CHAPTER XXXVII.

Jake pointed to the partmentean.
 "You were off," he said. "You were going to cut—"
 "It's—it's a lie!" said Seymour.
 "I was going to the bank for your money."
 Jake growled contemptuously.
 "Bank at this time of night? What do you take me for? You were off. You meant giving me the slip. And why, eh? What's your little game? Ah, the diamonds! You've got 'em. They're here. You thief! And he advanced a step. "They're mine. She gave 'em to me."
 The sweat broke out on Seymour's face.
 "Hush!" he whispered, warningly.
 "They—they will hear you. I have not got them. I was not going—that is, I am coming back to-morrow. Go away before they find you. I swear—"
 Jake had been watching him closely and saw a movement of his arm.
 "You swear?" he retorted in a husky whisper. "I wouldn't believe you if you swore till you were black in the face. What's that under your arm? It's them. Give 'em here."
 He advanced, and Seymour drew back clutching the bag.
 "Come—come a step nearer, and I'll ring the bell and give you in custody!" he gasped.
 Jake laughed fiercely.
 "Not you! Give it here, I say!"
 He made a grab at the bag, but Seymour slipped back out of his reach, and, with the frenzy of an animal driven to bay, struck at him. The blow fell short, but it maddened Jake.
 "What—strike your own father?" he cried, hoarsely. "You unnatural—"
 He made a dash at Seymour as he spoke, and Seymour in attempting to escape, tripped and fell—fell with a dull crash and the ring of metal. His head had struck the fender.
 Jake stooped down and tore the bag away.
 "Ha!" he said, exultingly. "Look there, now! I knew I was right Get up!"
 But Seymour did not move. Jake leaned over him and touched him.
 "He's—he's only fainted," he growled. "Confound him, it serves him right! To strike at his own father!"
 He went across the room and got the violet bottle, and poured some water on the white face, but Seymour still lay motionless.
 A knock came to the door, and a voice said:
 "The carriage is ready, my lord."
 Jake sprung to the small moderator lamp that was burning on a side table, and turned it down. In doing so, it fell, but noiselessly, on the thick carpet. The room was plunged in darkness.
 "The carriage is ready, my lord," repeated the footman.
 "Very well," said Jake, as smoothly as he could, and the voice, for the best of all reasons, was not very unlike the one he simulated. He waited until the man's footsteps had died away, then he knelt down, felt for Seymour, and, with some little difficulty, took off the fur cloak and exchanged his ulster for it. He found and put on Seymour's hat, drew the wide collar of the coat up round his face, and clutching the bag under his arm as Seymour had done, opened the door and went slowly down the stairs.

 A footman stood at the hall door.
 "Will you have the carriage window up, my lord?" he asked.
 Jake nodded, and touched his face as if he had the toothache.
 The man put the window up, and held the door for a moment.
 "Where to, my lord?" he asked.
 "The station," said Jake, from under the coat collar.
 "The footman looked at him rather curiously, but closed the door, and the carriage started.
 Jake leaned back and laughed noiselessly.
 "I'll teach him to play tricks on his father," he growled. "I reckon he'll be rather wild when he comes to." The picture of Seymour's surprise and disgust when restored to consciousness amused him for some minutes as the brougham rolled smoothly along; then suddenly a more serious reflection came. "I suppose the diamonds are all right," he said, and he opened the bag and held it to the window to catch the light from the back of the carriage lamps.
 For a moment he was almost bewildered by the slight that met his eyes. Then his face flushed, and he gasped:
 "He's clever than I thought. He was walking off with the whole swag, and I've got it! I've got it! Hooray! hooray!"

CHAPTER XXXIX.

An hour later, Giles, the second groom, happening to be going from the stables to the house, fancied he saw smoke issuing from one of the upper windows. The night was dark and gusty, and Giles, thinking that his eyes were playing tricks with him, and being in a hurry to join the other servants at tea, passed on and said nothing.
 Who gave the first alarm no one knew, but suddenly, as if a hundred throats were shouting it, there rose the awful cry of—"Fire!"
 As usual, everybody rushed hither and thither, throwing open the doors and creating a splendid draught under which the fire flourished at once and gloriously.
 In less than ten minutes from the moment of the alarm, the upper corridor was filled with smoke, through which tongues of flame protruded. Flames were also coming from the windows of the south wing, and the crackling of timber and shivering of glass mingled with the shouts and screams of the terrified household.
 One of the footmen had the sense to run and ring the great bell, and its sonorous tones rose grimly above the din, which added to the confusion. In an incredibly short time a mob of villagers had gathered round the place, and the butler, who was the first to recover his presence of mind, got together a band of volunteers, and supplied them with stable and house buckets. There was an enormous tank on the top of the south wing, which was supposed to be always filled with a large quantity of water available in case of fire, but though the water was there, no one seemed to know how to get it out, and the only water that was thrown upon the now raging flames was obtained from the stable taps.

 The nearest fire brigade—a volunteer one—was five miles off, and though the butler had started Giles off on horseback to fetch it, and hour must elapse before it could reach the Towers.
 "If only Mr. Royce was here!" groaned the butler to the rector of the parish, who had been among the first to arrive, and was working away in his shirt-sleeves with his parishioners. "But both he and his lordship are away."
 "The ladies are all right, of course!" panted the rector.
 The butler nodded quickly.
 "Yes, yes; they were in the west wing, and I saw the countess a few minutes ago, with Louise and Marion. Everybody's out of the house," and he looked round at the terrified group collected on the lawn.
 "I think you ought to telegraph to his lordship," said the rector.
 The butler shook his head.
 "What's the use, sir?" he said. "He has only just left the Towers for London; and by the time he got here—Lord! how it flames now!—the whole place will be gone!" and he groaned as he sprang forward, bucket in hand.
 The scene baffled description. The whole of the south wing was now in flames, and the murky sky was lighted up with a lurid glare, through which now and again shot up a volume of sparks and smoke, as portions of the roof and the castellated coping fell with a dull crash into the body of the fire.
 Black, and half mad with excitement, the little band of men worked with frenzied zeal, cheered on by the mass of spectators. At intervals, carriages and horses, bringing neighbors and friends, dashed up, adding to the confusion, for none of them could no any more than was being already done. Servants and villagers were so mixed up in the group on the lawn that it was difficult to find the countess, or, indeed, distinguish one person from the other; but at last Lord Balfarras gained her side.
 She was leaning against the pedestal of a statue, her hands clasped, her white face turned toward the blazing house, and, though she was certainly as calm as the statue above her, her lips moved convulsively now and again.
 "Thank God, you are safe!" said Lord Balfarras. "Are all out—Lady Irene—Mrs. Landon?"
 The countess did not remove her eyes from the flames.
 "Yes," she said, almost inaudibly.
 "Yes, Madge has gone; Irene was in the west wing, and is here." She looked round. "I—I saw her—when she put her hand to her brow."
 Lord Balfarras looked among the crowd eagerly.
 "I do not see her," he said. "Perhaps she is with Royce or Mrs. Landon."
 The servant overheard him.
 "Master Royce is away, my lord," he said, hurriedly.
 At that moment a roar rose from the crowd. The flames had broken out in the center of the building. As they did so the light was thrown upon the windows which had hitherto been darkened by the smoke, and the roar was followed by screams and yells of "Look! look! There's some one there! Look—the window!"
 "My God!" exclaimed the butler, grasping the rector's arm. "There is some one standing at that window—the second! It's—It's a woman! It's Lady Irene!"
 The rector went white, and dropped the bucket he was carrying

Curious Marriage Customs

After the wedding ceremony in many parts of India, particularly in Behral, the bride and bridegroom are tied together by the corners of their garments, and made to parade the full length of the village, to signify to all that they are united for life.
 At a Cingalese wedding the men and women are tied together by their thumbs, and in parts of Northern India the little hand of men worked with frenzied zeal, cheered on by the mass of spectators. At intervals, carriages and horses, bringing neighbors and friends, dashed up, adding to the confusion, for none of them could no any more than was being already done. Servants and villagers were so mixed up in the group on the lawn that it was difficult to find the countess, or, indeed, distinguish one person from the other; but at last Lord Balfarras gained her side.

When a Persian takes his bride home, sheep are usually killed as she steps over the threshold. A similar custom is prevalent among the Arabs and when the bride reaches the threshold of her new home a sheep is killed and she has to step over a stream of its flowing blood.
 In Turkey, when the bridegroom unveils his bride to have his first view of her after the marriage ceremony, they both look into a mirror and knock their heads together so that the images may appear united.

Carried Over a Charcoal Fire.
 In certain parts of China the bride is carried on a servant's back over a slow charcoal fire, on each side of which are arranged a pair of the bridegroom's shoes. Another custom is that of lifting the bride over the threshold of her new home.

The men of Abyssinia carry their brides from their old homes to their new ones, no doubt imitating the ancient custom of taking wives by force. In Somaliland they have a queer custom of shutting up the bride and bridegroom for seven days after the wedding.
 After an Algerian wedding the bridegroom enters his home backwards holding a dagger in his hand, and his bride follows him, touching the point of the blade with the tip of her finger. In the Gilbert Islands a man can demand his wife's sisters in marriage, and he is also expected to take his brother's widow!

 The inhabitants of the Cook Islands have for many years practised a very curious marriage custom. A few days before the wedding takes place the bride walks to the bridegroom's house on a path composed of members of her future husband's tribe, who lie face downwards on the ground. On the wedding day the man walks to his bride's house over the members of her tribe. Should the distance be great, those lying at the back of the row wait until they have been walked over, then get up and run to the head of the line and lie down again!

QUARANTINE.
 My tin sedan was all ashine, my heart was light and gay; I drove up to the country I love, upon an April day, and all the world seemed good and fine, and smooth and r e a b o r a h a y .
 "What ho," a ste e r n official said, "let Lizzie cease to wheeze; we're posted here to stop the spread of foot and mouth disease; we must pour dope upon your head, and also on your knees." "Oda fish," I cried, in cheery tones, "get busy, then, I pray; deodorize my canine bones, and fumigate my dray; then let me hit the paving stones, and journey on my way." They boiled my bus in caustic soda that turned the red paint black, they fumigated all my duds, poured acid down my back; and still I joshed those busy bloods, with merry quip and crack. A bitter job was theirs, I saw, a task that made them sore; to bring men up against a law that seemed to them a bore; the victims' nerves were tense and raw, they raved and wept and swore. I drove my wagon through a trough. I waded in a vat, the acid burned my whiskers off, and spoiled my Sunday hat, but I'm the flippant sort of toff who laughs at things like that. And so the stern officials cried, as I went on my way, "We'll always point to you with pride, you are the slichest-up jay; you take the soup the gods provide, and do not whine or bray."

Breeders of Holstein Cattle
 TO MEET NEXT IN VIRGINIA.
 CHICAGO, May 27 (A.P.)—Seventy-nine Holstein cows have made yearly records of more than 1,000 pounds of butterfat, and 64 cows of the same breed have in one year produced 30,000 pounds and more of milk. It will be shown in reports to be made at the convention of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America, to be held July 4 at Richmond, Virginia.
 In an announcement from headquarters here, made by President Frank O. Lowden, the business of the association for the last fiscal year shows an increase and a sound financial basis, "although decreases in business were shown for the previous successive three years."
 "Since 1885, when the association was organized, more than 1,200,000 cows and bulls have been registered in the Herd Book of Creditable records for production of milk and butterfat have been made by more than 100,000 cows under the supervision of agricultural colleges and recorded in the Advanced Registry."
 A national sale of 120 purebred Holsteins will follow the meeting.

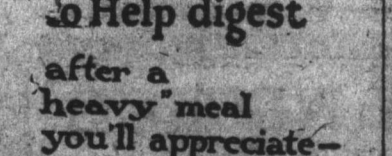

Making Money in America
 ASCRIBED TO JOY OF SUCCESS.
 LONDON, May 2 (A.P.)—Returning to London after five years' pastorate at 10th Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, Doctor J. Kelman told reporters that he and his wife had received wonderful kindness at the hands of the American people. As a nation Americans enjoyed the game of life tremendously. Although the gaining of money in business or by any other legitimate means, was the common interest of Americans, it mostly arose from the joy of success. During the whole of the time he was there he had not met a miserly American.
 "The Americans are a practical, scientific people," continued Dr. Kelman, "and meet the dangers of their highly crowded and highly strung life in New York by scientific relaxation. The business men of America recognize the dangers to health and efficiency that civilization has brought, and are avoiding or combating them. The American citizen practically lives under a more or less permanent system of training to keep himself fit for his job."

 John D. says to save. Henry Ford says to spend it. Perhaps it is the practice of about 50-50 of what both says that keeps everyone poor.
 An Englishman should always put his money on Scotland all the time, knowing the competence of that country for winning through. In this connection I have just heard two stories—new to me. A Scots boy in an English school, when his class was asked where Shakespeare was born, promptly replied, "In Scotland, sir." "Who makes you say Shakespeare was Scotsman?" said the schoolmaster. "Because of his abeility, sir!" was the answer. The other story is rather ribald for decorous ears. Two Scotsmen arrived at the golden gates of Heaven, and were told by the attendant that he must go and look up their credentials. When he returned the Scotsman had gone and taken the golden gates with them.

Sixteen Judges of English Court
 TO DECIDE ONE POINT.
 All the judges of the King's Bench Division—a total of 16—are to form a special court to try an appeal by a man now serving a sentence of penal servitude.
 The appeal has already been heard by five judges, who have not given their decision.
 It is understood that they expressed a wish that a full court should decide the point of law raised. Briefly the question is—
 If a man is once convicted as an habitual criminal he is liable to sentence as an habitual criminal whenever he again appears in the dock?

British Ambassador Issues Warning to Turkey

No Change in Ulster Boundary Situation—Canada Considering Further Restricting Japanese Immigration.

WARNING TO TURKEY.
CONSTANTINOPLE, June 2. Percy Cox, British High Commissioner for Mesopotamia, to-day informed Fethi Bey, Speaker of the Turkish Assembly, and head of the British Delegation, regarding Mosul which he had been instructed to return to London, unless the British Government modified the act which had taken in demanding complete rendition of the disputed territory.

ULSTER BOUNDARY SITUATION.
LONDON, June 2. James Craig, the Ulster Premier, is quoted by the Daily Sketch as saying that so far as Northern Ireland is concerned the boundary situation remains the same following Saturday's conference at the High Court, and there has been no suggestion for a further meeting as far as he is aware.

CANADA TO FURTHER RESTRICT JAP IMMIGRATION.
OTTAWA, June 2. Further restriction of Japanese immigration into Canada is under consideration by the Government. This was revealed to-day in the House of Commons when the question of Oriental immigrants was raised. Hon. H. Stevens asked if the Government had received representations from the British Columbia Chamber of Commerce for the same restriction on Chinese, and what the Government was doing about it. The Minister of Immigration replied that such representations had been received, and that further restricting of Japanese immigration was under consideration.

ITALIANS NOT WANTED.
NEW YORK, June 2. Two hundred Italian immigrants, who reported they had been refused admittance to Canada by the Canadian immigration authorities at Halifax, arrived at this port yesterday on the liner Dante Alighieri, from Italy. They were also refused admittance here and may be sent back to Italy. In the meantime they are at Ellis Island, a throng of their fellow countrymen gathered at the dock to greet them, and when it was found they would not be allowed to land it was necessary to summon police reserves to quell a small riot.

NEXT FRENCH GOVERNMENT STILL UNCERTAIN.
PARIS, June 2. The make up of the Government that will succeed the Poincare Cabinet which presented its resignation yesterday was still a matter of undecided uncertainty this afternoon. The next development of the situation depended upon the action of the Socialist party's congress then in session.

last night for Cherbourg and London, is returning here in consequence of a breakdown to her machinery. The Cherbourg passengers were transferred to the Lancaster.

Producing Sound Potatoes

Climate is one of the most important factors in growing a good crop of potatoes. This vegetable demands a fairly cool moist growing season for its best development. Nearly every year-droughts in one or more sections of the country are of common occurrence and the potato crop suffers. According to "The Michigan Farmer," from which this article is taken, these dry periods followed by heavy rainfall were largely responsible for the high percentage of hollow-hearted potatoes that were produced last season.

It was declared, however, that even in those sections where weather conditions were the most unfavorable last season, that those growers who were following the best "cultured" practices were producing potatoes of good quality and relatively free from hollow heart. The grower has no control over climate, but he does have control over such factors as soil, seed, planting and spraying, all of which can be used to good advantage in overcoming the effects of adverse weather conditions.

No one factor alone will solve the quality problem, but a combination of all the good cultural practices will put the grower on the right road to quality production.

The soil furnishes food and water to the plants. If it is lacking at any time during the growing season in available plant food and moisture the development of the plants is checked and the quality of the tubers is injured. It is, therefore, very important to prepare the soil so there will be an abundance of plant food and moisture in it. One of the most economical ways of doing this is to plant the potatoes on alfalfa, sweet clover or clover sod that has been top dressed the summer or fall previous to planting with 10 or more loads of stable manure to the acre. The sods and manure when plowed under decompose and furnish plant food, and the humus that is formed increases the moisture holding capacity of the soil. Such soil is able to produce good quality crops even in dry seasons. Potato growers should pay more attention to the growing of leguminous crops that will better prepare their soils for potatoes. In some cases, fresh stable manure applied shortly before planting favors the development of potato tubers.

Commercial fertilizers are becoming more generally used by the potato growers. On good loam soils that are well supplied with organic matter sixteen per cent acid phosphate used at the rate of 400 to 600 pounds per acre is usually beneficial. Generally on the lighter loam soils that are not so well supplied with organic matter a complete fertilizer analysis of approximately 3 per cent nitrogen, 12 per cent phosphoric acid and 4 per cent potash gives excellent results when used at the rate of 400 to 800 pounds to the acre. Plant potatoes on soils that are of a loamy type and well drained. Light sands and heavy clays are not suitable for potato production. Sandy loam, gravelly loam, and silt loams are excellent types.

On fertile, well prepared soil the yield of good quality potatoes can generally be increased by closer plantings. Some varieties of potatoes have a tendency to set but few tubers to the hill and when the hills are too apart the tubers may grow too large and rough. The practice of planting the hills 36 x 36 inches apart is not generally recommended. Planting distance tests that have been conducted and observations that have been made in the field, show that the best results are usually secured where the rows are approximately 36" apart and the hills from 15 to 24 inches apart in the rows.

Home of Dickens

Gad's Hill Palace, two miles from Rochester, the village home of Charles Dickens from 1857 until he died in 1870, is to be opened as a boarding school for girls after Easter. When Dickens was a small boy living at Chatham he was taken to Gad's Hill Place by his father and told that if he worked hard he might live in that house one day. Years after, when he had become famous, Dickens bought the place.

HOUSEHOLD EXPENSES.

At the first of the year said my Nellie to me: "In matters financial now let us agree. Let us make an arrangement and start in anew: There's no use my paying the household expenses if you will pay the insurance, the coal and the repairs. The club dues and bills and the clothing Bud wears." Said I to my Nellie: "That method is fine—Your bills are yours, and the others are mine."

Says Nellie to me, without shame or regret: "Will you stop at the store? There's a steak I must get. And some bread and some tea and your favorite cheese." Let me have money to pay for it, please. I've forgotten my purse.—I say: "Charge it, my dear!" She smilingly answered: "I'm not known in here! I just want to pick up these few things I lack." And I'm stung for a five-spot which never comes back.

Now household expenses, I take it, are all the charges against us which happen to fall. When I made that allowance I fancied that I would have naught but my own simple trinkets to buy. But here is a wedding gift sent to her niece. And here is the bill for a funeral piece. And she flings it at me and lays it down flat. "You surely don't think that I ought to pay for that!"

When I say 'twould be nice some slight favor to show. She answers: "It would be not with my money, though!" She'll get me a dinner for my friends, but still it must be understood that I'm paying the bill. I suppose there are men who lead regular lives. And keep to the contracts they make with their wives. And never get stung as my Nellie stings me. But as Nellie remarks: "Oh, what brutes they must be!"

Good News for Humanity

It is in the highest degree desirable that no false hopes should be raised regarding any of the ills that afflict mankind. History is strewn with tragedies that have followed hard upon the reaction caused by the crushing of such hopes. That is why medical men to-day are careful to exercise extreme caution in discussing the discovery, or progress leading towards the discovery, of cures for diseases that have scourged humanity from time immemorial. That is why the announcement of such a cure usually comes as a shock, and may explain in part why it is generally accepted with scepticism by the public, which cannot understand anything concerning which they have not been sedulously posted in advance.

When, therefore, such an eminent surgeon as Dr. Charles H. Mayo, of the world-famous Mayo clinic, expresses the firm belief that a cure for cancer will be discovered within a few years and that research work to-day is crystallizing towards such a cure, there is sound ground for substantial optimism. Dr. Mayo would never have given voice to this view unless he had what he believed to be more than adequate justification, and a scientist of his established skill does not talk in the dark. Some of the ablest minds in the world of medicine are engaged to-day upon the investigation of the causes of cancer, and it is not unreasonable to assume, in the light of the past that their united efforts must be eventually rewarded with success. As Dr. Mayo so significantly points out, whereas man used to die in the mass from plagues, now those plagues have been conquered and he dies of individual diseases. Medical research discovered the causes of the plagues, and they eliminated them. It is surely not indulging in too great optimism to express the belief that the same process will be crowned with ultimate success in the case of cancer, the one so-called incurable human plague left.

This optimism is justified is proved by the scientifically ascertained fact, indicated by Dr. Mayo, that from seventy to eighty per cent of cancer cases can be cured to-day if taken in time. It is not very many years ago since doctors used to shake their heads when they discovered cancer, convinced that it was incurable, and concerned only with the alleviation of pain to the sufferer. We have made great strides since then, and we are making still greater strides to-day. The small but devoted band of research workers who are giving up their lives to this great cause may well take renewed encouragement and incentive for still more determined effort from the words of Dr. Mayo. They constitute good news for all humanity.—Montreal Star, May 27.

Anita Stewart Scores Big at the Crescent

"THE LOVE PIKER" BEAUTIFUL FILM AND WELL ACTED.

Anita Stewart appeared at the Crescent Theatre last night in her greatest picture, "The Love Piker,"—the first of her new pictures. In the past this ever popular star has frequently been handicapped by the burden of roles utterly unsuited to her personality and talents. On this fortunate occasion she is starred in a part which affords her golden opportunities to demonstrate her sterling dramatic ability, a fact of which she takes full and complete advantage. The plot is simple enough, the tale of a young, willful girl spoiled by excess wealth, self-indulgence and the flattery of the rapid social set to which she belongs. Yet, while a snob in seeming, there is good stuff concealed by her mantle of frivolity, and when a real man falls in love with her the true woman comes to the surface and all ends happily.

Anita Stewart has never seemed so charming as she appears when interpreting heroine Hope Warner, and the secret of her success lies in her utter lack of affectation and her ability to depict that spoiled darling of fortune exactly as the author conceived her.

"The Love Piker," to sum up, offers flawless entertainment and that of a kind suited to the needs of all classes of people.

We don't know much, not expected to, for we don't get pay for knowing much. But we do know that the way to get the best of an argument is to stay out of it.

MINARD'S LIMENT FOR DIS-TEMPER.

ADVERTISE IN THE EVENING TELEGRAM.

Hudson's Bay Water Route Impracticable

The Hudson's Bay water route from Western Canada to Europe is not practicable in the grain-shipping months of October and November, says the whole project assumes the ships and substantiality of a mid-summer night's dream. On the front page of the Financial Section of Saturday Night in a recent issue Captain John L. Read, who has been master of all the best icebreakers in Canada and who has had extended first-hand experience in these waters, shows that those two months are just the two months that everybody with actual experience across the waters cannot be used. Even during the two months of August and September, which alone could be counted on, the ice conditions are such that the traffic could only be carried on by specially constructed vessels, and he gives it as his considered opinion that such special construction would be so costly and involve so little freight space as to make grain-carrying unprofitable.

The Senate Committee's finding that Fort Nelson is absolutely unsuited for terminal purposes in spite of the millions spent upon it is in line with Captain Read's experience. It is true that the Senate Committee and Northern navigators like Captain Read agree that Fort Churchill would make an ideal land-locked harbor, but what is the use of building the Hudson's Bay Railway to it if it cannot be used for delivering grain to ocean steamers in the same year that the wheat is harvested? The folly of such action is further demonstrated by the figures given in the article referred to as to comparative distances from various wheat-shipping points in Western Canada to water at Fort Nelson and Fort William respectively. In all but a comparatively insignificant wheat-growing area in Northern Saskatchewan the grain is nearer to Fort William than to Fort Nelson and the disparity between Fort William and Fort Churchill would be even greater. The cost of freights and insurance by the Northern route would be prohibitive.

The whole Hudson's Bay folly illustrates well the truth of the old adage that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. Look at a map, and the untrusting enthusiast immediately exclaims, "Why, sure, the Hudson's Bay route is the thing." What could be simpler. Build a railway to the nearest port on Hudson's Bay, make a Port with terminals, load the wheat on vessels and off they have to do it to sail right out into the Atlantic and over to Liverpool. It cuts out transportation on the Great Lakes and trans-shipping at Montreal as well as the rail transportation across Ontario where that is done.

The optimism of the Western enthusiasts reminds me of the madman's plan for a trip to the moon. "What could be simpler?" he explained. "The giant telescope in the Dominion Observatory near Victoria, B.C., brings the moon within half a mile of the Earth. Then get a balloon and go up to it."—Saturday Night.

Shutting Out the Human Flood

The passage of the new Immigration Bill through the United States Congress heralds the termination of the open door policy which has been in force in that country practically since the first white man set foot on the Continent. Taking the census of 1890 as the quota basis upon which two per cent. of the number of foreign born of a particular nationality may enter in any one year means that the annual installments of immigrants is cut to something like 150,000 per year, and of this number eight-five per cent. or more will be Nordic. Exceptions, however, will be made for immigrants having relatives in the United States who are bona fide citizens of five years residence. In this regard there is going to be a whole lot of consistent lying such as we have experienced from certain continental states.

The United States newspapers in discussing this Bill do not fail to point out that a great deal of trouble is in store for immigrants officials owing to the smuggling which will no doubt be attempted at both the Canadian and the Mexican borders. It may well be that bootlegging aliens into the United States will become an even more profitable business than smuggling liquor. That Government has already appropriated a million and one-quarter dollars to cover the expenses involved in patrolling the Mexican and Canadian borders, but this looks like a very insignificant sum when the thousands of miles of boundary line are considered.

The United States Congress pays to the applicant of not including bona fide Canadians in their restrictions, and somehow we almost wish they had, in view of the steady stream of Canadian workers that are now finding their way across the border.—Saturday Night.

Trials of Germans Still in Progress

Very few people are aware that, although six years have elapsed since the great war was brought to a close, and five years since the treaty of peace was signed by the belligerents at Versailles, military tribunals are still in session, especially in France and in Belgium, dealing with crimes perpetrated by German officers and men against the unarmed civilian population of the invaded districts.

Germany by the terms of the treaty of peace undertook to bring to justice and to punish these men, a list of whose names were furnished to them. But the very few trials which took place in Germany, in the presence of military and legal representatives of Great Britain, Belgium and France, proved so farcical and were conducted with such obvious intention of whitewashing instead of punishing the offenders that any further attempts to compel Germany to fulfill her treaty obligations in this respect were abandoned.

This does not, however, mean that France and her allies have either forgiven or forgotten. Since it was useless to attempt to have the offenders tried in Germany, the Entente Powers are trying them themselves, and one by one those German officers and men guilty of criminal violations and unpardonable acts of barbarity at the expense of unarmed civilians are being tried by military courts which are in permanent session.

The evidence is produced in due form. It is usually of an incontrovertible character, and on the strength of this evidence the offender, who, of course, is careful to avoid putting in an appearance, is convicted and sentenced pronounced against him.

For the present no attempt is being made to obtain the extradition of the offender, but the sentence is duly recorded against him, and in the event of his ever venturing to set foot on French or Belgian territory or on a French ship he would at once be seized and called upon to pay the full penalty of his crime.

Attention is called to this because a high military tribunal in Paris has just convicted and pronounced sentence of death against the German Gen. Von Oven, who was the Kaiser's Governor and Commander of the stronghold of Metz during a portion of the great war. The evidence goes to show that by the General's direct orders a detachment of German soldiers destroyed in October, 1914, the village of Jery and exterminated its civilian inhabitants under circumstances of indescribable atrocity, the soldiers acting under the immediate direction of their officers. Priests, nuns, women and children were all put to death under frightful conditions.

Five Men Killed Daily

AVERAGE IN BRITISH MINES. LONDON, May 10 (A.P.)—Herbert Smith, president of the Miners' Federation, gave some statistics regarding fatalities in the coal mines of Britain, little known to the average person, in his opening speech at the miners' wages inquiry.

In 1922, he said, 12,596 men were disabled for more than seven days, and in addition 1,297 lives were lost. These figures meant that every working day more than five persons were killed. Every 215,000 tons of coal raised was stained with one man's blood. Every working day 850 men were injured.

"If the victims of accidents in the mines," Mr. Smith continued, "were marshalled in one procession, four men in a rank and each rank one and a half yards apart, they would have a procession of 45 miles. Every 15 yards of that tragic march they would have an ambulance containing a man who was seriously injured and every 61 yards a hearse. This is part of the miner's wages, part of the price he pays in the struggle with natural forces that people may have coal and he and his family bread."

Thrilling Rescue of Fisherman

DOWN 60 FATHOMS FOR FIVE MINUTES.
The splendid and fortunately successful struggle of a Tuck's fishing crew to save the life of one of its members was the theme of a story brought to Buckle recently by the steam drifter Mary Bowie.

When James Bowie (skipper) was shooting the seine net rope seven miles off a cove caught William Crockett round one leg. He was whipped overboard and dragged under the water for 60 fathoms before the boat's full speed could be checked.

The crew hauled in the rope desperately after cutting the anchor shroud, and were able to get Crockett aboard. He was five minutes under water unconscious, and had turned blue. For nearly two hours the crew applied artificial respiration, and succeeded in restoring him. He is now progressing favorably.

Magnificent Home

DEDICATED TO CARE OF AGED GENTLEMEN.
NEW YORK, May 25 (A.P.)—The only free institution in this country, if not in the world, devoted solely to the care of aged gentlemen, those in good circumstances but now impoverished—and their maintenance for life in the case to which they have been accustomed—was dedicated here today by the trustees, of which Samuel Untermyer is the head.

This unique benefaction is the Andrew Freedman Home and is named for its founder, capitalist and philanthropist, who died December 4, 1915, leaving approximately $5,000,000 for this charity. One-half immediately became available. The balance was left in trust by the decedent for his mother and sister and will ultimately revert to the home. In his will Mr. Freedman specifically directed that the institution should be strictly non-sectarian and that in case a husband and wife were admitted, as guests they should dwell together.

Surrounded by velvety lawns, this impressive structure of limestone—pure French in design—occupies the center of an entire square at 167th Street and the Grand Concourse. Without its wide stone terraces it is 192 by 76 feet and is four stories in height. It is the last word in construction and in architectural beauty, and its interior decorative effects, designed by a noted Parisian artist, are both simple and charming. In reality the Home is a hotel luxuriously appointed in which the guests will never be presented with a bill.

From the Concourse terrace one enters the main floor, with the library on the left and the living and dining rooms on the right. Back of these is a wide corridor leading to the dining room, billiard parlor and other rooms. Elevators will take the guests to the forty-eight bedrooms above, all furnished with every possible convenience and equipped with baths. Actually, every unit is a private home, shut off from others by sound-proof walls, wherein each resident may live free from intrusion.

The simple, solid color effects throughout the interior form one of the greatest charms, the walls, carpets and furnishings all lending themselves to the general design. Yet in no two rooms is the bulletin a color tone repeated. The decorator has supplied his contrasts by touches in cushions and overdrapes. The only spot which might be termed gay is the dining-room where the walls are done in soft yellow, the tables and chairs in Chinese red and the hangings in lustrous black.

The completeness of the building may be estimated from the fact that it also incorporates a fully equipped hospital with operating room, a barber shop, a servants' hall and quarters, refrigerating rooms, and every other convenience which persons of wealth and refinement could desire.

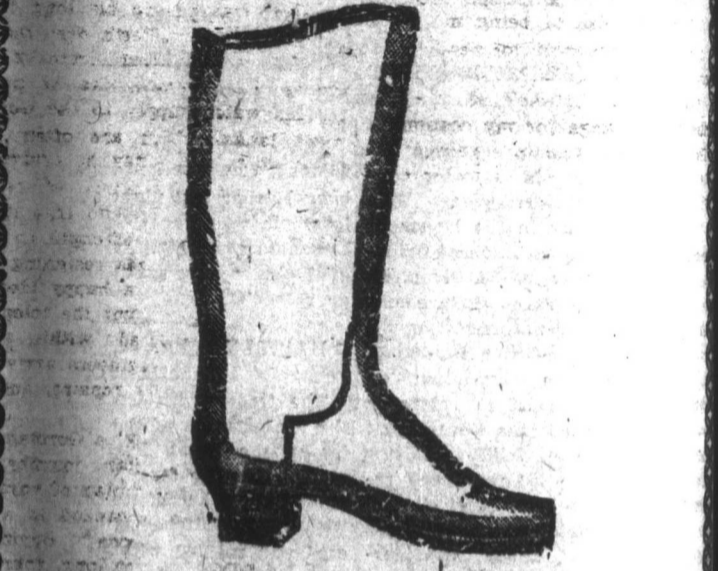

By careful management and investment the trustees have been able to carry out Mr. Freedman's wishes most advantageously and when the remainder of the fund is turned over to them they will be in a position materially to enlarge the institution.

Little Talks on Motoring
What is the cause of most of the troubles in present day motoring, cars to-day are nearly fool proof as regards mechanical defects. The majority of troubles are caused by dirt or water in the gasoline, so the wise motorist makes sure the gasoline he puts in his tank is clean. The pumping outfit you see at the different garages filter your gasoline before it goes in your tank, and it is the safest way to obtain it to be free from trouble, still and it is a big still, if the

The King's Birthday

A United Empire to-day showers its respectful congratulations upon His Majesty King George the Fifth, who celebrates the fifty-ninth anniversary of his birth.

Long before his accession to the throne His Majesty had earned the love and devotion of his people by those sterling qualities which stood him in good stead in the strenuous days of the Great War.

Few monarchs have passed so successfully through trying times as has King George, and his devotion to duty, his unflinching tact and sympathy, has endeared him to all the many people over whom he rules.

We in Newfoundland are never backward in professing our loyalty, and it is unfortunate that the King's Birthday must be commemorated at a time of the year when its celebration by a commercial holiday is extremely inconvenient.

Newfoundlanders, however, will join with all other loyal subjects in extending to the King their respectful congratulations, coupled with the hope that for many, many years to come His Majesty may be spared to reign over the greatest Empire on which the sun ever shone.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

Signs of Victory

Nothing is more uncertain than the result of a Newfoundland election, nor does it pay to feel unduly optimistic when the first counts are made known. At the same time there is a considerable amount of satisfaction in drawing first blood, and those of us who have supported the Monroe party have good cause to be pleased with the results of the contests in Port de Grave and Hr. Main.

No little significance attaches to the Monroe win in Port de Grave, for the vote in that district is to some extent indicative of the sentiment in Harbor Grace.

Messrs. Bradley, Woodford and Cahill are deserving of the heartiest congratulations on their great victories, which are all the more worthy of praise since the time for preparation and canvassing was so short.

Both Mr. Bradley and Mr. Cahill are newcomers to the Assembly, but we are confident that the districts they represent can rely upon them to work always in the best interests of the country and those of the people who supported them.

A Small Vote

The number of votes polled in the election has fallen very much short of last year's total. In the two districts in which the results have already been made known the votes cast were some 900 less than in 1923.

Reports received from other districts also point to very small voting. The reason for this small vote is chiefly the apathy and lack of interest with which so many have viewed the election.

A great many men throughout the island have become so disgusted with the manner in which our affairs have been administered during the past five years that they could not be prevailed upon to use their vote.

Apart from this, many electors are now abroad, or are working in some other district, and could not get home to exercise their franchise.

We are inclined to the belief however, that with the advent of clean government, the people will take a keener and livelier interest in the public affairs of the Colony, and that after four years with a Monroe Government, they will unite to poll the largest vote on record for the maintenance in power of the man who is soon likely to be entrusted with the task of leading Newfoundland from despondency to prosperity.

Leader Returns From Bonavista Campaign

Mr. W. S. Monroe and Capt. Dalton, candidates for Fogo district arrived by S.S. Walker at 1 o'clock to-day. The Walker left Wesleyville last midnight and made an exceptionally good run to port. The ship came in rather unexpectedly, nevertheless a large crowd were at the pier and welcome the leader in a whole-hearted manner. A cheering crowd brought Mr. Monroe to the Post Office steps and called for an address. Mr. Monroe spoke briefly thanking the gathering for the reception given.

Last Night at the Committee Rooms

Practically all the West End Committee were present at the Star Rooms last night to report the work done during the day. Sir John Crosbie and Messrs. Linagar and Browne made short addresses, congratulating the workers on their efforts.

Mr. J. R. Bennett, who was present, was requested to make an address, which he did, telling those present of the campaign in Harbor Grace, and holding out the best hopes for the election of himself and colleagues.

The meeting closed with cheers for the Monroe party and the candidates for St. John West and East, and for Mr. Bennett.

A Narrow Escape From Death

A resident of Portugal Cove named John Churchill had a narrow escape from being killed at his home yesterday morning and now lies in hospital suffering from injuries received. It appears that the unfortunate victim was about to board a carriage in company with his brother Alfred to proceed to town when the horse suddenly bolted and hurled him in front of the wagon the wheels passing over his chest. Churchill was brought to town and upon entering hospital an X-Ray examination was made but the extent of his injuries has not been ascertained as yet. Churchill was resting easily this morning.

Votes Cast at Outport Polling Stations

One thousand and forty-five votes were cast at the outport polling stations at the Seaman's Institute yesterday. The ballot boxes belonging to the various Conception Bay Districts, were sent out at 9.30 by special train.

The following is the record of the vote cast for the various districts:—Fortune 10, Fogo 23, Bay de Verde 88, Cartwright 15, Harbour Grace 47, Port de Grave 39, Harbour Main 85, Ferryland 59, Bonavista 39, Twillingate 29, Burin 29, Trinity 181, Placentia 107, St. George's 4, St. Barbe 18, Bargo 10.

A Surprised School Teacher

When the young lady in charge of the school on the southside entered the building this morning she was surprised to find a girl of 15 years lying in a stupor on the floor. The police were notified. On investigation it was found that the girl had gained access through a window and slipped in the building all night. She is well known to the police.

Four Men Thrown From Waggon

THREE SLIGHTLY INJURED, ONE KNOCKED UNCONSCIOUS.

About six o'clock last evening as Messrs. John Thistle, Frank Thistle, Walter Skinner and George Walsh were proceeding in Allandale Road, by Green, to cast their votes, the horse took fright near Coushins' bridge, as the result of the crostree hitting its hind leg, and setting beyond control of driver Walsh, dashed madly in the road, and before the beast could be brought to a standstill, the vehicle collided with a telegraph pole, throwing all four to the roadside, injuring them severely. Dr. Furneaux, who was driving to town and an eye-witness of the accident, managed to stop the infuriated animal, and immediately went to the assistance of the men. He found all four lying in a semi-conscious condition on the road. Frank Thistle and Walter Skinner, although badly shaken up, quickly recovered themselves. Walsh, who sustained a badly gashed nose, also came round in a few minutes, while Mr. John Thistle lapsed into unconsciousness, and it could be seen that he had been badly injured. Dr. Macpherson, who was attending a sick call in the neighbourhood, was notified of the accident and hurriedly rushed to the scene, whilst Dr. Grievie was also summoned by phone. The injured men were taken into a nearby house and had their wounds dressed, whilst John Thistle was later removed to hospital. An examination of his injuries showed that he was suffering from a slight concussion, but no bones were found broken. Early this morning he regained consciousness and there is every hope for a full recovery.

Obituary

PETER J. POWELL. It is with feelings of sincere regret that the Telegram has to chronicle to-day the passing of an esteemed citizen of St. John's East, in the person of Mr. Peter Powell, stevedore, Messrs. Bowring Bros. Ltd.

The deceased has been in failing health for the past two years, and about four months ago his condition became worse until no hope could be held out for his recovery. The late Mr. Powell was the eldest son of the late Peter Powell, who predeceased him about four weeks ago, and Fannie Powell he leaves to mourn, besides his wife and mother, three sisters and four brothers, to whom the sympathy of a wide circle of friends will be extended.

The funeral takes place to-morrow at 2.30 p.m. from his late residence, 12 Mallock Street.

MRS. WILLIAM FRENCH.

There passed peacefully away, at her residence, Murray Street, recently after a long and painful illness, Mrs. Wm. French, who was well and favourably known, and was liked by all who knew her. The deceased lady was in her sixty-third year. The deceased suffered for eight months with that terrible complaint, Cancer, and bore it all patiently. Although everything possible was done to effect a cure, she gradually grew worse and the end came peacefully on Wednesday morning. Mrs. French was a kind wife and loving mother not only to her own children but others as well. She leaves to mourn a husband, 2 brothers, Albert and Archibald Goode, of this city, 4 daughters, Mrs. E. Wheeler, Murray Street; Mildred at Everett, Mass., and Elsie and Olive at home; 4 sons, Adie G. French of the Salvation Army; Leonard French, Field Street; William at Everett, Mass., and Hayward at the White Clothing Co., Ltd.

Firemen Called Out

The Central and West End fire trucks were called out at 2.30 p.m. yesterday to the residence of Mr. Robert Aitken, New Gower Street, where a blaze was caused by sparks from the chimney igniting the roof. The blaze, however, raised very little heat, and with a good stream of water brought into play it soon had the desired effect. The roof was only slightly damaged.

Drowning Reported

A message from Sub-Collector Paul of Burin to the Deputy Minister of Justice, was received yesterday, which reads as follows:—"The schooner, Beattie McDonald, arrived from the Banks reporting Ed. Miles drowned through capsizing of ferry. Deceased belonged to Little Bay, Fortune Bay."

Small City Vote

The total votes polled in St. John's East and West yesterday was more below that cast last year. In St. John's West the total vote polled was 4,778, as against 5,511, making a shortage of 733. In the East End the total vote was 4,217, as against 5,271, last election, showing a decrease of 1,054. The East End count started at 3 o'clock.

Election Returns

PORT DE GRAVE. The Monroe Candidate for Port de Grave, Mr. F. G. Bradley, has won the District by a small margin of four votes. When the first count was bulletined, Smith, the Government candidate was leading by 24. At the second count Bradley had gained considerably, but up to the final hundred he was 15 behind his opponent. When the poll was declared the vote stood: Bradley 523, Smith 519.

Majority for Bradley 4. The total vote polled was over 400 less than last year. The Telegram extends congratulations to Mr. Bradley on his election.

HARBOR MAIN.

The two Monroe candidates for Hr. Main District, Messrs. Woodford and Cahill defeated the Government candidates, Hon. M. Hawco and Mr. E. L. Carter, by substantial majorities. The count was somewhat late in coming in and it was past two o'clock this morning when the first bulletin was issued. From the beginning the Monroe candidates led by a wide margin and when the poll was declared at 6 o'clock the count stood as follows: Woodford 884, Cahill 785, Hawco 628, Carter 504.

We extend to Messrs. Woodford and Cahill heartiest congratulations on their victory.

CARBONEAR.

This morning the police arrested under warrant a resident of the city who has been working up country on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences. It is said that the prisoner altered a cheque so that he stood to gain sixty or seventy dollars.

Lost in a Cavern Maze

A new game for Londoners has been tried out in the pitch-black darkness of the Chalehurst Caves by twenty men armed with miners' lamps and the first map ever made of the caves. They were taken by guides to the extremities of the caves, known as the "Druids' Altars," split into groups of two and told to try to find their way back through winding black tunnels to the open air.

Hampton Court maze is simplicity compared with the caves. Every few yards is a gloomy cavern, each cavern looks the same; one false turn and the explorer is left out of his way with his sense of direction hopelessly asphyxiated. The wanderers began to emerge blinking into the air in twos about an hour after the race began. Some had been lost, and others had only found their way back by counting carefully each step and comparing every tunnel with the map.

During the summer, visitors will be able to try the experiment in groups or singly. If any one wishes to wander alone through the shadows, a sign his name in a book and give the time of his entrance into the caves, so that if he does not appear again within a given time a guide may go out in search of him.

The old theory that the caves were tunnelled by primitive men, and that the ledges at the ends are alters on which the druids made grisly sacrifices has been dispelled by antiquaries, who declare that they are merely ancient chalk workings. During the war explosives were stored in them by the War Office.

Flying Foxes

Down comes swiftly in the tropics. The dim, grey sky is pierced by a shaft of palest gold; the greyness melts into rose and amber, and another new day is born, writes Lillian Gash, E.Z.S.

From a forest of fruit trees on the far horizon a black cloud rises, streaming its way across the water to an adjacent island. Were you near enough you would find that cloud to be composed of thousands of queer creatures with bat-like wings of three to four feet span and the bodies of small animals covered with reddish fur. Their faces are those of fierce little foxes, and their bright eyes, set in their heads like jewels, have anything but a sweet expression.

They are Fruit Bats, or Flying Foxes, returning from one of their nightly raids on a fruit plantation. Arrived at their roosting trees on the island, each fights to get the best place for himself, hitting out viciously with his long thumb-claws, snarling and biting and tearing. This will go on until the sun is high, the last to arrive having a desperate struggle to get any place at all.

When at last they have all settled, the trees appear to be hung with very large black pears. Suspended upside down by one claw, the Fruit Bats have folded themselves in their wings, only their heads peeping out. And so they will remain all day until sunset, when they will rouse themselves once more, to flock to where the fruit is ripest. So unerring is their instinct for finding ripe fruit that the Indian natives, if in doubt as to where the fruit trees are already bearing, will mark which way the flying foxes go and follow them. He will have to make haste or the trees will be bare, for in a single night each bat eats double its own weight in fruit.

U. S. WORLD FLIERS GREETED BY JAPANESE.

Thousands of people lined the water front of Kagoshima and stood on the hills about Kagoshima Bay to cheer the U.S. army world fliers upon their arrival here at 7.02 last evening from Kushimoto. The flight was trying and difficult, it took six hours to cover 425 miles. Fierce winds and rain retarded the aviators who had been delayed at Kashimoto by bad weather. The aviators have to continue the flight to Shanghai 10 miles across the yellow sea to-day. Kagoshima is their last stopping place in Japan.

Digging for Doubloons

BID FOR PILATE GOLD BY ELECTRICITY—THE BURIED MILLIONS OF COCOS ISLAND.

By means of a newly-invented electrical apparatus, which reveals metals 65 feet under the ground, another attempt is being made to discover and recover the golden doubloons, uncut diamonds, rare emeralds, rubies, strings of priceless pearls and other treasures of fabulous value alleged to be buried on Cocos Island, 600 miles from Panama. The present expedition made one trip to Cocos Island and now is about to return to finish the quest. Captain C. O. Polk-Burnham, master of the good ship Gunner, is in charge, assisted by Mr. W. S. Clayton, inventor of the instrument that detects the presence of metals far under the ground. Cocos Island seems to have been the burying ground for treasure of all the pirates and privateers and other adventurers of the seven seas. Records of the British Museum are said to show The Morgan treasure buried at Cocos to be worth $5,000,000, and the Bonito treasure worth $2,500,000. According to a document left by John Keating, master mariner of St. John's, Newfoundland, the brig Mary Dear deposited seven longboat loads of billion, gold and silver ornaments and precious stones on Cocos Island in 1840, the treasure having been brought from Peru. Comparatively little testing was done by the present expedition on its first visit to the island, due to the heavy rains. The survey of the island revealed innumerable tunnels, cuts and holes dug by previous treasure seekers during the last 50 years, reported Mr. Clayton. "Some parts are virtually honey-combed and bear mute testimony of the fruitless efforts of many, probably long forgotten, expeditions. One can almost see the last despairing pick mark and reconstruct the feelings of the disappointed 'colliers. The island is not at present inhabited, nor does it show signs of any recent habitation. The vegetation is dense and quite an effective barrier to speed exploration. Of the animal life the wild pig and cat predominate. A few old corrugated iron buildings are still making an effort to defy the inroads of time, and these speak well for the quality of the materials used, for it is some 35 years since they were built by Mr. Giesler and his wife, who lived on the island to within a few years ago. Mr. Giesler saw many expeditions come and go, and among others one from Victoria in 1898, when Captain Hackett sailed with a party on the schooner Aurora. There was present at this time Mrs. Keating, the widow of the only man who got any treasure off the island. Captain Keating is known to have removed 25,000 worth of precious stones. Captain A. B. Whidden, first mate of the Aurora on that occasion, is a member of the present expedition. Captain Whidden, who was present when Captain Keating discovered the treasure, is confident that the Clayton apparatus will locate the hidden wealth. This instrument, which has not yet been patented, is said to have covered ground in a few weeks which, had digging by the ordinary methods been resorted to, would have taken an army of men a year or more.—News of the World.

Trying an Aeroplane

There is always an adventure in taking up a new type of aeroplane for the first time, and a never-fading thrill is provided as the machine starts its rush across the aerodrome.

Settle comfortably in the seat, fasten up the safety belt, see that legs and arms can move freely and all controls are within easy reach.

When the engine has been warmed and tested the aeroplane is taxied out on to the aerodrome, faced up wind and the throttle opened.

Within fifteen yards, on a fast coast, the machine will try to lift, but to allow for a safe margin of flying speed it must be held down to the ground for some seconds longer.

No attempt should be tried till up a sufficient height, but once having attained 2,000 feet the pilot may commence to get the feel of his strange mount.

Starting with slightly banked turns, the angle is increased until the turns are vertical. After this more turns are made at varying speeds to test how the machine answers to the controls.

The next thing is to ascertain the stalling speed of the machine, or how slowly it can fly, for a pilot must know how much safe speed he has in hand to carry out evolutions.

The nose is pulled up to the heavens and the engine cut off.

From 120 miles an hour the air speed indicator drops to 30, 60, 50, then 45.

At this speed the nose, still pointing skywards, wavers. A moment's pause, then the aeroplane plunges earthwards, nose first. With a fall of some hundred feet, sufficient speed will have been regained and the machine can be brought under control once more.

"Now for a loop," says the pilot to himself. Down goes the nose and up goes the speed till the wires scream. Back with the stick and over the nose.

Earth and sky tumble over one another, until the ground suddenly seems to be rushing upwards to hit the pilot in the face. The loop is looped.

American Runners Promise Well For Olympic Marathon

NEW YORK, May 26 (A.P.)—America's hopes in the marathon, classic distance feature of the 1924 Olympic games at Paris in July, will be higher than at any time since the spectacular triumph of Johnny Hayes 16 years ago at London.

That year, 1908, Hayes was victorious after Dorando, great Italian runner, collapsed when within sight of the finish. Over-zealous officials helped Dorando across the line, but he was disqualified and Hayes, the next finisher, was awarded first prize.

One other American victory shows on the records of the seven Olympic marathons held since 1896. That was in 1904, at St. Louis, when Hicks breast the tape first in the long grind.

Since 1908, however, no American has finished better than third, although the winners of the Stars and Stripes, as a whole, made a formidable showing at Stockholm in 1912. In that race, Gaston Strohloot took third place, behind McArthur and Gittan, the South Africans, while six other Yankee runners were in the first 12 finishers.

This year the United States will send its six best long distance men to the start with particular confidence placed in Clarence H. DeMar, 38-year-old Melrose, Mass., athletic marvel who established his right to lead the Yankee squad when he won the Boston Marathon, final Olympic tryout, for the fourth time, snatching the American record and bettering the Olympic record for the distance of 26 miles, 283 yards.

DeMar's time for this race was 2 hours, 29 minutes, 40 1-5 seconds, only a second slower than the recognized world's marathon record hung up by Willie Kolehmanen at Newark, N. J., in 1912. Willie's brother, Hannas, won the Olympic marathon for Finland at Antwerp four years ago and set a new standard for the games of 2:32:35 4-5.

DeMar is a marathoner of the type of Tom Longboat, famous Canadian Indian. He is long, lean and apparently tireless. He holds his arms exceptionally high, and derives very little power from their swinging. His legs are slim, but well muscled at the calves and back of the thigh. Seldom during a race does he change his pace, regardless of whether he is going up or down grade. DeMar finished twelfth at Stockholm in his only Olympic marathon appearance.

While chief hopes probably will be pinned on the Melrose star, Uncle Sam has two other brilliant runners in Charles L. Mellor, of Chicago, and Frank E. Wendling, of Buffalo, a newcomer to marathon ranks. They finished second and third, respectively, in the Boston tryout. William J. Churchill, of San Francisco and Carl Lindner, of Boston, also are members of the team, while the sixth man will be chosen from Frank Zins, of Newark, N. J., and Ralph Williams, of Quincy, Mass.

Zins, who won this year's Baltimore and Detroit marathons, was regarded as the best of the pack until he dropped out of the Boston race because of stomach trouble. If he returns to form by the time of the Olympic event he will be strongly favored.

Chief among the rivals of the American runners will be Kolehmanen, who will attempt to make Olympic history by repeating his 1920 triumph.

One of the Season's Greatest Pictures

IS "BROKEN CHAINS" NOW PLAYING AT THE NICKEL.

It is easy to understand why "Broken Chains," the feature at the Nickel Theatre, won the first prize of ten thousand dollars in the scenario contest conducted by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and the Chicago Daily News. This is an all-round fine production, intensely dramatic in theme, well cast and beautifully directed.

Malcolm McGregor, who attracted considerable attention for his fine work in "The Prisoner of Zenda," has the leading male role, that of a wealthy young Easterner, Peter Wyndham, who undergoes a spiritual regeneration and learns the meaning of courage through love. McGregor was a fine choice for this role, and he succeeds admirably in bringing out its psychological aspects.

Colleen Moore undoubtedly reaches the high point of her career in her characterization of the part of Mercy Boone, the girl wife of a brutal outlaw ranchman, played by Ernest Torrence. Torrence's performance is as magnificent a piece of screen villainy as we have ever seen, almost fearsome in its realism.

The whole cast is a particularly strong one. The beautiful Claire Windsor, now under contract with Goldwyn, is a delight in the part of a New York society girl. Among the others are Beryl Mercer, who is well remembered for her performance on the New York stage in "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals"; James Marston, Whittaker and Leo Willis.

Allen Holubar directed this big production for Goldwyn.

Dust That Will Explode

That flour, sugar, starch or grain dust are capable of working greater havoc than a high explosive such as dynamite is not generally known, says an English writer.

In a barrel or sack flour is harmless. But if you were to take handfuls of it and throw it about until the air in the room was full of it, and then light a match, the house might be blown to pieces.

Flour is a combustible substance. When a cloud of it floats in the air of a room every particle is in immediate contact with oxygen, and a flame or even a spark will cause it to burn. Instantaneously the whole of it is converted into gas, which, expanding in a closed area, blows out the walls.

Powdered sugar is also extremely dangerous. While powdered spices, oatmeal, and even soap will explode.

Some months ago a workman lifted the lid of a bin containing flour, and held a lighted match inside to see how full it was. An explosion took place immediately, and the unfortunate man was badly injured. Yet it was not the mass of the flour that went off, but only what was afloat in the air of the bin.

A cake of soap does not burn unless put into a furnace or coal range, but if dry, and distributed in powdered form through the air of a room, it will explode with violence. The requisite conditions in such cases are that the substance shall be combustible and that it shall be plentifully mixed with air in a confined space.

The fact that coal dust will explode has only been realized within the last few years. A tremendous explosion in France, in which one thousand lives were lost, was proved to be due to this cause.

Means of safeguard against all sorts of dust explosions are now being evolved, and many factories use suction fans to remove particles of dust from the air.

"Dipping" for Dinners

Buenos Aires probably possesses the most curious restaurant in the world. It lies in Pasco de Julio, a street frequented by sailors and dockyard workers.

The whole establishment consists of a great pot, about one yard in diameter, and an equally large fork. Only one "dish," called "buchero," is offered to customers. It is simply prepared. The proprietor fills the pot with water, lets a few chunks of meat and bones drop to the bottom, then adds some coloring material, partly to give a touch of mystery to the whole; partly to make the meat in the bottom invisible.

A fire is now lit under the pot. When the mixture boils a card is displayed, stating that "lunch, dinner, or supper is now ready."

Each customer pays five cents and is handed the huge fork, which he dips into the boiling water. If he is lucky he harpoons a piece of meat, which he is entitled to fish out and devour.

If not, five cents have "gone bang." But he can buy another chance if he has another five cents to pay for it.

Keep The Hair Live And Glossy With Cuticura

On retiring, gently rub spots of dandruff and itching with Cuticura Ointment. Next morning shampoo with a soda of Cuticura Soap and hot water. This treatment does much to keep the scalp clean and healthy and promotes hair growth.

Aristocrats of Crime

The "fence"—the name by which the receiver of stolen property is known—is the aristocrat of the criminal world. If there were no "fences" there would be few thieves.

Sir Ernest Wild, K.C., once described a "fence" as a person who remained hidden in his den working like a spider in its web—running few risks and reaping most of the gains of the thief.

Most of the smart "fences" are known to the police, but the loyal support given them by those who take to them the plunder they secure makes it almost impossible for the smartest detectives to place them in the dock. For the criminal who gives a "fence" away is a marked man for the rest of his life. His name is never erased from a black list that circulates far and wide.

"Fences" even when captured are hard to convict—even when a crook turns "tail" it must be proved that stolen goods were purchased without knowing that they had been stolen. A "fence" can admit that a thief had told him that the goods had been stolen after payment had been made. The law in that respect is on their side.

Many "fences" began life as active criminals, but soon found that work behind the scenes was safer and more profitable.

The thief who has not the confidence of a good "fence" spends most of his life in goal. Clumsy efforts to dispose of stolen property always lead to the dock.

There are many apparently respectable firms in nearly all the big cities of the world owned by "fences." They can buy their stock in the cheapest market. Expert hands can change the outward appearance of most articles so well that even the owners cannot recognize their own property. But when alteration means depreciation goods can be shifted abroad, for the ramifications of the receiving trade are world-wide.

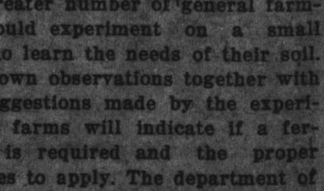

The "good fence" is as loyal to the chief as the thief is loyal to him, and herein lies the secret of the safety with which the "fence" enriches himself without getting "squeaked." Ways and means are found of looking after a thief's family when he falls by the way. When a "breadwinner" is in goal those dependent on him will not suffer, and a smart thief is sure of a cheery welcome when he returns to freedom.

"Fences" are singularly free from blackmail. The thief who shirks work and resorts to threats is soon taught a salutary lesson. His brother criminals insist on him playing the game!

Use of Fertilizers Might be Greatly Increased

The latest market report on fertilizers issued by the Federal Department of Agriculture states that trade is poor and that the season's business is coming to a close. Seed merchants and other retailers who bought different brands of fertilizer earlier in the season from the wholesale trade are experiencing a normal demand from urban and suburban gardeners. It is questionable whether the farmers have bought as much fertilizer this year as last, although every art of selling known to the trade has been practised. The farmers have not had the money with which to buy, nor sufficient confidence in the use of fertilizers as a source of profit to warrant buying them on credit. Undoubtedly there are gains from the use of fertilizers as demonstrated by individual farmers and official tests.

The problem is however dependent on so many conditions that very few feel confident enough of results to invest to any great extent. Potato growers, orchardists and truck gardeners have been the most liberal users of fertilizers. It would be well if a greater number of general farmers would experiment on a small scale to learn the needs of their soil. Their own observations together with the suggestions made by the experimental farms will indicate if a fertilizer is required and the proper mixtures to apply. The department of

Ten Sisters Hold Re-Union

FOR FIRST TIME IN 29 YEARS.
Ten sisters have just had a re-union meeting after an interval of 29 years.

The meeting took place at Margate, and the occasion was the 50th birthday of the youngest, Mrs. Doughty, who lives in the Kent seaside town.

Another of the sisters is Mrs. W. F. Mitchell, of Westfield Road, Beckenham, who said that the last meeting of herself and her nine sisters took place 29 years ago at their father's funeral.

The eldest is now 78, and the average age is 63 years. One of the sisters is a widow, two have been married twice, and three are spinsters.

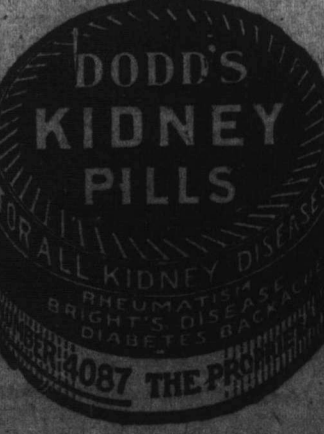

Five live at Margate, and the others at Beckenham, Brockley, Westcliff, Deal and Torquay.

Organism of Empire

London Times: The Empire is no mere mass of States no system of sister nations even, knit together by the golden link of the Crown; it is this, but it is much more. It is a living thing, and, like all things that live, it must grow or it may decay. The expansion of physical control over the forces of Nature accelerates the process, but accelerates it indifferently toward one or towards the other of its predestined ends. It is for us, for each successive generation, to get before our minds what that end is to be and to labor for it with our whole strength in our day. The choice must be clear and resolute; the labor un-aided and whole-hearted. So only are high ends attained and never has a higher earthly end been placed before the sons of men than the maintenance and the ceaseless betterment of this Empire and of the ideals it comprehends.

Girl's Farewell Message

NEW YORK, May 31 (Can. Press)—"Please take care of the dogs."
This eloquent line of loneliness and despair was the farewell message of Mary Coglan to her mother and father. Police found her dead from gas in her apartment at No. 24, West 91st Street, when neighbors gave the alarm after smelling gas.

Who her parents are or what her history the police were unable to learn. She was remarkably pretty. Two men who refused to give their names called after police took charge and were surprised to learn she was dead.

According to information from the callers, she was the widow of a soldier who was killed in the war, and the immediate cause of her suicide

THE WIDOW'S REWARD.

"And to think we were speaking the other day of a very fine family of four children brought up by a mother who was widowed before the last one was born."

"Only his little life insurance had died," said one of the group. "Look at Mary M. and her children," said another. "She had twelve thousand pounds and managed to send them all through school and then to college."

"Did you ever see better brought up children than Mrs. M.'s? I know she has a hard time to come, but they're so nice mannered and so helpful and ambitious."

"Widows' Children Turn Out Well." Really seems as if widows' children always turn out well.

And at the same time the children have a deeper sense of responsibility than the average child. The average child expects to be cared for and indulged for as long a period as its family's social standing in society makes customary; through grammar school, through high school, or through college. But the widow's child knows that he must do what he can as soon as he can, and his character develops accordingly.

One of the widow's rewards, I think, is that her children generally do have more gratitude and appreciation than the average child. They shared in the anxiety and the struggle; and they have more realization of what has been done for them, than the child with two parents; hence they have more wish to make it up to her.

They Send Her Abroad.

I know one dear, old lady who has just gone abroad for the second time, but there by the united efforts of the four sons whom she brought up and educated by unremitting thrift and hard work after their father's death. I doubt if they would ever have thought of making such a return if they had had two parents instead of one, to thank for their bringing up. It must be one of the most staggering blows that fate can deal to be deprived of a beloved husband and father

I could not lift anything heavy, and a little extra work some days would put me in bed. A friend had told me to try Lydia E. Hints for Your Home Stored silver will not tarnish if a piece of camphor is put away with it. If mustard is mixed with milk instead of water, the spoon will not be blackened.

Never leave a spoon in the saucepan when you want its contents to boil quickly.

If the onion flavour in soap proves too strong, add a turnip and boil a little longer.

Run a piece of stale bread through the mangle machine if fat or anything greasy has been mangled.

A spoonful of mustard added to the washing-up water will remove the smell of fish from cutlery and crockery.

To remove excess of fat from soap, draw the pan away from the fire and put in a little cold water; the grease comes to the top, and can be skimmed off.

Brass curtain poles should be rubbed once a fortnight with a cloth dampened with paraffin or machine oil, and the rings will slide smoothly when the curtains are drawn.

To freshen a stale cake, put it in a pudding basin in a steamer, cover the top with a lid or plate, and steam for half an hour, when the cake will be like one newly baked.

A teaspoonful of salt and a dessert-spoonful of lemon juice answer the same purpose as salts of lemon for removing iron rust from linen. This mixture is not a poison, and will not prove injurious to the linen.

To prevent a pottery flower bowl or vase marking the table on which it stands, warm the pottery with hot water and wipe dry. Pour in a few spoonfuls of melted paraffin wax and turn the article about until the interior is cooked. It will then be water-proof.

Something Like a Marathon

Could our modern pedestrians tackle jobs as stiff as those which made their predecessors famous? One feat of other days, at any rate, was accomplished by Captain Barclay Alford—better known as Captain Barclay—who died seventy years ago is likely to find few imitators in our own time.

Barclay first showed his prowess by walking, "fair toe and heel," six miles in an hour. He was then only fifteen. In 1891, when twenty-two, he walked ninety miles in twenty-one and a half successive hours, for a bet of five thousand guineas.

His great feat was accomplished when, some years later, $100,000 was staked upon his ability to walk one thousand miles in one thousand successive hours. This task had been undertaken previously by many pedestrians, but all the attempts had ended in failure, the exhaustion of the periods of repose constituting an apparently insuperable difficulty. Barclay found the strain severe, and often had to be lifted after resting, but he completed the task successfully. Nine days later he left Britain on foreign service.

There are many people who never use any toilet soap but Ivory and find this the most economical and satisfactory soap to use.

Grand Falls Appreciates Sergeant's Memorial Fund

VISIT OF LOCAL THEATRICALS.

Most of our expectations fall short of their realization. But in the case of Mr. Hutton's troupe our anticipations were justified to an extent that exceeded even the most sanguine. Friday, May 23rd, the day of their arrival, "Able's Irish Rose" was staged, and repeated on Tuesday following, "The Chinese Puzzle" being performed on Saturday and Monday.

It is no exaggeration to say that all four events far outshone the best professional and amateur productions that have ever been seen on our boards. It may have been thought that the two plays being different would have appealed to two groups of different tastes, but the audiences were practically identical each time, and showed enthusiastic enjoyment and appreciation. It is needless for us to go into details of the plays as they are well known to your readers, but as for the individual performers it is difficult to know where to begin. The almost perfect rendition depended on the punctilious correctness of the details and little touches as much as on the splendid histrionic efforts of the leads, and the exact mechanical effects of proper entrances and exit indicated the most painstaking attention on the part of the members of the troupe, and a striking monument of the art and ability of the talented producer, Mr. C. Hutton.

In the first performance all deserve the highest praise, and no one seemed to be even the slightest bit at variance with the character of his part. We thought that Mr. Wallace and Mrs. Hutton played well together. Mr. Channing was excellent, while Mr. Dobbin and Miss Kavanagh sustained their roles in the same high style. Dr. Howlett made a very fine Irish father and gave an interpretation of the character that was a very welcome change from the usually accepted stage portrayal (or we should say libel) of the part.

Mr. King and Mr. Jeans, as the Rabbi and Father Whelan also are to be congratulated.

"The Chinese Puzzle" of course was an entirely different kind of play. Naturally the whole plot is built around the characters of Naomi Melsham the Marquis Chi Lung, and they were the dominating personages during the whole four acts. While all contributed wonderfully to the success of the entire effect, and each to the fullest possible in his part, yet we will hope to be pardoned in stressing these two performers. As an emotional actress Miss Keegan has given us an example of her powers that has never been approached in Grand Falls, while the unemotional and studiously placid demeanour of Dr. Howlett in the Marquis whilst a tribute to his skill acted as a most effective foil to the more open and warmer temperament of the accident.

Armand de Rochechouart lost nothing in the hands of Mr. Wallace, and he was the ebullient and impressive Frenchman to the life. Mr. King gave a most creditable interpretation of his role, as also did Messrs. Dobbin and Jeans.

Mrs. Hutton in Lady de la Hays was all that could be desired and her facility in adopting the proper mood was greatly admired. Mrs. Melsham was the personification of the mercenary and adventurer, and must have been difficult to sustain; Miss Ryan in this earned the praise of the audience in no small degree. Miss Hutton and Miss Kavanagh also gained the approbation of all, and Mr. Hutton vividly suggested the courtly gentleman who had an unpleasant duty to perform.

During the entre-actes various vocal numbers were rendered and were greatly enjoyed. Miss Ryan's voice compelled the tribute of everyone's admiration, and Miss Hutton's sweet singing and fairlike dances captured the esteem of her listeners. Several recitations were given by Miss Keegan, and were beautifully delivered and keenly enjoyed. Mr. Bulley's music on the French horn, well, we can't gild the lily.

The ensemble created a profound impression on the minds and hearts of the Grand Falls public. We will not soon forget the great treat that was given us. Neither can we express how much it was enjoyed. We hope that the troupe will go on to further triumphs, and that they will not forget that Grand Falls will always welcome them, and will live now for the next opportunity of paying their homage to the art that enthralled them and to the friends that delighted them.

Mr. M. P. Gibbs Writes

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir,—I notice that in yesterday's issue of your paper there is printed an editorial entitled "Dastardly Attempt to Incite a Riot," with the following quotation from an editorial printed in your paper of Friday last:—"Desperate people will perform desperate deeds, and at the present time, none are more desperate than Coaker, Mosell, Hickman, Gibbs and Collishaw."

There can be no doubt from the tenor of the editorial and the veiled insinuations made, that it was the intention of the Editor to link my name with the circular to which the article refers.

As I neither inspired nor was I aware either directly or indirectly of the contents of or the issuing of the circular, I have to request a retraction in so far as it affects me, also, that you give this denial the same publicity as was given to the article in question. A prompt reply is requested.

Yours truly,
M. P. GIBBS.

Some Modern Crusoes

Census returns recently issued in Great Britain show a surprising number of instances of people who are apparently content to live Crusoe-like lives on lonely islands.

Little Papa, in the Shetlands, for example, has only one inhabitant, while Havergate Island, off East Suffolk, has a total population of two-both men.

A man and his wife live alone on a hand of Holm in Grimsby, in the Orkneys, while on Hunda, south of Kirkwall, there are three people, and seven on Copinshay.

There are tiny groups of male and female Crusoes scattered throughout the world. On Peling Island, in the Straits Settlement, are a handful of people who, like their Irish colleagues, live a tax-free life.

When Peling first defied the tax collector an attempt was made to enforce payment, and H.M. gunboat Wasp was sent to persuade the islanders to hand over their share of the Empire's expenses, but the boat was wrecked and all hands were lost. Since then the authorities have left the place alone.
