy, at all levels whether personal, family, social, municipal, provincial, federal, national, international or even at world level.

We should stop making so much ado about nothing. Such mysteries are only there to frighten the little man. When the people are at all informed, they see through them and public finance does not frighten him anymore. Even if he cannot grasp all the details, he can read between the lines.

So the day has come to be honest with the people of Canada about the annual budget of the government, to steady the flow of money with both the suction and the forcing pumps, so that every Canadian citizen, individually, be considered as a complete and essential unit, with his own buying power either through his work, or his capital, or through his right to live and if he does not have any revenue from his work or from his capital, for any possible reason.

Our ministers must therefore know what the people think about that.

Since the end of the war, in 1945, the whole culation among all Canadians. That is why family human capital in residences.

The Budget-Mr. Latulippe

Our banks and companies are prosperous but families are declining.

Capital and labour are the two mainstays of production and the 7,700,000 Canadian citizens that take part in this production receive wages for their work and interests on their capital.

But the 13 million citizens who have no work nor capital, receive no revenue, have no purchasing power to meet their personal needs and the needs of their families. Yet, all have the right to live in Canada.

This right to live must become a component in the distribution of the purchasing power, of a personal guaranteed income, through a vital personal right for each and every Canadian citizen without work or income.

A plain and easy formula to be applied universally, on a pay-as-you-go basis, depending upon the national production, would allow every Canadian without work or income to receive a personal vital right of $1 per day for a child, $2 for a student, $3 for an adult and $120 for each retired citizen of 60 years of age or more.

The total cost would be only $9 billions out of a production of $60 billions in 1968, for the 13 millions of Canadian citizens of all ages, without work or revenue, without any other personal revenue than the vital right.

This would only cost 14 per cent of the 68 billion national produt and there would still remain 86 per cent or 59 billion dollars to pay for the work and capital of the 7,700,000 citizens contributing to the national product, in preportion to their participation.

This one program, this one technical formula can be applied immediately, all at once or through successive steps, according to the competence and ability of the ministers of the present parliament and of the 262 representatives elected by the people to legislate on behalf of all Canadians.

Only outmoded and mechanistic reflexes or intellectual sloth are preventing us now from establishing within the framework of our economical machinery such a distribution formula of the purchising power, of a guaranteed personal income that adds automatically to the salary formula as regards work and to the interest formula as regards capital.

I am sure the three senior ministers can understand this view and can even provide for its immediate implementation, in spite of the last annual budget introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance.

[Mr Latulippe.]

Just let us wake up to this new light, this new possibility that suddenly he comes within our reach.

Can we deliberately, close our eyes? What can stop us from taking such action? Let us take a look at ourselves and we shall understand.

It has to be done some day, so the sooner the better. The more we postpone action, Mr. Speaker, the more difficult it will be, for the gap will go on widening every year between the rich who get richer and the poor who become poorer. Therefore why not correct right away what needs to be corrected.

This technical formula, Mr. Speaker, can be applied without any increase in taxes, in the cost of living or in prices, if only the large banks and the millionaire corporations agree to pay all the expenses of the guaranteed personal income out of their tremendous annual reserves of over $24 billion after taxes.

Most of the presidents and directors of large banking or commercial enterprises or institutions in Canada are willing to accept this guaranteed personal income formula, provided decisions are made by the government of Canada and everybody is considered on an equal basis, that is individuals, all corporations and even those which are exempt from taxation of all kinds for all sorts of considerations. This I am pointing out to the right hon. Prime Minister, the hon. Minister of Finance and hon. Minister of Justice.

I would like at this time, Mr. Speaker, to differentiate between true credit and financial credit.

True credit is the power to produce whatever the people need. It is the power to produce food, clothing and living accommodation and the capacity to build houses for families with children, barns for cattle and manufactures.

True credit means the capacity to build highways, roads, transportation equipment, automobiles and airplanes. It also implies the power to obtain the services of teachers for the education of children and to produce goods, which those teachers cannot produce them themselves and which they need.

Those are indeed realities which exist without any doubt, realities which are the reason we prefer Canada to a desert or an island and are instrumental in bringing about a decent way of living in our country.

This might be defined as true credit, Mr. Speaker, for the word "credit" means confidence. This potential production, this confidence factor and this true credit already existed when the first settlers from France or England landed here. They hoped to get enough to live. They would not have come otherwise and this true credit has constantly increased since then.

Canadian government is totally insensitive to suffering, while the opposition is a veritable oasis of charity and humanitarianism. Hon, members on the opposition benches know in

The problem is not at all due to actual possibilities but it is an artificial problem created by the lack of money and figures which can make products and services fluctuate.

There are two kinds of credit, Mr. Speaker, the true credit and the financial credit.

The financial credit is established by banks and is based upon the real credit. On the other hand, the real credit is the work and the devotion of past generations, science, technique or technology as well as philosophy.

Money credit is a title which gives a right to those products and services. It is only a figure engraved on metal or printed on paper, and it is controlled by the Bank of Canada for an issue of almost $3 billion. But financial credit, Mr. Speaker, amounts to figures—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I just ask for confirmation of the business for tomorrow. Is it the railway bill?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, No. 24 on today's order paper, the bill dealing with the financing of the Canadian National Railways. If any time is left over after that matter has been dealt with the house will resolve itself into committee of supply and consider the estimates with respect to legislation and the Treasury Board.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES FROM CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, this house and the country have heard a great deal in recent weeks about the Biafran tragedy—and it is a tragedy. To listen to some of the remarks of the opposition refugees who fled from Czechoslovakia in the members one would conclude that the face of Soviet aggression.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Canadian government is totally insensitive to suffering, while the opposition is a veritable oasis of charity and humanitarianism. Hon. members on the opposition benches know in their hearts that this is not true. It is not given to any group, be it a political party, a government party or an opposition party, to be the repository of goodness and generosity to the exclusion of all other groups. There have been criticisms of Canada's record in Nigeria. But what is that record, Mr. Speaker? Stated simply, the record is the best in the world.

We were one of the first nations to answer the call for help last August. We are the only nation which has been successful in negotiating with both sides to expedite aid to the starving of Nigeria and Biafra. We are the only nation today with government aircraft bringing aid to the victims of that horrible war. That is the record.

We are one of a handful of nations to contribute to the team of observers. These have been solid and productive accomplishments. In the process the government has not yielded to the temptation to seek headlines. Indeed our record in assisting in the resolution of international disputes and extending aid rests in our ability to conciliate and negotiate, even though that is done in an unspectacular way.

Mr. Forrestall: Who wrote that speech?

Mr. Perrault: During these past weeks, when we have seen some hon. members trafficking politically in the human misery of the Nigerian conflict, it is noteworthy that hon. members of the opposition have virtually ignored Canada's record in another area, a record which adds new laurels to Canada's reputation as a nation that cares about humanity.

We have achieved a superb record in the Czechoslovakian refugee crisis. The manner in which Canada has met her obligations in the Czech crisis shows that where there is an opportunity, where international red tape and diplomatic realities do not intervene, the government of Canada more than matches in action the generosity and compassion which the opposition delineates in words. The government, and particularly the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, deserve the commendation of parliament and the people of Canada for the nature and extent of the efforts to find a new life in Canada for those refugees who fled from Czechoslovakia in the face of Soviet aggression.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

As far as our nation is concerned, red tape has been virtually eliminated, financial barriers removed and screening processes speeded in an effort to bring as many refugees to Canada as quickly as possible. Tomorrow, the twentieth chartered plane load of Czech refugees arrives in Canada. All these flights have carried from 130 to 190 passengers. They are men, women and families who, in my view, will become exceptional Canadian citizens and make contributions to this country far beyond their new numerical strength.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Perrault: Since the first flight in mid September I have ascertained that approximately 3,449 refugees have come to Canada, the majority coming under the auspices of the government's program which provides grants or loans to cover transportation, settling in and adjustment costs. Practically all those intending to enter into the Canadian labour force have been interviewed by manpower counsellors in offices across Canada. Altogether 1,102 persons have been placed in employment; and 800 are taking language courses and other training in English or French so that they may become better equipped to practise their professions and trades across this country.

As of yesterday there had been 11,241 inquiries from Czechoslovakian refugees interested in coming to Canada. Our information offices in Europe have received firm applications for admission from approximately 10,000 people, dealing with 150 people a day in Vienna alone.

The government has acted with compassion and generosity. If it were given the same opportunity and if it were unhampered by external barriers not of its own making, I am sure it would do as much and even more for the victims of the Nigerian conflict.

Mr. Forrestall: Let's hope so.

Mr. Perreault: Despite their agitated and impassioned observations of recent weeks, our friends in opposition are well aware of the limits, often severe limits, which exist and which prevent this nation from accomplishing all that we may wish to do in the area of resolving conflicts and relieving the suffering of the world.

national sovereignty, a right we cherish ourselves, may frustrate our efforts to intervene constructively in the affairs, and indeed in the agonies of our world neighbours. Canada's contributions to the world are not a subject of the government is always wrong.

humiliation and embarrassment to any Canadian. Certainly they are not a subject of embarrassment with respect to Nigeria. Rather they are a matter of pride, as exemplified by our conduct in the Hungarian revolution as well as in the Czech crisis. I submit that in all these matters Canada's actions have been outstanding.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is the question?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member sitting at the end-I apologize for not being able to name his constituencyinferred that hon. members should listen, and sit down and learn something. I would draw attention to the fact that this period is set aside for members who are dissatisfied with the answers they receive from ministers. The hon, member who has just resumed his seat has at no time mentioned any question asked in the house nor has he referred to the minister with whom he is dissatisfied.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the procedure should be the following: I shall call on the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): What is the question? Which minister is he dissatisfied with?

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Allow me to congratulate the hon, member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), whose constituency I know very well, for having raised the question.

The hon, member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) said that the ten We know, for example, how the fact of o'clock show must be reserved for the members opposite who have some questions to raise or grievances to discuss. Why from time to time should we not congratulate the government for nobody can make me believe that

[Mr. Perrault.]

I congratulate the hon, member once again on the minister's behalf as well as on my own for having raised that matter of which all Canadians are quite proud.

I myself saw the arrival of some Czech refugees and I could see how happy they were to enter this country.

Canada can be proud of what she has done, for no other country in the world has accomplished as much as Canada for Biafran or Czech refugees.

During the Prague uprising on last August 23, the Canadian government, as early as September 4, ordered its European offices to process quickly all applications made by Czechoslovakian refugees. At the same time, we relaxed somewhat the ordinary conditions to allow them to enter Canada.

We must also remember that when the advisory commission which spent a few days in Vienna to see whether officials were taking proper and quick action came back to Canada, it could only praise all the Canadian officials in our offices abroad who hurry the answers to the applications which they receive from Czechoslovakians who want to come to Canada.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

In order to add to what the hon, member said a few moments ago, regarding the attitude of the government towards refugees, I must mention that, from the 1st to the 23rd of November, ten groups of refugees will arrive in the country. This proves, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian government has done what no other government in the world has done.

As far as the Biafrans are concerned, we are trying to do our utmost for them, but we must admit that the present conditions in Nigeria do not allow us to act as promptly and as easily. However, the Canadian government has publicly declared that any Biafran citizen, presently visiting the country, who asks for permission to stay, will have his request granted.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Pursuant to provisional standing order 39A the motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this house stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at $10.13~\mathrm{p.m.}$

EXCHANGE OF LETTERS BETWEEN CANADIAN

THE PERMANENT MISSION OF CANADA TO THE UNITED NATIONS 866 United Nations Plaza,

New York, 10017.

October 24, 1968

Dear Ambassador,

My Minister, the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, has asked me to enquire urgently about the role of churches in respect of relief supplies. One of the leading critics of the Government, Mr. Brewin, whom you will recall came to New York, and met with Dr. Arikpo, claims that he was told that the Federal Government would not oppose flights into rebel-held areas from Sao Tome by churches, using Canadian Hercules aircraft. This statement does not appear to have been made to Mr. Sharp himself but may have been made during the visit of certain Canadian Parliamentarians when they met the Commissioner for External Affairs.

Mr. Sharp would be very grateful if you could let him know, as a matter of urgency, whether in fact such a statement has been made or whether the Federal Nigerian Government would be likely to permit such an arrangement.

Yours sincerely,
George Ignatieff

His Excellency Mr. George Ignatieff, Ambassador and Permanent Representative of Canada to the United Nations, 866 United Nations Plaza, New York 10017, New York.

Dear Ambassador,

In reply to your letter of today's date, I am directed by Dr. Arikpo, Nigerian Commissioner for External Affairs, to inform you that neither he nor any other member of the Nigerian Delegation told the Canadian members of Parliament who met with Dr. Arikpo that the Federal Government would not oppose flights to rebel held areas from Sao Tome by churches, using Canadian Hercules aircraft. I am to inform you that the churches are operating at their own risk. For example, Caritas has been operating independently and the World Council of Churches operates under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross only when it suits them. The Federal Military Government has expressed its preference that all voluntary agencies operate under the aegis of the International Committee of the Red Cross. This preference remains unchanged.

Yours sincerely, (E. O. Ogbu)
