THE CORNED BEEF BOARDER. A few years since, the capital of one of the New England States boasted of but on lie house, which was a very creditable es-tablishment, by the way, and at which, as at the present time, you can make sure of a very comfortable and satisfactory accommodation, on reasonable terms. Then, as now, this house was the temporary home of the Splons and Lycurgueses of the State, when thei legislative duties drew them to the capital.

Mr. F -. the proprietor of the house at time to which I allude, found that he had all sorts of men to deal with, the State Representalives being composed of farmers, ship-builders, land speculators, lumber merchants,

With his associates, Mr. G—took up his guarters at the public house kept by Mr. F—He was delighted with the breakfasts of venison steak, the dinners of turkies and moose meat, and other corresponding accommodations; but really the rate of board was more than he felt able to-pay. Accordingly, he applied to the landlard to know if he could not board him for less than the usual price.

I should be very happy to accommodate you," said Mr. F—politely, "but I should lose by the operation. I have the best of everything on my table, and my expenses are so large that I could not live if I were to reduce my prices."

I should not live if I were to reduce my prices.
