CHAPTER XXIX.—Continued. A GENERAL MEETING AT BENGARRY—THE LOST WILL.

The Delight was once more got into motion, and proceeded steadily up the river, coming to anchor at sunrise off the clustering woods of Bengarry. The cutter was following at a considerable distance, and likewise lay in the river, but no sign made of a boat being sent ashore, even when Eustace, Ralph and Willy dropped over the larger side, and showed off in the little skiff that had just been lowered for their accommodation.

Strong and keen were the feelings of the three as they approached the bank, and drew nigh to the well-known scenes from which they had been so rudely separated. There was the little bay in which Eustace and Willy had plied the occupation of salmon-fishing, and there the cottage where they lived in such peaceful happiness.

They ran in under the bank, and fastening the boat, ascended the slope, and stood on the spot where Ralph had been seized by the press-gang. The game-keeper smiled grimly as he looked around, and called to mind every feature of the scene. Eustace looked upon it with interest too, but with far softer feelings, for it was a spot sacred to tender and pleasant memories. It was there, while reclining on the grass, that his eye first lighted on Lillias; from thence he saw her falling into the water, and rushed to save her. There also in the holy hush of the evening had their vows of betrothal been uttered, and sealed by the sweetest kiss of love. The place was therefore very dear, and he lingered on it to think of Lillias, now far distant, but in an ark of safety and of peace.

Leaving the river's side they crossed the woods, and came to the vicinity of the park, near to which was the house of one of the foresters. To this latter habitation they went, and found that the forester's wife was at the moment the only inmate. Great was the woman's astonishment, and extreme her gladness when she recognized her visitors.

'Preserve us a', Maister Eustace, has ye come back at last? Eh, but ye're sair burnt w' the sun. Hoo glad I am to see ye, an' will a' the folks on the estate, and the laird, yer father, purr man.'

'Ay, my father, what of him?' asked Eustace, interrupting the worthy woman's volubility.

'Waes me, he's far yont, but they say he's mair sensible than he was, an' can mak' bits o' signs.'

Eustace proceeded at once to the mansion, and Willy and Ralph remained with the old lady.

So Eustace, leaving the companions of his many wanderings, went across the park alone and entered the mansion by a side door, appearing in the hall to the excessive astonishment, but evident satisfaction, of the few servants who chanced to be about. He went into the large sitting-room, and sent up a message to Captain Dunsmore.

It was the room in which the terrible scene occurred when he avowed his marriage and was expelled from Bengarry, and the sight of it brought the scene back so vividly that it seemed to have taken place but yesterday. He had time to dwell on it but a few moments when the door was hurriedly thrown open, and Captain Dunsmore appeared.

'Eustace!' 'George!' 'And the friends warmly embraced each other.'

'You come to us from the grave,' said Dunsmore, with emotion. 'We thought you dead. I never doubted that you had gone down with the Cornet.'

'We were saved by a miracle,' returned Eustace. 'But say, have I done right in coming here? Ralph told me that my father—'

'Wishes to see you,' interrupted the other, eagerly. 'His chief trouble appears to be lest he should not see you. I have no doubt he now repents his injustice and credulity. But one thing alarms us, and adds to his anguish. As you know, he executed a will giving his estate to Randolph. That will has been removed from its depository in the private drawer of his writing desk, and cannot be got that he may destroy it. This is a dreadful business, because he is not in a state to execute another, and if that will cannot be found till after Mr. Grahame's death you may be sure Randolph will claim the execution of its provisions.'

'Of course there can be no doubt,' returned Eustace, with some bitterness. 'The will has been removed, you say—doubtless by Randolph himself, or his mother.'

'Precisely my thought,' returned Dunsmore. 'Mrs. Grahame looks and acts like one who has a knowledge that the will is securely concealed.'

'That we may set down as the actual truth,' remarked Eustace. 'In all likelihood Randolph has the will on board his vessel. Having been found capable of a deed of such enormity—the importance to him may be attributed as a matter of course. I fear, Dunsmore, he is destined to triumph in his villainy after all. It was for the sole purpose of obtaining the estate that his mother and himself plotted all the mischief that has come upon me, and now when circumstances have inflamed in my father's mind, and cause him to do me justice, he still finds a way to work out his selfish and infamous design.'

'But we shall not tamely submit to it,' cried Dunsmore. 'It is plainly your father's wish that the will should be destroyed, and that the estate should go to you, his legal and rightful heir, and the law cannot be strained to inflict a wrong so serious.'

Eustace shook his head. 'The law,' he said, 'is not constructed to suit a case like this. The penalty of wrong-doing is oftentimes inflexible in its operations, and falls on guilty and innocent alike. But come, I would see my father. I thought I should never again enter his presence. He swore that it should be so. Alas, for the boast of human pride, when under its unseemly guidance we judge and declare unrighteous judgments.'

They went up the stair in mournful silence, and entered together the bed chamber in which the stricken man lay. He was propped up in bed, and sat there without the power of motion. He could move his head slightly, and also one of his hands, but the faculty of speech was gone, though from the glance of his eye it could be seen that his mind had suffered little or no injury.

The moment his eye fell on Eustace it was lighted up with a sudden and vehement intelligence, indicating that he knew him,—that he was intensely glad at his arrival, and had a painfully anxious desire to speak to him. The result produced by his presence was, indeed so great as to cause a partial flow of the obstructed blood, and lifting his one hand nervously, he made several ineffectual efforts to speak.

'Father,' said Eustace, bending over him, 'I am sorry to see you thus. But I see you know me, and, I think, are pleased that I am come.'

The old man tried again to speak, and it was painfully distressing to observe the anxiety depicted on his face when he failed to give utterance to one syllable. He managed, however, to press the hand which Eustace gave him.

'I understand you,' said his son, in gentle, kindly tones. 'Of our separation and its cause, let us not think. If you have come to see that you did me wrong in the matter I hasten to say that I freely forgive you.'

Again, and more energetically than before, did the old man press his hand, and with growing excitement made a third effort to speak. The vehemence of his feelings struggled strongly against the physical obstruction which had smitten him with impotence and by the force of mental energy he managed to articulate—

'My will!' 'Dunsmore has spoken to me about that,' said Eustace. 'He understands you wish it destroyed, but it cannot be got.'

'Stolen!' gasped the helpless man. 'Taken away at any rate,' said Eustace. 'And he knows well by whom,' cried Captain Dunsmore, impetuously. 'Randolph!' said Mr. Grahame. 'Aye, even so; Randolph is the thief,' exclaimed Dunsmore. 'The despicable villain has not hesitated to do this deed in order to frustrate justice and right.'

'Thanks for your friendly remarks, Captain Dunsmore,' said a voice behind them, and looking round, they saw Randolph himself in the room. A mocking sneer was on his lip, and fiendish triumph gleamed in his eye.

'Allow me to observe, however,' he added, 'that you use strong language against a person in his absence.'

'I never say behind any one's back what I am not ready to say to his face,' retorted Dunsmore. 'And I repeat that you have been despicable enough and villain enough to take possession of the deed which your father executed some time ago in your favor, but which he now wishes destroyed.'

'You have proof of that, of course?' observed Randolph, with the utmost coolness, while the sneer broadened on his lip. 'Ample proof,' returned Dunsmore. 'Where—what?' demanded Randolph. 'Your recent conduct—your atrocious and infamous conduct in regard to Eustace and others. You have shown, sir, only too clearly that nothing is too vile for you to do.'

'I can only bow my acknowledgment of your flattering opinion,' returned Randolph, ironically. 'And that is the best proof how thoroughly you feel its truth,' said Dunsmore, contemptuously. 'A man of honor would have indignantly hurled back such an aspersion in the teeth of the utterer.'

'I can afford to forego that pleasure,' said Randolph, with another smile and bow. 'As matters now stand, you and your protegee there may safely disgorge a whole battery of epithets. If I mistake not,' he added, with a glance at the occupant of the bed, 'your opportunity to do so will not be long, for I can tell you that my first act of power in this mansion will be to turn you both out of it.' 'For shame, sir,' said Eustace, indignantly. 'Respect, at least, the presence of your suffering father.'

'Ah, true,' returned the heartless ruffian. 'It is for your interest that he should be nursed and coddled up, for thereby he may get well enough to revoke his settlement. You may save yourself the trouble. He's going fast.'

'Heartless, infamous wretch,' said Eustace, striding fiercely towards him. 'Utter such callous words again, and I will turn you out of the room.'

'Try it,' roared the other. 'I have as good a right to be here as you, and ere long it will be me who will have the exquisite pleasure of turning you out like this. Don't doubt that the feeling will be fully gratified. Meanwhile, if I choose to stay here there is no one present has the right to thwart me.'

During this scene the sufferer in bed had shown manifest signs of extraordinary feeling. He clearly heard and understood all that passed, and strong passions swelled through his breast which he was unable to express. Those limbs which he lacked the power to move quivered with the agitation of his mind.

His face twitched and distorted itself, and his eyes flashed on Randolph with the light of mingled reproach and rage.

The other inmates of the mansion were not ignorant of the state of matters in their master's bed-chamber, and the lost or abstracted will formed the exciting topic of conversation in the kitchen. It was felt by them as a matter of personal interest, for they one and all hated Randolph, and earnestly desired that Eustace should possess the estate.

At mid-day, when the forester returned to his cottage to dinner, he carried the intelligence thither, producing not a little sensation, and at once setting the voluble tongue of his better half agoing on the subject.

'Hidden the will!' she exclaimed, 'Oh the blackguard. And pure Maister Eustace will be robbin' o' the property after a'.' Was he, then, for the purr servants at Bengarry, for it will be black days when the estate comes into the hands o' Maister Randolph. He was aye a proud, selfish, senseless celtar, that counted us workin' folk nae better than the dirt below his feet, and what will be the dirn he gets a' the power into his hands?'

She was proceeding in this strain when Ralph, who had been exceedingly thoughtful from the moment the forester entered with his news, suddenly started up, and, without saying a word to any one, quickly left the house and struck across the park at a half run.

'That's what he was doing up the chestnut tree,' he muttered. 'I could not think what he had been after, but I see it now. He was hiding the will there. By Jove, if that's the case, and if I find it, what a stroke for me!'

Ralph ran on in breathless haste till he came to that part of the park where he deemed the tree to be from the branches of which he had seen Randolph drop down. He had no little difficulty in finding it, his excitement adding to the confusion of his ideas, perplexing him first as to the exact position of the tree, then rendering him unable to identify it when seen. It was not till he fell upon the plan of drawing near to the mansion and striking the path he took when he quitted it on the evening in question that he came to anything like orderly proceeding in his search.

By this means, however, he at last found himself on a spot which he recognized as that on which he stood when the rustle of the branches reached his ear and made him stand still. There was the tree under whose pendant branches and behind whose massive trunk he retreated to escape observation when Randolph passed by, and vander at a little distance off, was the tree from which the latter had dropped. He saw the very branches by which Randolph had swung himself to the ground—the very branches underneath which he had found the very important letter. Certain now that the tree stood before him, he ran towards it and was up among its branches in a twinkling. It was an old, venerable tree, casting from its trunk many huge twisted branches, some of them good sized trees in themselves. Ralph looked carefully about as he slowly ascended, for some crevice or cleft, but it was not till he approached near the top, that he came upon such. The upper branches of the tree were withered as if they had been scathed by lightning, while all the others had escaped, and in the cleft formed by the last parting of the main stem in two, he found a cavity. Uttering an exclamation of delight, he dashed in his hand and found a packed envelope in an oilskin covering.

Up there in the withered tree-top the mid-day light was in its full radiance, and, clutching the precious packet with the grasp of a vice, he peered through the branches before he undid the covering to see if any one noticed or was watching him. Far as his eyes could range the wide park was solitary as a wilderness. The gables and chimneys of the mansion rose above the opening foliage at no great distance, but above it all was quiet, and Ralph justly concluded that he was unseen by mortal. Then, with rough excited haste, he tore off the glazed cover, and held in his hands a fresh, clean parchment. A glance at its endorsement revealed to him that it was Mr. Grahame's will.

An impulsive shout of triumph broke from his lips, he slid down the tree with the agility of a squirrel, and rushed back across the park to the mansion.

That Home of Ours. In these days of low prices, when a pretty print or muslin dress can be bought for five or eight cents a yard, and cambric and satens in choice colors for fifteen cents, or cotton and wool fabrics for suits at twenty-five cents, there is little reason why a lady should not be prettily dressed when about her work at home. If the warm, damp weather takes the curls all out of her frizzes, a few moments should be employed after the family are scattered to put them up again. A little more trouble and expense will more than pay, if the little children are overheat to say, "Doesn't mother look sweet?" Boys, especially, are very early influenced by the surroundings of home. Happily the old-custom of having a "best room" shut up, except for weddings, funerals, or occasional company, is fast being abandoned. Now the home rooms are all thrown open. Sun-baths are welcomed, for it has been found that it is a choice between them and malaria, or disease in some form. All the best things are not crowded into one room, and the others left bare and shabby. Doors are removed, and curtains or portieres, hung on brass or stained rods, divide halls and rooms. The curtains are made of a variety of materials. They are heavy striped and figured goods, which come for this purpose, but plain goods with broad bands of contrasting color are richer. Double-faced canton flannel is the best cheap material. Dark blue or garnet is handsome, and bands of strips used for saddle-girths or some kinds of coach trimmings, are very effective upon them. Often one wishes a curtain between a large and small chamber or dressing room. Cretonne is best for this. Screens used for this purpose are very useful and ornamental, and may be very expensively or cheaply made. A clothes "horse" makes a good frame when stained or bronzed. If it has three panels each should be different. —[Ethel Stone in American Agriculturist for September.]

"JUST AFORE" The Faith that Moves Mountains of Earthly Troubles and Sorrows. 'Black-skinned, ignorant, uncouth—what was it to the world if he lay dying? They passed his humble floor with careless thoughts as the dampness of death gathered on his brow, and the children on the corner never once ceased their noisy play as the shadow of death fitted around the open door.'

'Yes, she was there. Old and wrinkled and black, her heart aching, her eyes full of tears, she sat by the bedside alone. 'Chloe, how long ago was it?' 'Nigh on fifty years, Moses,' she whispered. 'De same master owned us boat; we worked together in de same cotton fields; we prayed de same pray'r an' sung de same hymns togeder in de long ago.'

'An' de chile'n?' 'Dead—all dead! It has bin twenty years since de voice of de last one made our hearts beat faster.'

'An' we has bin alone?' 'All alone, Moses. Our ole hearts has pained and ached for de dead an' gone, an' we has sometime cried out: 'COME HOME, CHILEN—come back to us' but de dead can not return.'

'An' de time has bin long?' 'Yes, honey. We has bin pinin' an' longin' for de end of de road. 'An' we has bin poo' an' lowly?' 'De same. Hunger an' cold have shared our home fur yars an' yars, an' de world hardly knows dat we am upon airt.'

'An' now, Chloe, I ze gwine 'way to leave you?' 'Yes, Moses. 'An' de nights will seem darker an' de days longer when I am gone. You'll have another memory to make de hart ache—another sorrow to dim de poo' ole eyes w'it tears. I wish de Lawd had 'laid you fast.'

'No, no, Moses. What He doeth am fur de best. Men has told you dar' was no God. 'But dar am, Chloe! I'm got de feel'n heah if my heart. I ze got sich peace an' contentment dat I'm sinkin' away like a chile gwine to sleep.'

'An men have scoffed at a hereafter for de soul. 'ZE DRIFTIN' TO IT.' he whispered as his face lighted up. 'I kin see across de dark valley into de glorious sunshine of de spirit world.'

'An' dar am happiness an' rest for eben sich as us. 'Come closer, Chloe! Lay your face on mine. I ze driftin'— I ze partin' wid dis poo' ole body an' dis black skin. I ze leavin' ole age—sorrow—hunger an pain all behind. De sunlight from across de valley falls upon you face, an' it am de sunlight of de hereafter—of heaven! Closer, Chloe! I ze driftin'—driftin'—'

And as he held the hand of the dead and rocked to and fro; her face wore a smile of happiness. Are you troubled with Salt Rheum, Rough Skin, Pimples or Canker Sores; if so, go at once to Geo. Rhyms' Drug Store and get a package of McGregors' & Parke's Carbolic Ointment. Price 25 cents. It was never known to fail.

England stands first with 25 modern line-of-battle ships, fulfilling all requirements of the present time, and 14 obsolete men-of-war, 9 modern and 6 obsolete ironclads for coast defense, and 3 ironclad cruisers. France follows with 16 modern and 9 obsolete line-of-battle ships, and 7 modern and 8 obsolete ironclads for coast defense.

Next to these two most important naval powers ranks Germany, with 9 modern (5 iron-clad frigates, 4 iron-clad corvettes) line of battle ships, fulfilling all requirements of the present day, and three obsolete iron-clad ships (the iron-clad frigates Kronprinz and Friederich Karl, and the iron-clad corvette Hansa) 11 modern iron-clad vessels for coast defense (11 iron-clad gunboats, all completed), and one obsolete vessel, the iron-clad Arminius.

Austria takes fourth place, with three modern and 7 obsolete line-of-battle ships. Italy has 2 modern and 11 obsolete iron-clad ships at her disposal. Russia has only 1 single first-class line-of-battle ship and 7 obsolete iron-clad ships. Denmark possesses 2 modern and 2 obsolete line-of-battle ships, 2 modern and 2 obsolete iron-clad vessels for coast defense. Holland, 1 modern battle ship and 17 modern iron-clad vessels for coast defense. —[German Military Gazette.]

The tenacity with which people abide by their early faith in Ayer's Sarsaparilla can only be explained by the fact that it is the best blood medicine ever used, and is not approached in excellence by any new candidate for public favor.

To retain or recover health, persons should be relieved from anxiety concerning disease. The mind has power over the body—for a person to think he has a disease will often produce that disease. This we see effected when the mind is intensely concentrated upon the disease of another. We have seen a person so sick in anticipation of a voyage, before reaching the vessel, have known people to die of cancer in the stomach, when not afflicted with cancer or any other mortal disease. A blindfold man slightly pecked in the arm, has fainted and died from believing he was bleeding to death. Therefore, persons to remain well should be cheerful and happy; and sick persons should have their minds diverted as much as possible. It is by their faith that they die. As a man thinketh, so is he. If he wills not to die, he can often live in spite of disease; and if he has little or no attachment to life, he will slip away as easily as a child will fall asleep. Men live by their minds as well as by their bodies. Their bodies have no life of themselves; without pain or discomfort. Let those who are suffering from corns, yeast, scapular treatment, try it, and by the completeness of the cure they will be ready to recommend Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor to others.

The principle upon which Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor acts is entirely new. It does not sink deep into the flesh, thereby producing soreness, but acts directly upon the external covering of the corn, separates it from the under layer, removes the direct pressure from the part, and at once effects a radical cure, without pain or discomfort. Let those who are suffering from corns, yeast, scapular treatment, try it, and by the completeness of the cure they will be ready to recommend Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor to others.

Wheeler's Tissue Phosphates, Ed. THE DISTINGUISHED DR. LOUIS BLANC, of Paris, has been using Phosphate in treating consumption, and says he considers them the most reliable agents he has discovered. That of all the cases treated none have become worse, and the majority materially benefited, and manifesting signs of permanent recovery. This is the record of Wheeler's Phosphates and Cellulose, which cures a larger proportion of cases than any preparation hitherto known.

When symptoms of malaria appear in any form, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla at once, to prevent the development of the disease, and continue until health is restored, as it surely will be by the use of this remedy. A cure is warranted in every instance. At Peche, Que., a few days ago daughter of Mr. Jos. Hammond, narrowly escaped death from the effects of an overdose of Eop Bitters.

Warren Leland, Largest Hotel Enterprises of America, says that a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. Leland has recommended Ayer's Sarsaparilla in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure. Some years ago one of Mr. Leland's farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. Leland's direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use. Mr. Leland has personally used it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood disease. We have Mr. Leland's permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his manumoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 5th and 6th Streets, New York. Mr. Leland's extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquiries much valuable information.

Fun and Fancy.

The Milky Way—from the cow-head to the pump. How does Pat get over single-blessedness? He proposes to bridge it. Student (translating): 'And—er—then—er—he—er—went—er—and—er.' Professor: 'Don't laugh, gentlemen; to err is human.'

Prof. (near the close of a recitation): 'Are there any questions any one would like to ask?' Pupil (not prepared and anxious): 'What time is it please?' 'What is a lake?' asked the teacher. A bright little Irish boy raised his hand. 'Well, Mikey, what is it?' 'Sure it's a hole in the kettle, mum.'

Oakland county leads the state in the yield of beans, and all it needs is a little blue blood and a few paper airplanes to be the leading district of Michigan. The fact that the discovery that a man is an infamous rascal is always coincident with his nomination for an office has happened so often that it awakens suspicion.—[Denver Opinion.] There is a story of a Scotch deacon whose earnest commendations of his minister induced a neighboring congregation to offer him their pulpit. When once installed, the wanted preacher proved a sad disappointment. 'How could you crack him up so much?' asked the aggrieved parishioners of the flattering deacon. 'Oh! it was the dry reply, 'you'll be ready enough to crack him up if you see a chance of getting rid of him.'

I know a boy who says, 'Don't want, when he means 'I don't want to.' 'Whisper say' when he means 'What did you say?' and 'Where do go?' instead of 'Where did he go?' Sometimes you hear 'Flood,' instead of 'If I could'; 'Wilfercan,' instead of 'I will'; 'If I can'; and 'Howjerknow?' for 'How do you know?' Don't you think such talk might be improved?

'What have you done?' drawled the East India Hamcock, languidly, making a lazy effort to swing a little in the evening breeze. 'Done?' said the little Baseball, scornfully: 'What have I done? I broke the short-stop's fingers, knocked an eye out of the catcher, skinned the pitcher's hands, doubled up the umpire twice, drove the wind clean out of the second-base, broke six panes of glass and a woman's head in the school-house, and knocked a spectator cold.' 'What have I done?' I have laid around all day, a limp mass of protoplasmic net-work. And he smiled a bitter triumph as he thus displayed his college training.—[Brooklyn Eagle.]

Words of Wisdom.

The apple falls near the tree.—[Spanish Proverb.] It is exceedingly bad husbandry to brow up the feelings of your wife.—[G. D. Frentice.] I have discovered the philosopher's stone that turns everything into gold. It is—"Pay as you go!"—[John Randolph.] He that would live at ease should always put the best construction on business and conversation.—[Jeremy Collier.] Kind looks, kind words, kind acts, and warm hand-shakes—these are secondary means of grace when men are in trouble, and are fighting these unseen battles.—[Dr. John Hall.] It would be dishonorable for Congress to legislate either for the debtor class or for the creditor alone. We ought to legislate for the whole country.—[Garfield.] The supreme gifts of the gods can neither be discussed nor described. Believe in happiness; do not seek it; make room for it in your life! Have faith! Faith moves mountains.

If we would have powerful minds we must think; if we would have faithful hearts, we must love; if we would have strong muscles we must labor. These include all that is valuable in life. This world could not exist if it were not simple. This ground has been tilled a thousand years, yet its powers remain over the same; a little sun and each Spring it grows green again.—[Goethe.] The supreme art of life, above all other arts, is the art of living together justly and charitably; no other thing so little obvious, so much wisdom, so much practice—how to live with our fellow-men.

The way to fill a small sphere is to glorify a small one. There is no large sphere; you are your sphere; the man regenerated and consecrated is the lordliest thing on earth, because he makes himself so.—[Edward Brainerd.] Love never exhausts itself by giving. The more we love others and seek to do them good, the more power and good we have to give them. The more we love, the larger our hearts become. God is within all things, but is shut up in nothing; outside of all things, but excluded from nothing; beneath all things, but not depressed under anything; above all things, but not lifted up out of the reach of anything.—[Augustine.] God looks not at the oratory of your prayers, how eloquent they are; nor at their geometry, how long they are; nor at their arithmetic, how many they are; nor at their logic, how methodical they are; but he looks at their sincerity, how spiritual they are.

Nothing sinks a young man into low company, both of women and men, so surely as timidity and diffidence of himself. If he thinks that he shall not, he may depend upon it he will not, please. But with proper endeavors to please, and a degree of persuasion that he shall, it is almost certain that he will.—[Chesterfield.] Fashion is the great governor of this world. It presides not only in matters of dress and amusement, but in law, physics, politics, religion, and all other things of the gravest kind. Indeed, the wisest of men would be puzzled to give any better reason why particular forms in all these have been at particular times universally rejected.

The Net of Marriage.

Some people, especially if they marry young and on the impulse of some taking fancy, without a due consideration of the very grave nature of the state they are entering, discover afterward that his or her mate does not come up to the expectations which had been formed. The light and laughing love of the marriage and the early periods of married life are succeeded by a sense of disappointment. Then comes domestic indifference, perhaps recrimination. Both man and wife are deceived and undeceived. Unintentionally perhaps, but really, both feel, as it were, entangled in a net, and as they are, and repent too often, not at leisure, but with mutual bitterness and ill-concealed unconcern for one another. Each generally thinks the other most to blame. And I do not believe that I am overstepping the limits of appropriate language when I say that the idea of being caught in a net represents their secret convictions. Here is a disastrous state of affairs. In this country such a net cannot be easily broken. The pair have married for worse, in a more serious sense than these words are intended to bear in the marriage vows. What is to be done? I should very imperfectly express my advice if I simply said, "Make the best of it." For though this is a rude rendering of the advice needed, much might be said to show how this can be done after a Christian way. It is a Christian rule that to be loved, we must show kindness and consideration. We are to expect to receive that we do not grant ourselves. "Give, as ye wish to be given." "Judge not, and you shall not be judged. Condemn not, and you shall not be condemned." And if this applies anywhere, it applies most in the case of those who are in the relationship of husband and wife. Clouds sometimes cover the married life because too much consideration is expected. Show it, I would say rather than demand it, if it has seemed to come short. Do not think to mend matters by half-grudging and grudging. What is God to do? He is to be trusted to keep the rule, "Bear and forbear." So may a hasty marriage, the beauty of which has been spoiled by some misunderstanding, ripen into the true affection which should mark this holy estate, and the cloud of disappointment give place to a love which rests upon no pretense, drove the wind clean out of the second-base, broke six panes of glass and a woman's head in the school-house, and knocked a spectator cold. "What have I done?" I have laid around all day, a limp mass of protoplasmic net-work. And he smiled a bitter triumph as he thus displayed his college training.—[Brooklyn Eagle.]

Just as Much News in It. A Bible agent stopped at a rather pretentious house in Pittsfield. There was an evident desire on their part to buy a book, but there was a difference of opinion as to whether the books to be bought should be a 25 cent or a $1 copy. The wife was attracted by the morocco and gilt. The husband wasn't a bit fascinated by the binding. They retired to a corner for consultation, and after argument the man reported to the peddler: "We'll take one for a quarter. There's just as much news in it as there is in the one that's twice as big and ten times as costly."

Too Much of an Appetite.

'No more preaching for me,' said a young circuit rider, who had started out with bright prospects and two pairs of home-knit socks. 'I didn't mind persuading people to lead better lives, but the fact is, the walls were too thin where I boarded. I could lie in my room and hear everything that was said in the joining room. I didn't like this. I don't like to be an eavesdropper. The other night I was lying in my room, not trying to listen, but I couldn't help but hear. 'That's a fine preacher,' said the old man. 'Got a mouth like a stove door. Got devilish right more appetite than religion. Did you see him make a pass at that goat? Wonder the goat don't squeal when he comes around.' 'You oughter talk about him that way,' replied the old lady, 'for he's doin' the best he kin. I didn't like it though the way he dove into that butter. Now, he oughter know how scarce butter is. I believe he could eat two pounds at one setting. Did you notice to-night when he got down to pray? Had his eye on that basket of eggs all the time. My stars, if that's the kind of preachers they are going to send out, wed as well open the smoke-house and be done with it. That feller's hungry all the time, and besides that he can't preach. Talk like his mouth's full of mud. He'll never be a success in callin' mourners. Make a better hand at callin' hogs.' Every night I was compelled to hear such remarks. Until I decided that my appetite was a trifle too strong for one Arkansas meek and lowly trail.'—[Arkansas Traveler.]

A Parson's Experience of Weddings.

Generally speaking, marriages pass off very smoothly, and especially with very pretty brides. The brides are credited with careful study and perusal of the service for many days beforehand. Sometimes there has been a rehearsal. I have known brides, when the grooms have failed to make the proper response, to prompt the minister with the words of the facility. The most common mistake of the bride is to take off only one of her gloves, whereas both hands are brought into requisition in the service. As for the men they commit all kinds of blunders and bunglings. I have known a man at the very nervous and in a moment to follow a clergyman within the communion-rails, and prepare to take a communion. I have known a man, when the minister stretched out his hand to unite those of the couple, to take it vigorously in his own and give it a hearty shake. Some ladies have an annoying habit of following the minister to use the word 'obey'; one or two, if their own statements are to be accepted, have ingeniously constructed the word "nobody." The word, however, has still to be orally admitted into the language. There was one girl, who was being married, who very politely refused to obey. The minister suggested that, if she were unwilling to utter the word aloud, she should whisper it to him; but the young lady refused to accept even this kind of compromise. Further, however, than this the clergyman wished to deliver a little sermon, qualifying his vow and describing in what sense and to what extent he was using the words of the formula. He was, of course, given to understand that nothing of this kind could be permitted. There was one man who accompanied the formula with the remark, which must have been exceedingly disagreeable to the officiating minister. He interpolated remarks after the fashion of Burchell's "Fudge!" "With this ring I thee wed; that's superstitious." "With my body I thee worship; that's idolatry." "With my worldly goods I thee endow; that's a lie." It is a wonder that such a being was not conducted out of church by the beadle. This puts one in mind of an anecdote that is told of a man who in his time was a Cabinet Minister. There was a great discussion on the question whether a man can marry on three hundred a year. "All I can say," said the great man, "is that when I said, 'With all my worldly goods I thee endow,' so far from having three hundred pounds, I question whether, when all my debts were paid, I had three hundred pence." "Yes, my love," said his wife; "but then you had your splendid intellect." "I didn't endow you with that, ma'am," sharply retorted the right honorable husband.

The Ladies' Waist.

The more closely a woman can get her bust to approximate to the shape of a peg-top the prouder and happier she usually is. Why the peg-top has attained to the high distinction of serving as a model for women is one of the many puzzles connected with dress. The Greeks—who certainly knew something about the human form—assigned to their ideal waist dimensions quite intolerable to an American woman of to-day. Moreover, they made it oval, whereas the modern waist is round. It is a physiological fact that there is about an oval waist a delightful suppleness and flexibility, which is quite common at the present day is hard, rigid, and unsympathetic. The fact is that some women are blessed with waists naturally small and oval, as every waist naturally is, while other women less favored by nature, are determined to outdo the small waisted woman in the matter of self-discriminating critic can ever fail to perceive the difference between natural and artificial smallness. Perhaps if this were better understood women would cease to ruin their health and weaken the muscles of their back by going out in a tight-lacing corset, and at the risk of appearing in the round waist of the present day to depart conspicuously from woman's dress. They would then find that some of their problems, such as distribution of weight, would settle themselves with much difficulty.

THE FALL SHOW.

The West Riding of Huron Agricultural Society's Exhibition.

Nearly up to former years—a splendid show of Fruit—The Prize List.

A number of causes combined to make the fall show held on Tuesday and Wednesday unsuccessful. The weather was wet on the first day, and during the second...

The display of grain was one of those, John Varcoe and Thos. Hamilton being the most successful exhibitors. Our townsman C. Crabb came out ahead in large peas and black oats.

The competition in flowers, as will be seen by the prize list, was confined chiefly to professionals, with R. Bonamy a successful disputant for the amateurs.

Considering the season the vegetables shown were good. The potatoes were of an excellent quality, while the solid cabbage, the tealiful onion and the pointed carrot, claimed admiration.

The redeeming feature of the show was the display of fruit. The apples and pears were well worth seeing. We don't remember seeing better specimens here.

The cheese shown was of excellent quality and some of the butter was very good. As a whole this department was not up to former years.

was a good average exhibit throughout, but unfortunately about 3 p.m. while the judging was in progress a heavy rain set in, which militated against the success of the show.
