POETRY.

On the Mountain's Top.

At the mountain's foot lay my pathway,
Never toward the top,
And my life was so full of labor,
I had no time to stop—
And climb to the mount's fair summit;
Thro' often with longing eyes,
I followed the narrow pathway
Leading upward toward the skies.

Oh the top grew the laurel and bay tree,
With which heroes and poets are crowned.

And I—I was only a plodder,
With life's commonest things around,
But each day as I went to my labor,
Long the path at the mountain's base,
That path leading up to the summit
I was ever before my face.

Then there woke in my heart a something,
I never had known before,
With wings that wildly fluttered,
And my soul grew fretted and sore,
What was meant by the wings that fluttered?

I knew not and could not know,
But I climbed the narrow pathway
Where the laurel and bay tree grew.

And the wings they seemed to lift me,
Without my will or choice,
Till I stood on the mount's fair summit
Alone with a mighty voice;
The voice spoke in me, and thine' me,
And broke out in rapturous song,
And new mid laurel and bay trees,
I am singing the whole day long.

SELECT STORY.

THE DIAMOND CUTTER.

"He's an impostor," said Mrs Bagley, "that's what he is! I don't take no second sight to find that out!"

"He's not!" said Miss Dodd. "Do you think there is no truth in physiognomy?"

"It's an old dodge," said Mrs Bagley, quivering with indignation, until every fold in her fat double chin shook again. "I've often read of it in the papers, and I should think, Martha Dodd, that you would be enough—"

"Not so old as you be!" cried Miss Dodd. "If you were to see that sharp-eyed, good-looking young man yet, Jane Bagley!"

"Well, well," said Mrs Bagley, retreating before this well-organized attack, "that ain't nothing to signify!"

"No," said Miss Dodd, magnanimously. "Age is neither here nor there. What I mean is that he's got a good face."

"So much of it as ain't covered by that mop of heathenish beard," said Mrs Bagley.

"And the garden needed a half day's work awful bad, and fifty cents and a meal of victuals won't break neither of us," went on Miss Dodd.

"Oh, if you've a mind to put it that way!" said her sister.

And so the matter was settled.

"Give it to him on the barn-door step," Mrs Bagley urged. "In a tin pletter. And let him stir his coffee with a stick. I won't risk Grandmother Dodd's fiddle-stemmed spoon with no tramps. And tell him not to be all day eatin' it. 'Time's money, when you're payin' for it,' Bagley used to say."

Miss Dodd, however, piled a liberal ration of cold fried chicken, cucumber pickles, home-baked bread and sweet yellow butter on the tin pie-dish and sweetened the coffee liberally before she carried it out to the old man with the objectionable beard, the dusty shoes and the well-worn clothing, who was humbly waiting in the shadow of the old apple tree by the barn.

"He looks just exactly like one of them old pictures of apostles in the family Bible," said Miss Dodd, as she came back with the empty pletter and cup.

Mrs Bagley rolled her eyes upward.

"My goodness me, Martha," said she, "if that ain't up and down blasphemous, I dunno what it is!"

"I didn't mean it that way," said Miss Dodd. "But he has a mild eye, and he thanked me as pleasant as a basket of chips. And just look at the way he pulls' them frost bitten lima beans out of the ground!"

"I hope he won't carry our best spade and rake away with him," sighed Mrs Bagley.

"Guess there's no danger of that," cheerfully spoke Miss Dodd. "He's a diamond cutter."

"What?" said Mrs Bagley.

"By trade," said Miss Dodd. "That's what he told me, anyhow. It was pretty hard work to understand what he said, but I made out somehow."

"K. D. C. is Guaranteed To Cure DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, or Money Refunded.

"Where does he carry his diamonds?" gasped Mrs Bagley.

"Lal! he don't cut diamonds for himself," said Miss Dodd, laughing. "That's what he does in his native country—or what he did until a big diamond syndicate in London bought up all the precious stones last spring, and threw six thousand diamond cutters out of work in Poland and Belgium and them furrin' parts."

"Bless me!" said Mrs Bagley.

"And he came to this country because he heard, poor creature! that everybody made fortunes here," went on Miss Dodd, making a macabre of silver white soap-suds in the big tin dishes, and immersing the knives and forks therein with a gentle clatter. "And now he's got to his last crust and his last penny, and there won't no one listen to his story. And he's had dogs set on him for a tramp, and been threatened with constables and no end of trouble. I did feel sorry for him."

"Did you, aunty? That is just like you, dear!" cried a sweet voice. "So do I!"

"Miss Dodd staggered beneath the unexpected hug and kiss of a round-cheeked eighteen-year-old girl, who had come breezily into the sink-room, flinging her hat and saque this way and that.

"Child," said she, "what do you know about it?"

"Oh, I've been interviewing the grand old man out there!" cried Mary Moore, piling her strap of books on the shelf, for she was the district school teacher, and had just returned from her work. "He says he is a Belgian, and he looks as if he'd just stepped out of a picture frame. I'd like to paint his picture if I had time. See how hard he is working! Keeping his elbows on the window sill and staring out, like a vignetted framed in scarlet-runner leaves."

"I dare say he knows we're an 'owen-in' at him," dryly observed Mrs Bagley.

"A diamond cutter," thoughtfully uttered Mrs Bagley. "Doesn't it sound romantic?"

"I s'pose," said Mrs Bagley, "it's as easy a story to invent as any other."

But the majority was undoubtedly against her, and when the night fell in a brisk thunder shower, and Mary went out to the barn with a lantern to invite the poor old foreigner to share their supper and occupy a seven-foot-square bedroom at the end of an unused wing of the farmhouse, Mrs Bagley was compelled reluctantly to accord her consent.

"I dare say we shall all be murdered in our beds," said she, mournfully.

"But my opinion never did go for nothing in this family. Have your own way, all of you, and see where it will bring you!"

Old Hermann Ernst, however, was as meek as a child and as harmless as a cricket, and extremely helpful withal. He worked diligently at the long neglected farm chores, mended the broken gates, replaced missing fence pickets, patched the well-chain and made himself useful in all directions.

"A regular old tramp!" said Harry Vallance, who was engaged to marry Mary, as soon as that imperious young dame should consider that she had laid up enough money for her household provisioning. "The very person, I should think, that your aunt needs about the place. And he works very cheap, you say?"

"Fifty cents a day," said Mary, shrugging her shoulders. "But aunt Bagley considers that a ruinous price."

"He's not a young man," observed Vallance.

The next evening, when Mary was looking over her little store of ornaments, she came across a dull white stone, set in a scurrious cable of tarnished metal. She took it up and looked earnestly at it.

"I wonder what old Hermann would think of it?" mused she. "I've always felt curious about this old ring that belonged to my father's uncle. I'll ask Hermann. If it should be a real gem—thoughts, of course, it isn't!"

The old man eyed it keenly, turning it this way and that. Then he lifted his faded blue eyes to Mary's earnest face.

"Is it a real diamond?" she queried, eagerly.

"One hardly knows," slowly spoke Ernst. "I wish, for the fraulein's sake, that it was. I have not my instruments here, nor my testing glasses. If the fraulein does not object, I will take it to the jeweler's in Hungerford, and together we can tell."

To this Mary promptly consented; and not until he had gone, did she divulge this little plan to her aunts.

"He'll never come back," said Mrs Bagley with a groan. "Your diamond's gone forever."

"If it is a diamond," said Mary. "It ain't, and it never was," shrewdly spoke Miss Dodd.

Old Hermann trudged through the sun and the dust to Hungerford, carrying sea captain Moore's old ring in his pocket.

"There is a jeweler there," he said to himself, "and I may get work. And the money my brother Carl has left me—the money that came in a lawyer's letter, this morning from Bruges! It is not a fortune, true, but it will help. I had thought I would cease from toil and live at my ease; but I am quite strong yet—and who am I, to sit with folded hands, while there is work to do in the world? And the dear young fraulein has been good to me, and she won't not take Carl's money from me, much though I long to give it to her! Hoch! she shall fall into the trap old Ernst will set for her. She shall marry and be happy!"

The jeweler at Hungerford asked the diamond cutter a good many questions.

"You're the very fellow I want," said he. "I've an order from the ladies at Hungerford Grange to reset a parure of very fine stones, and I begrudge to share my profits with those conscienceless fellows in New York. You can do fine work?"

"As fine as any man!" cried old Ernst, with professional pride.

"Very well, I'll give you a trial, if you work for me. There are some points you Europeans understand that we haven't quite reached, as yet. Now, what is this about an antique? Let's look at it."

"It is not a diamond," said Ernst. "I know enough of uncut gems to be sure of that. It may be a white topaz; but it is of a very inferior grade. Probably it is a Rhine stone, and nothing more. But I wish that it should be a real diamond."

"Eh?" said the jeweler.

"My work will be of some money value, I suppose?"

"I don't doubt it; but—"

"And I have here something?"

He opened his foreign letter and took out its inclosure of this paper.

"Ah," said the jeweler, "quite a neat little sum, I should say."

"For me it is wealth," said the old man. "But I prefer to spend it—to invest it in a real stone of good water—as a gift to one who has been heavenly kind to the old exile."

"Humph!" said the jeweler.

Hermann Ernst came back late at night.

"I have a pleasant surprise for the fraulein," said he.

"Oh, was it a real diamond?" cried Mary, her face lighting up.

"I left it to be out and reset. I shall ere long bring back to the fraulein a jewel of which she may feel proud," spoke the old man.

"I always thought that ring was of value," said Mrs Bagley. "But we hadn't no means of tellin'!"

"Me with a real diamond ring?" cried Mary. "It seems impossible! Oh, I am so glad—so glad!"

She danced joyfully about the kitchen floor, making an impromptu castanet of an old tin bakopan which she changed just then to be battering for the evening.

Old Hermann watched her with beaming eyes.

"It is a good investment!" murmured he.

"Look here!" said Mrs Bagley, when the shining diamond ring, in its white velvet case, was sent home. "Here's your play!"

"What?" cried Miss Dodd.

"This ain't the same stone at all," said Mrs Bagley. "It's a size smaller."

"It don't seem quite so big," admitted Miss Dodd.

"The old fellow's a fraud!" said Mrs Bagley.

Good News!

No one, who is willing to adopt the right course, need be long afflicted with boils, carbuncles, pimples, or other cutaneous eruptions. These are the results of Nature's efforts to expel poisonous and effete matter from the blood, and show plainly that the system is ridding itself through the skin of impurities which it was the legitimate work of the liver and kidneys to remove. To restore these organs to their proper functions, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the medicine required. That no other blood-purifier can compare with it, thousands testify who have gained from the tyranny of depraved blood by the use of this medicine.

"For nine years I was afflicted with a skin disease that did not yield to any remedy until a friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. With the use of this medicine the complaint disappeared. It is my belief that no other blood medicine could have effected so rapid and complete a cure."—Andrus D. Garcia, C. Victoria, Tannapolis, Mexico.

"My face, for years, was covered with pimples and humors, for which I could find no remedy till I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Three bottles of this great blood medicine effected a thorough cure. I confidently recommend it to all suffering from similar troubles."—M. Parker, Concord, Vt.

The Sonnet and an Author of One.

The Sonnet is frequently denominated a Stanza, but not accurately. It is constructed as a Stanza might be, but it is itself a complete poem.

What has prompted these remarks is that I have lately seen a volume of poems, composed by our clever townsman, Mr. J. F. Herbin, which contains a true Sonnet, a rare avis, as explained: But the whole volume is equally worthy of notice, and most persons would say, with even better reason, for every poem is an effusion fraught with ardent patriotism.

"The people's voice is odd, It is, or it is not, the voice of God." But as regards this special point, Mr. H. has given us what is so rare, a true Sonnet. It is the last poem in the collection, and metrically considered, at least, is not inferior to that plaintive and well-known Sonnet of Milton's, "On his Blindness," beginning, Baptist Mission Band.

The monthly meeting of the Baptist Mission Band was held on Sabbath afternoon. Mrs H. Young gave an interesting reading. Mrs Hutchinson, dressed in native costume, represented "Merriam," and gave a history of her life. She was an orphan reared by the government officials sent at the time of the famine in India to relieve the starving ones in the country districts. She, with a number of others, was brought to Chiacole, and Mrs Armstrong took her in. Her hands were covered with sores, her hair matted to her head and her body so emaciated, it was painful to look at her. She was about six years old—now about twenty—called by Mrs Archibald "her right hand"—saved through the efforts of Christian Mission. ONE PRESENT.

House Warming.

A large number of the friends of F. McIntosh, Esq., of Waterville, met at his house (recently built) on the evening of the 29th ult. to show their respect and appreciation of him by presenting him and his estimable wife with a very creditable and valuable present, consisting of an elegant easy chair and wicker rocker; also a splendid parlor lamp of modern style. Mr McIntosh's new house is the best in the village, well built on modern plan and convenient, and its occupants, are respected by all. The evening was fine and the viands of the well loaded tables abundant to the occasion; and all partook with hearty zest as would naturally be the result as the fair sex of Waterville are far famed for making food toothsome. After the inner man was fully supplied the evening was devoted to music, speeches and other amusements. C. J. Wolfe, Esq., was chosen chairman and presented the gift with an appropriate speech, which was followed by Messrs Creg, Whitman, Lawson and Best, and some others. Mr McIntosh replied at the close of the evening with a few appropriate remarks; he was not only surprised but much overcome. The programme of the happily spent evening closed by singing the National Anthem. The host and hostess will long remember the happy faces of that evening. COM.

The annual meeting of the rate-payers of the Wolfville Water District was held on Monday evening last in Witter's hall, which was well filled. Mr C. R. H. Starr was called to the chair, and Mr J. H. Bishop was appointed secretary. The reports of the commissioners and auditors were read and on motion adopted, after some discussion. On ballot Mr G. V. Rand was elected to retire from the board of commissioners, and was afterwards re-elected for another term. After some further discussion on matters pertaining to water district the meeting adjourned.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.—No publication comes to our table that is more highly prized than this old, substantial journal. Aside from keeping the public fully posted respecting new inventions and scientific developments, it contains a vast amount of the practical and useful. The engravings are of remarkably high order, and matter accompanying them is so tersely put that such subjects as might, under ordinary circumstances, be considered dry and heavy, are not only readable, but highly enjoyable. It is the best conducted scientific journal in the United States, as well as being typographically the handsomest. Its circulation is larger than all the others of its class combined. Subscription price, $3 per annum. Munna & Co., 361 Broadway, New York.

The name of Rudyard Kipling has stolen across the Atlantic from London. At the present age of this latest of successful story writers is basking at this moment in the warmest light of social and critical favour.

The final round up of cattle in the Indian territory is about complete, and the number of cattle now in the territory is estimated at only about 500,000 head.

The export trade in "chopped apples"—a dried product from inferior fruit left over from the best quality of evaporated fruit—according to a recent estimate increased from small orders in 1880 to 11,000,000 pounds in 1888, and 20,000,000 pounds could have been sold in 1890.

Mixed grasses are better for stock than a single variety. No matter how valuable any particular grass crop may be, or how large the yield, the stock will thrive better when fed on a variety.

The following is also said to be a good application to prevent metal rusting: Melt one ounce of rosin in a gill of linseed oil, and mix with a quantity of water.

Take a suitable pot, say ten feet long, and stick to the end a coarse wooden stick by which it can be turned.

Fowls want grass food, especially in the season for it, and where they have the liberty they consume large quantities of grass.

Some cultivated and prefer pruning trees of their most active growth in summer rather than in the fall or early spring.

A poor point plant is inferior to a good layer. Good ones, however, are according to Orchard and Garden, cheaper in the end.
