DEATH OF CAPTAIN MCKENZIE.

Died, 8th Nov., aged 73, Capt. William McKenzie, one of the early settlers of Richmond.

Richmond has to mourn the loss of one of her oldest and most respected residents in the death of Capt. William McKenzie. Capt. McKenzie was born 24th Oct. 1788, in the Rae country, in the north of Scotland of respectable parents who were in good circumstances.

Capt. McKenzie always proved himself an active and useful subject, laboring zealously to promote the welfare of the community.

DR. RUSSELL'S CORRESPONDENCE.

TWO SOUTH AND THE NORTH AS ANTAGONISTS.

It is true that the South must be steady of also, but their passion does its work; the pride of the fierce aristocracy; their superiority in the field, in strategy, in political skill, the tenors of their slave volcano, sustain them.

In a former letter I expressed an opinion, which nothing I have seen or heard has induced me to alter or to modify, that the North could, if it put forth all its strength, overrun the South.

The champion has not finished his training and it would be dangerous to send him into the ring, however full of courage and mettle he may be.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

One of the main agencies on which the chiefs of the army rely for the establishment of discipline is total abstinence.

The typhoid fever prevails to a great extent in some of the regiments, and frequent deaths are the result.

Yong correspondent recently observed in an unattended and unprotected graveyard near the grounds of the Connecticut Fifth Regiment, a rustic but elegant inclosure including three new made and well turfed graves.

Rev. Mr. Wilson, a political prisoner, has been transferred to the charge of the Provost Marshal of Baltimore, and started thither yesterday.

Many of the regiments appear to be making preparations for cold weather, building stables, digging cellars, erecting Californian fireplaces and the like, indicating a general impression of a stay of some length in this locality.

A drenching rain storm commenced on Friday night at Washington, and continued until Sunday morning, almost without intermission.

The rain caused a tremendous rise in the Potomac; at the Navy Yard the rise about seven feet. Long Bridge was submerged, and the roads rendered nearly impassible.

BUBBLES.

I stood on the brink of childhood,
And watched the bubbles go
From the rock-fretted sunny ripple
To the smoother lymph below.

UP IN THE AIR.

Some few months back I was called in—I am a surgeon by profession—to attend a Señor Tornados, who, despite his name, was an Englishman by birth and parentage as the parish of Lambeth ever bred and reared. I found him suffering from extreme debility and nervousness brought on by the overstrained tension of the muscles and sinews. He told me that he was a rope-dancer, slack and tight; a tumbler, stiff and loose; a sprite, acrobat, and bottle-quilibrist; and many other things which have escaped my memory.

rules of professional etiquette. You must make out that you are foreigners.
Well, at that all the gentlemen began to laugh; but it was settled before we broke up that night that, for the future, we were to call ourselves 'The Two Foscari—the spineless Siamese of Syria.'
Well, Sir, from that moment Ranford and I began to do well; but I'm sorry to say that our good luck only caused my partner to drink the harder, and, in consequence, to behave more badly to his wife.

him a good thrashing for unjust suspicions; but I kept my temper for the sake of the poor woman, and so we went on for eight or ten days.
Our next ascent took place on the Grand Gala night of the United Order of Ancient Topopholites. It was a still summer night, without a breath of wind. We ascended till the gardens and the streets, and the churches looked like Dutch toys, and then got out upon the rope.
As I took my seat besides Ranford I noticed that he had been drinking more than usual. He had lately taken to an odd way of shutting his eyes, and smiling with his lips tight pressed together, and what with his knit brows, white teeth, spangled trunk, and the bit of ribbon round his head, with a paste star in the centre, he looked, as he sat swinging backwards and forwards in the air, more like an evil being than a man.

could not help thinking of my old partner, and had a strange nervousness upon me as if something was about to happen; but the feeling wore off when Ranford came into the ring. The audience applauded loudly, for he had thrown a treble somersault twice before, and was a favourite in consequence.
I saw that he was not sober, and I noticed that he had the same little star upon his forehead that he wore the last time we made an ascent together. While the grooms were altering the position of the spring-board he walked up to the orchestra, and, with the old devil's smile upon his face said to me—
'You can't keep away, then, can't you? You will come!'
Ranford, I whispered, 'you are not yourself to-night; take my advice—don't throw the treble!'
'He swore an oath, and then burst into a loud laugh.
'You want me to fail, do you?' he said.
'Fail when you here! Hi!—you—la!'
He ran up on the spring-board, bowed, and kissed his hands. The music began. He threw several somersaults, and then a double one; then he stopped, and crossed his arms, and looked at me. The audience were very enthusiastic, and he began again, repeated the performance, and stopped again. There was more applause. Then he turned towards me, smiling, as if he said 'Now!' and went to work a third time. He made some little preparation—turned over once or twice. The house was so silent that you might have heard a pin drop. He got the spring, and over he went—once, twice. My heart rose in my mouth, for I saw he had not room to turn a third time. His head came down with a horrible thud among the tan and sawdust; he lay in the ring, doubled up and dead!

RAFFAELE SMITH'S ADVENTURE.

A RICH STORY.

The down train from London had just entered the Great Cokhampton station; the hour was 9.50 A. M., the time a lovely June morning, a couple of years since. At Cokhampton, the railway traveller is allowed to leave his carriage a few minutes, in order to snatch a hasty cup of coffee or a basin of soup; but if being as every one knows, the custom at Cokhampton, to keep both these stimulants at a boiling point, the repast is usually performed under considerable difficulties. Among the rest of those whose steps were directed by appetite towards the refreshment saloon was a straight long-limbed, handsome young fellow, with a brown shooting jacket, brown moustache, and a wide awake that had been service. This was my friend, Raffaele Smith, of Clipstone street, London, landscape painter, journeying in the search of 'bits' of nature, as he termed them for his next year's pictures. As this may be a little too technical for the general readers, we may more clearly express what we mean by stating that, according to annual custom, the young artist, was going to the West country to sketch from nature.

The artist scrutinized the travellers, in order to ascertain those were addressed to any of them.
'He replied, he himself went up.'
'It appears that I am the only one you want me!'
'I want a Mr. Smith who has been in London.'
'He said, but I am unknown to you.'
'I know that, sir,' answered he. 'That is the reason.'
'The reason why you are peated Smith in great as whom?'
'Perhaps you will be kind enough to confide in me. I speak to Mr. Smith in private.'
A sudden misgiving took Raffaele Smith. 'Come, gentlemen, dressing his fellow travellers, joke! If any gentleman presents pieces of mystification, I name of the stomach, the me compassion in the world, to allow me to utilize, without few minutes that yet remain. In answer to this novel suggestion, complete ignorance. Smith was resolved to of the mystification, and the trial of the refreshment room formed his travelling comrade. The latter remark, put for a they were in the street, said 'Beg pardon, sir, but I laugh at them gentlemen? They taken if they think you are there?'
'I tell you what, young man, if you are not satisfied with my offer, I will not leave Cokhampton. I don't think you see the magnificent view you up at the villa.'
The last phrase, though sible than the other proposition somewhat calm. 'Then I am expected ter!'
'You'll be good enough with my mistress,' said he.
'You'll be good enough with my mistress,' said he.
'You'll be good enough with my mistress,' said he.
'You'll be good enough with my mistress,' said he.
