REV. J. R. CAMPBELL'S lecture in Memorial Hall to-morrow (Friday) evening on "Atheism Ancient and Modern" will be held at the most interesting of the whole course. The Rev. lecturer excels in close analysis and illustration of race characteristics. All who attend will enjoy a literary treat. The musical programme forms an attractive feature of the Mount Allison lecture course.

POLITICAL MEETING.—Messrs. Emmer-son, Smith and Robinson addressed a meeting in Chignecto Hall last Thursday evening. The Hall was well filled and the speakers received an attentive hearing.—A large audience, including a number of ladies, assembled in Music Hall on Monday evening and listened to able addresses from Messrs. Black and Powell. The meeting was a decided success.

AFTER THE BATTLE.—A large crowd gathered around the telegraph office last night to learn the results of the contest, and as the news came in slowly, they were kept on their toes in suspense. After part of the returns had been received Mr. Wood briefly addressed the crowd from the steps of the Brunswick House, and thanked the electors for the magnificent victory they had won. He said the other party had their fun on nomination day, but he thought it best to wait till the poll closed. He was then carried amid great enthusiasm to his residence, in front of which a huge bonfire was soon burning, and for some time the shouts of the multitude almost drowned the shrieks of two N. B. & P. E. Railway locomotives. A number of houses in the vicinity were brilliantly illuminated, and conspicuous among them was the new residence of Mr. C. A. Dool, which was a blaze of light from floor to ceiling.

ECHOES FROM OLD ACADIA.—Notwithstanding other attractions, there was a large audience in Memorial Hall last Thursday evening to hear Prof. Roberts. A very pleasing innovation was made by the presentation of a violin solo by Mr. Chisholm, and a song beautifully rendered by Miss Mack. Prof. Roberts' lecture was a charming collection of prose poems illustrating the history of the Acadia, and abounded in delightful word-pictures, touches of intense pathos and gleams of quiet humor. The "echoes" were entitled "Lifting the Curtain," "The Mouth of the St. Croix," "Noble Island," "The Order of a Good Time," "History of the Seign of Charles La Tour," "A later Acadian Dream," "An Old Acadian Christmas." Prof. Roberts' lecture will long be remembered by those who had the pleasure of hearing it, and the gifted New Brunswick poet will always be sure of a hearty welcome from a Sackville audience.

Dorchester.

Election day has come and gone, but not all the headaches. The managing owner of the Corner party has a considerable stock of barrels on hand—also an effigy—which could be had cheap. The effigy, by being filled out so as to look stouter and colored dark, would suit a different man from Mr. Wood. How much too previous those congratulations, chairings, cheerings, barrels, and effigies, must now appear to their owners.

The managing owner of the party had the oath administered to him on Tuesday last, and "like song tall pine it reared its awful head." It was a neat oath altogether. Talk about swallowing camels.

A happy change is coming over the Corner. Ministers of religion can go on the stump, speechify, canvass, and vote, and yet survive.

Dorchester may be quite a place some day yet. Good bye.

Postscript. The barrels above referred to as being in the market are warranted to be well seasoned, having been in stock about eight years.

Westmorland County.

The following are the latest returns that have been obtained. There will probably be a few slight changes but the general result will not be much affected.

man for a daughter to be proud of.

Miss Middlebury."

"Yes," said she, "I suppose so."

And what did papa tell you to say to

Matilda?"

"My dear young lady," said I, "do you know that you are seriously offending your good papa?"

"To be seriously offended is papa's normal condition," she replied, "and it doesn't much matter."

"You are aware that I made a will in your favor some time ago?" I asked.

"And papa threatens to alter it if I show any desire to please myself in anything," said Miss Matilda. "I presume he sent you here to say so."

He said it very often himself, very often, indeed; and I tell you, as I told him, that money, though desirable, is nothing when it stands in the way of the strongest feelings of one's life. What is the use of mincing matters? You know he objects to my marriage, but I am of age; he is unreasonable. I intend to do as I please. You have my answer."

"Madame," I said, "my message from your father is this: you are to return home, under my escort, at once."

"Perhaps I shall refuse to go with you," she said.

"Madame," I said, "I am prepared for that."

And then I brought in the legal hocus-pocus with which I had armed myself.

"Madame," I said, "it is necessary for you to show just cause before you can refuse to return to a parent's roof. Nine days are necessary for a quit claim. Meanwhile you are legally a minor. Pending your proof before a magistrate, I have authority to arrest you and take you home. I do so in the name of the law. I trust you will not force me to put handcuffs upon a lady's wrists, or to call in four police officers and lodge you in jail at night; but, being under bonds to your father, I shall be obliged to do so if you resist; otherwise, I can offer you my arm, and escort you, as any gentleman might, to the railway station."

As she listened, all the pretty red color faded from Miss Matilda's cheeks.

"What a dreadful thing law is!"

she said. "I had no idea such laws existed. Then I suppose I must go with you. But I'm not a baby."

Show me your proofs," your papers —whatever gives you your right."

I took from my pocket a lease written on parchment and tied with red tape.

"The warrant, Madame," I said.

I then turned over the edge of my waistcoat, and exhibited the pin of the Jolly Good Fellows' Club, of which I am a member, and said:

"My badge of office, Madame."

She turned pale as I said this, and sat down and began to cry. Suddenly she wiped her eyes, and said:

"May I write a note to tell somebody why I break an engagement?"

And before I got down to the stupid idea where papa wants to bury me, will you go with me to the dressmaker's?"

"Certainly," I replied. To myself

I said: "She will plan to escape me at the dressmaker's. I must watch her there."

Miss Matilda wrote the note. She sent it off before my eyes, and without leaving the room she called a maid to bring her lace shawl and a hat and veil. "And my pearl-colored gloves," she added. "And I remember, pack everything nicely."

liceman; "come along, you follow, if you please, miss. I don't consider it the duty of good citizens to let such fellows off, for my part."

"Nor I," said I. "Come on, Miss

Matilda."

The policeman led the way with the young man. As we walked behind, I particularly noticed that he had a very gentlemanly appearance.

New York thieves often have. "My heart really bled for him. He was one who should have played a better part."

We arrived at the station and were led into a sort of private parlor, where we were asked to wait until the prisoner being led away by the policeman. I saw the door of the room in which the justice sat open; I saw the prisoner standing before him. Then it closed with a bang. In my instant the policeman returned.

"Miss," said he, "His Honor wishes to see you alone. Our young man declares the affair a conspiracy against him, and you will be questioned separately. No offense, miss."

"None," said I. Then I beckoned to the policeman apart and slipped two dollars into his hand.

"Don't lose sight of the young lady until she rejoins me," I said.

"No," on no account," said he.

And off they went together. They were gone ten minutes, and returned as they went. Miss Matilda had been weeping.

"The lady's evidence was all sufficient," said the man.

"Then they have committed him?"

said I.

"Yes, he's committed," said Matilda. "Oh, poor fellow! I—I'll go now, Mr. Martin."

I led her away. As we went I saw the policeman grinning at us.

I couldn't think why.

We said very little as we walked on, and we were at the dressmaker's in no time. Now or never would she baffle me. She might escape by the back door, or the roof; I would not let her. I watched her every movement. When, twenty-four hours from our first meeting, I rang the bell of her father's residence, I was a jaded being, but I was triumphant. I walked into my father's chamber, with Matilda on my arm.

"Sir," I said, "I have done my duty. Here is Miss Matilda Middlebury."

Shall I ever forget that moment?

As I spoke, Matilda turned about and said:

"You've made a mistake," said she.

"A married woman bears her husband's name. Mrs. Jackson, if you please. Papa, here is my certificate."

And this is my ring," she said, drawing her glove as she spoke, and a heavy wedding ring, which she had not worn when we started, glittered on her finger. "You were afraid of the dressmaker's house," she said.

There was no danger there. I was married at the police station.

Charles was the thief. The arrest was a sham. The policeman was bribed. He merely ushered Charles into the presence of the Justice of Peace, supported me afterwards into the sacred room, and was witness to the ceremony.

"The law is very hard upon us young women," she added with a meaning glance at me, "and the parliament. But those whom God has joined no man can put asunder.

And papa must forgive me before my husband comes to-morrow."

I suppose Mr. Middlebury did forgive his daughter; for I never altered the will; but I went back to the city that day in such a boiling rage, that if it had been in my power to disinherit her, Matilda would now be penniless.

I got over my anger long ago; and I have learned a lesson by it. It is the duty of a wife to love and respect her husband, and no man can stop her."
