Bilious Headache

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

"KYRA,"

OR,
The Ward of the Earl of Vering.

CHAPTER XXXV.
Conclusion.

The house was still hushed, but the air of gloom had disappeared, for it was known that Kyra—the beautiful girl whose loveliness and gentleness had lit up the world house, and made it home for all within its walls—would live; and hope shone on every face—but one.

That one now stared at itself with apprehensive glance in the mirror of Lillian Devigne's chamber. To herself even she dared not admit that she alone felt no joy in the sudden restoration to life of her young rival; but ever there arose before her, and grew upon her, the conviction that the long and dangerous game she had been playing was lost, and only the fact that she had played with loaded dice could be hidden! Perhaps the count was dead or had left England, and the shameful secret of the plot she had planned might disappear and be lost with him!

While she paced to and fro, lost in the effort to cast aside the insidious fear and regain her composure, a low knock was heard at her door, and a servant announced that Mr. Merivale would be glad to see her in the library for a few minutes. She bathed her face, and pressed some color into her lips, and forcing the old serene smile, stole swanlike down the stairs. With her hand on the library door she paused. Was it not strange that Charlie Merivale should send for her in this way? What could he want with her—did he suspect? She opened the door and entered, and the first glance at Charlie's open face, now grave and sorrowful, told her that fate had torn the mask from her, and that one at least of that household knew her for what she was.

But the admirable calm self-possession did not desert her. She came with a smile to the table, and stood with her back to the window, so that he might only see her face indistinctly.

"You wanted to see me, Mr. Merivale?"

Low and clear the words came forth, making Charlie's task harder even than he had thought it would have been.

"Yes, Miss Devigne," he said, looking down as honesty has a way of doing before dishonesty. "I—Lady Devigne tells me that you intend leaving the Grange to-morrow."

Splitting Pains in the Muscles Driven Out Quickly by "Nerviline."

Rheumatic Pains Go—Suffering Ceases—Cure Comes in Even Chronic Cases.

For aching bones and sore muscles nothing will soothe away the pain like Nerviline.

For nerve-racking twinges in the muscles, for torturing backache or lumbago, you'll find Nerviline is full of amazing power.

You see, Nerviline has the power—it's about five times stronger than ordinary remedies, and can penetrate very deeply. It contains juices and extracts of certain herbs that give it a strange power to drive out congestion, inflammation or pain.

You are safe in using Nerviline. Just

"Yes," said Lillian, "mamma is anything but well, and I, myself, am not strong; and now that dear Kyra is past all danger, and has Lady Mary by her side, I think we should like to go."

"Yes," said Charlie, "perhaps it would be best—the south of France."

Then he paused, and held out the telegram.

"Before you go, let me give you this which fell into my possession by accident—"

She took it, and looked up into his kind, honest face, on which there was more of sorrow than anger.

For the first and only time the proud spirit broke; she fell into a chair, and clenching the telegram, bowed her head over it.

When she raised her face it was white and shamed.

"Did he—tell you to send me away?"

"He—whom? Percy? No! Miss Devigne, what do you take me for? I told you that that telegram came into my possession by accident. It was given to my wife by Count Hudsport, whom she found starving in London. Rather than Percy should see the telegram, and know the story it tells, I would—I cannot say what I would not do!"

"He knows nothing," she breathed.

"God bless you! Ah, Charlie, you can send me away without any cold words. I have sinned, but I have paid dearly for it. You, standing there, happy and victorious, you have never known what it is to have loved—and lost! Good-by. I shall go further than France; you will never see me again, none of you. Good-by!"

Charlie strode to her, and put out his hand.

"God forgive you, as I and Mary do!" he said—"as Percy would, if he knew; but he never shall know through us."

"You promise?" she said, imploringly and tearfully.

"I promise," he said, as he opened the door for her.

"God bless you—and him!" she murmured, and passed out. In an hour she was gone, and no Vering ever saw her again.

Very soon there came a day when the invalid was permitted to travel from the bedroom to her little boudoir. Winter had set in by then, and the room had been hung with rich curtains, upon which the glow of a great fire fell genially and morthfully.

WHEN LOVE Came Too Late.

CHAPTER I.

Something of a Mystery.

"Is he more like a burglar?" asked Olivia, with apparent innocence.

Mr. Sparrow shook his head.

"No, no, dear me, no! I think I said he was most distinguished-looking. Quite—er—aristocratic, and—er—patrician. Remarkably good-looking, also."

Miss Amelia pushed her chair nearer a book cabinet, and seized "The Peerage."

"Oh, I've looked through that," remarked Mr. Sparrow, with charming simplicity. "There is no mention of

"Well, it can't be denied that he was out of the house," said Olivia, as gravely as before. "We usually look over the stairs and whisper to the servants to say that we are not at home. For the future I shall imitate Mr. —what-is-his-name's veracity, and go out into the garden."

"The man added that his master never saw visitors," said Mr. Sparrow, solemnly.

There was something so irresistibly ludicrous in the little old man's tone that Olivia's gravity broke down, and she burst into a peal of laughter. While it was ringing through the room, and the other two were staring at her in startled astonishment and indignation, two gentlemen entered. One—an elderly man, tall and thin, with gray hair and eyes that had a look of Olivia's in them—was her father, Mr. Vanley. The other was a young man in flannels—a young man who would have been good-looking but for a remarkably faulty mouth and an expression in his eyes which seemed to convey the idea to the spectator that their owner was always on the alert listening and watching, and yet endeavoring to conceal the fact.

As Olivia looked up and met the eyes fixed upon her with a sudden, eager curiosity, then turned aside with a sudden attempt at indifference the laugh died away abruptly and a sudden change came over her expressive face. It was as if she had hardened it. A moment ago it had been full of girlish mirth and abandon; now in an instant it was eloquent of reserve and almost hauteur.

"What is the matter, Olivia?" asked Mr. Vanley, not irritably, but with a touch of sober earnestness, almost amounting to anxiety, which was always present with him. "What are you laughing at? Good-afternoon, Mr. Sparrow."

The young man came forward.

"Do tell us, Miss Olivia!" he said, throwing as much eagerness into his voice as possible. "Pray let us share the joke."

"It was no joke," she said, calmly; and turning away, began to arrange some music.

"Miss Olivia was laughing at me," said Mr. Sparrow, almost plaintively. "My dear Edwin—and you—Mr. Bradstone—you must hear this strange story of Mr. Sparrow's. Now, Mr. Sparrow, I insist!" exclaimed Miss Amelia, clasping her hands in the latest "intensity."

Mr. Sparrow was nothing loth, and Mr. Vanley sank into a chair with so palpable an air of resignation that a smile flitted across Olivia's face. Perhaps that encouraged Bartley Bradstone, for he approached her in a slow, hesitating kind of fashion, and talked to her in a low voice—he was watching her cold, downcast face covertly all the time—while Mr. Sparrow inflicted his story of the mysterious stranger upon Mr. Vanley.

The master of the Grange listened in silence until the narration was complete, and the old gentleman paused to see the effect of his recital; then Mr. Vanley looked up and said, quietly:

"Not a very promising neighbor. One would think he was insane; not that the purchase of The Dell is the act of a lunatic. It is the prettiest little place in the country."

He rose as he spoke, and, walking to the window, looked out pensively at the chimneys of The Dell, which just peeped over the tops of his own elms growing on the slope of the lane, at the bottom of which The Dell nestled.

"Yes, it is," said Miss Amelia; "and I am sure I have always wondered why you didn't buy it yourself, my dear Edwin, seeing that it is almost within your own estate."

Mr. Vanley's face clouded for an instant, and he cast a glance toward Bartley Bradstone; then he said, with a slight shrug:

"I have quite enough to worry about. Besides, I didn't know that Mr. Sparrow wished to part with it."

"I didn't—that is—I had no idea of it," said the old gentleman, nervously. "The—the fact is, this young man—Mr. Faradeane, I mean—took me by surprise."

Throw Away Your Eye-Glasses!

A Free Prescription
You Can Have Filled and Use at Home.

Do you wear glasses? Are you a victim of eye-strain or other eye-weakness? If so, you will be glad to know that there is real hope for you. Many whose eyes were failing, say they have had their eyes restored through the principle of this wonderful free prescription. One man says, after trying it: "It was almost blind; could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without any glasses and my eyes do not water any more." At night they would pain dreadfully; now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me. A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for fifteen days everything seems clear. I can even read fine print without glasses." It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by following the simple rules. Here is the prescription: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto Tablets. Drop one Bon-Opto tablet in 1/2 glass of water and allow to dissolve. With this liquid, bathe the eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation will quickly disappear. If your eyes are bothering you, even a little, take steps to save them now before it is too late. Many hopelessly blind might have been saved if they had been cared for their eyes in time. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

A President City physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its constituent ingredients are well known eye specialists and widely prescribed by them. It can be obtained from any good druggist and is one of the very few preparations I feel should be kept on hand for regular use in almost every family."

the name of Faradeane in that or "The County Families."

Miss Amelia closed the book with a gesture of despair.

"Is there no way of finding out something about him, dear Mr. Sparrow?"

"I know of none," he replied, solemnly.

"And I can only think of one," said Olivia.

Both pairs of eyes were turned upon her with eager impatience.

"Really? Now, what is that, my dear?" demanded Aunt Amelia.

"You might ask him to tell you his history," she said, without moving a muscle.

Aunt Amelia sank back with a gesture of disgusted disappointment, and Mr. Sparrow coughed.

"I—er—have reason to believe that the manservant was asked a question or two—"

"By you, Mr. Sparrow?" asked Olivia, still with the expression of an innocent child.

The little man blushed.

"Well, not exactly; but my man Walker happened to meet Mr. Faradeane's man, and got into conversation."

"And what did he say?" demanded Miss Amelia, eagerly.

"Well, I regret to say that he told poor Walker to mind his own business."

Olivia had only time to turn to the piano to hide the smile which seemed to flash across her face and dance in her eyes like a ray of sunshine.

"Well, I really never—Of course, no one will think of calling upon him," said Miss Amelia.

Again Mr. Sparrow colored guiltily.

"I—er—thought it my duty as a neighbor," he said, hesitatingly, "to just call. It was yesterday. The dog—he shuddered, and screwed up his slender legs, as if at some painful recollection—"the dog is one of the largest and—most awful animals, and I am convinced if the servant hadn't come up at the moment, I—"

He shuddered again. "He said his master was out. I saw Mr. Faradeane walking in the orchard at the side of the cottage quite distinctly."

"Then he was out," said Olivia, gravely.

"My dear Olivia," exclaimed her aunt, "you seem to be quite anxious to make excuses for this extraordinary young man; you do, indeed!"

"Well, it can't be denied that he was out of the house," said Olivia, as gravely as before. "We usually look over the stairs and whisper to the servants to say that we are not at home. For the future I shall imitate Mr. —what-is-his-name's veracity, and go out into the garden."

"It was no joke," she said, calmly; and turning away, began to arrange some music.

"Miss Olivia was laughing at me," said Mr. Sparrow, almost plaintively. "My dear Edwin—and you—Mr. Bradstone—you must hear this strange story of Mr. Sparrow's. Now, Mr. Sparrow, I insist!" exclaimed Miss Amelia, clasping her hands in the latest "intensity."

Mr. Sparrow was nothing loth, and Mr. Vanley sank into a chair with so palpable an air of resignation that a smile flitted across Olivia's face. Perhaps that encouraged Bartley Bradstone, for he approached her in a slow, hesitating kind of fashion, and talked to her in a low voice—he was watching her cold, downcast face covertly all the time—while Mr. Sparrow inflicted his story of the mysterious stranger upon Mr. Vanley.

The master of the Grange listened in silence until the narration was complete, and the old gentleman paused to see the effect of his recital; then Mr. Vanley looked up and said, quietly:

"Not a very promising neighbor. One would think he was insane; not that the purchase of The Dell is the act of a lunatic. It is the prettiest little place in the country."

A Frightful Death! Suffocated in Asthma Attack.

Every sufferer from asthma knows the terror, the abject fear that overcomes them when suffering for breath. The old-fashioned remedies may relieve, but never cure. Best results come from Catarrhoxone, which cures asthma after hope is abandoned. It's because Catarrhoxone kills the asthma germ that it cures. Choking spells and labored breathing are relieved, suffocating sensations and loss of breath are cured. Every trace of asthma is driven from the system, and even old chronics experience immediate relief and lasting cure. Equally good for bronchitis, throat trouble and catarrh. The large one dollar outfit includes the inhaler and lasts two months, sold by all dealers or from the Catarrhoxone Co., Kingston, Canada.

Driving Power of British is Greatest

Result of Long Preparation Drive as it Appeared Just Before the Offensive Began—Germans Must Equal Terms for First Time since War.

Bar-Le-Duc, June 29, (By AP)—There is a chance that the British French offensive of this summer will succeed in breaking through the main lines and bringing the enemy war in sight.

Let it be conceded that this is considered a possibility only. And that the probabilities are against the Germans will merely be weaker. The matter what may be the strength of the trust against them, and that the next task of the Allies will be to prepare for another winter in the trenches and another drive when the weather hardens next year. Nevertheless, there is a chance of success for the reasons:

First—The lines in the west have been actually broken four times.

Second—The weight of the drive will be as greatly superior to any previous effort by the Allies in the west as a sledge is to a tack hammer.

Third—The Central Powers have their hands full. They may find difficulty in playing the old game of hurdling Germany from one part of war to the other, as military necessities demand.

Fourth—Germany must have obviously blunted her cutting edge at Verdun.

Biggest Preparation Yet.

No other movement since this began, if the Germans rush the Belgium is excepted, has been so carefully thought out and managed and provided for as has the present offensive. The British should be able to get every ounce of weight to their blow. Here are some of the reasons:

(a) Three thousand miles of road have been built behind the British front. That ensures a superior system of supply of munitions, and withdrawal of the wounded, as well as a rapid transfer of troops to the point to point.

The tremendous advantage the Allies have had heretofore has been in the possession of a sufficient number of strategic railroads. The importance of this superiority was keenly appreciated at Verdun, where the Germans had eighteen lines converging on the Verdun district, while the Allies were forced to improvise automobile transport to make up for the deficiencies of their two inferior lines of rail.

Driving Power of British is Greatest Yet

Result of Long Preparation Described as It Appeared Just Before the Offensive Began—Germans Met on Equal Terms for First Time in the War.

Bar-Le-Duc, June 29, (by Mail).—There is a chance that the British and French offensive of this summer may succeed in breaking through the German lines and bringing the end of the war in sight.

Let it be conceded that this is to be considered a possibility only. Admit that the probabilities are that the Germans will merely be weakened, no matter what may be the strength of the thrust against them, and that the next task of the Allies will be to prepare for another winter in the trenches and another drive when the ground hardens next year. Nevertheless, there is a chance of success for these reasons:

First—The lines in the west have been actually broken four times. Second—The weight of the British drive will be as greatly superior to any previous effort by the Allies in the west as a sledge is to a tack hammer.

Third—The Central Powers have their hands full. They may find some difficulty in playing the old game of hurdling Germany from one theatre of war to the other, as military necessities demand.

Fourth—Germany must have seriously blunted her cutting edge against Verdun.

Diggest Preparation Yet.

No other movement since the war began, if the Germans rush through Belgium is excepted, has been as carefully thought out and munitioned and provided for as has the British offensive. The British should be able to get every ounce of weight into their blow. Here are some of the reasons:

(a) Three thousand miles of railroad have been built behind the British front. That ensures a perfect system of supply of munitions and withdrawal of the wounded, as well as a rapid transfer of troops from point to point.

The tremendous advantage the Germans have had heretofore has been in the possession of a sufficiency of strategic railroads. The immensity of this superiority was keenly illustrated at Verdun, where the Germans had eighteen lines converging in the Verdun district, while the French were forced to improvise automobile transport to make up for the deficiencies of their two inferior lines of rail.

The British drive will be the only one in which the Germans will have been met on equal ground since the beginning of the war.

Have 1,200,000 Men Ready.

(b) The driving force against the German front will be greater in this offensive than in the previous one of either front.

Some comparative figures will be given later. Meanwhile it should be observed that the British will have not less than 1,200,000 men—net strength—concentrated on their 85 miles of front. I mean by this 1,200,000 fighting men. Back of the fighting men are at least 500,000 soldiers of the liaison—the supply corps and the repair corps and the railroad corps and the bridge-building corps and Sir William Robertson alone knows what other corps. Usually the strength of an army is given as the total of combatants and uniformed workmen. In this case the figure given means that 1,200,000 men are actually subject to call for the front trenches.

Thanks to the three thousand miles of new railroad, these men can be shifted rapidly. Every other drive has broken down because of mechanical difficulties. It was necessary to hold up the operations in order to get fresh troops to the front, to "clean" the front of wounded men and broken organizations, to send fresh supplies forward. This great network of railroads means that what an automobile rider would call the "torque" is continuous. At Verdun the German operations have been marked by frequent pauses while new divisions were brought up. The British will be able to hammer absolutely without cessation, if they desire.

Even Terms on Guns.

(c) For the first time on this front the Germans will be met gun for gun and shell for shell. From the beginning they have had a notable superiority in heavy artillery, and it has been demonstrated that heavy artillery wins wars. For a time at Verdun the French held them even. This was after the first two weeks of breakdown because of meagre transportation facilities, and before the French guns began to wear out.

Of late the Germans have had a superiority, both in numbers and in guns at Verdun. Only French heroism and the French genius for soldiering kept the Germans away.

This time the British will be on even terms. A torrent of heavy guns has been coming over from England lately. A soldier friend recently toured the English front. "I found batteries of big guns that had never been fired tucked away behind every haystack," said he. "The country

Our Boys Safe Across. First Submarine Like Deutschland Taken By British

The Reid-Nid. Co. received a message from England to-day stating that the s.s. Sicilian with over 500 of the 2nd Nid. Regiment, would dock at 5 p.m. to-day. While the message does not give the port, we presume it will be at Liverpool. The run across was made in seven days and five hours. This is indeed welcome news to many in our Island Home and is another example of British supremacy on the sea.

Deutschland Taken By British

Was Caught Off Coast of Ireland on Trial Trip—Undersea Boat Crew is Sealed—Men Convinced They Will be Trapped in British Cruiser Nets, Washington, July 20.—Before the German merchant submarine now in Baltimore harbor had so much as started for this country, her predecessor, the first submarine of the Deutschland type, was captured off the Irish coast by the British navy, on her trial trip, so naval authorities here state.

The first undersea craft of the Deutschland type is now in England, according to a report on file here. On board her when she was captured by the British warships were several scientists, expert mechanics and sailors, all of whom are now interned in England.

The capture of the initial merchant submarine intended for trans-Atlantic service was effected because of engine trouble which developed off the Irish coast. For reasons of policy the fact had been kept secret by the British admiralty, but the facts are, on file with the United States officials in Washington, it is said.

The chances of British destroyers or other types of craft catching the Deutschland depend largely, according to expert opinion in naval circles, on whether the winks of the submarine is sighted as she attempts to slip out.

Deutschland Crew Scared Still.

Baltimore, Md., July 20.—Terror stricken and on the verge of a panic the crew of the Deutschland dread the order that will start them on their return trip across the Atlantic. None believe they will escape the dragnet being thrown out by the Allied cruisers now off the Cape. They feel sure that they will fall victims to the enemy cruisers, not through shot from the yawning mouths of the cannons, nor ball from the high-powered rifles in the little British patrol boats, but in a net that the enemy is spreading just off the three-mile limit.

The members of the crew whose names will go down in history for the creation of a commercial era, have openly expressed this feeling to friends on Lucicut Point. They have told these same friends that Captain Paul Koepke, the dapper and daring commander of the submarine, is doing everything in his power to keep up their spirits and make them look on the bright side of the affair, but the men cannot see his side of the venture.

"We are praying every night, and are getting our friends to pray for us," Second Engineer Karl Fruechte told a friend he has been spending his evenings with since the crew have been granted shore leave.

Fear British Cruiser Nets.

"The crew have orders to be ready to leave at any moment," said this friend of Fruechte this afternoon. "They cannot bring themselves about to see how the Deutschland will escape the enemy off the Cape. All the men have been talking about since they have been visiting me, is of the loved ones they will leave behind, should the U-boat find a resting place at the bottom of the Atlantic."

"It is not the cannon and the other guns the men fear, it is the nets that the enemy cruisers will stretch. Entangled in these, the submarine cannot escape, her engines will be crippled, and it will be a slow and agonizing death to all on board. When the engines stop, the lights will go out and the air will stop. That is what the men fear. They talk of it continually, while with me at night, and they ask everyone to pray for them."

Knowing the tactics of the British and French, and realizing that scores of German submarines have been caught in these nets that were stretched across the English Channel, those that man the Deutschland fear that the British will resort to this method off the Cape.

The reinforcement of the cruisers that are reported to have arrived just beyond the three mile limit, is causing the men great anxiety, for with these to aid the two which have been reported on guard, they say it is possible for the Allies to stretch nets for many miles. Such being the case, the Deutschland will, they fear, be encircled, crippled and sunk, and all on board will be martyrs to a lost cause.

Norfolk, Va., July 20.—Foreign warships which have been waiting off the Virginia Capes for the Deutschland were obliged to go out far to sea to-day, when a northeast gale made it dangerous for them to lay too close to the shore.

High seas and a 50 mile gale at Cape Henry drove the foreign ships to seek safety in deep water, probably ten miles off shore.

Why the Germans Came Out.

A Danish correspondent of the Glasgow Herald writes that the reason of the battle on May 31 was merely an incident—an unlucky one for the Germans. From information he has gathered from well-informed sources and also from German sailors now in Denmark, it appears that the Germans are unable to use the Kiel Canal for the transport of large vessels, and as it had become necessary to have large warships in the Baltic, the German Admiralty were forced to run the risk and attempt the passage around the Danish coast.

Accompanied by the High Sea fleet, the Baltic squadron sailed up the coast until it met Beatty's battle cruiser squadron, which compelled the whole German fleet to flee, leaving behind some of the finest ships ever built in German yards. In this fight the Germans lost six powerful capital ships, besides innumerable ships of the cruiser, destroyer and torpedo boat types. Rumor has it that the disaster for the German navy was finally completed when several other of their ships, well battered by the British, sunk inside the Kiel Canal some distance from the western entrance.

This has rendered the whole Canal practically useless for naval purposes, and besides the great financial loss entailed, this disaster has ruined all German hopes of an attack on the Russian fleet in the Gulf of Riga. It is needless to dilate on the opportunities now opened up for the daring Russian fleet, which will not be slow to accept.

Latest reports from the north give a good sign codfish from Tilt Cove to Burlington. Previous to this the fishery in that part of the coast has been a blank. Traps at Placentia are doing poorly, while hook and liners fishing off the shore are doing well. Cape St. Mary's trawlers had poor luck for the past week, however some nice catches were reported yesterday.

At Pouch Cove a large amount of haddock was secured during the past week. It is many years since those fish were so plentiful on that part of the coast.

Postum is delicious and comes in two forms. The original Postum Cereal must be boiled. Instant Postum is a soluble powder—made in the cup by adding hot water. Cheering Words.

When one of the first republic men in the land renounces an habitual tone of cautious scepticism, amounting almost to pessimism, to sound a note of cheerful triumph, the nation may feel it is time to pluck up heart. The man in the case here is Lloyd George. Perhaps no other man, even including Asquith or Sir William Robertson, can speak with quite the same authority of Britain's prospects. For eighteen months he has combated, almost alone, the insane over-confidence that infected England so badly after the battle of the Marne. He pointed out, as no one else, understood of the people, could point out, wherein lay the hidden peril to Great Britain. He saw, and stated, her only salvation to lie in immense and sustained effort. This attitude of mind, apart from his other great abilities, pointed him out as the man to control and direct the wonderful munitions organization which converted England into a vast arsenal. It is out of his knowledge of what has been there achieved that he speaks now. "There is no doubt at all," he says, "that the lesson of this battle is that we have simply to press on with all our resources, with all the material at our command, and victory will be ours." Which simply means that Lloyd George considers these resources and that material to be now at last sufficient.

The vital import of this fact is apt to be overlooked, or the fact itself too readily taken for granted. The wonderful nature of the achievement is not appreciated. Arguing a priori, but from insufficient premises, the Germans concluded that Britain could not possibly bring her armies to such a state of efficiency and artillery equipment as to be a serious menace to their West front. The real height to which Britain has in fact brought her preparations is not yet faintly guessed in Germany. So, too, there is no doubt that the confidence of the Central nations has been sustained, in the face of the Russian avalanche, by their conviction that the prodigious expenditure of ammunition by the Russian artillery would soon exhaust the supply. When they finally realize that the supply on both fronts is greater even than the demand upon it, the Germans will have to do a little more original thinking.

It would be interesting to know the mind of the German general staff on the West front. We can infer it indirectly from the activities which it directs. One fact is certain, the Germans are clinging for dear life to the positions before Bapaume. In the little village of Posteres the fate of the German army is being slowly wrought. When Posteres is taken and, later, Thiepval, the British will have scored a great triumph; for their fall will sound that of Bapaume. The relentless deluge of shrapnel and high explosives will be maintained, and the foot by foot advance of the infantry, costing the attackers very little more than the defenders. We must not be misled by the smallness of the territory gained. Mr. J. L. Garvin, a most reliable authority, says it is far better to wear out the Germans where they are than to attempt to drive them back. Even the German army cannot long withstand such pressure as the Allies are exerting. It may be a month before Bapaume falls, but that does not matter; it will fall, and every other point of resistance after it. The defence of these little places is being maintained with almost frenzied energy, and the reason is plain. The German command knows well that any considerable retirement of their line will have a moral and political effect, far transcending its tactical one. It will do more than oceans of words to apprise the German people at home of the real condition of the Allies and their state of mind. Conquered nations do not drive their conquerors back from such positions as these.

Fishery News From Many Quarters.

The following are the latest fishery reports received by the Board of Trade:—

July 22nd, from C. Renouf (Bank Head to Highlands).—The total catch is 3,676 qtls., with 18 for last week. No traps and only 6 dories are fishing. Prospects are very poor, and the shore fishery is nearly ended, the cod being now off in deep water. Herring is obtainable in small quantities.

July 22nd, from T. Hogan (Carbonear to Crocker's Cove).—Caplin is scarce, and only 24 traps and 4 punts are fishing. The catch is 1,245 qtls., and for last week 320.

July 22nd, from A. J. Hoff (Change Islands).—There is no improvement since last report, and prospects are poor. Traps and hook and liners are doing nothing, but from half to one qtl., is being taken daily by cod nets. The catch to date is 2,250 qtls., with 3505 for last week. Fifty traps and 50 dories and skiffs are fishing. There is no caplin, but sufficient herring for bait.

July 22nd, from C. E. Chafe (South Head of Briggs to Bay Roberts Pt.).—Hook and liners are doing nothing yet, but the outlook for a fall fishery is bright, as there is a good deal of cod about the grounds. Caplin is still plentiful and prospects are fairly good. The total catch is 2,500 qtls., and for last week 300.

July 22nd, from M. J. White (Aquaforte to Caplin Bay).—Four whale boats, 46 traps and 75 dories and skiffs are fishing. The catch is 5,155 qtls., with 80 for last week. Trawls are doing nothing and the traps took the above catch. Prospects for a good fishery are not very encouraging, and there is no bait.

July 22nd, from J. White (Colinet Island to Head of Salmonier).—Fourteen traps, 50 dories and skiffs and 20 boats are fishing. The total catch is 3,400 qtls., and for last week 500. Prospects are very good and caplin is fairly plentiful. Latest reports say there is a fine sign of cod, but the dogfish are numerous and are destroying the fishing gear.

Ready?

"Are you ready? Are you ready?" Is the cry that greets my ears; And to me the word means ready For the work of future years;

Is your step both firm and fearless? Is your armor shining bright? Are your weapons standing ready? Can you enter in and fight?

Many clouds obscure your pathway, Countless dangers lurking near; When the threatening shades enfold you Will you never flinch in fear?

Loving friends your steps have guided, Guarded you through tender years; Now, stone on life's broad highway, You must meet the joys and tears.

You are standing on a threshold, And before you sounds the call; Will you waver in deciding? Will you never finish in fear?

Let your aim be high and noble, Keep your purpose ever clear; Shoulder arms! Be standing ready; Greet your summons with a cheer!

For the time has come for striving, Each to follow his own star; Till the purpose is accomplished, And the gates of joy unbar.

To Take up Regimental Duty Here.

Yesterday the Telegram noted that forty-four of Newfoundland's soldiers were returning here from the Old Country, also giving the reason for the return of each member of the party. We stated that six officers, namely, Lieutenants Knight, Edgar, Duley, Snow, Smith and Thompson were coming on sick furlough. Of these Lieut. Knight, we understand, is the only one who actually took part in the big drive of July 1st in which the Newfoundland Regiment won such fame and covered itself with glory. However, Officers Edgar, Duley, Snow, Smith and Thompson were in France and saw active service in Gallipoli last year, some of them being wounded. It will be remembered. These five officers, besides coming here for a brief rest, we learn, will take up Regimental duty at the Barracks and help in the training of recruits.

A Short Trip.

Yesterday afternoon the Royal Naval Reserve Training Ship H. M. S. Briton which for upwards of twenty years has been moored to the north side of the dry dock was removed to the south wharf, several tugs assisting in the operation. The wharf to which she was fastened is in a bad state, the timbers almost caving in. Workmen have commenced repairs today and with no interruptions should complete the job in ten days. One of the Petty Officers was grieved over the fact that he had missed his passage.

GREATER PART OF VILLAGE OF POZIERES CAPTURED BY BRITISH.
LONDON, July 25.—British troops have captured the greater part of the village of Pozieres, says a British official statement issued this afternoon. The British brought up reinforcements of tanks and guns, but their counterattacks everywhere, the statement says, were repulsed by the British.

ATTACK BY GERMAN INFANTRY DRIVEN BACK.
LONDON, July 25.—There was fierce hand-to-hand fighting and bomb-fighting at several points along the front of the British in France during the day, says an official statement. An attack by German infantry on the village of Pozieres from the northeast, was driven back by British artillery fire.

OFFICER DESCRIBES POZIERES FIGHTING.
PARIS, July 25.—Fighting in the fortified village of Pozieres between the British and the Germans is described as follows by an officer, who was wounded in the village: Early on Sunday morning the moment that the signal for an attack was given, after a frightful bombardment, the English rushed forward to the entrance of the village, carried it brilliantly and occupied the first houses. At 6 o'clock the Germans counter-attacked. Their onset was extraordinarily doubtless because their courage was stimulated by their officers, as one tell from the odor. Here they played no part. Knife, bayonet, volvier and grenade were used. Germans employed a sort of hand-to-hand method, studied with such an Apache might used in the field. I saw a German officer, one of them on a wounded German, but as he was in the act of firing a revolver shot laid him down. His intended victim, in a moment, a German squad with a machine gun was exterminated to the last man by the bayonet by an Australian Party which had followed them to the house. I was present at an interesting duel between two officers, an English lieutenant who was charged with the head of his men, and a German captain. The lieutenant struck the Bavarian a blow on the chest with his sword. At the same instant received a ball from his adversary in the stomach. Dying in the suffering, he delivered another blow. This proved mortal to the Bavarian. Unfortunately the lieutenant died shortly afterwards, killed by strong enemy forces. The English had to retreat during the night, but they strongly counter-attacked at seven o'clock, and the masters of three-quarters of the village. By last accounts the English still going on in the northwest of the village, to the advantage of the allies.

RUSSIAN FORCES THREE MILES FROM HUNGARIAN FRONT.
NEW YORK, July 25.—A Journal dispatch from Constantinople to-day says that the Russian correspondent of the newspaper, St. Petersburg, estimates that General Vojtkin's German Army, which has been bearing the brunt of the Russian assaults on the Lipa River in Volynia, has lost 50,000 men, the third of its whole effective force. It is further reported from Posen that Russian forces, fighting in the Southern Carpathians, are now three miles from the Hungarian frontier.

Here the rifle played no part. Knives, bayonet, revolver and grenade were used. The Germans employed a sort of long-handled maces, studded with nails, such as an Apache might use, not a soldier. I saw a German officer using one of them on a wounded comrade, but as he was in the act of striking, a revolver shot laid him down beside his intended victim. In a ruined house a German squad with a machine gun was exterminated to the last man with the bayonet by an Australian Party which had followed them into the house. I was present at an exciting duel between two officers, an English lieutenant who was charging at the head of his men, and a Bavarian captain. RUSSIAN FORCES THREE MILES FROM HUNGARIAN FRONTIER.

NEW YORK, July 25. A Journal despet from Copenhagen to-day says that the Petrograd correspondent of the newspaper Politiken estimates that General Von Linington's German Army, which has been bearing the brunt of the Russian assaults on the Lipa River and Volynia, has lost 50,000 men, or one-third of its whole effective forces. It is further reported from Petrograd that Russian forces, fighting in the Southern Carpathians, are now only three miles from the Hungarian frontier.

THE GREEK SITUATION.

ATHENS, July 25. For the purpose of counteracting the widespread effect of the formation of anti-Venizelos leagues among the demobilized Greek reservists, the adherents of former Premier Venizelos this morning launched a similar nation-wide opposition league of which the former War Minister, General Danglis, Chief of the Staff during the first Balkan War, was elected President. There is undisguised uneasiness in Entente circles, as to the possible consequences of employing the army for political purposes by both sides, in the approaching electoral campaign.

THE DEUTSCHLAND.

NEW YORK, July 25. All kinds of small craft are being made ready here and in Hampton Roads, to take the trail of the German submarine Deutschland, when she comes down from Baltimore for the dash to the sea. Imagination are being fired by the presence of Allied cruisers off Virginia Capes, awaiting the re-appearance of the Deutschland. Rumors say that a flotilla of armed German submarines is on the way to attack the British-French patrols when their freight-carrying sister starts out. The underwater boat will probably be followed out by a big audience. It is understood that the Navy coast guard consider that neutrality does not require interference with such plans. Speculation over the delayed arrival of the Bremen, the Deutschland's sister-ship, continues.

PURCHASE OF DANISH WEST INDIES BY UNITED STATES.

WASHINGTON, July 25. An official announcement was made at the White House to-day that negotiations have practically been completed for the purchase of the Danish West Indies by the United States from Denmark for $25,000,000.

CECIL IN THE COMMONS.

LONDON, July 25. Replying to questions in the Commons, Lord Robert Cecil, Minister of War Trade, said to-day that American press criticism of the British black list was based largely upon misapprehension. The Act, under which the statutory list of American firms was issued, he said, was passed last December. The lists, referring to most neutral countries, had already been published, nor were the provisions of the Act, he added, unduly stringent. The French law, the Minister said, provided that all persons of enemy nationality, wherever living, were enemies of France, and that it was illegal for Frenchmen to trade with them. In the British case only persons who had shown themselves hostile to this country were put on the list. Neither did British seek these lists to interfere with the freedom of neutral citizens, Lord Robert Cecil said. It sought only to secure that British goods and credit be not used for the support and enrichment of those actively assisting Britain's enemies. If any persons were unjustly included in the lists, the Minister said, their names would be removed. Great care would be taken in applying the law to existing contracts. He was informed Germany had taken similar action.

A PATRIOTIC ACT.

HAMILTON, Ont., To-day. The Canadian Cartridge Company has returned to the Government $750,000 of the firm's profits on war orders to date. It was announced this afternoon that the firm made a million francs at cost of the money returned by it to be used for patriotic purposes.

ADDING TO THE SCORE.

AMSTERDAM, To-day. A fine of 5,000,000 marks has been imposed upon the City of Brussels for celebrating the Belgian national festival last Friday, according to the Echo Belge.

11.00 A.M.

THE IRISH SITUATION.

DUBLIN, To-day. Commenting on the Irish situation, the Times to-day says a political truce must be an agreement on the necessity for a just and firm administration of Ireland during the period of war. Present blunders have increased that necessity. Only disloyal or short-sighted Nationalists will arrest the measure which the Government must take without further delay for the maintenance of peace and the safety of Ireland. If this necessity be generally accepted, the way may become clear for further developments of unity among Irishmen. Freeman's Journal says the defence is pitiable; it impressed and will impress no one. A solemn agreement will be sung to the winds without cause or justification. The Government is alone responsible. The British public was willing to ratify the agreement. The British press supported the arrangement and the Irish party stood by its contract. The Government alone was found without faith, without courage, the consequences are obvious. It will be harder than ever to induce the

THE BLACK LIST.

WASHINGTON, To-day. A partial answer to the State Department to the request for information concerning the blacklisting of American firms by the British was given formally to Acting Secretary of State Polk to-day by Sir Cecil Spring Rice, British Ambassador. Sir Cecil said the black list was not directed against neutral trade. It was not intended to affect existing contracts; the British Government would be glad to consider cases of firms desiring to offer proof that they had been put on the list unjustly.

WIRES INTERRUPTED.

Owing to the terrific lightning storm that swept the west coast last night telegraph communication with Port aux Basques over the Postal and Reid telegraph lines was cut off, connections being out at almost every station west of Bishop's Falls. As a consequence the Kyle's passenger list could not be received in time for to-day's publication.

My Boy.

My little boy, with eyes so blue,
Seems just the other day
I kissed your little hands and feet
As on my lap you lay.
You were so tiny and so sweet
When God sent you away.

My little boy, with curly hair,
Seems just the other day,
Your only thought was boat and rod;
Now King and Country call, you say,
"My future we must leave with God,
I'm going duty's way."

My splendid boy, with heart so true,
God keep you all the way
And give you courage, faith and strength
For duty's call each day.
We trust He'll bring you home at length,
True-hearted as you went away.

THE INVICTUS SHOE

THE INVICTUS

A shoe for well-dressed men. Costs enough to insure a perfect shoe, but is as low as a shoe of this character can be sold. Seen beside a cheaper shoe, the difference is unmistakable. Men who want appearance, satisfying wear, and solid comfort, should wear the "Invictus Shoe."

Two Leading LEATHERWARE Lines

In Shoes; Low Prices and Cheapness

Are as far apart as the Poles. Cheapness in Shoes does not depend upon their price, but upon the service they give. To maintain the Low Price of cheap shoes it is necessary to use even more inferior leather than usual. That can only result in one thing—less service—less wear—therefore less economy. No substitution of inferior stock has been made in either of our two Leading Lines for Men and Women.

How Grip of British Forces Amounts to Fatal Strangle

British Widening Breaches of Medieval Fortresses—Fricourt—Paints Glowing Picture of Conditions.

(By Philip Gibbs)

With the British Army in the field, July 10. — Slowly and steadily we are drawing closer about the enemy's position along the whole extent of the front, in order that we may be able to capture them. Our troops captured news about Oviliers and La Boisselle that the pressure upon the front was tightening, and during the past few hours we have established in the Bois de Tromes, and in the Bois de la Motte.

The meaning of our attacks and of the hard fighting at Fricourt may not be clear to those who do not realize that which our men have to storm. It has been said that the lines, which stretch from the Vosges, are of great strength and this is true, but it is not so in the Bois de la Motte. The great German trench which curves round from Fricourt to the Bois de la Motte, like a medieval fortress connects earthworks and trenches. The trenches or strong places as we call them, are ruined bases of defense than any of our own. They are filled with machine guns, trench mortars, another design of destruction—Gomm Beaumont, Hamme Thiépreux, La Boisselle and Fricourt.

DESPERATE ATTACKS

In spite of the perils of these British battalions, which themselves against the strong on the left side of a German trench they did not fail, a breach was made in their defenses, which now being widened and deepened. On the southern side where the trench further eastward Metz and La Boisselle are, and attack is being further in to reach the places on the left in which trench walls are here, while they are being weakened assaults without.

A STRANGE GRIP.

We are gradually getting a grip on them, and I have been keeping striking deeper to the south as we have done during the twenty-four hours. Contaminated and Oviliers, it was seen as a strong place on the left must be evacuated by the enemy, and it was sounded and taken by their infantry troops by us.

I saw a scene of a struggle the enemy's struggle to-day all as if they were looking into the rear of the Lady of Lot. It is a strange, strangely out, as the image, and yet they real vivid, because I caught it suddenly and by accident, and for a gap in a hedge, by two on each side of the like the front of a picture. I hunched up to lines and it was on my back I came upon the gate the hedge. Through it I saw an unexpected scene of war, as the first in front of me all wild, with

ON BACKS!

RUTH CAMERON.

"No, she isn't pretty; but did you ever notice what a lovely back she has?" said the Lady-who-a-l-w-a-y-s-knows-somehow.

"No," said the Author's wife. "I must say I take more interest in people's faces than their backs."

"So do I," said the Lady; "but I've found that their backs are interesting, too."

"What do you mean by a lovely back?"

"Very straight and very graceful," said the Lady.

The Author's wife looked amused at the idea of a graceful back.

Personally it doesn't strike me as particularly amusing idea.

Backs Can Have Individually And Beauty.

Like the Lady, I've found that backs can have both individuality and beauty.

Many years ago a woman who thoroughly understood the art of dress gave my mind its first impulse in this direction.

She advised me to buy a certain suit because the back had such excellent lines.

"But what about the front?" said I. "Isn't that more important?"

"I don't think so," said she. "You are in front, yourself, and people will look at you, instead of your clothes; but there isn't any face to take attention away from the back."

Consider The Back View In Arranging The Hair.

Likewise, in trying on a hat or at-tranging one's hair, the back should be considered as carefully as the front and sides. Many people fail to do this, because they see their faces in the mirror so much more often than they see their backs.

One of the stories of my childhood that I have never forgotten is that of a little boy and his first visit to the photographer's. When he was told that he could have his picture taken in any pose he selected, he chose to have it taken back view, "because I've seen my face lots of times but I never got a good look at my back."

He Was Wiser Than His Elders.

His elders were greatly amused, but I thought—and still think—that I had more sense than they. I wonder if he grew up to be as thoughtful a man as he was a boy, or if in due time he became a convention-bound grown-up himself.

It is a wise person who knows his own back.

What does your back look like?

Is it the kind that makes people behind you on the street quicken their pace because they want to see the face that goes with it?

Or is it the other kind?

This is to certify that fourteen years ago I got the cords of my left wrist nearly severed, and was for about nine months that I had no use of my hand, and tried other Liniments, also doctors' and was receiving no benefit. By a persuasion from a friend I got MINARD'S LINIMENT and used one bottle which completely cured me, and have been using MINARD'S LINIMENT in my family ever since and find it the same as when I first used it, and would never be without it.

Vacation.

By GEORGE FITCH,
Author of "At Good Old Sishaw."

Vacation is one of the few gambles that aren't prohibited by law. You put in all the money you have saved and draw a two weeks' rest out of a grab bag. If you win you get a nice room next to the breeze on a shady farm with a milk cow. If you lose you get shivers at a northern beach, canned goods in a country boarding house or a camping party in a wet spell. But whatever it is, it is your vacation.

Vacation consists of eleven months of saving, two weeks of scramble, and two weeks of rest. Some people rest by chasing a deer through 100 miles of underbrush and some by climbing a mountain that only has a hand-hold every 100 feet. Others rest by playing lawn tennis until they are parboiled to a deep red, and still others consider turning a heavy motor boat engine over hand by hand in a boiling sun to be a relaxation that will send them home feeling like new men.

Some people are very hard on their bank accounts during vacation, and go to expensive seaside resorts where the poor things get no rest at all. A man may return from one of these places looking the picture of health, but with a pocket book which is so emaciated that a two-cent stamp would make a bulge in it.

Some people are so poor that they can't take a month's vacation and there are so rich that they rest fifty-one weeks in the year and spend the other week at home watching a hired man cut coupons. But two weeks' vacation is as much as the ordinary man can stand.

Minister's usually get a month's vacation, but this is because their congregations need the rest.

School-teachers have three months' vacation without pay. When a laboring man gets this kind of a vacation he calls it a lock-out and wants to know what the government is going to do about it.

People choose their vacations too carelessly and place too much faith in railroad folders and rumor. The best way to choose a place in which to gorge one's self with rest is to pick it out the year before and encourage a friend to go to it. If he comes back still a friend you can risk it.

Of course, some men suffer severely during their vacations and get even by recommending the place of torture to their friends, but fortunately these villains are very few.

Vacations are valuable because they give a man a change. Government employes should always spend their vacations at hard labor.

Bay of Islands World Famous Pleasure Resort

Its Scenic Beauty, Fine Fishing and Ideal Climate Have Gained Renown.—Mr. Davis Erecting Splendid Hotel to Meet Growing Trade.

(Western Star.)

The potentialities of Bay of Islands are so great and promising that it ought not to be necessary to say an assuring word regarding the future of this section.

The name of this Bay stands for a picture in the minds of all who have lingered even for a few fleeting days within the charm of its woding beauty. It stands not alone as a present picture but as the future ideal to its own loyal inhabitants.

Here thousands of tourists tour and enjoy the summer months. Some are attracted by the silver-skin salmon and speckled trout to the rivers and lakes by the brow of the green covered hills and majestic mountains where even the novice finds an abundance of the large beauties which have made this place famous the world over. Others delight to ride the placid waters of the Humber and view the many picturesque places which skirt its shores. And still others stay at curling and find pleasure in visiting some of the beautiful homes and mingling with the sociability of the refined inmates.

The traffic this way has been increasing year after year until the hotel accommodations have been inadequate to meet the needs. To successfully cope with this, the readers of the Star will be pleased to learn that Mr. James Davis, of Summerside, is erecting a large and up-to-date hotel right in the centre of curling.

This hostelry when completed will be sixty feet long and fifty feet wide, will have three stories besides a full-size basement. The building will contain thirty-seven bedrooms with hot and cold water connections. Baths and lavatories will be installed on the second and third floors. The different parts of the hotel will have the telephone connections with the office. The entire structure will be heated by steam, and if Mr. Davis can carry out his present plans he will have the building lighted throughout by electricity.

The construction work is progressing favorably, and in spite of the delay in getting suitable material, the building will be ready for business by the time the next tourist season arrives.

This will be good news to many who will admire Mr. Davis' optimistic spirit. It plainly shows that he has great faith in the future of this place. This enterprise of his is sure to attract to our town many more who are anxious to escape the burning heat of the more southern cities.

Here the heat of summer is moderated by the cooling breezes and by the unflagging coolness of the night. The rapid radiation of heat into a clear and generally cloudless sky causes a delightful change at nightfall. The climate is favorable to health and vigor, and proves indeed a beneficent sanitarium.

If perchance this should fall into the hands of any who are looking for health, pleasure, and prosperity, we extend the invitation to arise, gird yourself, come and enjoy its blessings!

How Grip of British Forces Amounts to Fatal Strangle Hold

British Widening Breaches in Chain of Medieval Fortresses from Gommecourt to Fricourt—Philip Gibbs Paints Glowing Picture of Battle Conditions.

(By Philip Gibbs.)
With the British Armies in the Field, July 10. — Slowly but quite steadily we are drawing our lines closer about the enemy's strong places along the whole extent of our attacking front, in order that one by one he must abandon them. Last night our troops captured new trenches about Ovillers and La Boisselle, so that the pressure upon that place is tighter, and during the past eighteen hours we have established ourselves in the Bois de Trones, and its neighborhood to the east of Montauban.

The meaning of our attacking methods and of the hard fighting at the different points may not be clear to people who do not realize the position which our men have to storm. It often has been said that the enemy's lines, which stretch from the sea to the Vosges, are one great fortress, and this is true, but it is more essentially and even technically true of the line through which we broke on July 1. The great German salient which curves round from Gommecourt to Fricourt like a chain of medieval fortresses connected by earthworks and ditches. The fortresses or strong places as we now call them, are ruined towers stronger in defense than any tower because they are filled with machine guns, trench mortars, another deadly engine of destruction—Gommecourt, Beaumont, Hammet, Thiepval, Ovillers, La Boisselle and Fricourt.

DESPERATE ATTACKS.
In spite of the perb courage of those British battalions which flung themselves against these strongholds on the left side of the German salient they did not fall, breaches were made in their defenses, which are now being widened and deepened. On the southern side where the attack succeeded La Boisselle, Fricourt and further eastward Metz and Montauban are ours, and attack is pushing further in to reach the strong places on the left within the fortress walls as here, while they are being weakened assaults from without.

A STRANGE GRIP.
We are gradually tightening a strangle grip on them, and if we have luck and keep striking deeper to the salient, as we have done during the past twenty-four hours Contalmaison and Ovillers, it would seem as if the strong places on this front either be penetrated by the enemy or surrounded and taken with their imprisoned troops by us.
I saw a scene of struggle for the enemy's straight-to-day almost as if they were looting into the mirror of the Lady of Lot. It seemed, strangely out, as though in image, and yet truly real and vivid, because I caught it suddenly and by accident, angled for me by a gap in a hedge by two trees on each side of the like the frame of a picture. I hied up to the lines and it was on my way back that I came upon the scene in the hedge. Through it I saw unexpectedly a scene of war, as the fields in front of me all wild, with that

Buffalo, N.Y. — "My daughter, whose picture is herewith, was much troubled because of the utter calm and beauty of the sky and golden light over all the scene it seemed to me, standing on the edge of it, less deadly, like a dream of war."
BRITISH SHELL FIRE.
It was no dream. Three of our shells followed each other in a group and burst with one explosion against the left-hand tower of Contalmaison chateau, smashed off the turret as though it were a card castle. Our shells were flinging up fountains of black earth and smoke in the German lines beyond at Pozieres. All around the battlefield there were black clouds of shell fire breaking and rising and spreading over the Ballif Wood at Ovillers and between the broken tree trunks of La Boisselle men were being killed as usual, but our shells were doing the most damage.
An extraordinary thing happened as I looked across to Chateau Contalmaison. The earthquake seemed suddenly to open in the enemy's lines and let forth the smoke of its inner fires. It gushed out in great round, dense masses and rose to great heights, spreading like the foliage of some gigantic tree. It was not a mine explosion, for a mine flings up a black mass, with jagged edges like a piece of black cardboard cut into teeth; but this was a regular uprising of curly black clouds of great volume, getting denser and coming continuously. I watched it for twenty minutes or more, and could not make out its meaning, but guessed we had blown up an ammunition store. Two great explosions, which came quite a few seconds after the first vomit of smoke, suggested this, so I went away from the picture through the gap in the trees down into the valley.
Where I passed the enemy's shells were coming rather near. A heavy one burst on a knoll close by, and the officers and men were watching with that curious smile men have at times when they know their lives depend upon a freak of chance. It is an ironical smile, and rather grim.

weed which is ruining so many harvest fields of France. Mametz Wood I knew at once by the queer shape of it, with a great bite out of its western side. In spite of all our shell fire it is still thick with foliage, upon which the sunlight lay, casting a great black shadow underneath. Just below it was the peak of the wood, a row of broken trees by a sunken road and a triangle trench for which our men fought desperately, so that it changed hand three times before they won it finally on Friday afternoon. To the left of Mametz Wood and on a line with it was Contalmaison, and on the left of that Ballif Wood, which we captured and lost again the day before yesterday, and then, further to the left, Ovillers and La Boisselle, and completing the crescent, La Boisselle itself.

A Pre-Raphaelite Picture.
Between the gap in the hedge I saw again one of the world's great battlefields, and every detail of it was so clearly, sharply defined in the sunlight that it was like a pre-Raphaelite picture painted in vivid colors. I could count the shell holes in the holes in the roofs of Contalmaison village, and the chateau there standing to the right of the little wood was brought so closely forward by the stereoscopic effect that I could look into the blackness of its broken windows.
Down below me were our trenches, and I saw our men in them. Some of them were outside the trenches, strolling about in the open in little groups or walking about on a lone track, as though taking a quiet half hour of this Sunday afternoon, and yet they were in the centre of a battlefield, and over their heads came an incessant flight of shells—our shells—which I could see falling in the German lines and in the fields about them. German shells were bursting with dull crashes and with clouds of black and greenish smoke. All the power of destruction was at work, but

Your Boys and Girls

Below are a few menus that are especially good for a growing child. They are well balanced and nourishing as well:
Breakfast: A plate of well cooked cereal with sugar and cream. Then a soft boiled egg, a couple of slices of bacon, or a bit of creamed codfish, with plenty of whole wheat bread and butter, a little butter, a little jam or marmalade, milk, or cocoa made with only enough of the cocoa to color, and lastly fruit, which is best in the form of apples, oranges or grapes, according to the time of year. The starchy food or cereal should be served first and the fruit last.
Dinner: Soup made with meat stock if the stock is allowed to stand and the grease skimmed off when it is cold, otherwise, cream soups are better; meat, preferably chicken, chop, or fresh fish cooked without grease, baked potato, a fresh vegetable, with a simple sweet dessert. Sweets should always be given at the end of the meal.
Supper: Whole wheat bread and butter, stewed fruit or some simple preserve, milk or cocoa. For variety light puddings, such as custards or gelatine puddings, sponge cake or oatmeal cookies.

Fashions and Fads.
Black net robes for evening are bordered with colored silk.
Broad bands of fur will be seen on the tunics of fall dresses.
Gold brocade silk makes the prettiest of evening slippers.
Castor and gray are the best colors after black—for shoes.
Broad-brimmed high-crowned hats are in vogue of two colors.
Mexican colored wool embroidery is much seen on models of serge.
Dark veils bordered with white are much liked by Frenchwomen.
The vogue for gray shoes has increased the demand for gray gloves. Cyclamen-colored satin veiled with royal blue net is a new combination.
Coatees of white serge are made to be worn with navy taffeta dresses.
The modified circular skirt with belt is in high favour for tailored suits.
A new sailor hat is the Puritan, with high crown and drooping brim. Chinese designs in color on net foundations are a feature of the new laces.
Modifications of the kimono sleeve are seen in some of the new coats.
Gray lace and gray crepe de chine combine to make a very distinguished Louise.
Full net skirts are charming over pleated satin foundations for dancing frocks.
New children's coats, it is said, are to be made of two favourite plis fabrics.
Navy, tan and blue crepe de chine will be used for some of the most serviceable waists.
Malina and chantilly laces will be most favored in the great lace season that is coming.

Incandescent Gas Lighting.

The remarkable economy of the incandescent gas lamp is by no means either its chief or even an important claim for popularity. It meets better than any other source of artificial light the requirements of ideal light.
In the color of the light produced it is far superior to any other illuminant in general and universal use. The investigations of acknowledged authorities indicate that the approximation of artificial daylight the gas mantle has at least one and one-half times the value of the carbon-filament electric lamp.
This quality is highly desirable, indeed absolutely essential where the approximation of daylight color values is important. For lighting shops, displaying haberdashery, suitings, gowns, millinery, etc., the incandescent gas lamp is not even remotely approached by any other incandescent lamp.
Of all the manifold advantages of gas light, perhaps the most important is its favourable effect upon the eyes. The development of the incandescent electric lamp with its intense brilliant and glaring filament has been accompanied by hitherto unheard of prevalence of eye troubles and diseases which are forcing themselves upon the attention of the medical fraternity. This is resulting in a greater appreciation of the soft mellow quality of gas light and is rapidly enlarging its field of use.—July 13, 1906.

SUMMER DIET.
It is seldom that I give advice, to readers, as to diet; the doctors do it, and their price has started many a riot. "Excelsior and bass-wood meal," the gifted doctor holers, "you ought to eat, if good you'd feel—now cough up seven dollars." The summer's hard on brain and nerve, and makes us total-lossy; some simple rules we should observe, if we'd be feeling fussy. We ought to fill ourselves with greens, to roastin' ears be treated; for eatin' pork and beefsteak means that we'll be overheard, you wouldn't wear your winter duds when solar rays are busy, yet eatin' meat and starchy spuds is surely just as dizzy. I journey forth with stately tread, where garden peas is growing, and eat a luscious cabbage head, when hunger's pangs I'm knowin'. No well done porterhouse for me! That diet is unholly; I pluck a turnip from the tree, and Fletcherize it slowly. No sweetened drinks, but Adam's ale, around my stomach washes, and when I hunger I regale my works with prunes and squashes. By eatin' things like these my health is buttressed strong and pillared, and I will bet a slice of wealth that I can whip Jesse Willard.

Spring Suitings!

Have just opened our new Spring Suitings. We were fortunate in securing a splendid range of English Worsteds and Irish and Scotch Tweeds.

Notwithstanding the scarcity of the woollens and the drawbacks in freights, we are able to show as good a selection as before the war. The latest in cut, the best in make. Write for samples and self-measuring cards.
