and fish, or lie in the knee-deep grass on a lazy summer day and watch the clouds form and re-form into lions and tigers, castles and armored knights. He loved to hunt birds' nests, but with a tenderness rare in many was the lad he pummelled who did rob them. He loved young things-babies, puppies and kittensand he had a way of flying into a fury over their mistreatment that made the neighbors predict a bad end for him. He left school early, but he hated work just as he hated study, and drifted from one job to another. He was out of tune with his times. He was born too late. He would have made a second Kit Karson, but, alas, when he appeared upon this earthly scene there were no Indians left, no in a door with a bayonet, momey, I the army and only resumed it ain't been able to sleep right well since. But there'll be plenty of time for sieep soon." He fell on the out: skirts of Fismes, riddled by a hall of lead from a concealed nest of machine guns. He lay for hours in that hell of attack and counter attack, without pain, but curiously numb, staring upward. When the low sun painted the battle clouds a fiery and bloody hue, he again saw the castle, the plumed knights, but with them this time a great host of babies, their mothers who directed the little ones eyes downward to him and whispered "Your saviour." He smiled and lifted his arms a little to acknowledge the tribute; then, with a deep sigh, he closed his hot, bright eyes—förever. Den't pity him: He would scorn your pity The war lifted him out of his drab life, and he died in just such a flare of glory as he had dreamed of since a child. He considered the war the most amazing piece of luck that could have come to him. He passed over the river like a panopiled knight and a sweeter death he could not have asked. It is stated, says the Dally Chronicle, that the Reyal Air Force will soon have swarms of a new type of machine at the battlefront which is likely to add greatly to the difficulties of the Germans. This machine a brilliant example of the constructor's art, is capable of carrying with its pilot and observer a great weight of bombs, machine guns, and other equipment, to over 20,000 feet, and in an extraordinarily short time. Searing, as the new machine Will, above the average range of guns and German airmen, it can cross the fighting lines, drop its bombs and feturn home swiftly for a new load. So fast is it, even at great altitudes; that long distances can be accomplished in the shortest periods, and bombing raids which with the older type of machine would, perhaps, need a whole day's preparation, will now be carried out within a couple of hours. Moreover, what is of the utmost importance, their engines are completely reliable, and the risk that they might fail when a hundred miles. ever the enemy lines a risk too common with some aftithe earlier typesno longer exists. It says much for their supremé value that, so far, not lidn't like to study--played hooky one of this type has been brough down in spite of the Huns' utmost efforts. A Few Questions

(Manitoba Free Press.) Let us ask these plausible sophists and with them the pacifists on our own side who would aid their campaign: What about the creed of kultur and of Pan-Germanism, so blatantly and boastfully enunciated in the pre-war and latter utterances of the Kaiser and his statellites? What about peaceful economic penetration before the war? What about the Lichnowsky and Muehlon disclosures? What about the careful German pre- tions. pafations for war and their utilization over the mutilated body of Belgium in the name of "military necessity?" What about the orgy of frightfulness in Belgium. Serbia, northern France and elsewhere, and the flouting of the legal restrictions upon submarine warfare? What about the Lusitania, Edith Cavell, poison gas, the bombing of hospitals and the inhuman treatment of captured noncombatants? Are these the acts of peoples fighting "only to safeguard themselves" against wanton aggression by jealous commercial competitors, who were taken by surprise in the declaration of war and who have only built up "such colossal superior-lty in strength" after four years of the greatest sacrifice and the utmost

Changeable Weather.

A S.E. gale with snow, prevailed along the western end of the railway yesterday and last night, extending east to Bishop's Falls, where it was beautifully fine with the temperature at 54. At Port aux Basques, Little River, and along to Quarry, there was snow falling all the afternoon, with the temperature at from 40 to 30. East of Bishop's Falls, the weather conditions were the same as experienced in the city.
