My Night's Entertainment

I had hoped to pass the night with my old friend, Tana Totel, whom I had not seen since the day he and his young wife had gone out to settle in that wild western country. But owing partly to rity of the roads, and partly to want of clearness in the directions reto want of clearmess if the ceived at my last stopping-place, I had ceived at my last time in regaining it, and my horse was next day.

There was something ludicrous, at which I could scarce repress a smile, which I could scarce repress a smile, was beginning to deel a little nervous, for the forest shadows were deepening so fast that there was danger of again losing the way—in which event the prospect of passing a shelterless and supportess night in the woods, was far more imminent than pleasing.

I patted Juba's neck encouragingly.

He answered in good idiomatic Howyhalts and Juba's a cat. I reached the state of the ground of the hokum: "Aye, aye, sir!" and fallanto

The preparation of the evening meal, bade me "take a cheer," hardly glancing up from a vension steak she was broiling on the other! from a vension steak she was broiling on the coals, of which the savory odor made ull and ds for the curtiess of any welcome.

The master of the cabin reappeared presently, and in return for the intellig gence that his name was Tofts, received information that mine was Touchwood. "Supper's ready," Mrs. Tofts an-

"Set up, "stranger," added Mr. ofts.
"Take trimmin's in yourn?" the former asked, poising a spoon filled with and giving me an interrogative glance. I took the "trimmin's;" and after an invitation to "help myself," with which like to see tried on some of those I complied without ceremony, the meal, to which, on my part, that best of sauces, hunger, lent a piquant relish, tying knots. was proceeded with in silence.

supper over, Mr. Tofts and I draw our chairs before the fire, and the cross-examination which any backwoods host would deem it a breach of hospitality to omit, was entered on in due form. To the questions toaching I what I hailed from," and "what I mought be goin' to," I answered unreservedly; but when to," I answered unreservedly; but when it came to inquiring into the object of errand which necessitated the carrying of a considerable sum of money. Mrs. Tofts, while clearing off the table, I could not help observing, kept me under a fire of sidewise glances, at the same time listening closely to my broad stare of his round, watery eyes, into which there had come a look as nearly penetrating as they were capable of assuming. He had completely lost his volubility, however-leaving it to his better half to do the talking sind "It's quite simple, form answered."

You see there's been a big reward the art of putting questions. There was a directness in her queries which baffled evasion by any means short of disrespect, you fill his advertised desledge of my personal affairs which it man, took you into custody, and then chappined me afterwards to think of.

I pleaded weariness at last, and asked being a Justice of the Peace. But Mrs. Tofts trimmed and lit a tin lamp which she handed to her husband, who stooped to pick up my saddle-bags. "I'll take them, if you please," I ed Sal. interposed, not baring that he should "You allus was a leetle too dod surmise the contents by the weight. A meaning look was exchanged between the husband and wife-very meaning on her part.

Mr. Tofts led the way up a ladder to the loft, in which I found a comfortable looking bed, and then withdrew without stopping to say good-night.

My feelings, on the whole, were far from easy. Rumors were afloat about travellers murdered for their money in these wild, out-of-the-way regions; and the conduct of my host and hostess had not been such as to inspire the fullest confidence. True, if it came to as enone of the two was a woman; but the male Tofts was a big, burly fellow, and his wife belonged to that sinewy, wiry type of her sex whose strength is not intype of her sex whose strength is not in-ferior to that of the average of men. I had a pistol, but an injury to the lock a few days before had rendered it use-less. So I was unarmed and at the mercy of people whose actions had aroused my serious suspicious.

Partially undressing and setting the lamp on a chair, I threw myself on the bed. My fears, for a time, kept me awake; but fatigue brought drowsiness, and at last sleep. I know not how long it had continued before a creaking of the ladder awoke me. The lamp was just giving its last flicker, and by it I saw a pair of eyes gleaming over the edge of the hatchway. The next instant I was in total darkness. Starting up, I turned my ear and listened. I heard steps softly descending the ladder, and then there was perfect stillness. I rose and crept to the hatchway, but without venturing to lean over, for there was still a dim light in the room below. But my hearing was on the alert to catch the faintest sound. "Hadn't we better get help?" whispered a voice, which I knew to be the "No," returned the woman; "we can manage him ourselves."
