England—The Power Wielded by Women in British Politics.

PLEASANTIES OF ELECTION CARTOONING.

We often hear from the Unionists of the violence and grossness of Nationalist cartoons. Such things are another instance, we are told, of that lack of restraint in the Irish character which renders home rule impracticable. But what of this cartoon put out by the Tories at Salisbury, in which Mr. Gladstone is being dragged down to hell by the devil? Here is the vile thing, which we print more in sorrow than in anger.—[Full Mail Gazette.]

The poetry inscribed on the wall reads as follows:

Oh, the devil's got hold of the wire
And is dragging G. O. M. to the fire,
For home rule's a hell-burn,
And give G. O. M. his last turn.
Oh, the devil's got hold of the wire,
"SHAKESPEARE UP TO DATE."

A very clever, satirical, dramatic, political sketch is published in Labourer's Truth. It is entitled "Shakespeare up to date—Two Richards in the Field." The scene is the Unionist Encampment in Ballot-box Field, Tynes, the eve of battle. The Marquis of Salisbury and his followers enter their tents. The Marquis hears a noise outside and exclaims: "That lark! what noise is that?" Pursuant to his liege, it is the Brommager encamped hard by; they loudly shout: "A Joseph!" Lord Salisbury: "Ugh! A Joseph! He should cry: 'A Joseph! Shall I ever have done with him?'" Next he turns to the very end: "Even in this perilous Gays his prime presence, his needling ways, his porky soliloquies, his petting airs, were hard to brook; but now—when fortune frowns and turns on me—To have him still at hand is gall and worm-wood."

The Pall Mall Gazette devotes an article to the immense indirect power wielded by women in British politics. As a woman's political organization, the Primrose League stands foremost in the world. It numbers 1,857,703, nearly half of whom are women. There are 1,400 women on the Women's Grand Council, and about 34,000 Primrose "dames" in England and Scotland. They do not speak much on platform, but they lead elections, they are able to insult, as in the case of Mrs. Stanley at North Lambeth. Canvassing, talking with wives, asking them about their homes, interesting themselves in the children, solving political difficulties as they present themselves, the minds of the husbands, and in a word, using their personal influence, are the means employed by the women.

The Women's Liberal Federation is the great counterpoise to the Primrose League. They are not quite so harmonious a body as they were before Mr. Gladstone pronounced against woman suffrage. The methods they adopt are exactly the same as those of the Primrose League. They are careful not to do anything which can even be associated with bribery. Any gifts they may have been accustomed to bestow in a private capacity are not allowed to be continued while the ladies are engaged in political work.

The Women's Liberal Unionist Association,

though numerically the smallest, has among its members many women of great prominence. There is no division of opinion or divided interests among them, and their one battle cry is "Integrity of the empire!" The association has, of course, only come into being since 1886, but for a young society, it has great influence.

A DOZEN MORE GAINS.

Associated Press Dispatch.

LONDON, July 13.—The Liberals made gains in twelve counties to-day, as follows: South Yorkshire—Formerly represented by Hon. Greville R. Vernon, Unionist. The majority of Mr. Courtney, deputy speaker in the last House of Commons, has been reduced from 1,662 to 231.

LADIES WERE LEFT.

Major-General Laurie, who formerly represented St. Albans, N. S., in the Canadian House of Commons, has been defeated in Pembroke, the Gladstonian candidate being returned.

GLADSTONE THANKS HIS SUPPORTERS. EDINBURGH, July 13.—Prior to his departure for Braemar Mr. Gladstone made an address to the Midlothian electors. He said: "I gratefully thank you that you have chosen me under circumstances of special stress and difficulty in your own county the sixth time as your representative in Parliament. It is my earnest hope not to fall behind you in the desire and effort to minister to the happiness of the three kingdoms and to the strength of the solid union of the empire."

CHIEF NEWS.

LONDON, July 13.—Cheering news for the Liberals came from the south division of Ayrshire. After the split in the Liberal party which found voice at the polls at the general elections of 1886 the Liberal Unionists elected their candidate in this district by a majority of 5 votes. Mr. Watson, the Liberal candidate, was elected by a majority of 197. This was a gain for the Liberals.

A FATAL FIGHT.

DUBLIN, July 13.—The rival political factions at Shull, county Cork, became involved in a dispute last night resolved itself into a riot. One man was killed and several were seriously injured. The police dispersed the rioters.

Summary.

DIVISION.

Up to 5 p. m. the returns show the election of 230 Tories, 211 Liberals, 35 Unionists, 42 Nationalists, 6 Parrellites. The net Liberal gain is 48.

How It Looks.

THE MASSES AGAINST THE CLASSES.

(SPECIAL TO THE ADVERTISER.)

LONDON, July 14—2 a. m.—The total returns up to 2 a. m. Thursday, July 14, show Conservatives elected 233, Liberal Unionists 35; total opponents of Irish home rule 268, Liberals 217, Anti-Parrellite Nationalists 42, Parrellites 7; total Liberals, including Labor and Irish Nationalists of both factions, 268. The Liberals have made a net gain of 49.

The results of to-day's elections were highly encouraging to the Liberal cause. The agricultural voters continued to show the utmost indifference for the feelings of the nobility and gentry. The most notable instance of the kind recorded to-day was the defeat of Viscount Weymouth, Lord Thomas Henry Thynne, eldest son of the Marquis of Bath. For over three centuries the Thynne family have lorded it over a large domain in Wilts and Somerset. It was only in late years that their absolutism began to be questioned, and now at length Hodge has actually rejected a Thynne for a comparatively obscure plebeian named Barlow. This is one of several notices served within a few days on the Conservatives that the country voters no longer recognize the lords and squires as having a prior claim on seats in Parliament.

There is now no longer any doubt of Mr.

Gladstone's success through a combination of the Liberals and the Irish and the Irish

Nationalists. It is to be remembered, however, that 136 constituents remain to be heard from in the course of the next few days, the number of members being 670, of whom 534 have been elected and the returns reported. The remainder may have surprises in store for both parties.

GORED TO DEATH BY THE BULL.

He Suddenly Turns on His Master, Who

Was Driving Him to Work.

ENGLAND, July 14.—Samuel Martin, 20 years old, was gored to death by a bull to-day. Young Martin lives on a farm on the main street, about five minutes walk from the center of the town. He and a younger brother were the chief supports of an aged father. The bull started at about 4 o'clock, and drove the father and son in front of him with lowered head. His right horn caught the man in the abdomen and ripped up through his stomach and chest, tearing a large hole in his body. The bull then tossed his victim over his head, and, turning, ran bellowing away.

The dying man staggered a few steps towards the house. Then he fell.

Martin's father witnessed the horrible going. He reached the spot, only to hear his son stammer with difficulty, "I am badly hurt." With these words he expired.

A number of children were playing in the road, which is separated from the field only by a low fence. The mad bull rushed towards them, but got fast in a ditch. The frightened children rushed up the street shouting for help. Policemen Bowlen and a number of men responded. When they reached the field the father of the victim urged them to shoot the bull. The animal seemed an easy target, caught as he was in the mire, but over 50 shots were fired before Bowlen and E. J. Lyons, the hotel-keeper, succeeded in killing him.

the election for a Saturday. The Baron met this by placarding the city with the London, Thursday, July 14.

SOME people have been kicking because Mr. Gladstone's majority in a constituency that was Conservative from time immemorial till he did battle in it was only a miserable 700 or so. It would not surprise us to find the same individuals grumbling because Hon. Edward Blake has only 2,000 votes to the good.

The raiding of opium joints in New York has, according to a local paper, brought up the question in that city once more. "Why should a man not smoke opium if he wishes to?" An opium smoker is quiet, he does not beat his wife, he makes no row on the street, nor, in the vast majority of cases, does the smoke do him any harm. Why is it that a Caucasian has a right to drink whisky and a Mongolian no right to take another nerve stimulant? This is a startling way in which to demonstrate the evil of intemperance, but it is most effective.

"No revision of the voters' lists this year," says the Montreal Star, "means that the graveyard vote will hold a balance of power at the bye-elections next spring." The dead men will not be alone, though. They will have hundreds of live associates, who, under the infamous provisions of the Franchise Act, will return from the United States and swamp the votes of genuine electors, while thousands of young Canadians, who are entitled to be on the lists, will be deprived of the opportunity of exercising their manhood rights. Is it not shameful?

SOUTH LONGFORD, for which Hon. Edward Blake will sit in the Parliament to assemble at Westminster on Aug. 4, is an important riding in the Province of Leinster, the very heart of Ireland. The soil is rich, underlaid by limestone and clay lead. There are valuable ores of iron and lead, but unwrought. Grazing farms are numerous and large quantities of butter are made. Linens and woollens are manufactured. Longford, the capital, with a population of 5,000, is 68 miles by railway from Dublin. The population is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic.

The town of Hyattsville has the own of all taxes on improvements, and will collect its civic revenues from land values only. An impetus to the building trade has already been given. Speculators have held land without improvements, while the neighboring owners built and added to the value of the vacant lots. Under the new system this will not be encouraged. The vacant lot owner will have to turn his property to account, or sell it to some one who will, or he will lose by the transaction. In Ottawa, Ex-Mayor McDougall and City Assessor Pratt favor this system, and the Board of Trade have received a favorable report on it. In all probability, the issue will be raised in the next municipal elections. There is this to be said in favor of the George system, its supporters have the courage of their convictions; they are aided by opponents who, in many cases, either ignorantly or by design, misrepresent the single tax on land values, only to be brought into humiliation when an honest investigator reads and thinks for himself. "Investigate!" is the watchword of the single tax men.

IN REPLY to an American correspondent, Prince Bismarck has talked quite freely about his recent severe criticism of the Emperor William. Many people outside of Germany have believed that Bismarck's language was so strongly condemnatory of the War Lord and his policy, and so calculated to cause dissatisfaction with his regime, that the Emperor would not fail to take action. Bismarck, however, says he has no fear; he knows, he asserts, that the German people and the German language are higher than the Emperor. This language, in itself, is, no doubt, viewed as treasonable by those who concede the Emperor's dictum that the first duty of the subject is to blindly obey the Emperor whithersoever he leadeth. Bismarck may not have thought of it, but he, one of the worst autocrats of them all while he was the right-hand man of the present Emperor's grandfather, has given an enormous impetus to democratic principles within the empire. He has a peculiar way of making his excuses for talking too frankly. "I am," he says, "criticized because I have spoken my mind, but my critics seem to forget or ignore the fact that it has always been my custom to speak frankly. And their objections extend to the manner in which I have expressed myself. Here, too, I can only regret the need of wording, but I have ever lived up to that line from our great Helms—you remember the words: 'Many I have scratched and not a few have been bitten by me. No, I never was a lamb.'"

HON. EDWARD BLAKE'S ELECTION.

The election of Hon. Edward Blake as M. P. for South Longford, by the enormous majority of 2,000, is an event fraught with the utmost importance, not only to Canadians, but to the people of Ireland and Great Britain as well.

It may be, let us hope it will be, that the hour of the distinguished Canadian statesman has come, and that in his new sphere he will be granted the opportunity to serve the land of his forefathers and advance the interest of the entire English-speaking world in such a manner as shall bring satisfaction to himself and pleasure to his hosts of admirers on both sides of the Atlantic.

Mr. Blake enters the British Parliament at a critical time. No matter how large the majority Mr. Gladstone may have behind him when the new Parliament assembles on Aug. 4, it is certain that the task which he has set before him cannot be completed without the exercise of the greatest prudence and, it may be, of another appeal to the electorate as a result of the determination of the House of Lords to thwart the wishes of the electorate as expressed at the polls.

This is a situation which will call for the exercise of wisdom, prudence, and judgment on the part of the Grand Old Man and his Parliamentary adherents. If there is one man who can give effective aid in the bringing to fruition of Gladstone's last great Parliamentary work that man is Edward Blake. The great question to be settled once and for all is whether Ireland shall or shall not have local self-government such as we in Ontario possess. The people at the polls have decided that the island shall be entrusted to manage her own local affairs, imperial business being left to the Parliament at Westminster. The details of the measure must be worked out by the Liberal statesmen before the act is presented to Parliament. Gladstone doubtless has the bill in skeleton. It must be perfected. Unnecessary criticism must be disarmed. The rights of all parties must be conserved. In this work the experience which Edward Blake has passed through in the Dominion will be of immense service to the great Liberal leader. Mr. Blake knows probably better than any other statesman now living the strength and the weakness of the system under which we now live, a modified form of which it is the intention to introduce in Ireland, and, if Mr. Blake has his way, in England and Scotland as well.

The experience of this distinguished Canadian exemplifies the truism that no work, however arduous, undertaken for the welfare of one's fellows is ever entirely fruitless. The harvest, though late, will come some time to the man of resource. For years Mr. Blake fought the battles of what he believed to be right, and was beaten despite the merits of his cause, by the most baneful of influences. No doubt there were many who thought that the failure to attain power meant a total loss to the honorable gentleman. That was far from being the case, and we believe that his career in the greatest representative body of the world will bear out our contention. His political schooling in Canada was the very thing necessary to his usefulness in his larger sphere.

WEALTH IN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.

The Census Office at Washington has completed a provisional estimate of the wealth of the United States, and the New York Sun makes an interesting comparison between it and the statistics of British progress compiled by Mr. Giffen, the English statistician. It may be premised that for 1890, as for 1880, the basis of the computation made by the United States census takers is the value assessed in the several States for taxation, which, except in Massachusetts, is very much below the true value. In 1880 the census office undertook to correct the assessed values, which made the wealth of the United States only $16,902,000,000, and substituted the much larger figures, $45,642,000,000. If the same correction factor is applied to the returns for 1890, the true value of all property represented in the census of the United States will be not $24,651,000,000, as reported, but $63,648,000,000. Even the latter estimate falls far short of the truth, because in about half of the United States railways are not included in the property taken account of by the census.

In the absence of exhaustive data, for the purpose of comparison it may be assumed that $63,648,000,000 represents the aggregate wealth of the United States. Now in 1885 Mr. Giffen entered into an elaborate series of calculations, in pursuance of which he fixed the wealth of the United Kingdom at $50,000,000,000, all railways and every other species of property being included. It follows that of the two countries the United States is the richer by more than $13,000,000,000. The excess in favor of the States is really greater, because the value of the railways in some of the States is not reckoned. As Great Britain is universally acknowledged to be richer than any other European State, it is contended that the people of the United States are thus the richest in the world. This is to say, their aggregate wealth is greater; but if we accept provisionally the figures $63,648,000,000 as correct, the United States wealth per head of population is less than that of the United Kingdom. Mr. Giffen reckoned that in the latter country at the date of his computations (1885) the divisible share of each person in the national wealth was $1,350, whereas about $1,000 would be the divisible share of each person in the United States. It should be further noted that according to Mr. Giffen the wealth of the United Kingdom increased by $130 per head in the ten years preceding 1885, while in the decade between the two last censuses the wealth of the United States increased at exactly the same rate.

When it is considered that Great Britain is an old country, with comparatively few natural resources, and the United States is a new land, possessing almost unbounded capabilities for wealth-getting, and a climate enabling the people to profitably produce almost any product to be found the world over, the growth of the motherland cannot but be regarded as satisfactory. In both countries, however, legislators have still need to apply themselves to an honest consideration of the problem of whether or not the laws are so operated that the wealth is fairly shared. There is plenty of work for the social and economical reformer before an ideal condition of society can be reached.

THE BURIED INDICTMENT.

The Toronto Week, an independent Conservative journal, refers to the forthcoming "investigation" of the embezzled charges against Sir Adolphe Caron as "a sham trial," and adds:

"Assume Sir Richard Cartwright's charges to be true, or to have a substantial basis of truth, and what follows? That for the last ten years the Government of Canada has been sustained and its party majorities secured by a system of organized fraud; that the public funds have been systematically used in subsidizing railways, erecting public buildings and other public works, not with reference solely to the needs of the country, but to promote the interests of the party in power; that in return for legislative and departmental favors conferred at the public expense, railway promoters, manufacturers and contractors have contributed large sums of money which have been used by the Government or its agents in bribing electors; that the constituencies have been outrageously 'gerrymandered' for the purpose of creating artificial Government majorities; that a Franchise Act has been passed and manipulated for the same purpose; that investigations demanded by the Opposition for the purpose of unveiling specific cases of corruption have been refused or turned aside by ineffective substitutes; and that, as a result of the persistent and systematic use of these and similar corrupt methods, the public conscience has become so deadened and debauched that the clearest evidence of the grossest corruption no longer avails to arouse popular indignation."

Mr. Edgar has solemnly affirmed that he can prove these charges to be true; he has expressed his readiness to furnish conclusive evidence to that effect; and the answer of the Ottawa authorities is that under no circumstances will he have the opportunity. Would not men conscious of their innocence gladly agree to an investigation? Mr. Laurier, when accused by innuendo of being a party to corrupt deals in Quebec Province, unreservedly offered to go before a committee named by his enemies. Sir John Thompson and Sir Adolphe Caron refused to have the charges made against them the last named investigated even by their friends. The public can draw their own conclusions.

OPINION: "ALL SORTS."

CANADA'S ALARMING DEBT.

(Toronto News, Conservative.)

In three years the interest charge on the public debt of the United States has been reduced from $24,500,000 to less than $25,000,000. To-day the republic, with over twelve times our population, is paying only a little more than double the sum that Canada is paying as interest on the national debt.

Under these circumstances it was little less than criminal to add to the Dominion's indebtedness by throwing away $5,000,000 in subsidies to railways that are mainly intended as a reward for constituencies that have returned supporters of the Government.

STAND BY THE STEAL.

(Guelph Mercury.)

There is to be no revision of the Dominion Franchise Act this year, and, in spite of an amendment by the Opposition, the bogus names on the list are to be retained. It is perhaps as well to have the whole discreditable, deplorable proceedings of that London steal stand out in all their dishonor, unredeemed by a single righteous act on the part of the Government.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER'S BEAUTIFUL SCHEME.

(London Economist.)

Sir Charles decried at great length upon the wheat-growing capacity of Canada, and on the wonderful agricultural development which the Dominion is destined to accomplish in the near future. But without stopping to inquire whether his glowing visions are or are not likely to be realized, we would suggest that on his own showing the realization is not in any way dependent upon the adoption of the policy he was seeking to support. That policy is based upon the assumption that, say, the Canadian wheat-growers would find a more profitable market for their produce here if foreign wheat were taxed than they find now when they have to compete on equal terms with foreign producers, and that the higher prices thus obtained would stimulate them to increased production. But this according to Sir Charles Tupper, is exactly what will not happen. "It seems impossible to doubt," he is reported to have said, "the practicability of producing within the borders of the empire all the food products required by Great Britain, and it is equally obvious that the competition between India, Australasia and Canada may be safely relied upon to prevent an increase in the cost of such commodities." In other words, as far as Canadian trade is concerned, the policy of fiscal discrimination which the league advocates would simply leave things as they are. The Canadians would derive no advantage from it, if, as Sir Charles Tupper says, the cost of wheat, grain, wheat, and other food products, to be long in a position to supply us with all the food products we require; and, if that be so, why should we in the meantime quarrel with all our foreign customers, and expose all our foreign trade to the danger of fiscal reprisals in order to attain an end that will inevitably come of itself? It is hardly necessary to say that we are not endorsing Sir Charles Tupper's arguments. Taking them as they are put, however, it is not difficult to see how contradictory and self-destructive they are.

The Pope is in excellent health.

In the House of Representatives the Free Silver Bill, which passed the Senate, was practically shelved by a vote of 136 to 129.

I Had Colic

Colic swellings in the neck since I was 10 years old; am now 52. I used Hood's Sarsaparilla recently and the swelling has entirely disappeared. It has been very troublesome. When I began I was feeling so discouraged with the colic and rheumatism I felt that I was never to be cured. When I began I was feeling so discouraged with the colic and rheumatism I felt that I was never to be cured.

The Baltimore National League team may be transferred to Indianapolis.

The attendance at Baltimore has been light, and President Von der Horst is tired of going down into his pocket to pay salaries.

Manager Kuntzsch of the Syracuse Stars has signed Petros, late of the Buffalo.

Petros will cover second base and Sales third base. Doyle is playing a great game at short. Miller will probably never again wear a Star uniform.

CURLING.

The 28th annual convention of the Grand National Curling Club of America was held at Utica, N. Y., on Wednesday.

Robert Nicholson, of St. Andrew's Club, New York, was elected president.

CRICKET.

A novel cricket match is to take place on Saturday between the Winnipeg Cricket Club representing the Government and the Opposition.

Premier Greenway and Mr. Roblin, leader of the Opposition, have been asked to umpire.

TORONTO VS. LONDON ASYLUM.

Toronto, July 13.—The asylum played to-day on the charity lawn resulted in a victory for the home team by 26 runs.

There was perfect weather and a large crowd of spectators. The visitors played East Toronto to-morrow and Rosedale Friday.

ATHLETICS.

George Dixon has been matched to fight Johnny Murphy, of Boston, at bantam weight for $2,500 a side and a purse of $7,500 at the California Athletic Club some time in August.

Articles of agreement for a glove contest between John Griffin, of Braintree, Mass., and Jimmie Layne, of New York, were signed on Wednesday. The purse is to be $2,500, of which the winner gets $2,000.

THE FIRE RECORD.

St. John, N. B., July 13.—The steamer St. Pierre, from St. Pierre, reports there was a disastrous fire at St. Pierre last Thursday, eight dwelling houses and several small shops being burned, causing about $30,000 damages. The buildings were situated in the heart of the city.

The State Capital at Albany has cost up to date about $20,000,000.

It doesn't make a small man any bigger to lift him up.

The devil loves to sit down and look at people who worry.

Conditions once firmly set are generally unchangeable, no matter what the object may be. To the fact the success of Mr. McKay & Co., of this city, is largely due. Those who have tried their "McKay" cigars never forsake them, and they retain all their old customers, and by the reputation only of the goods add new ones to the roll. For excellence the Norma at 10 cents is representative.

Unrivaled Service to Old Orchard Beach.

The special arrangements made by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the Old Orchard Beach service have met with immense approval. The special through cars leaving Toronto at 9 o'clock p.m. on Tuesday and Friday evening are duplicates in elegance and comfort of those on the renowned Montreal service. The service is so arranged as to afford a daylight view of the magnificent White Mountain scenery.

FEMININE FOLLY.

How Women of Various Nations Dress Themselves.

The ladies of Arabia stain their fingers and toes red and their lips blue. In Persia they paint a black streak around their eyes and ornament their faces with representations of various figures.

The Japanese women adopt the singular method of gliding their teeth, and those of the Indians paint them red. In some parts of India the pearl of the teeth must be lightening of the left hand of an infant at the crown, but the Sumatran mother carefully datuses the nose of her daughter.

The modern Persians have a strong aversion of red hair. The Turks, on the contrary, are warm admirers of it. In China small, round eyes are liked. But the great beauty of a Chinese lady is in her feet.

An African lady must have small eyes, thick lips, a large flat nose and a skin beautifully black. In New Guinea the nose is perforated and a large piece of wood or bone inserted. On the northwest coast of America an incision more than two inches long is made in the lower lip and then filled with a wooded plug.

In America women compress their figures into queer shapes by means of straight waistcoats. Some of them hang by their hands from a trapeze while a servant-maid draws the cords of the waistcoat as tight as possible. American women often faint after undergoing this process, and sometimes die.

TORONTO TOPICS.

Small Pills. Small Dose. Small Price.

Adam Graeme, of Mossray.

By Mrs. Oliphant.

But sauntering along the Calton Hill now, alone, to dream over the old town in its antique grace and beauty, made me sick at heart. How Murray was one of those rare spirits who does not need to be continually talking to a stranger who observed our few words might have taken us for very different companions, but this was what we were, the closest, closest, brotherhood.

When Charlie was with us, we were talkative enough, for there a foreign element was introduced, but we were too much on our guard when alone. And when from these silent walks we emerged into the bustle and light of the street below, and throwing off the charm, began to be as loud as our neighbors, we were drawn closer by these communings.

Never finding in this world did I appropriate and feel mine so entirely as I did in the dim hillside where my silence was unshared, where there was no one to dream beside me as I dreamed, or to feel as I felt, became painful to my solitary cry. How went not return to Edinburgh after Hew went away. I had lost my charm for me. I remained alone at Mossray.

I was then a man. I had nearly reached my majority, and having perhaps exaggerated the notions of what became my place and position in respect to the tenants and cottages around me, I began to better myself in the district, allotted to me by Providence. I had always been inclined to the contemplative, but I am not, and with all the proud hopes and ambitions of youth to buoy me up, I had lost my charm for me. I remained alone at Mossray.

Lucy Murray had grown into a young woman; graceful and grave, with lines of thought upon her forehead, printed perhaps too deeply for one so young. That slender ring upon her finger was Charlie's gift, and contains in its small inclosure one of the loveliest of his sunny hair, which cling so lovingly about his temples and become them so well; for their engagement is a grave matter now, acknowledged and known. And yet I fancy they dwell long with her own thoughts, and in solitude, and Charlie, with his whole soul, has embarked on the busy sea of life, but the contrast is not anything new when they are together, and Lucy is more than ever a sister to me.

The bright face at Greensaw, which, with all its happy changes, has been the angel of my boyhood dream for years, is brighter now in the grace of early womanhood than ever before. I fancy her inmate of some pure and holy atmosphere, the star of some loftier sky. I forget when I saw her last, but that there it is in the world—I become heterodox in my very faith—for evil has no share in Lillias.

The name echoes in my ear with a ring of silver music. The beautiful and pure of all ages shed their glory about her, and claim my devoted homage. The Rachel of yonder palace of Syria, the Mary, blessed among women, the Uta, the Desdemona of our own land. Their shadow is upon her in all places; the very neighbors, common-place they are, speak low, I fancy, when they speak of her. I forgive them the familiarity for the sake of the gracious name, for the stately flower in its royal purity symbolizes my ideal well, and my singular grace when they are together, and Lucy is more than ever a sister to me.

The beautiful time when every foundation stood fast, and that was, was true and constant, and of kin to the pure heavens. Yet Lillias was only the daughter of Mr. Johnstone of Greensaw, who had little honor or standing beyond the bounds of Fendie. Murray's shadow would have grieved the utmost thunder of his anathema upon the adjacent lands of families, who had not hitherto condescended to notice him. But Lillias was shy of Lucy, and seemed, to my chagrin, indifferent to her visit; so I had to console myself with a transitory belief that Lillias felt proudly the intimation of those artificial barriers of society, and was sensible of wrong done to her native dignity by the false rule which made the laird's daughter of Murray's a greater person than she, and by Lucy's quiet smile and gentle word of consolation. "By and by, Adam—we will be better friends, by and by."

Yes—there was no landed family of one which could boast a line so long and so unbroken as that of Mossray. The incomprehensible on the estate had gradually melted away during my frugal minority. I was able to maintain appropriately the position I had inherited. Only this one extra member of rank did Lillias want, and I had it, to lay it at her feet—the name itself acquired new honor and dignity, when my heart beat to anticipate the advent of a new lady of Mossray, who should eclipse all who went before.

I greatly affected Mr. Johnstone's company then. He was a shrewd man, if not refined one; and about he did not possess that fearful command of words which strikes one with utter panic when one comes to the beginning of a speech of his follow craftsman the "Wanderer" of Wordsworth, he yet could manage to keep up a conversation tolerably well, by help of an occasional monosyllable from the other interlocutor—we became greater friends. He gave me counsel about the management of my lands; he told me that Matthew Irving of Friesford, whose tack was nearly out, had been holding his farm for some years past nearly rent-free, so greatly had the land increased in value, since his father got the lease. He talked to me of foreign wars and home politics—I listened in happy unconsciousness feeling only that I was concluding the goodwill of the father of Lillias, and advancing slowly to my aim.

Mr. Johnstone was too shrewd a man not to perceive by and by what brought me on often, haughty and absorbed, into that corner of his parlor. The good man evidently believed at first that I sought the benefit and enlightenment of his conversation, and through a flood of random answers, and unhappy lack of comprehension on my part, of arguments which I never heard, his eyes were opened. He was by no means displeased, I fancy, that I was "Mossray" at last, my income was good, my prospects better. I was altogether eligible for a son-in-law.

And by and by, I thought I discovered that the Fendie young ladies, who bore Lillias company sometimes, looked at her with wicked secret laughs and whisperings when I entered the room. Could Lillias guess that I could not tell? I was too self-conscious to be at ease with her, and she had always been shy to me.

And matters remained in this uncertain state for a considerable time. I became of age. Murray's shadow's gruffly resigned, as he had gruffly undertaken, the guardianship of myself and my possessions. His house grew more and more desolate as I fancied, and Lucy grew more thoughtful every day. She was quite alone, and we used to walk together sometimes on the old terrace in silent sympathy, thinking of the future. He had reached his destination safely, and entered with cheerfulness (as he told us) into the shadow of his office; but the loss of him cast a shadow over the house of his fathers.

CHAPTER IX.
I leaned my back upon an alk.
I thought it was a trusty tree,
But first it bowed, and then it broke,
And see did my true love to me.

Our three students, Charlie, Walter, and Edward, at length completed their studies, and entered upon the duties of their respective professions. Charlie got his first brief from an old friend of the family, and there actually was a report of his speech on the case, by no means an important one, but very interesting, and very momentous to us, in one of the Edinburgh papers. It was something about a quarry, I think, though what about it, I cannot very well remember. I had just been up to Murray's with the paper. It was a bright day of early summer, and Charlie himself was to be with us in a week; a visit to which we had long looked forward, and of which Lucy and I had more than once spoken.

I found Lucy in her own little parlor, at the low window which opened to the terrace. The willows were weeping their tears, and the rain was falling, and in spite of the May sunshine over all, and the universal joy without, there was a look of sadness here. I involuntarily restrained my steps, and I reached the window, and Lucy looked up from her usual kindly and gentle smile.

"Look here Lucy! I have brought you news," said I, "news worth listening to. Come, don't read him in a dull room this May day. Come out into the sunshine and read them here."

Lucy rose eagerly.
"What is it?" she asked.
"She paused, a wavering painful color came upon her cheek, and her fingers played nervously with the work she had laid down. Lucy, you do not think I could tell you anything but good news to-day. Come out and read Charlie's first speech. His pleadings on his first brief, you know—you heard all about that."

AN ELEPHANT ON THEIR HANDS,

And Been Traveling in Style, and Objected to a Small Circus Show.

Reason, July 13.—The manager of a small circus show traveling in this section purchased a young and very vicious elephant from the Forepaugh menagerie the other day, and the transfer took place at Pittsfield, a small town on the railroad west of Bangor. It was a lively transfer. The elephant objected to leaving his companions, and, breaking away from his keepers, started to run amuck through the town. His bellowing awoke the sleeping villagers.

He ruined gardens, ripped down shop awnings and demolished things generally, and it was found necessary to send men mounted upon other elephants in pursuit. After a long chase the beast was captured and loaded upon a car.

When the car reached Bangor he refused to disembark, severely injuring several men and partially wrecking his conveyance. The purchasers don't know what to do with the beast now they have got him and paid for him, and the only man who can manage him is hundreds of miles away.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

Short Session of the Board of Health—Complaints from the Medical Health Officer.

At a meeting of the Board of Health held yesterday afternoon Ald. J. Heaman (chairman), Hannah, Parnell, Dr. Hutchinson, Dr. Gardiner, C. H. Ivey, Inspector Bell and Secretary Bell were present. Cholera is reported to be coming westward, and the inspector was instructed to have all outhouses cleaned by Aug. 15.

The board decided not to pay an account from the chief of police for $74.25 for services of P. C. Lumby while the house-to-house inspection was in progress.

The engineer and medical health officer recommended that the old houses at 191; 193 and 195 Dundas street be torn down, as they are in an unsanitary condition and also unsafe. Their suggestion will be acted upon, and the trustees of the Ferris estate will be communicated with regarding the condition.

The attention of the board was called to the dirty condition of a lane running from York street to King at the rear of the Grigg House. The medical health officer explained that such a place must be only that—perhaps there was something more; but a sadder decay seemed to be gathering over it every time I visited Murray's house.
