ARE YOU DEAF? ANY HEAD NOISES?

ALL CASES OF DEAFNESS OR HARD HEARING ARE NOW CURABLE by our new invention. Only those born deaf are incurable. HEAD NOISES CEASE IMMEDIATELY.

F. A. WERMAN, OF BALTIMORE, SAYS:

Certificates.— Being entirely cured of deafness, thanks to your treatment, I will now give you a full history of my case, to be used at your discretion. About five years ago my right ear began to ring, and this kept on getting worse, until I lost my hearing in this ear entirely. I consulted several of the best ear specialists of this city, who told me that I would never be cured, and that I should be content to remain very deaf. I then saw your advertisement in the New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had used it only a few days according to your directions, the noises ceased, and my hearing in this ear entirely. Catholic Progress in England.

The progress of church-building in outer East London, says our contemporary the London "Universer," with its townful of inhabitants, showed further advance on Sunday, when another new church was opened by his Eminence Cardinal Vaughan. It is a very few years since Ilford, with its large population, was without a suitable church, and what is more, has drawn a large congregation from that district. Walthamstow was at that time without a church, except one more like a shed, and Father Brannigan was sent down to that suburb with its population of some 100,000 to try—which has meant being successful in his attempt—to build a church and provide for the needs of the congregation, unable before to find room in the old tumble-down church. A church, to be dedicated to St. Mary and St. George, was designed, and Father Brannigan, working hard and supported by the Cardinal, has succeeded in the building of the sacred edifice.

After the solemn and imposing ceremonies of dedication in the morning, a luncheon was given in the afternoon, at which His Eminence Cardinal Vaughan and a large number of priests assisted.

The first toast ("His Holiness the Pope") was proposed by the Rev. Henry J. Grosch, who said: He had the honor to propose the health of the Holy Father, and he was very pleased to tell them that in spite of continual newspaper reports to the contrary, he was in most excellent health (applause). The Cardinal had heard a few days ago that one of the newspapers had reported that the Holy Father was suffering from fainting fits, and that report being brought to the Holy Father's ears he had made the remark that he did not even know the sensation of getting ready for a fainting fit, as no doubt some of the ladies did who were present (laughter). He (the rev. speaker) could not think of a more suitable occasion of proposing the health of the Holy Father than the occasion of the opening of a new church.

There was nothing more dear to the heart of His Holiness than the progress of the Catholic Church in this country. There was nothing he took greater interest in than the Catholic Church in old England, and therefore there was no more suitable occasion than the opening of a new church at which to propose his health. Might he be spared for many years, and might he see England Catholic as she once was from North to South and from East to West (cheers).

The toast having been drunk with enthusiasm, the Rev. Father Brannigan (rector of the mission) rose to propose "His Eminence the Cardinal," and said the extreme honor occurred to them that day of not only opening a new church, but of welcoming as their guest the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster. They appreciated immensely the favor shown them of having one of supreme height and dignity in their midst, and when they remembered what honor and respect was paid to a prelate of the Cardinal's standing in a Catholic country it was with joy and happiness that they thanked him for the privilege he had bestowed upon them. The toast, he took it, was the toast of the day, and although he (the rector) felt himself quite inadequate to propose it, he thought it only right to the Catholics of Walthamstow, as the rector of the mission, that he should take that toast (cheers). They all knew the organization of a mission was a difficult and arduous task. There were difficulties financially and difficulties personally. In regard to preparation, it was not the work of a year, it took years; and, he might tell them, he was three years preparing before he commenced building operations on Walthamstow, but when one had a prelate like Cardinal Vaughan as one's Bishop, one was encouraged and stimulated to put forth all one's energies and strength. He had always been struck in whatever work he had to do. The energy with which he had thrown himself into all kinds of work was remarkable not only in England, but in South America and other parts of the world. Long might he live was the prayer of all of them (cheers).

His Eminence the Cardinal, who on rising to reply was met with a great burst of cheering, said: I assure you that I would not have missed the opportunity of being here in your midst to-day for any one's dedication. I was threatened a little time ago with the privation which I did not expect; but, thank God, I have escaped and been consoled greatly by all I have seen here to-day. You have your rector, and without him you would have done nothing. Your rector has built a beautiful church, extremely spacious and lofty; the altar and sanctuary are high placed, so that all can see and hear, and he has provided a presbytery for the accommodation of some four or five priests. This mission has sprung up wonderfully during the last half century. I remember this district fifty years ago. Cardinal Wiseman lived not far off. It was with the greatest difficulty that the church was kept above water, that is to say, the difficulties were great financially, its position in that respect being often embarrassed, the number of the congregation was often small, and there were many signs of discouragement round about. All these things have passed away. We have opened another church in London. During the last few years I have been present at many openings, for there has been a considerable increase in missions, schools, and churches.

London is becoming hollow in the centre, except during the hours of the day which are devoted to the making of gold and silver. Only the merchant princes and those who attend upon them and carry out their babies go to the city, and then it is as full or fuller than ever, but the people must live somewhere, and they have gone to the suburbs of this great city, and amongst those suburbs they have come to this beautiful neighborhood. It has many health attractions, an excellent church and schools for Catholic children, and no doubt it will be still more attractive on that account to Catholics. I value very much indeed a gathering such as we have here to-day. We Catholics do not often meet to converse together and hold social intercourse because we are scattered and live long distances from each other; it is also a gathering of special pleasure to me because we meet not only; but with our non-Catholic friends, those friends who have accepted the invitation to fraternise with us and enjoy a little social life in our company.

Catholics know their own minds in matters of religious doctrine. The doctrines that Catholics hold tend to good citizenship, and those feelings which are the basis of our Young Men Afraid To Work.

Too many young men of our faith need to be reminded of the necessity and the dignity of honest labor. There is not a Catholic parish in the country, we dare say, which does not contain some young men who are afraid to work, and who bring odium upon their parents and upon the Church by their lazy and shiftless mode of living. That it may meet the eyes of some of these shirkers we take pleasure in quoting the following from SACROS:

"One thing that keeps young men down is their fear of work. They aim to find genteel occupations, so they can dress well, and not soil their clothes, and handle things with the tips of their fingers. They do extended not only to those of their own faith, but to our non-Catholic neighbors. People sometimes forget—even those inside the Church—that we are all brethren, and that we all meet on an equality on public and social platforms for the general welfare of the neighborhood in which we live. Meetings such as this have the effect of breaking down artificial and unnatural barriers. I cannot be accused of a desire to compromise, and I am sure no Catholic would compromise in matters of religious doctrine, but at the same time, while we hold ourselves strong, true, and consistent members of the Catholic Church, I am strongly of opinion that in matters of social intercourse we ought to fraternise gladly with those around us not of our faith. The toast of the day is not my health, but the health of him who achieved the present work, upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility, not only in the present, but in the future. Your rector has with the greatest courage and caution weighed the difficulties and responsibilities, looked at them with his eyes open, and he has determined to undertake them. Of course, the whole question of the mission and debt contracted was thoroughly discussed by the Westminster Council of Temporal Administration, which meets at my house every month. Father Brannigan has, therefore, the comfort of knowing that he was not in this matter acting simply on his own judgment or unguardedly. He had the sanction of his own Bishop and of the Church generally. I cordially wish Father Brannigan every success in time to come. By his tact and assiduity, by his consideration and kindness, by his business abilities he has gained the confidence of the whole faithful of this parish, and perhaps the same would apply to those outside. I hope Father Brannigan may be spared many years hence, and may call on some future Archbishop to consecrate the Church to God.

not like to get their shoulders under the wheel, and they prefer to give orders to others, or figure as masters and let some one else do the drudgery. There is no doubt that indolence and laziness are the chief obstacles to success.

"When we see a boy, who has just secured a position, take hold of everything with both hands and 'jump right into his work,' as if he meant to succeed, we have confidence that he will prosper. But if he stands around and asks questions when told to do anything; if he tells you that this or that belongs to some other boy to do, for it is not his work; if he does not try to carry out his orders in the correct way; if he wants a thousand explanations when asked to run an errand and makes his employer think that he could have done the whole thing himself—one feels like discharging such a boy on the spot, for he is convinced that he was not out for success. The boy will be cured with mediocrity or will be a failure. There is no place in this country for

The Rev. Dr. Nevins, who represents the Protestant Episcopal Church—what little there is of it—in Rome, is credited with the assertion that in the Latin countries of Europe which admit of no divorce, four out of every five families are broken by adultery; that people and priests have come to look upon it only as a venial sin. This is one of those gratuitous assertions which may be gratuitously denied.

However, we suggest that if be translated into Italian and made known to the heads of families. No doubt someone with proper spirit will take upon himself to convince Dr. Nevins of the falsity of his assertion; and if this is done in a way to make him remember the correction as long as he lives, there will be little sympathy for him. Granting the statement were true, it would be no excuse for the divorce canon of the P. E. Church, or for the number of its divorced members in good standing.

The Sixtine Madonna in Needlework.

Famous painters have sought to copy Raphael's "Sixtine Madonna," but have laid their brushes down in despair. And what painters have failed to do with the brush one woman has accomplished with her needle.

Fraulein Clara Ripberger, of Dresden, has dared to create—it is nothing less than a creation—this picture a second time. She spent between five and six years on her work. From the beginning she had unusual difficulties to surmount, and when the great undertaking was finished and noted artists came and looked, they would not accept the word of the artist until they had examined both sides of the canvas and recognized that every square inch of the work was unimitatable done by the needle alone. The contention that the eye at least had been painted had to be abandoned. Not a brushful of paint had touched the picture. Filo-selle silk of various colors, and in stitches of various lengths, had wrought the marvel. There is no suggestion of tapestry or Gobelins work. It is needle painting, not weaving, both in the flesh tones and expressions of the faces, and in the reproduction of the draperies. The soulful eyes of the Mother and the startled look of the Child are so admirably copied that one feels the full message of the spiritual truth, while the texture and color of the robes leave nothing to be desired. The first exhibition of the embroidered Madonna had not closed before the merit of the work was publicly acknowledged. The King and Queen of Saxony came to view the picture and complimented the embroiderer. From Germany the picture was taken to St. Petersburg, where a large sum was offered for it. The owner declined to sell and carried her treasure to London, where it was exhibited at Marlborough House before the Prince and Princess of Wales. From London it was taken to the Paris Exposition and received the gold medal from the international jury.

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

Dyspepsia

From foreign words meaning bad cook, has come rather to signify bad stomach, for the most common cause of the disease is a predisposing want of vigor and tone in that organ.

No disease makes life more miserable. Its sufferers certainly do not live to eat; they sometimes wonder if they should eat at all.

W. A. Nugent, Belleville, Ont., was greatly troubled with it for years; and Peter R. Gault, Eau Claire, Wis., who was so afflicted with it that he was nervous, sleepless, and actually sick most of the time, obtained no relief from medicines professionally prescribed.

They were completely cured, as others have been, by

according to their own statement voluntarily made. This great medicine strengthens the stomach and the whole digestive system. Be sure to get Hood's.

MR. FARQUHARSON must have felt rather frightened about his election when he thought it necessary to import Mr. D. C. Fraser of Guysboro, and Mr. E. M. McDonald, of Pictou, to harangue his Grit friends in the Opera House last night.

This being polling day in West Queen's, the election is in full swing as we go to press. Both parties are actively engaged in bringing up their voters. No doubt our Grit friends are energetically employing their usual persuasive; for it is announced in the public press that two car loads of whiskey were brought over to Georgetown in the Minto on Saturday. It is not unlikely that Mr. Farquharson and his fellow prohibitionists have ere this sent a very considerable portion of this whiskey to different portions of the riding. This is the peculiar way they have of emphasizing their temperance principles.

OUR issue of the 25th December contained an account of a beautiful monument erected in St. George's cemetery to the memory of the late "Father Francis." The writer had visited the cemetery and inspected the monument and had otherwise taken some trouble to procure data for the account. We notice that the Summerside Journal in its issue of this date, Jan. 15th, copies the entire article without giving the HERALD credit for it. We have no objection to the Journal copying any of our articles, but we would expect it to be sufficiently honest and honorable to give due credit. There are many ways of stealing besides putting your hand into your neighbor's pocket and taking his money and this method of journalistic thievery is mean and reprehensible.

We regret to have to announce the death of Hon. Senator Prowse, which occurred rather suddenly at the residence of Mr. Benjamin Hertz, in this city, at two o'clock yesterday morning. He had not been in vigorous health, but was able to come to town on Saturday last to attend a meeting of the board of directors of the Merchants' Bank. He was the guest of Mr. Hertz while in the city. His illness became more serious on Sunday, and on Monday morning a consultation of four doctors was held, when it was found that he was suffering appendicitis, accompanied by suppurative peritonitis, a very serious form of disease and almost always fatal. An operation was decided upon and was performed during the afternoon. He never rallied, and died as above stated at two o'clock yesterday morning. Hon. Samuel Prowse was a son of the late Samuel Prowse, who removed to P. E. Island from Devonshire, England, in 1823. Deceased was born at Charlottetown on August 28, 1835, and was educated here. He subsequently settled at Murray Harbour, South, where he carried on an extensive mercantile business, in which his sons subsequently became partners. He was elected to the House of Assembly at the general election of 1867 for the 4th district of King's County. He was re-elected in 1876 and became a member of the coalition Davies Government. He resigned from the Davies Government in 1878 and joined the Sullivan Government in 1878, again becoming a member of the Executive Council. He was re-elected to the Assembly in 1879, 1882 and 1886, and continued in his seat till he was called to the Senate in 1889.

An Illogical Position. (Halifax Herald.) The New York Tribune has been discoursing of free trade and protection, and pointing out the illogical position of a free trade Motherland at the head of a protectionist empire. This article was in reply to that erratic journal, the London Daily News, which has long seemed bent on destroying the British Empire by pro-Boerism or some other means, and had been varying its folly by speculating as to what Canada would do if the United States should adopt the free trade policy of Britain. The New York Tribune takes up this last theme as follows:

"It would doubtless be interesting, as the Daily News of London thinks, to see what would happen if the United States should drop its protective policy and offer free trade to Canada and Australasia. Likewise it would be intensely interesting to see how many larks we should catch if the skies should fall. Our London contemporary, which represents the waning Old Guard of discredited Cobdenism, appears to ignore the fact that it would be necessary for Canada and Australasia likewise to drop the protectionist policies which they have recently adopted in an intensified and extreme form. It overlooks the fact that Canada, under a government nominally pledged to free trade, is not only maintaining a high protective tariff, but also has added thereto that thing of all most hateful to the true Cobdenite—a differential, or discriminating, rate toward or in favor of Great Britain. There might be some unkindness in reminding it that while that discriminating system was adopted for the express purpose of discouraging trade with the United States, and increasing it with Great Britain, it has utterly failed of that effect, and that since its adoption Canadian trade with the United States has increased more rapidly than with the United Kingdom.

"There is another thing which would be every bit as interesting as that propounded by the Daily News, and which must be regarded as far more likely to come to pass. That is, to see what would happen if Great Britain should drop the Cobdenite policy and place itself in line with the rest of the civilized world under a protective tariff system. We are not predicting that this will be done, but many competent observers are freely predicting that if it is not done British supremacy in commerce and manufactures will become a thing of the past. That is the view taken by not a few men of light and leading in England itself. It is becoming the firm conviction of hosts of English business men and working men who are not wedded to academic theories. 'There is,' reports the United States consul at Liverpool, a strong sentiment among the masses, and one which appears to be getting stronger all the time in favor of changing the present fiscal policy so as to bring about what has become popularly known as 'fair trade,' which, in fact, is nothing but reciprocity. And reciprocity, the bete noire of Cobdenites, inevitably involves protection in its most emphatic form. 'It is indeed illogical, to a degree that should be perceptible to the most academic of Cobdenites, that the centre and mother country of a protectionist empire should be wedded to free trade. It chances that Canada, for some peculiar reasons, shows to Great Britain the favor of differential rates, much as a child might offer alms to a distressed parent. But Canada stands alone in so doing. Australia, the most British of all British colonies, is openly and aggressively protectionist as much against the United Kingdom as against the rest of the world. All other British colonies are protectionist, and some of them, through reciprocity, have come into much closer commercial relations with other countries than with their own mother country. No wonder Englishmen are asking, 'What kind of a fiscal policy is that? Moreover, mark the fact that they may, Englishmen are actually moving away from free trade. The imposition of the sugar tariff was a long step in that direction, and, with the income tax, screwed up to the maximum, further steps of the same kind may soon be necessary. The present Chancellor of the Exchequer, one of the strongest men in the government, is resolutely attached—Tory though he is—to the old Liberal school of finance practiced by Gladstone and Sir William Harcourt. But beside him one looks in vain for a Cobdenite champion on the ministerial benches. If Mr. Chamberlain be the coming man in British politics—as he logically should be—then protection may well be regarded as the coming policy. At any rate, it is every bit as interesting and certainly as plausible to speculate upon British protection as upon American free trade."

The criticism of such an independent observer as the Tribune is of value. The remarks about the failure of the Laurier Government's tariff work, and about the illogical position of Great Britain as to her own fiscal policy, are interesting and suggestive. The view as to the probable course of fiscal reform in Britain has much to support it, besides the ever-present fact that it is reasonable. There is evidence that the present Liberal opposition in Britain expects the present government party there to become protectionist in the very near future. The judgement of the leading members of the ministry is in that direction. Lord Salisbury has long been convinced of the folly of the free trade policy in Britain, with all the rest of the nations protectionist and evident that the present Liberal opposition intend to continue so. Several members of the ministry are avowed protectionists. Mr. Chamberlain, personally, is not at all in bondage to Cobdenism, and is ready to lead in a rational scheme of protection as soon as he feels the electorate would support such a change; and the evidence is daily increasing that the people are becoming more and more favorable to such a reform. The work now before the Motherland is first to complete the Boer war with a vigorous hand, and then to adopt a rational scheme of tariff protection and organize the Empire on a commercial basis. And if wisdom prevail there will not be much time lost in this necessary work.

Then other thoughts would strike into my mind and I would look at the matter in another light and congratulate myself that the Hawke valor was not running away with me altogether and I would find consolation in bemoaning these lines:

The Herald's Scoop-Net.

CONDUCTED BY TOM A. HAWKE. WHEN HEN HAWKE FOUGHT THE BOERS. The call to arms had sounded! Mr. P. Kruger had sent in his famous audacious ultimatum to Great Britain and hundreds of other people throughout the world were making fools of themselves as people often do. Among the number was young Henry Hawke, a near relation of your humble servant and to whom reference has been made more than one occasion in this department of this great family journal.

Now, although I started to write by alluding to the time Mr. Kruger forwarded his little message to John Bull, this article has nothing to do with that period; I merely mentioned it because that was the time Henry was first initiated with the war fever, which subsequently carried him off to Africa. Henry had 'it' bad, as they say. The fellow is very enthusiastic and offered himself for service with the first contingent, but got turned down, as he could not come up to the physical standard required. He felt pretty bad about it, too, for he had been talking restlessly about hosts of English soldiers, that he knew nothing about soldiering. However, when a second contingent was called for, he suddenly disappeared and the first intimation I got of his whereabouts was in the following letter from Halifax:

DEAR TOMMY.— I am at Halifax. Arrive here day before yesterday and you will no doubt be more than pleased to learn that I have been accepted for active service to help subdue the wily and woolly Boer. The doctor, (I think they call him the surgeon at arms here) had a look at me last night and said I was a splendid specimen of fizkal manhood. He said it was hardly worth while measuring me, but he just sized me up and said he guessed I was about 23 inches old and 30 years around the chest and with my sex off I would probably be about 4 feet 6 in. Not too bad, eh? For a fellow who has never gone in for athletics. The ship sails next Tuesday. This is a pretty exciting place and the people are all very friendly. (I've only been punched twice in the three days I've been here, and that was because some of the boys had been drinking.) Kipling would have a great show for a poem here. Will write again before leaving your loving brother, HENRY.

P. S.—Excuse any mistakes you may find in this letter, as it was written in haste. I'm hard to tell from the foregoing how he managed to get accepted, but it seems he passed, as had coin sometimes will. The next letter I got from him was as follows:

Well Tommy.— Here I am on the deck of the big troop-er. We sail in an hour's time. It seems awful to be leaving your native land for the first time. If it was the second or third time I would not mind it so much, but our country must have the men, and since Canada has put a foot in this war we're bound to see it through 'spotted' well rallied off at the first volley. The crowd on the wharf are bawling some of the boys I see they have checked out leave young chap overboard. Well, young fellows must have their fling at times. You may depend when it comes to fighting I will do my duty like a man and as all the Hawkes have done. You must not forget that we belong to the same family as the great Admiral Lord Hawke, who figured so prominently in English history in the good old days and in "Treasure Island," if I am not mistaken. You remember reading how he used to worry the French and Spanish a grade deal. Well, I can feel the same patriotic emotions within my breast, which animated my forefathers to do mighty deeds of valor. A Hawke is a Hawke and the tide of time will never work a change in them or deteriorate them when they have work to perform for the old flag. Well, I will have to close now, as the boy says I am taking up more room here than a baby elephant. (The gall of those sailor chaps who make people so, I wonder the captain allows it.) I will write again when we reach the seat of war. Adieu, dear Tommy, adieu, and address your next letter to Cape Town and if you never see me again remember I died like a Hawke.—HENRY.

When I read this letter I felt sort of sorry and felt that I ought to go to Africa at once and take the place of that brave impetuous boy, and my heart would begin to get pit-pat and then the thought struck me that the ship had sailed and I instantly felt relief. They say loyalty acts this way with a great many people.

Too bad the boy had got into that bragadocio style of writing his letters. He doesn't mean it. It's only his enthusiasm and his enthusiasm always carries him away. That's what took him to the war. But as my readers are now anxious to know of his further adventures, I here append his next letter dated at Bingenfontein:— (To be continued.)

In South Africa. The War Office has issued a call for 3938 infantry volunteers to replace gradually those now serving in South Africa. A Johannesburg despatch of the 8th, says: Since noon yesterday 122 Boers have been accounted for. After making a night march, Major Coles Brander captured a laager and a number of Gen. Delarey's men west of Rustenburg. The Boers' loss was 44 men killed, wounded and captured. Another British column captured 35 Boers in the north-west part of the Orange River colony, and the thirteenth Hussars captured eleven near the O'phants' River blockhouse line. General De Wet is reported to be moving south before General Elliott who is following him up the Wilge River. Gen. De Wet has little chance of using the guns he has captured against the blockhouse. The British columns being in close touch, the area in which he can move is being circumscribed. The military situation is generally good. There are an increasing number of surrenders. Since January 1st, 100 prisoners have been brought to Bloemfontein, they having been captured by the different columns operating in the Orange River Colony. Gen. Elliott, working to the northeast, captured nine Boers on Jan. 5, and also discovered and destroyed a Krupp gun.

Ninety burghers of the Orange River Colony have lately taken the oath of allegiance. Colonel Du Moulin, after a night march, recently surprised a party of Boers under Commandants Dutoit and Saul Sarens, to the southeast of Jagersfontein. The two Boer leaders and twenty-six men were made prisoners. Dutoit is known to have shot lately some native "boys." Du Moulin's prisoners are a mixed lot, and belong chiefly to the Akerman, Janboer, Coetzee, Baders, and Krogh commands. His captures include 58 rifles, 2,000 rounds of ammunition, and 100 horses.

Large parties of determined fighters, under the immediate command of Botha, Melinjs, Tallard, Sienkamp and Bocklitz are now lying in ambush about the district waiting to attack small columns.

MARRIED. On January 7th, 1902, the home of Mr. John Smith, Surgeon, was the pretty scene of a home wedding, held there for the eldest of his daughters, who was given away by him to Mr. William More also of Sturgeon, the knot being tied by Rev. William Platen, in the beautiful stone church of which he is pastor. The groom was attended by Mr. Neil Murphy and the bride by Miss Annie Langan of Cambridge. After the wedding ceremony the bride party returned home for the satisfaction of the wants of the inner man. Then they took a drive around Murray Harbour, whence they returned to dinner, the best style by friends of the bridal party. We wish them success and long life in their new field of happiness and extend congratulations. Com.

Home Knitters Wanted. To Work at Their Homes Under the Direction of The GLASGOW WOOLLEN CO. 37 MELINDA ST., TORONTO. To Fill Large Contracts—Good Wages Easily Earned. We want a few more workers in this locality, at once, and in order to secure your co-operation without the delay of correspondence, we herewith explain our full plan in this advertisement. The work is simple, and the Machine is easily operated, and with the Guide, requires no teacher. If you wish to join our staff of Workers let us hear from you promptly with the Contract, order form, and remittance, as a guarantee, and we will send machine and outfit to begin work at once.

OUR METHOD OF DOING BUSINESS. We wish to secure the services of families to do knitting for us in their homes. Our method is the same as adopted by the largest Knitting concern in Canada. After long and careful consideration we have decided to produce an Automatic Machine by which all kinds of seamless knitting is now done by the Family Machine, thereby enabling anyone of ordinary intelligence to quickly learn to do the work from the instruction Guide. All we require is that you use the machine according to directions. The Machine being made expressly for this purpose, and the operation so simple, you can actually make a mistake in its work. The great demand now is for Bicycle Stockings, Woodmen's socks, and motor men's mittens, 12c a pair. We are able to supply the demand, have taken this method of advertising for much help.

The large export trade to the North-West Territories, British Columbia, and the British Colonies, has created a demand for our goods, and, with the combined operation of the many families who are employing our machine, with the large amount of knitting we are able to turn out, by which we save rents, insurance, interest on capital, and enable us to undersell any manufacturer of this class of goods, and we have sale for all the knitting we can have turned out.

The price we pay for finished bicycle stockings is $10.00 per hundred, or at the rate of 10c per pair; woodmen's socks, 5c, and motor men's mittens, 12c a pair. All other work in proportion to size. The machine can be operated by any one of a family, and at our price any energetic family will be able to sustain themselves comfortably, and in time be a source of independent comfort.

When you send out each machine to beginners with a sock or stocking partially knitted, and remaining in the machine ready to be continued, and also enough yarn to knit one pair of sample socks or stockings and a simple instruction Guide, showing how the work is to be done. When the samples have been finished and returned to us satisfactory, we send a quantity of yarn, which you knit and return, likewise when finished. We repay charges on all work one way, and our workers pay return charges. The work, as we have stated, is simple and rapidly done, the machine having a capacity of ten thousand stitches a day, and many persons now in our employ who can knit from twenty-five to thirty pairs of socks a day, and where the time of family is devoted to the work, you can readily see that $15.00 per week is not too much.

We furnish our workers all the materials, yarn, etc., free, and everything that is necessary for the work. We are furnishing the machines only for the exclusive use of those persons desiring to take employment with us, who must, in order to become a member, send us this Contract Order Form, signed by them, and also a good reference, and remittance accordingly, to give us the necessary assurance that the quantities of valuable yarn we may send them will be used to the best advantage, and that they will not be sold to any other than those who will agree to do knitting for us.

At any time after you commence, and have done an amount of work equal to the purchase price, and wish to discontinue, we will take back machine and refund the amount paid for same, after deducting cost of our expense only. A Large Demand by the Trade for this class of work. Our workers can depend upon it year after year, and if you are unable to work, or have spare time we will keep you supplied with work as long as you do it satisfactorily. You can rest assured that we are supplying our workers with large quantities of valuable yarn, and as we give

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

It turns out that the vessel which was in collision with and sank the Steamer Walla Walla was the French barque Max, Capt. Bonois, from Glasgow to San Francisco. She was badly damaged in the accident and was towed to San Francisco. Her jib boom, made of hollow steel, was broken and twisted and the tip of it trailed on the water on the port side of the vessel and at about right angle with the line of the hull. Her stem was twisted and great gaping holes had been torn in her bow. There was one almost as the water line, and another a few feet above. Only her water tight compartments kept her from sinking. Her captain had little to say regarding the disaster except that his vessel was closely following the rules of the road when the steamer came under the bows of his barque. He declared that the light of the Max were properly burning and displayed and that the men of his crew saw the steamer for a long time before the collision. He said: "We could think of no reason why the man on the steamer did not see us, and as the vessel approached we became anxious. Then it was too late. The steamer had tried to cross our bows but had failed. Just before the crash came the steamer swung slightly to port as though an effort was being made to pass to our stern, but the change in her course had been made too late. The barque struck the steamer almost amidships on the port side. For a moment they hung together and then drifted apart. Our vessel was so badly damaged we thought she would sink, and under the circumstances we had all to do to take care of ourselves. By daylight we had beaten well out toward the sea and were safe from the breakers, but our vessel was to a great measure unmanageable. On Saturday morning we accepted a tow from the steam schooner Acme, which later was aided by the cutter Mculloch."

A queer ambition to become the king of whiskey drinkers cost Peter Christianson his life at Chicago. In one gulp he drained a pint of the fiery liquor. As the effect became apparent the man gradually became numb and senseless. Within a minute after the draught Christianson lay on the floor unconscious, while his friends, who had witnessed his reckless attempt to establish a record, were terrified. "Christianson's drink would be powerful and terrific enough in its effects to kill most any man," said Dr. Klinger, at the Chicago Avenue Station. "Such a draught of whiskey is about twenty times as much as any drinking man takes at a time."

A PILGRIMAGE.

BY ALOYSIUS COLL.

I journeyed into Nazareth to day, And saw the Christ Child by His mother's knee; I watched Him gambol humbly at play, Unmindful of the sad days yet to be. I came unto the Temple. Lo! the door Stood open, and within, the Child Divine I heard, disputing with the doctors, more Learned than they in prophecy and sign! I travelled out into the desert waste. Again I meet the Christ, His human face Faint with the Godly purpose—not to taste The honey and the locusts in the place. Into the Holy City journeyed I, And in the panic of His triumph then I lost myself, while rang the worship-cry, "Hosanna!" and the shouted praise of men. I wandered late into a garden lone, Where darkness settled down, and said to me: "Yonder He drinks His chalice, by the stone, Deep in the shadow of Gethsemane." And then I stood on crowded Calvary, And wept a space beside the lifted Cross; For some wild grief was given unto me, To join the few who knew the bitter loss. Think you some miracle was mine to day, That I went down the sorrowing way of Christ? Ah, yes! I went into a church to pray, And knelt before the Holy Eucharist!

Blandine of Betharram.

PART II.

"It is for you, Madame; it will explain itself. With your permission I will go to rest, only asking your ladyship," Nau's voice fell to a whisper, "to forgive those who deprived you so long of what you will find here." She placed the key of the box in Margaret's hand. Antony opened the box, his own heart full of misgivings. Uppermost lay a letter directed to Margaret, in her maiden name, at the Franciscan convent. Her husband opened it and placed it in her hands. She glanced at the first lines, at the signature—"My dear cousin, Margaret,"—"Your loving cousin, Rick Danroby."

"My dear cousin Rick," repeated Margaret. "Then it has nothing to do with Blandine after all. Read it, Antony." Antony made her place herself comfortably on a couch; after arranging the cushions he drew a chair close beside her and unfolded the letter once more. "Read it to yourself, first, dear; my head throbs hard once more." Antony read and reread every word. There was a new light in his eyes, new joy welling up in his heart. Margaret, who had been lying still, with closed eyes, glared up after a time; she caught his glad look and sprang up. "Then it is of our child! She is well, O my dear cousin!"

"It is indeed of her, dearest, and let us hope and trust in God that she is well. But, well or otherwise, she is yours, all your own."

"What do you mean, Antony?" "Blandine is the child of your cousin. You were her god-mother by proxy. She is left to your sole care by her father's will and her mother's consent. Our mother will be proud indeed, to have discovered the likeness that is now accounted for."

There was the certificate of birth and baptism—Mary Alexandra Patricia Blandine Danroby, which proved that the young mother had not called her baby by the name of St. Blandine without warrant.

"She will be sixteen in June. Oh, if we could only have her here to keep that feast, that month of joy!" Antony looked into his wife's eyes. He read her wishes. "Would you consent?" he asked with a meaning smile?

"To what, Antony?" "To let me carry out what you are thinking of at this moment?" "You would take me with you?" "And the babies?"

Happy and busy were the ensuing days. "Papa is going for our sister! Aunt Anna is going with papa to bring home our sister!" Nau Clough's head is fairly giddy with joy to hear herself thus called by little Antony and his sweet sister. It was with right glad heart and good will that Nau responded to Margaret's suggestion, that some good woman should accompany her husband, to take charge of her child. She promptly offered her services and was as promptly accepted for the post of chaperone. A week before Antony could be free from his parliamentary duties Nau started for Paris, to complete her own preparations there, to see Daria and tell her the rare good tidings.

"Well, well!" cried Daria. "And to think that they have the right after all, those good loving people, to claim the little one! Oh, if they had only known it from the beginning!"

"Had they known it from the beginning," said Nau, "would grace have found a way to save my brother and myself? Al is for the best. But, Daria, you look preoccupied."

Nau was coolly installed in Daria's private room, in a comfortable chair beside a great table.

"Come now, Nau, there are things to speak of that I could not write, being too ignorant. How comes it that you are not asking about the heir or the division of the property? Are you not interested in it?"

"Indeed I am; and chiefly for your sake, Daria; I hope there will be no change here."

"That I would not heed so much if I could go to my people, though they despise me for not taking my freedom like the others. But in the division this house had to be sold. It was bought by a French gentleman, who was to come and live in it. But now I hear it has been sold again by him, and the present owner is a stranger to me. He writes that he will be here in six months from now, and asks me to keep all as it is till he comes."

"Why was the settlement so long delayed?"

"For the coming of age of one of the family, the brother of the heir. Till then there could be no division. Oh, how my Barina would have rejoiced to see that heir of hers! A fine, handsome young officer he is, of the Preobrajensky Polk (regiment). You do not want to hear about him, Ania?"

"Oh, yes, Daria. Was he good to you?"

"So good," said Daria, "that when I showed him the paper my mistress wrote, the night you and she were talking together, the night before the blessing left the house, he declared that every item in it should be fulfilled."

"How noble he must be!" said Nau.

"Do you not wish to hear more?" "Yes, Daria. Did he provide well for you?"

Daria was provoked. "How slow you are, Ania Ivanovna! Have you forgotten what was in that paper?"

"What was in it, Daria?" "Have you lost your mind? Why, the reward and the redemption of your mother's house?"

"That was not written, Daria. Nothing of that, not one word of all that was written. It was only spoken of."

"It was both," cried Daria in an excited voice, "both, I tell you. She spoke of it, and she did more, she wrote it. When you went to bed she made me bring her pen and paper and sign what she wrote. And she put her own seal ring upon the blazing red wax. Still there was no lawful witness, for my name being in it, I had no right to sign it. But the young lord, he just read it!"

"I will show him a ghost," was Madame's conclusion; and she saw, in anticipation, his start of surprise. Madame's conditions were fixed in her own mind. She knew the value of what she had to offer. Brier of this kind was too common a thing to make her recoil an instant from her project. Many a bride, noble, high spirited, beautiful, had she seen won or lost at cards or on the race-course. It cost her no pang to fix the price she would demand for the child of her enemy. It would have cost her almost as little thought to barter off her own.

Blandine was indeed glad to return to her clean bed, to pure air, to outdoor exercise, glad to resume her studies, her music and drawing. But her eagerness for these pleasant occupations was subdued, when, as the days succeeded each other, she saw no sign of Gregory and heard no mention of Mr. Bards. Were they absent still from Karloff? With intense longing she listened for a word that might bring her the hope of hearing from those she loved, were they suffering on her account? Did they know that she had been in bondage; or are they, like herself, in ignorance of all that has been taking place? Blandine cannot answer any of these questions. She has developed physically and mentally in the course of the past year. Always thoughtful and serious beyond her years, she now wears the air of a young religious, never outside the convent walls. Her brow is as white as marble, and as pure; her eyes are full of deep thought, with a clearness in their depths such as is seen in the eyes of very young children.

Sophie has developed too, but into something of a hoiden. Under masters, she has learned a great deal of the ways of society and etiquette, polite manners and literature. She does not put the new knowledge into use daily. She hides it away for society, and is wilful and rom-over, and after thinking awhile, he looked at me glad like, and he says, 'I am glad, Daria, that I now know a way of doing something that would have pleased my aunt, that will please her, I hope, in the Better Land. On my word of honor all that is here set down shall be faithfully fulfilled as soon I touch my part of the inheritance.'

"If it be God's will, Daria, that will be a great blessing for all mine; to rear those two, little Joe and Nanette, to free and stock the farm. But I dare not set my heart upon it."

"Come here on your way back, Ania."

"Oh, if you could only bring that angel here again to gladden the heart of Daria, I could die in peace! And, Ania, do not spare the cost. Take every rouble I have. Only bring her back!"

"If money can bring her back, the Daeres will not spare it. And they are rich enough to ransom half of France, I think."

"Are they so rich? Then there is little hope that Daria will ever have the joy of seeing her here. You will wonder at me, Ania, and think me very stupid, but that child got into my heart somehow, and I am craving a sight of her still."

"She got into every one's heart, Daria, even into mine, that was so choked with care for this world."

Every mother who has a daughter drooping and fading—pale, weak and listless—whose health is not what it ought to be, should read the following statement made by Mrs. J. S. Heath, 39 Richmond Street, Chatham, Ont.:

"Some time ago I got a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills at the Central Drug Store for my daughter, who is now 13 years of age, and had been afflicted with weak action of the heart for a considerable length of time."

"These pills have done her a world of good, restoring strong, healthy action of her heart, improving her general health and giving her physical strength beyond our expectations."

"They are a splendid remedy, and to any one suffering from weakness, or heart and nerve trouble I cordially recommend them."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. a box or $ for $1.25, at all druggists.

And inclined to make bold speeches sotto voce, to attract attention to her newly acquired cleverness. She begins to rule, to give order, where she was wont to tease, and worry, and torment. She sometimes defies, and stamps her feet, even in the presence of her "aunt," who has begun to take notice of her, to call her "mon enfant," and who tries to reason with her instead of pushing, as formerly. The fact is Tatiana has betrayed to her the secret that was to be kept so scrupulously from the emperor. She knows she is a daughter of Karloff, a Vallinski, in some degree, and it makes her audacious and self-confident. It had been hateful to her always to feel that she was only the niece of an ex-tutor, or simply S phile Orlovna Bards; but now she can afford to patronize the disinherited Vallinski, the girl with low tastes, in spite of her beauty and cleverness and learning. Sophie knows another secret too. She knows the cavalier, who is to come, will give the means to travel, to winter in France, or the capital, to do a thousand things they cannot do now, and which she madly longs for. The passion for gayety, and amusement, and society, has got into Sophie's blood, and no one tries to stem the inclination. On the contrary, it makes her more attractive to her mother and Mlle. Dorezelli. These have only one regret, the fact that Vassilly Danilow had not shown any inclination to woo her for his second wife.

The Spirit of Winter.

The Spirit of Winter is with us, making its presence known in many different ways—sometimes by cheery sunshine and glittering snows, and sometimes by driving winds and blinding storms. To many people it seems to take a delight in making bad things worse, for rheumatism twists harder, twinges sharper, catarrh becomes more annoying, and the many symptoms of scrofula are developed and aggravated. There is not much poetry in this, but there is truth, and it is a wonder that more people don't get rid of these ailments. The medicine that cures them—Hood's Sarsaparilla—is easily obtained and there is abundant proof that its cures are radical and permanent.

is all right, if you are too fat, and all wrong, if too thin already. Fat, enough for your habit, is healthy; a little more, or less, is no great harm. Too fat, consult a doctor; too thin, persistently thin, no matter what cause, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil.

There are many causes of getting too thin; they all come under these two heads: over-work and under-digestion. Stop over-work, if you can; but, whether you can or not, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, to balance yourself with your work. You can't live on it—true—but, by it, you can. There's a limit, however, you'll pay for it.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the readiest cure for "can't eat," unless it comes of your doing no work—you can't long be well and strong, without some sort of activity.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other. If you have not tried it, send for free sample. Its agreeable taste will surprise you.
