Part of the reason for these expensive losses on the part of Crown corporations is the bureaucratic overlayering which tends to take place in those corporations. One of the significant differences between Northwest Airlines and Air Canada has almost doubled the staff of Northwest Airlines. The same thing happens when you take a look at oil companies and railway systems. Recently I had some meetings with people from Canadian Pacific Railway, and I was told that the factor at the top management level is eight to one, heavier in CN rail than it is in CP rail.

There is a loophole in this bill. It is a direct threat to the private sector of the trucking industry, which concerns my constituents, my province and every part of Canada. Further, I notice the Minister of Transport said that Air Canada is supposed to operate on a businesslike basis and is supposed to operate according to guidelines—I assume from his intructions and from the instructions of management at Air Canada, to operate that airline on a businesslike basis. I appreciate that those are the words he is saying, but the fact of the matter is that when you compare Air Canada, with other major airlines of similar size, it consistently shows either a lower profit or a loss, while others are showing a profit.

I think we have to see, in the same light, the assurance he is giving to the truckers in this country, because while on one hand he is saying that this company is supposed to work on a businesslike basis, the fact is that it is not. Though he is trying to give us an assurance that it is not going to compete with the trucking industry as long as the legislation is in its present form, I am not convinced that the bureaucrats will not do it. If there is a market there, and in some way they start to lose in some other area of air transport, or any other section of that whole Crown corporation dealing with transport, if there looks to be a lucrative market in the trucking industry I think there will be pressure on the bureaucrats to go ahead and do it.

That, in effect, is what I am sure is going to be causing some pressure, and we must keep bearing in mind that even today, without Bill C-17 before us, Canadian National trucks are the biggest fleet of trucks in all of Canada. Certain restrictions and limitations ought to be put on the size and scope that that sector of business is going to become.

The bill would allow direct competition with the trucking industry, and that is a very unacceptable position. So I agree very much with motions Nos. 1 and 2—with No. 1. in particular—put forward by my hon. friend from Vegreville, an amendment which would limit CN trucking to incidental and associated transport related to air and rail travel. What it says in effect is that if you have a fleet of trucks associated with CN, that fleet has to be with associated fleet travel, so it is dealing with the freight that comes off a train and has to be hauled somewhere to centre town, or from centre town to the train and likewise to the aeroplane. But it ought to be limited to that and it ought not to have the prerogative of extending into direct trucking right across the country, to get into the private market, which, incidentally, is one of the situations we are in.

People can get into privately setting themselves up on a one-man family, small business, and grow into a large business even today with the growing opportunities in the trucking business at the present time. Certainly, in this very important summer that we have ahead of us, this very important decade that we have ahead of us, one of the things we are going to notice is an increase in truck travel because of the fact that the whole northern development is not going to be just pipelines, but whatever happens in our north as a result of next month's debate is, I am sure, going to lead to a whole expansion far beyond oil and gas in the north. I would hate to think that this development, somewhere down the road, is not going to be serviced by a private fleet of young, enterprising, trucking people who come out of school and want to grab a truck, go into business on their own and operate it efficiently within their own capacity, without some threat of government interference coming in there in direct competition.

In conclusion, then, I hope the minister will urge upon his colleagues that the approach to the intent, the spirit of this bill, is not really too different on either side of the House. What we are asking for in essence is a guarantee enshrined in the legislation, and if the minister were of the same spirit as we are on this side he would say we were giving the private trucking industry the confidence it deserves. It would then feel that its business was secured by legislation, not merely by a promise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, these changes in Air Canada have been contemplated for a long time, and they give members an opportunity, unfortunately, at a late stage in the session to make some input into the direction in which we want Air Canada to go. Air Canada has, in effect, been an offspring, a subsidiary of the CNR and has been handled in a pseudo subsidiary capacity. During those years in which it has been under the Canadian National umbrella, the corporation has seen considerable growth from a small organization to a fairly large and competent international airline. But it is not without difficulties, and in this bill we appear to be putting in the same difficulties we established in Canadian National and have paid little attention to the realm of competition in any of the fields in which it operates.

Canadians are a widely travelled people. They travel across the world by car, by sea or boat, particularly people from the province of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who go to Mexico and to Florida. You see a great many of them driving there. Canadians travel extensively, and this is causing a great deal of difficulty in relation to the balance of payments and the economy of our country. But in relation to travel, we have been interested in watching the relationship which has happened in Britain to their national airline and to competition. It is interesting that this competition is now causing a great deal of difficulty in the United States and it is causing some difficulty in Canada as well.

Laker aircraft has been granted permission to operate flights at greatly reduced rates between Europe and North America, and this will mean that travel will cost less than 50 per cent of the normal cost of air travel between North America and Britain. Obviously, this competition will have to be met in various ways, but it is interesting that in Canada, where there are a lot of enterprising entrepreneurs, Wardair in particular, should have said it can match the Laker deal and do it without cutting away all the frills. And it will be able to provide travellers with a seat on the aircraft; they will not have to stand up all the way to Europe. They will be able to get refreshments on that trip, rather than cross in total austerity as contemplated in the low-rate Laker package.

Canadians will be obliged to develop a totally new way of handling travel, or they will have to compete. I hope Air Canada will in some way learn how to compete. The amendment before us is an indication that the government has given no consideration to this type of competition. We are talking about fares which will take one from Ottawa, Toronto or Montreal to Europe cheaper than you can go across Canada.

The charge is made that we are losing a great deal of money, at least in Canada, particularly in the triangle of Montreal-Ottawa-Toronto, as the previous speaker has said. Every member here knows how this can be solved easily and simply and to the advantage of the travelling public. With the volume of traffic there is between Montreal and Toronto, no airline should be operating as if it had to provide a multicarrier flight to New Zealand. A computer is not needed, nor are other frills needed on that route.

I was very impressed with the entrepreneur who started the airline between Edmonton and Calgary. You line up, you buy your ticket as you would on a bus, and you catch the flight regularly. It is a half-hour trip. The plane is utilized totally, and the line is making money. The minister should remember that it is replacing a flight that was dropped by Air Canada because it did not make any money. They do not make the usual search that you have at airports. They do not operate from the two international airports that are a few miles out of the two cities, but rather they operate from the municipal airports right in the cities which are easily accessible to the travelling public.

They run that service efficiently, and they move a very large number of passengers. If you are standing in line and they take 100 passengers a flight and you are the one hundred and first, you would wait for the next flight and you would be the first one on it. You cannot wait more than one hour. It is my guess that when Air Canada ran that flight, one sometimes had to wait four or five hours to get on that flight. You could either wait at the airport or you could go back to the city and make several trips back and forth before you got a seat on the flight. Now it takes much less time.

The company which runs that airline competes very successfully with local ground transportation. My case is that they are making a lot of money. Two pilots fly each plane; they do not serve coffee, and there are no frills. But an efficient service is provided. Perhaps that is the way in which we should handle transportation between short distances. The efficiency per passenger of such of flight is 150 per cent better than if you were to fill up a DC-9 to fly between the two cities. The DC-9 has about the same capacity as the plane they fly on the air base where they use a Boeing 727. That type of operation should be considered seriously by the minister. It provides a good service.

There is a matter in which the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais), I and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) are interested. It concerns a flight between Ottawa, North Bay and Sudbury. A jet service was to be provided by a third carrier, but there was opposition from Air Canada. They won, and they put on an early morning flight which nobody took. Then they provided another flight in the middle of the afternoon which, again, nobody took. Now they have discontinued the flight. A fourth level carrier is now operating that flight with DC-3s. I think the Postmaster General would agree with me that on a Friday afternoon you need a reservation on that flight to get a seat on the plane because it is often filled to capacity.

Mr. Blais: I fully agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Peters: It seems to me that that service is provided at a time when many people use it, so it fills the purpose and the airline makes money. I suggest that one of our main aims should be to provide service. Any member here can tell you that service could be improved in the triangle area of Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto. There is not a member here who could not make suggestions about better service which could make Air Canada a heck of a lot more money.

Another point that I wish to make is that a return trip to Europe is cheaper than a single fare to Vancouver. Surely hon. members should be concerned about this because many of them fly to Vancouver regularly, perhaps once a week, and they are aware of the difference in cost. Surely the cost of domestic flights should be reduced.

I suggest that if we pass this bill without amendments, we will be duplicating what CNR has done, as has been said here before. We would not only be asking Air Canada to run an airline; we would be giving them authority, as it is stated in the bill, to buy and operate aircraft, hotels and other accommodation, surface vehicles and facilities for the transportation and housing of persons, goods and mail. If the bill is passed, Air Canada will be authorized to buy condominiums at all the places to which they fly. They would want condominiums so their crews could stay there. We would be allowing them to buy trucks and other vehicles of transportation. The only thing I cannot see them operating is a railway, although they might even consider that. There is nothing in our transportation system which would surprise me very much. I would not even be surprised if Air Canada wanted to start a railway operation. What we want from them is an efficient airline.

I believe they should buy the kind of accommodation that is necessary. Hotels in Canada are a disaster. Accommodation in a hotel in Canada costs twice as much as comparable accommodation in the United States. Why is that so? Simply because in Canada they make no attempt to fill the hotel. Most of the time our major hotels are half full. From time to time there is a convention, and then they are filled. But generally speaking our hotels are only half filled, and therefore the price is doubled to cover the overhead. Therefore, we would like the airline to go into the hotel business to the same extent as other airlines, so they can make arrangements on behalf of customers and so their customers can make reservations at hotels for reasonably-priced accommodation. This may have to apply to meals as well. If it does not, there will be less and less travel in Canada, and more and more travel outside Canada.

Our forefathers did not set up Canada National Railways to make money. When Trans-Canada Air Lines was set up, it was set up with government financing, and with the backing of the general public, to provide a service. We have an immense country, and the only way to unite it was to provide a transportation facility to link it up. Today, when it costs $350 to go to Vancouver, most people would rather go to Florida or Mexico for half that price and have their holidays arranged by airlines through package tours. With the exception of Banff and several other ski tours in the winter, Air Canada does not have any package tours. We should be providing that kind of service to the Canadian people. We should be attempting to unite the people of this country, and there is no better way of doing that than by having people travel around the country.

A fantastic number of people in the province in Quebec could tell us more about every city in Florida, Mexico or in the continental United States, than about parts of Canada. I do not blame them, because all kinds of arrangements have been made to facilitate their travel to those areas. If you travel by car, your oil company will put together a package, arrange for hotels and provide all kinds of advice so that you can have a pleasurable trip. In Canada, nothing similar to that has been done for most areas. In my area the cost of accommodation, air fare, rail fare and all other costs which face tourists are so high that tourist activity is decreasing and many tourist operators are going out of business. I presume this is true in all the provinces.

Air Canada has a great reputation. It is probably the best airline I have ever used. The airline leaves much to be desired on the ground, however, and its tariff structure is a disaster. I do not think it is doing anything for the airline. It certainly does nothing for me, and I think it does nothing for the travelling public. Rather than getting vouchers to travel on Air Canada, I wish members of parliament had to make expenditures and be rebated. In that way we would know exactly what our travel costs and we would be much more concerned about problems than we are. It is not hard to get a $500 voucher to travel on Air Canada, but if we had to pay our fare and be rebated, we would wonder why it costs $500 to go to Vancouver and back.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, because he is a good friend of mine. I have a great deal of respect for him, but the speech he is making should have been made at second reading. We discussed these things at length in committee. We worked hard there. We have motions Nos. 1 and 2 before us, and up to this point none of the remarks made by the hon. member have had any bearing on them. It seems to me that it is up to you, Mr. Speaker, to call the hon. member to order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Hon. members will have noticed that in the past the Chair has been lenient. Sometimes hon. members give us a little tour and then come back to the subject before the House. Ground transportation is mentioned in motion No. 1. The hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) indicated that this has been discussed at length, but when he rose I was just about to remind the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that his time had expired. So perhaps there is no point of order to rule upon.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, much of what the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) has said is accurate, but I believe the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) was trying to express the concern of hon. members from all parties in relation to what they hope Air Canada will provide in the way of service in the days ahead.

Coming from the maritimes, I am concerned because Air Canada is to a certain degree endeavouring to become involved in a field in which one Crown corporation is already involved to such an extent that it has caused great difficulties for the private sector. When we were endeavouring to secure the government's approval to bring trucking under the Maritime Freight Rates Act and to obtain subsidies so that there would be competition for the railways and, hopefully, through competition, more realistic freight rates, we discovered that the CNR, a Crown corporation, then moved into the trucking industry and dashed one of the hopes we had. We had hoped that competition would bring down truck rates and freight rates in general. I would be very concerned if Air Canada were to embark upon any venture which would result in the elimination of still more privately-owned trucking firms in favour of government-owned firms, thus eliminating to an even greater degree the competition that is fast disappearing at this time.

Parliament must give very serious consideration to the amendments which are before us, so that the private enterprise sector is not interfered with in the area of transportation. I am upset about the degree of infiltration into the trucking industry by Crown-owned companies now, and I abhor the thought that they are going to move into the industry to an even greater degree in the days ahead. I am totally opposed to any concept which would allow that to happen in the future.

Air Canada has not instilled much confidence in the people of Canada in recent years as far as management is concerned. It has shown some multimillion dollar losses, so I hate to think of it branching into other areas.

The hon. member for Timiskaming may have been a little bit off the point of the amendment, but he was right on in regard to the arrangements in force at present for Canadians to move around the country at a reasonable price. It is cheaper to travel outside Canada.

We should try to determine how Air Canada can invest the money it has to best advantage in areas that would improve its service. When the bill was last before the House I brought to the attention of the minister the atrocious scheduling in Atlantic Canada. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) also voiced the opinion that it was totally inadequate and must be improved. We had hoped for some action, and when the President of Air Canada announced plans for new and distinctive administrative regions encompassing all of Atlantic Canada by July 1 and that Mr. Linder, Vice President of the corporation, would head a new division, we looked forward to improvements. But we were disappointed to find there was no real difference in the schedule of flights between major centres in the Atlantic provinces and other major centres in Canada as of July 1 or even April 1. We live in hope that the fall schedule will re-establish the type of service we used to have; even though it was not the best in the world it was not as bad as that in force at present.

Tourism is down again this year, and unless the airlines assist with better service to move people into and out of the area it will be worse. Last year was devastation for the tourist industry, and the outlook is not good for this summer.

I do not know how we can convince Air Canada that it should produce at least a half decent system for the area without embarking upon new ventures that might add to the multimillion dollar deficit it already has.

I am concerned for the trucking industry inasmuch as Air Canada and the CNR in concert could do great damage to firms already in existence. The CNR often operates on a tariff basis that would eliminate private enterprise and then, when it has achieved that end, increases its rates. The CNR charges whatever it wants to, with little regard for whether those using its service can maintain their business or not. Tremendous cutbacks in employment are anticipated in Moncton and Nova Scotia and now we have an indication that Air Canada wants to get into the trucking industry, and possibly the hotel industry.

The hon. member for Timiskaming was correct when he said that the hotel business was a disaster for the tourist because our rates are so high compared with those in the United States. And even though our hotel industry is operating at 50 per cent capacity or less today, I do not see any indication of changes. Unless they bring their prices down they will not be able to persuade people to use them.

It is frightening to think of Air Canada going into the hotel business, using taxpayers' money, and in effect putting out of business hoteliers whose taxes go to maintain the airline which is reporting huge losses. I am concerned that Air Canada has not done more for Atlantic Canada. Both in committee and in this House a lot has been said about the atrocious service it provides to the Atlantic provinces. I view its involvement in the trucking industry with deep concern; we have already seen what the CNR has done to the trucking industry and to private enterprise in Altantic Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before calling on the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) who, I believe, wants to contribute to this discussion, let me say I had indicated earlier in the day that the Chair has some concern, which I endeavoured to outline, about the procedural acceptability of motion No. 3.

In keeping with past practice I also circulated to some members of the House my notes in respect of the breakdown of motions which will be grouped for discussion. Those notes included in this instance my own notes about my procedural concern with respect to motion No. 3. I provided those notes to hon. members in order to give all hon. members the maximum opportunity to check the citations to which I had resorted in coming to today's preliminary conclusion, and I thought they would assist hon. members to prepare themselves for the discussion, if one were to take place, with respect to the procedural irregularity of motion No. 3. I understand hon. members have had the opportunity to review those citations and that no further discussion in respect of that motion is contemplated at present. I therefore repeat my earlier assessment of this motion. It appears to me to introduce a concept entirely foreign to the clause it seeks to amend. In my opinion, and for reasons I stated in a preliminary way this morning, it goes beyond the scope of the clause. Therefore, in line with citation 203(3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, and Erskine May's nineteenth edition, page 521, I would conclude that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the clause it seeks to amend and is therefore procedurally out of order.

I said this morning that motions Nos. 4 to 9 inclusive could be grouped together. That was an erroneous statement on my part. I had intended to refer to the motions standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and group them together. Those are motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9. I understand it is agreeable to discuss them together and, if necessary, to vote on them separately.

Motions Nos. 4 and 5 are separate from that group, and separate from each other. Motion No. 4 is in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and would be discussed and voted on separately. Essentially, motion No. 5 is a government amendment, designed to bring the French text of the bill in line with the English text and probably will not be the subject of much discussion or of a vote. In any case, it must be discussed and voted on separately if that is necessary. Therefore motion No. 4 will be discussed and voted on separately, as will motion No. 5. Motions Nos. 6 to 9 inclusive will be debated as a group, and voted on in a manner deemed necessary as the votes are called, if votes on those motions are necessary. If that is agreeable, perhaps I can call on the hon. member for Palliser to continue the debate on motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the authority this bill would grant the governor in council to run the affairs of Air Canada. The bill would require Air Canada to report on its operations directly to the minister, and thus to parliament. That provision is desirable and we are thankful for it. But part of the price we must pay for the privilege is this: the organization will become the creature of the minister of transport, whoever he may be, from time to time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let's hope it will not be the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Schumacher: The present minister will not always be Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). Politics being what it is, we can expect changes to be made from time to time, just as we can expect changes to be made in life. I think political considerations will influence the operations of Air Canada. That may be good or it may be bad. It depends how the influence is used.

I want to see this public corporation operate according to law, not according to the whims of an elected official, or of some faceless bureaucrat not accountable to parliament for his actions. At least if this bill passes we shall have the satisfaction of discussing Air Canada's operations from time to time, and hon. members will be able to voice their concern. I do not know how effective this exercise will be. I suppose the best thing about it is that because the subject will be discussed in this forum the public will be better informed. But I am greatly concerned, because the governor in council will have a great deal to say about the operations of the corporation.

Motions 1 and 2 are designed to protect the trucking industry and to make sure that in future there will not be any possibility of nationalizing our trucking industry by the back door, as it were. The industry, largely made up of small companies, by and large has proven efficient in carrying this country's freight. It has grown over the years and is the beneficiary of money spent largely by provincial jurisdiction, inasmuch as the trucking industry depends on this country's highway network, mostly under provincial jurisdiction.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Our trans-Canada highway system has been funded partly by the federal government, but the bulk of the country's roads still are the direct responsibility of the provinces. I point out that of all freight moved in Canada, the trucking industry moves 42 per cent. When I say all freight, I include freight moved by air, water and pipeline, and freight moved by truck. We move great volumes of commodities by way of pipeline, and one may say, too, that the trucking industry, composed of a large number of fairly small operators, has put up a creditable performance.

We should adopt the hon. member's motions, I suggest, because Canadian National Railways is becoming a big operator of trucks in an already large trucking industry. I understand that the Canadian National truck system now accounts for almost 5 per cent of that 42 per cent share of the total freight-haul market trucks have captured. The company has done this despite the provisions of the existing law which theoretically should limit Canadian National's ability to engage in trucking. I understand that the courts have interpreted parliament's approval of CNR's financing as having over-ridden the provisions of legislation which says the CNR must operate only as a railway.

As has been pointed out, one only has to look at the other activities of Canadian National, which is primarily a railway company. It has built the world's tallest free standing structure, acquired an interest in a fleet of ships, and has a large interest in the container operations to use with those ships. According to the television commercials of CN, it is certainly trying to emulate Canadian Pacific by getting into a very diversified operation.

What I object to in this situation is that the governor in council, in other words whoever may be Minister of Transport from time to time, will feel that he has a vested interest in making the operation of Air Canada look good. A political influence is now being introduced. The minister will take the position that he must have a good annual report to present to parliament so that the heat will be off him. He will therefore be very willing to stretch to the limit something the present Minister of Transport has undertaken to constrain, the present activities of Air Canada and functions of Air Canada.

I feel an adequate precedent has been established by what has happened to CN. The same need not happen with Air Canada. There is the matter of surface transportation, passenger traffic and baggage and, as the minister mentioned, mail is being authorized. That may be proper. There may be some controversy because I do not think it is generally accepted that Air Canada should have all the mail business. The tendency of the government will be to give Air Canada more and more of the mail business so that it will have a better profit and therefore better annual report.

There will be a natural bias against the private sector. This may be all right in some areas because the private sector has not done that good a job. The trucking industry has proven to be a very efficient and competitive operation. Otherwise CN and CP would not be getting into it.

We should look to the past and try to learn from our mistakes. We should not protect a healthy and viable industry. It is not dominated by giants but made up of many small entrepreneurial firms.

The trucking industry can move high valued freight from central Canada to the west coast as quickly as air cargo. If the Parliament of Canada decides this industry should be nationalized, let us do it through the front door.

An hon. Member: Like Lougheed.

Mr. Schumacher: He did it very directly via the front door. He operated through the law. I do not think anyone can accuse him of operating illegally.

Mr. Rodriguez: And he did it with heritage funds.

Mr. Schumacher: I do not think the heritage fund had been adopted at that time. Of course I am not here to defend Premier Lougheed and the decision with regard to Pacific Western Airlines. I can point out, however, that we have a government that can be responsible for an airline. It has left the management pretty well unto itself in the day to day operation. At least it makes money. That is something this government cannot claim for this highly protective national airline.

An hon. Member: Did CP make any?

Mr. Schumacher: CP did not make any either. That was probably as a result of the policies of this federal government. It is greatly restricted by the amount of traffic it is allowed to handle, largely for the benefit of Air Canada.

I do not object to people operating in these areas as long as there is free and unrestricted competition. What is necessary is that the consumer benefit. We need a free and open market place.

The government wants the power to issue directives in writing to this company because it has a responsibility for it. Naturally it will do everything it can to make it look as though it is making a profit. it may do a good job writing an annual report, but in doing so it will deprive the whole economy of profit competition. We will end up with more and more of these functions being run by the government or through government agencies. I do not like it.

If the intention is to get into freight handling, why not say it? Why is the minister so afraid of taking it in? He agrees with the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). All he says is, "Trust me." Well, we might trust him and we might not.

If we do trust him, how are we to know what he says here today will bind any future minister or administration? I like to see things done by law, not policy. There is ample precedent for the necessity of this type of amendment. Let us learn from the past and keep Air Canada in the air business, not the trucking business.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, when I came into the chamber I did not intend to say anything with regard to the amendments being debated. But after listening to the gobbledygook on my right, I have been stimulated into making a few remarks. It was all I could do to sit and listen to them say how competition will solve the problem and that profit making is the new goddess which must be worshipped. They said we must look to the past and we must keep Air Canada in the air.

The hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) talked about keeping Air Canada in the air, but he did not say anything about the extending tentacles of CP investment, CP Air, and the growth of that monolith, Canadian Pacific. They are not only in the air but on the ground in terms of rail freight, passenger business, steel mills, mining corporations and real estate. I suggest to the hon. member for Palliser that we look to the past so that we do not repeat our mistakes, thinking we can provide competition in terms of transportation in Canada and that competition will solve our transportation problems.

We in the NDP look on transportation in terms of service. According to all the articles I have read about railways, air lines and communications, since Canada covers a wide geographic area it is service to the people which should be uppermost in our minds. I have nothing against monopolies. It is just the matter of who owns them that concerns me. I am much more comfortable when a monopoly is owned by the public than when it is owned by a few people sitting in boardrooms in New York state or in the Senate.

• (1530)

Mr. Schumacher: What is the difference?

Mr. Rodriguez: My hon. friend does not know the difference. The difference is that when the people own the monopoly the people have control over it through their elected party.

Mr. Schumacher: Where is the control here?

Mr. Rodriguez: If the hon. member wants to talk about control that is a different matter. If Air Canada is to get into trucking while Canadian Pacific, using vertical integration, can handle the hotel business—

Mr. Schumacher: So does CN.

Mr. Rodriguez: Now just hold your horses.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are there horses in this bill too? Have they horses on the payroll again?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, there are no horses in this bill. I am talking about competition. The population of Canada is so small that you cannot compete with a very small market. Airlines in the United States are competing with each other but they are losing money because there are too many airlines.

The two national airlines in Canada are competing for a very small market and both of them end up losing money.

It seems to me only reasonable that when an airline sets up a package tour, for example, it has to tie in with hotels to provide service to the travelling public. In the same way it is important that Air Canada have access to the trucking of air freight which it moves. It is extremely important that Air Canada be integrated so it can provide service to hotels and truck air freight.

What bothers me is that hotels which are owned by the people of Canada are being turned over to the Hilton chain to manage. It seems to me that this is not in the best interests of the Canadian public, particularly the travelling public. For example, right now the Hotel Vancouver is into a strike position. It is administered by the Hilton chain under contract to CN. We have never had a strike in 26 years among the workers at the Hotel Vancouver, but now that management has been turned over to the Hilton chain, lo and behold we have our first strike there. This is one concern we have when hotels are turned over to foreign outfits to administer.

I always get a charge out of the argument made by my colleagues to my right. They want no government interference in the market place, in the so-called private sector. However, when the private sector is having difficulty and needs support prices for its products, the bottom having fallen out of the market because of free market competition, it asks the government for a subsidy, a handout.

As my colleagues to my right know full well, one thing we do not have in this country is a free market. We have an administered market. Whether my friends like it or not, the giants in a particular sector set the trend. It strikes me that the free enterprise system does not want competition; it wants to control the market so it can take advantage of all the spin-off effects.

We have been invited to look at past history. We know that the taxpayers of this country built up CP by giving the company millions of acres of land. Now when taxpayers in various cities across the country, specifically in the city of Sudbury where CP is located in the downtown area, want the land back, CP tells them they will have to pay for it. As I say, the land was given to CP in the first place, in return for which they were to provide a service to the people of this country. We now have a perfect example of what happens when modes of transportation, operated by CP and CN, compete for the rail travelling public.

Competition is not the solution to the problems of rail transportation. We do not have a large enough travelling public to make both these giants profitable. We know their routes cover long distances and their upkeep costs are tremendous, but it is illogical to expect both corporations to make money when they parallel each other's routes across the country. Therefore it is only fair that the government's philosophy on transportation should be directed to providing service.

When the Canadian Transport Commission was considering an east-west route from Montreal to Ottawa, Sudbury, Thunder Bay and on to Winnipeg, two airlines, Nordair and Air Canada, applied for the route. Nordair put a great lobby on in this House with the members from northern Ontario.

Mr. Peters: Order!

Mr. Rodriguez: They held big cocktail parties, wine and cheese parties. They wined and dined—

Mr. Peters: Order!

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) can call order all he wants, but he was there and was part of it. He went down to the Carlton Towers hotel where members were wined and dined.

An hon. Member: Did you go too?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, I was not there. I refuse to participate in any of these lobbies.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): How about the teachers' federation? Do you go to their functions?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, I do not. I go to their cocktail parties but they are not after a franchise. But hon. members are casting aspersions. I do happen to be a fellow of the Ontario Teachers' Federation and, as such, I am a sort of honorary dignitary at the meetings of the federation.

Mr. Peters: You are one of the nabobs of the federation.

Mr. Rodriguez: Nordair laid on a splurge for members from Ontario, and I am glad to say that my colleague from Timiskaming attended. The next day they all got the big pitch. They wanted letters of support for the Nordair application before the CTC for the route from Montreal through Sudbury and on to Winnipeg. My support went to Air Canada.

• (1540)

Mr. Peters: Tell us what happened when they got it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, Air Canada got it and they are servicing—

Mr. Peters: They got it, but they are not servicing it.

Mr. Rodriguez: I do not agree with that.

Mr. Peters: Be honest about it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order!

Mr. Rodriguez: I fly via Air Canada to Ottawa, and I arrive at 3.45 o'clock from Sudbury. It leaves Sudbury at 2.50. It is a very profitable route and is quite crowded. I argue in favour of Air Canada because it has to provide service on routes where no money is made. Therefore Air Canada has a right to have a route which is profitable.

The government ought to espouse that concept of transportation. It is not a question of making profit. It is a question of serving the people of this country with a particular airline, railway, bus service, or whatever. In Ontario Grey Coach provided a bus service from Sudbury to Toronto. Grey Coach is owned by the people of Ontario through the CTC. Mr. Eddie Goodman, the flunky for Mr. Davis, made an appeal before the Ontario Transport Commission and surprisingly won for Greyhound, which is an American privately owned corporation. Thus Grey Coach has to pick up all the losing routes. The private sector in Toronto had Eddie Goodman in its back pocket.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order relates generally to transportation. I think the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has strayed somewhat from the subject. For his edification I should like to indicate to him that in Ontario matters regarding highways are decided by a quasi-judicial tribunal which is as independent as the judiciary.

Mr. Rodriguez: I recognize I hit a tender spot of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), but the principle is there. Where a service is being provided, it seems to me government-owned transportation systems ought to take the good with the bad and not just take the bad. The amendments put forward by the Conservative party are with respect to Air Canada limiting itself to air and not becoming integrated with hotels and road transportation. If we look at the recent past, we see in a provincial jurisdiction where a publicly owned corporation was providing service on routes where it could make money, thus offsetting the cost to taxpayers of routes where it was not making money. Because of political machinations, we found the government shearing routes off to privately owned foreign corporations. It seems to me that these Tories and Grits are the same old gang.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: They can parade around all they want, but when they run into difficulties they come to the public trough and slurp it up just like any other corporation, public or private. Really, that is the crux of the matter. Are we going to provide service to the people of Canada with our transportation systems? Are we going to say to the public corporations that they have to take the out-of-the-way routes which cannot carry themselves and we will shear off the nice cushy ones? If the private sector runs into difficulty with the nice cushy ones, it can always come back to Santa Claus and have the public treasury opened up for it. You cannot suck and blow at the same time, but that is what the Tories and Grits do all the time.

Mr. Paproski: You are the only one who can do that in this House.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) has mastered that technique. Since I have come here, I have marvelled at his mastery of that technique.

Mr. Paproski: Not as well as the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Rodriguez: Our party has persistently maintained the position that we do not mind monopolies, as long as the people of Canada own them through their elected representatives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I would have enjoyed hearing the Conservatives stand up and argue that we should be breaking up the monopoly of CP Investments and that we should not have this conglomerate buying up land and becoming involved in various things, because it is destructive to free enterprise in this country. The minute one refers to breaking up the banks, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) runs in and is their great defender. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) defends banks any time there is an attempt to break up the monopolies of the banks.

As I indicated, it is sucking and blowing when it is said the people-owned transportation corporations ought not to integrate themselves, but on the other hand one turns a blind eye to the conglomerates and the monolithic private sectors such as CP Investments. One only has to look at the food industry to see how free enterprise can be destroyed. I should like to refer to one example—

An hon. Member: Tell us about that next week.

Mr. Rodriguez: In the city of Sudbury there is a bakery known as Ceccuti Bakery which employs 200 people. This firm has to close because the chains are loss leadering their own bread which is brought in from Toronto. The owner has to close up because he cannot compete. He is being squeezed out by the competitive pricing practices of supermarkets such as Dominion and Loblaw's which bring in their bread from southern Ontario and other places. That is another example of how free enterprise is being destroyed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it behooves members of this House to read more than one philosophy. It behooves them to evaluate the philosophies they read and to choose from the options which are in print and which are in practice what may best work in a particular psychological and philosophical situation in the society in which we live.

Having taken a look at some of the experiences which the Government of Canada and its people have experienced, as a result of following some of the philosophies of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), let me point out that it seems to be quite all right for a particular Crown corporation to lose $190 million. I have not heard the hon. member criticize that, but some taxpayer somewhere is going to pick up his portion of that $190 million.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): AECL.

Mr. McCain: Yes, AECL. The minister who was supposed to be in charge of that, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), might be used as an example of what happens when people take on business operations through their government. Once it was taken on there was no checkmate, no board of directors, no stockholders meetings, no stockholders notification, and no advice whatsoever. How many of those do we need? We have watched the government operate the Canadian National Railways. We have watched the government diversify in all ways which this act would have Air Canada diversify, and it has piled deficit upon deficit upon deficit. It has also curtailed service upon service. It has made its schedule impossible, as far as conveniencing the people of the Atlantic areas is concerned.

The hon. member may live in Nickel Belt and he may know all about that area, but I suggest he review the history and the services of Canadian National and then examine his own philosophy with great care and see whether it does in fact serve the people it was intended to serve. And the answer is, it does not.

An hon. Member: What is the CPR doing in New Brunswick?

Mr. McCain: All I can tell the hon. member is that many of us have shipped thousands of cars of materials, moved them tens and twenties of miles to get them to the CP for service which the CN could have provided and ought to have provided. The hon. member is putting forward a ridiculous argument.

An hon. Member: No weaknesses in the CP?

Mr. McCain: They have their weaknesses. The weaknesses are multitude. But they still have stockholders who have a voice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: If we, as individuals in this House, were to have a voice in the operation of Air Canada or in the reorganization of Air Canada—

Some hon. Members: Agreed!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: —and if its general management were subject to the criticism of this House, and if it would recognize the criticism which comes from members of the House, we would be singing a different tune. But this is not the case. This bill divorces the taxpayers from any ability to influence the corporation. He has not one word to say even through his elected representative. And that is reprehensible legislation.

Mr. Peters: The Liberals can muck up even a good program.

Mr. McCain: I have sat in the House long enough to know that no effective input into the policy or operations of Air Canada has been made by any committee of this House which has sat since October 30, 1972, and according to other members who have been here far longer than I have no one has ever been successful in making an input into Air Canada's operations despite all the notes and memoranda written to the president, to the chairman, or to branch management. Nothing happens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: If the government would agree to say to the airline, "You will submit your budget to a committee of the House which will have an opportunity to study it and appraise its profitability and assess the service provided by your corporation," we would be talking about a different kettle of fish. But that is not the situation. We are being asked to approve a bill which puts more power in the hands of the minister, a bill which gives still more leeway to the executive, an executive which has proven itself incapable of running a service comparable with that available from other airlines.

I want to give you an example from personal experience of what I mean in terms of the basic procedures by which Crown corporations in general, and Air Canada in particular, operate. It was recently necessary for me to go to Washington. I was not able to make a connection via Air Canada because Air Canada does not bother connecting the Atlantic region continentally with any points except Montreal and Toronto. So I had to go to Presquile and use an American airline. What was my experience? We were grounded at Portland, Maine, by weather conditions, as can happen with any airline. There were two ticket officers at the airport there, side by side. I spoke with the agents of both companies, because of the urgency of my getting to the meeting in Washington. Those two men paged me jointly and separately and kept me posted every ten or 20 minutes until I knew exactly where I was going to be, and at what time, and could let the people at the other end know.

It was not six months ago that I had the misfortune to be out at the airport in the little city of Ottawa, at the disposal of Air Canada. With me was a father, a mother, a 13-month-old child, and a 3-month-old child. Do you know what that airline did at the airport, Mr. Speaker? They would not tell me what the weather was like out of doors. And they took those two little children, together with the father and mother, to Montreal in spite of the promise which was given to them at the airport, and dumped them off in Montreal where they sat for 18 hours on the benches at the airport there. I ask you to compare that kind of treatment which the service I received across the border.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It being four o'clock the House will proceed to private members' business.

Mr. McCain: I wish to call it four o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I take it I have been recognized as calling it four o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I have just recognized the parliamentary secretary on a point of order. Afterwards I will hear the hon. member.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, in the normal course of events, earlier in the day we had made arrangements for the usual private members' business to be undertaken in this hour. Unfortunately, after we had begun our business today the hon. member who was in a position to proceed with an item in the private members' hour this afternoon, found he was not in a position to do so. This news came to us at a time when it was too late to arrange substitute business for this hour.

As hon. gentlemen across the way well know, private members' hour is one period which, unlike some others, is marked by a degree of co-operation and cordiality, and it is on this basis we are able to proceed on most days. It sometimes happens that a member is not in a position to proceed with the arranged item of business at the last minute and this leaves the House in some difficulty because of the late notice which is then given to other members about the kind of business we might take in that hour. That is the position in which we find ourselves today because of the late cancellation; we have not been able to find another item of business with which to proceed.

An hon. Member: Poor arrangements.

Mr. Goodale: Bearing in mind the point we have reached in the session it would seem to me to be a wise use of the time of the House if there were agreement to proceed with the hour remaining to us today by continuing consideration of the business which is presently before us, Bill C-17.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Goodale: I hear some catcalls, an indication from the other side that hon. gentlemen may not be in the mood to do the country's business today. Nevertheless, I will at least request that we consider taking this hour which is available to us this afternoon and to devote to the continuation of the debate on Bill C-17.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, speaking first to the question of private members' business as raised by my friend, I gather that the hon. member who sponsors the said motion, who is a member of the Liberal party, is not prepared to proceed with it. It is unfortunate, however, that the P.C. party was not asked whether we would be prepared to proceed with private members' business because we might well have been if we had been notified four, five or six minutes ago. In any event, private members' hour is an hour marked by co-operation, which means that government members co-operate to ensure that private members' business does not leave the House on second reading. That is the essence of the co-operation. Unfortunately, that is what is happening.

It is not too late to organize. I think perhaps we could go through the items on the order paper and find something which could be debated. The parliamentary secretary says he cannot do that under the circumstances. I happen to think that private members' hour should be respected. The parliamentary secretary and you, Mr. Speaker, I am sure, can tell from the comments from all sides of the House that there is no disposition to give up private members' hour simply because the government is not prepared to put forward a motion. Therefore, Sir, I must say, so that there be no doubt about it that I hide behind no one with respect to the matter and I say that consent is not forthcoming from this side, in the circumstances experienced in the House of Commons in the last couple of days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has refused consent to giving up the private members' hour. That seems to leave us with the question as to whether there is something we could deal with, and I draw attention to notice of motion No. 27 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). We would be prepared to deal with that motion in this hour.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That would be agreeable to us, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There was some discussion as to whether we might not proceed with another motion.

Mr. Paproski: Quit the stalling.

Mr. Blais: An offer was made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) to deal with Bill S-2. We attempted to obtain that consent because there are very few days left in which to deal with private members' business. In view of the fact that the hon. member suggested that we proceed with debate on that bill, let me say that we would be pleased to do so. Also, there has been some discussion that in the event we could not proceed with the item that had been suggested previously, the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), that the House adjourn at this point. Therefore, I in view of the inability to meet any requirement as to the business with which we are to proceed, all the best efforts having been made, I suggest that the House do now adjourn.

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is no motion before the House, I suggest that, despite all the palaver of the parliamentary secretary, we proceed as usual and that you call out the notices of motions in the regular order, at which time I would be prepared to indicate my preference if no other member indicates his.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Because of the bumbling of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) we are faced with this dilemma.

I have a notice of motion No. 27 on the order paper. We have not yet run out of business important to the people of Canada. The motion in my name asks the government to consider the establishment of a mining act for the protection of miners. If that is not of concern to the people of Canada, I do not know what is. How can the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) suggest adjournment of the House when we have important business such as notice of motion No. 27 regarding the safety of workers? We can very well debate it. I think the government has bungled House of Commons business in the last three days miserably, and now it wants to adjourn the House. It is absolutely shameful for it to want to adjourn the House.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And we will not let them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There has been a suggestion that we proceed to motion No. 27. Is that agreed?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, we seem to have lost that note of cordiality which I referred to earlier which tends to be the hallmark of this hour. I think we should go through the normal process of calling out the items of business on the order paper. I do not think we have any other alternative at this stage but to follow the normal process.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Since we do not have unanimous consent to proceed to notice of motion No. 27, we will consider the motions one by one. The first notice of motion is No. 16 in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is not here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is there agreement to debate the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the sponsor of the motion must be present in the House to move a motion. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) is not here, so we cannot proceed with the motion, and I propose that it be struck.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I rise on the same point of order. I would be prepared to move the motion in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) so that we could proceed with the debate on it. That is quite in order, and in accordance with the rules.

Mr. Blais: Not unless the mover of the motion consents.

[Mr. Peters.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion is stood at the request of the government.

• (1610)

Notice of motion No. 17 in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). Is there unanimous consent to proceed with motion No. 17 in the absence of its mover?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: no.

Motion No. 17 stood at the request of the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Notice of motion No. 26 in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion stands at the request of the government.

MERCHANT MARINE

SUGGESTION TO REVIVE

The House resumed, from Monday, December 6, 1976, consideration of the motion of Mr. Guay (Lévis):

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of reviving the Canadian Merchant Marine and applying recommendations of the Darling Report.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to deal with this particular motion. There has been some debate on this motion, and the interest of the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) is a very serious and worthwhile one. As hon. members very well know, my riding is not adjacent to any of the oceans which surround the country. I am left at somewhat of a disadvantage. I therefore move:

That the debate on motion No. 3 be now adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

PUBLIC SERVICE

TASK FORCE TO REVIEW PUBLIC SERVICE ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, December 13, 1976, consideration of the motion of Mr. Herbert:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing a special task force to review the Public Service Employment Act and the role of the Commission in personnel management and employer-employee relations in the Public Service and that the review include an examination of the role assigned the Public Service Commission and its relationship to the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Public Service Staff Relations Board; and

That the review entail a study of the relationship of the Public Service Commission and the departments and agencies; and consider the development of an audit system for perfomance accountability with respect to matters delegated to departments and agencies under the Public Service Employment Act.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I chaired the joint parliamentary committee relating to the public service and staff relations within the public service. There was much deliberation. I feel it would not be useful at this time to proceed with this debate, so I move:

That the House do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Blais) which was agreed to on the following division.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: For the convenience of hon. members, we might take a half minute to explore what the business will be on Monday. I do not know if that would warrant to be done by way of a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to do that. On Monday we will be proceeding with Bill C-60 relating to redistribution in northern Ontario.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, when is Bill C-51 coming up for debate?

Mr. Blais: Thereafter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: This House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m.

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT NOT PROCEED WITH PROPOSAL TO TAX BENEFITS OF LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity and of some considerable significance relating to the threatened implication of new taxes on the owners of life insurance policies, changes which may affect the tax status of millions of Canadians and of billions of dollars in policy benefits. In view of the fact that the proposal to tax policy savings gains at death amounts to reaching into the grave to tax the results of Canadian productivity and foresight, and in view of the fact that the proposals relating to the tax treatment of policy loans will deprive many average Canadians of a source of accessible and inexpensive financing for family and business needs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House urge the government not to proceed with those sections of Bill C-56 dealing with the taxation of the life insurance policy owner and the tax treatment of policy loans and loan interest payments.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN CENTRE FOR OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion which I am sure all hon. members of the House will find agreeable. In view of a recent study which showed that foundry workers at Dominion Foundries and Steel Company have four and a half times the risk of lung cancer as workers in other parts of the plant, and in view of the health hazards in other industries and the lack of progress that is being made in cleaning up the work environment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That the federal government implement as soon as possible its long promised Canadian Centre for Occupational Safety and Health to help co-ordinate and implement measures to protect workers' health and safety.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO ELIMINATE LOAN SHARKING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) has announced the withdrawal of that legislative mess known as Bill C-16, the borrowers and depositors protection act, which in fairness he inherited and could not correct even with some 75 proposed amendments, and since there therefore remains unsolved the serious loan sharking problem which continues to cause such concern to police and members of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House urge the Minister of Justice to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code which would be non-controversial and which would eliminate the practice of loan sharking.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED PRIZE FOR MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. My motion is prompted by the revelation of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) that the abortive foray of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) into July 2 broadcasting caused him to "be looked upon as a partisan, jaded politician", a very understandable and perceptive insight by the minister. In view of the minister's sentiments that it is unfortunate that politicians are held in such low esteem because it undermines their ability to provide leadership, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

● (1410)

That this House recommends that the Minister of Supply and Services, in view of his outstanding achievements in the field of political buck passing, be awarded the J. Btlfzkf prize named after Al Capp's cartoon character who lived under the cloud of his own ineptitude.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ELECTIONS

SUGGESTION HON. JEAN-LUC PEPIN NOT BE CANDIDATE IN NEXT ELECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising out of concern for the integrity of the Order of Canada and more particularly for the tradition that it not be awarded to active politicians but be reserved in that field to honour those who, having made worthy contributions, have retired. In order that the House be reassured that the integrity of the order has not been breached, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the House call upon the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, newly appointed Companion of the Order to unequivocally state that he will not be a candidate for a Liberal nomination in any Ottawa constituency nor in any other federal constituency for the next federal election.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM MALAYSIA

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before commencing the oral question period, I know all hon. members will want to join me in calling attention to the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished parliamentary delegation visiting us from Malaysia, particularly from the state of Sabah, headed by their very distinguished minister of communications and works, the Hon. Guan Sing Lim.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED ABANDONMENT OF PROPOSAL TO TAX BENEFITS OF LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In his budget message the minister announced his intention of taxing what is called the savings portion of death benefits received from life insurance policies. In Bill C-56 which will implement these proposals the minister attempted to lessen their full impact by deeming that only the portion of a savings gain which exceeds $10,000 will be added to the income of certain beneficiaries. Considering that no modifications to tax thresholds can disguise the fact that this administration proposes to reverse the trend away from death duties and to reach into the grave to tax survivors at the worst possible time, will the minister tell the House whether he will now abandon this particularly repellent attempt to generate revenues through taxing the results of Canadians' productivity and foresight?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might correct the hon. gentleman. He would know if he examined the Income Tax Act that in cases where income has been deferred during the lifetime of a recipient where he has had the benefit of being exempt from income tax under those circumstances, the law provides that it shall be brought in and it shall be taxed upon the event of his death. This is the case with regard to the capital gains tax as well as a registered retirement savings plan which has not yet matured, and with regard to deferred income, for example, under Canada Savings Bonds.

Under those circumstances, it seemed to us fair that people who have chosen to save by way of life insurance policies, the savings portion, as opposed to other means of savings, should be treated in exactly the same way to the extent that the instrument is the same. On this basis it is fair to observe that this will bring the taxation of that benefit into roughly the same treatment as those of other kinds. I would remind the hon. gentleman that previously the tax had been imposed upon policyholders, but at the corporate level under part XII of the Income Tax Act. It is the replacement of that tax by another tax.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The changes at the corporate level will require insurance companies to raise premiums, and the taxation by this government will cause hardship to widows and other beneficiaries. It is in effect a taxation reaching into the grave. The minister cannot have it two ways. Is the government considering the briefs which have been sent to it as a result of the fury this has generated in the insurance industry and the concern it has generated among the Canadian population generally, and is the government intending to change Bill C-56 over the summer? There is still some time, since the bill has been deferred.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this is to treat those who save by way of whole life policies in the same way as people who save by other instruments. It is to put all savers on the same basis. There will be a special benefit for policyholders who are entitled to modest amounts. I acknowledge that the life insurance industry has mounted a very extensive lobby. I think it is fair to point out to the House and to the country that it was the life insurance industry which asked to have part XII changed in order to put whole life policies on the same basis as other saving instruments.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, considering that very few countries in the world tax life insurance benefits, and considering that the Carter commission on taxation recommended against levying death duties—and that is all this is, another form of death duty—can the minister refer the House to any report or study which has recommended the imposition of such measures, and if he cannot, will the government reconsider the second question and consider abandoning what is a retrograde step in the field of death duty taxation, no matter what colour the minister tries to paint it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is wrong again. The measures do not tax the death benefits involved in a whole life policy. The death benefit is specifically exempt, and if the hon. member would examine the law, he would find that out. He would also find, however, that the savings that an individual has been able to enjoy tax free throughout his life are brought into taxation, just as all other kinds of savings are at the date of death. I again point out to the hon. gentleman that the part XII tax was brought in as a result of the Carter commission report which recommended that savings of this kind should be treated like savings of every other kind and that they should bear their portion of the taxation.

REASON FOR TREATING LOANS ON INSURANCE POLICIES AS DISTRIBUTION OF INCOME—POSSIBLE REFUNDING OF TAX WHEN LOAN REPAID

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I note that the minister proposes to treat the amount of a policy loan in excess of premiums paid as a distribution of income. In view of the fact that millions of Canadians borrow from policies for such purposes as sending children to college or meeting emergency expenditures, will the minister tell the House why he proposes to deprive Canadians of a source of inexpensive and easily accessible financing which is not subject to substantial tax penalties?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman might like to read the law or have someone interpret it for him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Your arrogance is showing.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I say that to the hon. gentleman because I recognize that he is not a member of the bar and because this is a very difficult and complex measure. I say that in no demeaning sense. To the extent that the amount of an advance under a policy exceeds the aggregate premiums and also to the extent that the $1,000 exemption is now available, it will be taxable. We anticipate that in most cases this will not result in a tax liability.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, since the minister fails to see the similarity between borrowing on the security of, for example, the family home and borrowing on the security of a life insurance policy, can he tell the House whether he will consider refunding the tax assessed on policy loans once they are repaid?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that there have been advances made on policies, any advances repaid on the policies will be added for the purpose of increasing the amount of aggregate premiums and therefore increasing the ultimate taxable exemption. The difference between an advance on a life insurance policy and any other kind of advance by way of loan is that there is an obligation to pay other kinds of loans back. That is not the case with respect to life insurance policies.

PROPOSAL TO TAX BENEFITS OF LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES—EFFECT ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Considering that many small businessmen now borrow on their insurance policies and deduct interest payments on those loans as a legitimate business expense, does the minister not realize that the cumulative effect of the two tax proposals relating to policy loans will be to force small businesses to make an attempt—not necessarily successful—to get financing from other financial institutions at much higher rates of interest? Has he consulted with his colleague the Minister of State (Small Business), to ascertain whether these tax changes are in the interest of the small business sector?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman might want to think about the mathematics of that. The small businessman would go to a banker to borrow at 12 per cent but he can get an advance on his policy at 6 per cent. In other words, the advance on the policy is a substantial benefit now and it seems to us it should be treated as an advance, which it is, and not a loan, which it is not.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

DATE MINISTER WAS AWARE OF LOSS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A few days ago I asked the minister when he first learned that AECL had suffered a loss of $130 million on the sale of a nuclear reactor to Argentina. The minister said he only learned of it a couple of weeks ago. In view of the fact that he has frequently told the House that he reorganized the board of directors last November and at that time there were appointed to the board the deputy minister of energy, mines and resources, the deputy minister of finance and the deputy minister of industry, trade and commerce may I ask if his deputy minister, Mr. Gordon MacNabb, reported to him more than a couple of weeks ago that there was a loss of more than $130 million and what was more, a spread between income and expenditures of $290 million and why that was not reported to him more than a few days before the report was tabled?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would check the record he would see I indicated I had received precise advice on losses or more accurately, the provision for future losses because they are not losses that have yet been incurred this year to the AECL contract with Argentina a couple of weeks ago. It had been brought to my attention that there might be substantial losses with respect to the AECL operation perhaps a couple of weeks before that. It may well have come from the source to which the hon. member has just alluded. As to the precise loss with respect to that contract, my answer stands as it is on the record.

DATE MINISTER OF FINANCE WAS ADVISED OF LOSS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. I take it the purpose of appointing the deputy minister of the Department of Finance to the board of directors of AECL was for the purpose of keeping the Department of Finance informed as to the financial position of that Crown corporation. Was the minister advised anytime prior to the tabling of this annual report and financial statement that AECL faced a deficit of $290 million, $130 million of which was due to the sale of the reactor to Argentina?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the House that I was advised there would be a substantial loss anticipated showing on the books of AECL for the period being covered.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I indicated, it was a matter of some weeks—I cannot be precise—before the tabling. That is the tabling now a week or ten days ago.

SUGGESTION DEPUTY MINISTERS NOT BE APPOINTED TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I put the final supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The purpose of putting busy deputy ministers on the boards of directors of Crown corporations ought to be to keep the government informed on what is going on, yet we find from the answer given today that the ministers were not aware of this until after the annual report was in preparation. Would it not be advisable, instead of putting pro forma representatives on the board of directors, to find people who could give time to this matter and report regularly to the government how they find the state of finances of the various Crown corporations to which they are appointed? Instead of putting deputy ministers on, who are already so busy with the work of their departments that they are unable to discharge adequately the responsibilities for which they were appointed, is it not time to change the method of dealing with this situation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I think the hon. member is confusing the role of a director with that of an auditor of a corporation. In this instance the auditor of the corporation is also the Auditor General of Canada. The hon. member should recognize that it is the responsibility of directors to apprise shareholders of the size of a potential loss only when they are sure precisely how large that loss will be, and that is the purpose of the auditor. The auditor signed the statement on June 22; I believe it was submitted to the directors some days after that. Clearly, the directors would be out of order if they were to prejudge the statement of the auditor of the corporation, particularly when he is the Auditor General of Canada.

INFORMATION SUPPLIED MINISTER BY PRESIDENT OF CORPORATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? My question relates to the testimony the former president of AECL, Mr. Gray, gave before the public accounts committee on February 1, 1977. Telling the committee how well the government was kept informed, at luncheon meetings with deputies of the department or with the minister himself, he said:

I think that AECL and I, personally, did more to keep other government offices advised of what we were doing than any other government office.

When Mr. Gray left the office of president of the board, did that kind of transmittal of information cease and not continue with the new chairman, Mr. Ross Campbell, and the president, Dr. Foster? Is the minister saying he did not receive from the new officers the kind of ongoing information which had been supplied by the former president?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sure luncheons are a useful vehicle for transmitting information, but as far as I am concerned luncheons are not enough.

Miss MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the minister, on occasion, has breakfast and dinner as well. Is the minister saying that the present officers of AECL including the chairman, Ross Campbell, no longer informs him or his deputy on the continuing basis on which Mr. Gray had supplied this information formerly, whether at luncheon meetings or at any other kind of meetings?

Mr. Gillespie: No, Mr. Speaker, I have had the odd lunch with the director. I have had the odd lunch with Mr. Campbell and Mr. Foster, but I can tell the hon. lady that I have had many, many more formal meetings than luncheon meetings to discuss the affairs of the corporation. I do not just wait for formal meetings. I use the telephone a great deal. There is a good deal of discussion back and forth.

SALE OF REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—PERSON INFORMING MINISTER OF LOSS LEADER POLICY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say who told him, and when, that it was the policy of AECL to sell a reactor as a loss leader to Argentina. Did Mr. Campbell convey that information to him?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. lady is referring to a comment made by the chairman of the corporation when he said the corporation had sharpened its pencils, taken a major effort to secure a contract in the face of competition from foreign corporations and, in sharpening its pencils in order to get the business, might well have acknowledged it would not make a normal rate of return and that, indeed, there could be a small loss.

Miss MacDonald: Do you call a loss of $130 million small?

Mr. Gillespie: That is the interpretation I placed on Mr. Campbell's comment.

Mr. Paproski: Is $130 million one of your smaller losses?

LA PRADE HEAVY WATER PROJECT—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF TOTAL COST—AMOUNT OF DEBIT ON FOREIGN SALES OF HEAVY WATER

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources relating to AECL. I have given him written notice in the hope that I will get some specific answers from him. The AECL at the moment is building a heavy water plant known as La Prade, near Gentilly, Quebec. The annual report tabled by the minister a week ago last Thursday, which strangely enough had not been distributed to the public or the press, indicates that the 1974 total project authorization of $453 million is presently under review. Having had notice of my question, can the minister now tell me the current estimated total capital cost of the La Prade heavy water project in Quebec?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the corporation for the figures so that I might be able to provide an answer to the hon. member. It is quite true that he provided notice to my office with respect to this question. I think it important that he get a detailed answer. The corporation has indicated to me that they are not yet in a position to provide the kinds of figures he is seeking. I can give him an undertaking that as soon as they become available to me, I will transmit them to him.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, that is totally unacceptable to me and to every other member of this House. The question was asked not only to elicit information but also to get it on the record so that in case there is some type of coverup later in this House, the minister will be on the record. Certainly, information has reached some of us that the amount will be abhorrent. Can the minister tell us how much the Canadian debit is at the moment with respect to the sale of heavy water overseas? I understand that for this year alone there is a reserve amount of $30 million for a loss with regard to the overseas sale of heavy water. Having tabled the annual report, I am sure the minister will have these figures at his fingertips. Can the minister advise, and eventually I would like the answer in the House, the total loss on the overseas sale of heavy water?

Mr. Gillespie: Going back to the first part of the first question, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must recognize there has been a very specific escalation in capital costs over the past three years in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: If the hon. member is familiar with the situation, he will know about the escalation in the costs of steel, refinery costs—

An hon. Member: Syncrude.

Mr. Gillespie: Even the Syncrude plant. It is for those reasons I want to get as accurate a figure as I can before providing the hon. member with that information.

As to the question about the obligations or the exposure of the corporation with respect of overseas sales of heavy water, if the hon. member will look at the annual report which has been tabled, he will see that $30 million has been provided for future losses of the corporation.

Mr. Lawrence: This year.

Mr. Gillespie: No, Mr. Speaker. The important point is that these are not losses that are being incurred this year. It is provision for future losses, which might take place over a period of five or more years.

Mr. Lawrence: I wonder if we could have assurance from the minister on two grounds. First, will the loss on the La Prade project be greater or lesser than the Argentinian project? Second, if it is greater, who will he have left to fire in AECL for that?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence at the moment that there will be a loss with respect to the La Prade heavy water plant. There is evidence that there has been an escalation in costs as there have been with respect to all major capital costs in this country over the past three years.

HOUSING

DATE OF APPROVAL OF ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT IN TORONTO

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the July 31 deadline for CMHC approval of the St. Lawrence housing project in Toronto, if work is to commence on October 1, which will create 500 badly needed construction jobs, can the minister or his parliamentary secretary inform the House whether approval will be given before that date?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to advise the hon. member that last week the minister advised Mayor Crombie that he agreed in principle with the St. Lawrence project which, as the hon. member stated, will create many jobs.

Mr. Paproski: This isn't the late show. Just answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF GASOLINE RATIONING—GOVERNMENT POSITION—ALLEGED LACK OF EFFORT ON CONSERVATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister recently stated that gas rationing is a real possibility in the future and that his department has already prepared rationing legislation. Will the minister inform the House when he will be tabling that rationing legislation and can he give some indication as to when it will be necessary to begin rationing?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, very shortly after the embargo in 1973, work was started to provide a contingency plan for Canada in the event we would not have supplies as a result of the embargo or for other reasons. That work proceeded. When the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board completed its work a year ago, the work was set aside. It has been completed and it can be put into force. It requires an act of this House to do so. I do not intend to table the bill at the present time. Quite clearly, I think it is prudent that we have legislation ready to go and more particulary the system ready to go for the allocation of scarce resources in the event it is needed. However, I hope it never will be.

Mr. McKenzie: As the International Energy Agency cited Canada for below average conservation efforts last year and as the minister has frittered away four years of opportunities during which this country could have made a good start toward self sufficiency, not self reliance, in the late eighties, is the government prepared to admit its responsibility where rationing is imminent?

Mr. Giilespie: Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated to the hon. member, it is prudent to have a rationing system worked out which has been thoroughly discussed with the members of the industry so that if a rationing system becomes necessary, it can be implemented very quickly. It would be very helpful for the people of Canada and perhaps members on this side of the House if members opposite would take a more positive interest in some of these questions and put forward a few ideas. I cannot recall a time when the Conservative party has been as bankrupt of ideas in the energy field as it is right now.

Mr. McKenzie: I suggest that the minister read the committee meeting minutes as well as speeches made in this House by members of the opposition. We are not the government. They are the government. The IEA has stated that Canada ranks fifteenth out of the 18 member nations. How can the minister say he has an all-out effort with regard to exploration? When will he be giving us his new rules and regulations needed for frontier development?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misleading the House, I assume inadvertently, when he says that Canadian efforts with regard to conservation and the development of an energy policy lag so far behind. If he were to read the transcript, he would find that in almost every area Canada has moved ahead very substantially. The one area where Canada was criticized, and this is the area where the hon. member's party has had so much trouble making up its mind, was that we had continued to keep our price significantly below the world price. I have not heard the hon. member or his colleagues arguing that Canada should raise the price of its oil. Indeed, they have been absolutely silent with regard to this fundamental question on energy policy in this country.

PENSIONS

PROPOSED INCREASE IN VETERANS AND OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to at least two departments of government and I had intended, therefore, to put it to the Prime Minister. In his absence I will address it to the Acting Prime Minister, which will probably be appropriate since the Acting Prime Minister today is the Minister of Finance. Now that the President of the Treasury Board has been able to announce the lifting of the freeze on the salaries of senior civil servants, although he has promised us that in 1977-78 no public servants will earn more than $62,500, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government will consider the serious needs of senior citizens and of war veterans and give the green light to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Veterans Affairs to increase the basic amounts of the pensions which come under their jurisdictions?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has, of course, been continuing to give serious consideration to these matters but I regret I cannot give the green light to the hon. gentleman's request at this point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I really have two supplementaries to ask, Mr. Speaker, if I am allowed, but in case I am permitted only one I will direct it to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Now that it is clear that money is available for some purposes, will the hon. gentleman go all out to win an increase in the basic disability pension and get rid of the wide gap which presently exists?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I will do what I have done on previous occasions. I will put forward my best efforts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare do the same?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is the most depressing answer we have had yet.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REASON FOR NEXT MEETING OF MINISTER WITH NATIONAL FEDERATION OF TRADE UNIONS

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Today's newspapers report that the minister is going to meet the representatives of the Confederation of National Trade Unions. Can the minister give us an indication of the purpose of those meetings?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a meeting planned for the next day or two with leaders of the CSN for discussions along the lines of those conducted with the CLC and the business community concerning the various options the government is considering with respect to a decontrol period. This is the meeting to which the hon. member may be referring.

ENERGY

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND QUEBEC ON DEVELOPMENT OF HYDRO PROJECTS IN LABRADOR—POSSIBLE FEDERAL PARTICIPATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it relates to the meeting held between the premiers of Quebec and Newfoundland with regard to the development of alternative sources of hydro energy in Labrador. Has the hon. gentleman's department taken any part in these discussions or, if not, has any approach been made by either provincial government for federal participation or financial help?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): There was no federal participation in these discussions nor did I receive a request from either of the provinces that there should be.

Mr. Marshall: Since there is a source of hydro power available on the Lower Churchill and having regard to the energy shortage, would the minister take the initiative by approaching the two premiers to ensure that this development goes ahead in the best interests of the country? He has already offered $340 million to Newfoundland in connection with the development of the Lower Churchill.

Mr. Gillespie: I took that initiative a long, long time ago. I am still waiting to receive from the government of Newfoundland updated information with respect to Gull Island. I am ready to sit down and discuss what I consider to be an asset of national importance, but I need that information, and it lies, right now, with the Newfoundland government.

IMMIGRATION

JAMES KENNEDY—REASON FOR DEPORTATION ORDER—POSSIBLE EXECUTION OF ORDER PRIOR TO HEARING OF APPEAL

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): A question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, Mr. Speaker. I recognize it is the minister's duty to carry out the provisions of the Immigration Act but I wish to raise with him today a matter which concerns human rights, one which I brought to his attention three weeks ago. The issue is not specifically James Peter Joseph Kennedy but the principle involved. This man has been held in maximum security in Vancouver, since May 27, nearly two months, now, on the suspicion that he is really someone else, an Irish terrorist, although no criminal charges have been laid in Canada and no public hearing has been held here, and no extradition proceedings have been commenced either against Kennedy or against the other man, McCann. I should like to ask for what reason the deportation order was issued and whether the appeal to the Federal Court, already lodged, will be heard before the order is executed?

Oral Questions

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that a person known as James Kennedy was ordered deported on July 14, 1977 for being a person who had been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude. Counsel for the person known as James Kennedy have commenced legal proceedings before the Federal Court. My officials are studying the implications of these proceedings as they relate to the execution of a deportation order.

Mr. Clarke: When will Mr. Kennedy be deported and to what country—or will he become another General Quang?

Mr. Cullen: No, I think one clunker is enough, Mr. Speaker. I understand that this gentleman would be deported to Northern Ireland and the time is to be determined following the investigations which our counsel are making into the implications of his filing an appeal notwithstanding that a deportation order is ready to be put into effect.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSIBILITY OF GUARANTEE WITH RESPECT TO SOCIO-ECONOMIC EFFECTS OF PIPELINE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It concerns the discussions held, and agreement signed, with the Province of British Columbia recently. I should like to ask the minister whether there was any reference in these discussions or in the agreement to the very special socio-economic implications to Northeast British Columbia which would accompany the construction of a pipeline. I should like to ask the government, specifically, whether it is the intention to require from the pipeline companies some kind of guarantee with respect to socio-economic effects both while the line is being constructed and afterward.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, obviously during our negotiations and discussions the possibility of building a pipeline was also considered, but we really could not, at that stage, look into the details of its social and economic implications, so that, in fact the agreements signed at that time do not concern that project as such. Naturally, when a decision has been announced and construction starts, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, as well as the British Columbia department of economic development can pursue negotiations further with a view to seeing how those agreements can be of benefit to the regions concerned.

[English]

ENERGY

NORTHERN PIPELINE—POSSIBILITY OF GUARANTEE BY COMPANY TO BRITISH COLUMBIA WITH RESPECT TO SOCIO-ECONOMIC IMPACT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): A supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the National Energy Board has recommended that up to $200 million should be deposited to deal with the socio-economic impact on the Yukon Territory, is it the intention of the minister to require that companies which would be involved should meet a similar requirement with respect to areas of northeast British Columbia through which the pipeline would be passing, since those areas are just as sensitive in economic and in environmental terms as is the Yukon?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The whole question of the nature of the decision to be made will, of course, have to await the outcome of a debate in this House which I believe has been set for early in August. That is the time when all members can make their input. The government will then make its decision on the basis of that input and of other evidence before it, sometime in August. That is our plan. We shall also be ready to consider further representations if they are put forward on this question during that period.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS BOARD

FAILURE OF BOARD TO DESIGNATE HOME OF MR. DIEFENBAKER—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that millions of Canadians would like to see the government take appropriate action to honour a distinguished former prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development prepared to reconsider his unwillingness to intervene with the National Historic Sites and Monuments Board concerning their refusal to designate the home in Neustadt, Ontario, which was the birthplace of the right hon. gentleman, as a national historic site as long as the right hon. gentleman is still alive? I ask this question in view of the fact that the home is in private hands and both the local council and the county council are very anxious to see this action taken.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, the Historic Sites and Monuments Board is an independent commission which deals with these matters. It was set up in that way to make decisions in a non-partisan way. At the present time, its policy is not to recognize living politicians in that way; but I have asked them to review that policy, and I am awaiting that review.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I hear they are buying Mr. Pepin's house.

CUSTOMS

LACK OF PERSONNEL TO GIVE CLEARANCE TO CHARTER FLIGHTS AT SYDNEY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue in charge of customs. I wish to thank the hon. lady for sending me a report on the subject matter of my question, although regrettably it is not encouraging. Several international charter flights have been prevented from landing at the Sydney airport, supposedly because of inadequate customs clearance facilities, according to certain bureaucrats in her department. Indeed one flight was forced, after landing at Sydney, to then fly to Halifax for customs clearance before returning to Sydney. Because this new regulation is creating great hardship and cost, not only to those who wish to visit Cape Breton island as tourists, but is hindering our tourist industry, would the minister be good enough to have this situation investigated further in order to have this problem corrected? I am informed that there are adequate facilities and manpower to take care of these charter flights?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that since I am responsible for a department providing services, I shall look further into the situation. I ask him to provide me personally with the details on the incident to which he referred. I should, however, like to take this opportunity to correct the impression he gave about the bureaucrats and existing facilities and so on. He knows full well that Parliament and the Canadian people have to keep some control over expenditures; we made arrangements for Sydney to accommodate certain chartered flights, but the airport is not classified as an international airport.

[English]

I wish him an international airport at Sydney one day, but we have not reached that point yet.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. lady for her answer; but in view of the fact that customs have been clearing international flights at this airport for many, many years, the magic number of 42 passengers comes up. Where was this decided? How was it decided that 42 passengers is the limit which can be cleared? In fact, a Concorde landed at that airport and they cleared some people there. Therefore, it would be in the interests of creating more jobs, which are badly needed on Cape Breton Island, if we could hire some more customs officials to clear some people there as they land.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I will transmit this request to the Treasury Board.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO THOSE WHO REFUSE TO TAKE JOBS

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that a new extended CARE hospital has officially opened at the medical science centre at the University of British Columbia, but two-thirds of it must remain closed to a long waiting group of elderly sick while 200 nurses receive unemployment insurance benefits, and since the reasons given for their refusal to take work violates UIC regulations, will the minister consider moving to discontinue benefits of those who refuse to take the jobs available?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the situation is that some benefits have been disallowed as a result of some nurses refusing to take these particular jobs. It strikes me this is a situation, given a surplus of nurses, where we can use the immortal words of Horace Greely: "Go west, young woman", as well as some young men who have taken up this respected profession.

DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRE FOR OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH—PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed the Minister of Labour. In view of the recent study which showed that foundry workers at Dominion Foundries and Steel Company have 4½ times the risk of lung cancer as workers in other parts of the plant, and in view of the health hazards in other industries as well and the lack of progress that is being made in cleaning up the work environment, I wonder if the minister can tell us when we can expect the establishment of the long promised Canadian centre for occupational safety and health to help co-ordinate and implement measures to protect workers' health and safety?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would hope by the end of this year, or at the very latest, the early part of next year. I should add that the interest of the hon. member is appreciated. By and large, discussions with the provinces have gone very well. They are desirous of participating with this agency, as are many in the business and labour communities.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister can inform the House as to whether he has agreement from all provinces to participate in this centre? Because a lot of provincial jurisdiction will be involved, what kind of muscle will this centre have? Will it merely be an advisory kind of body?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, it is not an invasion in any sense of the word on provincial jurisdiction. In a sense we have a responsibility to our own workers in federal jurisdiction. Because of substantial resources and expertise within the various government departments already devoted to this subject, we are proposing that they be brought together and co-ordinated through one institute which can marshall the resources, the research and the expertise necessary to stay on top of new and exotic noxious substances. They are always being introduced as new technology comes into place within the manufacturing industries and industry in general. In that sense, we are trying to stay contemporaneous with new developments in the work place and to protect the workers against harmful effects to which the hon. member has just referred.

To reiterate, there is no invasion on provincial jurisdiction. I have talked with ministers of some provinces and my officials have talked with them as well. The ministers to whom I have spoken have welcomed this initiative very much. If it has the participation of the provinces under the aegis of the federal government—business, labour and some type of tripartite apparatus—then their findings will have tremendous political momentum behind them for implementation and for acceptance within the general community.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SKAGIT VALLEY, BRITISH COLUMBIA—ACTION TO ENSURE NO FLOODING—POSSIBLE REVIEW OF AGREEMENT TO RAISE ROSS DAM

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am wondering if he can tell us what action the government is taking to ensure that the Skagit Valley in Canadian territory is not flooded, as a result of a decision by Seattle Light and Power to raise the Ross Dam in the State of Washington?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to make inquiries on this and communicate directly with the hon. gentleman.

[Mr. Symes.]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the answer on the record. While the minister is inquiring, I wonder if he could inquire also as to whether the government can give the assurance that it supports the government of British Columbia in its efforts to have a second look at the International Joint Commission agreement under which the Ross Dam was to have been raised, as underlying this present dispute?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to make that inquiry as well.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

DATE OF STATEMENT ON DECONTROL

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the minister has indicated on several occasions that he will be making a statement before the end of July with respect to the decontrol phase the government might be considering, could he indicate today more definitively when that statement will be made?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I will go to see my counterparts in the Atlantic provinces to discuss their approach to decontrol. On Wednesday I will see the government of Quebec, which will mean by that time that we will have consulted with all ten of the provinces. I anticipate bringing this matter before my colleagues in cabinet toward the end of the month. Naturally it will depend on the outcome of the cabinet decision, but I hope to be able to make it not later than the departure of cabinet for the summer at the end of the first week of August.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—FACTORS WHICH WILL SLOW RATE OF INCREASE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. As prices are increasing at an annual rate of 10 per cent over the first six months of this year, can the minister tell the House what factors he expects will slow this very rapid inflation; and in general can he tell the House whether he still sees the "underlying trend to lower inflation" that he saw in his last budget?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): In general, Mr. Speaker, yes. The fact is, of course, that in the first six months of this year food prices increased because of the increase in the cost of imported food. We feel that those costs by now have been absorbed into the system, indeed that Canadian foodstuffs will be coming into the consumer market within the next few weeks and that we should see a reduction on that side. I would have to recognize, on the other hand, that the further increase in petroleum and natural gas prices later in the year will be a countervailing factor.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council the government's intentions regarding business for today?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to begin this afternoon, as the first order of business, third reading of Bill C-51. As for items of business to be proceeded with thereafter, I should like to reserve the opportunity to consult with hon. gentlemen across the way, and I will be more specific about that later in the day.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I presume there is no difficulty in the government ranks in terms of votes today if we finish proceedings?

Mr. Goodale: That is correct presumption, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, my ever vigilant parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Gamelin, has pointed out to me that in answer to a question from the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra I inadvertently said that a person known as Kennedy would be deported to Northern Ireland. That should, of course, be the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, it is rarely that I rise on a point of order arising out of the question period, but having given notice to the Postmaster General of my intention to ask a question, and knowing that on Friday afternoon things fell apart over there rather badly, but not realizing the decay had reached the point that it seems to have reached today—I am very happy to know that one parliamentary secretary is awake in the House—having checked the list, I see that there is a parliamentary secretary for the Postmaster General, the hon. member for Saint-Jean. My question was straightforward and simple. I understood that the Postmaster General, who I realize has to be away today, was prepared to answer it, and I cannot understand the complete and utter silence with which my question was met.

Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I understood the question to be addressed to the acting minister; therefore, I did not rise at once. However, I missed my chance. The information that I have is that a decision has been taken, although I do not have a breakdown. I will gladly try to get an answer tomorrow for the hon. member.

APEC'S FIFTH REVIEW (1971)

Question No. 1,404—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Finance (c) the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce aware that APEC's Fifth Review (1971) states that the richer provinces "continue and expand their own industrial incentives programs that lessen the effectiveness of the programs pursued in the poorer provinces"?

2. Do the Departments agree with this observation made by APEC and, if not, for what reason?

3. Have any of the Departments taken any initiative in response to this situation and, if so, with what results?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned: 1. Yes.

2. DREE has no evidence that incentive programs pursued by the wealthier provinces have had detrimental effects on its own activities in support of industrial development in the poorer provinces under the Regional Development Incentives Act.

3. See answer to part 2.

In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: 1. Yes.

2. The department could agree with APEC's observation as a reasonable hypothesis, though not as a statement of demonstrated fact. As the same APEC review noted, evidence is lacking on the true impact of provincial development programs and on the actual effect of individual provincial programs on each other. The review recognized specifically that "quantitative and qualitative comparisons are difficult because of varying emphasis of activity for industrial development in the provinces, frequent changes in individual development in the provinces, frequent changes in individual provincial development programs, and the lack of data".

3. The department has not taken any initiative of the type mentioned.

In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Yes.

2. The department has no evidence that incentive programs pursued by the wealthier provinces have had detrimental effects on its own activities in support of industrial development in the poorer provinces. Because departmental programs are largely in the form of grants and provincial programs largely in the form of loans, assistance, in fact, is often complementary.

3. See answer to part 2.

PRODUCTION COSTS IN SECONDARY SECTORS

Question No. 1,405—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Do (a) DREE (b) the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce accept the viewpoint that in general the costs of production in the secondary sector are higher in the Atlantic Region than in Ontario?

2. For the industries (a) food and beverages (b) wood products (c) paper and allied (d) primary metal (e) metal fabricating (f) machinery (g) chemical and allied (h) textiles and clothing (i) electrical products (j) transport equipment (k) furniture and fixtures (l) printing and publishing, which factors or costs of production (i) financing and financial services (ii) land (iii) buildings (iv) machinery and equipment (v) energy (vi) transport of inputs (vii) tariff on inputs (viii) material inputs (ix) wages to labour (x) management and other professional salaries and fees (xi) fringe benefits for employees (xii) profits (xiii) transport of product to market (xiv) marketing (xv) local taxes (xvi) provincial taxes (xvii) federal taxes, are significantly higher or lower than those in Ontario and by what percentage?

3. As an average over the past five years for the secondary sector for (a) Atlantic (b) Quebec (c) Ontario (d) West, what percentage of (i) financing (ii) material inputs (iii) machinery and equipment came from within the region?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. (a) and (b) See answer to part 2.

2. The answer to this question would vary from one firm to another depending on many factors, including type of product, specific location, markets, collective agreement provisions and corporate structure. To obtain the data requested would entail a detailed survey of all firms in the industries specified. The costs of such a survey, and the work that would have to be carried out by reporting firms, is considered to be prohibitive. Specific investigations are undertaken from time to time as may be necessary, particularly as part of the administration of the regional development incentives program.

3. The departments do not have the data required to answer this question.

LABRADOR LINERBOARD MILL LIMITED

Question No. 1,645—Mr. Marshall:

1. Has the Province of Newfoundland approached the government to assist in overcoming the problems in marketing being experienced by Labrador Linerboard Mill Limited in Stephenville, Newfoundland, through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion or the Department of External Affairs?

2. Has any approach been made to the Export Development Corporation or to CIDA, to help explore markets for linerboard produced at the Labrador Linerboard Mill by the Province of Newfoundland?

3. (a) What is the productive capacity of linerboard in Canada (b) what are the names of the mills producing linerboard (c) how much of it is sold to foreign and domestic markets and to which markets?

4. Is Canada able to meet the demand of foreign and domestic markets for linerboard?

5. Has there been any follow up by officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce after meeting with the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, expressing concern over the deterioration of the Labrador Linerboard Mill?

[Mr. Goodale.]

6. As a result of the tour of Trade Commissioners to Canada in December 1976 from seven European posts, what opportunities were elicited to and what information was given as to how Canadian businessmen could take advantage of opportunities in their countries?

7. Did the series of seminars include Eastern Canada to provide the resources available in that part of the country and, if not, for what reason?

8. (a) Who were the individual businessmen who met with the Trade Commissioners on December 7 and 8, 1976 (b) did any of them represent the fishing, mining or pulp and paper industry and, if not, for what reason?

9. Were interest free loans or grants provided to foreign countries through the Export Development Corporation or CIDA or loan specialists for the establishment of pulp and paper mills or logging industries and, if so (a) in what amount (b) for what reason (c) did the government consider the effect on the Canadian market potential of such loans?

10. What are the names of pulp and paper mills coming on stream in foreign countries on whom Canada now depends for pulp and paper markets?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and External Affairs as follows: 1. The province of Newfoundland did approach the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to assist in overcoming the problems being experienced by Labrador Linerboard Limited in marketing kraft linerboard to world markets. Officials have supplied data on kraft linerboard exports, world trading patterns and pricing and current trade enquiries received through trade commissioners on a continuing basis.

2. No.

3. (a) The potential production capacity of kraft linerboard in Canada is some 1.3 million short tons. (b) The name of mills producing kraft linerboard in Canada are: Labrador Linerboard Limited (Stephenville, Newfoundland); Minas Basis Pulp and Power Limited (Hansport, Nova Scotia); Consolidated Bathurst Limited (New Richmond, Quebec); Canadian International Paper Company (La Tuque, Quebec); Domtar Limited (Red Rock, Ontario); Crown Zellerbach (Elk Falls, British Columbia); MacMillan Bloedel Limited (Port Alberni, British Columbia); Eurocan Pulp and Paper Company Limited (Kitimat, British Columbia). (c) About 65 percent of Canadian kraft linerboard shipments (excluding recycled liner) is sold in the domestic market. During 1976 domestic shipments of kraft linerboard were some 70 percent of total mill shipments; the balance was exported. The approximate percentage distribution of domestic kraft linerboard shipments to the various regions of Canada is as follows: Atlantic provinces (5 percent; Quebec (25 percent); Ontario (50 percent); prairies/British Columbia (20 percent).

The major export market for Canadian kraft linerboard is western Europe which, during the 1973-75 period, accounted for 70-76 percent of total export shipments; this percentage increased to 83 percent in 1976. Central American/Caribbean area accounts for some 10 percent of total Canadian kraft linerboard export shipments. Exports to the United States, the world's largest exporter of linerboard, are minimal. The trading pattern of kraft linerboard exports from Canada to other world areas is inconsistent and fluctuates extensively between countries.

4. Canada has the potential production capacity of kraft linerboard to meet the demand of the domestic market and to increase exports.

5. In addition to the follow-up referred to in (1) above, a packaging paper and board mission from Italy (including a representative of Italian unbleached kraft linerboard converters) has been invited by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to visit Canada in April of this year. Arrangements are being made to meet Labrador Linerboard representatives in Newfoundland.

6. The purpose of the seminars was to inform the Canadian business community of market opportunities in eastern Europe by drawing upon the experince gained by the trade commissioners at their posts abroad and the various five-year development plans published by the countries to which they are accredited. Opportunities were identified for the supply of machinery and equipment required for large scale development projects in the forestry, mining and oil and gas sectors as well as for agricultural machinery and grain handling equipment, engineering and design services, electronic equipment, and special vehicles. In their presentations, the trade commissioners discussed methods of doing business in eastern European countries, the role of the foreign trade organizations, and how they could be of assistance to Canadian businessmen by establishing and maintaining contact with officials in the state agencies responsible for decisions regarding the purchase of foreign goods and services.

7. The seminars concentrated on areas of the country where manufacturing capabilities correspond to eastern European import requirements. The Atlantic provinces were not included owing to the limited number of firms located there whose products coincided with eastern European interests. Since the volume, value and composition of imports into eastern European countries are controlled by the state, import licenses are only authorized for goods and services which are not available from domestic or other eastern European sources and which have a direct relationship to the achievement of the goals established under the various economic development plans. However, trade commissioners are aware of those firms in the Atlantic provinces offering goods and services for which there is a demand in eastern Europe and will continue to keep in direct touch with these firms in order to assist them in their marketing efforts vis-à-vis eastern Europe. The department's regional offices in the Atlantic provinces are also on a constant lookout for additional firms manufacturing products which correspond to eastern European import requirements. Other seminars have recently been held in the Atlantic provinces from regions where the market potential is considered promising. On April 2, 1976, a group of trade commissioners from western Europe held a seminar in Halifax. Unfortunately a seminar scheduled for St. John's, Newfoundland had to be cancelled due to bad weather. Similarly, visiting trade commissioners from South East Asia held seminars in Saint John, Fredericton, and Halifax June 17 and 18, 1976.

8. (a) A total fo 194 interviews with individual businessmen were conducted on December 7 and 8. Since firms approaching the department for assistance do so on the basis of confidentiality, it would be inappropriate to publish their names. (b) No. According to our records no representatives of these industries made application for interviews on these dates. A representative of these industries did however attend the seminar on December 6.

9. (a) $3,449,000—loan (b) To establish a mechanized logging system in the Sinharaja Forest in Sri Lanka. (c) The Canadian export potential for wood products to Sri Lanka on commercial terms has been virtually non-existent, as Canada and Sri Lanka have had no significant trade relationship outside of the development assistance program. The objective of the mechanized logging project was to encourage substitution for imports of plywood for the manufacturing of tea chests which would increase the profits from sales of tea, Sri Lanka's most important export product.

10. For 1977 there are no new pulp and paper mills coming on stream in the United States, western Europe and Japan, which are the major markets for Canadian pulp and paper products. There are a number of additions to existing pulp and paper mills that will be increasing production capacity for the 1977/1978 period. According to trade sources, new pulp and paper mill projects have been announced in the United States, western Europe and Japan by: 1. Alabama River Pulp Company (Parsons and Whittemore Inc.—U.S.) 2. North Pacific Paper Company (Weyerhauser Company—U.S.) 3. Feldmuhle, Haindle and PWA (consortium between Feldmuhle AG, Haindl Papier GMBH and Papierwerke Waldhof—Aschaffenburg AG—Federal Republic of Germany).

SEWAGE TREATMENT PROJECTS, LAVAL, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,947—Mr. Roy (Laval):

1. During the fiscal year ending March 31 (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976, were any projects undertaken in the City of Laval (sewers, aqueducts, rain-water drains) under the various financing and subsidization programmes of CMHC and, if so (i) what was the nature of these projects (ii) who obtained the funds or subsidies, and in what amount?

2. What programmes are planned for 1977-78?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. 1. The following loans were approved to the city of Laval under section 51 of the National Housing Act, in the period 1974-76, to assist in financing the construction of trunk sewers and sewage treatment plant:

	Loans	$000	Loans	$000	Loans	$000
Sewer and pumping stations	2	909	—	—	—	—
Trunk sewers	3	170	—	—	2	8,210
Combined sewers	2	282	—	—	—	—
Storm sewers	—	—	—	—	1	154
Sewage treatment	—	—	—	—	1	94

2. CMHC has been advised that the city of Laval is planning the following works with the related estimated costs, for 1977-78: 1977, water supply project, $2,250,000; combined sewers, $9,035,000; storm sewers, $2,264,000. 1978, water supply project, $549,000; combined sewers, $6,035,000; storm sewers, $250,000.

GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIZED INDUSTRIES

Question No. 2,760—Mr. Marshall:

1. What industries are being subsidized by the government as a result of economic failure and, in each case (a) what type of subsidy is being provided and for what reason was it granted (b) what is the annual amount?

2. What industries have been provided with support facilities, due to their lack of financing to provide the facilities themselves and, in each case, what are the actual facilities that were provided?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion does not subsidize industries as a result of economic failure. It does, however, provide incentives under the Regional Development Incentives program for the establishment, expansion or modernization of facilities which will make a significant contribution to economic expansion and social adjustment within designated regions. There are no industries being subsidized by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as a result of economic failure. The programs administered by the department are available only to companies with a financially viable prospect in order to strengthen the Canadian industrial base and to expand Canadian exports.

2. The following industries have been provided with financial assistance for support facilities which would not otherwise have been provided: (a) Book Publishing; In 1974, the department assisted the book publishing industry in creating an international annual trade fair in Montreal by providing display stands worth $500,000. (b) Textile, tanning, garment, footwear, and retail industries; The Canadian Colour and Fashion Trend Service was created in 1975 to gather information to enable Canadian manufacturers to anticipate consumers demand in both the domestic and international markets. (c) Footwear and Leather; In 1976, the Footwear and Leather Institute of Canada was created to assist the leather and footwear industries in acquiring highly specialized services in the areas of marketing, manufacturing, human resources and financial administration in order to improve the competitive capabilities of the manufacturers. The organizations listed in (b) and (c) above are administered by industry representatives. Since it is forecasted that these organizations will become self-sufficient, government involvement is temporary and limited to the formative years.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 2,208 could be made an order for return, that return would be tabled immediately. Once again, the reason for answering in this way is the lengthy and detailed nature of the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

2. For each year 1970 to date, how much (a) oil (b) natural gas was imported and, in each case (i) from which country (ii) at what price?

3. Do the provinces export electricity and, if so (a) which provinces (b) what was their production in each case (c) how much was exported (i) by province (ii) totally?

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1977

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-51, to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act, be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I had a long, detailed and definitive speech on the subject of this bill, but I think that it would be wise in the circumstances not to give it—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: —because I detect through the usual conversations that there is a great willingness to have this matter brought to a vote this afternoon, and I certainly appreciate that. We are, by way of third reading, coming to the end of a very long road in terms of discussion of this bill, gun control, wiretapping, changes to the Parole Act and other matters. It has been a road that has been marked, in the very best traditions of parliamentary democracy in a free society, with very vigorous debate, sometimes acrimonious debate, certainly a debate that brought out differences relating to the issues.

However, in the best traditions of parliamentary democracy, the time has come to end that debate, to take a vote and decide on the issues in the bill. In doing so, I want to pay tribute to the members of the justice and legal affairs committee who in the last couple of months have dealt with four bills put forward in my name in addition to their work on the penitentiary sub-committee of that committee. All the members of that committee, chaired by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), including the official critics, especially the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), have worked hard. I want to thank the members of the committee, and particularly those two spokesmen, for their work on the committee and for their constructive willingness to allow parliament in the best possible way to make progress, while objecting strenuously to features of the bill and points of policy.

I want to express my thanks to all those organizations which during the course of Bill C-83 and this bill took the time to make representations to the committee. Many representations were also made to me and to other members of the House, many of whom, at great effort and sometimes at great cost to themselves, volunteered their knowledge and expertise both to me and my advisers. I include the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, the Canadian Wildlife Federation, Mr. Byrnart, Colonel Nicholson and other organizations who have taken an interest in this legislation.

Following upon comments in the media, while they are not generally the subject of plaudits from politicians in any quarter of this House, I should like to express my thanks to the many editorialists across the country who have taken a very deep interest in the matter of gun control and electronic surveillance, and who in that way made a contribution to this debate.

The sections of the bill relating to gun control deal with what I regard are the two essential purposes of the gun control legislation: to reduce the incidence of murders, accidents and suicides caused by guns, by a system of screening those purchasing guns and by a system of increasing the standard of care relating to the sale, disposition, storage and use of guns, without at the same time unduly interfering with what in this country is often the necessity of carrying a gun, for example, by the native people or the northern people who use guns as a way of life, and by people who use guns in a responsible and competent way as part of a sport or recreation. The two objectives must be to endeavour to reduce the number of incidents involving guns, without affecting the position of those in our society who require guns.

I will mention one riding only because it is one in which I have done some hunting, namely, the riding of Comox-Alberni. The hon. member representing the riding has taken a deep interest in both Bill C-83 and this bill and recognized at an early date that the measures have to meet two criteria; first, that they be effective in reducing gun incidents and, second, that they do not interfere with responsible sporting and food gathering activities. That is a riding that I know well as having within it many fine sportsmen and people who come to the area from other parts of Canada or from the United States for purposes of hunting. The hon. member recognized those two fundamental principles of gun control and has been very helpful to me and to the government in advancing the proposals to this date.

There are a number of things that have to be done in the future. Obviously, one is that the bill must be dealt with in the other place. Secondly, as I undertook to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, we will establish the national advisory committee on firearms safety, made up of the chief provincial licensing officers, in order to provide consistency and co-ordination in the provincial application of the law, but also consisting of those interested in gun sports who have knowledge and expertise to contribute. I hope the committee will be established very quickly in order that the regulations which have to be dealt with under the legislation can be dealt with by the national advisory committee to ensure that they are sound. I would point to the provision of the bill which allows provincial attorneys general to either operate the acquisition certificate system themselves or to attach the requirements to their gun safety or hunting programs.

I hope that in future the wildlife groups and the gun clubs can be active, with the support of the government of Canada—both my department and that of the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox)—in working with the provincial attorneys general to encourage the further development of competence programs so that competence may be attached as a precondition to the issuance of a federal acquisition certificate. That is an objective which the Canadian Wildlife Federation and many others have worked for very hard. I hope that with the passage of Bill C-51 we will have provided a statutory mechanism which will encourage the program in the provinces so that we will know at some time in the future that people with guns do not have criminal records involving violence, and that they are competent in the handling of guns and have passed a course in gun safety training.

We will be organizing at some time in the future an amnesty or recall program which is designed, not to take guns away from those who still want them but to recall unwanted guns. This has been tried on an experimental basis in a few communities in this and other countries, with some success.

With regard to proclamation, it would be my hope that, subject to the bill being dealt with by the Senate—I think I should make this clear to the House—the prohibition and the new offence sections, in which the committee took a great interest, could be proclaimed shortly after passage of the legislation. However, the acquisition certificate system obviously will take some time to establish. To do it too quickly would cause problems in administration, in public information, and confusion among hunters and dealers. Therefore, it is my objective to declare the prohibition and new offence sections as quickly as possible and to work toward the implementation of the acquisition certificate program in mid-1978 after extensive consultations are held with the provinces.

I could go on and give a long description of those sections of the bill relating to electronic surveillance, and to other aspects of the bill, but I think the House has debated this bill and its predecessor at great length. Extensive hearings have been held, both on this bill and its predecessor, by the committee on justice and legal affairs, and I think the issues are clearly understood. However, I say to the House, and to members of the media who have taken an active interest in those aspects relating to electronic surveillance, that extensive amendments to the bill were made in the committee on justice and legal affairs in seeking a proper balance which must exist between the civil rights of people and the right of society to protect itself. That was the objective of the committee, and I think, with respect, the committee has met those two objectives.

Because of the amendments made in committee, we have an improved law relating to electronic surveillance which has a number of safeguards built into it and which, at the same time, provides additional measures to law enforcement authorities to deal more effectively than in the past with organized crime. Electronic surveillance has been a controversial issue every time it has been dealt with by the House, and that is how it should be. When the legislation was first passed in 1974, the government undertook that upon passage they would monitor its operation for the next year to assess the implications of new legislation. I think I should reiterate the same pledge today. If this legislation is passed and these changes are made, there is need for me to establish a committee made up not only of provincial authorities, either police or Crown officers, but involving, also, eminent citizens from non-governmental sectors to assess and monitor the operation of the law and to make recommendations to the Solicitor General and to me on how the law operates and what, if any, changes should be made in the future. We want to monitor the operation of these changes from the point of view of their effectiveness in combating crime and their effectiveness in protecting the human rights and civil liberties of Canadian citizens.

I have cut down my remarks very measurably because I think there is a willingness in the House to deal with this issue this afternoon. This bill and this whole subject has been a matter of intense examination and discussion in this House, and I think there is a willingness, which I certainly share, to acknowledge that we have come to the end of this long debate and that we should deal with this question by way of a vote this afternoon.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, we have come to the end of a very lengthy debate on these amendments to the Criminal Code. As I said with regard to Bill C-83, and as I said at second reading of Bill C-51, I cannot comprehend why the minister insists on linking together various distinct matters even though they fall under the Criminal Code.

Before referring to two or three particular matters, I would like to review what is in this bill. The bill deals with firearms control, commonly called gun control. It deals with electronic surveillance; in other words, wiretapping or, more clearly, invasion of privacy. Under this bill the authorities will be able to wiretap our telephones, bug our offices and bug our homes and our cars. This legislation also deals with dangerous offenders and offenders formerly known as habitual offenders. It deals with people repeatedly convicted of such things as sex offences, which include rape or indecent assault of young girls. I discussed this at second reading and I also raised it several times when I was asking questions of the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). This legislation deals with custody and release of inmates under the Parole Act. With the exception of one amendment we have no difficulty accepting it. This legislation also deals with the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and after the report of the special subcommittee I am sure far more extensive changes will take place.

As I said at second reading, joining these parcels of legislation together is, in my opinion and in my party's opinion, totally irresponsible, reprehensible and devious. It is being done deliberately. This is an incompatible form of marginal, unrelated amendments designed not only to frustrate us at second reading but also at committee stage, report stage and third reading. Having dealt with the five matters which I say should have been severed, I would like to point out that at second reading we opposed this bill. We moved a motion to have the bill severed so that we could deal separately with those sections dealing with gun control, wiretapping and the other matters I have outlined. The most serious parts of the bill are those parts dealing with gun control and with privacy. The other matters are not so contentious.

A few days ago, after a tragic incident which took place in Ottawa, the Minister of Justice and other members of the government suggested that we in the opposition had delayed this bill. I think it is up to me to put on the record just what we have been doing since Bill C-51 was introduced. We spent two short days at second reading stage. We spent that little time on a bill dealing with five separate and distinct matters. We spent only eight days in committee. I stood against the group in committee which suggested we should hear two groups of witnesses, one group on gun control and the other on the invasion of privacy. To be fair to the minister, I should point out that actually there were three groups. There was one on gun control which was nicknamed CASAL because it was supposed to be a group embracing all the various organizations representing people interested in guns either as collectors or as sportsmen.

In spite of that, I have in my office, I would say without exaggerating, more than 5,000 letters complaining about this bill. We sat only eight days in the committee. All witnesses were shut off. Basically, closure took place in fact, if not in law. After hearing witnesses there was a clause by clause study. There were 73 amendments moved in the committee of which some 37 were either moved by myself, members of my party or by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

Amendments with regard to wiretapping were moved by the hon. member for New Westminster and myself. The hon. member and I were in full accord; we worked out amendments together. However, with reference to gun control there was some difference of opinion. There were 73 amendments moved, and of the 37 which were moved by myself or by other hon. members in the opposition, only four were accepted—and those were very innocuous amendments which really did very little.

The minister says that the gun control part of this bill is a panacea for crime. The minister says the murder of police officers which is taking place across the nation would not be happening if this legislation were in effect. That statement is false and misleading. I doubt whether anybody has an accurate figure as to the number of long guns there are in Canada. Someone in the committee estimated there are 11 million, someone else estimated there are 6 million. I am not here to say whether there are 11 million or 6 million, but I do say that there are millions of long guns owned by people in Canada and many of them have been owned for many years. Some people inherit long guns from their grandfathers. I have a shotgun which I inherited from my grandfather who settled in western Canada before the turn of the century.

I want to make it clear that whether there are 11 million or 6 million long guns in Canada, none of them is included in this bill in any way at the present time. Under Bill C-83 there would have to have been certain documentation in reference to owners of long guns, but that is not so under this bill. I emphasize this because with all those guns in our society "A" can sell "B" a gun—many guns have no serial numbers—and no one has any way of telling who is buying what or who is stealing what. When they say that this bill will stop murder, shootings, robbery with violence, they are misleading the people of Canada. Make no mistake about that.

I am now convinced—I was not so convinced when Bill C-83 came in—after reading a lot of mail and listening to the evidence, that murder committed by firearms will continue. I know long guns are not covered by this bill. I must say, however, that of the last three murders in Calgary at least one was committed by means of a restricted and prohibited weapon. We must recognize that gangsters who want to rob corner stores or hold-up banks will get firearms as long as they have criminal intentions. In the case of the Brink's truck robbery in Montreal, the parts for the machine-gun that was used were brought in from the United States and the gun was built by the robbers.

For the minister or other members of parliament to go across this nation in an election—and there may be one—telling the people that they gave them gun control, is not the answer, because there is nothing in this bill, except one thing which I will deal with in a moment, to stop murder, robbery with violence and the use of firearms. If a crackpot or an alcoholic suddenly decided he did not like his neighbour or a member of his family, and he went to the hardware store to get a gun, he would need a certificate. Once he got the certificate, however, for five years or more he could buy any number of guns—a whole arsenal.

When it is claimed this bill would stop crime, I must say I have reservations about that. I hope the minister is as fair in future speeches on the hustings as he was this afternoon, rather than being unfair as he was the other night at the scene of probably the most tragic incident that has occurred in this city for many years. Let us be honest and let us be fair. Let us not play politics with murder and the killing of police officers. The House knows where I stand personally on such matters. Where it is premeditated murder, not only of police officers, and where there is a conviction on direct evidence, then I say some penalty other than the one we use today should be imposed. We had a free vote on that matter, however, and I will not get into it today.

I want to deal now with the method used by this government to produce legislation that is a matter of substance, not an administrative act. I realize we have orders in council to appoint George to this job and Nellie to that job, or to set up tribunals.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): George and Nellie both being Grits.

Mr. Woolliams: When I talk about substantive law, and we are legislating amendments to the Criminal Code, that law should be brought before parliament for scrutiny. In committee, 73 amendments were offered to the bill during eight days of meetings when at times we sat ten hours or more. We sometimes hear that members of parliament are not working, but we know that if they are busy on committees, they are working. That goes for members from both sides of the House. I moved an amendment which read in part as follows:

> Every order in council, regulation or form made under this act shall be laid before parliament within fifteen days after the order in council regulation or form, as the case may be, is made or if parliament is not then in session, within fifteen days after the commencement of the next ensuing session—

I do not say it has to be debated then. Through their representatives, the Canadian people would be able to analyse what kind of law is being legislated by some body or some cabinet minister that may not exist at the present time. According to statements made by the Minister without Portfolio from Alberta (Mr. Horner) I understand there is going to be a cabinet shuffle. He leaves the impression that he is going to get a big job, and if that is so perhaps he will be making the regulations and not the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General. I put forward that amendment honestly, fairly and, I believe, concisely, believing as I do that that is no way to conduct the affairs of parliament and that it is against the democratic process.

Where offences are created in the bill by order in council or otherwise, the onus is placed upon the accused. Under our system of jurisprudence, which is the same in every Commonwealth nation that has adopted the system of the mother country, the onus is always on the Crown. The Crown must prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt. In this legislation the reverse is the case. I have said it is more like the Napoleonic code than the system of criminal justice that has been the rule in Canada since confederation.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to move on to something that excites me even more, in terms of misrepresentation. I presented three motions on electronic surveillance. In that regard I am talking about the invasion of privacy of the individual. I do not want to repeat what I said about the medical clinic or law firm, except to say that in order to catch one person by telephone, all the conversations of perhaps 35 doctors and their patients can be listened to for two or three months and everything can go in as evidence. That is total invasion of privacy. The same thing may take place in reference to lawyers. I should like to refer to a well-known authority in this connection, Mr. Speaker. In "Phipson on Evidence", ninth edition, at page 203, appears the following:

A client (whether party or stranger) cannot be compelled, and a legal adviser (whether barrister, solicitor, the clerk or intermediate agent of either, or an interpreter, Du Barré v. Livette, 1 Peake 108) will not be allowed without the express consent of his client, to disclose oral or documentary communications passing between them in professional confidence. This rule applies to the case where the legal adviser is provided under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949—

The rule is established for the protection of the client, not of the lawyer; and is founded on the impossibility of conducting legal business without professional assistance, and on the necessity, in order to render that assistance effectual, of securing full and unreserved intercourse between the two—

Why is that rule there, Mr. Speaker? It must always be remembered that when the state lays a charge against an accused—whether it is murder, manslaughter or whatever—the state can gather evidence through its police officers who have the authority to do so and who have the technical know-how, the fingerprinting equipment, ballistic experts, and so on. Money is no object. The little fellow whose guilt has to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, however, only has a lawyer interrogating police officers, trying to make sure that the facts going before the jury are the type that would permit the jury to find him not guilty. That is the purpose of that rule on privileged communications. It is for the protection of the people, not the lawyers and doctors. When they change the law and say it is not permissible unless a judge rules it within his discretion, that does away with that protection.

Under the common law we had far more protection than in the legislation that is suggested by the minister, which is supposed to change the common law to give more protection to the citizens of this country. Surely the minister could have accepted some of our amendments. Now he leaves it to the discretion of the judge.

With what kind of evidence will our judges deal? The judge will have discretion with respect to evidence which flows from the conversation itself and with respect to evidence not derived from the wiretap. But the entire question of the wiretap is to come under the discretion of the judge. The judge is bound by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, the highest court of the land, which has said that if the matter is relevant to the issue, it is admissible. My amendment would have made not admissible evidence obtained from an illegal wiretap. Personally, I believe evidence derived from, or as a result of a wiretap, should not be admissible. Only in this way can we protect the due process of law. Now you know why we fought so strenuously against the changes the minister proposes.

I said the other day the rule of law is our only protection. There is no doubt that arbitrary power is today resented and feared to an even greater extent than in the late nineteenth century in the democratic states of the western world. The rule of law presupposes the absence of arbitrary power and so gives the assurance that the individual can ascertain with reasonable certainty what legal powers are available to government if there is a proposal to affect his private rights. A person who takes the trouble to consult his lawyer ought to be able to ascertain the legal consequences of his own acts and what are the powers of others to interfere with these acts.

The reason lawyers are apt to be critical of powers of delegated legislation and of the exercise by bodies other than the regular courts of judicial decision is in the uncertainty which these powers are alleged to produce. It is true enough that on many matters the law as administered in the ordinary courts is difficult to ascertain with any assurance. But in public law this uncertainty is accentuated by the bulk and detail of statutory instruments which are enacted by the departmental ministers as well as by the impossibility of predicting how, in the event of a dispute, discretion will be exercised, whether the last word rests with a tribunal or with a minister.

We heard today that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) is to change retroactively the law applying to life insurance policies. Many of our little wage earners buy life insurance policies. Some of the money goes toward risk, the rest toward savings. If the policyholder needs a second or third mortgage for a house, because he may have one or two more children than he anticipated having, he borrows against the policy. Now the Liberal government has said that any money the policy earns becomes taxable immediately on the policyholder's getting a loan. We oppose that kind of law, just as we oppose the kind of law this bill will become, if passed in its present form. I was shocked at the Minister of Finance's arrogance in making his statement. He said, "We tax corporations. Now we shall tax the little people as well." The party opposite always tries to make out it is the friend of the little man. Look at what it has done.

The rule of law, Mr. Speaker, is based upon the liberty of the individual and has as its object the harmonizing of the opposite notions of individual liberty and public order. The notion of justice maintains a balance between these notions. There is an important difference between the rule of law as the supremacy of law over the government, and the concept of the rule of law as the supremacy of law in society generally. The first concept is the only feature common to the western nations, connoting as it does the protection of the individual against arbitrary government. But it is fundamental that there must exist some technique for forcing the government to submit to the law. If such a technique does not exist, the government itself becomes the means whereby the law is achieved.

If we allow evidence obtained from illegal wiretaps to be admissible in court, the entire administration of justice will fall into disrespect. We tried to make this point to the minister, but he refused to accept our views. He would not listen. As I say, it is fundamental that there must exist some technique for forcing the government to submit to the law. If such a technique does not exist, the government itself becomes the means whereby the law is achieved. This is the antithesis of the rule of law. The government is, of course, a large bureaucratic organization, make no mistake; and the more it moves away from the pure doctrine of representative government into the murky area of the corporate state, the more bureaucratic it is likely to become. It is evident, if one views what has happened with respect to our large Crown Corporations, that parliament has lost control of those corporations which in themselves are large bureaucratic organizations.

Setting up a large bureaucratic organization to administer the Criminal Code by order in council is not good enough; and passing a law for allowing the police to wiretap illegally and bug people's homes and offices, and for allowing such illegally obtained evidence to be admissible, is also not good enough.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: The mischief that has arisen to the public from inconsiderate alteration of our laws is too obvious to be called into question. The common law has fared like other venerable edifices of antiquity which rash and inexperienced workmen have ventured to new-dress and refine with all the rage of modern improvement. Hence, frequently its symmetry has been destroyed, its proportions distorted, and its majestic simplicity exchanged for specious embellishments and fantastic novelties such as wiretapping.

We intend to vote against this bill on third reading. We voted against it on second reading. The minister refused to accept our amendments, save two, innocuous in character. I proposed 73 amendments in committee, only to see the minister refuse all but two innocuous ones, as I have said. I shall move no more amendments, but leave it to the highest jury in the land, the Canadian people. They shall know the nature of this legislation which the minister clutches to his chest. They shall know the kinds of gun controls this government proposes and how the minister proposes to snoop, against all the dictates of conscience, into the lives of citizens. That is to be the law of this land, and the people shall know it.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we should deal with a bill as important as Bill C-51 at the end of this session, for the bill will have far-reaching implications for the Canadian people. One wonders why we debate legislation of this sort on July 18. Two things always happen when the hot weather arrives. Something goes wrong with the air-conditioning, a coincidence which does not escape most people, and the government brings forward for consideration at the tail end of the session legislation it has found difficult to get through the House. We are told it intends to proceed with the immigration bill which the committee reported last Thursday evening, I believe. That the government should play games with the House of Commons and the people of Canada is bad. I point out that when the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) appeared on a CTV program last Saturday night, he said it is difficult to get legislation through the House of Commons at the moment. He wants an election to clear the air. With the stench that is around that department right now, a change of air would not hurt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): However, as far as getting legislation through, an election will not solve that problem. Whatever members are here from whatever party, they will want very closely to examine this piece of legislation. Two things concern us in the NDP about this legislation. The first is that we should be considering it in the dying days of the session, when the press and some members have gone home. Those who have not gone home are anxious to get home. They are quite justified in wanting to get home to see their wives and families. This is not the time to be dealing with legislation as important as this.

The second reason we are concerned about this legislation is that it has been framed in such a manner as to put the members of this House in an impossible position. This is a bill in which there are four or five distinct pieces of legislation. The only thing they have in common is that they deal with the Criminal Code. The bill deals with control over the kind of people who can purchase guns, obtain parole, who are classed as dangerous sexual offenders, and it also deals with electronic surveillance. There are members who will agree with some of the clauses in the bill, but not with others. That is why we have repeatedly asked that the bill be broken up.

We in this party have supported the minister in previous years and this year with respect to legislation which would restrict the kind of person who would be able to purchase a long gun. We think it is essential that people able to purchase deadly weapons should at least be able to convince the authorities that they do not have a criminal record, that they are not psychotic, that they are of an age and have had sufficient training to be able to handle dangerous weapons.

The Government has put before us this legislation with respect to gun control. It is a greatly watered-down version of what we had before. I do not think for a moment that it will prevent crimes being performed, or a lot of deaths resulting from the improper use of firearms. All this legislation will do is restrict the purchase of guns after it is passed. It will not do anything with regard to registering the millions of guns already around. However, half a loaf is better than none. I believe this legislation is a first step. It is a very cautious milk and water step. That is what we would expect from this government. They have never been noted for taking a strong stand and saying "Here we stand. We cannot do other". They take one step forward and two steps back. They have done that again with this legislation.

This is weak legislation in terms of gun control. However, it is better than nothing. It will give us a chance to ensure that guns sold in the future will not be sold to people who should not have them. We will develop techniques for registration in the years ahead, in the hope that this legislation will be strengthened even further. We are in favour of legislation controlling the sale of long guns. However, in order to express, in the third reading of this bill, our support for the bill, the minister puts us in the position that we have to vote for electronic surveillance—and that we are not prepared to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The whole question of wiretapping has been blown out of all proportions. We are told by some attorneys general and heads of police that electronic surveillance is absolutely necessary to deal with crime. I am sure many members saw a report by the New York Times service referring to a pamphlet put out by Herman Schwartz, the former New York State commissioner of corrections, entitled, "Taps, bugs and fooling the people". Mr. Schwartz says that electronics surveillance is a rending of the fabric of trust in a society without which free speech and association is not possible. He went on to state that since 1968, there have been 5,495 legal taps or bugs, and that they listened to 3.6 million conversations between 282,429 people. He points out that it cost in the neighbourhood of $11,000 per bug. He summed up by saying that the overwhelming majority of the targets were small-time gamblers and minor drug pushers. That was all they got for invading the privacy of 3.6 million homes or individuals in that area.

When legislation was introduced in 1974 to make it illegal for any citizen in Canada to indulge in wiretapping or electronic surveillance, we supported it. We did so because the government said at that time it would not allow the police to break the law. It said the police could not bug telephones, any more than any other citizen, unless they got authorization from the courts in the same way that they must get authorization for breaking and entering private property. The legislation before us gives the police the power to break the law. Under this legislation, an unlawful act is not illegal if it is committed by the police. The police cannot only bug an individual's home or place of business, but they can do it without authorization. They will not be punished in the same way as a private citizen.

The final iniquity is that they may use the fruits of their break-in as evidence in court. Does anyone think that a police officer will bother going to court to get authority to wiretap if he knows that he will not be punished for wiretapping illegally, and that if he gets anything worthwhile as a result of his fishing expedition, he can present it in court as evidence? In the television broadcast to which I referred a few moments ago, the Solicitor General, in one of his more unctuous moments, said the following:

—anyone who is a member of the national police force and who commits an illegal act can expect to be treated in the same way as an ordinary citizen—

That is absolute bunk.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): There is a stronger word.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I know another word beginning with "b", but I do not want to use it. The fact is that the police will not be treated as ordinary citizens. How many policemen have been charged and convicted of eavesdropping or wiretapping without an authorization?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

An hon. Member: None.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Under this legislation they will further incentives to commit illegal acts because they will be told that the results of their electronic surveillance can be produced in court. We are being given a good example of this at the moment. The judicial inquiry which has been going on in Edmonton is a case in point. One member of the RCMP has appeared before the inquiry and said that another RCMP person told him they had bugged the rooms of three Edmonton policemen while they were in the city of Winnipeg. On June 9, my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) asked the Solicitor General about this incident, as reported at page 6465 of Hansard. What was the minister's reply? The minister said:

The deputy commissioner of the RCMP was delegated by the commissioner of the force to investigate the matter fully and as a result of his investigation it was found that no acts of bugging in connection with the investigation which the hon. member mentioned have occurred.

What did we find before the commission headed by Mr. Justice James Laycraft? Here is one paragraph:

The inquiry also heard assistant commissioner Peter Wright, head of the RCMP in Alberta, testify that Ross Paisley, Alberta's deputy attorney general, told him the bugging was a fact and not an allegation and that assistant commissioner George Paquette in charge of the RCMP in Manitoba at the time gave his approval at the time this incident occurred.

So the Solicitor General tells the House that the deputy commissioner had investigated the matter and found there was no wiretapping of these Edmonton policemen, yet here is the assistant commissioner in charge of the RCMP in Alberta saying he was told by the deputy attorney general of Alberta that assistant commissioner Paquette in Manitoba authorized the wiretapping of these three Edmonton men. Thus, it is clear that not only the bugging of the public by the police but the bugging of policemen by each other can go on under the existing legislation. I ask the House, then, to stop and think what will happen under this legislation now before us, under which the police, instead of being blamed and open to charges of having committed an illegal act, are allowed to use whatever evidence they collect in a court of law.

I say to the government that it is placing us in an impossible position. It is asking us to accept an erosion of civil liberties, an encroachment upon the rights of a free people, if we want to vote for the other clauses in Bill C-51. But this we do not intend to do. We intend to protest as strongly as we can against this invasion of the rights of Canadians. In the final analysis, we are talking about the whole question of the use of power. I think it was Lord Bryce who said that all power corrupts, and that absolute power corrupts absolutely.

An hon. Member: Lord Atkin.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Lord Atkin. That statement is true. The more power possessed by any individual or group of individuals, the greater is the danger that the power will be abused, the greater the danger that they will become so involved in the particular case they are espousing, or a particular objective they are pursuing, that they will destroy the rights and privileges of others. One of the roles which parliament has performed for centuries at Westminster and for the last 110 years in this country is to see to it that too much power is never concentrated in the hands of any person or groups of persons and that no institution, even a police force, is allowed to become a state within a state, possessing powers which will allow it to sweep aside the rights of other people. That is what this battle is all about.

The government brings in a measure of this kind in the dying days of the session, though we ought to have an opportunity to debate it at much greater length. But there is no need to exhaust hon. members. The government is aware of the position we take. The country, too, knows our position. I want those interested to know that as far as the NDP is concerned we would vote for the other part of the legislation provided for in Bill C-51. But we shall not vote for a bill which contains provisions approving not only electronic surveillance but the right of the police to commit criminal acts and, going even further, allows them to use in court the evidence which they have secured by this method. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and by substituting the following words:

"Bill C-51 be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering clauses 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 thereof.

● (1610)

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping this afternoon to speak on Bill C-51 generally, but as this amendment has just been moved, I merely wish to say a few words in its support since it is asking that the bill should not be read for the third time, but that it be referred to the committee for a more thorough consideration and I would add to elucidate its contents.

We are told in the House that since this government is in power, we only see those omnibus bills designed to make us take poison coated with chocolate. It is always the same thing with those omnibus bills and this is why we will never accept them, despite the fact that they have been introduced for many years. Afterwards, during the election campaign we are told that we have voted for or against it. There are fine provisions in an omnibus bill, but there are also some bad ones. There are some things that we cannot accept, but by refusing the omnibus bill to oppose the bad provisions, we oppose the good ones as well. The government knows that very well, rather, the officials know it very well, because they are the ones who prepare this kind of bills. Someone said a little while ago that after ten years in power any government is corrupt, I say that after ten years in the administration, an official is just as corrupt as the government. That is why bills like this one are prepared by only one official, and he is doing it for fifteen or twenty years, he is the only one able to put out such a sordid thing. Only officials can do a thing like that.

It is not the minister who has been in charge of this portfolio for only one or two years who understands all these tricks, but his high ranking officials. We are being administered and directed by these technocrats, with the consequences that we know today. The government relies on these technocrats, because they are helping it gain power. A party should not seek and hold power with means such as these, with all sorts of hypocrisies; it should tell the truth to the public, because the public wants it.

The government would like us to swallow the wiretapping issue; as a matter of fact, it should have introduced not one, but four different bills, so we could deal with the gun issue separately from the wiretapping issue. By the way, I am always surprised to read subclauses such as this allowing the wiretapping procedure. Yet, the Prime Minister himself claimed during his first term in office that he was the champion of human rights. Incidentally, he said—when we were talking about homosexuals—that we had no business in the bedrooms of the nation. But what kind of authorization is he going to give to the police? That of searching everywhere, of wiretapping everywhere, to know what is going on, and not always in accordance with the law, Mr. Speaker, as we have seen in recent weeks. The RCMP admitted that it did not always have a legal warrant. We must not forget that wiretapping is a very delicate matter.

In the light of what we are being told these days I don't think I can trust anyone anymore. The RCMP has always been considered as one of the most honest police forces. But when we see what is going on these days, we cannot help wondering where Canada is heading, when a government such as this is giving all sorts of permission because it is in power. If such is the price of power, Mr. Speaker, I would rather not have it. Our laws should at least provide for more morality, integrity and sincerity:

I think this is a complete reshaping of justice, and not another intrusion in the life of honest people, on a plea of trying to denounce, to find a criminal. But there are other means to find criminals, Mr. Speaker, if the police really wants to do so. But on the pretext of finding a criminal, we search into the life of honest people, to know what happens in their homes, in the small community where they live.

This is what we have to prevent, this is what we think about when we see pieces of legislation as permissive as this one. I always see intrusions here in my province, in the province of Quebec, where the provincial government refuses authority; they do not want to pay for the federal police any more. However it goes there, it stays there and it is paid to go there. But do not forget that we should endeavour to prevent the police from playing politics, and we have virtually evidence it does so. We have been fighting for two years. We have reached the point where we can no longer call a taxation office or another agency without getting the federal police on the phone. If you ask who is speaking, the answer is: "The federal police". What are they doing there? We should wonder about this. Nowadays it has become impossible, even for a member of parliament, to have a discussion with any of the leaders of this country without him being attended by a federal policeman. I say "No!". Things have to be made clear, we will have to select our bills. When we are dealing with such a matter, a matter that has been dealt with in committee, this government should take the reports of this committee and study them.

We were talking a moment ago about these remarkable committees and the job they are doing. However, notwithstanding piles and piles of reports, not a word has been changed. In fact, 39 motions have been proposed in this House and all of them have been rejected. Government officials have told the minister: "That is what you should do. It is going to be this way, Okay!" So what is the use of working in a committee. I am not going to work there any more. It is hard and it is ridiculous. Look at what happened last week. If any average citizen had seen that, he would have thought that we are worse than children.

Mr. Speaker, I say that we should absolutely oblige this government to introduce real legislation instead of omnibus bills, legislation about precise matters we will be able to discuss thoroughly and especially, instead of listening to technocrats, they should read and consider the reports of the committees hearings. I think from there we will be able to work seriously, instead of referring the case from Caiaphas to Pilate, as it is the case now, so that we do not know who is responsible for whom and for what.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if we do not do that, if we go on proposing such mixture to the people, they are not going to consider us as serious legislators. As for me, I cannot vote for this bill in its present form. There are some good things in there, but, in its present form, I cannot swallow the whole thing. That is what I wanted to say to support the motion of the hon. member from the New Democratic Party.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I intend only to make a few brief remarks. I join with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) in expressing my protest at the way this bill has been introduced. To me it is an abuse of parliament to bring in a bill which has two parts, one having no connection with the other, and to ask the House to vote on them in a kind of package. What are we supposed to do? I had always understood that we voted according to our conscience, but in one part of this so-called package there is one measure we would like to vote for, however weak the gun control aspect of the bill may be. I should like to support it as a gesture, to indicate that there must be some stop put to the use of guns for violent purposes, that the picture must change.

I have tried to support the right to privacy of individuals in society, but I have no intention whatever of voting for a bill which includes these offensive provisions in regard to wiretapping. In the article quoted by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands which I think was printed in the Globe and Mail a few days ago, Tom Wicker quotes one of the greatest judges in the history of this continent, Mr. Justice Holmes. He described wiretapping and bugging as "a dirty business". Mr. Wicker, who is a distinguished journalist, comments "and so it has proved".

I am not going into this aspect of the bill in detail. If it were effective, if the minister had brought in any evidence to demonstrate the effectiveness of this method of apprehending criminals, we might have to take a different view. But no such evidence exists. In fact, nearly all the evidence is precisely to the contrary. Therefore, we are invading the right to privacy of individuals for no good purpose whatever. I suppose the reason for bringing forward this legislation is to please the police. I regard the police, as I imagine every member does, as being a very important element of our society, with a very important task to perform. But one task the police do not perform is the making of the laws of this country. I regard the subservience of the minister to the point of view of the police as something that is highly unsatisfactory and wrong.

I have had occasion in the last few weeks to wonder why the party opposite calls itself the Liberal party of Canada. I cannot think of anything less liberal than the way they have approached some of these matters. I was on the immigration committee where they put in a platoon system, and people who had not even heard the evidence voted down nearly all the constructive suggestions which were made. Personally, I would be ashamed if I were minister of justice in a so-called Liberal cabinet and I brought in this regressive, backward piece of legislation dealing with wiretapping which, as I say, infringes basic human rights.

I have said what I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker. I hope I have said it clearly and that at some stage or other the minister will start paying attention to the decencies of parliamentary life.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) to refer back to committee those clauses dealing with wiretapping. Every single day brings new insights into the whole question of wiretapping and the broadening of such powers which we are permitting in this bill. Personally, if I had my preference I would outlaw wiretapping and bugging by anyone, including the police and the law enforcement agencies.

I think the minister should be aware of the latest disturbing news, which is that Securicom of Canada Limited, a company which is an expert on debugging and specializes in locating bugs in rooms and on telephones, has been in communication with and offered a position to J. Gordon Liddy, a convicted criminal in the United States. I do not know how he will get by the Manpower department. The department will probably give this chap a work permit, with one million Canadians out of work, and he will be engaged in this very surreptitious business of working for Securicom detecting bugs and other listening devices.

Mr. Paproski: There are a lot of bugs in the Prime Minister's office.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member says—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I would ask the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to get back to the point under discussion, which is the amendment.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right, Mr. Speaker, and the amendment says that the particular sections of the bill dealing with wiretapping ought to be sent back to the committee. I point out to the House that this is a wise proposal because we ought to examine evidence which is coming in every day. The latest evidence is that a firm specializing in debugging telephones and rooms will be a magnet to some of the most unsavoury characters ever to come out of the sewers across the world, who will, in effect, be deployed on debugging each other. I just ask you to imagine, Mr. Speaker, this whole concept of counterbugging. In terms of trying to put the boots to organized crime in this country, this is a most stupid approach. Surely the criminal element will be the hiring companies like Securicom just as much as private citizens. For as many bugging devices that the law enforcement agencies come up with, there will be as many counter operations to circumvent the law and to defeat the whole purpose and thrust of this legislation.

In other words, it comes back to the question of who ends up being deprived of the right to privacy. It will be the private citizen in his communications with other private citizens, his lawyer, his doctor, his psychiatrist, his member of parliament, and so on. Therefore, I think the hon. member has made a wise proposal to refer these particular clauses back to the committee. If this were done, we could examine all of the latest evidence coming forward almost every day on the whole question of the use of bugging devices and wiretaps so that we can bust organized crime.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

● (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Douglas, Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) which was negatived on the following division:

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-51, to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-51 now before us entitled Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977, may not be the most intelligent one introduced by the government but it could go through history as the bill with the longest title and the most mixed provisions. As far as I am concerned it is a hotchpotch not to say a rotten bill. Here is its title: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act."

Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with an omnibus bill, that is, a bill which includes amendments to a number of acts in various areas and which are connected only by the will of the minister who sponsored this bill. The minister could have included as well amendments on tomato growing, which the House would not have found particularly surprising. I have heard with interest the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) suggest that the bill introduced by the minister should be divided into several bills, so that following the debate on this bill, hon. members should not be called upon to vote at the same time on provisions of which they approve and on provisions of which they disapprove.

Yet, this is exactly what is going to happen following the decision the Chair has rendered on the basis of established precedents. I understand quite well why the government will not introduce distinct bills for each and every amendment it wishes to adopt in respect of existing legislation. It has chosen this quite legitimate approach and refuses to introduce useless bills, because it wants to spare the House's time and resources.

Mr. Speaker, I feel, however, that the government should demonstrate judgment and good sense and avoid placing hon. members in a difficult situation. I know the Chair had no other choice but to accept the legislation as put forward by the minister since it is bound by precedents. However, I think the Minister of Justice could have remembered his experience with Bill C-83, when several members had protested against the fact that the bill included all kinds of things, and I think he has missed a good chance of showing members on both sides of the House his honesty and his willingness to co-operate with all the elected representatives of the people.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, this legislation the consideration of which we are about to conclude is nothing but the bastard offspring of Bill C-83 about which so much ink had been spilt and which had given rise to such an amount of criticism everywhere across the nation and especially with hunting and fishing organizations, and groups like the Wildlife Federation. Last year, I had the opportunity of working in close cooperation with those organizations. I was very proud when the government gave up trying to have the bill passed during the last session. For me, as well as for all those concerned by individual freedom, the death of Bill C-83 was a great victory. The hunters of northwestern Quebec who represent a major part of my constituents welcomed with relief the government's decision not to pass that bill, particularly not to force its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I probably have the greatest number of hunters among my constituents than any other member. I thus consider myself as the spokesman of all hunters and all nature lovers when I speak on this matter. My constituency, Mr. Speaker, is an immense territory full of game of all kinds and my fellow citizens take advantage of this unique chance to live close to nature. This exceptional geographical position is known by thousands of tourists who come to our area during the hunting season. So I know what I am talking about when I point out the concerns of hunters and nature lovers about Bill C-51. Obviously, the minister cannot say as much. He looked clearly astonished, during the sittings of the committee on Bill C-83, on hearing the specific and logical representations of the groups which appeared as witnesses against those elements of the bill that clearly interfere with the rights of the citizens. Mr. Speaker, I said at the time, and it still applies today, that the minister knows so little about the concerns of those who live in rural areas, close to the woods, that he probably would have a hard time telling the difference between a fir tree and a telephone pole.

Mr. Speaker, on this the last reading of Bill C-51, I shall dwell strictly on that part of it that deals with the control of firearms, as other hon. members have spoken and will speak about the other aspects of the bill. I shall use up my time to convey to the minister the concerns and worries of hunters and ordinary citizens in my riding as well as the rest of Canada. In his speech on May 11 last, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) averred as follows, and I quote:

As a result of the introduction of Bill C-83 and all the discussion which flowed from it we have been successful, in Bill C-51, in marrying the public objective with the need to protect the rights of certain people who, for responsible and legitimate purposes, use long guns in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to hurt his feelings and make him cry in the House of Commons, but I do believe it is my duty to tell the minister that once again he is completely mistaken if he imagines that Bill C-51, as it now stands, protects the public while also protecting the right of the individual to use guns for legitimate purposes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those who claim that the public will be better protected once this bill is passed are naive to a very considerable extent. Criminals will never be placed by this bill in a position which will prevent them from finding firearms. Criminals use the firearms they bought in the underworld and which cannot be traced nor identified by dealers. These firearms have been stolen and disguised especially for crime.

It is as ridiculous to claim that these criminals will be affected by this legislation as to believe that criminals are so stupid that they would have their firearms registered at the registration office and obtain a certificate before committing their crimes. In fact, we must recognize that criminals will not be affected by this piece of legislation. As in that past, they will obtain their firearms on the sly, that is on the black market which the government will never be in a position to control with the provisions of the bill which is now before us. So much for the protection of citizens!

As for the protection of the rights of individuals who possess and legitimately use firearms for serious purposes such as hunting or target shooting, the bill is not only useless and unefficient but plainly dangerous. Indeed, it will be left to officials to decide whether or not citizens will be allowed to possess or to use firearms. For instance, subclause 104(3) provides that decisions of the firearm officer are presumed to be valid, that they are supposed to represent the truth whether or not this officer has made an inquiry, that his conclusion be right or not, and that the citizen is presumed to be guilty. Mr. Speaker, that provision is completely contrary to what our judicial system stands for, namely that a citizen is presumed innocent unless proven guilty. In the case of Bill C-51, the firearm officer enjoys a presumption which compels ordinary citizen to bear the burden of the evidence, even if this decision is excessive and has been taken without prior inquiry or checking. That is a frightful aspect of the bill, Mr. Speaker. Canadians are not ready to accept this kind of dictatorship; they are used to be given the benefit of presumptive innocence and they are entitled to the extension of that presumption in all areas. Mr. Speaker, any legislative measure imposing the burden of the proof on the ordinary citizen is unacceptable. For that matter, if he wants to put Canadian citizens in the position of having to prove everything, the minister could just as well ask them to dip their hands in boiling oil to prove that they are innocent and protected by God. Was it not the way it was done in those days when people had to prove their innocence? This is a basic principle and the minister should amend the bill accordingly.

I would like to give a few more examples of very questionable points. One reads in the following clauses, and I quote:

The accused, the citizen is presumed not to have had a permit, and it is up to him to prove it before the court, that is he is still presumed guilty.

It is forbidden to sell, exchange, give, lend, give up or deliver a firearm without the person receiving it showing his or her permit between individuals and the person selling, giving or lending has the onus of proving that the person to whom he gave, sold or lent had the permit.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, further cases where the onus is unfairly placed on the shoulders of the citizen. Here are, Mr. Speaker, a few more examples of clauses interfering with the rights of citizens.

Permits and registrations issued by bureaucrats may be withdrawn at any time.

The recognition of the validity of hunting permits (competency cards in the handling of firearms) under clause 105 (p. 130) is a purely discretionary prerogative of the governor in council.

Those are clauses, Mr. Speaker, and I will have an opportunity to quote others later, that take acquired rights away from Canadian citizens. Having a permit to own a firearm is no longer a right. It becomes a privilege. And that privilege will be administered by almighty public servants who will hide behind the authority of the cabinet to prevent law-abiding citizens from using their acquired rights.

Mr. Speaker, I have here an article by Jean Pagé, published in the Montreal-Matin of May 12 last. He writes the following about Bill C-51, and I quote:

Seizures without warrants, without crimes, without trials, and confiscation without compensation are the first legislative step toward dictatorship. Presuming decisions by bureaucrats imposing the onus on citizens to be right is the second step toward dictatorship.

And what benefits will Canadians get for the loss of their rights and freedoms?

Mr. Speaker, gun control is not an effective way to check crime. Take Switzerland for example. In that country, all adult citizens are required to own a gun under the law. Everybody must have one. Yet, the crime rate for aggravated theft and murder is quite low in that country. Far from controlling firearms, Switzerland requires its citizens to own guns and rifles.

On the other hand, in England where gun control laws have been very strict for more than 50 years, a study conducted by Inspector Colin Greenwood of the British police has shown that gun control had no effect at all in reducing the number of crimes committed with firearms. Indeed according to those figures, violent crime has greatly increased since 1963 in England in spite of gun control. There again, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that gun control will not reduce the number of violent crimes. We have proof of that. Some countries without gun control have very low crime rates, while others with controls are faced with soaring crime rates. If Canadians cannot even expect a decrease in the crime rate in exchange for this loss of freedom, what will they get? Nothing more, Mr. Speaker. The minister thinks that firearms are responsible for crimes and murders.

Instead of controlling guns and their possession, he should be dealing with criminals through measures that would deter them from illegal actions. But the minister in his wisdom prefers to deal once again with firearms through Bill C-51, as he did with Bill C-83. Presumably, the Minister of Justice will some day introduce legislation putting guns in prison while criminals will go free. As far as I am concerned, the government is proposing to deal with material objects, putting the blame on them for inhuman acts by criminals and vile assassins.

Guns do not kill by themselves. Whoever saw revolvers walking down the street? They do not have the gift of motion. Punishing them for the acts committed by those who want to break the law is utterly ridiculous. But once more this year the Minister of Justice is proposing to do just that.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, gun control will victimize honest citizens, hunters and sportsmen that will have to submit to controls, while criminals will be able to do exactly as they wish, going on breaking the laws we pass in this House.

Mr. Speaker, over the weekend I had the opportunity to meet people who keep ammunition in their stores not for their own protection but for the use of hunter tourists, as I said the other week, to help them out. Of course, those hunters do not buy ammunition only, but a number of items they need for their survival in the bush.

And the minister or rather the government objected to an amendment to the bill put toward by a member of the Progressive Conservative party, asking for the withdrawal of the provision requiring the purchase of a permit to sell ammunition and even some items used for hunting purposes. The government, here again, has failed to listen to the legitimate requests of the small dealer and the small businessman who will have to pay even if it is not being done at the provincial level. A permit is sold under the provincial government authority.

I do not know whether the federal government is jealous of the revenue derived from this sale by the provincial government, but as I said, they feel obliged to interfere in an area which is not under their jurisdiction but which is specifically under the provincial jurisdiction, to sell another permit to the small businessman who to serve our tourists and hunters, will have to give up the sale of ammunition needed by some hunters, if they want to avoid paying more than they get from this sale. I think it would be appropriate for the government, even though the amendment is passed, to withdraw this bill immediately so that it can be considered even more carefully. Unfortunately, government members are looking forward to going home like many honourable members, and they introduced once more this legislation in a hurry, so that it can be passed as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have not participated to any extent in this debate up to this time. One of the reasons for my sitting back was the fact that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) gave this party tremendous leadership in the area of Bill C-51.

[Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: The hon. member for Calgary North was very willing to co-operate with the government in every possible way to produce a more realistic proposal which, if he had been listened to, would have seen this House give unanimous consent to the passage of the legislation. As it is now, without the many amendments which were put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North, we find ourselves in a position where we have bad legislation which I cannot support. I am sure most members cannot support it if they take the time to think about it, both in regard to gun control and wiretapping.

Even at this late date the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) is not wise enough to accept the good advice which has been given both in committee and in this House by the hon. member for Calgary North, the effect of which would produce legislation that would be acceptable to all Canadian people. What we have is a bad bill that the government has been unwilling to move on. Unfortunately other things have come into this debate which are most unpalatable to me and to most of the members of this House.

The only other time I spoke in regard to this bill in the House was when I rose because of some reprehensible remarks made by the Minister of Justice outside this Chamber in relation to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher), and the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie). These remarks were completely unparliamentary, as far as I was concerned, and should have been removed from the record by the Minister of Justice. He still has an opportunity to do that at this late date. He reflected on the good reputations of those individual members of parliament.

The remarks of the Minister of Justice should not stand in relation to these particular members, as they were endeavouring to give the best wisdom they had in relation to this legislation. In regard to those five individual members of parliament the record will show, upon examination, that they voted for the retention of capital punishment, which is the greatest possible deterrent available to government to enforce law and order in this country. It should continue to be a deterrent for all time to come.

If the government is interested in trying to bring some sanity into an insane situation, as far as enforcing laws upon the people of this nation is concerned, it will have to bring in another amendment to the Criminal Code placing on the statute books the retention of capital punishment for capital murder. That would do more than all the regulations associated with gun control implemented at any time.

Legal wiretapping from this moment forward will become a total joke. With this legislation, police officers are told that they can illegally wiretap and then introduce the evidence they secure into a particular trial. Why would any police officer want to bother going through the formality of getting authority to wiretap if he knows it can be done illegally and can be introduced in a trial for the purpose of producing a conviction?

My party is opposed to the wiretapping aspects of this legislation. The hon. member for Calgary North has put on the record how cosmetic wiretapping is. Out of 1,062 attempts, evidence which assisted in finding a person guilty of a specific crime was only secured on 13 occasions. When one considers that, he realizes just how little value wiretapping has in the first place. When you think of the encroachment on individual rights and liberties associated with this legislation in its present form, one can well understand why members of parliament have stood up and indicated their concern relating to those sections of this particular piece of legislation which are associated with wiretapping.

Apparently the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) has found time to go on television and tell the Canadian public that we should have an election. One has to remember that he is the man who is in charge of the police forces in this country. He sits as a member of a majority government which has been in office for only three years. Yet, he says the government cannot run the country, that the government cannot get legislation through the House of Commons. All I can say is that if the Solicitor General admits to the Canadian people that the Liberals cannot run the country with a majority government, then how many members do they need on the government side before they can run the country as efficiently as the Solicitor General would like?

The Solicitor General cannot run his own department. He cannot produce legislation associated with a report on penitentiaries produced by a sub-committee which was agreed on unanimously and which detailed how badly penitentiaries were being operated at the present time. Apparently the Solicitor General cannot control the RCM Police and has to have a special inquiry into their operations. Yet this same member goes on television and tells the people the government cannot run the country, after three years of majority government.

We have been saying that the Liberals cannot run the country for quite some time. I am very pleased that the Solicitor General has taken time out of his busy schedule, and away from all the inquiries revolving around him, to tell the Canadian public that the government of today cannot operate in a parliament where it has the majority of the seats. Apparently he is hoping by some magical formula that the Canadian people are going to eliminate the opposition altogether. I imagine that is the only way he feels the government can function properly. But the Canadian people are not going to provide the government with the power to eliminate opposition so that the government can operate by edict.

I feel very badly about the fact that a majority is giving the government the power it now has in Bill C-51. To a far greater degree than in the past the government is going to regulate the lives of Canadians by interfering more and more with their rights. A general election will solve nothing. The government already has a majority mandate from the Canadian people, and rather than running around, getting on television, and saying we should have a general election, hon. members opposite should go back to their offices and get their work done. If they did the people of this country would have some confidence in the way hon. members opposite operate the government.

I see the Minister of Justice in his seat. I ask him once again as a House of Commons man to eliminate once and for all any smear that he might have inadvertently left on the reputations of the hon. members for Red Deer, Palliser, Moose Jaw, Kootenay West, and Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) resulting from the injudicious remarks he made outside the House about the contributions of those members in the House. I think it is terribly unfair that a member of this House says outside the House anything about what another member said in the Chamber. As conscientious members of parliament they were speaking in a debate in the House and endeavouring to indicate what were their concerns about a piece of legislation that is troubling a great many Canadians both inside and outside this Chamber. I hope that when I sit down the minister will be willing to do what I suggest. His remarks were something injected into this debate which was not required and added nothing. All members of this party were terribly upset at his injudicious comments, and we hope that the minister will clear the record once and for all.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately time is moving on and for that reason I feel reluctant to say what I would normally say in a third reading speech. I think this legislation is very bad. That is pretty well the opinion of the chiefs of police as well; they indicated they were very sad that the minister has not done for them what they wanted him to do. They referred to the fact that the Carter administration in the United States is in favour of electronic surveillance and that the minister should do what they want. I presume that that means to allow unlimited surveillance. This is probably what the police will carry on anyway. They have never been too law-abiding in their enforcement of the law on others.

I am wondering whether they are really saying that they believe that the Carter administration in the United States is going to allow the police to use all kinds of wiretapping equipment without the benefit of court protection and then allow the use of that illegally obtained evidence to be used in court. I would doubt very much, knowing the reputations of the United States courts, that they would allow illegally obtained wiretap evidence to be used in them.

I suppose it is like people eavesdropping on everybody else. With the old party line telephones, if there was nothing else to do the housewife could always take the receiver off the hook and entertain herself while doing the ironing, the darning, the cooking or whatever. That was a great way to understand what everybody else was doing, and there were no secrets. It was a very open form of communication and whoever wanted to listen could, and often did so. I think it would have been a very brave rural resident who would go to church on Sunday morning and say "Did you hear the gossip on the telephone the other day when I heard Mrs. Jones talking about Mr. Smith?" Perhaps that would not have been done because people did not want others to know they were listening in, even though almost everybody did it.

The only way bugging can be effective is if people are unaware their conversations are being overheard. The police are foolish if they think otherwise or that it will help them very much. It will help them catch the small penny criminals, but so far as organized crime is concerned the government is barking up the wrong tree if it thinks this kind of surveillance will stop organized crime. It will only catch the little old lady trying, as somebody said, to sneak some underwear across the border; it will not do much to prevent organized crime. That surely is not really the main purpose of the police.

Police would like the elimination of firearms in the hands of the public. One of the police chiefs speaking on a radio program last night said that he wished there were no guns in the hands of individual citizens in Canada. I think that if you controlled all guns, that would be effective, but this is Utopian and it will not happen. There would be not much point in trying to achieve it. Perhaps that would be suitable in Canada, but people in Canada treat guns differently than they do in the United States.

In the United States there has always been a great deal of confusion about the right to use guns to protect one's property, under their constitution. We never had such problems. Very early in our history we established military law. The militia controlled the laws in the early history of Canada, in both French and English Canada. The militia acted as policemen in the colonies until we developed a police force. Our police force was not the same as in England or in France. It was a relatively mobile police force and some of its aims, among others, were to put down revolutions and to protect the properties of merchants. The police took part in the war of the English and French fur traders. Later the mounted police was formed. That was its background, so we in Canada have not developed the same attitude toward guns as they have in the United States. It has usually been a necessity here to carry a gun. On many occasions Canadians have been called upon to pick up guns in the defence of their country. Canadians have used guns as tools of their trade.

Listening to the program "Cross Country Check-up" last night I heard some interesting comments. One was from the Northwest Territories. A caller said that guns there were not treated with particular respect and care, but at the same time they were not misused. He said that there was no difference between the way a gun and a butcher's knife were approached. Children are taught early on in their lives that they must not pick up a butcher's knife because they might cut themselves, or a gun because it is dangerous. No particular care is taken of either a butcher's knife or a gun, but neither are they misused. Many murders that were committed in that area did not involve the use of a gun, although a gun was easily accessible to those involved in the crimes.

The police want to outlaw guns. In the bill preceding this one the minister indicated that he wished to outlaw guns. "Get them all out of the way, and there will be no problem", he seemed to say. Many of those who called in on "Cross Country Check-up", said, "We do not have guns over theah and therefore we do not want guns over heah". My tendency would be to say, "If you want to go over there, we will help to get you over there, because we like it here and we want to stay here". Much of it is that British nonsense, and the kind of people who go with that.

They fight their social wars here because over there they were not allowed to join the hunt club. Over here you can join the hunt club and chase foxes if you want, or you can shoot foxes at your own leisure—you do not need to belong to a social club or come from the right side of the tracks. There was a caller from Manotick who said, "We don't like these guns around, they are dangerous". That is a lot of nonsense. If they do not like them, they can go home and take their arguments with them.

There are many people in this country who are prejudiced either for or against guns. We all agree that the use of guns should be controlled to some degree, and one of the ways to control them is to improve ways of storing them. The way in which guns are stored in many parts of the country is atrocious.

We are worried about the one extra gun which one fellow used in the incident which took place in Ottawa the other day and which, they say, he would not have bought when on parole had the legislation been in effect. But no one said how he used other guns before that incident. They are talking only about the control of the gun he used this time. What shocks me about the police is that they seem to have known when and where he bought the gun, they knew all about it. Obviously they did not need this kind of legislation. Why did they let him buy it? Why did they not send a better trained policeman with a warrant to pick him up? In my opinion they are not really doing anything to prevent people from misusing guns, but they are really doing a number of things that are detrimental.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

[English]

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before the recess I was talking about the fact that the police chiefs of Canada are not particularly happy with the minister because they do not believe the wiretap legislation he is proposing is sufficient. They are also quite upset about the watering down of the bill with regard to gun legislation. In their brief the police chiefs talk about the unnecessary and impractical procedural burden which will be put on a firearms officer when he has to issue certificates of acquisition. They add something—which I presume is interesting to lawyers, but it is surprising to me—and it is this sentence:

It is the applicant who wishes to avail himself of a privilege—

That is, to buy a gun.

—and therefore the onus should be on him to provide the information necessary on the further grounds that he is also in a better position to provide that specific information.

It is proposed that the following question be asked: "Do you wish to say anything further which would incriminate you, because if we find out about something afterwards, you will face a more serious offence?" The police wish to go that further step so that the person who applies for a certificate, which the police chiefs call a privilege, could face other charges if the information he gives turns out to be inaccurate.

The brief of the police chiefs also says:

We further feel that any certificate renewal should be made only where there has been a revocation, and that the five year review of existing certificates should therefore be dropped.

The police chiefs think that anything else would be too expensive, would involve too much of the time of the police, and would be limiting.

An hon. Member: You are saying that.

Mr. Peters: No, I am paraphrasing what the police chiefs said. They were the ones who said that the five year review of existing certificates should be dropped, and that unless people do something wrong or there is some reason to revoke a certificate, people should not have to reapply after five years.

This is not the kind of legislation which will remove guns from people. On the other hand I do not think it will do anything to make it easier for the police to control the use of guns. There is considerable confusion as to what are prohibited guns, what are restricted guns, and what category the remainder fall under.

It has been argued that this legislation will control revolvers, but it will not affect them at all. They are already controlled. There are many revolvers on the market, and many are being used in hold-ups and in other criminal offences. Revolvers have always been very closely regulated. Machine guns would be banned under this legislation, but they have been banned under the Criminal Code for a long time. Machine guns have not been legalized, and there is nothing in this legislation which changes that. The only change affects automatic and semi-automatic weapons.

We are asking many people to support a bureaucracy in its efforts to do something which really will not accomplish anything. It is unfortunate that young members of parliament and young members of the public do not remember the fiasco of a number of years ago when there were $2 radio licences. People were supposed to pay $2 to licence each radio. They were supposed to do it voluntarily, and there were all kinds of inspectors who went around the country counting radios. That did not work, and the system was discarded.

Recently in Ontario the same thing was tried with regard to fishing licences. That was nuisance legislation. It was not designed to make just enough money to pay for itself. It did not keep people from fishing. It was established to produce revenue and to allow some control. There were better methods, and they are now being used. It seems to me this will be true of this legislation also.

If a person wants to buy a gun he will still need to have a certificate, and if he wants to sell that gun he will also need a certificate. In this way all new acquisitions will be recorded. This will not affect the more than 10 million long guns that are in circulation today, however, and I believe may lead to confusion in any attempt to control hand guns and other weapons used illegally by criminals.

This legislation is not going to satisfy anybody, but it will create a great deal of confusion for the police forces in the country and give them more work to do. Statistics accumulated and put in the hands of the police could be used against ordinary people.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the firearms provision and the wiretapping provision in this bill should not be passed.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief but I believe they will reflect the view of my constituency on this very important bill that we are tackling for the second time in this session. My constituency mail on Bill C-51 now before us was a great deal lighter than the mail I received on the earlier peace and security legislation, Bill C-83, although the tone of the mail was similar. Most letters came from rural people, farmers, hunting and sports associations and their members. There was very little comment on the wiretapping provisions of Bill C-51 and I think this is because the public at large do not understand the implications, so most of them did not comment on it. This impression is confirmed through conversations with many constituents.

Predictably most of the comments I received fully supported my stand on Bill C-83, the bill that died on the order paper, and almost all were critical of the firearms acquisition certificate, and were unanimously critical of the $10 fee.

A significant number of people pointed out that the priorities of the bill were wrong in view of the evidence on the misuse of alcohol and drugs in our society today. Many pointed to the statistic that 72 per cent of all violent crimes are related to the misuse of alcohol and drugs and felt that this matter should be receiving the attention of the House, not gun control as presented in the bill. I must say I thoroughly agree with that view.

My correspondence suggested that competency courses of instructions in the handling of firearms would be more applicable than this form of gun legislation. I agree with that as well. The underlying theme of all correspondence, however, in regard to the gun control feature of the bill, was that even with the substantial work done in committee on both Bill C-83 and Bill C-51, and in spite of the improvements resulting from the various amendments, this new bill will not do what all of us want, that is, take firearms out of the hands of criminals.

I received only about 50 letters on this bill, a small number in comparison to the number received on the earlier bill. About half of that 50 were from my constituents and the other half from all over western Canada.

I should like to put my personal views on record regarding the wiretapping provisions of the bill. There is no question that today our society is very disturbed and concerned about the frightening evidence of organized and unorganized crime in Canada. How far should we go in our efforts to combat this upsurge in crime?

I am equally concerned about the civil rights aspects, the invasion of our private rights in our homes. Recent high level break-ins—official or otherwise—pinpoint the need for a very high level assessment of our criminal laws as well as the political direction and responsibility of our police and security forces. We are not going to get this protection from the wiretapping provisions of this bill.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a very appropriate letter appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail on the subject of gun control, written by a former member of this House. It is a short letter, under the heading "Gun control" and reads as follows:

Gun control

Justice Minister Ronald Basford is quoted (Officer Slain, Six Wounded in Ottawa—July 12), as indicating that the slaying of an Ottawa policeman should "get Parliament and the Opposition moving to pass a bill we have been trying to get through for 18 months."

On Feb. 5, 1973, as an opposition member in the 29th Parliament, I asked the then Minister of Justice, (Otto Lang) if, in view of the shooting down of a third Toronto policeman, he would consider implementing the suggestions made by the Policemen's Association, regarding the ownership and registration of firearms in Canada.

He answered: "The problem is that regulations in relation to firearms most certainly interfere with the ordinary activities of a lot of law-abiding citizens, whereas in no way are they certain to interfere with the activities of criminals."

Mr. Basford was a member of the Government who supported that policy and made no protest. That was four years ago.

Reg Stackhouse

Toronto

It seems appropriate to conclude by pointing out the utter futility of the package concept in preparing legislation of this type. If the five parts of this bill had been split into at least two bills we could have been finished with both gun control and wiretapping long ago.

I cannot support this package bill, Mr. Speaker, mainly because of the government's proposals on gun control and wiretapping.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief but I want to go on record as saying I intend to support my party and oppose this bill. Had the bill been split it could have been passed two years ago and this legislation would not now be before us.

[Mr. Hargrave.]

It seems to me that in some of the speeches there has been a tendency to malign the police forces of this country. Some wild charges have been made about what the police will do with wiretaps—that they will use illegal wiretaps and engage in nefarious schemes, skullduggery, and other things that are objectionable. I disagree with such accusations, Mr. Speaker. I have probably had no more than the average number of encounters with the Ontario Provincial Police who service a number of municipalities in my riding. I may get the odd speeding ticket, and that is the sum of my encounters with them. Much the same applies to the RCMP. We see the RCMP on ceremonial occasions and know of some of the work they do. I have a personal relationship with a senior officer of the force who grew up next door to me. He is a sterling character; I know his family, and hope some of the accusations levelled against the RCMP will be cleared up during the forthcoming inquiry.

I resent some of the things some hon. members have said about our police forces. Let me say that in the small area I represent our police forces are not villains. They are the protectors of our people. I sat four years on the board of police commissioners of the city of Belleville and I can tell you that Chief Doug Crosbie heads one of the finest police forces in all Canada. I am not ashamed to say I had a hand in hiring him, but I do not single him out particularly, because chiefs before him were also good. Let me also mention Carl Beattie, chief of the police force in Deseronto. When they have a barbeque at the Lion's Club, or when there is work to do at the arena, to get ready for the kids on Saturday morning, Carl is one of the boys; but everyone in the village knows that on Saturday night, when Carl Beattie is on duty, you had better not drive down the main street of Deseronto faster than you should, or carry a mickey in your hip pocket, because Carl will put you in the clink as quick as a wink.

The same is true of Charlie Fletcher in Picton. I have an Indian reserve in my riding, one of the few with its own police force. When there is a problem in Shannonville, or on the Tyendwaga reserve, Tom Maracle comes up and talks to the people. If it is an Indian problem he straightens it out.

Those kind of people protect people in my part of the country. Mr. Speaker, I submit many hon. members who have spoken recently, barring the hon. member who spoke before me and dealt with a specific part of the bill, have come dangerously close to imputing serious crimes to police forces in Canada. I object. In my opinion these small police forces will not engage in undue wiretapping. I guarantee it. Small communities never have enough money for equipment and men. They do not have enough men for wiretapping, or for the sort of wiretapping they might like to do. The municipal police budgets are never large enough to enable the police forces to do the job they want to do. Those forces are equipped with the best equipment it is possible to obtain for them in the circumstances. They try to buy equipment as good as they can afford, and keep their training methods up to date. But they make a major decision when they decide to upgrade their radios or buy a new radar unit.

Personally I am not worried about wiretaps. Like most members of parliament I probably spend more time on the telephone than the average Canadian. Perhaps I use the telephone more than some other members do. If any people want to listen to my telephone conversations, they are welcome to try. Go ahead. I have nothing to hide. I am not the least bit worried about somebody tapping my telephone. I merely want the record to show that there is support in this House—I know I speak for many members—for those forces which protect Canadians. Our police forces are not a bunch of villains.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise under your chairmanship; this is the first time I have had this opportunity. I have something to add although I have spoken this afternoon on the amendment of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) about wiretapping. Everybody will realize that this legislation which is over 80-pages long, despite all the points dealt with, as I said this afternoon, is an omnibus bill dealing with the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act, wiretapping, gun control, etc. We find that the gun control section covers 44 pages of the bill, and that is why I said this afternoon that this was the most important question in the legislation, and that it would have been absolutely necessary to have a bill dealing specifically with gun control. What sort of a control? To what extent?

We are in favour of some control, and we have already had controls since World War II on ordinary and automatic weapons, but mainly since the sixties; and I should add that controls on automatic weapons are a lot stricter now, because I remember that when I had one day to have my revolver registered, I realized that the laws had become a lot more severe. We do not object to that, but we are saying that this legislation goes too far or is not precise enough, so that it frightens almost everybody. That is why I should like to convey to the House the reaction of the people in my constituency of Roberval who see in this bill not only a protection for law abiding citizens, as the minister claimed, but also in my opinion a legislation which favours the criminal to the detriment of the honest citizen. I am thinking about the farmers, the sportsmen and the businessmen of my constituency. Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on Bill C-83, I even proposed not only to grant permits but free permits. With all the money involved in this bill, it is simply another Loto Canada set up by the federal government and permits should be granted to those who require them, such as all farmers.

The bill specifies Indians and Inuits. I agree, but there are also other groups. I cannot imagine a farmer unable to have a permit for one or two guns, or sportsmen, and I added also businessmen. Nowadays, Mr. Speaker, if someone really wants protection, he must in a way look after himself. There is the civil defence, protection in general, of course, but I think it is essential that responsible citizens have the right to protect themselves. If a businessman does not have the right to keep a gun in his home to protect himself against bandits, that is terrible. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the situation if every bank manager, every bank teller could be armed? There would no longer be any bank robbers or at least far fewer of them would dare go into a bank with five, ten or 20 tellers. Then, they would start to be scared. But if there is a law that in fact disarms all those people, all the honest people, that forces them to hand over their weapons, who will then be favoured? Mr. Speaker, this bill will not disarm a single bandit. They will continue to keep their guns, and all the equipment they use to commit their crimes. In some stores, some banks, when robbers come face to face with a weapon, they do not show up a second time.

According to police reports, the law is not strong enough for us to abolish capital punishment. We started with doing just that; and now, we are asked to disarm all the honest people, under the pretext that crime will thereby be reduced. It is impossible to do so by proceeding in this way. The minister says he heard witness after witness. Yes, indeed, there were many in committee. I shall take a couple at random, for instance, from the report of the Canadian Police Association, and another, which I have here, from the report signed by Mr. McCann, advisor to the government or even from the report on arms control; those people are not extremists. They do not deny the government the right to exercise some control. I quote from that brief:

> As responsible owners, we feel that arms control should endeavour to prevent criminals and the mentally ill from owning such weapons while responsible citizens should be allowed to enjoy their favorite sport without undue restrictions.

I consider it undue restriction to have all those people.

In the first place, the department is going to set up a committee to enact regulations, to impose taxes because people are more concerned over regulations than the act itself. And following that bill, which already contains 44 pages on firearms alone, I anticipate another volume on regulations they want to impose on each and everyone. And you will notice, Mr. Speaker, that the bill emphasizes the punitive rather than the educational aspect. And that is the kind of avenue the government always follows. For instance, if a farmer forgot to register an old gun handed down from one generation to another, the officials will have the right to seize it because he did not report it.

We know how those things happen because there are confiscations every day in our area even with the present regulations because some hunter kills game that he is not allowed to kill, his gun or his rifle is confiscated or he is quietly on his way home after six o'clock and was unfortunate enough to leave his gun on the back seat, the gun is seized, a $200 to $250 gun that he will never see again. He is given a fine, and his rifle is taken away. People come to my office asking: Is it possible to get at least our rifle back after paying the fine? No. What do they do with it? We do not know, and nobody can tell us. But I think that thousands and thousands of rifles are being trafficked, I believe, by some public servants who take a wicked pleasure in seizing every time they can the rifles and guns of people who need them.

I am afraid that this bill which is excessively permissive will further strip honest people of a firearm to which they are attached, a firearm they want and would then have the right to keep in their possession in their homes. That is why, as I said this afternoon, I repeat that bills like this should be selected and graded so we would have time to discuss and vote with the necessary amendments to strengthen that bill, and when it would come back to the House, I think it would be easier to pass. What did happen? It was buried in an omnibus bill and the witnesses were indeed listened to but without giving it more attention to bring in the amendments they were proposing about firearms. That is why I say that we cannot support Bill C-51, not because it is entirely bad, no, but because it is an omnibus bill and we cannot afford to get everyone into the same boat.

For example, is the registration of firearms going to cost $10 or $15? We do not know. The regulations will determine that and the regulations are not written by members of parliament but will again be written by public servants who will determine the amount of money they need to pay to have the right to own a firearm. But will those permits be renewable every year now? Every five years? Every ten years? That is another thing, we do not know yet, Mr. Speaker. I think there are many obscure issues in this bill and it is impossible at present for us to give our support to that part of the bill. I say that this bill operates to the detriment of honest citizens. We also find the following statements in the A. McCann report which I realize has been tabled in committee. I quote:

> Estimates to the effect that 7 to 10 millions firearms are owned by Canadian citizens certainly prove that a lot of people 2 to 3 millions perhaps are interested enough in firearms to buy and maintain them. Only a few of these weapons are meant for illegal use. Although firearms owners are entirely in favour of effective controls, it seems unreasonable to subject a great number of citizens to such impracticable regulations. As for revolvers, controls on this type of firearms have existed in Canada since before the Second World War. These controls have been tightened in the sixties and since then their possession has become so difficult that it borders on prohibition.

And on that point they are right for I have made the experience myself. In spite of that, these controls did not result in a decrease of gun usage for criminal activities.

This is what I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker. Even with all those precautions, another report says that the crime rate has increased and that criminals are more active than ever. It is not by refusing everyone a permit that we can decrease the incidence of criminal acts.

> A comparison of the crime rates in countries with strict gun control has proven its use, unless other appropriate factors be considered as well. For every country, the comparisons emphasize the importance of history, population, family life and mutual respect. In the case of criminals, there is a premeditated intent to violate the law. If this includes the use of a firearm, violation of another law by the criminal is therefore completely unimportant. The criminal will always be able to obtain the weapons he needs from illegal sources. This is why we cannot believe that any control or prohibition can have a concrete effect on the criminal use of firearms.

The next paragraph talks about mental patients. I believe mostly in some control at the level of weapon sales, but this control that we shall have will be another federal tax on illegal sales. Instead of using the police for imposing a legal control, the government wants another licence traffic. And everyone knows what this traffic is like in politics. Everyone knows that this is the source of the whole problem. There will again be people who will not be entitled to hold permits but who will still get them because of political patronage. This will again come into play. If there was a legal commission to issue permits without any fee involved, there would be much less political influence. And this is always what I fear in such cases.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the federal government requires a permit for firearms trading, this is quite well for the trade. However, we do not want some regulations to deprive once again some honest citizens. This is what we fear in our areas especially according to the reports which I received at my office. All those who came to my office are afraid, but I think their fears will soon be justified if this goes on, because the minister mentioned that only the Indians, the Inuit and those who earn their living by hunting would have free permits, but they are not alone.

There are other Canadians who do not hunt for a living but who like that sport and who also have the right to own a gun either for their own pleasure or for their personal needs, such as farmers, tradesmen, businessmen and those who have great financial responsibilities. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this bill, regardless of what we might say, is going to be passed anyway, but I simply wanted explain why I was opposed to it, once again not because the whole bill is bad, but because of that famous omnibus bill that I have never swallowed and will never swallow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

● (2040)

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion in the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Basford: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions through the usual channels as to when a division on this motion might be taken and it has been agreed through the usual channels, I believe, that it be taken at the close of the question period tomorrow.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is the gist of the discussions, and it is quite agreeable to us on this side.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): I think that is strange. A short while ago, the minister came to my office and told me that there would be a vote tonight. I find it rather strange being told that there has been an understanding. I have not heard about that, and the minister came to my office a short while ago and told me that there was going to be a vote. This is why I am in favour of this vote tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will point out to the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) that he has a choice open to him. The House needs unanimous consent so that the vote may be deferred till tomorrow, after the oral question period, and as the Chair is not privy to these negotiations between party House leaders and since any member has the right to dissent, the unanimous consent of the House must be obtained before the House may make an order for the vote to be scheduled for tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. Basford: May I say to the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) that I did discuss this matter with him this afternoon before he made his speech and I thought I made it clear there would not be a division tonight—that the yeas and nays would be called but that the division would be taken tomorrow. That is the agreement I have been seeking to obtain all day—that after the debate had been concluded we would do the actual voting tomorrow. I apologize if I did not make this clear. I thought I had.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I think there was a misunderstanding, because when the minister came to talk to me, I did understand that he asked me if I was going to speak tonight. I said I would but that I would allow time for the taking of the vote tonight. Then he said to me: "Very well." I told him that immediately after I finished speaking, the vote could be held. I do not see what difference it makes whether the vote is taken tonight or tomorrow. I had understood correctly and I was indeed under the impression when I talked to him that the vote would be taken tonight, so I made arrangements accordingly.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Thank you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There not being unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Basford: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Roberval indicated to me, when I explained that I thought the vote would be taken tomorrow, that it was immaterial to him whether it was taken tonight or tomorrow. I thought I had informed the hon. member earlier that it would be taken by agreement tomorrow. I know he was ready to have a vote this evening but other groups in the House preferred to defer the voting until tomorrow. I would ask him, in line with our conversation, to agree to that course.

Mr. Epp: You Liberals blew it!

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I never said tonight or tomorrow. I said tonight when I spoke, because I had my reasons for wanting the vote to be taken tonight. That is why I did not want it postponed until tomorrow, because tomorrow there will be other business to be considered and we do not have enough members tonight to discuss the legislation that will be called after the vote. That is my reason for being honest with him.

Mr. Blaker: Do you agree that we adjourn until tomorrow?

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Do I agree to adjourn until tomorrow? That is precisely the point. I am being asked if I agree to adjourn until tomorrow, and I cannot agree because we do not have enough members to proceed with the next legislation that will be called.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If I understand correctly the hon. member for Roberval, since his party is not ready to proceed with the legislation to be called after the division, if it were not taken tonight but deferred until tomorrow, he would prefer the vote to be taken tonight, so that there will not be much time left, but enough to proceed with another bill and not necessarily to dispose of it.

[English]

There seems to be a misunderstanding. The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) insists that his party is not ready to proceed with other legislation, if the vote is postponed at this time, and unless there is some agreement by his party after the question being postponed, we would not proceed with other legislation. He is not ready to give unanimous consent. Unless someone finds an argument to get that consent, I will have to call in the members.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, if the vote is taken tomorrow, I do not mind, but let us call it ten o'clock immediately, so that we will not consider other bills after that.

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I rise on a point of order. I should like to point out to the hon. member for Roberval, the constituency next to mine, that there appears to be a clear case of misunderstanding between the hon. member for Roberval and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). I should like to add that the hon. member apparently fears that there will not be enough time or opportunity to debate the next bill, which is Bill C-60, the purpose of which is to create a constituency in northern Ontario. The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) is certainly ready to deal with this question. If my hon. colleague from Roberval would agree to have the vote postponed until three o'clock or 3.15 tomorrow afternoon, Bill

C-60 might be called immediately and give the hon. member for Villeneuve, NDP members, and probably others, and perhaps some also from this side the opportunity to make their views known. Anyway, it is already 8.55 p.m.

There is hardly an hour of debate left before the end of the sitting this evening. This would allow the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and other members to state their views on Bill C-60. Then the discussion on Bill C-60 could take place at some other time as determined by the Chair, or the House leader in consultation with the leaders of the other parties. I suggest to the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) that he consider the matter and allow the debate to be deferred until tomorrow at 3.15 p.m.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I made a distinction which I explained to everyone, and the members of the New Democratic Party were aware of the fact. I said that if Bill C-51 was discussed after supper, there would necessarily be a vote, because we would not be ready to deal with Bill C-60. In other words, they want to slip Bill C-60 between two others, but it will not be done just like that. This is the reason why I say that the vote should take place this evening. The minister should tell us why a vote cannot be taken this evening. We are all here and we are ready to vote. We are waiting for it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since there is no unanimous consent, I must call in the members.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader what he intends to deal with tomorrow and, if this is possible, later on in the week and into next week?

Mr. MacEachen: Tomorrow we shall continue with the third reading of the unemployment insurance bill, and consultations will take place with respect to what we shall be considering after that.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—PROPOSED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF POLICY STATEMENTS ON CATTLE INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the occasion for this adjournment debate arose as far back as last February 4, as reported at page 2720 of Hansard.

One of the most serious criticisms of our parliamentary procedure I have noticed in close to five years spent in this House relates to a practice which is slowly but surely increasing, to the great detriment of our parliamentary tradition. I refer to the government's deliberate policy-making by order in council, or by direct ministerial authority.

This portion of the adjournment debate will deal with that situation, especially with respect to three policy announcements which were made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) during the last Christmas recess, dealing with Canada's beef cattle industry, at a time when no proper debate or comment in the House was possible. Today, seven months later, as we prepare to adjourn for a summer recess, we find there has been no opportunity to examine and debate these policy pronouncements, especially in committee.

The first one was on December 23, 1976, which was the announcement of Canada's offshore beef quotas, against Australia, New Zealand, and United States beef imports into Canada. The facts which should have been pointed out in a proper debate in committee, immediately after our Christmas recess, would include this long overdue action which was a full year late. Cattlemen had asked for action more than a year earlier. Approximately nine months before this announcement the signs were clearly evident that we were headed for massive levels of offshore beef imports over the remainder of 1976, a 60 per cent increase in the offshore beef imports over 1975 which came to a total of 186 million pounds. This is the equivalent of approximately 535,000 Canadian cows. These came in at very badly discounted prices of as much as 31 cents per pound below the equivalent beef entering the United States from offshore. During 1976 there was the largest supply of domestic beef in Canada's history. The result was a massive displacement of our fresh cow beef to the United States market.

I want to point out that I have no criticism of Canada's participation in the North American market, but those displaced cows moved to that market because our own market was $3 lower due to offshore imports. That exercise cost our Canadian cow market at least $30 million. The most sinister aspect of this 1976 situation was that it was so deliberate that no action was taken until a year later when the damage was done. Beef to the consumer was held at cheap levels, and the control policy and the cost of living factor appeared to be working for the consumer's benefit.

The second announcement occurred on January 4, 1977. The minister announced his cow-calf stabilization policy for the calendar year 1977, following the minister's own stabilization policy. I have no quarrel with that aspect, but I do quarrel with the fact that this cow-calf policy was not retroactive to 1976. That was the worst year ever in our cattle industry with costs of production taken into account.

The minister had repeatedly promised this policy would be announced in 1976 for 1976, including a promise to the provincial ministers of agriculture during the summer or fall of that year. This lack of action for 1976 contributed to the very depressed cattle market, and of course was another contribution to the ongoing cheap food policy.

The third one was on January 23 or 24 of 1977, when the minister announced the details of his feed cattle support policy for last year. In this policy announcement the minister departed from a traditional departmental announcement which followed a prescribed and accepted pattern or guideline. He changed the rules in two ways: by using 95 per cent of the previous five year average market price instead of 90 per cent, and by using a flat dollar figure of $1.79 to be added to the stabilized level of $40.16 in order to make a payout possible. This $1.79 was the cost of production increment when the feed grains and feeder cattle, the two principal input costs in producing feeder cattle, were both down in 1976. This cost factor should have been a reducing factor.

These are facts and items of debate which should have been brought out in a parliamentary forum at least six months ago, and not now in a politically charged atmosphere. That is the trouble in our Canadian cattle industry—there is far too much politics involved in our market orientation. Why not let the market work?

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that in asking his question on February 4, 1977, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) acknowledged the importance of the programs which this government has put into place for the benefit of the Canadian cattle industry. The three programs which he mentioned—the cow-calf stabilization program, the slaughter cattle stabilization program, and the beef import quotas—have since been supplemented by an additional program at the request of producers in western Canada. I am speaking, of course, of the drought program.

As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) explained in his response on February 4, he has no objection in principle to the referral of these programs to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for discussion. In fact he would welcome such an opportunity further to explain their value to Canadian cattlemen. However, he is also aware that there is generally a very heavy demand on the time and resources available to both members of committees and the committees' branch itself.

The agriculture committee has recently expended a considerable amount of time and effort in studying the report of the commission of inquiry into the marketing of beef and veal. Issues of concern to the industry, such as those mentioned previously, were provided with an excellent forum for discussion during these meetings. The other place has also been most active in this respect. In addition, the Standing Committee on Agriculture considers the agriculture stabilization estimates, as well as those of the department, each year. Discussions are very broad in scope at these meetings, and issues such as the hon. member has mentioned tonight are regularly discussed with the witnesses who are present.

Although I am aware of the hon. member's concerns as they relate to the cattle industry, I have also noted the specific concerns of other members relative to different commodities. I am sure that the request of the hon. member would, therefore, give rise to a request for discussion by several other commodity interests. In view of the foregoing, and under the present circumstances, I do not believe that the minister would support the hon. member's request.

TRANSPORT—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FEDERAL SHARE OF COST OF HIGHWAY PROGRAM FOR ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am debating tonight the reply given me by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in which he advised that he was not prepared to accede to the request by the Atlantic provinces highways ministers and myself for a more deserving cost sharing formula in regard to the $100 million highway strengthening program for the Atlantic region announced recently, other than that the federal government would contribute 50 per cent of the cost.

I say with all due respect to the minister that I find it difficult to reconcile his creating a new precedent when another precedent has been set in two other areas of highway programs. Under the original agreement to build the Trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland during the Pearson regime, the federal government participated to the extent of 90 per cent of the cost. The minister replied to me that he was not sure that the generous treatment offered at that time should necessarily be repeated.

I remind the minister through his parliamentary secretary that even though the portion of the highway through Newfoundland was called the Trans-Canada highway, any similarity between what exists under that name in my province and that which exists in other parts of Canada is strictly coincidental and primarily a misnomer of the worst degree. I feel that on this basis alone the federal government should even pay 100 per cent of the cost to correct the accepted ridiculous standards of that highway in Canada.

Secondly, his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), has entered into several highways agreements with the province of Newfoundland, which are still existing, to build highways in the province on a 90-10 basis.

Thirdly, I wonder at the answers given to me according to which the program for the four Atlantic provinces of $100 million—about $25 million to each province—is deemed to be so generous when a similar amount of almost $100 million is to be provided to one other province under a $264 million Quebec highway program.

I would venture to say that the most deteriorated section of the Trans-Canada highway exists in my province and in my district, the portion from the Port aux Basques entry to Cornerbrook, a most important section of the corridor which is so necessary for the highway traffic to St. John's, Newfoundland.

It is interesting to note that in the Quebec agreement the basis of the financial contribution of $100 million is for industrial development, to facilitate access to tourist areas and, to improve safety and capacity along the traffic corridor, and I can only wonder why it is not recognized that the same need exists for the Newfoundland corridor to give that province the infrastructure base which is so vitally necessary for our economic development and for a fundamental transportation base so that Newfoundland can finally contribute toward the Canadian dream.

Certainly it should be recognized, from the slow progress made in developing and marketing our resources, that a reasonable transportation system is vital in order to overcome the handicap of transportation costs in competing for distant markets where we sell our products.

I hope that the minister will have his officials drive over the Trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland to see the deteriorated sections which are a danger to the traveller, and which can only be termed an embarrassment to Canada. What can our province do with $30 million? Our share of the program can do little to meet the needs, especially when it is spread over a three year period. I can only ask again that the matter be looked into with a view to meeting our regional objectives the fulfillment of which which we have awaited with too much patience over the past years. I hope that the very efficient parliamentary secretary can give me an answer which will give some hope for the future and which will meet the needs of Newfoundland in line with the highways agreement which was signed.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in considering the question of an appropriate role for the federal government in supporting the upgrading of the primary highway system in the Atlantic provinces, it is important to recognize that for the most part highways are a provincial responsibility.

However, as evidenced by a recent announcement, the federal government proposes to spend up to $125 million over the next three years to help improve transportation services in the four Atlantic provinces. The major highway strengthening program to which the government will contribute $100 million is, of course, of the highest priority.

An analysis of the highway proposal, or at least of those parts of the proposal that were put forward as having priority in the context of an initial three year agreement, submitted jointly by the provincial governments, indicated that the standardization of minimum truck weight and related regulations would indeed result in significant benefits that could be considered to be national rather than purely provincial in nature. This conclusion formed one of the main arguments in support of federal assistance.

As to the question of the cost-sharing ratio, the government feels that a 50 per cent federal share of the eligible costs would appropriately reflect the extent of "national" interest in the program. And, Mr. Speaker, given the need for fiscal restraint, the federal government is unable to assume additional liability at this time.

In conclusion, it is useful, I think, to point out that the federal proposal does make provision for a review of the first three year program, an analysis of future needs, and a recommendation regarding further programming.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—POSITION OF CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS ON PARTICIPATION IN MULTIPARTITE NATIONAL FORUM

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of questions which I asked of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) on July 13 as reported in Hansard commencing on page 7626. On June 13, during a speech which I was making, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) interjected when I was suggesting that the evidence was overwhelming that the Canadian Labour Congress would not take part in the Minister of Labour's multipartite national forum which he has been proposing since last autumn. The Minister of Finance interjected and said, "That's not what they say in private".

Subsequently, on July 13, I asked the Minister of Labour the following question which is reported at page 7626 of Hansard:

> Can the minister tell the House whether there have been private talks between the CLC and cabinet ministers which indicate that they are prepared to participate in the multipartite national forum or is the position of the CLC as it has been publicly stated, namely, that they are not prepared to participate in that particular forum?

I do not want to use undue language in this Chamber, but I must advise this House that the minister failed to answer that question because he did not want even to seem to be in disagreement with the Minister of Finance. However, the fact of the matter is that the CLC has never privately, publicly, or in any other way given any support to this multipartite national forum which the minister runs around the country saying is the keystone to labour policy on behalf of the Government of Canada.

I pointed out to the minister the other day that he has no commitments whatsoever from business to support a multipartite national forum. That has been made very clear on a number of occasions, if one refers to the press, but it was made very clear when Mr. Sydney Jackson of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, in a statement which was reported in the Globe and Mail of July 13 of this year, said that the whole idea was just window dressing, that he had not talked to a single leader in industry who agreed to it, and that his understanding was that labour did not support it either.

I put it to the parliamentary secretary, to the Minister of Labour and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and I have put it to the Minister of Finance in the past: how can there be a government policy, and how can ministers go around the country and say seriously that this is the policy, when two of the groups which absolutely must be part of this multipartite national forum—which the Minister of Labour said is to decide the "big economic issues of the day"—labour and management, have not agreed to participate in it? What commitments does the government have from labour? Frankly, I do not believe there are any. I think the government has been pulling the wool over our eyes for months, and to the degree it is doing that it is destroying the ability of business, labour and the government to get together to have meaningful discussions.

Second, what commitment does the government have from any section of the business community? I do not want to be met tonight with a lot of nonsense about the fact that these are ongoing discussions having something to do with decontrol. When the Minister of Labour put these things forward in October he was not talking about decontrol at all; he was talking about a forum for discussion in the post-control period, not to determine what decontrol is. The Minister of Finance confirmed to me some days ago in the House that his discussions which are going on right now are not in the multipartite sense but are strictly with business and labour.

I think it is time the Minister of Labour and the government generally stopped this silly little dance of pretending to have policy when they do not have it, and they do not have the support of the sectors of the community—meaning labour and business—which they must have to support the proposal which was put forward by the Minister of Labour. It would be far better to admit that, and come up with another idea. It is absolute folly to continue to waste public funds by putting out public documentation, advertising brochures and the like, which have been appearing on all hon. members' desks recently touting a multipartite national forum to decide the big economic issues of the day many months after it was first proposed when in fact there is no agreement from either labour or business to participate in it.

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the recent report of the executive director of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association presented at its annual general meeting, the following statement appears:

> . . . the Association has not fully assessed all of the 14 initiatives proposed by the federal Minister of Labour for improving labour relation climate . . .

This makes it all the more difficult to be able to conclude that the statement of any representative of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association does, in fact, represent the considered views of that association on the basis of an appropriately careful evaluation of any of the 14 points, including the national consultative forum.

Over the past number of months the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the officials of his department have gone to considerable lengths to consult with business and labour across this country with regard to the 14-point program. They have heard the concerns of businessmen for such issues as the competitiveness of Canadian industry in international markets, productivity, wages, and the climate of industrial relations within which economic decisions will have to be made once controls will have been lifted. They have also heard new and much more broadly framed concerns of organized labour for a more influential voice in matters of broad social and economic consequence. The very consultations in which we have engaged regarding the 14 points have already served to broaden the perspectives from which labour, business, and government look at matters of common interest and concern.

This process of enlarging the awareness of the other person's interests and points of view can be a powerful force for bringing greater wisdom into economic decisions, especially if the various considerations are brought into focus for intelligent analysis and consideration by all interested groups and individuals through the mechanism of the proposed national consultative forum. The forum we envisage would be representative not only of business, labour and government, but also of other interest areas including, but not necessarily restricted to, consumers, co-operatives, professionals, and primary producers such as farmers and fishermen.

Our assessment of the numerous consultations we have had with business and labour about the forum is that the concept has been enthusiastically endorsed and generally enjoys a wide measure of support. Indeed we have found no one who is actually opposed to consultation among those concerned with and affected by decisions on economic and social matters. The report of the executive director of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association referred to above contains references to consultations in which the association has been involved, and the contexts of those references would lead one to conclude that the C.M.A. has just as much to gain from consultation as anyone else.

Mr. Fraser: That is no answer to the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.36 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

TORNADO

PROPOSAL THAT AREA OF MANITOBA AFFECTED BE DECLARED DISASTER AREA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the unfortunate loss of life and devastation of property caused by a tornado which struck southeastern Manitoba, namely, the areas of Rosa and Carlowrie, on July 18, 1977, I move, seconded, by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

BILINGUALISM

SUGGESTION BONUS BE GRANTED BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

Since the Montreal regional council of the Public Service Alliance of Canada has declared its determination to continue boycotting the second language as long as the Treasury Board refuses to respect its promise to pay a bilingualism bonus; since the government has repeatedly stated formally that it considers it fair and equitable to pay that bonus; since an increasing number of federal civil servants in Quebec intend to ask that their jobs now classified as bilingual be reclassified as unilingual because, to quote them almost textually, they are fed up with claiming compensation they are being denied; and since it is imperative that the citizens being served by the civil servants concerned should have the choice of either official language in this country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey):

That the House unanimously recommend that the minister in charge solve immediately the problem of the bonus for bilingualism and that, should the matter not be solved quickly, no disciplinary measures be taken in the meantime against the functionaries concerned.

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO YORK PLACE DEVELOPMENT IN HAMILTON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. That this House do now order a full public inquiry into the York Place low rental housing development in Hamilton.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR DEVELOPMENT PAYMENTS FROM NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that professional hockey teams continue to benefit financially, and in fact depend on the development of junior hockey players in Canada, many of them financed through federal assistance programs, without contributing towards that development, and because the report by the president of Hockey Canada, Mr. Douglas Fisher, regarding the funding provisions between the NHL and Canadian major junior hockey leagues, concluded that: "there is no hope of an agreement or a compromise between the NHL and the juniors", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That this House instruct the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) to approach directly the president and officers of the National Hockey League and request that development payments for each drafted amateur be made forthwith and retroactive to the last drafts, failing which the government would be compelled to introduce legislation dealing with this serious and unjust matter.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation for debate of any such motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

OUTFLOW OF CAPITAL FROM CANADA—EFFECT OF REVIEW PROCEDURES—ESTIMATE OF NUMBER OF JOBS LOST

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Bank of Canada has revealed that in the last four years there has been an acceleration of Canadian direct investment abroad and a deceleration of foreign investments here, so that in 1976 there was a net outflow of nearly $1 billion, costing tens of thousands of Canadian jobs. Would the Prime Minister indicate if his administration anticipated such a turnaround when it introduced its foreign investment review procedures, bearing in mind that such a flight of capital has resulted not only in higher unemployment but also in a brain drain of some of our most talented people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the least I can say is that the question is extremely complex. Certainly, the Foreign Investment Review Agency did have as its stated objective screening investment so that it would be allowed only when it brings significant benefit to Canada. I would be surprised if the hon. member would disagree with that. As far as Canadian capital being invested elsewhere is concerned, there are no exchange controls on the Canadian dollar, and the Canadian investor is free to invest wherever he will get the maximum return for his dollar.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I would like to explore this subject a little further with the Prime Minister. Faced with an 8 per cent unemployment level at the present time and the anticipation that it might go even higher—in fact, it is now at a higher level than any major industrialized country—would the Prime Minister go further and indicate to what extent his foreign investment review procedures or other related government policies have contributed to unemployment by discouraging foreign investment and job creation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must repeat in part my previous answer. Foreign investment continues to be welcome in Canada, but only if it brings significant benefit. This, of course, includes the creation of jobs. It is on that basis that a great deal of foreign investment has continued to be allowed over the past several years since the creation of the Foreign Investment Review Agency. If the hon. member checks the figures, he will see that it is a small proportion indeed of foreign investment which is screened out, and one of the considerations of the review agency is to see if the investment will bring jobs or not. In the latter case, the investment is not encouraged unless there are other benefits.

Mr. Stevens: With almost daily press reports of further Canadian investment in foreign lands, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether he is concerned about this trend or, at least, would he indicate if he has received any report on this apparent exodus of money, know-how and jobs, and if so, could he estimate how many jobs have been lost so far?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I have not received any report on this nor an estimate of jobs lost so far, but the facts the hon. member raises are facts of which we are aware, and they change from time to time. There is a period in the cycle when members of parliament complain that there is too much foreign investment, and at other times they complain that there is too much Canadian investment going abroad. We have always taken the view that the economy should function in such a way that investors in normal times can be free to seek the best possible return for their dollar, and if that is not the case in Canada, that means we have to manage our economy better and increase our productivity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: You have seen the light.

Mr. Trudeau: I am glad I made hon. members opposite smile.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—ESTIMATE OF LEVEL NEXT YEAR—REASON PRIVATE SECTOR UNABLE TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, while we are talking about managing the economy better, it should be noted that the Prime Minister has some indication in terms of unemployment. As even the budget concedes that the current level of 8 per cent unemployment will worsen by the end of this year—and private sector forecasts are even more pessimistic—can the Prime Minister tell the House what the level of unemployment will be by this time next year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not have my crystal ball handy.

Mr. Alexander: As far as I am concerned, the Prime Minister never has a crystal ball, or any balls whatsoever, in terms of meeting this very serious situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: With reference to the steadily worsening unemployment situation, can the Prime Minister tell the House what the business leaders he has consulted with told him about why there is so little job creation? I know the Prime Minister registered his concern about this. Have the business leaders indicated to him why the private sector has not been able to create the jobs he thought it would as a result of that insignificant budget?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I really could not answer that question in a short period of time. Many business leaders have brought many reasons forward having to do with government expenditures, the level of productivity, the level of wage rates and the attitude of entrepreneurs in our country. When I say "we" have to manage the economy better, the hon. member knows me well enough to know this "we" is not the we of majesty; I am speaking of Canadians generally.

Mr. Epp: That is a new twist.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary. Since this administration has offered no solutions for Canadians seeking employment in Canada, would the Prime Minister follow through on his suggestion that unemployed Canadians leave the country to find work by indicating what country he had in mind that might receive unemployed Canadians? Is this the contingency plan the Prime Minister has for our youth?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is perhaps making a telling point against his own argument. People continue wanting to migrate to Canada because they feel it is a country with a future in spite of the opposition always trying to poor-mouth—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: What are you telling our kids to leave for? That is all I want to know.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not sure this is the proper forum in which to have a substantive economic debate on a question and answer basis.

Miss MacDonald: It never is for you.

Mr. Trudeau: I think even the opposition must realize that the economic questions which face Canada and most industrialized democracies are—

Mr. Alexander: And which you brought into play and which have destroyed this country.

Mr. MacFarlane: Don't embarrass us in Hamilton, Linc.

Mr. Trudeau: —very serious.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Come forward so that we can see your shorts.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I must say to the right hon. Prime Minister that jealousy will get him nowhere.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED ILLEGAL BUGGING OF HOTEL ROOMS OF THREE EDMONTON POLICE OFFICERS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, June 9, the hon. member for New Westminster put a question to the Solicitor General regarding the evidence given before a judicial inquiry in Edmonton in relation to a charge that RCMP officers had illegally bugged the hotel rooms of three Edmonton police officers. At that time the Solicitor General said that the Deputy Commissioner of the RCMP had been delegated by the commissioner to investigate the matter and that he found there was no bugging. The minister's statement is completely at variance with an evidence given to the Laycraft Inquiry yesterday reported in yesterday's Globe and Mail as follows:

> The inquiry also heard Assistant Commissioner Peter Wright, head of the RCMP in Alberta testify that Ross Paisley, Alberta's deputy attorney-general told him that the bugging was "a fact," not "an allegation," and that Assistant Commissioner George Paquette, in charge of the RCMP in Manitoba at the time of the bugging, had approved it.

Has the minister been in touch with the deputy attorney general of Alberta, to determine if the assertions the deputy commissioner of the RCMP made on the stand are accurate? More especially, has the Solicitor General been in touch with Assistant Commissioner Paquette, to determine if he approved the bugging?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no information at variance with the previous statement I made in the House in this regard. I am not sure if the hon. member is quoting a newspaper story about the commission of inquiry.

Be that as it may, the result of the investigation conducted by the deputy commissioner of the RCMP was negative. That matter is before the Laycraft inquiry for determination. I understand that the Laycraft inquiry has suspended its proceedings for the summer, but I shall be more than willing to look into the allegations the hon. member brought to my attention, allegations raised in the House yesterday, as I see from reading Hansard.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the Solicitor General receive from the commissioner of the RCMP a report saying the results of the investigation were negative, or did he actually see and read the report of the deputy commissioner? If he did, can he tell the House if the deputy commissioner interviewed Assistant Commissioner George Paquette in charge of the Manitoba division with respect to the bugging of the rooms of the three Edmonton police?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I answered that question. I received the assurances of the commissioner of the RCMP that the report of the deputy commissioner was negative.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it the minister himself did not receive a copy of the report, or did not read it. I take it also that he does not know if Assistant Commissioner Paquette was interviewed. That, I suggest, is extremely serious in view of the statement the minister made on June 9, when he assured the House that no bugging had taken place. I therefore ask him, and my question bears on the credibility of the statement he made on June 9, if he will get in touch with Mr. Ross Paisley, the deputy attorney general of Alberta, to ascertain if the statements an assistant commissioner of the RCMP made on the witness stand before the Laycraft commission were accurate? If they were accurate, will he take the matter up with Assistant Commissioner Paquette, to see if the statements of the deputy attorney general were accurate and report the results of his investigation in the next few days?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question intimates that I am not entitled to accept the word of the commissioner of the RCMP. If the commissioner of the RCMP tells me that, after undertaking some investigations he delegated the deputy commissioner of the force to look into the matter and the deputy commissioner's report concerning bugging is negative, it is appropriate for me to accept the commissioner's word in that regard.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But you told us that previously.

Mr. Fox: If I may deal with the allegations the commission is considering, I am told that it has heard only hearsay evidence with respect to the bugging of the rooms. The Alberta attorney general commissioned the inquiry, to determine precisely if such bugging had taken place. Of course, we shall examine those conclusions carefully. As to the rest of the hon. gentleman's question, I do not object asking the commissioner to verify facts which the hon. member believes were brought to the attention of the Laycraft commission.

AIRPORTS

DATE FACILITIES IN CHIBOUGAMAU WILL BE COMPLETED

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the people of Chibougamau have undertaken through the Canada Works Program, to clear the piece of land where the future Chibougamau regional airport should be located, can the minister tell the House whether his department has made or will soon make a decision with a view to providing the people of this area with the regional airport they have long since been asking and working for?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a report has not been presented to me but I will be glad to look into the status of the planning concerning that region and report further to the hon. member.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT AUDIT BY SIBBALD GROUP

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Since the audit of Farm Credit Corporation by Sibbald group indicates gross mismanagement in the higher echelons of the corporation, would the minister give the Standing Committee on Agriculture an opportunity to review the report and hear witnesses so that we may determine the details relating to the audit of that corporation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the hon. member is aware, the Farm Credit Corporation asked for this inquiry itself. They have followed the suggestions in the report more rapidly than in most cases. It is an internal study made at the request of the Farm Credit Corporation. They should not be condemned but congratulated for checking out their own organization to find out if they can improve on their operations.

Mr. Malone: They did call for the audit themselves. However, the fact is the audit implicates some of the very people who called for the audit. This raises the question that it ought to then be brought before the committee rather than the Farm Credit Corporation. Again I ask the minister whether he will consider bringing it before the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that we can examine the report and see what has happened in that organization.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to give the impression that the Farm Credit Corporation does not appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture because it does every year. I am not beyond considering that this go before the Agriculture Committee because it is no longer an internal document. If other people have it, it is now public. It is a working document for which they asked. They asked for it themselves to make sure they understood what the Farm Credit Corporation was doing and what it should be doing. It should not be condemned, but congratulated for trying to rectify any mismanagement within that corporation.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATION FUNDS APPROVED FOR YORK PLACE HOUSING PROJECT IN HAMILTON MISUSED—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I will direct my question to the Minister of Justice. It will be of some interest to him both in his capacity as chief law officer of the country as well as referring to incidents during his term as Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It has to do with questions on the order paper in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East, answered on July 15. One question asked, paragraph 16, of question No. 812 was this: "Is CMHC satisfied that all funds approved—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, it is important that the Minister of Justice understand. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs, in charge of CMHC, admitted in answer to a question in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East that CMHC was not satisfied that all funds approved in advance for York Place were indeed used for York Place. Did the Minister of Justice consult with his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, as to where the money went, who got it, was it diverted and what has the minister done in terms of follow up to lay charges in this regard?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would have to review, which I have not had a chance to do, the question that the hon. member wanted to put.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, in this House on October 27 of last year, the hon. member for St. John's East asked the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to conduct an inquiry in this regard. To this point all we have is a coverup. I want to know whether the Minister of Justice will now, in order to clear up questions regarding top officials of CMHC and indeed other ministers of the Crown, order a full public inquiry?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer in the name of the minister, there is no obligation on CMHC, or any lender for that matter, to ensure that mortgage funds are expended or used exclusively for any particular project. It would be virtually impossible to require such a thing. The mechanism required would be unworkable. It would be impossible for the mortgagers to carry out their work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I would like to make it very clear that neither CMHC or any other lender is obliged to follow construction to ensure that funds are expended for the purpose for which they are given.

● (1430)

Mr. Whiteway: A final supplementary, to the Prime Minister. Without debating or questioning particular aspects, because the Prime Minister has the responsibility for his ministers and for seeing that public funds are directed in the right way, would the right hon. gentleman undertake—

An hon. Member: Why don't you lay charges?

Mr. Whiteway: You condemned yourselves in the answer to question No. 16! Would the Prime Minister order, now, a full, public inquiry?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the other part of the question was directed to me. I am not quite sure, because I did not hear one or two words, to which project the hon. member was referring. But the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and I have been consulting with regard to certain aspects of the National Housing Act. With reference to the latter part of the hon. member's question, if there is any evidence of obtaining funds by fraud, that is a matter clearly covered by the Criminal Code which will be properly investigated by the appropriate police authorities.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

ALLEGATION MINISTER MISLED HOUSE IN ANSWERING ORDER PAPER QUESTION NO. 812

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The parliamentary secretary said the department has no obligation with respect to the direction funds are going to take. I assume he has heard of progress reports which are made regularly to CMHC with respect to the advancing of funds. But my question relates to another obligation of government, that is, the obligation to answer questions in this House truthfully. On July 15, the minister misled the House. The fact is that on June 3, 1977, an officer of CMHC, named Shaw, and one Domenec Morgenti, who is not an officer of CMHC, were convicted in Hamilton of an offence.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know whether the hon. member wants to put a question or raise a point of order on the subject.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In the absence of the minister, Mr. Speaker, I think I have to put the proper preamble.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): My question is to the government House leader. On July 15 we were told that there had been no conviction; in answer to a question, an unequivocal "No" was given on behalf of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I would ask the government House leader, who is primarily responsible for the answering of questions in the House, whether he has investigated this matter, since on the face of it the Minister of State for Urban Affairs appears to have misled the House, perhaps inadvertently, perhaps not. If he has not investigated this matter, would he do so and would he ask the Minister of State for Urban Afffairs to make a statement in this chamber to clear up the questions which obviously arise as a result of his answer last Friday.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): In answer to the first question, I would like to say—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answers provided are the responsibility of each particular minister and I believe the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton will have to follow up the matter with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think it is the responsibility of the House leader as well to ensure that answers are correct. The answer we were given brings into question every answer the minister made on Friday, answers which for the most part were incomplete at any rate.

Now, on October 27, 1976, the former minister of state for urban affairs told the House that he would check into allegations that the Minister of Labour had played a role in securing a $1.5 million loan increase to Morgenti. That is on the record for October of 1976. In the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I ask the government House leader whether he has followed up that inquiry. If the answer is no, why not, and if the answer is yes, what were the results and would he be prepared to table that report in the House? I am not asking the parliamentary secretary. I am asking the government House leader for this information.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that there have been no charges against any officer of CMHC at any time. There was a case made against a compliance inspector in Hamilton. He was accused and found guilty. He was not an officer of CMHC. Let's not have any more of these attempts to tar reputations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): The corporation follows normal procedures with regard to the payment of mortgages. The legal agent of the corporation has to go through the procedure of searching title; he has to make sure that there are no liens against the real estate—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We know all that.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): —and there is nothing involved in this case which warrants any inquiry. I think the hon. member knows that. The facts are public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In October of 1976, the then minister of state for urban affairs, now Minister of National Defence, indicated he was making inquiries following questions put to him by the hon. member for St. John's East. This implies there will be an answer from the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in relation to that inquiry, supplemental to the questionable answers on the order paper of July 15, 1977. I do not expect the parliamentary secretary to be able to look into the mind of his minister. Very few people can do that. I am asking the government House leader whether or not that inquiry did proceed, whether there was a report made with respect to the matter and, if so, whether it will be tabled.

Mr. MacEachen: Once again, I must repeat that in this case the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton should direct his questions to the appropriate minister. Otherwise, we would be embarking on an entirely new course involving the leader of the government in every question raised by every member, an innovation which I would vigorously oppose.

TRADE

SUGGESTED LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH INTERNATIONAL BOYCOTTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The United States and France, which to no lesser extent than Canada wish to expand trade with the Middle East, have both adopted legislation recently to protect their companies, and individual residents, from being forced to comply with international boycotts like the Arab boycott. Will the government therefore, now change its earlier decision not to introduce such legislation, and present legislation along these lines to parliament thereby implementing the sentiments of its policy statement of October, 1976 more fully than through the administrative measures taken to date—the kind of measures which the United States, at least, has already found not to be an adequate substitute for general legislation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, legislation is not contemplated at this time. Naturally, we shall want to review the effects of the policy statement and assess those effects before reporting in due course.

TRANSPORT

UPGRADING OF PRAIRIE RAIL NETWORK—REASON FOR FAILURE TO PROVIDE AMOUNT OF MONEY PROMISED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The Hall Commission recommended an amount in excess of $445 million for the rehabilitation and upgrading of the prairie rail network, and on May 27 the minister said in Regina that in the period immediately ahead there would be a firm commitment of $200 million to start the railways on this program of rehabilitation and upgrading. Yesterday, however, the minister announced in Calgary that the sum of $100 million would be provided. I should like to ask him what happened to the other $100 million he gave a firm commitment to provide in Regina in May. Can the hon. gentleman assure the House that he will not accept any excuse from the railroads that they can only spend $100 million during the period envisaged, because I can assure him that there are private companies which are able and willing to carry out some of this work?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I welcome the hon. member back to the House, but I must say I regret his selective quoting, in the course of which he left out the important word "seeking". The initial commitment of $100 million is intended to accommodate the construction and rehabilitation work which can be accomplished in the construction years 1977 and 1978. It is, however, an extremely constructive step and a maximum move forward in further commitment following the recommendations of the Hall commission. I think hon. members, particularly those from the west, should appreciate the willingness of the government to commit $100 million for this purpose at this time of serious fiscal restraint.

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the $100 million but we would welcome more the commitment from the minister to implement the recommendation of the Hall report, which will amount to about five times that which he is talking about at the moment. The minister also said in Calgary, to quote from the press, that "the west should consider if it would not be better served by having the Crow benefit paid in a more neutral way". What does the minister mean by that statement, since the west has already considered how it wants the benefits of the Crow rate applied? The recommendations of the Hall commission have been accepted and agreed to by the wheat pools and the prairie governments. Would the minister explain what he means by "a neutral way", and will he say whether the government accepts the recommendation of Mr. Justice Hall about the retention of the Crow rate and the payment direct to the railroads of any losses on grain hauling?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, our approach to rehabilitation evidences a willingness to move along those lines. I will send the hon. member several previous speeches of mine which analyse the alternative ways that the Crow rate will be paid. As the hon. member may know, from the western point of view I do not consider this matter closed. I have said, and I said again in that Calgary speech, that I considered it my obligation as a minister representing the west to attempt to persuade the government about the amount of money required to ensure the Crow rate for the west and the benefit of that rate, and that I will continue to do and I make that known at all times. But I will continue discussing, as a westerner, the possibility that developments in the west may be better encouraged by other arrangements than those which are contemplated at the present time. However, that is a subject regarding which I keep saying that I will not propose any move or take any action unless there is general agreement and a move in that regard in the west. I hope the hon. member will not reject continued discussion of issues as important as this and somehow treat the question as totally closed for all time.

FREIGHT RATES—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN RATE ON RAPESEED PRODUCTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious to all but the minister that the west has accepted the Hall commission recommendation on the Crow rates. That is the position of my party and certainly it is what the wheat pools and the prairie governments feel. The Hall commission recommended that freight rates on rapeseed and its derivatives be set at levels which do not discriminate against the natural location advantage of rapeseed crushers in the west. By recommending retention of the Crowsnest rates the commission has, by implication, recommended that the inequity discriminating against western rapeseed crushers be resolved by lowering the freight rate on rapeseed products. When will the minister act on this recommendation and when will the necessary changes be made to have rapeseed products qualify for lower freight rates?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hall commission did recommend a good number of things in regard to freight rates and products. It also said that the question whether the statutory Crow rates should be set at a particular level or at some other level is something that ought to be decided by the government; and obviously that did not answer a question but opened a question.

In relation to grain products moving out of the west there is a very serious issue, which again I raised in my speech in Calgary, namely that the only alternative to inequity in the west against processing which is produced by the low grain rate is the putting of all kinds of other products on a similar low rate. That was not quantified by the commission, but probably if you include western movement of meat and other products, presumably by trucks as well as by rail, this amounts to many hundreds of millions of dollars. In addition, I am not sure whether the hon. member is suggesting that there would be a way to put that low meat rate in place in the west without putting a similar low meat rate in place in other parts of the country. This would also add several hundreds of millions of dollars. That in addition to the problem of the Crow rate itself, plus rehabilitation, would probably add up to somewhere between $600 million to $800 million or $1 billion a year and growing. While the hon. member may think that that kind of burden on the taxpayer instead of a sensible economic arrangement regarding freight is a good thing, I believe the people of this country will resist that kind of thinking, whether it comes from a socialist in the NDP or from the neo-political socialist in the Conservative party.

HEALTH

EFFECT OF POSTAL STRIKE ON TESTING OF URINE SAMPLES AT SHERBROOKE HOSPITAL—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware that the testing of the urine of babies born in the province of Quebec is carried out at the University Hospital in Sherbrooke, that the post office strike in Sherbrooke is holding up delivery of the urine samples, creating a very serious health hazard affecting between 2,000 and 3,000 newborn babies each week, and will the minister use his influence to put an end to this disastrous situation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have raised this matter with my colleague the Postmaster General and he is aware of the difficulty. Quebec regional post office officials are studying the extent of the problem, and I might advise the hon. member that a temporary court injunction has been granted by the court in this respect. We hope that the situation will be resolved very soon, if it has not been resolved already.

ALLEGED ILLEGAL ACTIONS OF REED PAPER AND CANADIAN FOREST PRODUCTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs my question is for the Minister of Justice. I wonder whether the minister could tell the House whether an opinion has been asked of the law officers of the Crown, either by him or by any member of the government, respecting the rather scurrilous business practice of the Reed Paper Company and Canadian Forest Products Limited, both Canadian companies, which is designed obviously to keep hidden certain facts from Canadian shareholders as well perhaps as to evade foreign business taxes or income taxes. Would the minister find out whether, in the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, there has been abridgement either of the Canada Business Corporations Act or the Canadian Criminal Code, or any other related statute?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, not to me personally, but whether the matter has been taken up with either my colleague or his department or with officers of mine, at the present time I do not know. I have read the reports from which I assume the question arises. Personally, I am not aware whether the companies involved are formed under the Canada Business Corporations Act or not, but I will take note of the hon. member's question and make inquiries.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IN MODERNIZATION OF SYSCO PLANT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government leader. I suppose, knowing him formerly as a university professor, I might ask him to explain the difference between a neo-political socialist and a neo-political Liberal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I have a serious question for him, Mr. Speaker. Has the government received, either directly from Sysco or from the government of Nova Scotia, a specific request for financial assistance and co-operation in the modernization of the Sysco plants? I direct the question to the government House leader, knowing his great interest in this subject as well.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, no matter how much I should like to respond to the question of the hon. member for Halifax on this subject I feel it would also be creating a precedent that I do not want to encourage.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The reference obviously is to the administrative responsibility of the individual member. There is nothing wrong with the question; it seems to me to be directed to the wrong minister.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I assumed that the government House leader, particularly on this subject, would know what requests had been made to the government. Perhaps I could direct my question to the Prime Minister. Surely he knows, and surely it comes within the terms of his responsibilities.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question on behalf of the minister.

CONFEDERATION

PROPOSED COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL UNITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with the establishment of a parliamentary committee on national unity, and it is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister because I am sure he has had time to reflect on the constructive speeches made on both sides of this House regarding this matter some days ago and the questions put last week. In so far as the vast number of members of parliament on the government side are from my province and a vast number from western Canada sit on the opposition side, and in order to assure that the debate on national unity does not develop into a political fiasco, will the right hon. Prime Minister now assure the House that when we reconvene this session next fall he will immediately establish an all-party parliamentary committee to give elected members of parliament an opportunity to make constructive contributions to this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if and when we have the Speech from the Throne in the fall, it will deal with the question of national unity. The House will be given an opportunity to examine policy proposals and examine ways in which they can be dealt with by this House.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, if a crunch comes in this matter, the right hon. Prime Minister will need goodwill from all sides of this House. In so far as members on the task force are defeated members of parliament, why cannot the right hon. Prime Minister announce now, without any further consideration, that elected members of parliament will be let in on this matter—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Provencher.

POSSIBILITY OF DECLARING AFFECTED AREA OF MANITOBA A DISASTER AREA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister as well. In view of the unfortunate loss of life and devastation of property caused by a tornado which struck southeastern Manitoba yesterday, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government of Manitoba has contacted the federal government with a view of declaring the area a disaster area, thus making it eligible for payments under the federal-provincial plan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no notice of any such request. It would normally come to the Minister of Finance or from the premier to myself. I have had none, and I do not think the Minister of Finance has had any either.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL DELIVERY PERMIT FOR PRODUCERS WHOSE CROPS AFFECTED BY TORNADO

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the devastation that occurred yesterday in which many graneries were destroyed and grain is now lying exposed to the elements, I should like to ask the minister whether he can instruct the Canadian Wheat Board to grant a special permit to those farmers who want to deliver the grain in order that it might be saved from spoilage. I consider this question important in view of the fact that upon a similar request last week the Canadian Wheat Board turned it down. Elevator space is empty. I checked that out today.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will discuss the matter with the Canadian Wheat Board. Obviously it does attempt to respond to problems of this specific nature, but it has to bear in mind other considerations in terms of its shipping obligations. I will see if the two cannot be accommodated at this time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DISPUTE WITH ACTRA CONCERNING NON-CANADIAN PERFORMERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and relates to the cancellation by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of its planned production of the Stratford festival's performance of Richard III, which cancellation was caused by the threat of an ACTRA boycott. The union boycott was initiated because three non-Canadian performers were scheduled to appear along with 43 Canadian actors and actresses who have now lost their jobs in connection with this performance. Has the minister discussed this continuing situation with the CBC? This is not an isolated incident. Is he prepared to take any steps to correct it?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, from time to time I have discussed this matter with the CBC, as well as with ACTRA. The hon. member might not have noticed that last week the government indicated that in the revision of the immigration regulations concerning the entry of entertainers we, that is, my hon. colleague sitting beside me, Mr. Cullen, would develop regulations with the interested parties to ensure that ACTRA and other unions would have a full participation and consultation in the process leading to the decision as to whether entry visas should be permitted. It was my hope that this assurance to the unions would lead them to feel more secure in their position and that the kind of situation which developed at the end of last week would not occur. That hope on my part was disappointed.

HEALTH

PROPOSED COMMITTEE TO STUDY PROGRAMS FOR THE DISABLED

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and arises from the statement in the annual report of the Public Service Commission that the development of a comprehensive program for employing handicapped people in the public service has been hindered by a lack of knowledge about the handicapped. Now that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has tabled the new Social Service Act, will he be recommending the setting up of a subcommittee to gather together the information necessary for action programs for Canada's disabled and to provide background information for Canada's delegation to the Rehabilitation International Conference to be held in Winnipeg in June of 1980?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the social services bill has been introduced for first reading, but I am afraid it will not be passed before the adjournment of the present session. I intend to reintroduce that piece of legislation as soon as possible early in the new session. I would be pleased to examine the issue raised by the hon. member at that time.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, has the minister received the reports of the pilot projects which were operated in four regions during 1976? Will the government soon announce a comprehensive program for hiring handicapped persons, based on the experience gained from these pilot projects?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the reports. I will inquire whether they have been delivered to my department at the present time.

HYPERLIPEMIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSESS MEANS OF CONTROL

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, regarding a question which I asked on July 7, 1977 as reported at page 7414 of Hansard. As was stated at that time, the minister gave an address in Vancouver to a professional group of doctors and nurses which covered the field very well, except the field of scientific work. At that time the minister said the following:

> . . . there is no consensus within the medical profession on the usefulness or cost effectiveness of a nation-wide screening program for children.

It is an accepted fact that they are doing lipid profiles on people in labs all across Canada. They have even been done on children. If we are going to effectively treat this disease, we must get those cases early. Now they are doing testing from 20 years of age on. Why not return to the starting point, because once cardiovascular disease is established little can be done about its cure. It is progressive.

This should be carried on as a public health program. After all, he was talking to public health doctors and nurses. Why should this not be carried on as a public health program or a pre-school examination which is already paid for? They could have their blood tested at that time. One must keep in mind that some of those lipid diseases are hereditary. Some would be picked up there and others would be picked up as well, thus reducing the terrible mortality he referred to.

[Mr. Roberts.]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in the view of my department, children with a known strong family history of hyperlipemia should be investigated at different levels. The question arises as to the general screening for children. I have noted the suggestion made by the hon. member. I will investigate the matter further with provincial officials, and I will ask my officials to examine it with them as well, in order to determine the advisability of extending such a project. As I told him before, it would have to be started as a pilot project rather than as a national program. It is a matter which deserves investigation, indeed.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, since the minister believes in prevention, would he suggest this as part of a pre-school examination.

It does not have to be a pilot project, it has to be a pre-school examination because otherwise it would take too long. The minister said in his own speech that this is a ravaging disease, which is the case, and it should be drawn to the attention of the public. I suggest we start this program right now.

Mr. Lalonde: I appreciate the suggestion made by the hon. member and I will certainly ask my officials to discuss it with provincial officials who are responsible for the program.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which has to do with questions on the order paper standing in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East, which were answered on July 15, which answers are misleading and certainly incomplete. The answers to these questions affect the rights and privileges of all members of this Chamber.

To begin with, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, in answer this afternoon to questions, also misled the House, specifically in answer to question No. 22 on the order paper which asked whether or not any officials of CMHC—not officers of CMHC—were charged in relation to the York Place development. The parliamentary secretary said categorically that no officers of CMHC were charged. The man charged and convicted was not an officer of the corporation, but the question was not whether any officer had been charged; it was whether an official had been charged. He was an official, he was charged and convicted, and he was sentenced to three months in jail and a fine of $2,000. The question was answered by the parliamentary secretary this afternoon in such a way as to mislead the House, just as the answer of the minister on July 15 misled the House.

With regard to question No. 12, the minister clearly evaded answering the question. I, as well as other members of the House, am clearly aware of the difference between direct loans and guaranteed loans under CMHC. The question was whether or not CMHC at all times was in a first mortgage position. The minister answered in a way that made it impossible for us to ascertain whether or not CMHC was, in fact, always in a first mortgage position. Philosophically, I recognize the absolute right of the government to govern, but to be able to fulfil my responsibilities as a member of parliament and to scrutinize the government, to criticize the government, indeed to act as a watchdog, I must be sure that answers to questions which are put on the order paper must at least not be misleading. I understand that I cannot question the quality of the answers—but I must be sure that they are not misleading.

Specifically speaking, question No. 16 on the order paper deliberately misleads the House. The question was whether CMHC is satisfied that all funds approved and advanced to York Place were actually used in York Place. The answer was no; the minister was not satisfied that all funds approved and advanced to York Place were actually used in York Place. Surely it is the responsibility of the minister to set up the kind of public inquiry to ask the kind of questions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member has raised three different kinds of problems. The first was that the question which he put on the order paper was answered incorrectly. He asked whether officials of CMHC had been charged and convicted, and the answer was "no". The hon. member charges that the answer was misleading to the House. Whether that was deliberate or inadvertent is one category of argument.

The second problem had to do with the evasive answer, which, of course, is not a question of privilege. Now the hon. member seems to be dealing with a third category of argument which refers to a rather direct answer and suggests that there should be another ministerial answer. That may be a logical follow-up for the hon. member, but it certainly does not constitute a question of privilege. In respect of the first argument as to whether or not the House has been misled, I would be prepared to hear the argument concluded, but the other two matters certainly do not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, let me make a point specifically on whether or not the House has been misled by both the parliamentary secretary and the minister in regard to question No. 22 on the order paper asking whether any charges had been laid against any official of CMHC with regard to improper acts relating to the construction of York Place and, if so, what are the details. The answer to that question was "No". On June 3 there was the conviction, in Hamilton, of Clifford Shaw, an inspector with CMHC who can clearly be described as an official of CMHC, although not an officer. Judge Scime, in his judgment, said that this crime "involves the integrity of our public service and is of national interest". Shaw was convicted and sentenced to three months in jail and a $2,000 fine. It is clear that he was an official of CMHC; he was charged as an official of CMHC and convicted and sentenced as an official of CMHC. But that clearly was not the impression the Minister of State for Urban Affairs or his parliamentary secretary gave either, in answers to questions on the order paper or in the parliamentary secretary's verbal in the House this afternoon.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to comment on this matter. I interpret the word "officer" as meaning a member of the executive of CMHC, or an official. In my answer the word "official" was synonymous with the word "officer". Perhaps the hon. member is referring to a member of the staff of CMHC. No charges have been laid against any officers of CMHC: we know that. If he describes an employee of CMHC as being an official of CMHC, then I must say that yes, Mr. Clifford Shaw was an employee of CMHC. He was a former compliance inspector, officer, official or employee—it does not matter to me. The fact remains that he was convicted in court for actions to which he admitted and which he was found guilty of committing, and since that time he has left the corporation. So far as I am concerned, whether you call him an officer, an official or an employee, it is the same—a gentleman working for the corporation who has resigned and is no longer an officer or an official of the corporation.

On the other point, the matter of the first mortgage position, I am not a lawyer, but I understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated that questions which may be unclear or vague in respect of the first mortgage position, or the other question which relates as to whether or not there should be a follow up by the minister in respect of an answer which he gave, do not concern me at this time as questions of privilege. The only one which concerns me is the allegation that the House has been misled, and that is the only area on which I am prepared to hear a discussion.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): It was not my intention to mislead the House. I was trying to make it clear that an "official" and an "officer" are synonymous terms to me. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it was to me that this question was directed. Just so there is no doubt on the narrow point Your Honour has defined and which is being discussed, question No. 22 put by the hon. member for St. John's East, as recorded in the order paper, was as follows:

● (1510)

Have there been any charges laid against any officials of CMHC with regard to improper acts relating to the construction of York Place and if so, what are the details?

The answer which was supplied on July 15, 1977, was one word, "No". It is very clear—and if it needed any underscoring or reinforcement, it has been underscored and reinforced by the answer just given and the statement just made by the parliamentary secretary—that the minister misled the House on July 15, 1977. I know we cannot discuss the effect that might have on the other answers he gave, but a question must remain in hon. members' minds, and surely this clear, unequivocal misleading of the House requires an explanation.

I think it is important that the House and Your Honour know that yesterday, in anticipation of this line of questioning, I telephoned the minister's office and asked whether the minister was going to be in the House of Commons. The answer given to me by one of his staff was "Yes". I said, "Thank you very much. Would you please tell the minister that I intend to raise questions about the York Place matter in Hamilton". The minister did not turn up yesterday.

Miss MacDonald: Nor today.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I know he is in town. An official of the official opposition telephoned the minister again today to find out whether he would be in the House of Commons today to answer questions with respect to this matter. The answer we were given was, yes, he was to be in the House today.

Mr. Poulin: This is not on the point raised.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think it is important that the minister be in the House for questions put by members of the opposition. He does not have to be, but it is important that he be here. It is certainly important that he not evade, and I think it is important that all hon. members of this House demand his presence here tomorrow to make a statement with respect to all the questions which arise out of those questions on the order paper. His books are on his desk. Obviously, he was expected to be here at some time. It is not unusual for a minister, if he is in town, to be in the House during the question period, and I can come to no other conclusion than that he is evading the House of Commons and questions about this whole matter.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have no exact and precise description for the arguments just raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. In any case, I have no motion before me for action with respect to the question of privilege. The argument as to whether the answers given to questions on the order paper are misleading was in part responded to by the parliamentary secretary with respect to the differentiation in his mind between an "official" and an "officer" of the company. There seems to be nothing more to be contributed in this discussion at this particular time. On the face of it, this matter does not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Let him talk.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I want to make one point clear. The gentleman was not charged with regard to the York Place development project.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has made his contribution to the argument. The matter is now closed.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are all familiar with the following situation which occurs from time to time. Because of the enthusiasm of hon. members on both sides of the House during question period, Hansard reporters frequently take down the comments of hon. members when ministers are still on their feet giving answers to questions put. This can create real problems for the record. I would like to ask for an amendment to Hansard, because that situation occurred yesterday while I was answering a question asked by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. I had not completed my answer when the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands flipped in, while I was still on my feet—

Miss MacDonald: I don't flip.

Mr. Gillespie: —and put a further question which was not a supplementary in any official sense of the word. That question was taken down by the reporter. I refer to page 7741 of Hansard for July 18, 1977. I believe the account would be accurate if my words, "That is the interpretation I placed on Mr. Campbell's comment", were added to my answer as set forth prior to the comments of the hon. member, because that is precisely what I said.

If Your Honour reads the transcript, Your Honour will recognize that the hon. lady did not have the floor, did not ask an official question and did not put her question through the Chair to me. I was on my feet. There was a good deal of noise. The noise masked the hon. member's question. It was taken down by the reporter. This can happen from time to time. All I am saying is that it would be an accurate description of my answer if it were completed without the interjection of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, come on.

Mr. Gillespie: I am not complaining as long as it appears after my full answer, because the question completely distorts the meaning of my answer.

Mr. Speaker: That is an editorial comment. The minister has had an opportunity to put his description of the events on the record. There would, of course, be no hope of altering the record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Sit down.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Because of the juxtaposition, I am going to be put in a position of having given an answer to a question which was never properly put to me and which I never heard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the minister has been given an adequate opportunity to rectify any false impression which may have been left. He was given rather wide latitude to put his explanation on the record, and it seems to me that that ought to be a very complete answer to any fears he might have that the record as described by the reporter somehow creates a mistaken impression. The reporters can only do the best they can.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: We do not permit hon. members to rise in their places the following day to say that the impression created by their words as recorded by the reporter is really not the impression they intended to create. We do not enjoy that right. The reporters must attempt to catch what they hear and report it in the way they see fit, and if an hon. member says that that somehow creates a mistaken impression, he is always given the courtesy, as the minister was, of being allowed to make an amplified explanation for the record. However, to attempt now to go back and rearrange the language as it was reported is simply out of the question, whether it be attempted by way of a point of order, a question of privilege, or anything else.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same matter. I am certainly not going to bat for the minister, but having read the minutes of this chamber, I agree that on many occasions remarks made by hon. members who are not recognized by the Chair are recorded. I think remarks should never be recorded in Hansard unless there is a recognition by the Chair.

Mr. Paproski: No.

Mr. Jones: Don't swear at me, Mr. P. C. party whip.

Mr. Paproski: I didn't swear at you. I would not dare do something like that to you.

Mr. Jones: I make these remarks in all sincerity. Hansard is supposed to be a record of the proceedings in this chamber, and unless hon. members are recognized by Mr. Speaker or by the chairman of a committee meeting, their remarks should not be recorded. I do not say that to take the minister off the hook, but I question what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moncton makes a suggestion. This is not the first time it has been made. It is a very serious situation and one which has given the administration some concern in the past on whether there are certain members in the proximity of the reporters who enjoy an advantage in relation to comments made off the record and heard by the reporter.

There is great difficulty in the point raised by the minister and contributed to by the hon. member for Moncton on comments heard by the reporter and not heard by those who have the floor and, in fact, never heard by the Chair. When they appear in the record the following day, therefore, they incline to give a distorted impression of the events that have taken place. Often, when no answer appears in the record to such comments, the impression is given that the person to whom the comment was directed has not taken any action in respect of it, when in fact the comment was not heard except by the reporter. Indeed, some hon. members who have positions close to the reporter are able to take advantage of that.

I am not so sure that the answer suggested by the hon. member for Moncton is any better than the situation which prevails at the present time. It does raise a very serious difficulty, however, in respect of those who may on occasion take advantage of the fact that the comment made audibly to the reporter, but not audibly to the person who has the floor or to the Chair, is recorded in Hansard and only comes to the attention of those persons the following day. If there is a suggestion to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization that we ought to revise our procedures and have reporters record only the remarks of the member who has the floor, that is something that I hope the committee would examine very carefully one day.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I hope they turn it down. Make sure you get that on the record.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear, for Hansard!

Mr. Alexander: Hear, hear, for the reporters!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, July 14, I asked about question No. 632 which was placed on the order paper in the last session of parliament, over a year ago, and is as yet unanswered. The parliamentary secretary indicated the reason for such tardiness was that the question had not been brought to his attention. It has now, but it remains unanswered.

Question No. 1,070 was placed on the order paper on November 17, 1976. I am particularly concerned about this because it is a straightforward question and should have been answered long before now. It may be of particular interest to the parliamentary secretary because it asks for the criteria used by the Prime Minister in the selection of parliamentary secretaries. I, for one, am getting rather curious about the answer to that question.

Mr. Basford: The merit principle; that is the answer.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, there is another question I should like to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary. Question No. 1,180 was placed on the order paper on November 23. It asked, how many times since he became a minister, has—

Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned about interjections occurring in Hansard, perhaps he could give me the floor.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In the circumstances, I think if I were to call anybody to order it would be a number of members much closer to the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: On November 23 I placed question No. 1,180 on the order paper, which asked how many times since he became a minister, the Minister of Agriculture has personally made use of government aircraft. We know that he has become the Waldo Pepper of the cabinet. Members on this side would like to have that information, and I cannot understand why the parliamentary secretary has been so tardy. There are a number of other questions which are of similar concern, but I will leave them for today.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take note of questions Nos. 1,070 and 1,180. I did not catch the number of the first question, but I will check the number in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, since this House is apparently going to adjourn shortly, or dissolve shortly, or whatever the Prime Minister may decide, I think I am in order to raise a question that I have raised many times in the past about questions that have not been answered. I have put 27 questions on the order paper since this session opened, although most of them were there in the last session of parliament and some go back for 1½ years. In the first ten days of the present session, 79 questions placed on the order paper by me and other members of the opposition were not answered.

I should like to refer to specific questions concerning the international service of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, on the order paper since the last session, which bring out my documented evidence of interference in the affairs of the international service by the Department of External Affairs, and so on. Every time I bring this up, the parliamentary secretary tells me how many questions have been answered, but there is never a direct answer on these specific questions.

In reference to questions Nos. 29 and 30, I do not know why they are not answered. At least, I do know why. I would say it is because of political considerations and nothing else. One asks the amount of travelling done by cabinet ministers on Department of Transport aircraft at government expense; where they went, who went with them, the cost, etc., and the other asks the amount of travelling done by cabinet ministers on Department of National Defence aircraft. Those questions have not been answered since the first day of the session. I do not think it should take months and months to arrive at the answers.

I think I am within my rights to serve notice that when we come back in August—as I believe we have been told, but it is a good question as to whether we will—as a private member I will exercise my right to move the adjournment of the House if all the questions regarding the international service of the CBC, and the questions regarding cabinet ministers gallivanting at the taxpayers' expense are not answered. I refer to the ministers who went down to the riding of Matane. I have questions on the order paper about what they did there, why they did it, and how much it cost. We get nothing from the President of the Privy Council or his parliamentary secretary. I do not think this practice should be allowed to continue. I do not think we should be presented with silly generalities or hear hon. members opposite boast about how many questions they have answered.

I conclude by asking three questions. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary can answer. How long will this sham continue? How long will the government get away with stifling democracy by not answering questions in this House; and how long will the government get away with thumbing its nose at members of parliament?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, the last three questions asked by the hon. member for Leeds who was doing quite well up to that point, do not warrant a response because of the thinly-veiled innuendoes contained therein.

An hon. Member: They are not thin.

Mr. Goodale: They are unworthy and unwarranted innuendoes. The hon. member perhaps could guess what my response would be if he had listened to my previous reply to the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo. I asked him to clarify, specifically, the nature of the first questions to which he referred. I asked if the hon. member was referring to questions concerning CBC international, and he said he was not.

The hon. member for Leeds then rose and referred to that series of questions. Mr. Speaker, I expect very shortly to present answers relating to CBC international. I expect the answers to be at hand within a day or two. If I may respond to the hon. member's general comments about answers to questions on the order paper, may I repeat the assurances I have given on other occasions which relate directly to his comments about the session of this House proposed possibly for August. May I indicate that I intend to provide answers to all questions standing on the order paper before the present session ends.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION REORGANIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION, ETC.

The House resumed, from Friday, July 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cullen that Bill C-27, to establish the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Peters.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on this legislation some days ago, I said that the bill, which proposes to deal with serious unemployment by making it more difficult for the unemployed to draw unemployment insurance benefits, seeks to apply the wrong solution to the wrong people. By dividing the country into 53 or 54 regions, in each of which claimants may qualify for benefits on the basis of different period of employment, the bill will create an administrative jungle.

I shall try to show this afternoon how the unemployment insurance bureaucracy treated—"mistreated" is a better description—a poor woman unfortunate enough to be unemployed. You can imagine how much greater the confusion will be with the administrative nightmare of 53 or 54 different areas. My involvement in the case was greater than usual. I discussed the case with the claimant and local officers in Winnipeg. Not being satisfied with the response, I discussed it with the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission here in Ottawa. Although the operation was successful, the patient, my constituent, died. Of course, I am speaking figuratively about her dealing with the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I shall put on record certain facts to enable members of parliament and the public to know what happened. I want the officers of the commission to explain to the minister what they have not explained to me, namely, what actually happened, and to justify it.

My constituent, Mrs. Ruth Hirsch, is a social worker with a number of years experience in her field. Her most recent employment was with the family service organization of Winnipeg. She became unemployed when her agency was reorganized and her services were no longer required. She received unemployment insurance benefits for some weeks, then was called in for an interview with the benefit control officer who made a report of that so-called interview. I have in my possession a copy of what purports to be a complete file on the matter, a copy which I obtained from the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I shall return later to the question as to whether it is the entire file and if it depicts the entire story. The benefit control officer, B. Kolisnyk, wrote a report on February 10, 1977, which said in part:

> Claimant has a Bachelor in social work and a number of years experience. Claimant will work days only as she must be home evenings and for no less that $10,000/year. Claimant will work anywhere in Winnipeg. Claimant has not been sick or out of Winnipeg since filing her claim.

On February 15, Mr. W. Chimchak, an insurance officer wrote an official letter to Mrs. Ruth Hirsch as follows:

> Dear Madam:
> We find that you are not entitled to benefits from 14 Feb., '77, as you failed to prove that you are available for work and unable to obtain suitable employment in that, after being unemployed for a reasonable period, you are imposing restrictive conditions on your acceptance of suitable work in respect of the type of work (social worker or counsellor) you will accept.

Mrs. Hirsch replied immediately and on February 17 sent a letter to Mr. Chimchak, which said in part:

> Re your letter of February 15/77, and further to our telephone conversation of today, I wish to appeal the decision that I am not entitled to benefits from Feb. 14/77.
> As far as the "imposing restrictive conditions",
> (1) accepting work only as a social worker or counsellor. This, in fact, is not accurate. I am prepared to accept work that involves helping people (which may or may not be defined as a social worker or counsellor)—such as personnel officer, mental health worker, UIC interviewer, rehabilitation officer, mental retardation worker, etc., etc.
> (2) "re days only". I have 2 retarded school age children living at home, and therefore I must be home with at night. I am prepared to submit a report from their and/or my doctor(s) to that effect.
> (3) "re not less that $10,000 per annum". This was the salary of my last position. I am prepared to work for less.

She appealed the case, and the appeal board in its decision dated March 15, 1977, said in part:

She is still unemployed and still searching for work, but everything points to the fact that she is still restricting her search for work in the field of employment that deals with people. In other words, a form of social work for which she is trained and has experience, but in no way can this board find justification in altering the decision of the insurance officer, and the appeal is disallowed.

Mrs. Hirsch wanted to appeal to the office of the umpire. She got in touch with me and I suggested to her that she should make it clear the benefit control officer never informed her what kind of work she should look for. What would the commission consider to be suitable work? She stated in her appeal, and I quote:

At no time during my unemployment was I informed or encouraged to seek employment outside of my specialized field. As a matter of fact, I was asked to apply for a position with Canada Manpower. This I immediately did.

She went on to list some of the things she did. Her request for right to appeal was turned down in a letter dated April 20, which reads in part:

Your application for leave to appeal to the umpire from the decision of the board of referees given in Winnipeg, Manitoba, on 15 March, 1977, was forwarded to the chairman of the board of referees for his consideration.

We wish to inform you that the chairman has not approved your application for leave to appeal to the umpire—

I was pretty upset about this. I felt she had been mistreated. I took the matter up with the local office and with Mr. Tuck, the chairman of the commission. Mr. Tuck wrote to me saying that Mrs. Hirsch was being given permission to have another hearing before the same appeal board. The appeal was held. I will come to that in a few minutes. She was turned down.

When I again raised my voice, I got what are purported to be copies of the complete file. Nowhere in the file is there any explanation as to why, having been refused permission to go to the umpire, she was permitted another appeal. There is no mention, in the supposedly complete record, that her member of parliament intervened on her behalf. I wonder why. I am not ashamed of the fact that I intervened. Maybe I was wrong, but I am happy to intervene when I think a person has a good case. If I do not think a person has a good case, I say that I cannot intervene or that I cannot do anything more. In any event, there is nothing in the record. I say the record is defective; it is incomplete.

In the course of my discussion with Mr. Tuck, I was assured again and again that benefit control officers clearly understand that they should be telling those whose claims are turned down or are being cut off what are their rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am very concerned about the interest of the hon. member. However, I also wonder how his remarks refer to the bill before us. The hon. member seems to be talking about the administration of the act in relation to those in charge of the administration. The question before the House at this time is third reading of Bill C-27 and the amendment to the motion not to read the bill at this time but to postpone it for six months. Of course, I do not suggest that the hon. member must speak only to postpone third reading of the bill. However, he should at least speak to the bill. The hon. member should make some effort to relate his remarks to the bill before us.

Mr. Orlikow: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that is precisely what I am doing. In this bill the minister is proposing to divide the qualifying period of those entitled to receive unemployment insurance benefits: he proposes to divide the country into 54 districts, each of which will have a different qualifying period. One of the main reasons I intend to vote against this bill is that I believe the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Commission is incompetent, or the Unemployment Insurance Act and the regulations are deliberately being used by the commission, with or without the knowledge of the government, to reduce the number of people who qualify. That is precisely the point I am making.

I intend to prove my case by quoting from the guidelines under which Unemployment Insurance Commission employees are supposed to work. I have here a document entitled "Insurance policy guildelines, Conduct of the active job search program, Commission minute 73-144, August 1973". I received this from Mr. Tuck, chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I want to put various parts of this on record in order to show what UIC officials should be doing, rather than the way they dealt with my constituent. I do not raise this matter because I think my constituent's case is an isolated one. In a letter I received last week, Mr. Tuck virtually admitted that this has been the policy of the government, and they are now changing it. I am not vain enough to believe they are changing it only because I raised the matter with them. I presume there have been many complaints.

I will give the page numbers of the document so the minister and his officials can check them. I quote, first, from page 15-32, a draft letter, or to be used verbally when giving information to a claimant before being cut off by the benefit control officer:

You have been receiving unemployment insurance benefits now for a period of———weeks. In order for you to maintain your eligibility for benefits, you must now broaden your search to seek other suitable employment in any occupation . . . It is necessary, therefore, that you contact as many potential employers as possible to see if you are able to fill any vacancies in suitable employment that exist.

What is suitable? There is nothing in Mr. Tuck's letter to indicate that Mrs. Hirsch's claim is not valid. There is nothing in this document to indicate what is suitable employment. The benefit control officer did not tell Mrs. Hirsch what is suitable employment. I quote from page 16-32:

To find where jobs may be available, you should either check with your Canada Manpower centre and Canada job bank listings, search through newspaper advertisements, job posters, yellow pages of the telephone book or enquire from your friends, neighbours or the people with whom you used to work. You should contact possible employers by telephoning, writing, or visiting them to see if employment is available.

Mrs. Hirsch did all that. I now go to page 19-32, criteria for issue of job search statement. I quote:

No claimant will be required to search for work unless it is known that there are opportunities of employment in the area of his residence and/or in the area where he usually earns his living. The area of residence is intended to include the area within daily commuting distance.

I quote that section because the benefit control officer in her statement says that Mrs. Hirsch, restricted herself to looking for work in Winnipeg. Winnipeg is a big city. Do the UIC people believe that Mrs. Hirsch, or someone else, should travel 50 miles every day in order to fill a job? If so, they did not say that. I now quote from page 21:

Full advantage will be taken of this interview to ensure that the claimant is aware of his obligation to actively search for work and that he understands what in his circumstances would be considered a reasonable and customary effort.

There is no question in the documentation that Mrs. Hirsch was looking for work. She listed a series of places in which she had looked, including employment as a social worker and other places. If that was not broad enough, it was up to the UIC officer to tell her what was required. That is the position I have taken from the beginning.

On page 22, the document says a claimant is required to prove that he is capable of working and is available for work, that he is unable to find suitable employment and that he has made reasonable and customary efforts to find suitable employment. The question I want to ask is this: Who decides what is suitable employment? If it is the Unemployment Insurance Commission, then it is surely elementary justice to the claimant that the commission should be required to indicate the kind of work they expect a claimant, in this case Mrs. Hirsch, to take. If the commission felt she ought not to receive benefit because the work she wanted as a social worker, in the field of treating those mentally retarded, or as a personnel officer, was too restricted, it was surely up to those concerned to say to her, "You are restricting yourself too much. Instead of being prepared to work at those jobs for $10,000 a year"—which amounts to about $5 an hour—"you should be prepared to work as a filing clerk or as a dishwasher to earn, not $5 an hour but the minimum wage". But Mrs. Hirsch was not given such advice.

The guidelines go on to say that if a reasonable job search is not done, a person would be disqualified retroactively, notified of this decision in writing, and "informed of the manner in which the denial of benefits can be removed, that is to say, the carrying out of a reasonable job search and the reporting the results to the commission." This was never done by the commission. Then on page 26 we read that if circumstances warrant——the claimant is to be contacted by the insurance agent and counselled either in person, by telephone or letter, on his or her responsibilities in maintaining eligibility for benefits. In addition, the agent should determine when a claimant's change in status occurred and make the necessary revision to the claim.

That was never done. Then it says:

A disentitlement should not be imposed . . . if investigation reveals that a claimant was ignorant of the requirement to conduct an active search for work, or misunderstood the procedure.

I submit it is obvious that Mrs. Hirsch did not understand the procedures because the procedures were never explained to her. I wish the minister or the chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission would explain to me how a claimant is supposed to understand and follow the procedures if the real meaning of those procedures is either inadvertently or deliberately kept from him. I say the result of this procedure is that the commission has been able to cut off thousands of people from benefit—a disgraceful situation. On pages 27 and 28 of this document they say:

The number of contacts made with employers and employment agencies or the manner in which these contacts are made cannot be enunciated in a general policy directive. Both quantity and quality of contacts must be determined by the number of potential job opportunities in the community within the claimant's occupation, the number of employers, the length of time a claimant has been employed and the manner in which unemployed persons with the claimant's occupation would customarily find re-employment. The assessment of a reasonable and customary search for work is therefore a matter of judgment on the part of the adjudicator.

Mr. Speaker, of course they cannot enunciate these things in a general policy directive, especially if they wish to use it as a device for cutting off people. I submit it would take a lawyer to understand all the ramifications of that paragraph. I suggest the wording of that clause is not the result of inadvertence—that the clause is there precisely to give the commission, on the advice of the government, the opportunity to cut off people. That, again, is a disgraceful situation.

Anyway, despite the fact that there is nothing in the record to show that I intervened on Mrs. Hirsch's behalf, her case was reheard. But it was a hearing by the same board, bound by the same jungle of laws and regulations, bound by the same prejudices—and I say this advisedly; I know at least two members of the board. And despite the fact that Mrs. Hirsch indicated clearly the whole range of job applications she had made, not just in the field of social work but in the field of personnel and other work, her application was turned down. I might say that Mrs. Hirsch did apply for work as a clerk at Eaton's. She was told that she was overqualified. The application form required her to list her previous experience, and she whas then told by Eaton's that she was overqualified. Yet the board referred to this in a way which would seem to indicate that it was her fault she was overqualified. So despite my intervention, Mrs. Hirsch lost her case.

However, I have been pressing the department pretty hard, and after a number of other communications I received a letter, addressed to me from the commission, dated July 14, 1977. It stated in part:

I would like to advise you of specific developments that will, I believe, go a long way to resolving the problem you have noted to my attention.

A second appeal to a board of referees on Mrs. Hirsch's case was held on June 29 and again the board ruled unanimously that the decision to deny her benefits was proper. It is my understanding that your office was advised before the hearing in order for you or another representative to attend. As a result of this second hearing it must be concluded that appeal action on this case has been essentially exhausted.

I would also like to advise, however, that we are in the process of developing refinements to the existing interview and active job search programs that will provide more specific information to claimants required to search for work. It is our intent to include on the active job search form a portion to be completed by the insurance agent showing the occupation(s) in which the search should be carried out together with the type and number of contacts that should be made. Specific indications of the need for an expanded job search will be shown and discussed with the claimant as part of the interview program. These changes should be effected within the next few months.

If the commission does what Mr. Tuck has indicated in his letter, people will be told in future what kind of work they will have to look for if they are to continue to get unemployment insurance benefits. But it does not help Mrs. Hirsch. Why did this happen? When I spoke to the labour member on the board of referees—he is a good chap and I know he is concerned about people—he said, "We do not have the authority to do what you suggest, because the act is written in a certain way". I said, "There is nothing in the act to prevent you". He said, "The regulations are written that way". I asked to see them, because I thought he was misinformed. I went to Mr. Tuck, and Mr. Tuck said, "It could not have happened. All my officers know they have to tell the people these things." Well, there is not a tittle of evidence that the benefit control officer said to Mrs. Hirsch, "This is what you have to do."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I have to interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment which has been proposed by my hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), namely, that this bill be hoisted for six months and be reconsidered at that time, is a very wise one. Since we last discussed this measure a couple of weeks ago I have received further correspondence from across the country. I should like to put some of it on the record. The first is a telegram from the International Woodworkers of America, the Canadian Labour Congress affiliate, local 1-118. A copy of the telegram was sent to every member of the Liberal caucus. The gist of the telegram is as follows:

● (1600)

The membership of local 1-118, IWA Victoria, are protesting very strongly the enactment of Bill C-27 and particularly those parts that will have the effect of creating unnecessary hardships on those people unemployed and those who will become unemployed. As we are sure you are aware of the unemployment and lack of employment in this area, we feel sure you must be aware of the extreme hardship this bill will create on your constituents. Please reply.

That telegram was signed by Murray Drew, business agent. I received a letter from a Parti Quebecois member of the Quebec national assembly, Mr. Gérard Gosselin, the deputy for Sherbrooke. He wrote to me as follows:

Mr. Rodriguez,

Allow a member of the Quebec National Assembly to congratulate you on your most relevant comments on the effects of Bill C-27 on the Canadian unemployed.

I am deeply concerned about the matter and according to my estimates, over 60,000 Quebec jobless will thus be stricken from the unemployment insurance rolls in Canada. This is an abominable transfer of the responsibility for supporting the unemployed from the federal to the provincial government, thus increasing considerably the costs of social welfare in Quebec, even though the federal government is still trying to deceive us about the effects of its legislation on the provincial welfare schemes. For your information, sir, please note that the Quebec social welfare scheme is already supporting 98,600 people who are deemed employable. Because of the new federal policies, this number of recipients will probably increase by some tens of thousands.

The present Ottawa administration assumes unfairly its responsibilities for fighting unemployment and supporting the unemployed; even though the benefits paid by Ottawa to Quebec jobless are rather substantial, it is a fact that the high rate of unemployment in this province is the direct result of the broad economic policies of the central government which have disastrous consequences on our economy: for instance, its tariff policies on Quebec textiles, footwear, clothing and agricultural industries; its oil (the Borden Line), automobile, transportation, purchasing and capital investment policies.

The broad economic policies of the central government are the cause of unemployment in Quebec and of the ever decreasing number of jobs in the sensitive area of secondary industries.

Sir, I should appreciate very much being advised of the gist of the remarks you have made in the House on Bill C-27, as well as of any relevant material against this legislation.

I am much concerned about the implications of this bill, and I intend, together with a number of my colleagues, to denounce it.

Thanking you in advance for your co-operation, sir, I remain,

Yours truly,

[English]

I have touched on the questions raised by the Premier of New Brunswick respecting the lack of any meaningful consultation between the federal government and provincial government. Premier Hatfield has accused the federal government of conducting a monologue rather than a dialogue. As I pointed out, the premier indicated this was an ad hoc response to what is a grave concern, rather than a long term plan to create employment opportunities in Atlantic Canada.

We in the House know that when the government first brought in this bill it moved the minimum attachment period to the work force from eight weeks to 12 weeks. It was only because of the fear of embarrassment on the part of the government that its backbenchers would vote against it and embarrass the devil out of the government that it brought in the compromise solution which is now in the bill. Once again the Liberal party has shown that it is prepared to compromise its principles; it could not even hold to the principle it established in the bill originally.

Mr. Symes: Typical.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, it is very typical. The premier of New Brunswick also pointed out the difficulties he is having in regard to regional rates of unemployment. He expressed concern not only about the minimum attachment period and the length of benefits, but also about job sharing and the so-called creative use or developmental use of unemployment insurance funds.

The other surprising and most disappointing thing about this debate on Bill C-27 so far has been the performance in the House of the official opposition. By its silence, the Conservative party has acquiesced to this measure. It has broken faith with the unemployed in regions of the country where unemployment has unfortunately become a way of life. Not one voice in the Conservative opposition has been raised in the discussion of this bill, even though it has been at third reading stage for the last three to four weeks. A Conservative premier even took the time to write me a brief respecting the amended bill. But when the votes come on the amendments at third reading stage, members of the official opposition run for cover. They sit in their seats until the votes come; they then run behind the curtains. That is most regrettable and shameful.

As for the reasons for wanting to give this bill a six months' hoist, I can reiterate old arguments and add new ones. We have already said that the bill is based on a false premise. It is based on a document known as the comprehensive review. The last time I spoke on this bill I pointed out several inaccuracies in the review. In many instances outdated statistics were used. In addition, they were far too narrow. For example, in section B the review states the Canadian labour force is characterized by a high degree of mobility. To support that statement they use job separations for one year only, 1974, and use address changes in 1970 and 1971. That is garbage, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely useless in making a meaningful decision on unemployment insurance. It indicates that high wage increases have exceeded productivity increases. They have used only one year, 1974, and have made a comparison between Canadian and United States increases, which are not comparable in the first place. Thus, it is completely useless and inaccurate.

Approximately a week ago the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) made reference in his speech to the automotive industry. He showed conclusively that Canadian workers are far more productive than their American counterparts. Yet we pay more for the same automobile selling in the United States made by Canadian workers. In the comprehensive review, which was criticized and on which this bill is based, there is a statement that was arrived at by the UIC people. It refers to the fact that males with eight to 11 insured weeks in both years have a higher rate of disqualification than those with 12 or more insured weeks. On the other hand, females with 12 or more weeks have a higher incidence of disqualification and disentitlement than those with eight to 11 insured weeks.

On May 28, 1975, the former minister of manpower and immigration, in the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, said the following:

The incidence of disentitlement or disqualification, as an effect of failure to meet one's obligation under the act, is lower amongst the group with a minor attachment to the work force—

Again, we have printed information which has no relevancy to the bill we are dealing with. The entire bill is based on this comprehensive review which is not worth the paper it is written on. Members of parliament were asked to debate a bill which was based on inaccurate information.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Hon. members opposite can sit there yelling and screaming, but they never get up to make meaningful speeches. This bill was also based on an in-house report which contained a section devoted to the employment patterns in the Atlantic provinces. I have dealt with that section at some length before, but I should like to point out some of the things that were said about Canadian people, particularly those in Newfoundland where the latest rate of unemployment is over 13 per cent.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

The report indicated that there was an indication some employers in smaller isolated communities deliberately hire seasonal workers in such a way as to provide at least a minimum number of insured weeks to as many persons as possible, thereby ensuring an adequate work force at their doorstep when needed. This report was prepared by the people of UIC, obviously to rationalize a piece of legislation to be stuck in front of this minister's nose. The minister was told to legislate, and like a monkey on a string he acts out the power trips of the bureaucracy, as the Liberals sit and dream of ways to move each other up the ladder, to lift the ceilings on executive salaries in the public service and give themselves raises.

These salaries are now at a point where they are going past $60,000. What does this minister, elected by the people of Canada to make decisions, do? "How high do I jump", is what he says. That is not what we expected from the minister. He should lay down a policy in this country and not be subject to their policy-making. It is a complete reversal. The employment patterns in the Atlantic provinces, as referred to in the report, indicate that the seasonal inshore fishermen may have some difficulty operating for ten weeks in the Stephensville area. It has been said in committee by the bureaucrats that there is no reason in the world why the people of Atlantic Canada cannot get eight weeks of work. The employment patterns in the Atlantic regions have no relevance to this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member by informing him that this is a place for debate; it is not a place to throw things around. He should address himself to the bill. It is the hon. member's responsibility to see that decorum is followed.

Mr. Rodriguez: I suggest the bill is based on incorrect information. The report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration dated April 20, 1977, at page 13:9, in part, reads as follows:

MR. ALEXANDER: That is right. I think it is important, even if it does take up my time, that we have this . . .

MR. CULLEN: Mr. Hodder has the figures on this.

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Hodder.

MR. H. J. HODDER (ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER, STRATEGIC PLANNING AND RESEARCH DIVISION, DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION): Madam Chairman, I had better make clear, I think, first, the assumptions under which these calculations rest. The first assumption, for calculation purposes, is a national unemployment rate of 7 per cent.

They are basing their calculations on a national rate of unemployment of 7 per cent. The rate now is 8 per cent, and rising. This bill is based on incorrect information, further evidenced by the remark of the planning director. Imagine—the planning director is even out of date! When he said that, the rate was already 8 per cent for the year. He will receive a big raise. He will be rewarded. It is the "Peter" principle at work.

The hon. members for Quebec ought to listen. There were polls conducted by the Toronto Star and Le Devoir regarding the referendum in Quebec. It is interesting to note that in both those polls the people placed a great deal of emphasis on the economic health of their provinces and a great deal of emphasis on employment. This government thinks it has the national issue all locked up. They are missing the boat. Every time employment goes up a percentage point, Mr. Lévesque indicates that he has a federal yoke around his neck which he has to get rid of. He also indicates that there is nothing he can do about the economic situation in Quebec. "It is those maudits federalists, let us get rid of them and then I can do something". That is their game. Mr. Lévesque is gaining from the fumbling and bumbling and lack of economic policies by the federal government. Lo and behold, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) runs around the country benefiting from everything that has any connection with a poll which shows the separatists are gaining ground. The Prime Minister says to the Anglophones, "I will save the country; I will unite it." The Liberal party members have been wearing their great big buttons. That is the greatest threat to unity in this country—the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: There they sit, an alliance for power. We have seen the defections. We have seen how they are prepared to compromise their principles. Indeed, the other day somebody said that the Liberal Party of Canada was like a whore—it will take anyone.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Even Jack Horner.

Mr. Rodriguez: What are the solutions? Have they put forward anything at all with respect to employment opportunities in this country? What do I read in "Integration"? Obviously, the bureaucrats have already passed the bill themselves. They have put out a new document called "Integration". It is a document put out by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. It quotes the deputy minister's view on what full employment is from the point of view of the government. This is what Mr. Manion says:

"We are aiming at a full employment policy through these public programs coupled with developmental funds," added Mr. Manion. "Our employment strategy is designed to reduce the impact of unemployment and maximize employment opportunities".

The deputy minister is proposing that the job sharing programs and the developmental uses of UIC are the government's approach to full employment in Canada. It is rather interesting to see another article in the same paper, "Integration", written by a young woman who has never worked in her life. After graduation she went down to the Manpower office to look for work. They have a new system there now. They feed information into a computer which then tells them what are the job inclinations of the person applying for a job. The young woman who wrote the article is named Heather Hand, and the article is entitled, "Talk to the computer". Do you know what the computer spewed out that that young woman, who has never worked in her life before, is qualified to do? This is what she wrote:

I couldn't stand the suspense—

As she waited for the computer to give the answers.

—so I asked what they were:

3330-110 Producer, motion picture

3330-118 Producer, broadcasting

3330-150 Director, motion picture

3330-158 Director, broadcasting

That is what the machine said the young woman is qualified to do. That is the approach of matching people to jobs and full employment. Manpower offices now have computers, and computers are supposed to find jobs for people. It is marvellous! I think we had better disintegrate "Integration". The other provision that we oppose in the bill concerns the developmental uses of the unemployment insurance fund. We are opposed to this sort of thing. In effect, the government could use the unemployment insurance fund to give supplementary payments to those involved in a job sharing situation. It proposes, also, that the unemployment insurance fund be used for training people. All of us can subscribe to the theory that people should be trained, either on the job or anywhere else. Surely if the government wants to do that, then it should take the money out of the general revenues of the government so that the taxpayers can see that this much money is going to training and this much money is going to unemployment insurance.

We say that you cannot prostitute the unemployment insurance fund by using the fund to do other things than what it is supposed to do. Indeed, as an employee group which came before the committee said, they were completely opposed to job sharing and had grave doubts about the training programs which were proposed. The minister, with all his bureaucrats, proudly stood up in the committee and said that they had an advisory committee which gives them advice, and they welcomed the advice. The advisory committee reported in the annual report of 1976, and this is what they had to say about developmental uses of unemployment insurance:

A further meeting was held in December, 1976, for the specific purpose of reviewing the developmental uses of unemployment insurance in the areas of job creation and work sharing. The committee expressed very serious reservations about these approaches, particularly as they do not, in the committee's view, represent an appropriate use of the unemployment insurance program.

The committee feels very strongly that the minister should give careful thought to these views, which are unanimously shared by members of the committee.

He has received advice from the advisory committee to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and he has received advice and evidence in committee from employer and employee groups. He has received it from the opposition parties in committee before the Conservatives lost their tongues. All the advice said: No, we should not use the fund for developmental uses of unemployment insurance. There is no point in having an advisory committee if its advice is thrown aside or ignored completely.

We have grave doubts about the whole thrust of the length of benefit period. As you know, in this bill the government, as a sop to the backbenchers in the Liberal party, proposed the imposition of 54 unemployment regions. Those of us who deal with the unemployment insurance fund every day of our lives as members of parliament know how complicated it is. The unemployment rate in each of these 54 regions will determine the minor attachment period and the length of the benefit period. I gave some examples of how it would work. If a person who lives in Nova Scotia, where the unemployment rate is approximately 13.2 per cent or more, works ten weeks, that person would get unemployment insurance benefits for 42 weeks. If a person who lives in the lower mainland of Vancouver, where the unemployment rate is 8.5 per cent, works ten weeks, that person would get no benefits. I suggest to you that 8.5 per cent is above the national unemployment rate in this country and it should not matter where you live in the country. If you are unemployed in Toronto, in Newfoundland or in Vancouver, you are unemployed, and the effects of unemployment on the lives of our people, regardless of region, are equally bad. It is just as debilitating to be unemployed in the east as it is in the west, north or south. In no way could this party support the discriminatory legislation this government is proposing in Bill C-27.

Another concern we have expressed time and again has to do with where unemployment hits hardest. We have said the important issue at the moment is unemployment opportunities. We have asked questions day after day in this House. We identified this issue months ago. We have made specific suggestions about creating short-term employment opportunities as well as long-term employment opportunities.

This government is a typical Liberal government which recognizes shifts in the wind. It can accept the biggest fascist in Canada into its ranks. I suppose it could also accept any well known leftist. It can absorb anyone, and I referred to an analogy earlier. In this particular instance, the Liberal Party has perceived that there is a move to the right in Canada, and it is tightening-up things like unemployment insurance to show the Canadian people how tough it is. It is easy to be tough with the unemployed, especially when they are young. Those who can find work are laid off very quickly, or they move from one job to another because of the present state of our economy.

A growing number of women are heads of households. They are no longer so-called working wives, a situation which the minister would have us believe is a luxury. Women with children are contributing in a meaningful way to the support of their families. We can no longer dismiss them. I can think of no better way to describe the problem than the way in which the leader of my party described it. He described it as follows:

> Is it any wonder the Parti Québécois has such strong support from young Quebeckers when one in every five persons under 24 is without work in that province and when half of the new unemployment in Canada in the past two years has occurred in Quebec?
> The duty of an effective national government of whatever stripe is to govern in such a way as to see that its citizens can lead useful and productive lives. The Trudeau government has failed to meet this responsibility in nine years of office—

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

I recall 1968 when the swinging Prime Minister was diving off springboards. He never made any promises. Everybody said, "Isn't it wonderful; for a change, a politician who doesn't make a promise?" However, I remember two things the Prime Minister said during that 1968 campaign because I was very actively working at that time for our party's representative in Nickel Belt. The Prime Minister said that while he would not make any promises, he would work at two things. He said he would try to eliminate regional disparities in this country, and that he would work to bring about national unity. Here we are, nine years later. Is the country any more united than it was nine years ago?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hogan: It's worse.

Mr. Rodriguez: Have we eliminated regional disparities?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hogan: They are worse.

Mr. Rodriguez: There seems to be a consensus that this government has failed on the two most important issues today, the issue of national unity and the issue of the elimination of regional disparities.

Mr. Symes: No wonder the Prime Minister does not want to talk about them.

Mr. Rodriguez: He does not want to talk about them. The Liberal party has the ability to shift its position to accommodate whatever it thinks is in the wind. We, in this party, have said to the government time and again that we need short-term approaches as well as long-term policies which would set the base for employment as the work force grows. The government made a great big hullabaloo about the most recent budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). That hullabaloo was echoed in the province of Ontario over the budget which was brought down a few weeks later by that darling of the Chamber of Commerce, Darcy McKeough. That budget was a carbon copy of the budget brought down by the federal Minister of Finance. The federal Minister of Finance accepted the fact that full employment nationally is going to be anywhere upwards of 8 per cent. Tweedledee in the province of Ontario said we must live with 5.3 per cent in Ontario.

In its budget the federal government said that we still must depend on the private sector to create employment, and it gave out all kinds of hand-outs to the private sector. It handed out tax concessions when there are already too many tax concessions, in spite of the fact that we are operating at only 82 per cent of plant capacity. The chickens are coming home to roost. In a recent statement a chap by the name of Hugh Stevens, president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Sinclair's brother?

Mr. Rodriguez: They could be related. They are in the same field, banking. In a statement, he said he shared the concern of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) about unemployment, but he said that manufacturers cannot invest to create new jobs until the idle plant and equipment they already have is more fully used. That is why members of my party criticized the budget of the Minister of Finance. We asked why he was priming the pump when the pump was not being fully utilized. We asked why he was giving tax concessions for plant expansion when plant capacity was operating at only 82 per cent. Mr. Stevens went on to say:

> Investment can only be made when the economics justify it. The fact is that much of Canadian manufacturing is in an extremely precarious position as a result of the excessive increases in Canadian costs in recent years, including wages, fringes, taxes, construction costs and interest rates.

The article which quotes Mr. Stevens also notes that perhaps the major factor dampening business expansion plans is the low operating rate of existing plant and equipment. Mr. Stevens observed that the average capacity utilization rate in manufacturing is stagnant at about 82 per cent. We have said that the government should not prime the pump at the top; that should be done down at the low income levels. We have also said that we should not go on developing the economy of Canada as a hinterland. We cannot go on shipping out raw materials. We cannot go on shipping out jobs with those raw materials. Many Liberals who sit on the back benches come from the hinterland parts of their provinces. Many hon. members from the Atlantic region come from the hinterland of the economy because their constituents take raw materials out of the ground. They fish for raw material. They cut raw materials down. We keep shipping out raw materials, and along with them go jobs.

We have said that we need policies geared to economic planning. We have said that if we are going to mine in Canada, the products we mine should be finished to a final product here. Not only do we encourage outsiders to take our resources but we even pay them to depreciate our resources. In the province of Ontario there are depreciation allowances, and we pay mining companies to depreciate our raw materials. We need long-term policies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let him continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Nevertheless—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Who said "No"?

Mr. Symes: For that, there will be ten more speeches.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the former speaker could have finished his remarks in two or three minutes but, unfortunately, he was denied the chance to do so by the party in power. I deplore such an attitude. Yet, the fact remains that this attitude permeates all their actions. They claim to have the right to say everything and deny it to others who could point out their errors. More often than otherwise they just fool around. Even now, they do not have the decency to rise and speak on as important a topic as Bill C-27. We hear them shout, joke, show off, as we say in French "péter de la broue", but they do not have the decency to rise in the House as the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Bussières)—

An hon. Member: He did not speak at all, he is incapable of it.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): —to rise in the House and discuss those topics their electors would have them bring up. There are more than enough unemployed in the riding of Compton, just as there are in that of the hon. member who was shouting a moment ago. They did not have the decency to take into consideration the remarks made by their electors.

Yet those people sent in lists of names, they signed petitions to point out to the government and its members their disappointment, their disenchantement with Bill C-27. We are now discussing at the third reading stage a motion to stand Bill C-27 for six months, so that government members can read their mail and bring the corrections that are needed to this piece of legislation that is a disaster for the working population in Canada. The intent with this bill is to put the blame on the worker. If he cannot find work, if for some reason he finds it difficult to keep a job, he is accused by the government of abusing the system, so they want to make it more restrictive. The government, however, find no way that would allow the worker to find acceptable employment on a steady, yearly basis.

But they found the way to penalize him by increasing to 12 weeks the eligibility period. This is hurting those who find it hard to keep a job. We often receive letters from employers who make the personal effort of keeping an employee on the job one or two weeks more than the six or seven weeks they would normally employ them. Small businessmen make that effort so that the workers involved at least make up in unemployment insurance benefits for the little time they could spend at work. Such an effort the government do not make. They put forward the bill to reduce workers to the bare minimum, and they put the blame on the individual. And indirectly, especially in the province of Quebec, when they disentitle the greater number of unemployed, they know that automatically they will depend on welfare, so that the blame will be on the big bad government that was elected on November 15.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that this problem has been with us much longer than that. With an 8, 10, 12 week period there is disparity. It was said earlier that the government is committed to eliminating regional disparities, but it is quite the opposite. They are creating 54 disparities, 54 regions where they will be playing with 8, 10 and 12 week periods. They are going to play with that and another department of the government will say to the workers: now, we are going to move you to another area. I can hardly wait to see the problems those people are going to be faced with when they move from an eight-week area to a twelve-week area. I can hardly wait to see their faces when they argue with the officials. They tell them nothing about that. Indeed not, they hold a knife against their throat and tell them: Well, that is your problem. Does the bill talk about employment insurability? Not at all.

We have stacks of cases, discussions, and the UIC is now taking refuge behind the taxation department and tells people: Well, your job is not insurable, you are not entitled to unemployment insurance, you do not even have the right to contribute to unemployment insurance, you do not even have the right to pay unemployment insurance in order to draw benefits when you lose your job. I know of specific cases where a storekeeper hires one of his children—he does not have the right. If he hires his neighbour's son and sends his own son to work for the neighbour, then after such an exchange the employment is insurable. But under the regulations, if he wants to hire his own son, the latter is not insurable, he does not have the right to pay unemployment insurance premiums on a seasonal basis.

I am talking about a tourist area—Témiscamingue—where during the summer there are what are known as outfitters, people who work for a specific period, from May to September, who need a job for eight, seven, six or ten weeks, it depends, people who look after the tourists who come to those areas. If one hires his son, the son will not be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. If he hires the neighbour's son, then it is all right, he is entitled to unemployment insurance. That is the rule of the game. The government, through all kinds of means, through bills such as Bill C-27, has created situations where individuals are forced to be as crooked as the government to get what is due to them.

They are forced to cheat with the officers and search for reasons.

We know of a case now in the province of Quebec where the provincial government, through its highways department, is hiring people in the riding of Témiscamingue for only eight weeks. Then they are laid off, after eight weeks only, and another group of 75 people is hired for another eight week period. If that is not a fight between two government levels, I wonder what it is with the crazy regulations we now have. What change will be brought into it? The federal government says: No, we will block the unemployed and passed the buck to the provincial government through welfare. The provincial government answers: No, we will never accept that. Let those people take their responsibilities. Yet, those people are laid off after eight weeks of work.

It is a game of political confrontation instead of an administration that assists people. A further point: there is no change in sections 172 and 173 concerning leave credits and terms of employment. Nothing at all! They took advantage of that again last week, when we had to go before the board of referees and plead cases successfully before three judges who ruled unanimously in favour of the recipient. However, the next day, the board informed us that the case will be referred to the umpire. The three judges of the board of referees appointed by the government cannot even make a unanimous decision. But it is an never-ending game where they always lay the blame on the individual instead of trying to find a solution.

We are told that the government is trying to assist small businesses so that they may create work and produce more. Canadian productivity is increasing, but we know that it is gradually increasing through automation which undeniably causes unemployment. But the government is there precisely to deal with the affairs of the country, to be able to give. The number of jobs is reduced but the government is there precisely to establish policies which would ensure the individual the necessary purchasing power to buy the production of the machine. Unfortunately, the government lacks the decency to think this way. It tries to put the blame on the individual. When in trouble, it says that the situation depends on other countries, that if we have inflation in Canada, it is because of some other countries.

As far as inflation is concerned, prices increase and companies have to spend more to obtain the supplies they need to manufacture. Therefore some companies close down. And if the workers are unemployed, it is their fault; they are lazy because they worked only from eight to ten weeks, depending on the area, or perhaps for twelve weeks. The blame is always put on the individual. Bill C-27 should be entitled "Import controls" rather than deal with unemployment insurance. If, at the very outset, something had been done to deal with the problems of importation into Canada, there is no question that this would have promoted employment. In the Eastern Townships, textile plants are going out of business; furniture manufacturers have gone bankrupt, five of them, one after the other, in Victoriaville. The shoe manufacturers are also going bankrupt. They are all closing down because of the free flow of imports! And then, people will say: "We have too many unemployed"! If we have too many unemployed, something has to be done to reduce their number, and to this end, a bill is introduced, Bill C-27, intended to reduce the number of unemployed.

But what has been done to create jobs for these people? Absolutely nothing. This amounts to putting band aids on wooden legs. There are all kinds of excuses, investing in a given field, to create four, five or six jobs, while at the same time 50 or 60 jobs are destroyed in the same area. There is such a case in my own riding at the present time. We have to fight with various departments in order to get the grants needed to help small businesses. We have to appeal to both the provincial government and the federal government for investments in a region where there is about 22 to 24 per cent of unemployed. But, when we meet them in the streets, or try and count them, we are more likely to find 30 per cent than 24 or 22 per cent.

But the government allows this situation when it refuses to help small businesses, as was the case recently with Quebec Iron Foundries, in Noranda. There was an agreement between the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the company to retrain the employees in other fields. They are not guaranteed a job, they are retrained in a field other than the foundry, which served the Noranda mine. There was no thought given to retraining the company. It gets benefits from something else to guarantee jobs to the employees. But the blame is placed on the employees. The company closes down and the employees are dismissed. After that, they are told: "Very well, we shall retrain you." But in what field? Where? How? Why? No one knows. But they will be retrained. Afterwards, if they have not found a job, on the basis of Bill C-27 they will be told: "Well, my friend, you will have to get busy. You will have to look for a job, everywhere, like the unemployed are now doing." They are looking for jobs. They are now being told that they have not searched for employment in their area. They have looked only in their municipality, yes, in their municipality. You can ask the officials and the minister: "What is the municipality? What does it mean?" The previous speaker spoke about Winnipeg. If I live at one end of Winnipeg, I can tell you that it is quite a long way to go to work at the other end. The problem is the same in Montreal. If I live in Pointe-aux-Trembles and if I have to go to work in Dorval, this poses a transportation problem. But no consideration is given to that. The unemployed has not looked for a job; he restricted his search to his municipality.

In rural constituencies like my own where the next town is 40, 50 or 60 miles away, where there is no public transport, where the unemployed has been looking for a job in his town or the neighboring town, with a population of perhaps four or five thousand people, it is impossible to find a job. He is still cut off from the unemployment benefits because he has not looked in his area. When we try to find out how many miles does the area cover and what services are given, it is impossible to find out. The unemployment officials do not know what is an area. That person is on the unemployment roll, he has no car, no public transportation. How could he go 40 or 45 miles away, twice a day, to find a job? And people are denied unemployment insurance benefits on grounds such as these!

The bill refers to 54 districts. Employment opportunities, means of transportation to and from work and the total number of unemployed should at least be considered in these 54 districts! I suppose there is some assessment, to a certain extent but these things are not being considered. They apply the same scale to a region or a large urban centre, no matter what employment opportunities there are in a given area. They do not take those factors into account. For the same reasons, these people are denied unemployment insurance benefits and in addition, the onus is on the worker. He must prove he has been actively seeking employment. The applicant goes to the federal manpower centre, to the provincial manpower office and comes back home because they have nothing to offer him. He contacts the four or five industries where he used to work. They have nothing for him either. After a while those workers have to accept any job that is offered to them. What will Bill C-27 do to give workers adequate protection against officious civil servants? Nothing at all. All they try to do is to put the burden on the worker's shoulders.

What should our position be on this? When workers are displaced by machines, are they entitled to make a living or not? When, for economic reasons, whether from within or without the country, such sclerosis, and unemployment is created, resulting in financial disaster for the people concerned, are the jobless not entitled to a living? That is the whole question we must ask ourselves. If it is admitted they have a right to a decent living, well, legislation should provide a decent living for them. No bill like C-27 should be tolerated, the impact of which is to back the unemployed into a corner and gag and belittle them or force them on welfare, and then, once they are there, make it even worse for them, by making them crawl to officials for a mere pittance. That is why, for years now, the Social Credit Party of Canada has advocated and still does a guaranteed annual income for everybody, so that if someone loses his job, he will at least be assured a sufficient amount to live on. And he will be entitled and allowed to look for another job, and when he has found it, this guaranteed annual income will be a supplement to his income. It will not be a penalty as it is now.

If someone collecting unemployment insurance does a little work in a week, he is penalized and his benefits are reduced. If he works for more than four weeks, then he is "cancelled", out! He cannot get benefits for four weeks then this clause is used and he is kicked out, he is no longer eligible. He is not entitled to unemployment insurance benefits anymore. We have at least cancelled that one a little bit but only to find some other devious way, a little better than bear traps this time. Not mouse traps, bear traps this time.

That is why we support this motion to put this bill off for six months; if it were possible to put it off for two years, we would do it, because it does not solve the problem. It does not help to improve some situations. This bill creates a situation which is worse than the one existing before. It brings a small improvement on one side and a big failure on the other. A small correction is made on the right for an even bigger failure on the left. It is a continuous game. So, we oppose that bill, and we support the motion to put it off for six months, because in our opinion, many people have representations to make, there will be many petitions drawn by people who were caught in the unemployment problem, people who had to live with it. These are not businessmen.

I had a conversation with a member of the government who met businessmen in his riding; they told him: "That is a good bill". That man has never been on unemployment insurance in his life. He does not know what it is and he even added: I do not know what it is. I have never been on unemployment. But eight weeks is too short. Twelve weeks, you should put a longer period. Such is the advice given to some government members. They should have seen those who are on unemployment insurance, those who have to rely on unemployment benefits for some part of the year to be able to eat during 52 weeks. They should have consulted those people before introducing a bill such as Bill C-27, and maybe we would not have such a long debate. Chances are the government would have come up with a legislation likely to solve the problem instead of creating one as it is the case now.

Those are the general comments I wanted to make. Mr. Speaker, we are going to continue to make such comments, such representations in the House of Commons as well as outside the House, because we know that most Canadians do not want a discriminatory measure but legislation which will allow them to live decently in this country. If we do not have enough jobs to go around we should at least give them an opportunity to rely on some sort of guaranteed income. It should not be an everlasting fight between men who seek the right to live and civil servants who always wonder whether the unemployed or the person without a job is entitled to the payment he needs to survive. Those are the comments I wanted to submit to the attention of the House and I hope hon. members will vote for that six month delay to allow the civil servants to read their correspondence and become conscious of the problem this bill will create for simple workers.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have exaggerated—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but it would be appropriate now to announce the questions to be debated on the adjournment motion.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION REORGANIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cullen that Bill C-27, to establish the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Peters.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as I said a while ago, I do not think that I have taken too much of the time of the House in connection with this bill and this afternoon I wish to support the motion introduced by the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) suggesting to the government a six months's hoist in the consideration of this bill. Actually, Mr. Speaker, we would have many subject matters to deal with. And the reason we want that bill sent to the committee for six months to undergo a further study, is that we want, for example, a review of clause 29 which deals with the insured's qualification, of clause 38 which deals with sickness or pregnancy, of clause 27 which deals with the much talked about insurability, and of clause 31 which extends the qualifying period.

We also wish to discuss the board of referees, the immense power wielded by this body, the issue of the search for work and above all those explanations which the civil servants would have to give to the claimants. Finally, we want to study the issues raised by strikes, by vegetable and fruit pickers, by voluntary designations and make it mandatory for the employer to send immediately the termination of employment form, and so on. These are only a few points which I just mention and we would like all these matters to be dealt with in depth. This is why we want that bill sent back to committee in six months for it to undergo a more thorough study.

Mr. Speaker, for instance I find that clause 29, asking a claimant to have at least from ten to fourteen weeks of prior insurable employment to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits, is a direct attack against the unemployed, because it gives credence to the allegation that they should be considered guilty for their being unemployed. This new clause of the bill proposed by the government is a direct attack against the most defenseless people among the working class, in the sense that the majority of workers who only qualify with a minimum number of insurable weeks of work are the aged and those who have a low level of instruction who generally keep their jobs a shorter time because the type of jobs that are available to them are often for a short period. Students, for instance, who do not intend to go on with their studies and who, as their first work experience have been hired for the summer season, will find themselves without a right to these benefits according to the new clauses of the bill.

The eight-week requirement could quite easily be met by those families or individuals who worked as fruit, vegetable tobacco, tomato or cucumber pickers in the various parts of Canada or elsewhere, but I say it will be very difficult for them to get twelve or fourteen weeks of employment. In its proposal the government completely overlooks modern personnel requirements in the private, public and quasi-public sectors. Increasingly businesses require specialized workers for short periods of time only. Specialized people are hired for definite jobs of a short duration.

Through this provision increasing the qualifying period to eight, ten and even fourteen weeks, the government and its supporters leave the impression that most unemployed who qualified with a minimum period of eight weeks were hard-core unemployed. For instance, jobs are marginal in my riding. Our unemployment rate of 26 or 27 per cent is a clear indication that job-seekers must search for a long time to get one of the few jobs. It is obvious that with such a bill, such a provision and many others, the government is trying to make an insurance scheme profitable by eliminating the factors which are more risky. Social legislation such as this one should not be administered according to the same criteria as those governing private enterprise, even less so when the workers are the ones paying for this insurance.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the insured who pays the premium is entitled to the benefit of his insurance.

I have always considered that unemployment insurance was like any other insurance, like fire insurance or accident insurance: when your house burns down or when you have an accident, you have the right to claim benefit from your insurance company. But I think that is the major problem with the insurers: once you have paid the premium, there are indeed so many investigations of all kinds that in the end, even with a paid up insurance policy, you cannot get any benefits. Yet, when dealing with a commercial insurance company, let us say a fire insurance company, if one is not satisfied with the settlement, one may sue the company and the latter will have to pay. But when you are dealing with government agencies, it is useless to think of taking any legal action since it is so difficult to have officers transferred and they always have the last word. I say that those who deprive the unemployed of their rights are in my opinion outright criminals.

Mr. Speaker, such cases happen every day. A member's office is a good place to get to know of such things and I am sure that government members experience the very same problems. I feel that what is lacking in all this is a little light and a little more understanding. Some may say that I am overdoing it, that I am going too far. Yet, after my party leader spoke this afternoon and gave us an idea of what is going on among the people, I should like to call upon the media in order to substantiate our claims.

The fall 1976 issue of Le Quotidien, our regional paper stated the following, and I quote:

Reduced benefits. Five civil servants denounce . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must inform him that we are discussing at this point a motion to give the bill a six months' hoist. I would like to hear his reasons rather than quotations from newspapers.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what I am doing. As I said at the outset, I suggest that the bill should be deferred for 6 months. I am now telling why I am making this suggestion. I am not going to tell that all I am asking for is a motion to adjourn the House. I want to explain myself. I am in the process of stating why we are right in giving the bill a six months' hoist. This is what I have been in the process of doing all the time. I do not know if you are grasping what I am saying, but I am simply suggesting that this bill should be deferred for six months because the unemployed are dissatisfied, because the media are saying that we are doing the wrong thing.

It is stated here: Five officials denounce UIC roll reductions. That is why I was telling you that we must refer the bill back to committee in order that it be fully looked into. Let us stop playing on words. We are doing nothing here in this House but playing on words. We are creating problems for everybody. We enact pieces of legislation that are so utterly nonsensical as to be illegible. There is not a single worker who can understand one single line of them. Even officials, imagine, five officials denouncing the cuts made by the UIC. I know the minister is aware of the fact, because I discussed it with him. I would like this to be looked into. We have reached the point where five UIC employees give an interview to tell the truth, but they are wearing hoods because they are afraid of being identified. Apparently, the truth must now be told behind curtains, because one is kaput if one is seen. I realize that there are still honest civil servants. That is why I want to mention this fact because everything is blamed on the officials who have to cope with the act all year long.

In my riding, I meet some officials twice, three or four times a year and that is what they tell me. Why don't you try to have more specific legislation and stop bothering us with all these troubles. That is also what we must do. This new legislation is even worse. Do you realize that for disqualification alone, there will be 54 different regions, 54 different cases to be assessed. I would not like to be in these officials' shoes. To say what they want to say, they have to hide under a hood. According to them, the department is trying to strike off 33 per cent more people from the rolls. Their heads hidden under a black hood and without telling names, these five officials have given—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order please. I want to remind the hon. member, as I said earlier, that he should keep to the subject matter, namely the reasons why Bill C-27 should be given a six months' hoist and refrain from quoting press reports.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, here are the reasons why I think consideration of this bill should be deferred for six months. It is because we have heard evidence such as this asking us to give the bill a six months' hoist. We want a six months' hoist. Do you understand? You have listened to all other members who gave their reasons why this delay is necessary. Why are you trying to prevent me from telling the truth when I am stating my case? It seems we are trying to hide the truth from the public. And yet, this is the truth, what is written, what appeared in the papers. It has to be said.

There are more jobless but less people who collect benefit. Such is the effect of the bill before us. This is why we want to send it back to the committee. Here we say: Mr. Cullen will want some explanations. But how come there are more unemployed and fewer benefits are paid. But no wonder, with the kind of bill we have; and if this bill is not amended, if it is not reviewed, if it is not referred to a committee for consideration, we will still have more unemployed and fewer beneficiaries, and the responsibility for it all will fall on the provincial government, as said the hon. member who spoke before me. The federal government collects the taxes, collects the contributions and when it has had enough, it says to the provincial governments: Now, you take the rest.

And once again the provincial government will have to assist those unemployed through the social welfare. This is the impact of this bill; this is why, Mr. Speaker, we want to give the bill a six month hoist. As far as I am concerned, I would like to give it a six year hoist so that I would not hear about it any more, but the amendment provided for six months only, and we have to comply with it. But, if we should pass this bill tonight, it will not do any good. We are going to be worse off than before. I was telling you earlier that we now have 24 per cent. That is again in the newspaper Le Quotidien of the 23rd. And some think that we are going to keep quiet in the House, that we are not going to speak out. No, Mr. Speaker, they are wrong because we are going to speak out and to denounce, because what is coming makes no sense. This bill must at all costs be referred to committee for a further detailed study, so that the unemployed may have what they are entitled to.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is absolutely essential that the powers of the board of referees be restricted in the course of the further consideration. At present, the board of referees is all powerful and solves about every problem in its own way, unless that is changed in the course of the further consideration of this bill. I just had a case in my riding. I will not mention names but that was very obvious to me. So, in its report, the board of referees states: the fact remains that the board of referees has the right and privilege to interpret the power, the power to decide which statement it will accept, and also to rule on the admissibility of the evidence. Imagine! It goes on to say: It should be noted, however, that it is not up to the claimant to decide on his availability. Imagine! The claimant, under the present act, has no longer even the right to say whether he is available or not. It is up to the board of referees—officials—to decide: You are available, you are not available.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier).]

Such problems keep cropping up in our ridings. And what I do not understand is that such cases can be pleaded and when carried through, something finally comes out of it. But why did they not do it right away? Because the act quite simply, is not clear, it is too confused, and the officials are not wizards either. They do their best. Let us not forget, as I said earlier, that I am not trying to lay the blame on public servants.

Certain public servants want to make money out of unemployment insurance, but others are honest. I simply say that the legislation is too restrictive and not clear enough, and this is why we want a six month hoist to have the opportunity to say what we think about certain sections of the bill. I have something to say about insurability. Who determines insurability? There are many cases in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, of workers who had to contribute. I have seen such cases over a period of two and a half years. They were asked to contribute every week, and after two and a half years, they became unemployed. The Unemployment Insurance Commission told them: "Well, you were allowed to contribute, but you were not supposed to." The companies and the employers do not know what is going on.

The legislation does not clearly state when someone must contribute to unemployment insurance and is entitled to the benefits. Not only is the Unemployment Insurance office not authorized to tell those people that they are not entitled to benefits, but their case has to be referred to the Department of National Revenue since it is the one which decides if a worker is insurable or not. After two or three years, the worker is told that he has contributed for nothing. I know of such cases. I say this quite advisedly, Mr. Speaker. This is why a six months hoist would give us time to discuss this question of insurability.

It is essential to get the facts straight. I strongly object to the Department of National Revenue determining if someone can get unemployment insurance. There is a limit to the number of times departmental responsibility can change. I was talking about this with the officials of my area, in Alma, and they told me: "Listen, we do not have any influence, we must wait up to four months to know what the department will do." These poor people were saying: "We are like you, Mr. Gauthier, we have to wait." Is the government aware of the problem? There is a wall. I had to leave. I commuted between the office and the department because the civil servants could not communicate together. That is how they take the unemployed for a ride. What do you think happens to an unemployed man who can hardly sign his name and is facing such a problem? He will lose his unemployment insurance benefits. Those are real cases, Mr. Speaker, and for that reason we want to delay that study for six months so we could set the facts straight as we see them every day.

We have also the important issue of pregnancy or sickness. That is another trick: A guy gets sick and he needs a medical certificate. So I tell him: Send your doctor's certificate. Then he sends his certificate but they do not get it. I know workers who sent eight certificates within seven months but civil servants never received those famous certificates. Now I have them photocopied and send a dozen at the first opportunity because civil servants seem to lose them too easily. What I am complaining about now, what I have always asked for in this House is that the medical certificate be the only argument allowing a sick person to get his or her benefits. I have discussed that with doctors in my area. The doctor brings in his findings but at the insurance office it is a civil servant who will weigh the diagnosis. The doctor says six weeks rest, but civil servants figure that two weeks is enough. That is wrong, they should respect the medical diagnosis.

This is very clear, and I have been urging this for a long time. But let us respect the diagnosis of the physician. The civil servant is there to dictate letters and he has never practised medicine and does not know beans about it. However, he is one who decides whether a person has the right to be on sick leave for two, three, four or five weeks. This is ridiculous! I have always asked for this, without success. The physicians ask for this too, they want their certificates to be respected.

When a person is operated on for appendicitis, he gets four weeks leave, and I had the opportunity to discuss this with one of these civil servants who confirmed this to me. There can be all kinds of complications with appendicitis, Mr. Speaker. Even if the physician says this is acute appendicitis, and the knows his patient's need, he knows whether the person needs to stop working for eight or ten weeks, the civil servants tells us that it is four weeks according to the law. This is ridiculous! I had to defend such cases. It seems funny to say, maybe some of you would not believe me, but I had to go and defend such cases.

I also believe that as long as the legislation will not say specifically that the physician's diagnosis should be followed, we will be in the wrong. It seems to me that the government is relying more on its officials than on the physician. I for one can tell you that I have more faith in the physician than in the local official. It is sad to say, but I have always defended causes like that. The same thing goes for strikes. I see that time is going fast, but I wanted to say a few words on this subject to note what we are supposed to do and consider in the next six months regarding this bill. It is the same thing for strikes. Of course, when an industry strikes its workers are not allowed to get unemployment benefits. But what about those who are not union members, why should they be treated in the same way as those who are members of the union?

Within six months, those cases will have to be studied in a very specific manner to determine who is entitled to unemployment insurance and who will be penalized because of strikes. It must be realized that when there is a strike, strikers are not 100 percent for the strike, especially when their type of employment is not entirely related to the work performed by the real strikers. I think that we are witnessing these problems day in and day out and that they will keep arising because of the bill before us, if tonight we do not decide, once and for all, to clarify this situation and send this bill back for six months for further study on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, as for the extension of the qualifying periods, I think that while reading the bill the minister did not even think of workers who are injured on the job. There must absolutely be a special extension of the qualifying period in order that such persons who have received accident compensation benefits for a month, two months or even three months and did not collect unemployment insurance, will be able as soon as they are back on the job market, and available for but unable to secure employment, to receive unemployment insurance benefits. I think that this is a very legitimate demand. I can understand or I would rather think that there was perhaps a mistake, but I also believe that if we do not take the necessary steps to try and correct the defects that we keep finding in the present bill, we will keep giving the unemployed the run around and make them wait indefinitely. Last week, somebody told me that he had been waiting to collect his unemployment insurance benefits for the past fourteen months.

He had waited 14 months for the results of the studies. He had received a letter saying his case was under review. Mr. Speaker, I believe we are serious enough in this House and sincere enough to see to it that this bill is not voted upon tonight but referred instead for a real study, and not to be discussed with civil servants. Not that I blame those who are here. They have never been out in the field. They have no idea what goes on out there. They write the laws but know nothing about what is going on. We, however, live the whole year round with the unemployed out in the field. I think it would do them good to have an hon. member in their midst from time to time, an hon. member who comes from those areas, but, no, we come third class. It is quite forbidden to consult us, to ask our advice. They are the ones who decide under what conditions such and such an unemployed will get benefits. And there again, if one has good friends, good connections, things won't be too had. But if, unfortunately, one has no friends, it is often difficult to solve the case.

Indeed, we do run into cases like that. Mr. Speaker, I do hope this bill will not pass third reading tonight and that the amendment of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) will be accepted. I am sure that many government members would like to see the amendments I mentioned a while ago improve the shortcomings of the bill, and the only way to do that, once again, is to defer the bill and vote for the motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming.

An hon. Member: Question, question!

An hon. Member: What's the rush?

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, one really has the impression that this is not a democratic Parliament. Our colleagues seem shocked to see us rise and express the views of our constituents. Our democracy will survive so long as our democratic parliamentary system will be respected. Otherwise our system will disappear and then everybody will wonder how it happened. Freedom of speech! What has become of it?

Mr. Speaker, I hope that you at least understand me and will accept that I make some remarks on Bill C-27 and also on the motion to give the bill a six months' hoist for further consideration. I remember a few years ago when a similar piece of legislation was passed by the Canadian Parliament, the unemployment insurance act. Well, this Parliament wanted to safeguard the rights of the workers who happened to be out of work after the last world war. Before that war, Mr. Speaker, there was a period of acute unemployment during the economic recession from 1929 to 1939. At that time, there was no legislation to ensure the Canadian workers minimum income if unemployed. We had nevertheless various work programs. We had subsequently the relief program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must remind him once again that we have before us an amendment designed to give the bill a six months' hoist. Of course, it is allowed to criticize the bill during consideration of this amendment, but the amendment does not in any way allow for any correction or change in the bill. Therefore, I would appreciate it if the hon. member would address himself to the amendment under consideration at this time.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, but in order to say anything sensible on the amendment, I must deal with the bill. That is why I have to remind the hon. members of the history of our unemployment insurance legislation and I don't know of any rule that prevents me from telling the House that before the introduction of the present unemployment insurance act, other events took place. I consider that I respect the Standing Orders and the Chair precisely by recalling those previous situations which later led Parliament to adopt a law providing for the unemployed worker some benefits which have been called unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of my functions, I had to cooperate in many instances to complete forms for workers who happened to be unemployed, to help them take advantage of this law adopted by Parliament which provided they could receive unemployment insurance benefits. What Parliament wanted at that time was to guarantee them a minimum income so they would not have to get into debt when they were unemployed. And I think I must commend the lawmakers of that time who were concerned about protecting the economic situation of people who after the 1939-1945 war could eventually be unemployed.

Later the law was amended a few times, Mr. Speaker, as it was in 1971 and again in 1977. Now we are on Bill C-27 and an amendment motion has been proposed by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), a motion which would delay the adoption of this bill for six months. Is it because the bill has to beget something in six months' time? Definitely not. It is not a period set aside for confinement but a period set aside for reasoning, for thinking, that will allow the law-makers, the minister and the officers time to study this legislation in greater depth, to make it more consistent with the actual needs of the workers, of those who could possibly be unemployed some day, not of their own will, but due to unusual economic circumstances.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that since Bill C-27 was introduced in this House, there has been no reason for changing our opinion on it. Of course, I do not want to repeat the very serious comments voiced by my colleagues in the House of Commons, and especially by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) who is particularly qualified to speak on labour matters, on questions relating to unemployment insurance entitlement and contributions. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Kamouraska has shown during the last 15 years, in the speeches he has made before Parliament, that he is a truly responsible member, that he is sincerely working in the interest of his constituents, and that he is at the same time making sure that Canada can guarantee the security of the workers of our country, the security of our disabled citizens, of our widows, of our orphans and of all those who are destitute, so they are in a position to meet their obligations.

Mr. Speaker, are opposition members alone in objecting to Bill C-27? I do not think so. If we reread the comments made in the House by government members, on the majority side, I will not say in power, because they are not, but on the government or the majority side, well I remember among others the comments of the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) who clearly stated in the House that he objected to Bill C-27 on second reading. He assumed his responsibilities and said that the bill did not meet the needs of workers for which it was meant and did not encourage them to work and contribute to the growth and development of our country.

Mr. Speaker, further on, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) in a document which he tabled and in his comments before the committee said:

> In amending the unemployment insurance system, we are obviously facing the following dilemma: ensure better income protection for the claimant while giving him an incentive to work.

I more than agree. We must have in this country a legislation which would encourage any able-bodied man to work, whether in his own interest, in the interest of his community, his province or his country. I fully agree, but we must take into account the economic situation in which we live. The minister added:

> The 1971 amendments have obviously helped provide adequate income maintenance.

That is true. The benefits granted to the unemployed helped them meet the needs of their families, or in the case of single persons, prevented them from sinking into debt, for otherwise they would have been compelled to borrow and mortgage their future.

Up to that point, I think the minister is right. He went on:

As well, the experience of the past five years abviously threw light on the elements of the system which had bad consequences on the labour force.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, you were here when the bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act was introduced in 1971. Members on the government side were saying that this legislation was the best in the world, that it would provide workers with a stable income while encouraging them to go back to work and get the available jobs.

● (1750)

The minister goes on:

Not only the comprehensive study on the unemployment insurance system in Canada, but also a wide variety of studies made by other agencies and individuals have enabled us to recognize and identify its effects. The proposals contained in Bill C-27 are designed to improve the balance between the components of the system and I am convinced of their appropriateness.

Mr. Speaker, it is either of two things: In 1971, it was logical to give workers the possibility of claiming unemployment insurance benefits after having contributed to the fund for eight weeks, whereas in 1977 we confess in the face of the whole country that this was a disastrous mistake. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we confess that this was a disastrous mistake to give benefits after eight weeks of work attachment in 1971, I think I am entitled to question whether at the end of one year, or two years of having had to live with Bill C-27, we would not ask the same question for the second time: was it not a mistake to establish a qualifying period of 10, 12 or 14 weeks according to the unemployment in each area, as the minister says.

And I quote what he said:

First of all, we shall increase by 12 weeks the benefit period during the regional extended benefit phase. During this phase, recipients will therefore be entitled to benefits for a possible maximum of 32 weeks instead of 20.

Additional weeks of benefits would depend on the regional unemployment rate, which appears in Schedule B which is annexed to the copy of my speech.

These are remarks which he made in the House when he moved the second reading of this bill. Well, Mr. Speaker, statistics are something which I believe in, but I do not trust them 100 per cent, and because of our experience with votes earmarked for the Canada Works and Young Canada Works programs, I am most careful because statistics are not always up to date. When we consider the figures published by Statistics Canada concerning the number of unemployed recorded on its rolls, and then consider the real number of unemployed people in our own regions, there are serious discrepancies, and this procedure affects unfavourably the poorer regions in our country.

It is on the basis of these statistics that, according to Bill C-27, unemployment insurance benefit entitlement will hinge for those who are unemployed. There is something which I may know better than anybody in Canada, Mr. Speaker, and it is that there are many Canadians who really want to work and earn their own living, but who simply cannot, because of economic conditions which are beyond their control.

Second, a percentage of the population wants to work in order to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits and then live on them without working, thus taking advantage of all the benefits that our partnership, our life in society has to offer. But even then, a distinction must be made. I think it is a small number. And I remember during the recession I referred to a moment ago, many jobless were termed as lazy by the authorities of the day because they did not want to work, but when the war broke out and all able-bodied men were called upon to enlist, they no longer were lazy. Thousands of our young people were willing to enlist because it was the only way to earn a living.

From 1939 to 1945, thousands of Canadians were called upon to work in our factories here and there and it was then acknowledged that those people were not lazy but hard-working who only want to earn good pay, to earn a decent living. Mr. Speaker, we are now going through an extremely difficult period when the best qualified people cannot find a job. I get mail every day in this connection from young people, people of all trades who write to me, who telephone me to ask me if it would not be possible to help them find a job.

I signed earlier some fifty letters before coming to the House recommending people to the Quebec manpower centres in Quebec City, Lévis and Montmagny, not to ask for unemployment insurance benefits but to ask the public servants in those manpower centres to help those people find a job. Mr. Speaker, how gratifying it is to be able to help someone find a job so that this person will have the pleasure of saying at the end of each day: I earned my daily bread. I have done something for my country and my country will benefit from it because my country has given me plenty. Mr. Speaker, when you reach age 24 or 30, and have scores of diplomas stuffed in your pockets, diplomas which have been paid for by your predecessors and which are very hard to get these days, because education has become terribly expensive, when we see these young people so healthy and so fully qualified, having acquired the great qualification of the day, the qualification to be unemployed, we wonder what this parliament has been doing to deal with such an unacceptable situation. But, except in wartime, the private sector alone is not in a position to provide jobs for all the qualified people in our country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, before the dinner recess I had still a few minutes left to finish my comments on the motion under consideration. I was explaining how Canadian industries are at present unable to create the necessary jobs to cope with the manpower needs in Canada. That is one of the reasons why we now have more than a million unemployed.

In the province of Quebec, three large industries have to compete with imports and as a consequence the number of people without jobs is increasing. I am referring to the textile, garment and shoe industries. These three industries used to provide jobs for a great many people but today thousands of them are now out of work. They are now unemployed; they are in good health, and able to work but there are no jobs available. I know there are retraining programs intended for the worker who may learn another trade. But in spite of the good will of all the governments, these programs cannot cope adequately with labour needs. This is not creating more jobs either. Workers are being retrained and taught new trades, but will they find jobs? There is another trick—let me put it this way—that we find in our legislation: retrained workers must obtain a working permit. You can imagine! I call that a permit to keep them out of work. Such is modern democracy. A working permit. You are qualified, you were trained as a heavy equipment operator, but that is not enough. You must first obtain a working permit in order to get a job. That working permit is no easy thing to get, and God knows if I am not aware of that. So we make things more difficult. I know the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is not responsible for that, and I would not like him to think I am laying the blame on him, but such is the sitution. Secondly, there is not enough room available in those schools for training all the applicants. In my area alone, there are already 1200 names on the waiting list, people who want to retrain as heavy equipment operators. They have to wait for 6, 12, 18 or even 24 months before they can attend classes.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a list of employers operating in the James Bay area, just to show that there are employers really willing to help workers to get a job. There may be 150 firms. I did not count them. Anyway, I have seven or eight full pages. Some are operating in the North, on the Labrador side, and when someone asks me for help in finding a job, I send him the full list to show that there are employers. But do those employers have jobs? Before I take action to help someone get unemployment insurance benefits, I do all I can to help him get a job. I assume that the officials administering the Unemployment Insurance Act do all they can, but they only have the tools they are provided with. So, when someone after all is unemployed, they send him a notice stating he is disqualified because he has not been actively looking for work. They know at the UIC office that he cannot find work because there is none.

Manpower centres in the area know full well that the claimant cannot find a job because there is none available. He is disqualified just the same, and he loses the revenue toward which he had been contributing in the hope of receiving benefits until he could find a job. And if he insists, he is told to apply to the welfare office. In my province, welfare benefits are paid 50 per cent by the provincial government and 50 per cent by the federal government, while unemployment insurance is financed solely by the federal government. So they play games with the poor fellow who can have no more unemployment insurance benefits because he cannot find a job, but he is not told that he cannot find one because there is none. Far from it, he is blamed for everything, and this is playing games with unfortunate people.

Mr. Speaker, even if someone wants a job for a few days or a few weeks, if an employer is willing to employ him for that period of time, the claimant would not dare take the risk for fear of getting into trouble. Most of the time claimants are not adequately informed of their rights, and often, through lack of information, they turn down offers of temporary employment.

He protests again and tells the Unemployment Insurance Commission that he does not understand why he was disqualified. He is then sent a notice telling him that he still has one possibility left open, an appeal to the board of referees. The board studies the case of this poor guy. They are not aware of all the details, and they are appointed ordinarily to do a job that comes under the jurisdiction of the government and they do not examine sufficiently the job opportunities in the area to know if the claimant is truly lazy and does not want to work or if he is not able to work.

That is the whole difference; there are those who want to work and those who do not want to do so. Being able to get a job and refusing it is not the same thing as not being able to find a job. The claimant is then told: "If you are not satisfied, you can appeal to the umpire. But for this, you need the authorization of the board of referees. You need the authorization of the chairman." But the chairman has decided that the poor boy is not entitled to benefits. He is the one to tell him: "It is true, you can appeal to the umpire or not." And if the decision of the umpire is not in the favour of the claimant, there is no other recourse. The case is closed. In other areas, you can still appeal to the Supreme Court. There are still some possibilities. Mr. Speaker, I would not want to close my comments without making some suggestions for improvement to the members of the House of Commons. I would not like my comments to be considered only as criticisms. This would not be in accordance with my true role.

There must be some change, and this according to the great formula of Major Douglas that is called the social credit, a credit which is more social and which serves everyone. He suggested that the community as a whole benefits entirely from the present inventions and progress as man is being replaced more and more by machines. We must find a formula that will enable society to receive an income earned by machines and progress. In our party we call this social credit, a credit which is distributed to the society because it is earned by machines and progress. We now have a different formula. Our politicians and political scientists have found another name for this. They call it guaranteed minimum annual income. Mr. Speaker, I do not care whether it is called a guaranteed minimum annual income formula or a national dividend formula, as long as we succeed in reaching our objective, that is the redistribution to all the workers of the income earned by machines if they have become unemployed because of those machines.

Mr. Speaker, the second formula suggested by the same Major Douglas is a discount on the price of Canadian products in order to increase the consumption of Canadian production as an incentive to our industries, which will enable them to produce more because sales will be activated. And if our industries are able to empty their warehouses, they will be urged automatically to increase their production and thus give a new impetus to the Canadian economy. Mr. Speaker, I make this suggestion earnestly because I realize that the purpose of production is not only to produce for trade fairs or for the sake of production, but rather for consumption, in order to satisfy individual or community needs. If we make fire engines, it is to help municipalities fight fires in their area and not only to exhibit them.

Mr. Speaker, there are in our society some jobs which are guaranteed, which are secured. Those who hold these positions do not need unemployment insurance, but there are also jobs which are not guaranteed, which are available on a seasonal basis only, and those who fill them do need unemployment benefits. I wish we would take a consistent approach to enable these people whose job situation is not secure to rely on a guaranteed minimum annual income, without preventing them from earning money from another source. It would be, Mr. Speaker, an incentive to work and it would ensure some security to the individual and to those who depend upon him for their maintenance. This is my way of seeing things, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, I wish to express my appreciation to all hon. members who have expressed their views on this very important bill which affects thousands of people. After this motion is voted upon, and since all members want to go on holidays—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) has the floor.

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, even though the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) wants to call me what we have often called him, I simply wish to tell him that this afternoon, he requested that I take part in this debate, saying that it was my right and privilege. Indeed, for my constituents and the House, I want to exercise this right and perform my duty, namely make representations on behalf of my constituents.

I find myself compelled to take part in this debate because he who doesn't speak out implies consent, and I certainly cannot associate myself with the remarks made by the opposition today. They have been either demagogic or simply election-minded, or even full of inconsistent jokes, accompanied by grotesque and disgraceful demonstrations as examplified by the member for Nickel Belt. Of course, I can only agree that unemployment is a sad situation and I am willing to associate myself with all those who accept to work positively and efficiently toward creating permanent jobs. To succeed in his task, we need the support of all economic agents in this country and even that of the opposition parties in this House.

Today's debate is a blatant demonstration that there is a lot of empty chatter, a lot of common places, a lot of principles restated and the result of this situation is that when we are all tired of talking around, we will come to a vote and because the opposition will not have been responsible and efficient enough, Parliament will go on without solving anything. No one in this House should forget that he is a member of parliament and if he claims that Parliament should solve every problem he has but himself to blame for these shortcomings. With an opposition of the type we now have, the result would be an unsurpassed catastrophe. Of course I agree that the solution offered by Bill C-27 will not make my task any easier, nor improve the lot of certain of my constituents. But starting from a temporary problem, I hope that the solutions we will all have to apply will lead us to the true solutions, namely the creation of permanent jobs in a balanced and viable economy.

If I accept the principles and the regulations spelled out in Bill C-27, it is because the excesses have reached such a state and are so many that I am led to conclude that the government would be unable to pay for them and so would the taxpaying workers. I cannot put off what can and should be done today. Giving Bill C-27 a six months' hoist would not resolve anything, and this is illustrated by the remarks of the hon. member for Roberval. He wants to delay discussion for six months, but to what avail? The hooded public servants he mentioned did not resolve anything, but what concerns me is not so much that public servants wear hoods, but that some hon. members also have them but are unaware of it. I would agree on a guaranteed minimum income, but I would not correct abuses by instantly creating another source of abuses.

Some hon. members have also talked about the zealous and interfering public official. What about hon. members who interfere with his work? As for imports, this is also a matter which can give rise to many lies. I am thinking about textiles. A glove factory in my constituency had to reduce its operations. We know that it costs $13.30 to produce a dozen of Canadian gloves whereas imported gloves cost $5.50. Will the opposition have the courage to tell the consumers that they want them to pay more? In the pulp and paper industry, everybody in the House knows it, Domtar has announced that they are going out of business in my constituency. How are we then to find a solution when we know that labour in East Angus is paid an hourly minimum wage of $6.61? Yet in the same industry on the American side of the border, people are getting an average salary of $4.50 an hour. Mr. Speaker, I must add that productivity in the pulp and paper industry is 20 per cent higher. What is there to say about the cost of raw materials when we know that a cord of wood at the mill costs nearly $70, while they manage to get it for $30 and $40 on the American side. That is the dead end we are in, and hon. members of the House should realize that it is not only the government which is at fault.

Mr. Speaker, there are also great sowers of illusions. There are also great liars. Yet, what we actually need in the House are great public administrators who can represent their constituents in a complete and effective way, not only once in a while, as during a debate such as this. To promise is easy, but today we should be honest enough not only to make promises, but to list the items on the invoice and indicate the terms of payment. This is the way to act to be a politician who moves with the times, to be a great politician, and I would hope that in a near future this will be the only kind of politician sitting in this House.

Bill C-27 is a page of this new history which in some cases means new public men. The question is not to have the workers pay budget deficits, but to restrict abuse which have become institutionalized. We should repeat this and, if we have enough courage, act in consequence because our current system is too open to abuse. The government has the responsibility to be strong and courageous enough to correct this, and I would say that this abuse was quite well reflected by what went on today in the House. Mr. Speaker, I am fed up with those who pretend they are the heroes of democracy when all they can do is read or talk, sometimes only to accuse others; they accuse the government for remaining silent, and this is what should be said: To listen kindly to those who try desperately and awkwardly, if not dishonestly, to get re-elected by misleading the people, for it must be recognized that this country has far greater need of men of courage and know-how than of demagogues and liars. Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude by saying simply that I shall vote against the amendment for a six month's hoist—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member for Roberval on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon you called us to order repeatedly throughout the debate, yet you allow the hon. member to go on even though he is straying from the subject with his nonsense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member for Roberval has certainly brought up a very interesting point; I was about to stand and ask the hon. member for Compton to keep to the motion before the House. However, as he said he was concluding, I tried to be tolerant, but I shall now call him to order and ask him to talk to the amendment under consideration.

Mr. Tessier: Mr. Speaker, I just want to bring my remarks to a close, but as the opposition kept interfering all afternoon I felt I could indulge myself a little this time around.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion lost.

Amendment (Mr. Peters) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I shall intervene this evening in a way which will commend itself to all hon. members. First, I shall be brief. Second, my intervention will be a demonstration of party solidarity.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, but which party's?

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I would be inclined to support amendments to tighten the Unemployment Insurance Act because, without doubt, as members of my party have often said, abuses under the act need to be corrected. The question is, is this the time to do it?

Mr. Epp: Yes, definitely.

Mr. Saltsman: I, and other members, Mr. Speaker, have often asked the government to change the Unemployment Insurance Act. But we called for changes when we had reasonably high levels of employment. Surely bringing in such changes, when around one million Canadians are unemployed, is both inappropriate and cruel. Instead of lessening unemployment the government will cut people off from unemployment insurance benefits.

The hardships these changes will work on the poor, and on our poorer regions, will be beyond belief. Surely only an unconscionable government, and its supporters, would cut people off unemployment insurance when jobs are few and unemployment rates high. That is really what concerns me. If we could not create employment in this country, perhaps I would feel differently. However, I do not think any government ever stood as condemned as this one does in its absence of understanding and its absence of imagination in terms of solving the employment problem. It can be solved. The government simply has not bothered to do it. To throw people off unemployment insurance as a way of saying O.K., we are doing something, is totally unacceptable, at least to myself and my colleagues.

AIR CANADA ACT, 1976

MEASURE RESPECTING REORGANIZATION OF AIR CANADA

The House resumed, from Friday, July 15, consideration of Bill C-17, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and motions Nos. 1 and 2 (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on motions Nos. 1 and 2?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare motions Nos. 1 and 2 negatived on division.

Motions Nos. 1 and 2 (Mr. Mazankowski) negatived.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-17, An Act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 6 to 9 at page 4.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this report stage amendment to Bill C-17 is to strike out a few ridiculous lines which were written into the bill when it was in the hands of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. The lines that I have in mind were not there in the original version of the bill, but in the sessions of the standing committee the Conservative members on the committee proposed that something along the lines of the user-pay concept of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) should be written into the bill. Indeed they proposed that the main purpose of Air Canada should be stated to be the contemplation of profit. It turns out that in the standing committee the actual amendment which was proposed by the Conservative members was not accepted, but on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport their idea was accepted and was written into the bill at another place.

Accordingly, Bill C-17, at page 4, lines 6 to 9, now reads as follows:

(1.1) In discharging its responsibilities under this act, the Board shall have due regard to sound business principles, and in particular the contemplation of profit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear "hear, hears" from Tweedledee and Tweedledum, the Liberals and the Tories.

Mr. Paproski: You did not hear it from the Tories, you heard it from the minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is not the member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) a Tory?

Mr. Paproski: He did not say a word.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Oh yes, he did. He said "more socialist jargon".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has the floor. I suggest hon. members continue their conversations behind the curtains.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is quite clear that the idea contained in this sub-clause was put there because the Tories proposed it and the Minister of Transport welcomed it. It sounds like a bit of motherhood to say that the Board of Air Canada should have due regard to sound business principles, but sometimes I wonder. The business world has had charge of this country for 110 years and has had plenty of opportunity to pursue sound business principles. And look at the mess we are in today.

The phrase in this subsection which bothers us the most is the phrase which calls for the Board to have regard in particular to the contemplation of profit. It is not our suggestion that the Board of Air Canada should work hard to achieve a loss, but we do think that the main purpose of a government owned corporation should be the provision of service. It is not even mentioned in this clause. It is not even given a second thought. According to this bill, as amended by a Tory-Liberal combination, the main purpose of the Board of Air Canada is to be the contemplation of profit.

The whole reason for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Canadian National Railways, Air Canada and a host of other corporations and agencies which have been established in the public domain is to serve the needs of the people of this country. The reason that these bodies have come into being is because the private sector has failed this country and our people miserably through all these years.

Mr. Stevens: Like Saunders Aircraft.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member can refer to any outfit he wishes. He will discover a certain number which have failed and a certain number which have succeeded. I say to the hon. member, arch representative of the private sector that he is, that it is because of what the private sector has done that we are faced with massive unemployment today, with runaway inflation and with conditions which deny to our people the kind of economy and justice to which they are entitled.

I am not arguing that the words that were written into the bill have any particular meaning. I doubt that the Board of Directors will pay any attention to them. The Board of Directors of Air Canada will realize that it has a job to do and will see to it that Air Canada continues to be one of the best airlines in the world. It has a service which must be rendered to the people of this country. But parliament looks downright ridiculous putting these words into a piece of legislation which establishes the Board of Air Canada and gives it its working guidelines. Therefore, that is why I have put down this amendment and simply ask that the subparagraph which indicates that in discharging its responsibilities under this act the board shall have due regard to sound business principles, and in particular the contemplation of profits, be removed from this bill before it moves on to third reading.

Motion No. 4 reads that the act be amended in clause 7 by striking out lines 6 to 9 at page 4. I have read lines 6 to 9 several times. They are a ridiculous declaration, and parliament should not make itself look silly by leaving these words in Bill C-17. Therefore I call upon the House to support this amendment and take this nonsense out of this bill.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on motion No. 4, I should like to qualify my position first of all by saying that I am diametrically opposed to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has just told this House. We have got to put this situation into perspective. There was considerable debate at committee with respect to the question before us as a result of the amendment by the hon. member. In committee it was originally proposed by my colleague that the wording in the reprint of Bill C-17 dealing with contemplation of profit and the fact that Air Canada should be carried on with due respect for sound business considerations should come into Clause 6, making it very clear that the corporation, within and outside Canada, should carry on business subject to those essential ingredients. It should carry on in a sound business fashion in contemplation of profit.

It is rather interesting that it should be the House leader of the socialists who would be the first to become almost hysterical at the mere suggestion that we should have one of our Crown corporations operated in a sound fashion and in contemplation of profit. One of my colleagues from Winnipeg will be dealing more specifically with the disasters which have occurred under an NDP government out in Manitoba with the same type of philosophy the hon. member is asking us to accept for Air Canada tonight. I am sorry the hon. member did not attend the committee hearings when this matter was considered. If he had been there, even he would have been swayed a bit by some of the arguments placed by members on the government side as well as members from my party.

After the debate which occurred at committee, even the minister was willing to accept the amendment before us, provided it related only to the operation of the Board of Directors as opposed to the capacity of the company itself. That would have been the effect if the amendment was inserted in Clause 6.

Let us get matters into perspective. Let us realize what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has asked us to do in this House concerning Air Canada. Up to the present time Air Canada has had a $5 million capital. Most of the money used by Air Canada—and it is a billion dollar organization at the present time—has been loaned by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) on behalf of the people of Canada to Air Canada. It has been loaned at a nominal interest rate. Approximately $700 million of funds have been put into Air Canada, in addition to the $5 million of capital. The hard fact is that Air Canada has been running at a loss for the last three years. In fact, after 40 years of existence, Air Canada has total retained earnings of only $18 million as of today.

As further amendments are reached, I will put into evidence the contrast Air Canada's sad record has been over those 40 years compared to other airlines which it is competing with that have built up substantial retained earnings during the same period of time. The Minister of Transport is coming to us and asking us, on behalf of the Canadian public, to agree to an authorized capitalization of Air Canada at $750 million.

Mr. Benjamin: What has that got to do with the amendment?

Mr. Stevens: The hon. member is asking what that has got to do with this amendment. Obviously he has not read the amendment. Tonight, tomorrow, or whenever this bill may be passed, we will authorize the government to put $750 million of our capital into Air Canada without even the suggestion of a commitment of a dividend or interest from Air Canada back to the public treasury. In short, it will be $750 million that can go into Air Canada with no further reference to this House.

In today's money cost at 10 per cent, it means in effect that Air Canada will be entitled to a subsidy of $75 million a year out of the pockets of the taxpayers of Canada, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has the audacity to stand up in the House and say it is wrong for us to propose an amendment which simply says that the directors, in the sleepy fashion in which they run Air Canada, should at least follow sound business practices and should try to make a profit.

Let us accept the facts. I have indicated that if we allow this bill to go through, $750 million will be the total capitalization that can be put into Air Canada, doing nothing. If Air Canada simply took that money and put it out at 10 per cent, it could make $75 million, and yet the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre tells us that, notwithstanding those facts, we should not expect it to make a profit, or we should not even hint to it that we would like it to carry on in contemplation of a profit.

Let us look at some of the evidence that was put forth in the committee hearings. For example, we were told that of the $750 million on a pro forma basis over the next five years, the government contemplates that only $370 million will actually be paid, in the form of paid in capital. I found it most interesting that there has been a misrepresentation with respect to the effect of that paid in capital. We have been told repeatedly that the reason the capitalization of Air Canada must be changed is that it has to be made vital and competitive with other airlines, that, in short, this capital is needed in order that Air Canada can somehow show a better profit picture over the coming years. We are simply saying in the amendment that if you intend to make a better profit over the coming years, then say so, write it into the act, let the succeeding boards of directors know at least that when this legislation was passed we in the House believed they should carry on their business in contemplation of profit.

The second thing I would like to point out is that not only do we feel they should carry on in contemplation of that profit but, what is rather remarkable, is that we had two pro forma statements furnished to us in committee. One showed what would happen to Air Canada if no financing change took place. Oddly enough we found that if no financing change should take place, the retained earnings as far as Air Canada is concerned, should be $70.7 million by 1981, but with the recapitalization, the retained earnings they contemplate would only be $69 million. In short, it makes virtually no difference.

The recapitalization that is being asked for by the minister, and which we have indicated should at least reflect a sizeable profit as far as the Air Canada pro forma statements are concerned, will in fact not result in greater retained earnings in 1981 than it would if the situation were left exactly as it is today. I think that is one thing, when we are considering the motion put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that we should bear in mind. Air Canada is in effect stating that this refinancing will have no net effect on its retained earnings between now and 1981, but the important thing is that it will have no net effect provided Air Canada makes the money it contemplates it can make between now and 1981 which, contrary to what the socialists may think, means it has to make a profit. If it does not make that profit, the net result will be that the retained earnings between now and 1981 will be less for Air Canada and it will be the taxpayers of Canada who will have given the party. They in turn will be drained by an indirect subsidy in the form of free capital to the tune of possibly $60 million, $70 million, or $75 million in the form of lost interest.

That is why I believe, after having heard the sad tale of how Crown corporations are being operated in this country, how AECL lost $290 million last year alone, how virtually every Crown corporation which this government has ever had the responsibility to run has been a disaster, that when we are considering the recapitalization of an airline such as Air Canada we should say, fine, if you need this raw capital you should agree to carry on Air Canada in accordance with sound business principles and in contemplation of profit.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And in particular the contemplation of profit. Do not forget the words "in particular".

Mr. Stevens: Is it not odd that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has stated that those lines to which I am referring are ridiculous lines? How far out of touch can that hon. member be? How far out of touch can these socialists be, these socialists who propped up this government in October of 1972 until May of 1974, and then had the audacity to say that somehow there is too much inflation in the country? It is their type of thinking that led to the inflation, the fiscal spending and the extravagance of the Trudeau government.

Mr. Breau: That is not true.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you against the pension increases we won?

Mr. Stevens: Let me get it clearly on the record. It is often stated by government representatives that somehow all airlines are finding it rather tough and that Air Canada should not be faulted for losing money, such as the $20 million it lost last year. That is just not true. Last year airlines made big money. American Airlines made $56 million; Eastern Airlines made $46 million, Allegheni Airlines made $14 million, Piedmont Airlines made $4 million, Pan American Airlines made $94 million, Braniff Airlines made $27 million, and Ozark Airlines made $7 million.

Mr. Benjamin: Tell us about CP Air.

Mr. Stevens: CP Air also made money.

Mr. Benjamin: They did not.

Mr. Stevens: The fact is that in the past year airlines made good money. Air Canada lost money, and our point is that we think it must be made doubly clear that if we give it this added capital, it must in future try to make a profit just like its competitors have been making.

Mr. Breau: Are you speaking for your party?

Mr. Stevens: It is time the reactionary views of the socialists receive less credence. It is time they are put in the waste basket where they belong. The socialists have been a plague in this country for three decades, and it is time the country got rid of that plague.

Mr. McKenzie: May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—DEGREE OF SUPPORT FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have asked for the opportunity to speak tonight in the adjournment debate on a subject that has been of great concern to me from the time I first campaigned in the riding of Kootenay West, that is, the economic development, or lack of it, of both the Kootenays. Recently we witnessed the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) signing several agreements with the province of B.C., the first time that any substantive agreement has been signed by the government with that province since 1974.

My concern is that in terms of the general development agreement which provides the overview and the basic thrust as to how economic assistance will be provided to that province there are three areas within that framework of the general development agreement that are clearly singled out and designed for special attention. We have the northeast part of British Columbia, the northwest part of British Columbia and the Kootenays.

I was very disturbed and disappointed, when I reviewed the various agreements which had been signed, to note that the assistance under the Regional Development Incentives Act specifically earmarked for Kootenay West was not renewed on December 31, 1975. It had not in fact again been put in place. Certainly it has been put in place for the northeast and the northwest, and I do not deny that there is a need. However, it seems to me that the other areas, particularly the Kootenays, earmarked in the GDA have not been identified.

If we look at all the agreements we find that they are applicable to all parts of British Columbia except for the lower mainland and southern Vancouver Island and except for those areas earmarked under the RDIA. I note, for example, that $5 million in assistance has been earmarked for small enterprise. I must say that I am very disappointed when I look at the figures. We see $30,000 for small businesses, but we see that they are limited in that they cannot have a capitalization of greater than $60,000. What can be done to expand or establish a new industry with that kind of financing? Whether it is a grant, a loan or whatever, it simply is not going to be effective.

I would like to move on to my specific concern. I have difficulty in finding any specific reference to Castlegar. Castlegar has a potential for 150 new homes tomorrow. It will have a potential of 150 new jobs as soon as Can Cel expands. Castlegar is a bedroom community for the city of Trail. We will witness an expansion of the Cominco operations at Trail, costing some $425 million over the next six or seven years and employing 400 or 500 people for that period of time, and there are no accommodations. Why do we not have accommodations, and why can the industrial potential of Castlegar not be realized? Transportation is available, skilled workers are available, and everything else which is needed, except water, is available.

The Columbia River is right at Castlegar's doorstep, but the only way in which that community is going to be provided with potable water, and the only way that community is going to thrive, expand and realize its economic potential, is with proper provision for funding under the DREE program and under CMHC and with federal assistance and municipal participation. The municipality is prepared to carry its share of the load, but the only way it is going to survive is with a proper combination of those elements. The minister has indicated to me that there is provision under the new agreements which have been signed for that very specific problem, a very severe and acute problem which will shut down the industrial potential and the economic development of that community. It will also severely affect the livelihood of its citizens. I am pleased that the minister feels that there is potential within the agreement to provide that particular assistance, but quite frankly, I find it couched in such general and vague terms that I have difficulty in believing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ed. Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, on July 6 the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) asked a question as to the scope of subsidiary agreements being signed with the province of British Columbia. I am pleased to remind all members of this House of the signing, on July 8, of two agreements between our department and the province of British Columbia. These agreements provide a vehicle for coordinating and highlighting ongoing programs of the federal and provincial governments which are concerned with creating opportunities in the industrial sector, in agriculture and, more generally, in the rural areas of British Columbia.

The Canada-British Columbia Industrial Development Subsidiary Agreement identified areas of potential development within the province, recognizing the heavy dependence on export markets, the relatively narrow industrial base concentrated in small businesses and on resource activities such as forestry and mining. This agreement will provide $110 million in funding to assist in the diversification and distribution of economic activity throughout British Columbia. It will also provide for a large range of programs, including financial incentives and loans for small enterprises, financial support for industrial parks, and infrastructure and support for industrial commissions. In addition our department has also recently designated a large area in northern British Columbia for eligibility under DREE's regional development incentives program.

Under the Agriculture and Rural Development Subsidiary Agreement, the federal and provincial governments have committed themselves to programs expected to result in the expenditure of $87 million over the next five years to increase opportunties and employment in rural areas and encourage increased agricultural production. Sixty million dollars of this will be cost-shared between the two governments, while the remainder will be provided from the private sector.

When the hon. member for Kootenay West asked whether assistance for the water problem being experienced by Castlegar and district can be provided under these agreements, I can only indicate that the new initiatives are sufficiently broad so as to enable the province and my department to provide assistance to areas outside the lower mainland-southern Vancouver Island areas, whenever projects can be accommodated within the stated objectives. With respect to the situation at Castlegar, I understand that officials of our department in Victoria and provincial officials are continuing to co-operate with municipal representatives in an effort to identify possible federal and provincial programs that might provide assistance. It is possible that assistance might be considered under the newly signed industrial agreement, but only if it can be related to infrastructure needs of an industry and in some way meets the objectives and criteria of the agreement.

I would indicate to the hon. member that years of study, together with months of discussion and negotiation, have produced these two agreements. Together, they represent both a good example of federal-provincial co-operation and a new emphasis on economic development in British Columbia. For the Department of Regional Economic Expansion they represent an important additional step along the road defined by our legislative mandate, which is to tackle regional disparities wherever in Canada they are encountered and, to a very large extent, in co-operation with the provincial governments.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—ENFORCEMENT OF MINE SAFETY REGULATIONS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER OF LABOUR

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, this evening I raise once more the question of the appointment of territorial mining inspectors, a matter of great importance to those who work in the mines of the Northwest Territories. I raised this question on June 29 but did not receive a satisfactory answer. I directed it on June 30 to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand) but did not receive a satisfactory answer then, either. I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro (Hamilton East)) a question on June 14 about the appointment of inspectors in the Northwest Territories and was assured that my important questions would be answered. I am not satisifed with the government's non-answer to my question.

Surely I need not emphasize how important to people who work in the mines in the Northwest Territories is the appointment of mining inspectors who are concerned with the health and safety of miners. This concern is understandable because the mortality rate of miners in the Northwest Territories is very high.

As a result of this concern, and because the miners in the Northwest Territories do not feel the present federal mining inspectors are doing a competent job, the United Steelworkers Union got in touch with the territorial government, asking it to enforce the territorial mining safety ordinance by appointing territorial inspectors. This request was made to the commissioner at a meeting which took place on February 14, this year. The union received the assurance that this would be done.

Having heard nothing, the union wrote to the commissioner on May 25 this year, to learn what had happened. The commissioner wrote back on May 30 this year saying that he had written to the federal government on February 15, 1977, asking for authority to appoint territorial mine inspectors. He also informed that local of the United Steelworkers Union in the Northwest Territories that he had been trying for several years to get such authority but his efforts had not met with success.

That local of the United Steelworkers Union received, on June 8 this year, a letter from the office of the Minister of Labour. The letter said categorically that this matter does not come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labour.

Quite apart from any question to do with mine safety and the appointment of inspectors to enforce safety standards, there seems to be some confusion in this area. Whose responsibility is it? The commissioner says it is not his responsibility. The Minister of Labour says it is not his. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development does not seem quite certain whose responsibility it is.

Again I ask the government to give the commissioner of the Northwest Territories authority to appoint mining inspectors. If it has already approved this, made some move toward it, or is ready to do so, why has it not notified the commissioner of this very important decision?

These are simple requests, although they deal with a very serious issue. There is no way that such a matter should drag on for months and months. I am quite sure that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of Labour and the government generally know of this issue because there have been many letters going back and forth.

I have raised this matter in the House three times, this being the third time. It is about time the government came forward with some kind of answer to clarify the matter. There are lives at stake, and the health of many people who work in the mines. It is about time the government had an answer.

I now give the government another opportunity to answer to the people of Canada, and in particular the people of the Northwest Territories, as to what is the decision. Where are they now? May I ask the minister that?

Mr. Ed. Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) first raised this question with the minister on June 29, he gave the impression that the responsibility for enforcing the mining safety ordinance was with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). However, Northwest Territories Mining Safety and Rules is a territorial ordinance, the enforcement of which is presently the responsibility of the Yellowknife Engineering and Mine Inspection Unit of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

On February 15, 1977 Commissioner Hodgson wrote the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand) suggesting that mine inspection responsibilities be transferred to the territorial government effective September 1, 1977. His request was in response to a letter from the United Steelworkers of America, one of reportedly numerous requests made over the years from various mining related bodies in the Northwest Territories that the territorial government become actively involved in enforcing the Mining Safety Ordinance.

On May 25, 1977, the union again wrote to the commissioner inquiring as to the progress of his decision with respect to their proposal that the territorial government assume the responsibilities of mine inspection stating they are "ready to nominate suitable candidates for the new positions as they are established".

The request has been reviewed by officials both in Ottawa and in the field and the minister feels that the proposed transfer should be viewed positively.

However, the proposed transfer will affect the lives of many people. The views of mine workers, unions, mine management, territorial government and the department must be considered as to the effectiveness and the personnel implications of such a transfer. To be of any value, the proposed transfer must provide the Northwest Territories with a mining inspection service which better serves the mine workers and thus ultimately mine management.

In view of the fact that the busy summer season is now in full swing, it would appear that a complete study of the situation could not be made and a final decision taken in order for a transfer to take place by the September 1 deadline suggested by Commissioner Hodgson.

Mr. Firth: That is a non-answer. This is the fourth time I have given the government an opportunity to answer, and I still do not have an answer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. This is the late show. The hon. member had seven minutes to put his argument, and the parliamentary secretary three minutes to reply.

ENERGY—CONSERVATION—GRANTS FOR HOME INSULATION—AVAILABILITY TO OTHER PROVINCES OF PROGRAM SIMILAR TO THAT OF NOVA SCOTIA AND P.E.I.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in connection with a question asked on June 29 of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie). The answer was less than satisfactory, as is usually the case with that minister. When asked a question, he adopts one of two ways of proceeding. He either grins inanely, or jokes and laughs about the question. He appears to suffer from the gas he is suppose to regulate. He is saucy and insulting with his answers. In this case he was both.

The question had to do with the new home insulation program which is now being extended to eight other provinces of Canada. I am not referring to the program which applies to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, but a lesser discriminatory program for the other eight provinces. There was nothing until we started insisting last February that they could not be discriminated against indefinitely. There was nothing until we started insisting that the government should not simply have a home insulation branch program in the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, which have Liberal governments, but should implement such a program across Canada. But it has now introduced this discriminatory program, and when the minister introduced it in his official release of June 27, he misled the people of Canada and he misled the House. In that statement, at page five, the minister said:

—all provinces have been briefed on the details of the home insulation program and are generally supportive of it.

Mr. Speaker, there is not a word of truth in that statement. Province after province has repudiated the idea that they were briefed in detail about the program. All that happened was that the minister got on the telephone to ministers in the various provinces and told them he intended to bring in the program he announced. Effective consultation did not take place with any of them. This was confirmed by the minister in Ontario and by his deputy minister, and by other premiers and ministers since. That was a wrong statement, an incorrect statement, an untrue statement.

Then at page six of the same release the minister said that four conditions had been set. The minister said:

At the present time the conditions have been met by Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. It is hoped that during the month of July the other provinces will formally declare their willingness to implement the measures which are not already in effect.

In other words, the minister was saying that Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Manitoba and the Northwest Territories had agreed. There was not a word of truth in that statement. The program has been repudiated by the province of Newfoundland—I give this as only one instance; I only have seven minutes at my disposal. The hon. gentleman's statement has been repudiated by the minister of mines and energy in Newfoundland. In a release dated June 30 he spoke of the disappointment with which he viewed the announcement made by the government on June 27, hastily put together in such a way as to be uniform in its application and therefore giving the poorer provinces the same level of subsidy as the richer provinces.

I am still quoting the minister of mines and energy in Newfoundland. He said:

> It is a regressive and inequitable program. We have the highest unemployment and the lowest average income level and the highest petroleum products prices, yet we are offered the same subsidy as Ontario, Alberta and the other provinces.

The program is discriminatory because there are six conditions attached to it less favourable than those attached to the programs in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. The same conditions will not apply there. The benefits are not taxable there. They get bigger grants in those two provinces. The project only applies in Newfoundland to houses constructed prior to 1941, though it applies to pre-1921 homes in the other provinces. It's a joke, a sick joke. I wish an election were called tomorrow so that we could get to the public with this issue and get the minister his answer from the people. I wish the mandarins of the Liberal party would get up their nerve and call an election tomorrow.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The people of Newfoundland would inform the government of their adverse reaction to this hasty, inequitable, and highly conditional program in no uncertain terms, and demand that the program be withdrawn. Is this a province which agreed to the program?

The premier of the province issued a statement on July 5. He was extremely upset over the discrimination shown against the citizens of Newfoundland by the federal government in offering such an ill-conceived version of the program given to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. It was made in haste he said, without any meaningful consultations with the provinces, the reason for this unseemly haste being to gain political points which might have been lost through recent petroleum price increases. It is an interference with the internal policies of the provinces. It is obvious the federal government has decided to use the program for partisan, political purposes, and so on. The premier recommends that the province should withdraw from the scheme and that there be a federal-provincial conference with regard to it.

How does this square with the minister's statement of June 27 that he had engaged in meaningful consultation with the provinces and that they were supportive of this program? What poppycock! I never thought when I came, the greenhorn to this Chamber, that I would be speaking here tonight in 100 degree heat addressing myself to a federal minister who is attempting to fool the people with this type of poppycock. Who does he think we are that a minister of the federal government would give out a statement so inaccurate, so misleading, so grossly negligent, so deceitful—a major minister, I hate to say it—

An hon. Member: Not very major.

Mr. Crosbie: In this government any minister is a major minister who can open his mouth and smile. Most of them cannot even do that.

We now have a program which the minister has instituted which lacks any sense of reason at all. It is more effective and efficient to insulate a home that is being built than to insulate one built before 1941, yet this new program does not even apply to new homes being built in eight provinces of Canada. It is not going to apply to new homes built after September, 1977. It makes no sense. It almost makes one weep and gnash one's teeth that the Government of Canada thinks it can use the security blanket of national unity to hide the fact from people who live in eight provinces of Canada that they are being discriminated against because they do not have a Liberal provincial government.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask the parliamentary secretary who is going to reply to show some pangs of conscience and to repudiate his minister. I ask him to tell us that his minister has made a bad mistake and that he is recommending the same program for the rest of Canada that now applies in Nova Scotia and P.E.I. I ask that the program apply to new homes in particular; that it will be applied first in areas of high unemployment. Money does not appear to be a problem—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. I should also like to say to the hon. member that the temperature in the House at the present time is 76 degrees.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the information that the temperature is only 76 degrees; I feel better now. The minister has answered this question a few times and I am wondering why the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) did not pay attention to those answers which the minister has already given on this subject.

Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island are heavily dependent on imported oil for electrical generation, to the extent of 63 per cent in the one case and in the other case 100 per cent. In all other provinces except New Brunswick oil is used to generate less than 7 per cent of the electricity consumed in those provinces. Accordingly, electricity prices in these two provinces are much more directly tied to oil price increases than is the case in other provinces, and in the last two years electricity prices have escalated at a dramatic rate. In order to minimize the impact of the higher prices the federal government decided to institute an insulation assistance program which would result in a reduction in the over-all energy bill of householders in the two provinces. This approach was adopted rather than instituting a subsidy to maintain artificially low electricity prices because of the need to provide a continuing benefit to householders.

Other provinces, while also faced with higher oil prices, have not experienced the same increase in electricity prices. Accordingly a somewhat lower, but still substantial, level of subsidy will be made available to those provinces.

While there are differences between the national program and that available in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, the minister has explained why these differences exist. The Canadian home insulation program, with its major benefits to all Canadians, will be delivered as it was announced. The hon. member can bank on this.

The government of the province of Newfoundland and Labrador has agreed to adopt energy conserving standards for all new residences, and will set up an enforcement mechanism as quickly as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO TAKEOVER OF PONY SPORTING GOODS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing necessity concerning recent cabinet approval of the sale of Pony Sporting Goods of Canada, of which Senator Davey is a director and shareholder, and in particular concerning the fact that the cabinet apparently hid the purchaser's identity behind subsidiaries of the real purchaser, Mitsubishi International of Japan, already 50 per cent associated with Senator Davey and associates in Pony Sporting Goods of the United States. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce make a statement answering the following specific points: Was the cabinet aware that Pony Sporting Goods Limited was suspended by the Ontario Securities Commission in January of 1977 for delinquency in filing financial information and that Gordon Dryden, Treasurer of the Liberal Party of Canada and director/officer of the Unity Bank, filed an insider's trading report dated September 11, 1973 with the Ontario Securities Commission, as did the Unity Bank itself, declaring that each controlled or owned in excess of 10 per cent of Pony Sporting Goods Canada Limited; and finally, what representations were made to cabinet or the Foreign Investment Review Agency on behalf of this sale and have Senator Davey and Gordon Dryden as a result of the sale been bailed out financially?

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR ACTION ON SALARIES OF EXECUTIVES AND PROFESSIONALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, without the necessity of a preamble I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House, noting that the Anti-Inflation Board has called on Bell Canada to roll back to not more than $2,400 a year the increases granted to its executives, asks the government why penalties were not also imposed as has been done several times in the cases of groups of ordinary workers, calls on the government to press the Anti-Inflation Board to roll back the excessive salary increases of all executives and professionals, and insists that the salary of Mr. Ian Sinclair be made public in Canada, rather than waiting for this to be done by the Securities Exchange Commission of the United States, and that his income as president of Canadian Pacific be made subject to the same guidelines that are supposed to apply to all other Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to the Standing Order requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

COMMITTEE STUDY OF ALLEGED ERRORS WHICH RESULTED IN DISADVANTAGE TO BENEFICIARIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a very important matter, especially for senior citizens.

In view of the fact that thousands of 65 year-old persons who were drawing unemployment insurance on January 1, 1976 and whose benefits were cancelled as a result of decisions taken by officials who advised them to apply for an old age security pension or for a Quebec pension have lost all their rights to those benefits as a result of a decision made by Justice Jean-Eudes Dubé, former minister of public works, because they followed the advice of federal officials, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That a committee of the House consider all circumstances surrounding those profitable mistakes for the government which have been made by its officials thus depriving thousands of claimants of unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ELECTIONS

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL'S STATEMENT ON NEED FOR ELECTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity about which I hope there will be no debate and no question about consent. It concerns the press statement made on Monday by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) which was both interesting and thoughtful. In it he criticized the Solicitor General's (Mr. Fox) statement to the effect that there should be an early election. That statement had been made by the Solicitor General under obvious pressure—pressure so great we thought his head would blow up and cover us all with sawdust.

● (1410)

Mr. Poulin: Why don't you put your motion?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That the Solicitor General be given the opportunity to make a statement on motions answering the questions raised by the hon. member for Vaudreuil, and in particular to explain the government's planned action on Bill 101, their proposals for rule changes in the House of Commons, and the reason why action could only be taken on these matters after an election.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there unanimous consent for the putting of the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Paproski: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said no.

REQUEST THAT AID TO CUBA BE DISCONTINUED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since Communist Cuba is reported as having increased its military and civilian presence in Angola by as much as one third, I move—

Mr. Rodriguez: No.

Mr. Jelinek: —seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That all financial and other aid to Cuba by Canada be discontinued until such time as all Cuban military aggression in Africa is withdrawn.

Mr. Rodriguez: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such motion requires unanimous consent, and it is apparent there is not unanimous consent for it.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF DOCUMENT ENTITLED "THE WAY AHEAD"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. As the House will likely adjourn in the near future, yet motion No. 13 under government business standing in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) which appeared on the order paper last February and which called for the establishment of a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to be appointed to consider and report on the document entitled "The Way Ahead" has not been called to date—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That's the way this government goes ahead.

Mr. Stevens: —and as we all know our economy has declined still further with higher inflation, higher unemployment, and less real growth than there was even last spring, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield):

That this House urge the government to call motion No 13 forthwith as an item of government business so that the special jont committee contemplated by the Minister of Finance may be formed and carry out its terms of reference during the forthcoming parliamentary recess.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House pursuant to Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED FUNDING OF TORONTO RAPE CRISIS CENTRE UNDER CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As the Toronto rape crisis centre has provided an extremely necessary service to that community; as the centre was funded under the local initiatives program and such funding has come to an end; and as the Ontario ministry of community and social services has refused to fund the centre, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration be instructed to reconsider funding of this program under the Canada Works program.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such motion?

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

ALLEGATION POLICE REMOVED DOCUMENTS PERTAINING TO YORK PLACE FROM HAMILTON OFFICE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who assured us he would be in the House this afternoon—

Mr. Paproski: Where's chicken Ouellet?

Mr. Whiteway: —and the absence of the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In today's city edition of the Hamilton Spectator it is reported that RCMP officers on Friday, July 15, served a search warrant on the Hamilton offices of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and removed all documents pertaining to York Place. Can the Prime Minister say if that report is correct and, if it is, if this raid was initiated or directed by himself or any other minister of the Crown?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not been informed of this seizure of documents. I think that should deal with part of the last question.

YORK PLACE, HAMILTON—POSITION OF CORPORATION AS MORTGAGE HOLDER

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? As the Prime Minister is no doubt aware, this matter having been raised yesterday during the question period, the answer to order paper question No. 812 paragraph 12, asking whether CMHC ranked as first mortgage holder at all times with respect to York Place was evasive. When this matter was brought to the attention of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, did he or his office inquire of Mr. Stanley Dudzic, the lawyer for CMHC, if CMHC at any time did not rank as a first mortgage holder? What was the reply of the solicitor for CMHC? If the minister did not ask him that critical question, why did he not?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no comments to make about the RCMP inquiry. If necessary, the minister will make a statement in the House and I think the matter can be referred to the Solicitor General.

With regard to the second question, I take it as notice.

[English]

YORK PLACE, HAMILTON—PROPOSED PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, it is now eight months since the opposition first brought this matter to the attention of the minister and some eight months since the hon. member for St. John's East asked for an inquiry. In view of the move by the RCMP and the confusion, allegations, charges, countercharges, and a host of unanswered or inadequately answered questions, does the Prime Minister not think it reasonable to call for a full public inquiry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yet again I will give the answer. I believe the police are investigating, as the hon. member has obviously indicated. We will wait for the report. We believe in due process, not inquisitorial justice.

YORK PLACE, HAMILTON—ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF ANSWERS BY MINISTER

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, certainly there is some matter the Prime Minister can answer directly today. It is with respect to the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who, after assuring me last evening across the floor of the House he would be here today, is again absent from his place to answer very important questions with respect to this matter. The first question I have for the Prime Minister is where is his minister? Has the Prime Minister, as the head of the government, looked into the matter dealing with improper and indeed, I regret to say, false answers to questions made on July 15, 1977 by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs which also was compounded by the statement made yesterday by the parliamentary secretary in the absence of the minister? Has the Prime Minister looked into this? Is the Prime Minister prepared to state a position on the obvious inadequacies and indeed inaccuracies with regard to the York Place matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making a very serious charge of falsehoods. Of course, I will want to look into that allegation. I hope the hon. member will be prepared to support his assertions in a less flimsy way than he has done thus far in his questions.

YORK PLACE, HAMILTON—ALLEGATIONS AGAINST MINISTER OF LABOUR—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INQUIRY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it would be very interesting if the Minister of State for Urban Affairs were here to answer the questions rather than put the Prime Minister in the invidious position in which he finds himself today. On October 27, 1976 the former Minister of Urban Affairs told the House that he would check into allegations that the Minister of Labour had played a role in securing the $1.5 million loan increase to Morgenti. I simply want to ask the Prime Minister whether he in fact followed up the former minister's inquiry and, if so, what conclusions did he reach?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will hear the question of privilege at three o'clock.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF AUTOMOBILES—CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It arises out of an announcement this week by General Motors of a 6 per cent increase in the price of 1978 cars. This will be in addition to the 6 per cent increase implemented last year. This will result in an increase in the price of new cars of 12 per cent in one year. Will the minister consider discussing with the auto industry the necessity of this added price increase?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is not an increase of 12 per cent a year, but an increase of 5.5 per cent last year and 6 per cent this year. I shall look into this to get more details and, if necessary, I shall get in touch with the industry representatives but an increase of 6 per cent seems rather normal considering the present inflation rate.

[English]

SUGGESTED ELIMINATION OF DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN PRICES FOR AUTOMOBILES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my information is that this will be the second increase in one year. Since there is at present a differential amounting to between $150 and $600 or more in the price of cars made and sold in Canada as compared with the price of a Canadian car sold in the United States, even after allowance has been made for all taxes paid in both countries, and since one of the main purposes of the auto pact was the elimination of the gap in prices, would the minister direct his department to study again the price differential with a view to its elimination?

● (1420)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the problems I raised when I met the presidents of the automobile industry of Canada two weeks ago.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: That is the answer we have been getting ever since the first year of the agreement. Since the auto pact creates, in effect, a free trade situation for the auto manufacturing industry whereas no such situation exists in favour of individual Canadians purchasing cars, while the price of Canadian automobiles continues to be significantly higher than in the United States, would the minister discuss with his colleagues, especially the Minister of Finance, the possibility of removing the tariff on autos produced in the U.S.A. so that the benefits of the free trade in autos resulting from the pact would be made available to Canadians wishing to purchase new cars, not just to the manufacturers?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to consider the idea the hon. member has put forward, but I am not sure it will solve the problem he has raised.

ROLE OF UNITED STATES IN REINTRODUCTION OF DICKEY-LINCOLN DAM PROJECT ON BORDER OF MAINE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of the Environment.

In view of the fact that the American government set up a project a few years ago for the construction of a dam, which was to be called the Dickey-Lincoln Dam, on the Saint John River, on the borderline between the State of Maine and the Province of Quebec, that the people living in the area have again quite recently made their opposition to this project known, and that the American project is apparently being reintroduced, could the minister advise the House whether he has been informed by the American government of the reactivation of this project? If so, could the Minister tell the House what the position of the Canadian government will be in this respect?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am told that discussions have been going on for several months and even years regarding the objections raised by some groups in the United States. I will have to check in order to determine what will be the implications, if any, for the Canadian territory. This river borders on the U.S. and Canada. Of course, there are organizations such as the International Joint Commission which could intervene. But I will check and inform the hon. member.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

TAKEOVER OF PONY SPORTING GOODS—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF NAMES OF SHAREHOLDERS OF PONY SPORTING GOODS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and it arises from the cabinet decision on June 30 to permit the sale to foreign interests of Pony Sporting Goods (Canada) Limited. Will the minister tell us whether the cabinet was aware that Unity Bank and Gordon Dryden, Treasurer of the Liberal Party of Canada and a director of the Unity Bank, each controlled or owned together in excess of 20 per cent of the shares of Pony Sporting Goods (Canada) Limited, as indicated in insiders trading reports to the Ontario Securities Commission? Would he also tell us why it permitted this sale following what he has already indicated was little scrutiny, and whether the same procedure as applies to ordinary individuals was followed?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I checked and all the procedures have been normally followed in this transaction whereby an American group tried to take over this business called Pony Sporting Goods. At no time were the officers of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, myself and the Minister of State (Small Business), who also worked on this matter, aware that Mr. Davey or Mr. Dryden were directors or shareholders of this company.

[English]

Mr. Cossitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister last spoke or answered a question in the House on this matter, when he said he was totally unaware of the situation at the time he made the decision, has he consulted any of his colleagues to see whether they were aware that Senator Davey and Gordon Dryden were involved with Pony Sporting Goods, and was the cabinet aware at the time of the decision that in effect it could possibly take steps to bail out financially these two prominent Liberals?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, at no time and I checked with my colleagues, and I do not intend to do so. My colleague, the Minister of State (Small Business) and myself, as well as the director and the officers of the agency concerned, were not aware of this, and if we had been, we would have treated them in the same manner as we treat any other Canadian citizen.

POSSIBILITY INVESTIGATION OF UNITY BANK INCLUDED INTEREST IN PONY SPORTING GOODS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the absence of the Minister of Justice, who in reply to a question I asked him a week or so ago said he would look into the matter, I direct my supplementary to the Solicitor General. When I raised the matter with the Minister of Justice, the minister said he would look into it. Would the Solicitor General tell me whether or not the RCMP investigation into the affairs of Unity Bank also involved investigations into interests in Pony Sporting Goods Limited held by two prominent Liberals, Senator Davey and Gordon Dryden?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not have an immediate answer to the hon. member's question. I will take it as notice and look into the matter.

CANADIAN OPEN GOLF CHAMPIONSHIPS—REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING SITE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question, through you as our first Commoner and leading golfer, to the Secretary of State who speaks to us for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Since something to be called the Canadian Open is to start Thursday on reconverted meadowland near Toronto and is supposed to be permanently based there, would the Secretary of State advise the CBC that the golf world in confederation has its own coast to coast rights too and good golf courses, and that no one area should be allowed to claim this event as its own? Hopefully the CBC could state that the Canadian Open is only a claim and not a fact, or call it the Canadian closed.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the last time I played golf was 25 years ago so I am not sure that I understood the full purport of the hon. member's question. But I take it that there is an important issue here which he wishes to communicate to the CBC and I shall be happy to do that.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROSPECTS FOR RETURNS TO PRODUCERS DURING COMING YEAR

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture; I know he has been waiting for a question for quite a long while. Knowing his interest in farmers and farm prices, and of course realizing that there is considerable discontent among the farmers because of the prices they are receiving for their products as compared with the prices ultimately paid by consumers, in order to give the farmers the fullest information as to the prospect of prices over the next few months, and within the next year in general, would the minister make a statement in the House setting out the projections of the Department of Agriculture regarding farm prices in general?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the right hon. gentleman knows, the Canadian Department of Agriculture has one of the best information services of any department in the Canadian government or any provincial government so far as agriculture and agricultural costs are concerned. In our recently announced food strategy paper my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and I have agreed to work together—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: —on publicizing these facts so that public and consumers will know just where their dollars are going.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR ARRANGEMENTS TO PERMIT PRODUCERS TO DELIVER BALANCE OF LAST YEAR'S CROP

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to learn of the rapprochement between him and the minister he mentioned. Also, I hope there will be a similar rapprochement between him and the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: That causes me to ask this question: knowing his undoubted interest in the farmer and his income, would he do something even though it is not under his department, although I often think the Wheat Board should be under him, in order to get some of the action he has just spoken of? Would he put in a word to the government, if not to the Minister of Transport, that the western farmers should have an opportunity between now and the end of the month to dispose, as far as possible, of the large surplus of wheat they have on hand? Unless it is taken up in the market by that date, when the new grain year opens up, they will find themselves with their quotas reduced to the extent of the wheat production which has not yet been marketed.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. member is not aware. He should get the latest report from the United States Department of Agriculture which shows that Canada is outselling the United States by tenfold, and I will turn the rest over to the hon. Minister of Transport in charge of the Wheat Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in all that fiction which the minister has just reported on. Because of his tremendous interest, could he pass on a word to the Minister of Transport to the end that the western farmer will have a fair deal, instead of being crucified as a result of the rules the Minister of Transport has imposed on the western farmers?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the right hon. gentleman giving me a chance to point out to him that the Canadian Wheat Board has announced quotas for wheat, an additional three bushels in eight blocks, as the right hon. gentleman probably knows. They have now called an initial three bushel quota starting August 1 in the remaining blocks throughout the region. Thus, unlike the time when the right hon. gentleman's government was around, when all elevators were plugged at all the wrong times, farmers are going to be able to deliver grain straight off the combine and into the elevators once again.

STUDY OF IMPORTATION OF ARTIFICIAL CHEESE—REQUEST FOR A REPORT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Agriculture. Some months ago I asked a question of the Minister of Agriculture concerning dairy farmers in Canada and the possible importation from the United States of artificial cheese into our country. In March he undertook to make a study of its impact on the incomes of dairy farmers in this country. I should like to ask him now whether he has had a chance to complete that study. If he has what are the results of it, because dairy farmers are quite concerned?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this was discussed with the dairy farmers and also with the Agricultural Stabilization Advisory Board of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I am working together with that minister on this problem. They are concerned also about the health standards and the type of food this would be. As far as we know, none of this has come into Canada. There have been no real laws or regulations passed against it, at this present time. It is within our criteria, and it has not received the go ahead.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether it is his intention to amend the regulations governing the importation of substitute food such as artificial cheese from the United States. When he is conducting his investigation, will he take into consideration the whole question of substitute foods from its nutritional value, as more and more medical doctors are concerned about that field?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is familiar with those issues which read: "Notes for an address by the Minister of Agriculture". He has probably come across at least a half a dozen which point out that we can eat a very wholesome and very nutritional diet without eating any imported foods, just by eating Canadian produced foods. If the nutritional experts advise us that this is an unnecessary product, and perhaps not as nutritious as it could be if it were produced solely in Canada, I would be in a better position to recommend, along with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that it not be allowed to be imported into Canada.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY INTO CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH AIRCRAFT OPERATE IN NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is in regard to a series of crashes which have taken place in northwestern Ontario and the fact that pilots have now circulated a petition calling for an inquiry into the conditions under which private aircraft and public aircraft are operated in northwestern Ontario. I wonder if the minister could indicate to the House whether he has changed his mind as to whether an inquiry is necessary under these new circumstances?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very conscious of the concern in northern Ontario regarding air safety and the reports arising out of recent incidents. After a similar situation some time ago, I conducted an investigation and determined that the parallels, in terms of their safety and precautions, were about the same in that region as in other parts of the country and that the highest Canadian standards were indeed in place. However, the recent incidents and the concern have led me to ask for a further investigation into the situation. That is now going on. I am willing to say that if that investigation reveals the need for a more formal inquiry, I will be happy to see that that is undertaken as well. The present fact appears to be that the standards and rules are adequate. The question is whether there are reasons, including economic pressures, for them being contravened. Of course, we would want to come to grips with that very important question.

TRANSPORT

DATE OF DECISION ON NEW EQUIPMENT FOR SHIPMENT OF POTATOES—ADEQUACY OF EQUIPMENT FOR THIS YEAR

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it relates to a series of questions familiar to the minister concerning the transport of potatoes. In light of the fact that today Mr. Nick Alder has indicated that his report is completed and that it will be circulated within the next few days to some of the provincial interests in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, can the minister indicate how soon a decision will be taken by the government particularly with respect to new vehicles, realizing the importance of having adequate equipment for the next shipping season in light of the large crop expected this year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the working group was given until August 1 for its report. It has now an effective draft report available. It will be discussing this with the interested groups in the region. Within a week or so I would expect to have a final report from the group. At that point the government will look at the matter immediately, and we will take such actions and make such decisions as seem to arise out of it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister has investigated with the local potato marketing board or with the supplier of the vehicles to ascertain whether there will be enough equipment available for the next shipping season, realizing the rapid decline and deterioration of the present equipment which has been rented primarily from the United States and the length of time it would take to place an order for new equipment to be available this coming shipping season?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the subjects which has been examined by this working group. I know they have some preliminary conclusions on it and will have final conclusions to put before us within a week or ten days.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

YORK PLACE, HAMILTON—RESPONSIBILITY OF CORPORATION FOR ASCERTAINING HOW MORTGAGE MONEY SPENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

An hon. Member: He has arrived.

Mr. Darling: Yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs told this House that neither his department nor CMHC has any responsibility to ensure that mortgage funds allocated to a particular project are actually spent on that project. Last year the Auditor General reported that the government did not always know how taxpayers' money is spent. Now we are told that they do not even care. Will the minister tell the House whether it is the government's view that it is irrelevant where the $5.9 million advanced by CMHC for the construction of York Place was actually spent?

• (1440)

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the parliamentary secretary ever said yesterday that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation did not take any further interest in the loans it guaranteed. In fact, the Corporation follows the current practice in this area; it grants the loan in the form of a progressive advance payment during construction, which is a way of controlling gradually the progress of the work.

[English]

Mr. Darling: I have another supplementary question for the minister. The question on the order paper was whether the money was used in York Place. The minister's answer was, no. It is irrelevant whether the contractors were paid, how they were paid or who paid them. We want to know if the money went for the purpose for which it was borrowed. In light of the allegations that substantial amounts were diverted and that we have now waited for eight months without proper answers, would the minister tell the House exactly where the money went and who got it?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think I should remind the hon. member that all advance payments are made through a lawyer who has the responsibility to see to it that each payment is used to search for title deeds, in order to ensure that the advance payment has priority over any other prior claim. On the other hand, the Corporation acts under the existing legislation in each province, and in this case, the Ontario legislature does not give any priority to the creditor unless he has registered either a lien or a judgment.

YORK PLACE, HAMILTON—SUGGESTED INDEPENDENT ASSESSMENT OF VALUE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Five point nine million dollars have gone into this project—a portion of which may have departed for destinations unknown. Will the minister now undertake to obtain an independent assessment of what York Place is actually worth before he begins putting the additional $1.2 million needed to complete the place?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that we will look into the matter very carefully before allotting any other funds.

On the other hand, I can assure the hon. member that with regard to what has happened in the past, the officials of my department supervised that case very closely and I can tell the House that, in their opinion, there were no irregularities except for a former employee of the company concerned which tells us that he is no longer working for it.

FORESTS

SPRUCE BUDWORM IN NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment who is also responsible for the federal forestry policy. In view of the fact that in Nova Scotia some two million acres of forest land are under some form of spruce budworm attack which will result in an eventual loss of some six million cords of spruce and balsam fir, causing a major catastrophe throughout our province, the economy of which is based on our forest industries, will the minister indicate, either today or when convenient, whether his department plans to assist contractors in harvesting the devastated areas and whether he has any ongoing plans of a long term nature to assist Nova Scotia during this difficult period?

[Mr. Darling.]

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the decision to spray or not to spray in the case of the spruce budworm attack is one that rests with the provincial authorities which, under our constitution, are responsible for the management of forests. The federal government is obviously involved in research on spruce budworm. In fact, over $30 million have been spent and a further increase in that amount will be made by a co-ordinated effort between Canada and the United States into the research aspect of the problem. Management practices, such as early harvesting, can in fact solve certain problems, and that appears to have been Nova Scotia's decision. We had not become involved in this part of their activities, nor do we intend to at the moment.

FISHERIES

LOBSTERS—COMPENSATION FOR STORM DAMAGE TO GEAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of the Environment in his capacity as Minister of Fisheries, and it has to do with severe losses by lobster fishermen as a result of storm damage to their lobster gear. On May 6 the minister indicated he was taking steps to temporarily overcome the situation. Now that the lobster season is over and that help has not come forward, I wonder what steps are being taken to compensate the fishermen for their losses?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check Hansard to see the exact words I used. Certainly, when I said that all steps would be taken to help fishermen find other gear it was then the lobster season. I noticed some efforts were made to get fishing gear from some other provinces. As to the compensation matter, I have made it clear in the House in relation to Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, that a disaster formula has to be used and triggered by the provincial authorities. It is employed by the federal government if the province decides to use the disaster formula. I have no requests from the province of Newfoundland in front of me at the moment.

PROPOSAL FOR INSURANCE AGAINST GEAR LOSS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I do not want to contradict the minister but it was brought to my attention that the minister of fisheries in the province of Newfoundland submitted a proposal about two months ago about gear loss insurance, requesting comments from the minister and asking for financial participation. Would the minister look at that and reply, probably later in the week, as to the answer from his officials?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I know that the minister did write to me about a possible gear insurance plan. Discussions have taken place for some three years since I have had this responsibility. We have tried to find a way to get a plan which would be acceptable to fishermen. This has not turned out to be possible. There are coercive conditions in the plan suggested by our colleague from the Newfoundland government which I personally do not accept. The fishermen themselves will have to be volunteers in this type of plan.

BILINGUALISM

POSSIBILITY OF GRANTING BONUS TO PUBLIC SERVANTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, I should like to put my question to the Prime Minister as he is well acquainted with the matter.

As the civil servants working in Montreal have refused to serve the public in both languages in the last few days; as the President of the Treasury Board has admitted publicly that as far as he is concerned the bilingualism premium should be paid retroactively to 1976; as it seems that the minister intends to impose sanctions because those services were refused, and before everyone involved becomes bitter, which is likely to happen, I ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to ask his minister to meet the civil servants concerned immediately with a view to finding a solution and avoid another bilingualism crisis?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board already has the required authorization from the cabinet to discuss the matter with the authorized representatives of the civil servants, Mr. Speaker. I am convinced that those meetings have already started, perhaps not with the Montreal dissidents, but surely with the Union and Alliance people.

For further details, the hon. member will have to wait till the minister answers the question himself, since he is expected later in the House. He will surely be here some time today.

AGRICULTURE

RESULTS OF MEETING WITH PROVINCES CONCERNING INDUSTRIAL MILK QUOTAS

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Following his meeting with his provincial counterparts, can the minister tell this House whether any agreement has been reached regarding the terms of payment of this controversial 25 cent levy dairy producers are supposed to pay in keeping with the 1977-1978 dairy policy? Also, is the minister prepared to assert that the distribution of quotas among all dairy producers has been equitable in 1977, considering all the unfair cuts that have been made against the interest of industrial milk producers over the last two milk years?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, discussion took place in Victoria at the provincial ministers meeting concerning this topic. At that time I made a proposal to them that they collect 25 cents a hundred in any fair and equitable way they saw fit and submit it to the federal government. There was some discussion at the meeting that it was our responsibility to collect it, but I reminded them that they already collected now $1.20 a hundred for export costs, and submitted it to the federal government. It is their duty to run quotas under this program which is totally within provincial jurisdiction. If they give me no other recourse, I will have to collect the 25 cents a hundred or its equivalent by subtracting that from the federal subsidy payment that we make to them.

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF ABENAKI MOTOR INN

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Now that the minister has received requests from the chief of the Millbrook Band Council and the president of the Union of Nova Scotia Indians that a public inquiry into all aspects of the construction and operation of the Abenaki Motor Inn immediately be established—and I made a request to him on February 1 of this year—will a public inquiry be established?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have no intention of establishing a public inquiry at this time.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that statements have been made that the motel in question is losing money day in and day out and that the taxpayers of this country have now put up over $2 million for the operation of this facility, how does the minister intend to get some answers which will clear the names of Indians in Nova Scotia with regard to the terrible, reprehensible way this operation has been run?

The Indians are taking the blame for this when the minister's officials should rightfully be taking it.

Mr. Allmand: The band council has asked that it be given an opportunity to take over this motel and run it directly. We are looking at that possibility and also a restructuring of the economic and financial aspects. That is now being explored. That has been made known to the band, and we have had several meetings with them about it.

CATTLE—MEASURES TO SAFEGUARD TRADE WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture, and it deals with last Monday's United States announcement of new import restrictions against certain Canadian cattle as a result of a new round of non-tariff barrier trade irritants and with particular regard to the recent brucellosis issue which could involve Canadian cattle. Can the minister assure the Canadian beef and dairy industries that his recent personal discussions with Mr. Bergland will preserve and hopefully safeguard Canadian cattle trading interests in our two-way cattle trade with the United States?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think I can reassure at least those producers of purebred cattle who have followed good health practices that the negotiations which took place between Mr. Bergland and myself were based on a realization of the importance of the two-way trade between our nations. For those people who have had their herds tested within the last 12 months and who have had any additional cattle they have added to their herds in the last three months tested, there will be no impediment in the export of their cattle.

We realize, and I am sure the hon. member realizes, that we need to tighten up our procedures for trying to eradicate brucellosis. I am sure the hon. member is aware that our rate of brucellosis is lower than the rate in the United States. The United States has some areas which are called brucellosis-free, and we have some as well. When these are published, we will be negotiating with the United States on this contract. I see some loss of export trade at the present time, but I do not look on that as a trade barrier. I look on it as strictly a health move, and contrary to what some people have suggested, I emphatically deny that it is a trade barrier the United States has imposed. It is a health measure.

BLUE TONGUE—POSSIBILITY OF REDUCTION IN TESTING

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that up until now the discussions seem to indicate that Canada is the loser. In the minister's discussions with the Secretary of Agriculture and his staff, was the possibility of a reduction of our Canadian requirement for a double test for blue tongue to a single test during the nonfly season discussed? This would lessen the probability of yet another beef and cattle trade war between our two countries.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we touched on that. They had no reservations about the programs we have because they recognize that our nation is practically free of blue tongue, and they are satisfied that the blue tongue outbreak we had in British Columbia was as a result of our cattle being infected by cattle from the United States. They commend the program we have. I disagree with what some people from the Canadian Cattlemen's Association are reported in press reports to have said. They have said that it is a trade retaliation move. I emphatically deny that because Mr. Bergland has no intention of doing that. I have a harmonious relationship with the American Department of Agriculture, and the relationship I have with the present Secretary of Agriculture is the best there has been for years.

MANPOWER

MEASURES TO CREATE JOBS IN CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that the most recent figures from Statistics Canada indicate a crisis in Canadian construction which is best indicated by the fact that there are over 8,000 unemployed construction workers in Toronto alone at a cost of millions of dollars a week in unemployment insurance, and in view of the fact that there are many worthwhile projects requiring the talents of construction workers, projects such as those once promised to upgrade urban transit systems in places such as Toronto, can the minister tell the House what steps his department will take to deal specifically with crisis levels of unemployment among construction workers and generally among our one million unemployed? Is he willing to spend money both on construction in urban transit and on other municipal winter works?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is hardly a question which can be answered within the constraints of the question period. I suggest with respect that that question would more appropriately be directed to the Minister of Finance.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED NEW BUDGET TO GIVE TAX CONCESSIONS TO MIDDLE AND LOW INCOME GROUPS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Prime Minister, since the Minister of Manpower and Immigration copped out.

In view of the fact that construction in the private sector is stagnating or declining, a fact which indicates that the private sector has not reacted to hand-outs granted to them in the last couple of budgets, can the Prime Minister tell the House if he is now prepared to stimulate business investment and to improve the lot of working people by bringing in a new budget as soon as possible which will grant major tax concessions to low income and middle income groups of Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that seems to be the type of representation that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance would want to convey to the minister. The hon. member heard me say just a short while ago—and I believe the Minister of Finance has also said this—that we are concerned because the private sector has not taken up the slack which was provided for it in the budget. In that sense I agree with the concern of the hon. member.

LOG BOOMS IN NANAIMO RIVER ESTUARY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. Would the minister advise the House if he is aware of the controversy surrounding the proposed development of Dukes Point, Nanaimo, British Columbia by the B.C. Development Corporation? Can he also state whether additional log booms will be allowed in the Nanaimo River estuary, or is it still government policy to phase out existing log booms in this estuary for ecological reasons?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is still the policy of the government to phase out log booms. In fact, the movement is toward less and less use of log booms because of new techniques. With the adoption of Fisheries Act amendments it will now be possible to ask for plans to be submitted before construction begins. This is what is happening in this case. A letter of June 15 indicates to the company which wants to develop an operation in this area that more information will be required before clearance is given.

PLACE OF SITTING DURING PIPELINE DEBATE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as leader of the House? In view of the statement you made, Mr. Speaker, this morning on the radio, to the effect that the extended sitting of this session to discuss pipelines will be held in the Senate chamber, and as the Senate will also be sitting there, which conjunction of circumstances has given rise to speculations as to who will be sitting where and when—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Abolish the Senate first.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —can the government House leader clear this confusion by saying who will sit where, when?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain I can give a clear answer to all the questions the hon. member raised. It has been suggested that the House of Commons, instead of sitting in the Senate chamber, might sit in the Victoria Museum.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In the what?

Mr. Paproski: You might as well have the House sit in the Banff Springs.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre clearly expressed a preference for the latter location I mentioned to the other place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: To heck with Stanley.

Mr. MacEachen: I believe, because some members opposite are interested in knowing what it would be like to sit in the Senate, that there is now some general agreement for sitting in the Senate; but the Senators will not be there at the same time. They will probably be observing the rapid pace of our business.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the government House leader confirm reports to the effect that when the other place was considered as a place in which this House might sit, the House leader of the New Democratic Party objected to sitting in that chamber, and it was therefore thought we might sit in the museum. Will the minister answer?

PRIVILEGE—MR. MUNRO (HAMILTON EAST)

YORK PLACE—STATEMENT BY HON. MEMBER FOR GRENVILLE-CARLETON

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise with reference to the statement the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) made in his question, a statement implying that the Minister of Labour was involved in matters concerning York Place, and involved improperly. Clearly, that implication was contained in the hon. member's statement. I rise seriously on a question of privilege because I think such a remark constitutes most inappropriate behaviour on the part of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Let me refer to what happened when this matter was raised in the House of Commons, back on October 27. A copy of the Spectator was flown in from Hamilton for the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). The hon. member had that copy in his possession almost contemporaneously with the appearance of the edition on the street in Hamilton on that day. He rose and quoted a story alleging some political interference on my part. I immediately got in touch with my solicitors and launched a libel suit against the Spectator. The matter is now before the courts.

I believe the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is well aware of that activity on my part. He must also be aware that my making statements now about those allegations in the Spectator would not be the wisest course for me to follow. Now that the matter is in the hands of my solicitors it is up to them to pursue it in the courts to its normal conclusion. Therefore freedom of expression on my part is limited at this time.

The Spectator printed an apology, an apology which, in the opinion of my solicitors, was not sufficient, and we are continuing the law suit.

What has the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton done? Using the excuse of his unhappiness with certain written answers provided to questions yesterday, the hon. member rose in his place and tried to "muddy up" a political personality who happens to be on the side opposite to him.

Mr. Chrétien: Hit and run.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): He used that flimsy excuse to launch another McCarthy-type smear against another member.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Oh, no, not at all.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I ask this paragon of parliamentary virtue from Grenville-Carleton to stand up now in the House and show some moral fortitude, if he is going to continue in that course of conduct, make a charge, and back it with something specific.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): If he does not have the guts, or is too cowardly to do that, let him at least have the fundamental decency to retract, and let him stop resorting to such obnoxious behaviour.

Of course, if the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton were possessed of any sort of courage he could resort to another course of conduct. He could go outside this House and make any statements he wishes, make any innuendoes about improprieties—

Mr. Epp: Order, order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In the circumstances I should like to ask the minister to confine his remarks strictly to the question of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: He has no guts.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I will conclude shortly, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has open to him that other course of conduct, after which I would have recourse against him, as would be my right. Why does the hon. member not show enough courage to do even that?

Mr. Trudeau: He has no guts.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this type of conduct to which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has resorted, involving innuendo, smears, and McCarthy-like tactics, makes me wonder about the appropriateness of parliamentary immunity as an institution of this House. If it is to be so abused by political opportunists with little sense of fair play and decency, opportunists who will hide behind this institution, I think the day will come when those in political life in this country, in this parliament, will want to re-examine that institution, to determine its appropriateness in this day and age.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), who was a member of the Bar, knows histrionics will not replace substance. I also thought he knew the rules of the House. I note that although he said this was a question of privilege, he did not move a motion at the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. Trudeau: But he did say you were a coward.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Let me refer hon. members to what took place yesterday. Yesterday, as reported on page 7780 of Hansard, I directed a question to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), part of which reads as follows:

Now, on October 27, 1976, the former minister of state for urban affairs told the House that he would check into allegations that the Minister of Labour had played a role in securing a $1.5 million loan increase to Morgenti. That is on the record for October of 1976. In the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I ask the government House leader whether he has followed up that inquiry. If the answer is no, why not, and if the answer is yes, what were the results and would he be prepared to table that report in the House? I am not asking the parliamentary secretary. I am asking the government House leader for this information.

The parliamentary secretary rose—

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down, sit down!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not accurate even in what he has just said.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I did not obtain an answer to a legitimate question I asked in this House.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Make a charge, Walter, and show some guts.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I did not ask that question idly. So that the House will know it was not asked idly, this matter rose on October 27, and I thank the hon. member for his tribute to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath),—

● (1510)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Show some guts, Walter.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): At that time the then minister of state for urban affairs in answer to a question reported on page 501 of Hansard said, and I quote:

If there are any irregularities, certainly I want to be the first to know about them, and I will check into this. However I can give the hon. member no assurances at this time, particularly as the matter is before the courts.

The government itself on a matter that was before the courts decided to answer the written questions on the order paper through the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) on July 15, 1977, last Friday. If a member of the House is prohibited from asking questions arising out of questions on the order paper that the government has answered, we indeed have to look at the rules of this House, and the Minister of Labour has no question of privilege whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If answers to questions by the government on their face raise further questions and the opposition does not pursue the earlier line of inquiry made by the hon. member for St. John's East, then the opposition is not doing its duty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Only some compassion for the Minister of Labour would prohibit me from reading into the record today the article with appeared on September 16, 1976, in the Hamilton Spectator. I have had some checks made, and I can be corrected on this—

Mr. Trudeau: Go read it outside the House.

Mr. Paproski: He will read it.

Mr. Trudeau: He hasn't got the courage to read it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In addition to other considerations, there may be some limits to procedure which would interfere with the hon. member reading the entire newspaper article at this time. I would be grateful if the hon. member would develop his argument.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to read the entire article, as I said, out of compassion for the minister for what it contains.

Mr. Trudeau: That is not compassion, that is cowardice.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The government has answered the question and again put the matter back into the public record. That is what it has done.

I have been advised that an action was commenced by the minister in October, 1976. He said it was, and I accept that. However, the matter has not been prosecuted by the minister.

The Hamilton Spectator stands by the substance of the story, and the situation involves the headline which in a subsequent edition the Hamilton Spectator—

Mr. Trudeau: Fine, then make a charge.

Mr. Paproski: If you want to get up on a question of privilege, you can make a speech.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If a member of this House has to take this kind of abuse from a minister of the government who, by answering questions last Friday, laid open for questioning the original matters raised by the hon. member for St. John's East, then this is a very sorry House of Commons indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the minister really has a question of privilege, he does not have it today. He would have had it yesterday when the matter was raised. That is when he could have chosen to raise it, but he did not choose to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. The only thing that is becoming increasingly clear is that there is increasing confusion. In light of the action last Friday by the RCMP and by the unanswered questions, the responsibility is on this government to lauch a full public inquiry.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no procedural machinery whereby I can hear the minister a second time on the same question of privilege.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have never seen in the House such a distortion of facts made by an hon. member in his remarks following some answers. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that opposition members are not interested in getting answers to the questions they raise. As a matter of fact, this is entirely in the line of thinking of the hon. member who has just spoken and who Mr. Speaker, has made a complete and unacceptable distortion of the answers given earlier this week to a series of written questions. If you read these answers to the questions, in no way can you end up by incriminating my colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), as the hon. member has just done. I find this attitude very mean, unacceptable and quite improper from a responsible member. I think that the answers given simply answer the questions on the order paper and have nothing to do with the alleged misconduct of my colleague, the Minister of Labour. Trying to conclude from those answers that there was improper and irregular conduct on the part of my colleague, the Minister of Labour, is altogether unacceptable.

I want to inform the House that according to reports I have received—following the undertaking made by my colleague the former minister of state for urban affairs—the procedures followed and the amount of work done to ascertain whether or not there had been any improper action, I can only conclude that this was not the case. And if the hon. member has enough guts, as my colleague the Minister of Labour said, let him go outside the House, make direct charges and repeat what he said.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The question of privilege raised by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) concerns itself with an inference contained in questions put during the question period with regard to his activities. The complaint is that that ought to take the form of another course of action. It seems to be a matter of entire disagreement between the parties. In any event, I do not have to decide whether it is the substance of a question of privilege. It is not accompanied by a motion which requires action by the Chair. Therefore no further action is required.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

INCENTIVES AVAILABLE FOR DEVELOPMENT OF RENEWABLE ENERGY SOURCES

Question No. 2,410—Mr. Howie:

Are tax incentives, grants, or other industrial research incentives available to the private sector of the economy for research and development of renewable energy sources and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: The federal government has a number of initiatives to encourage the use of renewable energy sources. These include: (a) The 1976 budget measures which increased the Capital Cost Allowance for certain types of equipment which produce energy from waste and the elimination of federal sales tax on solar energy equipment and heat pumps. (b) Current and operating expenses for research and development conducted by the private sector into renewable energy sources are eligible for an investment tax credit of 5 percent, 7½ percent or 10 percent depending on where the activity is undertaken. (c) Under the Enterprise Development Programme grants are available to private industry to encourage research and development in commercial activities including renewable energy sources. (d) The National Research Council has a research, development and demonstration program in cooperation with the private sector respecting the use of solar energy in heating applications for buildings.

In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: Research and development for renewable energy sources falls within the general incentives of the Income Tax Act. Thus section 37 of the Act provides that a taxpayer may deduct in the year incurred any expenditures on scientific research, including those of a capital nature, to the extent that the scientific research is related to a business carried on by the taxpayer. It should also be noted that certain types of equipment which contribute to the efficient use of certain energy resources can be written-off for tax purposes over two years. The equipment which qualifies for this favourable treatment is described in class 34 of Schedule B to the Act.

What are the names and addresses of all individuals or organizations issued import permits to bring eggs into Canada from January 1, 1976 to May 31, 1977 and, in each case, by month, what was the total number the individual or organization was authorized to import?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: In view of the commercial confidentiality attached to permits issued to import goods listed on the Import Control List, it is the Departmental policy not to divulge the names and addresses of individuals or organizations to whom such permits were issued. During the period January 1, 1976 to May 31, 1977, a total of 188 companies or organizations were issued permits to import eggs into Canada. BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, would the government House leader be in a position to confirm the business of the House for today and tomorrow and tell us what are his intentions with respect to the balance of the legislative program?

Mr. MacEachen: The business today is Bill C-60 in the name of the President of the Treasury Board. Tomorrow we shall begin the report stage of the immigration bill—I gather this will take some days and I will therefore not go further, except to say I have two bills I should like to clear up after that—the report stage of the Air Canada bill, and the third reading of the metric conversion bill.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In the course of the adjournment motion set down by the President of the Privy Council contemplating an adjournment on July 15, an intention was expressed to bring the House back on August 2. My understanding is that there may be some change with respect to this plan, and if the hon. gentleman is in a position to announce his intentions I would appreciate any further information in terms of the days on which we shall be coming back in August if, indeed, we do have to come back in August. Perhaps he is in a position to make an announcement today or, possibly, he may wish to consult with the other parties in respect to the matter.

Mr. MacEachen: I have stated several times that it was the intention to debate the pipeline situation on August 4 and 5 following receipt of the final reports on the pipeline situation. The reason the date, August 2, was included on the motion which appears on the order paper was to provide for the contingency which might have arisen had there been agreement to come back to deal with the immigration bill in August. I make no complaint about the lack of agreement, but the date was there as a contingency against that possibility. When it comes to putting down a further adjournment motion, or amending the one already on the order paper, I shall be happy to consult with other members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When the government House leader says he is prepared to consult further with respect to this matter, does his offer include consultation as to the length of time to be spent on the pipeline debate? The minister is talking today as though we would be spending only two days on that debate. Can this be the subject of further consultation?

While I am on my feet, may I ask the minister whether it does not become clear, considering the additional time during which we must be here before we can get out at all, that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich need not worry about having to sit in the Senate Chamber after all?

Mr. Epp: I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council whether it is the intention that Bill C-24, the immigration bill, should be completed at all stages before we rise for the summer, regardless of the amount of time taken on it?

Mr. MacEachen: It is my personal intention and, I believe, the view of many members on this side of the House that we ought to conclude the immigration bill in all its stages before we rise. I shall be discussing the matter further with my colleagues in cabinet, but that is the situation at present. As to the other part of the question, whether this would be done regardless of the amount of time taken, I might endeavour to ensure that there would be a limit on the time spent on this bill. It might be that members of the other parties would agree that a definite period be allowed, and an order of the House could then be made.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My hon. friend from Esquimalt-Saanich raised the question of the locale of our deliberations. Could the President of the Privy Council let us know whether we are expected to be out of this Chamber by any particular time, so that we can arrange to get good seats in some other locale?

Mr. MacEachen: I believe there have been informal consultations on this question; the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton can probably fill the hon. member in with regard to that.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I would be delighted to do so but I did not wish to breach the undertaking which exists between the President of the Privy Council and myself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since we are discussing the length of the session, and since the Standing Order which provides for holidays to be taken by this House does not include the holiday of the first weekend in August, could there be an understanding that we should have at least that long week end off?

Some hon. Members: No holidays!

Mr. MacFarlane: We shall work on Saturdays and Sundays.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning answers to questions on the order paper—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member seeks the floor on a point of order with regard to questions, but we are now on Orders of the Day and I do not think the Chair can accept a point of order having to do with questions at this time.

REPRESENTATION AND ELECTORAL DISTRICTS READJUSTMENT ACT (ONTARIO)

MEASURE RESPECTING READJUSTMENT OF ONTARIO ELECTORAL DISTRICTS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-60, to readjust the representation of Ontario in the House of Commons and to readjust the electoral districts in Ontario, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I should keep the record straight. Some time ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised a point of order with respect to the introduction of this bill, a point of order which was reiterated at a later date by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). It was argued that there appeared, on the face of it, to be a departure from our accepted practice and precedents in relation to administrative responsibility inasmuch as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) introduced legislation relating to electoral boundaries instead of the President of the Privy Council within whose administrative responsibility this matter lies. In fact, this proposition is well founded. However, I am not able, in examining the precedents or rules of the House, to find any prohibition against this practice. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I think understood that in raising his point and introduced a caveat that may be used in some argument with respect to some other administrative restrictions in the future.

That seems to be the extent of it to this point. However, I did want to give note to the point of order which gave us some cause for study, but I can find no basis on which to interrupt this practice at the present time.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, parliament is probably at its best when it moves to act to redress a grievance. That grievance must, of course, be one of significance, and the issue on which it is based must be one of principle and not of expediency.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are gerrymandering.

Mr. Andras: I am very interested to see the reaction of the New Democratic Party to the comments I am making on this very significant bill for northern Ontario. I want to make clear that the reason I believe this is based on principle is this—the purpose is to allow the region of northern Ontario to retain in this House the same level of representation which it has. More than three quarters of a million citizens in northern Ontario, which has a population roughly equivalent to the province of Saskatchewan, feel aggrieved because of the effect upon this region—

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would not want the minister to think that I want to interfere with what he is saying, on the contrary. The matter is that interpretation is not working very well. I wish I could hear what the minister is saying with regard to Bill C-60. If we are to understand what he is saying, we need interpretation, at least as far as I am concerned. That is my point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will check the situation, with the hope that it might be improved. Meanwhile, if the hon. member has any problem, he might perhaps sit in the next seat. In the meantime, we will see that the situation is set right.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): We all have the same problem.

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will also be most interested in the reactions of the Progressive Conservative party. The people of northern Ontario will have been observing with very great interest whether there is an intent to support this grievance which is felt very strongly in that region because of the effect of the decision of the Electoral Boundaries Commission of Ontario on the number of seats.

Northern Ontario is a vast region representing about 80 per cent of the land mass of the province of Ontario, and in that sense it is now having, by that decision, its level of representation reduced by one seat at a time when the House of Commons is about to be enlarged in its membership, and also at a time when the region feels it has not lost population but has increased it.

Mr. Stevens: Sit down, Bob, and we will pass it.

Mr. Andras: I would if I thought that would be the case, but I do want to share the reasons for our argument. I think I know one or two members of this House who, over the last few years, have thought about this, but if the region had been a province this could not have happened. In fact the region would have had more members, not fewer, in the next parliament.

We do find ourselves in an anomalous situation, Mr. Speaker. The Chair, in a sound and reasoned judgment in April, 1977, stated that it had no jurisdiction to deal with the legal issue raised by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) and supported by other members regarding the validity of the report of the commission in Ontario. Subsequently the Federal Court, trial division, and the Federal Court of Appeal, for different reasons, stated that they had no jurisdiction to upset the report of the commission. The Federal Court Act states that no provincial court would have jurisdiction to deal with this issue. Therefore we are left with an act of parliament, The Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, duly passed by parliament and proclaimed, over which no one seemingly has any jurisdiction.

Mr. Stevens: You are chewing up time, Bob. Let us pass it.

Mr. Andras: In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, this House, the highest court of the land, particularly as it relates to legislation by which members come to the House, must not only have jurisdiction but must also enforce it when justly called upon to do so. But it is not only this anomalous situation or the need to meet the just demands of the citizens of northern Ontario that have led the government to assume the responsibility for redressing this grievance.

Mr. Stevens: Don't talk out your own bill, Bob. We are winning, so sit down.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may be party to information which I do not have, but I really do not think he is. As strong, perhaps as overwhelming, as those reasons are for doing so, the comments contained in the minority report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario I think defy any other course of action but one of support for this bill.

Mr. Paproski: So you are talking it out, Bob?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, may I prevall upon the House to listen more carefully to what I have to say. The hon. member may share the argument, but he must recognize that that is not the case throughout the House.

Mr. Stevens: Now, now, let's pass it.

Mr. Andras: It has to be said that this minority report to which I refer, submitted by Mr. Gratton and Mr. Tarnopolsky, represented the views of two of the four commissioners. Members from other regions—and this is my real point—I fully understand may also be less than satisfied with the redistribution process and the decisions of their electoral boundaries commissions. But in no other case and in no other province have members of independently appointed boundaries commissions, specifically members appointed to a commission by the Speaker of this House, filed a minority report recommending redress by parliament.

That is why this case is different from any other grievance filed, and understandably filed, by members in different parts of this country. The commissioners Gratton and Tarnopolsky, referring to a disagreement within the commission with respect to the interpretation to be given to section 13 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, and with specific reference to the problem of determining whether the region of northern Ontario should have assigned to it 12 or 11 electoral districts, said:

> The function to be exercised is the proper distribution of electoral districts on a representation by population basis, qualified by the necessity or desirability of giving effect to such human consideration as "community or diversity of interest" and by practical elements such as geographic considerations including in particular the sparsity, density of population of various regions of the province, the accessibility of such regions, etc.

They went on to say this, and it is the official comment of the minority report of the commission:

> There has been overwhelming evidence that the region of northern Ontario comes within these qualifying provisions. The desirability if not the necessity of allocating as many seats as possible to that region has been manifestly demonstrated.

And later, referring to the stricture imposed by parliament with reference to the 25 per cent variable above or below the provincial quota, they said:

> We believe that the fundamental question is: should the commission, where special consideration seems necessary, deal with a "region" of Ontario, or should its fundamental basis of consideration be all electoral districts in relation to the electoral quota?
> We feel that the former could have been done within the terms of section 13, without violating its intent.

● (1540)

Notwithstanding the very clear and strong suggestion contained in these words, it was clearly the position of the commission that this House of Commons has a responsibility to act in this situation.

May I refer Your Honour's attention to the words of the Representation Commissioner, Mr. Castonguay, spoken at the public hearing held in Thunder Bay on October 9, 1975, when he referred to the issue of maintaining 12 seats in northern Ontario. He said:

> I maintain it should be done by legislation. Parliament should specifically instruct this commission as other legislatures have done. They should be the ones judging this, not us.

Later the Honourable Mr. Justice Grant, Chairman of the Commission, at page 55, said on the issue of 12 seats in northern Ontario:

> Your remedy lies in parliament, does it not, not with us?

Finally, Professor Tarnopolsky later in the same hearing on the issue of the recognition of northern Ontario as a region, speaking to the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner), stated at page 89 the following:

> If I may, I disagree with whoever advised you or parliament on how much you could have done. And I am sure you can find people who could write a pretty good legal brief for you that there is more parliament could have done in order to ensure a region within a province got special consideration. I don't think it was impossible. Either you were misled or could have countered better. But I think it is something parliament could have taken care of better if they had wanted to.

In increasing the number of constituencies in Ontario from 95 to 96, would Ontario representation in this House be disproportionate to that of other provinces? The average population per constituency in all other provinces is as follows: in Newfoundland with seven seats the quotient would be 74,586; in Prince Edward Island with four seats it would be 27,910; in Nova Scotia with 11 seats it would be 71,723; in New Brunswick with 10 seats it would be 63,455; in Quebec with 75 seats it would be 80,370; in Manitoba with 14 seats it would be 70,589; in Saskatchewan with 14 seats it would be 66,160; in Alberta with 21 seats it would be 77,518; and in British Columbia with 28 seats it would be 78,022. Ontario has the highest quotient with 95 seats and an average of 81,085. With 96 seats its quotient will be, based on the 1971 census, 80,240.

With the exception of Quebec, which will be only marginally higher by 130 people, Ontario's quotient will still be 2,000 people greater per constituency than the next highest province, which is British Columbia. Therefore there would seem to be no validity to the argument that Ontario, by the operation of this proposed legislation, would receive a disproportionate degree of representation and be favoured over any other province.

In concluding, I should ask all members to consider this seriously. We in this party, and particularly the northern Ontario members, consider that this is not gerrymandering. This is based on a principle which has been recognized by the Electoral Boundaries Commission. The only redress available to us is by the action of this House. There has been overwhelming evidence that the region of northern Ontario comes within the qualifying provisions of the act at 12 seats. The desirability, if not the necessity, of allocating as many seats as possible to that region, has been manifestly demonstrated. I ask for the support of the House in passing this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: I had the opportunity of going to the hearings and making a case on behalf of my constituents, in conjunction with most of the other northern members. They were of the opinion that we should have a floor in northern Ontario of 12 seats. We should not be penalized by the rest of the province of Ontario which gained six seats, plus one from northern Ontario, in this redistribution. The people in northern Ontario are going to be poorly represented because of the boundaries. This is not necessarily saving a seat for a Liberal. That particular seat is held by the New Democratic Party with a very large majority in the provincial field. Therefore that is not really a reason to make a decision.

If a riding is so large that it is difficult for a representative to get around and see people in order to conduct his business satisfactorily on their behalf, then they should be protected by a floor. It happened in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta. We come from a very unfortunate part of the country, and that is the north. In northern Ontario and Quebec our distances are very large and our lines of communication are very bad.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) gave an example of distances between towns being 1,400 miles. That is the length of the entire maritime provinces. It would probably take in Newfoundland as well. In one case it would be necessary to travel 1,400 miles to reach a community where there are 4,500 people. What will happen to those people? We are talking about an electoral district of well over 100,000 people. Nobody will bother about those people. No political candidate will go there. The Liberal government may drive in a new fire truck for them, but they will not see a candidate. Thus, they are really isolated. Money has never been provided to make that kind of representation possible in northern Ontario.

We belong to 12 districts that are totally different than southern Ontario which is organized by counties. In northern Ontario we are organized in a different way mainly because of communications. Many of these communities can only be serviced by air. Some of them can only be serviced by train, and some by boat. Many of the communities are very remote and very difficult to service.

The minister has said that the Speaker appointed the commissioners. I argue that point. They were appointed by the provincial government. One of the problems we had was that the people the provincial government supplied, the judge and one of the commissioners, represented the provincial government rather than the interests of federal representation.

Perhaps we are only paying lip service to the idea of representation, but I suggest the minister should be willing to include Quebec. Northern Quebec is included in that whole northern area. The new parts of Quebec which the federal government turned over to that province not long ago, and a great deal of the rest of Quebec, are now in two ridings, not three. The area in one riding is bigger than the whole area of the prairie provinces.

An hon. Member: What about Wally Firth's riding?

Mr. Peters: Yes, certainly, the riding of the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) is huge. At one time a third of this country was in one riding, but the House saw fit to divide it into two ridings, not because of the population but because if someone is to be elected to represent that area, it should not only be in name but in fact, and it was impossible at that time to cross the Arctic from east to west. It is hard enough to travel in that area from north to south. We saw fit to give the area two representatives to serve the population there. They are not considered second class citizens. We tried to make them first class citizens like everyone else.

If this bill is approved, it should have attached to it a commitment from the government that we will also give northern Quebec one extra seat, because if we want to provide proper representation for the people, it should be a two-way street.

It might be said that if you cannot get to the people and they cannot get to you, then perhaps they should communicate with you by mail. But the fact of the matter is that it takes five days for a letter from Kirkland Lake—or wherever the place may be—to get to Ottawa, so how long would it take for a letter from Port George to arrive in Ottawa? It would take weeks. Sometimes an airplane has to stay there for two or three weeks because it cannot get back. I suppose it carries mail.

There can be no representation unless you are able to communicate with the people. It seems to me that if the government wanted to get away from charges of gerrymandering being made by some, there must be a commitment that a seat will be given to northern Quebec as well.

This legislation affects my riding. In fact it affects all the ridings in northern Ontario. I am quite prepared to run there as the riding is now, and also as it will be. I can speak personally because now I will have a community with about 5,000 people which can only be reached by train. Since I know that trains operate in our country like our mail, I know it is not going to be easy. Whenever there is an opening ceremony in that community which I am asked to attend, they will have to make the date coincide with the train schedule. Government officials might be able to fly, but if I have to travel by train the date will have to suit my convenience, not theirs.

It seems to me that representation by population will not be affected by the allocation of this additional seat in northern Ontario. I am one of those who believe that the districts in northern Ontario are totally different from the counties in southern Ontario, and therefore I think that representation by population will not be affected because we can still meet the requirements of population. I also believe that for the sake of justice we should be generous and commit ourselves to allocating an additional seat to northern Quebec so that the communities in that area might also benefit from a service which we are trying to provide to northern Ontario.

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the minister stated a while ago that it was essential to grant an adequate representation to northern Ontario. When the readjustment was made in northern Ontario, it was thought advisable to reduce the number of constituencies from twelve to eleven and in northwestern Quebec from three to two.

Today, on the basis of a specific issue, that is the report on which the commissioners were divided, the same argument comes up again, that northern Ontario should be given an additional constituency since the northern Ontario area covers 80 per cent of the Ontario territory. I readily accept these arguments and I think that it would be useful to have an increased representation that would not alter the Electoral Act.

But I feel that the minister made a mistake when he refused to recognize the fact that north western Quebec, with an area covering almost 60 per cent of the Province of Quebec has only two constituencies, as a result of redistribution. One is the Villeneuve riding, which occupies nearly half the area of the Province of Quebec, where, as the hon. member who spoke before me indicated, there are communities 1,400 or 1,500 mile away from one another. In sparsely populated areas, distance is a main factor in a constituency. But I feel we should also consider the importance of communications between individuals. When an hon. member has to fly over an area of such dimensions, because roads are few and far between, he certainly needs more time than is required to cover an urban riding in downtown Montreal.

When we made representations to the commissioners during hearings in northwestern Quebec and requested that this third major constituency be maintained, our request was turned down on the basis of statistical data of the 1971 census. I understand that their ruling had to be based on these data, but they failed to recognize the fact that some 6,000 people have moved into this region since 1971 to work on the James Bay project, and that there will be some 15,000 workers there one year from now, which means an increase of 15,000 people. Unfortunately, the commissioners refused to consider this. They unanimously ruled that these 15,000 new residents are not important for Quebec.

It is important that Ontario should have adequate representation, but Quebec, no, we must abide strictly and legally by the figures provided by the 1971 census. To be logical and reasonable, the minister should immediately add a third electoral district in the province of Quebec, if the arguments he raised for Ontario are to be consistent. I see absolutely no difference between the two situations. It is true that these are large electoral districts. It is true that the constituents must be served. It is true that people must be provided with the best of services. There again, the minister contends that by establishing an additional electoral district in northern Ontario, this would not significantly lower the average representation but would allow for a better balance and Ontario would have an average population of 80,200 people per riding while Quebec has an average of 80,300 inhabitants per riding.

A fair provincial average would be achieved by adding one electoral district in northwestern Quebec. This would probably reduce the average per riding in the province of Quebec by about a hundred votes. However, this would resolve the geographical and physical problem one has to face. The Minister said a while ago that at a given point, we must consider, when accepting or adding a new constituency, the geographical aspects as well as the access to such places.

I think that if the Minister were to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) for maps of the provinces of both Quebec and Ontario, he would have an idea of the territory to be covered by only one or two members in northwestern Quebec. Finally it is unfortunate that the province of Quebec should be discriminated against in this matter. According to the figures, I am willing to admit that the report was incomplete and that it was not unanimous while the one concerning Quebec was unanimous. On the other hand, one thing is certain: in Ontario, or in northern Ontario, constituencies are much more flexible politically-speaking. While in northwestern Quebec, in the last 15 years, the people have voted exclusively for the Social Credit Party of Canada, and have never given any votes to the Liberal Party. And the commissioners were not appointed by the Social Crediters either. However, when we happened to discuss the matter with them, we felt that political implication.

I feel the minister would meet with approval if he included in his bill specific recognition that a new riding is required in northern Ontario, as well as the clear and specific addition of a new riding in northwestern Quebec. Thus, justice would really be done to the people of both areas. The addition of one riding in Quebec would certainly not upset the national representation profile nor the representativeness of each hon. member. But it would really solve the problem of the area to be covered and the capacity of representation of the hon. members. One does not have to wonder about the shape of the road in that part of the country. They have dirt roads and, in the case of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), he will have to go around by train, while in northwestern Quebec there is not even a train, and air service is still inoperative. It must be that in the mind of the minister the hon. member elected in that part of the country would probably have to go around for a while riding a deer or a moose to visit the people. But that is not taken into consideration.

In closing, I ask the minister to take our requests into consideration and to combine with his bill, Bill C-421 introduced by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette); then I feel the intentions or pronouncements of the minister will really mean something when he speaks of serving the people. And then only when the two bills are grouped, or at least when the minister has assured us that Bill C-421 introduced by the hon. member for Villeneuve will also be accepted, then only will northwestern Quebec be adequately represented.

[English]

Hon. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I am a city dweller, and too rarely in this House do we hear the point of view of urbanites expressed.

I think there is a great consciousness among Canadians wherever they live, that concessions must be made; that we must not insist absolutely on representation by population in a country as diverse and widespread as Canada. However, what has been said here today so far raises questions about the equity of our system of parliamentary representation, and about the trend represented by this bill and the one just referred to by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). That trend seems to be away from recognition that Canada is increasingly an urban society. Whether we like it or not, that is the Canada of today and of the future. While all of us want to make every concession for the preservation of a feeling of identity by all Canadians with their country and with their national government, we must surely take care that in making these concessions to alleviate the disparities in Canada we do not ignore the strains which can be placed on our society by increasing disparity of political representation in our national institutions.

In introducing this bill the minister said that it is based on principle, and I hope that my remarks will be taken as being similarly based on principle. The minister made reference to the populations of various provinces and argued very cogently that Ontario is not over-represented, from the standpoint of population, under the present distribution of seats in this parliament or the proposed one. But he did not make a comparison between the populations of southern Ontario and northern Ontario, as he might have done, and I think it would assist hon. members if the minister were able to show that his bill would not increase the disparity of per capita representation which already exists between the more densely populated part of Ontario and the less densely populated part.

The minister made reference to the distances involved. I want to remind hon. members that, in the modern society in which we live, density can be as serious a factor as distance in alienating the population from its institutions. As those of us who live in the great cities of Canada know, there is such a thing as high-rise isolation. We know that it is often difficult for people in a densely populated part of a large city to feel close to their elected representative and to communicate with him, and it is hard for their representative, in turn, to communicate with his constituents.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) mentioned that there are distances of 1,000 or 1,400 miles between some small communities and the minister referred to the huge land mass of northern Ontario. We all recognize that is true of northern Ontario, northern Quebec, and other parts of Canada. The present law recognizes the difficulties in transportation, communication, and representation in such large land masses. However, I want to remind hon. members that we represent not land, but people. We are not called upon here to speak for acres—or perhaps hectares, after the metric system is in force—we are called upon to speak for our constituents who are people, and I ask hon. members to remember the constant whittling away of the principle of representation by population which we have seen in this House in recent times.

The system of redistribution is already biased against urban areas. One only has to look at the riding which I have had the honour to represent since I was first elected in 1965. Between 1965 and 1968, when a redistribution occurred my riding had in it the largest number of people of any riding in Canda. Since 1968, after a redistribution of seats, my riding has continued to have the largest number of people in it. Even after the redistribution, which is to take place at the next general election, the three ridings which will be created mainly from my present riding will still be among the largest of Canada's federal constituencies.

Not only does the present formula militate against the people of my area receiving adequate representation by population, but the law has been interpreted by the Electoral Boundaries Commission in Ontario in such a way as to prevent it from taking into account any projection of population. Given even the fairest of formulas, even if you accept the formula now in the law, there will occur some distortion in the representation of urban dwellers in a rapidly growing area, because the projection of population between periodic redistributions is not taken into account.

I did not rise to oppose this bill. I would not argue strenuously against the present bill or the one the hon. member for Villeneuve proposed. I think I speak for my constituents, the people of Toronto at large and urban dwellers of Canada generally, when I say we are prepared to make any concession which will keep this country united and allow people to identify strongly with Canada and its national government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanbury: However, we are an urban society and becoming increasingly urbanized. Not even urban dwellers are entirely in favour of this trend. Personally, I wish it were otherwise. But when we speak in this House of representation, we are surely not speaking of spaces, of cities, or of distances in this country. Surely we speak of the people we represent. We must be conscious of this country's realities.

City dwellers do not insist on perfect justice, but they ask members of the House, when considering changes to electoral law to remember that we represent people and nothing else. If we remember this and do this, we shall avoid arousing in city dwellers the sense of isolation which is evident, in a political sense, in some of those living in the far reaches of our country, and we shall preserve in all our citizens their sense of identification with Canada, which is an objective we surely all share.

Ontario Representation

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, we are considering an extremely important matter, not only for the residents of the province of Ontario, but also for the whole country, because until 1965 the distribution of electoral districts was the responsibility of Parliament and all governments in our history have tried to ensure fair representation for rural areas, accepting the fact that these areas had a lower density of population than urban centres.

We must still endeavour to maintain harmony in our country so that in all provinces, including the province of Quebec, Canadian citizens will be satisfied to have an equitable number of people representing them in the Canadian Parliament. Because Parliament has surrendered this responsibility through legislation, the task of establishing and redistributing electoral districts has been turned over to commissions. Today the government feels it should not have done that, as the minister mentioned in his speech, and should have kept its right to have the final word after the reports of these commissions have been submitted to the minister responsible for this issue.

And today the government feels obliged to intervene through a very special bill to give one more representative to the province of Ontario, on the basis of very logical arguments. However, if these arguments are logical in the case of Ontario, they are just as logical for the province of Quebec with regards to the Canadian northwest. Hon. members have had discussions about this issue long before today.

I had the opportunity myself to take part in discussions and there seemed to be an agreement on the fact that this should be done under the same bill for Ontario and Quebec. Today, we hear only rumours. As there was no official statement, we try to read the minds of hon. members from other provinces: if we allow Quebec another hon. member, an additional electoral district, other provinces will demand the same thing. I for one would like to hear evidence on this in Parliament and not behind the scene.

In any case, we should always apply good horse sense. The minister responsible for the Electoral Boundaries Act who sponsors the bill should perhaps give further consideration to this, and add provisions to ensure that Parliament regains control, that it has the last say in the distribution of electoral districts. I suggest this, in all fairness, concerning the Electoral Boundaries Act of our country.

Mr. Speaker, we have already dealt with the matter of area and population. In Quebec, the quota is roughly 80,000. As I said in this House on April 6, twelfth-graders could have done the same work as our distinguished judges. They simply had to add up the population according to the census and to distribute the population and then draw up boundaries. Indeed, this is how it was done in our province even though we made representations in all sincerity and even though ten members of Parliament signed a joint letter. We were unanimous; it was not a question of partisanship, but of justice and common sense. In my area, ten members signed a joint letter which was forwarded to the Quebec Commission but was not even acknowledged. I cannot understand this. The Commission was so engrossed in its powers that it did not even acknowledge the letter. They do their job and then, whether you like it or not, they submit their report. If you are not satisfied, that is too bad! I finally understood that this is what the commission meant.

Mr. Speaker, I heard the comments of the previous speaker a while ago and I thought that they did show real good sense; he said that people living in high-rise apartment buildings do not have as many chances of coming into contact with their representatives. They do not have as many opportunities as the people living in rural constituencies, but there is another side to the story. In rural constituencies, people in general know their representatives and arrange to meet them, and when we look at the map of any constituency, be it Abitibi, Villeneuve and Témiscamingue, which I know somehow better, or Bellechasse, which I know very well, we realize that the member of Parliament has to travel far and wide in order to meet his people. Whatever may be the number of inhabitants in a town or a municipal community, these people live there and they are entitled to the same consideration from their member as if the population were 2,000. This is how I understand my role as a member of Parliament. In the constituency of Bellechasse, there are 83,000 people. It is a rural constituency. There is only the city of Montmagny and the balance is made up of rural communities.

So under the act the commissioners had the authority to increase by up to 25 per cent the population in a rural riding, 25 per cent of the ratio set for the province, or to decrease that population by up to 25 per cent in rural ridings. So I wonder how they have considered the riding of Bellechasse, since rather than decrease its population, because it is a rural riding, they increased it. I understand that there again there is something to change in the Elections Act in order to adjust it better to the circumstances and needs of our country.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to address particularly the Liberal members of the province of Quebec who now ensure the government majority. But I am not addressing those members as Liberal members but as representatives of Quebec ridings to ask them to support the claims we are now making for the province of Quebec, in northwest Quebec, so that an additional riding be provided in the same manner as it is done now with Bill C-60.

Miss Bégin: What about the Gaspé area?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Well, I think that the Gaspé area would want the same thing but you cannot have it everywhere. My colleague the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron) knows quite well how I worked with him and all the others, all the efforts we made to try and preserve at least the riding of Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata, and my colleague is indicating that what I am telling you is the truth. So that is the way I would want things to be but I would not want to fight against an impossibility.

I would want to fight, I want to fight for a possibility, even if it means coming back a little later if the circumstances permit, but for the time being, what we are demanding, what we are asking is that the rights of the province of Quebec be protected and that this not become a matter of division in this country but a matter of union and harmony. And I consider that if in 1977 we really want to talk with assurance to the people of Quebec about harmony in Canada, we should start by ensuring that harmony through an act of Parliament which will give us authority to talk to our fellow-citizens in our own province. So I strongly urge the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), who is sponsoring Bill C-60 on the readjustment of the electoral districts in Ontario today, to show as much enthusiasm about a readjustment for the province of Quebec.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I cannot remain silent on the occasion of the introduction of this bill since I represent one of the ridings that will disappear in the province of Quebec. And as the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) pointed out, it is a fact that all members from Lévis to Gaspé, irrespective of their political affiliation, signed a letter at the time of the debate in April asking that the riding of Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata be reinstated.

Obviously, one cannot remain silent in the face of this bill since it contains an important anomaly, namely that the whole readjustment of the electoral map was based on the premise that the province of Quebec was to be the standard on which the number of members in all other provinces would be determined. I think that nobody objects to the riding of Thunder Bay being reinstated but we would want the agreement to be maintained, that the province of Quebec should be the basis on which the number of seats in others provinces should be determined.

Then, consequently, it must definitely be accepted that there should be an additional riding in the province of Quebec. I would not want at this stage to put forth all the arguments that have been raised on this subject. I would like to tell my colleague for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) that members of this House definitely do not represent mere acres of land. They represent the people living on these acres of land and when people are widely scattered around there are bound to be enormous problems. When the last redistribution occured, the province of Quebec registered an increase of one riding but the Abitibi area lost one and the lower St. Lawrence area one, while the Montreal area gained two and the Quebec City area one.

However, one cannot ignore these regional disparities. One cannot ignore the wide diversity and the tremendous needs of these sparsely populated and underprivileged areas. I think that all the members representing urban areas will agree with me that when you cut 26 ridings out of one single municipality, things are indeed a lot easier, and a member needs half a day to walk through his whole riding, something we can hardly do in a year's time. In our case, the issues we have to deal with are much more diversified, and complex, ranging from sea port projects, to customs, forest problems, resource development and countless difficulties which are increasingly making the task of the member more difficult. Accordingly, we are not actually against the rebirth of the Thunder Bay constituency, I believe it is, but we want the redistribution to remain on the same equitable basis that had been used for the province of Quebec. And I think that if, this afternoon, all political parties can agree, we can do something about it although I do not know which particular procedure we should use.

Perhaps it would be wise to adjourn the debate so that there be some kind of an agreement, or some discussion? But I think that it would be easy to reach an agreement for a general consensus in order that Ontario may get an additional riding as well as Quebec. It might also be appropriate, since the member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) are far removed, especially in north western Quebec, if that riding were to be restored in the lower St. Lawrence area or in the Abitibi area, to reach an agreement between ourselves, in order to find a quick solution to this problem.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am taking the liberty of making this suggestion to the minister and to the leaders of the different parties in this House to the effect that we try and reach a concensus in order to solve this problem.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my support for this bill to restore 12 seats to northern Ontario. It should be pointed out that a minority report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission argued that because of the size of these northern constituencies and the difficulty encountered by members of parliament in serving constituents in these vast areas, larger constituencies should not be created in northern Ontario but that the number of seats remain as it was prior to the most recent redistribution, that is, 12.

I know it is the unanimous feeling of people in northern Ontario that the regions should not lose seats. Incidentally, the distribution proposal affects the people in my constituency of Sault Ste. Marie by drawing a line arbitrarily across the northern part of the city and putting part of the riding into the riding of Algoma. This proposition met with great objection from the electors of Sault Ste. Marie who argued, quite properly, that they had nothing in common with Algoma and wished to keep the riding of Sault Ste. Marie intact.

I have listened intently to the representations made by hon. members in the Creditiste party. I believe they have a valid point. They, like us, have vast areas to cover, and the current distribution has prejudiced their ability to serve their constituents adequately.

I sometimes hear from people who are somewhat suspicious about what the government is doing. They wonder whether the Liberal government would have gone to the trouble of restoring this one seat to northern Ontario if that seat had not been held by a Liberal. The fact that a similar measure was not made available to the people of northern Quebec will, no doubt, strengthen the suspicions to which I have referred. However, the bill before us now concerns only the situation in northern Ontario. I fully support it and I hope it is passed, recognizing at the same time the legitimate grievances of the Creditiste members from northern Quebec. I hope the government will give us some kind of commitment that their representation will be restored. They, too, have lost a seat in northern Quebec. I know our party would be in favour of such a commitment, though I have yet to hear from the Conservative party what their reaction would be to a commitment to restore the number of seats in our neighbouring province. I hope my colleagues who understand the difficulty of serving vast northern ridings will look favourably upon this bill and, likewise, on the arguments raised by the members of the Creditiste party.

[Translation]

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, first I do not want to blame the President of the Treasury Board for having introduced today Bill C-60 in order that the House of Commons may give Ontario a better representation for its northern population, because they stand to lose an electoral district just as we did in northwestern Quebec. As the minister said, I know that he wants the population of northern Ontario to be fairly represented by a man who will give good service to the people in that area. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to note today that the New Democratic Party supports our position as well as some Liberal members.

I also hope, as was already mentioned, that the minister will manage somehow to include Bill C-421 that I sponsor and thus grant northwestern Quebec the same privilege he is asking for people from northern Ontario, namely that the people from northwestern Quebec may be represented adequately in this House. Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the reasons which prompt us to ask the minister to include in his legislation Bill C-421. It is for the simple reason that at present I have a very large area to cover. Someone quoted earlier the words spoken by the Prime Minister at the time of the death of our leader, Mr. André Fortin, when he came to extend his sympathy to Mr. Fortin's family.

Last week I had to go not even to the limit of my riding, I could say three quarters of the way to the limit. When I left from here, from Ottawa, I had 250 miles to drive before reaching my riding and from my home I still had 275 miles to go to meet people who needed my services and, during the same weekend, I had to come back home and go to the other end of my riding which is 100 miles farther. The new readjustment of electoral boundaries, if I am lucky enough to be reelected at the next election as member for Villeneuve, puts me in a situation where only in car mileage from my home to the farthest limit of my riding there are 1,400 miles. I explained that to many hon. members on both sides of the House and they understood the claims I was making.

As I was saying a moment ago, maybe the Prime Minister thought about it, and it is perhaps the best reason for asking the House to adopt this bill with maybe an amendment which would also provide for another riding in northwest Quebec.

When we met the Prime Minister in the funeral home, he told us that ridings of that size were ridiculous. They too have large ridings in their party and they also have to travel through them. When we leave here we are not exhausted but very tired and we still have to drive hundreds of miles to go back to our ridings and then there are yet enormous distances to cover.

When I will be in my new riding—which will be called Abitibi—I will want to give my constituents what they expect from their representative, and I must consider going from my home to a locality which is not the most remote but where there are 4,500 people. I believe those 4,500 people have the right to be fairly represented, they are entitled to receiving the service they can expect from their member, from Val-d'Or to Fort George, the municipality which presently has the largest population and which is over 700 miles away from my home. As my colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) said earlier, how can one man adequately serve the people in such circumstances without exhausting himself?

Of course, we have also had a commission referred to earlier by the minister. A great number of people and organizations appeared before that commission to show the judge how ridiculous it was to bring the number of northwestern Quebec constituencies down to two. As an illustration, the CERDAT made tremendous representations, but the commission ignored them. Boards of trade, municipalities, mayors, town councils all appeared. I myself and the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) repeatedly urged the commissioners to try and give the people in north western Quebec an opportunity as allowed by statute to have their own elected representatives while meeting the criteria. Admittedly the commission relied on the 1971 census. At that time, with the redistribution of electoral boundaries, the 1971 census gave Témiscamingue an 83,667 population, and Abitibi an 88,164 population.

And here, I would like to ask hon. members to listen carefully to the remarks I want to make. The riding of Abitibi will have 88,164 constituents under the new electoral redistribution. There was a mistake because during the 1971 census, as the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) said so eloquently, James Bay did not exist. And before taking part in the debate on the bill before us, I got some information from Statistics Canada—and everybody could get it—about the number of people there were in the ridings of Témiscamingue and of Abitibi according to the last census which was recorded in June last. One must also include the riding of Villeneuve.

According to Statistics Canada, Mr. Speaker, in the last 1976 census there was a population of 57,739 in Abitibi, 52,810 in Témiscamingue and 61,897 in Villeneuve. James Bay had 4,500 residents, and according to Statistics Canada, there can be a rate of error, considering the time in which the survey took place—that is during the holidays—the number of people who did not answer, of about 1½ per cent to 2 per cent. Therefore, I have taken this 2 per cent error rate into account which means that some 3,500 people would not have been declared during this census, and therefore we would have about 182,526 people to represent in northwestern Quebec.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we had a population of 171,831 in 1971. If you divide this number by three, you get exactly 57,265 people to be represented by three members. If you add those who were not included in the 1971 census and who are still there today, it amounts to between 7,000 and 10,000 people more. And if you refer to the end of this Parliament's mandate we will have a population of 15,000 for James Bay alone. I believe those people, even though they were not accounted for in the 1971 census, are also entitled to be represented by a member of parliament who is efficient in the House of Commons. Of course, the new electoral redistribution does not satisfy them, but I know with some goodwill—and at least several members have demonstrated theirs this afternoon—the government will adopt Bill C-421 to give a new riding to northwestern Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I could also be mean to the government, but this is not my intention. We could have mentioned ridings like Matane, which has 63,000 people, Mercier which covers about one square mile and has 67,000 people, Lac-Saint-Jean, represented by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), with a population of 67,200, Gaspé, with 60,481 people, and ourselves, according to the 1971 statistics, as I said earlier, we have 57,265 people for three members of parliament, or three ridings in northwestern Quebec. Now, Mr. Speaker, what more do we need? If we want to give some representation to James Bay, as I said earlier, we even have enough people to have three ridings.

But if we compare with 1971, there are about 2,500 to 3,000 fewer people in each constituency. Earlier, I heard the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) say how long a letter can take to go from the far end of the future Abitibi riding to Ottawa to make representations to the government for a new constituency. For my part, last winter, I went to James Bay and, unfortunately, I had to remain two days more than I had planned because of a storm, since the planes could not take off. As the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) said, I would like to give more to other areas because some have very large populations and I would like us to pass a measure in order to help these people who represent large populations and must travel great distances from one end of large ridings to another.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague who now represents the Abitibi riding also has one of the largest constituencies in the country. It may not be the largest, but it is one of the largest in the country. His riding nearly reaches up to the North Pole. This member has done fantastic work to represent his constituents, but if this same man also had to represent in addition to his own riding part of mine, that is Val d'Or, Lebel-sur Quévillon, Senneterre and Chibougamau, he would have to travel even more than at the present time since his home is even further than mine. In conclusion, I want to say that I have great confidence in the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), who wants to give fair representation to northern Ontario. He will certainly do everything he can, as said the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron), to try to negotiate with all the other House leaders, so that he and his constituents can be well represented and also that north western Quebec can be fairly represented in the House of Commons.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few comments to what has already been said concerning the representation suggested in this bill. I believe that the whole problem now caused by these redistributions came about when Parliament decided that it would no longer be responsible for the redistribution of electoral boundaries and handed over the work it had always done to a commission. Since then, and especially in the last ten years, we have suffered somewhat from the sickness of bureaucracy.

I do not know whether this is because we are lazy and do not want to take on extra work or because we do not wish to accept responsibility for our many mistakes, and this legislation is a mistake. But if we keep going this way, we will soon realize that we are referring to committees important parts of our work which, as members of Parliament, we should feel responsible for. As I said on other occasions, we are creating a politically irresponsible government, because those who do our work are not responsible to the people, they have not been elected by them to do that work. This does not mean by any stretch of imagination that those people are not competent. All I say is that we are entrusting them with powers and an authority that we should be exercising right here in this Parliament.

When the government set up that commission, they should have at least retained some control, and this is the objection I have to that commission. At least the government should have allowed members of parliament to make representations to the commissioners. I myself had problems with them, but I was told there was no way, I was 10 days late. Can you imagine that, when a member of parliament comes to discuss serious problems in his area, when subdivisions are made contrary to the constituency interests. It is an easy matter for a technician to sit down at his desk, pick up a map, draw a line here, another there, and so on, and the hell with the rest! But there is something more to it. The economic structure, the economic nerve center in each riding must be considered. With the last subdivision hon. members will have to cover constituencies whose nerve center is in another riding. This is beyond the imagination. Who could have thought this would ever happen?

A constituency with all unemployment insurance offices and other agencies, in someone else's area, this is what I have been given without regard for my constituents needs. An area which I used to cover, was thrown into another riding, but the people still go on dealing in my own constituency. So I have to serve them just the same, because I will not force them to drive 50 or 75 miles to the constituency where they were put by the commissioners. This is not their fault, so I serve more than 10 or 12 communities outside my own area. What else can we do if we want to remain human in an unhuman set up? This is what I have always been blaming the commission for, like all other commissions. They do not see beyond the Act. This is what they were appointed for. For them, members of Parliament are nothing but numbers. I suggest that the minister will finally put a stop to that and give the responsibility back to members of Parliament, who will be able to draw lines that will be fair to all the people in our constituencies.

Quite often, they even went as far as to tell me: Well, if we had included those municipalities, the boundary line would not have been straight. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, there would have been a curve on the electoral map. Well, Mr. Speaker, we hear arguments as stupid as that! That is why I say this legislation must be recalled so that we can stop being the laughing stock of our riding.

People say: How come you have no authority in this regard? Because we have delegated our authority. We have given it to three people who are in charge of administration on a national scale. Whether you like it or not, we have done it and there is nothing we can do about it. Well, I disagree. I had undertaken—and this is the best opportunity I have had to do it—to denounce not the commissioners but the procedure that was followed and the mistake that was made of leaving a job we should have performed in the hands of people who are not concerned with the responsibilities of our ridings. If we go back to the old system, should the constituents have someone to blame, they will know who is to blame. They say: Who is responsible? We tell them to write to the commissioner, that we have no responsibility in this regard. They ask: Why have you been elected? I must answer: We have been elected to delegate our responsibilities. Because with the government's proposals things are not easy and you know that opposing a bill when the majority is in favour of it is a loss of time. In the past, I thought that the government would at least keep some control. Things would not have been so bad, if the government had kept some final control, a right of veto so to speak, but they did not, they gave up everything. And today, I think that we could be held responsible when confronted with such a problem in several ridings, because we did not think the matter over enough.

Now, as far as this bill is concerned, I, of course, am not opposing it. Far from opposing it, I want two similar bills if we are to finally do justice and rectify the mistake that was made. The government has finally decided to put a bill forward in an attempt to do justice to northern Ontario, but let us do the same for another region in which the same or even worse conditions prevail as in northern Ontario, when you think that there is such a riding as the one of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) who spoke earlier, and that to cover it he will have to drive 1200 to 1400 miles. Now, with the new district there will be 89,000 people in that riding; try to cover 14,000 miles with 89,000 constituents, you will see. Try to serve a population such as this. This is nonsense. It was one in Ontario, they proved it to us but it is even more nonsensical in Quebec.

Do you think that people know this, that they are aware of this. They tell us—and I would not like to be told this myself—that in Ontario, those after the riding are all Liberals, and we have three Creditist ridings. Well, be careful. If the people are aware this could turn into political quibbling, and I would not like it. What we want is justice, we want everyone to be treated equally, to the best of our knowledge, by correcting most of the errors. What else can you do? It is done. By correcting most of our errors, and I think that if we are intelligent, if we accept at least these two large territories, I think that I would not be ashamed to speak tomorrow in my riding about Canadian unity, but I would be rather ashamed to speak against it. It is all very well to make speeches on Canadian unity, but when we do otherwise we try to destroy Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister to think twice about this matter because, as the hon. member for Rivière-du Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron) said a while ago, if Quebec has been taken as a reference to determine the average riding population, it should be adhered to in a bill such as the one now before us. We want the first agreements to be complied with as well as the 20 or 25 per cent variation between remote and urban areas.

Mr. Speaker, there are basic and humanitarian matters which cannot be ignored. To whatever party we may belong, there are humanitarian matters which cannot be disregarded and which are non-negotiable. And the matter which concerns us is one of these; it is a humanitarian matter.

Even if these constituents live 1,500 miles away from here, there are entitled to the same rights, the same services as those in larger cities, such as Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec, Toronto and others. Indeed, they are entitled to the same rights and their representatives are entitled to have the same opportunities to provide them with the same services. I express once again my concern about the redistribution of electoral seats across Canada. The minister just said that very few people seem satisfied. It is an understatement, because everybody is dissatisfied. Nobody is satisfied with this solution.

A while ago, I listened to the hon. member for Matane, and he was absolutely right when he spoke about Rivière-du-Loup. But, as in a number of other areas, we have been able to negotiate somewhat, because they wanted to take a riding away from the Saguenay-Lac-St-Jean district. We finally made our point after many discussions, the four members involved working together, so that we were spared a certain redistribution. But I repeat that the territories are badly delineated. If with the same population, an average of some 62,000, 63,000 or 67,000 people, they had allowed us to show them where the lines should be drawn to maintain the economic entities of concern to the people, nothing would have been changed and everybody would have been satisfied. But no! They finally allowed us to keep our constituencies, but they are the ones who drew the lines, and abominable ones at that. Everybody says that they are ridiculous; yet, the commissioners said: Draw the lines, now is the time. But one cannot even draw a line on the paper.

Mr. Speaker, I ask again the minister and all party leaders to put politics aside, use their common sense and, I should add, take up the challenge today, so that we may prove to the Canadian people that, even if there are four parties in the House, we can act sincerely and humanely and recognize the needs of all regions and, moreover, in spite of all the mistakes which have been made, that we can still correct at least most of them. Finally, I hope that in the future this Electoral Boundaries Commission will be made up of members of parliament, if you please, Mr. Speaker. I want us take our responsibilities.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, as I am quite concerned by the discussion now going on about Bill C-60, although this bill does not meet the purpose of this discussion in the true sense of the word, I want to speak for a moment or two to give my opinion on Bill C-60.

I listened to the speeches of most members, and I heard the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) say that members do not represent regions or territories, but people. Mr. Speaker, I agree on that. But if we consider how the population moved in a number of years in Canada, we realize that in a few years, the rural area will be underrepresented in the Canadian Parliament.

I read recently a report saying that in the year 2000, Canada will have a population of about 30 million inhabitants, of which 20 million will live in about 15 cities. That means that 10 million people, that is only one third, will live in rural or semi-rural areas. But, the way things are shaping, it is quite obvious that people living in rural areas are going to be under-represented in the House of Commons. I think Parliament should take steps to protect these rural people who are taxpayers and deserve to be represented at the same level as anybody else in Canada.

When we look at the difference between people living in areas such as Montreal, Quebec City, Toronto or Vancouver, and people living in rural areas, there is no possible comparison. In urban areas, they all enjoy administrative services. They only have to go around the corner and they come face to face with federal as well as provincial and municipal administrative agencies, whereas in rural districts, people have to travel miles and miles to be provided with the same services. Let us consider, for instance, the situation which prevails in Matagami, a mining town in the northern section of my constituency. When people have to go to the UIC office, they must go to Val-d'or. And that is over 200 miles away. So those people are disadvantaged compared to urban residents when they want to go and discuss their problems with executive officers of the federal government.

As for Canada manpower centres, it is again about the same thing, 115 miles from Matagami to Amos to go to a manpower office. No comparison is possible with urban residents. The riding I now represent, Abitibi, is the second largest riding in Canada. The largest is the riding of the Northwest Territories, and the second largest is Abitibi, which is larger than the Yukon, larger than the four Maritime provinces combined, larger than France as well as many other European countries besides France: that is how large is Abitibi. Between Noranda North and Sugluk, there is a distance of 985 miles. Of course, we cannot get there by car, there is no road suitable for motor vehicles to go up there. We have to go by plane: you know when you go there but you never know when you come back.

My colleague for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) said before that he once was stranded there for two days before he could come back, and this has been my personal experience at Grande Baleine, when I had to wait until the temperature got somewhat better so I could come back. However, Mr. Speaker, distances are a factor in rural ridings; I mentioned mine but there are many others which, while not quite so large and so spread out are still nevertheless huge ridings. This should be taken into account and the residents of those rural ridings have the same right as urban dwellers. I insist that such circumstances must be taken into account. And when the commissioner travelled through these regions to get the opinion of these people, when the study for electoral redistribution was carried out, I wonder if these trips were made seriously or if they were only a face saving device, because proposals made by such organizations as CERDAT in northwestern Quebec and by the Union of County Councils, had been highly spoken of, but in any event their recommendations have not been taken into account, it all sounded beautiful but nothing positive came out of it.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we were all led to wonder what they were trying to get at with this. What CERDAT was indeed asking for was representation for three ridings in northwestern Quebec. The present situation, Mr. Speaker, is that Bill C-60 recommends that we maintain those 12 ridings which already existed in northwestern Ontario. My colleague for Villeneuve (M. Caouette) tabled a bill to maintain the three ridings in northwestern Quebec, and I think that to be fair minded, the minister who introduced Bill C-60 should agree to grant the same privilege to northern Quebec so that it gets the same representation it had before the last redistribution.

Mr. Speaker, if one cannot but agree that the present representation was calculated according to the average population shown from the 1971 census, it is a fact that within the Abitibi riding things have changed since. There has been the James Bay hydroelectric development and there must be at least an extra 6,000 persons who now live in that area, either as residents or as workers. It is likely that they do not want to take this fact into account now, but in 1981 they will probably say that they are going to add a riding in northwestern Quebec because the population increased. And by 1981 they will realize that the construction will end within the decade. Then chances are we will come back in 1991 and scratch that riding from northwestern Quebec because the population will have decreased and we will play this way with representation of an area. Mr. Speaker, other members made representations, not only Social Credit members in this House, but members from other parties, urging the minister to reconsider his bill and extend the same privilege to the ridings in northwestern Quebec.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, when the new electoral map was tabled in this House, several of my colleagues and I took part in this important debate and we blamed the commission for many things. Today, the bill under study, Bill C-60, gives evidence that we were right at least for Ontario, because the government itself recognizes that the work of the commission maybe did not take into account all valid considerations concerning northern Ontario. Now, the government would want to have a bill adopted to correct a bad distribution.

We, Social Crediters, agree in this respect with the government as far as northern Ontario is concerned, because the government recognizes today that perhaps the readjustments made by the commission were wrong mainly and especially—I believe it is the main argument made by the government—because of a bad redistribution, taking into account the geography of northern Ontario. I personally know this area fairly well and I can imagine and I admit it is extremely difficult to have an equitable representation in northern Ontario, a representation that would be as flexible as in some other ridings in other areas of the country.

That is why the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) wants us to pass this bill. On the other hand, the same situation occurs in the province of Quebec, and this is the point we want to make during this debate. If the government forces this bill down our throats to make us accept a bad situation in Ontario, it will be very ill advised, I think, if it does not take into consideration a similar situation due to geographical reasons in northern Quebec, or more specially in the area better known as Abitibi.

The President of the Treasury Board said at the outset that he was making this statement in the House today not for purposes of expediency but rather for the sake of principle. I agree that at the time of redistribution of electoral ridings in Canada we were motivated by principles rather than by political expediency. But the very principles that are worthwhile in Ontario are also valid in Quebec, particularly at a time when we, Social Crediters, think that national harmony, or as the government would rather call it, national unity, is in great danger.

I think this bill would seem to grant Ontario privileges which are not considered for Quebec when normally it should not be a privilege for either Quebec or Ontario. It would be correcting a situation because the Commission, as the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) suggested, acted very badly in many cases. It is disconcerting to see that—and the readjustment of federal districts is not the only instance—the bureaucracy always has the last word and today we are losing part of the day intended for the business of the House in an effort to rectify a situation pertaining to a riding or a province that was improperly treated, or if you want, whose electoral boundaries were badly distributed.

It is always the same thing, Mr. Speaker; bills come to this House, decisions come to this House, which have not—or almost never, we are not here to shoot the breeze—been discussed and approved by the members of this House. Unfortunately, in financial matters and then in all other fields, bureaucrats take the initiative, write the bills, make the decisions, introduce the bills in this House and the majority vote for what the bureaucrats decide. We all know it by experience, we pass a piece of legislation in good faith and with good intentions but later on when we look at it and we look at the regulations that public servants enacted, thought out, came up with and which were accepted by the Cabinet and the minister concerned, we no longer recognize the original legislation. Unfortunately, we are trying to make believe that our Canadian government is still a democratic government when, admittedly, our democracy has nearly become a monumental farce. The only redeeming thing is that the people are not aware of it.

The population still believes that its elected representatives make nearly all the decisions, when they actually decide next to nothing either in the economic field or in the field of finance. We are now faced with a small problem, that of delineating the boundaries of our own ridings. This work is left to the bureaucracy. A city five miles from the largest city in my riding, with a population of 45,000 people, has been added to the neighbouring constituency. On the other hand, a city 75 miles away has been added to mine. This is completely nonsensical. They want to get rid of the lakes to go to another place when the village that used to belong to my constituency is serviced by the eastern townships highway which goes through my constituency, and we now have to make a long detour or to go by canoe if we want to take more time and take a more direct route.

Mr. Speaker, these are the completely ridiculous aspects of bureaucracy, as was said earlier by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) and the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). Once again, we have relinquished our authority. Not only have we relinquished our authority as members of parliament, but the federal government has also taken over the authority of provinces in another field. It does not concern the bill now before the House, Bill C-60, but in all areas, we have mixed up apples with oranges, we have mixed up the provincial, municipal and federal levels, and now we are ready to interfere with provincial rights in the field of education.

Mr. Speaker, with such confusion in the federal administration and the redistribution of constituencies, there are people who in the past two elections have believed themselves to be in one riding while they were in another. They wonder for whom to vote. Why? Because advertising is badly coordinated in this area. Some people come to the Longueuil office about unemployment insurance problems when they should go to the Sherbrooke office.

There are people in Saint-Césaire who go to the Montreal office for their tax returns, instead of going to Sherbrooke. And in my riding it is no worse than in others, the situation is quite the same everywhere. In those parishes located on the boundary of ridings, like in Saint-Hyacinthe for instance, people keep coming to see me because they got used to going to Shefford to get services provided by the federal government.

Well, this riding was removed, it was included in the county of Chambly during an election, it was moved to Shefford during another election, it was taken from Shefford in the course of another electoral redistribution and was returned to the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe. They are making fun of the people, because they think in terms of percentage. There is no problem in Canada, there is no unemployment problem, they think in terms of percentage.

They only rely on the figures of the manpower centres as regards percentages, when everyone knows perfectly well that all unemployed are not necessarily registered in the manpower centre and that they are not included either in the percentages of the unemployed, as the federal government tries to have us believe every time new statistics are released.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that in the particular context of Quebec, of Ontario and of Canada as a whole, the present argument is as follows: One wonders what will become of our country. We should not take too many steps at the present time to back up separatists, following an electoral redistribution which may be wrong, I admit, which may involve big mistakes, that is true, because there is a mistake in some area and they want to correct it in Ontario and are not prepared to do the same for Quebec. If they are not prepared to do the same in the province of Quebec, they can bloody well leave us in peace with national unity. This will be a sham! Why? Because the exact opposite will have been done of the words that were spoken. Unfortunately, that happens too often in this House. We are told one thing while the opposite is done. But to readjust ridings after an electoral redistribution has barely been completed—it became official just a few months ago—is to take advantage of a disorganized situation, I would say under the circumstances, to favour Ontario. Why? Because both the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec are poorly redistributed.

If readjustments are made in Ontario and not in Quebec, Ontario is enjoying a privilege, and national harmony then becomes but an empty word. If the same cannot be done for Quebec, then let us forget the whole thing and have elections according to the electoral map decided upon by the commissioners. As for us, Social Crediters, I inform the minister responsible for this bill that we are willing to pass it so that it can be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, provided the minister gives prime consideration to national harmony over electoral redistribution, especially as we are on the eve of a federal election the theme of which will be national unity.

It seems to me to be quite normal for the minister to accept that, not as a concession but as a logical fact since Quebec, in the process of the new electoral redistribution, lost one riding; it goes without saying that northern Ontario also loses one because northwestern Quebec has lost one. Under those circumstances, the minister should accept Bill C-421 and readjust the respresentation for Quebec while doing justice to Ontario as he should, as he explained very well in this House; while doing at the same time what we preach, that is advocating national harmony for the Crediters and national unity for the Liberals.

So, Mr. Speaker, we agree on this bill being referred to the committee provided the minister assures us that Bill C-421 will also be taken into consideration by the committee with a view to making a correction and readjustment in Quebec as well as in Ontario.

I think that with these arguments we could perhaps for once say that bureaucrats have been corrected, the bureaucrats did not tell us to do everything and that if they make mistakes we are here to correct them.

Mr. Speaker, since I know northern Ontario very well, I would like to see an additional district in Ontario because of the geographical situation. Considering also that I know very well the situation in northwestern Quebec, I would like the minister and particularly the government to consider the situation of northwestern Quebec on the same footing, not in a privileged way, not out of opportunism, but as a matter of principle for both Quebec and Ontario. I would like the minister to give us this guarantee so that we can be sure that both bills will be duly considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections so that when the bill comes back to the House we could consider both ridings or both areas and give justice to Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I will speak briefly, but I wish to take this opportunity to endorse some principles, from whatever side of the House they may originate. I would like to say that when it is said that service to the people goes beyond statistics, I endorse that principle and I will gladly work to that end every time I can possibly do so. I would like also, when reference is made to the readjustment of electoral boundaries, that the work of a member of Parliament be clearly understood. I think that the death of the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada a few weeks ago is a case in point. We should not merely take this opportunity to mention it, but I hope that actually it will be a lesson for all hon. members and that they will act accordingly. I also wish now to speak for the members from rural areas.

I should like the Commission to know that campaigning is not an impossible art, but that it should take place under normal conditions, and this applies also and especially to rural ridings. The Commission should also take special circumstances into consideration, because it tried to establish a statistical rule to the effect that rural ridings are not high density areas. A fact remains: the costs involved in election campaigns in rural ridings are causing us extreme difficulties. I should like also to support those who say that civil servants or the bureaucracy should not depolarize our ridings. Such a bureaucratic procedure I feel should be corrected, because ridings are social entities which should be respected.

I would also like to sound the alarm against statistics and the bureaucracy. Some people predict the disappearance of the rural ridings. As far as I am concerned, I think that the future lies in the rural ridings and that one day they will put statistics to rest. I think that this is another matter of government responsibility to leave people where they are in conditions that they accept and which are acceptable. I agree with the adjustments proposed by the minister and I think that if such adjustments apply outside Ontario, they should hold in the province of Quebec or in any other province.

On the other hand, I would like to warn hon. members opposite. I would like them to know that when they give the impression that we, on the government side, are inveterate public persecutors, that we are always against the little man, I have to disagree because, in my opinion, I can easily be a Liberal member while respecting all the basic liberties and even low density areas.

I would like to add that it is not enough to say that we must not play politics but we must act accordingly. I listened earlier to the charges made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) about this or that riding, the riding of this or that minister or member who may have a different image, and I think that is playing politics, and as long as I am in this House, I say to hon. members that I will oppose vigorously that kind of allegation.

For once, I fully agree with the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) who says that some things can and must be held against the Commission. I think this is true and this debate is a glaring proof of it. I hope also that the new adjustments will give us concrete evidence that it is possible to correct if not the mistakes of the bureaucracy at least the adjustments which appear to be necessary. Therefore, let us recondition our bureaucracy, and I say it again, I am ready to work at it. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I accept the adjustments proposed by the minister, but let all hon. members—and I think that is the purport of the proposal submitted by members opposite—let all members for the same good reasons, provided they are voiced and known, I say, let them decide.

However, and I repeat it, I am against those who say that we on the government side are always persecuting small underprivileged areas. If genuine and positive solutions are provided for the actual problems, I personally, will be ready to give my support. I will vote for the motion moved by the hon. minister. And I will even say to the hon. member for Villeneuve and his immediate neighbours that I am ready for it, and that if the vote were taken here and now, I would willingly support their proposal, because it is a common sense proposal, and I for one, as a member even on the government side, I am ready to vote for common sense. I also want people to know that honesty and sincerity are not to be found in only one party, but for as long as I sit in this House, if something has to be done with honesty and sincerity, I will always be on that side.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of astonishment, amazement, and regret that I participate in this debate this afternoon. It is utterly incredible for an institution that purports to be managing a country as civilized and developed as Canada not to have settled for the next ten years or so, in a decision made in the last session of this parliament, the number of seats of which the next parliament is to be composed.

There was a great deal of debate on the issue at that time. We moved to a different method and a new approach to looking at the whole business of dividing up the pie that is Canada according to its provinces and territories. After all that debate, rhetoric, battling in committee, and the efforts of members opposite from British Columbia in particular to obtain justice for that province with regard to this distribution, we now have this bill before this parliament at this time. I find it absolutely incredible.

I find it incredible that the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) could go on television and berate the opposition for causing delay in getting government legislation through and then find, in the last days of this parliament, time being devoted to such a bill as this. It only shows the extent to which the government cares for the reputation of the Solicitor General as one who makes any sense at all when he talks to the Canadian people.

Last session we decided, after all the effort I have outlined, that the size of parliament should be increased from 264 to 282. It should be remembered that under the old rules British Columbia was going to get 26 members out of 264. When I came back here I was astonished to find that a formula had been presented which would increase the size of parliament to 280 and that British Columbia, which has grown faster than any other province in this country, was going to have just 26 members in the larger House. It was at that point I joined battle in an effort to do something about redistribution, aided by my hon. friend from Calgary Centre who also came from a rapidly growing province and was concerned about what was happening under the formula. After discussion, we set out finally a schedule which gave Ontario 95 seats and Quebec 75 seats. I have every sympathy with the argument which has been made by the——members from La Belle Province de Québec today because I know that the redistribution formula for the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec is exactly the same as for the great provinces of Canada. If you want to change the situation in Ontario, you must absolutely change it in Quebec.

[English]

Nova Scotia, 11; New Brunswick, 10; Manitoba, 14; British Columbia, 28; Northwest Territories, 2. I do not think anybody in the House denies the need for an extra seat for the Northwest Territories bearing in mind the inhuman task which is given to the member who represents that region. Yukon Territory, 1; Prince Edward Island, 4. We know we can never have a one man one vote situation in Canada as long as we abide by the rules which establish a base below which provinces cannot fall in terms of representation. I am not quarrelling with that situation. Saskatchewan, 14; Alberta, 21; Newfoundland, 7, making a grand total of 282.

There were many in this House who had serious reservations about increasing the number of members to 282 bearing in mind all the extra costs and all the adjustments which would have to be made. Yet here we have a bill bringing the number to 283, and we know that if this is done it will be necessary to add one more from Quebec and another from the West, one here and another there. Mr. Speaker, members opposite have opened the box, they have taken the lid off a can of worms by bringing such a bill before parliament at this time.

I can understand the despair of Ontario members from any party which represents the north of the province. One has only to pick up the parliamentary guide and look at the figures from the 1974 election. I am not concerned about who was elected. It is simply a matter of record that in 1974, for instance, it took only 9,362 votes to elect a friend of mine, the peerless member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert). In Spadina, it took 9,273 to elect its member, and in Trinity it took 10,683 to elect a member. I am casting no aspersions on any of these members. Then one goes into the north of Ontario where the problems of transportation and the severity of the winter must all be taken into consideration, and we find that in Sudbury it took over 23,000 votes to elect a member there, that in Parry Sound-Muskoka it took 14,030 votes, in Nickel Belt it took over 17,000, and in Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton it took 18,000 votes to elect a member. Mr. Speaker, why should it take almost twice as many votes to elect a member in northern Ontario as it does in the heart of Toronto? This is a quarrel many members of parliament have always had with the formula. But it is one which should be taken up with the commission. One can only assume that the commission was composed solely of hacks and flunkeys appointed by the government—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Johnston: Members opposite cannot argue against that description, otherwise they would not have brought in this bill. The bill before us is a most damning criticism of the commission and of the redistribution. I have every sympathy with members of the New Democratic Party who favoured non-political commissions. Whatever some members thought about it, the decision was made by this parliament long ago. The first commission in British Columbia gave us Okanagan-Kootenay—I have not had too much regard personally for them ever since. But if we are going to change the principle and go back to the old business of gerrymandering, if we are going to revert to the practice of people in back rooms dividing up a province, let us at least be honest about it and bring in a bill which does that. But do not damn the commission, and do not damn the system by bringing a bill such as this before parliament.

I will read a few more statistics. in Sudbury the person who came second received 13,200 votes. In Parry Sound-Muskoka the person who came second polled 11,000 votes. In Nickel Belt the person who came second polled 13,000 votes, and in Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton the person who came second polled 13,000 votes. So there is a situation in which you can come in second in Northern Ontario and still have thousands more votes than it takes to win in downtown Toronto. That is where the scandal lies and that is the problem the commission should have rectified. But it did not.

One can only assume that the members of the commission are the type of people who, once they have climbed to the top of the CN Tower and looked around, think they have not only seen all of Canada, but all of Ontario too. That is our problem today, but it should not be. I did not hear any member from northern Ontario picketting the commission for what it did. Borrowing a tactic from British Columbia, did anyone strip in front of the commission, or, taking a tactic from Viet Nam, did anyone immolate himself in front of the commission? Drastic action was required at the time. Someone should have been prepared to say, "This is wrong."

Mr. Andras: It was taken to court twice.

Mr. Johnston: An hon. member has mentioned that it was taken to court. And, of course, the case was lost in court. Again we are on a most dangerous course where the Parliament of Canada undoes the work of the courts of the land.

We in this country are in a situation where people are raising serious questions about whether the checks and balances that we have are sufficient. Certainly one thing we do not want to do is to turn this institution of parliament, which is the final court, into one which spends its time eliminating the work and effort of the lower courts. There is no excuse for the bill. I cannot accept that the solution lies with members from Quebec who suggested that if Ontario gets one more member they should have one more.

Mr. Peters: That is not the argument.

Mr. Johnston: There is logic there. But it should be remembered that the Parliament of Canada sits on the boundaries of those two provinces and that none of the 170 representatives from those two provinces have the problems of distance which we British Columbians have, we who are still under represented here.

I speak today as a representative from my province which did not obtain justice in that previous bill. We held our own—26 out of 264, 28 out of 282. A formula was put forward which would add one more seat to British Columbia, but even that was not just. The formula had three categories, or four really: the ones that are set by statute, the small provinces, the intermediates, and the large.

I suggested that the solution to the problem was to treat Alberta and British Columbia as intermediate provinces, a category which they fitted. When I did my arithmetic it worked out to 29 seats for British Columbia, using the arithmetical average. It was at that point that the representative on that side told me one evening that the government would be prepared to accept 28. We had held our own, and at that point there was not much use fighting any longer because I could see that we were not going to get the 29 seats.

This is not a private member's bill; the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) is responsible for this mess, and if I had known that the government was going to bring in a bill to upset what had been decided on and passed by parliament, then I can tell the House that I would have fought much harder and longer to sustain the demand for 29, which would have been a little closer to justice for British Columbia.

Let hon. members not forget—and this may be an argument for the NDP—that we have only six seats in the Senate. So my province is under-represented in this institution in every way.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do not expect us to cry over that.

Mr. Johnston: I am amazed—and here I come to the most crucial point of all—how the President of the Treasury Board can bring this bill into parliament at a time when the government pretends to be exercised over national unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: That is the mark of shame, of disgrace, of folly and downright silliness so far as this bill is concerned. We set up extra parliamentary commissions, celebrate Dominion Day by another name at the cost of millions of dollars, and are doing any number of things for the sake of national unity. Yet the government brings in a bill which strikes at the core of national unity and endeavours to separate in representation in this Chamber the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec As a British Columbian who believes passionately in a country from sea to sea, I find that utterly unacceptable. The government is engaging in this paltry exercise when only a few days of this session are left, and pretends it wants to get the immigration bill through the House, along with several others.

An hon. Member: And we will.

Mr. Paproski: They are cowards and traitors.

Mr. Johnston: I cannot understand why we have not heard from the members of la belle province over there.

[Translation]

Where is the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) and where is the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos)? How can hon. members from Quebec vote for that bill? They cannot.

[English]

They can't go home and say that they let the cause of national unity down. Because this bill will be a symbol of what this government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the President of the Treasury Board care about national unity. Better to have brought in a bill on the national anthem, which I would have supported. I was on that committee in the Twenty-Seventh Parliament which reported unanimously, but the bill has never been presented to the House. It will not be necessary for the government to bring in a bill on the national anthem because this bill will be the symbol, will be the sign, will be the word indicating how much this government really cares about national unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Johnston: May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It being six o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until two o'clock p.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PROPOSED FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE TO DEAL WITH ECONOMIC PROBLEMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. In view of the recent report of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development which predicts gloomy economic prospects until at least mid-June 1978, and more specifically, in view of its forecast saying that business investment will remain weak, the gross national product will rise about 3 per cent, unemployment will remain high and heavy inflation will continue, and in view of the OECD's prediction that economic recovery could accelerate in the first quarter of 1978 if there is an upturn in real disposable income and personal consumption, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan):

That the Prime Minister immediately convene a first ministers' conference to specifically deal with the problems of real growth, inflation, and high unemployment and as soon as possible thereafter cause a new budget to be introduced which provides for at least tax cuts for low and middle income wage earners.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED SITE FOR DEBATE ON NORTHERN PIPELINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the direct effects of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline on northern Alberta, the fact that it will cross a portion of my constituency and that this Chamber will not be available for the debate planned in August, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the debate which parliament plans to hold be held in a suitable place in northern Alberta, preferably in the town of Lac-la-Biche.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The presentation of such motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion which I hope hon. members opposite will accept, they being honourable men and women. In view of the CRTC finding that the CBC is not guilty of pro-separatist bias, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House instruct the Cabinet ministers who accused the CBC of such bias to apologize publicly to the CBC for their unfounded charges.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY TO DETERMINE PROMOTIONAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR UNILINGUAL FRENCH-SPEAKING PERSONNEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering that the government was supposed to establish French units within the federal administration; that difficulties were experienced in carrying out the project; that the defence department, especially the air force, systematically refuses to provide training in French for its recruits; and that as a result of frustration some Quebecers intend to leave the forces or have already done so, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) immediately direct that an investigation be launched to determine whether it is possible for a Francophone to obtain a deserved promotion in the Canadian army even if he is unilingual.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the fact that, while the Liberal Party think the CBC is biased in favour of separatism, the Boyle report reveals that the Canadian people feel, if anything, that there is pro-Liberal bias. PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF REASONS FOR EXODUS OF CAPITAL TO UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. My motion is prompted by continuing alarming reports of the mass exodus of individual and corporate investment money from Canada to the United States, such as the millions of dollars Canadians are investing in Florida real estate, manufacturing, banking, etc. and the fact that a large Canadian trust company recently bought a large banking firm, and since there are countless other examples of Canadian capital leaving for the United States due to a lack of confidence in the Trudeau Liberal government along with reports that United States business is openly encouraging business in Montreal and Toronto to move to the United States, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt):

ALLEGED CABINET MEETING ON TAKEOVER OF PONY SPORTING GOODS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing necessity concerning information I have received that a special committee of cabinet will meet tomorrow, scheduled to include the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) to consider the Foreign Investment Review Act and possible amendments thereto along with the recent effectiveness of this legislation. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce acknowledge the fact that the principal reason for the sudden calling of this special meeting concerns recent cabinet approval of the sale of Pony Sporting Goods of Canada Limited to foreign interests in a transaction involving Senator Keith Davey, Liberal campaign manager and Gordon Dryden, Liberal party treasurer, and finally that it be made known to this House whether or not the cabinet will, on the basis of obvious facts immediately rescind permission granted for the sale and will in future properly review all foreign takeovers instead of leaving them in unopened folders—

SUGGESTION INQUIRY REPORT DOES NOT SUPPORT ALLEGATIONS OF SEPARATIST BIAS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of the CRTC report which the right hon. gentleman tabled yesterday. In view of the fact the Minister of State for Urban Affairs was quoted in La Presse of February 24 to the effect that he had a list of names of Radio Canada employees whose ambition it was "to destroy the country" and as the CRTC report does not substantiate these allegations of any separatist bias in Radio Canada, what action does the right hon. member, as leader of the government, contemplate to dissuade or discourage ministers from making unsubstantiated charges of this kind, not supported by evidence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member has the advantage of me. He says he has read every word of it. I must confess I have not yet read a single word of it, though I propose to do so. I am told by my ministers who have read the report that they are very satisfied with its conclusions.

An hon. Member: That doesn't say anything.

Mr. Trudeau: I am just saying they are very satisfied with the conclusions and that they bear out some of the suspicions they had.

Mr. Fairweather: I am in no position to make any charges, of course, and would not attempt to do so whether the Prime Minister has read the report or not.

Mr. Trudeau: I have just admitted I have not.

Mr. Fairweather: The fact is that those who commented to the right hon. gentleman must agree that charges made by various ministers about separatist bias on the part of Radio Canada are in no way substantiated in the 70 pages of the report. I would hope that as leader of the government the Prime Minister might discourage that type of loose and irresponsible comment.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Trudeau: I confessed to the hon. member that I had not read the report and therefore he does not need to feel he must make a charge about it. I am simply saying—and this is just hearsay, I know—that the report concluded that the media in general and that the electronic media in particular, the CBC included, had not fulfilled their duty to promote national unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It seems to me that this was the essence of the charge made by the ministers.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members opposite seem to be in doubt about that. If the word "subversion" is used in the report, as I am told it is, surely this is a fairly slight condemnation in line with what members on this side of the House and other people across the country have been saying.

PROPOSAL FOR COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): As the Prime Minister has said, he has not read the report and perhaps when he does the use of the word "subversive" will become clear. I should like to move to another part of the report because the Secretary of State and the President of the CBC, my own leader and others have called for a royal commission into communications and into the national broadcasting systems.

Mr. Ouellet: Where is your leader, anyway? You were complaining the other day because I was not here. Where is your leader?

Mr. Chrétien: He is in Cape Cod. He is reading the report in Cape Cod.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Fairweather: The heat is obviously getting to ministers as well as to the rest of us. I wonder what the Prime Minister's reaction was to the recommendation made by various people that a royal commission into the whole area of communications and broadcasting is urgently needed.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It is my understanding that the recommendation of the CRTC is not to the effect that a royal commission be set up. However, as the hon. gentleman says, a number of people are of a contrary opinion, including his own leader, he says.

Miss MacDonald: And one of your ministers.

Mr. Trudeau: And one of my ministers, she says. I have asked the minister responsible for the CBC, the Secretary of State, to come to cabinet within a month or so with a recommendation on this issue.

SUGGESTED APOLOGY BY PRIME MINISTER FOR ALLEGATIONS OF BIAS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): May I refresh the Prime Minister's memory? On February 25 he had this to say in the House of Commons with respect to the matter alluded to by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

> I am telling them with all the candour I can command that almost everyone, including the high officials of the CBC, would be prepared to state that the overwhelming majority of the employees in the CBC are of separatist leaning . . . They are just asking: What can we do about it without infringing freedom of speech.

It is clear that the view expressed by the Prime Minister has been declared to be false. Does the Prime Minister intend to apologize to the employees of the CBC, and would he ask his Minister of State for Urban Affairs to produce this list, which is supposed to number in the thousands according to statements attributed to him, so as to provide the House of Commons with the evidence which seems to have alluded Mr. Boyle and which for some reason or other the minister forgot to give to Mr. Boyle?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to quote me, and then he said that the report of the CRTC has contradicted me. I should ask him to be good enough to quote where the report of the CRTC contradicts me.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Just answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: I am answering the hon. member's question. He is making a false and phony assertion, but there is nothing new about that; we have those every day from the House leader of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is giving an interpretation of the CRTC report and I am asking him to substantiate that interpretation. He is incapable of doing it because the report uses words to prove the contrary, that the conduct of many people—

An hon. Member: You said you had not read it.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member for Prince Albert has a supplementary; I will bow to him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton on a supplementary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I may ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if I needed any help at evasion I could look to no better mentor than the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGATION NEWS SERVICE BIASED IN FAVOUR OF CENTRAL CANADA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I want to ask the Secretary of State a question with respect to the report. I hope that we will not use the same kind of attempts at adroit footwork that we have seen from the pyjama-clad Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: What is your leader wearing today, Stanfield underwear?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The CBC has no place in the bedrooms of the nation, Mr. Speaker. One conclusion of the report was that both CBC news services are heavily biased in favour of central Canada. Would the Secretary of State care to comment on that? Is he in a position to advise the House what he intends to do, if anything, with respect to that matter? Because if that is the case, and if that assertion is substantiated, then I think there is a question which the Secretary of State should address himself to respecting the mandate of the CBC.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would not care to comment at very great length. I am sure the hon. member is aware that the CBC have brought forward a report called "The Touchstone Report" which gives some indication of how they feel the activities of the corporation should develop for the future. I have read the CRTC report but I should like to reflect on it considerably more than I have been able to in the short time that it has been available to me so far. I think the questions that it raises are both extremely serious and extremely complex, so I am reluctant to give spontaneously the initial impression which I have to the hon. gentleman. I would prefer a chance to study the report in much greater detail before I make further comment.

ALLEGATION CORPORATION FAILED TO CONTRIBUTE TO NATIONAL UNITY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister agree with the CRTC report that the CBC, for a number of reasons has failed in its very important responsibility to contribute to the development of national unity; and, if so, bearing in mind the other conclusion of the report that the CBC has autonomy without true accountability, what measures does the government plan to take to ensure that there is accountability and that the CBC fulfils its mandate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these are very serious and substantial accusations which certainly indicate that the report contains a more severe criticism of the CBC than the hon. members of the Conservative Party have implied in their questions to us earlier.

The hon. member has asked me if I agree with these accusations. All I can say is that I have asked that the report be considered very seriously by my ministers and that whatever corrective action can be taken will be announced in due course to this House. The minister responsible for the CBC has been in contact with the president of the CBC. It is only fair that his views be heard also. My understanding is that the CBC is aware of some of these deficiencies and is doing its best to correct them. Having received the report, this is a matter we will have to look into.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT NOT WILLING TO MAKE FUNDAMENTAL CHANGES IN CORPORATION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the CRTC in his letter of July 20 to the Prime Minister recommends against a royal commission into broadcasting at this time, not because it is unnecessary but because "the commission does not perceive that the will and the readiness exist to give priority to these problems nor to implement fundamental changes that might emerge from any major public inquiry". Does the Prime Minister accept that condemnation of his government, and if not, how does he justify the introduction of Bill C-43 which in essence maintains the status quo in broadcasting with the exception of emasculating the power of the CRTC?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I would not be able to join issue with the hon. member on his interpretation of the CRTC report. My understanding of it is that the CRTC does not recommend a royal commission for a host of reasons, some of which have been quoted by the hon. member. There are other reasons of a different nature, and they have to do with the hopes that the CBC and other electronic media will take corrective action without waiting for the long process of a royal commission.

It is a very important report which Mr. Boyle has produced. I must thank them for doing it in such a short period of time. The question itself was extremely complex. At this stage all I can say is that our ministers are already seized with it. I have indicated that the Secretary of State responsible for the CBC will be recommending action to Cabinet in a very short period of time.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister will read the report very carefully because in that report he will see that the CRTC does not believe, because of Bill C-43, that this government is interested in any fundamental inquiry or report to the broadcasting system.

My final supplementary question is: the CRTC in its report on the national broadcasting service calls for an examination of the present administrative structure for broadcasting before a royal commission is instituted to examine the role of the electronic media in Canada. Is the government prepared to undertake such an examination prior to proceeding with its new communications Bill C-43?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member recites all the recommendations contained in the report one after the other, could I refer to my earlier answer that we have been seized with the report yesterday, as every member of this House has been? We will take a little bit of time to answer each of its recommendations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTION REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED ON MARCH, 1972, BE REVIEWED

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

As the current session is continuing under rather exceptional weather conditions, and as the report of the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate was tabled on March 16, 1972, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends to recommend that Parliament reconsider the recommendations of that report, and among others that suggesting that the government be defeated only on a motion of no confidence passed by the majority and that, under other circumstances, the government continue to function despite the rejection of laws that are passed or suggested by the government. In other words, can the Prime Minister tell the House, in short, whether the recommendations of that committee could be studied anew by this Parliament so that they can be applied and so ensure Canada propose administration while allowing Parliament to perform its duties?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question is serious, Mr. Speaker, and I share the concern of the hon. member with regard to allowing both the Parliament and the government to perform their duties far more efficiently and, I hope a bit more quickly. At this point in the life of the current Parliament, I can say that it is very unlikely that substantial reforms can be made of the type suggested by the hon. member. I can give him no hope in that regard; that is the type of reform we would like to suggest early in the life of a new Parliament. We have, as the hon. member is aware, through the leader of the government in the House, suggested in the course of the last few years a series of possible changes. We have never managed to achieve unanimity among the parties in the House on those changes, including those who object to the report in question. Therefore, I feel we should continue to make efforts in that direction, but I cannot propose immediate changes. In that matter, the hon. member knows, the government cannot act alone. It must try to achieve consensus among all the parties.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM UNITED KINGDOM PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before continuing with the question period I know all members would want to join me in calling attention to the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished group of visitors in the form of a delegation. I am referring to the members of the Subcommittee on Social Services and Employment of the Expenditures Committee of the British parliament, headed by their very distinguished member of the Labour party, Mrs. Renee Short.

Oral Questions

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FORECAST FOR CANADA BY OECD—GOVERNMENT POSITION—POSSIBILITY OF NEW BUDGET

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance dealing with the grim forecast of the OECD which indicates that this country will be facing gloomy economic prospects until at least mid-June 1978. In other words, our society is sick economically because of the higher rate of unemployment than anticipated and because of inflation. Considering that the OECD forecast is much more pessimistic than the forecast of the Minister of Finance, can he tell the House on what grounds he disagrees with the forecast of that respected national body, or has he now conceded that his own economic forecasts were wrong and the budget ill-conceived?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): As the hon. member knows, we do not attempt to make forecasts. We make a projection from the figures that are present at the time. The OECD report for Canada and for all other member countries is somewhat more pessimistic than projections earlier in the year would have indicated. As the report points out, the increase in the inflation rate in Canada has been temporary. We can look to a return to a gradual reduction in that. I have to say that unemployment does remain a matter of concern. My colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has recently announced additional measures for this coming winter which should be of some assistance in this regard. The position we take is that the considerable room we have made available for the private sector, both for private investment and for consumption, should cause, over the months to come, a gradual acceleration in the rate of economic recovery in Canada.

Mr. Alexander: We hope the minister will make this gloomy report available to all members. I would remind him that the Prime Minister has indicated—if I am wrong, I know he will correct me—that the private sector has not taken advantage of the budget nor does it intend to in the present circumstances. In other words, this government has too much business in the boardrooms of the nation and should get out. Given the fact that the minister indicated to me some time ago that just because I asked him for a budget he would not move in that regard but that there are other criteria which would allow him to bring in a new budget, does the minister think that the OECD report is sufficient for him to move, and if that is not the type of thing he is talking about, what will make the minister bring in a new budget inasmuch as the last one he introduced has been a disaster and a complete failure?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out to the hon. gentleman something which he should already know, that is that the OECD report is a public document and is available for him to read if he wishes. With regard to the comments on stimulation, either of consumer demand or indeed of business investment, I would remind the hon. gentleman that in excess of $1.2 billion stimulus was provided in the March 31, 1977 budget. In addition, a further stimulus of around $900 million was provided at the beginning of the year by indexation. The hon. member wonders if calls by him for a budget were not very persuasive. Since he voted against those stimulus measures, obviously I do not regard his further suggestions about stimulation as having great value.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: The minister does not worry me with this bombastic rhetoric regarding whether we vote for or against these measures. Thank goodness we did not because they are not good anyway.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I asked the minister a question and I want an answer. I want to know what criteria must exist before the minister will realize this country is sick and needs an impetus in the form of a new budget. What are the criteria before the minister decides to move in that direction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: Would you let the minister answer my question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is hypothetical in nature.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is bombastic rhetoric, Linc.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBILITY ONLY ONE YEAR'S SUPPLY AVAILABLE FOR NORTHERN PIPELINE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a question. An article has appeared in the Financial Post with reference to the pipeline which states that the United States authorities say that $8 billion or $9 billion would be spent on the Alcan route or any other route for reserve of 23 trillion cubic feet of gas, which is only a year's supply to the United States. Has there been a discussion of that since the recommendation of the National Energy Board?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): If the hon. member is asking whether cabinet has considered all the implications of that question, the answer is no. I have indicated in the past that we will be giving consideration to this and we will of course, consider the representations of hon. members opposite.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sure the minister will be getting our representations. Surely if there is a decision to be made between now and September 2, which is the date mentioned by the Prime Minister with reference to questions put from this side, that is one of the considerations that should be under discussion by his department with officials of the United States in reference to the supply of natural gas.

Mr. Gillespie: That is a further representation, Mr. Speaker, and I have noted it.

AIR CANADA

SUSPENSION OF LIQUOR SALES ON FLIGHTS OVER ONTARIO—POSSIBILITY OF APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the Ontario liquor licence board decision to suspend liquor sales on Air Canada flights in Ontario next week as a penalty for infringement of provincial liquor laws and in view of the grave constitutional implications this action has for the argument that provinces have jurisdiction over air rights within provincial boundaries, will the Minister of Transport urge Air Canada to seek a clarification in the Supreme Court as to the constitutionality of the Ontario board's suspension?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am in the process of consulting my law officers as to what advice might be given on that matter to the Minister of Transport and Air Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON SOVIET ATTACHÉ SMIRNOV NOT DECLARED PERSONA NON GRATA IN VIEW OF ALLEGED IMPROPER ACTIVITIES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that Lieutenant-Commander Valeri Smirnov of the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa has been asked to cease activities incompatible with his status of a diplomat for illegally obtaining official non-classified industrial documentation and because Mr. Smirnov's name was on the list of 20 KGB trained agents posing as diplomats in Ottawa, made public last year—and at least two others have already been expelled from Canada—can the minister now explain why Smirnov, who obviously was acting in bad faith in improperly and illegally obtaining important industrial documentation, has not been declared persona non grata and asked to leave the country for good?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the second of the two words used by the hon. member, "illegal". I should emphasize that RCMP comments on this matter did not suggest or claim that there was illegal activity. There was activity which was improper with regard to the Soviet representative's activities and his status as a diplomatic person in Canada. So it was in this respect that his embassy was asked to have him desist. There was nothing, however, in that conduct, as revealed by the RCMP, which would justify the kind of action the hon. member suggests.

Mr. Jelinek: In view of the fact—and this is more on a general basis—that on March 24 of last year the then solicitor general confirmed that the RCMP was well aware that a number of KGB agents were operating out of the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa and because in the past the government has declared diplomats whose activities were incompatible with their status as persona non grata, would the minister now be prepared to follow his own government's policy and request all diplomats known to the RCMP as KGB trained espionage agents—and I believe there are still 16 left at the embassy—to leave the country forthwith, in view of the very fact that their espionage training activities alone make them incompatible with their status as diplomats? This is the government's own policy, but it obviously is not following it.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that it is extremely difficult to discuss these matters openly in the House of Commons.

Mr. Jelinek: Do something about it.

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member says, "Do something about it", but I will indicate to him that within the past several months we have asked a number of persons from the Soviet Union and from other embassies to leave the country. Whatever hon. members opposite may think, I am quite prepared to rely upon the activities and advice of the RCMP in these matters, and in each case when the RCMP has made recommendations, we have acted upon them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

NEW MEASURES TO PROVIDE STIMULUS—POSSIBILITY OF NEW BUDGET

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Prime Minister indicated that the government's concern is that the private sector "has not taken up the slack which was provided for it in the budget". In addition, recent indications are that other aspects of the budget analysis are incorrect. Consumer spending and manufacturers' orders are down, and the U.S. economy is not recovering as fast as predicted. There are pretty gloomy prospects for that, and the OECD yesterday released a projection on the Canadian gross national product. Can the minister tell the House what new steps his government is taking to deal with the continuing economic slump and whether he is considering a fall budget?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not considering a fall budget. However, at the end of this month I will be having an analysis of the first quarter returns, and as much as is available on the second quarter returns, made to determine whether in the absence of private expenditure some additional public expenditure—additional to that announced by my colleague the other day—will be desirable for this coming winter.

POSSIBILITY OF OPPOSITION PARTIES ASSISTING IN DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY BUDGET

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the severe economic problems facing the country and the detrimental effect of simultaneous unemployment and stagnation and their consequences with regard to national unity and the future of confederation, it seems to many in Canada that a need exists to adopt the same kinds of attitudes and energies of a parliament facing a crisis comparable to fighting a war. Given the seriousness of the matter and the government's apparent inability to deal with the problems on its own, will the government consider inviting opposition parties to assist in the development of a national emergency budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has been meeting with groups across the country and trying to get from them constructive views on the past budget, their reaction to it and their suggested remedies for the economy in the time to come. I was at a meeting yesterday along with the Minister of Finance and other ministers. We would be very happy to receive proposals from the opposition parties as to what remedies they see at this time. Opposition members have occasion every day to make suggestions when they write preambles to their questions. They have occasions during budget debates. However, we would be very happy to read any written memorandum that the opposition, including the NDP, would like to send to me or to the Minister of Finance showing how we can combat inflation and unemployment.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the Prime Minister, but he knows as well as I and every other hon. member in this House that unless the government indicates that it is prepared to take the opposition into its confidence, it is going to be business as usual in the House of Commons. The point I was trying to make is that the seriousness of the situation is such that I think the Prime Minister has to go beyond saying that he is prepared to listen to the opposition. That is what I wanted from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I can safely go much beyond my previous answer. The hon. member seems to suggest that he wants his party, at least—since he cannot be a spokesman for the other opposition parties—to be part of the decision making processes which lead up to budgets. I am prepared to contemplate that. That would mean, of course, an organic alliance between the NDP and the Liberal Party.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Beatty: What else is new?

Mr. Trudeau: Feelers were sent out a few years ago, and the idea was rejected, but if the hon. member is sending out a feeler now, my response is positive. I would gladly sit down with the Leader of the NDP and see if there is any way our party could swallow up the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

BILINGUALISM

POSSIBILITY OF GRANTING BONUS TO BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES IN QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering that the President of the Treasury Board came back yesterday after the oral question period and that penalties have already been applied to Montreal civil servants who refuse to speak the second language, and in view of the government refusal to give them the bilingualism bonus, does the Prime Minister intend to support the President of the Treasury Board who favours the implementation of penalties or instead does the Prime Minister intend to commit himself personally in the debate to invite the minister to deal with this matter before it is too late, again in order to prevent this bilingualism crisis which would be deplorable?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had time to check the answer I gave yesterday and I think that what I indicated is right: the President of the Treasury Board has already undertaken with the civil service union negotiations to implement proposals made a few years ago. If I remember correctly, the decision was to take effect around last November. These contacts have already been made; in this sense, I am convinced that the civil disobedience the hon. member seems to defend, is in no way justified. If there are people who refuse to serve the public—after all they are hired in the civil service to serve the public—then, they should be punished. In this sense, I absolutely support the suspension measures approved by the minister concerned. But, in the meantime, as I said, we do indeed intend to follow up the assurances that have been given a few years ago to the effect that bilingual service would warrant special treatment; in any event, for a certain period of time. And the minister has already taken the necessary steps to solve this problem.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. I understand from the answer of the Prime Minister that he agrees with the President of the Treasury Board, but such a promise was made about two years ago by his predecessor. Considering the lack of guarantees and the delay as regards the qualification of the positions, I ask, in order to prevent this unfortunate problem from arising again—it is getting more serious and I think the Prime Minister is aware of that—I ask once again whether the Prime Minister is prepared at least to guarantee to the House by tomorrow a short term settlement which would be in line with the just society which he was advocating 10 years ago.

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat the same answer with somewhat different words. It has been some time since the President of the Treasury Board was authorized by his cabinet colleagues to settle this matter on a just and reasonable basis. The negotiations are going on and we are confident that they will soon be successful. All I ask the hon. member is not to encourage those who, in the meantime, and it is just a small minority, decide to violate the law.

HARBOURS

HALIFAX—SUGGESTION AGREEMENT FOR SECOND CONTAINER PIER SIGNED—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, who will recall having told me recently in the House that in his judgment the time for a second container pier in the Port of Halifax-Dartmouth has not yet arrived. Has the minister any comment to make about the statement made by a minister of the government of Nova Scotia to the effect that the government of Nova Scotia has signed an agreement with the government of Canada for the construction of such a second container pier. Who is kidding whom? Has the minister's department been negotiating an agreement without the minister's knowledge?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the more exact reply I gave the hon. member was that there was some question as to exactly when the container terminal would be needed. There is a difference of view involving a matter of months, rather than one year or more. The question therefore was, when should construction start. The government of Nova Scotia wanted to be sure that as much as possible could be done in advance, to be ready for earlier construction. Accordingly, it asked if we would object to their plans to go ahead with site preparation. That led us to discussions about the necessary lease arrangements. These are now in the final form, and matters are likely to proceed in accordance with the intentions of the government of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand from the minister, despite what he intimated a few weeks ago, that the government of Canada is now prepared to start construction at an early date of a second container pier in the port of Halifax-Dartmouth, and prepared to support this financially? Is the minister saying this now, despite what he said previously?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in line with what I said before, the decision with respect to the actual construction of the container terminal has not yet been taken. The arrangement which is being reached, and is in its final stages, is for putting the province into the position of being able to invest significant amounts of money in site preparation. Since it is agreed between us that a container terminal will be required, and it is only a matter of judgment based on growth of traffic as to when construction should begin, the government of Nova Scotia is interested in making sure steps are taken so that when it decides to go ahead with construction of the container terminal, the shortest time will elapse before it can be put to use.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand from the Minister of Transport that the government of Canada is not yet committed to the construction of a second container pier at any particular time? Am I entitled to assume, therefore, that the purpose of these manoeuvres is to put the government of Nova Scotia in the position of being able to indicate that it has an agreement with the government of Canada with respect to a second container pier, an agreement which does not bind the government of Canada to do anything specific?

Mr. Forrestall: An agreement for election purposes.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think the government of Nova Scotia can clearly rely on the fact that when a container terminal is required, this government will be playing its part in seeing it is built.

Mr. Stanfield: It's a fraud, then.

Mr. Lang: There is, as I said, full agreement between us that it will be needed. There is only the question of the actual date on which it should be opened. Of course, there has been no formal approval by Treasury Board of money for the container terminal, but work has been done which will allow the government of Nova Scotia to advance the work of construction when the time comes.

HALIFAX—PROPOSED SECOND CONTAINER PIER—REQUEST THAT HOURS OF WORK BE RESTRICTED

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister consider in the remaining negotiations that in the 1974 general election in Halifax-East Hants, very much affected by container expansion at Fairview Cove, the candidates for the three major parties opposed the containerization development at Fairview Cove; but, if the development is to take place there, as I gather it will, I ask that the operations be restricted to reasonable hours. On this point I ask the minister to negotiate with the province of Nova Scotia.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at this point I can only take note of that representation, but I shall see what can be done in the way of operations.

HALIFAX—ALLEGATION AGREEMENT SIGNED FOR SECOND CONTAINER PIER

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport with respect to the development of the container terminal. I ask the minister to comment on the fact that one hour ago in Nova Scotia the minister of industry indicated to the people of Nova Scotia and of Halifax that he had signed an agreement with Ottawa with respect to the construction of the second container terminal within the last week.

An hon. Member: Who is lying?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report of those remarks but presume they relate to the agreement connected with the site preparation work, which is being launched almost immediately.

ENERGY

NORTHERN PIPELINE—SUGGESTION UNITED STATES MAY DELAY CONSTRUCTION—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Washington correspondent of the Financial Post reports that the United States administration is seriously considering not moving any Prudhoe Bay natural gas at present. One of the government's energy experts is quoted as saying that not building a gas pipeline at all has now become a real option, and Mr. James Schlesinger, Mr. Carter's energy adviser, has been telling various agency experts, according to the report, "to think hard about no pipeline". Has the Prime Minister received either from Mr. Basil Robinson, the federal pipeline commissioner, or from any other sources any indication that the United States government is seriously thinking of either not proceeding with the pipeline, or considering as a real option the delay in the construction of the pipeline? What information can he give the House on the matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received any intimation of that but, naturally, will inquire from the ministers directly involved and if I find any contrary information, I will report to the hon. member.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact we anticipate having a House of Commons debate on the matter of the pipeline early in August, it would be extremely useful if members of the House knew whether the American administration is considering as a real option the matter of not proceeding or delaying it since this would open up the whole question of having more time to settle the native claims. I therefore ask the Prime Minister if he will undertake to get that information and give it to the House, if possible before the pipeline debate, or postpone the pipeline debate until that information is available.

Mr. Trudeau: Exactly, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member is making a good point. If his information is correct, maybe we do not have to come back at the beginning of August. Maybe we can finish this part of the session today or tomorrow hopefully. I indicated I had no knowledge of this particular piece of information. I do know that Mr. Basil Robinson, mentioned by the hon. member, is going to Washington to meet Mr. Schlesinger's counterpart next week. I will make sure that he looks into the matter raised by the hon. member.

NEW BANK OF CANADA BUILDING

Question No. 1,875—Mr. Herbert: (Supplementary)

With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,229, answered on January 26, 1976, have there been any changes in cost since that date?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): July 4, 1977—Statement by the Bank of Canada on the costs of its new head office building: The Bank of Canada estimates that the total construction cost of its head office building project in Ottawa will be $57.3 million. This figure includes both the construction of the new buildings on the head-office site, for which earlier estimates were provided, and the renovation and integration of the existing head-office building, for which no estimate has hitherto been given. In line with common practice, the figure above includes as construction costs outlays on permanent interiors, built-in equipment and landscaping (rather than showing them in other categories as was done in the statement of January 1976). The estimate for construction costs also includes the salary cost of Bank employees allocated to full-time work on the building project. It does not include fees for architects, consultants and other inspectors, and furniture, which are shown separately. Because of the Bank's security requirements, outlays on special construction and on built-in equipment are much larger than in the case of a typical office building; the figure above includes more than $5 million for security facilities such as vaults, secure doors, secure delivery and working areas, and security monitoring systems. An amount of $6.5 million in respect of the existing head office building is included in the above figure for total construction costs. It covers not only a thorough renovation of all the electrical and mechanical systems in that building but also the construction of a larger roof top mechanical room to accommodate equipment to serve the rest of the building complex, the completion of the bridges which connect the building above grade to the rest of the complex, space on the ground floor to house a museum for the National Currency Collection, and the total integration of the below grade floors of the building into the new basement areas. The whole complex, which will be substantially complete by the end of 1978 or early in 1979, is in accordance with a plan approved by the Bank's Board of Directors in August 1971 and announced in October of that year. The architectural plan accommodates the decision of the Bank to preserve the original Bank building. The complex will consist of two new symmetrical 12 storey buildings flanking the existing building, with the 3 buildings connected above grade by an enclosed court and bridges. Much the greater part of the ground floor area will be devoted to public facilities, including the connecting court, the Currency Museum, and a large plaza along Bank Street. Three levels of basement will extend across the whole of the block bounded by Wellington, Bank, Sparks and Kent Streets, The whole of the basement areas will be devoted to the Bank's operations; in addition to vaults and associated security areas there will be working space there for up to 300 people. No space is provided for staff parking. The building complex was planned to be built in stages so that the Bank could continue to operate on the site during the construction period. The first and major phase is now completed, and the final two phases, namely completing the East Tower and renovating and integrating the existing building, are underway. The estimate of $36 million for new construction costs provided in October 1971 did not cover the renovation and integration into the complex of the existing building and, in the event, included far too little allowance for the rapid increase in construction costs that occurred between 1971 and the date at which contracts for later stages of the work would be let. That estimate was based on a narrower definition of construction costs than that used above, and thus excluded some of the interior work and built-in equipment included in the present figure. Like the present figure, it included nothing for architectural, consultant, and inspection fees or for furniture. The current figure on the same basis as the October 1971 figure would be about $46 million, and the difference is due to the extent of about one-half to subsequent additions to the work planned and about one-half to higher costs than originally anticipated. The cost of architectural, consultant and inspection fees associated with the construction of the complex, and the cost of insurance during construction, is now estimated at $5.3 million. The cost of fitting up the building, i.e. the purchase and installation of office furniture and special-purpose facilities and the related architectural fees, is estimated at $4.2 million.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT

Question No. 1,961—Mr. Lawrence:

1. Since the coming into effect of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, how many persons with the rank of (a) deputy minister (b) assistant deputy minister (c) associate deputy minister (d) chief executive officer of a Crown corporation or agency, or one of their subsidiaries (e) ambassador or high commissioner, have resigned from the Public Service, thus becoming eligible under the terms of the Act?

2. How many persons holding a position of equivalent classification and status to any of the positions mentioned in Part 1, have resigned from the Public Service, thus becoming eligible under the terms of the Act?

3. (a) In each case, what is their name (b) what was the effective date of their retirement (c) what position did they occupy prior to retirement (d) which ones have been re-employed or retained in any way, by the government, Crown corporation or any agency, either directly or indirectly, as consultants or under contract or similar financial arrangement?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The information requested is not readily available. There are 93,000 recipients under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (all public servants are entitled). A master list of names would have to be set up by referring to all departments, agencies and crown corporations. They in turn would have to prepare a list of employees who occupied a position listed in parts 1 and 2, who have retired since the coming into effect of the Act (April 1970). A manual verification of personnel records would have to be initiated some of which have been destroyed after two years. Of the information assembled we would have to program our computer in order to match the master list supplied to us by the departments, agencies and Crown corporations. Once this has been done we must refer back to the departments, agencies and Crown corporations to verify if any of the recipients have been rehired under contract. This would entail a lengthy and costly examination of countless files of departments, agencies and Crown corporations, which cost in manpower and time would be exhorbitant and prohibitive.

FUNDY TIDAL POWER DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Question No. 2,418—Mr. Howie:

Has the government announced its intention to include an environmental impact study in the second stage of the Fundy Tidal Power Development Study and, if so, is it the intention of the government to provide a formal opportunity for the public to submit presentations to the study and, if so, will this practice be followed in future environmental studies?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): The Bay of Fundy Tidal Power Review Board has referred the project to the Environmental Assessment Panel for review. The Panel will submit to the Board guidelines for the preparation of an Environmental Impact Statement which will be prepared as part of the second stage of the Fundy Tidal Power Study. In connection with the Panel Review, formal public hearings will be held in Maritime communities in order to obtain presentations from all interested parties. All briefs and statements from the hearings will be reviewed and considered by the Panel in the preparation of its report. Public participation is an integral part of Panel operations and is being practised for all projects presently under review under the federal Environmental Assessment and Review Process.

WORKING WOMEN

Question No. 2,480—Mr. Fairweather:

1. What percentage of working women are (a) alone and supporting themselves (b) the head of a family?

2. What percentage is the average income for women compared to that of men?

3. What percentage was the average income for women compared to that of men 20 years ago?

4. How many women are in the labour force?

5. What percentage do women make up of the total labour force?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: 1. (a) The percentage of working women who are alone and supporting themselves is 20 per cent. This figure includes all females employed, those unemployed but seeking work and, those on temporary layoff. The term "alone and supporting themselves" is assumed to be all females not included in a "census family"*. These females may or may not be living alone. (b) The percentage of working women who are the head of a family is 5.3 per cent.

2. In 1974, women in the labour force had an average income which was 50.1 per cent of the income of men in the labour force.

3. The percentage of the average income for women compared to that of men in the 1961 Census was 41.3 per cent. The question on income was not included in the 1956 Census.

4. During 1976 the average number of females in the labour force was 3,859,000.

5. On the average, women constituted 37.4 per cent of the labour force in 1976.

* The definition of a "Census family" is a husband and wife, with or without children or a parent with one or more unmarried children (regardless of age).

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF FURNITURE

Question No. 2,648—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. In the (a) 1975-76 (b) 1976-77 fiscal years, did Canada import furniture and, if so (i) in what amount (ii) from which countries (iii) what was the percentage value by country?

2. For the same years, did Canada export furniture and, if so, what was the (a) total value (b) value by province?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: 1. Statistics on imports of furniture in the fiscal years (1975-76 and 1976-77 are shown on the attached table (No. 1) in terms of value and per cent by country.

2. Canadian exports of furniture in the same period are shown on table (No. 2) by each province of lading.

UNIVERSITY ASSISTANCE

Question No. 2,723—Mr. Howie:

1. Are there programmes available under the Department of Fisheries and of the Environment to assist in the construction of university buildings or for the provision of equipment, teaching aids or other such facilities and, if so, what are they?

2. Are there programmes available under the Department to assist university staff members to further their knowledge and teaching careers and, if so, what are they?

3. Is there any such assistance for teachers at the primary and secondary levels under the Department?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1. The Department of Fisheries and the Environment has no programs for the purpose of assisting in the construction of university buildings. Policies of the department do, however, allow for advanced students and university staff to participate in research cruises, and to use laboratory equipment when participating in cooperative investigations. The Crown also leases property to the Huntsman Marine Laboratory which is used in part for student training.

2. The department participates in Executive Exchange Program with Canadian Universities, this program being administered by the Public Service Commission. The department also manages a subvention program in support of university research, and the journal of the Fisheries Research Board of Canada enables university staff to publish their research results subject to required page charges.

3. No.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, on January 24 of this year, six months ago, I placed a starred question on the order paper with regard to whether the government had purchased the Gulfstream 2 executive jet. I have raised this matter four times since January. It is ridiculous, when the government cannot find out whether they have purchased an aircraft. I see the minister is here again today. I spoke to him once before about this. I still have not received an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will realize that there are 55 motions standing on the order paper at the report stage of Bill C-24. I have had the opportunity to examine these motions. I should like to indicate to the House that I have reservations, on procedural grounds, with respect to eight of them.

There are two groups. Motions Nos. 2 and 9 in the name of the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) are grouped together. In my opinion, they introduce, subject to argument, a new concept into both the bill and the clauses of the bill which they seek to amend. That is, the concept of Canadian domicile as it may relate to some special privileges or rights with regard to immigration. It seems, on a preliminary examination, that the concept of domicile is a totally new one in respect of the provisions of the act.

Mr. Brewin: It has been in there for years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) wishes to make an argument, I have indicated that this is my preliminary view, subject to discussion. It seemed to me that I was doing a courtesy to hon. members to give them this information and to make available the preliminary arguments and concerns of the Chair in order that hon. members can address themselves to the preliminary argument.

Subject to argument on the point, it seems that motions Nos. 2 and 9 suffer from a procedural difficulty with respect to the introduction of a new concept. Similarly, the motions which relate to motion No. 40, motions Nos. 34, 35, 36, 43 and 45. These all relate to the basic proposition put forward in motion No. 40 which seeks to introduce an entirely new concept into the act in the form of a refugee claims board with certain powers, to say nothing of the fact that the board, consisting of some 18 members, I believe it is proposed in the motion, would have to be paid. Some expense there would have to be contemplated. Presumably, there is a fundamental difficulty in respect of the royal recommendation. If not that, there is at least the difficulty of introducing into the act a concept that seems to be beyond that contemplated within the four corners of the bill and the clauses mentioned here.

These are the areas in which I would be prepared to hear argument in terms of procedure. I again indicate, as I have in the past, that I will ask for copies of these notes to be circulated to hon. members to assist them in their preparation. I have not cited the references to the procedural text because hon. members will see those during the course of the argument.

The remaining motions seem to be acceptable, on a preliminary analysis, on procedural grounds. I would attempt to group them as follows. Motions Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5 should be grouped for debate, with separate votes on motions Nos. 1 and 4. A separate vote will also be taken on motion No. 3, and this vote will dispose of motion No. 5. Motions Nos. 6, 7 and 8 could be grouped for debate and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 10, 11, 12, 22, 27, 28, 33, 46, 47, 48, 53, 54 and 55 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21 and 25 could be grouped for debate. Motions Nos. 13, 14 and 17 would be voted on separately. An affirmative vote on motions Nos. 14 and 17 would dispose of motions 15 and 18. However, a negative vote on the motions will require separate questions to be put on motions Nos. 15 and 18. Motion No. 16 will be voted on separately, and this vote will also dispose of motion No. 25.

Motion No. 19 will be voted on separately. Motion No. 20 will be voted on separately, and this vote will also dispose of motion No. 21. Motions Nos. 23, 24 and 26 could be grouped for debate, and a vote on motion No. 23 will dispose of motions Nos. 24 and 26. Motions Nos. 29, 30, 31 and 32 could be grouped for debate. A vote on motion No. 29 will dispose of motions Nos. 31 and 32. A separate vote is required on motion No. 30.

Motions Nos. 37 and 38 should be grouped for debate and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 39 and 41 could be grouped for debate and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 42 and 44 could be grouped for debate and voted on separately. Motions 49, 50, 51 and 52 will be grouped for debate. A separate vote will be called on motions 49 and 51. A vote on motion No. 50 will dispose of motion No. 52.

Those are my preliminary suggestions. The House may now wish to begin discussion of the first group, motions 1, 3, 4 and 5. However, since we would probably move on rather quickly to motion No. 2, with respect to which, as I have indicated, the Chair finds some difficulty, it might be useful to hear argument now. I notice, though, that the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay is not present at the moment, so perhaps the House would wish to discuss the first group of motions, and in the course of that discussion the Chair might be given some idea when argument with regard to motions Nos. 2 and 9 will take place.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, with regard to motions 2 and 9, in relation to which Your Honour mentioned that a new concept of domicile had been introduced, I should like a ruling from the Chair on motions 22 and 23 which also bring in the concept of domicile. Possibly that ruling could be given before we continue.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to assimilate all the suggestions made by Your Honour, but with regard to motions 2 and 9, which deal with the question of domicile, I respectfully submit that this is not a new concept. For many years the concept of domicile has been a familiar one—a certain number of years of residence in Canada excluding, except in extreme cases the right of the government to deport someone if that person had acquired Canadian domicile. This feature was discussed by the minister in committee, and I respectfully submit that the effort made by the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay in motions 2 and 9 is entirely in accordance with the right of parliament to say that it wishes this long-standing provision to remain in the law.

Mr. Speaker: I want to make sure whether the hon. member for Greenwood is indicating that this bill, Bill C-24, contains in it any reference, other than report stage motions, to the term "domicile".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the suggestion made earlier, that this procedural debate might be deferred until we have dealt with the first group of motions, namely, 1, 3, 4 and 5. If they move quickly, we could perhaps go on to motions 6, 7 and 8, and meanwhile arrange for some consultation on the matter and advise Your Honour when we would be ready for the procedural discussion.

Mr. Speaker: That was the suggestion I made a few moments ago. We all wish to move with some speed to deal with this complex bill, and our opportunity to examine the measure is to some extent limited by the compression of time. This is why I am very receptive to argument that the concept of domicile does, perhaps, exist elsewhere in the statute and has not been introduced for the first time in these motions. Hon. members have an opportunity to develop this aspect and make reference to it, but I would think it worth while to go on to deal with the first two groups of motions and leave the procedural argument until later.

Mr. Epp: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. To ease the work of the House, I should like to mention that when we get to the question of domicile and the argument on that point—whether it is a new concept, or whether it is already in the bill—the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) will not be here to put forward his views.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we can proceed, then, to the consideration of motions Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5.

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): As we are nearing the end of this session, Mr. Speaker, I feel it is important that all hon. members should co-operate to conclude the business of the House as soon as possible, but there are matters of principle which we should not overlook just for the sake of making our lives more agreeable.

The purpose of the amendment which I proposed to the House is to define more generally and—if I may use the word, Mr. Speaker—more liberally the expression "Convention refugee" in clause 2. Bill C-24 defines the expression "Convention refugee". This convention we are dealing with here is the Geneva convention which was signed in 1951 and to which Canada is signatory. We must realize, Mr. Speaker, that the Geneva convention which was signed almost immediately following World War II had a very particular and special significance in that it did not concern essentially people who were politically persecuted, but people who had been displaced by the unfortunate events the world had gone through between 1939 and 1945. Canada being a party to that international convention undertook to accept certain minimum obligations. On the contrary, article (5) of the convention very clearly indicates that with respect to their obligations towards refugees go beyond the signatory countries may easily that to which they committed themselves by signing the convention.

Mr. Speaker, it would be truly unrealistic to stick to the definition of the Geneva convention when we know that an increasing number of people will want to claim the status of refugee from within their own country, when the convention says that to qualify as a political refugee, one must necessarily be out of the country of his nationality. The proliferation of totalitarian regimes in the world can only increase that trend because of violations of human rights by an increasing number of countries. Mr. Speaker, this is a situation that is recognized by the department when, for example, in issue no. 11, reference is made to clauses 115(1)(d), 6(2), 115(1)(e), when the reasons are given for the regulations that will accompany the legislation and it is suggested in support of what I just said, that there is an increasingly frequent number of situations where certain groups are the victims of serious political persecutions and must seek to settle somewhere else although they do not meet the definition of the term "refugee" under the United Nations convention, and it goes on to mention the Ugandan and Chilean cases.

Mr. Speaker, it would only be natural to include in the legislation what is in any case being done in practice, what is being done in the case of the Ugandans, what is being done in the case of the Chileans, through administrative directives, or special programs. It is suggested, Mr. Speaker, that if we included in the law what has been done in practice for some time already, and what will have to be done with increasing frequence in any case in view of the new modern trend toward development, toward the proliferation of totalitarian regimes, Canada could literally be invaded by people claiming the status of political refugees.

Still, Mr. Speaker, I think we must make a distinction between the admissibility and the selection of individuals coming to Canada or wishing to come here. It is obvious that if a much broader or narrower definition of a refugee were given, a greater number of individuals would become admissible. However, under the legislation, at the selection stage Canada can always reserve the right to receive or to accept a limited number of applicants, in accordance with our possibilities. Nevertheless, and it must be pointed out, we would have to give priority to the most urgent cases, that is to the people who are most politically threatened. We should not use that possible reservoir of immigration to improve the quality of our immigrants, because they are really special cases, as it has been recognized by the minister when he accepted an amendment to clause 6 of Bill C-24.

Mr. Speaker, in the document which the minister distributed a few weeks ago on the procedures concerning the recognition of the refugee status, the following appears on page 2: "The bill provides for the great majority of refugees accepted by Canada to continue to be selected abroad." The individuals can be selected either in Canada, in their country of origin or in a third country. Since it is recognized that only a minority will be selected and will receive the status of political refugees in Canada itself, it remains that the majority of refugees will be selected either in a third country or in their own country, and, Mr. Speaker, according to very recent history, we know that the majority of those who come and who will have been chosen outside Canada will have been selected within their own country. The amendment therefore simply asks the government to recognize in the legislation what is done in practice through administrative directives and special programs.

Mr. Speaker, it would be truly shameful if Bill C-24 so restricted the definition of refugee that it would not include perhaps the majority of people who would want to come to Canada as refugees. I would very quickly like to point out to the House that my amendment is within the spirit of the recommendations, more specifically recommendation 93 of the special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate, and I know that the minister has been saying since the beginning of the debate, and especially in committee, that such a provision of the bill followed the recommendations of the special joint committee. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this argument should not be used only when convenient. I believe that the joint committee has done some great work and I would like to pay tribute to all my colleagues who took part in the work of this committee, but as much as we can say that the work and the recommendations of the special joint committee were useful in other cases concerning other sections of the bill, we can also say that this argument is valid in the case of my amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close by saying that it is important that the act itself contain a definition of refugee which takes more into account the present realities concerning this issue, and I know that the House in general has set an example to the rest of the world in this matter during the last few years and that it has been generous. However, the new legislation should not use terms which are too restrictive. We will perhaps have to live with it for 10, 15, 20 or 25 years. It would not be a good thing if in 10 or 15 years, a government that is not as receptive or a minister who has something against such people were able to hide behind a narrow definition to justify a policy which would be equivalent to refusing to take its moral responsibilities towards the international community.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like, first of all, to say that I most wholeheartedly support the motion of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) which I think is an excellent motion, and rightly is a reasonable, up to date definition of "refugee" which is essential if we are to live up to our promises in this regard.

My next point is this. I see that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has moved over to this side of the House for a moment and I want to say something to him as a preliminary to my remarks. A lot of people, not just members of parliament but the various staffs around this place, resent what I would call this inhumanity, this almost insanity, of forcing the House to go through this sensitive, difficult and lengthy bill in the middle of July. I do not think there is any necessity for that whatever. I credit the minister with much more common sense than to have advocated this himself; I think it must have been pushed on him by these young Turks who have sometimes adopted the style of a steamroller to try to get their way.

I make honourable exceptions here, Mr. Speaker. In our committee on this bill, the hon. member for Montmorency and the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) worked hard, stayed with it and took it seriously. But apart from that we had platoons of people who just put up their hands without showing the slightest interest in what was going on. I want to protest that and say that it is not fair to force members of parliament to stay here in the middle of July to deal with this bill when we in our party—I cannot speak, of course, for any other party—were perfectly ready to come back in August after a decent break. This procedure disrupts family arrangements, reasonable plans for travel and holidays which have been made, and disrupts going to one's constituency. I think it is absolutely deplorable. I want to express that opinion right here and now.

As far as this bill is concerned, I have submitted a number of amendments. They do not constitute a radical revision of the proposed bill. There are some things in the bill of which we approve. I certainly approve the setting out of objectives in the bill, although there are some changes that should be made. Particularly I welcome the clauses which refer to the reunion of Canadian citizens and permanent residents with their close relatives from abroad. There must be close co-operation among the federal government, the provincial governments and all levels of government.

We accept the rejection of discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, ethnic origin, religion, sex or political opinion which are contained in clause 3 of the bill. In particular, we welcome the explicit statement of Canada's determination to fulfil international obligations with respect to refugees and to uphold its humanitarian approach with respect to the displaced and the persecuted.

We share the view of the joint special committee of the Senate and the House of Commons that Canada needs immigrants, not only on demographic and economic grounds, but to take into account families and humanitarian considerations. The view of the joint committee is embodied in the bill as a whole. It is an aid to vastly increased mobility. Canada cannot afford to have an open-door policy. It has to maintain some control over the total number of immigrants coming to Canada each year. We do not support the policy of total rejection of immigrants flowing into Canada. Our preference is for a policy of moderation in the choice of the people we allow in, and a fair and decent handling of the people who apply to come to this country.

The statement of the principles and the objectives in the bill in no way obviates our criticism of some of the clauses which urgently require amendment for reasons we will outline as the various amendments come forward. We regret that so large a part of the provisions of the bill which applies to immigrants has been drafted by public servants and is based on regulations and orders in council. Such a process fails to secure adequate knowledge or scrutiny by the general public or by those concerned. I have introduced amendments which deal with this. We have had many excellent representations from church committees, legal aid societies, the Law Union of Ontario, civil liberties unions, la Ligue des Droits de l'Homme, and other organizations. Almost every one of the amendments I have proposed is based on those recommendations.

I should like to deal with motion No. 3. It spells out the class of people who shall be admitted to Canada as sponsored immigrants, that is to say, should be allowed into Canada with a minimum of regulations and obstacles put in their way. This is supposed to be the purpose of this bill. Clause 3(c) reads as follows:

> to facilitate the reunion in Canada of Canadian citizens and permanent residents with their close relatives from abroad;

Motion No. 4 in the name of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) is typical of his amendments and his approach. It includes such other classes of persons as are prescribed for the purpose of that provision. In other words, even when we are trying to advocate the reunion of families, we have to turn to the executive to do so. We in this parliament are not asked or permitted, apparently, to state the number of positive persons who should be admitted.

My amendment under motion No. 3 deals with husband, wife, mother, father, fiancé, grandfather, grandmother, and so on. It does not change the law except in certain minor particulars. At present, the law is in the regulations and is not in the act. Under the present regulations, the law is not substantially changed by my amendment. My amendment contains two things, one of which the government has announced to be its intention, namely, the admitting of people who are fathers, or mothers, over 60 whether in the work force or not.

Hitherto the law has been that one could be sponsored only if he were over 60 or so disabled that he could not work. In my judgment, the government has rightly suggested that persons can and should be allowed to sponsor their mothers or fathers regardless of their age. I have added one other change, and that is to include the words "natural son or natural daughter". The reason is that there are many countries, some of them not far away from Canada, where the institution of formal marriage is not the same as in our country. People marry, live together and have a family, but they are never formally married. In those circumstances, under the present regulations a mother is entitled to bring in what is referred to as her illegitimate child, which is a distasteful term. The same right should be extended to a father who has supported, looked after a child and behaved as the father. I feel that wording should be included, and that is why I suggest it.

The basic purpose of this amendment is to have parliament take the responsibility, and not the bureaucracy. There is a difference. We are sent here to legislate on sensitive and important issues, and I resent the growing habit, which has been evident for quite a while, of delegating these things to the governor in council, which is another term for the bureaucracy. I have never been in Her Majesty's privy council or cabinet, and thus I am not sure what they do with their time, but I imagine they have a great deal to do and do not have much time to direct to the question of immigration. There is a difference between the minister and myself, and the minister and some supporters of his party. That basic difference is whether we believe in the supremacy of parliament, or not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this group of motions I will not be too long. However, I should like to say a few words at the outset with general reference to the process we have been dealing with. In particular, I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) concerning the non-liberal attitude of the government in terms of propelling so rapidly the final decision of the House of Commons in this debate.

● (1540)

I think the editorial in this morning's Le Devoir is entitled, if I can give a rough Anglophone translation, "A bad climate for a fundamental law". I agree. The law we are presently dealing with in this statute having to do with immigration is the first major revision of our immigration procedures in a quarter of a century, as the minister well knows. In the process of, first, the green paper, subsequently the special joint committee which travelled to about 45 different centres throughout Canada and had a great many meetings here in Ottawa and elsewhere, and finally the bill itself, there has been realization of the tremendous amount of interest which exists with respect to the whole question of immigration. In fact, a newsman this morning, in commenting on the issue of immigration, said that this is one matter on which everybody has an opinion. Unfortunately, sometimes there are situations wherein we get opinions off the tops of people's heads, and not the considered view that Canadians are capable of giving to the matter of immigration.

I suppose that one of the reasons immigration touches people in every walk of life so deeply is that it goes to the heart or the essence of community itself, the essence of the nation. Certainly, as a country that is still relatively new, we realize that we have been fundamentally dependent on immigration. Also, we can observe that in the past decade public opinion has gone through wild swings and gyrations with respect to immigration. As I think I mentioned during the second reading debate, it is most instructive to realize that when we last dealt with immigration in a major way, which was in the white paper on immigration produced a little more than a decade ago by Mr. Pearson's government and Mr. Marchand when he was minister, the attitudes among the general public and in the media, and certainly as reflected in speeches in the House, were such that one faced the subject of immigration with exhilaration and with a sense that immigration was one of the important characteristics, one of the really hopeful aspects, of the unfolding history of this country.

Unfortunately, during the last four or five years, particularly as the economic and social situation has become uncertain and difficult for a great number of Canadians, with internal problems, some of them affecting the integrity of the country, and with questions related to the future evolution of the province of Quebec, immigration has become a difficult subject for many people. It has tended to be treated—this is one of the unfortunate aspects—in a rather pathological way, with the idea that somehow immigration is now rather like a genie out of the bottle; that we must look upon it as something that is perhaps somewhat dangerous for the development of Canada. I know that the special joint committee said in its report, and the minister, as well as his predecessor who was connected with the special joint committee and the green paper, stated that immigration is significant and important to Canada. This has always been said with, "Yes, that is the situation—but." That is what made difficult the work of our special joint committee.

I am delighted that the co-chairman of the special joint committee, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), is here this afternoon, because he did a difficult job and he did it well. Perhaps it means more for me to say that than some other members, because he and I at times were not in agreement. But I can say that he gave important and constructive leadership to that committee in a most difficult situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): All of us who served on the committee won our spurs, in a sense, because we had to go through a great deal of trial and tribulation as we tried to make ourselves available to public opinion and public participation. We had a further aspect of public participation, to a degree, in the work of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, because some briefs and submissions were heard there. I would like to go on the record as commending the very capable work that was done by the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). I think she was most fair and helpful in trying to produce a most constructive piece of legislation in that context.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Of course, perhaps we did not happen to suffer as much the kind of "road show" exposure in the standing committee as did the special joint committee a couple of years ago. I say all this because, as hon. members will know, I have not been entirely happy with the process because I think there were times when we did not consult public opinion adequately or effectively. I am really quite shocked and seriously disturbed at the fact that the government House leader and some members on the government side seem to be fanatically obsessed with having this legislation become law in the shortest possible time.

They seem to want to use some kind of pressure or steamroller tactic to push this bill through in a few days during a period when most people would recognize that anyone with any sense would not want to sit or stand in this legislative chamber, but would rather enjoy the all too brief summer that comes to this country. I feel it is unfortunate, and it is no credit to the government that they have committed themselves to rushing this bill through so that they can take whatever credit is due to them by having this legislation become a new statute on the books.

It would have been exceedingly valuable for the Canadian public in general had they had a few weeks to reflect upon the work that was done in the standing committee. It is significant that the minister, in writing a letter of thanks to the various members of the committee, recognized the fact that some 99 amendments were passed and made as amendments to Bill C-24. That is not to mention a number of other amendments made from both sides which were not accepted but merely served to give an indication of the complexity and importance of this piece of legislation. We are here, after all, not acting on our own behalf; we are acting in some sense as the representatives of the whole of Canada, trying to put on the statute books of this country a reformed immigration act which will presumably stand for a number of years to come.

I cannot for the life of me understand why the government or the Liberal caucus would want to pass the bill this month, rather than in a few weeks, perhaps in the early part of September. It seems to me that would have at least allowed for some responsible democratic participation in the key elements—and I think there are a number, as evidenced by the 55 amendments we are dealing with now at report stage—on which the Canadian people would like to register their concern either directly to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) or to each and any of us as individual backbenchers.

Having said that, I would like to say a few words with respect to the specific motion No. 1 put foward by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos). I am very pleased to support this motion and I congratulate the hon. member for putting it forward. Obviously, it arises from his own experience and the experience of some of the rest of us in trying to understand and, to the degree possible, to suggest effective reforms with respect to the way in which we deal with refugees. I want to make it quite clear at the outset, because I think there is often a misunderstanding when it comes to dealing with amendments to the whole structure of procedures for refugees, that the concern which all of us have with respect to the refugee amendments is not in terms of Canada not accepting enough refugees. As the minister has recognized, we have had a commendable record, in terms of responding to situations of great human peril and anguish. Certainly this is so with regard to refugees coming from Europe, Africa, Southeast Asia and Latin America. Canada has gained a worldwide reputation for being ready to respond and to take seriously the great problems that exist for people who become exiled either within or outside their own country.

One thing we have discovered is that because the whole phenomenon of refugees is an increasingly important one, both in the world sense and in the way in which we as Canadians respond, procedures that may have been adequate 20 or 30 years ago are no longer adequate, and that our approach has been either of an ad hoc nature, which makes it difficult to determine whether or not we are handling the situation fairly and equitably, or we have been faced with a situation in which there is no legal framework at all, as in the case of the motion moved by the hon. member for Montmorency.

The interesting thing about this amendment is not just the fact that it was recommended by the special joint committee, which I believe is significant, but also that it really would put into law what is the current practice of the governement. This is what makes it very difficult for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to say that it is not a worth-while amendment. In a sense, we are suggesting to the minister that we want to give him, in legislative terms, the kind of role which has been exercised both by himself and by his predecessors in recent years. If that is not a reasonable proposition, for the life of me I do not know what is.

As has been referred to already this afternoon, increasingly there are situations where there are breakdowns of civil rights or human rights in various countries and where there is oppression, whether it comes from an ideology to the left or to the right. We know—and we have responded on a humanitarian basis—of situations where thousands of people have been caught within their own countries, suffering all the things which are defined under the UN convention on refugees, and because of the fact that those people are not actually physically outside their countries they cannot be regarded in traditional terms as coming under the refugee category.

We recognized this a few years ago when we faced a situation which was difficult and deplorable in Uganda, and we recognized it, after that, in Chile. There were situations in which tens of thousands of people were suddenly subjected to massive persecution from the authorities in control of those countries. They did not come under the refugee definition of the United Nations. This situation was recognized by the special joint committee. So the department, in its wisdom—and I think it was wise—introduced the category of oppressed minorities. It does not exist in this particular statute, but that was a regulatory way for the department, the government and the Canadian people to respond to these very real human crises and tragedies.

We did respond, and I do not know—perhaps the minister can tell us—of anybody who has objected to the minister responding in this way. However, we have to recognize the fact that even though we handled those people as refugees, referred to them as refugees and established them in Canada on a refugee basis, and even though they were not legally situated as refugees, we participated and went along with it. I suppose it was really to save us going through an enormous debate here and having to amend the immigration law. Here we are, now trying to make our immigration law modern and relevant, and that is why I think the amendment of the hon. member for Montmorency is reasonable and sensible. In fact, I think it would not be sensible not to accept his amendment. The special joint committee recommended, at page 53:25, in recommendation No. 93, the following:

> The committee regards the United Nations definition of "refugee" as too narrow and not adequate to accommodate the present-day variety of circumstances and emergencies confronting citizens of many countries. One difficulty is the stipulation that the person be outside his country to qualify as a refugee. Canada has eased this requirement to accommodate Chileans and Ugandans, but the committee sees a need for firm criteria to reflect contemporary refugee situations in which persons must leave their home countries because they have been stripped of citizenship and denied the right to remain. The definition should also include persons living in their homeland who face persecution or punishment for political reasons, provided their governments allow them to leave.

The hon. member referred to that, and there are a number of hon. members in the House this afternoon who sat on the special joint committee and who will recall this, but I think it is useful to have it on the record when we are dealing with this particular motion. That recommendation states the case as succinctly and as reasonably as I think it is possible to do. One of the things which was uppermost in the mind of the minister, his predecessor who worked on the drafting of this bill, and departmental officials, was that they wanted to try to reflect the wisdom and insight which was accumulated by the special joint committee.

The amendment brought forward this afternoon is eminently sensible. Having had a chance to consider this in the committee, but perhaps not sufficiently, and a chance to consult with his officials to see if there is any aspect of this redefinition which would create other problems—and I have not heard of any from the minister or his officials so far—I hope the minister will accept the amendment as being reasonable and sensible. Quite frankly, I think the Canadian people would expect no less.

What we are really trying to do this afternoon is reform the law in terms of present practice. I am sure the minister does not what to say to us this afternoon that in the years to come we are not going to be able to be in a position from time to time to respond to situations in which people will be, for all intents and purposes, refugees within their own home countries. People whose lives are in jeopardy, who have to flee and find residence in another country, will be looking for a homeland, and we should be able to provide a homeland for some refugees. Of course, under UN designation at the present moment I suppose millions of people are categorized as refugees. We are not talking here about any increase in numbers we are talking specifically about having the law defined in the clearest possible terms so that all Canadians can be proud of what is now the current practice and responsibility of the government.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to commend the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos). I believe he attended practically every one of the 33 meetings of the committee. He has been consistent in his representations, and we held many discussions both privately and at the committee stage. I thought perhaps my arguments would be more persuasive than they have been but notwithstanding that, the hon. member has brought forward his amendment.

I also thank the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) for his comments on many of the items in the bill, which are excellent. The bill is a very marked improvement over the legislation which is presently in existence. The establishment of objectives in the bill is a good move. Our responsibility to refugees is at long last incorporated into legislation. There is a myriad of improvements in this bill. We removed some of the more objectionable words which appeared in the former bill. As I read it, the former bill seemed to indicate that we were endeavouring to do everything we could to stop immigration, whereas in this bill we are indicating why we want immigration, why it is good, what Canada's obligations are, and what objectives we are hoping to meet through our immigration policy, so that those who come here and those who welcome them will know what the objectives are.

I think it is important that we get on with this legislation. My information is that almost every minister of immigration since 1952 has been endeavouring to bring forward an immigration bill. They have got to various stages only to find that sessions ended, elections were called or there was more important legislation. I think the time to move ahead is when there is a good feeling in the country about a bill and about immigrants. We have a good bill, and it is time to press on and get it passed.

At the committee stage we spent some 70 hours going over 99, or perhaps in excess of 100, amendments. We looked very carefully at the amendments. Some of them were accepted, some were changed, and some were rejected. When I look at the amendments which have been put forward, particularly those put forward by the hon. member for Greenwood, I am reminded of a good friend of his, I am sure, and a man I knew mostly by reputation, Mr. Justice Walsh, when he was counsel practising before the court of appeal. On one occasion when he was before the court he handled five appeals. A judge asked him if he appealed all his cases. He said, "No, My Lord; just the ones I lose". That seems to be the precedent followed by the hon. member for Greenwood who has, once again, introduced ten of the amendments which were voted down at the committee stage.

This amendment purports to remove from the internationally accepted definition as contained in the convention the stipulation that a person must be outside his country of citizenship or normal residence before he can claim refugee status. Although the United Nations High Commission does not object to nations extending refugee-type benefits to classes beyond the convention definition, it does oppose any wholesale broadening of the definition itself, as being likely to cheapen the concept of "refugee" and thus impair its ability to secure assistance and protection for true refugees.

From a purely Canadian standpoint, as I said time and again in committee, the proposed amendment would enable literally millions of people to claim treatment as refugees when seeking admission to Canada, which would be an intolerable situation for the administration of the immigration program and would work to the detriment of true refugees.

The bill, however, does not preclude sympathetic consideration being extended to oppressed minorities, expellees, etc., in particularly urgent and meritorious circumstances. This is precisely the reason for clauses 6(2) and 115(1)(d) and (e), which will allow the government, taking into account people's need for resettlement and Canada's current ability to provide settlement opportunities, to recognize certain groups for refugee-like treatment. These are the provisions that would have been invoked, had they been in force, at the time of the troubles in Uganda, Chile and Lebanon. The bill will, in fact, achieve the end sought by the hon. member for Montmorency, but in a more orderly and effective manner.

What could be the result of accepting this amendment? If we expand the definition to include the majority of the world's population, surely we might have to stop giving refugees priority and processing them next to the family class. Second, we might have to apply reduced selection standards when dealing with refugees. So on that basis it could have an effect opposite to that which the hon. member intended.

I suggest the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) is not correct when he suggests that acceptance of the motion would give the sanction of law to the present practice. That would not be the case. Bill C-24 as presently printed would make our present practice the law. Therefore, for the reasons given I oppose broadening the definition as suggested in the amendment, especially given the changes we have made in the bill in clauses 6(2) and 115(1) (d) and (e).

I now come to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood, dealing with the definition of "family". From my reding of it, the apparent intention is to enshrine in the act virtually all the classes of relatives who can be sponsored or assisted, meaning nominated, plus all illegitimate children. Like the hon. member, I do not like that term, preferring to call such children natural children. Taken with the hon. member's proposed amendment to the definition "member of the family class", it would make all these relatives permanently sponsorable, with no possibility of addition or subtraction except by way of amendment of the act.

I wonder if the hon. member for Greenwood has failed to notice that the definiton "family" is not intended to govern admissibility provisions but, rather, serves the purposes of several other provisions of the act, most of which concern removal from Canada, for example sections 19(2)(c), 27(1)(f), 27(2)(l), and 33. His amendment would expose all the relatives named to removal because of the removability of a person to whom they are related. The proposed amendment is thus unacceptable from both the admission and the enforcement standpoint.

In clause 4, which stands in my name, I propose to include a new definition of the word "family" or, more appropriately, the old definition. I do this because of apprehensions expressed to me by some members that the original definition or the amendment passed by the committee would be seen by some as evidence of severe restriction in immigration policy.

The definition of "family" in the 1952 act uses the words "father", "mother" and "dependent children". This has always been open to the misconstruction that it covered three, rather than two, generations, although only the latter interpretation has ever been applied. The intent of Bill C-24 was to clear up the ambiguity. Nevertheless, I am given to understand that some people would take disappearance of the words "father" and "mother" as confirmation of an unfounded suspicion that sponsorship privileges are to be reduced, although the definition has nothing to do with the admissible classes. To avoid this appearance, if it is the wish of the House I am prepared to revert to the wording of the definition in the 1952 act, given that it has not caused any legal difficulties. The proposed amendment would restore the 1952 language, with the addition of the new optional power to extend the definition for specific purposes of the act and regulations.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, this bill, now being debated at report stage and soon to be passed at third reading, hopefully, is the culmination of a number of years of hard work. Even before the green paper on immigration matters was made public, members of the parliamentary committee and those concerned with immigration called for the appointment of a special joint committee which would travel across the country to gather the views of Canadians on immigration. That committee was appointed; it travelled across the country and heard the views of many. In one or two areas, because witnesses found it difficult to attend, it did not hear quite so much testimony.

The spirit which animated that special joint committee has also animated our standing committee which has been chaired so ably by the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). I say this because the committee behaved in a non-partisan way, and serving on it has been one of my finest experiences since being elected in 1972. It considered all questions relevant to immigration and what will be best for Canada's future and for immigrants. We considered 99 amendments and spent 71 hours trying to improve the bill.

Mr. Alexander: Thank God for you, sir.

Mr. Epp: Some may argue the committee did not go far enough. Yet unquestionably the bill reported to this House represents the consensus of the committee. Its members tried to introduce amendments which would result in fairer immigration laws and reflect the reality of modern-day Canada. The point is this: it does not matter if members of parliament want to go home in July. We spent so much time considering this bill that it deserves consideration at the report stage and passage on third reading.

No one can say we did not spend enough time on it. The special joint committee considered it at length. We debated it on second reading and in committee, and we are considering it again at report stage. Here let me raise an important point. Certain amendments brought forward during the committee stage have again been brought forward at the report stage. I think the House leader should consider this practice carefully, since I do not think it was contemplated when our Standing Orders were revised.

I want to mention, with regard to the refugee clauses, that members on this side feel that Canada's international reputation in the area of accepting refugees is second to none. Throughout our history that has been the case. I believe all of us can point to certain times when we were perhaps not as forthcoming as we should have been. But when you consider countries that are internationally touted as being leaders in refugee matters, they fall well behind Canada on their total flow. That is over a period of years.

The definition in the bill is one to which Canada agreed as a signatory to the United Nations convention. As I understand it, the definition would allow Canadian immigration officials, refugee officials or whoever they might be, to intervene to the point of where a person is a prisoner of conscience or a political prisoner imprisoned in his or her own country, to say that that person is a refugee. Surely that is as far as we can go. If you look at the turmoil in the world today, you see we have a situation which we would simply not be able to control. The definitions which the signatories and members of the United Nations have agreed to, fit our purposes adequately.

I now come to the question of family. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) brought forward the amendment. I realize that the concept of family class is not in the bill. This is where we have some trouble debating the bill. What we would really like to debate is the regulations. In the regulations there is a so-called family class. The definition of "family" here does have, either directly or by inference, a bearing on the family class. The whole question of family and the family class, or nominated class as it is called in the old bill, needs very thorough re-examination. In testimony in committee we were told that at the present time approximately 66 per cent of our flow is from the sponsored classes or nominated classes. If we expand into the sponsored classes parents, of any age, of Canadian citizens, it is estimated that the flow will increase to about 70 per cent.

I am very concerned about what we are going to do as we establish an annual target. If we increase those eligible under refugee clauses and increase the refugee definition, it will virtually eliminate the independent class. I refer to the immigrant who is an entrepreneur, the immigrant who would come here, not because of family reasons but for the simple reason of making a new start. If this trend continues, we are going to be in trouble. The independent immigrant who does not have relatives in Canada, but who is an immigrant we desperately need, will not come to Canada.

If we go back far enough, we have to concede that someone in our family came here as an independent immigrant and established a family, business, farm, or whatever the case may be. We today are the beneficiaries of that. Some people call them "new seed" immigrants. Call it what you will, I want to place this matter before the minister. I know his officials are very aware of it because I have hammered it so many times already. I am deeply concerned about any expansion of the sponsored class and the family class. I am not against family reunification in any way, shape or form. However, if we expand that definition too far, the independent immigrant, the entrepreneur, will have less chance to come into this country and allow us the benefit of what they can give us. This is the point that must be stated clearly and openly.

With that in mind, the amendment on refugees is not acceptable. I want, again, to stress to the minister and his officials that when we look at any expansion of the "family" definition—although I know it is not in the bill as a family class, but it is in the regulations—we should not take steps whereby the sponsor or family class will increase to such a degree that we will virtually remove the possibility of the independent immigrant coming to this country.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has to do with private members' hour this afternoon. There have been some discussions about how best we could use the hour between five and six o'clock today. Earlier today, the House leader for the NDP, whose party has the business for that hour this afternoon, agreed that it would be useful to use that hour to continue the discussion on this bill, rather than private members' business. As a result of that willingness on his part, there have been the usual discussions. I believe Your Honour will find agreement in the House, now, that the hour between five and six today be used for consideration of Bill C-24 rather than private members' business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I stand by what I suggested earlier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is so ordered.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on an associated point of order. In order to ease the work of the House, I wonder if we could have an order as to when votes that are deferred will be taken. Will they be taken at the end of the day on which they have been deferred? How does the Chair rule on that matter?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my understanding there have been discussions and that votes will be deferred to the end of the day. Votes will be taken tonight on votes deferred today.

Mr. Paproski: At 9.45.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I object to these discussions taking place in public before there has been consultation. I was approached about this a few minutes ago. I said I would discuss it with my colleagues and report later. Let us do it in the right way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed that private members' hour today between five and six o'clock will be dispensed with in order to carry on with Bill C-24?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is so ordered.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment briefly on the remarks of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen). He stated that it is good to have set forth in the bill the principle of reunification and the principle with regard to refugees. He said there is a good feeling in Canada at the moment and, therefore, let us get on with the bill. If the minister were to look at yesterday's Globe and Mail, he would see there has been a substantial reduction in the inflow of immigrants. One reason is the law pertaining at the moment, as well as the ill-feeling pertaining across the country.

I say to the minister that if we want to create good feelings among new immigrants, we must have proper policies with regard to employment, housing and some of the other social problems. Only then will we generate good feelings among immigrants. At the moment, in the major cities in particular, there are racial tensions which could flare up at a moment's notice. I wish to comment on that matter and underline it for the minister.

Remarks have been made on motion No. 1 concerning refugees. I rather subscribe to the remarks which accompanied the motion of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos), the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). If there's a will, there's a way. The minister set forth some of the administrative difficulties he foresees if the motion moved by the hon. member for Montmorency is accepted.

Mr. Speaker, if we had the will to accept the up to date definition given by the hon. member for Montmorency, I am sure we could find a way to deal with the difficulties the minister has outlined. If we wish to remain in the forefront in dealing with refugees, it is not sufficient to say that if we accept an up to date definition there will be administrative difficulties. If the up to date definition offered by the hon. member is correct—and there was a feeling throughout the committee that this is the case—we ought to accept that definition and then put in place the necessary administrative machinery to meet the situation. We ought not simply to accept the excuse offered by the minister.

There is another area to which I should like to refer. In motion No. 3, my hon. friend from Greenwood wants to make sure of the definition of "family". He wants it in the bill, not just in the regulations, so he sets forth in strict terms what he means by "family". I have spoken to the hon. member. His motion says that for the purpose of any provision of the act, "family" shall mean any person being a husband, a wife, natural son and natural daughter. I asked him whether this included adopted sons and adopted daughters.

My experience before the Immigration Appeal Board is that difficulties arise in the case of adopted children because many of them are adopted in countries which follow procedures different from our own and at times it is difficult to determine whether a youngster has been adopted legally. I should like the minister to give us some assurance that the words "any children" in motion No. 4 include not only natural children but adopted children. I am well aware of the problems which arise with respect to certain adoptions, but I am sure such problems can be taken care of by regulation. However, it should be said that young children, whether natural children, in the words of the hon. member for Greenwood or "any children," in the words of the minister himself, should include adopted children. These are the main comments I should like to make with regard to these motions.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will not continue at any great length, and I may say it is not my intention to speak very frequently on this bill. First of all, it seems to me, on the basis of what I have been able to observe since I came to parliament, that the question of refugees and the question of immigration are to a large extent separate issues. I am not as concerned about the volume of immigration, the numbers who come here as a result of the legislation, whether amended or unamended, as are some members of parliament. I say this because I have watched immigration rise from 100,000 to almost 250,000 in some years, and then decline again by 20 per cent or 30 per cent, as it has done in the last year and a half, all without any changes in the act and without many changes in the regulations.

These fluctuations to a large extent reflect the economic situation in the country. When there is prosperity, we let more people in, and when there is large-scale unemployment, as there is at the present time, we let fewer people in. Somehow, the officials of the department get a message and they are able, certainly without any instruction from parliament—what instructions they get from the minister, I do not know—to regulate the flow. This is done chiefly through changes in the regulations. At one time a person wishing to immigrate to Canada was required to produce a firm job offer. But as unemployment grew there was a change in regulations and suddenly the job offer was not good enough. The applicant was required to produce a job offer in respect of a job which no Canadian wished to take. I am not saying this is wrong, because I am one who believes that in times of high unemployment there should be less immigration, and I do not expect this situation to change very much no matter what the act or a new set of regulations may say.

I am concerned, though, about the question of refugees. We have a good record, probably one of the best in the world. We have permitted large numbers of refugees to come here. I might mention some of the countries from which we have received refugees. At the time of the revolution in Hungary we relaxed our rules and admitted large numbers of refugees from that country. At the time the Asians were ordered out of Uganda we permitted large numbers to come to Canada. When the Viet Nam war was approaching its climax and many people wished to leave South Viet Nam, we relaxed our regulations in their favour.

I have the impression, though—and it is shared by many people—that our generosity was somewhat less toward refugees from Chile after the military junta took over. I have the impression we were much more selective in our treatment of refugees and that the authorities, whether they be in the immigration department or the RCMP responsible for security clearance, were much tougher in the case of Chileans who wanted to come to Canada than they had been with respect to those admitted from the other countries I have mentioned. This attitude, to put it mildly, does not enthuse me. If the people of Canada, correctly or not, have reason to believe that their government is picking and choosing the types of refugees it allows to enter, there is likely to be much less acceptance of the idea that we should be generous in our treatment of refugees. We are living in a world in which citizens of any country may be tomorrow's refugees. This being the case, we ought to be as generous as possible in our definition of what is a refugee and in the provisions under which refugees are admitted here.

It was interesting to hear the minister suggest that as a result of the green paper discussions, the production of this bill, and then the hearings before the committee, a great deal of consensus had been reached. I find this hard to believe. Firstly, in view of the fact that there are over 50 amendments to the bill, many by members of the Liberal party, there does not seem to me to be much consensus. Secondly, when I note some of the views expressed by the Inter-Church Committee on Human Rights and the Inter-Church Committee on Population, both of which committees represented a very broad range of all the major religious denominations in this country, it seems to me that the minister has been very loth to accept what I consider to be some of the very sensible recommendations which they made. Let me quote just two short extracts from the presentations which were made, firstly by the Inter-Church Committee on Human Rights in Latin America. I quote from the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration for June 2, 1977. As found at page 30A:23, they say:

We are asking your initiative and support in three ways:

1. that you go on record supporting the development of criteria appropriate to refugees separate from those applied to regular immigration applications.

2. that you support the right to a personal oral hearing before a panel which would make the final decision, with appropriate opportunity to prepare such a hearing, for applicants for refugee status within Canada. To this end we are recommending the creation of a refugee claims board.

3. that you support amendments to the new immigration bill which would institutionalize these changes.

They then go on to outline the clauses which would implement those proposals. At page 30A:35 of the same day's proceedings, when dealing with the need for special refugee criteria, they had this to say:

In any situation, but especially in a world filled with evidence of growing brutality and oppression, refugees, the displaced and the persecuted should find quick refuge and untroubled safety among us Canadians. We are concerned that Bill C-24 does not really provide for special handling of these people with special needs.

In light of those two assessments of the bill, I find it very easy to support the motion of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) and I am surprised that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), and also the minister, suggested that this would open the door to millions of people. If, as suggested in the amendment, people in foreign countries were permitted to apply for refugee status, this would not mean that they could leave that country. After all, Vladimir Bokovsky, to mention one of the most recent dissidents who wanted to leave the Soviet Union, was not permitted to do so until that government agreed to let him go. Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn did not want to leave the Soviet Union, but he left when the government put him out. So to say that we will permit people to be classed as refugees if they want to leave their country merely broadens the classification.

So far as we are concerned, the country in which those people are living must first permit them to leave, and I suggest that on the basis of both past and present experience the door would not be opened very much more than it is at the present time. I agree with the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) that if we have the will, it is certainly not beyond the ability of the department to work out a procedure that would be satisfactory.

I want to say a few words about families. In his motion No. 4, the minister proposes that the act be amended so that at a certain point which he defines, clause 2 would read as follows:

—"family" means the father and mother and any children who, by reason of age or disability—

These are, to me, the important words.

—are in the opinion of an immigrant officer, mainly dependent upon the father or mother—

And so on. I can see 20 different definitions there. An immigration officer in Vancouver may use that definition to decide that a certain person is in the family, whereas an immigration officer in Winnipeg may come to a different conclusion, an immigration officer in Toronto may arrive at a third definition, an immigration officer in Montreal a fourth, and so on. Or two officers in adjoining offices in the same city could come to two completely different decisions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So could the same officer, on two different days.

Mr. Orlikow: Or, as my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says, so could the same officer, on two different days or in two different hours. So it seems to me that motion No. 4 as drafted by the minister is very deficient, and that motion No. 3 as drafted by my colleague from Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) includes a much better definition of "family". It is much more specific and gives quite a clear directive to an immigration officer, rather than leaving it to the whim or fancy of one immigration officer as opposed to another. The criteria are quite clear, and it seems to me the motion should be supported. I urge the minister to reconsider his position and to be a good deal more generous than he proposes to be on the subject of refugees. I ask him to adopt the motion proposed by the hon. member of his own party, the hon. member for Montmorency.

● (1640)

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, during its proceedings the House must consider various bills, but by their nature and their object some of them deal with the substance of the country itself and more especially define our prospects for the future which must be specified during the discussion so that the country in which we will be living during the next few years meet the objects of democracy and freedom without which a society cannot make any progress, but comes to a standstill.

The amendment moved by my colleague from Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) deals with one of those notions reconsidering our international responsibilities. When the Geneva convention was signed, it dealt with the sovereignty concept as known and applied after the Second World War. The drafters of that time wanted the country to keep total jurisdiction over its subjects, citizens, nationals as long as they remained within its borders and as soon as they had left their territorial boundaries, they could then claim protection from other states. But a foreign state could not intervene within that country in an attempt to remove from the jurisdiction of the laws of that country those nationals who had not yet left that territory.

This concept is the one contained in the very definition of the word "refugees" spelled out in the Geneva convention, and in the wording of Bill C-24. The motion presented by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) aims at enlarging this very narrow definition and to surround the concept of the word "refugees" with a democratic context which is recognized today by most international bodies as necessary. One of the most recent international bodies to have seen the day, namely the European Common Market, made it mandatory for its members to respect the basic notion of a democratic regime and it has even provided for specific procedures to preclude or even reject certain requests for admission in cases where the political regimes of these countries did not meet those objectives with regard to freedom that all members of the European Economic Community are bound to uphold.

The definition given by my colleague, the hon. member for Montmorency, to the concept of "refugees" matches this evolution in international law which is now entrenched in the constitutional charter of the most recent regional international organizations. There is no doubt, as it has been underlined by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) that a broader definition of the concept of "refugees" would lead to less stringent admissibility standards. However, it would not change the criteria or the conditions. Essentially it aims at extending to a greater number of individuals who are experiencing trouble with the prevailing law of their country, the possibility of applying for admission to Canada. It does not constitute an obligation per se for a potential guest country—under those circumstances, Canada— automatically to grant the requests for admission made by those refugees. Essentially, the aim is to allow applications for political refugee status by foreign citizens at odds with the laws of their country for the reason that the latter do not meet with the democratic goals and freedoms to which Canada is committed.

Obviously, as emphasized by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the extended definition will entail extra work for immigration officers having to deal with such applications. It would certainly not lead to the excessive levels of applications that have been referred to at certain stages of the bill. It is vital in my view, dealing with the motion by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) that we as a Parliament ask ourselves what Canada's responsibility is, that we promote and defend a certain commitment, a certain content of international responsibility, that we use up to date concepts.

The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) stressed in his speech that the most difficult cases before us today involve precisely nationals still living in their own countries. I think the amendment gives us an opportunity to redefine the context in which Canada will be operating tomorrow at the international level. You yourself, Mr. Speaker, have a large experience of a number of countries that went through difficult political circumstances but that, thanks to the support, help and understanding of other countries more deeply committed to those goals, are trying to redevelop a certain concept of international life different from that which prevailed after World War II, but better adapted to the historical context of the later part of the 20th century.

[Mr. Joyal.]

Therefore, the amendment now before us has in my view a significant symbolic value, in that it makes reference to the role that Canada proposes to play during the years to come. On the very long list of amendments proposed today some are built on basic concepts in our democratic society. I had an opportunity outside Parliament to refer to some of those concepts and those amendments are a new opportunity to come back to them. However, at this stage of the debate, it seems to me perfectly convenient to replace the purposes of this legislation within the context of Canada's international obligations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The deferred division on motion No. 1 also defers division on motion No. 4. As announced by the Chair, I will now put the question on motion No. 3 standing in the name of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

[English]

At this time I have to put the question on motion No. 3, which will dispose of motion No. 5. Motion No. 3 is in the name of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members may consider this to be an appropriate time to proceed with the argument in respect of motions Nos. 2 and 9 and also motion No. 40 and other motions related thereto. If there are any members who wish to discuss the procedural regularity of motions Nos. 2, 9 and 22, I would be pleased to hear their arguments now, although I note that the hon. member in whose name motions Nos. 2 and 9 stand is not expected to be here to pursue those matters.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to argue in defence of the procedural regularity of motions Nos. 2, 9 and 22. I recognize the points you made when you gave your preliminary opinion, to the effect that there is no reference to domicile in Bill C-24 and that therefore these report stage amendments bring in a new proposition.

Mr. Speaker: The situation that we are facing here seems to me to be very similar to the one we faced in the bill to amend the Criminal Code with respect to capital punishment, that is, that what was a concept in the immigration law previously, namely, the concept of domicile, was removed by this bill which repeals the existing law and replaces it with a concept of permanent residence. That being so, the question that would remain is whether reinstating a concept which was taken out of the law by virtue of a bill which repeals it is simply a change in detail or a change of such a fundamental nature that it goes to the principle of the bill.

I would indicate that since the amendment is sought to be made to clause 4 of the bill, it is significant that clause 4 appears under the heading "Principles", and that the principles of the bill appear to be stated in clause 4 as relating to concepts of Canadian citizenship and permanent residence. If that is so, the concept of permanent residence would appear to be part of the principle of the bill in place of the previous concept of domicile. Therefore, the amendment which would seek to reinstate from the statute law an aspect of the law which was there before, but which is repealed by this bill, would seem to be going contrary to the principle of the bill. I thought I would expose that reasoning for the benefit of the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for adding to what you said earlier. I thank you in particular for drawing the parallel to the legislation that we had with respect to the criminal law. Initially, may I make the point that in that case we did not repeal the entire Criminal Code and bring in a new one; we amended the Criminal Code in one respect. In this case we are repealing, in its entirety, the present Immigration Act, as provided in clause 128 of the bill.

I submit that because clause 128 of the bill repeals in its entirety the present Immigration Act, Bill C-24 is removing the question of domicile from the existing legislation. It seems to me that there is something that is analogous to the very principle of the report stage, indeed to the rules that govern the report stage which give us the right at that stage to put back into the legislation something that was removed at the committee stage. I realize that the time when the concept of domicile was removed was when the bill was brought before the House and given second reading, but what I am trying to address myself to is Your Honour's contention that there is nothing in Bill C-24 on domicile, and therefore that report stage motions Nos. 2, 9 and 22 bring in a new idea.

My contention is that Bill C-24 pronounces on domicile by virtue of the fact that it repeals in its entirety the previous legislation known as the Immigration Act, and that it is relevant to the whole process of striking out the whole concept of domicile for members at the report stage to ask that the concept of domicile be put back into the legislation. It is for this reason that I contend, sir, that motions Nos. 2, 9 and 22 should be allowed, at least procedurally.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any necessity to elaborate on the arguments that have already been put forward by you and the introduction that you were good enough to make to the House when you indicated the grouping of the particular motions. What we have done here, very clearly, is to eliminate the original bill. We do not have a bill that we are simply amending; we have done away with the bill completely, and all the concepts that we are dealing with are subject to amendment.

What is attempted by motion No. 9 is to reintroduce a concept which was in the old bill. It endeavours to introduce another concept in the bill which was not considered when we brought this new bill into being. On that basis, it seems to me that your point is well taken, sir, and that the idea of reintroducing a concept of domicile from an old bill into this new one, which does away completely with the old act, is inappropriate. Therefore, the motion should be ruled out of order.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that we have done away with the old Immigration Act. He is a little premature. We have not done away with it. It is still the law of this land. As my colleague pointed out very clearly, we are changing the law, or we are proposing to change it, I assume, by repealing the Immigration Act at a later date. In the meantime, I would respectfully submit that a concept such as domicile, which has historically been associated with the right to immigrate or to stay in this country once you have immigrated, is part of the legislation in respect of immigration.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I find it difficult to comprehend how parliament at this stage of the proceedings should not be entitled to say there is a concept which we think protects people and it should be incorporated. I am not trying to argue the merits of it now; I am merely trying to argue the procedural point of view. It would seem to me that the function of the rules of parliament should permit us to do something which is clearly relevant to the basic theory of immigration. We have in the bill provisions which deal with residence, and we want to add a clause or put back a clause that was formerly recognized regarding people who have acquired Canadian domicile.

● (1700)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And keep alive a concept.

Mr. Brewin: And keep alive a concept which is there at the present time. I respectfully submit that parliament should be allowed to do this, and should not be restricted by any interpretation of the rules which would prevent the will of parliament being expressed on this highly important subject.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) and I briefly discussed these motions, and I am prepared to act on his behalf and move them, if they are acceptable to the Chair. With regard to the acceptability of motions Nos. 2 and 9 concerning the concept of domicile, it has already been stated clearly by some hon. members that this is something that is part and parcel of the present Immigration Act. There is a real question, in line with the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), as to whether, in dealing with the new legislation, that would be considered to be a new motion. That is particularly so with respect to the fact that there are going to be hundreds of thousands of people—we do not know exactly how many; this is something we tried to determine in committee; perhaps the number will be well over a million—who will continue to be defined under this category.

Perhaps Your Honour did not have an opportunity, because of the length and complexity of the bill and the shortness of time, to notice that in clause 127 the concept of domicile is very clearly stated and very clearly referred to as being part of the new administration in terms of the coming into force of this bill. Just to refresh the mind of hon. members, in clause 127 we find these words:

> Where a person acquired Canadian domicile in accordance with the Immigration Act as it read before it was repealed by subsection 128(1) of this act and did not lose Canadian domicile before the coming into force of this act, a deportation order may not be made against that person on the basis of any activity carried on by him before the coming into force of this Act for which a deportation order could not have been made against him under the Immigration Act as it read before it was repealed by subsection 128(1) of this act.

In other words, what I am saying is that it is not just a question of this presently being the status under the Immigration Act, which will cease to exist when Bill C-24 becomes law; indeed, there is going to be for many hundreds of thousands of Canadians certain legal protection and legal recognition under the designation of domicile as it presently exists. The minister will well recall that in the discussion we had concerning the inclusion of the domicile provision in the new legislation, he was quite willing to recognize that for many hundreds of thousands of people—and we cannot fix an exact figure because apparently exact figures are not kept—the domicile provision and designation will still apply.

That is very clearly why it is part of clause 127. Therefore, when this bill comes into effect there will be a domicile provision, a domicile designation and a domicile categorization. While it is quite true that it will be quite different with respect to the functioning of the law—Bill C-24, as compared to the present law—it is not true to say that there will not be, for the purposes of definition or even of administration, the concept of domicile. That is why I argue strenuously that this is not a new concept. It was an important concept, and it was incumbent upon the department to provide some kind of recognition and continuing designation for a very substantial number of people who have lived in this country, for a considerable length of time in some instances, and who will have to live, as long as this new bill will be in effect, under the designation of domicile.

So I argue that it is not just a question of what was in the former act. That has been suggested, and I think that is a valid point in terms of the importance of it. I argue that it is also in this bill and it is very clearly defined in clause 127. That sets out very clearly the legal situation and the legal protection for those who enjoy the designation of domicile. Of course, it will be fixed to a date, the date of the proclamation of this bill; but this bill in no way discontinues the designation of domicile. What is proposed by the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay in motions Nos. 2 and 9 is merely the extension of the provisions of domicile as they are set out in clause 127, and to elaborate them somewhat; but certainly not to introduce a new definition into the context of this bill.

Having said that with respect to those two motions, I must say, quite frankly, that my arguments and my position can be a good deal more convincing with respect to that, as well as to the questions Your Honour has raised concerning a number of my motions, particularly motion No. 40 which would establish a refugee claims board. As Your Honour has recognized, I was attempting, through a series of amendments, to set out a particular procedure with respect to dealing with refugees. The minister is well aware of this because it was discussed in committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the record would be a little tidier if we dealt with one set of motions at a time. If the hon. member has concluded with respect to motions Nos. 2 and 9, perhaps I can now see if there are any other hon. members who wish to make a contribution to that argument. If not, perhaps I could conclude.

I have some sympathy with the arguments which have been advanced with respect to these motions. I do not want to mislead the House by saying that the concept is unknown to the immigration law. In fact, the concept was part of the statute as it existed previously. Neither do I want to indicate that it is not relevant to the bill. I do not want to confuse any of that language. Certainly, anything which would define the status of people in Canada would certainly be relevant to this bill because it relates to the subject of immigration.

The problem I have is simply this. The bill which the House passed at second reading contains a principle. The principle is the repeal of the existing law on immigration and the replacement of that law with the one contained in Bill C-24. One of the principles involved in that, however those principles are defined, seems to be the elimination of the concept of domicile. The argument made with respect to clause 127 seems to be a counter-productive argument, with all due respect.

In fact, it seems to me that clause 127 simply advertises that elimination and makes provision for those who up to the time of the passage of this bill had acquired domicile. That seems to me to be a reinforcement of the fact that one of the purposes of this bill, which was passed at second reading, is to repeal the immigration law in such a way as to remove the concept of domicile and replace it with the concept described in clause 4 of the bill.

My difficulty there is not whether the concept is a new one, in the sense of the immigration law, or whether it is relevant, but whether it is appropriate to permit, by way of a motion at the report stage, an amendment to a bill which, it seems to me, would be counterproductive to the very basic principle of the bill. One of the basic principles and purposes of the bill is the elimination of domicile from the law. It seems to me that to permit an amendment which would reinstate the law of domicile is to say that amendments could be used to contravene directly the principle of the bill. That is something which we obviously do not support and I cannot consider.

The language used in clause 4 of the bill leads me to believe that it is certainly intended to be a rather fundamental principle of this bill that the concept of domicile be removed. Therefore, any amendment at this stage which would seek to reinstate that falls into precisely the same category as amendments which I previously had to rule on and which one by one sought to reinstate capital punishment when it had been removed by the bill. I ruled in each case that those amendments were directly contrary to the principle of the bill.

I find the parallel here irresistible. If this were simply a change of some detail, or some incidental circumstance with respect to the application of the bill, I would follow and accept the arguments of the hon. members who have spoken in favour of the amendments. The reason for my ruling them out is that they offend the principle of the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre); Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier this afternoon, when one of Your Honour's deputies was in the Chair, a point was raised about the possibility of some recorded divisions being taken tonight. I complained that this was raised before any opportunity for consultation. So far as I am concerned, that consultation has now taken place, and we are prepared to agree to the taking tonight, at 9.45, of recorded divisions on any report stage amendments stored up to that time, so to speak. But that is all we are suggesting. Let each day's evil take care of itself. We will let tomorrow go without any votes, and take care of Monday when it comes.

• (1710)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we understand the suggestion shall apply to today only. To that extent, we agree. We can discuss what is to happen on other days.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, that suggestion is agreeable to us.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed, and so ordered, that the taking of deferred divisions on report stage amendments will proceed at 9.45. The proceedings will be interrupted at 9.45 this evening for the taking of any deferred divisions which have accumulated within our procedures up to that point. We may consider how this procedure will affect the adjournment debate already announced.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the bells not ring for 15 minutes only?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Part of the order should say that the proceedings will be interrupted at 9.45, the bells will ring for 15 minutes, and the votes will be taken at ten o'clock. That would allow the adjournment debate to proceed as announced a few moments ago.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: For the purpose of the procedural argument, perhaps we could address ourselves to motion No. 40.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, as I said before you ruled on motions 2 and 9, it is somewhat difficult to argue in support of the establishment of a refugee claims board primarily because the establishment of the board will involve some financial expenditure, which is beyond the ability of a private member to recommend. Although I was absent from the committee hearings when the point was discussed, members of the committee experienced certain difficulty in having this matter brought forward and voted on during the committee's regular proceedings. However, committee members tried to bring about a more effective, efficient and fair way of dealing with refugees than our present immigration procedures contemplate. I recognize that the introduction of a refugee claims board may introduce a new element into our procedures. However, if I can set aside for a moment any suggestion of a charge against the Crown, I suggest that this is not a foreign idea. At least, the idea of suggesting one procedure as against another is not foreign to us.

As Your Honour may know, and as the minister has said several times, there is in the bill a much more clearly stated procedure with respect to the processing of refugees than ever was contained in our immigration law. I am attempting to bring about, by way of this particular procedure and motions set down on the order paper, much more clearly defined procedures, perhaps more public procedures and, in the final analysis, a much fairer way of processing refugee claims which may come to the attention of the department. If one can judge by what has been said in the House today, there is concern that somehow one of two things will happen: that an enormous number of people will suddenly appear on our doorstep—

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect, I thought we were debating the procedural acceptability of the motions, and not debating their merits. It seems to me the hon. member is now debating their merits.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In every case, anticipating what may be raised hereafter by way of argument on the merits, I may perhaps be lulled into being somewhat generous with remarks concerning the procedural point. However, I should bring the hon. member back to the point being debated.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I thought I was debating the procedural aspect. I wish to make clear that I am not attempting to introduce a proposition at variance with what is contained in Beauchesne's fourth edition. I am not trying to introduce a proposition foreign to the proposition of the bill. I do not think the minister himself would argue that anything in these motions is foreign to the purpose of the bill. I merely wish to make our procedures more equitable. Being concerned with equity, I argued that this particular series of motions should be accepted. I did not intend to introduce any factors inconsistent with the over-all scope of the immigration bill. That scope, or those objectives, are set out clearly. There is an attempt in my motion to be much more non-discriminatory, more open and more fair with respect to those whom we judge should be granted refugee status.

The question of costs involved can be interpreted perhaps in one of two ways. From time to time private members have proposed legislation allowing for the appointment of individuals, and such legislation has in no way obligated the Crown with respect to expenditures. Realistically, I recognize that this would very likely be the case in the present instance and I would accept Your Honour's ruling in that regard. I think the ideas incorporated in the motions are eminently reasonable and in harmony with the bill as presently printed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member recognizes his fundamental difficulty in proposing the motions he has just defended. I am sure the motions are well-intentioned and would put forward a régime designed only to extend greater justice and fairness to those who seek refugee status under our immigration law. However, it is basic and fundamental, under our practices and precedents, that it does not lie within the power of a private member to put forward, by way of amendment or otherwise, measures which would call for the expenditure of funds, unless he has been able to contrive, I presume with the assistance of the minister, the royal recommendation in respect thereto.

But that is not the case at present. Therefore, on that one, basic ground alone, without going further, the motion fails. It seems to me that the motion relating to the establishment of a different kind of board than now exists under our immigration law would obviously provide for expenditure. Therefore, on that basic, fundamental ground, I rule the motions out of order. Motion No. 40 having been ruled out of order, the motions related to it also fail, those being motions 34, 35, 36, 43 and 45.

As I said earlier, motions Nos. 2 and 9 having failed, motion 22 is the only other motion which mentions specifically the concept of domicile. Therefore, motions 2, 9 and 22 are out of order.

I note that motion No. 23 was referred to earlier. I have examined the language of motion 23 and do not find the word "domicile" in it, although there seems to be language in it which has a similar description or connotation. In fact, the word "domicile" is not used. Therefore, on procedural grounds I am not able, without further elaboration, to find difficulty with that motion.

That brings us to the consideration of motion No. 6 in the name of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). That, in accordance with early discussion, also brings forward motion No. 7 in the name of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), and motion No. 8, in the name of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). I should also add that Mr. Paproski is the seconder of motion No. 6, Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) the seconder of motion No. 7, and Mr. Brewin the seconder of motion No. 8.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher) moved:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 3 by striking out lines 11 to 13 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"long term demographic goals as shall be established by the government of Canada from time to time after consultation with the provinces, concerning regional demographic needs and after consultation with such other persons, organizations and institutions as it deems appropriate in respect of the size, rate of".

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 7.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 3 by striking out line 19 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"ter of Canada and the multicultural nature of Canada;".

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved:

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 3 by striking our line 41 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"origin, colour, religion, sex or legal political opinion or activity;".

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, when the special joint committee reported, and during second reading debate on Bill C-24, my party stressed the need for a Canadian demographic policy. We contended, on second reading, that Canada has no demographic policy. The minister's remarks on second reading convinced us that this is the case.

When this matter was raised during committee stage, further evidence was brought to our attention which illustrates that, in fact, Canada does not have a developed demographic policy. The purpose of this amendment is to put into place the mechanism by which a demographic policy would, in fact, be developed. We are not calling for a demographic policy to be put in place, and to be in place immediately. What we are calling for is that the procedure and development of that demographic policy to be put into place in very fair terms.

The minister went part way in clause 7. I am not trying to move ahead, Mr. Speaker. I hope I am in order. In clause 7, the minister went part way in the development of a demographic policy. I must stress that he only went part way. The amendment in clause 7 is acceptable. We endorse it and hope to go further on it. Clause 7 states that after the establishment of annual levels—

The minister . . . shall lay before parliament, not later than the sixtieth day before the commencement of each calendar year or, if parliament is not then sitting, not later than the fifteenth day next thereafter that parliament is sitting, a report specifying

(a) the number of immigrants that the government of Canada deems it appropriate to admit during any specified period of time; and

(b) the manner in which demographic considerations have been taken into account in determining that number.

What the amendment does is obligate the minister to lay before parliament the target, not the exact number, of the number of immigrants who will be landed in the next year. That target might be overshot or undershot largely on the basis of the number of refugees that we land during that given year. We cannot determine beforehand, on any demographic considerations or manpower considerations, the number of refugees who might be landed in that given year. I believe that is clearly understood by those members who sat on the committee.

What will happen at this stage is that the minister, under clause 7(b), will have to place before parliament the demographic considerations, in other words, the rationale for the number he deems wise to land in that given year. That is fine as far as it goes. However, demographic considerations have not been defined in 7(b). The minister can give us the demographic considerations as he sees them. A process must be established whereby we will get those policy statements and demographic considerations. That is the reason for the amendment.

I believe I am supported in this by the report of the special joint committee. I do not recall how the committee split at that time. I do know there was general agreement on recommendations Nos. 84 and 85 of the special joint committee. It is important that they be read into the record at this time. Section 84 of the special joint committee report, page 53:23, reads as follows:

As now proposed, the only inducement offered to a prospective immigrant to settle in a designated community is the opportunity to emigrate immediately. This would be attractive only if a waiting list had developed. With a waiting list, an immigrant choosing to settle in a designated community would do so entirely voluntarily since he would be admissible in any event if he were prepared to wait.

These are the operative words.

The committee urges that this proposal be approached imaginatively, and that consultation with the provinces be undertaken about the various ways of applying the principle which the committee wishes to promote that one of the goals immigration can help to serve is regional development.

Section 85 reads as follows:

The committee is under no illusion that its proposal would solve the problems of regional development or urban congestion. It recognizes that incentives must be available to attract Canadians as well as immigrants to areas where people are needed. However, a proposal along these lines could go a little way toward meeting these objectives, and the committee urges that such a change be implemented on an experimental basis, and carefully monitored.

Our amendment would obligate the federal government to develop long-term demographic goals. In the amendment we placed before the committee we set a time period of every five years. We have removed that in order to make it more feasible, because of the difficulty the time period might create. However, longer term demographic periods should be provided, because all we have in 7(b) is a yearly basis of landed immigrants subject to demographic considerations. There is no obligation to give long-term projections.

It is vital that there be an obligation in the legislation to consult with the provinces. Everyone on the committee paid lip service to consultation with the provinces. During the special joint committee hearings there were numerous representations to the effect that it is the provinces, municipalities and school-boards which are faced with large financial obligations because of an immigration policy in which they have had little, if any, input. It is the federal government which puts the policy into place and lands the immigrants. There should be a consultative process to determine the impact on the communities and the need for the services these people will require.

One of the recommendations of the task force the western premiers established is that an ongoing consultative process be put into place. If my amendment does not carry, this will not take place. That is why we believe it is necessary. Further, there is the question of regional needs. It has been brought forward, especially by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), that a whole new approach for maritime Canada will have to be viewed with respect to immigrants in order to get entrepreneurial skills into the maritimes and somewhat alleviate the chronic unemployment in those areas. That is a valid point. It holds true for other areas as well.

The provinces would have a much better tab on their input into regional needs. Their information could be put into the consultative process, not only so that immigrants will benefit Canada but, which is more important, so they can establish themselves successfully in Canada. This amendment will force the federal government to put into place and follow the consultative process.

The amendment goes further and opens up a consultative process with any group interested in demography. I will not go into that in great detail. However, it has been stated many times that immigrants will play a larger role than heretofore with regard to population increase. That is only half of the argument. The other half of the argument is this: by all economic factors we need to create 400,000 to 500,000 jobs in a given calendar year in Canada. At the present rate the government is creating only some 200,000 jobs a year and the consultative process will help us decide how immigrants fit in and how sufficient jobs are to be created for Canadians coming onto the labour market, whether they be young Canadians or women who have not been in the labour market but are now entering at the rate of some 150,000 a year.

Surely it is apparent that Canada is in need of a demographic policy, a consultative process. All my amendment does is to go further than the minister has already decided to do. It merely puts into place a consultative process and stresses the need for a demographic policy.

I say quite openly that this is a new area for Canadians and we have a long way to go. But I believe it is apparent that we must lose some of the attitudes we have had about Canada—that Canada is a vast land and that we can accept people without any further view as to the distribution of the population, the demand on natural resources, housing, transportation, education, you name it. It is for that purpose I would like to see something in place which would finally create a small committee or group of persons who I know have the expertise to put into place a demographic policy which is definitely needed in this country. I therefore commend this amendment to the House.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I do not intend to speak on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I have never found "demography" to be a very useful word. I have read some books about it and their authors, like all experts, disagree with each other, so I am not at all sure I am as enthusiastic as is the hon. member about these demographic goals. However, he has had his say. He may be perfectly right, and maybe he has persuaded me, but I am not quite sure, yet.

The amendment to which I propose to call attention is motion No. 7. I would remind hon. members that Clause 3 sets out a Canadian immigration policy. It says:

—the rules and regulations made under this act shall be designed and administered in such a manner as to promote the domestic and international interests of Canada, recognizing the need . . .

Then the clause goes on to list various things, including

(b) to enrich and strengthen the cultural and social fabric of Canada, taking into account the federal and bilingual character of Canada.

This is the paragraph to which I should like to draw particular attention. I say "Amen" to it as a very sound statement of purpose, but I believe it falls short in one important particular. It is true we have a federal and bilingual character: I pay full tribute to that and to the necessity for it. But it so happens we also have a multicultural fact. There are many different peoples in this country. I have not counted them all up but there must be at least a million people whose roots are not in the French or English speaking areas.

Mr. Paproski: Three and a half million.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are a million Paproskis.

Mr. Brewin: I underestimated the Paproskis, it seems. I do not know how many there are exactly, but there are a great many of them. Most of them have come here in fairly recent generations, and most of them want to be consulted and to be recognized as citizens with a status equal to that of other Canadians. In my own city of Toronto there is a real multicultural fact. People from many different parts of the world have come to make their homes in the city, and may I say they have immensely improved it. They want to feel they were consulted, that they were part of the pattern, that when we speak about the purposes of this legislation we are not speaking just about French and English Canada.

We are fully justified, of course, in making reference to our French and English heritage, but I do not think we are justified in omitting any reference to that other fact of life, the multicultural nature of Canada. I cannot understand the minister's objection to doing so. I would have thought it would have been wise for him to have included such a reference if only for political reasons. The government of which he is a member has spent money on multiculturalism. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) was the minister in charge of the multicultural program. We recognize the right of people to be different and to cherish different cultures.

It seems to me this is a most inoffensive amendment; it is hard to conceive of one which should meet with less objection. Perhaps the minister and his advisers decided at one point that they would make no concessions whatever. I would say that his refusal to make a concession on this point is equivalent to a slap in the face to citizens who have their origins in various countries.

The minister reproves me for having introduced too many amendments. I can tell him that every amendment I have introduced has been suggested to me by organizations and that many of these organizations represent particular ethnic groups. Does he think they are not entitled to be consulted? He shows a great deal of complacency about these matters. If he would only show an ounce of common sense he would accept this amendment.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about all three of these amendments. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has raised a crucial issue, one which was brought forward time and time again during the meetings of the special joint committee as it travelled across the country. It is at the heart of the reason for having an Immigration Act in the first place. The reason is, surely, to regulate the flow of people who come here either as visitors or to seek landed immigrant status. The whole question of why they come and where they go is as crucial as any other aspect of the bill.

It is interesting that in this bill, as in no previous immigration law before it, we have a clearly stated set of objectives, which I know the minister feels quite keenly about and for which I think he and his staff should be commended. It is fundamentally important that we have stated in very clear and ringing tones in the objectives the purposes of the immigration bill. We should indicate the non-discriminatory character of our immigration policy and the basis on which our immigration programs and Immigration Act will operate.

It is therefore important at the outset, in the very first clause of the bill respecting the fundamental purposes of the legislation, that we have stated that it is for the attainment of demographic goals. I suppose I share a bit of the feeling of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who said that he is not quite sure what "demography" means. All kinds of people who pass themselves off as demographers or demographic experts might have trouble agreeing, but if we slip away from that technical word or from a word that smacks of some kind of jargon we recognize that what it really says is where people live, and asks what kind of settlement, what kind of community building, what kind of evolution in human terms, will take place in this country.

I suppose in a previous generation this was all caught up in a kind of laissez-faire situation. One did not talk about demographic goals 25 years ago when the last Immigration Act was passed. At least if we had talked about it I do not think we would have received a very good hearing. There was a pretty general feeling that people simply lived where they chose to live. Communities developed almost willy-nilly as a sort of unseen hand in events took control. Yet because the complicated and sophisticated society in which we move has become very apparent, certainly in terms of a much more complex immigration bill this time than the one we had 25 years ago, we have to be concerned with the way in which communities, provinces and regions develop.

All of us are reminded, almost on a daily basis, of the problems which arise when we suffer urban congestion or rural depopulation or regional disparity and housing problems. There are any number of social and economic problems which confront us. Quite frankly, one of the difficulties in trying to resolve immigration policy is that we have concluded that by dealing simply with the subject of immigration we were going to affect in a fundamental and total way all of the economic and social problems that we are facing in this country. I think that most of us who have become involved in this subject for a while realize that this is not the case. However, Mr. Speaker, we do know that increasingly, perhaps primarily because of a declining birth rate, the phenomenon of immigration is going to become critically important.

Much of the evidence which was placed before the special joint committee very often came from urban areas which had strong views about the impact of immigration on their particular community. This was particularly so in the larger urban centres across Canada. What was not nearly so obvious, but which became obvious, when we moved into regions which had not experienced on a per capita basis the same amount of immigration, say over the past half century, was that there were also problems there respecting what I call a shortfall in the number of immigrants who arrived. We could spend a lot of time canvassing the various reasons why this occurred—the dynamism, employment opportunities, attractiveness of very rapidly growing urban centres in this country which absorbed a higher percentage of the immigrants who have arrived this century.

Whether the factors be those or others, we do know that immigration has not followed an even pattern. In fact if one were to look at the present situation, it is an extremely uneven pattern. A high proportion of the immigrants coming to this country are concentrated within one province; indeed, they are concentrated within one specific geographic area.

I am concerned on two fronts, Mr. Speaker. I am concerned that with the recognition of demographic goals set out in the objectives there will be a much greater consciousness on a longer term basis, on the part not only of public officials but the general public itself, of the implication of immigration, not just on an immediate basis in terms of the economic situation—which is uppermost in our minds at the present time—but on a longer term basis in terms of the evolution and development of the country.

What concerns me, and I think should concern the minister, is that when he recognizes the importance of trying to achieve demographic goals I am sure he must also recognize that this is not something which can be achieved unilaterally. Surely the lesson we have learned in recent years is that the federal government cannot by itself establish demographic policy. It would run into enormous difficulty if it sought to do so.

I know the minister has no such intention and has indicated so clearly. I also know that the present demographic group which is set up to co-ordinate the fact finding and projections on the part of a number of key departments in the federal government is also working closely with the provinces. But I think it must be clearly stated in law that this is one of the very clear objectives, namely, that the demographic goals which are to be evolved over the next few years, for the life of this legislation, will be evolved in full consultation with the other legitimate authority—the provinces—and other organizations and even individuals who have something important to contribute to this very important process in community and country building.

Unless that commitment is clearly stated in the objectives, then surely the minister is not attempting to put on the statute books a law which is both realistic and fair so far as the evolution of this country is concerned. I hope that the minister will give serious consideration to this amendment submitted by my colleague from Provencher and will see it within his power to accept it as reasonable and right.

With regard to motion No. 7 moved by my colleague from Greenwood, which raises the whole issue of the multicultural nature of Canada, I do not think the argument really needs to be reiterated. I think it was very clearly stated. We are both a bilingual country in terms of our origins and the evolution of this country since Confederation, and multicultural in character. I could wax eloquent about the multicultural aspects of Prince Edward Island but I realize that that is not the purpose of this debate this afternoon. If this is to be a modern and relevant piece of legislation, and if it is to be clearly stated in the objectives that it is the character of this country which has to be preserved and enhanced, then it is only reasonable and right that, in addition to the bilingual characteristic which is now increasingly and generally recognized, its multicultural nature should also be included.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to my own motion, No. 8, which refers to the clause which clearly states that we are to have a non-discriminatory policy. I refer to Clause 3(f) which provides:

—to ensure that any person who seeks admission to Canada on either a permanent or temporary basis is subject to standards of admission that do not discriminate on grounds of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion or sex;

This is a time when increasingly authorities, national governments, even agencies under the purview of the United Nations are making clear the position that there is the concept of equity and equality. If we fail to state this, there is always the possibility, hopefully less than probably, that acts of discrimination will take place, particularly against those who may seek admission to this country. There were a number of predecessors to the present immigration minister who declared in this House, since I have been a member, that we would have a non-discriminatory policy. The late Prime Minister Lester Pearson made it very clear, in support of that concept, that Canada would adopt a policy of non-discrimination in its immigration program. Those on the special joint committee and those who have studied immigration closely take the view that only in recent years, really only within the last decade, can Canada rightfully say that its immigration policy is non-discriminatory. What I am asking for in this amendment is that it be realistic in terms of potential discrimination which exists both in this country and in the world today. We must recognize that in the past there has been discrimination on the basis of race and creed. These are no longer acceptable as bases of discrimination in the type of democratic society which is existent in Canada today.

We have left uncovered an area of increasing potential for discrimination. The world in which we have moved in the late sixties and early seventies is one increasingly polarized with respect to strong political opinions and activities. There have been instances within our own society of actions being taken which were based on a person's political point of view. Unfortunately in one or two instances I have encountered discrimination with respect to political opinion, which is something we must be very careful to guard against. In a highly complicated technocratic society it is dangerous to start narrowing the borders of accepted and legitimate political activity and opinion.

During the last few years we have seen a number of countries which previously enjoyed democratic and parliamentary institutions such as our own, lose those institutions because of intolerance and a regime which eliminated free political expression and activity. It is not encouraging to realize that there are fewer parliamentary groups and fewer countries in the world today which tolerate freedom of political expression and activity than there were before I became a member of this Chamber.

In a world which is faced with very strong contending pressures and ideologies, there is a danger that we might succumb, for some possible short term gain, to the temptation to reject political opinions which would be legitimate in normal times. We might believe, for some reason or other, that they should be eliminated or discriminated against.

What I have said here has been discussed in committee and was originally proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood. I am referring to the fact that we should include the aspect of non-discrimination in this legislation with respect to legal political opinion and activity. To do less than that is not to provide for pressures which will exist during the course of the years when this particular bill will serve as the immigration statute for this country. Therefore I hope the minister will give serious consideration to the inclusion of this provision in the legislation.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) indicated that the determination on the demographic policy would not be amenable. The hon. member for Provencher referred to Clause 7 which clearly spells out that the minister, "after consultation with the provinces concerning regional demographic needs," etc.—thus there is an obligation on the minister.

As has been said, the bill already recognizes that national demographic goals may be established in the future. In that case immigration planning and operations must be consistent with those goals. However, in our opinion the Immigration Act is not the appropriate vehicle for establishing statutory provisions respecting demographic planning. Demographic planning will involve much more than immigration. In fact immigration may well be a relatively small element. In any event it is also questionable whether such a positive subject as demographic planning should appear in a statute which is predominantly enforcement oriented.

I will not repeat the comments I made at second reading, but commencing on March 10, 1977, at page 3863 of Hansard I elaborated on those comments. Motion No. 7 is in the name of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). In my opinion the immigration statute, which pertains mainly to the admission of people to Canada, including visitors, and the removal of offenders from Canada, is not a suitable vehicle for official endorsation of multiculturalism. From a practical standpoint one would have to be apprehensive that the inclusion of multiculturalism in the governing objectives could be used to try to compel a government either to maintain the present ethnic composition of the Canadian population or to make a deliberate effort to speed its rate of change. Neither of these extremes is acceptable.

Motion No. 8 is in the name of the hon. member for Egmont. Primarily he has refugees in mind in proposing this amendment. There should be no distinction among refugees, fleeing rightist or leftist persecution. However, the effect of the amendment would be much broader than that. It is difficult to see how most provisions respecting subversion and national security could be reconciled with the proposed amendment. No political party is illegal in Canada, yet membership in a particular party abroad, where it is probably legal, is often the principal evidence that a person is a security risk.

With the amendment it would appear that the subversion/security provisions could apply only in the case of an overt act defined as an offence in Canadian law. This would be going too far in the case of refugees. It would effectively prevent the screening out of people, although refugees by definition, who were forced to leave their countries of citizenship or residence because of their adherence to parties with extremist policies, which would be just as dangerous in Canada as elsewhere. For those reasons I would be against these motions.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express surprise at the minister and the government for not accepting the amendment proposed in motion No. 7. This is an extremely important and fundamental matter, because it deals with the whole question of the policies of biculturalism and bilingualism in this country, something which has been accepted by all parties.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), contained in motion No. 7 which proposes to add to Clause 3 the consideration in this act of the multicultural nature of Canada. I find it difficult to understand the government's reluctance to accept this amendment.

This country has been committed by parliament for almost 15 years to the concept of increasing the use of both the English and French languages. That policy was first announced by former Prime Minister Pearson. It was worked upon by the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism which he appointed and whose findings were supported by all party leaders and the majority of members of all parties represented in this parliament. The Official Languages Act, which was brought forward by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), was supported by all four party leaders and by the majority of members of all four parties.

Members of parliament have supported the idea of the bilingual nature of this country because we recognize the importance which the people of Quebec, particularly the majority of the people of Quebec who are French speaking, give to the concept that this country should recognize that the people who founded this country spoke two languages. Members of parliament in all parties, if they are honest—I speak now only of members of parliament who represent English speaking constituencies because I cannot claim to be as knowledgeable about those who represent French speaking constituencies—know how much hostility there is among so many of their constituents, how often they are telephoned or receive letters asking why the French language is being rammed down their throats. Representing, as I do, a large ethnic constituency in which the majority of people are neither of French nor English origin, I know that among the most skeptical, among those to whom it is most difficult to explain the necessity for increasing the use of French in this country, are people who are neither of French nor of English origin. Their suspicions are based on the idea, I believe, that to the extent the second language is given more power, more influence and more recognition, their status as first class citizens is jeopardized.

One of the things which the government has done with the support of all parties to try to combat that feeling is to support the language and culture expansion and development of those ethnic or religious groups which come from non-English or non-French speaking countries and who have maintained, and indeed expanded, until recently on an almost completely voluntary basis, the languages, the culture, the music, the art and all the other forms which their culture took in the countries from which they came.

In recent years federal and provincial governments have stepped in without clearly understanding that the continuation of these other cultures, languages and arts has to be essentially on a voluntary basis. It has to be based on people's desires, whether they be Italians, Greeks, Portuguese, German or Jewish. I could go down the list with dozens of examples. They must want to do this. However, federal and provincial governments have been prepared to help them financially and materially.

We now have a Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Guay). The federal government proposes and parliament agrees to the expenditure of millions of dollars to help fund the work of various ethnic and racial groups. In view of the importance these groups put on the preservation, maintenance and expansion of their cultures—the roots from which they came—it seems to me that every opportunity should be used to make it clear to these groups that we encourage them to develop the multicultural foundations of this country. Recognizing, as the minister said earlier today, that the purpose of this bill is essentially to deal with people who are coming into this country, and recognizing that this is not the place to discuss in any great detail the whole question of multiculturalism, I still believe that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood is a good one.

The amendment would reinforce the knowledge of the people of this country who are of neither English nor French origin that they too are equal, first class citizens of this country and that the Government of Canada cares about them and wants them to succeed in their efforts to maintain their languages and cultures. I intend to support this motion, and I express my surprise and dismay that the minister has rejected it.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to put a few points on the record. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has done an excellent job as my party's spokesman regarding Bill C-24.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I am a little concerned about the reluctance of the minister. I know the minister, and I respect him. In terms of implementing our immigration policy he has a very onerous job, but all the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) is attempting to do is bring to the attention of the House and the country what this country is all about.

This bill contains objectives, and I do not want anyone to think that these objectives relate only to the immigrant or the person coming into the country. They apply also to those who live in the country now. All the members of the committee of which I was very fortunate to be a member were interested in seeing that we have a just and fair immigration policy and that there be certain objectives set out in the bill. One objective is that our immigration policy be non-discriminatory. Second, we should be concerned about and aware of the need to reunify families. Third, we need to take a new approach to refugees.

Within the confines of those three principles the minister brought in Clause 3(b) which reads as follows:

to enrich and strengthen the cultural and social fabric of Canada, taking into account the federal and bilingual character of Canada;

All the hon. member for Greenwood wants to do is add a few words to bring about an actual realization that we appreciate the contribution which has been made by people of all colours, races, creeds and cultures to the development of this country, and the minister stands in his place and says he will not accept those further words. After the word "Canada" the hon. member for Greenwood wants to add "and the multicultural nature of Canada". That is all we are talking about here. I do not want to say that the government is playing politics with the policy of multiculturalism, but it seems to me that we have an on and off policy. That is continually brought home to me in terms of multicultural policy. Canada is a multicultural and multilingual country, with English and French as its two official languages. That is a fact.

I once asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) how he and his cabinet members devise policy and on what basis. This can be checked somewhere in Hansard. The Prime Minister said, "On the basis that this is a multicultural country, but bilingual".

Mr. Kaplan: I don't think he said that.

Mr. Alexander: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Kaplan) says he does not believe it. I would bet him $100, and he could well afford it. I am trying to be responsible. I am trying to show that the government plays footsy and displays a hypocritical attitude at times when it comes to the multicultural policy, and that disturbs me. This policy was brought in on October 8, 1971. At that time the secretary of state was Gérard Pelletier. He has gone on to big and better rewards. He is now the ambassador to France. What did he say around October 8, 1971? I would like to read from a paper entitled "Towards a Canada Uniquely Canadian" by Dr. Joseph Kage, President of the Quebec Ethnic Press Association. There is no date on this document, but I want to put on the record what the good doctor indicated. He quoted what the Hon. Gérard Pelletier said. The paper states:

"When we speak of cultural pluralism we are making a fundamental choice for Canada, both now and for the future, for we are talking about the development in Canada of a multicultural society. The government refuses to sacrifice, in the name of unity through conformity, any of the cultures which are represented in our population, whether these cultures are European or native to Canada such as those of the Indians and Eskimos. Canada is not a 'melting pot' and the government is opposed to any measure aimed at assimilation. On the contrary, it encourages all initiatives which have as their object the promotion and dissemination—alongside the two main cultures, English and French—of other cultural values".

Mr. Haidasz: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I am going to get to that hon. member later on.

I have another undated document. This is one signed by one Bernard Ostry, Assistant Under Secretary of State. It is on the letterhead of the Department of the Secretary of State. It is entitled "Guidelines for Submissions for Grants under the Multicultural Programme".

Mr. Epp: Wasn't he in charge of Canadian unity?

Mr. Alexander: Yes. I do not have much time. Let me put a few things on the record. I do not know what the date of the document is, but it must have been around October 8, 1971, or shortly thereafter. This is what Bernard Ostry stated:

Funds may be made available only to projects which fulfil some or all of the objectives of the multicultural programme:

Notice, Mr. Speaker, how that word "multicultural" is always springing in there.

They will assist the development of a Canadian ethno-cultural group or groups which have demonstrated their desire and ability to develop their culture within the Canadian context and to contribute to modern Canadian society, as well as a clear need for assistance.

● (2020)

They are designed to share a cultural heritage with other Canadians.

They will promote an awareness of Canada's cultural diversity.

They have the participation and financial support of the community to which they are directed.

They assist immigrants to become full participants in Canadian society.

That is what we are talking about. The government whip will not remember what was said in those days; he was not around then, and will not be around much longer.

Mr. MacFarlane: I wouldn't bet on it, if I were you.

Mr. Alexander: He is not aware of what I quoted, which is why he was surprised at my comments on multiculturalism. That was the policy of the government on and around October 8, 1971. I am amazed at the minister's policy. He was first elected to the House of Commons at the same time as the hon. member for Hamilton West, in 1968. He knows that his government accepted the objectives of multiculturalism. The government first brought forward the principle of multiculturalism, which we all accept. Now the minister says he cannot accept the amendment the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has proposed. He will not accept that nine-word amendment.

I ought to put on record certain facts and statistics to show that when it is in the government's interest to do something, it will do it. But when it acts, it does not think of the hardship its policies will work on those who may be affected. On October 8, 1971, the government announced its multicultural policy, which had hitherto been under the aegis of the then Secretary of State, Gérard Pelletier. There was a young member of this House, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), who is still a member, who was made minister without portfolio responsible for multiculturalism. I have great respect for the hon. member; unfortunately, his constituents did not return him in the 1972 election. I cannot understand why. Consequently, we were without the services of that minister without portfolio. But even when he was minister, his job was not full-time. He was not a full minister of state; he was a minister without portfolio, responsible to Gérard Pelletier who took over-all responsibility for the multicultural program.

After the election of 1972 the young doctor from Parkdale, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), was made responsible for multiculturalism. The government suddenly said, "We recognize the significant contribution our various peoples have made to this country's development and, for the first time, shall appoint a full-time minister responsible for multiculturalism."

Mr. Paproski: We want Stanley Haidasz.

Mr. Alexander: That minister did his best.

An hon. Member: What's your point?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I think the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance wants to make a speech.

Mr. Paproski: He doesn't care about multiculturalism.

Mr. Alexander: I am coming to my point. As I said, the hon. member for Parkdale was the minister responsible for multiculturalism, but sometime in October, 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, "We do not need you any longer. Multiculturalism is not important." The Prime Minister removed from office this country's first full-time minister of multiculturalism and put the implementation of the policy under the armpits, as it were, of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). I say, shame to that. That is what I mean when I say the government is playing footsy with this policy.

Mr. Fairweather: It is an armpit policy.

Mr. Alexander: Next, the Prime Minister appointed a young man from St. Boniface—

Mr. Epp: Who?

Mr. Alexander: A young man from St. Boniface. He had nothing to do. Suddenly the government thought he could give leadership to parts of the western provinces. It wanted those provinces to elect some Liberal members. It had to give the hon. member something to do. Consequently, the government appointed the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) as Minister of State (Multiculturalism). In other words, the government has been hypocritical, which disturbs me. Having accepted the principle of multiculturalism by appointing a full-time minister, the government, as shown by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), has flip-flopped again. The minister has said in so many words, "We do not have a multicultural society."

Mr. MacFarlane: He has not said that.

Mr. Alexander: Despite anything the government whip may say, I suggest, since the government has recognized the fact of multiculturalism by appointing a full-time minister, it should accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood, which would incorporate the objectives of multiculturalism in the language of the bill. If it did this the government would be consistent. Since on the one hand we have a minister responsible for multiculturalism and since, on the other hand, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration says in so many words "No, I am not interested," or "this is not the policy," there is something wrong with the government's position. If the minister has any heart, if he has compassion for those who are other than Anglophone or Francophone—and sometimes I think we talk only about those two groups and forget all the other people who built up this country—the minister will accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood. But apparently the minister does not recognize the contribution other groups have made to this country's development.

Mr. Paproski: He does not care.

Mr. Alexander: That minister does not care.

Mrs. Holt: Don't say that.

Mr. Alexander: Don't tell me not to say it, Simma. I said it and I will say it again.

Mr. MacFarlane: Then wash your mouth out with soap.

Mr. Alexander: If the minister cares, let him accept the hon. member's amendment, and thus show that he supports the policy of multiculturalism. I am ashamed at the minister's attitude, and shocked. We are debating this provision at length, to give the minister time for sober, second thought. Let him reflect on our position. He has nothing to lose by adopting it, and much to gain. If the minister refuses to accept the amendment he will put himself in the position of being accused as an opponent of multiculturalism. Or, at best, the government will be accused of hypocrisy, and we would not want that to happen, would we? Therefore I hope the minister will stand in his place and say that, having considered the matter, he will accept the reasonable and needed amendment the hon. member for Greenwood proposed.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who spoke just now and others have tried to leave the impression that somehow the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Guay) is not suitable for his job. I want to correct that impression. Considering his Métis background, his own background and his family, I think he is eminently suited for his position, and I want to correct the erroneous impression some have tried to create.

We should not forget that other government policies have to do with discrimination. At present we are debating a bill to do with immigration. We are debating a long-standing policy. It has always been this country's policy to satisfy, by way of immigration, the requirements of its two founding races. That is why the bilingual situation is mentioned. Personally I think that if you went further to deal with the multicultural area, you might get into some kind of quota system. I would be very concerned about that. I am not saying that is what is intended in the amendment. However, just as the hon. member seems to have some concern about other provisions in the bill and is moving this amendment, his amendment causes me concern. I would rather have the bill as it is. Therefore I speak against the amendment.

I do not think multicultural people in my area, whether they be Scottish, Italian, Hungarian, West Indian or East Indian, find any offence in the present policy. I certainly have not run into it. I just want to put that on record. Personally I do not support any tampering with the policy as it stands and, therefore, I do not support the amendment.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane), I will be very brief. I have to put on record how astonished I am to hear the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) seriously insisting that this amendment be adopted. It is nothing more than pure tokenism. There is not one single thing in it to increase the rights of immigrants or prospective immigrants. It is absolutely pure, unadulterated tokenism. It is nothing but hypocrisy for him to stand up and argue that the implementation of nine words, which do not do anything for immigrants or prospective immigrants, will make as much difference as he insists they will. I normally have great respect for that hon. member, but tonight I am ashamed of him.

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): I enter this debate very briefly, Mr. Speaker. I am rather surprised at the comments made by my colleague, the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). I do not feel this amendment is hypocrisy. Indeed, it is an honour to rise and enter this debate in support of the motion moved by the member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), to include in the statement of objectives, section 3(b), the word "multicultural".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lee: Canada is a country made up of hard-working and talented people, many of whom have come from other countries to make this their home. There are thousands of native born as well, and together we represent a great range of ethnic backgrounds and many political parties. We have Canadians who have come from Italy, Germany, Yugoslavia, the Netherlands, from other European and Asiatic countries and, of course, from Great Britain. We are glad they chose Canada. It was on that basis the federal government introduced the policy of multiculturalism in 1971, and in so doing affirmed multiculturalism to be a fact of the cultural and social fabric of Canada.

I am also in support of this motion as I firmly believe that multiculturalism is an excellent means to foster and facilitate national unity. I say this as a westerner, for westerners take great pride in our earnest hopes for a united Canada based on the diversity of our ethnic origin.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I strongly encourage the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) to accept the motion of the hon. member for Greenwood.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 7.

Immigration

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 19 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"ter of Canada and the multicultural nature of Canada;"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When I am speaking in this House I do not want the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) to make any reference to the fact that perhaps some of my comments have anything to do with my skin. She was not standing in her place at that particular time. I thought she understood this particular problem. I do not want her at any time in the future to make reference to my skin. It was not an offensive intervention, but I just question why she had to bring that in. That is my point of order. I have been here nine years. It is the first time I have heard that. I want to let hon. members in this House know that Alexander can be quite tough when it is required.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: I am still on my point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: I just want to say that I have a great deal of respect for the hon. lady, but let it not happen again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mrs. Holt: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) speaking on a point of order referred to remarks made by some hon. members. The Chair cannot rule on what was said by a member who was not recognized. There has been, and I am sure there will continue to be, shouting across the aisle which the Chair cannot recognize unless an hon. member rises in his place and is recognized. Therefore the Chair cannot rule on such a point of order. The hon. member for Hamilton West may have a valid point, but I cannot accept it as a point of order.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My name was referred to, and it has been implied on the record that I am a racist—

Mr. Alexander: I never said that.

Mrs. Holt: —and that I made a reference to the difference in skin. I said I am an anonymous ethnic because my skin is not a different colour. However, I am still of the ethnic group. I was not being racist, and I want that to be on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. We can all enter into this question of privilege. It will then degenerate into a debate. With the kind permission of hon. members, we will move on to motion No. 8.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved:

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 41 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"origin, colour, religion, sex or legal political opinion or activity;".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved:

Motion No. 10.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 27 to 36 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) in the case of a Convention refugee, it is established that that person is a person

(i) described in paragraph 19(1)(c) unless the offense in question is a political offense; or

(ii) described in paragraph 19(1)(d)(ii), 19(1)(e), 19(1)(f), 19(1)(g), 27(1)(c) or 27(2)(c); or

(iii) who has been convicted of an offense under any act of Parliament and has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment of two or more years."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak briefly with respect to this motion. It concerns the situation affecting the present U.N. convention on refugees. As the minister well knows from conversation in committee, very real concern was registered in terms of the general provisions as they are presently outlined in Clause 4(2)(b). It very clearly states that a person under this category of convention refugee can indeed be affected by crimes that were not of a political nature, but will be regarded under these present terms of the act as serious enough to prevent recognition or acceptance of that individual as a refugee.

It seems to me there is no clear delineation in the bill between those who are legitimate refugees and those who might be either a threat to Canadian society or have committed acts of a criminal nature and who should not, and would not, be accepted. The bill, it seems to me, would be in breach of the convention on refugees which we signed, I believe, some four years ago. I hope the minister will offer some explanation of how this particular clause will square with our acceptance of the UN convention on refugees. Can he give us an assurance that the High Commission for Refugees has accepted this as a valid interpretation of article 1F under the present convention because, if not, it would seem to me we are in danger of putting on the statute books of the country a law, one section of which would fly in the face of the agreement we presently have on refugees.

It seems to me as well that the definition of a political offence is too narrow with respect to those who might come to Canada as refugees after committing acts of a criminal nature. I think the minister should recall a recent decision by the Federal Court in the Armstrong case. This involved extradition proceedings on the part of the United States in which it was argued that because of the nature of the accusation against Armstrong, the fact that there had been a bombing as part of a political protest against the war in Viet Nam, he should be regarded as a refugee instead of as one who had simply committed a criminal act within his own country. It is clear from the decision at that time, in 1973, that the Federal Court adopted a narrow definition of "political offence". Therefore the action by the minister in asking for this kind of provision, one which is to my mind much too broad, is unsatisfactory and will create real problems in its implementation.

With respect to the latter part of the amendment concerning the lengthening of the period of imprisonment from six months to two years, may I say that both in our own country and in a number of European countries, the practice is to regard as serious offences those which are of a "penitentiary nature" or which begin with a "penitentiary offence" of not less than two years. To have it start at the six month figure, which can cover a much wider range of situations and experiences both in our own country and others, seems to me to be much too sweeping and to demand an unrealistic standard with respect to those who come under the refugee classification. I would therefore suggest seriously to the minister that he reconsider his position concerning Clause 4(2)(b) and indicate whether some adequate adjustment could not be made in order to avoid putting ourselves in defiance of the UN convention of refugees and so as not to create an onerous situation with respect to the six months' imprisonment provision.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment would make three changes respecting reasons for refugees' loss of protection. It would exempt refugees from loss of protection because of a 19(1)(c) type offence, if the offence was of a political nature; it would exempt them from loss of protection for being likely to commit an indictable offence in Canada; and it would amend the standard for which refugees could lose protection because of offences committed in Canada.

It is my opinion that there is no need for the exemption for political offences. On the one hand it is unlikely that a truly political offence would be construed as an offence under Canadian law, as required by the provision respecting criminality. On the other hand it is doubtful that we should welcome a person who has committed a 19(1)(c) type offence—murder, arson, kidnapping, etc.—even if it was committed for political purposes.

The distinction proposed to be made between refugees likely to commit an indictable offence (19)(1)(d)(i) and those likely to participate in organized crime (19)(1)(d)(ii) is difficult to understand. The former are the more immediately dangerous and there would be greater justification for denying protection to them, but the motion proposes just the opposite. In practice, however, we believe that both classes are serious enough to warrant a denial of protection.

The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) also wishes to change the standard of criminal offences committed in Canada for which a refugee would lose protection. During committee consideration of the bill, this standard was made identical to that for permanent residents, whether the refugee is a permanent resident or a visitor, that is, an offence for which the person actually received more than six months or was liable to five years or more. The hon. member would change this to a single standard of an actual sentence of two years or more. It is difficult to say whether this would mean raising or lowering the standard, since court sentencing practices vary so much. It would have the effect, however, of creating yet another standard in an area that is already complex.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on motion No. 10 in the name of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 10 (Mr. MacDonald (Egmont)) negatived on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 11.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal) moved:

Motion No. 11.

—That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause7

(a) by striking out line 29 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"7.(1) The Minister, after consultation with";

(b) by adding immediately after line 3 at page 8 the following new subclause;

"(2) The number announced by the Minister pursuant to subsection (1), shall in no way limit the number of refugees admitted to Canada."

He said: I intend to be very brief, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps, if the minister can clarify this clause, I shall not need to move my amendment, in which case I shall ask for unanimous consent to withdraw it.

I am sure the minister means that the quota is exclusive of refugees. That is the only interpretation a humane government or anyone else could reach. I think our Canadian history with regard to refugees has been particularly honourable. We think of the Hungarians, the Czechoslovaks, the Ugandans and the Chileans who came to Canada in special circumstances, and I would be very upset to think that these refugees were deducted from the quota enunciated in the clause I seek to amend. If the minister could assure me that they are not to be deducted, and that I am under a misapprehension, I would then ask for permission to withdraw. Otherwise I will pursue the amendment and ask hon. members to support it. I hope we are not playing a numbers game and that, if there are special circumstances, the refugees who are admitted are not deducted from the general total.

I should like to draw the minister's attention to a particularly poignant story which is much to the point in terms of the dilemma faced during the British mandate over Palestine. Refugees were assembled in terrible circumstances in Cyprus and special arrangements were made with Britain to try to relieve the refugee camps on Cyprus. With regard to the movement particularly of orphans of one-parent families and of young parents with children, the objective was to move this group out of the Cyprus refugee camps. The British government, to their eternal shame in my opinion, deducted this particular movement of refugees from the quotas into the mandated country. I hope that this occurrence will not happen in present day Israel. I hope there would not be a refugee deduction in a place like Lebanon. The minister should have credit for a very sympathetic movement of people from Lebanon, although I guess they were not particularly in the refugee category.

● (2050)

I hope this point can be cleared up rapidly. If it can, I will ask my colleagues to let me withdraw my amendment.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's concern might be more relevant if we in fact said that each year we were going to accept a certain number. What we are talking about here is setting levels which will be most flexible.

Just so there will not be any misunderstanding, there need be no concern that the use of levels will arbitrarily limit the admission of refugees, contrary to Canada's humanitarian traditions. If it is understood—and if it is not, it should be—our intention is to use the processing priorities provided for in 115(1)(f) to ensure that refugees, through being given second priority—first priority is the family class—would never be subject to numerical limitation. There is virtually no likelihood that the level would ever be set so low as to restrict or delay the admission of the family class, convention refugees, or those like persons who may be designated pursuant to 115(1)(d). In other words, they will be top priority. If we were dealing with a specific number here, there might be some concern; but the fact that we are dealing with levels gives us the flexibility that we need. The priorities that we set under the act, putting convention refugees in the second category after the family class, I feel give no real cause for concern.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the Chair to understand that there is a request to withdraw the motion?

Mr. Fairweather: I think we had better test the House, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on motion No. 11. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Paproski: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Negatived on division.

Motion No. 11 (Mr. Fairweather) negatived.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 8 and 9 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"grant; or"

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment requires a little explanation. It has to do with terms and conditions. It applies to lines 8 and 9 of Clause 14, at page 11 of the bill. The clause presently provides as follows:

(a) he—

That is, an immigration officer.

—shall grant landing to that immigrant, in which case he may impose terms and conditions of a prescribed nature;—

My amendment seeks to strike out the last two lines which read "in which case he may impose terms and conditions of a prescribed nature".

The idea of imposing terms and conditions on people we admit to this country is a new one. The terms and conditions are not to be revealed to parliament; they are entirely within the discretion of the immigration officer who is handling the case. As far as I can make out—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—there are no restrictions on what sort of terms and conditions are referred to. If my amendment is turned down and we pass the clause as presently worded, we are giving to an immigration officer the right to impose terms and conditions on a person he has found admissible to Canada under the regulations. I think that is wrong.

I think there is somewhere else in the bill a restriction on the terms and conditions, but in the clause with which we are dealing here an immigration officer grants landing and he can impose terms and conditions. I think that under Clause 15 the terms and conditions apply only for six months.

In committee at the instance of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) the committee passed an amendment which restricted certain terms and conditions which could be applied; but it is my submission to this House that no case can be made out for giving an immigration officer power, in effect, to legislate, to say what terms and conditions apply to a person whose landing would otherwise not be contrary to this act. An immigration officer would be able to say he will land that person but only if he observes certain undefined, vague, and perhaps highly onerous or ridiculous terms and conditions as imposed by that officer.

I do not think I need say more than that. Throughout the bill I have suggested a number of amendments designed to remove restrictive, unnecessary clauses which multiply the powers of officials, and in this case not even officials but any immigration officer. I am trying to simplify the procedure. We have never had this sort of thing before, and I do not want to be part of any process which imposes it now.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when I read this motion in the first instance the intent of it was not clear. It seems to me that it would have the effect of eliminating the power of an immigration officer at a port of entry to impose terms and conditions on the landing of an immigrant. No such change is proposed with respect to an immigration officer at an inland point under clause 14(4), a senior immigration officer under clause 23(1)(a), or an adjudicator under clause 32(3)(a). The proposed amendment would be unacceptable for this reason alone, if no distinction among the different situations was intended.

During committee stage we agreed to and accepted an amendment giving up the power to impose conditions specifying place of residence. We did this by accepting the amendment to add clause 115(4). For the purpose of ensuring the integrity of the selection system, we wish to retain the power to impose conditions related to the occupational selection factors. Conditions respecting the admission of fiancées and people requiring medical surveillance are also important. It must be remembered that the duration of conditions is only six months at the most, and that even within that short time they may be changed or cancelled for good cause.

Immigration

That Bill C-24, an act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 27 by striking out line 45 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"by force of any democratic government,"

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to sound enthusiastic before one starts his speech. I feel I should pound on the table to get the attention of hon. members.

Clause 19(1)(a) seeks a workable compromise between the original text of the clause and the amendment passed in committee. Although we are sympathetic to hon. members' concerns that underlay the committee amendment, my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), is very apprehensive about the practical impact of that amendment.

The committee amendment added two elements to the clause: the motion of reasonable grounds, and the need for consultation with a medical specialist. Both could have serious implications for administration of the law. The reasonable grounds addition would open medical officers' prognosis to judicial review. We disagree in principle with trying to apply judicial precision to questions that must remain a matter of professional experience and judgment applied to the peculiar circumstances of each case, but apart from this there would be serious practical problems.

If a medical officer's decision can be challenged legally, it follows that he must be available for examination and cross-examination. Since most medical examinations are carried out overseas, it would be extremely difficult and costly to arrange for medical officers' availability at judicial proceedings in Canada. In addition to constant disruption of service, it is estimated costs would reach as much as $2½ million a year. Nearly all medical examinations overseas are performed by local practitioners as part of their normal practice. It is believed that few would be willing to tolerate either the exposure of their judgment to Canadian judicial scrutiny, or the need to travel to Canada at unpredictable intervals. It would be necessary to replace the whole overseas medical examination system with an all Canadian service at enormous cost.

There would be even more difficulties with the medical specialist addition. I should like to cite some of them. It is not clear how one would determine the appropriate medical specialist. It is highly questionable that one needs the advice of a specialist in every case of health impairment, for example, a child with measles or a person who had lost both eyes. There are few or no specialists available in many countries. Examination by a specialist would add substantially to the applicant's expenses. It may not be reasonable to expect foreign specialists to be able to make a judgment on danger to the public or use of health facilities in Canada. The required consultation between the medical officer and specialist would create still greater operating costs.

In short, the committee amendment would probably hamstring the immigration medical service to the benefit of a very few people. Nevertheless, in order to allay hon. members' fears about unfettered discretion exercised by single medical officers, we are prepared to offer two safeguards: first, the proposed amendment under which a finding of inadmissibility on health grounds would require the concurrence of at least two medical officers; and second, a commitment to a stipulation in the regulations to be made under clause 115(1)(l) that one of the factors to be considered by medical officers shall be any reports from relevant medical specialists where so indicated.

I have spelled out some of the more practical concerns which the Department of National Health and Welfare will visualize because it is the department that is responsible for this portion of the immigration laws and procedures. In committee we endeavoured to cover this particular ground and to do it in a way that was appropriate. The amendment as proposed by motion No. 13 goes a long way to allay the fears experienced by members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to speak on ten different motions all at one time. I do not propose to pursue what the minister has said about medical officers. I fail to understand the complexity of the problem as he has developed it.

Hitherto, the government, when dealing with medical cases, has proceeded on the opinion it secured from medical men. It should do that, and it should make up its own mind as to the evidence it wants to get. This theory of vast throngs of people having to be put on staff to do this job is typical of this minister and the department he represents. They conjure up totally exaggerated myths and dreams of all the terrible consequences if anything is done to change this bill.

The best thing would be to toss out the term "medical officer" altogether and insert the phrase "on the advice of a medical officer", the department may do so on and so forth. That was done before with no complaint. This myth-making by the minister, which we have been subjected to time and again, on the advice of those who advise him, has reached a point where I find it difficult to take some of these suggestions seriously.

I should like to deal with my motions which relate to the very core of what we consider to be the most objectionable feature of this bill. Clause 19 of the bill deals with the prohibition of people who cannot come to Canada. For the first time in the history of Canadian jurisprudence, it does not deal on the basis of having been convicted of an offence. It does not deal on the basis of having admitted an offence of some serious criminal nature. It deals with reasonable grounds for the suspicion that an offence is going to be done. Motion No. 14 strikes out lines 11 to 22 at page 14 of the original bill, Clause 19, which read as follows:

persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe will, while in Canada, engage in or instigate the subversion by force of any government;

The core of this is: "persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe will". It is not grounds that they have, but a belief they will do something which is considered offensive by the drafters of this legislation. The minister or his representative proposed an amendment to the original clause 19(d) which is partly an improvement. It confines it to a pattern of criminal activity planned and organized by a number of persons in furtherance of the commission of any offence that may be punishable under any act of parliament by way of indictment. The original clause 19.(d)(i) reads as follows:

commit one or more offences punishable by way of indictment under any act of parliament . . .

We all know that the statute books are full of acts regarding some serious and some trivial offences. Regulations have been so innumerable in the past that it has been almost impossible to put them in books for a person to see how many regulations there are.

● (2110)

All you need to bar a person is to have an immigration official look into a person's eyes and say, "I have reasonable grounds to believe that you will commit some offence in the future or you will engaged in the future in the commission of some offence". The first is by way of indictment—those are more serious matters—but the second is under any act of parliament. It also says "by way of indictment". It is true that it is limited to the commission on the suspicion or speculation that you might do something that the immigration officer thinks would fall within the general definitions here, and that you might be punishable by way of indictment. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the minister, that it is incredible that a so-called Liberal government would introduce clauses such as this one which deny the basic right to be tried before you are punished, which deny hearings, so that you do not know what you are being punished for. This is a move toward a repressive state and it is utterly wrong.

An hon. Member: That is untrue.

Mr. Brewin: That is what you say. I don't know how you know anything about it, but you certainly can talk.

Mr. Béchard: Are you God Almighty, Andy?

An hon. Member: Don't be so arrogant, for goodness sake.

Mr. Brewin: I am not arrogant.

An hon. Member: All he did was to ask you a question.

Mr. Brewin: He did not question me. He said that what I said was not true. He can get up and speak for himself. He is one of that platoon that walked in toward the end of the hearings and took pride in the streamroller proceedings that I referred to earlier.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should address himself to the Chair. There might have been an intervention but I did not hear any of it, so I suggest the hon. member continue his remarks and address the Chair.

Mr. Brewin: I apologize for not addressing you, Mr. Speaker, and also I apologize if I showed some heat at this senseless, needless interruption that took place, but perhaps it is because of what we have been subjected to here in the last little while. We spent 70 hours in this committee—we sat there for hours and hours. I think the hon. member attended only about two of those hours and managed to make irrelevant observations during that period.

I have explained why we are against it. We are against it because it is contrary to the basic civil liberties and rights of people in this country. We oppose it, and we will continue to oppose it.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I intend to address myself to motion No. 13. Let me say first of all that I am surprised that the minister should get up in his place tonight and try to reverse that which was done in committee, because I do not believe his heart is in it. It is really the ghost of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) which must be around somewhere.

An hon. Member: Even the body is here.

Mr. Epp: Let us put the facts on the table as they developed in committee. We know that the approval of medical certificates is done by medical officers of the Department of National Health and Welfare who, after examining them, send them to the Department of Manpower and Immigration. With all due respect to the medical profession—and I am not trying to step on sensitive toes—it must be said quite bluntly and honestly that the meeting we had with the medical officers of the Department of National Health and Welfare that evening was less than successful because no matter what questions we put to them, the answers implied that as lay people we knew nothing, nor should we ask. I do not accept that as a member of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I do not believe there is such a term as medical infallibility, but that is what we were getting from them. Now after passing the amendment in committee we hear that the Minister of National Health and Welfare got all hot and bothered and left it to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) to bring in this amendment, reversing what we have decided.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: If you take a look at what our amendment was going to do you will see that it was trying to ensure that the person who was having the medical examination could avail himself or herself of the best medical help available—that is all. I know that medical check-ups are done by native doctors in the country where application is made. When the minister rose in his place tonight and told us they will need another $2.5 million, how can he justify that figure? Is that another thing that the Minister of National Health and Welfare fed to him? Did he check it out? Does he believe it? He knows the applicant pays for his medical examination. What is he talking about? Does he want us to buy that bill of goods?

Mr. McKenzie: Any excuse to spend more money.

Mr. Epp: What are we looking at? It came primarily from two groups. If I have not sounded very positive, it is because I believe this is a retrograde step by a minister who is only concerned about his ego and image. I am referring to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I want to commend the Minister of Manpower and Immigration for one thing in this regard. Clause 5 in the 1952 bill had words such as "imbeciles" and "morons". Thank God that is now removed from the bill. Also epileptics are removed.

I again want to commend the minister. I want to indicate for the record, so that we do not forget, the fact that we received a commitment in the committee that those persons who are in Canada on the minister's order and who cannot be landed because they were epileptic will be contacted once the bill has been promulgated and given an opportunity to get landed immigrant status. It is high time they were. The Canadian Association for the Mentally Retarded made a suggestion in their brief. It was not trying to negate the work of our medical officers, but it suggested that a person who is examined by a medical officer without the training of a psychiatrist or a psychologist and who does not pass the mental test should have the right to be examined by a specialist in that field. That is all we are asking for, but what this amendment would do would be to allow two medical officers to certify. The Canadian Association for the Mentally Retarded said at page four of its brief:

If immigration officials are to be able to give proper consideration to cases involving mental retardation, in addition to medical assessments, they should have available psychological, psychometric, educational and social assessments carried out by qualified professionals including psychologists, social workers, education and rehabilitation specialists.

That is all we are asking for, but no, the Minister of National Health and Welfare does not like it, and when the Minister of National Health and Welfare does not like something, we change. There is no such thing as a judicial review. I have too much respect for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to think that on his own he would give us that kind of information. I believe his heart was not in it.

I want to raise another matter which I think has escaped most hon. members, and that is the matter of Canadians who want to adopt children who are orphans in the developing world, because their parents are gone for one reason or another. Very often it is because of war, especially in the case of the disaster and the terrible things which happened in Vietnam. I want to bring this matter to the attention of the House because I believe it is important. In the last four years Kuan-Yin has been able to place some 600 orphans with parents in North America, but hardly any have been placed in Canada, despite the fact that there are Canadians who want to adopt children. An official of that organization told me today that every step of the way is a battle with the Department of National Health and Welfare. The organization tells me it is too expensive to hire legal help and to go through the red tape which is required to place a child in Canada. This is a sad testimonial.

Some hon. members opposite and some hon. members on this side of the House will understand what I say because of their experience in teaching. Children are given standard psychological tests. They are tested for their mental ability. Some children from deprived backgrounds often score low, not because of a lack of mental ability, but because they do not have the social experiences which would allow them to score higher. For example, one child scored an I.Q. of 67. I do not take for granted the fact that one test is definitive. I do not think anyone who does psychological testing does either. Children who do not understand the language used in these tests will score low. In one case a child from Asia was asked what a mailbox was used for. The poor child had never seen a mailbox.

Mr. Fairweather: We don't know what a mailbox is for either.

Mr. Epp: With the service we are getting, perhaps that is true. After that child had been in North America for two years his mental ability was tested, and his score was 115. All we are asking is that a psychologist or a psychiatrist who has ability in this field be allowed to do the testing. However, the Minister of National Health and Welfare says no. Therefore we cannot have that.

This amendment is retrogressive, it is arbitrary, and it is another indication of the absolute power the Minister of National Health and Welfare wants. I say the amendment is wrong, and if hon. members have any sense of fairness they should not support it. The amendments which were passed in the committee were a small step toward fairness for those people who are less fortunate than some of us.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Young) wants to say a few words. I was surprised when the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) was explaining his amendments that the hon. member for Niagara Falls was arrogating for himself all the knowledge and wisdom.

Mr. Young: That wasn't my comment.

Mr. Orlikow: That is certainly what it sounded like. I want to put on the record some of the submissions made to the committee. If the hon. member for Niagara Falls had attended more than one or two committee meetings, he would have heard them. I wish the hon. member would either not interject, or at least interject loud enough so that I could hear him.

Mr. Young: I attended many more than one or two.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member may have attended, but he obviously did not listen. If the hon. member would refer to the minutes of the meeting of June 7, 1977, at page 32A:8 he would see the submissions of the Student Legal Aid Society and the Law Union of Ontario. I am not a lawyer, but these are organizations comprising lawyers and law students who work in parts of Toronto where there are large numbers of immigrants. These organizations work with immigrants and their friends and relatives to help them come to this country.

They work with the department and with the law and the regulations as enacted by the cabinet and interpreted and administered by the department. For the edification of the hon. member for Niagara Falls I will read some of the criticisms of the bill which those two organizations made. If they sound familiar, I suppose it is because the hon. member for Greenwood has included most of these criticisms in the amendments which he has proposed. Let me begin on page 32A:8 and read their comments on Clause 19(1)(a).

● (2130)

Under the proposed Bill, conduct permissible in Canada yet criminally punishable in less democratic countries would constitute a bar to admission; the bar should only extend to those who have committed acts which would be prohibited in this country.

For instance, if in the Soviet Union one were to distribute books written by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, one would undoubtedly be prosecuted under Soviet law for doing something illegal in that country. If you applied the present section of the act to that person, you could exclude him from entering this country.

Commenting on proposed Section 19(1)(c) they say:

The prohibition on persons 'likely to engage in criminal activity' casts such a wide net that it may have the effect of both undoing the effect of other sections of the bill, and short circuiting Canadian law on criminal procedure. This class of inadmissible persons should thus be deleted from the bill.

They also say this about proposed Section 19(1)(d):

The present act puts a person in an inadmissible class only if he has been involved in subversion by force or other means of 'democratic government', but the Bill proposes to extend this to subversion by force of any government. Since subversion of any kind against democratic government is covered by s. 19(1)(e) of the bill, it is recommended that this subsection be deleted.

I cannot imagine ever being involved in the subverting of any government, but can well believe that some who want to come to Canada may try to subvert authoritarian, dictatorial governments, of which there are too many, for example in Africa. Yet under that clause in this bill they could be excluded from entry.

They say this about proposed Section 19(1)(f):

The prohibition against persons who are 'members of or associated with an organization that is likely to engage in acts of violence' is a broad and vague classification which is prone to abuse; deserving cases for exclusion are caught by the provision covering 'persons who are likely to engage in acts of violence that would or might endanger the lives or safety of persons in Canada.'

We have seen too many examples in the country south of us of the branding as criminals and the prosecuting of people it is supposed are likely to commit acts of violence, to use the language of the bill. In whose opinion are they likely to do this? In the opinion of the minister, or of the immigration officer? Surely we are not going to condemn someone for something we think he may do. That would be dangerous.

The Parkdale Community Legal Services organization repeated many of the criticisms just enumerated. Let me put on record some of their opinions. Speaking of the provisions of subsection 19(1)(h) they said, as recorded at page 32A:190 of the committee proceedings:

Subsection 19(1)(h) is a re-doing of the present subsection 5(P) and is every bit as vague and arbitrary as the old section. It is the section which, because of its lack of criteria, is often used to exclude anyone who is merely suspicious, inarticulate or different. It too should be deleted as there are many other sections to cover those truly undeserving of admission.

Let me put on record what they say about Section 27, which is covered by motion No. 25. They say:

Section 27 covers the removal of persons from Canada after their admission and includes the removal of landed immigrants regardless of their length of residence in Canada. Subsections 27(1)(a) and (e) suffer from problems already discussed under Section 19.

Subsection 27(1)(e) is substantially the same as the present subsection 18(1)(e)(viii) and poses the same inequities. The wording of this subsection coupled with the current case law, make it possible for someone to be deported after being in Canada any number of years, for very minor misstatements on their application. The Supreme Court of Canada has characterized the effects of this section as harsh. Furthermore, when coupled with Section 9 of the new Citizenship Act, a person may have his/her citizenship revoked and then be deported for relatively minor infractions on this subsection. It is not enough to suggest that this won't be done. The power is there, and has already been used.

If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) were present he could tell the House more eloquently that I can how similar provisions in the Immigration Act were almost used following World War I in the attempt to deport from Winnipeg British people who had lived in the city many years. They had come to Canada from Great Britain and their only crime was that they were the supposed leaders of the general strike in Winnipeg in 1919. The authorities wanted to deport them under a similar section of the act, but desisted only after the protests of one who I think became a Liberal solicitor general, E. J. MacMurray.

I hope history has taught us something, has shown us we do not need such draconian legislation. Frankly, I am amazed that a so-called Liberal government should include such a provision in the bill. I urge members of the House to heed the advice of the Parkdale Community Legal Services, and of the other organizations to which I referred, and reject this clause. Such advice is based on knowledge of the law.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about the intervention of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) in connection with motion No. 13. I can understand the motivation of the committee which led to the adoption of that particular amendment. It clearly was based on the presumed uncontrolled and unlimited discretion of the medical officer in formulating his or her opinion as to the health status of a particular immigrant. However, I believe there are serious grounds for concluding that the new wording proposed by the hon. member is incapable of achieving the control which was intended and, further, that it will not be virtually impossible for my department to continue to operate an immigration health service in support of Canada's immigration program. I should like to put a few reasons on record in support of this statement.

Hon. members must remember that it is not possible to designate medical practitioners for immigration medical purposes in certain countries, such as Spain, China, Yugoslavia, Taiwan or the Soviet Union, much less to determine the qualifications of appropriate medical specialists in those countries, to use the wording of the amendment proposed in committee. In those cases the state concerned designates the local examining medical practitioners and occasionally accedes to request for medical consultations when these are required. Departmental medical officials ordinarily do not have any direct contact with these physicians. They certainly do not have any control with respect to their designation.

Another point worth bearing in mind is the incongruity of the so-called medical specialists in India, Japan, Lebanon, Ghana or Afghanistan, opining for example, on the subject of, and I quote the amendment passed by the committee, "excessive demands on health or social services" in Canada with respect to health impairment discerned in an immigrant applicant in one of those countries, assuming that the requirement for, and I again quote the amendment, "consultation with the appropriate medical specialist", as the amended version reads, applies to Section 19.

The hon. member raised questions as to costs. He went out of his way to point out that the applicant immigrants are paying for the medical specialist consultations. I suspect that what he proposed would end up hurting sick people whom he claims he would want to help. It is estimated that for approximately every 2,000 immigrants there might be as many as 50,000 cases where it would be appropriate to have a consultation with a medical specialist.

Let us assume a consultation fee of about $100 per immigrant. It immediately adds an additional $5 million to potential immigrants who will have to bear that particular cost. As the hon. member knows, many of these people come to Canada with relatively small means, especially if they suffer from a particular health impairment.

As to the figure of $2.5 million about which the hon. member was concerned, it is related essentially to having medical immigration officers from the department and medical specialists appear in litigation procedures and the costs arising therefrom.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., pursuant to the order made today, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on Bill C-24, an Act respecting immigration to Canada.

Call in the members.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Speaker: It being after ten o'clock, in accordance with Standing Order 40 a motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been moved and seconded. Therefore the question is: "That this House do adjourn."

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—INCREASE IN FREIGHT RATES ON POTATOES AND PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL EQUIPMENT—REASON FOR TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, it has been a long day. I hope now to be able to direct the attention of the House briefly during the adjournment debate to a matter of some major concern to potato producers in eastern Canada, particularly Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. As the minister will recognize, it concerns the problem of transportation costs and transportation equipment for the potato industry.

This has become a major question. This is roughly the fourteenth time over the past eight months that I have raised it in the House, either in the question period or adjournment debate.

There has been a developing problem of major proportions in terms of equipment that will be made available for potato producers. As the minister and his officials know, most of the potatoes were moved in carriers that were not made in this country. In fact they were rented from American rail operators and remained available to the Canadian railroads at a very inexpensive rental cost.

These refrigerated cars, some 4,000 or 5,000 in number, were normally adequate for the movement of potatoes to central Canadian markets. However, when the American railroads decided it was no longer possible to obtain existing equipment or build new equipment, these deteriorated very rapidly both in number and in quality. The situation today is that we have roughly 25 per cent of those that were normally available, something around 1,000 cars.

Some provision must be made in the very near future. In fact some would say the time is already well past when such equipment can be available on time. Otherwise we will run into a crisis situation during the peak shipping month of February or March. There will simply not be enough vehicles available to move potatoes to markets where demands are greatest.

We might have encountered the situation in the last shipping year were it not for the fact that an unusual opportunity developed for potato producers in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to ship a very large amount of table potatoes to Europe after their own crop failed. I doubt whether that situation is likely to arise again this year or on many occasions. Indeed, with the bumper crop predicted for this year, we could well be in a very serious situation next spring when we try to move the bulk of our potatoes to market.

I raised this with the minister on June 9 because it had been announced a few days earlier, around the first of the month, that CNR was contemplating rate increases of 12 and 20 per cent. By the first of the year we will have something like a total rate increase of 34 per cent.

In addition, there was a suggestion that in place of the refrigerated cars which are no longer available or adequate for service, insulated boxcars roughly double or more the size of the present reefer cars should be provided. When the producers and retail operators heard of this, they were appalled, both at the discriminatory nature of the further rate increase which was away beyond any kind of guideline as it presumably existed with respect to cost increases under the present wage and price control program and, second, the appropriateness or adequacy of the insulated boxcars that CNR was contemplating using.

The rough experience that had been noticed over the past year, the difficulty with the substantial number of freeze-ups of potatoes that were in insulated boxcars, the problems of adequately handling them at the receiving end, as well as the problems in loading them for the producers came as extremely bad news to potato producers in eastern Canada. Therefore I was somewhat surprised when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) told me the CNR had simply put this information on the table in order that they could proceed with discussions with the shippers on the subject of equipment, its availability and, presumably, its cost.

Since that time the special task force has worked diligently. Its report has now been circulated among potato interests in eastern Canada and it seems some break-through is being made. I believe we can expect an announcement that some cars will actually be built. The problem will, of course, be whether they will be in time or whether they will be enough. My understanding is that some 300 cars may be ordered of the size in the 90,000 lbs. range, and of the type suitable for the use of eastern potato producers, but that many of them may not be available for at least two or three years. Three hundred cars are really not adequate; they will accommodate, perhaps, less than 50 per cent of the real demand which will exist for these cars, and I hope more adequate consultation with the industry will lead to a more positive and more comprehensive plan being implemented.

In addition, I believe the plan to use insulated boxcars will not be any asset to the market or to the potato producers. I hope this proposal will be studied further. What is important, though, is to have a decision, to end this long and unsettled period in which potato producers do not know how to meet their marketing commitments. This is an industry which has tried desperately in recent years to get itself adequately organized so as to realize a fair return for producers, and further delay is not helpful. I trust the parliamentary secretary will be able to give us a favourable progress report this evening.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the problems of transporting and distributing potatoes from Prince Edward Island and northwestern New Brunswick have ranged from inadequate rail equipment and port facilities, to inefficient market co-ordination and unrealistic transportation rates.

Both government and industry have long since recognized some of the complex issues in dealing with the question of distribution, and while some steps have been taken to improve the system, many of the basic issues remain unresolved.

Therefore, as the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) is aware, Mr. Speaker, in order to deal with the problems and to develop a consensus on future steps among all major interest groups, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) appointed a working group on the Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick potato distribution system to consult with representatives of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick producers and shippers, P.E.I. and New Brunswick governments, CN and CP, truckers and ports. It was the task of the working group to come up with recommendations by August, 1977, on a short term basis which would ensure the efficient and cost-effective distribution of potatoes for the 1977-78 crop year, and longer term measures by early in 1978 to ensure desirable system capability for future crop years.

As the minister said in the House just yesterday, a draft report by the working group on the first part of their task is complete. In fact officials were in Moncton today to discuss the report with the interested parties. A final report is expected within a week or so, at which time the government will consider the matter and take such actions as it deems necessary to ensure the most effective system of distribution for potatoes. We take note, of course, of the representations made by the hon. member and will also take note of the representations of other hon. members who may be interested.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—REPORT OF FITZGERALD ASSOCIATES ON "THE WAY AHEAD"—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT OR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on April 4 of this year I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with regard to a document from the consulting firm E.P. Fitzgerald Associates of Ottawa entitled "Comments on The Way Ahead—A Framework for Discussion." This document contains a series of recommendations as to what action the government should take to rectify the serious economic mess Canada is in. I am here tonight not only to find out what action, if any, the Liberal government has taken on this document but also to draw attention to the very serious economic problems the government is ignoring because of the priority it places on such things as bilingualism and culture. This government, Mr. Speaker, has not been giving very serious attention to economic problems and it would be amazing to find out how many other documents like the E.P. Fitzgerald report are not being acted upon.

While of course there are many aspects to the economic fiasco the government has created, I believe one of the more critical items is the drain of Canadian investment money leaving Canada. On two occasions I have introduced motions under Standing Order 43 calling for the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic affairs to conduct an immediate investigation into the money leaving Canada by way of investments in the United States. The government, of course, chose to ignore this serious problem by rejecting these motions, just as it is ignoring all economic matters by not presenting a budget this fall.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the whole matter of the various documents the government has containing economic proposals, and the whole question of the drain on the Canadian economy of money leaving Canada by way of investments should be a matter for the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to consider in detail.

For the record, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the proposals of the Fitzgerald report dealing with the promotion of the private sector because there is such little faith in the Liberal government that it has brought about the drain of millions of dollars leaving Canada. The promotion of the private sector recommendations read as follows:

Promotion of the Private Sector

Because the private sector constitutes the main tax base for all government programs in addition to providing much needed employment, it is apparent that expansion of private enterprise should be given top priority.

It is suggested that some of the ways in which this could be done include the following:

(a) Emphasis on the development of high technology and secondary industry in Canada.

(b) Increased support to the setting up of labour intensive industry in the Third World while retaining capital intensive industry at home.

(c) Use of tax-bonds and de-taxation measures to return consumer oriented programs, e.g. the building industry, to private sectors.

Again, although the writer has specific proposals in mind in each of the foregoing areas, these have been omitted for the sake of brevity.

American business representatives are openly encouraging Canadian businesses to move from Montreal and Toronto to U.S. locations. It is alarming, Mr. Speaker, that it has reached the point where Canadian investment in United States real estate has gone from $300 million in 1972 to a high $2.5 billion this year; to the point where Canadian investors own 30 per cent of the major apartment complexes in Seattle, Washington, and Canadian firms have developed 17 major complexes in U.S. cities. All of this is because of the lack of faith in the economic policies of the Liberal government. Even a major firm like Canadian Pacific is making huge investments in the U.S.

In every year since, and including, 1973, Canadians have made more long term direct investments—real estate, plant and equipment, etc.—abroad than foreigners have made in Canada. Since 1973 more than $1 billion of direct investment capital has left the country. In more human terms, if an average $60,000 capital investment is required to create one permanent job, more than 17,000 potential jobs have not been created because of this outflow.

The net outflow of capital has been growing in recent years. In 1976, even though foreign economies were plagued by stagnation, Canadians invested $555 million abroad. And, for the first time in at least 25 years, 1976 was the first year in which foreigners actually reduced the value of their holdings in Canada—by $395 million. Figures for the first quarter of 1977 show that the net outflow is continuing: $35 million in the first quarter, an annual rate of $140 million.

Statistics Canada, which is the Canadian government's statistical agency, reports, that Canadian long term investment in the United States increased by more than 66 per cent between 1969 and 1974, from $5,564 millions outstanding at the end of 1969 to $8,376 millions outstanding at the end of 1974.

The Statistics Canada figures show total Canadian direct investment in the U.S. in 1974 was $4,900 millions, up from $2,079 millions in 1969; portfolio investment $2,967 millions, up from $2,309 millions, and miscellaneous investment $500 millions, up from $216 millions.

These totals, of course, are far below total United States long term investment in Canada, which amounted to $46,675 millions in 1974, up from $33,045 millions in 1969.

With both inflation and unemployment running at disturbingly high levels in Canada, the opposition parties and labour organizations are all concerned about the outflow of capital which, if put to work in Canada, would provide more jobs, and in theory would counterprice inflation by encouraging price competition to sell more goods available. The federal budget presented to parliament on March 31 contained a good many tax relief items aimed at encouraging more investment in Canada and more jobs. The results have been disappointing. A fortnight ago a cabinet minister, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), was almost shrill in a speech imploring businessmen to invest their capital in expanding operations and jobs in Canada.

In Florida, where Canadian tourists spend an estimated $500 million a year, Canadians are increasing their investments, not only in retirement condominiums, but in business ventures of many kinds—real estate, manufacturing, banks, etc. Florida economic development officials report more Canadian investment inquiries in the last five months than in the previous 14 months, mainly from small and medium-sized Canadian firms in many industrial sectors. Canada's Royal Trust Company recently bought the American Bank of Orange County in Orlando for $2.3 million.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) has been unfair because for several minutes he has been laying on the table hundreds of statistics on which I will not comment now. I do not accept them as being valid. I should like to take the time I have to deal with Mr. Fitzgerald's submission, which I understood was to be the content of his interjection. I should like to say that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and myself are very grateful to the many hundreds of individual Canadians, among them Mr. Fitzgerald, and to the groups and firms who took the time and effort to respond to our request for views on "The Way Ahead".

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Mr. Fitzgerald's submission put forward, in a rather general way, some criticisms of what he regards as conventional economics and mentions certain new concepts which he feels would lead to an improved understanding of economic processes and problems. The alternative theory which he has offered is not very clear, but a more general point is that governments do not usually act on the basis of general critiques of economic theory or of new general theories received in the mail or in submissions. The real testing grounds for such critiques and theories are public debate and professional analysis. I wish Mr. Fitzgerald well, but I doubt that the chances are very high that future finance ministers will be forced by the tide of public and professional opinion to formulate economic policy on the basis of his new theories.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre alluded to certain specific proposals concerning tax bonds and reductions in the taxation on housing included in Mr. Fitzgerald's submission. Because of the time factor, I should like to refer to one of his proposals. According to the tax bond proposal, corporations would be given the option of subscribing to long term government bonds bearing an interest rate lower than current market rates in place of paying some fraction of their taxes. This proposal is put forward as a means of relieving pressure on firms to increase prices, and as a means of raising capital for government investment projects. Given that the bond issues are to replace receipts of tax revenues, it is hard to see how the measure increases the financial resources available to government for capital spending.

The measure would amount to a reduction in the effective rate of corporation taxation with the revenue loss financed by increased borrowing. The extent of the effective tax rate reduction would depend on the extent to which the interest rates on the bonds were below current market levels.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT OF LOCAL OFFICE IN BRANDON

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the question I should like to raise tonight has been under discussion for almost two years now. It is a very important issue concerning the Department of Veterans Affairs. It will decentralize its service facilities and establish a network, in places like the good city of Thunder Bay, Ontario, and the great city of Brandon, Manitoba, of storefront operations manned by qualified service officer personnel of the Department of Veterans Affairs in order more effectively to serve the populations living in those regions.

I have submitted questions from time to time to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and he has acknowledged them positively, saying that a decision is just around the corner and that if I would rest my soul in patience, the announcement would be made. When the parliamentary secretary responded in a similar debate of this kind almost a year ago, he indicated that the decision was about to be made.

I regret that neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary are present, but I trust that the spokesman who is representing the government tonight will be able to answer in specific terms to two questions. First of all, will the government proceed with this policy which will provide on the spot advisory and counselling services to the veterans, and will one of these offices be located Brandon; and second, when will the program be initiated?

The reason I have become involved in the matter is a letter that was circulated from the regional office of the Department of Veterans Affairs in the city of Winnipeg which serves Thunder Bay, from the area welfare supervisor on February 10, 1976. It was directed to the service officer of the Royal Canadian Legion in Brandon, Mr. John Heming. It reads:

> Dear Mr. Heming:
> Due to budgetary cutbacks our country travel has been curtailed until the beginning of the new fiscal year—April, 1976.
> I apologize for the inconvenience this will create to veterans in the area, but ask for your co-operation in forwarding full particulars of any veterans problems in your area with which I may be of assistance. Please include in your referrals full name, address, regimental number and nature of problem.
> I am looking forward to seeing you in April.

This letter is dated February, so I think he will agree that there was not too much service given at that time to a veteran population which is represented by almost 5,000 ex-service personnel in the Westman region who are active members of the Royal Canadian Legion. Based on percentage figures, that means that there must be a veteran population of over 15,000 because those areas of the country made a great contribution to enlistments in both World War I and World War II.

As a result of this letter the branches of the Royal Canadian Legion in the area conducted a write-in campaign and letters flowed into me and to the minister in great numbers. It was on the basis of this write-in campaign that the minister was persuaded, I am sure, that this was a good policy and an urgently needed one. The situation was reinforced by a statement of Mr. Bob Adams, the director general of veterans services, located here in Ottawa, in an article in the Legionnaire, the official organ of the Canadian Legion, when he indicated that this program was being contemplated and that it was going to be a storefront operation with as little in the way of support staff as possible and it would bring uniformity into the disbursal of the program's goodies, as Adams said, "Standards of counselling and social welfare will be set here in Ottawa" he said, and they will be uniform across the country.

I raised the question on May 31, and again the Minister of Veterans Affairs said:

> The study I initiated at that time in reference to this question is still under way. Brandon is under study at the present time. As far as giving the hon. member a definite date, I prefer not to do so now.

Another two months have passed, and I hope tonight that the spokesman will be able to indicate some specifics in this regard. It is much less expensive than the travelling involved and the long distance telephone calls involved. It is a program which is a part of the decentralization emphasis which has been announced by the minister.

We have the grandiose plan of taking the department to Prince Edward Island. I think even greater priority is demanded by the issue which has been brought forward in quite specific terms in hundreds of letters which have come from the veterans of the Westman area. The legion service officers are trying to fill in to the best of their ability. They have initiated an operation service, and they are to be congratulated for filling the gap which has to be filled. It is a vacuum of service which has to be met and I trust—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am sure the spokesman will give us a positive response tonight.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member presents the problem very well. As the hon. member is aware, the minister has indicated that a review of the organization of the department is under way with the hope of improving service. The number of veteran clients is increasing. Those of us who are veterans are getting older and are going to require more services, so there is no question that there will be a need. The problem is the freeze on manpower but, as the hon. member has indicated, one way of improving service is to increase the number of offices. In order to improve service, some services in those offices must be combined.

The study is still under way. The data is not all in. I cannot give a date, but the study is under way, and there is no question that Brandon and Thunder Bay are two centres where this kind of service is necessary. One of the pressures will be the need for increased service. We all appreciate that. In my visits to veterans hospitals I find that the numbers are increasing rather than decreasing. The minister has assured me that as soon as the data is complete he will be giving thorough consideration to this, and one of the things to be considered seriously is decentralization into small communities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.57 p.m.

PROPOSED DISCLOSURE OF EXPORT WHEAT PRICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the approaching end of the wheat crop year on July 31, wheat farmers are deeply concerned over falling wheat prices and they want to be assured that the export sales now and during the last year have not been at prices that will permit little or no return to them. Having the right to know, as Canada's competitors for wheat sales know at all times, the prices at which Canada is selling its export wheat, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the wheat board officials should appear forthwith before the Standing Committee on Agriculture and furnish such information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 43, the presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and public necessity arising from the wildcat strike that is disrupting the movement of mail in the nation's capital. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Postmaster General or his representatives meet with representatives of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers in a co-ordinated and cooperative effort to resolve the issues causing the dispute and get the mail moving again.

PROPOSED POSTPONEMENT OF SUBSIDIES TO PRIVATE SHIPPING COMPANIES SERVING NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning applications that have been made to the Canadian Transport Commission for additional subsidies by the Clarke Steamship Line and further, applications have been made to the CTC for subsidies by the A. Harvey Shipping of Newfoundland, Federal Commerce and Navigation of Montreal and Newfoundland Container Lines Ltd. of Newfoundland. If these subsidies are granted, there will be a detrimental effect on the shipment of goods through the Port of North Sydney to Newfoundland, thus creating additional unemployment for the stevedores at the Port of North Sydney where the work force has been cut to less than half the normal number. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates):

That in light of the fact that taxpayers' moneys are being used to subsidize private corporations while CN marine ships are often tied up, lying idle, all further consideration of subsidies to the aforementioned corporations be held in abeyance until a study has been made to determine what effect such competition in shipping may have on the work force of stevedores at the Port of North Sydney and also the crews of CN marine operating out of North Sydney to Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 43, the presentation for debate of any such motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S INTERPRETATION OF BOYLE REPORT ON ALLEGED SEPARATIST BIAS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister and arises out of comments made during the question period yesterday when the Prime Minister exhibited a sense of clairvoyance. He said that the CRTC report which we talked about yesterday supports his contention, to quote him, that "the overwhelming majority of CBC employees are of separatist leanings". Yesterday the president of the CBC said—and I am quoting him now—that "the CRTC has not found the CBC guilty of a separatist bias". I want to ask the Prime Minister to tell the House who is right about what Mr. Boyle said about separatism in the CBC. Is Mr. Boyle right or is the Prime Minister right?

An hon. Member: You mean Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am sorry, I mean Mr. Johnson.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to know what Mr. Boyle thinks, he just has to read his report. All I said yesterday was that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton should not be interpreting the report as he did in a false way.

Mr. Lalonde: You are using McCarthy-like methods.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am interested in the interpretation that the Prime Minister put upon the report. Mr. Johnson indicated quite clearly that as far as he was concerned—and I am now quoting him—the CRTC has not found the CBC guilty of a separatist bias. Yesterday and on other occasions the Prime Minister has indicated that he disagrees. I am simply asking the Prime Minister who is right, Mr. Johnson, on the one hand, or the Prime Minister?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the relevant question is what Mr. Boyle says, and the way to get the answer to that question is to read his report. If the hon. member reads the report he will see that Mr. Boyle's report said that the electronic media had been contributing to the division of Canada.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is quite a different thing.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the division of Canada means to separate Canada into parts, and to separate Canada into parts is called separatism in some quarters.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is pretty fancy footwork even for the Prime Minister, who is digging rather deeply. The Prime Minister as the head of the government has expressed an opinion on the CBC. If the Prime Minister believes that and is using what his minister of health has just said are McCarthy-like tactics, could he tell the House why he is allowing to continue in office as president of the CBC a man who, according to the Prime Minister, is so blind that he cannot see the hordes of separatists that are around him?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid this is much too subtle for the hon. member to understand. I will try to give the answers that I gave in this House before we set up the Boyle inquiry. It was that there were a lot of active separatists in Radio Canada. This is the statement. The hon. member can quarrel with it if he wants; but Mr. Boyle does not pronounce on that, nor does Mr. Johnson. The relevant question is whether these separatists are subverting or whether they are doing their jobs properly. It is also whether they are guilty of malpractices as journalists and so on. Mr. Boyle says that there is subversion and that there is malpractice. These are facts, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: They are facts, Mr. Boyle says this. The hon. member can disagree with Mr. Boyle, if he wants; but I have made the assertion before that the point is not really the political beliefs of those who are working for the CBC or anyone else. It is whether they are doing their jobs honestly, conscientiously and properly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The Boyle report indicates that they are guilty of malpractice and they are guilty of not uniting Canada.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Prime Minister has neither read the report, nor has he read the statement by Mr. Johnson, the President of the CBC. In his news release, the President of the CBC said the following:

> In commenting on the CRTC report today, let me deal first with that question of pro-separatist bias. I am pleased to see the CRTC has not found the CBC to be guilty of such bias.

Obviously, the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation takes issue with the statement made by the Prime Minister in February and the statement made once again by him here today. The important part is that there have been assertions made by the government. His Minister of State for Urban Affairs, who was later promoted to be the czar of Quebec, said that there were thousands of letters and thousands of inquiries.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Boyle did not receive one of them during his inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): How can the Prime Minister possibly say, in the face of what Mr. Boyle says, in the face of what Mr. Johnson says and in the face of the omission by his own minister, to supply those letters, that there is any truth whatsoever in the assertions made by the Prime Minister in the House today?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is a somewhat repetitive debate. Perhaps Mr. Johnson does not agree with Mr. Boyle. That is something for the hon. member to reconcile in the way he wants.

An hon. Member: It is for you to reconcile.

Mr. Trudeau: I have read enough of Mr. Boyle's report to know that he says that the electronic media, and the CBC in particular, have not contributed in a sufficient way to their mandate, nor to the unity of Canada. He said also that they are guilty of malpractice.

An hon. Member: Do you agree?

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps he uses the word "subversion" in a metaphorical sense in terms of not working toward Canadian unity. If these words have no meaning to the hon. member, I refuse to have any further discussion.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What do they mean to you?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are the Prime Minister.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yes, you are the Prime Minister. What do they mean to you?

Mr. Paproski: You have to answer that.

ADEQUACY OF BOYLE REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister feel that Mr. Boyle's commission of inquiry was adequate in terms of the comments made by himself and some of his ministers? Does the Prime Minister know whether it gives a clear direction in terms of the necessary improvements or possible reforms which might be made within the sector of public broadcasting at the present time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as to whether the report was adequate or not, from the point of view of the government it was a good job well done. We did not give them much time to make a report. They made that report within time constraints with a great deal of competence. Thus, in that sense it is adequate. I do not think it is adequate in that it would have had to use pictures in order for the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton to understand it. For us it was adequate. It recommends several directions which we have not analysed. As I have said, the Secretary of State for the government will be reporting to Cabinet in a memorandum still to come concerning those directions.

POSSIBILITY OF DISTINGUISHING BETWEEN SINS OF OMISSION MENTIONED IN BOYLE REPORT AND ALLEGATIONS OF SEPARATIST BIAS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister distinguish between the inability to function effectively referred to in the context of the report, or the sins of omission which have been mentioned regarding the provision of information, and his earlier criticism and that of his colleagues concerning a definite political bias—one directed toward a political solution or option for the province of Quebec? Does he distinguish a difference between Mr. Boyle's report and the original criticism by himself and others?

● (1120)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It appears to me that Mr. Boyle does not use the word "separatism" although I am informed that several of the cases he analyzes are cases of separatism in which some incompetence was shown. It seems to me it should be of sufficient concern to the opposition, if they want to rely on the report in any sense, that he is making a very severe criticism of the electronic media because they have not contributed, as the mandate would direct them, to national unity. To my mind this is a serious criticism. People on the other side of this House seem to be more interested in knowing whether he used or did not use the word "separatism". If they take the report at its face value I think they should realize there is a severe condemnation there and they should be more constructive as to ways in which the task of the media can be accomplished than in playing with words.

POSSIBILITY OF REFERRING BOYLE AND TOUCHSTONE REPORTS TO COMMITTEE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): The Prime Minister seems to be caught on one note. He seems to have missed the thrust of the report which talks very much of the over-centralization of production, the heavy dependency on American programming and the loss of contact with both parliament and the public which are major issues and which seem not yet to have been recognized. Has the right hon. gentleman consulted with the Secretary of State to determine whether it might be useful to have this report and perhaps the recent Touchstone Report made orders of reference to the appropriate parliamentary committee when we return in the fall?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not sure what the hon. member means when he says I have not recognized these important facets. It seems to me more relevant that not one of his colleagues on the other side of the House has asked questions about them. They have all been concerned about whether separatism had been discovered or not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF EXPENDITURE ON FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the decision of President Carter against the production of B-1 aircraft and in view of the obvious fact that manned aircraft cannot now play a significant defensive or deterrent role, will the minister and the government reconsider the immense proposed expenditure of upward of $2 billion to be made on fighter aircraft?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): One of the reasons for the decline in the use of the manned bomber is, of course, that it is vulnerable to air defences. If there were a general de-escalation it would be a different matter, but one of the other considerations is the need to maintain our first priority in national defence, that of ensuring national sovereignty, and fighter aircraft serve this role very well. Any nation which allows its air space to be intruded upon does so at its peril.

PURCHASE OF FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—ASSURANCE OF PROPORTION OF PRODUCTION IN CANADA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I must say I accept what the minister says about the need for the protection of Canadian Sovereignty. I wonder, though, whether a very large manned bomber and fighter aircraft fleet is necessary for that purpose, and I suggest it is not. When the minister made his announcement on this subject some weeks ago he assured us every effort would be made to ensure as much of the production was kept in Canada as possible. He referred to a number of firms. I think most of them were European. One or two were American. These firms were going to be asked to tender on this. I assume negotiations will be based on the hope that production will take place in Canada so that employment can be created here. Has any progress been made on this at all?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. First, I should point out in further answer to comments in the first question that the aircraft are used in our NATO role in Europe as well. With reference to the industrial benefits, there are negotiations going on now and proposals are being made by some of the six vendors who are tendering on the aircraft. The industrial benefits will be an exceptionally important consideration. First of all, it has to be a correct military decision. The price has to be right. That is another very important consideration. The bidders know about and are working on the question of industrial benefits. I use the term "industrial benefits" as opposed to offsets which might be offsetting on this procurement alone. I am delighted to see that some of those vendors are now making proposals which go quite beyond the contract involved. One is now talking in terms of a $1.5 billion to $2 billion investment in Canada. I think that is a good start. I hope the others will see that that is the kind of opener we are looking for and will improve on that.

PURCHASE OF FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—POSSIBILITY OF USING MONEY EXPENDED FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I should address this question to this minister or to the Minister of Finance, but I think I will stick with the Minister of National Defence. If he can I would like him to tell us what percentage of production there will be in Canada. I would like him also to say whether it is not fairly obvious that there are socially useful projects such as cleaning up the Great Lakes and housing—which I know the minister has a special interest in—which require capital. Is this the time to be expanding military expenditures, one group of aircraft alone costing over $2 billion, when these other urgent things need to be done for the benefit of Canada?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman recognizes the priorities the government must have in terms of military expenditures as opposed to other social expenditures. Of course, this is a massive expenditure. It is not an increase in our effort. It is to replace older aircraft with newer ones to fulfil our commitment to NATO and NORAD and for our own security.

As far as the percentage of purchasing in Canada is concerned, I have not set a fixed percentage. When I announced that we were looking for tenders I suggested something like 125 per cent in Canada is what we are looking for. My colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, is vitally concerned about this as well. We want industrial benefits which will have ongoing results. These may not necessarily be strictly military benefits but industrial benefits in the broader sense of bringing permanent jobs, permanent facilities, new technology, research and development into Canada.

TORNADO

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FROM MANITOBA TO HAVE AFFECTED AREA DECLARED DISASTER AREA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. On Tuesday of this week as recorded at page 7783 of Hansard I asked a question regarding the tornado which devastated parts of southeastern Manitoba. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the premier of Manitoba or the minister of finance of Manitoba have contacted either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance asking the federal government to declare the area a disaster area and thus to make relief moneys available. This would be very welcome, in view of the fact that some of us will be in the devastated area, and these people have been waiting now for a week.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not as yet heard from the premier. The Minister of State (Multiculturalism) has already brought this to my attention. I remind the House that we have a procedure whereby we respond to a provincial request. If the province needs assistance and meets the requirements, I would then be prepared to have the matter considered further within my department. As I indicated to the Minister of State (Multiculturalism), we are looking for further information in this regard, and he has undertaken to keep me advised.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL DELIVERY PERMITS FOR PRODUCERS IN AREA AFFECTED BY TORNADO

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): First of all, I want to thank the Minister of Finance for that answer. Obviously I am disappointed that there has been no representation from the government of Manitoba, but I would like to ask a supplementary question of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I asked him on Tuesday whether he would urge the Canadian Wheat Board to give special consideration to granting special permits to persons who require them in order that grain, which is now exposed to the elements because of loss of buildings may be delivered. Can the minister give me an up to date report on whether this has been done and those special permits will be forthcoming?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): As I indicated yesterday to the hon. member, I have not had word on that as yet, but I do expect an answer very shortly.

AGRICULTURE

OTTAWA-QUEBEC AGREEMENT ON FEED GRAIN ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Last week I put a question to his parliamentary secretary about the signing of an agreement between the federal government and that of the province of Quebec concerning a subsidy of some $35 million for the transport of feed grains. Can the minister tell the House today whether that agreement has been signed between Ottawa and Quebec and, if so, when it will become effective?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): It has not been signed as of this day, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

In a reply to the National Assembly, the Quebec minister of agriculture stated that he was ready to sign but that he was waiting for the signature of his federal counterpart. This is what he said: I don't understand why there should be so much dilly-dallying.

I know the expression is not very parliamentary but I am merely repeating what he said. Can the minister tell us whether there is some valid reason, or some difficulty or other to justify the fact that he has not yet signed that agreement?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the proposal is similar to one made to the province of Ontario where feed grain assistance was also discontinued in a big part of the province. That agreement was signed with the province of Ontario some time ago. I only use this as an example of how expeditiously we acted. When the province is willing to sign, we sign the agreement. Discussions took place between Quebec and myself, but the Quebec minister and the Quebec government were reluctant to sign the same kind of agreement as we made with the province of Ontario.

POST OFFICE

MEASURES TO IMPROVE DELIVERY—ALLEGATION MAIL ARRIVES IN DAMAGED CONDITION IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. It concerns allegations that were made by an angry northerner, Andy Peiffer of Nanisivik, Northwest Territories in a letter to the Postmaster General to the effect that mail takes three weeks to a month to arrive from southern Canada, and much of it arrives in a damaged condition. Arising from these complaints, what is the minister doing to improve the quality of northern mail service, and specifically in light of the humiliating defeat of the regular postal service by both bicycles and pony express in the great contest held in Manitoba this week, is the minister considering reintroducing mail delivery by dog sled into the north?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Not in the summer time, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: With your record, we are surprised.

Mr. Blais: First of all, I am not accepting defeat at all. The cyclists who went from Melita in the hon. gentleman's riding to Morris were bonded contractors of the Post Office who carried the mail in accordance with the rules of the game as they were set down for the pony express. The hon. gentleman knows fully well the system that is in place in his particular area. He has indicated to me that he is satisfied with the postal service in the Dauphin area, indeed in the Winnipeg area, and I have no reason to doubt his word in that regard. I am very proud and pleased with the service that the greater Winnipeg area is receiving.

I might indicate to him that I wish he could have been there in order to join in the fun, but unfortunately he could not be there. However, I can assure him that good fun was had by all. It was the proper way of showing the excellence of the postal service and, in effect, the ingenuity of postal officials and employees of that department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: I think I have already made the point that the regular mail service was defeated by bicycles.

An hon. Member: And horses.

Mr. Dinsdale: But with reference to a very serious problem in the north, the allegation that mail bags have been tampered with, is the minister prepared to investigate this charge?

Mr. Blais: Of course, it has been drawn to my attention and I will be investigating it and reporting to the hon. member.

STRIKE AT OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EFFORTS TO SETTLE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question on an even more serious matter, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the wildcat strike in the Ottawa area. What action is the Postmaster General taking to resolve this difficulty?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to receive representations from the hon. member for Ottawa West, who also intends to ask me a question with reference to this matter. I would like to indicate to the hon. gentleman that at one o'clock this afternoon a meeting will be held with regional representatives of the union as well as local representatives of the Post Office, and I hope that in view of the nature or the motivations behind this particular walkout, service will be resumed immediately.

STRIKE AT OTTAWA—POSSIBILITY OF DISCIPLINARY ACTION AGAINST EMPLOYEES

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, is the Postmaster General in a position to tell the House whether or not disciplinary action is being taken in the case of this serious illegal work stoppage?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): I recognize, as does the hon. gentleman, that this is indeed an illegal work stoppage, a wildcat strike. However, I do not want to indicate what further action needs to be taken until such time as reasonably cool heads have met and have sought a solution to this particular impasse.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

NAMES OF PERSONS ATTENDING WORLD ENERGY CONFERENCE IN ISTANBUL—CAPACITY IN WHICH DR. FOSTER WILL ATTEND

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can he say what persons from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited will be attending the World Energy Conference in Istanbul in September?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to make the inquiry and give the information to the hon. lady.

Miss MacDonald: I would like to ask the minister if he is aware of the fact that Dr. John Foster will be attending that conference as one of the representatives of AECL, and will he say, or will he find out, in what capacity Dr. Foster will be attending the conference? Will he also tell us whether or not he will be going there as a salaried employee of AECL and, if so, at what rate?

Mr. Gillespie: Earlier I described in the House the arrangements that I hope to be able to make with Dr. Foster, that is to say to enter into a contract with him or arrangement which would cover consultant services to the corporation. I indicated to the House that that conversation would take place towards the end of August or early September.

POSSIBILITY SALES OF CANDU REACTORS DISCUSSED AT WORLD ENERGY CONFERENCE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): The minister cannot have it both ways, one week dismissing Dr. Foster for incompetence in his position and the next appointing him as a representative from AECL to the World Conference on Energy. I should like to ask the minister, in view of this flip-flop, whether he would also determine whether or not the question of further sales of CANDU reactors will be discussed at that conference in September.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would draw to the attention of the hon. lady the statement I made on motions. If she were to re-read it, she would find out that at that time I made it very clear that I hoped the corporation would be able to retain the services of Dr. Foster and that he had contributed uniquely to the development of the CANDU system. I very much hope that it will be possible to work out an arrangement with him.

As to the question of whether CANDU sales, or possible sales of CANDU reactors, will be discussed at the conference, my information is that the World Energy Conference is not a marketing conference but a conference of experts in the field from all over the world who are looking at many aspects of energy. Undoubtedly, there will be people there who will be interested in talking to Canadians about the CANDU system. If Dr. Foster is there and receives inquiries, I am sure he will relay them back to Canada. I think there will be an opportunity to tell the world about some of the successes of the CANDU system. I hope the hon. lady and her party will support the CANDU system, because some of the remarks she and her associates have made do not help the corporation to sell the CANDU reactor.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES FOR AGREEMENT ON USE OF STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA BY OIL TANKERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Some weeks ago the minister indicated that Canada was close to agreement with the United States on the question of tankers which will ply the Strait of Juan de Fuca, a question of great interest to British Columbia since, at present, more than 550 oil tankers ply these straits. When the Alyeska line is completed and oil reaches Valdez, more tankers will bring oil down to Cherry Point. Has the agreement been completed? If so, what is the nature of the agreement, and what are its terms, particularly with reference to controls and to compensation for those who may have to bear the cost of oil spills?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, negotiations with the United States have moved along quite well and a vast number of issues leading to agreement have been settled. There are still six or seven outstanding issues, I think, being discussed by the two sets of negotiators. As of yesterday, when I discussed the point with the Canadian negotiating team, we determined the posture we will take with regard to those remaining items and I will communicate with the Secretary of State in the United States to indicate our proposals on those outstanding matters. We shall do this in an effort to have these matters cleaned up more quickly than might be the case if the conventional negotiating process were adopted. As to the actual date, I cannot inform the hon. member of that, although I can tell him this: Even after the agreement is completed it will take some time to ratify it before the American Congress. I am told that their procedure requires that. I am also told that the system can be used on a voluntary basis, as, indeed, much of it is being used at present.

As to specific matters, I am sure the hon. member will understand I would as soon not talk about certain elements to do with compensation and the like which are being discussed in the package until agreement, hopefully, is reached; but I can assure the hon. member that these matters, which I agree are of great importance, are being discussed and in some instances have been resolved.

REGULATION OF TANKERS FLYING FLAGS OF CONVENIENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer but am sure he appreciates, as other members do, that oil will shortly begin to move from Valdez, Alaska, and those likely to be affected are extremely anxious to know what compensation provisions are being made to deal with the situation.

May I also ask the minister this question. Since there has been talk of oil being brought from Indonesia to Cherry Point, which would mean another 80 tankers bringing oil from various areas in addition to tankers now plying the Strait of Juan de Fuca, I ask, what provision is being made within the 200-mile limit to deal with ships flying flags of convenience, ships which will very likely transport oil from Indonesia or the far east? At present such ships have been the least subject to controls, the least subject to adequate precautions for dealing with oil spills, the least subject to regulations covering the pumping out of oil tanks in Canadian waters. Is the department taking steps, under some agreement, to protect as much as possible the people on the west coast of Canada and to make sure that the west coast will not be the dumping ground for oil pumped out or from vessels not adequately equipped to ply those dangerous waters?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of non-United States or non-Canadian vessels which are not, as the House will understand, part of the bilateral arrangement with the United States is one of considerable difficulty, since there is difficulty in getting an international understanding. The Law of the Sea Conference which just concluded its most recent session in New York saw Canada assert a very strong position with regard to coastal state or port state control over the 200-mile zone. There is strong opposition to this by some countries. Therefore, no international agreement was possible at this current negotiating round. I do know that my colleagues in the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment have in mind certain plans and activities relating to the zone, but I would emphasize that there is no international agreement and there may be some questions about enforcement beyond the so-called territorial sea out to the 200-mile limit.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask one short supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's exchanges have already taken up some ten minutes, which I think is generous enough.

Oral Questions

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—DATE OF CONCILIATION REPORT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Labour. I do not mind which minister answers. Since the air traffic controllers today sought a mandate to authorize a strike, if necessary, to back their current wage demands, may I ask, since I understand the conciliation report is to be handed down by Tuesday, next week, when exactly that report is to come down. Since the controllers will be in a legal position to strike in seven days, what contingency plans has the government made to offset the serious hardships which could be worked on some summer travellers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to comment on possible consequences of strike action, serious consequences with which we are familiar from our experience one year ago. While conciliation and discussion procedures are continuing, I do not want to intervene. The hon. member assumed correctly that the conciliation report is expected soon.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that the minister expects to see the conciliation report by Tuesday, next week?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, although I cannot say the exact date, the latest word I have is that it is expected towards the latter part of the month.

BILINGUALISM

RECIPROCAL ARRANGEMENTS BETWEEN PROVINCES FOR EDUCATION IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—POSSIBLE DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER LÉVESQUE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I ask whether he has had correspondence or discussions with Premier Lévesque of Quebec in connection with a matter the Prime Minister dealt with the other day, reciprocal arrangements for education in French and English in the various provinces. Has there been any discussion between him and the premier?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): None whatsoever, Mr. Speaker. But the right hon. gentleman will remember the answer I gave the other day to the kite or balloon being floated in that direction by Minister Laurin.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there was a degree of uncertainty about the Prime Minister's statement, which is why I asked my question. Was he consulted by Premier Lévesque in the last few days in connection with representations to be made, or being made, to the various provinces in connection with the point raised? I ask him this because I know the close relationship—they are like two peas in a pod—he enjoys with Lévesque. I wonder if that same spirit of co-operation still continues? Is he aware that the Premier of Quebec is going to communicate with the provinces and advance a proposition similar to that referred to by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I think my answer was quite clear and still is quite clear. There has been no communication between Premier Levesque and myself or any of his ministers and myself on any subject remotely linked to the subject raised by the right hon. member. I made it clear when Mr. Laurin alluded to this possibility a few weeks ago. I stated unequivocally the government's position, as I would have if indeed this other pea in the pod had deigned to consult me on it. This is precisely what we proposed to the provinces at Victoria in 1971, that the rights of the linguistic minorities be recognized as a matter of right in the constitution of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I went on to say that it was not a bargaining point from our point of view, that two provinces could negotiate; if you do this, we will do that. We consider it as a right for minorities. Not only was this said and done at Victoria, but it was put to the provinces in a succession of meetings and letters with the premiers which culminated in my letter to all the premiers last January, including Premier Levesque, telling them if they were interested in the fate of the French speaking minorities of the other provinces as other provinces would be concerned with the fate of the English speaking minority in Quebec, we had an answer to that. It was to recognize these rights and entrench them in the constitution. It was not to bargain over the heads of the kids in the schools.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF LETTERS FROM PREMIER LÉVESQUE TO PROVINCES CONCERNING RECIPROCAL ARRANGEMENTS ON EDUCATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Has the Prime Minister received a copy of the letters written by the Premier of Quebec to the various provinces in this connection? I ask him that because he goes back to the Victoria charter. An end was put to that charter because Premier Bourassa, a fellow Liberal in the province of Quebec, did not accept it. Has the Prime Minister been aware of any correspondence between the province of Quebec and the other provinces? If so, does he not think that Levesque has actually pulled the rug from under him?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I learned of the existence of such letters a couple of hours ago. I have not seen these letters. I probably learned in the same way as the right hon. gentleman. It is known that some of the premiers have received some of these letters by now or at least that Premier Levesque has tabled them in Quebec City. I have not seen the letters. I know about as much of the content as I think the right hon. gentleman does. I hope that the other provinces will not fall for it in the sense that they feel this is a bargaining point to the effect, we will be just providing you are just. Justice is something which stands by itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: When the right hon. gentleman says that Premier Lévesque has pulled the rug from under our feet, I am very sad to hear that. It obviously shows that the right hon. gentleman thinks that this is a proper course. It is one we disagree with. Therefore, it is not our rug that is being pulled. It is perhaps the right hon. gentleman's.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PROPOSED PROVISION FOR EDUCATION IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): The other day I listened to the Prime Minister describe the kind of legislation he is going to bring before parliament unless this is achieved. I wondered whether he had secured the opinion of the law officer of the Crown that the stand he was taking was unconstitutional and apparently this is just window dressing in order to build up the myth that he who did so much to destroy the unity of this country is to become the saviour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am puzzled by the statement of the right hon. gentleman about the opinion of the law officer of the Crown. The right hon. gentleman should know we were proposing a constitutional amendment. It was not a matter of acting within the constitution. It was a matter of going to Victoria and hopefully getting the provinces to agree to a constitutional amendment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Liberals didn't agree.

Mr. Trudeau: This has nothing to do with the law officer of the Crown. I wish the right hon. gentleman would clarify his thoughts a little bit.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF SUBSIDIES TO PRIVATE SHIPPING COMPANIES IN VIEW OF EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT AT NORTH SYDNEY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is in reference to the motion I raised under Standing Order 43 at the commencement of today's proceedings. I realize the minister has a tremendously large department and naturally would not have the facts before him today. Can he assure the House, the stevedores of North Sydney and the crews of CN marine ships that he will thoroughly investigate the question of subsidies to private shipping corporations that are going to compete with Crown corporations and discriminate against the stevedores of North Sydney and the crews of CN marine ships, thereby causing more unemployment. Will he let us know as soon as possible?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been giving attention to the question of the commercial viability of various services supplying Newfoundland. Obviously, as the hon. member will appreciate, this is a question of a subsidized service competing with another subsidized service. Therefore, the questions can be put in a very regional way by any member of parliament coming from one of the regions involved. Our task in trying to provide proper solutions from the point of view of the people in Canada in total is to attempt to achieve some balance. That is what we will do as we attempt to find a solution to this problem.

Mr. Muir: Will the minister agree that before taxpayers' moneys are used to subsidize private corporations which know before they start that their operation is not going to be profitable, that the option should be given to the Crown corporation in order to assist them to maintain a proper balance and be as economic as possible?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the exact point I was trying to make to the hon. member is that in this somewhat peculiar case the use of taxpayers' dollars is justified only when it comes to saving far more taxpayers' dollars because the alternative service is subsidized very heavily indeed. If the hon. member is relying on saving taxpayers' dollars as the justification of his proposal, I am afraid he is working against his exact proposal.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

YORK PLACE, HAMILTON—USE OF FUNDS ADVANCED FOR PROJECT

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I will direct my question to the acting minister. My question relates to the York Place affair. On Wednesday, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs indicated that he had followed up the inquiry begun by his predecessor into irregularities or ministerial involvement in the $5.9 million loan from CMHC to York Place. I am glad to hear that there was no improper action in the granting of these funds. My question is simply this. Will the acting minister tell us more about those funds advanced by the CMHC to York Place but which, according to the minister, were not in fact used to build that project specifically. Where, by whom, and for what purpose were they actually used?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think most of these questions have been answered. I repeat that, subject to clearance by our legal agent, these funds are given to the entrepreneur. He then disperses them in accordance with work inspected by CMHC and other inspectors and approved by his lawyer. Subsequent to that, CMHC has no way of ensuring that the moneys expended by the contractor are going to that particular project. It would be impossible to have an auditor general for every contract in every place where CMHC operates. We have to rely on the reports from our lawyer and our inspectors that the physical plant exists. We do that. We do a lot of this work across Canada. We are satisfied in this case. We cannot make a firm statement that all the funds were expended on that particular project. However, we are satisfied that funds were advanced in accordance with our system of inspections, follow-ups and checking our accounts. I do not see anything that needs to be added to that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There have been allegations that a part of the $5.9 million allocated by CMHC to York Place was actually used to finance another Hamilton project known as Main Place. In view of the fact that CMHC rejected the Main Place application for a mortgage, would the acting minister or whoever is answering assure the House that these allegations are completely without foundation and that no CMHC funds whatsoever were used in the construction of Main Place?

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I would like to take notice of that aspect, Mr. Speaker. My information is that the name of Main Place was changed to York Place and that there was no CMHC money given to Main Place.

YORK PLACE, HAMILTON—ALLEGEDLY MISLEADING INFORMATION FROM MINISTER CONCERNING CONVICTION OF OFFICIAL

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): In relation to the minister's answer to part 16 of question 812 on the order paper asked by my hon. friend from St. John's East, I would simply ask why the minister sought to misinform the House by saying that no official of CMHC had been charged in connection with improper activities in the construction of York Place when in truth a CMHC inspector named Clifford Shaw had been convicted of corrupt practices in a trial which the judge presiding said was of national importance.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I say again, Mr. Speaker, that the charges which were laid were laid under section 110 of the Criminal Code. This had nothing to do with the York Place development project.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-24

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there is agreement among the representatives of all parties to the following motion, pursuant to Standing Order 75A, which I would move as follows:

That the time spent on government orders commencing at 12 noon on July 26, 1977, except for one hour to be designated by a minister of the Crown, be allocated as required to the report stage of Bill C-24, an act respecting immigration to Canada, and that no later than 5.45 p.m. on July 22, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House and shall put, without further debate or amendment, all questions necessary for the disposal of report stage of said bill; and that proceedings on the third reading stage of the said bill shall commence upon the completion of the report stage, and that no later than 5.45 p.m. July 27, 1977, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House and shall put, without further debate or amendment, all questions necessary for the disposal of the third reading stage of the said bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This motion, being put forward pursuant to Standing Order 75A, is to be decided forthwith, without debate or amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements. See reply to question No. 1 answered July 12, 1977.

TREES FOR INTERIOR LANDSCAPING

Question No. 2,417—Mr. Howie:

Is the Department of Public Works buying trees for interior landscaping at the new Bank of Canada Building in Ottawa and Place du Portage in Hull valued at approximately $50,000 and $80,000 respectively and, if so, are the trees to be imported from Florida?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): The budget for interior landscaping on Phase III of Place du Portage is $80,000.000. To date a contract has been awarded in the amount of $69,500.00 to Fines Flowers Limited, Ottawa. The contract provides for miscellaneous plants, shrubbery and palm trees. Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements. See reply to question No. 1 answered July 12, 1977.

QUESTION NO. 1

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions. It is not appropriate therefore to provide information about internal administrative arrangements. See reply to question No. 1 answered July 12, 1977.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): (a) Parkin Architects and Planners, Toronto, Ontario. (b) See following list. EXPENDITURES—SAULT STE. MARIE

Question No. 2,801—Mr. Symes:

What was the total amount spent in Sault Ste. Marie from October 1972 to date by the Ministry of State (Small Business)?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Small Business)): In so far as the Minister of State (Small Business) is concerned: neither he nor the Small Business Secretariat has spent any money in Sault Ste. Marie. The position of Minister of State (Small Business) was created in September, 1976.

Subsequently, the Small Business Secretary was established within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to work with the Minister of State. The role of the Minister of State and the Small Business Secretariat has been policy development rather than program administration. Therefore, neither the Minister of State nor the Small Business Secretariat has authorized or made any program expenditures, anywhere.

MILK—ANNUAL PRODUCTION

Question No. 2,761—Mr. Laprise:

Since 1962, by province, what was the annual production of (a) natural (b) industrial milk?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, for some time now a number of questions have been standing on the order paper in my name, and I believe I am entitled to expect answers to them prior to the close of the session. I would draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to the fact that I have had ten questions standing on the order paper since October 19, 1976. One was placed there on December 19, 1976, and nine others on January 27, 1977. Two have been there since April 5, 1977. This seems to me to be an absolutely inexcusable period in which to have to wait for answers to questions. While some of these questions are complicated, it should not have been necessary to have delayed answering them for so long. I specifically refer the parliamentary secretary to two questions which have remained unanswered since April 5 with respect to Air Canada agreements with the government of Cuba, because they relate directly to the movement of troops from Cuba to Angola and the use of Canadian air space.

I believe the Canadian people are entitled to have some knowledge of these circumstances in order to determine whether or not Canada was involved in any direct way in the movement of Cuban troops to Angola, a country engaged in a civil war. I ask the parliamentary secretary to do his very best to obtain answers to these questions before we recess, hopefully on July 27.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I certainly give the hon. member my assurance that I will do my very best to see that the questions he has referred to and, indeed, all questions on the order paper at this moment, are answered before the end of the session.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to remind the parliamentary secretary again about the questions I have on the order paper, some of which have been there for over a year and have not been answered despite my bringing them to his attention before. I specifically wish to bring to his attention question 1,246 which I placed on the order paper on December 3, 1976. It is the first time I have raised this matter because I recognize that the question is lengthy and requires some time to answer. However, I feel that since December 3 the government has had ample opportunity to get the answer. The question asks about the patronage machinery set up by the government. While I do not expect to get a perfectly straightforward answer, I hope to see the parliamentary secretary light a fire under the Prime Minister's office to get them moving on some sort of answer.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

The House resumed, from Thursday, July 21, consideration of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

● (1210)

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, in the notes that you tabled in the House yesterday concerning the regrouping of motions, you mentioned that a vote on motion No. 29 could also dispose of motions Nos. 31 and 32.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that these three motions deal with different aspects of the bill. Indeed, motion No. 29 concerns the procedure in case of deportation of a non-permanent resident, while motion No. 31 deals on the contrary with the procedure in the case of a permanent resident. All members agree that these procedures must be different.

Since both motions aim at amending the bill, the first for non-permanent residents and the other for permanent residents, I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that it would be appropriate to take the votes separately on motion No. 29 and on motions Nos. 31 and 32, so as to recognize that these provisions provide for different judicial systems for applicants.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As always, the Chair has only suggested that the motions be grouped for the purpose of debate or voting. In this respect, motions are always better understood, I am sure, by the members who move or support them.

If the members prefer to group this motion with others for the purpose of discussion and to vote on each motion separately, I would find this acceptable. We should therefore change the arrangements so that we may debate together motions Nos. 29, 30, 31 and 32, but vote on each one separately. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the parliamentary secretary rising on the point of order?

Mr. Goodale: No, Mr. Speaker, on a separate point of order having to do with the business of the House later today, particularly during the hour which would have been set aside for private members' business. There have been the usual discussions among representatives of the parties this morning and I think there is a disposition in the House to use the hour between four and five o'clock this afternoon for continuing the discussion of Bill C-24, rather than devoting it to an item of private members' business.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Paproski: That is so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed, and so ordered.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Before the House proceeded to vote last night, I was making a few comments on the motion put forward by the committee as well as the amendment of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) concerning the medical reports required from potential immigrants to Canada. Before concluding these comments, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to some corrections that were made to the speech I delivered yesterday, as reported on page 7899 and 7900 of Hansard.

[English]

In the answer last night, I am reported as having said:

> However, I believe there are serious grounds for concluding that the new wording proposed by the hon. member is incapable of achieving the control which was intended, and, further, that it will not be virtually impossible for my department to continue to operate an immigration health service in support of Canada's immigration program.

Obviously, that should read "that it will be virtually impossible"; the "not" should not be there. Secondly, at page 7900 there is a statement which reads as follows:

> It is estimated that for approximately every 2,000 immigrants there might be as many as 50,000 cases where it would be appropriate to have a consultation with a medical specialist.

The figure is not "2,000", but "200,000". That makes the statement clear.

[Translation]

As fas as motion No. 13 is concerned, I indicated last night that the proposal made in committee would not achieve the purposes suggested by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). It would result in considerable administrative problems. In addition, it would be extremely difficult and even impossible in some countries to follow the procedures suggested by the hon. member for Provencher; second, it would involve considerable additional costs for those who wish to come to Canada; and, third, it would also entail considerable costs for the federal program administration, as a result of possible litigation and disputes of all kinds brought before the courts.

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration has therefore moved an amendment recognizing the concern expressed by the committee members over the fact that one medical officer could for all practical purposes decide upon the eligibility of an applicant. To meet this concern of the committee, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has moved an amendment, motion No. 13, which would ensure that the decision concerning the medical condition of a potential immigrant could always be confirmed or challenged by another medical officer. This solution would assure the applicant that his case would be reviewed by someone with the authority and ability required at no cost to him. Therefore, no additional burden would be borne by the Canadian taxpayer in terms of considerable legal costs.

I commend strongly to the House the proposal put forward by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration which, in my view, meets the concerns expressed by the committee and which will still ensure adequate services to those who wish to come to Canada, without saddling them with useless costs which might amount each year to several million dollars, as I said last night.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make about Motion No. 13. I would not want to take unduly the time of the House in that respect but I would like to raise another point made yesterday in the debate by the hon. member for Provencher. He said that the Department of National Health and Welfare was creating unnecessary difficulties in cases of children up for adoption by Canadian citizens. I want to give the lie direct to the assertion by the hon. member for Provencher. Every year we admit a very large number of children for adoption. My department has no objection about that procedure—on the contrary. In practice, if there were some administrative difficulties in those adoption cases they are perhaps more related to provincial governments which have the administrative responsibility for adoption programs in Canada.

However, I should say that in the past year we received outstanding cooperation from the provinces in the area of international adoption. That matter was debated on two occasions during federal-provincial conferences of welfare ministers and it was following those discussions that we set up in my department a special office in charge of international adoption matters whose role is to ensure better coordination and control of administrative procedures followed in Canada and abroad in the area of adoption.

So, Mr. Speaker, I recommend very strongly that the House support the proposal of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen). I think it is an eminently reasonable proposal which meets the concerns of the committee. Moreover, it will make for an effective and least expensive possible administration of immigration services, particularly as regards the health aspect of immigration services.

[English]

Mr. Robert Young (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in the debate at this time with particular reference to motions Nos. 14 and 15. In view of the time element last evening, I deferred from raising a question of privilege which I wished to clear up. Some aspersions were cast on my service in the committee when studying this bill. If the House would indulge me for a few moments, I should like to comment on some of these aspersions. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) pointed out that I attended only two committee hearings. In fact, I attended many more than that. I should like to indicate that he did not attend any.

Mr. Orlikow: I was not a member of the committee.

Mr. Young: You do not have to be a member in order to attend committee hearings.

Mr. Orlikow: But I read the evidence.

Mr. Young: The hon. member has the happy faculty of squeezing the largest number of words into some of the smallest ideas possible. Most of what he said last night did not pertain to the remarks I made, nor the comments I made to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). Most of what he said referred to the draft bill, not to the amended bill which is now before this House for debate. To do what he did takes things greatly out of context.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am sure he will apologize.

Mr. Young: The hon. member for Greenwood accused me of coming into committee with a platoon. He indicated that I walked in and steamrollered him. I appreciate his commenting on some of my efforts during the afternoon and evening sittings of the committee hearings. Although he was a member of the committee, he was not present when we amended the particular clause he referred to last night. I am referring to clause 19(1)(d). The hon. member was not in his place at committee, but I was and the record will show that. The understanding that the hon. member for Greenwood was presenting regarding the particular clause of the bill that he takes issue with was untrue and incomplete. I maintain that because the hon. member said last night that clause 19(1)(d) at present contains no right to trial and that it denied the right to be tried before punishment. He indicated that a person will be barred from entering or visiting Canada merely on a suspicion.

I should like to indicate that that is not true. If he knew as much about this new bill as he maintains, he would know there are clauses in it indicating that anyone who is turned back or detained at the border can cause a special inquiry to be held and can cause the immigration officer at the border to relate the reasonable grounds for believing he will commit an indictable offence—and not "may" or "likely to". There have to be reasonable grounds on which to base the ruling that a person will go out and commit an indictable offence.

Mr. Orlikow: What are the reasonable grounds?

Mr. Young: We are talking about a hypothetical case. Let me refer to some practical ones. If the hon. member wants to know what the reasonable grounds are, hon. members from the New Democratic Party over the last few months have champed at the bit regarding how members of the Five Dragons immigrated to this country and are now residing on our west coast. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) has asked questions on how these people came to be in our country. That is one reason the government wishes to have this type of amendment in the bill.

Therefore, if there are reasonable grounds to suspect that people will come into this country to commit an indictable offence, immigration officers can say "No". In one breath, members of the New Democratic Party are saying to the government, "Why did you let these people in?" In another breath, the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Winnipeg North are saying, "Let them all come in". In committee, the hon. member for Greenwood said, "Let everyone come in. Let them do what they please. If he is going to commit a criminal act, let him do that". He indicated also that it was up to the government to go out and catch him, convict him and then try to deport him. That is a rather asinine way of going about it; it is rather ridiculous.

The clause which is presently in the bill is a good one. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood would prevent the department from keeping out, or removing persons about whom there is credible information that they are engaged in organized criminal activities although no convictions may have been registered against them. That clause was amended in committee, after long discussions, along lines originally proposed by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). The present clause attempts to deal with the fact that those involved in organized crime all too rarely come before the courts. Without it, the government would be seriously hampered in its efforts to safeguard the Canadian public against the menace of organized crime.

The hon. member for Greenwood suggests that the border should be open and that anyone, regardless of his intentions, criminal or otherwise, should be able to come into the country. If he commits a criminal act, it is up to the government to catch him, convict him and then try to deport him. If we are going to devise an immigration act asking border officials to carry out a job on behalf of the government and the people of this country, we should give them the tools and the powers to do the job. I am not referring to a wide-ranging, discretionary clause which would give them the power to look into the eyes of someone and say, "I do not like you. I think you are going to commit an offence".

The act requires that the immigration officer must have reasonable grounds to believe that a person will commit an indictable offence—not just any offence. To do anything else would weaken the efficacy of the act and would impair situations at the border and airports. It would seriously emasculate the bill, and emasculate immigration officers in the carrying out of their duties.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has put forward an amendment which touches on an issue discussed in committee. I am sorry he is not here today. However, last night I informed him that I would speak against his amendment today and told him what I would be saying. His proposed motion refers back to subclause (c) of the draft bill. It would give power to border officers to turn back or detain someone whom he believes might commit an indictable offence, but only if that indictable offence was subject to a penalty of at least ten years imprisonment. That verges on being somewhat ridiculous, because if one peruses the Criminal Code he will find a great number of serious offences which do not have ten-year minimum penalties.

If that amendment were passed, a person could come to the border and an immigration officer could have a reasonable belief: he could even be told by the person wanting to come in that that person has the full intention of committing any one of a number of different crimes. It could be indecent and harassing telephone calls, bookmaking, corrupting justice, keeping a gaming house or cattle rustling, which I am sure interests hon. members from the west. It could be blowing up somebody's property or animals. It could be that that person might come here to print or tender a counterfeit proclamation of parliament. All of those are indictable offences, but not subject to at least ten years imprisonment. Therefore, even if the immigration officer has reasonable and probable grounds to believe the person would commit that type of offence, he could not keep that individual out if we passed the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

Perhaps I could break it down into a very easily understood example. If we were to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Greenwood, the hon. member would be quite happy to invite someone into his house even though he might have a reasonable suspicion that that person would set fire to his living room or to his house. The hon. member for Greenwood would say, "Come on over to my house; light your match; set my rug on fire". He would then go to the trouble of calling the fire department and the police department and trying to catch the fellow and have him convicted. He would go to the trouble of trying to get damages and then have the fellow deported.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal, being a little more sensible, since arson can bring more than ten years, would not invite that fellow into his house, believing on reasonable grounds that the fellow would set fire to his living room. However, if the fellow was just going to blow up the house, he would invite him in because he would not get ten years for that. That is how ridiculous some of these amendments are.

I think border officials have to have some power and discretion. They are reasonable people. If a person is denied entry, he has the right to ask the border officer to divulge reasonable grounds at a special inquiry. In any event, a report is made to a senior immigration officer. The detained person might appear, after just a few minutes, before a senior immigration officer and convince the officer that he is a totally reasonable and proper person to come into the country. I think immigration officers need the tools necessary to do the work they are called upon to do.

We need the type of legislation which is in this bill as unamended in order to take care of the public in this country, to keep us at peace and to prevent those people we reasonably suspect of having criminal intent from coming into Canada. I do not think we have to open our borders and allow criminals, those with criminal intentions and those whose design is to engage in organized crime, to come into this country.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I noticed just now, in yesterday's Hansard, a reference on page 7889, by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), to multicultural policy. The hon. member said:

On October 8, 1971, the government announced its multicultural policy, which had hitherto been under the aegis of then secretary of state, Gérard Pelletier.

To set the record straight, I simply want to state that as minister responsible for citizenship I had full responsibility for that area of government administration, for the development of the policy of multiculturalism and its articulation as national policy, and I accept responsibility for it with pride.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point raised by the hon. member is, of course, not a question of privilege. I would call it a point of clarification. That is truly welcomed by all hon. members, so I think the matter is settled in this way.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about two or three of the motions which are up for debate at the present time. Two of them stand in my name, and the other one, which was discussed both last night and today, stands in the name of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen). I am indeed sorry that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) did not stay to listen to any further responses to his comments, and in particular that he did not stay long enough to hear the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Young). Because I thought if there was any difficulty the Minister of National Health and Welfare was having in understanding the purpose of the amendment, which had been accepted by the committee, the hon. member for Niagara Falls might have helped a great deal, for in the context of his remarks—while I do not agree with the conclusions he reached in a number of instances—he kept referring to reasonable grounds, and of course that is the sum and substance of the attempt which is being made by the minister today in removing that particular section from clause 19.

I think there has been a bit of a snow job here, quite frankly, and I know that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) is well aware that it is taking place, because he referred to it last night. There is an attempt to talk about the question of possible expense. There is the so-called compromise of the minister. Instead of having a medical specialist, there will be another medical officer.

Mr. Epp: Same department.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That is right. Surely, if there is a question of expenses, the expense is going to be incurred similarly with the second medical officer as it would be with a medical specialist, unless it is found that there are two different rates of pay.

With respect to possible litigation, I regard that as a complete distraction from the essence of the argument and the essence of the attempt which is being made here by the minister in this motion. Quite frankly, I am shocked that the minister would have the effrontery, having given the committee the responsibility of reviewing the bill—which is its parliamentary obligation—to call in the expert witnesses who were made available by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. It was not as if we did not have such expert advice offered to the committee.

I well recall the evening the medical officers came and testified in our committee with respect to this specific clause in terms of their own responsibility. I think members were well aware of all the implications of what was being done in the amendments which were moved and accepted in the committee at that time. One of the things which bothered me on that occasion—and, of course, it bothers me again today—is that I think we have developed a new kind of sacred deity, a new area of unquestioned authority. It used to be that people in my profession, the clergy, could make pronouncements which would simply go unquestioned because they spoke with the kind of mantle of authenticity which no one in his right mind would ever seriously question. We are now living in a much more modern period, and that is no longer the case.

Mr. Stanbury: Especially since you have been here.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Perhaps. But whether one is inside or outside this place, having any clerical mantle does not add any sense of authority or infallibility to one's position. That is likely a pretty good thing; I have no hesitation in saying that. However, in this generation we have established a new system of infallibility. We have moved from the area of theology to medicine, so that now when somebody who comes out of medical school either as a general practitioner or, perhaps more significantly, some kind of medical specialist and makes a pronouncement as to what he can and cannot do as to the absolute accuracy and fairness of each and every pronouncement or decision he renders, no one in his right mind must question that. Quite frankly, I am not prepared to accept that. I have found that even medical specialists can make mistakes and that two highly trained medical practitioners can, on occasion, be in disagreement. I have found, also, that there is no absolute scientific conclusion in respect of each and every medical examination.

• (1240)

This is the reason that from time to time—all of us have experienced this—when we get a medical diagnosis which does not seem to explain adequately a certain condition, we look for a second and sometimes even a third opinion. Who in the chamber has not heard of cases of individuals who have gone first to one doctor, have not been satisfied with the diagnosis or recommendation of that doctor, and have moved on to a second one and then to a third one, finally, to get satisfaction? Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare has not heard of it yet. Perhaps he is so much in awe of medical practitioners and those who reside in his department who practice the medical arts, that when they make a pronouncement, ex cathedra, so to speak, he thinks it must be accepted without question. Certainly he received that message very clearly from the medical specialists who were on hand the night we discussed this whole matter.

I am sure they were not happy, not because we were adding a burden to some extent but simply because we were allowing for the kind of human fallibility that can take place even in medical circles. That is what concerns me in this instance, and that is why I wish the Minister of National Health and Welfare had remained long enough to hear some other comments, particularly from his own colleague, the hon. member for Niagara Falls.

It is not even primarily the question of medical specialists. In my opinion it is the change of wording from "in his opinion" to "on reasonable grounds", because it becomes very clear, when we think about it for a moment, that with the words "in his opinion" which the minister would like to reintroduce, no mistake is allowed, no error, no need for a further review on the part of one who can adequately judge whether or not the medical diagnosis or medical report was totally accurate and correct.

My colleague has already indicated instances where it has occurred to the detriment of the individual applicant. I am sure the hon. member for Provencher or any other members of the House were not seeking to establish a regime that would produce the kind of litigation suggested by the Minister of National Health and Welfare for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. If that is the problem, I do not think there was an attempt on the part of the minister, and I say this repectfully, to resolve that problem, then surely we could have a better amendment than the one he has currently proposed, because what he has done merely is again to allow—from my point of view and that of the committee, because of the motion that was approved there—the almost unappealable and unreviewable situation of a medical report jeopardizing or preventing a legitimate application going forward.

Therefore, I am quite dissatisfied and disappointed that the minister in this instance would act in this way, in view of the length of time the committee spent on the matter and in view of the importance of this particular section as it was amended and put in the revised bill that has come back to the House, and that he would have recommended this in view of the recommendation of the committee in its collective wisdom.

I want to say a couple of things more because, as you will note, we have ten motions that are currently before us for debate at present, two of which stand in my name, namely, motions Nos. 20 and 21. With respect to motion No. 20, I think you will realize that this motion would attempt to clarify a situation which was discussed in committee. It was discussed with respect to the kind of liability that would exist for those who would fall under the inadmissable category. It was generally agreed in the discussion that took place with the minister and his officials that it was not satisfactory that there be such a blanket inclusion that anyone who was convicted under any act of parliament would therefore be liable to exclusion or perhaps to deportation.

We discussed whether or not we could be more precise in terms of the definition of those acts under which one could not be convicted and still be accepted as a legitimate applicant. Indeed, as it is presently drafted in the bill—and, again, it shows the unwarranted powers and rather illegal approach of the minister and the department—it would mean that if an individual had been convicted of illegal parking on Parliament Hill, which I believe is a summary offence, he could be regarded as an unacceptable applicant. Or if, on the other hand, he had been caught twice fishing without a licence, again he might be convicted of a summary offence and not considered an acceptable applicant.

The same might be true if one were to give a cigarette to a person under the age of 16. These are the kind of ridiculous examples one can give which show that we have not drafted a precise bill, but have given tremendous and, I think, unwarranted powers to the minister. This will make his job not easier but more difficult. It would create, of course, a considerable amount of anxiety and suspicion on the part of those who come into contact with the immigration procedures.

Motion No. 21 is an instance where an individual who does not comply with the conditions or requirements of the Immigration Act or the regulations or any orders or directions would, in a sense, also come under the act. Here we have a situation where an individual might break a regulation or in some way inadvertently defy an order or a direction and would immediately find himself in jeopardy. When we discussed this in committee, we were quickly assured by the minister and his officials that this would not happen, that the individual in question would not be in danger of breaking a regulation or defying an order or a direction of which he did not have knowledge.

But as you well know, it is one thing to have a verbal assurance in a committee from an official, or even from the minister, and another thing to have it clearly stated in the statute. My motion would say that this would refer to an act or regulation which had been made public. This would ensure that an individual could not inadvertently, or without knowledge, break a regulation. When we come to dealing with something as increasingly complex as immigration, it would be almost impossible to think of instances where individuals would not be, perhaps even only in a marginal way, in defiance of some regulatory obligation.

Again, I think the minister has not clearly defended, explained or provided in law protection against the growing number of regulations and orders in council which can jeopardize the individual applicant. That is why I think that not to allow for direct knowledge being made available to an individual is to infringe upon that individual's human rights. There are a number of other amendments to which I would like to speak, but time does not permit. However, I hope they will be given, each in their own way, serious study by the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak a few minutes only on motion No. 18 in my name, amending clause 19(1)(g). As you know, under that clause an inadmissible class is established, that of persons that are likely, as the term occurs all through the legislation, as that are likely to or "susceptibles de" engage in acts of violence that would or might endanger the life or safety of persons in Canada or are members of an organization that is likely to engage in violence. I find that clause unacceptable because it enshrines both the principle of guilt by apprehension and that of guilt by association. In other words, the fact alone of being a member of rather than being active or being actively involved in an association that is likely to engage in violence puts a person in an inadmissible class.

My amendment proposes at least to eliminate guilt by association, a concept that is fully foreign to our law, by refusing or rather eliminating as a cause of inadmissibility the mere fact of being a member of an association that might endanger the life or safety of persons in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would stress that my amendment would still give immigration officers all the power they need to exclude persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe are likely to engage in acts of violence or that are likely to take part in illegal activities by an organization that is likely to engage in such acts of violence.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is that there exist a number of political movements, national liberation movements or other organizations of that type that often include two components, one that could be termed the politicial arm, the organization of a purely political nature very often urging changes through peaceful ways and means, and the other that is termed the fighting arm, that chooses to use violent means to attain its ends. It would therefore be possible that someone having joined in good faith a political movement, a national liberation movement, his name would appear on the membership list, and he or she would be denied entry into Canada for the sole reason that there would be a second component, the other one using violence.

Mr. Speaker, it will always be possible to refer to clause 19(1)(g) to exclude a group of really undesirable individuals who are not welcomed in Canada. I therefore hope that the amendment will be agreed to and thus the harmful principle of guilt by association will be rejected as otherwise it would be sanctioned by the legislation. Mr. Speaker, we cannot speak of equality before the law in this country if the principle of guilt by association must apply to some individuals, while the majority of Canadians would not be subject to it, since the notion of guilt by association is squarely rejected in our statutes.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN BILLS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have had consultations, and I believe there is agreement among the representatives of the parties that I put a motion at this time, under motions, to dispose of a number of items of business, not to pass them but to arrange that they be dealt with in a later session. I move, seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald):

That the Standing Orders be amended by adding, for the remainder of the present parliament, the following:

117. Notwithstanding any Standing Order, in the third session of the thirtieth parliament, the following bills of the second session of the said parliament shall on the opening day of the third session, be deemed to have been read a first time, ordered to be printed and dealt with as follows:

(i) Bill C-7, an act respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada, shall be deemed to have been read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry;

(ii) Bill C-17, an act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada shall be deemed to have been read a second time, referred to and reported from a committee and ordered for consideration at the report stage;

(iii) Bill C-40, an act to amend the Aeronautics Act shall be deemed to have been read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is correct that we have agreed to this. One point has just occurred to me. Perhaps it should be understood that in the next session these three bills will probably have different numbers.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will note that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposition of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). Is it agreed that the minister shall have leave to put the motion at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1.06 p.m. the House took recess.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order please!

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved:

Motion No. 23.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 27

(a) by striking out line 9 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"any fraudulent or improper means or intentional mis-";

(c) by striking out line 29 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"such information, but no such report shall be made pursuant to paragraph 27(1)(b), (d)(ii), (e) or (f) if that permanent resident has resided in Canada as a permanent resident for more than five years."

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 24.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 27 by striking out lines 19 to 21 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"pertaining to his admission or was granted landing by any willfully false and fraudulent misrepresentation of any material fact, wheth-"

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved:

Motion No. 26.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 27 by striking out line 14 at page 21 and substituting the following therefor:

"lent or improper means or intentional misrepresenta-".

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I should like to speak briefly to the amendments in my name to which Your Honour has referred, and deal with three aspects, especially, which I believe to be of importance but which unfortunately were not regarded favourable by the committee.

In the first place, there is an issue here which I believe to be of considerable moment concerning the acceptability of those who have been involved, or, as it says in clause 27(1)(c), are engaged in or instigated subversion by force of any government. The addition of the words "by force" has, of course, considerably improved this clause. The situation in the world community is such today that parliamentary institutions, freedom of public expression, freedom to take part in assemblies, and so on, are becoming increasingly rare. Many people must, therefore, regard the situation in this country with considerable envy. It is for this reason we must be very concerned, when passing an immigration act, to distinguish between governments which are supported by the will of the people and those which have secured power by force in order to establish some form of dictatorship. All too frequently we read in newspapers or hear on the broadcasting media of some democratic regime or institution which has fallen in the face of some totalitarian power.

In immigration law which is going to deal with hundreds of thousands of people who often come from many such countries and who, while taking up residence and perhaps even citizenship here, will feel quite strongly about the freedom or possibility of freedom of their own home country, we would not want in some way, in the context of our own Immigration Act, to defeat the purpose of our own society, which is to uphold the notion that people should be allowed to participate and act responsibly in their own country, and that they should have elemental respect for human rights and the dignity and sanctity of the individual.

When this does not occur, I am sure that for those who take an interest in seeing that their former homeland is returned to some form of democratic institution it must not be beyond their opportunity so to participate. This is why I have included in the first part of this amendment, (a), the word "democratic".

The second part of motion No. 23 refers to intentional misrepresentation as against simply misrepresentation. The minister and his officials will recall that we discussed this matter at very considerable length at committee and it forms part of both motion No. 23 and motion No. 26. Again we move into an area where we are going to be dealing substantially with people who, not familiar with the rules as they apply with respect to presentation of evidence or the validating of themselves as individuals in terms of correct immigration procedures, may innocently provide some kind of information which is not wholly or totally accurate.

I think the minister will recall a good deal of the conversation in committee which concerned the accuracy or credibility of the translation services and the translated records which are sometimes used in examining the legitimacy of an applicant. Of course, it is just not in the area of translation, which I think the minister took very seriously and promised to improve to the best of his ability; it is in the whole area of dealing with people coming from different cultures and societies, in many instances having perhaps been under the authority of administrations and bureaucracies which are not inclined to treat them with any great degree of fairness. Something which we would not accept in our own country is very often traditionally the case in the homelands of these people.

Therefore, people who are in the nature of being immigrant applicants often approach the bureaucracy with fear and anxiety, unsure both of the nature of the bureaucracy itself as well as the general cultural situation of the country to which they are coming. For us not to include this provision for the inadvertent, unintentional misrepresentation which might occur with respect to information seems to me to be overly narrow and legalistic when dealing with people whom we hope will enjoy and assume the benefits and responsibilities of Canadian society. Therefore, for that reason I have included this amendment on these two occasions in motions 23 and 26.

The final part refers to the concept of domicile, but not the language of domicile. This is to be found in (c) of motion 23, which reads as follows:

—such information, but no such report shall be made pursuant to paragraph 27(1)(b), (d)(ii); (e) or (f) if that permanent resident has resided in Canada as a permanent resident for more than five years.

I point out at the outset that while it introduces in general terms the concept of domicile, which I believe, indeed, to be an important one and worthy of retention in an immigration bill, it in no way has the scope that is presently enjoyed by those who have domicile in Canada. Indeed, I am really taking the minister at his word when he testified in committee; I believe that this will be an adequate provision to include in a responsible and reformed Immigration Act. Certainly it provides for and allows all the latitude which I believe is required for the minister to deport people of criminal intent or criminal activity with whom the minister was considerably concerned in committee. However, it seems to me that people who have resided in Canada for a period longer than five years should not be deported unless serious criminal offences are involved. This is certainly a great deal weaker than the previous domicile provision.

Under the law as it presently stands and under the bill now before the House, quite frankly we are in a situation where people, perhaps through no fault of their own but in the process of adjustment to a new country, could end up for a brief period of time on welfare or in receipt of social security assistance, whereupon they would then be liable to deportation. I do not think that the occasional dependence upon the state of an individual who comes here is reason or cause enough for the minister to want to exercise, under the bill as it presently stands, the right of deportation.

I know the minister has said that the aspect that concerned members was adequately covered under the new citizenship act, but I think there is very little difference between the provisions of the citizenship act as it presently stands and the exercise of the right of deportation. In the present situation, without the provisions I have outlined in motion No. 23, clearly an individual who came here for one day would have just the same legal rights as the individual who has resided here for ten years and who has participated as a responsible member of our society. I do not think that the minister realistically feels that that is a fair way to deal with those who will be residents in Canada for a considerable period of time, and this is why I have introduced this concept but not, of course, the designation, of domicile in this particular motion. Therefore, I ask hon. members to give these provisions very serious re-consideration.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, before I move on to deal with this particular amendment may I say something I omitted, by mistake, to say yesterday or the day before in the great heat of the moment and the asperity which characterized our debate at that time. I made some reasonably caustic remarks about some of the committee members, but I exempted from my strictures the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Cacccia) and the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos). However, I intended—I see she has just walked out—also to include the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) who was chairman of the committee, an extremely fair and patient chairman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I certainly do not want any remarks of mine to cast any reflection upon what she did in this respect.

Motion No. 24 is in my name and it is fairly simple. It is an amendment to clause 27. The clause presently provides that a person may be deported who came into Canada or remained therein with a false or improperly obtained passport, visa or other document pertaining to his admission, or by reason of any fraudulent or improper means or misrepresentation of any material fact, whether exercised or made by himself or by any other person. My amendment would have the effect of striking out lines 19 to 21 of the clause and substituting therefor the words "pertaining to his admission or was granted landing by any wilfully false and fraudulent misrepresentation of any material fact".

● (1420)

As has been interpreted by the Supreme Court of Canada in the Brooks case, if one gets into Canada by reason of a false misrepresentation, the act would apply without any proof whatsoever of intent to deceive. Those who are familiar with immigration matters realize that the situation is highly complex. People who are unfamiliar with the procedures are required to fill in forms, answer questions and are excited by the circumstances under which they find themselves. A person should not be subject to deportation, unless what he said was wilfully false or fraudulent.

The minister added the words "misrepresentation of any material fact". That reference is entirely proper and is indicated in my amendment as well. He would not accept the amendment to include the word "wilfully". I think it should be included. The United States immigration act is in exactly the form I am suggesting. It refers to "wilfully false and fraudulent misrepresentation of any material fact." The Americans have been able to make their system work. We should include that wording in the act in order to avoid striking out a person who unintentionally makes a mistake. Some members of this House do not appreciate that to be deported from Canada, after investing money to come to this country and looking forward to making one's way here, is a very traumatic and a very penal exercise. One must realize that these people told their friends they were going to Canada, and then they have had to return home. If it were wilful, I agree they should not stay. If it was an innocent misstatement of fact, they should not be deported.

I approve of motion No. 23 in the name of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). I am not entirely sure about motion No. 26. I will have to study that further. The basic ideas in motion No. 23 are excellent. They refer to democratic governments and the motion seeks the same purpose I am seeking by referring to "intentional misrepresentation." That would be a great improvement over what we have at the present time.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is incumbent upon me to make my comments at third reading stage, but I should like to join the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) in the tribute he paid to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. That committee was dealing with a very important piece of legislation with myriad amendments, and not only those proposed by the government and by parties opposite in advance. Many amendments came up during the course of the discussions. Given the varying views and attitudes of the members of the committee, that particular member of parliament performed her task in an admirable fashion. Ske kept control of the committee meetings. When the meeting seemed to be out of control, we recognized she was allowing us to splutter on until we finally reached a better bill as a result of the committee hearings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: I dissociate myself from the hon. member for Greenwood when he took the odd potshot at members who attended only a few of the meetings. In many instances I received representations from both sides of this House indicating interest in particular parts of the bill. Hon. members wanted to be present when the committee was dealing with particular areas of the bill in which they were interested. They would say, "I am busy with six or seven committees, but when these issues come up I very definitely want to be there". Thus, members only appeared for two or three meetings when we were dealing with specific sections. They had very important roles to play.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) performed his task on the unemployment insurance bill. When he could not be present for some meetings, he sent the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). The hon. member for Timiskaming was present for only two or three meetings, but he did a great job when he was there, putting forward views he was required to put forward. It was not necessary for him to be present at every committee meeting in order to put his view across. It is unfair to criticize members who were present for some of the meetings but not all of them.

I should like to comment on the motions put forward by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and the hon. member for Greenwood. The first part of motion No. 23 and all of motion No. 25 have the same effect in that they would restrict the removal of persons who, while in Canada, engage in or instigate subversion by force of democratic governments, and not just any government, as the bill now proposes. The bill does not preclude lawful and peaceful activity against any form of government. It attempts to prevent the use of force in carrying out those activities.

We have a responsibility to protect the lives and property of Canadian citizens against the violence of others, even though we may not condone the particular government against which that violence is aimed. We do not want to have in Canada a counter part of the recent bombing of the Yugoslav consulate in New York which was carried out by emigré groups.

Motions Nos. 23 and 24 would require fraud or misrepresentation relating to entry into Canada, as referred to in clause 27(1)(e), to be intentional, in the one motion, or to be done wilfully, in the second motion. This would require the department to prove that a permanent resident who gained landing by misrepresenting a material fact did so intentionally or wilfully, before his removal could be ordered. This would pose probably an impossible burden of proof upon the department. The false statements would have been made overseas, and the individual's conduct would have to be assessed as of that time in order to determine whether the fraud or misrepresentation was intentional or wilful. For that reason, I cannot support the proposals in these two motions.

Motion No. 23 in the name of the hon. member for Egmont would restore the domicile protection of the present act, which prohibits the deportation of permanent residents for the commission of certain offences if they have resided in Canada for more than five years. Although I respect and admire the integrity of the hon. member for Egmont trying to get this particular idea back into the act and passed, I basically disagree as to whether it is necessary. The paragraphs referred to in this part of the motion relate to the offences of knowingly contravening terms and conditions of landing, conviction of an offence carrying a maximum imposable penalty of more than five years, obtaining landing fraudulently, or wilfully failing to support himself or a dependent member of his family.

The first of these is totally unnecessary, since terms and conditions cannot continue in effect for more than six months and so could not be contravened by a person with more than five years' permanent residence. The others can be applicable at any time, but they are serious offences, indicating that the person is unwilling to carry out his legal and moral obligations, or is a danger to public safety or order in Canada.

Clause 27(1), dealing with removal of permanent residents, has been shorn of all the removable classes in the present act which cover matters outside the control of the individual or which are not indicative of serious character flaws or criminal behaviour. The whole clause, therefore, permits removal of permanent residents only for very serious reasons and leaves ameliorating or compassionate factors such as length of residence in Canada to the discretion of the Immigration Appeal Board to which permanent residents have a right to appeal. For the reasons I have cited I am not prepared to accept this part of motion No. 23.

Motion No. 26 is very similar to the motion put forward by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) at the committee stage. Surely, if there is a reason for the committee stage, it is to look at the various amendments which are put forward, to determine if they are acceptable to the government or if they might be acceptable to the government drawn in a different form or perhaps with certain changes made. That is what we agreed to at the committee stage, and I think that is what the hon. member for Egmont was saying when he made, I believe, his first intervention at the report stage.

Mr. Epp: "Provencher", not "Egmont".

Mr. Cullen: Surely there is a time when we use the committee stage, and it is really wrong, when motions have been discussed, when we have accepted changes and when hon. members who introduce amendments agree to withdraw them on the basis of the government's response, to bring in amendments which we have already agreed at the committee stage should be withdrawn. That seems to me to be an abuse of the process. This is not a motion which was defeated at the committee stage. It was introduced at the committee stage. There was discussion around the table by members from parties of every political persuasion, and finally the individual who moved the amendment saw fit to withdraw it because he felt the amendment which had been proposed by the government adequately covered the position he maintained. If that was not the case, the hon. member could say, "No, I do not like the compromise. We will vote on my amendment. If we cannot get my amendment, then we will look at the one introduced by the government". However, in this case agreement was reached and we came up with the wording "misrepresentation of material fact be proved to have been intentional". So I think that kind of amendment really has no place if the committee stage is to have any importance at all.

For the reasons cited, I feel we have gone a long way to meeting the concerns of hon. members opposite and, quite candidly, of hon. members from this party as well. This is the kind of bill which crosses party lines. People have very strong feelings in particular areas, and that is why there is no argument with hon. members in this party or with hon. members opposite about the interventions they have made. Those interventions have been made because of a strong feeling of conscience, and for that I frankly congratulate and commend hon. members. I do not feel angry with them or ashamed of the fact that there are some hon. members in my party who do not agree with everything that the government is trying to do. I welcome the interventions, but in this case I do not feel these amendments are acceptable, given the changes we have already made.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 28.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 37 by striking out line 35 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"time, but the minister shall not make such an order without granting a hearing at which the applicant may be heard and represented".

Mr. Epp: What about motion No. 26?

Mr. Cullen: Motion No. 26 was taken care of by the last vote.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I am a little puzzled by this. I have been furnished with a list of the motions which were to be grouped together. It includes motions Nos. 23, 24 and 26. It does not include motion No. 28, and when I was—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. For the benefit of all hon. members, motions Nos. 23, 24 and 26 were grouped for debate and a vote on motion no. 23 disposed of motions Nos. 24 and 26. We have had a vote on motion No. 23, and that disposed of motions nos. 24 and 26. We are now, therefore, considering motion No. 28.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, if we are on motion No. 28, I would like to state very briefly why it is presented. This deals with the cancellation of a permit. As the house knows well, the minister is entitled, in special cases, more particularly on compassionate grounds but not necessarily on compassionate grounds, to grant a permit even though a person would not otherwise be admissible under the ordinary rules. Then the minister is granted, under this bill, the right to cancel a permit. The purport of my amendment is that the minister should not make such an order without granting a hearing in which the applicant may be heard and represented.

If a person has been allowed into Canada—the right to stay here is a very important right to certain individuals—I think it is wrong that a minister, without being accountable to anybody, should be able to cancel the permit. He should be willing to grant to a person whose permit he is permanently cancelling, the right to make his side of the case known before he acts. I am sure the minister in practice frequently does exactly that, and so he should, but I think it should be in the act. Some people argue about whether immigrants have rights. They certainly have privileges conferred upon them by this parliament, and they have the right to have a permit if the minister sees fit and confers a status. If it is to be taken away, it should be taken away after a hearing, and not before.

It may be very convenient for the minister to cancel permits if he feels like it, but the fact that it is convenient is not a good reason. The right to a hearing is part of our basic judicial system and part of our whole system of dealing with people. Therefore, I am glad to recommend that this amendment be accepted. I do not suppose the minister would have to conduct the hearings himself. I am sure he can, under other sections of the act, delegate many of these powers. I am not trying to overburden him with work, but whoever actually makes the decision should grant a hearing to the person concerned.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the proposed amendment which the hon. member moved at the committee stage. Quite candidly, I looked at it very carefully because I know that motions put by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) are not put lightly but come from a strong sense of what is appropriate. He feels that the issuance of a ministerial permit confers a particular status on an individual once he comes to Canada. This motion would require the minister or the department to grant a hearing to a person whose permit has been cancelled or who has been required to leave Canada.

I disagree in principle with the intent of the amendment. A person who received a permit and entered Canada as an exercise of executive clemency and discretion has no right to come into or remain in Canada; indeed, he is by definition an inadmissible or removable person, and he has no right to the issuance of a permit. That he should suddenly acquire rights after he has benefited from the clemency, and the period has expired, would be totally incongruous.

The effect of the passage of this amendment would mean a drastic decline in any minister's willingness to issue permits in the first place. Apart from these considerations, the proposed amendment is no indication of the nature of the proposed hearing, its subject matter or its possible results. I am not too concerned, because I know how I, in this particular portfolio, would respond to a request for a ministerial permit and the effect of an appeal would not influence me personally, I think. But I have to think of incumbents who may subsequently come and fill this role who would say, "I don't need that kind of harassment. I am not going to issue a ministerial permit and be put in that invidious position". So I think it would defeat the purpose that the hon. member has in mind. It is for that reason that I am opposed to this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 40 by striking out lines 19 to 26 at page 30 and substituting the following therefor:

"section (8) and where the report made pursuant to subsection (9) has determined that the person concerned is a person described in subparagraph 19(1)(d)(ii) or paragraph 19(1)(e) or (g) or 27(1)(c), the Governor in Council, after having considered the reports referred to in subsections (1) and (9), may make a deportation order against that person."

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont) (for Mr. De Bané) moved:

Motion No. 32.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 41 by striking out lines 31 and 32 at page 30 and substituting the following therefor:

"Council, which Members shall be retired judges of a superior court."

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to speak on the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos), to expand the concept of "political refugees". I pointed out that some particularly important provisions in Bill C-24 should be made crystal clear in the minds of all members, essentially because they put into question basic concepts in our society and the type of Canada we want for the future.

I will not come back to the meaning of the amendment proposed by my colleague from Montmorency, since hon. members already had the opportunity to vote at this stage. However, I would like to deal in more detail with sections 39, 40, 41 and 42 as these sections question assumptions by the government, Parliament and the public on matters of national security and appropriate legislation to be passed by the House to ensure its preservation. Sections 39, 40, 41 and 42 of the bill apply to two particular groups of immigrant non-permanent residents, i.e. visitors, tourists, students, occasional workers and refugees who are not yet permanent residents, and holders of a permit issued by a minister. That is a first category of non-permanent residents, and sections 40 and 41 deal mostly with national security as far as permanent residents are concerned, which means persons we all feel should enjoy more extensive rights and wider protection than are available to non-permanent residents.

However, sections 39, 40 and 83 are related to section 119 of the bill which provides that secret reports which would be used by the ministers will not be made available to any court of the country and consequently in no judicial procedure. So, section 119 is a provision which deprives our civil courts of their jurisdiction, and challenges our ideas of reliance on the courts to enforce the law, and above all ensure security in Canada. I would like to mention that this problem of relationship between the courts and national security is rather new in parliamentary democracy, and especially in North America, and I would like to draw a comparison with the situation prevailing in the United States.

Last year, in April 1976, the American Senate tabled a report which dealt precisely with the relationship between security operations, i.e. aiming at the protection of territorial integrity, and the survival of democratic institutions, such as the Constitution, and civil rights and their relationship with the courts, that is the judicial power to ensure that the role or the rights recognized by the constitution of the country can be reconciled with the more general powers of the courts in matters of national security.

Obviously, there is always the same element involved in matters of national security, that is the need for confidentiality and in camera proceedings. Of course, if the security system operated in the open in the market place, it would lose any real measure of efficiency. It is therefore accepted practice that security matters are dealt with in a confidential environment for efficiency reasons. This does not mean however that the judiciary should lose all control over security activities.

I am referring to the American situation. Hon. members are fully aware that scarcely 15 days ago, the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Fox) announced here in this House a royal commission to define control procedures available to the Canadian government in the special area of freedom that must apply to our security institutions.

Clauses 39, 40 and 41 were discussed at length at the committee stage. I was not present at that time, being involved in legal proceedings against a Crown corporation. I am aware of the amendments put forward by some official opposition members, which were discussed at length by New Democrat members, and also of certain arrangements that may have been reached by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) and the movers of various amendments.

I suggest, however, that it might be useful at the report stage to bring back some amendments that are aimed in my mind not at reducing the degree of security, but neither at ensuring that it will be maintained within the framework of judicial control. The first amendment in particular involves clause 39, this is amendment No. 29 tending to obtain that a judge of the Federal Court of Canada issue the security certificate that the minister and the Solicitor General can sign themselves. Various objections were raised against that amendment, namely that a judge would not always be available, that this would over burden federal courts and that in the final analysis confidential matters would be debated in public. Upon analysis, I do not think either of these arguments would stand up. On the one hand, we have often seen judges of the Federal Court issue orders in the evening or during the night. Similarly, judges of the Federal Court have made themselves available to the government, for instance during the strike of air traffic controllers, last summer.

We have also seen some judges direct that hearings be held in camera in special cases where public interest and security were at stake. Therefore, the arguments that were made against this amendment No. 29 do not seem to take into account the availability of the Federal Court judges, nor the confidentiality which can be assured by the courts; finally, the usefulness and the essential part that the courts play in the matter of people's basic rights have not been recognized either. This first amendment, Mr. Speaker, is to me but another trade-off which seems to be the minimum that can be granted if we want to provide to non-permanent applicants a basic right that we would recognize as citizens of a free and democratic country, which gives a high priority to the rule of law and the involvement of courts in the supervision and control of the power of discretion, with the essential significance that they must retain throughout these security activities.

I do not want to prejudge the recommendations of the Royal Commission set up by the hon. Solicitor General, which we will discuss. I simply want to emphasize that the recommendations of the U.S. Senate report are very conclusive. They recommend that security activities be subject to the supervision and control of American courts, and that the spending power of security agencies be subject to the control of the Auditor General. Again, I do not want to go beyond the recommendations of the Canadian Royal Commission but members of parliament may have eventually to amend the law of the land if they want to give effect to those recommendations which will enable the courts to exercise a tighter control over the security activities performed by the RCMP.

Clause 40 includes certain provisions which, as I pointed out at the outset, refer to applicants who are permanent applicants, who have the status of permanent applicants. The amendment to that clause is an amendment which I think gives the advisory board a power that once again would tend to give it the status of a court of justice. The advisory board as set up in clause 40 is strictly an advisory body and its recommendation which could be in favour of an applicant could be dismissed by the governor in council. In other words, the favourable aspect of the decision which might be made by the advisory board could always be disregarded in a decision of the governor in council, without any right of appeal. We all recognize that the rights of a permanent applicant are and should be a lot more extensive than those of a non permanent applicant.

The proposed amendment to clause 40 basically provides that decisions in favour of an applicant which could be made by the advisory board would be mandatory and could not be quashed by the governor in council. Again, that seems to me to be the minimum compromise which could be sought to try and give that body the power of independence and inquiry that would normally make it look more like a court of justice. Otherwise, it would be a purely intermediary stage that has no effect on the rights for which protection is sought. Once again, that amendment to clause 40, amendment No. 31, appears to me to be a minimum.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen)—and I know he is aware of it—that in 1969, the commission presided by Mr. Mackenzie, of which former Air Canada president Yves Pratte was a member, recommended that in the area of security, a permanent applicant would not be denied his rights before he has been allowed access to the due judicial process.

If one reads the recommendations of the Mackenzie commission of 1969, one realizes that these recommendations were extremely strict and extremely tight vis-à-vis the rights of citizens as regards security. Now the Mackenzie commission itself recommended in 1969 that the case of permanent applicants be subject to a complete legal process. It is therefore unnecessary, Mr. Speaker, to take exception to or dismiss at once the proposed amendment to clause 40, since it is aimed at establishing a procedure which remains well within the suggestion made by the Mackenzie commission in 1969.

I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that in the case of section 41, amendment No. 32 is aimed at having three retired judges on that advisory board instead of only one. Several objections have been raised to those proposals. Finally, an arrangement was concluded by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, an arrangement which has finally allowed us to obtain that one of three positions be filled by a retired judge. Once again, several objections were raised: few judges available, courts are overburdened, security files would be made public. Looking back at the statements which have been made, Mr. Speaker, it is to be regretted that as legislators we are not favourably disposed towards the courts when it comes to national security. And as I said earlier, the U.S. Senate has already had the opportunity to vote more specifically on the role of courts in the context of national security. And once again, perhaps as legislators, we will have to reconsider during the months to come some bills whose object will be to extend the control of courts in the context of national security. I think that we are overly eager to associate the role of courts with the public character of court operations.

Court action does not necessarily mean public hearings. My colleagues who have experience with the Criminal Code and related statutes, know that in some cases it is possible to ensure confidentiality of the debates. I believe it is fair to state that in the past, the vast majority of judges have always fulfilled this responsibility in the most exemplary way, and there is no ground to fear that security files may get lost in court.

Unfortunately, as we found out in the last few months, files sometimes get out of police hands much more readily than out of courts of justice and magistrates' Chambers. Therefore, I do not believe that the points raised against the presence of three judges on the advisory council would jeopardize national security.

Mr. Speaker, this is why it seems basic to me that the compromise proposed by the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) who, to a certain extent, has taken fifty steps forward in this area, be pursued and that we may reach a point of further refinement of the role that we want to give courts and the importance that we want to recognize in the rule of law in the area of national security.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I propose to speak on motion No. 30 standing in my name. The motion proposes to delete clauses 39, 40, 41 and 42 of the bill, and substitute therefor the proposed clause 39 as set out on the order paper. I submit that in place of the elaborate, confusing phraseology of the four sections, you would have a much simpler, more straightforward provision as set out in the amendment. It deals with security, and nothing is more difficult than squaring security with justice and fairness to people affected by legislation of this kind.

In this case we are considering the Immigration Act. I propose, and I shall tell the House later where I got the idea for the amendment, that the minister and solicitor general may issue certificates in the normal course of any proceeding in connection with deportation before the adjudicator or the Immigration Appeal Board. Their certificate says that the case involves security or criminal intelligence. It then provides that, and I quote:

● (1500)

—the Adjudicator or the Immigration Appeal Board shall conduct the hearing in camera and shall not furnish to the applicant the sources of the information but shall give to the applicant a summary of the basis of objections, and shall otherwise hear and determine any claims or allegations that security or criminal intelligence is involved in the same manner as other cases."

That differs from the clause which I seek to delete which provides various hearings. It provides for the setting up of a security advisory board which, incidentally, is given no authority at all except to report.

Mr. Nystrom: The Conservative party is now united.

Mr. Brewin: I don't know if I feel very united at the moment. The present clauses provide for the special advisory board. Then they provide that the cabinet may order the deportation of a person whether or not it has a report from the security board. That is clause 40(10).

The basis of my recommendation is what was done in the last world war. At that time the government, in its wisdom, found it necessary to use the defence of Canada regulations to detain people who were thought by the Minister of Justice to be a security risk, and to intern them at his pleasure. This was to be in the regulations which in turn were passed under the War Measures Act and it was acted on. Many people of German or Italian origin, and perhaps some of Japanese origin, were interned under this procedure and detained without hearing and trial.

At that stage a group of civil libertarians, many of them businessmen from Toronto, and I happened to be associated with them, came together in what they called the Civil Liberties Association of Toronto. They said it is basic, even where security is concerned, that there be a public hearing. They devised a formula which was accepted by the government of the day. The Minister of Justice at that time was Mr. St. Laurent, a distinguished name in the Liberal hierarchy. He accepted this proposal whereby, when security came into question and a person who was interned wanted to question it, he could do so by making application to a county or superior court judge, who was required to do what I suggest here. He was required to proceed with the hearing, listen to what the applicant had to say, and no doubt hear from the Department of Justice why the person was detained. He did not disclose sources of confidential information, but he did give particulars so that the person being interned would know in general terms at any rate what was the alleged reason.

As a result of that process, very large numbers of people were released from internment camps. As far as I have been able to determine, none of them proved a danger to the security of Canada. None of them were in trouble. They secured their freedom through this process which kept confidential sources secret but nevertheless granted a hearing.

If that can be done in wartime in respect of people whose liberty had been taken from them by reason of suspicion that somehow or other they might help the enemy and thereby be damaging to Canada, why can it not be done now? If the Liberal party is able to show such liberality in the midst of war, why not in the Immigration Act when we are not at war?

I admit there are such things as security risks. We are talking about a means of granting a fair hearing on the one side and keeping confidential information from disclosure on the other. It worked then. It could work now. It would be a sensible compromise. There is no reason why these things should be taken entirely away from the adjudicators in the Immigration Appeal Board. They are the ones trained to deal with this subject. If they receive this certificate their obligation is not to have the case publicly held, but hold it in camera and give limited particulars to the persons concerned. That is a reasonable compromise.

Security is always a difficult matter to deal with. I would like to read from the abridged version of the Report of the Royal Commission on Security, June, 1969. As most members will recall, Max Mackenzie was the chairman and Yves Pratte and M. J. Coldwell were members. They submitted a lengthy report. This is what they had to say about deportation and appeal in relation to security:

Our views on one important aspect of deportation and appeal procedures have already been outlined. We feel that the deportation of an immigrant who has been formally landed in Canada is a most serious matter, and that it is right that any such order should be subject to formal judicial due process—

It is not political due process through the cabinet, but judicial due process. I put those last few words in to clarify the matter.

—and appeal before a body such as the Immigration Appeal Board. If the government is unwilling to produce acceptable and satisfactory evidence, we feel that deportation should not be ordered. Such situations should not often arise, if reasonably effective immigration screening procedures exist.

It will be noted that my proposed amendment does not go as far as the royal commission recommended. It said if there was not adequate evidence they should not proceed with the deportation. I am prepared that they should proceed, but only after some due judicial process and appeal before such a body as the Immigration Appeal Board. I have inserted a formula which will provide for confidentiality.

If these very distinguished gentlemen were entrusted with this job by Mr. Pearson and could recommend what they did, then what was done by Mr. St. Laurent in the middle of the war can also be done here. Instead of doing violence to either side, and instead of doing violence to the confidentiality of secret sources of information so as to provide for a full judicial process hearing, the amendment I propose will serve that purpose. I have very little hope with the present attitude that this amendment will be adopted. It is much too sensible. The tendency these days is to try to use the word security, wave it around like a magic wand, and let the cabinet decide these matters. We do not need such a strict division as the Americans have, but it makes sense to let the judiciary body do its work and to let the cabinet do its work. I certainly do not approve the sort of thing set out in these proposed changes.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, many hon. members as well as many representatives of non-governmental organizations have expressed concern about Clauses 39 and 40 and to a lesser extent about Clauses 41 and 42. These clauses were discussed at some length in the committee, and as a result of interventions there by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and others, substantial amendments were made in committee. I believe members who were able to attend the committee sessions now have a better appreciation of the purpose of these clauses and the manner of their implementation, but I think it might be helpful to the House in considering these motions if I were again to review the intended application of the clauses in question.

Bill C-24 describes several classes of persons who may be inadmissible or deportable because of engagement in criminal or subversive activities. I would refer hon. members in particular to paragraphs 19(1)(d) to 19(1)(g) inclusive, as well as to 27(1)(c) and 27(2)(c). Where the evidence of such engagement can be freely disclosed in public, we would proceed against the person concerned by way of a full and proper inquiry before an adjudicator. This is what is done now, and what would be done in most cases in the future.

There are some cases, however, where the evidence cannot be freely disclosed, and consequently an inquiry cannot be held. The evidence may contain elements whose disclosure would endanger national security; it may have been provided in the strictest confidence by an agency of the government of another country, or it may have been supplied by an important undercover agent whose usefulness would come to a quick end if his existence were revealed. These cases are a minority, but unfortunately they are usually the most serious ones.

At present the department finds itself in rather a difficult position. The minister can take action against non-immigrants in Canada by declaring that they have ceased to be non-immigrants and making deportation orders against them under sections 7(4) and 7(5) of the 1952 act. But there is no comparable power to deal with people seeking admission to Canada or those who have been admitted as landed immigrants, no matter how grave the danger to Canada or Canadians. We have no choice but to let such people come into or remain in Canada, as the case may be.

This has long been recognized as a serious problem, and was mentioned as such by the Royal Commission on Security some years ago. It all boils down, of course, to a conflict between the right of the individual to fair and just treatment and the right of Canada to defend its legitimate interests and those of its citizens and residents. It is a difficult decision to make, but we believe that in this area the right of the state must be paramount. Clauses 39 and 40 attempt to secure the state's interests without taking away from the individual any more than is absolutely necessary.

Clause 39 deals with people who are not permanent residents, that is, visitors in Canada, people not yet admitted to Canada, and people who are in Canada unlawfully. We feel Canada owes these classes rather less than it owes its permanent residents, but even so clause 39 does not give the minister the absolute power he has under the 1952 act. Although the minister and Solicitor General would be entitled to issue non-contestable certificates, the person concerned would still have the right to an inquiry before an adjudicator, and in some cases to a hearing by the Immigration Appeal Board at which he could seek to establish that he and the person named in the certificate were not one and the same. This is a significant improvement over the 1952 act.

Permanent residents are a different matter. We do owe them more consideration, no matter how serious the evidence against them. Under the provision proposed in Clause 40, the opinion of the minister and of the Solicitor General would not be conclusive. Rather, it would have to be submitted to a panel of distinguished citizens for review. This panel—the special advisory board—would not only have access to the minister's evidence, but would be authorized to pass on selected items to the person concerned, and would give the person a hearing at which he could present a defence. The board would then report its conclusions to cabinet, which would in turn review all the evidence before making a decision. The permanent resident would thus receive consideration at three very high levels.

Motions Nos. 29 and 30—and I might also mention motion No. 46, which is on the same topic although not included in this group for debate—appear to agree with the necessity of protecting sensitive information, but suggest that the decision on sensitivity be placed elsewhere. This is a decision which cannot be made casually or out of context. We are convinced it must be made by persons who have regular access to and involvement with secret information, and who are thus better able to appreciate its signficance, its reliability, and its ramifications. It is internationally recognized that security matters must be dealt with by the executive rather than the judiciary. The same observation applies to motion No. 32; although we agree with the presence of one retired judge on the special advisory board, we do not think that a board consisting solely of judges could bring sufficient experience and expertise to bear, having regard to both the board's functions specified in Clause 42.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) constantly reminds us of security cases under the Defence of Canada regulations, but I would point out that in those cases the information was domestically generated whereas much of the immigration material comes in trust from foreign sources. Furthermore, immigration security cases do not appear to be a fit subject for judicial proceedings since none of the usual court rules can apply—I am thinking primarily of the ability to cross-examine witnesses, for example. National security is generally regarded in all countries as a matter for the executive branch, not for the judiciary.

In conclusion I repeat that we understand and appreciate the sentiments which have inspired the movers of this group of motions. Nevertheless, I am convinced that the scheme set out in the bill, especially as it was modified in committee, comes as close as we can hope to get to an appropriately balanced protection of the rights of both the individual and the state, and I respectfully urge the House to defeat these motions.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I shall not prolong the debate unnecessarily. I am grateful for the minister's intervention because it clarifies the nature of the difficulty we have encountered this afternoon with respect to these amendments. The hon. gentleman said at the outset that all kinds of safeguards were needed with respect to this situation. The very fact that confidential material is being brought forward and used against individuals creates a delicate situation.

These provisions are certainly intended to apply to those said to have been engaged in criminal or subversive activity, and I realize that from time to time information might be forthcoming which it would not be in the interests of the security of the state to make public. Nevertheless, I feel the minister has failed in his argument on two points.

In the first place it seems to me there is an assumption that the information which is made available by security and intelligence agencies is almost without question accurate, full and fair. This is an assumption we encounter at the outset. If there were any way in which we as members of parliament could be sure that the kind of information made available to the department in these cases involving the suggestion of criminal activity or criminal conspiracy was not to be questioned, those who have raised this matter would feel a great deal more comfortable. The difficulty is that we are dealing with a whole variety of sources of information. The minister knows, because he is experienced in the law, that much of the information obtained by way of the creation of a file with respect to criminal or subversive activity may not be hard information but in fact hearsay evidence, or the evidence of prejudiced witnesses, those with a particular axe to grind.

In the case of agencies operating in other countries, we have no way of ascertaining the veracity or accuracy of information made available to our own government. There have been very sorry experiences indeed on occasions when we have acted upon the assumption and in good faith that information provided to us was accurate, only to find subsequently that it was misleading and in fact sometimes downright untrue. In situations like that one must be doubly sure there is sufficient protection for the particular individual involved. There is therefore a major weakness in what the minister said today. He has given us no indication how he or of the officials of his department can be protected against information which is incorrect or unfair to an individual who stands accused. In those instances, of course, any individual can stand in jeopardy.

The other point that concerns me even more is what I think is a false proposition which the minister conveyed to the House this afternoon, which I suppose creates a difficulty for the minister in taking the position he does, or it gives him the basis for taking a position which I think is unwarranted. The minister said something like this—I do not want to misquote him: "The real issue, Mr. Speaker, is the question of the right of the individual to a fair and just treatment as against the right of Canada, the state, to be paramount".

If the choice is between the individual in terms of receiving a fair and just treatment and the survival, the integrity or the legitimacy of the state, surely we have a false notion of what our society is all about. There can be no Canada worth preserving, to put it bluntly, unless the right of the individual to a fair and just treatment is preserved.

I really do not think the minister wants to push this very far. If he is saying that we will have to begin sacrificing certain rights before the law to have a fair and just hearing in order to protect the sanctity and survival of the state, then surely he is saying something that is not in the best tradition of a liberal democracy. Therefore he will want to reconsider, if not today I hope before the time comes for us further to revise the bill in amendments which will come in years to follow. It seems to me that we must be very certain, when establishing the methodology and procedures for dealing with certain situations, which I realize are very often complex and difficult, whether they be of a criminal or subversive nature, to create responsibilities on the part of government and the bureaucracy to deal with innocent people who may be detrimentally affected through the forfeiture of their right to a fair and just hearing.

There is no justification in my estimation for accepting the proposition that there must be some kind of trade off between the survival of the state and the right of each and every individual who is a resident of this country to a fair and just treatment. I share with the minister the sentiment that the committee made considerable progress in alerting members of his staff and of the committee generally to the difficult situation confronting them. I think that substantial improvement was made on this aspect of the bill in committee, but quite obviously it does not go far enough.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member suggested—I know he did not mean this—that we always take evidence provided as full, fair and accurate. With respect, that is not the case. There is a problem I have at the present time whereby the minister has to make a decision as to the weight to be given to any evidence. We now have two ministers who will look at the evidence and then we refer it to a special advisory board to decide how fair, full and accurate the evidence is and what emphasis or weight should be given to it. I think this is one of the big improvements made to this bill during committee stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on motion No. 29. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Division deferred.

[Translation]

Mr. Joyal: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont on a point of order.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to have a recorded division on motion No. 32?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This will certainly be a recorded division if I may answer the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont. This is only a vote which has been deferred under Standing Order 75(11) which says that the vote will be held at a predetermined period.

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency) moved:

Motion No. 33.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 45 by striking out lines 25 and 26 at page 32 and substituting the following therefor:

"with respect thereto, the accuracy of which transcript attested to by the person claiming, shall be referred to the Minister for determination."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of Motion No. 33, which aims at amending Clause 45(2). The purpose of this amendment is essentially to make sure that the accuracy of the stenographic notes of the examination to which is subjected the person claiming refugee status is attested by this person. This is a somewhat minor amendment which I feel would give the runner an even break. This amendment, if adopted, would close one of the loopholes which exist throughout this bill and which open the way to bureaucratic abuse.

In fact, if this amendment is important, it is only because it is on the basis of this transcript that the advisory committee on refugee status advises the minister who is responsible for deciding whether a person qualifies as a political refugee and, therefore, whether this person will be granted this status.

Under the existing law, a person who claims to be a Convention refugee cannot even see the transcript unless of course he is eventually heard by the Immigration Appeal Board. From that point of view, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24 is an improvement to some extent, since a copy of the transcript is forwarded to the potential refugee, i.e. the person who claims to be a Convention refugee. However, he cannot ask for corrections before the transcript is brought to the attention of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee or before the Committee has read it with the result that, to all practical purposes, this is an insignificant improvement in view of the fact that the inaccuracies or errors which could have slipped either during the translation, interpretation or transcription cannot be corrected. Now, it is obvious that the slightest error of translation or transcription may give a totally different meaning to someone's evidence and, therefore, ruin his credibility in the eyes of the Advisory Committee. Obviously, such control would have to be made by a translator selected by the person who claims to be a Convention refugee since the transcript is written either in English or French and therefore cannot be understood by the applicant.

Of course, one can argue that making it mandatory for the Department of Immigration to have the stenographic notes certified by the person seeking refugee status could be a waste of time. But I think, Mr. Speaker, that it would be better to take more time and avoid situations where, because of an inaccuracy or a mistake, the applicant is refused entry into Canada while in fact, had such details been accurate, he would have been entitled to come into Canada.

Mr. Speaker, others could also argue that certain applicants might change their testimony while revising those stenographical notes. To this, I answer that this problem could easily be solved by recording the testimony which would stand as unassailable evidence in case of conflict between the stenographic notes and the changes that could be required by the person seeking political refugee status.

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning of my speech, I think the minister will agree that the amendment I moved is quite small and that he will want to give a chance to everybody, to individuals in very hard conditions, to people who are uncomfortable and nervous and who may give, under the pressure of the examination which is sometimes very hard and in some cases I think, a bit cruel, to check the accuracy of their testimony. So I leave this amendment to the consideration of the House with the hope that it will agree with it.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the interests of answering the concern of the hon. member, this was discussed at some considerable length in committee. The amendment would have a claimant to refugee status certify the accuracy of the transcript of his examination by a senior immigration officer. Since the bill requires that the examination take place under oath, the suggested addition seems superfluous and will provide only an opportunity for the person concerned to change his answers. Additionally, it is unclear how a claimant, unable to speak either official language, could certify the accuracy of the transcript in English or French interpreted from the claimant's language. Even counsel would not be able to assist in that particular regard.

Those who do the translations swear to the truth of the accuracy of the transcripts. With respect, there is adequate protection provided under the terms of the act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is now on motion No. 33 in the name of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency) moved:

Motion No. 38.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 55 by striking out lines 33 to 44 at page 36 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) a member of the inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(c) unless the offense in question is a political offense;

(b) a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g);

(c) a person described in paragraph 27(1)(c) or 27(2)(c); or

(d) a person who has been convicted in Canada of an offense under any act of Parliament for which a term of imprisonment of five or more years has been imposed, and the Minister is of the opinion that the person should not be allowed to remain in Canada."

Mr. Speaker, my participation in this debate will be about an amendment to clause 55 of Bill C-24. At the committee stage, I proposed an amendment to clause 55 of the bill which would have abolished outright the possibility of removal, that is sending a refugee back to his country. This amendment was of course in accordance with clause 33 of the Geneva Convention on refugees, where it is said, I quote:

However, a refugee will not be entitled to the benefits of the present clause, if there are any serious grounds for considering him as a threat to the security of his country of residence or if, having been sentenced for a particularly serious criminal offence, he is considered as a threat for the community of the said country.

Mr. Speaker, does that mean that Canada, as a signatory to the Geneva Convention, has the obligation of resorting to removal in some cases? No, for in to the same clause of the convention, we find the following. I quote:

No clause of this convention will affect other rights or benefits granted to refugees, irrespective of the convention.

As I said before the standing committee, I recognize that there can be some cases where we have to deal with distasteful characters, as the minister knows, but I submit that it is morally unjustifiable to send back to their country people who risk torture or death, whatever the seriousness of their offences, especially if these offences were polically motivated. In fact, we shall have very strange legislation on this subject. Since clause 56 allows the non-implementation of a removal order if the refugee has not been able to obtain the authorization to remain in any other country, removal will only take place in the case of the people on whom their country of origin wishes to avenge itself. For instance, since Vietnam does not especially want to settle its account against General Quang, he will be able to ask to stay in Canada under clause 56. On the other hand, a Chilean who will have been a member of a popular unit under the Allende regime could not make use of clause 56 since the Pinochet administration would be only too happy to let him come back to Chile to torture him and possibly have him executed.

Mr. Speaker, what is ridiculous is that, basically, a decision taken by a foreign government will determine if an individual will come under clause 56 or under clause 55. We could always punish in Canada the refugees who might constitute a real danger for our country—even though there are very few of them according to what we heard in the standing committee—but nothing justifies the removal to his country of origin of someone who risks being mistreated, and this is an understatement since such people can even risk death in the case of certain Latin American countries.

The amendment that I have submitted to the House in motion No. 38 constitutes in fact a compromise and aims first of all at excluding the possibility of removal in the case of a political offence, such as provided in clause 19(1)(g). The part of my amendment found in subclause (2) therefore only aims at making our new Immigration Act in accordance with the Geneva Convention. Section 1(f) of the Geneva Convention explicitly provides that the refugee who has committed a political offence is entitled to the protection of the Convention while the one who has committed a non-political offence cannot claim this protection.

Mr. Speaker, it would be quite unacceptable for Canada, which has set as one of the objectives of this new law respecting immigration—and I quote clause 3(g) of Bill C-24, "to fulfil Canada's international legal obligations with respect to refugees"—to allow itself to act against the principles enshrined in the Geneva Convention by not making, in clause 19(1)(d), a difference between political offences and those which are not. This is why, Mr. Speaker, the first part of my amendment, subclause (a), must be adopted by this House if Canada is to abide, as the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) so often reminded us, by the requirements set in the Geneva Convention.

As for the second part of my amendment, to be found at subclause (d), it simply aims at being in agreement with an amendment presented by the minister himself when this bill was studied in committee. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, subclause (c) of clause 55 originally concerned those persons who had committed an offence for which a term of imprisonment of 10 years or more may be imposed. At the very request of the minister himself, the committee amended this subclause which now concerns those persons who have been found guilty of such offences.

Since we will now be dealing with persons found guilty, it is obvious that these persons will also have been sentenced. And it is precisely that sentence, Mr. Speaker, which should be used as a criterion in deciding whether a refugee should be deported to his former country. For, Mr. Speaker, it is quite frequent in Canada that persons who have committed an offence for which a term of imprisonment of 10 years or more may be imposed are only given a suspended sentence or even a probation period of some months or some years by the presiding judge at their trial. The judge who passes that sentence must take into account the type of more or less aggravating or mitigating circumstances that surrounded the commission of that offence.

Mr. Speaker, would it not be repugnant for Canada to remove a refugee to a country where torture or death may await him—for it is indeed the subject of clause 55—simply because he would have committed an offence for which a term of imprisonment of 10 years or more may be imposed, while the judge, taking into account the circumstances of the case, would only in fact have sentenced him to a light prison term? Besides, Mr. Speaker, the deputy minister of manpower and immigration, Mr. Manion, stated before the committee on July 8 that he personally was in favour of such an amendment. And here I quote Mr. Manion, as reported on page 48:36 of issue No. 48 of the minutes of proceedings of the committee: If you really want to know whether we should consider an effective term of imprisonment or a possible sentence, I do not think the department would be opposed to it. Of course, this clause only provides for removal for very serious reasons, and I do not think we would object to amend subclause (c) to comply with this objective.

And when the committee discussed the term of imprisonment to be imposed as a criterion for the removal of refugees under clause 55, Mr. Manion stated, and I quote from page 48:40: In my opinion, the purpose of this provision is to ensure that removal can only follow a very serious crime and we would agree to provide for a term of imprisonment of five years in this clause. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind hon. members that European countries signatories to the Geneva Convention usually apply the imposed rather than the possible sentence criterion.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment, because its only purpose, on one hand, is to make clause 55 comply with the requirements of the Geneva Convention and, on the other hand, to take into account the effects of the amendment put forward by the minister himself in committee. The amendment I am putting forward should therefore get the support of the minister since his deputy has assured committee members that the department had no objection to it.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Epp: Don't respond.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member says I should not respond, but if I do not respond here I will have to respond in some other place, and I do not mean the other place.

This motion of the hon. member substitutes a five-year actual sentence for a ten-year potential sentence as the standard for determining that a Convention refugee who has committed a serious criminal offence in Canada should lose protection against deportation to a country where his life or freedom could be threatened. I commend to hon. members a close look at Clause 55 on page 36 where we make what I think is a significant improvement and provide the kind of protection about which we are all concerned. I refer to the addition of the words:

. . . and the Minister is of the opinion that the person should not be allowed to remain in Canada.

This amendment would also exempt political offences from the class of very serious offences which render a convention refugee inadmissible to or removable from Canada, even to a country where he would be persecuted.

On the first point, if the ten-year potential standard is retained, a refugee could be removed even though he received a relatively light sentence.

If the five-year actual sentence standard were adopted, a refugee could be removed for an offence not considered serious enough in Canada to warrant a ten-year potential sentence.

Court sentencing practices vary, so it is difficult to determine which standard best represents the Convention standard of a "particularly serious crime". On balance, we believe that the ten-year potential standard now in Clause 55 more often represents a particularly serious crime.

On the second point, there is really no need to exempt political offences because a truly political offence in another country is unlikely to be construed as any offence at all under Canadian law, so that the refugee would be neither inadmissible nor removable under the bill.

If, however, a person had committed murder, arson, kidnapping or any other such offence which would bring him within the very serious inadmissible class in Clause 19(1)(c), I question whether Canadians would feel secure with the person in their midst, even if the crime had been committed for political purposes.

On balance, this motion is unnecessary, in my view, since it adds little or no protection for Convention refugees and could conceivably endanger Canadians.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos). I disagree with the minister that adding a specific reference to a political offence really makes no difference. He says a political offence would not be a serious offence here. My understanding is that this provision for the political offence is taken out of the Geneva Convention, which explicitly excludes political offences.

I know that it is not an easy job sometimes to determine whether an offence is really political or whether it is just a violent criminal offence, but I think this is something that has to be done and I think our action follows the convention. If that is the type of person who is not supposed to be sent back to his country of origin under the Geneva Convention then I think the act we pass should accept that distinction.

There is a lot of difference in paragraph (c). The minister is quite right in saying that paragraph (c) was much improved by reference to having been convicted, but the distinction is that it says "of an offence . . . for which a term of imprisonment . . . may be imposed". On the other hand, the amendment of the hon. member for Montmorency refers to a person who has been convicted of an offence for which a term of imprisonment of five or more years has been imposed. It seems to me that that is much better wording. Sometimes people commit offences for which there are extremely severe penalties but under conditions which palliate or ameliorate the offence and the courts decide what is an appropriate sentence. Yet here we are asking parliament to say that so long as you can get more than ten years—you may have only got a six months sentence imposed—you are not excluded from the class of refugees who can be deported. It seems to me that the amendment is a great improvement and, in my view, should be adopted.

I have never thought that these provisions were supposed to deal with political offences, yet we go on gaily, unwilling to accept a clear statement that a political offence is not the sort of offence for which a convention refugee can be deported. Then in the clause which deals with a sentence, we deal with a potential sentence and not with realities as dealt with by the courts. This is all part of a pattern. We push the courts out. We say we know better than the courts about what is a suitable sentence, but I do not believe we do. I think the amendment recognizes that fact.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 38 (Mr. Duclos) negatived on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The House will now proceed to motion No. 39.

[English]

We will now proceed to motion No. 39 in the name of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, with respect to motion No. 39, this really should have been raised yesterday when Your Honour made a ruling with respect to the acceptability of motions. Motion No. 39 is consequential on a number of amendments I had on the order paper with respect to the refugee category, and since they were not acceptable to the Chair, this also will have no meaning and should be dropped. I would ask that the motion be dropped.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The proper manner in which the hon. member can withdraw his motion is to ask for the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent to dropping motion No. 39?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 39 withdrawn.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton) moved:

Motion No. 41.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 64 by striking out lines 27 to 34 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

"64. (1) The head office of the Board shall be in Ottawa and the Chairman and such other members as may be designated by the Governor in Council shall live in Ottawa or within reasonable commuting distance thereof."

He said: Mr. Speaker, just to set this motion in proper perspective I would like to indicate that it deals with Section 64 of the Immigration Act, and particularly Section 64(1) as it presently reads that the head office of the Immigration Appeal Board shall be in the national capital region as described in the schedule to the National Capital Act, and the chairman and such other members as may be designated by the governor in council shall live in that region or within a reasonable commuting distance thereof. The purpose of the amendment I am proposing, seconded by my friend, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), is to provide that the head office of the board shall not be in the national capital region as set forth in the statute but shall be in the city of Ottawa, and the chairman and such other members as may be designated by the governor in council shall live in Ottawa or within a reasonable distance thereof.

When I look across the floor of the House I am glad to see my friend, the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), because I want to speak about a matter which is of particular importance to the areas which both of us represent, as does the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), who is also here, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Poulin), and the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It has become a matter of considerable local concern and, I suggest to you, that the concern perhaps goes beyond the local area. There are very few opportunities in the House, short of the question period or perhaps an adjournment debate arising out of the question period, to discuss in this forum matters of this kind which are of some significance to the area.

It is for that purpose that I moved this amendment so that I might deal for a few moments with some of the problems that have been caused to Ottawa on the Ontario side of the river, and some of the allegations with respect to problems that might well be caused on the other side of the Ottawa river in Hull as a result of the construction and the attempt to fill buildings across the river which I have described on one occasion in the House as "Fullerton's fortress".

An annoucement was made a few days ago by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan) that over the course of the next few years some 15,000 public servants would be moved across the river for the purpose of working in those buildings. We would be burying the matter under the rug if we did not say that this has caused tremendous concern in the national capital area, particularly in the city of Ottawa, but beyond that, in the residential areas which basically serve the national capital area on the Ontario side of the river. I am now referring to Gloucester, Nepean, Rideau, Goulbourn and Osgoode in which live the public servants who commute to work.

This has been of concern to the local business people in the city of Ottawa because the effect of it, which has not been denied categorically, is that some four million square feet of office space in Ottawa will be made vacant, and the attempts by the federal government to ameliorate the situation by taking down temporary buildings will in no way alleviate the problem. For the restaurateur, the shopkeeper and the small businessman, the backbone of Ottawa, in the area on the Ontario side of the river, the move will create difficulties. Its effects will ripple out to other municipalities in the way ripples spread out in a pond when you drop a pebble in it. Almost all local municipalities on the Ontario side of the river will be affected.

I am concerned about the timing of the move, about its magnitude, and about the lack of consultation with local authorities, local business interests, public servants, including Public Service employee organizations like the PSAC, in all its aspects, and the Professional Institute of Public Servants, in all its aspects. I complain of lack of consultation concerning traffic, transportation and related matters. Surely no member of this House will say it is a sin to place federal institutions in Hull but the government persists in its intention to move, desite warnings about the drastic effects of the move on employees and on the commercial interests I have mentioned. The government's conduct is deplorable. It should not happen this way anywhere in this country, particularly not in the national capital area.

The amendment before us seeks to retain the head office of the Immigration Appeal Board in Ottawa. I point out that the minister has announced the department is to move to Hull by 1980. If the amendment is accepted, it will not move. Critics may argue, "But we are talking about the entire national capital region." Of course we are. The head offices of various boards and organizations have been moved from one place to another in the national capital region. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) had this in mind when the government he led proposed the National Capital Act. But the right hon. member did not intend, as I am sure the hon. member for Ottawa West will agree, that the movement or relocation of offices would be such as to affect the city of Ottawa and the people who live and work in it and the surrounding area in the way the Minister of Public Works admitted would be the case when he made his statement.

People criticize my position and say, "You must have seen those buildings being erected on the other side of the river." Of course I did. Their erection was part of the great plan of 1969, when, so far as I can determine, not a dissenting voice was raised to criticize the government for its proposal. If anyone can show I am wrong, I will withdraw my remarks. Why do I make this point? Members of the government party overwhelmingly represented constituencies in the national capital region. Therefore there were no dissenting voices to criticize the government. If you will recall, Sir, the former minister of finance, Hon. John Turner, represented Ottawa-Carleton. The hon. lady, a member of the Progressive Conservative party, secured that seat in the recent byelection. If my memory is right, the member for Ottawa-Centre was Hon. George McIlraith, now Senator McIlraith. He occupies a place of distinction in the Chamber in which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) seeks a place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The constituency I now have the honour to represent was represented by Gordon Blair, now Mr. Justice Blair of the Ontario Court of Appeal. That member went to his just reward and, if I may say so, is serving that court with great distinction.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the hon. member preaching for a call?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I choose to ignore that remark, Mr. Speaker.

Going further afield in the national capital area, the constituency of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton was represented by Murray McBride, who has gone to his just reward as vice-president, I think, in charge of one of the boards or agencies of government—the Farm Credit Corporation. It can be seen that the political representation of constituencies in the national capital area was such that no voice was raised in protest against the government's proposal for relocation. Plans for relocation to Hull could have been proceeded with in a way consistent with Hull's development. Unfortunately, certain events intervened which anyone with half an eye could have foreseen, namely, some restraint was imposed on the growth of the Public Service. We had the grand scheme to develop Fullerton's fortress on the other side of the river. Unfortunately, or fortunately, the government suddenly instituted restraints of growth in the Public Service; but, at the same time, the erection of the buildings on the other side of the river proceeded apace.

Having made a glaring error in its commitment of 1969, what did the government do? It chose not to leave the buildings empty. Therefore the only alternative was to fill those buildings, in anyway it could.

I am appalled at the government's failure to co-ordinate its various policies and programs, and disturbed by the effects on morale in the Public Service. Mr. Speaker, all this should not have happened.

Mr. Paproski: It's incredible.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If I may say so, you cannot move some branches of the Canadian Penitentiary Service, some parts of the Secretary of State's department, some parts of the National Parole Board and the Canadian Commercial Corporation without amending the law. It is important for us to know, when we deal with these matters, how and when the government proposes to change the law. The proposal to move the head office of the Immigration Appeal Board to the other side of the river is an attempt to put flesh on the policy the government has put forward. Mr. Speaker, we are discussing an extremely important matter.

The removal of these boards, or the relocation of the Immigration Appeal Board which is likely to move when the Department of Immigration moves, could create a host of administrative problems. As I have already said, there has not been sufficient consultation. Certain difficulties have already arisen about whether to allow public servants to observe as holidays, St. Jean Baptiste Day on June 21, or July 1. There was great difficulty.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): St. Jean Baptiste Day is on June 24.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There was some grave difficulty. The Public Service, and I am sure they were joined by employees of the Immigration Appeal Board who are affected by Section 64, wrote to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) on July 5, 1977, making some reasonable suggestions. Those suggestions have been ignored. The developers of Ottawa, who face a real problem because they were enticed on the basis of government statements, have asked for some consideration from the ministry. No consideration is forthcoming.

Given the limited opportunities that there are to discuss these matters on the floor of the House of Commons; and given the fact that this whole movement seems to have been carried out a bit by the back door, and certain agencies cannot move out of the city of Ottawa in any event unless there is an amendment in the statutes, the government had better be put on notice that before many agencies move across the river it will have to come to this parliament for its consent. I have named some, and some of those are slated for a move.

There is no one in this House of Commons who is reasonable, and I hope that I am reasonable, who stands against development in the city of Hull. However, I hope that all members of this House will stand against the implementation and execution of a policy which is compounding one error of magnitude and lack of timing with another. I refer to the error of failure to consult and to take into account the difficulties that public servants, merchants, developers, land owners, business people and indeed the whole of the national capital region on the Ontario side of the river will face as a result of 15,000 public servants moving out. I assume it is only 15,000. The government has very seldom been right in its figures. I remember at one time getting a figure from the President of the Treasury Board that there would only be 25,000 positions designated bilingual, and today there are 63,000.

We have a problem in terms of honesty and directness. That problem is nowhere more evident than in this whole dreadfully mishandled matter of the relocation of public servants and the development of those buildings in the city of Hull on the other side of the national capital region.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of speaking in this debate on Bill C-24, but in the face of the amendment to clause 64 moved by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and especially after the statement he just made in this House, I feel I must express my views.

First, and without dwelling on the history of the area and more importantly on that of our national capital, I must say to the hon. member who felt he was not showing bad judgment but he should be told if he did, that the national capital is directly related to the choice made by Queen Victoria. When Queen Victoria chose Ottawa as the capital of Canada, certainly the present limits did not exist. It is also the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who decided to describe by statute the national capital area, and that area included both the Quebec and the Ontario parts in one entity called the national capital.

It is rather important to state that at a time when Canada is going through a crisis that can be termed a "national unity crisis", I feel that hon. members representing the constituencies involved should understand that national unity must start right here in the national capital region. It must be the laboratory, it must project the image the national capital should have. A country's capital is the focus of its national spirit. If we are to start politicking with statements that one part of the national capital should not live as the other, there is no point in having a national capital area, and there is no point in having a national capital at all. Because Ottawa, whether we like it or not, will always be an Ontario town and does not reflect in any way the kind of Canadianism and federalism we would like to live and future generations will want to recognize.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton uses far-fetched arguments about numerous things, among others the Public Service Alliance. I understand he also said after the announcement that thousands of civil servants would be transferred to Hull that the Public Service Alliance was irresponsible, it should rather deal with the blatantly unfair situations of individual public servants rather than "embalming" itself in discussions about snow removal procedures on the Portage bridge or the Interprovincial bridge for the Ottawa civil servants who will soon be commuting to Hull. I find it appalling that such things should be said in this House where we should speak as one man on the question of national unity. It certainly is not with a speech such as the one we just heard and by putting down the city of Hull as the Public Service Alliance did, that we will promote national unity. In fact, little things such as those are the reason why we lose more ground than we gain in the matter of national unity.

I am against the amendment, and I trust that some day hon. members as a group will show enough sense to see to it that section 16 of the Constitution is amended so that the capital of Canada will no longer be Ottawa but the whole national capital area instead.

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of my friend, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). He seemed to argue the amendment with something less than a full heart. The amendment he is putting will introduce for the first time the principle of a statutory discrimination within the national capital region between the Ontario and the Quebec side. As far as I know, this is a principle which has not been considered since the days of the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he passed the National Capital Region Act.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton noted that the national capital region was created by a Conservative government in 1957. However, he did not call the attention of this House to the federal-provincial conference of 1969 in which all the premiers of all the provinces of Canada stated in a communiqué which was issued to the press that the capital of Canada would in effect be the national capital region. Premier Robarts of Ontario was most specific in that regard at that time.

We cannot be on both sides of this issue. I am going to vote against this motion should it come to a vote. However, I welcome the opportunity of making some observations.

• (1620)

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton very carefully went through the political representation at the time and implied that some people had gone to what he called their just rewards. He kindly did not refer to me in any respect so I presume I have not had any just reward in his book.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Be patient.

Mr. Francis: Well, I have been patient, Mr. Speaker. That is one thing that I think those who have followed my career in politics would have to give me credit for.

I think we all have to recognize the very sensitive situation at the present time. My colleague, the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) did not mention matters which are very obvious in the press. There has recently been taken into the cabinet for the Parti Québécois the representative of the city of Hull in the national assembly. What Jocelyne Ouellette has had to say about the National Capital Commission and the federal presence and all the rest of it is an appalling record. She simply says that the entire federal presence has to be chased lock, stock, and barrel out of the national capital region. The fact that her own home was expropriated to make way for the bridge may or may not have anything to do with her feelings, but one cannot but help suspect a personal vindictive note in her approach.

The move to Hull is an assertion of the federal presence on the other side of the river in an unmistakable way, and I give the hon. member for Hull and the minister responsible for the National Capital Commission, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), full credit for standing up to the Parti Quebecois and saying "This is a federal state. We have certain federal rights; we will assert those federal rights; we will not be intimidated in the assertion of those federal rights and this is part of our policy of national unity." That is something I would entirely support, Mr. Speaker, without reservation.

But I would be less than honest if I said we had a very good record in managing these affairs. The federal government's record of management of three things; the relocation to Hull, the decentralization policy outside the national capital region of the Public Service, and the restraints on hiring in the Public Service were very badly co-ordinated, and that is no reflection on the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan). He has inherited the situation and he is doing his best to correct these things, but the decisions which were taken were not carefully planned. They have had an impact on the city of Ottawa which is the most negative of all the communities in this area. Six million square feet of office space were vacated in Ottawa, or are about to be, over a period, two million of which can be demolished in temporary buildings, and four million square feet of privately-owned accommodation is coming on to the rental market. This represents a depression in this area plus a loss in federal grants in lieu of tax of something like $150 per household per year in the city of Ottawa.

But what is hardest for me as a local member to accept is the failure of the National Capital Commission to do its job. This was the instrument, a Crown corporation, independent, not reporting to a minister, directly reporting to parliament, all those great so-called virtues, able to offer free, independent advice, and it had the benefit of certain streams of information. In its Annual Report of 1975 the National Capital Commission talked about moving 25,000 jobs out of the national capital region into others parts of Canada. That was the one quarter of the total employment within the region it was going to move out. And it knew what the relocation from Ottawa to Hull involved, the 15,000 jobs.

If any body has access to the plans of the government with respect to its projection of growth in the public service, surely the National Capital Commission had its sources of intelligence. And in the face of these three streams of information the relocation to Hull, the decentralization outside the national capital region, the freeze on hiring policy, it still proceeded with the most outlandish schemes for satellite devolvement, a satellite community of 100,000 people in the Carlsbad area in Ontario and 100,000 people in the Aylmer area in the province of Quebec, linked by a transportation corridor. It was sheer folly, daydreaming and madness, in light of the total situation.

Within the National Capital Commission the right hand did not know what the left hand was doing. This Crown agency was grossly negligent in its advice to the Government of Canada regarding the planning and development of the national capital. Members of the agency do not have to get elected. And they really do not care whether the local members are elected or re-elected, and they say as much to us. It is very difficult, as a local member, to find my letters unanswered, to find that when I approach them there is this haughty disdain which suggests that I am somehow of a lesser breed of humanity. I am treated with contempt when I try to get elementary advice. I think I am entitled to receive information and courtesy.

The facts are that a good part of the bungling and the planning of these moves to which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has referred is the responsibility of that agency, those who are supposed to be the eyes, the ears and the brains, giving independent advice to the Government of Canada.

[Translation]

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, it is a pity that the National Capital Commission has been remiss in its duties. What the Commission did, as far as I am concerned, has nothing to do with its responsibilities in that regard.

[English]

I just think that this motion cannot be supported by hon. members in this House, and I hope that it does not even come to a vote because it is so contrary to the thrust and spirit of our times and the policy of national unity we are trying to develop. But if the intent of the hon. member was to provoke a debate on a matter which is of very real concern, one which has been a sore point with many of us, to focus attention on the lack of consistent policy in this area, for which the national capital has suffered and will continue to suffer in the period ahead, then I think to a certain extent it certainly served its purpose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On division.

Motion No. 41 (Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton)) negatived.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved:

Motion No. 42.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 70 by striking out line 25 at page 41 and substituting the following therefor:

"refugee may, within such reasonable period of time as is"

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher) moved:

Motion No. 44.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 71 by striking out lines 7 to 11 at page 42 and substituting the following therefor:

"unless there are reasonable grounds to believe that the claim is fraudulent, frivolous, or unfounded, it shall allow the application to proceed, and in any"

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length on motion No. 44 but it is my intention to set out briefly the arguments which were made during the committee stage. Much of the debate in this area, both here and in the committee, has been concerned with the manner in which a claim to refugee status is to be judged. Amendments have been put forward by hon. members on both sides of the House in a serious attempt to establish a procedure for judging such claims.

I have not felt able to support all the amendments; I believe the bill gives adequate protection as it stands to persons claiming to be refugees. Nevertheless, there is one area in which the processes suggested in the bill appear to be deficient. I refer to the provision for an oral hearing. This is the subject of motion No. 44—we are considering the general topic of redetermination and appeal procedure specifically for those claiming refugee status before the Immigration Appeal Board. What will happen, as I understand the legislation if it remains unamended, is that when a person comes to Canada or makes application for refugee status the evidence is taken down under oath. The minister and I both have difficulty in that after the evidence is taken down under oath an appeal could result in the changing of that information.

My point is this. Throughout the discussions which took place—

Mr. Cullen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member but I believe he is talking to motion No. 44. As I read motion No. 44, it says "unless there are reasonable grounds to believe that the claim is fraudulent, frivolous, or unfounded". Is the hon. member addressing himself to that or to the fact of a public hearing?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member can address himself to either motion No. 42 or No. 44; they are grouped for debate.

Mr. Epp: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be getting to the minister's intervention in a moment. According to the bill, a refugee will not have an oral hearing. It is true that under Clause 70 an applicant's declaration will be taken under oath, but an immigrant may come here and in the initial stages fail to give all the evidence, not because of any fraudulent intent but simply because, due to the new situation in which he finds himself, information which would assist in establishing whether his claim should go forward as a refugee cannot be properly adjudged. For that reason I strongly feel there should be some mechanism whereby an applicant is entitled to an oral hearing.

When we were debating this in committee there was much discussion about what could result at an oral hearing. We wondered whether a claim would be made which was fraudulent, frivolous or unfounded simply to buy time. The appeal process could be the means to buy time to remain in Canada for a longer period. I believe this amendment goes a long way to prevent claims going forward for people buying time, so to speak. After the initial evidence is in, a claim could be judged very quickly as to its validity. For this reason I bring forward the amendment, with a view to providing for an oral hearing based on strong evidence respecting the validity of any claim for refugee status.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support this amendment. When the amendment was brought forward we frequently heard it said that the board would be flooded with these fraudulent, frivolous of unfounded claims. It is strange that people on the outside say that, but those on the Immigration Appeal Board with many years of experience do not say it at all. It is perfectly true that some years ago there was a terrible backlog of cases, but that was under quite different circumstances from those pertaining now. At that time visitors were allowed to apply from within Canada. The board was new at the job and did not have as many members as it has now. When the chairman of the board comes to our committee and says that yes, they can handle the situation, then I suggest that depriving a person of the right is unwarranted.

Personally I think the board can be trusted to determine very quickly and without undue delay wether a claim is fraudulent, frivolous or unfounded. I think the amendment moved by the hon. member for Provencher (M. Epp) is sound. The reasons I have heard so far against it, unless the minister has different or better ones today, are in themselves unfounded. I would not say they were fraudulent. I would not even say they were frivolous. But in my view they are unfounded.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I speak briefly to both motion 42 and 44. May I first refer to my own motion, No. 42. Clause 70 provides:

A person who claims to be a Convention Refugee and has been informed in writing by the Minister pursuant to subsection 45(5) that he is not a Convention refugee may, within such period of time as is prescribed, make an application—

The amendment uses the words "within such reasonable period of time". I realize there may be a fine point of distinction here, but we are faced with the situation, as we were in a number of instances in committee, of wrestling with what kind of clear intent is put into the law which will carry over in effective procedures dealing with people in various circumstances.

The difficulty with this clause as it presently stands is that it says "within such period of time as is prescribed". We could find ourselves in a situation for a variety of reasons which could make it difficult to provide sufficient time for a person to make an application for review. In the proposed amendment there is put into law the very clear intent that there be a reasonable time so as to make it difficult, if not impossible, for such an application to be pursued.

With regard to the second motion, No. 44, I am delighted not only that my colleague from Provencher has brought it forward but that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has risen in support of it. It seems to me to strike at the heart of the whole process of dealing with those who apply for refugee status.

As the bill presently stands, Clause 71 says "is of the opinion that there are reasonable grounds to believe that a claim could, upon the hearing of the application, be established, it shall allow the application to proceed". That puts the burden, if you like, on the individual to prove that there will be a successful outcome. As members on all sides have learned with respect to a number of refugee applications, often the initial decision made on that basis is not the fairest, most just, or the one which relates to the actual facts of the situation. By using the words "fraudulent, frivolous, or unfounded" we are using the words which were discussed in the committee. If I recall correctly, the word "unfounded" was suggested either by the minister or his officials as a word that would protect against the kind of burdening I have described or against making it functionally impossible for the board to do its job effectively and fairly.

I think that those who have taken the time and the trouble to study the procedures by which people have their refugee applications considered believe that this is not an unwarranted situation. I believe it is a reasonable approach, one that is fair and just. It seems to me that in the proposition put forward in motion No. 44 we are making sure that, in those cases where it is often difficult to arrive at a decision at the outset, the benefit of the doubt, if you like, will be on the side of the applicant. I think for an immigration program, and one specifically directed to those who apply for refugee status, we really can do no less. I hope the minister will give this very serious consideration.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, after 70 hours of committee hearings, I heard all the representations made from both sides of this House.

Motion No. 42 appears to be reasonable on the surface, but I consider it unnecessary, since it is a basic tenet of legal interpretation that anything done under a statute must be reasonable, and this would certainly include the making of regulations. More important, however, it could lead to a great deal of frivolous and fruitless litigation as individuals contend that in their particular circumstances the period prescribed was not reasonable. Thus another avenue of delay would be opened up as a result of that.

Dealing with motion No. 44, the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), speaking on behalf of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), conceded that the onus of proof would be reversed. Instead of an applicant endeavouring to demonstrate the validity of his case in order to secure a hearing before the board, if we accept the amendment as drafted, the board would have to grant the hearing unless it could demonstrate that the claim was fraudulent, frivolous or unfounded. This would be next to impossible, since the board would have nothing before it except the claimant's own submission. The intended effect of the screening stage would be largely negated, with all too predictable results.

Although I have listened very carefully to the comments of hon. members and have read very carefully the amendments, I am in no position to accept them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is now on motion No. 42 in the name of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 42 (Mr. MacDonald (Egmont)) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is now on motion No. 44 in the name of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 44 (Mr. Epp) negatived.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is with pleasure I point out to the House that not only have we done very well today but we are so far ahead of schedule we may have difficulties on Monday.

The mover of the next motion, the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), is not present in the House. In any event, if we were to call it a day at this time, that would leave us with only ten motions for Monday. Therefore I wonder if it would meet the wishes of the House to call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is seeking the unanimous consent of the House to call it five o'clock. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Therefore, it being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock p.m.

At 4.46 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

SUGGESTED PROCEDURE FOR FILLING VACANCIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent necessity. In light of the growing concern among employees of the National Harbours Board of Canada, and Ports Canada, with respect to their future job security, and in light of widespread indications that some present employees of the National Harbours Board are not being invited to compete for job opportunities under the ports policy proposals, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the government cease forthwith its present practice of filling vacancies under proposed legislation; namely, C-61, which at this point in time does not have approval in principle by parliament and instead these same employees be given firm assurances by the government that if and when a new ports policy is approved by parliament they will be given full and first opportunity to apply for the positions to be created by the new legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43 unanimous consent of the House is required before a motion can be put. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROHIBITION AGAINST POSSESSION OF FIREARMS BY SECURITY GUARDS DURING LABOUR DISPUTES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the deplorable use of violence by security guards at Robin Hood Mills in Montreal on Friday. Considering that the possession of firearms by security guards at the time of an industrial dispute can lead to the destruction of human life, or even to the serious injury of working people, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the Minister of Labour to immediately contact the president of Robin Hood Multifoods Limited to make it clear that such practices must be discontinued immediately; and, further, to take immediate steps to ensure that this policy of the non-presence of firearms be established across the country in all areas of federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent pursuant to Standing Order 43?

Some hon. Members: No!

REQUEST THAT LIST OF ALLEGEDLY BIASED REPORTERS BE SENT TO COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of pressing necessity.

Since the CRTC report did not substantiate allegations to the effect that CBC employees were altering information to promote the constitutional option of sovereignty and association; since the Prime Minister and some of his cabinet colleagues had lodged rather specific charges because they even had in their possession, so they said, a list of the names of those reporters working to destroy the country; and since the Prime Minister maintains that the report confirms his comments, thus leaving some suspicions about the integrity of those employees, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That the Prime Minister make official apologies or table a list of suspected individuals before the standing committee on broadcasting so that the said committee be in a position to investigate and judge those allegations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE SENATE

SUGGESTION SENATORS BE RELIEVED OF POSITIONS AND NO REPLACEMENTS APPOINTED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House, noting that certain Senators feel that they cannot live on the $31,100 a year they now receive, recommends that they be relieved of their positions so that they can spend their full time dealing in stock options, sitting on boards of directors and in other pursuits that will enable them to make the kind of money they feel they must have, and that no one be appointed to fill the vacancies created by their removal from the other place, thus hastening the day when the Senate will be extinct.

Mr. Speaker: I have some very severe reservations about the urgent and pressing necessity of that motion.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH PRESS COUNCIL TO IMPROVE ACCOUNTABILITY AND AUTOMATIC REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE OF ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the House and perhaps even the country would be edified if we had another go at the pejorative CRTC report. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would respond to the suggestion of the president of the CBC that, as a way of improving the CBC's accountability, and presumably that of the, as they say, electronic media, a press council be set up. Would the Prime Minister respond to this suggestion of the president of the CBC?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will certainly study it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fairweather: That is good news. I have a second suggestion which I hope will be studied, too. I am being assisted by certain others who are would be speakers, Mr. Speaker. As a suggestion, would the government led by the Prime Minister consider the automatic referral of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation annual report to the standing committee on broadcasting so that its tattered accountability might be remedied?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have dealt with this question before, simply by responding that automatic referrals would put a burden on the committees and that perhaps members of parliament themselves would find it took time from them to which they might spend going into other matters, such as departmental estimates, in detail. The House leader on this side in specific cases, perhaps like that of the CBC, would be prepared to discuss with the opposition House leaders the conduct of business in committees, which would permit this committee to start such a report; but the hon. member for Fundy-Royal knows that in the past two or three weeks we have had many suggestions for referral of all kinds of annual reports, and my answer was that obviously we cannot refer them all, otherwise the committees will not have time to do their other business.

Mr. Fairweather: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How does the Prime Minister expect that the reorganization of the CBC, as suggested by the president of the CRTC, will affect those verging on subversion in the other electronic media who are also indicted by Mr. Boyle's report?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps that is what Mr. Johnston and the hon. member have in mind when they talk of a press council. Certainly it is a good course to be taken if the media, electronic or otherwise, could have some form of self-discipline. That is always the preferred course, failing which, of course, discipline has to be imposed upon them, which nobody likes.

INFORMATION

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH NEW INFORMATION SERVICE—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF PERSONNEL AND COST

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister as well. In another classic case of the government wanting to shoot the messenger, the Prime Minister's Secretary of State on Saturday is reported to have reacted to instructions from the right hon. gentleman in regard to setting up a task force so that there may be a new study done on setting up a new mini Information Canada. He is reported as saying that the reason for setting one up would be that the only news about the government these days is bad news.

I wonder if the Prime Minister would mind telling the House what has changed in the last year to permit the reviving of a new form of Information Canada only one year after it was killed off. The reason it was terminated at that time was to save taxpayers $7 million a year. What has happened in the last year to change the Prime Minister's mind?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is not so much a question of shooting the messenger as making sure there are enough messengers around so that all messages can be conveyed by the Canadian government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Who is your joke writer, Pierre?

Mr. Trudeau: The Secretary of State has been setting up a group, within his jurisdiction and within his authority, of ten people borrowed from other departments whose sole purpose would be to distribute material on the subject of Canadian unity. It has nothing to do with the much broader functions of the previous Information Canada.

In answer to the precise question as to what has happened in the past year, there was an election in the province of Quebec of a government dedicated to the separation of that province from the country. There have been approximately 10 or 15 offices set up by that government across the province to convey information favourable to separatism. The hon. member should join me in approving the setting up, at the federal government level, of an information centre which would counteract that subversive propaganda.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Prime Minister has now taken us into his confidence. He has now let us know one of the purposes, and perhaps the only purpose, of this task force. If he expects to get our endorsation, our support and our co-operation, surely he would not mind telling the House or tabling some time soon the terms of reference so that we may be assured that they do not exceed what the Prime Minister has just told us. We should like to know who are on it, what it is going to cost and what the eventual object, procedure and form of this new propaganda machine may be.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the general concern of the hon. member is legitimate. It seems to me we already anticipated it by ensuring that the so-called Tellier group in the Privy Council office would consult with the various opposition parties as to the work they were doing. I should be very surprised if Mr. Tellier has not already indicated to the Leader of the Opposition the intention of having him work with Mr. Tellier and the intention of setting up a group which would be concerned with making available to Canadians information and facts favourable to Canada rather than to separatism.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, apart from any general consultations that the members of the opposition may have had with the Letellier group, I return to my question once again. Would the Prime Minister mind taking us into his confidence and telling us exactly who is on the task force? We should also like to know what their terms of reference are or might be, if those terms of reference have been laid down.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I just answered that this particular group is under the authority of the Secretary of State for reasons of financial administration, but it is to work with the Tellier group. The Tellier group has already met with the opposition parties. If they forgot to ask them the right questions, perhaps they can think of them the next time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: We are asking you.

BILINGUALISM

PROPOSAL FOR COST-SHARING MINORITY LANGUAGE PROGRAMS—SUGGESTED DISCUSSION BY PROVINCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said in the House on Friday that minority language rights of the country are not matters for bargaining. I agree with the Prime Minister, as I am sure most thinking Canadians do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The serious question is this: How can we achieve the most speedy implementation of this ideal? For this reason I ask the Prime Minister if he or the Secretary of State requested the provinces to discuss at their meeting next month proposals the Secretary of State put forward in this House on June 21 which include proposals for federal cost-sharing in the implementation of minority language programs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the leader of the New Democratic Party knows the federal government has no locus standi to suggest items for the agenda of the meeting of provincial premiers. But I could say that I discussed informally these matters with some of the premiers at a meeting I had with Liberal leaders of the ten provinces which was held in this capital one week ago. I hope the premiers will do some of the things the hon. member is suggesting but of course I cannot ask the chairman of that conference to inscribe anything in particular on the agenda. I believe the leader of the New Democratic Party has some connection with some premiers. Perhaps he would put a suggestion to them.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Strange as it may seem, I understand the Prime Minister as well has some connection with some premiers. I ask him my question in a most serious and non-partisan way. Given the importance of minority language rights, an importance which the Prime Minister correctly told the House transcends provincial jurisdictional authority since it has national implications at this point in our history, and considering that almost all the provinces agreed in Victoria in 1971 that something should be done about this important matter, would the Prime Minister now follow the course his own logic dictates, get in touch with Premier Hatfield and request that at the meeting which is to take place in one month the provincial premiers put on the agenda of the meeting proposals the federal government made in the House of Commons last month.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the hon. member grasped my previous answer. He made some quip about my having some contact with provincial premiers. That was my answer—that at a meeting I had last Monday, which included some provincial premiers, I suggested such a course to them. I suggested it publicly and expressed the hope they would do that. I cannot do more than that to make sure they put a specific item on their agenda. Let us put it that I have suggested this informally and in other ways.

Mr. Broadbent: To Premier Hatfield?

Mr. Trudeau: Not to Mr. Hatfield directly, Mr. Speaker. But the hon. member should gather from my answer that I have expressed the hope that the premiers would do that, and I have talked to at least two premiers to that effect.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. To ensure that the proposal is given the seriousness it merits, does the Prime Minister not agree that at this point in our history it would be desirable for him, as head of the national government, to get in touch with Premier Hatfield, who will be chairman of the conference, and ask him to consider consulting with the other premiers on the desirability of their discussing that important matter at the conference next month? I say this as during the past 48 hours provincial premiers of different provinces representing different political parties in Canada have shown an openness and serious approach to this issue.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I feel the leader of the NDP means to be constructive in his suggestions and he, in effect, is seeking the same result as I indicated I was seeking. It is really a matter of knowing whether the proper way to achieve those results is for the federal Prime Minister to request that the provincial premiers put something on the agenda. It is my suggestion that it is not the proper way to go about these things. The important thing is that that type of discussion take place, and I have taken certain measures to ensure that it does take place if the provinces so desire. But the hon. member knows that the provinces are rather jealous of their jurisdiction in the area of education and I think it would not be productive for me to request, demand or suggest that the chairman of the conference do certain things. The important thing is that premiers who are participating in that conference do make such suggestions, and I invite the leader of the NDP to make that suggestion at least to Premier Schreyer and Premier Blakeney.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER MAINTAINS SOME REPORTERS SEPARATISTS AND SLANT NEWS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister.

Considering the serious charges laid by the Prime Minister and some of his ministers against CBC reporters in connection with their separatist leanings, and considering the denials contained in the CRTC report tabled recently, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he himself and the members of his cabinet concerned continue to maintain that some CBC reporters are separatists and give biased information to favour their constitutional option?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member for Champlain is asking this question for the purpose of getting some political credit, and I do not accuse him of that, but I can only remind him that on several occasions his lamented leader, Mr. Réal Caouette, did denounce in this House the separatist and other leanings of the CBC. I think the hon. member's memory is too short and that he should have more respect for the memory of his leader.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

I did not ask what the opinion of my former leader was, but that of the Prime Minister, so he should consider answering our questions. My supplementary question is this: does the Prime Minister admit that approaches to Canadian unity different from his own may exist?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member really wants to know what I think, he need only read the answers I gave to the questions on the Boyle report which were directed to me every day of last week. I dealt also with this subject during my press conference. If the hon. member wants to be up to date, perhaps he should question me again tomorrow or the day after tomorrow.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker, I must insist in my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Since Canadians in general and Quebeckers in particular are seeking a new type of constitutional agreement, does the Prime Minister feel that the CBC should normally reflect this search for a new identity?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, Mr. Speaker, so what?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—LEVEL IN OCTOBER, 1978—POSSIBILITY OF CUT IN PERSONAL INCOME TAX

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Writing in the Canadian Tax Journal, Professors Jump and Wilson of the Institute for Policy Analysis of the University of Toronto have indicated that they feel the last federal budget will have no effect on current levels of inflation which they anticipate will run at approximately 8 per cent in 1978, and as the inflation target for the third year of the control program set by the government is 4 per cent, would the minister indicate if he is still confident that the Canadian economy will achieve a 4 per cent inflation level by October, 1978, and if not, what is his new target?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I recently read the article but I do not seem to recall those figures. I think I had better check them to see if the hon. member quoted them correctly.

Mr. Stevens: My question is again for the Minister of Finance who is most selective in what he recalls in this House.

● (1430)

My supplementary is again based on what Professors Jump and Wilson have stated in their article, and this time for the minister's benefit I will quote it. Professor Jump and Professor Wilson have stated that a larger cut in personal income taxes would have been more effective in directly stimulating consumer spending and in bringing into play the economy's full multiplier and accelerator forces, which in turn would lower unemployment to a greater extent than the minister's present budgetary thrust is. Would the minister indicate if he is giving any consideration to such a budgetary thrust in the near future?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am not contemplating a budget at this time.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO ESTABLISH COMMITTEE TO STUDY DOCUMENT "THE WAY AHEAD"

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): The minister has once again reiterated that he is not contemplating a new budget. Would he indicate to the House why he has not pressed for the calling of motion No. 13, which was put on the order paper under his name calling for the establishment of a joint committee of this House and the other place? That committee would be designed to review "The Way Ahead" which the minister tabled in the House. Why is the minister not pressing to set up that committee so that we can have a more thoughtful review of the economy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, principally because of the activities of hon. members of this House in other committees it was decided not to go ahead.

Mr. Stevens: What about the recess?

EFFECT OF UPTURN IN DISPOSABLE INCOME AND PERSONAL CONSUMPTION—POSSIBILITY OF CUT IN SALES AND INCOME TAXES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have one short supplementary, and perhaps a second one, if Your Honour desires it. The OECD predicts that economic recovery could accelerate in the first quarter of 1978 if there is an upturn in real disposable income and personal consumption. Does the minister agree with that finding of the OECD, and if so, how does he hope to accomplish that end?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the most important ways to have an increase in personal disposable income is to get the rate of inflation down, and it is for that reason that we have been directing our policies in that direction for the last couple of years.

Mr. Alexander: Another suggestion which has been made is that we should cut personal income taxes for low and middle income earners as well as cut federal sales tax, particularly as it relates to building materials. Is the minister now saying that he has thrown those suggestions out the window for the time being?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I just indicated to the hon. member's colleague that I am not going to propose further budgetary measures at this time. I think it is fair to remind the hon. member again that we did indeed reduce federal income taxes in order to increase the minimum income on which tax is paid to $7,000 a year. Unhappily, the hon. gentleman voted against that.

Mr. Alexander: That is a lot of baloney.

Mr. Stevens: You should not mislead the House.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGATION OF BIASED NEWS REPORTING—SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF NEWS BE PROHIBITED

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I hate to interrupt the Prime Minister's discussion about external affairs, but I would like to pursue the question raised by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. Having in mind that there is great unease in the country about the proposition contained in the CRTC report, about the way in which the Prime Minister and his friends incited the commission hearing to start with, about the report itself and about the Prime Minister's reaction to it, which seems to move very categorically and clearly toward a form of media control and management, will the Prime Minister assure the House—I see he is smiling, but this is much more serious in the mind of the Prime Minister outside this House than it is here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Will the Prime Minister give a categorical assurance to the House that the terms of reference in the preamble of any form of further inquiry into this matter will clearly rule out any suggestion, discussion or recommendation about government control of the media, either broadcasting or written?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is certainly asking the question with some levity. I can see that by his smile. He knows very well that the government is as opposed to any form of censorship as he is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Having in mind the movements of this government toward authoritarianism, I am not asking the question with any levity at all. Will the Prime Minister become serious about this and reassure the public, which is very concerned about the movements of this government, that there is no attempt on the part of the government and the Prime Minister in any way to try to secure media management or control?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when the opposition makes it quite clear in its party program that it is opposed to media control, then the hon. member can stand and ask that question.

PENITENTIARIES

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMITTEE ON REFORM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the widespread support among Canadians generally for the recommendations contained in the subcommittee report on the penitentiary system in Canada, would the minister inform the House when we might expect a statement to be forthcoming with respect to the implementation of the recommendations contained in that report?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): I thank the hon. member for his question, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to inform him that I have almost finished considering the most interesting recommendations made by the parliamentary subcommittee, and that I intend to table my answer in the House on Friday August 5.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION OF DIVERSION OF FUNDS BY MANITOBA INDIAN BROTHERHOOD—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I gave him notice of this question last week. Is the minister in a position today to report on the allegations made by Mr. Tony Walker, formerly employed by the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood, regarding certain irregularities relating to possible diversion of government funds given to the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood for research?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, officials in my department have been investigating this matter for about nine months now. They started the investigation long before the allegations were recently made. We see nothing of the nature of what was described by the person concerned, but there were some problems with financing, and we are working those out.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my information is that when Mr. Walker brought this to the attention of the assistant deputy minister, the department then referred the matter back to the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood. I wonder if the minister can explain why his department asked the brotherhood to investigate itself on this particular matter, and further, whether the minister is prepared to appoint an independent auditor to verify expenditures made by the brotherhood, as stipulated in the memorandum of agreement between the government and the brotherhood, especially in light of the fact that Mr. Tony Walker was fired from the brotherhood immediately after bringing this to the attention of the assistant deputy minister.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, that is not correct. The matter was being investigated by officials of the department, including some from Ottawa, and not by the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood. However, the financial problems are being worked out between the officials of my department and the MIB. As I said earlier, the matters in question were not brought to light by Mr. Walker. They were known for some time. As a matter of fact, I met with the executive of the MIB several times long before Mr. Walker made his statement.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there is an agreement between the MIB and the department which provides for the appointment of an independent auditor to look into the affairs of the MIB relating to government funds. Will the minister now undertake to have an independent auditor investigate the records with respect to expenditures and with respect to the allegations raised by Mr. Walker?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, if that has not already been done, I will look into that possibility.

SYDNEY STEEL—REQUEST FOR AID IN MODERNIZING PLANT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister, who will recall that last week I asked him whether the government of Nova Scotia or SYSCO made any specific proposal or request to the government of Canada respecting the modernization of the Sydney Steel plant which, of course, is of great concern to the people of Cape Breton and northern Nova Scotia. The Prime Minister said he would take the question as notice. Can he now give me an answer on this very important situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may have received an answer. I have not read it yet, if I have received it.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long the House will be sitting, but in view of the importance of the question to a substantial number of Canadians, if the Prime Minister is not able to give me an oral response before the House rises, would he inform me by telephone or by letter?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will see that somebody does that.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH CABINET

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister may have been informed that on the weekend in Cape Breton, where there is such heavy unemployment, many eminent people including those holding public office, clergy, professors and labour leaders, attempted to attract the attention of the nation to the heavy unemployment in that area. They want some action from the Prime Minister in order to correct an abnormal and heavy unemployment. They look to the Prime Minister for answers. Has the Prime Minister anything to offer? Is he or a group of his cabinet ministers prepared to meet with them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if such a group asks to meet with a group of cabinet ministers, we always react favourably to such a request.

Mr. Hogan: The Prime Minister knows that telegrams have been sent to his office for at least three weeks. He sent a Mr. Brian Fleming there. He has not yet reported to these people. This is the reason for the additional demonstrations. To date they have been peaceful, but we have no guarantee they will remain that way. How long are we going to be expected to be second class citizens in this country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ALLEGED CHALLENGE BY MINISTER TO DEBATE MARKETING BOARD-SUPPLY MANAGEMENT ISSUE—ACCEPTANCE BY COLIN THATCHER

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the minister's recent challenge to debate the marketing board-supply management issue with anyone respecting the Canadian cattle industry, and in view of the acceptance of this challenge by Colin Thatcher, MLA, a practical cattleman from Saskatchewan, will the minister assure the House and Canadian cattlemen that he will indeed carry out his personal agreement to proceed with this debate?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has changed some of the words. I can let him listen to the tape when I addressed the Saskatchewan Rural Municipalities Association when I said I would debate the merits of supply-management and marketing boards. I did not say one word about beef. The person who saw fit to cross the House in the Saskatchewan legislature is now trying to make some political hay. I am not going to change the commitments I have made for service to Canadians in order to give him a platform. I want to say one thing. I am not one bit afraid of him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Is the implication of the minister's answer that he had anticipated an easy-going Liberal to Liberal debate but now backs away from a hard hitting, no holds barred debate with a genuine western cattleman?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BILINGUALISM

DATE OF NEXT MEETING WITH PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE—POSSIBILITY OF PAYING BONUS TO BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Considering that in September 1969 the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission recommended in its third volume the payment of a bilingualism bonus to the categories of civil servants holding positions designated as bilingual; considering that a joint committee, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance, have been sitting since January 3, 1973 to study the implications of the policy on official languages; and considering that the President of the Treasury Board acknowledged that the payment of such a bonus has been due since November 1, 1976, can the hon. gentleman inform the members of the House when the next meeting between his officials and those of the Public Service Alliance will be held to expedite the payment of this bonus, and whether he will consider the proposition providing the immediate payment of a minimum amount to all those holding positions designated as bilingual, even if it entails the adjustment of those amounts during the coming months considering that the discussions to this effect have been going on for four years?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I anticipate being in formal and detailed consultation with the Public Service Unions and the National Joint Council in a matter of days, probably next week.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

ALLEGATION OF IMPROPER PROCEDURE IN FILLING VACANCIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. It arises out of a practice authorized by the Minister of Transport or his officials with regard to filling vacancies or job positions which will be created by legislation presently before this House. It has passed first reading stage, but has not yet received approval in principle, been before the committee or been passed. Will the President of the Treasury Board use his good offices to have this practice cease, not only because it is an affront to parliament but because there are widespread rumours of employees of National Harbours Board and Ports Canada not being offered jobs under the proposals presently before us?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the premise of the hon. member's preamble. I do not recognize his description of the placement policy as being the actual practice. I will certainly examine his question. I am sure the Minister of Transport will do so as well. In any event, I do not believe that is an accurate description of what is planned.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Acting Minister of Transport. Will he draw to the attention of the minister that there is indeed some widespread concern? Also, will he suggest to the Minister of Transport that the other route be taken with regard to job security for employees of National Harbours Board and Ports Canada? Will he assure them that when this legislation is part of the law of Canada they will be given full opportunity to apply for jobs created under the new ports policy, if and when it is passed?

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

AWARDING OF CONTRACT TO MANITOBA INSTITUTE OF MANAGEMENT—DISCLOSURE BY CHAIRMAN OF DIRECTORSHIP

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I gave the Minister of Agriculture notice of my intention to raise this question. It arises from the decision by the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation to award an untendered $80,000 contract to the Manitoba Institute of Management, of which he was a director at the time. In view of the fact that the chairman sought the approval of the FCC's board only some months after awarding the contract, may I ask the minister whether the chairman in any way sought his approval prior to awarding the contract to MIM and did he at that time disclose to the minister the fact that he was a director of the consulting firm?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question is rather detailed. There has been a lot of discussion and insinuation with regard to what the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation has or has not done. Under the authority vested in the Farm Credit Corporation, he can hire people to do studies and so on. I am told that the Manitoba Institute of Management is a non-profit organization. He did report to the board. In early May 1975, he reported to me that he was going to hire the institute. Some months after that, he asked for confirmation of the Farm Credit Corporation Board. He explained to them what he did. They condoned it at that time. As hon. members know, the Auditor General's report, which was handed to me within the past few days, clears the Farm Credit Corporation of any irregularities. The Auditor General certainly did not point out any irregularities to me. I have to go by what the board of directors say and what the Auditor General says. If the hon. member has any further information that is sound and factual, I would appreciate hearing it.

Mr. Beatty: Has the minister determined whether the chairman disclosed the fact that he was a director of the Manitoba Institute of Management at the time he asked the board to approve his decision?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation informed me that he was a director of the MIM. He also submitted all his outside interests to the proper authorities in order to determine whether there was any conflict of interest. I take that for granted when I am informed that he has no conflict of interest. I do not have an investigation team that runs around and investigates everybody. I asked the present chairman to resign from a position in the province of Manitoba to accept this challenge. I did so because of his great ability. One of the finest books ever written on farm credit was done by him when he was an employee of the former Minister of Agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

INTERNAL MANAGEMENT AUDIT BY SIBBALD GROUP—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): The minister should know that the public declaration and public file by the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation makes no reference to the fact that he was a director of the Manitoba Institute of Management. In view of the fact that the Sibbald Group report that grew out of the MIM study was highly critical of senior management of the Farm Credit Corporation and pointed out the serious deterioration in morale within the Farm Credit Corporation, can the minister tell the House what specific action he proposes to take to restore direction to this $306 million corporation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, the board of directors and management took prompt action on a study that they asked to be undertaken on the corporation itself. If one checks the minutes of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, one will see that from time to time members from both sides of this House have made strong representations for the Farm Credit Corporation to be more realistic. Some of these areas have been touched on by the new administration in the Farm Credit Corporation. There is some resentment. I am not saying that they are perfect in what they are doing. Some of the suggestions of the Sibbald report have been followed up quite rapidly. For the first time there has been a director of the Farm Credit Corporation appointed from outside the public service. He is a young farmer from eastern Ontario who is bilingual.

● (1450)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: He has had past experience in the Farm Credit Corporation. He is an actual farmer. This is a new breakthrough, as far as I am concerned. I am concerned about the Farm Credit Corporation being operated in a proper fashion. We must have some real basic facts which indicate that something improper was done, rather than a rumour mill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Can the Postmaster General tell this House what progress is being made in resolving the illegal and damaging work stoppage still continuing in the Ottawa Post Office?

An hon. Member: Good question, Lloyd.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the hon. gentleman that the backlog which was a built up last week is now being cleared. There are 400,000 CPP cheques coming in today which will be processed. Unfortunately, we have had to do that with the hiring of additional casuals, which was done after a great deal of hesitation. However, there are approximately 250 regular employees who are now clearing the mail. Hopefully, the meetings we are attempting to have with the local will take place within a short period of time in order for the matter to be regularized.

MEASURES TO STOP EXODUS OF CAPITAL TO UNITED STATES—REASON REAL ESTATE DEVELOPERS WILL NOT INVEST IN CANADA

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. There are continuing alarming reports of the mass exodus of individual and corporate investment money going from Canada to the United States, such as millions of dollars that Canadians are investing in Florida real estate, manufacturing and banking. The United States is openly encouraging businesses in Montreal and Toronto to move to the United States. They are meeting with some success, because industry and business just cannot survive in the current Canadian climate. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is planning any meetings with the business communities to help this flow of money and businesses, or is he planning a new budget to try to stop this serious situation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been meeting continuously with provincial governments and with leaders of the business community. The hon. member posed two questions. The first was with regard to budgetary changes. I remind him that something over $700 million of changes were made in favour of the corporate business sector in the March 31 budget. We believe it is a favourable climate, combined with the changes in the dividend tax credit for business investment in Canada.

On the question of the problem of inflation in Canada, indeed that continues to be a problem. The competitiveness of Canadian industry is a matter of grave concern, and it is for that reason we have continued to place very heavy emphasis on restraining the increase in costs in this country.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, unemployment is somewhere between a million and a million and a half. The construction industry has ground to a halt. Real estate developers in Canada this year have poured $2½ billion into real estate development in the United States. Canadian real estate developers are developing 17 major complexes in the United States. In view of all this, could the minister arrange some meetings with the real estate development industry in this country to find out why they will not invest in Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the obvious conclusion would be that at the present time,—and speaking only for my own community—there is a substantial excess of commercial capacity in this country. Obviously when there is that commercial capacity at the present time, it does not make sense to further invest.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just like the depression.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PENSIONS FOR RETIRED RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that three years have gone by since the minister commissioned Dr. Noel Hall to make a report on railway pensions, and in view of the fact that consideration of that report by management and the unions does nothing for the railroad workers already retired and on pension, will the minister say when he intends to announce what the government proposes to do to see to it that those already retired get an increase in their pensions?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is aware that a lot of the report puts some considerable pressure on the CPR with respect to upgrading pensions for those already on retirement. I am convinced this is something the union leadership is concerned about, even though they are not presently in the work force. I am hopeful the union leadership will intend to do something about this in the next round of negotiations.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that neither the CPR nor the CNR has provided any escalation of pensions in 1977, will the government put pressure on these two railways to take action to increase the pensions of their workers already retired without any further delay?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, when we are involved with the railways and the unions, in order to keep a satisfied work force,—and the work force here is an excellent one—it is always our intention to try to do all we can to ensure that the working conditions are adequate. That should be a sufficient answer for the hon. member.

POSSIBILITY OF RECIPROCITY AGREEMENT ON PENSIONS WITH UNITED KINGDOM—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Seeing functionaries of the Social Welfare Department of Great Britain were present in the Speaker's gallery last week, can the minister tell us whether that visit took place in the context of the signing of a reciprocal agreement with Great Britain, which I so often advocated, providing the indexation of British pensions to recipients living in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. Still, I must indicate to the hon. member that the officials of my department did meet British functionaries about two weeks ago, and that negotiations were very encouraging. There will be further exchanges of documents in coming weeks and I think we can foresee another meeting early in the fall. I trust therefore that I shall be able to bring good news to the hon. member at that time.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary. Can the minister give us a set date, or even an approximate date, for the signing of such an agreement?

Mr. Lalonde: As far as Canada is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we are ready to sign an agreement tomorrow morning, but our British colleagues have run into financial difficulties they want to analyse. I hope we can reach an agreement in the fall, but I am unable to give a specific date. Again, I point out that the initiative in that regard lies in the hands of my British colleagues.

INDUSTRIAL MILK—POSSIBILITY OF CUT IN QUOTA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the hardships which the dairy farmers of Canada experienced as a result of quota reduction during the past year, and in view of the rumour that the Canadian Dairy Commission may recommend a further cut in quota, will the minister approve the quota cut if the dairy commission recommends it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. By virtue of the terminology of the question, it is hypothetical.

INDUSTRIAL MILK—POSSIBILITY OF CUT IN PRODUCTION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture as well. It relates to the Canadian Dairy Commission and its proposed 4 per cent cutback in milk production which will exclude Canadian dairy farmers from a $7 million industry and will cost Canadian dairy farmers $7 million. Can the minister tell us whether on the agenda of the milk supply management committee, which will be meeting later this week, there is an item relating to a possible cut in production for the present dairy year?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I know of no such item, Mr. Speaker. No information has been given to me about such a cut. I am meeting the Dairy Commission tomorrow, but no suggestion of a cut has been made to me. The latest documents I have seen were those available at the meeting of provincial ministers in Victoria and no suggestion of that kind was made then. I would be very surprised if such a course were contemplated—if it were, it would be because of something which had happened very recently. I would point out, however, that it is the supply-management committee which has the responsibility for making these decisions, and it would have to be pretty sure it was making the right decision before it took action along the lines suggested by the hon. member. It is not the Minister of Agriculture who makes decisions of that kind.

Mr. Paproski: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to apologize to the House for possibly becoming confused as to names in my answer to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, and to correct Hansard at page 7916. There was a name change from York Place (Hamilton) Limited to York Place of Hamilton Incorporated. Main Place has nothing to do with York Place. They are two distinct and separate projects. Nevertheless, I maintain the rest of my answer to be substantively correct.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the parliamentary secretary has, though belatedly, corrected his response. I wonder if he is now in a position to correct his response with respect to Mr. Shaw's connection with the charges relating to the York Place project? He may wish to review that part of his answer, as well, to determine whether or not he has misled the House.

Mr. Speaker: Even if the parliamentary secretary were prepared to do that, he might find difficulty at this point in our proceedings.

Question No. 2,152—Mr. Nystrom:

1. (a) In regard to the 1975-76 crop year and the two-price system for wheat, did the Canadian Wheat Board receive money from the government in order to make up the difference between the domestic and international prices for wheat and, if so (a) in what amount (b) what was the price subsidy on a per bushel basis?

2. How many bushels of wheat were sold to domestic millers at $3.25 per bushel over and above the two-price system?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): In so far as the Canadian Wheat Board is concerned: 1. (a) Yes; (a) $82,523,-175.86; (b) Average price subsidy per bushel $1.49.

2. None reported.

PREVENTION OF POLLUTION FROM FOREIGN SHIPS

Question No. 2,409—Mr. Howie:

What steps are being taken to ensure that foreign vessels sailing in Canadian waters conform to Canadian standards of shipping safety in light of oil spills off the coast of North America, and considering that many of the vessels responsible for these incidents were registered in countries which encourage such registration by retaining lax safety regulations for their merchant marine fleets?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): All foreign oil tankers of 500 tons, gross tonnage and over are required to have on board a valid certificate to verify that the ship complies with Canadian regulations relating to the navigating appliances and pollution prevention. Also these tankers must comply with international conventions relating to the design and construction of the ship, its machinery, equipment and the assignment of load lines. The Canada Shipping Act provides for a penalty of up to $100,000 where a ship is found guilty of entering or navigating in Canadian waters without a valid certificate or where it is not in compliance with regulations. Where foreign ships are found to not comply with international standards, such ships can be detained until defects are repaired or remedied. With respect to navigating appliances, these ships are required to be provided with magnetic compasses of approved types, an efficient gyro compass, sounding apparatus, a marine radar, a V.H.F. radiotelephone facility capable of receiving and transmitting on designated frequencies and an additional radio capable of receiving navigational warnings. Oil tankers of 1,600 tons or more are required to be provided with two marine radars, an internal communication system, manoeuvring system indicators and appliances such as rudder angle indicators, propeller direction indicators and other devices designed to assist in manoeuvring and controlling the ship, and a radio direction finding apparatus. Other equipment required includes searchlights and signalling flags. Every ship must have on board the latest editions of charts and other publications such as tide and current tables, sailing directions, lists of lights, buoys and fog signals, Radio Aids to Marine Navigation, Code of Navigation Practices and Procedures and a copy of the Canadian Notices to Mariners for the area to be navigated. All of the foregoing equipment and publications must be maintained in an efficient manner and up-dated. Where necessary spare parts must be supplied. Foreign ships navigating in Canadian waters are required to comply with regulations regarding deck watches in order to ensure that there are sufficient officers and crew members on watch particularly in areas where marine traffic may present danger of collision and accidents. The Oil Pollution Prevention Regulations, Garbage Pollution Prevention Regulations and the Pollutant Substances Regulations prohibit the discharge of oil, garbage and other designated pollutants from ships into waters under Canadian jurisdiction. Additionally, the Oil Pollution Prevention Regulations require all oil tankers built after January 1, 1974 to limit cargo tank sizes in accordance with international standards and require all ships to keep records of oil transfers. Regulations prohibit the discharge of oil from ships and where offences are detected, fines of up to $100,000 can be imposed when ships are found guilty of such violations. During the past three years the department was successful in 107 prosecutions for violations of the Pollution Prevention Regulations. A total of $321,575 was levied in fines. In many other cases minor infractions were dealt with by requiring the ship to rectify defects prior to proceeding. In order to enforce these regulations officers of the Department of Transport have been designated as pollution prevention officers under the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act. These officers have the power to require ships to provide information regarding the condition of the ship, its cargo, the manner in which the cargo is stowed and other information to ensure that the ship complies with the act and regulations. Such an officer may go on board ships bound for a place in Canada in order to carry out inspections, order a ship out of Canadian waters or otherwise direct it where he suspects that the ship fails to comply with the act or regulations, or where he is satisfied that such order is necessary to prevent a discharge or a pollutant such as oil or chemicals. Any review of existing regulations will be contingent upon the outcome of the UN Conference on the Law of the Sea and the development of international standards by other agencies such as the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization. Vessel traffic management systems have been established and continue to be upgraded. The procedures provide for traffic separation, VHF radiotelephone communication between ships and a central regulating centre, ship to ship communication and, in some localities, radar surveillance. Ships report their positions and intended movements at specified reporting points and obtain clearance as required. The centre gives information on traffic, weather, navigational conditions, etc.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION—SALARIES

Question No. 2,734—Mr. Robinson:

What is the salary of the (a) Executive (b) Director (c) Chairman (d) Vice-Chairman (e) board members of the Canadian Transport Commission?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission reports as follows: the question is answered on the basis that the term "Chairman" means "President"; that the term "Vice-Chairman" means "Vice-president" and that there is no position of "Executive" and a separate position of "Director". The president of the commission is paid at a rate with the range DM-3 ($54,000-$66,000); the vice-president (legal) is paid at a rate within the range DM-2 ($45,500-$60,500); and members of the commission are paid at a rate within the range SX-2 ($31,500-$41,500).

URANIUM EXPORT TO FRANCE

Question No. 2,786—Mr. Jones:

Are there any plans or agreements for France to import uranium from Quebec and, if so, were these agreements discussed at the three day meeting with President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing and Premier Raymond Barre on the Prime Minister's visit to France in May?

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): While exploration activity has revealed significant deposits of uranium in Quebec, their development is still at a preliminary stage. There are no agreements or current plans for the export of this uranium to France.

EXPENDITURES—SAULT STE. MARIE

Question No. 2,815—Mr. Symes:

What was the total amount spent in Sault Ste. Marie from October 1972 to date by the Department of National Defence?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence):

Fiscal Years	Expenditure
1972-73	See note below
1973-74	See note below
1974-75	$ 443,000
1975-76	$ 595,000
1976-77	$ 810,000
	$1,848,000

NOTE: Data for 1972-73 and 1973-74 is not readily available. It could involve a research of a great many closed files and the department does not have the necessary resources to do this.

HIGHWAYS IN ATLANTIC REGION

Question No. 2,838—Mr. Jones:

1. Is it the intention of the government to spend $100 million on highways in the Atlantic provinces and, if so (a) on what basis (b) what amount will be spent in each province and in what centres?

2. Is there any connection between the cancellation of the greater part of Rail Transportation in the Atlantic provinces and the announcement of the proposed money to be spent on highways?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) and (b) On May 25, 1977, I announced that the federal government was prepared to spend up to $100 million in the Atlantic provinces over the 1977/78 fiscal years, jointly with each of the four provinces, for the purposes of assisting in the strengthening and improvement of portions of the primary highway system in the region. The precise terms of federal/provincial agreements, including the allocation of the federal funds among the four provinces, and the specific highway links to be strengthened or improved, are under discussion.

2. No decision has been made to abandon any rail passenger service in the Atlantic provinces. The Canadian Transport Commission has held hearings related to these routes and has stated that a decision will be made by December of this year. The over-all objective of the government is to improve rail transportation services when such services make sense, and to this end is prepared to pay 100 per cent of any operating deficits when effective management has been demonstrated. Alternatives to upgrade the service will be evaluated after the CTC decision has been made.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

The House resumed, from Friday, July 22, consideration of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont) for (Mr. De Bané) moved:

Motion No. 46.

That Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in Clause 83 by striking out lines 24 and 25 at page 47 and substituting the following therefor:

"certificate issued at the discretion of a judge of the Federal Court of Canada upon application of the Minister and the Solicitor General, which application shall contain all the particulars of security or criminal intelligence reports, is filed with the Board".

He said: In resuming this debate at the report stage of Bill C-24, I would like to remind the House that motion No. 46 which seeks to amend clause 83 of this bill, under the heading of security which concerns the terms of reference of the Immigration Appeal Board, has the same effect as amendment No. 29 which sought to amend section 39 of the law which applied to permanent residents. The nature of section 24, contrary to clauses 39 and 40 which have been included in the bill at the request of the RCMP security services, is not a new point of law. Actually, it is a repetition of section 21 of the Immigration Appeal Board Act adopted by the House in 1967.

Clause 83 applies to permanent residents or those who claim the permanent resident status. Those are visa holders, those who consider themselves as political refugees as well as people who hold a return permit.

● (1510)

I will not dwell on the nature of this returning permit. These are provisions dealing with new rights Bill C-24 is acknowledging for the first time, which certainly appears to me as an improvement over the provisions of the previous immigration act. Clause 83 provides that a security certificate signed by two cabinet members, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the Solicitor General of Canada, and filed with the Immigration Appeal Board has a determining effect on the terms of reference and jurisdiction of the Board. As a matter of fact, the filing of this security certificate, not to the effect that either one of the permanent claimants or permanent residents falls in any of the categories referred to in clause 39, but the simple fact of mentioning such a certificate to the effect that the presence in Canada of the designated person would be contrary to the national interest and security has a determining effect on the jurisdiction of the Immigration Appeal Board. As a result, the Immigration Appeal Board is deprived of its jurisdiction on humanitarian considerations or compassionate grounds.

As we all know, Mr. Speaker, the Immigration Appeal Board has been set up to meet two main objectives: first, to ensure the respect of judicial procedure in the case of hearings required by permanent residents; second, to bring within the Board's terms of reference humanitarian elements the consideration of which may determine its decision to uphold or reject a claimant's appeal. The Immigration Appeal Board takes favourable decisions in most cases when taking into account humanitarian considerations or compassionate grounds. Yet, the filing of that security certificate, as was mentioned previously, denies the Board such jurisdiction or responsibility as far as hearings are concerned. Therefore it is important to make sure that the security certificate is worded in such a way as to meet the security objectives the law is trying to determine and ensure within the general framework of national security.

As far as clause 39 is concerned, we had put forward an amendment which would ensure that this security certificate would be issued at the discretion of a Federal Court judge in Canada. During the debate in committee, many speakers have emphasized the very important role and responsibility that the judges of the Federal Court or the Supreme Court of Canada have in the judicial process which was designed to ensure the respect of law in the implementation of procedures for the national security. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) said on this occasion that the Mackenzie-Pratte-Caldwell Commission, established by Prime Minister Pearson in 1969, said in page 53 of their report that the deportation of an immigrant who had been formally admitted to Canada was an extremely serious gesture and that this kind of order should be subject to an official judicial process providing for a right of appeal before an agency like the Immigration Appeal Board.

If the government refused to present acceptable and satisfactory evidence, the board felt that deportation should not be ordered. Such a situation, according to them, should not occur very frequently if the selection criteria of applicants were reasonably efficient.

The Mackenzie Commission was in favour of the creation of a tight judicial process in the case of deportation of an applicant with permanent resident status. Now, the amendment we are respectfully submitting to the consideration of the House today is designed to ensure that one of the Federal Court of Canada judges would have the authority to issue such security certificates. Many arguments have been put forward at the committee stage against the interference from the Federal Court or the Supreme Court judges in the administrative procedure relating to the deportation of a person from Canada or the issuance of a departure notice. I will not come back on any of these arguments. You just have to read the reports and the minutes of proceedings of the immigration committee to see that most of them are pointless.

The minister, through his deputy minister, stated that several judges of the Federal Court and even of the Supreme Court of Canada would not be granted a clearance if they had to go through the security selection procedure themselves, and rightly so, Mr. Speaker. Even if this reason should be retained, I do not think that it could be an acceptable argument to reject the proposal in motion No. 46. As a matter of fact, this security certificate might well be delivered by one of the judges of the Federal Court who would be granted a security clearance through the RCMP. We realize the absurdity of having our Supreme Court and Federal Court judges take these security tests or obtain these security clearances, which would result in enabling them to play a part in the responsibility designed to ensure compliance with a judicial procedure in the area of immigration.

I think it is extremely regrettable that such interventions should have been made during the debates in committee, and I do not believe that those are grounds that Parliament should maintain in implementing the system to ensure the upholding of the Immigration Act. Therefore, the purpose of this amendment No. 46 is not per se to take away from the Immigration Appeal Board its jurisdiction with respect to the law and the facts nor to make its jurisdiction more complicated with respect to humanitarian or compassionate considerations.

In fact, the only purpose of this amendment is to ensure that the security certificate is subject to examination or control by a judge of the Federal Court who could himself, even in the context of the odiousness of those security ratings, be subject to an inquiry by the RCMP security services. Therefore, it seems to me that the passage of this amendment would have the effect of showing very clearly the security objective that is sought under the provisions of clauses 39 and 40 are not per se incompatible with the intervention at the Federal Court in the area of the issuance of security certificates. In fact, it seems to me to be a quite acceptable compromise which I think represents the kind of minimum solution that people concerned with legality and the rule of law should accept in the context of a legislation whose purpose is not to create other classes of people or another kind of Canadian society for permanent residents but in fact to give them the same benefit of access to and protection from the courts that Canadian citizens have in the exercise of their normal responsibilities.

Consequently, it seems to me that the acceptance of this amendment would appear to me to be the minimum in the case of a board which is also entrusted with the upholding of the law and whose chairman recognized that the issuance of that security certificate appeared as one of the first signs to take away from the commission a jurisdiction that enabled it to put into decisions on permanent residents the minimum humaneness and equity without which this country on which we think we can build a democratic and free society would be greatly blemished from the start for those who believe that Canada still represents a hope of freedom.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion No. 46 (Mr. Joyal, for Mr. De Bané) negatived.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 47.

That Bill C-24, an act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 104 by striking out lines 11 to 28 at page 59 and by renumbering the subsequent subclauses accordingly.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to delete subclause (2) of clause 104 of the bill. Clause 104 provides:

The deputy minister or a senior immigration officer may on reasonable grounds issue a warrant for the arrest and detention of any person—

And so on. Subclause (2) goes on to provide:

Every peace officer in Canada, whether appointed under the laws of Canada or of any province or municipality thereof, and every immigration officer may, without the issue of a warrant, an order or a direction for arrest or detention, arrest and detain or arrest and make an order to detain—

The subclause goes on to say a person may be detained for an inquiry, for removal from Canada, and so on. In effect, the amendment deletes the provision that quite junior officers do not have to get warrants in order to detain people and take their liberty from them. In my view, that would constitute an invasion of what is otherwise a healthy situation. After all, Mr. Speaker, what is the purpose of a warrant? No one can arrest a person unadvisedly; they have to establish, usually by affidavit, good and sufficient reason for believing an offence has been committed before an arrest can be made. In other words, they have to consult a senior officer.

For many years we have regarded the limitation of the right to arrest as one of the great protections of our law. Indeed, without such limitation or restriction any police officer or immigration officer could walk into a house and arrest somebody. He could do it without needing any piece of paper giving him authority, or without prior consultation. The bill, as it stands would move us, willingly or unwillingly, in the direction of a police state. It is often said by officials that this power will not be abused. But that has not always been its history. I know many immigration officials whose good judgment and good sense I respect. But I have also known some who were not so restrained and would not have been sorry to exercise this wide power of arrest and detention. I therefore say that this provision in the bill is unnecessary. Officials could get a warrant from the deputy minister or a senior immigration official and, having obtained it, carry it out. The warrant should be obtained after they have discussed the matter with a senior official and filed an affidavit with a senior official or with the deputy minister.

Such provisions are not included in the law to protect people. It was said in committee that the legislation would enable officials to act promptly, that is to say, to bring people before an inquiry quickly after they have been detained. But that is small comfort to the person detained. I do not think members of this House would appreciate being detained 48 hours and not being given reasons for their detention. Therefore, this is a serious question.

People who immigrate to this country are uncertain of our customs and laws. They think we live in a society of law and freedom; therefore, many would be shocked if they underwent the experience of arrest without warrant. We cannot justify such provisions by saying they are convenient for the administration of the law. It is always convenient for police officers and immigration officials to exercise powers unhindered by too much red tape. It would be convenient for them, but it is not so convenient for those detained. We must consider their side of the question, as well as the so-called efficient operation of immigration policy. We do not need any law providing for arrest without warrant.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member tried to evoke the spectre of the police state. But such arguments are mere hyperbole when applied to the reality of the particular section of the act being considered. It was clearly stated during committee stage that this power of arrest would be used only in the case of those who fail to appear for an inquiry, those whom we wish to remove, and in the case of over-stayed visitors and ship's deserters. These are the groups of people who, with relatively few exceptions, will go to almost any lengths to stay out of the hands of immigration officials and who are most likely to disappear if an officer has to leave them while he seeks a warrant.

The power to arrest without warrant exists in the current Immigration Act, but I suggest that under Bill C-24, even when a person is arrested without warrant, the arresting officer must be satisfied that the person is dangerous to the public or is likely to go into hiding. The arresting officer must immediately inform a senior immigration officer, who is given the power to release the person if he is not satisfied that there would be a danger to the public or that the person would not appear when asked to do so. If detention is continued, it must be reviewed by an adjudicator in 48 hours, and he in turn can release the person if he is not satisfied that detention is lawful according to the same criteria.

These safeguards are not in the present act, but exist in Bill C-24. I think the bill fully protects the rights of persons arrested. If the motion is not defeated, the battle against illegal immigration will be immeasurably more difficult to wage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All the opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 47 (Mr. Brewin) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The House will now consider motion No. 48.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 48.

That Bill C-24, an act respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 111 by striking out lines 32 to 40 at page 62 and by renumbering the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion would strike from the bill power whereby an immigration officer could ask people to identify themselves satisfactorily. Usually, this means that such people are required to be fingerprinted. I do not know why such identification should so often apply to fingerprinting. I do not object to fingerprinting per se, but think that if some people are to be fingerprinted, everybody should be fingerprinted.

Mr. Epp: What?

Mr. Brewin: Everybody coming in as an immigrant should be fingerprinted.

Mr. Epp: Everyone?

Mr. Brewin: Yes, certainly. You should not choose among people. My friend, Mr. Epp, does not seem to grasp the point I am making.

Mr. Paproski: You mean, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Would the hon. member please refer to hon. members of this House by riding, and not by name.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It would be "in-Eppt" not to do so.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House and to Your Honour for that faux pas. My point is, although the power to fingerprint applies to people coming to Canada from overseas, it apparently does not apply to those entering Canada from the United States or Great Britain. Such people are hardly ever fingerprinted. I object to certain groups being discriminated against. If you come from Asia, say, you would be fingerprinted. I do not think we should have one law for one group of immigrants and another for another group. Most of them become Canadians, and they should be treated fairly and equally.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the motion proposed by the hon. member would strike out the power to require people seeking an immigration privilege, or those who have been arrested or ordered removed from Canada under the immigration legislation, to identify themselves satisfactorily by means of photography or fingerprinting, as provided for in section 115(1)(n). I point out that clause 111(2)(a) was revised at the committee stage to state more precisely the classes of people who may be asked to submit to photography or fingerprinting.

For people seeking admission, authorization to work or to study, or an extension or change in their status as visitors, our intent is simply to ask them to provide us with photographs so that these can be attached to the document which grants them a privilege, to ensure that it is not used by someone else. If we have reason to suspect that they have misrepresented their identity or have a criminal conviction in their background, and only then, we may ask them to submit to fingerprinting.

For the second group, persons who have been arrested because they are considered dangerous to the public or likely to go into hiding, and persons who already have been ordered removed, we may ask the person to submit to photography or fingerprinting. The reason would be to verify identity when we have reason to believe the person is using an alias, to verify a criminal conviction when there are good grounds to believe one exists, to assist in controlling or deterring the person's return to Canada following removal, where he has a record of using aliases or returning illegally, or to facilitate procurement of travel documents for the person who is to be removed from Canada. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, members may be assured that this power is necessary for the proper carrying out of immigration officials' legal responsibilities, but that it will be used only when it is necessary, and not indiscriminately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I declare the motion lost. Motion No. 48 (Mr. Brewin) negatived.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When his Honour, Mr. Speaker, grouped the various amendments now before us for debate he suggested that motions Nos. 49, 50, 51 and 52 could be grouped for debate. Then he said that a separate vote could be called on motions Nos. 49 and 51, but that a vote on motion No. 50 would dispose of motion No. 52. I may say that I had a personal conversation with His Honour a few minutes ago about the point which I wish to raise, and he thought perhaps there was validity to it.

My friend, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), feels that there is sufficient difference between motion No. 50 in the name of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), and motion No. 52 in the name of the hon. member for Greenwood, that although they could be grouped for debate they should be voted upon separately. I also make the point that motions Nos. 49 and 51 deal with quite different subjects than either motion No. 50 or motion No. 52. I would like to suggest, therefore, that motions Nos. 49 and 51 be dealt with separately, and that motions Nos. 50 and 52 be grouped for debate but be voted on separately. I think that makes more sense, in terms of the substance of the motions.

I see no other problems of this kind. As I have said, I think perhaps the initial reason for grouping them was that they are all amendments to clause 115 of the bill, but they amend it in different areas and in different respects. My suggestion is that motions Nos. 49 and 51 be debated and voted on separately, if there is any debate on them, and that motions Nos. 50 and 52 be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Although the grouping possibly was arrived at because of the general heading "regulations", I believe the topics are sufficiently distinct for the grouping as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to be made more workable. Motion No. 49, standing in the name of the minister, has been discussed at some length in committee, and I think it is quite distinct from my motion No. 50 wherein I ask that the House agree to the tabling and the coming into force of regulations. So, with all due respect, I support the view of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I do not see any problem with that. There are some differences, and if it will make the House happier, let us proceed on that basis.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved:

Motion No. 49.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 115 by striking out lines 39 to 49 at page 65 and lines 1 to 3 at page 66 and substituting the following therefor:

"(k) requiring any person to deposit security with the Minister to guarantee the performance by that person of any obligation assumed by him with respect to the admission of any other person;

(k.1) where a person or organization seeks to facilitate the admission or arrival in Canada of a convention refugee or a person who is a member of a class designated pursuant to paragraph (d) or where a person seeks to facilitate the admission of an immigrant who is related to him, establishing the requirements to be met by any person or organization including the provision of an undertaking to assist any such convention refugee, person or immigrant in becoming successfully established in Canada;".

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the motion I am proposing to amend clause 115(1)(k) which is intended to fulfill my undertaking to respond, to the extent possible, to concerns expressed by members of the committee about the regulation-making power respecting people who may be authorized to assist the admission of certain immigrants and visitors. The amendment would restore the original paragraph (k) and create a new paragraph (k.1). The effects, compared to the amendment reluctantly passed in committee, would be as follows: first, the question of security deposits would be divorced from the matter of applications by people in Canada who want to assist the admission of refugees and other immigrants; second, organizations might be authorized to sponsor refugees and quasi-refugees, but not ordinary immigrants. Individuals might be authorized to assist the admission of relatives, but not non-relatives other than refugees or quasi-refugees.

I believe this amendment meets the main points made by members of all parties in committee and fulfills my commitment to the committee.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, committee members will recall the differences we had when the minister brought forward his amendment as he introduced it at the report stage. Now it is acceptable to us, but I think there are one or two points that should be stressed. First of all, I commend the minister for separating the security deposits for sponsorship applications. I think this was a very worth-while step. The question we have to answer concerns the so-called quasi-refugees. I think the very words give us some difficulty. What do they really mean? Is it just more verbiage which means nothing to anyone who has not been present at the committee discussions?

The way I understand this clause, a person who has left his country in eastern Europe, for example, and who would not be eligible as a convention refugee under the convention which Canada has signed as a member of the United Nations, could be sponsored by a group in Canada interested in his or her well-being. For example, multicultural groups in Canada which have attempted through the years to maintain their culture would be able to sponsor those individuals to help them in their admission to Canada. I believe that is a valid exercise under the Immigration Act, and I welcome that provision. However, I believe the minister is well aware of the difficulty we have with the definition of "organization". The minister's amendment provides, "to be met by any such person or organization". What is a bona fide organization which would sponsor a refugee under these limited conditions? I believe the words "limited conditions" should be stressed. The condition is satisfactory, but we have questions about the organizations.

As we said to the minister in committee, it is very important we ensure that the organization willing to sponsor such individuals be a bona fide organization, that it have the support of a fairly wide constituency of Canadian citizens, and that it not be, to put it colloquially, a fly-by-night organization created simply for the purpose of sponsoring people. We want to ensure that these people are sincere in their efforts and that they have the interests of the person, and of Canada, in mind. Under those conditions, we accept the amendment of the minister.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the minister is quite right, in my judgment, in saying that the amendments passed in the committee appear to improve considerably the first draft. Therefore, I am disposed to support this resolution. There are one or two things, however, about which I am a little unhappy. I wonder about the necessity of this kind of resolution. There have been persons or organizations assisting people to come to Canada. Many of them have been churches, ethnic organizations or people interested in immigration, and without the aid of legislation such as this they have been assisting people. This amendment just requires them to be ready to give an undertaking. I am not happy about that, because the word "undertaking" is vague. If we are going to legislate obligations to be assumed by people, we should either make available a copy of what they might be expected to fill in, or we should give some particulars. We should not just have a vague reference to an "undertaking". I think that is rather loose drafting.

When we discussed this matter in committee we were informed by officials that it was contemplated that if a person gave an obligation as required by this amendment, that might count toward the admissibility of the person that person was undertaking to assist. If that is the intention, I think it should be spelled out. As it is, it is rather one-sided. It says a person must give an undertaking. Nowhere does it say what, quid pro quo, the government is prepared to provide.

I am very keen on the idea that organizations and persons should assist refugees into this country without being closely connected by marriage, or anything of that kind. I am very anxious that that be done. But I think if we are going to ask people to make obligations, we should spell out the whole contract and make it very clear that the person making the obligation—or his protege, her protege or its protege, as the case may be—is given an additional score on a possible points system, or additional consideration with respect to admission to Canada. For that reason, I think the amendment is somewhat defective. But as the minister came a long way toward meeting the desires of the committee, I do not feel disposed to vote against his amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 49 (Mr. Cullen) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Motions Nos. 50 and 52 are grouped for the purpose of debate, but they will be voted on separately.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher) moved:

Motion No. 50.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 115 by striking out lines 39 to 44 at page 68 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) Every order in council, regulation or form made under this act shall be laid before parliament within fifteen days after the order in council, regulation or form, as the case may be, is made or, if parliament is not then in session, within fifteen days after the commencement of the next ensuing session thereof and every order in council, regulation, or form shall be subject to affirmative resolution of parliament and shall not come into force until 30 days after it has been published in the Canada Gazette."

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 52.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 115 by adding immediately after line 50 at page 68 the following new subclause:

"(5) Any regulation passed under provisions of paragraphs 1(a), (b) and (c) of this section shall not come into force unless approved by the House of Commons after a motion for consideration is signed by 20 members which shall be considered within 15 days after the motion is filed when the House of Commons is in session or within 15 days after the opening of parliament, if it is not in session."

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I will speak briefly on motion No. 50. This topic has been swirling around immigration debates for as long as I have had the opportunity to read the record of our debates. As the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) so perfectly describes it, the topic is legislation by regulation. As a member of the committee, I can appreciate that the minister and his officials must have a fair amount of regulatory power. They must have that so they can react to changing conditions. Conditions can change very quickly. There are fewer receiving countries in the world taking in fewer immigrants, and it is incumbent on the minister and his officials to respond. I think we all understand that, but we do not accept the fact that regulations can come very close to changing the spirit of legislation. I believe that the supremacy and primacy of parliament should prevail. It is for that reason that this amendment has been moved.

We were able to squeeze—how shall I put it—half an amendment out of the minister. The minister went part of the way in meeting the objections we raised at second reading. The minister said he went a long way. I suppose it depends upon where you start. However, I think we must keep in mind the experiences of the last few years. There was a time when people could change their status while in Canada. They might have come in as students or visitors and changed their status to that of landed immigrants. When that change was made there was a great effect on the flow and the nature of the flow. There was nothing parliament could do about it. The only time we had a chance to do anything was when the main estimates or the supplementary estimates were before the committee. At best, that is a frail substitute for what we really want. We do not want regulations to change dramatically the immigration policy of this country as to flow or qualitative flow. Changes like that should be presented to parliament, because parliament is supreme. It is for that reason this amendment is before us. The minister has gone part of the way in meeting our objection, but obviously not far enough. Clause 115(3), at page 68 of the bill, reads as follows:

No regulation made under paragraph (1)(a), (b) or (c) shall come into force until 30 days after it has been published in the Canada Gazette, and the text of such regulation shall be laid before parliament as soon as practicable.

As I understand that wording, regulations cannot be passed in the dead of night. We will not wake up in the morning to find that our immigration policy has changed dramatically. That subclause means that regulations will be published in the Canada Gazette and will not come into effect for 30 days after that. I know that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has had more experience with the Canada Gazette than I have or might ever have. He feels the Canada Gazette is not well enough organized and wonders how many Canadians read it anyhow. However, those interested in immigration will be reading the Gazette and they will at least have some prior notice. This prior notice will allow them to raise objections or to indicate what effects they think the regulations might have on immigration policy.

The other position the minister has taken is that he will lay the text of such regulations before parliament as soon as possible. I am not worried about the time-frame; that is acceptable. We are in a co-operative spirit. However, simply laying the text of the regulations before parliament does not give parliament any chance for debate. While parliament will be notified, parliament will not be able to see whether the regulations in fact change the spirit and intent of the legislation passed in the House.

It is for that purpose I have moved the amendment which will do the following: every order in council, and I know we have had some discussion in committee as to who can given information vis-à-vis orders in council respecting immigration, regulation or forms that are needed for the administration of the Immigration Act, will be laid before parliament within 15 days if parliament is in session. If it is not in session, I have given conditions for that. What is more important is that the regulation will then need the affirmative resolution of parliament: that is the important part.

What I am deeply concerned about is that as parliamentarians we have the right to debate these regulations and, if we choose, to vote on them. Whether we want to admit it or not, the regulations have a tremendous effect on immigration. It is for that reason it is imperative that parliament has the right to debate the regulation and voice its opinion on it. I do not believe this is restrictive as far as the minister is concerned, because it takes in the spirit of amendment to which he has agreed. For that reason, I commend that amendment to all members of the House.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on motion No. 52. It is aimed at the same purpose to which the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has directed his motion No. 50: it is aimed at ensuring that there be some measure of parliamentary control over the more important and substantial regulations. Where motion No. 52 differs from motion No. 50 is that we apply it, and I do not think this is in No. 50, to the regulations passed under the provisions of clause 115(1)(a) (b) and (c). I would like to tell the House what those regulations provide for. They provide what might be termed as the guts of the whole of the immigration system. I quote:

> The governor in council may make regulations (a) providing for the establishment and application of selection standards based on such factors as family relationships, education, language, skill, occupational experience and other personal attributes and attainments, together with demographic considerations and labour market conditions in Canada, for the purpose of determining whether or not an immigrant will be able to become successfully established in Canada—

That is the basic purpose of an immigration act, to set standards of selection. We all agree we cannot allow a completely open door so that everyone who wants to come to Canada as an immigrant may do so. We need to have a selection process. Therefore, we set up the Department of Immigration and passed the act. These regulations dealing with selection standards for the various items included in the selection standards are the very essence of any immigration policy. The hon. member for Provencher is correct when he says these regulations are absolutely essential to the whole act. We believe that at least some of them should be under the direct control of parliament.

Subclause (b) prescribes the classes of persons whose applications for landing may be sponsored. The House knows that sponsored applications are the applications of close relatives. It is said in clause 13 that the reunion of families through a process of sponsorship is one of the key purposes of the act. However, we leave to regulation the prescribing of what classes of people may be sponsored. We are abdicating in this particular clause. Subclause (c) exempts members of the family class from the requirements and the regulations, prescribing special regulations. I am not sure whether that use of the dispensing power is even legal. My recollection is that James II lost his throne, and King Charles I his head, because they used widespread exempting powers. However, that is a technical point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was not technical for Charles I!

Mr. Brewin: No. These three clauses are highly important. The act is full of references to regulations. There are at least 18 clauses of matters to be dealt with by regulation in this section alone. Indeed, the whole bill is full of "as prescribed by regulation". As far as I know, the whole question of what refugees ought to be admitted is to be prescribed by regulation. The terms and conditions which people may have imposed on them when they come to this country can be prescribed by regulation. One can go through the whole bill picking out the phrase "as prescribed by regulation". I have not attempted, in my motion No. 52, to deal with that. I have taken out the ones that are the key provisions of any immigration scheme. I pretty well know what the minister is going to say. He will say that we have to be flexible in these matters, but that parliament cannot meet all the time. That is perfectly true.

Mr. Epp: You mean, we do meet all the time.

Mr. Brewin: We nearly do. There is a perfectly legitimate excuse for many matters of detail being decided by regulation. However, there is no reason why these key issues should not be dealt with by parliament itself. The method I have suggested is somewhat similar to the method selected by the hon. member for Provencher in his motion No. 50. His is subject to affirmative vote. I have a provision for a motion for consideration signed by 20 members which shall be considered within 15 days after the motion is filed. I want it clear that after this motion is brought in by a certain number of members of parliament to initiate discussion, it will come before parliament. That would be a useful way of doing it.

This might eliminate some frivolous motions to consider regulations. More important, it would give any 20 members the right to bring it directly to parliament. It would provide a time-frame within which it would be dealt. That is necessary, because we are all familiar with motions piling up and not being dealt with adequately or at all. I have sympathy for the President of the Privy Council trying to get all the business handled. However, unless there is a clear, strong provision, we cannot get it in.

The minister says we have to be flexible about this. I do not know why we have to be so flexible about the key provisions in the act. There are places for flexibility, but there are also places for clarity by parliament itself, and there is every reason why parliament should take a greater interest in this subject. Under the present system, a lot of what has been done by regulation has, in effect, been done in secret.

● (1600)

As we have heard, the minister has proposed an amendment. The hon. member for Provencher said it was half an answer. I would put the fraction lower; I would say it is one-tenth of an answer. What does it amount to? It says the regulations will be found in the Canada Gazette. I do not know how many hon. members have ever looked at the Canada Gazette. It lists all the innumerable regulations which are made under the various statutes of Canada—huge volumes of them. No one who does not have the patience of Job can possibly expect to find a particular regulation in that mass of words.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is not exactly a best-seller.

Mr. Brewin: I doubt that it is. And I imagine fewer copies of it are read than are printed. Yet here we are, saying to prospective immigrants, "Read the Canada Gazette. Get the information from these fearful tomes". I gather it does not even have a proper index, so people would have an awful time finding a particular regulation.

The other aspect, and a more important one, is the undertaking that the text of such regulations will be laid before parliament as soon as possible. But even this is not a process which gives notice to very many people. As I understand it, the minister can simply table the relevant document, and that ends the matter because there is no way of questioning here what is contained in the regulations. For this reason, I find the minister's proposal altogether inadequate. The issue here is whether we in parliament are to exercise some measure of control in accordance with the principle of parliamentary supremacy, or whether we shall continue to countenance the issue of a series of semi-secret documents—no doubt got together and put into shape by very distinguished bureaucrats in the department. In my view, that is not good enough. After all, we are here for the purpose of dealing with matters like this.

If I have not been very successful in persuading the minister to accept the amendment I have proposed, may I say I would not feel at all badly if motion 50 were passed, rather than motion 52. I think there is very little difference between them, though naturally, from pride of ownership, I prefer my own version.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Here, again, we have two approaches before us, the one taken by those who have responsibility for administering a particular bill in a particular situation, and the other by those who have no responsibility and who see no practical difficulty in circumstances which the party or the government of the day must face when dealing with 600,000 people who apply to come into this country every year.

At the committee stage we discussed this proposal at some length. A motion was made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) requiring an affirmative resolution of parliament. That motion was defeated in the committee. However, in the interest of meeting some of the suggestions which were made, we did bring forth 115(3). The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) denigrates that particular effort, the point of which was to get necessary information to the public who are concerned about immigration. After all, laying regulations before parliament is making them available in a public forum. They are available to everyone, and it is up to the research staff of the party concerned to check on a daily basis to see what papers have been filed so that if desired they might be given the widest publicity.

The motion put forward by the hon. member for Provencher goes further, requiring that every order in council and every form should also be subject to parliamentary approval. In other words, he apparently wishes to prevent the exercise of virtually all the powers assigned in the act to the governor in council or the minister until parliament has given its approval, no matter how trivial a regulation, order in council, form or amendment might be. This motion would have the effect of bringing the operations of the department to a virtual standstill.

Many of the regulations are relatively unimportant or technical, though they are still essential for the efficient and effective operation of the immigration program. The delays which could result from the requirement to attain parliamentary approval followed by publicity for 30 days would permit persons to circumvent new regulations by coming to Canada before a regulation came into effect, thus defeating the very purpose of the regulation. The provision for 30-days delay already built into 115(3) poses sufficient danger of such circumventions. Most regulations are made to overcome or to prevent serious problems. Delay in their implementation can easily augment those problems.

I recognize what hon. members are endeavouring to do. I suggest that if we are able to change our rules in such a way that it is not necessary to spend an interminable amount of time before we are able to get anything done, that may be the time to give effect to these motions. But given the rules under which we presently operate I suggest, with respect, that the hon. members proposal would be to the detriment of the immigration program and to the detriment of the people we are trying to help, namely, those who apply to come to our great country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it. Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred. We will now move to motion 52.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it. Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded motion on the division stands deferred.

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie) moved:

Motion No. 51.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 115 by striking out lines 45 to 50 at page 68.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I move this motion to draw the attention of the House and of the people of Canada to what I consider to be another example of the government reneging on its commitments with respect to urban priorities. It is several years now since the government indicated that among its priorities for the long term there would be a move, through whichever vehicle it had at its disposal, to encourage less growth of the larger metropolitan areas of Canada and greater growth of many of our smaller cities. The objective is obvious. There are too many people concentrated in too few urban areas, and the quality of life in some of those urban areas is diminishing rather than improving.

At the trilevel conference in which the federal government participated, through the Department of Urban Affairs, in 1973 the federal government took a tack which recommended elimination of regional disparities, which elimination would be nullified if Canada continued to accept a pattern of urban growth that concentrated people and activities within a few small areas of the country. At that time the position of the government appeared to be that if we continued to accept that the present trend toward highly concentrated and rapid urban growth is undesirable, we must as a government seek an alternative pattern of urbanization through the recognition that Canadian towns and cities are not in competition with each other but are closely linked in a nationwide system of cities.

At that time, the position of the government appeared to be premised on the conviction that the degree of concentration then being experienced—and certainly it has not diminished today—was unacceptable and that a better alternative to the existing pattern was not only feasible but desirable. The conference agreed that there was a role for all levels of government to play in trying to achieve this long-term decentralization of population. Among the levers mentioned at the conference as being available to the federal government were those of monetary and fiscal policy, immigration and migration, transportation, regional development, land use, housing, social welfare, resource management, industrial promotion, and one or two others.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, this was the position in 1973. In 1975 we had a new urban affairs minister who was still on the same wavelength basically. In referring to the earlier trilevel conference, he said that all three levels of government had agreed on that occasion that the trend should be shifted in favour of a more regionally balanced pattern of growth. The conference also agreed to examine ways and means of doing this and had indicated a readiness to co-ordinate selected relevant policies and programs. The urban affairs minister at that time, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson), said he was going to involve all provinces, and through them the municipalities, in the consultation process, and he was confident that through this dialogue we could evolve an urban strategy for Canada, a strategy to which all governments would lend their support and within which we could co-ordinate our various policies and programs. The minister then went on to say:

I will also take every opportunity to discuss these issues publicly with Canadian non-governmental organizations concerned with the future of our cities. Out of this process, I believe that a consensus on a national demographic policy and a Canadian urban strategy will emerge.

When this bill came along, Mr. Speaker, I thought that something was emerging which made a bit of sense. I thought we were going to use one of the levers which was referred to in 1973 to help discourage the tremendous population growth in Toronto particularly, as well as on the west coast. I was unhappy when the committee decided to remove the particular clause from the bill which would have required a new immigrant or person applying for immigrant status who required a few extra points to live in a designated area of Canada away from the larger metropolitan centres for a period of six months. Hopefully, that person, after remaining for that length of time, would then have planted sufficient roots to stay.

In committee, members felt that this would not be a very effective route, that somehow it did not accord with the proper attitude to be taken toward human rights. I would take issue with this latter argument, though I think from the practical point of view some of the committee arguments may have been valid. It seems to me that the argument of interference with human rights is based on a view of immigration which I do not accept. I contend that the granting of immigrant status is a privilege accorded by this country and is not, as some would assert, the right of any person coming to this country. Our immigration policy remains the most liberal in the world. The assertion that requiring people to live in areas outside concentrations of population so as to achieve a better demographic balance is somehow an interference with a person's human rights and a reflection upon Canada's reputation in this regard

I find quite unacceptable. It is a line of argument that I just do not buy.

I would not, perhaps, have taken this initiative to make my point concerning what I feel has been the reneging of the government on its urban priorities had it not been for my strong concern about some of the other backtrackings that have occurred. I will touch upon these briefly, and I should like to give a little background about why I am particularly critical of the government's lack of direction and inability to pursue a course that will benefit over the longer term some 85 per cent of our population which now live in the urban areas of Canada.

● (1620)

I should like to refer back to the period after World War II when Canada had an opportunity not only to ensure adequate housing for its population but adequate planning for that housing. The original personnel who made up the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the early fifties had a very clear concept for the future of Canada, that it would be well planned. Unfortunately, those far-sighted individuals were not given an opportunity by the government of that day to use the government's lending power to that end. The government was practically the only body lending money for housing at that time.

Had that lending level been used to force better planning for our suburbs, we would have had a totally different situation today. We would have avoided massive speculation with the results we are all aware of. We would have had communities planned around transportation facilities not totally dependent on highways. We would have had basic planning involving things such as sewers and water. The result would have been far less expensive for our taxpayers in the long run, and a much healthier municipal tax situation across the country than we have now. Mind you, that is water under the bridge. The federal government did not do what it should have done.

In 1968, when our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was running for the leadership of his party, there was hope that he was someone who could see what the country's priorities were in the form of better living conditions for the areas where most of our people live. The hope for getting more out of this government was encouraged. At the beginning there was a slow period, but by 1972-73 there was a hope that finally the government was seeing the error of its earlier ways and was going to move in a direction to link transportation planning with redevelopment planning. A prime example of that is the Railway Relocation Act. It is a vehicle which allows the federal government to contribute on a 50-50 basis with the provinces, or even higher.

I am referring to regional transportation plans and the regional development plans which must precede transportation plans desired by particular urban or suburban areas. This type of direction is more necessary now because of the energy crisis, and it seemed to be on the point of being pushed by the federal government and a consensus had almost been reached with the provinces. The provinces have matured substantially in their treatment of regional and city planning. The need is not as great as it was in the late fifties and early sixties for a federal policy guidance input. But along came a new areas of necessity resulting from the energy situation, and the federal government realized there was a new opening for their presence because the provinces were not showing an adequate appreciation of the long-term consequences of what energy shortages would do to our urban and suburban societies. It was not only there for the grabbing; it was there for grasping by the federal government. No one else was doing it, and by not doing it we are putting our people into a more and more precarious situation from an energy consumption point of view and from the point of view of our long-term energy balance with the rest of the world.

From 1972 to 1974 the situation was one of hope. We were finally going to move to a central policy planning push which was needed and useful. The transportation development agency was in existence, and we were going to develop an industry, with government encouragement, to standardize transportation equipment in this country. The industry would have had a fantastic export potential. But on that, too, we have moved way from any concrete action: we are talking; we are not doing anything.

Under the National Housing Act, we have had laws which encouraged land assembly from as early as 1953. Some lands were assembled in Toronto at that time. One can imagine the consequence for house prices around Toronto had the federal government pushed its program for land assembly. After the provinces were embarrassed, Ontario finally moved to assemble some land. Several years ago the federal government moved toward a new cities program which also has disappeared into the woodwork somewhere along the line. There was southeast city in Ottawa. The Pickering airport land was conceived of being for airport use and for the potential use of a new city. These efforts were to be examples for the rest of the country.

The new city concept and land banking could have had an enormous effect upon the inflation situation in Canada. House prices in Ottawa are a direct result of the lack of proper city planning for the expansion of Ottawa suburbs. Had our new cities program been in effect, or had we pushed a land assembly program around Ottawa with that possible lever at our disposal, land and house prices could have been anywhere from 25 per cent to 35 per cent lower than the last few years. Thus, public servants would have been faced with lower costs for housing which might have alleviated some of their demands for higher wages.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The hon. member is making statements not related to this bill.

Mr. Watson: From the beginning I have attempted to underscore the federal government's backing away from a number of urban priorities, including the one referred to in this motion. These priorities would have encouraged immigrants into the slower growth areas of this country and would have had a salutary demographic effect on the country.

• (1630)

Finally, I raise the question of one other urban priority. So far the government has been unwilling to use its lending power to push for proper land use in areas of this country which, in the long term, could benefit from such a policy. I am referring particularly to what is happening in the Niagara peninsula, the rich farmlands around Montreal—in fact, to rich farmlands around our major cities, farmlands not protected by provincial action. We should use the lending powers available to us under the National Housing Act. That is to say, we should abstain from lending or not to guarantee loans with respect to those areas of the country where, in our judgment, proper land use procedures are not followed.

I feel that we have not adequately considered what should be Canada's urban priorities. I suggest that the people of this country have a right to expect more far-sighted action from the government in certain areas than they have witnessed in the last few years. They expect the government to take action in matters which affect their lives, where they live and on questions such as commuting between work and home. That brings me to urban transit. One need not spell out the details of what is not happening. We all know what is not happening and what was promised. This is a sad story which I will not belabour. After the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) has spoken on my motion, I intend to rise on a point of order to request leave to withdraw it.

Mr. Fairweather: That sounds like a dirty trick.

Mr. Watson: I shall do this because my support of the recent Science Council of Canada recommendations outweighs my concern with the government's backtracking on decentralization of population, and I wish to stress that the Science Council of Canada has recommended limiting our future population growth to allow in 50,000 immigrant per year. That being the case, I do not want to open the doors wider than they are now open. If we grant immigrant status on certain conditions to people who would otherwise not be allowed in to this country, that is, if we grant them immigrant status only on the condition that they shall land in certain areas, we shall allow a greater number of people in per year. The Science Council of Canada has examined the question of the long-term availability of energy against the background of our northern climate and the impact on our standard of living of a larger population. In view of its findings, I suggest that if we are to maintain the present high quality of life in Canada and our present living standards, we shall have to think seriously about slowing down the growth of our population. The government thinks our population should grow at between 140,000 and 150,000 per year from immigration. I say our growth rate should be lower. I agree with the Science Council of Canada. I am agreeable to the hon. member for Ottawa West speaking, after which I shall rise on a point of order.

Immigration

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended speaking on this motion, but having heard the hon. member condemn the government for its lack of immigration policy and blame urban congestion on immigrants, I felt compelled to speak. I agree with one thing the hon. member said. The government's attempt to rationalize population growth has been, to use his words, I think, a sad story. We tried to make the minister aware of this point, but he has not accepted our amendments concerning demographic policy. The point the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) made in that regard is correct.

The special joint committee tried to bring forward a recommendation for placing a large number of immigrants in areas of the country with job vacancies. Unfortunately, the original draft of the bill did not incorporate that recommendation, possibly because the committee's intent was not clear to the minister and his officials. In any event, that suggested section was considered unworkable. During the committee consideration, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) was able to bring in an amendment for removing area criteria. Consequently, the news media reported that the hon. member for Davenport had won his war against area designation. With all respect, the press did not understand the situation and had not analysed what had happened. It left the impression that there was to be no area designation, which was not the case. If you take a look at the situation as amended, this is what will happen. We found it impractical to police the movement of immigrants to a specific point, and that they would have to stay there for six months. Longitudinal studies indicate that there is evidence to support what the minister said. These studies indicate that if a person goes to an area other than one of the larger metropolitan areas, the chances of his staying there are fairly good. That is fair enough—but the question of the policing becomes a difficulty.

I agree with the hon. member when he indicates that immigration is a privilege, rather than a right. When you get into the whole question of human rights, whose human rights are being violated? What is going to be done now is a workable compromise. For example, an immigrant who indicates that he is going to northern Canada will not have his landing completed in Toronto, which is the first point of contact in Canada. His landing will be completed at the nearest Canada Immigration centre or Canada Manpower centre. The fact that they will be obligated to complete landing at the destination of the immigrant will facilitate, to some degree, the movement of the people into that area.

Simply having an area designation requiring a person to stay for six months in a given spot, and virtually a given employment situation, can create exploitation of which we are not in favour. It has been indicated in newspapers that the area designation is now gone; but if I understand the regulations correctly, points will be awarded or removed depending on the area to which a person goes. It can be controlled somewhat in the regulations and the area designations as to the number of points. Up to the present time, not enough points were given for area designations. During months when unemployment was very low in the prairies and employment opportunities existed, people were receiving four out of five points by saying that they were going to the prairies.

If the immigrant wanted to settle in a place like Toronto or another place in the province of Ontario which was getting more than 50 per cent of the immigrant flow and where employment was higher, he would get three out of five points. So the regulation was meaningless in the sense of encouraging people to go to other areas. But I believe the compromise that has been made is much more practical than the area designation suggested by the hon. member. However, I want the record to show clearly that what was reported after the amendment of the hon. member for Davenport was carried in committee, that there would be no area designation, is not in fact the case and that points will still be awarded for area designation.

What should be pointed out, again, after the speech of the hon. member for Laprairie, is that the government still does not have a demographic policy and that immigration is but one problem of the larger problems of the urbanization of Canada. A much greater condition is that of Canadians moving—inward migration to our urban centres where job opportunities exist. I must say to this government that they will have to get on with a demographic policy and regional expansion policies which will encourage, through incentives, people to move into other areas rather than force them through regulation to settle in special areas.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will not be a lengthy one at this point. I merely wish to say that I support the arguments that have been advanced by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) and most of what the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) had to say. Part of the clause which this amendment will delete says the following:

> For the purpose of this act and the regulations, whenever a person is granted landing and terms and conditions are imposed, no such term or condition may specify the area in which that person shall reside.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for Provencher who said that points would still be granted and in effect there would be some area designation by the back door, in spite of what appears to be the clear wording of the bill before us. I share the fears of those who point out that our immigration has been heavily concentrated in the cities. This has added to our housing problems and to the social services that are required. An attempt to direct immigration to the slower growth areas in Canada seems to me to be a reasonable thing to do. I am aware of the problems concerning possible exploitation.

I have listened to the arguments of those who say that this might be a violation of human rights. However, I am not persuaded that it is a violation of human rights to say to those who choose to come to Canada that they are requested to spend a certain period of time in one of the slower growth areas in the country. This appears to me to be a reasonable request. I know the mover of this amendment, the hon. member for Laprairie, has indicated he might withdraw it, but I simply wish to say that I, for one, believe we must face the problems of urbanization to a much greater degree than we have so far.

The hon. member for Laprairie referred to our housing policy and to the urban transportation commitment of the party to which I belong. We have a substantial obligation in that area. I would like to see the development of an urban policy along with measures which would allow the free movement of people in Canada wherever they choose to reside. But in principle I go along with those who say that it would not be a violation of human rights to request those who come to Canada to spend a certain period of time in one of the underdeveloped areas so that they would not all go, in overwhelming numbers, to the urban centres where the problems of urban life are magnified as a result.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question. I want to ask him which areas he would designate as the slower growth areas in Canada where immigrants could be sent, because all the slower growth areas are areas of very high unemployment, and if we were to send these people to the slow growth areas there would be a tremendous problem with regard to their employment. I would like the hon. member to address his remarks to that question.

Mr. Francis: I am not in a position to give a detailed description, but I listened to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mrs. Campagnolo) who tells me that there are job opportunities in her area in British Columbia and they would welcome a number of immigrants to that area. I am aware that there are employment opportunities in the frontier areas of Canada.

Mrs. Campagnolo: For skilled workers.

Mr. Francis: For skilled workers and others.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Francis: My point is that the concentration of immigration in the large cities compounds and magnifies the problem. It is still a very basic point and the hon. member, I am sure, would have to concede it.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I understood the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) to say that at a certain stage he might withdraw his motion, so obviously it is not necessary for me to make a long speech. I am sure many of us might be in agreement with a great deal of what he said about urban planning, but I cannot support his theory that we should direct certain people resident in Canada as to where they are to go, this despite what the hon. member for Laprairie and the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) said that there is no right involved. That is not quite correct.

I am sorry, I do not have the actual citation here, but the United Nations convention on this subject clearly refers to freedom of movement. If we invite people to this country, we should not invite them as second-class citizens and tell them they cannot go where they see fit. I see no objection to inducements being offered to make certain areas attractive for them to go to, such as employment opportunities, good housing, or whatever is necessary to persuade people to avoid overcrowded urban areas and go to some other areas where things are booming and where they are needed. I have no objection to that at all. I think we should do all we can to assist that. But there is a right not to be pushed around.

I have often heard the hon. member's argument in courts and in this place, that is, the argument that the opportunity to immigrate is a privilege and is by no means a right. That is only partially true. Of course, there is no general right to immigrate. Every sovereign nation has the right to say who should come to their shores from outside. But we legislate to give statutory rights to certain people and we have given certain statutory rights in the act we are now discussing and in previous acts which confirm that people qualify under those certain limited rights, and then we say to them that as permanent residents they will be treated like everyone else in Canada.

I hope we will not abandon that principle. I suspect there are grave practical difficulties in enforcing or dealing with this provision. As the hon. member no doubt knows, these terms and conditions are supposed to last for six months only. There may be some powers for extending the requirement to go to those places where they were designated to go for a short time. I think the hon. member for Provencher is quite right in saying that the regulations give certain extra points to people who are ready to fit into certain economic conditions which are satisfactory. I see no great objection to doing that, but I object to directing people to where they should live. There would be too many exceptions.

Let us suppose that someone comes to a place like Thompson, Manitoba, and then the plant closes down. Is that person supposed to stay there for six months if the plant closes down and there is no employment there? Let us suppose that person has a relative in Toronto. Perhaps I should not mention Toronto; but suppose that relative is very ill and might be dying. We are dealing with human beings, and I think it would be wise to extend to them the same freedoms and privileges we claim for ourselves. Indeed, it would be right to live up to the principles enunciated by the United Nations.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I would like to point out that if the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) wishes to withdraw his motion, he needs the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Watson: I request the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw my motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion No. 51 (Mr. Watson) withdrawn.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved:

Motion No. 53.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 121 by striking out lines 4 to 12 at page 71 and substituting the following therefor:

"for the purpose of

(a) paying the costs of establishing that they and their families may be granted admission;

(b) paying the costs of obtaining transportation to Canada and transportation from the port of arrival to the place of destination in Canada for them and their families; and

(c) paying the reasonable living expenses of such persons and their families and such other expenses as are prescribed in order to assist those persons in establishing themselves successfully in Canada."

Motion No. 53 (Mr. Cullen) agreed to.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal) moved:

Motion No. 54.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in clause 125 by striking out line 17 at page 73 and substituting the following therefor:

"with this act or the former act at the option of the person concerned with this proceeding."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I really want to test the minister on this one exactly as I did on an earlier motion, and I would be glad if the minister would reassure the House. Then I would ask, in the same way as the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), for the permission of the House to have the motion withdrawn. It seems to me that my motion is essentially one of fairness. There are certain tests under the existing act. There are certain requirements, and I suggest that it would be fairer to the immigrant if he could use either the existing ground rules or the new ground rules, depending on his wishes. Somebody in the middle of the process suddenly confronted by this formidable statute might have imposed on him different criteria. I would like to think that this is not true, and if my apprehension is not well founded and the minister can reassure me that there will not be new tests or criteria, I would be glad to ask that my motion be dropped.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is my feeling that the motion is, in fact, redundant because by judicial interpretation the clause as it now stands always would be read to ensure that the legislation which is to the person's advantage would be the legislation applied in his case. In most cases the new act will apply. The judicial interpretation is that in most cases the new act will be to the person's advantage, but where it is not— primarily unsuccessful claimants to convention refugee status—the board would, quite legally, act under the former legislation.

To give the person a choice would do the opposite to what the hon. member wishes, since it would permit the person to choose, in ignorance, the option which may very well not be to his advantage.

Mr. Fairweather: I would like permission to withdraw my motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 54 (Mr. Fairweather) withdrawn.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved:

Motion No. 55.

That Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be amended in the Schedule by striking out subparagraph (b)(ii) in item 6 at page 77 and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) in prescribed circumstances, is a visitor in Canada or the holder of a permit in Canada within the meaning of the Immigration Act, 1976."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is simply a consequential amendment. It comes about as a result of too zealous an attempt to change the language. It was inhibiting and limiting, and I think this amendment corrects the flaw.

Motion No. 55 (Mr. Cullen) agreed to.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on Bill C-24. Call in the members.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among representatives of the parties. As the House will recall, we have one other item of business with which we would like to deal before the conclusion of the discussion with respect to the immigration bill, and that is the one hour which was mentioned earlier respecting the special order of the House relating to the metric conversion legislation.

I believe there is a disposition in the House at the moment—since we have now concluded all the motions at the report stage of Bill C-24—to defer the votes on those motions until the first order of business tonight at eight o'clock, and to devote the hour which remains before six o'clock to a discussion of the metric conversion legislation. I wonder if Your Honour could confirm that there is that disposition. Then we could use this hour to discuss the metric conversion legislation, proceed with the votes on Bill C-24 this evening, and then move immediately after those votes to the third reading of Bill C-24.

As I make that suggestion, I sincerely apologize to Your Honour and to the officers at the table. The discussions which led to this development took place just now and we did not have an opportunity to alert you before this moment.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to concur in what the parliamentary secretary has said. The special order which was made on Friday envisaged that we might complete the report stage of Bill C-24 and then proceed directly to third reading. However, for the purposes of this hour it is agreeable to us to move to consideration of Bill C-23 and complete it. In the order of Friday, the House indicated that this hour would be set aside for the completion of Bill C-23, so we concur in the suggestion made by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion being made is in conformity with the order passed the other day under Standing Order 75A, and it also represents what we have been discussing in the last little while. Just so that we can be clear, I will make one suggestion. If it does not take the full hour to deal with Bill C-23, I suggest we call it six o'clock when we finish Bill C-23, so it is understood that tonight at eight o'clock the bells will be rung to call in the members for the votes on Bill C-24.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, just to be technically correct, I think the motion under Standing Order 75A required that this hour be designated by a minister of the Crown, and I invite the President of the Privy Council to make that designation.

● (1700)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I designate whatever is required of this hour to deal with Bill C-23. It is understood that the Minister of State will make a number of amendments to the bill, when consent is given, to go into committee of the whole for the purpose of amending clauses 2, 6 and 10. It will be possible to come out of committee of the whole and give the bill third reading within that hour. Otherwise, I will be very disappointed, having made the amendments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT TO FACILITATE CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) that Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe we require the consent of the House to give authority to return to committee of the whole for consideration of clauses 2, 6 and 10.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We were never there on this bill.

Mr. MacEachen: Return to, or go into committee of the whole. Whatever words the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wishes to select, I will concur. May we have consent on that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed that I do now leave the chair to go into committee of the whole on Bill C-23?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House went into committee on Bill C-23—Mr. Ethier in the chair.

On clause 2

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to take the floor in preference to the minister. However, I move:

That Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be amended in clause 2

(a) by striking out lines 7 to 13 inclusive on page 1 and substituting the following:

"2. (1) The following provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, namely," and (b) by striking out line 23 on page 1 and substituting the following:

"(2) This section shall come into force on"

I believe hon. members have had copies of this proposed amendment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I am just a simple city boy. Will somebody tell me what this amendment does?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, these three amendments just deal with restoring the acre back into the various pieces of legislation.

Metric System

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand: This one deals with the Wheat Board Act. As hon. members know, we have had many representations from that side and this side of the House relating to the removal of the "hectare" from the four pieces of legislation. We are just restoring the "acre".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the explanation given by the minister. However, he left out a very important element of this change. According to the correspondence we have all been receiving from western farmers, they have made a number of representations on this matter and will be very much in favour of this capitulation by the government.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacEachen moved:

That Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be amended in clause 6

(a) by striking out lines 17 to 28 inclusive on page 4 and substituting the following:

"6. (1) The following provisions of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, namely,"

(b) by striking out line 31 on page 4 and substituting the following:

"(b) subsections 4(2) and 7(1), (2) and (4), and"

(c) by striking out lines 36 to 44 inclusive on page 4 and lines 1 to 12 on page 5 and substituting the following:

"(2) Paragraph 7.1(4)(b) of the said Act is"; and (d) by striking out line 26 on page 5 and substituting the following:

"(3) This section shall come into force on a"

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the President of the Privy Council know what he has just said? What does it mean?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister a question. Does this really mean that "hectare" is dead? Is that what this motion indicates? Seeing that the President of the Privy Council did not answer the question, I thought maybe the minister responsible for small business could answer. Is that what the second amendment means?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How do you spell "hectare"?

Mr. Alexander: It does not matter, as long as he is dead.

Mr. Marchand: I do not know what kind of language they use in describing this situation, whether it is dead or not. Certainly, the "hectare" is being removed from the Canadian Wheat Board Act. In this amendment it is removed from the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. It restores the "acre" wherever it was used on previous occasions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand: As far as being dead is concerned, I would like to refer to some words by Premier Lougheed when talking about moves in their legislature not to proceed with converting the usage of "acre" to "hectare". He said that perhaps at some future date when the education process regarding metric conversion is more complete we can move to the "hectare". But that is not what we are suggesting here.

● (1710)

Mr. Paproski: Another century.

Mr. Marchand: The "hectare" is being removed, and the "acre" is being put back, largely because of pressure by the farmers.

Motion (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

Mr. MacEachen moved:

That Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be amended in subclause 10(1) by striking out lines 30-32 inclusive on page eight and substituting the following:

"stituting for the word "bushel", wherever it appears therein, the word "tonne".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Explain.

Motion agreed to.

Bill reported and concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall the bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. MacEachen moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): I thought the minister was about to rise, Mr. Speaker, and I was waiting for him to say a few words. I shall be brief, because I understand there has been an all-party agreement to proceed with the third reading of this bill without delay and to accept certain amendments put forward to remove "hectares" as a land measure from the bill.

This whole matter could have been dealt with many months ago. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) in his opening speech on Bill C-23 offered speedy passage of the measure if the government would abandon its insistence on the use of "hectares" for land measurement. Today, eight months later, we are adopting the same proposal as was made so long ago by my hon. friend. I might mention, also, that an amendment to this effect was put forward in the standing committee, where government members voted against it. There is no doubt that the metric commission has misled the minister, misled the standing committee and misled the House of Commons in connection with this matter. Despite the overwhelming objection of western farmers to the change from "acres" to "hectares", the commission brought witnesses before the inquiry who gave evidence to the contrary. They told us that farmers wholeheartedly supported metric conversion. Yet at the very time the standing committee was hearing evidence with regard to the details of Bill C-23, there was a meeting going on in Ottawa of a large farm federation at a large hotel not far from Parliament Hill. The subject of metrication was brought up at that meeting by farm representatives and provoked such violent discussion and division of opinion that the chairman postponed consideration of the matter so that the meeting could proceed with other business. While this meeting was going on, the farm federation sent a representative here—we are told he was a witness selected by the metric commission—and this witness misled the House.

We have now reached agreement to pass Bill C-23. There is no desire on this side to prolong the debate one moment longer than is necessary, but I feel obliged to mention two points. First, it is evident to everyone that the government's willingness to negotiate with our party with respect to the amendment on the use of the "acres" is a clear victory for those Conservative members from western Canada who listened to their constituents and made their objections known in this chamber. It is also evidence that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has been gelded and put out to pasture. In spite of his boast that he would influence the decision, it is obvious he had no influence whatever. In fact, after he had crossed the floor, the government brought this bill forward on three separate occasions and attempted to force it through the House. It should be noted that the hon. member for Crowfoot neither spoke in the debate on this issue nor participated in the committee proceedings. It should also be noted that he did not take part in any of the votes on this bill.

The final point I wish to make, before we move on to other business, has to do with the metric commission itself. We believe the commission should be revamped and shaken up. Someone should really build a fire under it. The commission should now be prepared to make known the balance of the metric conversion program. A complete bill should be brought forward so that parliament might have a chance to comment on the last phases of the metric conversion program. Such a bill should contain a schedule of the statutes which require amendment. In fact, it should include the amendments, together with a time schedule so that we might know when they were to come into effect. I have contended since 1973 that the metric commission is not fulfilling its mandate as set forth in the order in council. In my view, it has failed miserably. The commission owes it to the House and to the people to recommend legislation covering the balance of the conversion program. It should revise its approach to the program and have its annual report ready on time, not eight months late as on the last occasion.

If the commission fails to fulfil its mandate, I believe its members should be discharged as being incompetent. As members of the Conservative party, we shall continue to monitor very closely the work of the commission along with the whole metric conversion program. We urge the commission and the minister to see to it that we receive full value for the money we are spending on conversion and that the program goes forward in a businesslike manner.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUMMER RECESS

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would ask consent to revert to motions for the purpose of passing the adjournment motion, if there is consent that we can do so without debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are prepared to do so, on the understanding that no debate takes place.

Mr. MacEachen: I should like, then, to read the motion:

That, when the House adjourns following the disposal of the third reading and passage stage of Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, it shall stand adjourned until August 4, 1977 and, when it adjourns on August 5, 1977, it shall stand adjourned until October 17, 1977, provided that at any time prior to that date if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

● (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House met at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 52 (Mr. Brewin) negatived.

• (2050)

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that Bill C-24, an act respecting immigration to Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): By order, now.

Mr. Speaker: By order of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when I moved second reading of Bill C-24 I gave a brief historical account of the development of the legislation we now have before us. I pointed out that it was a bill in whose preparation thousands of Canadians had participated. They did so in part through the instrument of the Special Joint Committee on Immigration Policy which held hearings throughout Canada from May to November, 1975. Some Canadians submitted briefs through their members; others sent them directly to myself or to the department.

Since then the bill has had the benefit of a most thorough review by the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. That committee invited to appear before it many of the organizations which had appeared during 1975 so that it could determine the degree to which the earlier expressed views had been interpreted in terms of legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the minister but I do so for the sole purpose of asking hon. members who are not interested in listening to the speech of the minister please to leave the House quickly so that other hon. members who are interested can hear what is being said.

Mr. Cullen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my attendance at that committee's sessions I was impressed with the depth of knowledge and the interest of individual members in a law which will have such an impact on the conduct of Canada's immigration program in the future. I was impressed too with the essentially non-partisan approach which the members adopted during their clause by clause review, in their efforts to formulate legislation which I believe is a model in this field. Members approached the subject with the same open-mindedness to immigration which I suggest the government has had since it originated the review of immigration policy in 1973.

To underline the constructive attitude which members of the committee adopted toward the bill, one should note the sources of the amendments. A number were proposed by both opposition and Liberal members of the committee and were accepted by the government. Others were accepted in part by the government and were either modified by the proposer or by a government spokesman. Still others were moved on behalf of the government. Taken as a whole, I believe that these changes have resulted in an even better piece of legislation.

When I spoke on March 10 I described what I considered to be the major features of the bill. I would remind the House of what they are and how they have been improved by the amendments which were made in committee.

The first feature of the bill to which I referred last March was its establishment, in Clause 3, of the objectives which will govern future immigration policy. The committee endorsed those objectives but amended the preamble to the clause to declare "that the rules and regulations made under this act" would recognize those objectives. That, of course, is entirely acceptable and reinforces the government's intent when it drafted this clause.

The second point which I made at second reading was that the bill represents a new approach to the prohibited classes particularly by its removal of the archaic provisions of the present act concerning criminal and medical classes. I am particularly pleased that the unqualified ban against epileptics has been removed. The bill which has issued from the committee confirms this approach. Improvements have been made. For example, when dealing with persons seeking entry to Canada who have committed offences outside this country, it is now clearer that those offences must have a relationship to Canadian law.

I believe hon. members will find that the committee has improved Clause 19(1)(d) which is aimed at persons engaged in organized criminal activity. It describes more precisely than the original subsection the very sort of person and activity from whom we are attempting to protect the Canadian public.

The third reference I made related to the volume of the immigration movement. I stated that the bill removed the determination of immigration flow from the current practice of administrative decision. It provides for forward planning of the immigration program. In doing so it involves the provinces in the process. The amended bill fortifies the government's decision of adopting a new and open approach. It requires the minister responsible for immigration to table in this House not later than November 1 of each year a report which will indicate the immigration target for the following calendar year. That report will also indicate in which way demographic factors were taken into account when the annual target was determined.

On my fourth point, I dealt with the regulation making powers of the government and the minister. I indicated that the almost unlimited authority given in the current act was being replaced by a much more precise delineation of those powers.

While the bill was in committee I arranged for an amendment to be made to combine Clauses 115 and 116 which provided for governor in council and ministerial regulations respectively. While both sets of regulations are published in the Canada Gazette I considered that it would be less confusing to the public if only a single set of regulations were reported.

With respect to regulations, I was pleased to support an amendment in committee which would require certain of the regulations to be published in the Canada Gazette and the text laid before parliament 30 days prior to the coming into force of such regulations.

The fifth topic on which I spoke was refugees. I think it is true to say that it was a subject that concerned the members of the standing committee and the witnesses who appeared before it more than any other. There was a common feeling, in which the government fully shared, that Canada's refugee policy should not only live up to the obligations of the United Nations Convention to which we adhere, but that the bill should also reflect the humanitarian selection policy we have been following for more than 30 years.

In the achievement of these ends several changes were made to the bill in committee stage. An amendment to Clause 4 made it clear that a convention refugee who is in visitor status cannot be deported for minor offences. To underline what had been the government's original intent, Clause 6 was amended to emphasize that special selection criteria would be applied to refugees. I hope that this will finally clear up a misconception held by many groups that refugees will be selected under the same criteria as independent immigrants. That was never our proposal in the first place, and I am pleased to have our position clarified in this way.

The government proposed an amendment in committee which puts into law the present practice of permitting a refugee claimant in Canada to have a counsel while he or she is being examined.

I am now more confident than ever that the refugee sections of the bill are among the most generous in the world. They far exceed our international obligations in terms of the acceptance and protection of refugees.

My sixth point related to the protection of Canada from threats which did not exist in 1952 when the current act was passed. Terrorism and hijacking are contemporary crimes, perpetrated by individuals who give no advance warning of their intended deeds. The committee recognized the need for legislation to deal with these potential crimes.

● (2100)

My final point was on the safeguarding of civil liberties. I believe Bill C-24 unquestionably achieves this goal. Even potential or actual terrorists, or members of organized crime, have a right to a hearing, although in a small minority of cases they may not be made aware of all the allegations against them in order to protect sensitive information or even the life of the person who gave it. Elsewhere every subject of an immigration inquiry will know precisely the allegations against him. In addition, he will have the right to counsel and, if he chooses, the public may attend the hearing. The officer presiding over the case, known as an adjudicator, does not participate in the development of the case and renders his decision exclusively on the information adduced at the inquiry. This is an improvement over the present situation where a special inquiry officer not only prepares and presents the department's case but also renders the decision.

The same rights of appeal to the independent Immigration Appeal Board will be carried into the new legislation, but it will now be possible for an appellant to seek the board's compassionate consideration without contesting the legality of the removal order.

Parliament has been involved in the preparation of this legislation for some two and one half years. That was preceded by a year and a half of activity by the department in the preparation of the green paper. This has been a long process, but the quality of the bill now before us justifies the extended preparation that has gone into it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be very long tonight. It is the hope of our party that this bill will go through third reading this evening and that our work will be completed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I should like to echo the words of the hon. minister regarding committee stage. It was a very fine working committee, and in non-partisan manner it attempted to improve the legislation. As I said during report stage, we have reported back and improved this bill. On behalf of my party, I should like to say that we will support this legislation on third reading if a vote is called.

All of us who have been involved realize that a new immigration act is needed. I am pleased to see that the Immigration Act contains some objectives regarding Canada's new immigration policy. The minister and I do not agree totally as to the scope of those objectives. Some of us wanted to see them go a little further, especially my favourite whipping horse, namely, the demographic policy. The minister has accepted a partial step in that direction, which will place before parliament the target for immigration flow. It does not take a look at internal migration. While this is not within the exclusive purview of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, I urge the minister, and those who sit on the interdepartmental council, that a very clear-cut demographic policy be placed before us in the very near future.

Immigration cannot be rationalized without having a demographic policy and knowing exactly what are the objectives. We feel the amendment of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) should have been included. Immigration should not only reflect Canada's bilingual nature, but it should reflect Canada's multicultural nature. Unfortunately that was not accepted by the government. That concept was in the original draft of the bill and it was presented to Liberal caucus. It was at that point that it was very hotly debated and finally rejected. It is absolutely unacceptable for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Guay) to get up in his place and vote against—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but he should be aware of the fact that a decision has been rendered by the House on this motion. I do not think the hon. member is in line to criticize a vote by one of his colleagues.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for that direction.

Mr. Paproski: In any event, he voted against it.

Mr. Epp: This party wanted to see included in the objectives the multicultural aspect of Canada. Unfortunately that will not be the case.

Mr. Paproski: Right, but we will let the people in western Canada know.

Mr. Epp: The removal of prohibition against those for medical reasons from the 1952 bill is an improvement. The removal of the prohibition against epileptics whose condition is medically controlled is another improvement. The minister should be reminded of the commitment made by his officials at committee stage regarding persons present in Canada on the minister's permission. These persons were not given landed immigrant status. They will be contacted by the department and granted landed immigrant status after the bill is proclaimed. These persons will be granted a landed immigrant status and a calculation will be made as to the residency requirement in conjunction with the Department of the Secretary of State. Hopefully that will lead to citizenship for these people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: All of us can take pride in the fact that for the first time in Canada's immigration legislation we have a clear-cut definition of refugees and also a claim for refugee status. All members of the committee wanted to see this incorporated into the act. It is pleasing to see, after many representations from various interest groups across the country, that a refugee policy has been incorporated into the bill. Members of the United Nations Commission on refugees feel that it is a forerunner of refugee legislation.

From time to time too much stress has been placed on the so-called civil liberties of persons who have been on the fringes of a criminal element. It has concerned me that these people should be afforded every civil liberty. On the other hand there were members of the committee who seemed to stress the civil liberties of these persons over the protection of Canadians. This government has lost the handle on immigration. Canada's immigration laws have not been administered strongly enough. People have come into Canada and used Canada as a base to continue their criminal activities. I am referring to a very small number of people. That is not part of immigration and it should not be accepted by Canadians.

The minister's powers in this new legislation should prevent the criminal element from coming into Canada. He has the power to deport, and that is what is expected of him. It has nothing to do with the landing of bona fide immigrants who want to come to this country and start a new life, thus giving us the benefit of their experience and their ability. It has nothing to do with persons who try to exploit this country and beat the law. That is not what we want to see in the act. Criticism has been strongly levelled at the minister. He should use the act in such a manner that criminals will not use Canada as a base for their activities. It is for this reason we have endorsed clauses which may be wide-reaching and discretionary, new clauses regarding organized crime, terrorists and hijacking. This is an ongoing phenomenon in our modern world, and we need a law whereby the minister and his officials can act quickly and forcibly to protect Canadian society.

There is one other matter that I want to bring to the attention of the House tonight, and that is the matter of immigrant selection. Hon. members opposite know that I have favoured an immigration selection system based on the point system whereby we would have a sponsored class, a refugee class, and an independent class. The minister and his officials also know that we have recommended the expansion of the sponsored class and the removal of the nominated class. One might say that that means that one is opposed to such objectives as timely reunification. That is not the case. I believe that the reunification of next of kin, of those within the nuclear family, is well taken care of in the sponsored class, especially if we expand it to the sponsorship of parents of any age.

I am concerned that with the point system as it is now retained what will happen is that the percentage of the total flow of the so-called nominated class will increase to the point where independent immigrants will have a very difficult time in coming into Canada. There is a distinct advantage for a person getting points to have some family relationship. What I would have preferred is that all those apply as independent immigrants. They would then come into the country, it is true, and adjust to Canadian society with the assistance of their families. I feel very strongly that we will see the day when the sponsor of the refugee class will take such a high proportion of our annual flow that the independent immigrant who is willing to go to areas outside our cities—and studies show this is the group that has frequently gone to the outlying areas—will have much greater difficulty coming to this country, and I do not believe our immigration policy should be structured in that way.

In conclusion I would like to say that we have a better bill than before, a better immigration policy, and members of this House are pleased to see the end of the exercise. It is for that reason we will be supporting it on final reading.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I tried to make clear in the debate on second reading, and indeed in discussions in the committee, that I am quite prepared to admit that there are some features of the present legislation which are satisfactory, and improvements on what we had before, and I am also prepared to admit that the committee produced some useful amendments. Nevertheless, we think we have a bad bill and we should vote against it.

There are three areas in which the bill is unsatisfactory. First, the bill contains provisions which seriously jeopardize the right to proper hearings and fundamental freedoms. The main sections which are unsatisfactory are found in Clauses 19 and 27 dealing with reports against persons in Canada providing for their removal or deportation. I will not go over the whole argument in respect of Clause 19—members of the committee have heard me speak on it more than once and they must probably be getting a little tired of it—but the difficulty is that Clause 19 gives the right to refuse admission on the basis of speculative opinions and suspicions of immigration officers. This is in direct contradiction of what was previously in the Immigration Act. It was only when a person was convicted of certain kinds of criminal acts, or admitted to the commission of such acts, that he or she might be deported.

It has long been a basic principle of justice as it is known in Canada that a person should not be penalized for things he might do at some future time but has not done. What he is likely to do is purely a matter of speculation, and it is wrong that a person should be condemned, with the severe consequence of deportation, on the basis of committing one or more indictable offences, when some of these offences are relatively trivial. Nor should persons be liable to deportation because an immigration officer believes that there are reasonable grounds to assume that such a person will engage in subversion by force of any government. Any democratic government would have some sympathy for them, but some Canadian immigrants come from countries in which brutal dictatorships deny fundamental human rights, deny any possibility of a peaceful change, and indeed engage in widespread torture. The previous act dealt with this matter by referring to democratic governments, and I am prepared to see our immigration law seeking to protect democratic governments, but I see no reason why we should seek to protect regimes such as the one in Uganda at present, or those in some parts of South America and other parts of the world.

Another subclause makes liable to deportation a person who is a member of or is likely to participate in local activities and organizations likely to engage in such acts of violence. In the world as we know it today there are many organizations in different parts of the world engaged in many different ways of doing things. In other parts of the world there are people who are held down by violence and terror, and if they desire to change these regimes in order to assist their country, that is no good reason for Canada to refuse them admission. But it is quite possible that members of these organizations in Canada know nothing about the so-called violent activities of other members of an organization in another section of the world—they are perfectly innocent of any offence, and to penalize a person who is not knowingly guilty of any offence is wrong. It is what people do in Canada that should be of importance.

Clause 27 provides that where a person other than a Canadian citizen or permanent resident obtains entry by reason of any fraud or improper means of representation or any material fact, he or she can be deported. The American clause that covers this refers to wilful misrepresentation of any material facts. Our courts have interpreted an act similar to Clause 27(h) as applying even where the misrepresentation of material facts is without any intent to deceive. It is indeed a harsh penalty to refuse admission in such a case.

Every police officer, every immigration officer, is given the power to arrest without a warrant. The need to secure a warrant is a reasonable protection. It can usually be obtained on an affidavit or other sworn document. The deputy minister or senior immigration officer may issue such a warrant on reasonable grounds. Therefore there should be no difficulty for an immigration officer seeking to make an arrest in securing a warrant, and this would give adequate protection by having two different people, a senior member of the department or an immigration officer, look into the question of whether there is a proper basis for detention. It is extremely dangerous to give this power allowing wide groups of people, some trained and some not trained, to arrest on their own initiative at any time of the day or night. It removes a most important bulwark to hasty and ill-considered arrests.

The act still contains some provisions to permit fingerprinting, although it does not apply them with uniformity. People who come from the United States or the United Kingdom do not require visas and therefore are not liable to be fingerprinted. I am not personally very violently against fingerprinting, but it has been associated with criminal activities, and it is wrong for it to be required for certain classes of immigrants and not required for other immigrants. One thing that adds to the vice of deporting people on the grounds of suspicion is that the right of appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board is severely limited. In order to be sure of proper hearings all cases of deportation should be subject to appeal.

The second major objection we have was mentioned at second reading. That is that some of the most important provisions with respect to immigrants are delegated to the governor in council, and any parliamentary control, even of some of the key factors, is done away with.

Clause 115 deals with the making of regulations. There are 18 different classes of matters. Some of these are matters of detail, and it is perfectly reasonable to make rules and regulations without reference to parliament, but there are three subclauses in Clause 115(a) which provide for the establishment and application of selection criteria based on such factors as family relationships, education, and skill.

I do not need to read the whole group of things which are to be taken into account. At the very core of the Immigration Act are the standards by which we admit people, yet that is not delegated to parliament, and parliament has no real input whatever into the process.

Clause 115(b) deals with sponsored applicants. We say very piously in Clause 3 that one of the main purposes of the bill is to aid in the reunion of families. Then, instead of insisting that the rules in this respect be set out by acts of parliament so that they can be seen by all, we say that the rules with respect to this shall be delegated to the governor in council. Of course we do not really mean the governor in council. We know that the governor in council does not have time to deal with all these immigration matters. We mean the people who advise the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

By changing the regulations the government on a number of occasions has totally changed the law and caused the number of immigrants to vary very widely either up or down. Some of this may be necessary, but the important laws should be made by parliament. I tried in two amendments to introduce provisions which would enable parliament to intervene. The first was to define "family" for the purposes of sponsorship by setting out precise relationships.

The second amendment I proposed was that any regulations passed under Clause 115(a), (b) and (c) could be brought before parliament by a petition of 20 members, to be followed by debate and recorded vote within a certain limited time. This would make it necessary that all regulations under (a), (b) or (c) would be reviewed in parliament where 20 members are sufficiently concerned to take action by petition to secure parliamentary approval. The difference between the minister and my party on this lies in our evaluation of the role and supremacy of parliament. There are, of course, many other clauses of the bill which are to be dealt with by regulation.

As far as the principle of acceptance of refugees is concerned the minister said that we have a wonderful scheme for refugees, but no member of the committee knows what it is because it is in regulations which have not been published. We really do not know whether his words of praise for the regulations or proposals are justified or not justified. Terms and conditions which may be imposed on immigrants when they come to Canada are to be dealt with by regulation, and they are yet to be prescribed. I could go through the bill and find time and time again the reference in clauses "as prescribed by the regulations".

One of the difficulties of having everything done by regulations is the lack of public knowledge or, in fact, the secrecy with which some of these regulations are dealt. The minister did, as he has told us, indeed cause an amendment to Clause 115 to be proposed which provided that regulations passed under subclauses (a), (b) or (c) would not come into force unless published in the Canada Gazette. However, the Canada Gazette is packed with volumes of material, and it is almost impossible to find anything in it. I defy a layman or a new immigrant to be able to make head or tail of what is in the Canada Gazette. It would be extremely difficult to find the relevant provisions. The average immigrant would be completely at a loss, even if he did find the appropriate regulation. They are often highly complicated. The amendments I proposed were turned down, so we did not have and will not have a direct parliamentary say in these crucial matters.

There are one or two other matters I would like to call to the attention of the House. One has to do with security matters. These are very elaborate provisions allowing the minister or the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) to give certificates, and an advisory board to make recommendations, and then for the governor in council to order deportation after considering the reports of the special advisory board.

The weakness of all this is that what should be a matter of judicial power is given to political officers. I think that is quite wrong. It is wrong to say that procedures could not be devised which would enable a review of these cases by judicial officers. During the last war the defence of Canada regulations were passed giving to the then minister of justice, Mr. Louis St. Laurent, the power to detain and intern persons who, in his opinion, might be dangerous to the state. A fairly large number of persons was so detained. Eventually, however, parliament approved of a change whereby county and superior court judges could have hearings in such cases, and provision was made in cases where information was confidential not to publicize the sources of that information. This system worked perfectly well, and many persons were released. No difficulties seemed to result. I proposed such an amendment in straightforward terms to this section of the present act. This again was turned down.

The minister has developed a habit of saying that if a change is made, it would be a threat to the whole administration of the Immigration Act. What we have been primarily concerned about has been fairness and justice so that human beings facing the prospects of deportation can have fair hearings and an opportunity to meet the cases against them.

[Mr. Brewin.]

One other clause has been mentioned by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I find that clause very strange indeed. Clause 3 sets out the purposes of Canadian immigration policy and includes, as one of the main purposes, enriching and strengthening the cultural and social fabric of Canada, taking into account the federal and bilingual character of Canada. I proposed an amendment which would have added the multicultural nature of Canada. I was, of course, referring to the thousands of people—nay, perhaps millions—who come to Canada from countries other than Britain and France.

I am told that there are as many as perhaps three million from different ethnic backgrounds in Canada. They are particularly concerned about the management of immigration. Many of them have not been in this country very long, and they still have friends and relatives in the countries from which they came. There is a general statement of purpose in Clause 3, and I think it justifies consultation with these groups. As a matter of fact, some of the very best recommendations the committee received were from some of the so-called ethnic, multicultural groups. They have a right to be interested. They are not second class citizens. They are Canadians. We are all Canadians together, and no differences of culture should provide even a verbal exclusion of these people.

I am sure there are many other things that can be said about the bill. I am trying to bring out the salient features. I would like to finish by saying two things. First, we must always remember when discussing immigration that we are dealing with persons, human beings. It is all very well to be practical, to look into the economics and consider our own security. However, we must also in our own interests look at the human side of these problems.

These, therefore, are my three main objections. First is Clause 19 which condemns people on speculation and suspicion. Second is the refusal to recognize that the regulations are often not the right way to deal with key parts of the statute. The third is the recognition of the multicultural nature of Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the word "That", and by substituting therefor the following words:
> "Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada, be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration for the purpose of reconsidering Clauses 3, 19 and 115 thereof.".

Mr. Roger Young (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, my remarks at this stage of the debate will be very brief indeed. In view of the fact that Bill C-24 has been in preparation for two years or more, that there have been extensive hearings across the country, and even more extensive hearings in committee, and that we have had extensive and complete debate at second reading and report stage, pursuant to Standing Order 6(5)(a) I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey):

That this House continue sitting beyond the ordinary time of daily adjournment this day for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the third reading stage of Bill C-24, An Act respecting immigration to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members are aware that Standing Order 6(5)(a) permits a member to move such a motion to sit beyond the normal hours of sitting for the purpose of considering a specified item of business. Such a motion should be moved in the hour preceding the hour of adjournment. The Standing Order is very clear. It provides for the Speaker to put the question to the House. If fewer than ten members rise to indicate their opposition to the motion, the motion is declared as being adopted. I invite hon. members who are opposed to this motion to rise at this time.

And fewer than ten members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There not being ten members indicating their opposition to the motion, I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I begin by saying it would be a great disservice to the country if the motion proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) were passed. It is time that we passed this measure to give Canadians the immigration bill for which they have waited much too long.

On second reading debate I could not find it within my convictions to support this bill. I felt that the measures in it were far too open ended. They gave the minister too much power to change the immigration policy of the government simply by altering regulations with little reference to parliament, only by order in council.

That kind of power has distorted the demographics of Canada for the past 15 years. We do not need to extend that power now. For that reason, and for the reason of the loose definition of the family, I felt it was a very poor bill and could not vote in favour of it.

Having worked in committee and having seen some of the amendments that have been passed, I am pleased to see what has happened and the openness on the part of the minister to accept amendments. Therefore I am in favour of what is happening, even though the bill is still imperfect in many ways.

If we are going to talk about immigration, we need to concern ourselves with two very important principles. First, in looking at an immigration policy for Canada we must look to further the interests and welfare of Canada. That is our responsibility. I am very concerned about the humanitarian objectives that we as Canadians need to espouse and cultivate in our country.

It seems to me that those who are interested in coming to Canada are interested in Canada for one reason. Our country is different from theirs. They not only come here because Canada is attractive to them but because the place in which they are is unattractive to them. They want to leave the circumstances in which they find themselves.

• (2140)

If we are to preserve an attractive country we must preserve the characteristics which made it attractive and which we enjoy today. In order to do this we must maintain a sensitive control of immigration flow. For this reason I would be happier if the regulations were contained in the bill. Nevertheless, I am pleased to see that one of the amendments, an amendment to Clause 3, calls for the rules and regulations made by the immigration department to be in conformity with the objectives of the bill. That is an acceptable compromise and therefore I am happy to support the bill.

Mr. Benjamin: Happy?

Mr. Friesen: Yes, I am happy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: Members of the NDP would like to slow down passage of the bill and make it more difficult for the epileptics who need it to come into the country. They show such concern about the criminal element getting justice that they are willing to jeopardize justice for people who cannot help themselves. The flow of immigration must be controlled in order to preserve the employment climate, and at a time when we have between 800,000 and one million unemployed we cannot justify unlimited immigration.

One of our objectives must be the encouragement of entrepreneurial growth through the admission of immigrants with appropriate background and qualification.

An hon. Member: And money!

Mr. Friesen: Yes, provided it is honest money, not the kind which in the past has allegedly come from Hong Kong. So the first principle is that of preserving the well-being of Canada. The second is that immigration rules must be fair. There are those who feel this means we must cater to the most needy and that by doing this we would be fulfilling humanitarian goals. I suggest that the people who are most needy are those who do not even know Canada exists; if we were to take care of the most needy people of all, we ought to bring them here. Then we would face the difficulty of accepting immigrants who were incapable of standing the culture shock. If we cannot work on the principle of bringing in the most needy, we must work on the basis of fairness and we must be prepared to do our very best to give all the information which is needed by those who desire it. They have the right, for instance, to know how they are to be judged. Up to now, a large part of the statute and of the regulations was veiled in obscurity.

Consider the criteria which apply to health qualifications. All too often people do not know why they have failed. That is why I was disappointed in the amendment which the minister brought in at the report stage to limit an amendment which had already been agreed upon unanimously in committee. We agreed that if an applicant had a health problem he should have the right to the opinion of a competent health specialist in addition to that of the examining doctor. But the minister told us at the report stage that he had changed his mind, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) had whispered in his ear that this was not a workable program. Mr. Speaker, the minister of health had better be called the minister of stealth because he is sneaking in his own ideas, as if the minister directly responsible could not run his department properly. He is claiming he knows better. He is aspiring to godhead. He knows better, so he is overriding the wisdom of the committee, including the opinion of the staff of the department who agreed that this was a workable amendment and a good policy.

An hon. Member: Perhaps a ghost writer did it.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, perhaps a ghost writer did that for him—and it will come back to haunt him. The minister of health was looking after his own welfare and that of his bureaucrats when he revised that policy. Representations were brought to us by the National Association of the Mentally Retarded. They said it was easy enough for an immigration officer to betray his bias when examining an immigrant, and that it was not fair that the fate of an application should rest upon the opinion of one medical officer; there should be the right of recourse to the opinion of a specialist. But the minister of health knows better than those who specialize in various areas. He has never dealt with these cases. He has never been in contact with a family whose child might be retarded, or considered as being retarded. Because he is a Rhodes scholar he has never entered into the world of such a family or felt for its needs.

I think it is a shame that the minister has seen fit to bring in an amendment which waters down the protection afforded to applicants in such cases. The principle is the right to know. Under present circumstances when a case rests upon the opinion of one medical officer there is no way in which an applicant can feel sure his application is being rejected fairly. Under the amendment which unfortunately the House has just passed, the application simply goes to a second medical officer, a process which does nothing for the applicant and gives him no extra protection. All it means is a shuffling of folders and application forms in some immigration office overseas.

If we are to be fair, we must eliminate bias and prejudice. It is all too easy in the world in which we live for an immigration officer in any country abroad to get tired of looking at applications, tired of making decisions. In this connection, I think of the line which reads: "And wretches hang that jurymen may dine". I can offer the House a perfect illustration.

Some time ago a constituent of mine came to see me, with his wife. They are from India. They wanted to enter Canada but they had a teen-aged son who suffered from a serious heart condition. The medical officer examining them said the rest of the family could enter as immigrants but the son could not pass the medical test because of his heart condition. In view of the exigencies of the family's situation in India, the family decided to come to Canada and leave the child in the care of an uncle. The uncle formally adopted him so that the rest of the family could come here.

Once here, naturally they were lonesome for their son. They earned enough money to supply him with an air ticket so that he could visit them. While he was here they took him to a heart specialist. The heart specialist said he had a very severe problem but that the operation was not very severe and the boy could be taken care of very quickly. This they proceeded to do; the young boy underwent an operation and was cured 100 per cent. The family wants to bring him to Canada but he is now a member of a different family. If the minister had adopted the amendment we put forward in committee that would not have happened. The medical officer would have been required to pass the application on to the responsible medical specialist who would have said that he could take care of it. A general practitioner would not have looked at the matter.

The minister of health who is supposed to be looking after the welfare of people I say has done a disservice to some Canadians as well as discriminated against some who want to come to Canada to join their families. He has displayed his bias, and I say shame on him.

I do not want to prolong the debate. I just want to bring to the attention of hon. members what we have done to some families who want to come to Canada. They have been done harm. We have talked about prejudice. People come to my office every month who seem to think that prejudice exists in the immigration system. People from England say that it would be easier to reunite their families if they were from some country other than England. They believe there is prejudice. It is time that we made our immigration policy as open as possible in the sense of information, so that both by statute and by published regulations people know how their applications to come to Canada will be judged.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker. I trust we will end this debate soon and give the Canadian people the Immigration Act that they deserve.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of keeping the House very long, although I think we could have done without the motion which was moved a few moments ago.

I have been surprised at some of the comments which the minister made. It is true that both at second reading stage and in committee there was a great deal of discussion and exchange of opinions among members. Representations were made by a very wide variety of organizations. However, I cannot agree with the minister when he suggests that the committee approached questions with an open mind. He inferred, if he did not actually say so, that the committee reached a consensus. Anyone who has read the minutes of the meetings will realize that there were many submissions made by organizations which were not accepted by the government. A similar fate befell many of the most important suggestions and draft amendments made by members from all parties, including members on the government side.

We oppose this bill for the reason which some of us outlined at the report stage in some detail, as did my colleague the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) tonight. We believe that the bill gives much too much power and authority to the department and its officials. This does not mean that we think the policy in past years has been bad. It does not mean that we think we have permitted too many people to come to Canada or that we believe that the wrong kind of people have come to Canada. We just do not believe that any individuals or departments should be given the power virtually over life and death that is given in this bill to those who work for the government.

We do not believe, as we have made clear at all stages of debate that regulations drafted by public servants and adopted by cabinet, regulations which are not discussed or debated in parliament, are the way to formulate immigration policy.

I do not believe that this bill is as good as its proponents have suggested. Nor do I believe it is as bad as its opponents say. I have had representations made to me by constituents, as I am sure have many members from city constituencies, particularly constituencies in cities where there has been large scale immigration, to the effect that there has not been enough debate. I do not believe that is true, but they believe it is because there has been relatively little media reporting of the debates which have taken place in the House and in committee on this bill.

They believe that this bill will cut off immigration and that it will stop their friends and relatives from coming to Canada in the future. I do not believe that, but that is the way they feel. Nor do I believe, as I have said, that the bill is as good as the minister and members on the government side claim.

We are living in a changing world. Our open immigration policy is bound to change in the next few years. I doubt that there is a single member—certainly there is not a party in parliament—who does not believe that such a change is inevitable and who would not support such a change. After all, no other country in the world has taken in the number of immigrants Canada has, at least in percentage terms. This country has always been a country of immigrants.

Since the end of World War II more than three million people have come to Canada. Prior to World War II, and for four or five years after the war, almost all of the immigrants who came to Canada were either from Great Britain or countries in northern Europe. This began to change in the 1950's when we saw large scale immigration to Canada of people from countries such as Italy, and later Spain and Portugal. In more recent years we have seen a very large inflow of immigrants from countries which in earlier times never provided immigrants to this country, namely, countries in the West Indies, India, Pakistan, Hong Kong and Africa.

We Canadians have had to learn, and are still learning to live in close proximity with people whose language, colour and religion are different from those to which we have been accustomed. On the whole, that adjustment has been easy and smooth and Canadians have accepted the changes which have taken place. But there have been other changes. Immigrants who came to Canada before World War I to a large extent, at least in western Canada, became farmers. They came to open up land which had not been worked prior to their arrival. Their children and grandchildren can be found in almost every part of western Canada.

Today's immigrants will work in our cities, mostly Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. Some people express surprise about that. There has been talk to devise policies encouraging people to come to Canada, provided they will not move to our large cities. That will not be possible because when they opt for large cities they are following the example of people resident in Canada. They want to go to the large cities because that is where the action is and that is where the jobs are.

The number of immigrants coming to Canada will decline. According to Statistics Canada, we have about 900,000 unemployed. In fact we are aware that there are substantially more than one million unemployed. Faced with that kind of situation and the pressure for housing and other facilities in the city, people living in Canada, including the children and granchildren of immigrants, are saying to members of parliament that Canada should slow down the number of immigrants it permits to come into this country. I do not believe anyone would disagree with that policy, but a reduction will not take place as a result of this bill.

Reduction can occur if the government changes regulations, as it has done in the past when it desired a reduction in the number of immigrants. A reduction can be achieved by changing the staffing of immigration officers in the countries from which people want to emigrate. If we want to reduce the number of immigrants, we have to cut the staff by 25 per cent or 50 per cent, thus enabling them to process a lesser number of immigrants wanting to come to Canada. We do not object to a reduction, but we object to the reduction which will take place under a closed policy, even if the minister will be making an annual statement. By devices within his department this statement will be kept a secret from the people of Canada.

As has been stated previously, we will vote against this bill because we do not believe that the immigration policies of this country should be decided as they will be, to a large extent, by the minister, the deputy minister, and officers of their department both inside and outside Canada. We believe prospective immigrants should be more aware of the reason why they were turned down. They should also be aware of the fact that they have the right to appeal. The appeal procedure should be easier than that found in the provisions of the bill as drafted.

This bill is deficient in view of the fact that it does not recognize the multicultural character of this country. For these various reasons, it is my intention to vote against this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Immigration

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I should thank the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Young) for giving me these 40 minutes in which to speak on immigration or not. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) had been willing to cut his remarks somewhat, we would have been finished by now. But I do not intend to take the full 40 minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: My reason for not requiring the 40 minutes is that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has made a very noble presentation of his party's views. By far he is the most competent of any member in this House to speak on immigration. He has been associated with it for years and years. He is not biased in relation to language, creed, colour, or whatever else may be involved. His position has been that of a purist. Probably some members will regret, no matter how good the legislation is, some of the changes which would be very difficult for the public service.

Everyone should realize the speed and the compromise made by hon. members on all sides of this House in relation to Bill C-24, which had over 50 amendments at report stage. It was disposed of in a matter of six or eight hours of debate, and third reading was included in that time. The House leader, even if a backbencher does not work with him, should realize that he owes us, and that I will collect. We could have used the period of time between now and October when we will be returning, rather than talking about adjourning at this time.

The remarks which have been made during this debate, and the work done by the hon. member for Greenwood in committee will be long remembered because of his knowledge, sincerity, and objectivity in this field. It is unfortunate that some of the amendments were not given consideration, particularly those regarding cultures other than our two major ones in this country. There will be many regrets because of that.

I regret the government House leader was not present tonight to see the action that was taken. He is certainly liberal enough to admit that the deliberations have proceeded beyond our wildest hopes. The action taken by one of his backbenchers will be regretted by all of us because of the bad taste which has been left in our mouths.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is now on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

Amendment (Mr. Brewin) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is upon the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, the House has finally come tonight to the conclusion of a long and interesting debate which has at last opposed people with very different views on the relations between the state and the citizen. I have deeply appreciated working in committee where cooperation as well as fair exchanges of views prevailed throughout the 70 hours of debate.

It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that the work accomplished has brought a substantial improvement to the quality of this legislation introduced in the House of Commons by the government. Mr. Speaker, the minister pointed out during the debate at the report stage that the law had been improved. He insisted a lot on the number of amendments he had accepted. I think he mentioned that close to one hundred amendments were approved by the House and the committee and then sanctioned by the House but I would respectfully remind him that the number of amendments approved and passed are not necessarily an indication of a substantial improvement of this bill.

I was surprised last night to hear another minister on television, a minister representing another level of government, using exactly the same argument to try to explain that a famous legislation, a legislation in which a good many members of this House are quite interested, had been greatly improved because of some hundred amendments that had been accepted. I think what is important is the nature, the effect, the substance of these amendments, which give the real measure to determine whether a legislation has been improved or not.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of national security has been present throughout the whole debate. I will not elaborate too much on this, but I think that the difficult problem encountered and still present in any democratic system is to try to find a balance between the safeguard of our institutions and of democracy and the steps a government or the executive must take to protect the democratic system.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-24 unfortunately contains in several of its provisions some factors which could give rise to rather serious abuses. I do not challenge nor question the good faith and the ideal which inspire this government. Being well acquainted with the cabinet members and the people who run the government, I do not think there is any problem for the time being. However, I think that to govern is essentially to anticipate and we must see that any bill passed by Parliament is drafted in such way that not only this government, but also the government of tomorrow or the day after tomorrow—since we are living under a democratic system and governments are replaced—but also future governments could not be in a position to take advantage of it, especially as far as national security is concerned, and open the door to abuses which could infringe the individual freedom of the Canadian people, the permanent residents and visitors.

Mr. Speaker, I would like more especially to quote a few examples. Amendments have been submitted, for example, to clause 39 which more specifically deal with visitors and security certificates. Under the proposed amendment, the security certificate should be issued at the discretion of a judge of the Federal Court, but since that amendment has been negatived, we are back to a situation where, essentially, the security certificates may be issued by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the Solicitor General, without any form of control whatsoever. The same goes with clause 40, where the Advisory Board provided for has advisory powers only, which means that whatever its verdict the excutive can always ignore it.

I would now like to say a few words about political refugees, which has been my main issue with Bill C-24 through all its stages. I would suggest once more to the minister, in a most friendly way, that on this matter I have the deep conviction that I have been defending not only a just cause but the right one. Because I cannot accept the point that widening the definition of "refugee" would have created problems as far as the refugee program administration is concerned. I feel that the special programs developed by the government in respect of certain countries such as Uganda or Chile could create as many problems strictly speaking, inasmuch as a great number of residents, citizens and nationals living in those countries could in theory seek political asylum in Canada. The key to this whole matter in my view lies in a distinction that has been ignored, the difference between admissibility and selection. Clearly, under the act a greater number of individuals could have been admissible as refugees, but on the other hand the possibility always remained with the government under the act itself, as is now the case, to select those who seemed to meet certain criteria. To conclude on the matter of political refugees, I am otherwise happy that the minister accepted to submit refugees to clause 6(2), so that special criteria would apply to those special immigrants. Mr. Speaker, important improvements have also been made in the committee, and I would like to speak about the matter of exit permits which, it seems to me, constituted an extremely dangerous initiative and opened the door to many potential abuses from which the Canadian democracy would inevitably have suffered in a few years.

Mr. Speaker, we could speak for hours about such a complex bill, but I would like to close by quoting the French poet Paul Valéry since, as I said in the beginning, this bill essentially concerns the relationship between the state and the citizens. Valéry said: If the state is strong, we are crushed, if it is weak, we perish. Therefore, in such a bill as this one, the objective that we should have aimed for, and I believe that we have missed it, should have been, on one hand, to establish a balance to enable the state to gain sufficient strength so that our democracy may endure and develop, and on the other hand, to protect the freedoms of the citizens of this country, and not only of the Canadian citizens, but also of all the people in the world who wish to come to Canada, either as immigrants or as visitors. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of members of this House to see to it that the legislative authority, the courts have some input in major decisions, and I believe that in Bill C-24, the legislative authority has been in a certain way short-circuited through a series of regulations. I am pleased that an amendment was made to clause 115, so that at least, before regulations are proclaimed in the Official Gazette, Parliament can be made aware of them.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the motion (Mr. Cullen) that the bill be now read the third time and do pass. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

And five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. By virtue of a series of rather fascinating orders, we now appear to have arrived at the time at which we have exhausted the order pursuant to Standing Order 75A. We have also fulfilled the order made earlier this day standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). Further, we have given effect to the special order under Standing Order 6(5)(a) made earlier this evening on the hour of adjournment, which therefore makes applicable the order on the adjournment standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council. Therefore, with the fulfilment of the orders and the passage of time, this House stands adjourned, pursuant to that order, until August 4 at 2 p.m.

May I say three other things. First, it appears possible now that when we return to this House on August 4 for the debate that is ordered for August 4 and 5, we will be able to do so in this Chamber without prejudice to the projects that we have under way which are so important for the commencement in the fall.

Second, there was to be an adjournment debate pursuant to Standing Order 40 this evening. Those hon. members who have been scheduled to appear on that adjournment debate this evening have been rescheduled by popular demand for August 4 at ten o'clock or whatever may be the time.

Third, at the risk of having to do this a second time in the same summer—a rather unprecedented combination—I now invite all hon. members to join me in my chambers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

At 11.10 p.m. the House adjourned until August 4, 1977, pursuant to special order made earlier this day.

SUGGESTED WITHHOLDING OF CANADA WORKS GRANTS FROM QUEBEC WHILE CIVIL SERVANTS HOLD TWO JOBS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by the fact that the public service minister of the province of Quebec has confirmed that 22,000 Quebec public servants hold two permanent public service jobs and collect two salaries during a time of high unemployment. Furthermore, since the federal government has announced that Quebec will get more than $84 million from the Canada Works program for make work projects, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this House direct the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to proportionately reduce the $84 million Canada Works grant to Quebec and UIC payments to Quebec until 22,000 Quebeckers are taken off the unemployment rolls by eliminating dual jobs in the Quebec civil service, and if this is not done to withhold the Canada Works grant from Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED PROLONGATION OF SESSION TO DEAL WITH ECONOMIC SITUATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of public and private forecasts, including most recently the Wall Street Journal, indicating continuing high levels of unemployment throughout Canada, in view of the general uncertainty in the Canadian economy and considering the fact that the government has promised a statement on job creation in the first week of August and nothing has been forthcoming, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House agrees to sit beyond Friday, August 5, in order to enable the government to bring in legislation to deal with the serious problems of the Canadian economy, and in particular the alarming and worsening problem of unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT LET QUEBEC CONTROL ITS OWN FUNDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of pressing necessity.

Considering the economic situation now prevailing in the western world and especially in North America; considering that such a situation affects mostly the American dollar and as a consequence the Canadian dollar; considering the dangerous fluctuation of the Canadian dollar related to the American dollar; and considering that the government headed by the Prime Minister is attempting to hide this situation under the pretext that all these problems are due to the new political situation created by the elections of November 15, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the government stop fighting in every possible way the Quebec political emancipation that, instead, it concern itself with solving the problems of our deficient economic system which generates the worse ills, namely including unemployment, through a feasibility study to let the provinces control their credit, thus guaranteeing each one's progress.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by the apparently illegal activities of a uranium cartel which operated between 1972 and 1975. In view of the fact that the Canadian government took an active part in fostering this cartel, and bearing in mind that as the uranium cartel functioned cartel prices become world prices, which in turn became the Canadian domestic price, all of which is carefully recorded as it was screened with the cartel secretary in Paris, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield):

That this House order an inquiry immediately into such cartel, with particular reference as to whether the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act have been violated.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation for debate of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTED INQUIRY TO ASSURE MAINTENANCE OF LAW ENFORCEMENT STANDARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity with regard to the contractual and working relationship of the RCMP vis-à-vis provinces to which the force is under contract, specifically Nova Scotia. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That the Solicitor General, in view of differences between the RCMP and the Nova Scotia department of the attorney general as set out in correspondence this spring regarding certain matters of criminal procedure and investigations of persons in the Berwick area of Nova Scotia which touched on the police force of that town among other things, enquire to make certain that proper and usual standards of law enforcement of the force are not being restricted.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF COMPREHENSIVE POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the brief presented to the Minister of State (Small Business) by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, which criticized the government for failing to address itself to the many problems faced by small business, such as access to capital, cash flow, tax policies, government purchasing policies, government regulations and reporting requirements, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That this House instructs the Minister of State for Small Business to end the patchwork quilt of government programs by introducing a comprehensive small business policy which will truly meet the needs of small businessmen in Canada.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ACTION TAKEN AGAINST THOSE ADVERTISING ABORTION ON DEMAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the promise of the Minister of Justice to investigate the May 9 advertisement in the Ottawa Journal for legal abortions on demand, and in view of the fact that these abortions take place in Montreal at a cost of $250 on a same day no questions asked basis and are in obvious and direct contravention to the Criminal Code, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House directs the Minister of Justice to make a statement on motions today outlining what actions have been taken in conjunction with the Ontario and Quebec ministers of justice and clearly indicate what charges have been laid.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

COMBINES

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—REASON FOR ORDER IN COUNCIL PROHIBITING POSSESSION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister in connection with this very considerable uranium cartel of a dubious nature, and probably tainted with illegality, in which the government apparently played some part, as referred to by my hon. friend earlier. Will the Prime Minister explain to this House the reasons the government had to accommodate the parties by indicating in advance that "an opinion will be rendered by the Minister of Justice which will prevent any action from being taken under Canada law against participants in the agreement, at least as long as the present government is in power", which is a quote from a memorandum from Gulf legal counsel under date April 12, 1972.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the position of the government is one of not permitting United States law to have extraterritorial jurisdiction in Canada. I suspect the hon. member for Peace River will support the government on that, as long as he is in the opposition.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Prime Minister is afraid to answer the question directly.

Mr. Alexander: When he is in trouble, as usual.

Mr. Baldwin: If the government is satisfied that there was no illegality and that there is nothing to hide, despite the fact that it is trying desperately both in the courts in England and in Toronto to prevent any information being given, can the Prime Minister explain why the government promulgated Order in Council 76-644 which effectively bars possession and use of all documents relating to the cartel from 1972 to 1975 inclusive, as an horrendous attempt to hide evidence. I might make myself liable under it by bringing from my office in the Confederation Building to this Chamber a copy of the memo I have just read.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I really wonder whether the hon. member listened to the substantive answers which were given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and other ministers in this House some time ago. If he is just being farcical about the subject, then I can understand his question. If he will recall the substantive issue itself this "cartel" was deliberately encouraged by the government in order to protect Canadian industry and industries of other countries which were being inhibited by restrictive practices in the United States. We find it objectionable that United States law should inquire into this practice which we consider legitimate, as if their law should be forced upon Canadians and we in Canada should be forced to submit to that law. This point was made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It was made by the Minister of Finance in this very House, I believe in the presence of the Attorney General of the United States. If the hon. member objects to the Canadian government taking measures to protect our industry from foreign interference, he should say so and not disguise it in the form of a question that is spurious.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I am not talking about extraterritorial law. I am talking about this House of Commons and an order in council which this government passed prohibiting members of this House, members of the gallery and members of the public from having in their possession any documents relating to this conspiracy. If the government has nothing to hide, why did it pass this order in council and why will it not let the documents in question become public so that we can all make our judgment?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the issue is really whether we want to let Canadian residents be subjected to United States law—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: The issue is whether Canada is prepared to break other countries' laws.

Mr. Trudeau: —when that law tells them they shall make certain documents public. In that sense, we are telling Canadians that they do not have to divulge everything that Uncle Sam says they should. In that sense they are obliged to hide facts from foreign application of a foreign law.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—EFFECT ON DOMESTIC USERS—POSSIBILITY DOMESTIC CONTRACTS EXAMINED BY CARTEL

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Prime Minister. As it has now been revealed in documents, in minutes and in sworn testimony relating to the uranium cartel group, known as the Club of Five, that Canadian consumers have been injured while international companies may gain billions in windfall gains, and as on several occasions the cabinet approved of these cartel activities and even facilitated them, which appear to have contravened the Canadian Combines Investigation Act, will the Prime Minister indicate if at any time, as head of cabinet, he inquired as to what effect cartel activities would have on domestic users in Canada and, if so, what did he learn?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this subject was acted on by the government in the normal way.

An hon. Member: It sure was.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot recall, in answer to the precise question, which particular decisions went before the cabinet. I do say that the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the then Minister of Justice were acting within their authority and acted in the way they did to protect Canadian interests.

Mr. Stevens: As a search of the Club of Five organization's records maintained in Paris, supposedly secret, confirm that Canadian domestic contracts involving Ontario Hydro, for example, were scrutinized and policed by the group, will the Prime Minister indicate if he was informed of this fact, bearing in mind such information was certainly available to his then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and to at least one member of his staff?

Mr. Trudeau: In answer to that particular question, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, I did not know that particular fact. I fail to see how that would have changed the decision at the time.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—POSSIBILITY PRIME MINISTER INQUIRED AS TO LEGALITY OF SCHEME

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Bearing in mind Club of Five records indicate that many participants feared their activities would lead to charges under the Combines Investigation Act, and in fact the then director of investigation and research of the Combines Branch, Mr. Henry, was said to have warned that the proposed activity was illegal, would the Prime Minister indicate if he inquired as to the legality of the scheme and, if so, what was he informed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall whether I asked any specific question about the legality of the scheme or otherwise. This was a plan put forward once again to protect Canadian producers, and I presume consumers, against restrictive measures by the U.S. uranium industry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Not the consumers.

Mr. Trudeau: As such it went forward with the government's approval. I would ask the hon. member, if he is concerned with specific aspects of this, to let me inquire into them or else to address his questions to the ministers who were then responsible for these portfolios.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REASON FOR LACK OF ACTION ON JOB-CREATING MEASURES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I am tempted to say that only the Conservatives could make the Prime Minister look like a nationalist.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. Considering that recently the minister said that, unless the private business sector did something soon about creating more jobs, the government would have to move in with special job creation measures, and since he also added that the cabinet would have to reach a decision on this matter by the end of July and that an announcement would be made about such new efforts by the government in the first week of August, since none of these three conditions have materialized, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance why he has changed his mind and why the government has done nothing in the past week about the new job creating measures that the Minister of Finance said were essential?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I would remind the hon. gentleman that my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, set out late last month a proposed expenditure of a quarter of a billion dollars for additional direct job creation measures in this coming winter. We have been keeping under close surveillance the report on the first and second quarter performance within the Canadian economy, and that close surveillance will be continuing as the year goes on.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister well knows that the announcement he has just referred to by one of his colleagues was a decision that was made prior to his own statement that some additional measures might be required. Is he now saying that the announcement that was made by one of his colleagues will be sufficient to head off what every independent and public group has forescast as increasing unemployment for the coming fall?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would remind the hon. gentleman again that the announcement incorporated the expenditure of a quarter of a billion dollars, which of course, is a very substantial expenditure for the coming year.

EFFECT OF UNEMPLOYMENT ON NATIONAL UNITY—REASON FOR FAILURE TO ADOPT CORRECTIVE MEASURES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I would remind the minister that what he has just said does not at all deny the point that I have made. He admitted just a few weeks ago that all these measures were insufficient; now he is implying that the measures that were in existence then and that remain unchanged are sufficient.

My last question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to ask him whether, considering that he himself has said that the private sector has not been creating the kinds of jobs that the budget was supposed to establish, and considering that the President of the Treasury Board is quoted as having said that it is "getting pretty hard on the nerves" to wait for action by the private sector in terms of job creation and that this is contributing to national disunity—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fraser: You are in the House, not on television.

Mr. Broadbent: —I would like to ask the Prime Minister, if he agrees with these observations and if he agrees that national disunity results in part from higher levels of unemployment, why the government persists in doing nothing.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can answer that question fairly only by putting it in the context of the larger problem of economic development in Canada, which I am sure the leader of the NDP would welcome. In that sense it fits into the discussion we had with management and labour on Friday of last week and with some other labour groups this week to try to impress upon them that the Canadian economy must be made to perform better and that that depends not only on government action—I mean all governments, federal, provincial and municipal—but that it also relies very heavily on the private sector, of which the groups we met last week were very representative.

In this sense I support the views of the Minister of Finance and the quotes from the President of the Treasury Board that there is a great onus on government to do what it can to correct the high unemployment situation, but much of our corrective measures will depend on the co-operation we can have from all sectors of the Canadian economy to make sure that we have an economy which is competitive with our principal competitors, principally the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: What is the government going to do?

HOUSING

PROVINCES CONSENTING TO HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister? Considering that a few weeks ago the government announced that a special insulation program designed to urge those who own a house built before 1921 to save energy, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether all provinces agreed to follow this program and, if not, which provinces have agreed so far?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take notice of the question but the hon. member will realize that I did not communicate myself with the provinces but the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did so before announcing his program, and he is also the one who will be able to report on the reception given to this program by the various provinces.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Could the minister tell the House whether the provinces were consulted before the announcement of the program? If so, did they all agree? If not, which provinces did not and did they say why?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was considerable consultation between the federal government and the provinces. This matter was raised at the federal-provincial energy ministers' meeting on May 11 of this year. Subsequent to that and subsequent to discussions between myself and my cabinet colleagues and a cabinet decision, I then discussed the principles of the home insulation program with each of the energy ministers, or their premiers, of all the provinces across the country before announcing the government's decision. On each occasion I got a very favourable response from each energy minister or premier to whom I was talking. Indeed, in the case of Quebec there was a discussion between myself and the energy minister, and the minister made it quite clear to me that he accepted and agreed with the principles which the federal government proposed to impose in the home insulation program.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, considering the importance of this question and the somewhat controversial radio news like I heard this morning, did the province of Quebec categorically refuse or does it agree on principle, and if it does agree on principle can the minister tell us that we can hope it will do so in practice?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, that is a question we are trying to clarify right now with the Quebec government. There has been an exchange of telexes and letters between myself and the energy minister, and I hope to be able to define and clarify the areas of concern of the government of Quebec very shortly.

COMBINES

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—RIGHT OF GOVERNMENT TO PARTICIPATE IN ILLEGAL ACTION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In light of matters which were raised today by my colleagues from Peace River and York-Simcoe relating to a matter which could well have involved the participation of ministers and officials of the government of Canada in an action which at the time, and in view of the then director of combines and investigation of this government, was illegal, will the Prime Minister tell the House whether it is the position of the government that there are circumstances in which ministers of the Crown or the government itself have the right to take actions which break the law of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no, that is not a right to which we, on this side, subscribe.

Mr. Fraser: Then, why did you do it?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, I cannot quarrel with what Mr. Henry, the then director of combines and investigation said, but I know that the order in council we passed was under a law passed by this parliament setting up Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and that we had a legal opinion from the Department of Justice of Canada to the effect that we were not infringing on the combines act.

Mr. Hees: When did you become a supporter of cartels?

Oral Questions

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ACTIVITIES OF CABINET MINISTERS OR GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that there is a difference between subscription and practice on the government side. Since it now appears on the basis of available evidence that there was what amounts to a uranium sales conspiracy which included ministers of the Crown and the Canadian government, a conspiracy to sell uranium in a way which violated Canadian domestic laws, not foreign laws, which may well have transgressed international codes and perhaps artificially inflated the domestic prices of power and uranium in Canada, I wonder if the Prime Minister, instead of covering up this matter by order in council or any other means, would undertake to have a complete review and a full report made to the House of Commons with regard to any actions by any cabinet minister or representatives of the government of Canada which might have been or were in clear conflict with the law of Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that the question was properly asked in light of my previous answer, in which I indicated clearly that we received information from the Department of Justice to the effect that we were not in contravention of the competition act, that we were not in conflict with the restrictive trade practices legislation of Canada and that we were perfectly within our rights to pass that order in council which, I repeat, was made pursuant to an act of this parliament setting up atomic energy controls.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—SUGGESTED REPEAL OF ORDER IN COUNCIL PROHIBITING POSSESSION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister had at least two legal opinions which were in conflict. The then director of the combines investigation branch told the Prime Minister and his colleagues that what they were doing was in conflict with the law of Canada. For some reason, perhaps relating to the fear of litigation on this matter or of the matter becoming public, they have promulgated a most extraordinary order in council which in effect makes it illegal for me as Leader of the Opposition, any member of this House, any member of the gallery, or any member of the public of Canada to carry, discuss or have in his possession any of a wide range of documents which are public in other countries and would normally be public here. I ask the Prime Minister, if he is not prepared to carry out an investigation of this matter will he at least repeal the regulation in this most offensive order in council, this latest attempt by the government of Canada to keep information from the people of Canada? Will he at least give us the undertaking that he will today, by order in council, repeal this document and then institute immediately an inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act into all aspects of the uranium cartel's operation?

[Mr. Hees.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is false, at least in part, in that the Leader of the Opposition said we had conflicting legal opinions. I must remind him that the Crown in Canada is advised by the legal officers of the Crown and that we had legal advice from the Department of Justice—

An hon. Member: To cover up.

Mr. Trudeau: —which is empowered by parliament to advise the Crown and does so by tradition. We had advice that we were acting legally. Any allegations about cover up or of the desire to controvert the law are spurious accusations.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Nonsense!

Mr. Fraser: Was the order in council spurious? Why do you need something like that in a free country?

Mr. Paproski: They only do things like that in Russia.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is dealing with the matter of whether the government acted legally or not. We acted within the law, as we were advised the law read. That is point number one.

Obviously, the object of the order in council is not to prevent the Leader of the Opposition or the hon. member for Peace River—

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Read it.

An hon. Member: Listen.

Mr. Trudeau: —to carry around documents in their pockets. The object of the legislation, to repeat my earlier answers, is to prevent foreign law from obliging Canadian residents or Canadian citizens, including the Leader of the Opposition, to submit to that foreign law.

Mr. Stevens: That is not what it says.

Mr. Trudeau: If there is any way in which that objective can be reached by improving the order in council, by not infringing on the rights of the opposition to carry documents in their pockets when they walk from their offices to the House of Commons, I undertake to look at the order in council, to see if it can be improved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the opposition laughs, but this is what the Leader of the Opposition wants me to do.

Mr. Fraser: It is enough to make us cry.

Mr. Trudeau: You can cry, of course, and you will be following your natural habit.

Mr. Fraser: I cry for my country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by the Leader of the Opposition to examine a statutory instrument, to see if it can be improved. I have answered that I would, Mr. Speaker. What else does the opposition want?

Mr. Fraser: The truth.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I wonder, after that performance, if I may ask if the Prime Minister has read this order in council which makes it illegal for any person to release any note, document or material or disclose or communicate the contents thereof to any person, government, Crown corporation, agent or other organization, unless required to do so under a law of Canada, or unless he does so with the consent of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the man in charge of the department which was then involved in an activity which may well have been illegal. Surely, the Prime Minister does not need any more evidence than that I have read into the record to prove to him that we have here a restriction upon free speech, upon free inquiry, upon the ability of the House of Commons to do its job and upon the ability of the courts of the land to do their job, and that this most illiberal attempt to limit debate and hide information should be withdrawn and stopped immediately.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition read part of an order in council and the words I heard were "release any note or document." I have not read the order in council.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not have it before me.

Mr. Epp: But you signed it.

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously—I listened to what the Leader of the Opposition said—it depends on what the note or document relates to. I hope the Leader of the Opposition is not claiming that he can carry and release any document relating to anything without being liable to some kind of restriction by the law.

Mr. Hees: This performance would make the Russians blush.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ACTIONS OF COMBINES DIRECTOR

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs also relates to the uranium cartel. In response to my question of June 17, the minister replied, as reported on page 6785 of Hansard, that:

> . . . the director has been following the situation closely for evidence of violation of the act.

Has the minister anything further to report on what the director of the combines and investigation has been doing, given that the previous director had said it was very likely that the action taken on the part of the conspirators was illegal under Canadian law?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, given the questioning which arose a few minutes ago, and in response to the hon. member's last point, may I say that I consulted the deputy director a few minutes ago who advised me the matter is still under consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you blush, Abbott? Resign.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER REVIEWED EVIDENCE AND WILL LAY CHARGES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): A question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the minister tell us whether or not he has reviewed personally any of the evidence which has been produced in the U.S. courts, and which has now been produced in Toronto in connection with this conspiracy and allegations that Canadian law has been broken and that some of the participants were the hon. gentleman's colleagues in the present Cabinet?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have reviewed the press reports and material but I was not a member of the government at the time and I can add nothing to the answers which the Prime Minister has given, answers which I believe adequately deal with the scurrilous remarks made by the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Gillies: It is a very interesting question whether this government believes that any means can be used to justify certain ends. However, it has long been a proposition among the people of this country that even governments must obey the law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: I did not ask the minister whether he had read any press reports. I asked him whether he had read any of the depositions taken in this case, evidence which to most people indicates there was a conspiracy and that Canadian law was broken. More specifically, will the minister lay charges under Section 8 of the act and require that the Director of the Combines Investigation Branch take this matter under consideration so that it may be properly investigated?

Mr. Abbott: As the hon. member is aware, my powers under Section 8 of the Combines Investigation Act are as he outlines. But at the time I answered a question earlier in the summer I did so quite accurately—that in the light of the proceedings taking place in the United States the Director of the Combines Branch was studying the question and would be reporting to me. Until that study has been completed and until he has reported I do not intend to take any further action.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE

PAYMENT OF BILINGUAL BONUS

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of articles appearing in today's Ottawa press, can the hon. gentleman tell us when an announcement will be made concerning payment of bilingual bonuses to public servants?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Consultations are under way with the official languages committee of the National Joint Council and we are hopeful a consensus will be reached on certain proposals placed before that body covering this whole area, one of which also includes significant and related provisions for changes in the implementation of the Official Languages Act in the Public Service. I hope such a consensus may be available within a month. Until then we are not in a position to make any formal announcement.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION UNITED STATES USED CANADIAN INSTITUTIONS FOR EXPERIMENTS IN SENSORY DEPRIVATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—I am sorry I did not give him notice. Is the government aware of the use by the United States CIA, a U.S. government agency, of Canadians and the Canadian Institute at McGill to experiment in brainwashing or sensory deprivation? Is the minister aware that persons who are subjected to this treatment lose the senses of sound, sight, smell and in some cases touch and time also, and that the experience has serious effects upon their personalities?

An hon. Member: Like the Liberals!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The only evidence I have about changes in people's personality relates to this House and is usually the result of actions taken by the other side. But as to the question, which is a serious one, may I say I have not had an opportunity to find out anything beyond the account I have read in the newspaper. But I will undertake to inquire further.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask the minister whether, if these accounts, which certainly appear to be authentic, prove to be authentic, he will consider making a protest to the United States government with regard to what appears to have been an intrusion into the affairs of Canadians?

Mr. Jamieson: I will consider that possibility.

[Mr. Abbott.]

COMBINES

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—SUGGESTION MINISTER MADE MISLEADING STATEMENT CONCERNING EFFECT ON DOMESTIC PRICE

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs relating to the subject of the cartel. On June 17, the minister told the House that this cartel "was designed to exclude price fixing in the Canadian market". The quotation is from Hansard. It is now evident from a quarterly report of the Paris-based cartel secretariat dated July 4, 1974, that seven tonnes of uranium were sold to Ontario Hydro at the fixed cartel price—Ontario Hydro records will confirm this sale. Further documentation shows clearly that Ontario Hydro, hence, the Ontario consumer, was forced to pay the cartel price on a continuing basis. Will the minister tell us why he chose to mislead the House in his statement of June 17?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): When I answered that question I stated correctly that the design of the cartel was as I described it. I was not attempting to deceive the House in any way. The information which the hon. member has provided to the House and which has been discussed today is new to me, so my answer at that time was accurate given the information I had.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): In view of the fact the former director of investigation and research advised the government in 1972 that what they subsequently did would be illegal, does the minister not feel he has a duty to move the matter from being one of investigation to one of inquiry into this illegal arrangement and behaviour, particularly in the light of the tremendous amount of work the finance committee of this House has just completed with regard to the proposed revisions to the Combines Investigation Act?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I think it only proper that I should refer the hon. member to the answers given by the Prime Minister today.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Abbott: Members who are catcalling have not, I suggest, been as interested in the Competition Act as is the hon. member who asked the question. I am trying to explain in as factual a way as possible that the question he raised about a possible illegality as described by one officer can be contrasted with the opinion of another. Therefore I referred the hon. member to the statement of the right hon. gentleman today in which he gave his version, one which I submit is the correct appraisal of the situation upon which the government acted.

ENERGY

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER TO GULF TO PARTICIPATE IN SCHEME

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In a letter dated November 8, 1976 and addressed to Mr. Janisch the president of Gulf Minerals, the minister admitted, and I quote, that "Gulf participated in the arrangement only at the specific written request of the government of Canada." Will the minister table this "specific written request" in the House and will he tell us whether that document was one of several which Gulf was allowed to draft on departmental stationery for signature by officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources or by the minister?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I shall be prepared to take a look at the correspondence to which the hon. member is referring, but I think it is clear from answers ministers have given in the House that the government did invite Gulf Minerals of Canada to participate in the producers' arrangements.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—RETURN OF DOCUMENTS FROM PARTICIPATING COMPANIES

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): On June 17, the minister told the House there was "no secrecy with respect to the producers' group arrangement at all". Since all the documents in our possession concerning this cartel were marked secret or "specially confidential" after an order in council was passed on September 21, 1976, as was mentioned here today, and since the minister wrote Gulf Minerals on November 8, 1976 demanding the return of all documents relating to the cartel, is he still telling us there was no secrecy? Was the minister successful in getting all the documents back from Gulf so that his coverup could continue and did he write to other cartel members asking them to send back documents so that the coverup could continue?

● (1450)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, apparently the hon. member does not distinguish between Gulf Minerals of Canada Limited, the Canadian corporation, and Gulf Minerals of the U.S.

Mr. Fraser: What difference does it make?

Mr. Gillespie: What is the difference, the hon. member says. I say there is a great difference. That is part of the whole issue here, the extraterritorial application of United States law to Canada; the ability of a U.S. parent to compel its Canadian subsidiary to provide confidential Government of Canada documents. That is the issue here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The minister is very touchy about this question, Mr. Speaker, but there is possibly criminal liability involved. My question was whether he wrote others, apart from Gulf Minerals of Canada Limited, requesting the return of documents, such as Rio Tinto-Zinc and the others involved, did they return the documents, and has Gulf returned all the documents? That is my question to the minister.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I will check the record. I know that all the participants in Canada were contacted. They were asked for certain undertakings with respect to the documents. I believe that a large number of those documents have been returned. Others may have been subject to some kind of in-trust arrangement so that those documents could not be relayed to foreign corporations, foreign governments or to agencies of foreign governments, or to foreign courts.

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE PAYMENT OF BONUS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Since he just said, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Ottawa West, that the Civil Service Act will have to be amended before granting the bilingualism bonus and since the House cannot look into that matter before the end of 1977, could the President of the Treasury Board tell the House whether or not he would consider granting immediately a minimum amount to all those who fill designated bilingual positions and adjust thoses amounts once administrative details have been established?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think there is some misunderstanding here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Where are you, Francis?

Mr. Andras: At no time has there been an indication that amendments will be required to the Public Service Staff Relations Act or to the Public Service Employment Act specifically relating to the payment of compensation for bilingualism. That is not the case; therefore, the premise of the question is unfortunately incorrectly based.

COMBINES

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LEGAL OPINION GIVEN TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a follow up question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that the Prime Minister has said that the government has received a legal opinion from the Crown officers of the Department of Justice, and in light of the fact that that legal opinion certainly seems to contradict either the assistant director or the director of the combines investigation branch, was that opinion given to the cabinet in writing, and if it was in writing, since I am sure the Prime Minister would want to maintain his credibility in respect to this very serious matter, would he be prepared to table that opinion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire as to the form in which the opinion was given. I have just been told by the Minister of Justice that it was in the form of correspondence, presumably between his department and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The hon. member knows that it is the constant practice of the House not to table legal opinions given by the Department of Justice—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and so far as that practice is an established one, I do not propose to break it.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member to whom the Prime Minister refers, being myself, is not aware of such practice. That is only a procedure which is a complete cover-up; we do not know whether those are the facts or not. I am asking the Prime Minister, the head of the government, in light of the fact—

Some hon. Members: Louder.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I will be loud. It is time that the Canadian people got loud about something as bad as this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact that this is such a serious matter, I wonder whether the Prime Minister, even if he does believe the procedure to be as he set it out, would waive that procedure and consent to table the document in the House of Commons, so that even his credibility can look good today?

Mr. Trudeau: I think that if the hon. member reflects on the question, Mr. Speaker, he will understand why this practice has been established.

Mr. Fraser: We understand it.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps the hon. member from Vancouver does not understand it.

Mr. Fraser: You are making it very clear.

Mr. Trudeau: I think the hon. member from Vancouver is a lawyer.

Mr. Fraser: That is right, I am.

Mr. Trudeau: He knows what redress exists within Canada for people who think that an order in council or an action taken by the government is illegal.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Fraser: I can also read an opinion, and that is what you are afraid to give me.

Mr. Trudeau: The courts are there, Mr. Speaker, to settle this matter. If the opposition—

Mr. Fraser: You can relieve yourself of your self-imposed restrictions.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member does not have to agree with me, but I have stated that we have an opinion from the Department of Justice.

Mr. Fraser: Then let us see it.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not the practice to table such an opinion.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't give us that.

Mr. Fraser: You cannot expect me to take that seriously.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, let me try a different tack; I might be more successful.

Mr. Fraser: Try the truth.

Mr. Trudeau: The government has made it a policy—

Mr. Paproski: Now, here come the histrionics.

Mr. Trudeau: If any person in this country, including a member of the opposition, thinks that we have acted illegally, redress is available in the courts.

Miss MacDonald: What is wrong with this court?

Mr. Trudeau: We have adopted and applied a policy which was meant to defend the Canadian producer and the Canadian consumer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Anything that the government does can be attacked by the opposition as being illegal. In some cases we ask the law officers of the Crown to advise us whether such an interpretation of the law is correct or not. It is the government's privilege to ask for the advice of its lawyers. It is the job of the Minister of Justice to advise the government whether it is acting legally or not. The opposition does not have to agree with the government. It does not have to believe the Department of Justice. It is up to them—

Mr. Hees: A new John Barrymore has been born. You have missed your calling, Pierre.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—MEMBERS' RIGHTS RESPECTING ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I gave the Chair notice, as the rules require, regarding a question of privilege relating to the matter we have been discussing. It is a very important matter because it affects the rights and privileges of every member of this House in discharging his or her duty with respect to the obtaining of information to be used in connection with proceedings in this House or its committees.

● (1500)

At the moment there is no doubt that we are inhibited and prevented from discharging our responsibilities because of the order in council which has been referred to. As the Prime Minister seems to be unaware of the contents of the order in council, which are very brief, I should like to read it so the Prime Minister can consider the heinous nature of the document he has laid his hand to. It is dated September 23, 1976, which was four days after a former official of Eldorado appeared in court in Toronto and released a great deal of information after being questioned in respect of this particular issue. The order in council referred to uranium information security regulations, and reads as follows:

> No person who has in his possession or under his control any note, document or other written or printed material in any way related to conversations, discussions or meetings that took place between January 1, 1972 and December 31, 1975, involving that person or any other person or any government, Crown corporation, agency or other organization in respect of the production, import, export, transportation, refining, possession, ownership, use or sale of uranium or its derivatives or compounds, shall
> (a) release any such note, document or material, or disclose or communicate the contents thereof to any person, government, Crown corporation, agency or other organization unless
> (i) he is required to do so by or under a law of Canada, or
> (ii) he does so with the consent of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; or
> (b) fail to guard against or take reasonable care to prevent the unauthorized release of any such note, document or material or the disclosure or communication of the contents thereof.

For hundreds of years this House, following the practice of the United Kingdom House of Commons at Westminster, has had the right, under the bill of rights, to see that there is no interference with freedom of speech and debate or proceedings in parliament which ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of parliament. I ask members to contrast that order in council with what should be the uninhibited right of members of this House to discharge their obligations to the people of Canada by bringing into this House documents and material which tend to indicate or touch on the probable liability of the government, members of the government or officials of the government, in connection with any conspiracy, crime or impropriety. Under the terms of the order in council it may well be that we are free to discuss it in the House. But how do we get it here? Under that order in council, as it stands, I am prohibited from finding and obtaining that information in a documentary form and bringing it to this House. I can use it once I get here—but how can I get it here legally? I am prohibited from showing it to members of the public or the media. Under those conditions, how is it possible for me or other members of this House to properly discharge our obligations? There should be no doubt about what took place here, despite what has been said. An extract from what we managed to obtain indicates that on April 28, 1972, a memo was passed from one Gulf official to legal counsel which reads as follows:

> Mr. Zagnoli—a Gulf official—remains of the definite opinion that failure on Gulf's part to submit to coercive pressure being applied by the Canadian government respecting Gulf's participation would almost certainly result in severe adverse economic consequences for Gulf, including a material deterioration of Gulf's relations with the Canadian government.
> Effectively Gulf is being compelled to participate by the Canadian government.

There is a second memo, dated April 10, 1972, from Mr. R. K. Allen, a Gulf official, which reads as follows:

> Mr. Austin advised that a formal declaration would be sought from the cabinet—with the Minister of Justice present—that the arrangement is in the interest of Canada. He further stated that an opinion would be obtained from the Minister of Justice as to the legality of the arrangement in so far as the two Crown companies are concerned.

Because of this particular regulation there is a complete prohibition on the part of any member of the public from taking proceedings in any court in Canada. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) made an attempt in consultation with his solicitors who said that in their opinion under no circumstances would it be possible for any proceedings to be launched with regard to a potential infraction of the restrictive trade practices legislation. As a lawyer and counsel of some experience, after looking at a lot of the material, in my judgment there is a prima facie case of breach of that statute. That being the case, the only court left is the highest court in this land—this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I understand the government is sensitive about this issue. Not so many months ago the now Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) was very put out because of a decision by the supreme court of the province of Quebec dealing with the issue of the restrictive trade practices legislation. I understand why he said what he did. I may not agree with him, but it is his right to say what he did. The government is very sensitive and very solicitous about the competition act and the restrictive trade practices legislation. Attempts were made in Washington and in Toronto, and an attempt is now being made in London—at which the Canadian government is represented—to try to obtain some of the facts in connection with this issue. This government has said "no" and has enacted this order in council.

For that reason there is an obligation on this House to make certain that we pass a motion giving us the right to deal not only with this matter in the House but to obtain the documents for the purpose of so doing. For that purpose, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

> That this House declare that the order in council SOR 76-644 is not binding on members of the House with regard to proceedings in the House or any committee thereof and that for the purpose of such proceedings, despite the provisions of such order in council, all documents or copies may be obtained, produced and used in connection with any inquiry into questions of privilege or into the legality and propriety of the actions of the government, ministers and others in the establishment of a uranium cartel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government would welcome a debate on this subject. It would welcome it today, if hon. members are more interested in that than in the pipeline question. It would welcome that when the House reconvenes: it would welcome that debate at any time.

Miss MacDonald: On Monday.

Mr. Trudeau: The government's purpose in adopting this order in council under Canadian law, after having received advice that the law was correctly interpreted by the government, was to prevent Canadian uranium producers from going under at the same time as the uranium producers in several other countries would have gone under, when the United States government and its economy adopted measures restricting the entry of uranium into their country.

● (1510)

It must be kept in mind that 70 per cent of the world markets for uranium were in the United States. When in the late sixties and early seventies the Americans adopted this policy, it meant for Canadian producers, miners in Elliot Lake and other parts of Canada, that they would have to close down; they could no longer be kept in the production of uranium. A few years later pressure was upon Canada and every other country to supply uranium. We should keep in mind the consequences of inaction by the government at that time had it not decided to act before other countries and the producer group decided to act in order to protect the uranium industry.

This is our policy. It is in order to carry out this policy that we made the announcement and took this action. I repeat, Mr. Speaker—and Your Honour will have to decide whether the time to debate it is now or at some other time—that we want the policy to be understood by Canadians. We are not, like the opposition, putting up a front in order to serve the interests of Westinghouse in the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The precise and exact effect of the motion put by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) would be to do exactly what Westinghouse wants to be done in order to get out from under this Canadian policy. If that is the purpose the opposition wants to serve, that is their right. We will debate this policy when you, Mr. Speaker, so decide. But on this question of privilege, we say there is none. We looked earlier, in answer to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Clark), to see if there was some way in which the order in council could be improved to have any better effect in terms of the right of the opposition to know. We want them to know what is our policy. We want them to debate it, because we know that the Canadian people will support us on this.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The question put to you, Mr. Speaker, is the following: In order to debate this policy, do the opposition have to get secret facts of this group of producers, the effect of which will be to serve Westinghouse, U.S.A.? That is the question put to you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: They say that just because you are a member of the opposition, you are entitled so stand up here and claim the right to freedom of speech and freedom of knowledge and, because of that claim, able to go into documents which are privileged under the law.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Trudeau: We say that is not the interpretation of freedom of speech. If they want to attack the law, they can attack the law. If they want to attack the policy, they can attack the policy. They do not have to serve Westinghouse in order to attain that end.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to walk around the House in order to make my point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My contribution will be brief in response to the histrionic attempt by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to avoid the question of privilege raised by my colleague the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). If I might deal for a moment with the extraneous matters which the Prime Minister raised, we would, of course, welcome a debate on all aspects of this question.

Mr. Trudeau: Now, today.

Mr. Clark: I know that the Prime Minister has been anxious to avoid debate on the pipeline decision for a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: We have business on the agenda of this House of Commons right now, business that should have been debated well before this time. The parliament of Canada should have been allowed to become involved in this question long before it did. We would be prepared to have the matter debated in the fall, or next week, on the provision that the debate would be a full and extensive one that would let us know all aspects of all the transactions and all the illegalities that may be involved in this question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The second extraneous matter that the Prime Minister raised had to do with his contention that the actions of his government were designed to support the Canadian uranium industry and were the only means at their disposal. The question we ask is: Why was it necessary for the Government of Canada to take action which the director of the combines investigation branch told them would be a breach of the law of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Why did they accomplish that by illegal means when they had available to them such legal means as the mining control act, the establishment of a marketing board along the model of several boards now in place, or an international commodity agreement? There were legal ways to do this. They chose an illegal way to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This was the point on which my colleague from Peace River raised this question of privilege and asked for a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Finally, we have this odious order in council clearly designed to inhibit public debate on this question. It is designed to cover up actions which might well have been illegally entered into by members of the government, representatives of the government or members of the public acting on directions of the Government of Canada.

We believe—and it is for you, sir, to decide—that on its face this order in council very signally limits the capacity of the parliament of Canada to do its job of finding out what kind of activities, legal or otherwise, the Government of Canada is involved in.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister, if I heard him correctly, said that there are some limitations to freedom of speech. That was the clear implication. He agrees.

Mr. Trudeau: Justice Holmes said that.

Mr. Clark: This reminds one profoundly of the rationale that led them to try to reinstitute Information Canada so they could find some other means to control access to information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We know too well the views and practices of this Prime Minister and this government with regard to restricting the speech of parliament, the press and others. That is precisely why we are so worried about the order in council on which reputable legal counsel in this country, upon reading the order in council, felt precluded from giving a legal opinion to a member of parliament as to actions that might be taken in this House or the courts of this land.

My colleague from Peace River asked for a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that we can see whether the privileges of the House of Commons have been limited by this odious order in council, and so we can ensure that the parliament of Canada has the opportunity to ask questions and get information which the public of Canada has a right to have in the public domain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to this discussion at my colleague's request. Basically, I believe it is necessary that this regulation be lifted in order that there can be a full examination of the facts of this situation. We have made available to ourselves various documents that are referred to in the regulation which my colleague has already mentioned, and in fact two legal firms have refused to give me a legal opinion on what is the consequence of the documentation and the effect of what has transpired under this arrangement, in that they feel that even to review the documentation would be in violation of the regulation to which my colleague the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), has referred.

● (1520)

It is important that this regulation be withdrawn in order that the documentation can be properly analysed by those who may wish to look at it, bearing in mind that it tells some very incriminating things concerning many Canadians about cartel actions. We have had a reference here, for example, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the fact that he received an opinion from the Department of Justice that the regulation was apparently in order. The important matter is that throughout the various documents that we have there are repeated references to various opinions being sought or to be obtained from the Department of Justice concerning these transactions. It is important that we have the letter tabled so that we can identify exactly what letter the Prime Minister is referring to when he states that the Department of Justice officials said that the proposal was all right.

In that connection, I would point out that in the minutes of the meeting of the Canadian uranium producers held in Ottawa on April 10, 1972, marked "Confidential," on every page—

An hon. Member: The lights are going out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: More histrionics, Pierre.

An hon. Member: You won't get rid of us that way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stevens: In this document, under the heading "Discussion of legal aspects of producers' arrangement", Mr. Austin opened up the discussion by pointing out that the Combines Investigation Act is very vague, etc. But then he was asked by Gulf a question concerning the opinion that was to be obtained from the Minister of Justice as to the legality of the arrangement under the Combines Investigation Act. Mr. Austin said they had received the negative opinion from the then director of the combines investigation branch.

The reason I referred to this kind of statement in this document is that the information in these documents cannot be freely dealt with at present as a result of the regulation to which my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River, has referred. In short, I hope that Your Honour will see fit to meet the request of the hon. member for Peace River.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take a lot of time, but I think it is important to put some important facts on the record dealing with this question. The opposition seems to have left the impression in the minds of those of us here that they would have been quite prepared to see the U.S. take action to close off 70 per cent of the world market.

An hon. Member: That has nothing to do with it.

An hon. Member: We want to see things done legally.

Mr. Gillespie: They would seem to imply that the Canadian government should have taken no action to protect Canadian interests. They would have been quite prepared to see Australia, France, and South Africa take action.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In the contributions made originally by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I extended considerable leniency in allowing hon. members to get off the procedural point and into the substance of the matter. I would not want to encourage that to continue. The fact is that we have a procedural question based on privilege as to whether or not a certain order in council, in its terms, in fact restricts the ability of a member of parliament to operate. Whether or not the action of the government in setting up a certain organization was illegal is not the matter before us, and whether it was advisable from any point of view is not the matter that is before us. What is before us is whether or not this order in council so inhibits the ability of members of the House to function that it offends their privileges. That is the only matter before us now.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Just stick to what Mr. Speaker said, Alastair.

Mr. Gillespie: —I think it is important to set the particular context of my remarks that follow on this particular point. There is one other important point which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) mentioned and which I think the House should recognize: that is, that during this period of time, the late 1960s and the early 1970s, when the price of uranium—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Mr. Stevens.]

An hon. Member: Stick to the point.

Mr. Gillespie: It is very relevant to the question of the confidentiality of these documents, and I would ask your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, so that I might make the point.

An hon. Member: The first one you would have made.

Mr. Gillespie: There was considerable competition to sell reactors at that time, as members may know, and Westinghouse was using uranium as a come-on. They were entering into long-term contracts at fixed prices.

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Stick to the point.

Mr. Gillespie: It is very relevant.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, I would have to know how the merits of the case are relevant to the procedural question before letting the minister go on.

Mr. Gillespie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps you will give me one or two moments to indicate why I believe it is relevant. Westinghouse entered into a large number of long-term contracts on fixed prices.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We know that.

Mr. Gillespie: I don't think you or some of your associates know.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We all know it.

Mr. Gillespie: I have the floor, Mr. Speaker. The important point was the world price of uranium soared after the oil price increase, and so Westinghouse repudiated its long-term contracts.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gillespie: The result of that is that their customers are now suing Westinghouse in the United States, and Westinghouse is faced with suits of well over $1 billion. Westinghouse, as part of its defence, is seeking to use Canadian government confidential documents—documents which were entered into by the Canadian government and members of the producing group, the producers' club on an international basis—an intergovernmental arrangement of which the Canadian government was a part. The Westinghouse Corporation, as part of their defence, is trying to obtain these confidential documents. They are trying to use the United States law, the extra-territorial reach of the U.S. law, to gain access to these documents, and that is why it was necessary to draft the particular order in council which was passed last September in broad terms to prevent the movement of these relevant documents to U.S. jurisdiction.

Mr. Clark: What are you hiding from parliament?

Mr. Gillespie: That is why that particular order in council had to be drafted that way. If it had been done in any other way there would have been a loophole and a number of those documents could have gone back and not served the Canadian national interest.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River has raised a point by way of a question of privilege of which he gave notice to the Chair, and it is, of course, a very serious matter. I think the Chair should have some time to consider the question, although it is obviously a very timely matter. I must confess that my initial impression is that the terms of the motion are such that the order in council should not be binding on members of the House in the discharge of their duties or upon committees of the House or the House itself in carrying out its work.

It seems to me that this motion reflects the basic nature of the question; that is, that while there may be a potential danger in the application of the order in council to the work of members of parliament, in order to give the motion priority over all other items of business before us there would have to have been in fact an actual restriction and prohibition or interference with the ability of hon. members to carry out their work.

What seems to have been discussed here this afternoon is the proposition that the order in council potentially restricts the right of hon. members to have access to documents, the right of parliamentary committees to have access to information or the right of the House or its members to have access to information or documents in order to discharge their duties. Potentially, of course, the question is hypothetical. If in fact we were dealing with a situation where members or committees or the House had been refused access to documents or information on the basis of this order in council, to me that would be a different matter. However, that is an initial impression of the Chair, one upon which I would like to reflect. I would like to examine the precedents and examine again the arguments which have been put forward.

For the moment I will reserve until just after questions tomorrow to see whether the regular business for that day ought to be set aside to debate this question as a matter of privilege and with all the attendant priority questions of privilege have.

UIC—BENEFITS

Question No. 1,372—Mr. Herbert:

1. Is the duration of a claim for regular unemployment insurance benefits decreased by the apportionment of severance and vacation pay as part of the qualifying period?

2. Is it the intention of the government to introduce a change in the regulations so that an individual would not be subject to such a decrease in the claim period and, if so (a) on what date (b) could such a change be made retroactive?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. As a general rule, under the unemployment insurance program, all monies received by a claimant at the time that he is separated from employment, are treated as earnings and have the effect of either delaying the start of a benefit period, or are deducted from benefits otherwise payable. In particular, both severance pay and vacation pay are considered earnings for unemployment insurance benefit purposes.

2. The government will be making regulatory amendments to effect the disconstinuance of the treatment of severance pay as earnings. It is not intended, however, to make similar changes to the treatment of vacation pay which will continue to be treated as earnings and deducted from benefits. (a) The regulatory amendments to discontinue the treatment of severance pay as earnings will be made as soon as administratively possible, and is expected to be effective in the near future. (b) There is no legislative authority that would allow such an amendment to be made retroactive. The intent, however, is to discontinue the allocation of severance pay on all existing and new claims after the effective date of the regulatory amendment.

DREE—ATLANTIC REGION

Question No. 1,407—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce aware that the October, 1976 APEC report Industrial Incentives Programs in the Atlantic Region states, with regard to existing programs, that "activity under research and product development has been abysmal", that "it is obvious that the region failed to take advantage of research and industrial design assistance", and that "given the region's emphasis on trade, its lack of participation in programs to encourage market expansion is of concern" and, if so, do the Departments agree with such statements?

2. Do the Departments accept that a sizeable advancement of the Atlantic Region's economy will require major initiatives in product research, development and marketing?

3. What measures do the Departments propose to ensure more adequate participation by the Atlantic Region in the type of programs cited by APEC?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned: 1. DREE is aware of the report and believes that increased research and product development in the Atlantic region would be desirable.

2. Further advances in the economy of the Atlantic region will call for progress on a number of fronts. Viable initiatives in product research, development and marketing would certainly be helpful.

3. Although DREE does not normally have direct responsibility for the operation of programs of this type, it is prepared to complement and supplement the efforts of the responsible departments with regionally-oriented activities under its General Development Agreements (GDAs) with the various provincial governments. A specific example in this regard is the DREE agreement with Newfoundland providing for the establishment of a Newfoundland Oceans Research and Development Corporation which seek to stimulate the development of marine technology within the province and to foster the establishment of marine ice-related industries based on the technology. DREE's activities under the Regional Development Incentives Act and through industrial development initiatives under the GDAs are also serving to help strengthen the industrial base of the region, thus creating a better climate for new product design and development.

In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Yes, the department is aware of the statement. The department actively promotes its programs in all provinces, but these programs require an application by individual companies. The use in each province depends on the rate of response of individual companies.

2. Industry, Trade and Commerce continues to actively promote its programs in the Atlantic region recognizing the importance of both innovation and market development in the Atlantic area.

3. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has adapted a number of measures which should ensure more adequate participation by the Atlantic region. Such measures have included a further decentralization of the administration of its programs and the consolidation of a number of the development and incentive programs into the Enterprise Development Program to make them more accessible to smaller and medium-size businesses which play an important role in the Atlantic region.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE AVAILABLE TO POULTRY FARMERS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 1,474—Mr. Howie:

2. Have applications for financial assistance been made by poultry farmers in New Brunswick since January 1, 1975 and, if so, how many and what is their status?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Farm Credit Corporation advises: 1. Yes. (a) Loans are available under the Farm Credit Act which is administered by the Farm Credit Corporation. (b) Not applicable.

2. Yes. Twenty enquiries were made to Farm Credit Corporation, of which six resulted in loan applications. All six were approved for a total of $455,000. It is expected that a further one of the enquirers will make an application after April 1, 1977. The remainder were either general enquiries for information, did not wish to proceed at this time, or did not meet the qualifications for a loan under the Farm Credit Act.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): In so far as the officials identified are concerned, this question cannot be answered at this time as there has been no canvass of veterans affairs personnel to identify the staff who will choose to relocate or choose not to relocate. It is expected that this canvass will be made during 1977 as a first step in relocation manpower planning.

In so far as the position titles are concerned, all positions will be relocated except the deputy minister and a small core group, and the positions in the Veterans Land Administration program, which will remain in the National Capital Region.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS EMPLOYEES RELOCATING IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Question No. 1,687—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What is the estimated number of Department of Veterans Affairs employees expected to be stationed in Charlottetown, PEI when a portion of the Department is transferred?

2. How many will be (a) French speaking (b) English speaking (c) transferred from Ottawa and on what proposed date (d) recruited from among citizens of Prince Edward Island?

3. Is the government making any provisions to provide French language instruction in Prince Edward Island for applicants for positions in the Department subsequent to the move and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. While there can be no precise determination of the department's future manpower requirements, it is estimated that there will be approximately 700 Veterans Affairs employees in Charlottetown in 1981 following relocation.

2. This information will not be available until all present employees have indicated their preference with regard to relocation.

3. Consistent with the provisions of the Official Languages policy, French language training will be provided as required for successful applicants. Provision for such training in Prince Edward Island or at other language training facilities in the Atlantic region would depend upon the number of employees requiring training.

MILK SUBSIDIES AND MARKET QUOTAS

Question No. 1,706—Mr. Caron:

1. For each constituency, what are the names of milk producers who are subsidized by the government and, in each case, what was their production in (a) 1974-75 (b) 1975-76?

2. What market quota (a) was allocated to each on April 1, 1976 (b) has been allocated to each since October 19, 1976?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The Canadian Dairy Commission maintains the information required to answer this part of the question in confidence. The release of this information could infringe upon the right of privacy of the producer as it could form the basis of determining income or establishing a mailing list of all milk producers. However, the total production by province is as follows:

	Million hundredweights of milk
	1974-75	1975-76
Prince Edward Island	1.37	1.53
Nova Scotia	.84	1.06
New Brunswick	.68	.68
Quebec	47.13	55.61
Ontario	29.83	36.13
Manitoba	4.13	4.37
Saskatchewan	2.29	2.44
Alberta	6.51	7.44
British Columbia	2.74	3.54
Canada	95.52	112.80

2. The allocation of market quotas to producers is the responsibility of the provincial milk marketing boards and the information is not available to the commission.

EQUIPMENT OR BUILDING REPAIRS IN 1974, 1975 AND 1976

Question No. 1,805—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was the Treasury Board's policy decision to change accounting practices for the 1975-76 fiscal year, as referred to in the reply of the Secretary of State to Question No. 1,059, carried forward to the 1976-77 fiscal year and (a) if so, what is the reason for the substantial drop in the Purchased Repair and Upkeep estimated for the Department in the 1976-77 Main Estimates from the 1975-76 levels (b) if not, what is the reason for the substantial increase in the Purchased Repair and Upkeep estimated for the Department in the 1976-77 Main Estimates over the 1974-75 level before the accounting policy changed?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Treasury Board has issued two policy directives to this department relating to accounting practices during the period in question. The first policy directive was in 1975; this directive authorized DPW to recover its costs for certain tenant services to this department; these included the costs of fitting-up new, leased accommodation needed for the expansion of the translation bureau in the Quebec region. In accordance with the procedures provided by DPW and the definition of the Tenant Services portion of Purchased Repair and Upkeep which were affected under this directive, the Department of the Secretary of State estimated $1.7 million as a cost payable to DPW for Tenant Services. That same directive was not carried over into 1976-77; a new directive was issued in early 1976 which revised the definition of Tenant Services. On the basis of these revised guidelines, DPW was directed once again to absorb the fitting-up cost of new, leased accommodation and the Department of the Secretary of State estimated that $296,000 would be payable to DPW for Tenant Services. (a) It is this revision which accounts for the sizeable decrease from the 1975-76 figures. (b) The reason for the increase in the Tenant Services portion of Purchased Repair and Upkeep in the 1976-77 Main Estimates over the 1974-75 level is that T.B. guidelines, as per the second policy directive, require that the Department include these costs in its departmental estimates whereas in 1974-75 these costs were included in DPW estimates. It is to be noted, however, that the figure is lower than for 1975-76 since Treasury Board revised the original definition of the cost of Tenant Services. In summary, the figures for the three years in question are as follows: 1974-75 (Tenant Services portion of Purchased Repair and Upkeep absorbed by DPW) $3,000. 1975-76 T.B. issued 1st directive $1,700,000. 1976-77 T.B. issued 2nd directive (but definition of Tenant Services redefined) $296,000.

Question No. 1,916—Mr. Schumacher:

1. In the years immediately following World War II, for each year of their existence, what was the complete statistical breakdown of (a) the farm worker (b) the track worker (c) other similar programmes?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The megastructure for the Canadian Forces language training and recruit school is now approximately 17 per cent complete and it is anticipated it will be completed in the 1979/80 fiscal year. In addition there will be 513 both military and civilian permanent teaching and training staff plus 170 administrative support personnel.

1. What are the amounts by department, agency or commission, that the Department of Public Works sets down as accommodation costs to be carried in the 1977-78 Estimates?

2. In each case, what is the (a) total square footage utilized (b) percentage change in the (i) area utilized in the past year (ii) amount carried?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): 1. The estimates of the Department of Public Works are not prepared by building up the cost of accommodation by occupancy. Accordingly, the accommodation costs carried in the 1977-78 Main Estimates for the Department of Public Works cannot be detailed by department, agency and commission.

2. (a) and (b) (i) departmental records identify only the amount of space allocated to a client at a point of time. We do not have information as to what use they would make of space, i.e., utilization. (b) (ii) As indicated in the reply to part 1 this information is not available.

(b) The Department of Public Works does not prepare estimates for its operating programs by forecasting expenditures for each department or agency which will use its space, nor does it maintain a record of historical costs incurred on a departmental/agency basis. Accordingly no figures can be provided for the costs to operate the accommodation utilized by the Post Office.

2. How does the Minister of Transport reconcile his negative answer with the statement contained in the memo signed by Mr. Finley?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. An inter-branch memorandum was prepared and signed by H. R. ONTARIO COLLEGES OF APPLIED ARTS AND TECHNOLOGY

Question No. 2,300—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. How many students entered Department of Manpower and Immigration college preparatory programmes in the Ontario College of Applied Arts and Technology each year 1972 to date?

2. What was the average fee paid?

3. What was the average award to the students?

4. How many left before completing the programme?

5. How many found employment after graduation in the field for which they were trained?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Virtually all full-time training in Ontario is done through the Ontario Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology. The following data covers all full-time skill training, for Ontario. Trainee and cost figures (Nos. 1-4) are by fiscal year, 1972-73 to 1976-77; trainee follow-up data (No. 5) is by calendar year, 1972 to 1975. (1) The number of trainees who started training for each year is as follows: 1972-73: 16,864; 1973-74: 17,203; 1974-75: 17,316; 1975-76: 20,337; 1976-77: 18,337 (Preliminary, as at March 31, 1977).

(2) The average Purchase Costs per Trainee were: 1972-73: $1,338 (Based on Estimated Purchase Costs); 1973-74: $1,194 (Based on Estimated Purchase Costs); 1974-75: $1,522 (Based on Estimated Purchase Costs); 1975-76: $1,477; 1976-77: $1,651 (Preliminary, as at March 31, 1977).

(3) The average Allowances paid per Trainee were: 1972-73: $1,220; 1973-74: $1,186; 1974-75: $1,216; 1975-76: $1,344; 1976-77: $1,550 (Preliminary, as at March 31, 1977).

(4) The number of Trainees who Discontinued training each year was: 1972-73: 4,997; 1973-74: 5,102; 1974-75: 5,475; 1975-76: 6,301; 1976-77: 5,198 (Preliminary, as at March 31, 1977).

(5) This information is not directly available, since graduates are not required to seek subsequent employment through a Canada Manpower Centre. The information available is from a continuing 100 per cent survey of skill course graduates which shows:

	Percentage of Skill Graduates Employed
	Before Training	After Training
1972	12.7	72.4
1973	14.1	73.0
1974	14.4	71.3
1975	12.7	65.5
1976	N/A	N/A

The same survey shows that 74.8 per cent of those employed in 1975 are employed in a two-digit CCDO occupation which corresponds with the two-digit CCDO occupation assigned to their skill course. This is not a reliable indicator of whether persons are employed in the field for which they are trained because, for instance, a person trained in agricultural technology (agricultural occupation) may utilize his or her training as a sales representative for a feed company (sales occupation).

CANADA WORKS AND YOUNG CANADA WORKS PROGRAMS

Question No. 2,303—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. What have been the total amounts paid to date since January 1, 1977, to (a) newspapers (b) radio stations (c) television stations serving the constituencies of Hamilton—Wentworth, Hamilton West, Hamilton East, Hamilton—Mountain, Halton—Wentworth and Halton to promote the (i) Canada Works Programme (ii) Young Canada Works Programme and, in each case, what are the names and addresses of the involved media?

2. What has been the total amount allocated under the (a) Canada Works Programme (b) Young Canada Works Programme to the constituency of (i) Hamilton—Wentworth (ii) Hamilton West (iii) Hamilton East (iv) Hamilton—Mountain (v) Halton—Wentworth (vi) Halton?

3. In each case, on what basis was this distribution of funds made?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a) (i) $5,487.00; (ii) $5,487.00; (b) Nil; (c) Nil. The following newspapers were used for both the Canada Works and the Young Canada Works programmes' advertising. Acton Free Press, P.O. Box 120, Acton, Ontario; Burlington Gazette, 490 Brant Street, Burlington, Ontario; Caledonia Grand River Sachem, P.O. Box 160, Caledonia, Ontario; Grimsby Independent, P.O. Box 310, Grimsby, Ontario; Oakville Journal Record, 284 Lakeshore Blvd., E., Oakville, Ontario; Calvinist & Contact, 99 Niagara Street, St. Catharines, Ontario; Pioneer, 201 Paradise Road N., Hamilton, Ontario; Hamilton Spectator, 44 Frid Street, Hamilton, Ontario; Kanadski Srbobran, 335 Britania Avenue, Hamilton, Ontario.

2. (a) (i) $100,000; (ii) $296,000; (iii) $364,000; (iv) $100,000; (v) $100,000; (vi) $50,000; (b) (i) $59,000; (ii) $239,000; (iii) $140,000; (iv) $57,000; (v) $44,000; (vi) $44,000.

3. 1977/78 Canada Works program—Phase I: The 1977/78 Canada Works program—Phase I funds were distributed to the above constituencies as follows: Initial Allocation: (1) Estimates of labour force, labour surplus and a labour surplus rate were derived for each constituency for the period December, 1975 to November, 1976. (2) Based on these data $50,000 was allocated to those constituencies with a labour surplus rate below 5 per cent; therefore, Halton received $50,000. (3) A basic allocation of $100,000 was distributed to those constituencies with a labour surplus rate of 5 per cent to 7 per cent; therefore, Hamilton-Wentworth, Hamilton-Mountain and Halton-Wentworth each received $100,000. (4) Constituencies with a labour surplus rate over 7 per cent received a basic allocation of $100,000 and a per capita allocation based on their labour surplus in excess of 7 per cent of their labour force. All such constituencies received $187.33 for each person estimated in the excess labour surplus group. Thus, Hamilton West received a basic allocation of $100,000 and a per capita allocation of $83,000 on the basis of an excess labour surplus of 442. Hamilton East was granted a basic allocation of $100,000 and a per capita allocation of $112,000 on the basis of an excess labour suplus of 600. Supplementary Allocation: The supplementary funds were distributed in direct proportion to the per capita segment of the initial allocations. Thus, basic allocations were excluded from consideration in allocating the supplementary funds. On this basis, Hamilton-Wentworth, Hamilton-Mountain, Halton-Wentworth and Halton received no supplementary funds. The relevant data for the constituencies of Hamilton-Wentworth, Hamilton West, Hamilton East, Hamilton Mountain, Halton-Wentworth and Halton are:

1977/78 Canada Works Program—Phase I

Constituency	Labour Surplus Rate	Labour Force	Labour Surplus	Excess Labour Surplus
		(Average December 1975-November 1976)
Hamilton-Wentworth	6.00 per cent	49,398	2,964	—
Hamilton West	8.03 per cent	42,921	3,447	442
Hamilton East	8.65 per cent	36,444	3,151	600
Hamilton-Mountain	5.40 per cent	53,802	2,907	—
Halton-Wentworth	5.06 per cent	65,888	3,331	—
Halton	4.88 per cent	53,064	2,588	—

1977 Young Canada Works Program: The 1977 Young Canada Works funds were distributed to the above constituencies as follows: Initial Allocation: (1) Estimates of labour force, labour surplus and labour surplus rates were derived for each constituency for the period May, 1976 to August 1976, for the 15-24 age group. (2) A basic allocation of $25,000 was made to those constituencies with a labour surplus rate of 10 per cent or less; therefore, Halton-Wentworth and Halton each received $25,000. (3) Constituencies with a labour surplus rate over 10 per cent received the basic allocation of $25,000 and a per capita allocation based on their labour surplus in excess of 10 per cent of their labour force. All such constituencies received $171.47 for each person estimated in the excess labour surplus group. Thus, (i) Hamilton-Wentworth was granted a basic allocation of $25,000 and a per capita allocation of $34,000 on the basis of an excess labour surplus of 198; (ii) Hamilton West was granted a basic allocation of $25,000 and a per capita allocation of $110,000 on the basis of an excess labour surplus of 643; (iii) Hamilton East was granted a basic allocation of $25,000 and a per capita allocation of $115,000 on the basis of an excess labour surplus of 668; and (iv) Hamilton-Mountain was granted a basic allocation of $25,000 and a per capita allocation of $7,000 based on an excess labour surplus of 42. Supplementary Allocations: The supplementary funds were distributed in direct proportion to the total funds distributed to a constituency in the initial allocation. The relevant data for the constituencies of Hamilton-Wentworth, Hamilton West, Hamilton East, Hamilton-Mountain, Halton-Wentworth and Halton are:

1977 Young Canada Works Program

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Yes. December 8, 1975.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING ACT

Question No. 2,319—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. In the years 1972 to 1976, what was the total cost of the Occupational Training of Adults (OTA) Programme and how was such cost divided between (a) instructor's salaries (b) rental or leasing of teaching facilities and materials (c) training allowances (d) transportation allowances (e) administrative (f) other costs?

2. In each year 1972 to 1976, how many persons in (a) Canada (b) the Atlantic Provinces (c) Quebec (d) Ontario (e) the Western Provinces (f) Yukon (g) NWT (h) the Constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth (i) registered (ii) completed courses provided under the OTA Programme?

3. Of those completing the Programme, how many found course-related employment through the Department of Manpower and Immigration's job placement services?

4. Are those who complete the Programme given priority over others by Manpower for employment opportunities?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Under the Adult Occupational Training Act, there are two programs: the Canada Manpower Training Program (CMTP) and the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program (CMITP). Data on CMTP and CMITP costs and trainees (parts 1. and 2. of the question) is available only by fiscal year. Data on follow-up of trainees (part 3.) is available, by calendar year 1972 to 1975, for CMTP only.

1. The total cost of CMTP and CMITP for the years 1972-73 to 1975-76 was $1,654,118,331. The cost was divided as follows: (a) and (b) $902,117,203 (a. and b. split not available). (c) $601,664,202 (CMTP only—no allowances in CMITP); (d) $13,717,223 (Trainee Travel and Commuting Allowances). (e) $42,215,260 (Provincial Administration)*. (f) $94,404,443 (Other).

*In some provinces provincial administration costs are included in the purchase price of the training.

2. See list below.

3. This information is not directly available, since graduates are not required to seek subsequent employment through a Canada Manpower Centre. The information available is from a continuing 100 per cent survey of skill course graduates which shows:

	Percentage of Skill Graduates Employed
	Before Training	After Training
1972	38.0	76.0
1973	37.4	76.5
1974	40.4	75.9
1975	31.0	69.1
1976	N/A	N/A

The same survey shows that 76.3 per cent of those employed in 1975 are employed in a two-digit CCDO occupation which corresponds with the two-digit CCDO occupation assigned to their skill course. This is not a reliable indicator of whether persons are employed in the field for which they are trained because, for instance, a person trained in agricultural technology (agricultural occupation) may utilize his or her training as a sales representative for a feed company (sales occupation).

4. No.

1. At the employer-union meeting which was held on December 8, 1976 and in which six UIC managers in Quebec participated with Mr. Pierre Gadbois, Director, heading their group, and five regional union officers led by Mr. Robert Goyette, Regional President, did the five managers accompanying Mr. Gadbois admit that they had not read the document entitled Cadre des rencontres patronales-syndicales submitted by the union on May 26, 1976, and did they refuse to have it inserted in the minutes of the meeting?

2. Was the only item on the agenda of the meeting the document mentioned in Part 1?

3. Did Mr. Gadbois in regard to invitations for consultation extended by the union on May 26, August 30, October 17, 1976, consider the document submitted by the union as an obstacle to the meetings?

4. On December 8, 1976, upon reading the document, did Mr. Gadbois indicate he agreed almost completely with the union paper, except for a matter of little importance?

5. Did Mr. Michel Fortin, Chief of the UIC Labour Relations in Quebec, admit to Mr. Robert Goyette, the Quebec President of the Union, that the management refused to study the paper because they thought the union was demanding co-management?

6. Was Mr. Goyette dismissed under these circumstances, even though it was not in keeping with the reasons put forward by management?

7. Since December 8, 1976, has the union invited management to employer-union meetings on particular dates and, has management refused to take part in such meetings?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—LETTER FROM MR. MICHAEL FORTIN

Question No. 2,387—Mr. Fortin:

1. On October 8, 1976, was a letter by Mr. Michel Fortin, Regional Director of Staff Relations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Quebec, addressed to the Quebec president of the union of employees of the UIC (ESENA-PSAC-QFL), apologizing for the fact that he had been escorted by security guards when, having been suspended for his union activities by the Department, he was on his way to defend grievances at 1441 St-Urbain Street in Montreal?

2. On February 23, 1977 or thereabouts, although Mr. Goyette had been dismissed, but was still President of the Union under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the constitution of the PSAC, was he again escorted by security guards acting on orders given by Mr. Fortin, on his way to the same place to defend grievances?

3. On September 29, 1976, at the time of Mr. Goyette's suspension for union activities, did Mr. Claude Rouleau, a Staff Relations agent, acting under orders of Mr. Fortin, try to convince local agents and members of the union who had submitted grievances to take their case out of Mr. Goyette's hands?

4. In spite of the letter of apology sent by Mr. Fortin on October 8, 1976, did Mr. Rouleau try again to convince agents and members of the union to take their case out of Mr. Goyette's hands, with such insistence that the Quebec local of the union complained of intimidation and harrassment, particularly during a press conference with the QFL?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes; however, the president of the UIC employees' union had not been suspended for union activities, but for other reasons.

2. Yes.

3. No. It should, however, he pointed out that Mr. Goyette was not suspended "for union activities".

4. Not applicable.

1. What additional staff was hired and what was the cost to operate the Student Summer Employment Programme (a) Peace and Security (b) Canadian Penitentiary Service (c) National Parole Service (d) National Parole Board (e) Secretariat (f) RCMP under the Department of the Solicitor General?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): 1. No additional staff was hired to operate the Student Summer Programmes in the Ministry of the Solicitor General. (a) Peace and Security is not a component of the Ministry of the Solicitor General and therefore there was no specific project under this name as such. However, because Peace and Security has been an important subject of legislation, the Student Summer Employment and Activities Program within the Ministry of the Solicitor General had been designed in relation with this legislation. Therefore all projects had to be related in some way to Peace and Security as a Ministry priority. (b) $18,540.00; (c) $199,-193.24; (d) $21,723.00; (e) $102,759.36; (f) $183,245.55.

CBC "THE FIFTH ESTATE"

Question No. 2,440—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did CBC programme "The Fifth Estate" recently carry the results of an examination of news items carried by CBC English and French networks and, if so, did the examination show that (a) 21% of the English network news items were from Quebec and 46% from the rest of the country (b) 63% of the French network news items were from Quebec and only 15% from the rest of Canada?

2. What are the reasons justifying the low percentage of news items from the rest of Canada used on CBC French network?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Yes. The results of such an examination were carried on the programme "Fifth Estate" of April 27, 1977. (a) The examination showed that CTV and CBC English television network both carried 21 per cent of Quebec-related news during the three week survey period in January and February 1977. CBC carried slightly more Canadian news than CTV, with the two English networks averaging 46 per cent. TVA, the privately-owned French television network, and the CBC French television network carried on average 63 per cent Quebec-related news and 15 per cent news from the nine other provinces and Ottawa combined.

2. In the period analyzed by the Fifth Estate, the French network carried less news from other provinces than the English network. However, it carried twice as much as the other French-language media, namely 15 per cent compared to 6 per cent. The English network serves a diversified society which reaches right across Canada and which generates events likely to be of interest primarily to that society. The French network serves a more compact society, of which 85 per cent is concentrated in Quebec, and it too generates events which are peculiar to itself and are likely to be of more interest to its people. The preponderance of news from other provinces in the English-language media, including the English network, is due simply to the greater interest of the English-speaking public in such news. Similarly the preponderance of Quebec news in the French-speaking media, including the French network, explains the greater interest which the French-speaking public has in Quebec affairs. It is undeniable that the importance of Quebec events, even more than in the past, commands a larger place in the news in the media: the impact of an independence-oriented government in power, the policies, legislation and initiatives of this government produce a steady flow of news both in Quebec, throughout Canada and abroad and it must be treated accordingly. The time and space occupied by these Quebec events have increased at the expense of all other news of lower priority. Furthermore, this situation of an audience comprising 85 per cent Quebeckers, at grips with this major political crisis which it is experiencing so intensely, subjects the CBC and the French-language media to an environment and conditioning which make a major difference in how they treat Quebec news and news from other provinces. Finally, as Quebec is involving all Canada in the most serious and profound political crisis since Confederation, it is natural also that the English-language media should give much more attention and time to Quebec events, especially since November 15. It should also be stressed that it is much easier to gather Quebec news for the English network than for the French network to cover the other provinces. English network reporters seldom encounter a language barrier when dealing with Quebec newsmakers, who are nearly all bilingual, whereas the French network reporters are constantly coping with the language limitations of the newsmakers in English Canada who very often are unilingual. Consequently, it is necessary to take into account the constraints and limitations experienced by the French network in producing its news in English Canada.

UIC—FRAUD PROSECUTIONS

Question No. 2,443—Mr. Cossitt:

Have prosecutions for defrauding the Unemployment Insurance Commission been taken completely out of the hands of local police forces and placed entirely under control of the RCMP and (a) if so (i) on what date was such a decision made and by whom (ii) for what reason (b) if not, is it the government's intentions to do so?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of the Solicitor General as follows: (a) No, (b) No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—REPORT OF JOB OPPORTUNITIES

Question No. 2,458—Mr. Fortin:

1. Is the Unemployment Insurance Commission, Quebec Region using, or has it ever used, the document entitled "Report of job opportunities" and, if so, for what purpose?

2. Does UIC use only four figures of the Occupational Code and is the reference data in the report based on seven figures and, if so, is the report fraudulent?

3. Does UIC run the risk of excluding a model (Occupational Code 5199-126) from eligibility to benefits because there is need for automobile assessors (O.C. 5199-118) and that UIC uses only O.C. 5199, whereas the data from the Canada Manpower Centre or any other agency includes the Code's seven figures?

4. Was this issue raised by the five hooded persons who denounced certain UIC fraudulent practices in Quebec and, if so, what did the Department do to correct the situation?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes, in the Montreal area only. It is one of the factors used permitting the agent to assemble information from which he can judge the availability of a claimant.

2. Yes, the agent uses the four digit code as a starting point for the collection of facts for a decision on benefit entitlement but in all cases any further research is based on the seven digit code obtained from the Department of Manpower.

3. See 2.

4. Unknown.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—M. L. BOMBARDIER EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,459—Mr. Fortin:

1. Did M. L. Bombardier employees, on Wednesday, April 25, 1977, occupy the UIC office located at 1441 St. Urban Avenue, Montreal, Quebec, in order to find out the decision made regarding their claim for benefits and, if so (a) was a request for disqualification submitted before they were notified by UIC officer, Mr. Jean-Guy Côté, that a decision had not yet been rendered (b) on what date was the decision made?

2. Does UIC management in Quebec make a habit of hiding the truth and, if so, does this behaviour have a negative effect on the unemployed?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes, but on Wednesday, April 27, 1977. (a) No. (b) Thursday, April 28, 1977.

2. See Beauchesne's Rules and Forms of the House of Commons 171(a), (h), (i) and (q).

PSC—MONEY PAID TO EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 2,463—Mr. Caccia:

For the most recent three years for which statistics are available, what is the amount of money paid each year to fee charging employment agencies by the Public Service Commission of Canada to fill full-time and part-time vacancies with government departments and Crown agencies?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: The Public Service Commission has paid no money to employment agencies in each of the last three years in order to fill vacant positions in departments and crown agencies. The Public Service Commission is responsible for the appointment of public servants in accordance with the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act. It does not have the authority to enter into contracts with employment agencies on behalf of government departments. However, departments may contract with such agencies in accordance with the Government Contract Regulations. There is some concern that some departments have used the temporary employment agencies to by-pass normal recruitment procedures. As a result, the Treasury Board in consultation with the Public Service Commission has been preparing policy guidelines concerning departmental use of private personnel agencies which will improve the situation. It is anticipated that these guidelines will be issued in the near future.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—GRIEVANCE AGAINST THE UIX REGIONAL OFFICE IN MONTREAL

Question No. 2,543—Mr. Fortin:

Was a grievance filed by 167 employees of the UIC regional office in Montreal in December 1976, to protest against the lack of ventilation and humidity and, if so (a) during the hours which preceded the tests conducted by the Departments of Public Works and National Health and Welfare on December 21, 1976, did the administration order a manual ventilating system "to recreate a normal situation" (b) did the complainants win their case and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes. (a) No. At the request of the administration, the Department of Public Works operated the air conditioning system manually as soon as the automatic system failed. (b) No, because scientific analyses of the quality of the air, of the temperature and of the humidity, conducted on December 21 and January 5 and 6, clearly established that there were no problems in any of the locations tested.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—TRAINING MANUAL FOR BCO

Question No. 2,544—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does the manual used for training claim control officers at the Quebec regional office of the UIC specify on page 45, that it is better not to inform the claimant that any statement he makes might be used against him, in spite of the intimation of the court that enquiry officers must give a statutory notification to the individuals they are going to question and, if so, for what reason?

2. Does the manual also state on page 46, that the claimant has to declare that he has read the unemployment insurance booklet which accompanies the claim form in order to bring it to the attention of the court if the accused pleads his ignorance of the law and, if so (a) does the UIC suggest that the booklet is complete enough to enable a person who has read it to know all the provisions of the Act (b) in view of the complex nature of the Act and of the fact that the claimant could be intimidated by the presence of the enquiry officer while being asked whether he has read the booklet, could the use by UIC of the answer to that question be considered malicious and even fraudulent?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes. Investigations are designed to determine whether claimants are fulfilling their obligations under the Act and further serve to protect the integrity of the UI Account. Since the Agents objective is not to prepare material for prosecution purposes, the Commission feels that informing the claimant that his statement could be used in evidence against him, would detract from the effectiveness of this type of interview.

2. Yes. (a) The booklet in question was replaced nearly three years ago by two others entitled: (i) Your Rights and Obligations. (ii) How to Complete Your Claimant's Report Booklet (i) states: "The Unemployment Insurance Commission has prepared a series of pamphlets with one object in mind to inform and help you. However, it is possible that this pamphlet does not contain all the information you need. We therefore invite you to visit the nearest Unemployment Insurance Commission office. The staff will be happy to answer all your questions." (b) No. This question may be asked by a Benefit Control or Insurance Officer for the sole purpose of making sure that the claimant is in full knowledge of his rights and obligations.

Order Paper Questions

NEW BANK OF CANADA BUILDING

Question No. 2,879—Mr. Stevens:

1. Is the total cost of the new Bank of Canada building $57.3 million plus $5.3 million for the cost of architectural, consultant and inspection fees and $4.2 million for the cost of fitting up the building, i.e., the cost and installation of office furniture and special purpose facilities?

2. Based on the number of usable square feet in the new building, what is the total cost per square foot of the project?

3. Who received and will receive the estimated $5.3 million for architectural, consultant fees and the cost of insurance and, in each case, in what amount?

4. What is the breakdown of the $4.2 million estimated for the purchase and installation of office furniture and special purpose facilities?

5. What is the cost for furnishing (a) the Governor's office (b) each Deputy Governor's office (c) the general foyer of the complex?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): 1. The costs quoted in the question include not only those for the new building but also those for the renovation and integration into the complex of the original Head Office building. See answer to Question No. 1,875—Mr. Herbert.

2. The cost per square foot reflects the renovation and integration of the original Bank Building into the new complex above and below grade, and the exceptional security requirements of the construction below grade. Based on a total construction cost of $57.3 million, the price per gross square foot of the project is $69. A net to gross ratio of 84 per cent is achieved in the design.

*ISSUE OF GREEN UNIFORMS TO SEA AND AIR CADETS

Question No. 1,731—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the issue of green cloth uniforms to the Sea and Air Cadets rather than the traditional uniforms?

2. What is a description of the new uniforms to be issued?

A green T-shirt is worn under the jacket in summer, and a green turtle neck sweater in winter. A green 100 per cent wool gabardine top coat is also part of the basic uniform. Distinctive corps and squadron headdress and accoutrements are now under consideration, by league officials.

3. Cadet corps and squadrons may retain the old, single service uniforms to wear on ceremonial occasions. Stocks of these uniforms, however, will not be replenished by DND.

4. The new green uniform was procured only after its adoption was agreed to by the presidents of the Navy, Army Cadet and Air Cadet Leagues of Canada at the ninth meeting of the National Cadet Advisory Group held on 6 December, 1974.

*WORLD SUPPLY OF OIL AND GAS

[Text]

Question No. 2,718—Mr. Fairweather:

To the knowledge of the government, did a recent United Nations study by geologists and economists conclude that the world's supply of oil and gas is unlikely to be depleted within a century?

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal is as follows: The study referred to appears to be the recently-released report of the UNITAR Conference on future world supply of oil and gas, held last July in Laxenburg, Austria. This conference concluded that additional oil and gas resources would probably be available at least until their use is replaced by renewable energy sources, even if this transition period should last a hundred years or more. This conclusion is considerably more optimistic than other assessments of world hydrocarbon resources. Most of the "new" oil which the conference is purported to have revealed had been known to exist, but most of this oil is locked in our own Athabasca and Venezuela's Orinoco oil sands and heavy oil deposits and the oil shales of the western U.S., and in the still unrecoverable portions of known conventional oil fields. There are also huge but presently inaccessible gas resources in tight rock formations, high pressure zones and other sources unexploitable today due to high cost or lack of technology. The report also suggests that major hydrocarbon resources may lie offshore beneath the continental slopes and deep ocean floor, more in fact than beneath the continental shelves where oil and gas are currently being produced. This concept is purely speculative with no direct evidence available to support it, since only a handful of wells has been drilled on the continental slopes or the deep ocean floor to date and these have discovered no indications of commercial oil and gas deposits. As technology advances and conventional oil fields become depleted, some of these sources of oil and gas will be tapped, just as Canada is presently starting to tap its own oil sands deposits. However, the cost of recovering much of these resources such as those below the deep ocean floor will likely be prohibitive, even with escalating international prices for oil, so much so that other cheaper and nuclear will replace oil and gas for many of their present uses.

● (1540)

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Among the question which the parliamentary secretary said would be answered today there is not one question in my name. I placed some of my questions on the order paper over one year ago. I refer particularly to question No. 632 relating to a trip taken by the then secretary of state in July, 1976, some 13 months ago. I have drawn this question to the parliamentary secretary's attention several times. I cannot understand why the government needs 13 months to answer a question. The secretary of state is now a different person. Why is there not sufficient staff to provide the answer to my question? I again draw the question to the parliamentary secretary's attention and ask him to provide an answer soon.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a point of order. A few moments ago the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) said the government was answering 102 questions today. On the surface, that sounds an impressive number, but if one looks beneath the surface one will see that we are in almost the same situation as we were when the House ended its sitting just over a week ago.

I recall raising at least five times the fact that the first 26 questions on the order paper are in my name. They have been on the order paper since October 12. Some were on the order paper in a previous session of parliament, and some of them have remained on the order paper for one year and a half. They have to do with such matters as the CBC international service and what appears to be the interference by the Department of External Affairs in programming to eastern Europe. It has been suggested that the CBC was told what it could or could not say in reflecting the Canadian way of life to communist countries. There are questions concerning cabinet ministers who make frequent use of government aircraft for private and pleasure purposes. These questions remain unanswered. I recall the parliamentary secretary's assuring the House, unless I misunderstood, that the questions would be answered by the time the House adjourns. The adjournment is coming tomorrow.

He may claim now that he meant the questions would be answered by the time the session ends. I point out that the session could continue another year, which he knows. Must we wait another year for answers to questions which should have been answered 11 months ago? When will this foolishness end? Though he claimed the government is answering 102 questions today, can he say when my questions will be answered? If he cannot say, perhaps the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) can say when a question which concerns him will be answered. On the program "Cross-country Check-up" last year a caller called the radio station to ask the Minister of Transport why five women, private people and not employees of the government of Canada, used a Jetstar to fly into Saskatoon, shortly after the minister had flown in on another Jetstar. The minister assured the listener that he would look into it and supply a public answer immediately.

I, in turn, put the question on the order paper. No immediate answer has been forthcoming. Apparently nobody knows the answer. I think that either the parliamentary secretary or the Minister of Transport, who is mainly responsible for delaying the answers relating to the use of aircraft under his jurisdiction, should tell the House why in the name of the devil they are hiding the truth from the Canadian people. There are smiles on the faces of certain ministers who shrug this off as a joke. The Canadian people do not think it a joke when information is withheld from parliament.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will determine what has happened to the answer relating to the refuelling of the aircraft in Saskatoon. I thought it would have been answered by now. I think the hon. member should recollect the matter more correctly. If my memory serves me right, the caller asked about an aircraft refuelling in Saskatoon in which there were five pretty girls. I have determined that it was an aircraft carrying, among others, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport on a trip to the west. I will obtain further details for the hon. member.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) that he can expect answers shortly to many questions to which he referred a few moments ago. I hope many will be answered tomorrow. I confirm the intention, which I have repeated several times, to bring forward answers to questions standing on the order paper at this time, before the end of the session. I cannot give that assurance with respect to questions which may appear after this time.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENERGY

CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSALS FOR NORTHERN GAS PIPELINE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That this House recognizes the social, economic, environmental and energy issues surrounding the question of northern gas pipelines and, believing that the resolution of these issues must reflect the national interest, approves the position of the government that all relevant reports must be considered before deciding on a pipeline and its route.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my remarks I should like to set out the circumstances surrounding the debate in which we shall engage for the next two days. You will recall that we were urged a number of times, particularly by members of the official opposition, to provide for a debate on the northern pipeline issue before the government reaches a decision. Notably, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) on April last, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in May last, and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) in May last, all joined together in asking that the House of Commons and its members be given the opportunity to express its views on these complicated questions before a decision is taken by the government.

Therefore, it will be no surprise to hon. members that it is not my intention in this statement to make any announcement with respect to a decision but, rather, to indicate some of the issues which have to be considered and some of the problems which are involved in dealing with this important matter. Inasmuch as the government is in the process of considering these problems, the contributions made by hon. members to this debate will be very valuable indeed.

Mr. Speaker, when I participated in the debate on the northern pipeline question in this House on May 13, I pointed out that it raised important issues that had to be considered carefully not only by members of parliament, but also by the Canadian people as a whole. Today I would like to try to provide an overview of the long train of events leading up to the point of decision that we now face and to outline the important considerations—tangible and intangible—that have to be weighed in the balance in reaching a judgment as to which of the various alternative courses of action open to us will best serve the national interest.

As all of us are well aware, Mr. Speaker, the pace of development of the north has accelerated substantially over the past two decades and more, fostered by the expansion of rail, road, air and communication links, the considerable enlargement in available government services, and the rapid growth of a number of territorial communities. Through the early and mid-1960s, the pace of exploration for oil and gas in both Alaska and the Canadian north began to gather momentum. It began to accelerate still faster with the discovery of petroleum at Prudhoe Bay in 1968 and at Atkinson Point in the Mackenzie Delta in 1970.

While most of us have welcomed the quickening pace of northern development, we have also become increasingly conscious of the need to ensure at the same time that such development is in harmony with nature and with the people who live there. In 1970, for example, the federal government issued initial guidelines providing for the protection of native rights, the expansion of native employment opportunities, and safeguarding of the environment and ecology of the north in the event of future construction of oil or gas pipelines. Substantially more detailed provisions were established in the expanded guidelines that were subsequently issued in 1972. In the same year the government also issued a statement on northern development in the seventies which elaborated this concern that industrial growth should be in accord with the people and the environment of the territories.

In the following year, 1973, the federal government announced its readiness to enter into negotiation with the Indian and Inuit people of the north to provide a settlement of claims for the loss of interests that had not been extinguished by treaty or superseded by law. During the course of these ongoing negotiations, the federal government has recognized that a settlement cannot be confined only to material benefits, but also must recognize the aspiration of native people for a much enhanced role in the making of decisions involving their communal life.

In March, 1974, Canadian Arctic Gas filed its long expected application for a pipeline across the Yukon North Slope and the Mackenzie Delta and up the Mackenzie Valley to transport both Canadian and U.S. natural gas to markets in southern Canada and the lower 48 states. In that same month, the federal government appointed Mr. Justice Thomas Berger to undertake an inquiry into the social, economic and environmental impact on the north of this project—and of the subsequently proposed Maple Leaf line—which was unprecedented in its depth and breadth.

As the House is aware, late in the proceedings the Foothills group sponsoring the all-Canadian, Maple Leaf line from the Mackenzie Delta submitted an alternative proposal for a line that would carry gas from Prudhoe Bay to Fairbanks, from which it would run southeastward along the route of the Alaska Highway through the southern Yukon Territory, across the northeast corner of British Columbia and southward in Alberta to branch lines transporting the gas to western and midwestern U.S. states.

When it became apparent that this proposal was being given serious consideration by Canadian and U.S. regulatory authorities and, further, that it offered the possibility of an interconnection for Delta gas through a line running southwest along the Dempster Highway, the government quickly established a three-member board under the chairmanship of Kenneth Lysyk, Dean of Law at the University of British Columbia, to launch a preliminary inquiry into the socioeconomic impact of such a project. At the same time, my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, (Mr. LeBlanc), also launched a preliminary inquiry under his department's environmental assessment and review process. As the government has emphasized, in the event that a decision were made to endorse a project along the lines of that proposed by Foothills (Yukon), further socioeconomic and environmental studies would be undertaken to determine how best to minimize any potentially adverse impacts identified by the preliminary inquiries.

Now I should like to say a word about the recommendations which have come forward from these various inquiries. Members of the House have now received copies of the first volume of Mr. Justice Berger's eloquent report, which concluded that no pipeline should be built across the Yukon North Slope or the Mackenzie Delta because of unacceptable environmental risks that it would create, and that no pipeline should be built along the Mackenzie Valley for ten years in order to provide time for the settlement of native claims and implementation of measures to provide native people with a greater measure of self-determination. The summary of the forthcoming second volume of his report, which was released late last week, outlines Mr. Justice Berger's proposals for minimizing the adverse social, economic and environmental impact if a decision should be reached in favour of building a line along the route proposed by Canadian Arctic Gas.

The House will recall that the report of the National Energy Board ruled the so-called Maple Leaf line out of contention, as did the applicant, on the grounds that insufficient reserves in the Mackenzie Delta made it uneconomic and unfinanceable. The board concluded that both Canadian Arctic Gas and the Foothills (Yukon) project, with provision for a connecting line to feed Delta gas into the express system at Dawson, could transport Canadian and U.S. supplies to southern markets economically and at reasonably similar costs.

The board considered that both projects could contribute significant industrial benefits to the Canadian economy and create an equally significant increase in employment opportunities during the construction phase. In the case of Canadian Arctic Gas, for example, the board estimated that over a five-year period 25,000 man-years of employment would be created directly and 220,000 created indirectly as a result of that project. Like Mr. Justice Berger, the NEB reached a judgment that the environmental impact of the proposed line along the Yukon North Slope would be intolerably severe. The Board concluded that the environmental impact of the Foothills (Yukon) line would be acceptable because for the most part it would follow established corridors. It also concluded that that route was preferable from a socioeconomic point of view because fewer native people would be affected, because those in the Yukon Territory were more accustomed to industrial development, and because negotiations on native claims were more advanced than some of those in the Northwest Territories.

It is clear that in reaching its conclusion in favour of the Foothills (Yukon) system, the National Energy Board gave substantial weight to the proposed conditions to preserve Canada's option to have Delta gas connected with the express line in order to provide for its economic transport to southern markets as and when required to supplement declining reserves from conventional areas in the west.

The environmental assessment panel established under the chairmanship of Dr. Harry Hill last week expressed the view that a southern Yukon pipeline route was environmentally preferable to a Mackenzie Valley line. At the same time it emphasized that considerably more study was required in order to devise measures to minimize the environmental impact of such a line, and considered that further information was required to assess the impact of a line along the Dempster Highway to provide access to Delta gas.

The report of the Alaska Highway pipeline inquiry under the chairmanship of Dean Lysyk, which was made public last Tuesday, provides a further valuable insight into many critical factors that all of us must take into account. That inquiry recommended that a start on construction of any pipeline through the southern Yukon be deferred until August 1, 1981, to provide time for the settlement and implementation of native claims.

Regardless of what decision was eventually reached regarding the routing and timing of a pipeline, the report proposed that the federal government make an interim advance payment of $50 million in respect of such a settlement to a special trust account, with the accumulating interest from August 1 of this year being allocated to serve the various interests of native people in the Yukon. In addition, the report expressed the view that no conclusion could be reached about the social and economic feasibility of a connecting line to Delta reserves along the Dempster Highway on the strength of existing information.

While the National Energy Board proposed that the project company building a pipeline through the southern Yukon be required to provide a payment of up to $200 million to help cover identifiable economic and social costs, the Lysyk inquiry contended that such costs should largely be met through tax revenues. It contended that any company building a line along this general route be required to pay a minimum of $200 million into a Yukon heritage fund in order to compensate Yukon residents for adverse impacts which could not be readily calculated on a dollar and cents basis.

May I say a word now about Canadian-U.S. options. Both Canada and the United States are now faced with the difficult task of weighing all the advantages and disadvantages, all the costs and benefits that are involved in each of the various alternative courses in order to reach a judgment as to which will best serve the public interest of each country. The United States, which experienced a critical shortage of gas during a prolonged period of severe cold weather last winter, faces a choice of joining with Canada in the construction of an overland pipeline that would transport gas from Prudhoe Bay in Alaska to the lower 48 states, of opting for an all-American system involving an Alaskan pipeline and liquefied natural gas transport ships, or whether to forgo any delivery system now and instead devote its resources to development of other energy alternatives.

In Canada, we are faced with a decision essentially involving three basic choices: of approving a system generally in line with that proposed by Canadian Arctic Gas; of approving a system along the lines of that proposed by Foothills (Yukon), with or without provision for a connection for Canadian Delta gas, or of deferring construction of any pipeline for the foreseeable future and either awaiting bigger finds of Delta-Beaufort Sea gas to justify a Maple Leaf route, or concentrating our resources instead on the development of other sources of energy supply.

Perhaps the best starting point for consideration of the factors that we in Canada must weigh in the balance is the need for natural gas as it relates to the national energy strategy. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), will be participating in the debate later, but in order to maintain a proper balance of the various factors involved in a decision of this kind I think it is appropriate that I should refer in the over-all context to the question of energy demand and supply.

One of the central goals of that strategy is to ensure that by 1985 and thereafter Canada's dependence on imported foreign oil does not exceed one-third of total domestic consumption. The magnitude of the challenge we face in meeting that goal was clearly underlined by the National Energy Board in its recent report on Canadian oil supply and requirements. Failing the adoption of decisive policies and programs to reverse the trend, the board estimated that Canada might be forced to rely on foreign oil imports to supply anywhere from 52 per cent to 62 per cent of its oil requirements by 1985, and perhaps even more in the next decade. Such heavy dependence on foreign oil supplies would expose this country to a number of risks which I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, would like to deal with later.

There are two basic thrusts to the policies we have been developing to restrain the extent of our dependence on foreign petroleum supplies. One is that of greatly intensifying conservation in our consumption of energy. The other is that of substantially increasing the supply of many alternative sources of new energy capacity that are open to us.

The existing reserves of natural gas found to date in the Mackenzie Delta are estimated by the National Energy Board to amount to 5.3 trillion cubic feet, which is a relatively small volume when measured against the high expectations for discoveries that most of us had earlier in the 1970s. Nevertheless, it is the board's view that this could provide one of the cheapest alternative sources of new energy at present available, one that its calculations suggest could supply some 10 per cent of domestic gas consumption for a period of several years. That is almost double the U.S. demand that could be met from present reserves in Prudhoe Bay.

The National Energy Board estimated that Canada could have a requirement for natural gas from the Arctic to meet the prospective domestic demand and existing export contracts as early as 1981 if Alberta strictly enforced its formula for reserving supplies to meet its own requirements or as late as 1985. In the event that it were decided to terminate exports by the end of this year, the board estimated the supply of gas from conventional sources would be sufficient to meet Canadian demand until around 1989. But apart from the effect of such a policy on our relations with the United States, the board also concluded that the adoption of this course could lead to a sharp decline in exploration and discovery of new reserves.

In reaching these conclusions, however, the board also underlined the fact that it was, in its words, "bedevilled by the inability to accurately predict demand and supply . . ." On the supply side, uncertainty is created by the present difficulty of determining to what extent the development of the existing surplus of natural gas from conventional areas is a temporary phenomenon and to what extent it may reflect accelerated development of new reserves in response to substantially higher wellhead prices. On the demand side, there is uncertainty about how the balance may be struck between increased conservation of gas consumption and the development of new markets for gas to provide a substitute for oil or other energy forms. As a consequence, we are faced with deciding not only whether we should build a northern pipeline, but also with considering when Arctic gas might be required to meet Canadian needs.

The tapping of Canadian gas from the western Arctic, of course, is only one of several alternative sources of new energy that we might draw on in the future. Exploration for conventional sources of petroleum in the conventional areas of western Canada has, as I indicated earlier, been growing rapidly and yielding significant new discoveries. Extensive discussions have been under way for some time with the producing provinces about steps that might be taken to accelerate development of the tar sands and heavy oil deposits, both of which Canada possesses in abundance. Our nuclear power capacity is being steadily expanded, along with the development of new hydroelectric facilities. Exploration for oil and gas is being actively pursued in the eastern Arctic and the deep offshore area of the Beaufort Sea. Extensive research is being conducted into the feasibility of various forms of renewable energy such as that from the sun, wind and tides.

As I suggested previously, one of the important elements that we have to weigh is whether investment of scarce resources in a northern pipeline to open up access to Delta gas, or in the development of some of these other alternative energy sources I have just mentioned, would yield the best return to this country. It may well be that when all the factors are considered, the conclusion that emerges is that our interests will be better served by following the latter course. Before reaching that conclusion, however, one of the factors which we would obviously have to weigh is the possible effect of such a decision in sharply curtailing future exploration in the western Arctic in the absence of any other measures to sustain it.

We are also reminded by the many reports that have been submitted to us that economic considerations are not the only ones that we must assess in reaching a judgment on the issue before us. We must also be deeply concerned about the impact of a pipeline on the northern people, particularly native people, and on the fragile northern land and the wildlife that it supports. In the case of the environment and the ecology, our concerns must be to forgo routes which would have a harshly adverse impact that could not be overcome by any reasonable means, and of reducing the adverse impact of other routes to the greatest possible extent.

It is a fact that if a pipeline is built, some degree of environmental disruption is inevitable. For this, there is a cost that has to be paid, now or in the future. But the cost can be quite high or relatively low, depending on a number of factors. In the next few days of debate I believe those factors must be taken into account. The only basis for sound environmental protection is sound environmental information. Though we know a great deal about many of the problems associated with the construction of northern pipelines, we will have to know a great deal more. If we know enough, if we take environmental factors into account during decision-making, and if we relate those factors to final design and mitigative measures, we can reduce environmental costs to acceptable limits.

I should point out that the El Paso proposal is not without environmental risk to Canada. While the direct environmental effect on this country of a gas pipeline across Alaska would be relatively small, the same cannot be said of the necessary port installations on Prince William Sound and in southern California. These installations do pose certain threats to fisheries resources that may be of more than local importance.

The tankers carrying liquefied gas are not a serious threat in themselves. The possibility exists, however, that increased traffic along the coast increases the possibility of collision with coastal oil tankers travelling to and from Valdez in Alaska. The results of such a collision could be devastating to coastal and marine life. Major concerns with the El Paso proposal, therefore, result not from the pipeline itself but from the necessary ancillary facilities and concurrent transportation methods.

In the case of the natives of the north, our concern must be twofold: to minimize the adverse impact of any pipeline and to maximize the benefits that it can provide. Mr. Justice Berger pointed this out in the first volume of his report, "Native society is not static". The report of the National Energy Board made a similar point: "The north at this time may be said to be a land in transition". Also, the board asserted the following:

> The move of natives away from the traditional ways of life, living in small groups and relying almost entirely on hunting and fishing, is a recognized fact. Many native northerners now live in communities where schools and social services are available. Hunting and trapping still take place, but more on a seasonal basis. Little wage employment has been created and many of the people receive welfare payments.

The short-term dislocations and disruptions which could be faced by members of some native communities, and some of the potentially adverse impacts that could be felt over the longer term, must also be weighed against the long-term benefits that a pipeline could provide directly and indirectly in the form of job training, new job opportunities, opportunities for the development of native enterprises, possibilities of access to natural gas fuel to northern homes at significantly lower cost than that of other available fuels. While the pipeline operation itself would not provide substantial employment opportunities, many northerners are convinced that it would serve as a catalyst in promoting other resource and hydro developments. These, in turn, would provide jobs for the growing number of young people in the territories who will be looking for employment on a full-time or part-time basis in the years that lie immediately ahead.

At the same time, however, it is also important that the construction of a pipeline should not prejudice the settlement of native claims, nor unduly impede the implementation of the new social framework established as part of such settlements under which native people will acquire an increased opportunity to shape their own development in future.

It is very important to remind the House that even if the government should reach a decision to enter into talks with the United States on the possibility of a pipeline generally following one or the other of the two major overland routes, that would by no means resolve the issue. As I pointed out earlier in my remarks, the United States must also determine which alternative best serves its own interests. In the event that it reached the tentative conclusion that the alternative which might best serve its interest coincided with our own, there would undoubtedly be a good many important questions to be resolved to the satisfaction of both countries before any final agreement could be reached between the two governments.

Mr. Fraser: Right on, Allan.

Mr. MacEachen: Any final decision about proceeding with construction of a pipeline would also depend on reaching satisfactory terms and conditions with the companies involved in both countries and in satisfactory arrangements being made to ensure financing of the project. Consequently, it would be a serious mistake to assume that a decision on our part—

Mr. Fraser: Could ever possibly be made.

Mr. MacEachen: —to enter into discussions with the United States would lead automatically to a foregone conclusion, namely, a decision to authorize an overland pipeline. If we assume that all the hurdles I have just mentioned could be overcome, and if a decision were made by the government to approve an overland pipeline, it would be the intention of the government, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said at his press conference last week, to implement such a proposal by legislation.

● (1620)

By following this course, parliament would be assured of the right to provide or withhold its sanction for an undertaking of such vast dimensions and major implications for our country. While it is, of course, not possible to anticipate in advance the form such legislation might take, it is conceivable that it might provide for the route to be followed, establish terms governing the granting of a right-of-way, impose terms for the protection of the environment, for minimizing adverse social and economic impacts and maximizing the benefits for the people of the north, and spell out the major terms and conditions agreed on with the United States and the participating company or companies.

I can assure the House that it would be our intention that such legislation would provide for the establishment of a single agency to co-ordinate and supervise the exercise of authority in all matters pertaining to a northern pipeline that are under the responsibility of federal authorities. This agency would be expected to co-operate closely with the provincial governments, territorial governments as well as with the National Energy Board, which possesses a great deal of experience and expertise in regulating the physical aspects of pipeline construction. In our view, a single agency of this kind would be essential to minimize duplication and confusion and to ensure that the intentions of parliament were fulfilled expeditiously and efficiently.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, let me observe that undoubtedly there will be those who will argue that we lack sufficient information even now to make a decision in principle on the question. In an imperfect world, there is no such thing as perfect knowledge.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: There are some critical elements that must be weighed in the balance involving developments in the future that we cannot possibly foresee with certainty—elements such as national and international energy supply, demand and costs. Because of the long lead time required to develop the new energy resources that will be urgently required in the years ahead, we are faced with the necessity of making decisions now based on the best evidence currently available. To defer a decision would itself be an important decision because it would have the effect of foreclosing some of the options still open to us. Hon. gentlemen have not been entirely enthusiastic about my concluding comments on this issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I can well understand their somewhat uneasy reception of these cold facts. Now they can take the floor and tell the government how, exactly, it ought to put all these considerations together into an integrated package.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should begin by saying, on behalf of all members, that it has been a long time since the House of Commons has heard a speech like that. We are a little puzzled as to why the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) made the lead speech on this matter. Frankly, what concerns us most is that perhaps he has been given the north in exchange for CIDA. A procedural expert near the exit which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is seeking from the debate suggested that the President of the Privy Council spoke because the motion was in his name. I simply say that we on this side of the House would have been delighted to have given unanimous consent if someone else had wanted to lead off.

We are discussing, and will be deciding, this question in an atmosphere that can best be called an Alice in Wonderland atmosphere. In effect, as the minister stated, three routes are at issue. One is a route from Prudhoe Bay, down the Mackenzie, which was recommended by Canadian Arctic Gas and studied by the Berger inquiry and the National Energy Board. Second, along the Alaska Highway, which was recommended by the Foothills group and studied by Dean Lysyk and the National Energy Board. Third, the Dempster connection to the Delta, proposed as possible by the National Energy Board but studied by nobody.

Mr. Justice Berger, having studied the Mackenzie Valley route, prefers the Alcan route, which he has not studied. The NEB, having studied Berger, recommends access to the Dempster route, which it has not studied. The Lysyk group, the third inquiry in a venture conceived, originally, to achieve Canadian access to the Canadian reserves, recommends a route which gives Americans access to American reserves, with the possibility of connection to Canadian reserves, assuming the viability of the Dempster connection, which nobody has studied.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: In each case, to a more or less degree, the inquirers recommend routes they have not studied. The fault in this bizarre situation does not rest with the various inquiries, each of which has worked effectively and well within difficult constraints of time and information, nor with the various applicants, Arctic Gas and the Foothills group which spent immense amounts of money, time, imagination and care in making their cases. The result, instead, rests with the government of Canada, which runs the north like a colony and has known for at least a decade that the society and economy of that region were bound to be profoundly affected by a pipeline possibility. Yet despite that warning, despite Ottawa's absolute jurisdiction, we have to make this decision without a northern energy policy, without a national energy policy, without a northern development policy, and without any clear or consistent approach to native rights or the northern ecology.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Sadly, this kind of incompetence is not confined to the north. There is no more alarming evidence of that than the continuing erosion in the position of our dollar in world currency markets. The fall in the Canadian dollar, and let us not kid ourselves that this is simply a technical adjustment, is not the result of any single event in any single part of the country. As has been stated so explicitly by the Wall Street Journal, among others, it is the price of years of economic mismanagement by this incompetent government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That kind of incompetence creates problems well beyond the north. These problems will become much more severe if the Government of Canada continues to fail to develop an effective integrated energy policy for Canada. When the energy crisis broke in 1973, reaction was swift virtually everywhere but in Canada. In the United Kingdom, for example, development of North Sea oil and gas reserves was speeded up by the world price increases. The result is that North Sea oil and gas are already coming onstream. By 1980 the United Kingdom will be self-sufficient in energy and may, in fact, even be an exporter. But not Canada.

• (1630)

The changed price situation of the crisis gave Canada the opportunity to become self-sufficient in energy. That opportunity has not been entirely lost. But it sets the context for the decision on a northern pipeline. That decision must contribute to the goal of making Canada self-sufficient in energy by the 1990s—not self-reliant, which is the minister's phrase, because the word "self-reliant" is simply a euphemism for using not foreign exchange to buy resources, but self-sufficient, bringing our domestic demand and our domestic supply into harmony. That is a realizeable goal, and it is necessary.

A failure to strive for self-sufficiency could be very costly to Canada. The National Energy Board estimated, in February of this year, that Canada will be a net importer of more than half a million barrels of oil per day in 1985, and a million in 1990, if the present inadequate supply and demand policy remain in place. The dollar cost of that level of importation is roughly calculable. It is more than $10 billion a year added to Canada's balance of payments deficit by 1990—assuming only moderate inflation and moderate price increases for energy. That is an added level of deficit that could be sustained by some economy, but not by Canada's.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Canada's economy is dominated by the resource and service sectors, and burdened by a very heavy public sector. We have traditionally paid for our international deficits with resources. Our manufacturing sector—traditionally weak, and getting weaker under the policies of this government—cannot carry the burden. Japan, with its world-scale factories and disciplined labour force, can perhaps pay for its oil with television sets and toasters, Canada cannot.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The consequences of the looming oil deficit are chilling. The Canadian dollar could fall to 70 American cents by 1985. High cost imported goods will add enormously to domestic inflation. Unemployment could rise to 15 per cent nationally, and it could stay there for decades. But that is not the worst. At least one major international report now concludes that there will be a world energy shortfall coinciding with Canada's new position as a major importer, and there is the real possibility that the OPEC cartel will curtail production and impose, for its own reasons, a type of world rationing system.

The inevitable result would be domestic rationing of oil as early as 1985. That is eight short years away. The social and political costs of such rationing are literally incalculable. Our industries would have to shut down for periods. Unemployment would rise even above the 15 per cent figure. Our cities, dependent as they are on a high degree of personal mobility, would be disrupted as people crowd into the urban core. That is a prescription for chaos. That kind of situation can be averted by action today against the crisis of tomorrow. It can be avoided by a vigorous effort to make up lost time and to work toward energy self-sufficiency by 1990. Reaching that goal requires federal effort on both the supply and demand fronts. First, there must be a far more effective program of energy conservation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The introduction of the two-price system for oil, and the phased move to the world price, are necessary on grounds of equity, on grounds of allowing Canadians to adjust gradually to the new price structure. But we must face the fact that it has discouraged the efficient use of scarce energy resources. This is all the more reason why Canada should have had in place long ago a serious program of energy conservation. The new national home insulation program—first proposed by this party—is one delinquent step in the right direction. But it has been four years in coming and it will be another four years before it has meaningful impact.

The government's official target for the annual increase in energy consumption is 3½ per cent per year. That is no target at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The government's own officials, who have by and large left the service of the government, in delivering a justified and effective criticism of the minister say that growth can be held to 2 per cent without economic disruption. That should be a firm commitment of the federal government of Canada. Serious consideration should be given to a program of tax rebates for energy-efficient automobiles. The government should have produced, as it promised it would more than two years ago, appliance efficiency labelling. It should establish minimum standards for appliance efficiency. It should encourage corporations, through tax deductions or rebates, to conduct internal energy audits—to determine where industrial savings can be made. We need a far better performance on conservation than we have been receiving from this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The second step to energy self-sufficiency demands what amounts to a crash program to develop the tar sands and heavy oil deposits of western Canada, and also to develop clear guidelines and incentives to encourage exploration and development in the north. The third step must be a determined effort to substitute other energy sources for oil. Over the long term, of course, the emphasis has to be on renewable forms of energy such as solar power and tidal power. Canada's efforts in this regard are paltry compared with the research and development work done in other countries. We need, also, to give far more priority to research into coal gasification, and other alternatives. For the nearer term, we must look very seriously to the substitution of natural gas for oil. Our natural gas supply now exceeds Canada's immediate requirements, and expansion of those resources could very well be vital to the goal of energy self-sufficiency in Canada.

We are faced now, and the government perhaps next week, with making a decision regarding the pipeline. Canada could make a route decision with much more certainty if the government had been doing its job in the north over the last decade. The settlement of land claims has been delayed this long because, as late as 1973, the Prime Minister of Canada refused to admit that our native people have legitimate claims.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Hill report is a testimony to how very little advance research into environmental conditions has been done by this government in the north. Indeed, our present knowledge of northern ecology owes more to the pipeline and petroleum companies than it does to this government. The only consistent northern development policy of this government has been to run the north badly from Ottawa. Stark testimony to the total absence of any co-ordinated northern policy can be seen in the uncompleted Dempster Highway, the federal furniture rotting in the rain at Norman Wells, the refusal to bring any certainty to guide resource exploration and development, and the absolute irresponsibility of federal officials in the Northwest Territories in encouraging small communities and small business to expand in anticipation of a Mackenzie Valley line that will not be built.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It is in that context of incomplete data, and the absence of energy, northern or native policy—all due to a dereliction of duty by the government of Canada—that we now must choose a route. We have the benefit of extensive reports by public commissions and private groups and companies. On the basis of available information, this party would be prepared to support a route along the Alcan corridor—provided certain firm conditions are met. Before coming to those conditions, I want to remind the House that Canada has two basic interests in pipeline policy. Our primary interest, our primary goal, is to deliver Canadian resources to Canadian markets. Our secondary goal is to help our neighbour and ally, the United States, deliver their resources to their markets.

● (1640)

At the moment, the Alcan proposal serves only that secondary goal. It moves American reserves but it does not move Canadian reserves. The National Energy Board has recommended a route which would bring Alcan within 480 miles of the Delta, and it is imperative that the government of Canada and the Alcan proponents begin immediately environmental and other studies to tell us whether a Dempster connection is feasible. At the same time, the government and the proponents should review and report upon any other feasible route connecting Canadian reserves to Canadian markets. In concert with those route studies, the Canadian government, which has done everything it could to discourage exploration in northern Canada, should immediately introduce clear, firm regulations and effective incentives to stimulate the search for new Canadian reserves.

Let me come to the secondary—although, of course, important—Canadian goal, of helping the United States. The government of the United States may decide to ask for a route across Canadian territory to serve American needs. Naturally, we should respond positively; but naturally, too, we should put a price upon access to our territory, as they, in reverse circumstances, would put a price. It should be a reasonable price, taking account of the disruption the route will cause Canada and taking account of the fair return we should require for granting a right of way. Our negotiators should, of course, impose conditions. They should also explore the possibility of other arrangements softer than conditions which might be of advantage to Canada, whether those involve access from the Yukon across the Panhandle or concessions on trade or on other fronts.

Work should proceed as quickly as possible. The government must make a serious effort to settle outstanding land claims within 12 months. The minister says it is possible. We intend to hold him to the undertaking that it is possible. We think most serious consideration should be given to the Lysyk proposal for a substantial $50 million advance payment to allow native communities in the Yukon to prepare for the impact of the pipeline. We support the recommendation for a Yukon heritage fund of at least $200 million, paid by Foothills to the Yukon on the condition that it be managed by the elected members of the Yukon legislative assembly. However, we do not think that agreement should be contingent on a prior settlement of land claims.

There is one important associated matter related to timing. As hon. members know, we now have a so-called "bubble" in our gas supply position in Canada. We have a temporary surplus, most of it in the hands of small, independent producers in Alberta. In our view, the federal government should begin immediate consultation with the government of Alberta with an eye to the possibility of issuing temporary export permits for the sale of a significant part of this surplus gas to the United States. If the federal and Alberta governments feel that these volumes could well be needed in the longer term to meet domestic demand, any offer of short-term export to the United States could be conditional on a swap arrangement which would assure us at least an option on equivalent volumes of U.S. gas once the pipeline is operating. That kind of arrangement could earn Canada valuable export dollars now—as much as $500 million a year—as well as provide revenues for independent producers who might well find it difficult to hold gas in these volumes in reserve for any period of time. Naturally, such an agreement could also help the United States bridge its needs through the period necessary to prepare for northern pipeline construction.

Concerning the Alcan route specifically, certain firm conditions must attach. First, planning should go ahead on the basis of provision for the eventual addition of Canadian northern gas to the system. That is, it should permit a spur to the Mackenzie Delta and Beaufort Sea fields. The basic pipeline itself must be planned with sufficient capacity to handle the addition of Canadian supplies. Only if this is the case will the pipeline make sense from a purely Canadian perspective. Only if this is the case will the pipeline contribute to the achievement of energy self-sufficiency by 1990.

Second, the Government of Canada should insist that no Canadian government guarantees be attached to the basic pipeline project. As the basic project now stands, and until a decision on a northern spur is taken, it will serve only American needs. American guarantees should, therefore, be sufficient. Canada should not be expected to underwrite what will be at first, and perhaps forever, a purely American project. Third, Canadians—and especially northern Canadians and others along the route—should extract the maximum possible benefit from the construction itself, so the construction should be planned for the maximum possible Canadian content in materials.

This pipeline should not be regarded just as a public works project. We must recognize the Canadian business needs business because of the conduct of this government. Because of the economic failure of this government, Canadian manufacturing is now operating at only 80 per cent of capacity, creating massive unemployment. There is a job-creation capacity in this pipeline. In the community of Edson, which happens to be in my own constituency and which is along the route, this project could provide 20 to 40 permanent new jobs, and the effect would be the same at other points along the route.

Fourth, the same principle of maximum benefit should apply to equity participation and to pipeline hiring practices. The pipeline crosses Canadian territory, but it also crosses northern Canadian territory. Northern Canadians must extract from it the maximum benefit. For that reason, northerners should have preference in all hiring connected with northern pipeline construction. For the same reason, northern communities should have, where it is feasible, access to gas energy supplies for their own needs from the pipeline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do you want my pen to take notes, Allan?

Mr. MacEachen: If your leader would say something, it would help.

Mr. Clark: I am prepared to put up with a great deal from the President of the Privy Council, but after his speech I am not prepared to accept a suggestion from him that I should say something.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: As a final condition of approval, we insist upon the creation of a single authority or independent regulatory agency. It should be new, and it should last only for the life of the project and not become another perpetual agency in the long list of perpetual and often unnecessary agencies maintained by this government. It should have—and this is of fundamental importance—clear authority over all the other agencies and departments whose conflicts now complicate life in the north. This agency must have a mandate to oversee and regulate technical and social problems connected with the pipeline. It should have attached to it a planning body designated by the elected governments of the Yukon and of the provinces through which the pipeline passes to deal specifically with the social and economic impact of the pipeline on the north.

Mr. Gillespie: Senior to the NEB?

Mr. Clark: The legislation to establish this authority should be presented to parliament at the earliest possible opportunity, no later than next fall. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) asks if it should be senior to the National Energy Board. He knows that the National Energy Board is responsible for making decisions on pipeline approvals and matters of that kind. This agency, as recommended by, I believe, all the commissioners of inquiry, should deal with getting the project done. We think that is needed. As the minister would know from his flights at a high level over the territory, one of the very serious problems relating to the development of the north now is that there is a plethora of federal government agencies, all going in different directions, all competing with each other and all getting in the way of people who want to build the north, whoever they are and whatever their goals. We have to end that kind of duplication and have one agency which can legitimately claim to be representative of the elected opinion of the people of the territory and of the provinces through which the pipeline will run. The legislation to establish this authority should be presented to parliament at the earliest possible opportunity, certainly no later than next fall.

In addition, there is another role for parliament. It is one thing to express opinions, as parliament is doing today, but the House of Commons also has an obligation to oversee the development of a project which can have a profound effect upon our future. The decision on a route will be made in cabinet, in secret. The conditions will be discussed in negotiations, in secret. Before and after passage of any legislation parliament will be a spectator, powerless to influence a major Canadian development. That is the style of operation of this government, and it is one of the reasons our country is so badly prepared for the decision we must take on a pipeline. This question is far too important to leave out parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Therefore, sir, we believe and trust that any member opposite who has any respect for parliamentary traditions will support our proposal, that the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works should have a continuing right to monitor the pipeline question. It should be consulted regularly on the progress and nature of negotiations with the United States, on the progress of construction, on the degree to which conditions are being honoured, and on other questions. Sir, as is clear, this is more than a debate about a pipeline. It is, instead, a debate about the future shape of our country. Canada today is the sick man of the international economy. By almost every measure imaginable, this country is failing to live up to its promise and potential. By almost any measure imaginable this country is in the worst economic shape of any of the major powers.

What is at stake today in Canada is whether this country enters the twenty-first century as a hopeless economic invalid, or whether it starts now to recover its lost momentum. This decision can contribute to Canada's economic renewal, provided it is taken within the kind of comprehensive strategy of energy self-sufficiency I have outlined. Or it can be just one more bleak milestone along the route we have travelled the last ten years, the route of national decline and international dependency. The alternatives are clear. The choice can begin with a choice of a pipeline route. We have indicated today the position which we, in this party would take, not simply in relation to the pipeline but also in relation to the context of national development and development of a national energy policy within which a pipeline decision must be made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) rising. Is he rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Gillespie: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) permit a question?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I should be delighted to answer the minister's question.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, as I understood the Leader of Opposition's position, his party would support the Alcan route, subject to certain conditions. Has he ruled out categorically the possibility of the CAGPL route?

Mr. Clark: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Gillespie: Has the Leader of the Opposition categorically rejected the option of the CAGPL route?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated in the House clearly to everybody, including the minister, that on the basis of available information we think preference should be given to the Alcan route. We say that on the basis of information available to the House of Commons. We do not rule out anything categorically the details of which we do not know and which the minister may know.

ENERGY

CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSALS FOR NORTHERN GAS PIPELINE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen:

That this House recognizes the social, economic, environmental and energy issues surrounding the question of northern gas pipelines and, believing that the resolution of these issues must reflect the national interest, approves the position of the government that all relevant reports must be considered before deciding on a pipeline and its route.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in a minute I shall set out our reasons for making an unequivocal commitment in principle to the Alcan route if a pipeline is to be built in northern Canada. Before doing so I shall express a personal lament for the sad state to which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has fallen. We all know the President of the Privy Council to be an intelligent man. He is an eloquent man, and from time to time has shown himself to be a man of passion. I think particularly of some notable debates on the rules and the use of Gaelic. I am seriously concerned about the sad state to which the government has let the President of the Privy Council fall. Not only is he reduced to uttering texts prepared by mere bureaucrats; he is reduced to uttering texts prepared apparently by a committee of bureaucrats, by an interdepartmental committee the zenith of whose intellectual accomplishment was enshrined in that complicated sentence I attempted to copy down which is to this effect: there are no perfect answers in an imperfect world.

Mr. MacEachen: You missed it.

Mr. Broadbent: I misquoted. Obviously, the sentence was more complex than I suggested. Having studied for months, indeed years, Canada's energy position, and having given particular attention to pipelines in the north, the government's performance was remarkable. What did the minister do? The high point of the minister's speech came when he asked the opposition parties for their suggestions.

Mr. Allmand: Isn't that why you wanted this debate? Be honest.

Mr. Broadbent: Speaking as an old professor, I must take the minister to task for his knowledge of history. I was fascinated when, at the beginning of his remarks the President of the Privy Council told us he was going to tell us something of the history of the pipeline decision. My ears perked up. I thought, "My God, we are going to hear a Liberal minister tell the truth". Alas, Mr. Speaker, I should have known better. We heard a careful selection of the facts presented by the President of the Privy Council.

Before I deal with the circumstances of this particular energy decision, or of the decision we are to make in Canada which will have an important bearing on our future, I want to speak on the history of this decision. The facts I shall put on record are somewhat different from those the minister mentioned. I do not do so because of some interest in intellectual or political history. I do so because the facts will document that the Liberal Party of Canada, right up to this afternoon, has no coherent policy, that the Liberal Party of Canada, step by step as far back as 1968, made a commitment, without thinking clearly of the broader ramifications, to the Arctic Gas proposal. Now, because of a series of historic events over which the government had no control, it has stumbled willy-nilly on the right decision not announced this afternoon, namely, the decision to adopt the Alcan route if a pipeline is to built.

Mr. Allmand: What a joke!

• (1700)

Mr. Broadbent: I say this is important because we on this side of the House, and I am sure I speak for all the opposition parties, are tired of energy decisions made on an ad hoc basis one after another in the total absence of a national energy policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: As early as 1968 the federal government made very clear that it supported in principle a Mackenzie Valley pipeline. In that year the federal government established an interdepartmental committee which had one purpose only, which was to investigate the possibility of bringing Prudhoe Bay oil through the Mackenzie Valley. It sent the then chairman of the National Energy Board, that so-called independent body to which the government refers from time to time, to the United States to see whether the Americans might be interested in such a proposition. The only consultation in which the government engaged outside its own bureaucratic ranks in 1968 was with the oil industry. No native people were consulted. No northerners were consulted, whether native or non-native. It is certain that no one interested in environmental aspects was consulted.

Two years later, in 1970, the government published its northern pipeline guidelines to which the minister referred in his opening remarks. What he did not say was that those guidelines gave the green light to industry to prepare a Mackenzie Valley pipeline proposal. The Leader of the Opposition has already referred, correctly, to the kind of encouragement which was offered the small businessmen in the north in anticipation of the building of a pipeline right up the Mackenzie Valley. There is no doubt that this paper, which the minister mentioned but from which he did not choose to quote, represented approval in principle for the construction of a Mackenzie Valley pipeline.

At that time, close co-operation between government and industry was under way in an attempt to head-off all criticism which might crop up in connection with such a proposal, and various government departments, including the Department of Indian Affairs and the Crown corporation, Northern Transportation Limited, maintained that internal assessments of environmental and social damage could be trusted; that the minister could rely on internal studies and internal information exclusively when making decisions on this matter. Native land claims were not even mentioned in the document to which the minister referred. The minister did not mention it, but the title of that document was "Canada's North, 1970-1980". I repeat, there was no question of establishing any independent inquiry outside the federal bureaucracy.

Most important for the future of a national energy policy in Canada, this approach, so solemnly established by the Liberal government, was directly in line with the continental energy policy which the administration was then following. The Mackenzie Valley pipeline would supply additional frontier oil and gas from Canada which would be sold to the United States for needed export dollars. Government departments were instructed to increase preparations for the building of a pipeline. Only the NDP at that time opposed such a course of action, this selling out of our energy resources in northern Canada, this total failure to consult the native people, this total lack of concern for environmental considerations.

Then we come to 1972 and the general election of that year. In 1972, out of the blue it was announced that the government intended to build a Mackenzie Highway, the purpose of which was asserted to be the opening up of the Mackenzie Valley and the provision of support for the construction of a pipeline. It soon became evident that once again environmental research had been conducted into this proposal either internally or through external sources and that no native communities affected by such a proposal had been consulted; they had been excluded from any consideration by the government in relation to such a proposal. Moreover, the government steadfastly refused to accept that the building of a pipeline would prejudice native land claims. Rather, the administration maintained its continentalist policy of selling off Canadian energy resources to the United States. This was in the context of the 1972 election campaign. The government was already locking itself into an Arctic Gas type of proposal.

However, the election results were not exactly what the government desired. A minority government was formed and the opposition of the NDP to the whole drift of the Liberals totally thoughtless, totally aimless energy policy brought the cabinet temporarily to its senses. Seeing it could not proceed with its Mackenzie Valley project involving the selling out of Canadian energy, the ignoring of native rights and disregard for the environment while still surviving as a government, it appointed the royal commission headed by Mr. Justice Berger. It is no coincidence, I emphasize, that there was a minority government at that time, with the NDP as the crucial variable.

The subsequent history is well known. Because of Mr. Justice Berger's accomplishments, the right of public participation in the work of royal commissions has been solidly established, native peoples in the Mackenzie Valley will have time in which to get their claims settled and an opportunity to shape their economic future. The Arctic Gas proposal was dead—or at least I thought so until a few minutes ago when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) got to his feet. Last but not least, during the course of Mr. Justice Berger's inquiry, the Alcan proposal was born. I should add that without the important precedent set by Mr. Justice Berger it is almost certain that the National Energy Board would not have brought in the recommendation that it did, nor would inquiries have been launched into the impact of an Alcan pipeline on affected communities.

The point I wish to make is this: in addressing ourselves to the Alcan proposal—and I am still assuming that even this government will not make a decision in favour of the Mackenzie route in face of the overwhelming evidence—we must recognize what has been done already for the country by Mr. Justice Berger's inquiry and keep its important implications in mind. We must remember that the issue in building a pipeline is much broader than that of the materials and labour involved, important as such considerations are. What is at stake is the entire question of the way in which we choose to treat our northland and those who live in it. We have learned that the future of the north depends to a large extent on what happens during the next decade. That became very clear to anyone reading Justice Berger's report. We need time to allow the indigenous native peoples to prepare themselves for entry into the wage economy; there can be no doubt about that.

Mr. MacEachen: In saying that, you distress me.

Mr. Broadbent: Perhaps the minister will re-enter the debate and actually say something next time. I would welcome that. The point I want to make is that in saying this we are not turning back the clock or recommending that that be done. We are saying that as a nation we must take a longer historical perspective and that to wreak irretrievable social, economic and environmental damage in any part of our north simply for short-run purposes would be a decision for which future Canadians would condemn us.

All of this, I stress, must be kept in mind in assessing the Alcan proposal. All of this, I stress, came out of the Berger proposal. During that inquiry it became clear for the first time, as I have said, that a route via the Alaska Highway could have considerably reduced social and environmental consequences compared with a pipeline up the Mackenzie Valley to the Delta. Accordingly, Justice Berger heard much environmental evidence on precisely this route. Following these hearings with care, the New Democratic Party soon supported in principle the idea of this route as being essential for future study. My colleague, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), submitted a brief on behalf of our party to the Berger inquiry over a year ago making precisely this point.

Subsequently, Mr. Speaker, the Alcan proposal itself was officially made by the financial groups who were interested in it. This was followed by the Lysyk inquiry and Dr. Hill's study. They have now verified that such a pipeline can be built with an acceptable degree of negative social impact. However, the important question we now face is whether the pipeline will be built within that acceptable degree of negative impact. For this reason, we must not be pushed or rushed into any hasty construction; and for this reason, also, the crucial recommendations of the Hill and Lysyk inquiries must be accepted and implemented as soon as possible by this government.

I want to make some very specific suggestions with reference to this acceptance in principle. First, we recommend that a delay of at least four years be accepted—and I underline "at least four years". In practice, this means a delay of only about a year beyond the time schedule proposed by the Alcan people themselves, a delay which will likely be taken up with unexpected preconstruction activities anyway, according to the most recent and systematic reports which have been submitted to President Carter in the United States. It is important that we take this time to ensure fair treatment for the Yukon Indians and that we should keep in mind that the delay might in fact slightly exceed the four-year limitation. That is why we want to underline, in face of what the government might decide to do, the need for a minimum four-year period.

In terms of the very legitimate interests and concerns of our American neighbours, it is clear from other reports submitted to President Carter that the United States has at least until the late 1980s before Alaskan gas is needed in that country. This gives our American friends additional time to wait for us to do the right thing in Canada in terms of our energy needs, our environmental requirements and the rights of our native people.

The second matter that I want to stress is the need for over-all control of the project. It is clear that additional research must be conducted into the detailed social and environmental consequences of the project, so that appropriate mitigative and preventive measures can be taken. Without this control, the report tells us that the degree of adverse impact on the people of the Yukon would probably be unacceptable. It is, therefore, incumbent upon the government, in the event that it approves, as we hope it will, an Alcan pipeline, to ensure proper control of this project is exercised, beginning immediately, through such a controlling body.

The third question concerns compensation. The National Energy Board recommended the payment of up to $200 million by the company to compensate for social damage suffered by Yukoners. Dean Lysyk has amended this proposal slightly into a definite $200 million for the creation of a Yukon heritage fund. This seems a sensible proposal to us, as it is clear that some form of general compensation is entirely due. Evidence before the Lysyk inquiry concerning the building of the Alaskan oil pipeline, which would have similar impact to the building of the Alcan gas pipeline, showed that during construction of the oil pipeline nearly half the population of wage earners suffered a loss in real income. That, Mr. Speaker, to the people who live in that part of Canada is a supremely important fact.

In learning from this experience, Mr. Speaker, we must also see to it that steps are taken to ensure that the residents of the Yukon—and I stress, also, the residents of northern British Columbia, an area through which a great part of the pipeline will pass—are not subjected to astronomical increases in inflation. I think in particular of food, housing and utility costs, and I will say something specific about that in an amendment.

The fourth area of concern that I want to stress is that an advance payment of $50 million be given to the Yukon Indians at once so that they may start immediately to establish the new institutions they plan following their land claims settlement. We think this is a good proposal and that it is in the interests of all parties in the north and in the south that it be acted upon immediately.

A few words about the employment consequences of the Alcan route. There will be some important advantages to Canada in building this pipeline, in terms of job-creation. With proper control, the Canadian economy will receive some stimulus in supplying steel. I think immediately of families in Welland, Sault Ste. Marie and Regina which are dependent upon the steel industry, particularly the steel pipeline industry. They will get tangible benefits from this decision. Northerners, of course, will have increased employment opportunities. That, too, goes without saying. What I am saying, on behalf of my colleagues, is that through federal government action we must ensure that the probability of increased jobs in the steel towns of the south and increased employment for northerners on the spot become not just a probability but a certainty.

Another advantage of the Alcan proposal is that although it is clearly premature to say that a link with the Mackenzie Delta via the Dempster Highway would be acceptable on the basis of the known evidence, the Alcan proposal does at least offer the potential for such a link in the future when we might require it. Most of all, Mr. Speaker, the Alcan proposal gives the people of Canada time—time to develop a more comprehensive energy policy, and time to consider a balanced and long-term approach to northern development. It has been the absence of a coherent national energy policy that has led to the demands of many for frontier gas at once, in the fear that we were imminently running out of supplies. That has been particularly felt throughout southern Canada. It has been the absence of a coherent strategy for future northern development that has led many people in the north, not just in Inuvik but other communities, to seek pipeline construction as their only salvation. Both of these hastily drawn conclusions are wrong.

The point is, as the Hill and the Lysyk reports make clear, their principal recommendations do not lock us in if we accept them in terms of other possibilities. They give us time to plan, not only for the north but time to plan for a comprehensive policy which is totally lacking at the national level at this time.

I listened with agreement in almost every detail to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) in terms of his proposals about the need for a national energy policy and his criticism of the total absence of one coming from the present cabinet. We need a policy which will seriously deal with energy conservation. The approach of the federal government to this is laughable. The minister knows that a report on the leading industrial countries which was published in the last year shows that Canada and the United States have the worst record in terms of energy conservation policies.

It is a shame that such a policy exists and should be passed off as being credible in the real world. A national policy of some depth would give emphasis to developing alternative energy resources. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has spoken a number of times on what should constitute such an approach. Such a policy should ensure a fair distribution of the consumer burden on higher energy costs, which is totally absent at this point in the national policy. A comprehensive policy should ensure that increased corporate returns, which are now going out in the hundreds of millions of dollars, be directed to the development of additional domestic oil and gas resources for Canadians as a condition for their being maintained. It is a scandal that hundreds of millions of Canadian dollars should be going out to multinational oil companies with no requirement that those funds be reinvested for development in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: With specific reference to the Alcan proposal, which I have indicated we support in principle, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and after considering the evidence and reports of the relevant inquiries, this House approves the granting of a certificate for a pipeline through the southern Yukon as recommended in principle by the National Energy Board and the Lysyk and Hill inquiries, with particular reference to the following conditions:

(1) That an Alcan pipeline authority be established immediately comprised of representatives of the native communities, labour, small business, consumers and conservationists from the affected pipeline corridor and from the federal, provincial and territorial governments, and that this authority be empowered to manage the regional impact of pipeline construction especially with respect to employment practices, and food, housing and utility prices as well as assuming the other responsibilities recommended by the above inquiries;

(2) That a "Canada first" priority be enforced in hiring, contracting and supplying the pipeline with particular preference to local residents of the Yukon, British Columbia and Alberta in the vicinity of the pipeline route;

(3) That no pipeline construction precede a fair settlement of the affected native land claims; and

(4) That no pipeline construction commence before August 1981, and that the interval be used to inquire further into the local impact of pipeline construction, to determine final route selection, and to control project planning; and furthermore that exports of Canadian natural gas licensed for delivery to the United States after 1985 be considered as credits to be redeemed from the United States on an equivalent BTU basis."

The amendment concerning gas exports after 1985 would save Canadians roughly 4.1 trillion cubic feet of gas, but would cut off that amount from the United States markets which need it. It would merely require that it be repaid at some future date, at a time when the Americans have an adequate supply to do so, an adequate supply established by the pipeline itself. If we are concerned about Canadian interests in the pipeline, surely this should be a paramount consideration. It is consistent with our already established policy of phasing out oil exports. It gives the United States considerable notice and, most importantly, it will add considerably to Canadian energy supplies after 1985 and hence to the flexibility we need for meeting our future energy needs. This action should be undertaken by this government whether or not we approve a northern pipeline.

In accepting this course of action which we have proposed this afternoon, we believe Canadians will have an opportunity to rethink our policies on northern development and establish an over-all national energy policy. It will be a chance to step back. It will be an opportunity for some breathing time. We in the New Democratic Party are proud to have been an integral part of this process. The onus is now clearly with the government to seize this opportunity to do future good for the country and, in particular, for the future well-being of the north and its people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. There has been an amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). The hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether you propose to put the amendment or whether you propose to declare it out of order immediately, as I believe it should be. If you have any intention of putting the motion, I should like to argue against its regularity so that we would have an opportunity to prevent—

An hon. Member: It has some substance.

Mr. MacEachen: —this amendment from defacing the order paper.

● (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. That is about what the Chair was going to say. Since this is a long and complicated amendment, perhaps the hon. member would permit me to take it under consideration as to its procedural acceptability and without prejudice to the debate. We can hear arguments later on this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to take part in the debate because I believe this is a basic issue which must be analysed so that a realistic decision can be taken in the interest of the nation that we represent in this House. We know that Mr. Justice Berger has suggested that the Canadian government place a ten year moratorium on the construction of any pipeline in the Mackenzie area. However, since the recommendation made in the Berger report, major changes have been brought to the Foothills pipeline project. Whether these changes were postponed voluntarily or not, it remains that the National Energy Board believes that this moratorium is not necessary for the Alcan route since it has agreed to it.

This ten year moratorium would enable the natives of the Northwest Territories to establish more freely their claims and to negotiate without any pressure, as was the case for the Inuit of James Bay. This would also enable Canada to improve its natural gas transportation technology and eventually find other more ecologically safe answers, both for transportation and for our real needs and energy requirements. The National Energy Board has also made an investigation in this regard and its conclusion was approximately the same as that of the Berger study. The National Energy Board also believes a pipeline through the Mackenzie Valley would be disastrous from all aspects. I am in total agreement with this point. The National Energy Board was, however, given its agreement to the Alcan proposal. The Alaska Highway Pipelines distribution system will receive natural gas from Prudhoe Bay in Alaska and will deliver it to the United States.

This proposal was made to meet the most urgent needs while allowing for a better transportation policy for northern Canada supplies to be developed. Therefore, the Alcan route is the most adequate in the present situation and I can only support it, even though I have a few reservations. While all industrialized countries are beginning to show concern about the accumulated deterioration of their natural environment, we ourselves continue to exhaust our resources for short term economic reasons and we continue to shatter the harmony between man and his environment.

Mr. Justice Berger showed clearly in his report to what extent the natural balance in the northwest is precarious. I understand that footprints and tire imprints can take up to ten years before disappearing. What will the prints made by 7,000 men, 50,000 vehicles, and so on leave us? Already, in certain areas of the Arctic, the Inuit are catching oil-covered seals, not to mention the animals that will no longer be proper for human consumption, the threatened species, and the risks of irreversible pollution which are more than possible; they are obvious. I think that Mr. Justice Berger's proposal to set up a sanctuary for some species is a necessity if we want to preserve them as well as their habitats. In addition to all the anticipated ecological deteriorations, another matter of concern arose in the minds of the people of the Yukon. Recently, a pump station of the Trans-Alaska oil pipeline exploded. It is only one accident among so many others that the government must anticipate. So steps will have to be taken to prevent this kind of accident from occurring, and in view of the possibility that always exists we will have to come up with top safety systems. One only has to remember how many times this kind of accident happened either at sea or on land. On land leaks and explosions are more harmful, and recuperation is difficult on land. In a few years we will probably start thinking about dressing the wounds that we will have opened in those yet virgin habitats.

It is certainly necessary to develop a minimum of our natural resources but does our export of natural gas to the United States justify that rush for gas dollars? All those who studied the Berger report agree on one point: the construction of pipelines in the north could have alarming effects on the environment and the animal species, man included. In the balance of Canada's future improvement, is the environmental loss worth the economic gain? Because this is indeed an economic need. The government's commitments to export natural gas represents about 40 per cent of our total annual production. Our consumption of natural gas represents about 80 per cent of our total energy consumption, and it was proven to every conscious mind that our need for natural gas can easily be reduced, and it is quite inevitable that in a relatively near future we will have to make room for renewable energy.

Natural gas is used mainly for heating and several qualified scientists say that in this area of consumption several types of renewable energy can be used. If one looks at the statistics of government grants for energy research and development one readily realizes that for this government renewable energy is not an urgent imperative. In 1976-77, less than 4 per cent of the amount allotted for energy research and development went to renewable resources. The government suffers from tunnel vision when looking at the future and that is why no figure is put on the commercial nature of natural gas.

The current energy crisis will come to an end only when governments realize that renewable energy is the solution we shall finally have to accept. If the reason for this technological dealy is economic in nature, this is only one more evidence of the incompetence of our political magnates. The most important factor in any project which is in the common good, as the building of this pipeline is supposed to be, is the human factor itself. Well, the human aspect in the regions which will be affected by the building of a pipeline will be subjected to heavy pressure due to the fact that a large portion of the population there is made up of Indians. As a matter of fact, it will not be possible to extract one single cubic centimeter of natural gas within Indian territories without damaging an environment which is, in most cases, their only source of income. Moreover, it is also their only reason to live.

Once more this would mean taking control over significant parts of their lands. And whatever the aspect of future negotiations, the result will probably be as usual that the government will assume resource development rights, and the native people will lose access to certain lands in consideration of the settlement of their claims to land they were already owning in any case, monetary compensation. As long as the native people will live on resource-rich lands, they will be up against the big capitalistic machine, and even if there are democratic negotiations, they will end up socialized, with compensatory goods that are foreign to their natural culture.

One point made by corporations competing for the relevant pipeline was that of benefits to native people. There is reference to 4,000 direct and indirect jobs. There is reference to reduced unemployment and minimized welfare reliance. There is also reference to the jobs native people ask for. In fact some do, but others do not. I suggest no one here can state in conscience whether they want those jobs or not, or even whether those jobs will be created. Mr. Justice Berger had this to say in his report:

> There is abundant reason to doubt that a pipeline would provide meaningful and ongoing employment to many native people. The pipeline contractors and unions have made it plain that native northerners are not qualified to hold down skilled positions in pipeline construction, and that they will be employed largely in unskilled and semi-skilled jobs. Once the pipeline is built, only about 250 people will be needed to operate it. Most of these jobs are of a technical nature and will have to be filled by qualified personnel from the south.

As I said, suggested benefits to native people are short-term benefits. This in no way resolves that particular problem, nor the language and race problems that are bound to crop up. Seven different dialects are currently spoken in these lands. And I would call on those who know what happened in the early 70's on the Quebec north shore and Labrador to remember the discrimination against native employment. Natives were tied to menial tasks, without any access to better working conditions to which every Canadian is entitled.

Experience has shown me that most native people looking for paid work wanted to earn enough money to buy the tools which they need to continue to lead their own way of living. The Inuit more particularly are proud people who want to assert their independence and self-determination. They have clearly shown it on several occasions, especially at James Bay. I do not think that menial work is conducive to the independence of an ethnic group. In addition, if the native people want better paid and more qualified jobs, they will have to learn to speak our language and get some education. This could eventually mean their assimilation by new needs rather than the improvement of their human and social condition. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to insist on the fact that the construction of a pipeline in northern Canada could jeopardize a unique habitat in Canada and our native people. For those reasons, I wish to state my systematic objection to the Arctic Gas pipeline route.

One must chose the lesser of two evils, and as the Foothills Pipe Lines project will allow us to arrive at a better Canadian gas transportation policy for the future, I support it, conditional upon the following, however: That the government see to it that the Americans do not reap all the benefits of the undertaking by letting us shoulder all ecological damages; that the government negotiate with our natives with every consideration they are entitled to as original owners of the territories concerned; that it allow them to assert themselves without imposing upon them a way of life to which they were not born and, as our needs for natural gas are very relative, without imposing any temporal constraints upon them as has been the case with the James Bay Inuit with regard to negotiations; that the government see to it, without any further delay, that all forms of energy capable of replacing more wisely and progressively the consumption of natural gas be considered with a view to meeting social and conservation requirements before political and economic needs; that the government give more importance than it does now to the long term factor so that the energy and ecology situation does not find itself again in a bind in the future; and finally, that the government put off the construction of pipelines in virgin areas of the northwest until such time as all means have been developed to protect the environment, and negotiations with our native people have led to equitable conclusions.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, for some years now this government, members of this House, and people across Canada have been concerned with the question of pipelines through Canada's north to bring gas to southern markets. Prompted by the tremendous pressure for additional gas in the United States now and the possibility of future increased Canadian demand, the investigation of and discussion on northern pipelines have been extensive and sometimes exhaustive. But now is the time for a decision.

Members of this House have before them the results of the Berger inquiry into the Mackenzie Valley pipeline proposal, the National Energy Board report on the whole northern pipeline issue, the report of the environmental assessment panel on the Alaska highway proposal, Dr. Hill's report, and finally, the Lysyk report on the potential socio-economic impact of the Alaska highway pipeline. In the course of all these inquiries and studies the people of Canada were consulted extensively, and this is particularly true of those living in areas most likely to be affected by any pipeline.

I can honestly say that few issues in Canadian history have received as much attention and debate. This is a reflection of the importance which Canadians place on this issue, and it is also a reflection of the lengths to which the government has gone in order to ensure that, when the time comes for decisions, those decisions can be made rationally and based upon the best available information.

The inquiries that have taken place during the past three years have added a great deal to our previous knowledge of the north, its people, and the impact of possible pipelines along several proposed routes. Let us consider the facts. I believe everyone in this Chamber recognizes that northern Canada is a unique part of this country and that part of that uniqueness stems from its fragile and in many ways very special environment. For many years federal departments, including the Department of Fisheries and the Environment, have conducted major comprehensive programs of investigation and research centred on special northern characteristics, the effects of its vigorous climate, its special soil conditions, its unique wildlife, and how these relate to the culture, lifestyle and aspirations of those native to the north.

All of these examinations, both regular programs and special inquiries, had one objective in common—better protection of the north and better management of its natural resources. But to protect and to manage properly, we must have a basic understanding of such diverse subjects as geology, vegetation, lakes, rivers and streams, wildlife, fish and sea mammals. Gaining this understanding has not been easy—northern areas are vast and funds are not unlimited. Still, we have accomplished and learned a great deal. Canadian knowledge of our northern frontier is as good or better than that of any other nation with large northern areas.

In our search for basic knowledge we discovered that the north held significant mineral and petroleum resources. By the 1960's significant petroleum resources had been identified in the Arctic coastal waters and Arctic islands. This was an interesting discovery but one that did not assume major importance until the western nations realized that they had a problem of energy supply. It was then, in the late 1960's, that interest in the development of northern petroleum resources began to surface.

In December, 1968, the government set up a task force on northern oil development and from this arose the special environmental social program—a program designed to uncover the possible impact of a northern pipeline.

The specific aim of that program was to gain the knowledge necessary for the protection of the northern environment and the social and cultural life of those native to the north. Even then it was realized that there had to be a balance between development and the protection of the human and physical environment of the north.

The geographic scope of the program was very broad, covering the entire Mackenzie Valley region north of the 60th parallel, the sensitive northern Yukon slope to the Alaska border and southward in Yukon to include the Old Crow flats.

Without belabouring the point, I want to say that the knowledge we have gained from this program—contained in 270 separate research reports—has been invaluable both to the government and to all of the inquiries that have looked into the question of northern pipelines. The program also led to the tabling in this House on June 28, 1972, of the Expanded Guidelines for Northern Pipelines. The guidelines served to spell out the kinds of information required when a pipeline company applies for a land use permit under the Territorial Lands Act, administered by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand).

Other mechanisms have also been set up to ensure proper development in the north. The environmental assessment and review process, established by cabinet in 1973, requires a detailed and comprehensive assessment of the potential environmental impact of any project involving federal lands or federal money or sponsored by a federal department. The Environmental Assessment Panel, established to examine the possible impact of the proposed Alaska highway pipeline, submitted an interim report to my minister only a day or so ago.

Another important feature of our efforts to minimize social and environmental disruption in the north is the support of this government for the corridor concept. What this means is that we try to minimize or lessen the impact of development by channelling it into one corridor. To fail to do so would simply mean random development with widespread impact in many areas. I do not think we can afford that. It is imperative, I think, that when we consider pipeline routes, we also consider associated developments. These other facilities must, of course, be examined on their own merits as well. As one of the witnesses before the recent hearings of the Environmental Assessment Panel in Whitehorse put it, we, as a country and as a people, cannot afford wholesale environmental destruction by insignificant increments.

In its support of this concept the government has initiated a number of other programs which have been accelerated to meet the challenge of constantly changing contexts. We are looking at the possible impacts of a pipeline on the high Arctic. Efforts have been made to accelerate the gathering of baseline data in southern Yukon, and we have joined with industry in research on the Beaufort Sea. The end product of all these ventures, whether strictly federal or carried out in co-operation with industry, will be increased understanding of what is acceptable development in Canada's north and where in the north that development should take place.

To this point I have spoken about the environmental and social criteria which the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) believes must be applied in making a decision on northern pipelines. There are, of course, many other factors to be considered which I am sure will surface, or have already done so, during this debate.

However, I do want to emphasize that the government has been preparing for this decision for some time. The Department of Fisheries and the Environment, both alone and in co-operation with others, has been studying the potential impact of northern pipelines for several years now, and more knowledge is being gathered every day.

I would like to turn now to the individual proposals for northern pipelines and mention some of the potential environmental effects of each.

The government is required to make two decisions very shortly. First, it must decide whether or not to permit the construction of a gas pipeline in the western Arctic. Second, if a pipeline is allowed, the government must decide through which corridor it should pass.

Essentially there are two proposals before the government. The first is a proposal by Canada Arctic Gas Pipeline Limited to construct a buried gas pipeline through northern Yukon and down the Mackenzie Valley carrying both Alaskan and Canadian gas.

Second, there is a proposal by Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon) Limited to construct a buried gas line along the Alaska highway in the southern Yukon passing through B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan, where it would join existing pipeline facilities. The latter pipeline is intended to carry only Alaskan gas, although Canadian gas could be transported by constructing a lateral line following the Dempster Highway, if such a link were found to be environmentally and socially acceptable.

Another proposal, the Foothills Mapleleaf Line down the Mackenzie Valley, has been withdrawn at the request of the company.

Finally, we must remember the El Paso proposal to carry gas across Alaska and then by tanker to southern markets. While this proposal is obviously not the subject of an application to the Government of Canada, it may have a bearing on our decision.

All of the Canadian proposals have been the subjects of one or more public inquiries as well as extensive scientific evaluations. The National Energy Board has reported on the three major Canadian proposals. The Berger inquiry has published the first volume of its examination of the Arctic Gas and Foothills Mapleleaf proposals. The Environmental Assessment Panel has completed its report on the Alaska Highway proposal, as has the Lysyk inquiry. I do not intend to pass judgment on the findings of these inquiries today, but these investigations, combined with a great deal of research by the government, have identified the primary environmental concerns associated with each proposal.

Let me deal first with the potential effects of the El Paso proposal. While the direct environmental effect on Canada of a gas pipeline across Alaska would be relatively small, the same cannot be said of the necessary port installation on Prince William Sound. That installation would pose certain threats to fisheries resources which may be of more than local importance.

The tankers carrying chilled gas are not a serious threat in themselves. The possibility exists, however, that increased traffic along the coast increases the possibility of collision with coastal oil tankers travelling to and from Valdez. The results of such a collision could be devastating to coastal and marine life in Canada. Major concerns about the El Paso proposal, therefore, result not from the pipeline itself but from the necessary ancillary facilities and concurrent transportation methods.

The Arctic Gas and Foothills proposals have much more direct environmental impacts on Canada's north. A pipeline along the northern Yukon coast, across the Mackenzie Delta and down the Mackenzie Valley has a very high potential for environmental disruption.

The Delta and northern Yukon are vital breeding areas for many species of animals, birds and sea mammals. There are no alternative breeding grounds which could support these populations to the same degree. Populations of birds that range all across North America, whales that roam much of the Arctic and north Pacific, as well as one of the last surviving large herds of caribou could be permanently reduced.

In addition, heavy construction work necessary for the building of any pipeline could disrupt the biological productivity of the Delta, coastal plain and inshore waters. Such a disruption would have a severely negative effect on the wildlife on the entire continent and on the oceans, even in areas far from the pipeline itself.

Further down the proposed Arctic Gas line, in the Mackenzie Valley itself, environmental problems tend to be more of a geotechnical or engineering nature. Finding stable ground—stable enough to ensure pipeline integrity—is just such a problem. The problem is particularly acute in areas of discontinuous permafrost where either chilling the gas or warming it could cause frost heave or excessive settling of the pipe. There are also problems associated with ancillary structures such as excessive noise from compressor stations, the construction of access roads and others. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we continue with the debate I should indicate that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), the decision on which had been reserved by the Chair, raises some special concerns from the procedural point of view. The amendment would, it seems to me, change substantially the motion now before the House. I believe strong representations were made that, when this matter was to be brought on for debate, no position would be put forward in the motion and that any decision would be consequential upon the discussions which would take place during these two days. The amendment put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby does exactly that: it takes the general nature of the motion before the House and transforms it into a course of action which, to me, is a substantial deviation from the intent of the motion.

Further, the amendment introduces propositions which seem to me entirely independent of the basic motion, and therefore on procedural grounds I think the amendment is in great difficulty. However, I would want to listen in the normal way to arguments in support of the amendment on procedural grounds, and to arguments against it. Then I will examine the matter and make a ruling.

In other circumstances I would insist on this being done at this moment. However, we are now embarked in a limited debate on a matter of wide interest and importance and it would be unfair to hon. members to take time from that limited allotment to argue these procedural points. I am concerned in case I might set a precedent by leaving a procedural question of this importance and significance outstanding during two days; I think it ought not to be taken as a precedent for future reference because of the extraordinary nature of this particular discussion.

If there is any indication that this matter may come to a vote today or tomorrow, the matter will have to be settled before any vote can take place.

Third, I am concerned about what might happen if any other amendment were to be put forward. Any member putting forward another amendment would be prejudiced by the fact that there is this amendment in the hands of the Chair, and this amendment, as I said before, seems to be in great procedural difficulty, subject of course to any arguments which may be presented.

In an effort to do justice to all these important considerations, I am prepared to defer consideration on procedural grounds of this amendment for two days, provided that we do not face the difficulties I just mentioned, that is to say, provided we are not confronted with another amendment; for if we are confronted with another amendment, which we would have to turn to one side because we have one amendment in our hands already, or if we are confronted with the possibility of a vote, obviously, this procedural matter will have to be settled. But as long as neither of those events takes place I would be prepared to defer argument and decision on the procedural aspects of the motion for two days, and beyond the two days, in order to maximize the opportunity for members of the House to participate in this important discussion.

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when I left off at six o'clock I was outlining some of the difficulties to be reckoned with in pipeline operations such as discontinuous permafrost, the provision of suitable access roads, and so on. However, on a comparative level, the potential environmental problems likely to be encountered on the Alaska or Klondike highways are generally less severe than those on the Mackenzie Valley line. Both of these possible alternatives use existing corridors. The areas through which these routes pass are less critical to the survival of major migratory species, and the region is less biologically productive at the peak breeding season.

Certainly there are difficulties associated with the Alaska Highway route, especially in the first 150 miles. Here there are specific areas containing unique and endangered species. There is a higher risk of major or minor earthquakes here than along the Klondike diversion proposed by the National Energy Board. There is also the hazard of discontinuous permafrost and ice rich soils in this portion of the proposed line. It appears, however, that most of these obstacles can be minimized through effective engineering or by changing the route so as to avoid specific problem areas.

A number of other challenges present themselves. There could be local damage to forests and other plant life. Revegetation in the Yukon is a very slow process. The aesthetic value of the land might be harmed, particularly in the northern section of the Alaska Highway. The access provided by right of ways and compressor station service roads might open areas to larger numbers of people and this could be a definite threat to wildlife and fisheries resources. And in the case of the possible Dempster lateral, both the highway and the pipeline would cross the migratory path of the Porcupine caribou herd. This latter aspect is of special concern to the Department of Fisheries and the Environment.

On the whole, however, the potential environmental problems on the Alaska Highway or Klondike routes do seem more predictable than those likely to be encountered on the Mackenzie Valley route, and because they are more predictable, environmental protection measures can be more easily and more effectively devised.

The possibility still exists, however, that Canada may need the resources offered by the Mackenzie Delta and Beaufort Sea. The exploitation of those resources will, in itself, bring significant environmental problems. The Department of Fisheries and the Environment has anticipated this and has begun a technology development program to help us deal with potential problems associated with on-shore collection and processing and off-shore exploitation operations. The program is being carried out over a five-year period.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, a great deal of evidence has been collected in the last few years in anticipation of the construction of northern pipelines.

Mr. Nielsen: Not by the government.

Mr. Fleming: If the hon. member were here this afternoon when I delivered the first part of my speech he would not have said what he has just said. I share the minister's pleasure that the Department of Fisheries and the Environment has been able to help the various inquiries and the public by supplying as much information as possible.

At the same time, I, like other members of the House, am aware that there is a wide diversity of opinion on the need for a northern pipeline, the route it should take, how it can best be controlled and how subsequent or consequent development can be handled. That was the reason the government commissioned the several enquiries, and that is why we are here today.

The building of a pipeline involves not only the environment but important economic issues as well. Let me assure you, on behalf of my minister, that the Department of Fisheries and the Environment does strive for a sense of perspective and reasonable pragmatism in environmental issues. It is a fact that if a pipeline is built, some degree of environmental disruption is inevitable. For this there is a cost that has to be paid—now or in the future. But the cost can be quite high or relatively low depending on a number of factors. I believe those factors must be taken into account in moving toward a decision.

The only basis for sound environmental protection is sound environmental information. Though we know a great deal about many of the problems associated with the construction of northern pipelines, we will have to know a great deal more. If we know enough, if we take environmental factors into account during the decision-making, and if we relate those factors to final design and mitigative measures, we can reduce environmental costs to acceptable limits.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate as probably the only impartial member of the House of Commons with respect to the subject matter we are discussing. No one could be less concerned than I about regional interests when discussing the routes of the proposed pipeline—I speak on the assumption that a decision will be taken to construct the pipeline.

Before dealing with the remarks of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) I think it is worth while putting on the record an assurance I was very glad to see in the light of the assertion made by the leader of my party. I refer to a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on July 28 at a press conference with respect to the ultimate method of disposing of the pipeline question, and I read from page 12 of the transcript of the press conference on that date. As part of his answer the Prime Minister said:

> The only thing I think I can safely say is that because of the multiplicity of these reports and because of the variety of concerns which have to do not only with energy and its transportation but with the financial implications, its job creation implications, with the rights of the native peoples in the North, and with the environment—they have to deal obviously with the problem of foreign affairs in relation to the United States—because of this complexity it is inevitable that if we do build a pipeline, it will have to be by legislation. In other words, we will have to come to parliament with a law saying that A, we are building the pipeline and, B, this is the route, and, C, this is what we will do with respect to financing and, D, there are the measures we are taking for the environment and E, this is the kind of contract we are making with the United States. I am just making the point that it would be a very complex series of decisions which I think would be best debated by parliament and therefore would be placed in the form of legislation, if we decide to build a pipeline.

That is the first definitive and positive statement which has appeared with respect to this subject matter finding its ultimate form by way of legislation before this House. So once a decision is made—and it is anticipated one will be made next week, possibly next Monday—we look forward to the honouring of that commitment by the Prime Minister to see that there is a debate here before a pipeline is built.

Having sat here as long as I have, I was disappointed to see the Prime Minister leave the Chamber before the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had completed his comments and before the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the spokesman for the Social Credit Party had delivered theirs. It was a hollow comment on the assurance given to us by the President of the Privy Council that the views of parliamentarians in this, to my mind, rather useless and meaningless debate, will be taken into account. The hon. gentleman said they would be given careful consideration, but I know the Prime Minister does not waste his time reading the comments of the leader of the NDP or of the spokesman for the Social Credit Party. However, his attitude serves to draw attention to the flaccid place this Chamber has become under the present government. Oh, there is nothing personal intended as far as the leader of the NDP is concerned. His speech was one of the more coherent I have heard him make in all the years I have been here.

Mr. Broadbent: Good to have you back!

Mr. Nielsen: The President of the Privy Council spoke about the measures successive governments have taken to encourage northern development. I can only recall the days when such imaginative leadership was shown by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the then minister of northern affairs, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). They envisioned opening up the north to the development of its resources and embarked upon an imaginative program of building roads, bridges and other means of communication. I recall the words of the next prime minister of that day charging us with spending money like drunken sailors. He charged us with building roads from igloo to igloo in the north. The government of that day made a fair number of yards in southern Canada with that kind of accusation, yet one of the roads, indeed the specific road criticized by the Liberal prime minister of that day as being from igloo to igloo, was the self same Dempster highway that we are discussing in this debate today.

● (2020)

This was a road which was commenced in 1958, 80 miles of which were constructed by 1963 when the government changed. Immediately construction of the road ceased. It was the philosophy of the government of that day that there were oil reserves in the north which would benefit Canadians. That was the philosophy behind the commencement of the construction of that particular road. We were charged with wasting money, so construction of that road was halted in 1963. After the discovery of oil in Prudhoe Bay the government belatedly recommenced construction of the road and now, all of a sudden, it has become one of the most important links in the route to the Arctic which, I am certain, will eventually tap Canadian reserves of gas and oil in the Arctic.

We are speaking not only of gas in the Delta but of oil in the Yukon, oil in the Yukon, oil in the Eagle plain and in the Peel plateau. I do not know whether the President of the Privy Council has any idea where these places are; I doubt very much whether he has ever been to the north. I would invite him to the north, as I would invite the hon. gentleman who is now his colleague who is seated beside him. Let him come to the Yukon and have a look. I know the hon. gentleman has been to Inuvik. Now being a member of the cabinet he is obviously expressing the view of the government when he says that there must be a pipeline. That was the statement he made. Whether he meant that there should be a pipeline along the Mackenzie to attract the political allegiance of the citizens of Inuvik is something else again.

I would invite the President of the Privy Council to come and wander with me through my constituency at something less than 4,000 feet above the Dempster highway, as his colleague to his left did when he made the observation, "I can't see anything wrong with this route for a pipeline".

Mr. Gillespie: You are exaggerating again.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps it was 3,500 feet, I do not know. In any event, it was too high to get an on the ground look at what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. Fleming) was talking about, of which he knows nothing when he speaks of permafrost, the flora and fauna and the ecological problems of the Yukon.

Mr. Gillespie: The "Flora" is all on your side of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: As a Yukoner and as a northerner I appreciate the good intentions of you southerners, but you do not know the north because you do not come to the north. The first prime minister in Canada's history who visited above the 60th parallel was the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, and he did not stop at Whitehorse as Prime Minister Trudeau did, and who has yet to come back. We are all waiting for the second coming, Mr. Speaker.

When the right hon. member for Prince Albert was prime minister he travelled the Yukon. He went to Dawson City, to Mayo, to Haines Junction. So did the Leader of the Opposition and so did his predecessor. They did not stop in the urban community of Whitehorse; they listened and found out about things. I am afraid that this government is sadly lacking in its knowledge of the north because it simply does not go up there.

I was really intrigued by the "knowledgeable expressions"—question mark—of the President of the Privy Council when he joined in the debate. The only reason I can attribute to his leading off the debate rather than the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), who is the minister responsible here, is that he wants to wind up the debate. I hope that the juggling of time will allow that, though he might find himself in a pinch, as is often the case in the House. As my colleague comments, he can always do another flyover.

The only comment I can make about the minister's interjection in the speech of the Leader of the Opposition, when he asked whether the Leader of the Opposition had dismissed the CAGPL proposal, is that it was either a very facetious question or a very inane question. The minister shakes his head: it was not facetious so it must have been inane. I cannot understand how the minister can ask whether the CAGPL proposal has been dismissed by the Leader of the Opposition unless the government is still considering it; and I cannot credit that conclusion because it would mean that the government is considering an application made by an applicant which had already withdrawn the application it had made. Again the minister shakes his head. We must all be misinformed; I thought it was common knowledge that Arctic Gas had withdrawn its application.

Mr. Gillespie: You must come down here more often.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister says I must come down here more often, Mr. Speaker, but if he was plagued in his constituency with the administrative tribunals with which I am plagued in my constituency as a result of federal intervention in our affairs in the Yukon, then he would never be here. For the last three months I have at least been where the action is—where Mr. Lysyk has been holding his inquiry—and I have not seen any other members of parliament appearing around that inquiry in the Yukon.

Mr. Gillespie: I never saw you there either.

Mr. Nielsen: The reason the minister did not see me there is that he was busy speaking to the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Gillespie: And to Mr. Lysyk.

Mr. Nielsen: However, Mr. Speaker, I reserve my kindest remarks for the leader of the NDP.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. leader's remark may be a little premature. He spoke extremely patronizingly. He said some good things. Although it was one of the most coherent speeches I have heard him make in a long time, it was patronizing. He spoke about how "we" were going to treat the people of the north. He spoke about what "we" had to do in order to ensure the proper treatment of the people of the north. He spoke as though we in this parliament should be looking forward constantly to the future in how we should be treating the north, when for the last 20 years we have been fighting to do that treating and thinking ourselves.

Nowhere in the hon. member's amendment do I see any reference to self-government for the people of the Yukon territory. Nowhere in his amendment do I see any reference to full participation among our elected representatives. Indeed his amendment would create another top heavy bureaucracy which would staff this so-called single agency that is to be set up to regulate and control construction of a pipeline. He should read the brief of the government of the Yukon territory as presented primarily by its elected representatives. He should read it carefully. If he does he will find that Mr. Lysyk and his inquiry adopted substantially all of the recommendations in that brief, one of the foremost of which was that the people of the Yukon should make the paramount decisions in this connection.

Mr. Broadbent: Have you read my amendment?

Mr. Nielsen: I have studied it, but in his sanctimonious way the hon. member did not deal directly with that problem. Neither has he nor his party yet dealt with the problem of self-government in the Yukon.

• (2030)

At this stage I could do no better than to quote something to arouse the memories of some of the hon. members here who might remember their history. I am referring to Lord Durham's Report wherein he said:

> The colonists—

and we in the Yukon are still colonists—

> may not always know what laws are best for them or which of their countrymen are the fittest for conducting their affairs; but at least they have a greater interest in coming to a right judgment on these points and will take greater pains to do so than those whose welfare is very remotely and slightly affected by the good or bad legislation of these portions of the Empire.

That is what is being done here, and that is what the Leader of the New Democratic Party is attempting to do in his own self-effacing fashion when he stated that we know better here what decisions to impose on the people of the Yukon.

One of the conditions which is attached to building any pipeline through the Yukon is that all of these factors, which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has referred to, the parliamentary secretary who has just resumed his seat and the Leader of the New Democratic Party have also referred to, are essential, and should be decided by the people of the Yukon Territory through their duly elected legislative assembly.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) has always advanced two arguments. The hon. members from the province of Quebec should understand what I am speaking about when we call for maîtres chez-nous. He has said that you cannot have autonomy "until you have the people and the money to pay for it. As long as we in the federal treasury are paying, then we are going to call the tune." The Yukon produced some $221 million last year in mineral revenue. This pipeline construction will dismiss that argument entirely. The money argument goes by the board, if ever it was an argument. Thus you are left with the argument of people.

Since when has the establishment of democratic institutions depended upon a target level of people for its functions? The problems which confront the people of the Yukon in the construction of a pipeline can be best solved by themselves. I hear various well-intentioned criticisms by southerners. There are those who advocate no pipeline at all. There are those who advocate a delay in the pipeline, which is simply asking for the delay of a future crisis in the supply of fuels to southern Canada. These are simply not in line.

There was an article by someone I have never quoted in the House of Commons. This person has some knowledge of the north and used to be with the Department of Northern Affairs. The article was written in 1966 by R. A. J. Phillips, who is now with Heritage Canada. The article was entitled "The Story of the Yukon and Northwest Territories" and reads in part as follows:

> The Yukon will not look like parts of southern Canada where towns and cities are joined by farms, and highways are dotted with villages. Between the northern towns, the Yukon will remain unchanged, its plains, its rivers, its mountains as majestic as when the land was born. And its rocks and gravels will, as in the past, quicken the hearts and hopes of men.

That is going to be true when the pipeline is built, as it is now. Anyone who has travelled the old dredging grounds of the Klondike goldfields will realize how quickly things will revegetate, contrary to what the parliamentary secretary just said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have two questions to decide tonight and tomorrow: first, do we need a gas pipeline now; and second, what route should we adopt?

Reviews of our production, consumption and demand for all kinds of energy show our Canadian oil demand to be 2,670 million barrels yearly. Our daily production is 1,780,000 barrels and our imports are 890,000 barrels. We export 918,000 barrels. We produce 2,520 million cubic feet of gas annually. We use 1,000,348,000 ourselves and we export 946 million cubic feet. We also produce 273 billion kilowatts of electricity in total annually, which is 26.6 per cent of our total energy production. So far only 1.4 per cent is nuclear. Coal, coke and natural gas in turn supply 26.1 per cent of our energy supply.

The export of oil to the United States has been reduced by one half since 1975. The natural gas export to the United States has also been reduced markedly. Both of these are on contracts which we must respect, and we are able to exchange other forms of energy in return for our exports. This mainly consists of coal for our Ontario Hydro. We are now importing oil for energy use, particularly for the Canadian regions east of the Ottawa valley line, from the OPEC countries. It used to be one million barrels daily and is now approximately 300,000 to 400,000 barrels a day.

Canada is doing research and demonstration projects on renewable resources such as on winds, sun, tides, and the biomass. It is conceded that these are most unlikely to become practical total substitutes for our fossil fuels but certainly are adjunctive. When petroleum, gas and coal run out, our energy will have to come in the main from hydro, nuclear installations, and the biomass.

Nuclear power will need fast development, particularly in Ontario, because in this province we are losing the self-sufficiency we once enjoyed in energy. Dr. Rasmussen of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology stated that nuclear power is the safest, cheapest and cleanest form of energy production. Even now breeder reactors for atomic fusion are being built in the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, and Russia. The most recent is the super Phoenix in France. It was the scene of an incited anti-nuclear mob recently, which I deplore. None of these will be able to rival Canada's CANDU reactor because of their complexity and the need to find new metallic transducers or mediators to replace the light water. Our CANDU heavy water reactor can be adapted to the new Canadian concept of a breeder reactor. It will adopt the thorium cycle. This will make our present uranium resources stretch out 50 times further. It will also permit the use of the very poor grades of uranium, which are so plentiful in the earth's crust. This will make civilization many hundreds of years down the energy road.

From all accounts of economists, geologists, as well as oil and gas companies and government information sources, we will run into an acute energy scarcity around the year 1980. This will continue until the year 1986, at least. That is why we are striving so hard to become self-sufficient in Canadian-produced energy. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) has frequently stated, there is no guarantee that Middle East oil will be available until we become self-sufficient. A sudden political upset there could mean that Canada might run into worse shortages than the U.S.A. experienced last winter. For this reason alone we cannot vacillate any longer on the pipeline question.

In fact, as stated in the "Energy Strategy for Canada" our future depends on the synchronization of all our energy modalities. Development of all our gas fields with vigorous exploration for new deposits are imperative. Then Delta and Arctic gas and oil will be set to flow after Alberta oil and gas are exhausted. The tarsands, though expensive, will also be brought into great production. It behooves us to invest heavily in these future energy industries, both privately and publicly.

We may eventually, not only need new pipelines from the Delta and Arctic islands but we may, of necessity, look forward to ice-breaking cargo ships for transportation to carry liquefied Arctic island gas to the St. Lawrence Gulf.

New technologies for lowering the costs of tarsands oil, as well as for Alberta and Saskatchewan coal, are being produced even now. This, we hope, taken all together, will avert any catastrophe which any sudden Middle East boycott could produce. Along with all this necessarily simultaneous development, new oil and gas policies are to be phased in as they become economic or desirable. All that is in the "Energy Strategy for Canada". I wish hon. members would read it.

The government has laid on a very impressive conservation policy for energy. This includes home insulation stimulation throughout the country, the eventual mandatory conversion of private automobiles to low consumption types, and the possible strict rationing of gasoline in the future. There will have to be a planned diversion of fossil fuel energy for public use on railroads and highways, as well as airways and for the manufacture of plastics.

Part of our overview of the construction of pipelines will necessarily include the needs of the U.S. Her oil and gas fields in the lower 48 states are pretty depleted, although she is getting new supplies from the Gulf of Mexico and to some extent from her offshore Atlantic areas. Prudhoe Bay in Alaska has added 10 per cent to her inventory with both its gas and oil. One of her big hopes is that she can get supplies for her carry-over period from Mexico, which country may soon enter an enlarged exporting phase.

Prudhoe Bay oil has already begun to flow to Valdez and transportation to the upper western U.S. refineries will soon begin. This carries some danger to our Canadian coastal waters from pollution. It also presents the U.S. with the need to build more pipelines across its wide range of mountains to the mid-western states. It became obvious to them that a gas pipeline which requires gas-liquefaction after arriving at Valdez from the north slope and special new ships to transport it to the U.S. mainland, followed by more pipelines to the midwest, was anything but economical.

Both Canada and the U.S. know that Prudhoe Bay is a much cheaper and more efficient route by going down to Fairbanks, diverting to Dawson and Whitehorse in the Yukon, and finally running across upper B.C. and Alberta. The originally well researched plan of the Canadian Arctic Gas consortium along the Alaska-Yukon corridor to the Mackenzie Delta and then down the Mackenzie River would have been slightly easier but has certain ecological and socio-economic disadvantages.

We can argue for the CAGPL that it was a consortium made up of U.S. and Canadian companies, that it had considerable experience from its background companies, and that it seemed to have a good prospect of raising plenty of money. However, against the CAGPL submission, as seen by the NEB and by the report of Justice Berger, there are several black marks.

The consortium was fairly strong in their insistence for a government guarantee. We Canadians feel that a trans-Canada pipeline of this sort should be built privately by Canadians and, as it were, rented to the U.S. Justice Berger was very vocal in castigating the CAGPL plan. He ruled out the pipeline from Prudhoe Bay to the Tuktoyaktuk Peninsula along the Alaska-Yukon corridor because of the possibility of extinguishing the caribou herds, the migratory birds, the fur-bearing animals, and even the whales in the Beaufort Sea which calve on this nearby Arctic shore. He felt very strongly that the opinions of the Inuit, Indian and Métis peoples could not be circumvented. He stated that there would be a socio-economic black-out perpetrated and, just as important, he asked for a ten year moratorium and for the land claims to be settled.

I cannot agree that we should have a moratorium on any northern line for ten years because we will need the gas from that area in not more than five or ten years. So if that is the case, we will have to build some pipeline with this in view and start very shortly as the construction time is five to six years from planning. I was not convinced after an Arctic tour that the corridor plan would be very harmful ecologically.

A few separate points should be examined. Can we take on the $5 billion to $10 billion dollar investment in a pipeline and still find enough capital to allow further industrial development in Canada such as mining, nuclear reactor building, tidal power, transportation improvement, and the heavy cost of our system of social security?

Looking at it one way, there is no doubt the injection of this amount of money into Canada would be a stimulant to recovery in our economy. It would provide employment for many tradesmen, as well as labourers, and enhance the development of technology in many lines. There would be an impressive spin-off in many other lines of manufacturing and industry generally. It would bring temporary prosperity to the native population, with some hope for local industry in the future.

Dr. Peters, vice-president of the Toronto Dominion Bank, has given a good overview of this economic situation and shows that with ordinary growth in the next 13 years, we will double or triple our GNP and have plenty of capital left over for the other uses even after completing the pipeline. This does not preclude offshore borrowing, privately and publicly. In fact he is reassuring when he says that the amount of offshore borrowing would not appreciate in the next 13 years and we would generate enough capital from our own savings to promote all these expenditures in that period.

Furthermore, there are the completion dates to think of. The CAGPL, if started late this year, could be finished in 1981, that is, before we actually think our production scarcity will begin. The new ALCAN route could be completed by 1983-1984. This also gives Canada the option to begin the Dempster highway addition, bringing gas from the Mackenzie Delta down from the Yukon to join the ALCAN line. This could be set to finish between 1984-1988. If it seemed necessary at that time, and if further deposits were found in the Mackenzie Delta, the Beaufort Sea and the Arctic islands, either a Mackenzie Valley pipeline or an Arctic island transmission system, or both, could be implemented. We must not be tied in into a state of no manoeuvrability. I think that should be noted.

● (2050)

An hon. Member: Allan MacEachen must have written the speech.

Mr. Railton: I wrote it myself, old boy.

The recent delay of four years for the ALCAN route, as suggested in the Lysyk report, takes no notice of our precarious dependence on the Middle East. Neither does it give us credit for the ingenuity and the responsibility we possess in our desire to look after our native peoples.

The alternatives might consist of a pipeline from the Arctic islands to the south, on the east or west coast of Hudson Bay—or even the previously mentioned plan of cargo ships. From the standpoint of the Canadian people, the vast majority of whom live below the Arctic Circle, it is important to demonstrate that we do have an energy strategy for Canada. This plan not only provides us with energy for the foreseeable future but also takes care of our northern citizens in a sensitive and generous manner.

Part of our public relations should be to educate people to know that severe scarcity in energy will occur in the next five years. It could suddenly become an emergency if an oil embargo by the OPEC countries is applied. Canadian people should have full information on the need for conservation, as mentioned previously, and they must be given full information on the advantages of the ALCAN route over that of the CAGPL for all the reasons presented in this debate.

In my opinion the selection of this latter route has been forced on us by necessity. Although we are not in full agreement with the Berger report, we believe it was an extremely important exercise because it pointed out our responsibilities as regards the environment and all our northern citizens.

With care, good planning and decisive action we can obtain our much needed pipeline and still live up to our contractual obligations to our neighbours in the U.S.A., and to our own northern Canadians. We have many great issues facing us in this country at the present time. They all need a solution. The building of a pipeline is just as necessary in keeping Canada together as is our handling of the Quebec problem. In fact it is rather like a re-enactment of the early Canadian dream, the trans-continental railway of Sir. John A. Macdonald, which gave us "Dominion from Sea to Sea".

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Batten down the hatches, fellows.

[Mr. Railton.]

Mr. Crosbie: It is with some regret that I have to say that the speech of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) with which he opened this debate today was not made by the minister as he was known in his heyday. It had all the force and strength of the roar of a ruptured duck.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Now we all know that the President of the Privy Council was shot on the wing last fall, shot right out of external affairs into presiding over this House. We all sympathize with him in his predicament, because none of us here would want to preside over this House if we could avoid it. But he has been plucked like a partridge and plunked into this parliament, and we can only extend to him our condolences. Certainly he did not tell the House, he did not even intimate, what was in the thoughts of the government after all these years of studying the pipeline question. We certainly could not get a clue from the inscrutable minister today.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had an even better solution—he did not stay in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I have never seen the Prime Minister or anyone else suffer as much as he did as he sat under the elbow of the President of the Privy Council and listened to him today. As soon as the President of the Privy Council finished speaking, he got up from this seat as if he were rushing to the outhouse and left the Chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We are having this debate so the government can listen to our opinions and be guided and choose from among them, but the Prime Minister is certainly not bothering with our opinions. Nevertheless, we will put them on the record.

There is some talk about Prudhoe Bay. I say we will never get Trudeau at bay in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was a delight, as always.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The leader of the rump party, the NDP, of whom I always think as flash Broadbent because of his quick decisions—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —was at it again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member refer to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) by his title, not by his name.

Mr. Crosbie: I accept your stricture, Mr. Speaker, and I will call him the flash member from Oshawa. Is it a bird, is it a plane? No, it is the member from Oshawa making a quick decision based on hot air. This inspired me to verse, if you do not mind verse, Mr. Speaker. This is a verse I dedicate to the CBC:

The leader of the rump of the NDP
Is also the hero of the CBC.
They admire his dash and his quick decisions
Though the NDP, like God, haven't got the divisions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: One thing we can say about the CBC is that they are always fair, they are for the underdog, and that is why they are for the leader of the rump party. It may be that if you are the leader of the rump you do not have to consult the rump because when you look at a rump, you just say, "hi, rump". You do not have much discussion or debate with a rump. But in the Progressive Conservative party we have a caucus of 95 members, and since it is a democratic party our leader does not make decisions without consulting us. There are 94 of us—the other chap got booed in Edmonton yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We have been travelling over here, with the thought of all the seats the Liberals will get in Alberta in the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest the hon. member get back to the subject under discussion.

Mr. Crosbie: After all these years of Liberal governments, the only gas ever transported out of our frontier areas is the gas that came out of the stomachs of the ministers who flew over the Yukon, and that is certainly a very unsatisfactory situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I want to say, before launching into the serious part of my speech—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: These remarks have not been prepared by a member of the civil service but rather prepared by a man whom I admire tremendously, namely, myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I do not ask anyone else to prepare my speeches.

The present very unsatisfactory situation with reference to the pipeline question is the responsibility of the gentlemen opposite, the scattered handful listening to me tonight. The others should be here, they might learn something. Since 1968-69 the hon. gentlemen opposite failed to take the necessary steps to establish the best route for a pipeline from the frontier areas, with the result that what would be the main objective for Canada, that is, the most economic method of bringing frontier gas to Canadian consumers when needed, is now only a secondary objective which might or might not be accomplished by the route which we have come to support because it is the only alternative left to us. That is the fault of the hon. gentlemen opposite because they should never have left it to private enterprise, to commissions, to studies, to environmental panels and the rest of it, to try to puzzle out the best route. They should never have allowed Arctic Gas to spend $130 million to do that work for them. They should have done some work themselves, or should have had the civil servants do some work on this question long before Canadian Arctic Gas and the others were drawn into this effort by themselves. It illustrates a lack of government policy.

● (2100)

The government says it has a strategy, but that is all it has. The government has nothing which will achieve anything for this country. The reports of the last few months make it clear that the proposal of Arctic Gas for a pipeline from Alaska down through the Mackenzie Delta and the Mackenzie Valley is not possible, even though that might be the most economic way to bring Canadian frontier gas down to Canadian consumers. It is not now or seems barely possible, unless hon. gentlemen opposite have some facts or knowledge we do not have. However, on the knowledge we have, that option is now foreclosed because of the reports of the NEB, Mr. Justice Berger and the rest. What might have been the most economic route for Canadian consumers appears to be foreclosed for the reasons given by Mr. Justice Berger and by the NEB.

The NEB and those who are experts in the field seem to assure us that we are really not going to need frontier gas for our Canadian consumers until the mid 1980's. From all we have been told and from all the assumptions the NEB has made this seems to be a reasonable risk. One assumption the NEB could not put into its report is the assumption that there might be a change of government and that there might be a successful implementation of a policy. That would give us even more assurance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We have about a four year period to decide what is the best way of getting gas from the Mackenzie Delta, from the Beaufort Sea, from the Arctic islands and from the high Arctic to the south of Canada before we have to make a final decision on a Canadian route. However, we have to make a decision now about a route for transporting American gas from Alaska to the United States. Since the Arctic Gas proposal is not now acceptable, we are left with the Alcan proposal. That is the proposal of Mr. Blair and his associates, who certainly are to be admired for their persistence and hard work for three or four years. These are certainly Canadians of whom we can be proud. They are great Canadian nationalists.

There is one route left, if we are to be a good neighbour to the United States. On the assumption that we want to take advantage of what we might offer them, there is one route left, and that is the Alcan route, the Alaska Highway route through the Yukon Territory, British Columbia and Alberta to the U.S. We should not even go for that route if it is clearly detrimental to Canada, but all the evidence we have seen shows that it is not.

The benefits for Canada seem to outweigh the costs. Some of the benefits are employment, economic activity and the opening of the Yukon. This might be the boost the Canadian economy needs because of the state it is left in by the policies of hon. gentlemen opposite for the last four or five years. This pipeline will require the manufacture of pipe and other activities. It will help the foreign exchange situation. There may be tax revenue, and there is a possibility that this route may provide a chance for us to bring Delta gas through the Dempster Highway link. In our opinion all these things would make it worth while for the government to go ahead with a decision to proceed with the Alcan route as approved by the NEB.

This would be taking two gambles, but they seem to be safe on the face of it. The Dempster Highway link from the Delta will be feasible in an economic sense as well as feasible in an environmental sense. The Dempster Highway would be a great benefit as a result of this project. The rest of the benefits would only be benefits for the next four or five years. Second, our need for frontier gas from the Delta or the Beaufort Sea will not come until the last half of the 1980's. We can get by without frontier gas until then.

Our position—certainly my feeling—is that the government should advise the United States that it is ready to go ahead under the conditions our leader outlined today. I do not see why these conditions should have to be negotiated. We should offer the Americans this route subject to these reasonable conditions, and the Americans can either accept them or use their alternative, which is to liquefy natural gas from Alaska and bring it by ship to California or wherever.

I do not like what I see and hear. I have in my hand an article from today's newspaper. The headline is "Ottawa Appears to be Jittery on Yukon Pipeline Commitment". The article refers to an attack of last minute jitters in the Canadian government. We saw that here this afternoon at the end of the question period. The ministry was pretty jittery. The government is jittery also because of the frosty reception it encountered last week in Washington when Mr. Basil Robinson and his team of negotiators went down there. The Americans did not fall over them and say, "Thank God you will be giving us the Alcan route". The Americans said they would not accept a number of things. They said they would not accept the $200 million socio-economic surcharge that the National Energy Board has recommended and that Mr. Lysyk has recommended.

It it recommended that that surcharge be added to the cost of the pipeline. The American Secretary of State, Mr. Vance, wrote a letter to the congressional committee advising that committee that a new pipeline treaty would prevent Canada from adding such an amount for socio-economic costs to the cost of the pipeline, which would have to be paid by the consumers of the gas. The United States has already said it would not accept any condition like that. The United States Senate has said that. The Americans are objecting, and apparently they are not going to pay the extra cost for any route deviation to Dawson City in the Yukon. They say they may not agree to an all-events tariff which would be necessary unless there are going to be government guarantees in connection with this pipeline. So our government is getting jitters. I say our government should forget the jitters.

If, because of our good neighbourliness, we are prepared to give to the United States a route across Canada for a gas pipeline subject to conditions which are reasonable to Canadians, Yukoners and people who would live along the route, and if the United States is not prepared to accept those reasonable conditions, then let us forget it. We are not suppliants to the United States; they are the suppliants, so let us not forget that. If the government goes for the route we are suggesting, I do not think it should act as if Canada has to surrender these reasonable conditions mentioned by our leader and others in this debate.

As our leader said, there should be no financial guarantees from the Government of Canada in connection with this pipeline. If it comes to building our own pipeline—the Dempster Highway pipeline or another pipeline to bring gas to Canadian consumers—it might be necessary for the Canadian government to have some financial involvement. If it does, it should have the equity of that project, or the project should be carried out through a Crown corporation. No guarantees should be given to private corporations or non-government corporations to build pipelines. Never should we agree to that, and we should give no financial assistance to bring American gas to American consumers. I am sure that the present government would not be so foolish as to do that.

Mr. Fraser: Don't be too sure, John.

Miss MacDonald: We gave it to Argentina.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not have time to go into the details of other conditions there might be, but if there are any swaps arranged, let us remember the price of those swaps. If we sell Canadian gas now or next year to the United States on a swap basis to get theirs back in eight or ten years' time, the gas we get back should be at the same price. We should pay the same price they pay when they buy our gas. Let us not forget that as a very important point to be remembered in any swap deals.

The government would be well advised to change its federal-provincial tactics and to get a little cosier with the government of Alberta once it makes its decision. If this project goes ahead, it cannot go ahead successfully without the co-operation of the government of Alberta, which has been treated in a pretty shabby manner by the government opposite, and it is not being treated any better now. To date there has been no change. Alberta has to be consulted on the financing of Alberta's gas contracts. There should be co-operative arrangements.

The people of the Yukon have to be consulted, and British Columbia has to be consulted. But the government is not used to consulting anyone. It is used to telling people what they are going to do and what they should do. Time and again we have seen the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) carry on their Kung-Fu federalist tactics. They say, "Accept our programs, or we will give you our foot right in the mouth". That is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said when it came to his home insultation program, but he is going to get a foot somewhere else before the year is out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Lysyk Report suggests a four-year delay, but that is not any grave impediment. It is only a year longer than might be necessary in any event. We say that if native claims and the rest of these matters are cleared up earlier than that, which any efficient government ought to be able to do, it would not take four years as Mr. Lysyk suggests. Of course he was dealing with the present government, knew its record, and based his four years on that.

• (2110)

All standing committees of this House, including the committee on national resources, should be treated as though they are meaningful. None I have been on to date has been meaningful. It would be nice if the government, when it makes its decision, does as the Leader of the Opposition suggests, sits down with the natural resources committee, to outline why it made the decision. It should meet with it every three or four months, to bring it and the House up to date on what is happening, how the negotiations with the U.S.A. are going, and what conditions they are or are not agreeing to. It would be no good passing orders in council of the sort mentioned in the House earlier this afternoon. They are not going to stop us looking at documents; we will get our mitts on them, anyway. Take us into your confidence, we say to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, knowing that there is not a chance in the world he ever will. But we say it anyway. If the record of the last nine months is any guide, we do not have a hope in Hades of having our pleas in this House answered.

Once you get the television cameras into the House we shall see the Prime Minister sitting in his seat, smiling through these debates. He will be all smiles when his seat mate, the President of the Privy Council, speaks. When the people see our leader speaking so well that the Prime Minister has to skulk and flee from this House in shame, they will draw the right conclusion.

We want additional exploration in the Delta and the Beaufort Sea, and it is up to the government to see that it happens. It is up to the government to provide the incentive. If all else fails, let the government use its great paragon of petroleum virtue, Petro-Canada, to make sure that explanation continues.

It is as well for me to sit down before you jump up, Mr. Speaker, and interrupt my train of thought. Let me end by saying we have told the government the course it should follow. If the government has any sense it will follow our advice. If it has not much sense, the government will be even more doomed to defeat than it is today.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you speak, instead of asking questions?

Mr. Fraser: When are you going to speak?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has one minute left. Will he accept a question from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I will give the minister as full and informed an answer as he gives me.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who is the energy critic of the Conservative party made an important contribution. I wonder if he can elaborate on something he said. I took him to say—if I am wrong perhaps he can correct me—that his party would gamble to the late 1980's before it is necessary to connect up any northern gas to the south. If he did not say that I ask him to clarify that position.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I should like the Prime Minister to gamble on an election this fall. Answering the minister's question, I said that we must recognize that two gambles are involved in implementing the recommendations of the National Energy Board, of Mr. Lysyk or of my party. One is that gas supplies will be adequate until the mid-1980's. The second is if building the Dempster line will be possible. When I speak of gambles I mean that we have to take two chances any such decision involves, and it would be fair to take them on the evidence now available.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the two day debate in which members of this House are now engaged concerns issues relating to a multi-billion dollar project, the largest single project to be undertaken in North American history by the private sector.

The question before us is in two parts. First and foremost there is the question of whether or not Canada wants a substantial piece of the action. Second, what are the minimum conditions under which we are prepared to throw in our lot with the project, if it is our determined objective to participate? I say minimum conditions advisedly, because we must bear in mind that this entire project has really come about as a result of substantial natural gas discoveries in the Prudhoe Bay area of the state of Alaska, and the desperate need in the heart of the United States to find a means to transport this newfound resource to the mainland. Without this crucial factor, the substantial proven reserves estimated at some 28 trillion cubic feet in Alaska, coupled with the urgent need for this gas to fuel the energy starved economy of mainland United States, we should not be here debating the Canadian position on this matter today.

It is my view, Mr. Speaker, that Canada should capitalize on the opportunity before the country and participate in as full and meaningful a way in this gigantic energy project as can be negotiated with our American partners.

The first argument I should like to make in support of my stand relates purely and simply to the obviously positive effect that such a major project will have on the Canadian economy at this time and in the immediate years ahead. Economists in Canada are few and far between today who are not prepared to state almost categorically that this country is running substantially below its potential, economically speaking. In this connection I refer to an article carried in the Toronto Star, dealing with the participation of the director of policy analysis for the C.D. Howe Institute, at the Couchiching conference. Mr. Speaker, a project of this nature will do more, both directly and indirectly, to stimulate new economic activity in Canada than any number of individual stimulants that might be provided by governments at federal, provincial and perhaps municipal levels, of various types and sorts with the same over-all objective. To me this is developing as perhaps the key issue in this debate over whether or not Canada should participate in discussions over the appropriate route for the line in Canada, questions of financial commitments to be made and other negotiations relating to native right problems, etc.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, a decision to participate in this important venture based in the first instance on its potential as a dramatic stimulus to the Canadian economy should help in perhaps defogging some of the other technical yet extremely important aspects that obviously must be resolved before the nature of our participation may be developed. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I see this project as such an important stimulant that one of the key considerations must, in my view, be the determination of appropriate controlling measures to ensure a minimum effect, from the vast spending involved, on the ever present and lingering inflationary concerns. These do not appear to be leaving us, and indeed may receive some stimulation in the wrong direction when the current control program is ended. I say, let matters relating to our sluggish economy be paramount as we hopefully make one decision to proceed and as we enter the complex phase of negotiations with Washington that will ensue, assuming the Americans continue to opt for an overland route, an assumption which I believe will prevail.

The second argument I wish to put forward relates to the opportunity which our willingness to participate in this project would create in terms of our relations with our great and respected neighbour to the south. Canadians are charged at this time with a desire to identify and promote our national spirit wherever and whenever possible. But this particular point in our developing state of maturity requires that from time to time we take a realistic and sensible attitude in our relations with countries which may be substantially more heavily populated and economically powerful than our own. We must never obviously be subservient—

Mr. Fraser: Not obviously!

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. Martin: We must, however, endeavour to be helpful and understanding whenever possible, particularly in those instances where co-operation may be shown to be in our national interest. I would point out that a large part of Canada's energy development and delivery systems have been put in place over the years with American assistance. Through co-operation by the U.S.A. we are today delivering a major part of central Canada's oil and gas needs through pipeline systems which embody substantial mileage across several U.S. states and which are owned by Canadians, either completely or jointly with U.S. interests.

I believe our negotiating teams should be tough and should be expected to hammer out the best deal possible for Canadians in the course of the detailed arrangements which may ultimately be developed with regard to Canadian participation in this project. However, we must not forget that Washington will possess two clear options in the event the Canadian government chooses to participate. The U.S. authorities can accept such participation or else decide to go it alone by selecting the all-Alaska, all-American route. In the event we wish to join in—and I believe we shall—we must be careful to avoid falling prey unwittingly to the increasingly influential proponents of the all-American proposal by attaching terms and conditions to our participation which might be perceived as making such participation unattractive to American eyes by comparison with a project which does not involve Canada and Canadians.

Mr. Fraser: Would the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) permit a question?

Mr. Martin: I would be delighted to do so but I should like to finish what I have to say first, and see whether my time allotment permits.

An hon. Member: It is all so dull.

Mr. Martin: I hope that comment refers to some of the remarks I have heard from the other side.

An hon. Member: The House is falling asleep.

Mr. Martin: That would not be much of a change for some members over there.

The other point I should like to make relates to incentives to future exploration in the north, something which I believe is an important aspect of our considerations.

Mr. Woolliams: Incentives like the 25 per cent tax.

Mr. Martin: Frankly, I would be most concerned if Canada either opted out or was effectively shut out by virtue of a Washington decision to "go it alone". I hold this view for what, to my mind, is a most important reason—the need for Canada to do everything in its power to ensure far more active exploration and development in the Delta region and in the north in general than has occurred to date. This country needs the untapped or unproven resources of the north, both oil and gas, if we are to ensure a continuation of our economy in the manner to which we have become accustomed. There is much argument as to how soon we shall need further gas. There is no similar argument about the need for frontier oil. Mr. Speaker, there is only one way in which this exploration and development can proceed and that is by heavy investment in the frontier areas, involving massive co-operation on the part of both the private sector and the government.

Mr. Woolliams: Like the 25 per cent tax.

Mr. Martin: If we fail in our efforts to become part of this current American frontier project which is so close to our own Delta region I am concerned about the discouraging effect of that situation upon efforts to bring vast amounts of capital to play in this crucial area of exploration and development.

I have so far, in these brief remarks, avoided two issues—I shall comment briefly on my reasons for giving them a somewhat lesser priority. The first is the question of the Canadian gas supply situation in the immediate future, say within the next several years. I might say that I am aware of the arguments which have been put forward to show how and why a near term shortage may develop; it is not lack of knowledge which prompts me to give this aspect a lesser priority. Rather, it is that I, as an ordinary member of parliament, am confused.

Mr. Fraser: That is apparent.

Mr. Martin: I am confused, and, unfortunately, not completely convinced. We are told again and again of the ever-increasing gas bubble developing in Alberta and the ever-increasing difficulty of getting new contracts signed. We are told about new reserves being proven in the traditional areas and of the failure to date to convince eastern oil customers to switch to natural gas. Then there is the vast potential offered by conservation measures. I feel there may be time on our side in this area at present and that the need for a new and concentrated focus on Delta and Arctic potential gas reserves may be less.

In the second place, I have not spoken about the actual route to be taken. I would find it difficult, bearing in mind the substantive recommendations and evidence presented to us recently, to accept that the Arctic Gas proposal is a viable one at this date. Therefore, we are looking at Alcan. Whether or not the Alcan route, if it is approved, should take in the Dawson spur is a consideration which I believe could be left for negotiation with the people concerned south of the border in terms of the ultimate project.

Mr. Fraser: Are you serious?

Mr. Martin: If I am correct in believing concrete evidence is lacking of an imminent gas shortge in the years immediately ahead, it seems to me conceivable that there may be time in which to prove up more Delta reserves in sufficient quantity to justify a pipeline which could come down either through what is referred to as the Dawson spur, longer or shorter than we have talked about so far, or through a new Mackenzie Valley line. The point I am making is that participation in the project serves a key need, and if ultimately it means that participation has to mean participation in a project which, for now, will only be moving U.S. gas from U.S. sources to a U.S. destination, it is still something in which we should be involved.

● (2130)

If I have time I would now be quite happy to entertain the question directed to me earlier.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I appreciate my hon. friend's acceptance of my question. I want to refer to something he said a few minutes ago when he warned this House and presumably his colleagues in the government about being too intransigent with the terms, because there is a possibility that the United States may not accept either of the overland routes.

I want to read to my hon. friend from Scarborough West part of a letter sent several days ago to Senator Stevens of Alaska by the administration. This matter is of very grave importance in that I am referring to the $200 million fund recommended by the National Energy Board in the event that the Alcan project goes ahead, the money to be used to help soften the socio-economic impact in the Yukon. This is an excerpt from the letter sent to Senator Stevens of Alaska by a Mr. Bennet.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Fraser: Just a minute. We have come a long way at great public expense to debate this matter and, with respect, Mr. Speaker, I think I should ask my colleagues to allow me to put the question in proper form. I am sure my hon. friend would appreciate that. The letter is sent by the office of Secretary Vance and commences:

> Secretary Vance has asked me to respond to your letter of July 22 concerning the United States-Canada transit pipeline agreement and the transportation of Alaskan natural gas across Canada.

He goes on:

> With regard to the relationship between Article III of the agreement—

That is the Canada-U.S. agreement.

> —and the proposed two hundred million charge to Alcan for indirect socio-economic costs, we have taken the position with the Canadians that Article III of the agreement would preclude the imposition on the pipeline of the charge unless such a charge is applicable to similar pipelines in Canada.

My question to my hon. friend who speaks for the government is in the context of the remarks that the hon. member made a few minutes ago to the effect that we must be very flexible and not become intransigent in regard to the terms. In view of the fact that my leader and other speakers, most recently the critic in our caucus on energy matters from the province of Newfoundland, have so eloquently stated that these—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not open the debate but ask a question.

Mr. Fraser: It is an important question, Mr. Speaker. Can I ask the hon. member whether he is prepared to say on behalf either of himself or on behalf of the government, when he was referring to being flexible, that he is prepared to give up one dollar of the $200 million recommendation from the government's own regulatory agency, the National Energy Board, in any negotiations with the United States of America?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, first of all I think it should be quite obvious to the hon. member, who has been around here a lot longer than I have, that as a backbencher on this side of the House I do not indeed speak for the government. I am a member of parliament and I am participating as a member of parliament in this debate. With regard to his point, I would simply say that in my view the point he has made is one of those technical matters—and I realize technical matters can amount to a great deal of money at times—which I think will have to be resolved at some point in the negotiations in Washington. I certainly had that in mind when I lumped the groups together earlier in my speech.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired and unanimous consent would be required.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, during this debate I want to make a few observations about the north and its people. Perhaps this will be a diversion from what we have heard earlier. I should say at the outset that I do not recall an issue on which there has been more information over a prolonged period of time than that surrounding the present debate. The divergent views expressed on a multitude of interrelated issues is one manifestation of the complexity and importance of the subject.

In assessing the information, it has been my impression that the participants involved collect information from their own perspective, and the strategy to disseminate that information varies from that of retaining a narrow point of view to retaining a narrow point of view while giving the appearance of a broader perspective of the issues. I do not say this in a critical manner; indeed it is my belief we have been exposed to a new decision making process in dealing with an important and sensitive political issue.

The question must be asked: is there a common denominator, is there a starting point from which we can reconcile the divergent opinions that surround the present debate? I suspect the simple answer to that question is no, and yet it seems to me there are convincing arguments to suggest all northerners—and I emphasize all northerners—are telling us they are concerned about individual freedom and equality of opportunity.

The irony of this debate is that the Liberal government would have the House of Commons and the Canadian public believe that by permitting members of parliament to speak for a period of two days the words of wisdom flowing from all concerns of the House will lead to more enlightened decisions. However, what is obvious and what the government has failed to tell the Canadian people is that many of the issues involved in the debate have been ignored by the Liberal government for years and have been permitted to fester like an untreated chronic ulcer. The illusion created by the government that we are simply debating a pipeline is spurious, and has had the serious and unfortunate effect of diverting attention away from many of the critical political issues which affect the north.

What are some of the issues that have a direct impact on the north, its people and their future, that have been ignored or inadequately handled by the government? The absence of a national energy policy has been discussed earlier today, in particular the long term need for Canada, in concert not only with the western world but with the global community, to rationalize our future energy needs. Despite widely conflicting reports with respect to existing and potential petroleum resources in Canada, it is generally accepted that there is a need for a transition strategy toward a different kind of energy economy. The importance of such a strategy on decisions affecting northern development and Canadian sovereignty over a disproportionate share of the world's territory and resources is obvious.

The absence of a comprehensive policy for the north, the absence of an industrial development strategy and a national policy regarding resource development, has a direct impact on the future of the north and its people. What will be the role of Petro-Canada? The conflicts between the federal and provincial governments, between provincial governments, and the conflicting objectives between various federal ministries and indeed within specific ministries, including the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, have created uncertainty, stagnation, and inaction. The political development of the north and the role of native northerners in that development process is crucial, and I shall make reference to this point later.

Any rational discussion about the future of the north and its people must be predicated on our past and present knowledge of the area and its people. Following several visits to the north and innumerable discussions with a broad cross section of northerners, one is left with definite impressions. Indeed for many reasons which I do not have time to discuss there is a growing awareness of the north in southern Canada, which in itself is healthy, and as one Canadian interested in the future of the north and its people I would like to make a few observations.

I believe it is fair to say that the north during its three centuries of contact with the white man has been viewed by those in southern Canada as a sparsely populated, hostile environment, with vast natural resources that should serve as a resource base for the rest of Canada and the world.

Although the nature of the resources has changed through the centuries, the basic principle of exploitation of natural resources in the north independent of the economic, social and political development of the area has been and continues to be the policy of this government. Indeed in recent years the state has been involved in numerous projects to the extent that there is no apparent difference in the activities in the public as distinguished from the private sector. The question is not whether these resources should be developed now or in the future, but rather how they should be developed, over what period of time, with what safeguards and for whose benefit?

I am convinced this policy of exploitation is regressive. It is essential that the Canadian north be respected on its own terms, and future policy must be adopted to acknowledge the special characteristics of the north and the culture of its people.

The second point I wish to make is the lack of understanding that prevails regarding the impact our society has had on the economic, social and political development of the Indian, Inuit and Metis in the north. In assessing the impact there is a risk of either accepting de facto the interpretation of the events as perceived by a particular group, or a risk of becoming paralyzed by a number of widely divergent interpretations from several groups based on their perception of events. It is essential to make a distinction between the opinions of the various parties and the necessity to have an understanding of the events which have occurred.

To draw an analogy, it could be compared to three patients visiting a doctor with similar symptoms, where the first patient was convinced he had leukemia, the second cancer, and the third meningitis. The doctor has the choice of treating each patient as they have interpreted the symptoms, or attempt to elicit the facts and draw his own conclusions.

What are the facts? During the past 30 years there has been a remarkable shift in the Canadian economy from a goods producing system to a services producing system. During this period we have seen a growing portion of our economic resources allocated to health care, communications, transportation, education, and social services. This growth in the service sector has been accompanied by changes in financing, in which many of the services formerly financed in the private sector are now the responsibility of the public sector.

There is no question these changes have had a dramatic impact on the traditional way of life in the north. With the continued high birth rate, improved health standards and decreasing mortality rates, we are witnessing the highest population increase on record. Added to this is a marked reduction of previous nomadic activity. The results of these events have been an explosion in the population and the establishment of more permanent settlements.

Not unexpectedly this sequence of events has been accompanied with problems in housing, lack of infrastructure, unemployment, and the numerous social problems one would anticipate in such an environmental setting. In recent years there have been an increasing number of children attending schools in the north, and one cannot escape the inevitable question of asking about their future. Will we be able to provide them with a life style of their choice? Having provided them with the educational equipment to work in a wage economy, will we be able to provide them with the economic opportunities in their communities? Will conditions be such that their future opportunities are limited, causing a further breakdown in families as children are forced to leave home to seek opportunities elsewhere, most likely in the provinces?

I do not underestimate the difficulties in achieving the proper balance in reconciling the divergent views which exist regarding the future economic, social, and political evolution of the north. However, I am confident if we understand the past, and if there is a commitment to the future, we can achieve the proper balance which will preserve individual freedom and equality of opportunity.

In the brief time remaining I should like to make a few comments regarding the first volume of Mr. Justice Berger's Report and native land claims in the north. Few doubt the eloquent report of Justice Berger has had a significant impact on those preoccupied with the problems of native land claims, economic development and political evolution in the north. Although it is too early to assess the effect the Berger inquiry will have on the future political climate in Canada, it is important to understand the significance of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline inquiry.

It seems clear from the proceedings of the Berger inquiry and a review of the testimony collected, either from informal gatherings in small settlements in the north or larger centres with exposure to the news media in the south, that the future of people was the dominant theme. Although I am not in agreement with all of the conclusions of Justice Berger, I am persuaded to conclude he has added an important dimension to the decision-making process of assessing development projects. In contrast to the James Bay hydro power project in northern Quebec, when the people were forgotten prior to the injunction to stop the development, the Berger inquiry recognized the need to establish the effect development would have on the people in the north. Historically economic concerns dominate the decision-making process in assessing development. Justice Berger has provided a source of information expressing other concerns, and this fundamental principle should be recognized as an important component in any technology assessment program applied to future development.

During the debate on second reading of the James Bay legislation I attempted to define some of the difficulties encountered in resolving the important issue of comprehensive land claims in the north. I emphasized the need for flexibility since no one, in my opinion, in our democratically constituted society has the wisdom or foresight to predict how an individual or a people will evolve. On the basis of the existing proposals or stated objectives of the Northwest Territory Indian Brotherhood, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, the Committee for Original Peoples Entitlement, the Metis principally around Great Slaves Lake and the Delta, and the Council for Yukon Indians, the need for flexibility continues to exist.

The flexibility does not imply inaction. Indeed the major components of comprehensive land claims are well known, and yet the government had failed to acknowledge the reality of northern native aboriginal claims and has refused to come to grips with this fundamental issue.

Unfortunately the time constraints imposed by the House prevent me from outlining the details of the various proposals. However, at the risk of generalizing, it should be noted there is a remarkable similarity in the major components of the proposals that have been presented to the government, which I believe the majority of Canadians would accept in principle. I want to conclude my remarks by referring to what I consider to be the major issue in Mr. Justice Berger's report, and perhaps in the entire debate, namely his reasoning for imposing a ten year moratorium on the building of a pipeline. Let me attempt to place the problem in perspective by initially quoting from the first volume where he states at page 174 the following:

> Local, regional or territorial political entities may evolve that have a predominantly native electorate, an electorate in which a native majority might be entrenched by a suitable residency clause. Or political instruments may be developed by which the native people can, under an ethnic franchise and within a larger political entity, control matters that are, by tradition and right, theirs to determine. One approach would be geographical, the other functional.

Again, at page 176, he states:

> The settlement of native claims must be the point of departure for any political reorganization in the Northwest Territories. That is why the decision on the pipeline is really a decision about the political future of the Northwest Territories.

In a recent submission to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand) the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories proposed the division of the Northwest Territories into three sections on ethnic grounds. Indeed in an earlier proposal to the federal government they stated:

> There will therefore be within Confederation, a Dene government with jurisdiction over a geographical area and over subject matters now within the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada or the government of the Northwest Territories.

The issue is quite clear. If one supports the moratorium for the reasons outlined by Justice Berger, one is in effect supporting the principle of separate national development on ethnic grounds, in other words a homeland policy as proposed in South Africa, and perhaps it is not coincidental the title of the first volume is in part referred to as "Northern Homeland".

What are the implications of accepting the Dene proposal for political independence on the basis of race and culture, which appears to be supported in Judge Berger's recommendations?

First is the assumption that the federal government has not, cannot, and will not be trusted to administer an obligation under the B.N.A. Act to protect the interests and rights of the Indian people. This point of view has its proponents in both the north and south, among Indians and non-Indians, for a variety of reasons. Some are prisoners of the past, others are romanticists, and others espouse personal ideologies with questionable credentials regarding their genuine interest in resolving Indian problems.

If a federal government accedes to the request for independence, we are admitting as a nation and more important, as a people, that we do not have the capacity and flexibility to adapt to existing circumstances, and we are admitting independence is an acceptable alternative to the development and respect which can serve to unite us for the mutual benefit of all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holmes: Although the constitution does not define in a precise manner how the federal government should discharge its responsibilities, it is quite clear action can and should be taken. We need to assist the Indian people to preserve their identity and permit them to choose a way of life in keeping with their cultural heritage. We need to provide the Indian people with the opportunity to build an economic base to ensure the survival of their culture. With respect to political development, we must recognize the importance of Indian involvement in the decision making process, and it seems to me a broad spectrum of possibilities exists other than independence.

Finally, it is impossible to divorce the issue of independence on racial and cultural grounds in the north from the issue of national unity and the future of Canada.

Special status for the Indian people is an integral part of our constitution which must be preserved and continually altered to allow the Indian people the opportunity to preserve their identity and break the shackles of dependency. I believe this is just and attainable.

However, I have not been persuaded that Justice Berger's reasoning will stand the test of time, and to add tacit approval to the Dene proposal for independence supports a fundamental problem that exists in Canada, namely, the notion that a people must be the absolute masters of all matters affecting them.

An important feature of our federal system is that if there is the will it can respond to changing circumstances. As I indicated earlier, to accept independence as a viable option is to admit as Canadians we do not have the capacity and flexibility to adapt to existing circumstances.

It is my belief that federalism and national unity are a viable option over independence, and to take any course of action which accepts in principle the establishment of political independence based on race and culture is to indicate our loss of faith in federalism and our future as an united country. I am a Canadian and stand for a united Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because I see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand) rising, presumably to put a question. It is important that we on this side make it clear to ministers that while we are prepared to receive some reasonable questions, there are certain ministers from whom we believe we and the people of Canada have a right to hear on this matter.

One of the reasons we were prepared to accept questions from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr.

Gillespie) was that he indicated he would be speaking in this debate. If the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is going to speak in this debate, we will be prepared to answer questions. However, we are not going to let him get away with this debate simply playing the role of a questioner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Are you going to speak or are you not?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) will agree that it is the decision of the member who has the floor as to whether to accept a question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In this particular case the hon. member's time expired over a minute ago. The question can only be asked with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent to allow the minister to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. I will have to recognize the next speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, you will agree that it is difficult for an orator to launch out into as important a debate as that on the construction of a pipeline when there is barely one minute left.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock, in accordance with Standing Order 40 a motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore the question is: That this House do now adjourn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—NUMBER OF WIDOWS NOT RECEIVING PENSIONS AND LOW LEVEL OF DISABILITY PENSION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, June 29, as reported in Hansard at page 7183, I put to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) a question concerning two matters about which I have questioned him a great many times. My question on June 29 put it this way:

> In view of the increasing concern of veterans and their organizations over the number of widows who do not receive pensions, and in view of the increasing concern over the widening gap between the rate of the disability pension and the base to which it was attached a few years ago, as well as the minister's sympathetic statements made several times to the effect that this matter is being reviewed, will he do his best to get the members of the cabinet to agree to bringing in this year the necessary legislation to correct these two situations?

The reply of the minister was in these words:

> Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has indicated, this is a concern of mine and many people in the House. As far as trying to get it implemented this year, I will do my best.

It could well be that this is the last night in this session in which there will be late shows. I know of no subject to which I would rather devote my last effort in an adjournment debate than this one.

I appeal as strongly as I can to the Minister of Veterans Affairs to do what I asked him to do on June 29, as well as on other occasions, to try and get the cabinet to agree to include in the Speech from the Throne that may well be read by Her Majesty in October at least these two matters respecting Canadian veterans.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Not just for study.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member is right. We do not want just study, we want action. I realize that every time we discuss the question of pensions for widows of veterans, the minister makes the point that if a veteran's disability pension was only 5 per cent, say, for flat feet, that amount of money would hardly be the main element in the income of that veteran and his wife and that therefore a case for a widow's pension in that situation is not as strong as it might be. I point out to the minister—and he knows it as well as the rest of us do—that the pensions of veterans' widows are not on a graduated basis. Either the widow gets the full widow's pension or she gets nothing at all. The crucial point is that 48 per cent level in the case of the veteran's pension.

The minister knows that several responsible bodies such as the Woods commission, the Hermann commission and the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs on at least two or if not more occasions, have recommended that there be a graduated scale so that in the case of widows of veterans where the veteran's pension was less than 48 per cent, there could be a pro rata pension. This is one of the matters that is concerning veterans greatly, and as the years roll on, especially now for World War II veterans as they rolled on some time ago for World War I veterans, the numbers of veterans' widows who do not qualify for pension as a matter of right is increasing, and this is an issue of great concern to veterans. It is being expressed by the veterans in literally every veterans' organization.

I do not think I have to argue with the minister the strength of the case. I think he agrees with it just as strongly as the rest of us do. The problem is to get it approved by the cabinet, to get it into the Speech from the Throne, and to get it on the list of legislation for the next session. I plead with him as strongly as I can to see to it that it is on that list when we come back into session in October of this year.

The other point covered in my question is another of the major issues that are still of concern to veterans. A few years ago we corrected a wrong that had persisted for nearly 50 years, namely, that the war disability pension lost its relationship to the base to which it was established back in the early 1920's. A few years ago we attached it to a base, namely, the average income after taxes of five categories in the public service. But in the four or five years since that base was established, a gap has developed which is now nearly $45 a month or nearly $540 a year. I have the exact figures in front of me. They are a few cents less, but those are roughly the figures. I submit that it is grossly unfair to the veterans, unfair to the government which brought in this proposal, and unfair to the standing committee which recommended it, and I earnestly plead with the minister and express as strongly as I can to him the hope that this too will be in the Speech from the Throne which will open the next session of parliament.

The minister knows, as do all members, that veterans have a particular feeling of attachment to the Crown, and I suspect that the Sovereign, being herself a woman, has a particular interest in women and in widows, and I can think of nothing better to put in the mouth of the Queen when she opens parliament next October than these two matters respecting veterans.

I know the minister agrees that it should be done. I plead with him tonight to give us the assurance that he will do his best to get the agreement of his colleagues in the cabinet on these two important measures affecting the veterans of this country.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in answering the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on this matter, as I have done in the past. In 1972 it was recognized that some better method of determining the basic amount of disability pension had to be found, and a joint study group on the basic rate of pension was established. This study group had representation from veterans' organizations as well as from the Canadian Pension Commission and the Department of Veterans Affairs.

The joint study group recommended that the salary, after tax, of a composite group composed of five classes of unskilled public servants be accepted as the basis on which the disability pension should be based. This was done, and in June, 1973, Bill C-202 was enacted. That bill established the basic rate of pension in relation to five named classes of unskilled public servants. This resulted in an over-all increase of pension at that time of some 24 per cent.

In 1974, 1975 and 1976, because the pension rate was tied to the consumer price index, it was slightly more than it would have been if it had been tied only to the five categories of unskilled public servants.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

This year, however, after deduction of income tax the spread between the income of the unskilled public servant and the pensioner has reached the point where the pension rate is $44.72 a month behind that of the composite group of unskilled public servants, approximately $536 a year.

I am aware of the spread between the pension paid to the single 100 per cent pensioner and the control group of five named classes of unskilled public servants. The question of an upward adjustment of pension rates is under serious consideration.

Insofar as payment of pro rata pensions to widows of pensioned veterans is concerned, I have very little to add since a statement was last made on this subject. The suggestion has been made that a widow should receive a pro rata pension if her husband had been in receipt of a disability pension assessed at the rate of 47 per cent or less. This is because if his pension had been assessed at the rate of 48 per cent or more, the surviving dependants would be pensionable. What is sometimes forgotten is that in addition a widow will be pensioned if her husband's death was attributable to service or occurred during wartime regardless of the degree of the assessment of the disability.

The hon. member predicted that if people are in receipt of as little as 1 per cent pension I would make this statement, so I might as well make it. There is an opportunity to receive war veterans allowance if a person's income enables him to do so. The entire matter of veterans benefits—and that includes the basic rate of pension and pro rata benefits for widows—is under constant review by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Canadian Pension Commission and the other agencies of my ministry to see what changes can be made to improve the lot of veterans and their dependants. Both subjects are of great importance, and when I have something specific to report to the House, I will be more than pleased to do so.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR OPERATION OF SECURITY SERVICES—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF ALLEGEDLY ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on May 24 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether he took the position that the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) or the government should be responsible for the activities of the security services of the RCMP. The Prime Minister said that the principle of ministerial responsibility did apply, but he was less direct in indicating what sort of briefings the Solicitor General got from the force.

Since then interesting things have happened. On June 17 the Solicitor General said there would be no inquiry into the RCMP because the Montreal news agency break-in was, to use the Solicitor General's terminology, exceptional and isolated. Then, early in July, a complete reversal occurred. An inquiry was announced. Obviously, to put it in the most charitable way, between the minister and the RCMP there was an obvious failure to communicate. Who is responsible for this information gap or need "not to know"? I cannot believe it is totally the fault of the force.

A series of solicitors general have obviously been either too lazy, imperceptive or incompetent to become informed and to live up to their parliamentary obligations and traditions. Perhaps, as Shakespeare said, "When ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise". However, under the terms of reference of this inquiry announced last month there is no thrust, even in part, toward exploring the errors—if not of commission, then of omission—of the government or a series of solicitors general.

No, the RCMP is left literally alone to be checked, and nothing is said to any extent about any responsibility of its political masters. I would have expected this minister to have done better in living up to his responsibilities for the force than this. He has focused the inquiry on the RCMP, leaving the responsibility on the force, rather than assessing the degree of blame which ought to be attached to the Solicitor General and his predecessors.

If I may refer briefly to the British North America Act with reference to the responsibility for security services, there is an interesting, possible conflict between federal and provincial jurisdictions as far as the duties of the RCMP are concerned. As everyone knows, the force at one time was a territorial force known as the North West Mounted Police, with headquarters in Regina, which was then in a territory. Once a province was established, it had to enact its own police act, since every province had and has exclusive jurisdiction under section 92(14) of the BNA Act for its administration of justice. The provinces then enforced not only their own laws but those passed by parliament, for example, the Criminal Code and the War Measures Act.

An examination of section 91 of the act reveals significantly that while subsection (7) provides parliament with control over our militia, military and naval services and defence, there is no provision for the national police force, which is understandable in a way, since the administration of justice by parliament is confined by definition to the territories. Yet, when we turn to the RCMP Act we note an interesting conflict. That act passed by parliament, appoints every member of the force a peace officer in all Canada, and its officers ex officio justices of the peace.

The question which comes to mind is, how is it possible for parliament to pass this legislation, when the appointment of peace officers and justices of the peace is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. I shall develop this theme when time permits. For the present suffice it to say that the Royal Commission on Security in 1969 stated then that there is no exclusive statutory authority for the security role of the RCMP. In other words the RCMP, lacking parliamentary direction but realizing what was required, had to make its own terms of reference, which the royal commission pointed out as well. That is another indication of lack of backing for our national police force by a series of governments and ministers.

As a step in the right direction I suggest we should consider amending the BNA Act and inserting in section 91(7), in addition to the provisions concerning the militia, military and naval services and defence, a provision concerning national police and security services. Parliament should then regularize the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, after consulting with the provinces, and consider a better legislative foundation for our security services as well.

The minister, using his ministerial responsibility in the full meaning of the term, as I suggested earlier, owes it to the force to make certain that when the RCMP is contracted to a province, its work there shall be in no way unduly restricted. When I see a letter like the one I gave the minister today, a letter from an official of the Nova Scotia attorney general's department to a superintendent of the RCMP, instructing that officer to have deleted certain items from a file, items which would appear to be embarrassing to the Crown prosecutor, the same prosecutor whom the official informed the superintendent would be prosecuting the case, I suggest the Solicitor General owes a duty to the force in that respect, as well, to make certain its work is not being hindered. I think Superintendent Christian, the officer involved, is obviously unhappy with that situation, since he wrote three letters in 11 days. I think the minister has some responsibility for checking such a situation which also comes under the broad mantle of ministerial responsibility.

While the force must in the final analysis be responsible to the civil authority and conform as well to certain policies of the provinces to which it is under contract, the force must never be discouraged or brushed aside from certain areas of criminal investigation for reasons that those areas may touch on matters close to government, any government.

The RCMP is a proud, national force, with national standards of law enforcement to maintain. I trust that the Solicitor General, using his ministerial responsibility, will make sure that its mandate to enforce law and order is never impinged upon. I also hope that the government, in particular the Solicitor General, will do as it promised, implement some of the recommendations of Judge René Marin. In this way the minister would have better rapport with the force. I should like to see him improve its work conditions and see a more satisfactory and businesslike relationship between this important law enforcement agency and the Parliament of Canada. Until this is done we shall continue to have these unfortunate situations which have precipitated the present RCMP inquiry and which, as I said at the outset, do little credit to the concept of ministerial responsibility, since the force in effect is left holding the bag. All attention is focused on it and none of the responsibility is focused on those ministers who are responsible by definition and law for the force. I trust this matter will be remedied soon.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the principle of accountability is not one which the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) or the government simply acknowledges or endorses. It is a concept which is understood as fundamental to the system of parliamentary democracy in Canada. As practised in our system and by the government, it means acceptance of responsibility for the conduct of government and, of course, for the administrative machinery of the Government in Canada, in the sense it involves an obligation not simply to give direction but also to ensure that those directives given are carried out. But as with any other system of responsibility and obligation, it would be too simplistic to believe that the principle of accountability involves exactly the same thing in each of every aspect of its application. There is, at once, a general understanding of the principle and of its reality in practice.

Thus, in some areas of government endeavour one might anticipate, indeed expect, a rigorous form of this principle. In other, different areas of government operations, one equally expects a less controlled exercise of the principle. For example, the over-all system of government in Canada includes the operations of various Crown corporations. The nature of their activities ranges from that of support to Canadian industry active in the international area to the activity of those Crown corporations involved in domestic operations, such as the Canadian National Railways. These corporations have many features similar to private enterprise organizations, and in some cases they compete evenly in and with the private sector. In order to do so, they must be relatively free of direct ministerial involvement. Yet, at the same time, support given them from taxes collected at large demands ministerial control.

At the other end of the scale of government operations are those areas of endeavour which are of such importance to the national well-being that important ministerial involvement is essential. In the areas of regional disparity, employment, health and welfare, responsible ministers must ensure that the direction they request is indeed met and carried out. In such areas the nature of ministerial responsibility for appropriate public service organizational and individual response is critical. No minister of this government would deny his responsibility and that of departmental employees in such circumstances. There is then no question of the government's sense of and support for this principle. It is a principle which I believe has been met by government action.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—MEASURES TO STOP EXODUS OF CAPITAL TO UNITED STATES—REASON REAL ESTATE DEVELOPERS WILL NOT INVEST IN CANADA

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the heading of my adjournment speech tonight is "The Trudeau Government—Architects of the near destruction of Canada".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: At the rate we have been going and on the basis of the information which has come forward in the last couple of weeks we shall soon be able to remove the word "near".

On July 25 I addressed a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) with regard to measures he might take to stop the exodus of capital to the United States and inquiring as to the reason for which real estate developers will not invest in Canada. I got a typical Liberal answer. The minister said, in part, that changes costing something over $700 million had been made in favour of the corporate business sector in the budget of March 31 and the government believed that this, combined with a change in the dividend tax credit for business investment in Canada made for a favourable climate.

[Mr. Railton.]

That is a meaningless answer and it does absolutely nothing to help the economy. If the present trend of business going to the United States continues, within the next five years Canada will have from two million to 2.5 million unemployed and the government's make-work projects will not be able to match the dollars leaving this country. Over 400,000 students are leaving our schools and universities annually, but only 200,000 new jobs are being created annually. Members can see the direction in which we are headed. It is not a question of whether the government could be returned in the next general election. It is a question of whether we can afford to have it continue in office until this parliament comes to an end.

● (2220)

So that I will not be accused of making strictly a partisan speech tonight I want to quote a financial institution and other financial experts throughout Canada and the United States. Economists for the Royal Bank of Canada and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce have said that, based on their economic indicators, the current slump may continue into next year. So that absolutely nothing will be done for the one million unemployed in this country or about the mass exodus of investment money. A Royal Bank trader blamed it on lack of concern by the federal government. He said that people are waiting for the government to do something. Well, Mr. Speaker, we will be Rip Van Winkles with beards before this government does anything.

The type of answers that we have been receiving from the Prime Minister to the effect that investors will send their money where they will get the best return is an indication of the concern that he has. He tells people that if they cannot get a job in Canada they should go to the United States. The Royal Bank trader also said that the decline could fuel inflation by raising the price of imported goods. A Bank of Commerce economist said that the weakening in their indicator underscores the fragile state of Canada's economic recovery. These are damaging statements, Mr. Speaker.

According to an article in a recent Wall Street Journal issue, the weaker Canadian dollar is a sign that the money markets are telling the Prime Minister that they have even less confidence in his economic management—that should be mismanagement—than in that of the current U.S. administration. The article points out that the Prime Minister's complacency is not shared by many of his fellow Canadians. Canada is not doing so well. Its economy has been tangled up by a government effort to apply compulsory wage and price controls for nearly two years, when we should have had short-term controls as we in the Conservative party proposed. The article goes on to say:

While the nation's troubles are frequently attributed to the rise of the Quebec separatists, it would be more accurate to say that the rise of the Quebec separatists is closely related to the country's economic mismanagement.

Individual U.S. states are also opening up offices in the Montreal and Toronto areas and are being funded by the United States economic development administration. For example, the state of Vermont has opened up an office in Montreal to encourage Canadian businesses to move to the United States. The state wanted to be in a position to attract businesses wishing to move from the province of Quebec. They see that there is a lush open market here, and they know that no smart investor or any Canadian business is going to continue to operate in this country.

A number of United States bankers have combined to provide a $500,000 pool so that low interest loans can be offered to firms contemplating relocation to the United States. Furthermore, American towns and cities along the St. Lawrence plan to blitz Ontario with promotional campaigns aimed at luring Canadian industries across the border. Jefferson county and Watertown recently joined forces to open a new $800,000 industrial park which local officials hope to fill with Canadian satellite plants. They already have two, and leads on three others. That is another example of Canadian business and Canadian investors having no faith in Canada or in the present government.

Last year was a banner year for movements to the United States; 44 companies either moved to New York or expanded existing facilities. Twenty-five came from Ontario and 18 from Quebec. They brought in $28.6 million in investment money and created 1,330 new jobs. Canadians are also buying United States realty. For example, there are 17 major complexes being developed with Canadian money throughout the United States.

I would also draw the attention of the House to a most devastating article which I read recently entitled "Drifting along like ship without rudder", which has reference to this government. I want to point out, in closing, that the reason for all these business investors moving out of Canada is the overtaxation and the over-regulation which are confining these businesses to debt, and they can no longer operate in this country.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised a number of concerns about reports of business investment and, in particular, investment in real property flowing out of Canada and into the United States.

It is always difficult to obtain a clear and up to date perspective on investment flows in any particular business sector. However, it is important to note that investors continue to express confidence in the Canadian economy and the ability to obtain a return on investment in Canada. Thus, for example, total capital movements, unadjusted for seasonal variations, produced a net capital inflow of $810 million during the first quarter of 1977, while new issues of Canadian securities raised $1.4 billion.

Of course it is the case that within the total flow of capital there are movements in both directions, which represent the response of investors to market conditions and opportunities. In certain areas such as real estate development, two or three major projects can represent in themselves very large dollar transactions. However, it is important not to draw premature or unwarranted conclusions based on a limited number of cases.

It is true that we have faced in the last two years an uphill battle to restore the competitiveness of the Canadian economy, which is the prerequisite for sustained investment. That battle has been difficult, but with widespread public support and co-operation the inflation of our costs has been brought to more acceptable levels. Wage settlements have, for example, shown a steady deceleration in the first six months of this year. Negotiated settlements are now showing increases in the first year of the contract in the order of 8 per cent. In the manufacturing sector, first year increases in Canada were down to 7 per cent in the first quarter, falling below the United States increase of 7.8 per cent.

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) indicated in his response on July 25, the budget of March 31 provided additional assistance to equity investment and business finance in Canada, particularly through the increased dividend tax credit, the enriched investment tax credit, and additional measures to assist small business. With the rather cautious case of the current expansion, the full impact of those measures has yet to be felt; but there are encouraging signs of strengthening export markets, particularly in the United States. However, what is important is that we persist in the effort to hold the line on our costs if we wish to ensure the attractiveness of the Canadian economy to investors. That is why the government attaches importance to obtaining agreement with business and labour on wage and price restraint for the period after controls are lifted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—BASIS FOR DISTINGUISHING BETWEEN COMPANIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the extremely puzzling ability of the Prime Minister to separate certain foreign multinationals, such as Gulf Oil, the Rothschild financial empire and RTZ, whom he feels are good guys, from the other multinationals such as Westinghouse. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That the Prime Minister explain to this House, the Canadian people and the director of combines investigation how he decides which of the various multinationals is a good guy and which is a bad guy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSAL TO MAKE SEXUALLY RELATED MURDERS PUNISHABLE BY DEATH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity dealing with yet another sex related murder. I refer this time to the horrendous episode in Toronto involving an innocent 12 year old boy who became a victim of a sexual orgy. Although the city of Toronto, as well as provincial officials, are taking steps to close down sex oriented establishments, much broader action is necessary from parliament in order to stem any similar future episodes. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams):

That this House instruct the Minister of Justice to introduce legislation which would make sexually related murders punishable by death.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF AGREEMENT WITH DENISON MINES FOR PURCHASE OR SALE OF URANIUM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of reports that the federal government is now selling uranium to Denison Mines which it had recently purchased from the company as part of a federal government stockpile; in view of the suggestion that the government is selling this uranium back to the company at the same price at which they purchased it, in spite of the fact that the world price of uranium has risen $30 a pound since the initial purchase; and in view of the fact that if this is the case the government is passing on an enormous windfall profit to the company at the expense of Canadian taxpayers and at a time when wages for company employees were frozen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House instruct the government to clear up this issue by releasing any agreements it has with Denison Mines for the purchase or sale of uranium.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST BANK OF CANADA MAKE LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES WITHOUT INTEREST FOR SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent and important matter.

As most municipal administrations have many problems with their sewage treatment and discharge systems;

As most of our streams, lakes and rivers are in the process of becoming highly polluted;

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House order the central government, through the Bank of Canada, to allow loans at cost to the municipalities with a view to enabling them to finance the construction or expansion of sewage treatment and discharge facilities, which would at the same time create employment at a time when unemployment is extremely high in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON TAX PROVISIONS FOR ADVERTISING IN PERIODICALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

When the government promoted the advantages of Bill C-58 in the first session of this parliament, it promised that the provisions of that legislation would not only restrict unfair foreign competition but would also thereby help to establish an indigenous periodical industry in Canada. To date the government has collected about $5 million in taxes, lost about $200 million in convention business, and the periodical industry has not given birth to a major new publication.

In view of the fact the U.S. Senate foreign relations committee has approved a resolution criticizing Canada's posture and in view of the fact that at least one prominent U.S. Senator believes the Canadian provisions might end in disaster for bilateral trade relations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House instruct the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to adopt a position of enlightened self-interest and conciliation when negotiating with their American counterparts on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTED PLACEMENT OF ORDERS FOR RAILWAY CARS WITH SYDNEY STEEL PLANT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of continuing high unemployment in the Pictou County area of Nova Scotia, and in view of the need for additional railway rolling stock, including refrigerator cars, and in view of the pressing need for such cars by CN rail, particularly in Prince Edward Island, as outlined recently by both Premier Campbell and the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to forthwith arrange orders for the construction of a substantial number of suitable types of railway cars at the Hawker-Siddeley plant in Trenton, Nova Scotia.

EFFORTS TO SECURE RELEASE OF DANYLO SHUMUK FROM SOVIET UNION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. It concerns the plight of Danylo Shumuk, a Soviet citizen who has been imprisoned in the U.S.S.R. for over 27 years for activities that would constitute no crime in a free society. Given that Mr. Shumuk is living in great physical and mental deprivation, and that he is nearly 64 years of age, and that he has many relatives in Canada who are willing to sponsor his entry to Canada, and given that he has been adopted as a prisoner of conscience by Amnesty International since 1972, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the minister instruct the Canadian delegation to this fall's Belgrade Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe to publicly raise the plight of Danylo Shumuk, and take all steps to secure his release from the Soviet Union.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

MEASURES TO ENSURE CONTINUANCE OF SERVICE IN VIEW OF THREAT OF STRIKE BY AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the breakdown of negotiations between the air traffic controllers and the Government of Canada, the rotating strikes threatened to commence August 8 and the need, if this situation occurs, for the government to be rotated, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the government of Canada take immediate steps to ensure the continuance of air transportation services across Canada during the period from at least August 7, 1977, to August 19, 1977, during the period of the Canada summer games held in St. John's, the capital of Newfoundland, and the oldest civilized city on this side of the Atlantic.

REASON FOR LATE PUBLICATION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before beginning the question period perhaps I could advise members that there has been some difficulty with Hansard, partly due to some computer difficulty and partly due to the fact that a number of tables which were filed as part of answers to questions yesterday cannot be printed in the usual way by the computerized equipment. We are trying to finalize the printing of Hansard to get it into the hands of members as quickly as possible.

COMBINES

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—REMOVAL OR AMENDMENT OF ORDER IN COUNCIL PROHIBITING POSSESSION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He will recall that yesterday he said he would be prepared to review order in council No. PC-1976/2368, this offensive document limiting the access of members of parliament and Canadian citizens to information relevant to our understanding of the legal or illegal activities of the Government of Canada. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has considered changes or amendments with respect to this regulation and whether a changed regulation will be put into effect or the regulation removed today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, certainly not today. I have asked that the regulation be considered with a view to doing what I suggested yesterday. We want the Canadian public, and the opposition in particular, to be well informed about the reasons for our policy, why it was taken and what the effects of it would be. If it is necessary in order to obtain that and to permit the opposition to debate this fairly, we will see what we can do to amend the order in council. The intention, once again, is to permit the policy to be judged on its merits, and we will attempt to do that.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure how long it is going to take the government of Canada and the Prime Minister particularly to recognize the obvious, which is that we have here in this order in council a very serious restraint upon the capacity of the House of Commons to do its work. In light of the Prime Minister's recommendation to us yesterday in answer to a question by the hon. member for Calgary North—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Oh!

Mr. Clark: I just heard from the Minister of State (Multiculturalism). The last time we heard from him was when he voted against multiculturalism.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister is reported in Hansard to have said yesterday, and I quote: "If any person in this country, including a member of the opposition, thinks that we have acted illegally, redress is available in the courts". On the basis of the evidence we have seen, we in this party want to instruct our lawyers to investigate and advise on whether charges under the Combines Investigation Act are warranted and on what processes are open either to us or to other members of the Canadian public to act and to take advantage of the law. We have, however, been informed by very respected and responsible legal counsel that given this regulation it is impossible for them to advise or to give any opinion to us or to any member of the public in any way with respect to legal proceedings. This regulation makes it impossible for Canadian citizens to obtain advice with respect to the operations of the cartel and with respect to the legal or illegal activities of the Government of Canada.

Can the Prime Minister give us a commitment that whether by removal of this regulation or by amendment of this regulation we will have a situation where members of parliament or members of the public will not be barred from taking legal action or from seeing whether charges are warranted under the Combines Investigation Act? Can we have the commitment now that the impediment which responsible lawyers in Canada believe is created by this order in council will be removed so that the regular law of the land can apply, even though the people who suffer from that application might be the government of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the order in council itself has already been challenged in the courts, as the Leader of the Opposition may know, and it has been found by the courts to be a valid order in council.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is not the question; that is the problem.

Mr. Fraser: That just proves what he said.

Mr. Baldwin: We are talking about natural justice, not legality.

Mr. Trudeau: If we are talking about natural justice it seems to me—

Mr. Baldwin: You don't understand what natural justice is.

Mr. Trudeau: —the first precept would be to hear the other side of the question, which the opposition does not seem to want to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: You passed a law which says nobody can hear the other side of the question.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Shut up, big mouth.

Mr. Paproski: Listen to the red neck.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The animal is back. Welcome back, animal.

Mr. Trudeau: I have given the understanding that I would do everything possible to permit the opposition and the Canadian public to debate this fairly, to know the reasons for the policy and so forth. I have said if that entails a change in the order in council, I will direct such a change to be brought in. But the essence of the question, as I explained yesterday, was to protect the Canadian people, producers and consumers. I repeat, the opposition may not agree with that. They are entitled to know the facts, so that they can debate this question properly. But if that policy is justified and if it means not letting competitors of the Canadian industry know certain data relating to that industry, then, obviously, there will have to be some embargo on the spreading of that particular knowledge. I repeat, this will depend on whether the opposition has the data at hand and whether or not it can debate the justification of this policy.

● (1120)

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This regulation, in effect, will stop the Parliament of Canada and the people of Canada from having and pursuing data which might relate to illegal activities by the Government of Canada. I asked the Prime Minister a simple question: Will he give us a firm commitment, now, to remove the obstacle which now prevents Canadian citizens, including members of parliament, from taking the kind of legal action which would be open to us in normal cases but is closed to us in this case, because the Government of Canada has passed an order in council to give itself special protection against inquiry into illegal acts in which it may have been involved.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, since the question is phrased in that way, I must say I disagree with the advice the hon. gentleman received from his lawyers. I would say that if the Government of Canada has acted illegally or if there is cause to believe this, there is no impediment in the courts to proceeding—

Mr. Stevens: What about the regulation.

Mr. Trudeau: And the regulation itself, I suggest, would not stand in the way of that.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am the law, says the Prime Minister.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—REASON FOR NOT PASSING LEGISLATION TO PROHIBIT EXTRATERRITORIAL APPLICATION OF LAW

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we can get a better legal opinion than that offered by the Prime Minister, and we have it. That legal opinion is that this order in council, passed by the government to protect itself from scrutiny, bars this party, any Canadian citizen or any member of parliament from proceeding in the courts or having an inquiry started under the Combines Investigation Act. I asked the Prime Minister to have that stopped. I have asked him three times to give us a simple, clear, unequivocal commitment that he will remove this obstacle directly.

I ask, why did the Prime Minister, as head of the government, choose not to follow the example set by the government of Australia which, when faced with a problem similar to that cited by the Prime Minister, simply passed legislation to prevent extra-territorial demands for information? This order in council, in contrast to what is happening in Australia where they respect the rights of their legislators and of the citizens, stops domestic inquiry into domestic matters. If the Prime Minister of Canada wanted to prevent extraterritorial demands for information, he could have done as Australia did and passed legislation. Why did he not do that? Why did he, instead, bring in this odious order in council which seriously restricts the rights and capacities to inquire of this parliament and of the people of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the second part of his question the Leader of the Opposition was arguing policy, arguing that another policy would have been more appropriate. This is what we are prepared to debate.

Miss MacDonald: We are concerned about the legal issue.

Mr. Grafftey: The Prime Minister's approach is Nixonian.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, it reminds you of Richard Nixon.

Mr. Trudeau: On the first part of the question, I repeat what I said a moment ago. If the government of Canada or any person in this country has acted illegally, there is no impediment that would stand in front of the courts for attacking that illegality.

Mr. Clark: There is this impediment.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition is showing an order in council—

Mr. Fraser: You wouldn't get through first year law school—

Mr. Trudeau: —and I hear from the hon. member for Vancouver South who is talking about law school. I do not think the remark is very appropriate in this context.

Mr. Fraser: I said you wouldn't get through first year law school with the argument you are advancing.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You wouldn't even get passed Cité Libre.

Mr. Hees: You wouldn't get into law school.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They might even take your degree back.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure it is appropriate for me to give legal advice to members opposite. Apparently they would not even listen to it, let alone understand it. If they had any courage, or if their lawyers had any courage and they believed what they are saying—

An hon. Member: Lay a charge.

Mr. Hees: It's the old broken record, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: If they had any courage—

Mr. Hees: Wind up that old gramophone.

Mr. Trudeau: —they would look at a piece of legislation that the right hon. member for Prince Albert brought in some years ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: They don't even know about it.

Miss MacDonald: Just remember the War Measures Act.

Mr. Hees: Pierre, you need some new writers. You are running down.

Mr. Trudeau: Here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What are you going to do about that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Hees: Throw him out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This line of questions and answers which began a while ago has degenerated into an argument over legal opinions which is really not appropriate to the question period. Because it consisted of questions being put in a serious vein by the Leader of the Opposition to the Prime Minister, I naturally extended considerable leniency in the scope of the questions. However, for some time now participants have been arguing over legal interpretations. It is really not germane to the question period in which strictly information is sought and not opinions, particularly not arguments over opinions sought outside the House. I think the hon. member for York-Simcoe wants to continue the line of questioning. Perhaps that might be permitted, but they will have to be factual rather than along the lines of legal opinion or advice.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—IDENTIFICATION OF LEGAL OPINION TO WHICH PRIME MINISTER REFERRED

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Prime Minister. It arises out of a statement by the Prime Minister and recorded in Hansard to the effect that he had a legal opinion from the Department of Justice of Canada to the effect that they were not infringing the Combines Act. In the hope that we can identify which legal opinion the Prime Minister is referring to, as there are several legal opinions referred to in various documents that we now have in our possession, will the Prime Minister indicate if the legal opinion to which he made reference yesterday was the one to which Mr. Jack Austin made reference during a meeting recorded in a memo between Mr. O. J. C. Runnalls to Mr. Austin dated June 15, 1972 in which Mr. Austin stated that it had been necessary to measure the risk of falling within the confines of the Combines Investigation Act. It had seemed to be a reasonable business risk to accept the arrangement up to 1977 but beyond that, however, the risk of infraction of the act was substantial. Is that the legal opinion that subsequently was forthcoming to which he referred yesterday? Mr. Austin, in the memo to which I have referred, ended up by stating that a regulation would be passed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question seems to be clear without further reference to the matter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the memo that the hon. gentlemen is putting before the House. I am aware that when this policy was put together, it was done with the participation of the Department of Justice and the Deputy Attorney General. We envisaged, as we always do, what the proper way of implementing a policy is, that it is within the law. I have this assurance and this was done at the time by the deputy attorney general. In what form he expressed his opinion I have not yet ascertained, and I could not say if it was done at the time of, or in relation to, the particular document quoted by the hon. gentleman.

● (1130)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that the justice opinion that he is apparently referring to, on the basis of which he justifies the government's participation in this questionable affair, is actually part of a four point program of government accommodation conceived and drafted by the producers and fully orchestrated by them to give them, if I may quote from a memo, "some insulation"? Also Chief Justice Estey of Ontario is reported in a memo to have stated that "an opinion will be rendered by the Minister of Justice which will prevent any action under Canada law . . . at least as long as the present government is in power", to which a Gulf official is reported to have replied: "The political implications of"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is obviously entering into a debate. I indicated yesterday that we would welcome this debate. We will put every fact we have before parliament so it can debate this matter properly. Obviously, this game of putting statements on the record of which I have no knowledge may be profitable for the hon. gentleman, but I do not think it advances the question whether the government at that time either acted legally or illegally. Nor does it answer the question whether we did so in the interests of the Canadian people or not. We are anxious to have this debated—

Mr. Gillies: Can you act illegally in the interests of the Canadian people?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand another hon. gentleman has a question; perhaps you could recognize him.

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—OBJECTIVE OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister and I hope that he will have a view on this. Gulf officials, in a memo originating from Bermuda, indicated that the primary objective of the Canadian uranium export regulations is basically to implement the over-all cartel arrangement. A secondary objective is to implement the over-all cartel in the safest possible manner, with a view to the hazards of the combines act. Would the Prime Minister indicate if in fact they were the primary and secondary reasons for the regulation passed in 1972?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I do not know the context of these documents. The hon. gentleman could ask any of his lawyer friends. It seems to me that that is the kind of thing a lawyer would say. He would want to advise you to do some things which would keep you out of the reach of the law. That is the way lawyers give advice. They want to make sure that their clients are not doing anything which is illegal. It seems to me that that is what this particular phrase is saying.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ADOPTION OF DIRECT JOB-CREATING MEASURES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Considering that the most recent report on Canadian profits which was published in today's press shows that corporate profit increases in Canada for the second quarter of this year averaged some 12 per cent, with more than half the groups surveyed increasing their profits from 13 to 31 per cent, and considering that the Minister of Finance has admitted that the budget's $1.2 billion tax incentives to business which will come on top of these profits are being unproductive in terms of job creation, I would ask the Minister of Finance whether he would now reconsider this $1.2 billion package as being both unproductive and unfair and reallocate the equivalent sum of money to direct job creation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to contest the assertion of the hon. gentleman that I at any stage admitted that the proposals in the budget will not be effective for the purpose of strengthening the Canadian economy and contributing particularly to employment. I would point out to him that one of the most significant ways in which to create additional employment, in particular in Canada, is through additional investment in the public sector—

Mr. Broadbent: The private sector.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —the private sector, thank you very much. The best way of attracting that kind of investment is to make sure that it is going to gain a return. I think even the hon. member would be able to understand that an investment which is going to get a return is in the interests of all Canadians, and in that sense the hon. member should favour the proposal.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering that a manufacturing sector operating only at 80 per cent capacity because of a fall in domestic demand and other reasons is most unlikely to use these kinds of incentives to expand unused facilities any further, a fact which the President of the Treasury Board alluded to when he said that the budget has failed and which the Prime Minister alluded to when he said that the budget has failed in terms of job creation, I would ask him to follow up on his Freudian slip when he said that the way to create jobs now is through public investment and assure the House that before we come back in the fall the government will take some initiative to create jobs for the one million Canadians who need them.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out to the hon. gentleman, as he knows, that when he says that the President of the Treasury Board says the budget has failed it is a falsehood, and he knows that it is false. We are keeping the economy under careful examination. At the same time we must be concerned about a recurrence of inflation and the impact of unemployment. It is to maintain a balance between the two that we have been following this policy. If indeed as time moves on there has to be a change in that policy we will make it. It seems clear to us at the moment that we should not depart from the basic policy, which is directed at trying to restore private investment in this country and at the same time not increase inflation.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance said that I had said something which is false. I repeat what I have just said, that he himself, the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister in recent weeks have said that the private sector is not doing what they believe ought to have been done in terms of job creation, and that the budget measures presumably related to that have not been successful. I repeat that.

In view of these concessions made publicly in recent weeks, and in view of the Minister of Finance's own commitment made a few weeks ago that during the first week of August the government would make a decision on some new job creation efforts, I would ask the Minister of Finance whether we are now going to get those new job creation efforts, or is the Minister of Finance saying to the people of Canada that they can freeze in the dark in the coming winter in terms of new job efforts by the government?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would just repeat to the hon. gentleman that it is quite false to say that the Prime Minister, the President of the Treasury Board or I have made this statement which the hon. gentleman alleges. He would know if he examined the record that there is absolutely no foundation for those allegations.

Mr. Broadbent: Read the papers.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have read the papers. I know what the hon. gentleman says and it is pure invention on his part. With regard to the question of further measures for this winter, as I have said there is an additional quarter of a billion dollars going into direct employment measures this coming winter. I indicated that we would be conducting an examination, as indeed we have, of the current state of the economy to determine whether we should decide on further public investment at this time. We have decided not to change the fiscal framework at this time for this purpose. Obviously, we will have to watch the economy carefully during the balance of the summer and in the fall to see if further changes in fiscal or financial policy will have to be made.

INDUSTRY

SHOES—FINDINGS OF ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Can the minister tell the House whether he can live up to the commitment he made on July 19 concerning the position he or the government will take about the obvious conclusions of the interim report of the Anti-dumping Tribunal which is investigating the footwear situation in Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are now consulting with manufacturers, importers and consumer associations to determine what would be the best policy; we had meetings last week and this week and we hope to be able to announce a policy on this subject in the near future.

REQUEST FOR CONTROL OF LEATHER GOODS IMPORTS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Can the minister tell us whether the manufacturers will be able to have better cooperation from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the future as far as the import of footwear and of related products such as leather, etc, is concerned?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I do not know what the hon. member is alluding to; my department is always prepared to co-operate with all industrial sectors in Canada.

COMBINES

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—KNOWLEDGE OF LEGAL ADVISER OF EFFECT OF ARRANGEMENT ON DOMESTIC PRICES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, which refers to the cartel arrangement the government entered into. Any documentation we have seen concerning this cartel, or any legal opinion, seems to suggest it was either illegal, or if not that, it would not effect a restriction of a reduction of prices to Canadian consumers. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the legal opinion he has indicating that this cartel was legal is based upon knowledge that it would in fact fix prices and raise prices to Canadian consumers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said earlier. The arrangement was put together with the participation of the deputy attorney general of Canada. Obviously he knew what the arrangement was. I suppose it was evident that this would be the effect—that prices would be set. Our opinion was that this was a legal arrangement and we proceeded with it.

ENERGY

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—GOVERNMENT'S KNOWLEDGE OF EFFECT OF ARRANGEMENT ON DOMESTIC PRICES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, an examination of the documents seems to indicate that the Canadian representatives were of the opinion that it would not be applied in Canada and would not affect prices to Canadian consumers.

Perhaps I could direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and ask him, as the principal agent of this conspiracy, whether he knew it would have the effect of raising prices to Canadian utilities such as Ontario Hydro, or if he believed, as the early discussions seemed to indicate, that it would not have that effect on domestic Canadian prices? Who conned whom? Did the government know that by entering into this agreement it would be raising prices to Canadian public utilities to the extent that the prices went up? They went up almost 300 per cent. Did the government know this was the penalty they were imposing upon Canadian consumers, when it entered into that arrangement?

Mr. Clark: Did its lawyers know?

Mr. Gillies: And, did its lawyers know?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it has been made very clear many times that this arrangement was aimed at export sales and it was aimed at stabilizing the remaining markets of the world, which at that time represented only 30 per cent of the market. It was being competed for by the producers of at least five major countries. As the hon. member may know, at that time the price of uranium was lower in many instances than the cost of uranium. For those reasons, if there had not been such a cartel arrangement, to use the hon. member's words, then in all probability there would not have been a viable uranium industry today.

Mr. Stevens: Baloney!

Mr. Hees: Why don't you answer the question?

Mr. Gillespie: The second aspect of the hon. member's question seems to imply that as a result of this producers' arrangement the price, which was then somewhere in the order of $5, went up to $40 a pound. If the hon. member has looked at the circumstances, he must know that the main increase in price occurred after the oil price increase. Second, he must know that the price of the arrangement in all respects, except for one month, was lower than the United States domestic price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMBINES

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—POSSIBILITY OF CHARGES BEING LAID

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, obviously the minister did not answer the question. If he is trying to say to the people of Canada that this cartel was put together to keep prices down, that is just absolutely inconceivable.

I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If it can be demonstrated that the action of this cartel was to fix prices and limit production in Canada, which is clearly in contravention of the competition act, will the minister lay charges, as it is his duty and responsibility to do? Will he lay charges under the law? This arrangement has been expensive to Canadian people. Will he lay those charges, if we give him the documentation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may want to make some response; but I cannot overlook the fact that the question in its basic terms is hypothetical. The hon. member may wish to rephrase his question and the minister may want to make some response. I am not restricting the minister; but surely there could not be a more basically hypothetical question than the one put by the hon. member for Don Valley.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Let him comment.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I completely endorse Your Honour's view that the question is hypothetical.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: The fact is that the government—

Mr. Clark: It makes one wonder about its source.

Mr. Abbott: —in carrying out this measure did so in consultation with the bureau of competition policy. The government received the advice of its law officers. The project was proceeded with as a legally proper action by the government.

The hon. member is asserting that it is an illegal action. I would reiterate that the Prime Minister's point is simply this: if such a belief exists, then action should be taken by those who say so to prove so.

An hon. Member: We can't!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED URANIUM CARTEL—REQUEST FOR IMMUNITY FROM PROSECUTION FOR POSSESSION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. His anxiety to debate in this House the legality of the proceedings, which the government took in conjunction with the companies, is evident and also the propriety of the regulation passed to prevent information from being given. We have some problems in getting the proper information or documentation upon which we can debate intelligently. I note a hint from what Your Honour said yesterday that until there has been clear danger to a member of the House we may not be able to find there is a breach of privilege. I would find it difficult to debate this issue from the cell which might be occupied more properly by other people.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he would be prepared to give the same absolution to members of this House and their counsel as the Minister of Justice gave those involved in the 1972 cartel, in order that we will be free to obtain the necessary documentation and papers to prepare our case in this House, and if necessary, for the purpose of laying charges outside the House under the act? Will the Prime Minister give us the same privilege as his government extended to the companies involved in the cartel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that seems to be a rather circumlocutive way to ask if the hon. member can attack the government on its alleged illegal behaviour. My answer earlier was that he certainly could. If he feels the government has acted illegally, if he feels that due process is not possible in this, and if he feels that the order in council does not permit him to have due process in this country, then I think they should attack the order in council under the Bill of Rights. The right hon. member for Prince Albert might be able to advise them on that. When I was trying to explain earlier I was just talking to a howling mob, and I do not think that is conducive to finding out the truth.

An hon. Member: Swing it again.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, now that we have descended into a quiet, judicial atmosphere where we can have an intelligent examination and cross-examination, will the Prime Minister answer the last part of my question? Is he prepared to consult with his Minister of Justice so that we can have assurance on this side of the House that we will be able to properly and legally obtain the documentation required to make our case in the House, and if necessary, on the advice of counsel outside the House, for prosecution under the Combines Investigation Act? Will he give us that assurance?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman knows that neither the Minister of Justice, nor anyone else, can absolve in advance anyone from committing an illegality. If the government of Canada has committed an illegality, this will be proved in the courts.

• (1150)

Some hon. Members: How?

Mr. Trudeau: It will not be proved by any defence or legal opinion of the Department of Justice. It will be proved in the courts.

The next question is: How does one prove it in the courts. To this, I have two answers—I feel I am giving very valuable legal advice to members who probably do not appreciate it. But there are two ways. The first is to go to the minister of energy under the regulations, under the regulation in the second paragraph, and ask him for any information which is felt to be needed in order to test the government on the legality of its position. And if he refuses, I tell the opposition that they should find lawyers who are prepared to consult with the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert—

An hon. Member: And take a chance.

Mr. Trudeau: And take a chance, Mr. Speaker. When you go before the courts and you believe in your legal case, when you are not simply involved in political histrionics such as we have seen in the past couple of days, you don't fool around; you go to a lawyer, you take the government to the courts and you prove your case and you have the courage to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

POSSIBILITY OF ATTENDANCE AT OPENING OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of accepting the accolade the Prime Minister has just given me. But I do appreciate the welcome I have received from the House of Commons today and if I had the athletic capacity of the Prime Minister I would do either a pirouette or, if I might use the proper expression, the kick which he performed this morning in the House.

Again, I wish to ask the Prime Minister the question I asked him earlier concerning the possibility of Her Majesty the Queen opening parliament. I am wondering whether he is in a position to tell us what the situation is.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We on this side are very glad to welcome the right hon. gentleman back to the House of Commons. This is not only because of our great affection for him, which is well known and which was established, I believe, in the month of June of this year, but because he is an expert in due process and I am sure he would be an addition to his caucus at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I am not sure whether the right hon. gentleman was away when I answered this question a short time ago. I said I had invited Her Majesty in a hypothetical form—in other words, if we were able to open parliament at the time of her visit, would she be prepared to read the Speech from the Throne. She graciously accepted, as I believe I reported to the House, at which time I indicated that the date of the opening of parliament would only be known with certainty when parliament opens.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: We are not certain, now, when parliament will close. The various parties are consulting on the possibility of sitting beyond today and it may be that our plans for having parliament open on October 18 will not materialize. However, for the time being we are still planning on that assumption and it is on that basis I invited Her Majesty and she accepted.

GRAIN

WHEAT—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN DOMESTIC PRICE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. The hon. gentleman told the House recently that the two-price wheat policy was under review. I should like to ask him whether he has completed this review and if so whether there will be an upward adjustment in the price along the lines recommended by the wheat pool, namely, from $3.25 for domestic wheat sold in this country to $4 a bushel. If he has completed the review will he announce his policy today and make any increase retroactive?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a final decision has not yet been taken, but is imminent.

FEED GRAIN—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I wish to ask a supplementary question which also has to do with the price of grain. In the last two years, the price of feed grain sold outside the Wheat Board has been less than the price received for feed grain sold within the Wheat Board. When he brought down his new policy, the minister made a commitment that this would not happen. Since the policy has obviously failed, is the hon. gentleman now considering placing feed grains under the Wheat Board or, at least, conducting a plebiscite which would enable the farmers to decide how they wish to sell feed grain.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The hon. member is completely falsifying the record in relation to anything I said about prices of grain. There were expressions of protection in relation to the guarantee and initial prices, but in the ordinary course of events when there are quotas on Wheat Board grains and an open quota on non-Wheat Board grain it is to be expected that the non-Board price would fall somewhat below the Board price. That was always the broad expectation although, of course, market forces work in different ways.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—MINISTERS' VIEW ON RETENTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Since this may be the last day upon which we shall sit until October, can the minister clarify certain statements he has made about the Crow rate? Can he tell us once and for all that he agrees with what the Hall Commission is saying and that the Crow rate must stay.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have emphasized in the House that I fully support the Hall Commission's statement. The Hall Commission said emphatically that the Crow rate should remain statutory and made permanent protection, and I endorse that position completely. But the Hall Commission did go on to say a number of other things which need reconciliation in terms of the rate and products carried, and this raises some difficult questions.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO DEAL WITH SEX RELATED MURDER

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and it is further to my motion dealing with the brutal sex murder of 12-year old Manuel Jaques of Toronto. Could the minister tell us what action the government is taking or intends to take in order to minimize such dastardly incidents, bearing in mind that officials of both the city of Toronto and of the province of Ontario are taking action within their own jurisdictions? Such action may be a step in the right direction but I believe much broader federal action is necessary in order to discourage any such further incidents. What is this action to be?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): I share the concern of the hon. member and of the people of Toronto about this matter. All the alleged activities involved would appear to be criminal offences already and therefore subject to the enforcement of the Criminal Code provisions. I am continuing discussions with my provincial counterparts in connection with certain aspects of pornography, and as a result of our most recent discussions in June my officials are examining, in consultation with provincial officials, possible amendments to the Criminal Code in relation to pornography. However, I emphasize that the activities alleged to have been committed in Toronto are clearly contrary to the law and a matter for law enforcement.

● (1200)

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT PROVIDING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT FOR CERTAIN TYPES OF MURDER

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have one supplementary question. In view of the minister's answer and because sex related murders as well as the murder of police officers, as has occurred in the incident here in Ottawa recently, continue to take place even after the House passed the Capital Punishment bill against the wishes of the great majority of Canadians, would the minister consider introducing legislation which would make sexually related murders as well as murders of prison guards and police officers punishable by death? If not, would the minister consider approaching cabinet about including the question of capital punishment by way of a referendum in the next federal election?

Mr. Speaker: That is clearly a recommendation.

CUSTOMS

PROPOSAL TO PROHIBIT PORNOGRAPHY FROM ENTERING CANADA

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that Criminal Code section 159(8) clearly defines obscenity, and that pornography is obscenity in its most gross and extreme form, and given that all pornography brought into Canada is the product of organized crime in the United States, and given the fact that the main Canadian distributor is well known in Canada as being Maclean-Hunter publishing Company—

Some hon. Members: Right.

Mrs. Holt: —and given the fact that these products not only require illegal use of children, animals and adults for illustration but also counsel law breaking in their texts, will the Minister of National Revenue move to halt all pornography entering Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This seems to be clearly a representation, as was the case of the question put by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order dealing with the matter that was raised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a few moments ago. I say with some regret that a number of questioners on the matter of the uranium cartel, because of the shortness of time could not put their questions. I want to make that clear. I rise because I think the Prime Minister may have inadvertently misled the House. He indicated that some discussions were going on now regarding the extension of the period of sittings of the House while we are here. I must say to him that that is not so. There have been no discussions at all amongst the representatives of the parties about extending the sittings of the House for any purpose whatsoever. That is the first point.

The Prime Minister alluded, in the course of his remarks, to the fact that he would be interested in having a debate at some time to be agreed upon. I presume he would have no objection to a debate on Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday of next week—and I am not limiting myself to time when I say that—so this matter can be completely dealt with. I want to make it quite clear to the Prime Minister and to the government House leader that there is no objection on this side of the House to having a debate on this issue, but there is and would be great objection to having such a debate if it were conducted without the documents which have been referred to being tabled in the House of Commons so that all all members of the House have access to them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It would seem absolutely fruitless, on one hand, for a debate on such a matter as this to be carried on under the shroud of this odious order in council, as it has been described rather benevolently and, on the other hand, for a debate to be carried on in the face of the failure of the government to produce the documents upon which this debate would take place. Moreover, I think that regardless of whether the debate and further action will take place in the House or in the courts, it would be difficult, if not impossible—and the government knows this—to prosecute the case, whether or not there is courage to do so, and there would be little point and no advantage gained in prosecuting the case outside or inside the House without the production of the documents.

These are the conditions upon which any debate should take place in the House, and I presume that either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) or perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), would be prepared to rise in their place in the House now and indicate that they and their officials have authority to release to Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and to any other member of parliament who wishes to have them the documents which were intended to be enveloped, enshrouded and hidden away in the order in council entitled "Security of Information".

In the course of this point of order I invite the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to authorize any person, organization or corporation who has these documents to release them for the purpose of a debate in the House and in the interests of justice and full disclosure of truth with respect to this matter. I now invite him to say that all organizations which have these documents, including his own department and any other agency, can now disclose them and that, in aiding this process, he will do the courageous and honourable thing and table these documents in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the position, as the hon. member clearly must know, to give that kind of "carte blanche" order with respect to a very large number of documents of a confidential nature, documents which involve not just the Canadian government but arrangements between the Canadian government and other foreign governments. Clearly, the hon. member could not expect this. If he thought for one moment that I could give him that undertaking, then I can only consider his question to be a very frivolous question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—MEMBERS' RIGHTS RESPECTING ORDERS IN COUNCIL—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before allowing the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) to state his question of privilege, I should like to deal with the question of privilege raised yesterday by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). The hon. member interpreted correctly the preliminary opinion I gave yesterday, which I now confirm.

I should like to make reference to a ruling I made on March 17 of this year which was with reference to a very similar question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River. I think it is important to understand that the Chair should not attempt to decipher legal opinions and decide between one and another legal opinion. Furthermore, the Chair should not attempt to decide whether or not government action is technically or legally justified.

The Chair has to decide on questions of procedure and whether they extend into the area of privilege. Privilege, while it goes beyond procedure into substance, does in fact, for obvious reasons, have a strict definition. That strict definition has been repeated many times in the past, and it relates to actual interference with a member of parliament in the discharge of his or her duties. In fact, the hon. member for Peace River referred to this order in council as being a potential interference in that regard. Were it an actual interference, it would be a different situation so far as the argument is concerned. At the moment, I think all hon. members will agree that if there is the interference described in the terms put forward yesterday by the hon. member for Peace River, it is potential in nature and not actual. Therefore, I reiterate the ruling I gave on March 17 in respect of some regulations that were passed at that time which had a similar potential effect.

While members are expressing fear that the effect of this order in council might be to restrict them in the transportation, use or release of documents in their possession, unless the restriction has taken place I believe it would be an unwarranted extension of the definition of privilege for the Chair to indicate that the danger of that taking place, rather than the actuality of it, constituted a question of privilege. Therefore, I set aside the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River yesterday.

MR. BROADBENT—ANSWER OF MINISTER OF FINANCE DURING ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It pertains to a very serious accusation made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). He has totally mismanaged the Canadian economy, and rather than acknowledging that, he makes accusations about hon. members when they try to put the record straight. The minister said earlier in the question period that what I said was false and that I knew it was false. That is a serious accusation for one member to make about another member of the House, and I do not take it lightly.

I want to document for the minister what other ministers have said on the subject of the failure of the budget, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and then I will let the Minister of Finance repeat his accusation, if he wants to. The point I made during the question period is that a variety of ministers of the Crown have acknowledged the failure of the budget to create jobs by stimulating the private sector. It was that which the Minister of Finance said was a false description of what had been said. I see he is nodding his head.

I have reference here to three ministers who support the question I put to the Minister of Finance. The judgment of these three ministers is that the budget has failed. The first judgment was made by the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) in a speech, appropriately enough, to the Canadian Manufacturers Association in Toronto on July 12. He was talking about the failure of the Canadian economy to create jobs and, related to that and entirely appropriately, to growing feelings of disunity in the country. At that time the President of Treasury Board said, and I quote from his text:

—pressure is building to substitute public spending on direct public sector job creation . . . and there will be very heavy pressure indeed if significant private sector employment increase, through expanded or new activity, is not forthcoming soon.

The whole thrust of that part of the speech of the President of Treasury Board was that the private sector was not producing the jobs that the government expected it would in its earlier budget. In addition to the President of the Treasury Board, I would like to quote the Minister of Finance himself. In a newspaper article which appeared in the Toronto Star on July 22 we find the following:

The federal government may be forced to spend more on emergency job creation if business investment doesn't pick up soon, says finance minister Donald Macdonald.

"We will have to make a decision by the end of this month," he told the Star yesterday. If government projections indicate investment is not going to improve in the next few months, "perhaps we'll have to step in."

Later in the same article it says:

In his March budget, Macdonald provided $1.2 billion in tax cuts for companies in the hope they would expand and create more jobs.

Yesterday, he admitted the strategy wasn't working.

The story continues in the same vein. Finally, I would like to refer to the Prime Minister. In the same article pertaining to the failure of the budget to create jobs, in the judgment of the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister is quoted as having said earlier in the week—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Where?

Mr. Broadbent: The source I have is a Toronto Star article, and it put the words of the Prime Minister in quotation marks.

I will try to track it down for the minister, but in the last 40 minutes it has been hard for me to find anything more specific than words attributed directly to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is reported to have said that the private sector "has not taken up the slack which was provided for it in the budget".

The President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Finance, and the Prime Minister all passed judgment, explicitly or implicitly, on the failure of the budget to create jobs—and if that does not support the questions I asked, I do not know what does. If the Minister of Finance has any respect for truth—even if he has no concern about job creation—I suggest he withdraw the accusation he made when he said that what I said was false.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, right at the start I will withdraw the comment I made that the hon. gentleman was misleading the House. I recognize that under the rules of this House, whatever my personal belief, I am not entitled to say that any other hon. member is deliberately setting out to mislead. Therefore, I can say that the statements the hon. gentleman made were false, and I think he has shown on the record that they are false. However, I am not accusing, and I withdraw any accusation that he is trying to mislead.

What I am saying is that he just does not know any better. The remarks made by the hon. member do not at all reinforce the arguments he made. He said that ministers had acknowledged—and I have not seen the blues yet—and admitted that the budget had failed. I have spoken to my colleagues, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in this regard and they both affirm that they have never at any time said that. In addition, the quotations read by the hon. gentleman do not support that whatsoever. The quotations he read are, "We may be forced to spend more if business does not pick up soon," and, "Perhaps we will have to step in". Both quotations refer to possible future measures. In other words, that is what I said to the hon. gentlemen—indeed, also in response to the hon. gentleman's colleague in this House—and I think it is significant that the Leader of the NDP chose to refer to press reports rather than statements actually made by me in response to his colleague right here in the House.

I would like to refer the hon. gentleman to the response I gave on July 21 to his colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman). In that response he will find the position I took at that time and the position I have been taking consistently. As recorded at page 7860 of Hansard, I said the following:

> Mr. Speaker, I am not considering a fall budget. However, at the end of this month I will be having an analysis of the first quarter returns, and as much as is available on the second quarter returns, made to determine whether in the absence of private expenditure some additional public expenditure—additional to that announced by my colleague the other day—will be desirable for this coming winter.

In response to questions today, I said that we have made that analysis and decided that with the present balance between inflation and unemployment in the economy we should not make further public expenditure at this time. I think it is fair to say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that that statement is clearly on the record. I will examine very closely the quotations he has made, but on the face of them I suggest that they bear absolutely no support for the proposition which the hon. gentleman put forward, that ministers have acknowledged that the budget has failed. There is nothing in the record, either in Hansard or in the statements he has quoted, which supports in one whit the allegations he has made. I cannot say he was trying to mislead the House, and I withdraw that, but I say the statement was false.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. The House has just heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) say that there is nothing in Hansard and nothing on the record indicating that government ministers or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have indicated that the measures to stimulate the private sector have failed, in terms of producing jobs. I refer the minister to page 7829 of Hansard for July 20, 1977. On that day I asked the Prime Minister the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Prime Minister, since the Minister of Manpower and Immigration copped out.
> In view of the fact that construction in the private sector is stagnating or declining, a fact which indicates that the private sector has not reacted to hand-outs granted to them in the last couple of budgets, can the Prime Minister tell the House if he is now prepared to stimulate business investment and to improve the lot of working people by bringing in a new budget as soon as possible which will grant major tax concessions to low income and middle income groups of Canadians?

The Prime Minister answered as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, that seems to be the type of representation that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance would want to convey to the minister. The hon. member heard me say just a short while ago—and I believe the Minister of Finance has also said this—that we are concerned because the private sector has not taken up the slack which was provided for it in the budget. In that sense I agree with the concern of the hon. member.

The clear indication and implication from that response is that the budget measures have not served the purpose for which they were designed. The minister is deliberately trying to obfuscate the issue by accusing my leader and by saying that he is misleading the House. The Prime Minister himself has clearly indicated that the measures in the budget are not solving the problem.

● (1220)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Any vestige of a question of privilege vanished when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) rose in his place to withdraw allegations concerning any deliberate misleading of the House. However, he said during the question period that there had been some misleading, or that something said by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) was false. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby was given time to raise the matter as a question of privilege. The Minister of Finance responded and withdrew his allegations suggesting the hon. member had been deliberately misleading the House. Any other arguments seem to me to relate to the interpretation of answers given or statements made. That becomes a matter of debate and discussion, and not a question of privilege.

MR. STEVENS—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER ON QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE OF MR. BALDWIN

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which arises from the ruling Your Honour made on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). As I understood the thrust of your ruling, you came down against the motion my colleague proposed to move, on the basis that there was no infringement, other than an apprehended infringement, of the rights of members of parliament with respect to the regulation concerning the security of information regulation with respect to the uranium question.

My question of privilege is this. In my case there has already been an infringement, in my view, of my right to perform as a member of parliament in this House. I requested a large Toronto law firm to review the documentation I had at my disposal, to determine to what extent they felt an offence had been committed and, second, to what extent they felt that offence had been committed not only by officials of companies in the private sector but by certain members of the government as well. They considered the question. Upon my drawing their attention to the regulation to which I have referred, they said they felt they could no longer continue to even review the documentation, or to advise me on the subject, as they themselves might be charged under the provisions of the Atomic Energy Control Act.

The chap with whom I was dealing said he would discuss it with two of his partners. He telephoned me again in two hours and said they both felt unanimously that there was no way they could participate in the formation of an opinion with respect to this matter. Within one hour, the documents in their entirety were returned to my Toronto office.

An hon. Member: Obviously, you did not have a case.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the second infringement occurred in this manner. I planned to go to the United States in order to review certain documents which had been made available to us in the United States. Members of a Toronto law firm agreed to go down to attend and review the documents with me. Subsequently, within 12 hours of our leaving for the United States, they told me they could not go on the trip. They felt they could not review the documents because of the impact of the regulations to which we have been referring.

In short, in two instances legal counsel of two large law firms in Toronto said that they felt the regulation was so all-embracing and so wide that they would risk being charged even if they simply reviewed the documentation with a view to giving me an opinion as to what the legal consequences might be of actions taken by certain individuals as revealed in those documents. That, in essence, is my question of privilege. If you find a prima facie case, I propose to move the following motion:

That the question of my inability as a member of this House to consult with counsel on the question of a uranium cartel and seek legal opinion as to action being taken with reference thereto be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I feel that the point raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), a point raised in discussion yesterday, was met in the ruling I gave today. Perhaps, in fairness, I should have expanded on the point because it is significant. The hon. member's argument put forward today is essentially the same argument as he put forward in support of the question yesterday.

I say I think the point has been met for this reason. Surely the Chair ought not to be called upon to comment on the correctness or adequacy of a legal opinion. The hon. member did not say to me that he, as a member of parliament, could not have the documents in his possession. In fact, he said today that he had the documents in his possession and turned them over to his counsel. Counsel returned the documents saying that under the impact of the law counsel ought not to proceed to look at the documents or give an opinion. Surely I cannot say if that is a correct or incorrect legal opinion. Surely it is beyond the scope of the chairman of this assembly to determine if that is right or wrong. If the hon. member had indicated to me that he could not get the documents with which to go to the lawyers as a member of parliament, then I would say the point had been met. Similarly, the point arises in connection with the hon. member's going out of the country to have access—

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. To go on in the same vein, the hon. member intended to go elsewhere to examine documents and indicated that he requested counsel to accompany him. Counsel said, "Under the impact of that order in council, as I read it, I would not go with you because I am afraid of breaking the law." But that does not prevent the hon. member himself from going to examine the documents. After all, privilege is confined to the ability of a member to fulfil his obligations as a member of the House of Commons. Surely it does not call on the Chair to pass an opinion upon the competence of a legal opinion.

On the question of whether the lawyers gave a correct opinion or an incorrect opinion, that is a decision I do not want to make, and in any circumstances do not think the Chair should make. If the hon. member had indicated that he had not been able to get the documents to seek a legal opinion, I would think that would be a much different matter. But asking the Chair to pass on the validity of an opinion seems to me to go far beyond that which is required of the Chair in assessing privilege.

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—ANSWER OF MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a personal question of privilege which relates to this matter and which arose during the course of the question of privilege and point of order I raised earlier to which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) responded. I do so on the basis of the dictum which Your Honour just pronounced. Your Honour said this, and I think I took most of the words down: First, privilege is confined to the ability of the member of parliament to perform his function or carry out his duty; second, if the point relates to whether or not the member of parliament was able to obtain the documents in order to obtain a legal opinion, it might be a completely different question.

Sir, during the course of my point of order I put a specific question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources which he did not have to answer but chose to answer. He said my question was frivolous, that I ought to know better than ask such a question, and he made certain other disparaging remarks I am prepared to let pass. The important point is this: he refused to table those documents and thereby make them available to me, at my request as a member of parliament, to do with them what I will in my capacity as a member of parliament, which could include the seeking of a legal opinion. I do not want Your Honour to be "hung up" on legal opinions. As a member of parliament, I have duties other than the obtaining of legal opinions. One of my duties is to know what is happening in any given situation.

The situation in which I now find myself may be different from that of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), but fits exactly the conditions set out in your last decision. I should like to have those documents tabled, naturally. I now believe I am raising the valid question of privilege which the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) sought to raise but did not put forward, according to Your Honour's judgment. Your Honour also ruled that the hon. member for York-Simcoe had not raised a valid question of privilege. Therefore, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) continues, I want to be clear as to what he is saying. Is he suggesting to me that the Chair ought to find that there is a case of privilege in every application by a member of the House of Commons for documents which is not met with the tabling of documents? Obviously, I cannot extend the area of privilege to that point.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I did not argue that.

Mr. Speaker: Applications for documents have followed a well known procedure in the House, namely, the request for the tabling of documents. Surely the hon. member is not asking me to find that if a request for documents is met with a refusal, until the request is specific, is met with an argument or transferred for debate under motions for the production of documents, that that constitutes privilege. I need to have clear ground if a member indicates to me that in attempting to fulfil the special obligations upon a member of this House of Commons the member has been prevented from carrying out those obligations. The definitions are well known. There is a regular process for the tabling of documents. Applications by members for tabling of government documents is well known. It is available to all members.

● (1230)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the question is much broader than that. It is not merely a procedural point. It should be apparent to everyone in this House that it is not a mere question of procedure. The order in council that has been dealt with in the past few days reads as follows:

> No person who has in his possession or under his control any note, document, or other written or printed material in any way related to conversations, discussions or meetings that took place between January 1, 1972, and December 31, 1975, involving that person or any other person or any government, Crown corporation, agency or other organization in respect of the production, import, export, transportation, refining, possession, ownership, use or sale of uranium or its derivatives or compounds, shall
> (a) release any such note, document or material, or disclose or communicate the contents thereof to any person, government, Crown corporation, agency or other organization unless
> (1) he is required to do so by or under a law of Canada, or
> (ii) he does so with the consent—

It is not just a mere question of procedure. This is not a mere tabling of documents. What has happened to the public of Canada and to this House over which Your Honour presides is that by your ruling, a member of parliament, before he would have a question of privilege, would have to commit an offence and be in jail—that is, before he would have a question of privilege with respect to this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member interprets my language for me—and I want to give him full amplitude to develop his argument—I want to make it clear that he must establish something that comes within the four corners of privilege as we have known them within the classic definition of privilege, the interference with a member in the performance of his duties.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) indicated that he had documentation, sent it to his lawyers and his lawyers said they could not give him an opinion on it. That is their opinion. Surely the Chair is not called upon to say whether that is right or wrong. The member was not in a position to say he attempted to get documentation which was refused to him on the basis of this order in council, or that it was documentation that had been refused on grounds of confidentiality or relationship with other government, or one of several other standards. Bear in mind that in applications for documents by members of the House of Commons there are several grounds upon which the government has, and does, regularly refuse production of documents to members of this House.

If an application is made for documentation with respect to a certain negotiation, the application is made in this House and the minister rises in his place and says they will not produce that document because it relates to confidential negotiations, does the member rise in his place and say that he is asking for a document, he cannot get it and that is a question of privilege? Surely not. There must be something more than the inability of members to be able to get the tabling of that document.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) stood in his place today—by way of a point of order, by the way—and said to the minister the honourable thing to do would be to stand up and agree to table all of these documents. The minister said, "Of course I cannot agree to table all documents until I know what documents they are and what restrictions they might be under." Does that constitute a question of privilege? How can I bring that within the definition of privilege? I am not in any way saying that the member has to go and steal the documents from the minister. Surely that is not an accurate interpretation of the language I have used. Surely there must be more than some sort of refusal to produce documents on the classic grounds that have been known in the past.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot comprehend the corner in which the House now finds itself. We have not suggested that before I or any other member would have a question of privilege there has to be a theft of the documents.

Mr. Nielsen: Those were not your words.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Those were not my words. That was not my interpretation of Your Honour's words. Moreover, the question is not whether the Chair must decide whether the lawyer, in expressing the opinion that he could not give an opinion, is right or wrong. That is not Your Honour's function; I admit that. The point is the lawyer, the solicitor or counsel who made the statement that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has indicated made the statement regardless of where he stands on the question of right or wrong.

The facts are now that the hon. member for York-Simcoe, by Your Honour's ruling and, indeed, any other member of this House of Commons, even when faced with a legal opinion that is wrong, that that particular lawyer could not give an opinion, is now in the position where his privileges as a member of parliament to investigate, as a member of parliament, as a citizen to involve himself in the court process, however you want to cut it, is denied access to documents and to opinion on those documents by this order in council which the Leader of the Opposition has rightfully described as an odious order in council. That is the situation in which we find ourselves.

This is not an ordinary production of documents. I asked this question specifically, admittedly not in the question period but as a point of order. It would have been grand if it had been in the question period, but it was not. It was outside the question period. The question was answered. The question was not answered on the grounds Your Honour suggests. It was answered on the basis that the question was frivolous and I knew it. There was an absolute refusal to produce those documents.

Mr. Clark: Check the record.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is on the record that it was frivolous. The disparaging remarks followed. On the basis of this order in council, we are now being denied the documents. That is out of the mouth of the minister. In these unusual circumstances, I do not know how anyone including, with respect, Your Honour, could call this an ordinary matter of production of documents, in view of what has happened. What has clearly happened is that I, as a member of parliament, in the circumstances of the last few days in the face of order in council by the government, have been denied access here in the House of Commons to documents, according to one legal opinion, right or wrong, upon which you do not have to decide. The solicitor could not give an opinion to a member of parliament to permit him to carry out his duties.

I want those documents as a matter of my right as a member of parliament. It is not an ordinary production. In view of what has happened, I do not think it can be handled in any other way. Therefore, in view of the refusal and in view of what I have said, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

> That this House declare that the order in council No. SOR 76-644 is not binding on members of the House with regard to proceedings in the House or any committee thereof or their counsel and that for the purpose of such proceedings, despite the provisions of such order in council, all documents or copies may be obtained, produced and used in connection with any inquiry into questions of privilege or into the legality and propriety of the actions of the government and minister and others in the establishment of a uranium cartel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1240)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was going to rise on a point of order. Perhaps that is the best context in which to make my remarks. As the House leader of the opposition mentioned a few moments ago, he raised during the question period a question, on a point of order, which he put to me dealing with the matter of the documents. Quite clearly, if he will reread his question as it will undoubtedly appear in Hansard, he will realize, as his motion is now cast, that this is a carte blanche request to the government to table and make public all of the documents that might have been associated with the producers' agreement, all of the confidential government documents and all of the intergovernmental agreements, the sort of agreements that Your Honour referred to a moment ago when addressing the Leader of the Opposition.

I want to make it quite clear to him that when his request was put on that basis I considered it to be frivolous, and I still do. But I would make this point to him, that if he is prepared to put forward requests respecting specific documents, I am quite prepared to consider those requests—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): To "consider".

Mr. Gillespie: Yes, to consider those requests—on an expeditious basis. Quite clearly, I cannot give a carte blanche answer that I will table every confidential document that he may want to list, but I am quite prepared to give consideration on an expeditious basis to the particular documents that he might like to receive.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I make one very brief comment before a final ruling is made or is reserved, though there is little time left for reservation today. Your Honour will take note, as a member of the profession to which I have the honour to belong as well, of the punitive nature of this order in council. It is not just a civil matter; this is an order in council passed under the Atomic Energy Control Act. Any offence against that act or any of the regulations under the act carries with it a very heavy penalty. I do not have the act here, but I examined it the other day. There are very heavy penalties attached to any infraction or breach of that act or regulation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minute that I—or, indeed, my friend for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) or the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—go to anyone to secure possession of these documents and I have them in my possession, I commit an offence against this order in council. This goes back to the case that Your Honour will remember we discussed in committee, of Strauss, the father of the House in the United Kingdom. I remember that in that case the original decision was against Strauss; but ten years later, in a report of the committee proceedings in 1966 and 1967, my recollection is that the procedure committee in the House in England at that time made it quite plain that any attempt which was made in that case, by threats against a member of the House, to inhibit him in the carrying out of his functions and duties constituted, in their opinion, a breach of privilege.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what could be a greater threat to us than the contents of this order in council? It constitutes a threat to every member of this House that if they dare to secure, without the permission—the very selective permission, probably—of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), possession of a document for the purpose of proceeding in the House or out of the House, it would immediately render them liable to a criminal proceeding and to the imposition of a very heavy penalty.

I suggest to Your Honour that there could be nothing more conducive to inhibiting members of this House in the discharge of their duty than the fact that they know—and I intend to pursue this matter when I leave the House today—that if I come into possession of some of these documents, not second or third rate copies out of the proceedings in Washington, but the original documents themselves, that if I go to a member of this cartel, ask for a document and they show it to me and for some reason are prepared to give it to me, then I have committed an offence. How can I prepare a case for proceeding in this House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: In support of my hon. friend from Grenville-Carleton, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that this order in council constitutes a clear, present and continuing threat to every member of this House.

Mr. Speaker: Although again eloquently argued, I return to the basic point which I think has not been altered by the discussion during the last hour. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has very accurately and coolly described the circumstances under which this order in council, in his view, constitutes a threat to his ability to function as a member of the House of Commons. I can understand that interpretation.

Again I say that if the hon. member was standing in his place and saying to me that he has done what he says he might do, and that he had met with that kind of response, I would be dealing with a much different question from the one I am dealing with at the present time. I maintain that so long as the matter remains in the potential, as opposed to being in the actual, the Chair would be making an unwarranted extension of privilege to accept the matter as a question of privilege.

With respect to the application by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) which we are specifically dealing with here, the basis of his question of privilege is the statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) today that he could not give the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton a blanket assurance that he would table all of the documents which relate to these transactions. I surely cannot find that that constitutes a question of privilege.
