The World of Rome.

Rome, July 28th

The very strange story which has been going the round of the French Press to the effect that the Holy Father had wounded his hand with a writing pen, and that blood-poisoning had set in, does not seem to be borne out. Yesterday morning about half-past six his Holiness, after having celebrated his Mass in his private chapel, descended into the Vatican Gardens, where he remained for about an hour, driving from one part of the Gardens to the other in the simple carriage in which his predecessor was accustomed to take the air. He left the carriage at the upper part of the Gardens, near the place where an imitation of the Grotto of Lourdes was erected by the French a few years ago and from that point he walked back to the Vatican, entering it by the Court of the Pine-cones, and passing by the Museum of Inscriptions to his private apartments. It is only now, after the French have exploited the story of his wounded hand, that the people of Rome are beginning to hear of it.

The French newspapers are at this moment particularly active in spreading reports concerning the future action of the Pontiff. For a certain time past the public opinion represented by these journals has been eager in its haste to discuss what line the Pope will take with regard to the Separation Law; whether he will accept the humiliating conditions made to the Church of France by this law or, refusing them, put the Church now in the position that will leave to it some freedom of action, poverty, the frequent accompaniment of freedom. All sorts of reports, favoring one or other of these views, are going the rounds of the papers. Interviews with nameless Cardinals are put forward, and both sides of the question are presented at their best.

Attention is excited by these reports, and a public opinion is, to ascertain degree, thus created. One of these newspaper reports, pretending to a knowledge of what line of action the Pope will follow, has been disposed of by the Osservatore Romano of to-day. The Petit Parisien has from Rome that the decision of the Pope on the affairs of France has been taken, and that its publication is imminent, and that the Separation Law will be accepted by the Vatican. "The conversion of Pius X. to conciliation is due to the conviction that the majority of the clergy of France is contrary to resistance. It is unknown with what document and when the Pope will make his own decision known; certainly before the end of July."

Such is the account of the information furnished by the Petit Parisien. The official note which the Osservatore publishes on this says:—"We are authorized to put our readers on guard concerning the news of the 'Petit Parisien' relating to this very serious question; and not only to that, but to all the other similar news given by other journals, and to declare that such news belong to the fantastic and bisserating character."

To-day takes place the election of the General of the Order of Scapolii, or the Pious Schools—an office which has been vacant since 1901, when Father Mauro Ricci, who was General died. Since then the Order was represented by the Vicar-General, Father Bratino. The Order was founded by S. Calassiano at the beginning of the 17th century, and is especially intended for the education of sons of the people, and furnishing them with all that can develop intelligence and character. Amongst the many important changes and improvements which Pius X. is making within the precincts of the Vatican, that of the renewal of the Column of the Council is one of the most interesting. The shaft consists of a great block of that marble which is known as "Affricano" from its dusky hue, and not from the Dark Continent, for the quarries that yielded it in the days of the ancient Romans were situated in the Island of Chios one of the Creek Islands, and claiming to be the birthplace of Homer, "the blind old man of Siois' rocky isle." The marble is peeling away in fragments from the effects of the weather. Its condition is such that it must be replaced by an entirely new column of granite, entailing upon the Pontiff an expenditure of over 21,000 francs. This column is surmounted by a colossal bronze statue of St. Peter. It was at first destined to rise on the Janiculum Hill, in the centre of the space opening in front of the Church of St. Peter in Montorio, and the foundations were to consist of several hundred small blocks of marble, each one of which was to be laid by one of the bishops present at the Council of the Vatican. It was also intended that a list of the names of all the bishops present—there were nearly 300 of them—should be incised upon it. But the bombardment and invasion of Rome on 20th September, 1870, by a king who described himself then in a letter to the Pope as "a dutiful son of the Catholic Church" put an end to this as well as to many other great projects. The column was finally erected in the Court of the Belvedere where it is occasionally seen by visitors who look through the glass doors of the Chiaramonti Gallery, where they go to see the statues.

It is reported that the German Historical Institute has just purchased the Villa Maletti, over against the Convent of Irish Franciscans of St. Isidore at Rome. It is one of the very fine villas of Rome, and has been for many years past in possession of the Russian family, Bobrinsky. Its new proprietors paid 1,600,000 francs (or $270,000) for it. This beautifully situated villa, with its magnificent Terrace tower rising high above its walls will be used as an Art Academy for the students which the Fatherland sends here annually to study the art of Italy, and so to acquire a knowledge of what has been achieved, in order that they may profit by it in their future achievements. The only great nation which is not fitly represented in this home of art by such an institution is England.

The Villa Maletti has interesting art association, dating back to the beginning of last century. In 1810 four young enthusiasts in art—Overbeck, Pförtner, Hottinger, and Vogel—came towards Rome. Their last stopping place on the road was La Storta; Rome shone in the distance, seated upon the celebrated seven hills, with the dome of St. Peter's showing over all, and giving the characteristic note to the scene. "Warm hearts and helpful hands," says the biographer of Overbeck, "to give the weary travellers greeting, and to do kindly offices for them." They were taken to the Villa Maletti, which was prepared for them, and there these pioneers of the Christian revival in art—unlike the semi-pagan revival of the English pre-Raphaelites in England of a later period—settled down for a time. Afterwards they took up their residence in the suppressed convent of the Irish Franciscans of St. Isidore and helped to keep the memories of the place sweet and holy. It seems a coming back to old times to find, after so many years, another German art colony settling in this historic Villa Maletti.

"Brigands at the Gates of Rome!" Such was the startling phrase that headed a column in one of yesterday's papers. That there are brigands still left in this lovely land is brought home to newspaper readers at intervals. This irrepressible personage was a noteworthy element of the traveller's experience in Italy. No English account of travels in the Sunny South was complete unless it had one or more encounters with brigands to lend spice to its otherwise unimaginative pages. The pinch of poverty, of fiscal oppression, or the opportune occasion, made the thief for the moment; but brigandage proper was a much more serious thing. The brigand of an earlier age, and even of later date, was an adventurous, picturesque, and little that was exciting about it. Its only interest depends upon its proximity to Rome and its occurrence in the dead sea, son. A certain Signor De Angelis, driving in a tiny trap to the farm "Pisana" to superintend the work of the farm laborers, was stopped at 300 yards distance from this farm. It was an ascent, where, by the necessities of the case, the horse had to go slow; and thus the person who insists upon an interview has full opportunity to talk and reason. The beggars in Rome and its vicinity choose such accents for their most impressive appeals, which must be listened to.

"Money—quittini!" shouted the ravenous voice from the shelter of the large oak overhanging the road, and itself the edge of a dense thicket; and the appeal was progressively backed up by the ferocious looking character who had a torrid it glowing a double-barrelled gun at De Angelis. The latter remembered that he was unarmed, that his horse could not be driven here into a rapid pace; and, obeying the suggestions of prudence, he pulled out his pocket-book and threw down a 50-franc note on the ground in the direction of the ugly, ragged, grisly-bearded individual beside the oak tree who held the double-barrelled gun pointed towards him.

"The pocket-book also," said the man in the thicket. De Angelis pleaded that the rest of its contents was matter of no use to anyone but the owner. "The pocket-book!" repeated the brigand, with an insistence not to be denied; so the pocket-book followed the 50-franc note first given; it contained another 50 franc note. "Now go ahead, and don't look behind you," was the final recommendation of the robber to the robbed. De Angelis reported the incident at the farm of "Pisana." Messengers conveyed the information to the nearest carabinieri station; thence it was telephoned into Rome and a little army of carabinieri was dispatched to search the thicket. Maltei, on the edge of which the act of brigandage took place, and the other thickets which abound in this neighborhood.

It is supposed that the man who "held up" as the Americans say, Signor De Angelis was one of the two prisoners who, while they were being transferred by rail from Civita Castellana to another prison, broke the iron bars of their cage and escaped into the open country. Two suspicious-looking individuals have been seen recently at different places in the vicinity; and near the place of the robbery there was found a small sack belonging to the Administration of Prisons, and signs that two persons were there.

There is quite an excitement in Rome regarding this robbery of a man on the desolate highway outside the Gate of Saint Pancratius, and there is comparatively little excitement caused by the killings and stabbings and suicides which are reported day by day in the Roman papers. Naturally, it is an awful disgrace that after so many years of "intangible Rome," which had its eyes opened to all the vices by the cannon of Porta Pia, there should still linger within seven miles of the walls the plague of brigandage! Hence the authorities are having the whole neighborhood examined, inch by inch, to capture this bold 19th century brigand.

An American pilgrim arrived in Rome yesterday. The prominent personage in the group of 132, of which 30 are priests is the Right Rev. Henry Gabriel, Bishop at Ogdensburg. It appears strange that travellers should come to Rome during this hot season when the dwellers here long for cool breezes and seaside resorts. To many Americans this is the only time when they can travel, and the heat of Rome is generally found less terrible than that from which they suffer at home. The Pilgrimage will be received in special audience by his Holiness on next Tuesday morning.

The Chapter of the Fathers of the Pious Schools ended in the election today of Rev. Father Emanuel Sanger, Assistant of Spain, to be General of the Order.—P. L. Connellan, Rome Cor. Dublin Freeman.

The Preference of the Interior Department for Rascals—Moberly Sticks Closer Than a Brother—Though a Confessed Forger, Perjuror and Ballot Stuffer.

Trouble for the North Atlantic—Panicky Feeling After Last Session's Exposures.

Ottawa, Aug. 18, 1906.

The trade returns of the Dominion for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1906, show a large increase in Canadian commerce. But there are some features in the business of the year which one would like to see different.

We sold Canadian merchandise to the value of $214,381,282. Of this Great Britain took $127,466,471, and the United States only $83,247,406.

On the other hand Canada imported for consumption goods to the value of $290,342,408, of which Great Britain supplied us $69,176,180, while we bought from the United States $175,865,418, or a good deal more than twice as much.

While we undertake to give Great Britain a preference it may be noticed that the bill of free goods from the United States increases much more rapidly than the similar class of goods from Great Britain.

Comparing last year with the year before we find in round figures an increase of $86,000,000 in our total exports of Canadian merchandise.

But while our sales to Great Britain increased much more than our sales to the United States, Canadian purchases from the United States increased more than those from Great Britain.

It is evident that there is something yet to be done in the way of improving our purchasing relations with our best customers.

MR. FIELDING'S MISTAKE OF LAST YEAR.

Mr. Fielding made his budget speech on May 25th of this year. He had to confess that in his statement for 1905 he had been a good way out in his estimates. In that year he made his budget statement after the fiscal year closed, but some time before all the accounts were settled. His estimate of the revenue to be received that year was an over-estimate. His estimate of the current expenditure was $62,250,000, which was more than $1,000,000 below the correct figures.

REPEATED THIS YEAR.

Having made these confessions Mr. Fielding produced his statement for the year ending June 30th, 1906. It now appears that he has committed the same error that he made last year. The accounts will not be closed until the end of August, but the figures as revised to the end of July have been printed. They go to show that Mr. Fielding did not over-estimate his revenue. He expected $79,000,000 and by the end of July had received $79,006,823.

But his estimate of current expenditure is evidently away below the mark. He expected a current outlay of $66,500,000 which is $2,180,000 more than the previous year, but he already reports payments to the extent of $69,924,868, which is $3,904,528 more than at the same date last year.

The Finance Minister expected to spend on capital account $15,797,293, or within $1,500,000 of the total estimated figure. Last year he spent $3,500,000 after the July returns were in.

the third was Moberley. They came back with ballot boxes containing 150 votes for the government candidate and none for the opposition.

In view of the distance travelled by these eastern men who come into the west for a period of six weeks or two months it is a debatable question just what might be considered a fair compensation for this employment.

Not much happened to these men. Government officers declined to prosecute, but one government officer appeared for the accused. He persuaded the magistrate to punish them with a fine, which the party promptly paid for them.

According to Mr. Oliver, Moberley was the worst of the three. Speaking on March 12th in the House Mr. Oliver said: "The third man was the one responsible, so far as I can learn for proposing to hold the polls in that region; he was the man supposed to know the locality, who stated there were so many people there entitled to vote and he was the guide to these parties who were to go up to take these votes."

Now what happens to this man, the chief culprit in stealing a seat in the House, by his own confession, guilty of forgery, fraud and perjury. On June 29th of this year, a Prince Albert despatch stated that Moberley had been appointed by the federal government to take the census in the far north.

Mr. Fisher was a little confused, but made this emphatic declaration: "If that man is working in my department, just as soon as I find out, he will cease to work for the department."

But three days later it was made clear to the satisfaction of Mr. Fisher himself that Moberley had been engaged to go with the enumerator to that district as guide and assistant, in the pay of the government.

who since his promotion to be Admiral has been attached as a personal adjutant to the staff of the Emperor. This was the third attempt on the life of General Min, who was condemned to death by the Emperor's order.

Further shots were presented by Moberley. He threw himself upon the man who threw or dropped the bomb and seized the hand which held the pistol.

London, Aug. 27.—Despatches from St. Petersburg to the newspapers here last evening supply some further details concerning the attempt on the Russian Premier M. Stolypin.

At the moment the contractors need money to what they regard as an exorbitant demand. But the Winnipeg Telegram, commenting on the condition of affairs, takes a very sensible view of it.

Winnipeg advises say that the Pacific Coast lumbermen are contemplating a further advance in the price of lumber. At the present time rough lumber is higher than it has ever been before. This advance in price is due to the enormous amount of building now being done all over the Canadian Northwest, and is also due to the San Francisco disaster, the Californian builders getting almost their entire lumber supply from British Columbia.

A despatch of the 25th, from Manchester, England, had the following:—The iron moulders to-day informed their employers in the engineering trade of Manchester and Southern Lancashire of their decision to strike, on Monday unless their demand for an immediate advance of fifty cents a week is conceded. The moulders numbered only 1,800 men, but the strike would affect 40,000 skilled workmen and sixty firms. The men declare that the trade is enjoying great prosperity, while wages have not been increased for ten years, during which the conditions of living have greatly altered and the price of food having risen.

A Quebec despatch of the 24th, has the following:—Oscar Laroche, pilot of E. Laroche, pilot. St. Michel, Bellechasse fell from the steamer "Champion" near St. Jean, Island of Orleans, this morning and was drowned before the eyes of his wife and young children, who were with him on the steamer on route for St. Michel. It is thought he lost his balance and fell in. An effort was made to rescue the man, but in vain. Deceased was 32 years of age. It is thought the unfortunate man was a relative of Eugene Laroche, a well known ferrying man who had been lost from the steamer "Cacana."

At New Ireland in Albert County, New Brunswick Miss Mary Ann McAulay, cousin and housekeeper of Rev. Father McAulay, parish priest of that place, was cruelly murdered on Monday of last week. The murdered woman was about fifty-five years of age. Father McAulay was absent from home at the time having gone to Fredericton Road on the previous Friday to attend a mission of his charge at that place. The murderer is undoubtedly Thomas J. Collins, who had been engaged by Father McAulay some weeks previously to work as a servant man. The man is about twenty-one years of age and had previously been a sailor. Collins was arrested near St. George, N. B. on Friday afternoon having tramped all the way from New Ireland, a distance of about a hundred and fifty miles. He was brought to St. John and is now in jail there.

We have received a copy of the sermon pronounced by the late lamented Archbishop O'Brien on the occasion of the funeral of the Rt. Hon. Sir John S. D. Thompson in St. Mary's Cathedral, Halifax, Nova Scotia, on January 3rd, 1895. In compliance with repeated requests, the sermon is now published for the first time in pamphlet form. The discourse is a beautiful and eloquent tribute of a great mind to the smouldering qualities of mind and heart of a friend and kindred spirit, suddenly stricken by the hand of death in the midst of his patriotic labors. The sermon is not an outburst of fulsome eulogy; but the sincere and heartfelt conclusion of the preacher's convictions regarding the characteristics and principles of action that constituted the greatness of the illustrious dead to the title great. The Most Rev. preacher points out with uncontrovertible logic that Sir John Thompson had, although dying when he had scarcely attained to the summit of middle life, fully proved his claim to greatness. He was great as a jurist, as an orator and statesman; he was intellectually great and morally great. In all his important undertakings in his various spheres of action he always proved himself equal and more than equal to the exigencies of the situation. He served his country faithfully and well and died in her service in the palace of his sovereign. To the sermon is added the Elogy of Sir Louis Morris and an appendix contains the speeches on the same subject delivered in Parliament at the opening of the session of 1895 by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Mr. Foster. The whole constitutes a pamphlet of twenty-four pages and sells for twenty-five cents. The pamphlet is published by E. P. Meagher, Limited, Halifax.

Pius X. On Kindness to Animals.

According to recent reports from Rome, the Holy Father was graciously pleased to accept, books "Les Saints et Les Animaux" and "L'Eglise et la Pitié envers les Animaux."

Of course his Holiness did not have time to read them then and there, but on learning that they had been presented by the Naples Society for the Protection of Animals, and that they were written to show that many of the great saints were conspicuous for their gentleness and kindness towards animals, and that the spirit of the Church, as revealed in many ways, has always shown itself strongly in the same sense, the Pope warmly approved of this object, and sent a cordial blessing to the Marquis de Rambures a devoted daughter of the Church, the authoress of "L'Eglise et la Pitié envers les Animaux."

What's their address? asked Father Murphy. "I want to build a club-room!"—Paterfamilias in Catholic Weekly.

Death of St. Thomas "The Angelical."

Knowing how faith and science had illumined the man of God especially with respect to the union of the soul with his beloved, the monks, notwithstanding his feeble condition, could not refrain from asking him to expound to them the Canticle of Canticles, which was wholly to do with the mystic marriage of the soul with Christ.

After long deliberation Pius X has decided that the Church in France will not accept the Law of Association. It now remains to be seen whether the Government will consistently with its policy, close the churches. Up to the present it has been impossible to persuade the French people at large the actions of the Government were really directed at the destruction of religion. They have suffered themselves to be persuaded that the expulsion of the religious orders was in the interest of the diocesan clergy, and that the secularizing of the schools was intended to open to the laity the career of teaching from which they had been shut out by the monopoly enjoyed by the priests and nuns.

The Cynic.

He stalks abroad, a blighting blast of hope

Dispensing gloom where happiness should reign

Devout of justice, truth and charity, No sunshine penetrates his clouded brain.

For him Religion, heaven's peerless queen, Is but the tool of base hypocrisy; His moral code precludes all real good, And naught he finds but fraud in honesty.

Nor love, nor hope, nor generosity Within his callous heart may find a place; Nor sympathetic, sweetly cheering smile Can ever surprise his calm, dispassionate face.

Tho' virtue blossoms bloom in every glade, But ugly thorns his searing glance descry; The silvery fountain, playing in the light, Reveals but filth to his transforming eyes.

Few are his friends, his enemies a score; For self-conceit alone controls his heart. Unloved, yet feared, he lives; unmourned he dies; The world shall sweeter smile rid of his art.

Social Work in Schools

"We always come back to the same problem," said Harry. "How is it that we find so few Catholics interested in social work?"

"It has never been brought before them," answered Haldane, searching for his pipe. "When once they are brought face to face with it they are as keen as anybody—keener, in fact, just because they are Catholics. They have higher motives for taking it up than others have. The whole trouble is that so few of them are brought across it. We haven't the same tradition."

"But your Protestants have the tradition," exclaimed Duden. "How did they get it? I have been reading wonderful things of their Church Army. It has only been started a few years, yet they have an income of two hundred thousand pounds a year, and what is more striking, a vast number of workers who are not paid. They have five thousand people in their labor homes, and they have mission vans and lodging homes everywhere. How do they get the workers?"

"In the first place, Duden," I said, "you must consider the difference between their number and ours—especially as regards the wealthier classes. We are overwhelmed with our poor and destitute. Look how much money we have had to scrape together for our schools. Moreover, as Haldane says, we have not yet got the tradition. Catholics are only beginning to realize the need of social work. Hitherto we have not been sufficiently alive to its importance."

"It is so in France! The Catholics have lost their position in the country because they have neglected it. It is only lately that the clergy have taken to it at the direction of the Pope."

"I think that things are improving with us, as, no doubt, with you," I answered. "But the supply of workers is still miserably small. I was boarding to see, for instance, the way in which Newman House fished out. Such a calamity makes it very difficult to start a new work. One would like to see a generation of workers trained in our Catholic schools."

"There you have hit it," said Montague, making a hole in the lawn with the Doctor's walking stick. "If one is to get any social work done by Catholics, the best
