loving me! Oh, I was wrong to accept your generosity, I was wrong to make you my betrothed; I should have known that sorrow would come of it!" exclaimed Cecil, in deep agitation and sympathy, although so throbb of love stirred his heart for the beautiful girl clinging to him in such passionate love.

"No, no," cried Amber, wildly, still holding him, though he tried to place her gently back in the chair. "No, no, dear Cecil, never say that sorrow came of our betrothal, for it is the pride and glory of my life; and I would that we might be wedded this hour that I might dismiss the haunting fears of being torn away from you by that wicked old man, my grandfather. Ah, Cecil, darling, would that you loved me enough to make me yours to day!"

The wild words were uttered, and she waited in sickening suspense and shame for his answer. She knew, though she dared not look up at his deadly pale face, how surprised and perhaps disgusted he must feel at her bold hints, almost entreaties, for an immediate marriage.

He was indeed silent a few minutes from surprise and trouble, then he said, gently:

"Calm yourself, dear Amber, for there is no cause for these tears. You need not fear Judge Camden, for you shall remain with us at Ronnycastle, in my mother's charge until—until I can make arrangements for our early marriage."

Ab, how cruelly it pained his heart, still sore and aching from Violet's loss, to promise Amber an early marriage; but her distress wounded him, and the debt of gratitude he owed her must be paid, at any cost.

But her agitation only increased, and she cried, in anguish:

"Alas, alas, he may come at any moment to tear me from you! Oh, Cecil, dear Cecil, forgive me if I seem unreasonably—if I speak where I ought to be silent; but I swear to you that my whole life's happiness rests on your instant decision, and on keeping of your faith with me!"

"What would you have me do, Amber?" he asked in a perplexed tone, thinking to himself that although her tears were exaggerated, it was best to humor her hysterical mood.

With a great throb of hope at her heart, she answered:

"I can never be safe from that vindictive old man until I am your wife, dear Cecil; and if you care for me, if you value my happiness at all, surely you will consent to my wish. Listen! my phatton is at the gate waiting. Let us fly this hour to Washington and be married. Then we can return and defy my tyrannical guardian!"

There was a long pause. Amber hid her face against his shoulder, and the mother and son looked at each other, his eyes questioning, hers grave, but affirmative.

"You cannot refuse," her grave eyes said, sadly enough, for she was shocked and pained at the girl's boldness.

Amber lifted her head proudly.

"I am refused. Very well, I will go," she began, drawing back from him, but he answered, quietly:

"You are hasty, Amber; I was about to say that it should be as you wish. You will excuse me one moment while I get ready," and he went out, soon returning wrapped in his thick fur-lined overcoat, for a long, cold drive lay before them, and the air was thick with snow-flakes.

Surely never was elopement so quickly planned before, for in ten minutes they were seated in the phatton warmly wrapped about in heavy robes.

"Does it beat?" asked the woman and the gray pony was skimming over the road to Washington, bearing the handsome pair—Amber thrilling with joy, Cecil heavy-hearted and miserable.

The air was keenly cold, and the snow began to fall so fast that the air was thick with whirling flakes. Amber held the reins herself, and urged the pony to his highest speed as they flew over mile after mile of the lonely road in the gloom of the wintry afternoon.

Every moment was an hour to her impatient heart until they should reach the minister's and be made one ere Cecil learned that his fair young love, so cruelly torn away from him, was already widowed and had always been true to him at heart. Let but this knowledge reach him ere the marriage, and Amber knew that all her hopes would be overthrown.

It frightened her to think of the letter to Cecil lying hidden on her breast inside the folds of her warm seal-skin jacket, and she determined to destroy it at the very first opportunity.

They were five miles on their way now, and they had come so fast that the gray pony was reeking with sweat in spite of the wintry cold. Cecil ventured to expostulate, but she turned on him with a white, reproachful face.

"One would think you were reluctant to reach Washington!" she exclaimed.

"You mistake me, dear Amber; but you will kill the poor animal if you keep up this rate of speed!"

For answer she touched the pony's back with the whip, and the brave little animal flew forward like the wind, maintaining its high rate of speed for half a mile.

Then—perhaps from exhaustion, perhaps from some obstruction in the road—Cecil never knew which—an accident happened.

The brave pony stumbled and fell, and Cecil and Amber were both thrown violently out of the phatton, on either side of the road into the soft white bed of snow with which Mother Nature was spreading the earth.

CHAPTER XLVI.

Cecil was very fortunate, for he rose unscathed from the ground, with the exception of a few bruises.

But he trembled with dread when he saw Amber lying still as death on the pile of rocks where she had fallen.

"Oh, horrors! was she dead? It was more than likely, for her face was death-like, her eyes closed, and there was a bleeding wound near her temple, where it had struck in falling upon a sharp rock.

The poor pony lay among the shafts of the overturned phatton, as he had fallen, and Cecil surmised that he had broken a limb; but he had no time to investigate, for Amber needed instant attention.

It seemed like a merciful provision of Providence that the accident had happened just in front of a neat, pretty cottage, and the inhabitants had witnessed it from their windows. A woman and a little girl hurried out, and helped Cecil to carry Amber into the house.

"Oh, the pretty lady; she is dead!" whispered the child, as the death-white face of Amber rested among the pillows of the sofa.

Cecil feared that she was right, and he hastily unfastened her heavy fur jacket, and threw it back to place his hand on her heart. As he did so, the hidden letter slipped from its concealment and fell to the floor. He noticed it, but went on with his investigation, feeling anxiously for the pulsation of Amber's heart.

"Does it beat?" asked the woman of the house, anxiously.

"Very faintly, I think. This may be only a deep swoon. Will you bring some water and bathe her head, please?"

The frightened woman obeyed, and then Cecil said, courteously:

"I will go for a doctor if you will direct me to the nearest one."

"There is one two miles away, sir," and while she was giving explicit directions, the little fair-haired girl crept up timidly with the letter she had picked up from the floor.

"The letter, sir, that dropped from the lady's jacket."

"Don't pester the good man, Millie," said her mother, reprovingly, but Cecil patted the little sunny head kindly, and took the letter from her hand with a careless glance at the superscription.

He gave a start of surprise, and his heart leaped strangely into his throat.

The letter was addressed to himself in the beautiful, beloved, familiar writing of his lost Violet!

He comprehended that Amber had lied to him and kept back this letter, the mere touch of which made his blood whirl in dizzy waves through his throbbing heart.

But there was no time to read it now. Thrusting it against his heart, he dashed out of the door, and hurried in quest of the doctor.

Within half a mile he encountered the person he was seeking, riding rapidly toward him on horseback, followed by the gardener from Golden Willows.

"Doctor Perry, I was just going in quest of you. Miss Laurens has been thrown from her phatton half a mile back from here, and seriously injured, I fear," cried Cecil.

But the old physician answered, brusquely:

"My God, man, I can't stop! I have been summoned post-haste to Judge Camden, who has been very strangely seized, and is thought to be dying. Let Tom Smith here ride back for my neighbor, Doctor Jenner, and the old physician galloped past like the wind toward Golden Willows.

"Will you bring the doctor for Miss Laurens, Smith, as I am on foot, and should make poor progress?" asked Cecil, anxiously.

"Certainly, Mr. Grant, and glad to oblige you," answered the gardener, turning his horse's head and galloping back in the direction he had come.

Cecil walked quickly back through the high wind and flying snow-flakes to the cottage, where he found Amber still wrapped in deep unconsciousness, despite all the efforts the mistress of the cottage had put forth for her recovery.

CHAPTER XLVII.

During Cecil's absence, Jasper Melrose, the husband of the kind woman at the cottage, returned on horseback from the village, and his wife begged him to see to the poor pony, lying so still in the road, under the upturned phatton.

A moment's examination told the truth. The gray beauty was dead, driven to exhaustion by the merciless haste of his despotic mistress.

Cecil had scarcely returned, before Tom Smith arrived with Doctor Jenner, who looked grave, as he examined the unconscious Amber, and declared that she was suffering from concussion of the brain.

"It is impossible to say just now whether she will ever rally from her swoon or not. She must be put to bed, and we will do what we can, and hope for the best," he said.

He deftly sewed up the gaping wound on her temple, remarking that it was a great misfortune she had received it, since if she lived, it must disfigure her beauty for life with a deep scar.

Mrs. Melrose put Amber to bed in her best room, and the physician declared his intention of remaining all night. He supposed that there would be a handsome fee from Judge Camden for attendance on his granddaughter, and determined to spare no attention.

The cottage people supposed that the accident had been the result of a runaway, and Cecil did not undecide to them. He did not wish any one to know of the elopement that had ended so tragically.

He did not love Amber, but his heart was full of grief and pain over her fate; and if she had died, and the truth of her treachery had never come to light, he would have cherished her memory always as something sweet and sacred.

Given now he had no conception of the great importance of the letter she had intercepted from Violet. For why should she write to him, the heartless girl, who had deserted him so cruelly, and was now the bride of another? It was only to taunt him with her happiness, of course.

So he felt no real resentment against Amber for her deceitfulness. He judged her mercifully, thinking she had withheld the letter to spare him pain.

And, in his anxiety over her perilous condition, he scarcely remembered Violet's letter, although it lay, unread, upon his breast. Why should he think of fickle, selfish Violet, when her noble cousin lay stricken down in all her youth and beauty, never, perhaps, to rise again.

In those moments of his sorrow and gratitude, he was very near to loving Amber, at last, for pity is akin to love.

Suddenly, Doctor Jenner approached him, and said:

"It is very probable that she will lie in this comatose condition all night, and as you can do no good by remaining, might it not be a good plan to go and break the news to the family at Golden Willows, and bring Mrs. Shirley here to see after the young lady?"

Dumb with amazement and indignation, Cecil stood passive in the clasp of her clinging arms, while she raved on:

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N.S., NOV. 25, 1898.

Our Streets.

The condition of our streets has not in any way improved since last we wrote upon the subject. Popular opinion has pronounced that no improvement can reasonably be expected until hard frost sets in, which will probably be not very long now. Main street is certainly in a most disgraceful condition, and remarks that have been made concerning it during the past few weeks, both by those who drive and those who walk, have been forcible if not at all times elegant in the extreme. Wolfville, however, is not alone in the matter of bad streets. The same sound of complaint comes from nearly every town in the Province. Most harrowing tales have been published in the press concerning the streets of Kentville, Parrishboro, Windsor, Amherst and other towns, and the county roads are also as bad as could be wished for. The reason has been a most trying one on the kind of streets and roads prevalent in Nova Scotia. Continuous rain has fallen and the light material of which our roads are constructed has been readily ground into mud. This is especially the case where new material has been put on during the summer in large quantity. On our own main street such a work was done. The material was not at all suitable for road building and entirely too much of it was put on. The result is that the wet weather and the large amount of traffic over it has turned the street into a veritable "slough of despond." Disagreeable as the present state of affairs is, and depressing as the influence is upon the trade of the town, we trust that it may ultimately result in good. What we need is a more scientific method of road-building. Better material and more knowledge of the construction of suitable streets would produce what we require. The ACADIAN has repeatedly urged the use of stone and we shall continue to do so. Good streets will undoubtedly cost money, but they are a necessity, and in the end will well repay the cost expended. Year after year we have gone on repeating the same mistakes, and this too has cost money, with nothing to show for it. The time has now come when we cannot afford to continue such a career. Good streets we must have at any cost.

Sheldon's Newspaper.

The Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon's books, now so universally read, make it plain that that writer's hopes of the regeneration of the world lie in getting individuals more and more to do their duty to Christian principles, no matter what the sacrifice involved. In the best known of his books, "In His Steps," he clearly looks to the newspaper, carried on upon Christian principles, as largely the hope of the "coming kingdom." In looking about him for a newspaper upon his model, he seems to have lit on the Montreal Witness, to which he has addressed a letter, part of which we quote:

"I have read the Witness with much interest. I do not say that I know of any other daily paper in the United States that is conducted on such high Christian principles. I wish I did, for if ever we needed such a paper in our country we need it now."

"Let me express to you my appreciation which make a paper like the Witness a possibility. I have always believed it possible for a Christian daily to succeed. You have proved that it can. So much of the ideal newspaper in 'In His Steps' is therefore real."

"I pray that you may continue to be blessed in your work. I do not know a more glorious opportunity for building up the kingdom on earth than by means of Christian Journalism. I take the greatest pleasure in sending the copies of the Witness to newspaper friends of mine for their inspection."

Very cordially yours,
CHARLES M. SHELDON,
Topeka, Kansas.

Town Council Meeting.

A special meeting of the town council was held on Tuesday evening at which the Mayor, and all the councillors and the recorder were present. After the minutes of the last meeting had been read, the Mayor stated that the meeting had been called to receive a petition from ratepayers and to consider the condition of the streets. The petition was then read by the clerk. It was signed by twenty-five citizens and called the attention of the council to the present condition of Main street, asking that the material put on during the summer be removed, or such other step taken as will improve the condition of the street. Considerable discussion ensued, and it was thought that it would be impossible to do any work that would be effective as late in the season. The whole matter of streets was freely discussed, and some of the councillors spoke quite strongly on the subject. A resolution was passed that the petition be tabled indefinitely.

A leading New York newspaper gives the following and noteworthy testimony: "It is no wonder that every oppressed people in the world, dimly awakening to the possibility of better government, prays for English intervention and English rule. If our island possessions are to become anything but dens of corruption, their government must be undertaken in the English spirit, with the English model before our eyes."

Educational Notes for the Guidance of Teachers and Trustees.

The following notes are called from the Journal of Education for October, which has just been sent to the Secretary of Trustees in each section of the Province. It will be of much importance to read the full text, of which these notes may be regarded as mere hints.

II.

The number of legal teaching days for half year ending Feb. 3 is 108.

III.

The Teachers' "pass" will be 33 per cent on each "imperative" in the course, after the 31st of December next.

This means that a candidate who has not gone up for the lower grades, and who may have obtained a grade A certificate, cannot obtain a License higher than D (provisional) without attendance at the Normal School. So far as the teaching profession is concerned it is compulsory to take the examinations in the various grades in order.

IV.

The High School "pass" of 25 per cent is not affected by this change.

V.

Entrance into the Normal School is on the High School "pass" as heretofore.

VI.

Teachers cannot engage a school for a period less than one year without the consent of the Inspector. Provincial moneys cannot be drawn by trustee or teacher for such schools. See section 28 (1) of statute.

VII.

The Principal of a graded school must hold at least a first class License, or a second class teacher, must be specially recommended by the Inspector. The engagement of a third class teacher as principal of such school is illegal under any circumstance. See 120-124 of this Journal.

VIII.

After the present year the text book will not be required in the hands of the pupils of the Common School grades at all, for the study of grammar. "Lessons in English," by Marshall and Kennedy, is prescribed as a guide for the teacher in giving lessons to these grades. The work must be done orally. The pupils will not be expected to have the text book.

IX.

Colkin's History of Canada will take the place of his history of British America, after the present year. Also Hamilton Smith's Arithmetic will be superseded by Part IV. of the Progressive Arithmetic.

X.

Jackson's New Style of Vertical Writing, at five cents each, and the Royal, slipshod hand, are on the list of books prescribed.

It is hoped that these references to the contents of the Journal may prove useful to all, and lead those specially interested to read every editorial note in it. Ask the Secretary of Trustees for it.

COLIN W. BOSCOE,
Lecturer of Schools.

The greatest of the intercollegiate football matches, Yale vs. Harvard, is over, and victory is perched upon the crimson banner of Harvard. The result was altogether unexpected. Few thought that Harvard would beat Yale, and only looked for a favorable showing or else a draw. It was eight long years since Harvard showed any superiority on the gridiron, and in all those eight years Yale has been manifestly Harvard's superior. So the result of Saturday's game was appalling to the enthusiasts. Yale was not only beaten, but received a crushing defeat, the score being 17 to 0. The crimson crossed Yale's blue three times, and two of the touches resulted in goals. The splendid physical condition of Harvard's players, their speed, endurance, superior kicking and united attack, won the game. Yale fought with magnificent pluck, but desperate as her injuries were they had not the effect of stemming the overwhelming tide of victory.

Answer a Fool According to His Folly.

These are my last words to the Academic young gentleman who is too infatuated to know when he is well used, and who cannot distinguish between a kind word and an insult, and who as a beneficiary of Horton Academy, abuses his bread without paying for it, and abuses the charity which he does not, and cannot appreciate, the people being judges. "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you."

(This must end a controversy that has already gone too far. The ACADIAN is pleased to publish any communication of general interest, but we think the public has ceased to be interested in this discussion, and no good is likely to come from it.—Ed.)

THE NEW REMEDY.

Nature is full of hidden forces that are being utilized and yet to be utilized for the benefit and upbuilding of mankind. One of the most important of these of recent date is Prof. Warner's Liquid Ozons. People are talking about it wherever it has been introduced. It is selling more readily every day, and even in places where it has not been advertised, from one person telling another of the benefit received. It is a great tonic and builds up the system and thereby throws off disease. It is good for almost all complaints, but particularly effective in Dyspepsia, and general debility, and is also a great remedy for sore throat, bruises, etc. It is not a drug but the vital principle of life, and the most delicate can take it without harm.

Now is a good time of the year to take it, and fortify the system for the winter. Get a circular at the druggists, which tells all about this wonderful remedy, and try it, and you will see that it all or more than is claimed for it.

Gasperan Items.

Miss Laura Williams has gone to New York where she intends spending the winter. On her way she spent a few days in Boston with her sister, Miss Gaudin, who is fitting herself for mission work at Dr. Gordon's Training School.

Mr Alvin Graham and family have moved from the mountain into our village where they will reside for the winter.

Our school, under the efficient management of Miss Annie Ferguson and Mrs. Lena Benjamin, is doing first class work. The children are looking forward with much pleasure to getting into their new quarters which will be ready for them by the first of the year.

Mrs Bains and her daughter Bessie, have recently returned from Boston where they were spending the summer. Our fruit growers are very well pleased with the returns they receive every two weeks from London. Hope the good prices may continue throughout the winter.

We notice by a Wolfville paper that a man from this village is supposed to have lost his life in that town together with five of the elect. We recently heard a man threatening vengeance on account of the bad condition of the streets in Wolfville, but did not think he would be so unwise as to try to pave the streets with the "precious souls" of the citizens. He was probably unaware of the depth of the mud and so was engulfed before he had time to make a solid foundation upon which to stand. If the town council would appoint a "man from Gasperan" as commissioner of streets they would soon have a highway on which those "precious souls" could travel in safety.

Belleisle, Annapolis County.

Miss Bessie B. Parker, well known in Wolfville, as having frequently visited the home of her grandfather, the late W. C. Blackadder, left on Tuesday to make an extended visit to her aunt, Mrs. W. B. It was accompanied by the following address:

To Sister Bessie Parker:

As you are about to leave this community and make your home in a far country, we, the members of Belleisle Division, No. 511, Sons of Temperance, wish to express our deep regret on being called to part with so valued a member.

In your departure this Division loses a consistent charter member, a willing helper and a true friend. As a slight token of the esteem in which you are held by this Division, we ask you to accept this Book (a copy of the Bible), with the sincere wish that pleasant reminiscences of the Division may ever be fresh in your mind, that your life may be characterized by its teachings, and that you may ever find comfort and consolation within its sacred pages. And, dear sister, in leaving us rest assured you will carry with you the best wishes of the Division for your future prosperity and every happiness in your new home.

The Editor's Dream.

Many an editor will envy the "brother quill" who could dream as follows:

We had sweet dreams the other night, When all around was still— We dreamed we saw a host of folks Pay up their printers' bill.

We wish the dream would come to pass And our empty pockets fill— Tar da um ta da diddle dum, To tempt to iddle dill.

[A valued subscriber handed us the above with his subscription a few days since. We publish it with the hope that many of our readers may see the force of the joke.—Ed.]
