HECANDS GAZITTE. AUGUST 18.

The state of th mition to listen to no proposals that did not reach him through the medium of Austria—a state which he, and he alone, had rescued from the destruction that impended over it in 1848 and 1849—are of themselves groofs how little he understands the real sentiments of the Western nations. He will in due time, it is to be hoped, discover his fatal error. He is the common enemy of every state in Europe. He has already inflicted more mischief upon them than has been inflicted more mischief upon them than has been inflicted why any individual since the days of the French Consilate and Empire The only course loft for this and other countries is to be prepared for him; and we gather from the speech of Lord Clarendon, in answer to the Marquis of Clanticarde, that, as fix as this nation is concerned, there is no reason to dread any further indecision or vacillation. The nation knows, at last, the true character of this disturber, and is prepared to make a great present, sacrifices at a future period.

Advises from St. Petersburgh state General Count Orlow Dunison had left for Moldavis, and General Count Nesselrode for Warraw.

On the 18th and 19th ult, the Sultan assembled the Ulemas and dignituries of the state at Constantinople, and declared to them that, not being able to take part with the army, they should, procure money for the defence of the country and faith.

Three new yearsols were expected to join the putation of Boyarda have gone to St. Petersburgh to obtain justice. Lord Charendon tells us that Lord Stratford de Redeliff has been informed that a communication had been made by the Consul-General of Russis to the Hospodar of Moldavia, informing him that his relations with the Ottoman Government were to cease; that the tribute usually transmitted to the Sultan sess to be transmitted to the Russiam Government; and that the action of the Sovereign Powers must necessarily, though temporarily, be suspended. The Turkish Government expectation of Wallachia, but Mr. Colquhoun, our Consul-General at Bucharest, says, in a letter dated the 22nd July, that, up to the evening before, Hospodar of Wallachia, had not received the notice which had been communicated to the Hospodar of Moldavia. Of course Lord Stratford had sent orders to our Consuls to abdicate their functions in the event of such notice; and Lord Clarendon has signified the entire approval of her Majesty's Government of such a course, and has instructed Sir Hamilton Seymour to demand an explanation of the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh respecting this fresh aggravated insult and aggression upon the sovereign rights of the Sultan. Now, with these plain finets before us, the truth of which is beyond doubt, we ask our intelligent commercial readers what evidence there is, what shadow of an indication there is that the Caar intends to recede. The course of the Sultan would be clear enough but that England and France have held his arms lest he might strike a blow rasally. The Sultan, however, has given orders to the Hospodars to withdraw from the Principalities, and to cease their functions the moment the insolent notice of the Caar shall be received. The Egyptian flest, with 12,000 men on board, has arrived at Constantinople, and everything is ripe for action in the event of the Car persisting in his treacherous aggressive course of action. All the tales so industriously circulated by the Times and extantine foreign journals about the concessions meditated to Turkey ments, with some slight adaptation to the manners of the Chinese Empire. Thus, in the commentary on the seventh commandament, we are informed that moting opium is to be considered as included in the crime of adultery. The prayers and thanksgivings to be used by the flathful in the various occasions of life are expressly offered "through the merits of our Savicur and heavenly brother, the Lord Jesus who redeessed us from sin." The form of praise is evidently isken from the Christian doxology; the observance of the sabbath is enjoined, and the whole dispensation of the Old and New Testiments is set forth in a poem or pasha, called the "Trimetrical Classic," which is one of the most singular productions we can remember to have perused. In point of morals and language, the conduct of the new seat is described as extremely decorous, and strikingly different from the usual habits of the Chinese. It seems, however, that the numbers of troops serving under the standard of this insurrection are less than had been stated. At Nankin their regular force did not exceed 8,000 of their original party, assisted by about 25,000 men who had joined their standard in the provinces they had subdued. Upon the Mandarins and Tartar troops they make war with great ferocity, and many thousands of them have been slain. It is stated that the Mantehoos at Nankin numbered not less than 20,000, of whom 8,000 were regular troops. Yet they struck not a blow in their defence. Only about 100 escaped out of the whole population; the rest, men, women, and children, were all out to the sword. "We killed them all," and the insurgents to the English interpretors, to the infant in arms; we left not a root to snrout from. Their bodies were thrown into the Yang-tse-kiang." The rabble of the cities of course join the march of the successful army for the purpose of plunder, though in ma-half ounces! Besides; our shippers nearly me in food for 100 days, and 22 days more must try to remember that, and that a letter d not eat anything. If the Ocean Penny Post were established, Government would reap the vautage in paper duties, for the stationers we sell a ream where they now sell a quire."

you are mistaken this time—I owe you nothing."

"O, it is not my bill," said the man—I am only the collector. It is a tax bill."

"Ah, a rum bill!"

"Yes," said the collector, "if you've a mind to understand it so—and about half I call upon are of this opinion—they mutter terribly upon the rum taxes, the number of lazy, drunken fellows in the poor-house, and the criminals taken up every day, making an enormous cost to the country, and I believe if it was not for the rum shops, the taxes would not be one quarter so heavy as they are—you have given it about the right name—rum bill—only I should not like to have the name of rum bill collector."

On saying this he sat down—but it proved a most effective speech, for others took up the thought, and the rum bill, assessed upon temperance men, was not lost eight of to the close of the meeting. Indeed, the idea that a temperance man should be met with a demand which could only appropriately be made of a drunkard. "Sir, I have a rum bill against you," and be compelled to submit to it, and pay it, while it was at first quite ludicrous, soon excited burning indignation—words are wanting to express the strength of a demand, and that immediately, for a Maine Law.

"Would that we could traverse the State, strength of a demand, and that immediately, for a Maine Law.

"Would that we could traverse the State, and show to every hard working man, the amount of his rum bill—that we could sit down by the shoemaker, working day and night to pay his rent, and support his family, and sak him bow much was his rum bill.

"Rum bill? I never drink rum."

"Very well, sir, but you may a rum bill.

"Rum bill? I never drink rum."
"Very well, sir, but you pay a rum bill.
What was your taxes last year?"
"Sixteen dollars, twenty-five centa."

"Rum bill! don't insult me; never a drop comes into my shop."
"That may be, sir, but you pay a heavy rum bill; and it won't be anything less when these drunken fellows, who I see hang around your furnace, get, with their families, into the poor house."
By the hard-working thrifty farmer—"Sis, you've a very fine farm, will you not set apart a lot for the missionary or Bible cause?

"I would if I could, but it requires all I an raise to support my family." "Sir, you are now devoting the produce

"Sir, you are now devoting the produce of your best lot to a worse purpose."
"I am, sir, what do you mean?"
"I mean to pay your rum bill."
"Sir, you're mistaken in your man. Rum used to cost me twenty and thirty dollars in haying and harvesting, but I have not paid a rum bill these six years."
"Have not? what were your taxes last

"Well two thirds of that was a rum bill.
The pauper tax of the State of New York in 1849, according to the legislative Reports, was $817,441; of this, $670,173, was set down to intemperance, and you had to pay your share of it. Now go for a Maine Law, and you may have hearly the whole of the produce of your farm for yourself and children."

A LONDON CONVERZATIONE.—"Good Heavens! what do people mean by going there? What is doing there, that everybody throngs into those three little rooms? After being rammed to a jelly in a doorway (where you feel your feet going through Lady Barbara Macbeth's lace flounces, and get a look from that haggard and painted old harpy, compared to which the gaze of Ugolino is quite cheerfull; after withdrawing your elbo to which the gaze of Ugolino is quite cheerful); after withdrawing your elbo out of poor Bob Guttleton's white waist-coat, from which cushion it was impossible to remove it, though you knew you were squeezing poor Bob into an appoplexy—you find yourself at last in the reception-room, and try to catch the eye of Mrs Botibol, the conversazione-giver. When you catch her oye, you are expected to grin, and she smiles too, for the four-hundreth time that night; and if she's very glad to see you, waggles her little hand before her face as if to blow you a kiss, as the phrase is. Why the deuce should Mrs. Botibol blow me a kiss? I wouldn't kiss her for the world. Why do I grin when I see her, as it I was delighted? Because we are both performing the ceremonies demanded by the Great Snob Society: whose dictates we all of us obey.

A General writer says, the people of the United States can burst more steamboats and chew more tobacco than any other five nations in the world.

A round widow was asked why she was going to take another husband so soon after the death of the first. "O, in!" said she, "I do it to prevent feating myself to death on account of dear Tom."

"I SHALL die like a hero," said the coal, when it was being communed; "for I shall mix with the other of the gree."
