Watches!

Our sales this year have been larger than last, although there has been more competition. A good many who have purchased trashy watches are waking up sorry, and the reaction will have the effect of creating a better demand for reliable goods.

We have no fault to find with honest competition, so long as right goods are sold but do think the sale of dishonest goods ought to be prohibited.

Items of Interest to Catholic Readers in the Magazine.

"A Mortgaged Expression"

(From the Sacred Heart Review)

According to a writer in the latest number of the Revue de Paris, M. Mabillean, the above graphic phrase is the way wherein a member of the Italian parliament described to him the actual condition of King Humbert's realm. "Our country," said the Italian in question, "is no longer a geographical expression: it is a mortgaged expression." In a letter lately published by him Marion Crawford told the American reading public the fearful exactions in the shape of taxes which are demanded from the unfortunate Italian people, and this article of M. Mabillean confirms all that the American novelist said on that subject. In it we are told that in some districts every lire of gain that agriculturists earn from the fields or the vineyards has straightway to be paid to the tax-collector, with the consequence that in those districts evictions are continually taking place. Let the reader might imagine that this assertion was merely a general statement, unfounded upon actual happenings, M. Mabillean asserts that in the districts he refers to there occurred, in 1893, no less than two thousand evictions. It would appear, moreover, that these evictions profit the Italian exchequer nothing, but, on the contrary, injure it. For the costs of making the evictions more than equal the taxes which the government collects by making them. The financial poverty of the land may be inferred from this writer's statement that specie has practically disappeared from circulation altogether; that paper money is valueless, and that for ready money small portions of land are used. Naturally with things in such a state as this, usury flourishes apace, and the poor people suffer in consequence. "The wealthier farmers," says M. Mabillean, "lend money to their tenants and workpeople at 120 and 150 per cent., taking out their interest in work. Thus whole families become slaves, and debts are carried over from one generation to another." Mortgages play a great part, too, in agricultural finance; and as a matter of fact, so heavily, and in a large measure so unjustly, are the farmers mortgaged that one prominent Italian parliamentarian declares that the law should declare every agricultural mortgage annulled. Plainly the Italian people are paying a terrible price for that "unity" to secure which their rulers unwarrantably despoiled the Holy See of its rightful possessions.

The Author of "Quo Vadis"

Mr. Jeremiah Curtin, whose translations of the work of Henryk Sienkiewicz are generally recognized as the best versions thereof, contributes a short paper to the July Centenary on the famous Polish novelist. In it the translator tells us how he first met Sienkiewicz in Switzerland, after he had turned into English some of his stories; and, naturally, the meeting was pleasing to both gentlemen. The most of this paper deals with Sienkiewicz's literary likes and dislikes; and as everything connected with so favorite and widely read a novelist has a general interest, our readers may like to know that the author of "Quo Vadis" prefers Dickens to any other English novelist, and considers "David Copperfield" nearer genuine human nature than any other production of the present century. Of Scott Sienkiewicz said that he admired the Scottish storyteller for his great narrative powers, but he does not think that there was much in his novels that was true. Thackeray he found great from a literary point of view, but he looked upon him as being to a certain extent under the enthralment of society. The language of Fenelon, he regards as beautiful, but as a poet he considers the late laureate to have been artificial. Shakespeare, of course, is without flaw in the eyes of the Polish litterateur, who says that he studies him apart from all other writers, and regards his knowledge of mankind as almost superhuman. Among modern writers in English Sienkiewicz looks upon Rudyard Kipling as the best, in fact the only, writer of short stories, and of Du Maurier's much lauded work he asserts that it may be fine, but it is fantastic. As Mr. Curtin says, Sienkiewicz has been always a student of many other literatures than that of his native land, and his estimates of the English writers mentioned above show that he is very intimately acquainted with our English fiction.

An Estimate of Gladstone.

A writer in the July number of the Atlantic Monthly essays, in an anonymous article, an estimate of the character and work of the lamented Mr. Gladstone, and while there are several statements in his paper from which many admirers of "the grand old man" will dissent, there are others which all will willingly accept as true and correct. Among the former class of statements may be put this declaration, made about Mr. Gladstone's efforts to obtain legislative independence for the Irish people. He "set his hand for the first time to an important undertaking of constructive statesmanship; and his verdict must be that he was not equal to it." The cause of the undeniably fierce which attended the Gladstone home rule bill lay not, in the estimation of most people, in any inherent defects of that measure, or in any incapacity shown by its author in endeavoring to secure its enactment, but in the recalcitrance of a section of his party large enough to prevent its success. This paper pays a merited tribute to Gladstone's eloquence and his persuasive witchery; and it does not, in our opinion, err when it asserts that the great commoner was never logically strong. That fault was strikingly illustrated in his "Vaticanism" pamphlets and in other of his theological writings. As this writer remarks, Gladstone's argumentative writings even those which were most carefully and deliberately composed, betray marked defects of reasoning. Yet nobody who knew the man doubted his sincerity, and there is doubtless good ground for the assertion that "Gladstone could persuade anybody to anything himself included." His eminence was both moral and intellectual, though this writer seems to be disposed to attribute his greatness more to his moral qualities than to his intellectual powers. With the following statements dealing with Gladstone's heroism, all, we imagine, will cheerfully coincide: "When he braved the scorp and danger of the (Anglican) church, which had always been more to him than most of its priests (sic), and contempt of the same for his own part, in order to do justice to the people of another creed; and when he made a righteous peace with the Boers in the face of a storm of English wrath, he rose to a greatness in character that will be measured in future time with clearer eyes than now."

An Optimistic View.

In the course of a review of the recently published biographies of Cardinal Wiseman and Doctor Pusey, a writer in the English Quarterly Review takes an optimistic view of the religious situation at the close of the century. He thinks that the attacks of rationalism, skepticism and infidelity upon Christianity and revealed religion have resulted in a union of Christian forces, or perhaps it were more correct to say, that he thinks such a union will result from those attacks. To ordinary observers, who see the sects quarrelling now with as much animosity as ever, this view of the situation seems hardly warranted; and even were such a union as this writer speaks of to come into being, it is very questionable if the results which he considers certain to ensue from it would follow. There is but one Church that has been divinely commissioned to guard the deposit of faith, and when other churches have essayed that task in the past they have lamentably failed in the undertaking. What reason, then, is there to anticipate that they will succeed better in the future, even if they succeed in forgetting their denominational differences and presenting a united front to the enemies of Christianity? What is more, this very writer admits that the union between the sects wherof he speaks is more imaginary than real. "The Christian host," says he, "though still parted into squadrons, is not engaged in civil war; its regiments have drawn closer. . . . A deeper feeling has been drawn forth toward the spiritual elements of religion, and controversy is exchanged for the development of life within the borders of each community." It would be well for the Protestant world if these words were a correct presentation of the situation. But, as already remarked, to ordinary observers the situation is far otherwise, and the squadrons into which the sects are still divided, even on this writer's admission, are yet warring war upon each other, or, at least, stand ready to do so upon the least provocation. It was true that "men are prepared to give the Christian Church fair play, to let it take up the reins of spiritual government once more and guide civilization to higher issues." But let the Church which is par excellence the Catholic Church, and the parted squadrons of Protestantism will at once forget their differences and unite against her, assign false motives to her efforts and to do all in their common power to defeat her labors. Still, let us do this writer the justice of saying that, in the great churchmen whom he says the second half of this century has produced, he names three Catholics, Newman, Wiseman and Manning.

A Needed Institution.

In the July number of the Catholic World, S. T. Swift pleads for a Catholic blind asylum. There may be, perhaps, in some localities Catholic institutions for the sightless, but there is plainly need of one and more than one central institution for the education of Catholic blind children. For as this writer says, "a blind child can not be educated at home, under the most exceptional circumstances. Even its own parents seldom comprehend its limitations on the one side, while on the other they are apt to regard them as far as possible insurmountable, and coddle it into a most unhealthy state of dependence. The cleverest 'sighted' teacher, unless specially trained to work among the blind, usually fails to develop their intelligence." Catholic charity promptly provides for all manners of needs and wants. If it has seemed somewhat remiss in this matter of providing for the instruction of Catholic blind children, it is because it has so far been occupied in providing for more general and pressing needs. While there is probably a number of Catholic blind children to be found in all large communities, their numbers are small compared to those of other needy children, orphans, neglected offspring, etc., to provide for whom and whose needs Catholic charity rightly deemed itself first bound. The time has already come, though, when it has begun to put its hand to the accomplishment of these special works, as they may be called. Here in Boston, for instance, the right reverend president of the Review Publishing Company has undertaken to provide a school for the instruction of Catholic deaf and dumb youth, and when that institution is in working order, we make no doubt that some other zealous clergyman will interest himself in the Catholic blind children, provided their number be found sufficient to warrant undertaking the creation of a separate institution for their education. All that this writer says about the difficulties attending the education of blind children is unquestionably true; and equally true is it that in most of the non-Catholic blind institutions the faith of Catholic inmates is in danger of impairment or loss. A Catholic blind asylum is needed in more than one section of the country; and we have no doubt that before many years Catholic charity and benevolence will supply that need.

Important Items.

(From the Ave Maria.)

A Protestant chaplain, writing from the seat of war, says that soldiers do not take kindly to sensational sermons, and that they want "Gospel truth alone." That is precisely what earnest men want at home as well as in camp, if God had given their reverence the grace to see it. We notice that some of the Episcopal bishops—rather late in the day, it is true,—have counselled their clergy to refrain from war talk in their pulpits; and a Presbyterian gathering held at Richmond, Va., voted that, though ministers may hold what political opinions they please, "it is their duty to proclaim from their pulpits at all times nothing but the glorious Gospel of the blessed God."

The question of mixed marriages, recalled to the attention of our Protestant friends by a new note in which the hero refuses to marry the heroine on the sole ground that she is not a Catholic, has led the pulpiters to empty several vials of wrath upon "exclusive and intolerant Rome." The Church may ever be exclusive: she can never compromise with those man-made organizations which are attempting, with whatsoever good intention, to do the work to which she was divinely commissioned. This is not jealousy nor the thirst for domination nor the hatred of rivalry, but an essential part of her nature as the sole channel of salvation. Doubtless our Protestant friends are exclusive enough with the heathen, else why do they send missionaries to convert them? They are so far exclusive because they have still a modicum of faith in Christianity; if they had more faith in their own sect they, too, would be "exclusive" of the Church as their grandfathers were. There is danger in exclaiming "so much on the ground of temperament and the limitations of the mind in its search after truth. The heart, too, has been enfeebled by the fall of man; yet heaven is promised only to him who overcomes that weakness. And if the weakness of the mind were supported by an honest desire to know the truth and embrace it at all hazards, there would be less scepticism and less heresy in the world.

A Paris correspondent states that ten days previous to the reception of Rev. John Spencer Turner into the Catholic Church in Paris, his sister, Mrs. Walter Shields, of New York, also embraced the faith.

Here is another evidence, we suppose, of the fact that the Catholic Church, as its enemies assert, opposes the study of the Scriptures by its priests and people. A new annotated edition of the whole Bible is being prepared by one of the professors of the Catholic Institute of Paris. This edition will present the Old Testament in the Hebrew, Septuagint, Vulgate and French text, and give the New Testament and the deuterocanonical books in Greek, Latin and French, and the Pope has, moreover, given the enterprise his special sanction. Carry the tidings to the McAll Mission, which so often declares that the Bible is an unknown book in Catholic France.

It is not generally known that in Portugal St. Anthony of Padua enjoys military honors and has enjoyed them for almost two centuries. In 1706, on the eve of battle, John Va. in order to encourage his troops, enrolled St. Anthony in his regiment and ordered the same honors which were paid to the flag to be also paid to his statue, which was borne aloft amid the conflict and ever received a wound. In a very curious document John VI., in 1814, nominated St. Anthony lieutenant colonel of infantry and decreed that his salary be distributed among the poor.

Weak and Run Down, With Heart and Kidneys in Bad Condition—Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.
"I was very much run down, having been sick for several months. I had been trying different remedies which did me no good. I would have severe spells of coughing that would leave me prostrate. I was told that my lungs were affected, and my heart and kidneys were in a bad condition. In fact, it seemed as though every organ was out of order. I felt that something must be done and my brother advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I procured a bottle and began taking it. Before it was half gone I felt that it was helping me. I continued its use and it has made me a new woman. I cannot praise it too highly." Mrs. BUCKNER-VALE, 217 Ossington Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

On Tuesday night of last week, a terrific storm of wind, rain, thunder and lightning prevailed on the western part of the island. It is said that a partly finished house owned by Robert Simmons, of Lot 16 was completely thrown off its base; serious injury was also done to the grain crop.

A LARGE number of persons assembled at the Station at Sydney, C. B., on Wednesday night last, to welcome Sir Charles Tupper. Sir Charles yielding to the pressing requests of the people, stepped on the balcony and, in his usual and happy manner, thanked those present for their reception and expressed his pleasure at being again amongst them. When he had finished speaking he was loudly cheered.

It was understood that a writ was served on the Patriot Publishing Co., on Tuesday 9th, by order of Mr. Walter Lewis, for libel. The writ was served on the President of the Company, Sir I. H. Davies. This writ has taken out of certain remarks reflecting on Mr. Lewis's character, which appeared in the Patriot in connection with the asylum contract. Mr. Lewis sues for $20,000 damages. The case will be tried next term of Supreme Court.

The United States, it seems, has at length within grasp the Isle of Cuba. Doubtless she has been wide awake to her interests in that direction since President Monroe, in 1823 received from Thomas Jefferson the following: "I candidly confess that I have ever looked upon Cuba as the most interesting addition which could ever be made to our system of States."

At Merchants' Row, not far from Faneuil Hall, Boston, on the morning of Wednesday last, a $25,000 fire broke out. It commenced in a restaurant kept by Jones and Marshall and raged for an hour and a half. Many of the ironmen were overcome by the smoke arising from sulphur and chemicals; and several were somewhat injured from glass and slate.

The twelve thousand dollars missing over a week, from the Canadian Pacific Railway Account and the Bank of Montreal, is now supposed to have been stolen. The teller, Mr. Stockman, received the money from the C. P. R. in various forms and has to sort it. One day he was behind in his sorting, and as usual put the money into the basket and sent it by one of the porters to the vault. When he came to count up he was short.

ANOTHER accident, caused by reckless revolver handling, is chronicled. The victim is Mr. Alfred Mills Bowen, of Main St., St. John, N. B. He was first assistant engineer on the City of Everett running between Boston and Newport News, whilst at the latter place on August 8th, a number of playmates—friends of the deceased—went to his stateroom, and fired a not supposed loaded revolver, which was lying on the table. The bullet struck Mr. Bowen causing death in about ten hours.

THE "Month's Mind," for the late Father McMillan took place at St. Teresa's on Friday last. A solemn Pontifical Mass Requiem was celebrated by his Lordship Bishop McDonald, with Rev. Father Curran, as high priest, Rev. S. T. Phelps, deacon, Rev. Alex. McAnulty, sub-deacon, Rev. Ignatius McDonald, master of ceremonies and Rev. D. J. McKinnon, organ bearer. Very Rev. Mgr. McDonald, and Rev. William Phelps occupied seats in the Sanctuary. The choir was augmented by Rev. A. J. McDonald, who presided at the organ, Rev. J. C. McLean, and R. J. Gillis. The church was crowded with people, who came to pay their tribute of respect to the memory of their beloved deceased pastor. A most appropriate sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. McMillan of Cardigan Bridge. The Rev. preacher referred in touching language to the exemplary qualities of the good priest who had laid down his life and had gone to his reward; and the large congregation was much moved by his discourse. After Mass a Libera was sung and the organists at the catafalque, erected at the entrance to the Sanctuary, were performed by the Bishop and the other officers of Mass.

Proposals must be on the forms supplied from this office, and each tender must be accompanied by an accepted bank cheque for Six Hundred Dollars ($600) payable to the order of the Commissioners of Sewers and Water Supply. This cheque will be forfeited if the party declines the contract, or fails to complete the work contracted for, and will be returned in case of non-acceptance of tender. The Commissioners do not bind themselves to accept the lowest or any tender. DAVID LAIRD, Chairman, Office of Commissioners of Sewers and Water Supply, Charlottetown, July 29th, -Aug. 3 1898

Subjects for Quebec Conference.

It is announced from Washington that the first meeting of the joint high commission appointed by the United States and Great Britain to consider various matters of importance between the United States and Canada will be held at Quebec on August 23. They are to consider in the main the following matters:

First—Questions in respect to the fur seals in Behring Sea and the waters of the North Pacific ocean.

Second—Provisions in respect to the service in the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and in the waters of the common frontier.

Third—Provisions for the delimitation and establishment of the Alaskan-Canadian boundary, by legal and scientific experts if the commission shall so desire, or otherwise.

Fourth—Provisions for the transit of merchandise to or from either country, across intermediate territory of the other, whether by land or water, including natural and artificial waterways and intermediate transit by sea.

Fifth—Provisions relating to the transit of merchandise from one country to be delivered at points in the other beyond the frontier.

Sixth—Such adjustment and compensation as may be deemed mutually advantageous of custom duties applicable in each country to the products of the soil or industry upon the basis of reciprocal equivalents.

Seventh—Mining rights of the citizens of each country within the territory of the other.

Eighth—Such adjustment and compensation as may be deemed mutually advantageous of the rights of the citizens of the United States and Canada.

Ninth—Arrangement for the more complete definition and marking of any part of the frontier line, by land or water, where the same is now insufficiently defined or marked as to be liable to dispute.

Eleventh—Provisions for the conveyance for trial or punishment of persons in the lawful custody of the officers of one country through the territory of the other.

Twelfth—Reciprocity in wrecking and salvage rights.

HAD READ ABOUT IT.

"I had a distressing pain in my side and was also troubled with severe headache. My blood was out of order and my constitution was generally run down. Reading what Hood's Sarsaparilla had done I began taking it and after using two bottles I was cured."—MAY FLANNAGAN, Manning Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

Nature makes the cures after all. Now and then she gets into a tight place and needs helping out.

Something is needed to check disease and start the system in the right direction toward health.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with hypophosphites can do just this.

It strengthens the nerves, feeds famished tissues, and makes rich blood.

REFUGEE OF SINNERS.

BY G. H. CORNBARD.

A mellow light thro' latticed windows stealing, The Virgin's statue in a niche revealing.

Her hands were clasped, and with a look adoring She sought the altar of the Son Div.

And then in prayer her little soul out-pouring, A tender glance she lifted to the shrine.

Then bowed her head before our Mother's altar, A flow of tears out-springing from her eyes;

Her childish sob the fervent prayer made father, Her little form was trembling with her sighs.

Alas! what grief could blight so young a spirit? What sorrow weigh her with so much distress?

So deep her weal she seemed too frail to bear it, Had not each tear-drop made each burden less.

A wall across amid her sobs and sighing, Refuge of sinners, from Thy throne above, Look down on one unto thy pity cry.

And hid my sins beneath thy mantling love! O child! if thou in so deep grief shouldst languish

When trivial wrong thy little soul doth blight— If wrong it be—how great shouldst be our anguish

Whose sins are mountains in our dear Lord's sight! The child arose; the tears no more were streaming

Adown those cheeks, a bitter scolding-brine; With radiant joy her countenance was beaming;

She left her burden at our Lady's shrine, Thus woe our soul's a healing balm is needing.

To thee, sweet Refuge, Queen of Heaven above, To thee we'll fly and this shall be our pleading.

"O hide our sins beneath thy mantling love!" The Wiser Way.

"How fresh and rosy you look, Nora," exclaimed Isabel, who had just returned from the beach, and was greeting her friend.

make room upon boat or raft for themselves, he stood upon the deck and prayed for all.

"After the collision I ran up on the deck with my husband. The passengers were crowding together and fighting like madmen for a place in the boats.

"So died and ascended into heaven the bravest man I ever knew; so was translated the first soul, the soul of Father Kessler, the hero of the Bourgogne."

"I heard the scream of a woman. It was the shriek of one who had received a mortal blow. Someone shouted that an Italian had stabbed a woman who had tried to get into a boat before him.

"The roaring of machinery and the hissing of escaping steam almost drowned the priest's voice, but we strained our eyes to see his face. It was bent above as long as my husband and I knelt there shivering.

"The moment after he passed there was a crash. One of the boats had fallen from the mast where it swung. The vessel dipped, the water swirled about us and we were carried off the sinking ship by the waves.

"My terrified eyes, strained toward the ship, caught the last mortal view of Father Kessler. His hands were still stretched as though invoking a blessing upon some kneeling one. The one who had knelt a moment before had been snatched away by the waves.

"The water rose above his waist. It reached his breast. It covered his outstretched hands and then—died not longer. A gurgle came from a monster throat sounded in our ears.
