Mr. Speaker, of course we will support this bill. But I thought it my duty to remind the government that those measures should have been introduced long before today. Politically, they will be exploited as they must. But, in any event we are very happy to support them and trust that this government, with regard to industry, will find the means, take the steps and implement programs to create jobs and thus, I imagine, spare us the need to think only in terms of social measures. But there again, we have to consider those proposals which have been put before the House as essential, in view of the complete economic fiasco we have seen.

I doubt that a prosperous Canada can be built through social measures. There will always be groups that will have to be looked upon as human responsibilities; I mean senior citizens and similar groups. In a better economic climate than that we know today, we would not be forced to introduce measures which, to my mind, bring nothing positive to the economic sector. Over all, it remains that some of the people now in need will benefit from those proposals. We shall support them in the hope that the minister will take good note of the remarks I have made, at least the ones she may consider positive.

● (1712)

[English]

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I welcome Bill C-10 for several reasons. It would be fair to say that many of us in the House of Commons have felt a disparity in various pieces of legislation where tax credits were given either for family allowance or other income tax policies. We are all aware that tax benefits do not assist families with the greatest need for federal, provincial or municipal assistance.

The first proposal contained in Bill C-10 is to reduce the amount of family allowance to $20 per month. Although the family allowance will be reduced to $20 on January 1, 1979, for families with incomes below $18,000 there will be a benefit. Each family will receive $200 per year for each child in the family.

I welcome Bill C-10 because it contains measures for redistribution. This is the first time since I have been here that a piece of legislation has been brought in which appears to be a negative income tax, due to the fact that one does not have to have high income in order to benefit from the tax policy change. Lower income families, regardless of whether they pay income tax, will receive a $200 allowance. For that reason I believe we on this side of the House, as well as those on the other side, welcome this proposal.

The $50 child adjustment will be eliminated. Also I understand there will be a change in the amount of moneys which can be deducted for income tax purposes in the 16 and 17-year old bracket. The present child benefit system consists of family allowance of $25.68 per month per child, with a child tax exemption of $460 a year for children under the age of 16 years, and over the age of 16, in the 16 to 17-year bracket, a tax exemption of $840, as well as the $50 per child adjustment to the general tax deduction.

For example, in order to benefit from the $840 exemption for 16 and 17-year old children, one must have an income to tax. In other words, those with the highest incomes receive the greatest benefits from the tax exemption system. Those on the lower end of the economic scale received proportionately less until they reached a cut-off point where the family could not take advantage of any of the tax exemptions.

● (1722)

If we can say anything regarding Bill C-10, surely it is that this legislation involves a fair distribution and a re-addressing of benefits to people with lower incomes and those who financially require more assistance from programs of this type. Under this legislation, I understand that families with incomes of $18,000 or less, with one child, will receive a $200 rebate, and families with the same income and two children will receive a $400 rebate. This will progressively decrease as the family income increases. For example, a family with an income of $22,000 and with one child will receive $20 per month in family allowance, but no tax credit. I understand, as well, that a family with an income of $26,000 and two children will not receive tax credit benefits.

The theory is that the higher the income of a family the less the need for assistance from the federal government. I agree with that philosophy, and in a time of financial restraint when we know there are low income earners in Canada who require assistance, this is a mandate to which we must address ourselves. We must apportion those funds we have available for programs such as family allowance to ensure that they go to those people who require them the most and where the need is the greatest.

I compliment the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) for taking a bold initiative, taking moneys payable to the federal government and directing them to those areas where there is the greatest need. I am sure it would be fair to say that all hon. members of parliament have been approached in the last several years by constituents asking members if there is not a better way of reallocating family allowance funds. Obviously a family with an income of $100,000 a year does not require assistance, and the assistance provided through this allowance would not make any difference to their well-being.

Although this was supposed to be a universal plan, it has always seemed to me that we made one error. It was that, a family in the $8,000 to $10,000 income bracket had to follow the same rules as those followed by a family with an income of $50,000 or $60,000. One group could take advantage of our income tax legislation in order to derive benefits, yet the other group, those families with incomes of $8,000 to $10,000, could not obtain those benefits. They ended up in a negative position because they could not claim the income tax benefits the Parliament of Canada had provided in the legislation. In other words, it was an unfair situation. Those at the higher income level could take advantage of the tax deductions for children, but obviously those at the lower end of the income scale could not take advantage of those deductions and, therefore, they derived no benefit from them.

It is my understanding that approximately 2.4 million families of the 3.6 million families who receive family allowances will benefit from the new system to the extent of $200 per child per year. In other words, two thirds of the families with children will be the recipients of the benefits of this program. Putting this another way, one third of the families with children, up until the present time have been at a distinct advantage. When looking strictly at numbers it is obvious that Canadians with higher incomes were given higher priority by previous parliaments.

I do not wish to be lengthy, because obviously this legislation has received the approval of members of the opposition. I want to say that I hope this is a beginning and not an ending. We have brought in innovative legislation which will be applauded by most Canadians. I hope the move does not stop there. If this theory applies well in respect of family allowances, and apparently we have concurrence from other parties in the House, perhaps we should address ourselves to the equally grave injustices or problems that exist in respect of old age pensions. Surely we have the same situation there where old age pensions amount to approximately $155 a month, indexed to the cost of living. These pensions increase as the cost of living increases every three months, whether the recipient requires the money or not. We are reducing family allowances by approximately $6 to $8 per child per month, on the understanding that we will redistribute the money saved to those at the lower end of the income scale.

I have calculated a few figures in order to compare what we could do in respect of old age pensions if we followed the same scheme. By eliminating the age exemption we could save the government about $150 million per annum. By de-indexing the OAS we would save approximately $350 million per annum. However, if we did that, GIS recipients would also suffer. Thus the only responsible initiative we could take of this kind would be to de-index OAS for those who receive only OAS, ensuring that pensions including both OAS and GIS continued fully indexed.

In other words, what we would be doing is redirecting approximately $350 million by removing the indexing of OAS and redirecting that money to GIS rather than putting it into government coffers. In this way the people who need assistance would receive greater benefits. Those people with higher incomes would receive less. I suspect this is not revolutionary since we have accepted this principle in respect of family allowances. Is there something different between family allowances and old age security, or should we apply the same principles, providing the greatest amount of money to those with the greatest need?

An hon. Member: Are you trying to get them to vote against you too?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the hon. member not know that the allowance is still indexed?

Mr. Anderson: There would be a total saving of $350 million with which to increase the GIS, at about the same magnitude as proposed in Bill C-5. We must be careful that the gains for the elderly poor are not at the expense of the near poor. Obviously we would not wish to rob the near poor to pay the poor. I suggest that this House and those people who have an interest in assisting people who require help should look at a plan on the lines of the one I have suggested, or in some other form.

• (1732)

I realize that over the years some members of the House have complained about the OAS and claim there should be a higher limit, but I do not agree. Certainly it would be appreciated by senior citizens, but I suspect that an amount added to the basic pension would go to people who do not require it. I am using the same principle as that in the legislation before the House now to ask if there is not something we can do in that area. Perhaps there is no concern about it, however. I believe there is, and I believe the principle could be transferred to the old age pensioner in order that those who have the greatest need derive the greatest benefit, and those who have the least need derive the minimum benefit.

I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is present, will see if some such plan can be introduced. Hon. members will know that there is no extra money for programs of this type; all we are doing in this legislation is redistributing some money. If my premise is correct and we do not have additional funds for social programs, then I suggest we look at redistribution so that money will go to the people with the greatest need, not only in family allowances but also to people receiving the old age pension.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by correcting something the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) said. He said he wanted to apply the same principle to the old age pension legislation by making sure the OAS was not indexed. He said that would be the same principle as that in the family allowance bill. If he looks at the bill, however, he will see that we are not going to end indexing of the basic family allowance. Indexing will continue.

The hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), who is not in the House at the moment, was sensitive to the very just criticisms of the government made by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae) who spoke of the inequities in our economy and in our society. I think he misunderstood the position of the hon. member for Broadview who said we would support the bill, and that the position outlined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is the position of the party. The hon. member for Broadview pointed out that this legislation is only one small step toward remedying some of the inequities in our society.

I want to take a few minutes to talk about five or six different things this evening. This bill could be a major reform if a few things are cleared up. I agree with the minister that it could be a watershed in social policy in this country, but that will only happen if several points are clarified.

Like the hon. member for Broadview and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I believe we have to be concerned about the redistribution of income and, indeed, I believe the minister is genuinely concerned about that, although I am not sure she was last night, judging from the speech she made. We have to realize, despite the statistics used by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) in the House the other day, that in the last 20 years the gap between rich and poor has not narrowed. The figures used in the House yesterday can be obtained from Statistics Canada. Perhaps some hon. members do not think that Statistics Canada, the little organization of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), is accurate, but I think it is.

The figures show that in 1951 the richest 20 per cent of our population received some 42.8 per cent of the national income, while in 1975 the wealthiest 20 per cent of our population received 43 per cent of the national income.

Mr. Breau: What about other income?

Mr. Nystrom: All right; let us take the bottom 20 per cent of the population. In 1951 they received 4.4 per cent of the national income, while in 1975 they received 4 per cent of the national income. The hon. member, who comes from New Brunswick, will probably say that everybody's income went up and, of course, it did. We are living in a country with immense resources, and all kinds of technology, and we hope, all kinds of intelligent people. Naturally the wealth of the country went up, but the gap between the rich and the poor is not narrowing as the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan) would have us believe. It has remained the same for 25 years.

Canadians are not out on the streets without any food, but there have been reports that a lot of Canadians are ill nourished and cannot afford to buy nutritious food. The problem of poverty in this country is well documented, so we have to be concerned about the redistribution of wealth. This is the point the hon. member for Broadview was making, and I want to put that on the record.

Mr. Breau: Be careful; we will read it.

Mr. Nystrom: I am being very careful about what I say.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, if we clarify two or three things this will be watershed legislation and a major change in the government's thinking on social programs. If that happens, I would join the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in thanking the minister for introducing the bill.

I should like to deal with some positive parts of the bill, and then raise my questions, Mr. Speaker. On the question of redistribution of income, the bill does not only redistribute the money in the family allowance plan, but the pie is bigger. More money is being put in, and there is a genuine attempt to redistribute it. For example, there is the tax credit of $200 per child. People earning under $18,000 per year get the full benefit of that. People earning over $26,000 do not get the benefit, as it is phased out between $18,000 and $26,000. That is the way it should be. Members of parliament earn more than $26,000, for instance. I have a four-year old child and I do not think I deserve the tax credit. On the income I make I think I can afford to look after the child, and other people need it more than I do.

The second positive thing I see in the bill is the introduction of demogrant for the first time, and that is something that this party has wanted for a long time. Exemptions in our tax system tend to help people in the upper income bracket and not the low income people. The tax credit system will help the low income people more than the wealthy, however, and that is a good thing.

• (1742)

I am trying to be constructive and positive. We have a demogrant and that will be paid to people whether or not they file their income tax returns. I see the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) and the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) in the House. In their ridings and mine people tend to have large families and do not file income tax returns because they are very poor. Often the poor have large families, as any sociologist would know. I think particularly of the Indian and Métis people in my riding. For example, if there are six children in a family the amount is $200 per child, or $1,200 in tax credit. I think that is good and a step in the right direction.

We always argue in this party that to stimulate the economy it must be stimulated from the bottom up. Money should be put into the hands of the low income people because they will spend that money buying consumer goods, which in turn stimulates the economy and produces jobs. That, too, is going in the right direction.

Fourth, this bill protects the concept of universality. Everyone will still get part of the family allowance. The amount is $20 a month, which I think is good to keep, but I will comment on this later.

Fifth, contrary to what the parliamentary secretary was saying, the basic family allowance will continue to be indexed and, even though it will be reduced from $26 per month to $20 per month, it will go up according to the increase in the cost of living in 1980. These are what I see as the six positive things in the bill before us.

I now come to the questions I have about the bill. At this point I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) will take me as seriously and responsibly as she did when I was talking about the positive aspects of the bill before us.

I am concerned over whether or not she has an agreement from the provinces that they will not use the extra money the welfare recipients will receive as an excuse to cut the welfare payments to the low income people. She mentions Saskatchewan. I have the right to believe that in Saskatchewan that probably will not happen. Our party has already talked to members of the Saskatchewan cabinet—

An hon. Member: Did you make a phone call?

Mr. Nystrom: —to at least two very influential ministers. I am optimistic that they will not do that. At least I hope they will not do it, and believe they will not.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

An hon. Member: You made the phone call.

Mr. Nystrom: It was not a phone call. We happen to see people personally.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Talk to the one provincial Liberal government.

Mr. Nystrom: We have nine other provincial governments in this country. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare attempting to get any commitment from the provinces to the effect that when those on welfare get the extra $200 per child, that this amount will not be taken as normal income and deducted from their welfare payments? If it is deducted, Mr. Speaker, it nullifies the whole impact of this bill before us today. It nullifies it for the people who are the most needy. As a result it does not become a redistribution of income nor does it become a redistribution of wealth. The answer to that question, I think, is fundamentally important in terms of how we, as parliamentarians, judge the progressiveness of this bill.

Miss Bégin: The answer is yes.

Mr. Nystrom: The answer is yes. Does the minister have a commitment from the provinces that they will not do that?

Miss Bégin: That is not your question. I took up the matter with the provinces and we have a meeting on that.

Mr. Nystrom: The minister says she has taken the matter up with the provinces, and I commend her for that. But I want to make sure that she has a commitment from the provinces because the federal government, after all, does pay 50 per cent of the welfare costs.

Under the Canada Assistance Plan I think the minister has a big enough club to hold over the provinces to say to them, "Look, we want to change fundamentally one part of the social welfare system in our country, and we damn well demand you go along with us and that the welfare payments to the poor people not be reduced by $200 per child."

As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said, we in this House have a right to get the answer to that question from the minister, who in turn has a right to get it from the provinces, before the bill passes.

As I have already mentioned, I think this House has a clout and can say to the provinces, "This is what we want. We want to put more money into the hands of the poor people of this country, and we insist on your co-operation".

As the member for Broadview has already pointed out, we are concerned about the discounters, the usurers, the rip-off artists who may go to a mother and say, "You have four children. That amounts to $800 that you will be getting in terms of a tax credit. We will lend you the money, but we will charge you an excessively high interest rate." If that happens it nullifies—

Miss Bégin: It is limited to 15 per cent now.

An hon. Member: Per quarter.

Mr. Nystrom: It is limited to 15 per cent per quarter, and that is still 60 per cent interest per year. It is per quarter, Mr. Speaker, and the minister will check this out. If that is not usury, then I am not sure what is. I do not see any reason why, and I know the minister means well, the government cannot talk to the people in the Department of Justice and bring to this House a companion bill that will make it illegal for people to charge this type of interest, by making it illegal for the discounters to participate and practise their so-called profession, or perhaps to make it illegal to use these cheques that come from the federal government in the form of family allowance, as security.

One of two things can be done to protect the innocent woman who needs the money now to buy things for her family. She might think that the only way she can get it is to listen to a discounter, and pay the 15 per cent interest per quarter. I would commend the minister if she could do something along this line to protect the woman from a usurer and as well for doing what is necessary to protect a bill that could be very progressive.

I have two more questions. I understand the payment to be made to the woman will come in a lump sum. Would the minister consider having the payment spread out quarterly so that a person with five children under the age of 18 who gets $1,000, would not receive a lump sum payment when the tax credits come out, but instead would get four payments three months apart for $250 each? This too would be some protection against discounters or against people who want to be fast rip-off artists. In addition, it would help the mother and the family because there would be money available on a quarterly basis to buy things for her children, for example, food, clothing or other things they might need to make their life better.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has already mentioned that we in this party object to the basic family allowance being reduced from $26 a month to $20. In reply to that the government says it is putting more into the pie. I know that. But if some of the tax loopholes were plugged, as has been suggested by some other members of my party, more money than would be necessary would be collected to keep up the payments of $26 per month. There are several loopholes that could be plugged. I am thinking particularly of the depreciation allowances to oil companies, and the capital gains benefits to people who play the stock market, etc. If loopholes such as those were plugged and made part of our taxation law which would be as progressive as this part, then there would be more than enough money to leave the family allowances at $26 per child per month, instead of reducing the amount to $20.

● (1752)

I hope the minister can answer some of my questions. The first question has to do with the provinces not taking advantage of this bill to recoup more of the money they pay out in welfare. Second, can the minister assure us she will do something to protect the innocent women of this country, who get this money, from rip-off artists? Third, as I said before, consider the possibility of that payment on a quarterly basis. It could be two or three times a year, but preferably four, instead of a lump sum. If this were done this could indeed be a major reform. This bill could be a milestone or a watershed, doing something real for our country in terms of social legislation, and reforming the taxation system.

I want to make a final point. If we can introduce a tax credit in family allowances that has a bias built into the plan in favour of poor and low income people, why can it not be done throughout our entire taxation system? Why not the same philosophy running throughout our society? We could have a planned economy, using all of the resources, technology and wealth we have to create a country that would in a genuine way redistribute the wealth among the poor and low income people, the have-nots whom the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) spoke about today, instead of the system we have had for over 100 years.

Under our present system the only real judges that we have are the profit margin and the so-called competitiveness, the merits of the philosophies of the corporations which guide us. If this can be done with family allowances, let us use it as a model. It can be extended throughout our taxation system. This would make Canada truly a great place for everyone regardless of their social and economic background or where they happen to live. If we do that, a lot of people now living below the poverty line would have a decent break in life. They would have an opportunity to do something. They could provide their children with the goods they need in order to explore the roads and avenues of life. They would be a happier and healthier people living in a more harmonious society. Plug all the possible loopholes in this bill well, and use this philosophy to guide us down the road in the years ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly not take more than four minutes of the time of the House because that is all what is left today. I wish to express my views after reading time and again this bill which is not very long but which is very important for all Canadians. If we want to summarize the the general principles of that bill, I think we could say that we are going to take a chunk of all family allowances and give back a negligible part of it to a very small group and probably channel the rest towards other sectors of the economy. This is why I would not fulfil my responsibilities today if I did not draw that famous Bill C-10 to everyone's attention. I wish to expose before all Canadians the purposes, the hidden purposes of this amendment to the Income Tax Act. The bill is entitled: an Act to amend the Income Tax Act to provide for a child tax credit and to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973. After reading this title I said to myself: Here we go again with family allowances!

I remember that the last time I spoke on this subject I urged that family allowances be paid for all children without discrimination, regardless of their parents' income, in other words I consider children as real Canadian citizens. And I advocated again the principle of universality as an essential condition for all social legislation here at the federal level. This way we would not play political games at the expense of children by considering the income level of their parents. In fact everything rationalized through income tax—the rich gives back all his family allowances when he files his income tax return, but at least the child as a citizen gets justice. A serious question comes to my mind when reading this bill. I ask myself who stands to gain most from this bill, the child or the state? How much money will children get and what profits will the state, in other words the government receive from this? In his statement, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has tried to sugar the pill by attempting to show the good effects of the bill on children, even in the folder sent by the Department of National Health and Welfare to all families which begins as follows:

Dear parents:

Most families receiving family allowances will be pleased to learn about the new child tax credit announced by the federal government.

It will be a disappointment, Mr. Speaker, for perhaps 90 per cent of the families. At first sight, they will all think that poor children and families with average earnings will get more money, what with all that publicity.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.01 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 2, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

REQUESTED INCREASE IN TAX DEDUCTION FOR VOLUNTEER FIREMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity concerning volunteer fire departments in Canada, and the existing legislation under the Income Tax Act allowing volunteer firemen a maximum deduction of $300 for honorariums received—a very low figure in light of existing facts, and of grave concern to many areas of Canada including my own in Leeds and Grenville from which I have received numerous representations.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

In view of the fact that countless volunteer firemen buy their own uniforms, pay for much of their own personally-used fire equipment, and lose numerous days' pay from regular jobs by being called away to fight fires at any hour of the night or day, the House requests the government to bring in immediately an amendment to the Income Tax Act raising the meagre allowance of $300 to a higher and equitable figure more in keeping with reality and, finally, that the House condemns the government for this continued deplorable treatment and lack of respect for the indispensable efforts of volunteer firemen who comprise the greatest percentage of firemen in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF FREIGHT IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House calls on the government to take swift and decisive action to guarantee that the aborted sea lift in Frobisher Bay, Northwest Territories, does not cause hardship in that community, and that the government take immediate steps to ensure that the unloaded freight be flown to Frobisher Bay without delay and without cost to the people living in that area.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COVERAGE OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the high degree of interest among Canadians in the three-day conference of first ministers which has just concluded in Ottawa, and in view of the sharp contrast between the gloomy coverage of the constitutional conference given by the CBC compared to the far more cheerful coverage offered by CTV news and other media outlets, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale):

That this House request the Secretary of State to determine from the CBC whether the conference on which it has been reporting and commenting for the past three days was, in fact, the same conference as that being covered by CTV news and others.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED NATIONS' SUPERVISED ELECTIONS IN EMERGING NATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of pressing necessity and ever-increasing urgency. Now that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) has successfully negotiated the free, one-man one-vote UN-supervised election in South West Africa, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That he take his five western nation show on the road and arrange similar elections in Angola, Afghanistan, Burundi, Cambodia, Chad, Dahomey, West Irian, Zaire and Zambia and any nation in between that lacks a recognizable parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PENSIONS

EQUALITY FOR WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter the urgency of which will continue until this House does something about it. Therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), I move:

That this House calls on the government to recognize the contribution that women in their homes make to our economy, and as a minimum to recognize this contribution by establishing pension equality, including the equivalent of the Canada Pension Plan, for women whose work is in their homes, equal pension rights for all women between the ages of 60 and 65 regardless of marital status, increasing the pensions paid to widows under various government plans to at least 75 per cent, and the continuing payment of pensions granted to widows regardless of any subsequent change in marital status.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

CALL FOR EARLY BUDGET WITH MEASURES TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the report of the U.S. labour department, just released, showing Canada leading all other western industrialized nations in terms of the unemployment rate, and having regard to the fact that the order paper is devoid of any significant or effective economic legislation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House direct the Minister of Finance to bring forward his budget at the earliest possible date in order that any measures proposed to combat unemployment may be effected in time to meet an anticipated record level of unemployment this winter.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION TO PARLIAMENT OF REVISED CONSTITUTION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The throne speech indicated that the government had the intention of introducing in this session of parliament a revised constitutional bill. I wonder if the Prime Minister can tell us when it is the intention of the government to introduce a new constitutional proposal to parliament, and whether it is the government's intention to introduce that before, or after, the next conference relating to the constitution in early February.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): After the next conference, Mr. Speaker.

● (1412)

Mr. Clark: Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he and his government have dropped the July 1, 1979, deadline for all or any aspects of what the former Bill C-60 referred to as phase one?

Mr. Trudeau: That was not asked of me by any of the premiers either publicly or privately. I myself announced that we would not want to proceed with the provisions of Bill C-60 which cover the Senate unless we had the unanimous consent of the provinces.

Mr. Clark: My question was a little more explicit than that. It was whether the July 1 deadline applies to any aspects at all of what was called phase one in the former Bill C-60. To which aspects of that bill does the deadline apply, if any?

Mr. Trudeau: No premier asked me to change that deadline and therefore there is no reason why I should change it.

Mr. Clark: I take it, then, that the Prime Minister is sticking to that deadline with respect to every matter except the Senate.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition is quite incorrect.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to lose the opportunity to ask my final supplementary. It has to do with a document introduced by the Prime Minister on Tuesday, entitled "Agenda for Change", which I must say has a very familiar ring to it. I raise this point because there is some question about preconditions the government is attaching—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Clark: I am surprised at the nervousness members opposite are showing. If supporters of the government party will try to be quiet for a moment, I will put my question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is this: does the government insist on establishing the criteria of rapid progress toward an amending formula as a precondition to serious consideration of any or all of the seven items in the so-called "Agenda for Change" introduced on Tuesday?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

RECONSTITUTION OF COMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would he consider the immediate reconstitution of the Joint Parliamentary Committee on the Constitution which, as he knows, provided him with very valuable advice on the former Bill C-60? Would he consider reconstituting that joint committee, and would he refer to it those proposals which were presented by himself and by other first ministers to the recent first ministers' conference, so that it could study them and provide the right hon. gentleman with an all-party federal input prior to the February conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would certainly be prepared to consider that suggestion. I am not sure the premiers consider the committee's advice to be as valuable as I do myself. For instance, there was a unanimous report from the committee that we should entrench the Bill of Rights in the constitution. I regret to say that this advice was not accepted by some of the Tory premiers.

Miss MacDonald: What I am asking the Prime Minister is whether he is really interested in getting all-party input from the federal House of Commons and the Senate of Canada to the first ministers' conference in February, so that it may provide a much broader framework in which he can go to the conference. I wonder if he can give us that assurance.

Mr. Trudeau: That is what I answered: I said I am prepared to consider doing that.

* * *

● (1417)

FINANCE

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister arises from the news that the discount rate in the United States has been raised from 8.5 per cent to 9.5 per cent. It is now at an all-time high. In light of the fact that it is the stated policy of the Bank of Canada to keep Canadian interest rates higher than American interest rates, we must assume that there will be further pressure on the bank rate and on interest rates in general.

Recent economic estimates suggest that the result of the recent rise in mortgage rates to levels as high as 8.5 per cent has resulted in the loss of some 25,000 jobs in the construction industry and that a further rise in interest rates of 1 per cent to follow the American lead will result in further unemployment in the range of 25,000 jobs. Can the Prime Minister confirm that this is the advice he has been given by the Department of Finance and, if so, will he provide this House with background information on the consequences of interest rate increases?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not been provided with any such advice. As the hon. member knows, I have been busy at the first ministers' conference for the past three days. The Minister of Finance did reach me on an urgent basis yesterday morning or the night before to inform me that Secretary Blumenthal had informed him that this was going to happen and that the minister would be considering what steps, if any, it would be necessary for us to take.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, in view of the very obvious conclusion to which all economists have come, that any increase in the interest rate could very well put us into a recession and prolong the unemployment problem we now have, can the Prime Minister indicate whether he is prepared to follow any other course which would be less damaging to employment than the raising of the interest rate, as has been the pattern in the past?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, any other course which is reasonable would be considered. I do not think the hon. member has suggested any other course. If he has no interest in keeping the dollar at any particular level, I suppose the advice he refers to could be followed.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister seems to be inviting suggestions as to what might be done, that is one suggestion which could be pursued. This is not the time to give the Prime Minister advice, so I will ask another question. Has the government considered exchange controls as an alternative to raising interest rates continuously? Exchange controls would be less damaging to employment.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have often discussed economics with the hon. member. I think he has some very wise ideas on the subject. I am glad that when he talked about exchange controls, he was not giving advice because I assure him that I would not accept that kind of advice.

Oral Questions

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL ALLOW IMPORTATION OF U.S. BEEF IN 1979

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that the price of beef has shown an upward tendency for the past year and that in certain cases the increase has been over 100 per cent over the price of last year, considering also the requests made by many grocery chains to increase quotas in 1979, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to follow the suggestions of those undertakings and allow beef imports from the United States in 1979?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, much has been said about this. I think that the record should be put straight. The amount of meat in storage in Canada at the present time is only slightly less that it was last year. Last year there were about 83.3 million pounds of meat in storage. At the present time there are about 83.1 million pounds of meat in storage. Many live cattle which are being exported to the United States could be brought here by local buyers, rather than exported to the United States, if local buyers wanted to compete for that market. There have been extreme suggestions that the price of hamburger might rise to $2 a pound. There should be no reason for that.

● (1422)

So far as imports of meats from any country are concerned, the United States are not filling our quota of meat coming into Canada. Australia and New Zealand are filling their quotas. The permits are issued under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I do not issue them, but we have a system of consultation before any permits are issued. So I do not think that at this time there is any intention of increasing that quota.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE MEASURES TO INCREASE PRODUCTION OF BEEF IN CANADA

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

The minister is no doubt aware that beef consumption has declined by 40 per cent last year and this factor has naturally encouraged higher consumption of pork and poultry. I would therefore like to ask him whether he intends to introduce legislation to raise beef production in Canada so that we will not have to increase our import quotas to stabilize the price of beef?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is no control whatsoever on the production of beef in Canada; it is up to the producers to make that decision. They can either increase it, if they so desire, or they can decide to go out of the business of producing beef.

I think the hon. member should remember the past 3½ years when beef producers saw the price of beef go down to below the cost of production and there was not that much sympathy expressed for them or on their behalf, or any suggestion put forward that we increase imports to Canada so that they may reduce the price. History shows that this may not reduce the price to consumers but may show that the people handling that type of beef are increasing their profits, not necessarily that consumers will get any benefit from it.

* * *

FINANCE

PROJECTION OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could put my question to the Prime Minister. A review of the statement of the financial operations of the government by the Receiver General of Canada for the six months ended September 30 of this year indicates that expenditures at the governmental level are up by a startling 15 per cent compared to last year.

Would the Prime Minister indicate if he anticipates that expenditure rate of increase, namely, 15 per cent, will be maintained for the whole year and, if so, how does he reconcile that with the April prediction that expenditures would rise by only 9 per cent?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has heard the Minister of Finance say many times before—and the hon. member should realize it himself—that you cannot conclude from a four or six-month period what will be the figure for the whole year, because of the cyclical character of the economy over the year. There are seasonal and statutory factors which tend to bunch together certain types of expenditures and certain types of receipts. It is patently misleading to try to extrapolate figures for the whole year from one quarter.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the prime Minister, who I hope realized that in my question I related six months of this year to the same six months of last year. Let me put this further question to him. As a result of the near-static increases in revenue which are up by about 2 per cent only, whereas expenditures have been going up by 15 per cent, we find that the six months' deficit is $7 billion, 58 per cent higher than in the same six-month period last year. Would the Prime Minister indicate if he thinks that the deficit prediction of $10.9 billion for the entire year will, in fact, be realized?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the premise on which the hon. member admits he based his question seems to indicate that his conclusions are indeed unfounded. He is telling me that he is comparing six months of this year with six months of last year. I have answered that, due to statutory and seasonal factors, these figures are not representative of this year and, consequently, they are probably not representative of last year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, let me try one final supplementary question directed either to the Prime Minister or to his seatmate: it deals with expenditures in the Privy Council office, and I emphasize the office itself. In the six-month period, those expenditures have jumped $7.4 million, an 86 per cent jump. For this year's six months compared to last year's six months, would the Prime Minister or his seatmate indicate why there has been such a sharp jump in Privy Council operating expenses?

● (1427)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wanted to have an answer to this, he could have given us notice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Seasonally adjusted.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member opposite, I believe sitting next to the hon. member for—is it Prince Albert—said something about seasonal adjustment. Yes, it so happens that this year there are expenditures, I believe relating to the McDonald commission and other royal commissions, which were not incurred in other years. It was under the Privy Council estimates that a lot of these new operations, for instance, the operation of setting up an institute for research into inflation and productivity—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: This institute was set up at the request of the ten premiers meeting here in Ottawa last February.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know to what extent the expenditures are linked to this particular institute. I know it was set up at the request of the premiers and that the estimates come under the Privy Council office. If the hon. member really wants an answer to the question, and if his leader is interested in knowing facts, rather than fantasy, he can give me notice of such a question and I will provide the answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

HIRING OF CONSULTANTS OUTSIDE CANADA—POSSIBILITY OF CHARGES BEING LAID

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice. On October 16 I asked the minister a question concerning the Boeing revelations, payments to an agent in Canada which seem improper or illegal in nature under a so-called system of dual contracts.

Now that the minister has had two weeks to brief himself fully on this matter, can he tell the House whether Canada has requested assistance from the United States Department of Justice? When can we expect charges to be laid in connection with these incidents?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that we have not only requested, but have received, information and assistance from the United States. However, the investigation in relation to the information received is continuing and I cannot comment further on the question of what the results may be.

AUTHORITY FOR RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Will he tell the House who initiated the Royal Canadian Mounted Police probe into the Boeing revelations in Canada? Was it the Solicitor General himself, some other minister, or did the RCMP initiate it of its own volition? Can he tell us when he expects the RCMP report to be handed in?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member ought to know that any investigation relating to matters which may be questionable come strictly within the purview of the RCMP. If the RCMP decides that sufficient facts or allegations have been brought to its attention to conduct an investigation, they proceed with that investigation. I am pleased to advise the hon. member that an investigation is ongoing relating to the matter which he brought to the attention of the House.

* * *

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO REVISE CONSTITUTION—TIMING VIS-À-VIS NEXT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Prime Minister: I do so with diffidence in view of the fact that he is so truculent and peevish today.

Arising out of the question asked by the hon. Leader of the Opposition, and to determine whether or not I heard correctly, is the government intending to bring in any legislation in connection with the so-called plan which was evolved and placed before the Canadian people in general last July? Is it intended to bring any legislation before parliament covering Her Majesty the Queen or the Senate in advance of the next meeting of a dominion-provincial nature?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I answered that question by the negative, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

● (1432)

[Translation]

MANPOWER

LEGISLATION FORBIDDING CONSTRUCTION WORKERS TO WORK IN OTHER PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. As Ontario is about to give itself an act similar to that of Quebec to prevent real construction workers of other provinces from working in its own, as that will lead to several thousand lay-offs among real construction workers, especially in the national capital region; as those steps by Quebec and Ontario mark the start of the balkanization of Canada and a break in the association of the provinces, does the right hon. Prime Minister intend to submit to the Supreme Court of Canada both the Quebec law and the Ontario bill, when it has been passed, in order to settle once and for all all those unnecessary interprovincial complications which interfere with the sacred right to work of all Canadians, as well as the possibility for the labour force to move from one province to another?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House knows that in its Bill C-60 the government provides specifically for the incorporation into the Human Bill of Rights of a provision guaranteeing all workers freedom of movement from one province to another. If that provision were passed, naturally it would be the ideal solution. Another solution is also possible, Mr. Speaker, that is, that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec agree between them to find a solution to that imbroglio. Unfortunately, they do not seem to have managed that. When they meet, they discuss a thousand and one things, generally pertaining to the federal government, but never seem to solve the problems that exist between them. I have repeatdly offered my services to intervene. If the two provinces were willing to lend me their authority, I could guarantee a solution to that specific problem. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, if they insist in passing laws as they have indicated, and of which the hon. member has reminded us, and if they agree to having them referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, we should willingly make that referral. But they should agree at least on the referral, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

PROPOSED CUTBACK IN PROGRAM—LEVEL OF FUTURE FUNDING

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my questions is to the Minister of Science and Technology. In view of the proposed across-the-board cuts in expenditures for research and development, particularly in forestry, fishing and agriculture—areas where Canada has a comparable natural trading advantage—does the minister still hold to his objective announced last June of research and development spending equivalent to 1.5 per cent of the gross domestic product by 1983?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, that commitment still remains firm. As I indicated at the time the commitment was made, we are looking primarily to an increase in the industrial sector where Canada has by far its greatest shortfall. We are endeavouring, through means such as tax incentives—and they were announced in the earlier budget by the Minister of Finance—to stimulate and encourage the private sector. Indeed, that commitment remains firm.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, it is good to hear that despite the fact we are going to spend less, we will spend more. Since the exciting June 1 research and development announcements by the minister, can he indicate to the House if a start has yet been made on any new regional centres of excellence or the innovation centres he announced? Where are they, and when can we expect the regulations constituting the new government procurement policy which is supposed to enhance research and development in Canada?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the hon. member's suggestion that you spend less to get more, in fact when you add the forgone taxes plus the expenditures it is substantially more than any cuts that have in fact taken place.

I will be meeting next week with my counterparts from the provinces to discuss this question of procurement and how we can more effectively use federal government procurement and provincial government procurement to promote and to effectively increase the R and D activities in Canada.

* * *

TRANSPORT

ARBITRARY WITHDRAWAL OF RAIL SERVICE FOR CERTAIN COMMODITIES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question arises from the problem which has been affecting the potato industry of eastern Canada as a result of near double-digit inflation over the last few years. During this period, punitive increments in transportation costs have been imposed on that industry. The climax of all this has been proposals by the railroad to withdraw from the transportation of this product.

I would like to ask the Minister of Transport: does the Department of Transport or the Canadian Transport Commission allow the Canadian railroad system or any of its members to withdraw service from a customer or group of customers who have been historically dependent on the railroad for transportation of a particular commodity, and does the Department of Transport or the Canadian Transport Commission have authority to order continued service when railroads arbitrarily withdraw such a service?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member not only seeks a legal opinion but a fairly complex one, as it is a complex question. I will be glad to take note of the question in written form and attempt to obtain an answer for the hon. member.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, when railroad service is withdrawn from a captive industry such as the New Brunswick potato industry, can the industry concerned appeal to the Canadian Transport Commission, the Department of Transport or any other agency of government on the basis of economic hardship to the industry and region concerned?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think that I will apply my first answer to the second question as well.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW FIGHTER PLANES FOR NATO FORCE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question was originally to be directed to the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence it is appropriately addressed to the Prime Minister.

The group of experts reviewing the choice of suppliers for the proposed new fighter planes to be substituted for the Voodoos in the defence of North America and to be used in support of ground troops in Europe under NATO were to report to the cabinet in September. Has this group reported to the cabinet, and when will the cabinet make a decision on the matter, bearing in mind the urgent necessity for cutting back on the more than $2 billion involved in the purchase?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that matter was discussed in cabinet last June and I do not believe it has returned to cabinet since. It may have been discussed in a committee of ministers: I do not think that it has, but I am not certain. I could inquire of the Minister of National Defence, who is in Toronto meeting with the minister of defence from Norway.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister will also want to refer this question to the Minister of National Defence. My question is: can it be stated in general terms what proportion of the proposed new fighter planes would be used in Europe and what proportion would be used in North America?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is part of the problem. We were looking at a plane which would be multipurpose and could be used in Europe and Canada. This is part of the problem we are looking at. I cannot answer the question, because I do not know, as I just indicated, what the present submissions are, if any, that have been made to the minister.

* * *

HEALTH AND WELFARE

POLICY REGARDING EXTENDED USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare: it is the same question that I asked her last Friday when she became rather agitated. I think the hon. member misunderstood the question.

I would like to know, in view of the fact the government has obviously broken its word with respect to the expansion of social insurance numbers over and above social security programs, what steps it is taking to restrict its ever-expanding use of those numbers and, equally important, what the government is doing to prevent information obtained by the social insurance programs from going to other departments not under the aegis of social security programs.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the adjectives that I saw used in some press reports described my actions from agitated, to shaky and pale, to spirited. I will not be the judge of my actions. I do know that the answer I gave was addressing the point raised in a most responsible manner.

I would reiterate today that I would be playing the part of the ostrich which puts its head in the sand to pretend that the use of the social insurance number will not grow, because our population is growing and our social programs have expanded greatly in the past ten years.

The hon. member is probably also referring to the fact that the child tax credit bill presently being studied by the House requires the use of the taxation machinery and will require that people have a social insurance number. I do not understand why this procedure is so wrong. I would like the hon. member to stop making innuendoes about a breach of policy, because it does not exist. Would he please state exactly what his objection is and why he objects?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the minister understands the problem. I am not talking about social security programs.

Miss Bégin: Then why do you direct your question to me?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Because social insurance numbers are under the minister's responsibility.

• (1442)

Miss Bégin: No.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They are under somebody's responsibility. Having regard to what the minister has said—and I am not going to get involved in a debate here—is the minister aware of the study on privacy and computers, a task force of her own government, that stated in its recommendations as follows:

—it is important to ensure that a single identifying number—

Or a social insurance number.

—should not be adopted in Canada, directly or indirectly, without a full examination and public debate of its merits and consequences.

Does the minister accept the recommendation that before there is an expansion beyond social security programs, parliament should be consulted?

Mr. MacEachen: It has been.

Miss Bégin: As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, and I thought the hon. member would have checked that, my office told him the SIN number is under the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am the minister responsible for social policy and programs in the name of the Canadian taxpayer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: I am accountable for a budget of $14 billion. I am not shocked by the use of a number that permits control of funds, that are the funds of the Canadian taxpayer going to those in need. I will continue this policy of control.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

POST OFFICE

ALLEGED SABOTAGE AT TORONTO TERMINAL

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that reports indicate, including personal phone calls to me by a number of serious and dedicated members of Toronto's CUPW union, that an intensive and expensive sabotage program at Toronto's main postal terminal is under way, initiated by a few radical union leaders, causing not only extensive damage to the post office but to the mails, and the jamming of machines directing mail to other cities, could the minister advise this House whether he is aware of the sabotage tactics and what he intends to do to rectify this very serious and damaging problem now being experienced in Toronto?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the facts mentioned by the hon. member. According to the reports I have to date, postal work is going normally. If there is an intention of sabotage, we are not aware of it. If it happens, we will take the proper measures to correct it.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

PUBLIC SERVICE

POLICY RESPECTING SECTOR BARGAINING IN LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I will convey to the Postmaster General the messages I have received.

On a related matter, I would like to put my supplementary question to the Acting Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the fragmentation of union power within each essential public service sector contributes dramatically not only to postal strikes but to other essential service strikes, air lines being a good example, could the minister advise this House whether or not the government is now prepared to reduce the number of bargaining points within these sectors and introduce what is known as sector bargaining, which I know would receive widespread support including support from a number of unions?

Hon. André Ouellet (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious question that is under consideration. I think it is too early to give any indication of this.

* * *

[Translation]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FEDERAL MANDATE TO NEGOTIATE SOVEREIGNTY ASSOCIATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister.

The media reported recently a shocking statement of the Leader of the Opposition that if he were Prime Minister of the country he would negotiate sovereignty association with the PQ government if 60 per cent of the Quebec population supported their government in the referendum.

[English]

I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he would inform this House whether, given the present constitutional arrangements which he is presently trying to renew and the fact that we must base these renewed constitutional arrangements on the fact that Canada remains a federation, the Prime Minister considers that any federal government or its leader would, or could, have a mandate to negotiate sovereignty association with Quebec or any other province on a bilateral basis.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not know that any leader has been given the mandate to negotiate sovereignty association with any government in the country. Certainly, I have not been given such a mandate, nor would I intend to ask one. If the Leader of the Opposition intends asking for such a mandate, I hope he will make it clear during the election campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROPOSED AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS EXPORT DIVISION

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. For the last two years, members on this side of the House have asked for the establishment of an agricultural products export division within the Department of Agriculture, to work with the provinces and to work with commodity organizations to seek out and develop export markets for agricultural commodities.

Earlier this week—in fact, on Monday to be exact—I understand that a meeting was held between the minister and interested people within the agricultural industry to seek out ways and means to develop export markets. I must indicate that I welcome the minister's eleventh-hour interest in this very important subject. I ask the minister what progress was made and, secondly, did the provinces participate?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think I should first put the record straight. I would have serious doubt about the originality of this suggestion—the claim that the hon. member has made that it came from the other side of the House. Many other people have put this forward. For instance, I would think it has come from farm organizations, etc. At the last Liberal conference it was passed, fully endorsed, and then some other people picked it up afterwards and tried to carry it.

This was an exploratory meeting that we held on Monday. The response was good. It was with agricultural officials and officials from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. They seem to be in full support of the suggestion of this kind of an organization being worked out between the departments here in Canada, for the good of agriculture.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, if a new system or structure is established, can the minister give me the assurance that those assigned to this particular responsibility will be aggressive sales and market-oriented people?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the whole intent is just that. You would have an aggressive sales type of program. As it is stated in the presentation which we made to them at that time, we would want to see the provinces participating in this program and we want to see the federal departments concerned with the same issue participating in it, and probably a broader spectrum of the agricultural producers in Canada being brought into it, which we hope to do early in the new year.

REASON FOR CANCELLATION OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker my supplementary question is to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the export of barley has been dropping in western Canada and the elevators are plugged, with the result there are fire-sale prices of feed barley accumulating in western Canada, and the Canadian Wheat Board cannot be held to account until such time as the Standing Committee on Agriculture is organized—and such a meeting was scheduled for this afternoon—could the minister tell the House why this meeting was cancelled, along with several other organizational meetings?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of the meeting being cancelled at all. I understood it was going to go ahead. However, some of the preamble that the hon. member put to his question I do not accept.

* * *

SOCIAL INSURANCE

EXTENDED USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS—POTENTIAL INVASION OF PRIVACY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to that posed by my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who we are told is the minister responsible for SIN.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I ask the minister this question in view of the finding in the report on privacy and computers, commissioned by the Department of Communications, as follows:

> —a single identifying number should not be adopted in Canada, directly or indirectly, without a full examination and public debate of its merits and consequences.

In view of the potential invasion of privacy that is represented by the extensive use of the social insurance number, could the minister tell the House what controls he has adopted to ensure that the social insurance number is not abused and does not, in fact, represent a massive invasion of privacy in this country without parliament having a chance to debate it?

● (1452)

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of preparing guidelines to ensure that information which we secure through the social insurance number will not violate the human rights legislation. The privacy provisions have not, in fact, been violated.

Under the old act, the commission had authority to release information, but that was always generally within the parameters of the act. Last year, when we moved amendments to the bill, the hon. member's colleague from Hamilton West suggested that the discretion should rest with the minister. We changed section 114 of the act to put that discretion in my hands.

However, we do not encourage outside use of the social insurance number as an identifier. I think in three particular regions the federal government has legislative authority to use the social insurance number: I think of the Canada Pension Plan, income tax and, of course, unemployment insurance.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the minister, like his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, does not really understand the question. What we are concerned with is the fact that the SIN will be used as a single identifying number and will thereby represent a massive invasion of privacy of the people of this country, without parliament first having had an opportunity to fully debate it.

For example, does the minister consider the use of the SIN in the gun control legislation to be proper use of the social insurance number? There are other areas as well where it is being used.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, invariably, with people using names and numbers, a program can be better administered as a result of using numbers, whether it is for income tax, bank accounts, or whatever. I indicated in my answer that as far as the use of SIN numbers is concerned, we do not encourage their use outside the federal government. We indicate that individuals are not required to give that particular information. If you are asked that, I would say go and "sin" no more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROGRESS IN FIELD OF BEHAVIOURAL MEDICINE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What progress is being made in the field of behavioural medicine, the dream child of the previous minister, who believed that this would cut the galloping costs of health care by not only cutting down the accident rate but in preventing disease in its incipiency and by full-scale innoculations, environmental changes, good hygiene and exercise?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have adopted the child left by my predecessor. We are continuing to put the emphasis on promotion of health, which the hon. member has referred to as the prevention of ill health. He has always supported the efforts of all governments and every Canadian in that respect. He knows it has more to do with a change in attitude than legislative change.

I am pleased to inform the House that the rate of hospitalization, one of the criteria that can be used to measure progress in the promotion of good health in Canada, decreased by 8 per cent between 1971 and 1975, the time when we put forward this new proposal to Canadians. Also, the proportion of death of Canadians by the two leading causes has decreased, motor vehicle accidents by 24 per cent between 1973 and 1976, and heart disease by 3 per cent during the same period. These are indicators, and no more; but I want to put on record that progress is being made. I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question.

[Mr. McGrath.]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COVERAGE OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister ask the Secretary of State to inquire of the CBC why it persists in trying to portray to Canadians an impression that this country faces insurmountable problems for which no solutions can, or will, be found, and have the Secretary of State report back to the House so that we can determine whether the CBC is trying to fulfil or thwart its mandate as a force for unity in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that the Secretary of State can, and will, convey the representation to the CBC. However, he has no control over what they do. He cannot give them direct instructions unless the House wishes him to do so.

I am sometimes amused when the CBC talks about the terrible state of the country, considering the terrible state of the CBC.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF FREIGHT IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I will direct my question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that the sea lift operation in Frobisher Bay has been aborted due to severe weather conditions and late scheduling, will the minister indicate what steps the government is taking to guarantee that food and other essential supplies will be transported to Frobisher Bay at the earliest possible date, and will he also tell this House if any emergency operations will be conducted without cost to the people affected by the sea lift termination?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, at least part of that question is not within the area of my responsibility. I can say that Transport was willing to give whatever assistance it could and, indeed, attempted to help by improvising helicopter pads and the like during the time of the unsuccessful loading.

I am sure the parties involved will be looking at the manner in which they can move this food and other supplies to their destination and will be consulting with various departments of government at different levels.

AIRPORTS

FOOD AND LIQUOR CONCESSION AT DORVAL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport: it arises out of the rather extraordinary arrangement involving a 20-year monopoly to a food and liquor concessionaire at Montreal's Dorval airport. I understand this contract will be up for renewal. Can the minister assure this House that tenders will be called for this concession? Also, will he ensure that the details with regard to sales, rent and other pertinent data will be made available to all other interested parties who may be wanting to bid on this concession?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to which specific concession the hon. member is referring. However, I can tell him it is our standing practice to go to tender in connection with concessions. There are sometimes special reasons for deviating from that practice; those are always plain and available. I do not contemplate that at this particular time.

The question of what information is available has concerned me for some time. A couple of years ago we began to make it clear in our contracts with concessionaires that information required for future tendering would be made available publicly. We had not done it prior to that time. There are some contractual and other questions which arise about how far we can go with information in those circumstances.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will bring the minister up to date. The firm involved is known as AFC. In view of the fact this seems to be a rather extraordinary case, will the minister take the House into his confidence and make a statement on motions outlining the facts with regard to this concession? Also, will he determine, during the course of his investigation, whether there are any other monopoly franchise-type arrangements with the MOT? Since the whole tendering process within the Ministry of Transport has been drawn into question, will the minister consider reviewing the whole tendering process and clearly enunciate a policy in that regard?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am indeed reviewing the whole tendering process, particularly in terms of the kinds of conditions and limits that sometimes have been imposed in the bidding proposals. I have wanted to maximize the amount of competition in bidding and have already taken many steps in that regard. For example, in connection with catering concessions, we have ensured that the information about proposals is made available to as many local people as possible who might have an interest. The result has been a very greatly increased number of bids received in connection with the tenders being sought. I think this is a very good and satisfactory solution and that continued effort in that regard is warranted. We shall continue the effort.

• (1502)

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PENALTIES FOR VANDALISM

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It has to do with a petition circulated recently by the town of Trenton regarding vandalism: it was circulated to all municipalities in Ontario.

In the light of this petition, which requests that the federal-provincial authorities meet with municipal officials to discuss a change in the law, imposing heavier penalties and restitution in vandalism cases, would the minister tell us whether he plans any such action?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): I would ordinarily be very happy to raise this question with provincial attorneys general, but I would expect the initiative to come from them if they are dissatisfied with enforcement provisions which apply to any section of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Acts of wanton destruction and senseless vandalism are increasing at a frightening rate. Since it appears that the present laws are an ineffective deterrent to these crimes, can the minister explain his reluctance to take positive action in this area?

Mr. Lang: There is no reluctance on my part. I indicated I would be very happy to consult with the attorneys general on this question, but if their feeling agrees with that expressed by the hon. member, obviously they would have brought the matter to my attention before this.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MRS. HOLT—AFFRONT BY COMMISSIONER FAIBISH, MEMBER OF CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Two days ago the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) raised, by way of a question of privilege, an occurrence which had taken place before a hearing of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission in the province of British Columbia.

The hon. member related to us an experience which, in her opinion, interfered with her right as a member of parliament to appear and adequately discharge before that commission—which is a federal commission—her responsibilities to her constituents, some of whom were present at the hearing to which she made reference. I have no doubt that the hon. lady was acting in a capacity which she considered to be an essential part of her function as a member of the House of Commons.

As I indicated at the time the question was raised, the difficulty we face is not whether a member is acting in a capacity as a member of parliament. Indeed, there are many such occasions today which were not envisaged a few years ago, and increasingly members of this House are called upon to perform functions which, although very much related to their duties—and in the eyes of their constituents may constitute a fulfilment of their obligations to their voters—but do not necessarily bear a direct relationship to the privilege which has traditionally surrounded and protected members of this House in a very special way.

I want to stress that privilege is accorded to members of the House of Commons over and above the rights enjoyed by any ordinary citizen. For that reason it has always been interpreted very strictly by this House, because there is no reason why a general privilege or right to some kind of special treatment should surround a member of the House of Commons or any other citizen before our boards or commission or in the everyday work we perform as citizens in this country, except in so far as it relates to the basic or essential function of carrying out our obligations as elected members in assisting in or participating in the proceedings of the House of Commons itself.

After listening to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway I will attempt to summarize the issue before the House as follows: Does the treatment received by the hon. member at the hands of a member of a public commission constitute a contempt of the House? Can the privileges which undoubtedly protect members in the performance of their duties in the House and in the committees be extended to include their duties in their constituencies and, specifically, in this case, an appearance before a hearing of a federal commission? Is there a distinction in the application of the law of privilege beyond the precincts of parliament when it is claimed on behalf of a member appearing before a federally appointed board or commission on the one hand, or any other non-parliamentary body on the other? I must express, of course, as I am sure all hon. members do, my shock and concern that a member of parliament would be treated in the way described by the hon. member by any public body appearing anywhere in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Indeed, I would be equally shocked, as I am sure would all other hon. members, were such treatment accorded to any citizen by any federally appointed board or commission in this country. However, in itself that is a statement of the dilemma. As I indicated earlier, parliamentary privilege is that which surrounds us here and ensures that we are able to carry out the basic function of participating in the proceedings of this House.

Since it is a right of a member of parliament, in common with all other citizens, to appear before these boards and commissions it would seem to me to be an unwarranted extension of the privilege of this House to extend it not only to meetings of the committees of this House which may take place from time to time around the country, but to go even a step further than that and extend it to the point at which it would somehow protect a member of parliament making an appearance before a public body anywhere throughout the country.

It seems to me that despite the fact that society demands more of members of parliament than it did even a few years ago, not all of these demands impose a strict parliamentary duty in the course of the service of the House of Commons. Every one of us has duties as representatives of the electorate to our constituents, and these duties are increasing. But the duties for which a member of parliament can claim the protection of privilege are his parliamentary duties, particularly in his primary duty or service to this House of Commons here. At times the line distinguishing these duties as a representative on one side and parliamentary duties on the other is very fine. There may be cases in which the line can become blurred, but in present circumstances unless I am absolutely convinced that a member's ability to serve in the proceedings of this House have been affected, I cannot find a case of privilege.

As I undertook to do, I have similarly to examine the law of contempt of the House to see whether or not there was a separate remedy available to the hon. member in this way, to ascertain whether, if a strict question of privilege was not involved here, there may not have been, in the treatment accorded the hon. member, a contempt to her person which could be translated further to be a contempt of the House. However, I face the same difficulty in this approach. Since the member was not in the circumstances acting in the official capacities which are surrounded by privilege—that very narrow category—it would, I think, be unwarranted extension of the precedents to extend privilege with respect to an act which was directed to her person in the circumstances. I have examined the precedents in order to assist the hon. member as far as possible but I regret I cannot be of more help to her in this respect.

To add another observation—and I put it as a third observation in the circumstance as I would not term it a primary defeat of her argument on procedural grounds—her complaint was not accompanied by a motion. As I say, that is not a procedural difficulty which would cause me to stop her on that ground alone, but it becomes substantive in these circumstances because it would be difficult, if not impossible, for the hon. member to have framed a motion which would have asked for anything more than an investigation or a verification of the circumstances. That kind of motion has often been set aside in the past on the grounds of it being too general. Therefore, while I reiterate that the hon. member has described circumstances which I find to be shocking, which ought to be considered as most grave not only to her as a member of parliament but as a citizen appearing before a federally appointed board, there may be remedies which she may and perhaps will pursue as they relate to a grievance in respect to that administration specifically.

I have to decide whether or not any motion which would be put to this House by the member would enjoy priority over any other piece of business by virtue of it being a case of privilege or of contempt. On the basis of that strict procedure, one which has been guarded so carefully and, I believe, properly so in the past, I have to say that I cannot find it comes within the parameters of privilege or contempt. The hon. member will therefore have to pursue whatever other remedies may be available to her in the circumstances.

● (1512)

MR. LAWRENCE—ANSWERS GIVEN BY A MINISTER OF THE CROWN

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, just before the one o'clock deadline I gave Your Honour what I hope was valid notice that I wished to raise a question of privilege this afternoon relating to answers and correspondence given to me by a minister of the Crown which were very clearly misleading, which were misleading to a constituent of mine, and which very vitally affected later oral questions in this House to a minister of the Crown. Because I am still having research done for me and I intend to document matters a little better than I have already—some of this information just reached me this morning—I wonder if I could reserve my right to raise this as a question of privilege at a later date.

MR. DIEFENBAKER—BUREAUCRATIC USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, what I have in mind arises out of the discussions which have taken place here today in connection with social security numbers. I have been one who, through the years, has refused to accept the old age pension, and I have consistently followed that course. If I had taken the old age pension I would have had to accept a social security number. That was not the reason I did not accept the old age pension but, nonetheless, it is a fact.

Now we find in connection with investments by Canadians that social security numbers are being demanded. I have investments in bonds and the like, and I received notice the other day that my social security number must be produced and that, if it is not produced, the amount of interest accruing to me would be reduced by 25 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: If that is not an interference with the privileges not only of members of parliament but of people in Canada generally, I do not know what is. The Canadian people want to invest. They want to join with the government in its request and crusade for increased assistance through bonds, and I would like Your Honour to look into this question.

If ever there was a form of intimidation being practised in order to achieve acceptance of the social security number, which for some reason has become almost a pilgrimage for some departments, this is one. I have a right to determine whether I want to have a social security number. No government institution has the right to tell me that, if I do not do what a bureaucrat says, I am going to lose 25 per cent of my interest. I hope Your Honour will look into that whole question.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) raises this matter by way of a question of privilege arising out of some answers which were given in the House today. I do not undertake at the moment to set the matter aside on procedural grounds in a definite way, although I am sure the right hon. member recognizes that there would be severe difficulty in bringing this in as a procedural question. However, I am sure the minister responsible for this program will want to take into account the intervention of the right hon. member, and perhaps make a response. That minister will likely want to do that at the earliest possible occasion, and I will wait for that before I make a final determination on procedural grounds.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) with respect to the legislative program for the week. While he is dealing with that I wonder if he would designate Wednesday, November 8, as an allotted day. Perhaps he could advise me whether the schedule I have sent him as a proposal is satisfactory for a set of allotted days, given the problems the government may have with respect to the budget and a number of other things.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, the business for the House today, as is well known, will be the continuation of the second reading debate on the bill increasing benefits to the children of families in Canada, followed by the health resources fund measure, and then followed by amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act which will, I hope, be given first reading today. I have already had some discussions with hon. members of all parties with respect to how we might deal with several other bills, including the CALURA bill, the Canada-France trade agreement bill and the independence of parliament bill, and when the discussions are completed it will be possible to say when we will deal with these bills.

In the meantime, I am happy to confirm that the dates suggested by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) with respect to allotted days are generally satisfactory. Perhaps we will have to change some of them, but certainly the first day, Wednesday, is satisfactory, and I designate next Wednesday as the first allotted day.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister can tell the House when he expects to bring in the supplementary estimates, which are expected fairly soon, and whether there has been any conclusion reached by the government as to the appropriate day for a budget.

Can he also tell the House when it is the intention of the government to give notice of the bill with respect to the Post Office becoming a Crown corporation? I ask that question because there was some discussion that the notice might have been given last Friday.

I have had some discussions, and it would be in order if the Deputy Prime Minister wished to make a reference of the commodity tax review to the appropriate committee. I understand that there are a large number of briefs and that that reference could be made without debate.

I notice that the Bank Act legislation is on the order paper. I assume that that will be called quickly, and if it is the intention of the government to refer the subject matter of that bill—and I emphasize the words "subject matter"—to the appropriate standing committee, as far as our party is concerned that reference could be made without debate.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the supplementary estimates have been approved, and it is my expectation that it will be possible to bring them into the House next week.

The date of the budget is not settled. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has indicated that it will be sometime in the middle of November, and I cannot add any precision to that.

I should tell the hon. member that it is not likely that I will be able to introduce the bill establishing a Crown corporation with respect to the Post Office at the time I indicated earlier. The reason for that is that the postal unions have requested consultations with respect to the bill. Just as soon as those consultations have been completed it will be possible for me to introduce that bill for first reading.

With respect to the revisions to the Bank Act, I hope that bill will be given first reading today and that we can send the subject matter to committee without debate. I will give further consideration to the question of sending the commodity tax matter to the appropriate standing committee. That committee is quite busy, and we will have to decide which takes priority, the Bank Act or the commodity tax matter. However, we can work that out.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) will be available for the Committee of the Whole discussions later this afternoon. He was not in the House earlier today, but I presume he will be available to discuss tax matters relating to Bill C-10 which deals with family allowances.

The Deputy Prime Minister mentioned the Post Office legislation. It occurred to me that there was a representation made by the government that it would bring in legislation of an omnibus nature with respect to Crown corporations. Is it the intention of the government to bring in that kind of legislation with the Post Office legislation at the same time, so that they can be compared? There may be special considerations in the Post Office legislation which might not apply generally. On the other hand, is it the intention to bring in the Post Office bill in isolation? Has the government considered that? Perhaps my friend can answer the question today because it is quite important, I think.

• (1522)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we seem to be reviewing the matters which we discussed earlier today at a meeting of the House leaders, so I can say that in so far as an agreement to certain points has been expressed, we join in that agreement. Specifically, if there is a desire to refer the subject matter of the bill to amend the Bank Act to committee without prior debate, we would be prepared to go along with that. I emphasize, as did my friend, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), that that motion, to be treated that way, must be a motion to refer the subject matter, not the bill.

I may say also that if there is a desire, as expressed some time ago by the government House leader, to move on the bill respecting the independence of parliament, we would be prepared to agree to a one-speaker per party debate at the second reading of that bill so that it too could get to committee at an early date.

I have just one other request to make, and again it is something that we discussed at the meeting earlier today. In view of the gross misrepresentation by the press with respect to Bill C-12, the one affecting the indexing of certain pensions, particularly those of retired public servants, I wonder if the government House leader would consider bringing that bill forward reasonably soon so that in public debate here on the floor of the House we could make its provisions clear.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, my question follows the same line. I would like to ask the leader of the government whether he intends, during this session, to bring back before the House the bill which was introduced last April 5 and which deals with the creation of the office of ombudsman in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Symes: Following the same point of order raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on future House business, may I say, Mr. Speaker, that I notice as the first item of government business there is a motion which I moved under Standing Order 43 last Thursday, which unfortunately was not disposed of by the House. I realize, of course, that the motion asked the House to declare October 26 as Arts Day. We are now after the fact, nevertheless the debate on that motion had begun and we did not have time to complete it. In view of what I know is the long-standing desire of the House leader that fairness should prevail in this place, and that all parties should be able to express an opinion on the motion I moved, I wonder if he could inform us when he will call that motion for final debate and resolution.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will consider the representations made by the hon. member with respect to his motion and, if we can make good progress on other government business, I might bring it forward.

With respect to the bill relating to the pensions of public servants, I think it would be a good idea to have it debated at the earliest possible date in order to remove much of the misunderstanding and concern, which I regard as unjustified, and to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has alluded.

It is the intention of the government to bring forward the ombudsman bill. It is now before us for study, and it will be brought forward.

It is not the intention, at least I do not intend in the near future, to put a general bill before the House dealing with Crown corporations. It is a very complex subject, and I believe it would be better for us to deal with the issues involved in the Post Office Crown corporation as it is proposed.

It is the intention, if we get second reading of the child benefit bill, to go into committee of the whole. I should advise the House that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is meeting with his colleagues, the other finance ministers, but I am sure the House will be pleased to hear that the very capable Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) will assist the rapid passage of the bill through committee of the whole, aided, if necessary, by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Martin).

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

TABLING OF BOARD'S REFERENCE FORWARDED TO ADMINISTRATOR

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, I should like to table a copy of the reference from the Anti-Inflation Board to the Administrator, dated October 23, 1978.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1978

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING INSTITUTIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council) (for Mr. Chrétien) moved for leave to introduce Bill C- 15, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CHILD TAX CREDIT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, November 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-10, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide for a child tax credit and to amend the Family Allowances Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I had begun my speech yesterday and I was talking about the publicity accompanying every government action and I was saying this publicity was misleading. As an example of this misleading literature, here is how they can have people accept a smaller cheque. I am quoting another part of the famous folder I mentioned:

> In order to ensure funds for this child tax credit, we will have to lower the monthly family allowances from the current $25.68 to $20 for each child. However, they will continue to be paid to eligible families—

This $20, not the $25, is therefore taxable.

> —and, of course, to be indexed to the cost of living. The majority of Canadian families will benefit from this change because in addition to receiving the new tax credit, they will continue withdrawing their family allowances.

How could we qualify this publicity trick? Should we call it irresponsibility, infantilism or sheer deception? I suggest it is all that. I would simply say this to Canadians: Stop being suckers. Get back to reality because the first result of this bill will be to freeze huge funds not earmarked for family allowance. They all believe that children of low or middle income families will get a lot more money. Mr. Speaker, that is not the case at all because even if 10 per cent of these families do get a few extra dollars a month, most of it will be lost because the $200 will be payable only at the end of the year.

Miss Bégin: That is absolutely false.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): In other words the government will take advantage of the millions in $200 tax credits to finance itself during a year—

Mr. Breau: That's not true.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): —whereas the needy families will have only their meagre $20 per child to provide for them.

Mr. Speaker, someone said it was false—

Mr. Breau: That is false.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, someone says that's false. But that is what is in the bill. Maybe if we ask long enough we will get amendments, as the minister promised, as well as payments every three months. That is exactly what we want in the first place, those $200, and we are calling that to the minister's attention.

● (1532)

What is really happening? First, let us go back to the facts. At the end of December, 1978, that is this year, the family allowances will no longer be $25.68 but, due to cost of living adjustments, they will be brought up to $28.80 a month for every child. It means that every child will lose $8.80 a month instead of $6 as the minister pretends. Thus $105 a year will be lost, which brings the $200 down to $94.40 at the end of the year. With this loss of $105.60 and the allowances now granted, a family of four children, for example, will not be able to subsist with $20 a month for each child, a total of $80 for the four of them. They will have to rely on the $800 to make ends meet at the end of the year, that is in April of every year—

Mr. Breau: But it is next April!

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): —yes, I know, but it will happen every year. To make ends meet at the end of the year, the $800 will have to be borrowed.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): —it seems to me what I witnessed yesterday is true. Yesterday, I was amazed to hear statements to the effect that the minister tolerates interest rates of 15 per cent for a three-month period. In the case of a family which would like to negotiate those allowances, there will be only $400 out of $800 left at the end of the year since usurious interests will have taken $400.

Since it will be compulsory to fill in the forms, even if the family has not sufficient income to send an income tax return, this gives an idea of the delays which will occur in those payments. Those who like us have experienced the slowness of the whole bureaucracy, which has become impersonal, know what I am talking about. Even as an hon. member one cannot obtain the names of the people who are responsible for all the sectors of our riding offices, as I could experience recently. I asked the department but received no answer, which confirms my statement, Mr. Speaker.

Let us not forget that a family living on social welfare or below the poverty level waits every month for the family allowances cheque to make ends meet. It certainly would not tolerate that its own money be so withheld by the government a whole year before being entitled to receive an annual guaranteed income under a law. Those are always the same difficulties that we have when we pass too selective and too often politicized laws. It would be much better now to give $35 to every child without the tax credit provided in Bill C-10. We would rather pay $35 to everyone, we would rather see it universal, without that famous tax credit which would be delayed all year. That would be to the satisfaction of all families, the rich as well as the poor. And that would be fair.

In fact, poor families would receive the full allowances, which would amount to $420 a year for each child, whereas the family allowances to the families with an average income would be reduced according to the family income. Thus the poor would get more and the average family would get a little bit less, whereas the rich would then receive nothing, since everything he would receive would be given back in the form of income tax. Mr. Speaker, I can see that as a way to eliminate all the discrimination which existed so far, and which we still have in such selective legislation, because when making the payments, all children would receive the same cheque, since the difference would show only in the family income tax return. The family will get its allowances in full every month, so there will be no need to go see the shylocks to borrow.

● (1542)

That $200 will, as I said earlier, be easily taken off. Now, what will they do with the accumulated revenues—they will be accumulated revenues, they said so—after that cut in family allowances? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) himself said that lowering family allowances to $20 per month per child, would bring the treasury $170 million for the rest of fiscal 1978-79 and $690 million for fiscal 1979-80, $800 million a year on average. So reducing allowances from $25.60 to $20 does represent a sizeable amount. But if the calculation is made at $28 as it should be at the end of December, 1978, at $28.80, that would still increase the Minister of Finance's forecast revenues. So, at least $900 million in additional revenues, and all that taken out of child family allowances.

Today, I would like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) for being frank with the people. Indeed, in her statement of September 14, 1978, she said:

> Our approach to the implementation of those changes is simple. Above all, we must be sure that we are really going to redistribute the money and not increase spending; so cuts are necessary to finance the new benefits. Then the money must be reallocated to people who need it most: old people and small wage earners with children, those who suffer most from poverty, those who need help right away. Finally, we must define the new measures taking into account our sick economy; the formula must be an incentive to work and stimulate our productivity.

After reading that first part, Mr. Speaker, I imagine the minister must not always feel at ease within her party. We admit that old people should be receiving more and that low income people should be guaranteed a minimum income. We recognize that because, for 15 years we have been calling on successive governments in this House to set up a universal guaranteed income system to do away with those millions of inspectors, investigators, auditors bureaucrats of all kinds who relentlessly harass the disabled, the sick, the poor, the unemployed and people on welfare whom they often consider as rejects because they could not benefit from political favours as many bureaucrats had a chance to do today.

People laughed at us for years. Today, the government must open its eyes and say we are right. We recognize that our sick economy must be stimulated, but we recommend that we need a formula to provide an incentive to work and strengthen our economy; we are aware of that formula we need. Our economy must absolutely be stimulated, we are aware of all that, Mr. Speaker.

But how, by which means, through what procedure? This is where our opinions differ because we will certainly not tolerate that the government stimulate the economy at the expense of our children by reducing the amount of family allowances now that it has finished robbing senior citizens by taking back their right to unemployment insurance on retirement, now that it has eroded the income of pensioners as much as possible to make them even more dependent on the state. Do you want examples? In the case of senior citizens who had purchased Quebec annuities for their old age, the federal government takes back 50 per cent by reducing by that amount their income supplement. The federal government therefore robs provincial insurance benefits. What if the senior citizen was covered by private or group insurance? Once again, the federal government takes back 50 per cent or 60 per cent, to such a point that, according to most pensioners, it is better to be broke when you retire than to have saved all your life only to be robbed by the state.

Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat concerned about another comment made by the minister to the effect that the new formula should be a work incentive and a stimulant for our productivity. I find it difficult to reconcile this concept with the one concerning senior citizens, poor children, and so on. We have to wonder if the funds created by these cut-backs will be used only for social services since we are talking about the welfare department and I was under the impression that the cutbacks would be used only within the framework of our social services. We must now wonder, Mr. Speaker, if they will be used for other purposes, as this last statement seems to indicate.

When we talk about stimulating our productivity and creating work incentives, this is a more direct concern of the employment department and I wonder whether the minister's department wants to use the sums made available under the bill to create employment for senior citizens. This would surprise me enormously. This is where I find the statement of the minister a bit vague because I cannot imagine that even if our economy is in bad shape, the minister finds the situation critical enough to eliminate essential services for our children. Even though we recognize the ills that have been denounced, we cannot accept the means suggested as a solution to all our problems. Mr. Speaker, there is so much potential in Canada to recover easily certain revenues to stimulate our economy that it is not necessary to do so at the expense of the weakest and the more defenceless among us while protecting the strongest, if that is the aim of this measure. The government is looking for funds? I believe the time has come for the government to stop looking for funds in the social sector to make up its incredible deficits and set afloat its shaky administration.

• (1552)

If the government needs more revenues let it first reduce its irresponsible expenses for trips throughout the world—planetary travels as would say a certain hon. member. And if it needs $2.5 billion, for instance, as we heard recently in this House, it should defer for five years the purchase of military aircraft it has already ordered. We do not need military aircraft to live in peace in Canada. By this suggestion the government will find more money than needed and I might make dozens of other suggestions, all perfectly realistic. Let the government go after the big monopolies it is always protecting. It should order a reduction of the interest rates it pays to chartered banks because it did not have the guts to make the monetary reforms needed to create the credits required by our country.

To conclude, I ask the government to undertake an in-depth study of this bill at the committee stage to make the amendments required on third reading as, in its present form, we consider this bill, like many others, to be anti-social, anti-familial as it gives to money capital priority over human capital on the backs of our children.

Mr. Speaker, if I have a few minutes left I wish to read to this House a very interesting article I saw in Le Devoir entitled: "The New Social Policy of the Federal Government" written by Michel Pelletier, an economist and jurist. This writer is involved in research on social policy. I quote:

D'Alembert described politics as the art of cheating people. Valéry considered it was the art of preventing people from minding their own business. If we consider all the actions and moves of the Trudeau government since last August 1, that is since the Prime Minister announced in a surprise television broadcast the new economic policy which his government was bent on implementing in the aftermath of the economic summit of Bonn, we could find here numerous elements to support either one of these two points of view.

It is not that Mr. Trudeau or any of his ministers have lied to us. It would be too obvious and consequently not very fruitful. It is rather by means of a careful dosage of staging and dramatization, by an increase in press conferences and apparently sudden and improvised statements, by uncovering bits by bits without obvious logic the elements of that new policy, by the time lapses between these partial disclosings, it is by all these indirect means that the Trudeau cabinet has been able to create a state of confusion in our minds while creating the impression it was accomplishing a lot in a very short time.

Now listen carefully because he is saying great truths. I am now quoting again:

It was obvious then that in order to reach simultaneously objectives which were at least in competition with one another if not contradictory, that is to say do more in order to spur the economy and do more for the most vulnerable people while at the same time reducing government spending by some $2½ billion—the government would have to show a great talent for magic. And if we can agree to the fact that the state can take social benefits away from some people in order to give them to others, we could also fear that it would take advantage of this opportunity to reassign the amounts saved from social programs for the purpose of boosting the economy.

This is precisely the point when one talks about stimulating the economy which has me a bit upset because I can see through all those statements and through all these amounts taken away from the family allowances that the government can use it and this is why I mention it because at least when it happens people will say that we expected it, that it could use them to other purposes than filling the needs of social services. I think that the proposals and the critical remarks which I have made are inspired by the greatest sincerity and it is to give to this bill a more social and human aspect and to make it less impersonal and above all less centralizational so that it will exert less control over our population, because we are heading towards an absolute form of control, as absolute I think, if not worse than what exists in the Communist countries.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my speech by making it crystal clear, as it seems to have been misunderstood by some members of this House and by some members of the media, that members of the New Democratic Party support the principle of this bill.

We support the bill, as my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who led off the debate for our party said, because for the first time a federal government is amending the Income Tax Act to give greater benefits to people in the lower income brackets than to people in the higher income brackets. For the first time in Canadian history people who pay no income tax at all, because their income is so low that they are not taxable, will get benefits. We hope that is the first step toward a negative income tax, a theory we have supported for many years and which provincial New Democratic governments in British Columbia and in Manitoba began to implement years ago.

In the province of Manitoba the NDP government, while it was in office, changed the property tax credit to provide that every family, whether renting or owning a dwelling in that province, would get a tax credit. It included those people whose income was so low that they paid no income tax, and provided that the greatest tax credit would go to people in the lowest income brackets, with the smallest tax credit going to people in the highest tax bracket. It is not surprising, given our approval of this principle, that we support this bill.

The reasons why we support this bill were very well enunciated in a paper put out in August of this year by the National Council on Welfare entitled "The Refundable Child Tax Credit, what it is . . . how it works" and I quote:

On August 24 the federal government announced what may well be the most far-reaching restructuring of its programs of financial support for families with children since the introduction of family allowances. For the first time the federal income tax system will be used to deliver benefits to low and middle-income families, including all of those with incomes below the poverty line. Unlike the usual tax cuts of the past which automatically excluded those so poor that they already paid no income tax, a new mechanism—a $200 refundable child tax credit—has been designed that will provide full benefits to these poorest of families who are most in need. The same benefits will be provided as well to virtually all other families with incomes below the national average. As incomes rise above the average and the need for financial support diminishes, the benefits will be gradually reduced and finally phased out.

We endorse that statement of principle completely, and it is for that reason that we support this bill.

Our support for the bill was not made easy by listening to some of the speeches we have heard from the government side. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Anderson) suggested the pension paid to all residents of Canada who reach age 65, that is, the old age security pension, should be de-indexed. We look on that kind of a suggestion as the first suggestion to eliminate universal programs. We support universal programs, and we will fight relentlessly against that kind of a suggestion. I certainly hope that the member was not floating a balloon for the government when he made that suggestion.

Neither was our support for the bill made easy when we listened to the speech made yesterday by the Parliamenary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lachance). He took it upon himself to lecture the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae), suggesting that never having been poor he had no right to talk about poverty. He went on to suggest there was little if any poverty in Canada. He stated that this government had worked at reducing the gap between the rich and the poor and had been successful.

● (1602)

As reported at page 708 of Hansard, the parliamentary secretary suggested the hon. member for Broadview should "support the efforts made by this government or any future government to better meet the needs of those Canadians who experience hardship, and try to narrow the gap between the rich and the poor." This government has done many things. One thing it has not done is narrow the gap between the rich and the poor. It is a Liberal myth which they have preached assiduously, that they have narrowed the gap between the rich and the poor.

When the minister spoke the other night, she tried to create that same impression. I am not as enthused about the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) as my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. However, I look upon her as being probably the only liberal in the so-called Liberal cabinet.

The minister has made a number of good speeches dealing with the question of poverty. I want to quote a couple of sentences from a speech she made last May to the YMCA. I quote:

—nearly 2 million children who live in families with incomes inadequate for their needs and for the 600,000 working families who spend two thirds or more of their incomes to provide the basic necessities of food, clothing and shelter.... In 1977, the poorest 20 per cent of Canadian families received less than 6 per cent of total Canadian family income while the richest 20 per cent of Canadian families received 40 per cent of all the income. These figures are, unfortunately, very stable. The share of income going to our poor families has scarcely changed since the end of the second world war.

That was a statement of fact which the minister made last May. What happened the other day? I suppose she was responding to the attacks and criticism of her and the government by the lead spokesman for the official opposition, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I ask the minister to think about the difference between her May speech and what she said the other night about the hon. member for St. John's East. She said, and I quote:

He did not tell Canadians that it is not fashionable to talk about poverty today because there is no longer visible, flagrant poverty in Canada. People no longer really suffer from malnutrition as they did when I was a teacher 20 year ago. People no longer suffer from the effects of unacceptable housing conditions. Poverty is far more difficult to fight. It is far more difficult to sell to Canadians the fact that poverty should be put on the map of urgent problems to tackle because it has gone underground and has become less apparent.

She went on to suggest that because the standard of living in Canada had increased by 25 per cent in the last ten years, we do not have to worry about it. The minister knows better. The facts disprove everything she said the other night.

According to Statistics Canada, in 1968 a very substantial number of people were living in poverty. In its fifth annual review in 1968, the Economic Council of Canada stated, that based on figures from the 1961 and 1965 census, 20 per cent of all Canadians were living below the poverty line.

The most recent figures we have are for 1976. According to Statistics Canada figures for 1975-76, 11.8 per cent of all families and 38.1 per cent of unattached individuals in Canada were living below the poverty line. In other words, 19 per cent of all Canadians were living below the poverty line in 1975-76.

If anyone doubts the figures of Statistics Canada, I want to put on record figures published by the OECD. They show that in the early 1970s, using a standardized definition, 8 per cent of the population in Australia were living in poverty, 16 per cent in France, 3 per cent in Germany, 5 per cent in Norway, 3½ per cent in Sweden, 7½ per cent in the United Kingdom, 13 per cent in the United States and 11 per cent in Canada.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare represents a constituency in the metropolitan Montreal area, as does the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lachance) who suggested yesterday there is little if any poverty in Canada. I was interested in an article which appeared in Canadian Magazine, in June, 1975, dealing with some of the problems that exist in the city of Montreal.

Before putting any facts or figures on the record, I want to make it clear that I do not suggest that Montreal is any different from or any worse than other cities in Canada. In my own city of Winnipeg the situation of the native people, who are increasing in number every year and now make up an appreciable percentage of the population of metropolitan Winnipeg, is a disgrace. A large majority of them live in real poverty.

I want to put on record for the information of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the problems which exist in her city of Montreal. The minister was somewhat glib, uncaring, and unnoticing of the situation in her speech the other night. I quote from the article which appeared in the Canadian Magazine in 1975:

In Canada it's estimated that 25 per cent of all children live in poverty. In the city of Montreal, the figure is 46 per cent, almost double the national average.... 15,000 dwelling units don't have hot water. In 10,625 homes, people live without a bathtub or shower. Inadequate heating or faulty wiring cause at least ten fires a week.... The types of lives people lead show in the health statistics. The death rate in the slums of St. Jacques, in central Montreal, is fully twice that of the city as a whole.

I wish the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice were here to hear the statistics. Maybe he could explain how, under a Liberal government, that kind of situation could exist in the city of Montreal, part of which he represents.

● (1612)

The article goes on to say that in greater Montreal just under one quarter of the children under 15 can be classed as poor. In the actual centre of Montreal the figure rises to 46 per cent, almost double.

Then, in a report published by the National Council of Welfare in 1975, entitled "Poor Kids" I came across the following description of poverty:

We find the greatest number and higher proportion of poor kids live in rural areas of less than 1,000 population.

The report states that there are more than 500,000 children living in poverty in the province of Quebec and that the percentage of the total number in the province living in poverty is 28.1. The report goes on to speak about the St. Catharines school in a low income neighbourhood in Montreal's east end, where it found the following situation: 21.3 per cent of the children were inadequately nourished, 22 per cent were retarded in height and weight development, 30 per cent had a history of diabetes, and 20 per cent had a family history of tuberculosis. So I hope we shall not hear again the kind of speech we heard the other night from the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I hope she will go back to being the one person in that so-called Liberal cabinet who really understands that a large percentage of the people of Canada are in need, and that their conditions have not been improved by the policies which the federal and provincial governments have applied.

I said at the beginning of my speech that we would support this bill. It is a move in the right direction, but it is only a small step in the right direction. I suggest to the minister and to the government that if they were really interested in improving the condition of the people or in redistributing the wealth and benefits which could be achieved, they would set themselves the objective, the goal, of full employment. What we have seen under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for the last ten years is precisely the opposite result.

When the Prime Minister took office in September, 1968, there were just under 300,000 people unemployed. That was 3.7 per cent of the labour force. What we find ten years later is 946,000 unemployed—7.7 per cent of the labour force. The number of the unemployed has almost tripled and the percentage has more than doubled. That is the government's record. The most serious effect of this tremendous increase in unemployment is, of course, felt by the unemployed themselves. But every Canadian suffers as a result of that unemployment.

Don McGillivray, who writes a column several times a week appearing in the Southam Press, wrote an article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on October 11 of this year, in which he analyzed the effects of unemployment. I quote from his article because Mr. McGillivray is by no means a wild-eyed radical, and the Southam Press cannot be called anything but an establishment organization. Here is what Mr. McGillivray said:

> Unemployment can never be reduced to zero, of course. But surely it is reasonable to aim at getting it back to 5.6 per cent, the level of 1974 before the rate started to climb as a result of recession.
>
> If unemployment could be cut to the 1974 level, 360,000 Canadians who are now unemployed would be working instead. They would be producing, at a guess, about $8 billion worth of goods and services in addition to the $230 billion worth of output expected this year. They would also be off welfare and unemployment insurance, a saving of perhaps $2 billion a year.

The writer goes on:

> Let's stay with hard cash. What would $8 billion of extra production and $2 billion of lowered government cost mean to the average Canadian family?
>
> It means that unemployment cost the average Canadian family about $140 last month in lost output and extra welfare payments. That adds up to about $1,700 a year.

The result of the government's economic policies is being felt by every Canadian whether employed or unemployed.

If the government is interested in the redistribution of wealth, as members opposite have on occasion said they were, it would do something about the working poor of whom there are so many. In the Financial Times of August 1, 1977, George Radwanski, who writes a column every week, summarized the findings of the report made by the National Council of Welfare entitled "Jobs and Poverty", as follows:

[Mr. Orlikow.]

> The report makes clear that neither laziness nor inability to work can be the decisive factor in the majority of cases. Fully 60 per cent of low income families headed by persons aged under 65 are the working poor, people who depend on labour rather than upon government assistance for most of their incomes.
>
> Thirty per cent of the working poor are under the age of 25, most of them single persons without family responsibilities. But the overwhelming majority are over 25, and two out of three in this category are the heads of families with dependent children.

The writer goes on to show who these poor people are:

> They range from junior clerks and cleaning women in the office buildings of our largest cities to wood lot operators and fish processing workers in our rural areas. They are the laundrymen in our dry cleaning establishments, the textile knitters and small appliance packers in our factories, the baby sitters and housekeepers in our homes.

The article shows how poverty is prevalent in all parts of the country, in all provinces. Figures are given for the median income of these workers. Yet we find governments, federal and provincial, people who are living well, people who have "made it" in our society, people in business and in universities, saying that the minimum wage set by some of the provinces is too high. People who have to live on the minimum wage do not say that wages are too high. It is always those who are doing quite well, thank you, who lecture others about wages being too high.

● (1622)

I say to the government, and particularly to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that if they are really concerned about poverty and inequity, they should move to raise the minimum wage, because it is a disgrace that there are hundreds of thousands of people in this country who are doing an honest day's work and whose wages are so low that they live in poverty. We have to do something about that. The time for that is long overdue.

Let me speak about one more group which is in trouble. I am thinking about probably hundreds of thousands of single parents, mostly women, who want to work, who are trained and educated for work, whose work is needed, who are not working, and who are living, many of them, on welfare or social assistance, because in this country we have not developed a system of nursery schools, day care centres and kindergartens so that the children of these single parent families can be taken care of during the daytime when their parents are at work.

In this respect this country and its governments, federal and provincial, have failed miserably, and we ought to look at the experiences of some countries in western Europe, such as Sweden and Norway. We ought to look at how they have established systems so that children whose parents want them to be in day care centres, nursery schools and kindergartens, can be there for a substantial part of the day so that their parents who want to work and are able to work can do so.

There was one other part of the minister's speech which disturbed me, and I thought it to be very surprising coming from this minister. Hon. members can find this part of her speech on page 672 of Hansard. In reference to the part of this bill which reduces the amount of the monthly cheque which is paid to the mother of each child in this country, from the present $26—or $28, which it would have been in December—to $20, and which provides a yearly cash payment for each child of $200 to mothers in families earning less than $18,000, the minister tried to justify the necessity for cutting this $26 to $20 by saying, and I quote:

—we knew Canadians would not agree to pay more taxes and that there was no other source of funds than shifting benefits within the existing system, making it more fair and equitable.

The minister knows better. Indeed, in a speech from which I have already quoted, a speech she made to the YMCA in May of 1978, with regard to the tax system the minister said, and I quote:

The average taxpayer in the $5—10,000 category benefited from various special personal income tax exemptions in 1975 to the tune of about $237 per year. The average taxpayer in the over $50,000 category benefited to the tune of $5,592. And of course if you were too poor to pay taxes you would not have benefited at all. That may well be good fiscal policy and in some respects it is good social policy too—but still, it does seem odd that those who need the benefits most are least likely to get them.

When the minister was speaking two nights ago, I wished she had remembered the speech she made in May, because in May she was saying that the tax system as it is and as it has been—and as it will be after this bill is passed—has not been working properly nor in the interests of the poor. The other night she was saying that there was no other way to get the money needed to pay for the increase to those people whose incomes are less than $18,000 except by reducing the $26 per month payment to $20. We in our party completely reject that kind of thinking because the facts do not bear out the argument made by the minister.

Let me refer the minister to a report—I presume she has forgotten it, if she ever saw it—made in November of 1976 by the National Council of Welfare. The report is entitled "The Hidden Welfare System". The council did an excellent job of showing how the tax system under Liberal and Conservative governments, and in the last 15 or more years under a Liberal government, operates. Let me quote a few paragraphs from the council's report. I think the following is a profound observation:

There are two welfare systems in Canada—one for the poor, the other for everyone else.

Most of us know about the welfare system for the poor. We are told about that ad nauseam by many well paid lawyers, accountants, university professors and other spokesmen who frequently speak on behalf of those who have, but we do not hear a great deal about how the tax system works as a welfare system for the wealthy. This is what the National Council of Welfare says:

While all of this is going on—

This refers to the welfare system for the poor.

—however, another massive spending program continues virtually unnoticed. Like the highly visible welfare system for the poor, this program transfers money from government to individuals. In fact it transfers far more money than the poor ever receive from their welfare system, and its benefits go to millions of persons. By any reasonable definition of the term it is a welfare program.

Only it is not called a welfare program. And its principal beneficiaries are most assuredly not the poor. It is called the Income Tax Act.

I want to digress for a moment and say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that this minuscule change which is being proposed in the Income Tax Act, while a step in the right direction, will not change the essential fact that, on the whole, our income tax system benefits those who need benefits the least, the wealthy. Then the National Council of Welfare went on to say in its report, which I commend to the minister, the following:

The mechanism which governments have used to make the ability-to-pay principle operational is a system of progressive rates of taxation. These rates work in a straightforward manner: The first few dollars of an individual's income are not taxed at all; the next are taxed at a very low rate; the following are taxed at a greater rate; those after that at an even greater rate, and so on.

That is how the system supposedly works. As originally developed that is how it did work, but that is not how the system works at the present time, and I think the minister knows it. In its report the council gives examples.

Under the existing income tax provisions . . . a taxpayer is allowed to deduct up to $1,000 in interest to arrive at his taxable income. Therefore, although this person's real income is $20,000, he only has to pay taxes on $19,000 (his $1,000 of interest income is tax free). Tax on $19,000 is $4,640—$380 less than the tax on $20,000.

That is just one example. In other words, a person with a taxable income of $20,000, of which $1,000 comes from interest on investments, gets a bigger benefit than a low income family with one child will get as a result of this bill.

● (1632)

It goes on and on. They summarize by saying the following about the tax system as it operated then, and it has not changed, except for the worse:

In 1974 the tax subsidies generated by the exemptions and deductions in the personal income tax system (excluding the basic personal exemption and the deductions for expenses directly related to earning an income) plus the tax subsidy contained in the temporary tax reduction provision cost Canadians $6.4 billion. And this was, by no means, the total cost of the hidden welfare system in that year.

Mr. Speaker, $6.4 billion is what the tax system gave to people, most of them in the upper income brackets. As a matter of fact, they go on to show in the report that the tax benefits for a person with an income of over $50,000 average out of just under $4,000 a year, to be exact, at $3,989.78, while the tax exemptions, the various loopholes in the income tax system for a person with an income of under $5,000, give him a benefit of only $243.75.

I put those figures on the record because I want to reject completely the suggestion made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare the other night that there was no other way to get the money but to reduce the amount paid in family allowance to each child, from $26 to $20.

Let me conclude by putting on the record what we find has been done for the corporations of this country, mainly for the 1,000 largest corporations, in the way of tax concessions as a result of the recent benefits. We have calculated them to be $1.25 billion, made up as follows: $300 million in tax relief in respect of business inventories; $485 million in federal investment tax credit; $20 million in enhanced depletion for high cost oil and gas wells; $120 million in increased dividend tax credit; $45 million in the increase in limit for capital loss; $10 million in the inclusion of capital gains on Canadian securities; $100 million in other corporate and investor tax concessions; and $165 million in loss in provincial revenues related to the above, for a total, as I have indicated, of $1,245 million.

Therefore we do not accept the arguments of the government as expressed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that it was necessary or useful to reduce the monthly payments per child from the $26 now paid, or from the $28 which would have been paid as of December 1 as a result of the increase in the cost of living, to the $20 which is proposed in this bill. We do not believe it is necessary. We think that the amount should have remained as at present, and that we should give, as well, $200 per child in tax credit to people in the lower income brackets. However, we are not the government and we have not drafted the legislation. We propose to vote for this bill despite what we consider to be the very grave defects in it.

Having said that, I conclude as I began, by saying that we will vote for the bill but we will do so with grave reservations. We will do so in spite of the speeches made by members of the government side—including the Minister of National Health and Welfare—rather than because of the speeches which they made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-10, to amend the Income Tax Act. Shall clause 1 carry?

On clause 1.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Chairman, having thoroughly considered the bill now before the House, I think it is fair and reasonable that hon. members should try to understand its contents more deeply. I think that the time allowed to us in committee of the whole is the best time to put questions to the minister and give him the chance to make us understand the amendments brought to the bill.

● (1642)

Hon. members will have the opportunity, as I will in a moment, to propose an amendment which, hopefully, will be carried by the House. Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to thank you for recognizing me. Several aspects of this bill are very positive, while others are very negative. I will deal, Mr. Chairman with a very negative aspect. I had the honour of congratulating the minister during her stopover in my riding last summer, about the $200 tax credit. According to the minister, it will be granted not to those living on the poverty line but rather to the middle income families of this country. Despite the government's desire to lighten the tax burden of the disadvantaged, the practical application of the legislation poses problems and results in serious administrative complexities.

Mr. Chairman, to quote an expression used by my colleague, the hon. member for Bellechasse during a debate in the last session, I would say that we have in front of us a government of fence riders. Why fence riders? At a certain moment, the government juggles with a bill which it says is not yet good enough, then it amends the bill as it probably will amend, in the coming weeks, the bill amending the Unemployment Insurance Act which was passed about two years ago, if I am not mistaken. Instead of wasting the time and energy of the House, why does the government not take the time to consider thoroughly the needs of Canadians?

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out a statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare for which, as I said earlier, I congratulated her. As the minister explained it, the new measures are judicious and will have good effects from an economic point of view. They will enable the children of poor families to contribute, to a certain extent, in the prosperity and welfare of the country. Let there be no misunderstanding. These payments are for the people who are in urgent need of help. They will increase the purchasing power of millions of Canadians. These people will not save that money, they will spend it and, by so doing, they will stimulate the economy.

Mr. Chairman, as my colleague, the hon. member for Roberval pointed out earlier, the minister says, on the one hand, that she wants to help the economy as well as low and average income groups with this bill, and on the other hand, she reduces the rate of family allowance because, as she says, there will be a tax refund. We are told, on the one hand, that it is necessary to give the economy a new impetus while allowing those people to meet their needs and, on the other hand, family allowances are being reduced.

Therefore, I am tempted to put a question to the minister. If the economy needs a new impetus, why decrease allowances that are payable and, by the same token, increase the tax credit by $200? Now, let us keep in mind that, according to the minister, the refund is immediate, while people will have, as pointed out by the hon. member for Roberval, to wait until the end of the year. But some say he was wrong; so let us take their word for it: he is wrong and payments will be made every four months. Thus, those people will have to wait four months before receiving their share which will be approximately $270 for a family of four children after a period of four months. On the other hand, those poor families—as the minister said—must stimulate the economy by spending the income they are being given.

Following a question raised by the hon. member for Broadview, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville replied and I quote:

> We are concerned about the discounters, the usurers, the rip-off artists who may go to a mother and say, "You have four children. That amounts to $800 that you will be getting in terms of a tax credit. We will lend you the money, but we will charge you an excessively high interest rate." If that happens it nullifies—

And the minister interjected:

> It is limited to 15 per cent now.

Imagine, Mr. Chairman, if these people want to follow the suggestions of the minister, they will have to use these means to be entitled to live decently in this country.

Going over, once again, the main principles of the bill now before the House, we note the following: Allowances are reduced from an average $24.68 to $20 a month. The government proposes to end the higher income tax exemptions for children of 16 and 17, and substitute instead a uniform exemption of $460 for each child. Clause 3 of the bill proposes the withdrawal of the non-reimbursable tax credit of $50 a year for each child. The bill institutes a reimbursable tax credit system of $200 for each child in families whose income is $18,000 or less, and of 5 per cent of the amount by which the family income for the year exceeds $18,000 in the other cases.

As my hon. colleague for Roberval said a while ago: Why take away from one and give to the other? Why deprive of that right those who earn a salary of $30,000; why not have a system entitling those whose income is higher to receive the same amount as everyone else? As the hon. member said, we should have a universal allowance, or in other words, all Canadians should get one regardless of their salary. In his income tax return, the person who earns $30,000 a year will have to declare the family allowances and pay income tax accordingly. To my mind, the system suggested by the hon. member for Roberval would be far more fair to all mothers, regardless of their income. We have reached the point where we are asking the average mother not to have any more children, while we are telling the low-income mother: We will give you more money, so go ahead and have more children! We ask unbelievable things of the Canadian people; yet, motherhood is one of the vital rights of every mother.

Mr. Chairman, too quick an examination of this bill could lead one to say it is excellent. But on closer perusal, one will realize that it holds many a hidden problem. I know the minister wants to increase the tax credit. But did she think that many poor families depend on those family allowances to make both ends meet? When reducing family allowances, by $5 a month, the government does not help families which must live from day to day. Why give the tax credits and take off $5, as I said earlier? We should not forget that Canadians who live below poverty level do not pay taxes; so most of them do not file income tax returns. With the new system proposed by the minister, those families will have to file an income tax return to obtain this refundable tax credit.

I agree when the government wants to give more support to poor families but by requiring them to ask for their money, they force them to ask for their due, namely family allowances. Like my colleague the hon. member for Rimouski, I think this measure will unnecessarily make the bureaucracy heavier and make income tax returns more complex for Canadian citizens. I know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare wanted to help the poor by introducing this reform through the Minister of Finance. Unfortunately, I am afraid this reform increases the tax burden of middle income families. Poor families will be able to use the credit in full but middle income families will need an income of over $18,000 or they will not be entitled to the whole deduction. The government has the bad tendency to overtax middle income families. Well, those families represent the greater part of families in Canada.

Mr. Chairman I think, Bill C-10 will be an additional burden for middle income families with two to four children. By reducing family allowances to $20 a month the government immediately reduces the purchasing power of those families. Mr. Chairman, there might be a very interesting suggestion to be made at this point to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who I hope will forcefully ask cabinet and more particularly the Minister of National Revenue as in a question put on the order paper by the hon. member for Bellechasse in January, 1976, and I quote:

> 1. As of March 31, 1975, what was the amount of income tax arrears owed by national and multinational corporations?
>
> 2. Do those arrears carry interest and, if so, at what rate?
>
> 3. How far back to they date?

To our great surprise, Mr. Chairman—and I think that would be something to bring to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, rather than taking from one hand to give to the other the government should take its responsibilities immediately. We learned that for the years 1973 and before, 2,470 national and multinational corporations owed the Department of National Revenue $80,662,661. In 1974, those companies were given a break. We have 9,269 companies owing a total of $91,381,797. In 1975, we have the utterly ridiculous situation where 12,881 national and multinational corporations owed the Department of National Revenue an amount of $50,998,490 for a grand total of $223,042,948.

Mr. Chairman, it stops in 1975. I believe this government should in the first place, as suggested by the hon. member for Roberval, desist from picking the pockets of middle-income and poverty line taxpayers, and turn to those corporations owing enormous amounts of money. Questioned earlier I quoted the minister who said a person borrowing the amount of family allowance she would be getting four months later would pay interest at 15 per cent. Mr. Chairman, what could be more ridiculous? The 27,000 companies owing us $223 million are charged interest at an annual rate of 6 per cent. We are telling the people: Pay, give your lenders an opportunity to charge you 15 per cent interest, and we will allow millionaire multinational corporations to keep the public's money at 6 per cent interest. If that is not ridiculous, Mr. Chairman, what is it? Scheming, maybe? Mr. Chairman, what is urgently needed today is trying to give Canadians an opportunity to live decently. Concerning taxes and those companies I was referring to, since I have come to age, since age 17 when I started working, never did the government allow me, nor will it ever allow a Canadian citizen to tell Revenue Canada: I will keep your money and give me 6 per cent of what you owe me. No, we are charged 15 per cent.

• (1652)

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to answer a few points raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve in his speech.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are just a few minutes left before we begin private members' hour. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary could wait until we reassemble at eight o'clock. I just wanted to make the point that the official opposition has not surrendered its traditional right to lead off on clause 1 of the debate. I trust that Mr. Chairman will keep that in mind as we reassemble at eight o'clock.

Mr. Martin: I am quite prepared to close off now until eight o'clock, Mr. Chairman. I would like to respond to some of the points raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve, at that time.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

* * *

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I have the honour to inform hon. members that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill S-3, an act to implement the international convention for safe containers, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

[Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve).]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis)—Public Service—Relocation and retraining of employees whose jobs are declared redundant; the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Transport—Rail service in Newfoundland; the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro)—Fisheries—Rights of Indian bands.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, private bills. There being no items under the headings notices of motions and private bills on the order paper, the House will proceed to public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HEARINGS OF CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville) moved that Bill C-201, to amend the National Transportation Act (review and re-hearing), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-201 arises out of problems caused by the construction of the Powell sidings by the Canadian Pacific Railway in Windsor, but is not limited in its effect to that case.

Since the Powell sidings issue is still before the Canadian Transport Commission for decision, I have to be somewhat restrained in my references to it, though I must develop enough of the facts in relation to it to explain the problem. The Powell sidings were built in the summer of 1974 to facilitate a new co-operative rail-freight service between the Canadian Pacific Railway in Canada and the Chessie system in the United States. To quote from an article in the Detroit Sunday News on November 3, 1974, at page 10-G:

> A new siding in Windsor was built to provide a landing stage for the exchange of Chessie and CP equipment . . . An eastbound train, manned by a U.S. crew, is turned over to a Canadian crew. Simultaneously, a westbound train manned by the Canadians, is turned over to the Americans . . . Prior to this arrangement Canadian trains halted in Windsor and cars were transferred to various U.S. carriers in the Detroit area.

The problem is not with the co-operative arrangement between the railways—which is an admirable effort at rationalization—but with the location of the new sidings in Windsor. Although the sidings were built on land already owned by the railway and served by railway tracks, the land had not previously been used as a holding and transfer area. Since there are residential areas contiguous to the tracks on both sides, the neighbourhood residents were understandably disturbed by the substantial change in the railway activities in the area, and they succeeded in obtaining a hearing before the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission on the application by the CPR to change the usage of the sidings.

In my submission to the committee on behalf of the citizens on June 17, 1975, I described the situation as follows:

There are really two kinds of problems raised by the Powell siding. The simpler problem relates to the traditional pedestrian crossing. The lack of such a crossing has proved an inconvenience to residents especially of the Remington Park area to the south of the tracks because it hampers their access to Memorial Park immediately to the north of the tracks.

● (1702)

What I regard as the more serious problem concerns the environmental effects from noise and air pollution caused by the use of the Powell siding by trains for long periods of time. When there are no delays, the occupancy of the tracks is for a very short period of time, but on the 25 per cent or so of occasions on which the trains are not on time, the use of the new tracks constitutes a genuine and serious annoyance for the residents. Even if the diesel engines are disconnected and taken to the CPR railway station, the continued presence of refrigeration cars and cabooses causes a noise and pollution problem. On days when the schedule is awry this nuisance may be present for 6 to 12 hours or longer.

Many residents described the railway usage in much stronger language than I did. I might also add that many people were ready to substantiate that the delays were much higher than the 25 per cent figure I used in my submission. With the additional observation possible during the lapse of time since then, I am inclined to agree with them.

After lengthy hearings the Railway Transport Committee held on April 17, 1977, that the application of the CPR to construct and use the sidings should be rejected. The committee said in part, and I would like to quote from the decision of the Railway Transport Committee:

In our opinion, the difficulty was created by the fact that, contrary to the Railway Act, Canadian Pacific constructed Powell sidings without first applying for and obtaining the requisite approvals from the committee—

It is one thing for the committee to consider the opening of what is proposed to be a lightly travelled branch line through farm land or uninhabited open country (or a siding on a main line through the same kind of territory), and quite another for the committee to consider two sidings along the main line to be used for international traffic through the Detroit River Tunnel as is the case here, and as is also the case here, that traffic will not merely pass over the sidings without stopping, but trains containing, among other things, cars with dangerous commodities will, according to the evidence before us, be left standing sometimes for hours. By no stretch of the imagination could it be suggested that Powell sidings are in open country or even in a lightly populated area. They are located in the middle of a city with residential districts, a park and a school in close proximity on one side and a residential area and substantial open space on the other. It is the Powell sidings in that character that we must consider, not Powell sidings as two isolated pieces of track.

For these reasons, the Application of Canadian Pacific under section 216 of the Railway Act fails."

The committee could not reach agreement at that time on the disposition of the motion for costs by the citizens, and that question remains undecided to this day.

The problem which this bill addresses arises from the application by CP Rail in July, 1977, not for a review by the CTC of the decision, but for a new hearing. The public argument began in November of 1977 and continued through April, 1978. The neighbourhood citizens were once again put in the position of having to engage legal counsel to defend their rights to undisturbed possesion of their property. In fact, representation for the citizens was made possible by a decision of the Windsor city council to pay a lawyer to act on their behalf before the CTC. Without this generous decision by the city of Windsor, the residents would have been in a most unfortunate plight.

The second set of hearings before the CTC has been conducted on the premise that the doctrine of res judicata has no application to the proceedings, and I am informed that counsel for the CTC contended on an application before a federal court that res judicata does not apply.

The doctrine of res judicata is described by Halsbury's "Laws of England" (4th ed., 1976, vol. 16, para. 1527) as a "fundamental doctrine of all courts that there must be an end of litigation." It applies where the subject matter in dispute in a later case is the same as in a previous case, i.e., where everything that was in controversy in the second case as the foundation of the claim for relief was also in controversy or open to controversy in the first case. Where a plea of res judicata cannot be established because the causes of action are not identical, issue estoppel may preclude a party from contending the contrary of any point which has been determined against him. This is sometimes also referred to as res judicata.

The doctrine of res judicata does not apply to administrative tribunals, but it does apply to quasi-judicial tribunals exercising judicial functions. The citation for this is the "Canadian Encyclopedic Digest," (Ontario) 3rd edition, 1973, paragraph 104.

In fact, the CTC has held that on a review it is, in effect, bound by the doctrine of res judicata. Witness the statement by a review committee in the Comsol case:

The power to review, now to be found in section 63 of the National Transportation Act, has been given to the commission and to its predecessors for pragmatic reasons. It is an expeditious manner to correct an error or to meet changed circumstances. In themselves these two factors encompass all motives for review. The nature and the degree of the error may vary almost ad infinitum. The changed circumstances may have developed after the decision had been rendered or for sufficient reason some circumstances may not have been placed before the commission at the time of the original hearing. With respect to the correction of an error, the remedial process may exist concurrently with the appeal jurisdiction of the Federal Court. With respect to a change of circumstances, the remedial process is left to the commission. It amounts, when changed circumstances are invoked, to a reopening of the original hearing in order to receive further evidence.

The jurisdiction of the commission is administrative, legislative and quasi-judicial. For instance, the commission is called upon to make an administrative decision when it sets a specific speed limit pursuant to the Railway Act. In adopting regulations, the commission legislates by delegation. When making a decision on a matter in dispute between parties in adverse interest, the commission performs its quasi-judicial role . . . The finality of a decision rendered in the quasi-judicial context must be seen in that very context which is not the context of an administrative decision even if the procedure followed to reach a conclusion in either instance may have been the same under the general rules of the commission—

This panel would agree that it would be remiss to refuse to determine the matter before it is reviewable if the applicants and the intervenors had demonstrated that new facts had arisen or that the decision contained an error in law or in fact or that a matter of principle that had been proposed before the original committee had not been considered, or that a new matter of principle arose as a result of the decision ... This committee cannot see that it would be to the public advantage to again consider the questions that have already been dealth with by the modal committee and to re-examine the body of facts from which in their wisdom earnestly and in accordance with the rules, the members of the original panel have drawn opposite conclusion.

The official citation for that case is Amoco Canada Petroleum Ltd. et al and Canadian Pacific Ltd. [1974] CTC 300, at 321, 322, 326.

● (1712)

Although this decision was criticized by a 1978 study for the Law Reform Commission by Professor H. N. Janisch, it nevertheless remains the Committee's final word. I should also make it clear that this was not a report of the Law Reform Commission itself but a study which was done for it.

But if a party is able to avoid the CTC's stated limitations on reconsideration of a matter merely by the device of making a new application rather than by asking for a re-hearing of an earlier application, then obviously there is an enormous loophole which the law must move to close if the CTC does not. It is this loophole which Bill C-201 attempts to cover by providing that the CTC may alter orders or decisions already made only where there has been a material change in the circumstances upon which the order or decision was based.

I would have no objection to an amendment at committee stage to broaden the grounds on which reconsideration can take place beyond the single one I propose in Bill C-201 of a material change in circumstances. The five grounds adopted by the CTC itself in the Comsol case would be acceptable. What is not acceptable is the continuation of the status quo under which there are no limitations on the CTC's powers of rehearing and there is therefore no end to litigation. Such a situation puts a premium on the financial resources of the contending parties and obviously places citizens' groups in an inherently unfavourable position, especially when confronted on the other side with the resources of a gigantic corporation.

It is my hope hon. members will agree that the status quo cannot be allowed to continue and will agree to refer Bill C-201 to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for full consideration of the problems that I have raised.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take much time of the House. I listened to the comments made by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). His remarks underlined a particular problem with regard to transportation policy, which is operated to a large extent in this country under a quasi-judicial tribunal, the Canadian Transport Commission.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville pointed out that while he deals ostensibly with an example in his locale, it opens up a much broader question for debate. I support the hon. member in asking that this bill be referred to the committee for the fullest possible examination. From that point of view, I support the bill going forward.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

This gives us an opportunity to present the bill to the committee for the fullest examination of the circumstances regarding a loophole whereby transportation companies, often large corporations, may circumvent the principle of reasonable justice by making a re-application or new application under a particular set of circumstances. This could cause citizens in a particular locale who are affected by these decisions, some inconvenience and substantial expense. I understand and sympathize with the motives which caused the hon. member to bring forward this private member's bill.

There is a growing feeling of concern in many regions in Canada about the effectiveness of the operations of the CTC. I see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) is here. I do not say this in any partisan sense, but people in western Canada often feel that the resource or sensitivity of that administrative tribunal is not all that could be desired with regard to particular problems relating to transportation in various regions, specifically in western Canada.

Hon. members know that my party has suggested a reorganization of the CTC to provide for a western branch of that administrative tribunal. It would be responsible for considering matters relating to transportation in western Canada. We look forward to the CTC performing a more sensitive role with regard to transportation policy, using transportation as a tool for regional development in western Canada.

The bill brought forward by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville gives us an opportunity to consider the more technical loopholes to which he referred. This is an admirable opportunity for members of parliament to examine the rules under which the CTC operates and whether the CTC is adequately equipped to deal with local or regional problems. Over the course of the next few weeks and months, we could look at the operation of transportation policy where an application is required for a service, extension of service, or permission needs to be granted by the CTC.

I support sending this bill to committee, as do the members of this party I am sure, because it will serve a very useful function. I believe even the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), who usually opposes things, will agree to having this bill go to committee. With those few words in support of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, I will resume my seat.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise that whenever the name Canadian Transport Commission comes up in this House, whether in a private member's bill or any other context, I cannot sit back and say nothing. I am surprised that other members from Vancouver Island, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) are not here. I assumed they would be equally interested. As I progress, I will show why it is of interest to those on the island.

I may not agree with the hon. member's proposed bill because, as I understand it, the bill before us proposes to amend Section 63 of the National Transportation Act to make it read as follows:

> Where there has been a material change in the circumstances upon which an order or decision of the commission was based or out of which an application arose, the commission may review, rescind, change, alter or vary the order or decision, or may re-hear the application before deciding it.

As hon. members will recognize, the bill would limit the powers of the commission to review its own orders and decisions. Under its terms the commission could only carry out reviews "where there has been a material change in the circumstances upon which an order or decision of the commission was based or out of which an application arose."

At present the rules under which reviews are conducted are set out in the general rules of the commission. The general rules provide that:

> —an application for review shall be filed with the commission within 30 days of the issuance of the commission's order or decision, unless the commission enlarges the time.

There are other areas which give the review committee a determination as to whether to re-open hearings. At present the review committee comprises the vice-president, five chairmen of the modal and two ad hoc commissioners. I understand in 1974 the committee considered the Comsol case, Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company Ltd. and examined the place of reviews with regard to appeals to the CTC. It came up with a decision, and I quote:

● (1722)

> The decisions of the Transport Commission are appealable under the National Transportation Act, as under earlier legislation, to the courts—at present to the Federal Court—upon a question of law or of jurisdiction. Further, our decisions may at any time be varied or rescinded by the Governor in Council either on petition or on his own motion. Finally, section 55(1) of the National Transportation Act provides that on a question of law or jurisdiction a case may be stated to the Federal Court.

This is particularly significant to the residents of Vancouver Island, because in 1976 a decision was reached by the Transport Commission to allow the abandonment of passenger service on Vancouver Island. Almost immediately the province of British Columbia took to the federal courts a case in which it challenged the right of the E and N Railway to abandon its passenger service. This action was taken on the grounds that under the original agreement certain sums of money or land had been granted to the company by the federal government and by the government of British Columbia in return for an undertaking to carry on a rail passenger service in perpetuity. It was on this ground that the B.C. government decided to challenge the decision of the commission.

As I said earlier, the bill before us would restrict the powers of the CTC with respect to a re-hearing or re-examination of a decision.

As I have noted, it is also possible for the Privy Council to overturn a decision of the CTC. In December of 1977 I petitioned the Privy Council to take such action. If I may, I will read the letter I wrote to the Clerk of the Privy Council, Mr. P. M. Pitfield:

> I, the undersigned, most respectfully wish to submit, through you, a petition to the governor in council under provision 64(1) of the National Transportation Act requesting that a decision taken on December 14, 1977, by the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission Under order No. R-25960 be rescinded.

I received a reply almost immediately from Mr. James R. Midwinter, Senior Assistant Secretary to the cabinet, in which he states that the matter would be referred to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) as the minister responsible for the act, for his consideration and advice to the governor in council. I bring this up because we are dealing with a very complicated area. The CTC is not only being questioned on legal grounds in the courts of British Columbia, but steps have been taken by a member of this House to have it rescind an order which would cause the abandonment of passenger service on Vancouver Island.

Hon. members may recall that last year I spoke extensively on this subject of rail line abandonment. There is only one railroad line on the island and only one road, so when rail passenger service is cut out you end with one road which is totally inadequate to meet the needs of the people who visit our beautiful island every year, especially in the summer months by the hundreds of thousands. I can give one figure which may be of interest. Over a four-month period more than 600,000 people visited the Pacific Rim National Park near Comox-Alberni.

With these things in mind I find myself uneasy hearing an hon. member put forward legislation whose effect would be to restrict the re-examination of decisions made by the CTC. There are some of us who want these decisions to be reviewed, especially decisions which affect what we consider to be essential transport services. For this reason I am bound to speak against this bill and trust we shall continue a wide open approach to the review of the commission's decisions. In many cases, as I say, we are dealing with matters which are of great importance to the areas affected.

Since the decision was made by the CTC some startling developments have taken place. In 1977 there were approximately 11,000 passengers using the E and N Railroad. With the rescheduling of dayliner services, a reduction of fares, and the introduction of a three-day excursion fare in 1978, the total number using the service to date this year is 40,000. This is the sort of information we would wish to see brought before the CTC, and it is for this reason I hope we shall allow the greatest latitude for the re-opening of these matters so that we may save transportation systems where there is a need for them.

I would hope that the CTC, if faced with an unfavourable result of the court action, would be willing to re-open its hearings so that new evidence could be produced to demonstrate the economic feasibility of this line due to the much greater passenger participation in the last year. Alternatively, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Privy Council, on the basis of the information provided for 1978, will overturn the CTC ruling. But these corridors must be kept open for the sake of the people of Vancouver Island who do not wish their passenger service discontinued.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I would have to agree with the views expressed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn). The number of opportunities for the House to consider the activities of the Canadian Transport Commission or even of the Department of Transport in depth are few and far between, and it looks as though they will be unusually limited this session.

There are a number of items which should be considered, both by the department and by the commission. Applications such as those referred to by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) come before the Canadian Transport Commission without any onus upon the applicant for abandonment of service to prove that there is in fact no business. There is no onus upon the applicant to prove that he or she has made a proper effort to obtain the business which might be available in the area to be abandoned. There is no onus upon the Canadian Transport Commission to consider seriously the human, industrial or social needs for a particular service and to say in an unqualified way that the carrier must continue the service which he has suggested he should abandon.

● (1732)

I am particularly concerned about the aspect of the situation in which the carrier is not requested to indicate how much business is in the area and what effort the carrier has made to obtain that business. It appears to the public that the carrier very often may deliberately reduce service to a level which makes it totally unacceptable to the shipper or passenger. Having become totally unacceptable, it is of course not properly patronized, and the application for abandonment of the particular service automatically follows.

I think the questions which I raised in the House today put an exclamation mark after this procedure, over which the government apparently has no control or, if the government and the CTC do have control, the minister of many years is not prepared at this moment to state what element of control they do have. A carrier may be permitted to abandon a service, the transportation of a product, without application to the CTC, and this is a very dangerous situation.

I understand the reasons for the presentation of this bill, but I must say that because it deals with an isolated instance it cannot be used as an instrument to justify the limitation of the power of the CTC to change its position. Nor can it justify itself on a national basis because it cites a specific instance. My sympathies are with the applicant and with the residents of Windsor-Walkerville who are concerned about this problem, but I would not like to see this matter considered in the committee as an individual case with relation to the CTC, its decisions and what rights of appeal there are. I would like to see this bill go to the committee so that there can be an opportunity to consider the general transportation problems of Canada and the decisions which are being made by the CTC.

I would like this subject matter to go to the committee so that we might get a proper delineation of the opportunity to appeal to the CTC when service is not officially suspended but in practice is, as is the case with the CPR and the potato industry in the province of New Brunswick, and as is that case with respect to perishable food products and processed products in the Dominion of Canada. There has been a virtual withdrawal by the railroad systems from their responsibility to transport these products.

If this bill were to go to committee and if the government permitted a broad study of the responsibilities of the railroads, the authority of the minister and the authority of the CTC so that these things might be spelled out, the bill might then be amended, not just as it refers to the CTC and a specific case but, rather, as it refers to transportation problems in Canada generally. I strongly recommend that this bill go to a committee on that basis. It would be unfortunate if it went to committee and was considered only with respect to a specific instance because the subject matter is much broader than that. I do not offer any prejudice to the specific instance outlined in this bill, but I do want to use it as an example of a broad transportation problem in all of Canada.

If the bill could go to the committee in that context, I think we could have a very proper discussion on how the government, the CTC and the railroad structure of Canada could combine to give better service on a broad basis and assure all Canadians that where service is essential the railroads shall be obligated to continue that service.

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to add a few words in this debate and to commend the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) for once again putting before this House the whole question of the interaction between the railways and the Canadian Transport Commission and, more particularly, the railway transport committee of the CTC.

As one who is somewhat familiar with the problem faced by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville by virtue of a similar problem in my own riding some years ago which cropped up again within the last year, for which I was, thanks to the co-operation of the House, able to get through a private member's bill which amended the Railway Act in this connection, it seems to me that there is a real need to examine closely the jurisprudence which the CTC, through its railway transport committee, is going to use to assist people. I am thinking particularly of people in urban areas which perhaps were not so heavily built up years ago when the railways first went through but have since become very heavily urbanized. In some cases homes were built closer to railway facilities than they should have been.

I think what the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville is touching on is what position the CTC should be taking in relation to the railways. In the past I think there has been concern amongst ordinary residents who run into problems with the railways that they are in the position of fighting city hall. Even though there is a federal authority in place, there is a feeling that it should be there to take care of their interests as well as the interests of the customers of the railways and the railways themselves. There has been concern that perhaps the CTC has not been doing that effectively.

I believe that perception has not been without some degree of validity, but I think that is changing. As a result of a private member's bill which I managed to get through the House recently, I find that the CTC is now prepared to come out to the public, as it were, and hold public meetings in areas where there are problems. I want to commend the railway transport committee for initiating that kind of action last year. When a subsequent problem arose in my area the railway transport committee came to the borough of Scarborough and held a public meeting. When the local residents were not satisfied with the notices they were given concerning that meeting, another meeting was held. The second meeting was widely advertised. At the meeting the committee listened carefully and attentively to all the comments made by local residents. It was a formal meeting, and subsequent to it the Railway Transport committee issued its findings and insisted that the railways do certain things. What was involved was a temporary relocation of track. The committee insisted that the railways conform to certain requirements, and I know that tended to placate the concerns of the residents.

I think the CTC and the railway transport committee, which is a segment of the CTC, are endeavouring more and more to listen to people. Through submissions made by members of this House, including the excellent submission put forward through this private member's bill in the name of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, I think they will do more listening. I think it is up to us as members of this House to continue to bring these problems forward.

The railways are a tremendously important part of our economy. In years gone by they were considered to be so important that perhaps the ordinary citizen should not have involved himself too much in what was going on, even if there were problems in local areas.

This is a thing which has to be turned around. The railways must realize that not only are they responsible to their customers and for keeping the economy of this country functioning, but they also have a responsibility to communities where their railway facilities enter and pass.

● (1742)

I know the problem which the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville is facing. I think it is a little unfortunate. I believe that because the CTC has rules in this matter in favour of the local people and against the railways, if I am correct, the railways were anxious to bring the matter up again and the CTC held another hearing. I believe the appeal process should provide for either side to do that. I really think the CTC should be as responsive to the local groups in urban areas as it is to the railways.

The other point I would like to make—and now I will move away from the concerns of citizens relating to the reopening of facilities that have been dormant for years—relates to the whole matter of grade separations. I see the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) in the House now and I know he shares my concern in that regard because there are many crossings in our two ridings on the main Canadian National line which runs between Toronto and Montreal. I do not know whether there is a more heavily traversed line in Canada than that line. There are crossings in the borough of Scarborough, which has a population of 375,000 people, which as yet do not have grade separations. This is a really dangerous situation. Every day there are hundreds of thousands of motorists crossing these level crossings and in each instance the exposure factor is very serious. I hope that the Canadian Transport Commission will continue to put more pressure on the railways to initiate the installation of grade separations as well as better signalling equipment.

I have noticed that as a result of actions taken by the hon. member for Scarborough East and myself of recent years, there has been an improvement in our borough in the quality of safety measures at those level crossings over the last few years, and it is noticeable. I do not know whether this is strictly a coincidence or because the railways and the CTC are starting to feel some pressure. If that is the case, it is all to the good because what we want is what is best for the communities involved; and in the long term what is in their best interest is also in the best interest of the railways themselves.

● (1752)

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the bill introduced by my colleague from Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) is essentially quite important, in the sense that it gives rise to a problem faced by his constituents and also raises a much broader issue, that is the place of a citizen as an individual and the place of a citizen as a member of a pressure group and, the means available to him to challenge a decision made by federal boards endowed with quasi-judicial powers. This is a very important problem and I would like to thank and congratulate the hon. member for having introduced a bill which allows us to discuss however, briefly the much broader issue of the citizen's representativity before quasi-judicial boards as mentioned earlier.

A very important problem evidently arises if such commissions, as in the case of the CTC, can constantly reconsider their own decisions and if a transport company can put forward any reason, which may be more or less different from those invoked before, if a commission can and must reconsider or reexamine the issue or the decision it made. Of course, Mr. Speaker, this subjects pressure groups, whether citizens' committees or individuals, to financial and administrative burdens, and is quite time consuming, and I think it is the same for the CRTC and other federal commissions, who must implement certain policies of the federal government.

I know that the CTC is now stydying this aspect which can become quite costly for the citizen, and that it is looking for ways of reducing this burden which an individuals, a citizens' group must bear, to allow them to resort with more fairness to the procedures established by these commissions, either the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission or the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard valid arguments for both sides of this issue, one being that the commission must have the right to review, rescind, change, alter or vary its orders and decisions, the other being that the power of the Canadian Transport Commission to do so should be restricted, so that justice is not constantly doing and undoing itself. My colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Anderson) argued that the CTC's mandate, its power of review, should be as widespread as possible in order to avoid that citizens, groups, or areas be wronged when a decision that is issued is detrimental to them.

Moreover, my colleague the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), argued that the power now enjoyed by the commission to change its decisions and modify its orders is too wide, as I said earlier, and that any transport company can, for more or less serious reasons, try to convince the commission to change a decision it has made and which might not be advantageous for the company.

These are the two arguments we must consider and I think they can be applied to both sides of the fence. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar said it is unjust to allow large transport companies to refer constantly to the commission's decisions, but on the other hand the magnitude of the Canadian Transport Commission's power to change or review its own decisions makes it possible for simple citizens, citizen groups, local chambers of commerce or any other pressure group, in other words for people who do not have the financial means and are not as well organized as large companies, to refer to the commission's decisions. Arguments are used on both sides with equal force, and this is the dilemma I am facing now.

I would like to come back a little later on the foundation of the question, but may I digress a little, Mr. Speaker, to comment on what the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar said when he stressed a real problem in the western provinces, namely the fact that provincial authorities or the citizens or local groups feel somewhat uncomfortable when it comes to appeal to the Canadian Transport Commission, and they consider that the commission does not always do justice to their regional aspirations.

This is an important matter which the hon. member raised, but I would like to remind him that last year, on December 3, if my memory serves me right, in a speech he made in Saskatchewan, the Minister of Transport undertook, on behalf of the government, to establish as far as possible a western arm of the CTC, as he said to look after and satisfy more adequately the legitimate regional expectations of the western provinces. So I am happy the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar raised that aspect of the problem but I would remind him, Mr. Speaker, that such a commitment was made by the Minister of Transport nearly a year ago now.

The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) wanted to support the principle of the bill we are considering now on the ground that it would be a good opportunity to discuss the whole policy and problem of transport at a meeting of the transport committee. I have some sympathy for the point he has made because everybody in this House had at some time or other problems somehow related to transport in Canada. And that is all the more true, I believe, for the Atlantic provinces and for the riding of Carleton-Charlotte which is represented by the hon. member. Of course, as individual members in this House we all had to criticize decisions made by representatives of our national railways but naturally it is always important, I think, to raise those matters before the House of Commons or in committee to try bringing those large companies to play a social role which should be more important. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to illustrate my point with a personal experience I had some two years ago when the Canadian National decided to suspend its passenger service between Quebec and La Malbaie in the heart of my riding.

Of course, you could argue that there had been a sharp decline in the volume of passengers in recent years, but as was mentioned by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, there was no way to assess or determine to what extent the company was responsible for that traffic loss. So it is very easy, Mr. Speaker, to come up after a few years and say: Look, the number of passengers has been going down for five years, we are losing millions of dollars each year on that branch; that's why we are asking the Canadian Transport Commission permission to suppress that service. That is very easy to do: you only have to make trains leave at 5.15 a.m., or use self-propelling railway coaches without any heating; there are all kinds of means which may be used to scare the passengers away.

That is what they said in the riding of Charlevoix when the commission was under the able and noble chairmanship of the vice president, Mr. Roberge, who came in La Malbaie to preside over the public hearings. Mr. Roberge was very sympathetic to our local representations but, of course, he was faced with questions of dollars, statistics that could not be denied because if the company said, we had so many passengers such and such a week, this could not be denied, it was right. And the commission or the commissioner did not have any means at their disposal to assess, as I was saying, the factors for which the company itself might have been responsible, the factors which brought about that deficit situation, so finally, not having those instruments, the service was unfortunately abandoned.

In other instances—this was the case of the little Northern train that goes to the Laurentians north of Montreal—we saw the commission refuse to let the CPR abandon a service and as a result of the sustained efforts of local chambers of commerce in the municipalities, that service had 100 per cent more passengers last winter. If I make those digressions, Mr. Speaker, it is to show how important is the basic question of allowing the Canadian Transport Commission to review its own decisions and I think that the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville was right in raising it but unfortunately I think we still have not had enough time to scrutinize all the aspects of that question because, as I said earlier, we are faced with a dilemma, there are arguments both for an as extensive as possible revision authority and a restrictive revision authority for the Canadian Transport Commission.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we still have not had enough time to scrutinize that whole question which is extremely important to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, but I hope that this important matter which we have just examined briefly will allow the government and the federal administration to try in the coming months to do what needs to be done with respect to all those quasi-judicial commissions or boards so that appeal procedures will not become a financial burden for the average citizen or pressure groups because the game is too one-sided between a big company and a group of citizens, a chamber of commerce or an individual to pursue for months, even years, appeal or revision procedures, or changes in decisions and orders, and so on.

I hope the government and its administration understood the message clearly and will try as soon as possible to develop mechanisms to ensure that Canadians receive all the justice they are entitled to in dealing with large corporations in this country.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. With the consent of the House, perhaps we could go back into committee of the whole before the Chair calls it six o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CHILD TAX CREDIT

The House resumed consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-10, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide for a child tax credit and to amend the Family Allowances Act—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Turner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at six o'clock clause 1 of Bill C-10, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, was under consideration and the hon. parliamentary secretary had the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I was answering some of the points the hon. member for Villeneuve brought up during his speech when we broke up for dinner. The first point he made, I believe, was that next year there will be a decrease in federal allowances to the citizens of Canada as a result of the bill now before us; I should like to explain that this will definitely not be the case. In 1979, more money will go from the government to the citizens' pockets. For instance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) told me $60 million more will go to the province of Quebec, to name only one. I feel that point deserved to be explained.

[English]

The second point I should like to refer to, which I picked up from the hon. member's comments, is the concern over the need for people to go to tax discounters in order to obtain their funds. This should not be necessary at all as we are hopeful that the filing system will be simple and speedy enough that, indeed, they will be able to make their filings in good time and receive their $200 credit for each child on a fairly prompt basis. There should be no need to resort to the tax discounting business.

I suppose one might add in passing that, as a result of the legislation we passed in this House last year, the tax discounters are at least now limited to being able to collect no more than 15 per cent. However, the point should be made that there should be no need now for people who want to claim this particular credit to make use of the tax discounting group.

The third point the hon. member for Villeneuve referred to was the fact that there is a progressive decrease in the $200 benefit once a family income is over $18,000 per year. I understood from his comments that he felt this was rather unfair. There has to be a threshold somewhere in order for this particular legislation to make any sense at all, and it seemed logical to fix that threshold at some point around the area of what the average family income is today. That is how the figure was picked. As has been pointed out in speeches by both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the threshold is $18,000 but, indeed, people with net incomes higher than that will continue to receive credits, though on a diminishing scale.

Again, I think along the same line, the hon. member was generally making the point that it seemed unfair to hit the wealthier families in that they would have a decrease now in family allowance payments. Perhaps that is very true, but the whole thrust of the legislation, from the time of the first announcement by my own minister on August 24 and subsequently by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has been that we are taking a look at some of these social programs, and here is an opportunity, without increasing over-all government expenditures, to take the expenditures now being made, reallocate them in a manner that really seems to make more sense, and really help those people in areas where there is a real need.

● (2012)

Those are the only four points which I wanted to comment on at this time. I am sure there will be opportunity during the course of the debate to speak on other matters.

Mr. McGrath: I welcome the opportunity on clause 1, Mr. Chairman, to place a few questions on the record in the hope that they will draw the attention of the minister. I am glad to see her sitting opposite me tonight, and I am particularly happy to see that the officials of the tax department are between us, because the last time I addressed the House on this bill the minister transgressed one of the ancient privileges of the House and crossed the invisible barrier between us, which is the equivalent of four sword lengths separating the opposition from the government, and presented me with a copy of the report by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women right in the middle of my speech.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Two sword lengths.

Mr. McGrath: I stand corrected; it is two sword lengths. In any event, I have the protection of the department tonight as well as the two sword lengths.

I would like to place on the record a quote from the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, to which the minister was the distinguished secretary, in support of the position that I put forward during my remarks on second reading. One of the points my party put forward as part of our social program was that the homemaking spouse should be included in the Canada Pension Plan. I would like to read recommendation 103 of the royal commission report; I am grateful to the minister for sending it across the floor to me:

Therefore, we recommend that (a) both the Canada and the Quebec Pension Plans be amended so that the spouse who remains at home can participate in the plan, and (b) the feasibility be explored of

(i) crediting to the spouse remaining at home a portion of the contributions made by the employer on the employed spouse's behalf, and

(ii) on an optional basis, permitting the spouse at home to contribute as a self-employed worker.

I would like the minister to tell us exactly what the position is of these recommendations by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women which were made some time ago. I put it to the committee, in support of the position which I placed before the House during second reading of the bill, that the government has continued to ignore most of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women and particularly this recommendation, which is so important to the whole social welfare program which the government is addressing in part by the bill which is now before committee.

I would like to refer also to the remarks of my colleague the hon. member for Egmont on the effect of this bill on women in the home and the status in the bill of the married woman in the home. I would also like to comment briefly on the outstanding maiden speech of my colleague the hon. member for Rosedale. Most hon. members will agree with me that it was one of the greatest maiden speeches of the House.

In support of the position put forward by my colleague from Egmont, there was presented today to the Minister of Finance a letter—copies of which were made available to all parties in the House—from the chief commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. I would like to read that letter into the record. It is addressed to the Minister of Finance and is dated November 2, 1978:

The Canadian Human Rights Commission has certain reservations concerning the provisions of Bill C-10, the enabling legislation for the refundable child tax credit program, which I would like to communicate to you before the bill moves into committee of the whole this afternoon.

We are concerned that the bill makes distinctions based on marital status. The result of these distinctions is that mothers who are married are treated differently (and adversely) under the bill. The identification for special treatment of individuals whose living arrangements are based on legal marriage has a discriminatory impact.

Implicit in this provision of the bill is the intention to take family income into consideration in the determination of refundable child tax credits. We would like to be assured that the government does not intend to base its future taxation and social policies on the joint income of two spouses, which is not an adequate definition of family income.

That is precisely the argument that was put forward by my colleague the hon. member for Egmont.

The basic principle of using the income of the total family or living group will require extensive examination before its implications are fully appreciated; the Canadian Human Rights Commission urges the government not to move precipitously into this policy area.

The provisions of Bill C-10 which isolate the income of legally married women for special consideration are not consistent with the recent social phenomenon of the emerging economic independence of women. The Canadian Human Rights Commission felt it important that parliament be alerted of these concerns at this stage of policy development.

He goes on to say that he has sent copies to the Leader of the Opposition, leader of the New Democratic Party and the leader of the Social Credit party and the letter is signed by R. G. L. Fairweather.

The committee and the House have a right to hear a response from the government as to just how it intends to meet the very serious implications set out by the commissioner with respect to the direction this bill is taking in determining family income and the impact it will have on the rights of women and, especially, women as outlined in the bill—those women who are in the home and who are not covered by the bill.

There were a number of questions raised during the course of the debate which should be put into focus at this point in the committee stage of the bill, since we are now dealing with clause 1. It is well to remember that the welfare ministers of the provinces, when they met in Nova Scotia last September, expressed concern that there had not been consultation with them regarding this bill. Has there been consultation since that time, considering there are two provinces which have their own child allowance programs, and what impact will this bill have on those two provinces?

We would also like to know if there has been consultation with the provinces with respect to the impact this bill will have on provincial social assistance programs. Does the government have the assurance that people who qualify for the special tax allowance under this bill will not be penalized in terms of social welfare programs under provincial jurisdiction? That is an important point and one which the committee is entitled to be satisfied on.

The question has already been raised regarding the rebaters, who will have a field day unless there is special provision made to protect the recipients of the benefits of this bill from those people. There are a number of things in this bill which are causing us trouble. We support the bill naturally, but while we question the way the government is going, we do feel nevertheless it is a bill that tends to address a problem in this country, namely, the disparities of income with respect to the present social welfare program of the government. For expample, we are dealing here with a negative income tax principle and in my estimation a number of people will be filing tax returns for the first time. These people will be unfamiliar with the forms and we can anticipate that there will be a number of errors. We would expect, under normal circumstances, that there would be a substantial educational program involved because we are dealing here with the 1978 tax year. We are talking about this bill becoming operative in this tax year, and the returns will be based on the 1978 taxation year. So we can expect all kinds of administrative problems in this area. We are wondering, therefore, what steps the government proposes to take with respect to meeting these problems.

● (2022)

Then there was the question which was raised in the House today dealing with the social insurance number. Many of these people do not have a social insurance number. They will be required to have one, and we know the administrative process in applying for and receiving a social insurance number is often slow. A lot of people are not familiar with this number and do not know how to go about applying for it. To a large extent we are dealing with low income earners, people who are not familiar with the tax bureaucracy of the government, with income tax returns, with the social insurance number and all that it entails. There is no information presently available in the 1978 guide that accompanies tax returns. Consequently, some kind of an advertising or educational program will be needed in order to familiarize people with their entitlement under the bill, how they can qualify and meet the requirements of the act. In this respect we are wondering how the government intends to meet that problem.

We will have other questions with respect to the technical aspects of the bill, Mr. Chairman. My colleague the hon. member for York-Simcoe will have questions with respect to those aspects of the bill, and I know the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance is well able to satisfy the committee in this regard. Officials of the Department of Finance are with him, and these are questions we will anticipate as we get into the bill.

To conclude my opening remarks on clause 1 of the bill, I believe the committee is entitled to some response from the government with respect to the legitimate concerns expressed to the Minister of Finance today in a letter from the chief commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. I hope that either the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the parliamentary secretary will address herself or himself to this letter at the outset.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member raised—and I took note of his questions—seven matters he would like to be clarified. The main question concerns clause 1 of the bill and I will do my best to answer it. Referring me to his earlier speech on the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women he asked what we are doing for homemaking spouses and their participation in the Canada Pension Plan. While his point is not too relevant to the bill before us, I shall answer it briefly.

First, most of the recommendations of the report, with a federal thrust, have been implemented. The report recommended a study on housewives participation in the Canada Pension Plan, as it is in essence a pension plan that applies to workers. It is based on employer-employee contributions. So, the government studied this problem under my predecessor and decided after many public and private consultations to maintain the nature of the Canada Pension Plan based on a double contribution and to make only amendments that would not change its character.

I think the hon. member will recall for instance that we proposed for a mother who decides to stay home to raise her young child a so-called drop-out provision so that her contributory earnings would not be reduced in the years for which she gets no salary, but that provision was rejected for all Canada because of the refusal of Ontario to sign the agreement. I only wish to say that the problem of housewives participation in the Canada Pension Plan, for which nobody has yet come up with the right answer, is related to the following question: Who will pay the employee and employer contribution? It seems to us that what is proposed to date by the hon. member would only benefit high income families as the husband might give to his wife the money required to pay both contributions.

On the second point, the hon. member referred to his colleague from Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and asked if the tax credit is high enough to be a deterrent for some mothers who would want to take a job outside. I believe that $200 per child would not be a deterrent for mothers who would choose to work outside unless in some very hypothetical cases a mother, because of her profession, would have a very high income and her husband would be a low income earner. Her decision to work or not to work would mean that family would no longer be in the $18,000, $20,000 or $22,000 a year group.

Also, I would like to say that we have in our income tax system other provisions allowing deductions for day care expenses. There are already many fiscal privileges so that a mother can decide to go or not to go on the labour market. Certainly, the tax credit will vary according to the parents' income and the number of children and will be reduced gradually by 5 per cent for each additional dollar and that is very marginal. Honestly, I believe there is nothing in that new tax credit likely to prevent a woman from working outside. Low income earners or mothers who would want to leave welfare and go on the labour market will be able to do so because the family income will probably be below the maximum where the tax credit is cut off. I can reassure the House on that point.

The third point is extremely important. I think it is fundamental and that everyone will agree on this. That is the issue raised by our former colleague, Gordon Fairweather, now chief commissioner of the Human Rights Commission. I believe that point is fundamental and it is the first time it is under study in this House when dealing with a legislation, and it is well known in some women circles.

● (2032)

[English]

It is the first time we have seriously considered the eventual problem of discrimination based on the use of marital status as a criterion. It is important to study it seriously. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands cannot disagree with that.

[Translation]

The whole Canadian welfare plan, whether it is from federal or provincial origin, is based on the parental income of the family unit, for instance the welfare benefits paid under the Canadian public assistance program, the guaranteed income supplement, the GIS, which is paid to old age people, and other programs we have, for example in the field of housing for the underprivileged. The whole social policy in Canada and the programs derived from it are based on the concept of parental income of the family unit; the same is true in the U.S. Moreover, the Canadian tax system is based on the individual except when a spouse takes charge of the other and, because of marriage, benefits from fiscal exemptions. That already exists. I have never heard the opposition object to this point. The bill before us does not make any change to this.

In Bill C-10 we are not concerned with marital status. We are concerned only with motherhood or legal custody of children, since it determines who will be the beneficiary, that is the mother in most cases since the refundable tax credit follows the family allowances pattern. Now, to determine the needs of the children we aim to help with this bill, it is essential that we know the parental income of the family, whatever the source of the income may be. One parent or two, the father and or the mother; the marital status is not important in this matter. I must establish clearly that in my opinion the concern expressed by the commissioner of the Human Rights Commission is absolutely without foundation in this case. It is true that the personal income tax return first asks for identification data which include the taxpayer marital status. The same data will probably be asked in the new and very simple form that is being developed for mothers, and it proceeds from the need to know the total income of the parents of the child whose needs we are trying to evaluate. I think I have covered all the aspects of this question. The fourth point was the impact on Quebec and Ontario. I am not sure if—

[English]

On the fourth point, I am not sure if I understood the hon. member. He may wish to repeat his point. It had to do with the impact on Quebec or Ontario and the other provinces. He may have meant the financial impact.

I would simply say that the poorer a province is relative to the rest of Canada, the more it will benefit. Quebec will be a beneficiary. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance gave the figure concerning new investments in terms of transfer payments to individuals by way of a new tax credit. This will be approximately $60 million for 1979. In Ontario, if my memory serves me well, the payment will be made to 714,000 families. However, because of the reduction in the monthly family allowance, the net result will be a very small gain. It will be a gain of approximately $26 million. This is speaking in terms of the impact on the provinces not from an economic viewpoint, but from a federal relations viewpoint.

The fifth point raised by the hon. member was consultation with the provinces. This is indeed very important if we want the money to represent an increase in the hands of the families. I have written to all my provincial colleagues. None have yet made a firm commitment. I have invited them to pass on this total amount, in other words, without using any indirect way of getting all or part of the money back into the provincial treasury, via increases in rents for housing or day care centre, or through welfare payments, such as the mothers' allowance in Ontario or any other such payment. I am very confident that the provinces will pass it on even though I have not yet received their formal commitment.

I have already met with five of my provincial colleagues. I will be meeting with all of them this month when this topic will be on the agenda. Under the act from a federal point of view, I confirm to my provincial colleagues that I will not consider this new child tax credit as income, thereby clarifying for them that they too should not consider it as income.

The sixth point concerned the appearance of the form and the complexities of using a tax form for 1.5 million mothers who receive family allowance but who are non-filers. The form has not yet been finalized. Our objective is to design the simplest possible form for mothers. We want them to apply and to receive the money set aside for them. Most will be non-filers because they are either on welfare or do not earn enough to pay tax. We are conscious of that and, if possible, will try to design a simple one-page form. However, we repeat, the final decision has not yet been made.

The last point raised by the hon. member was, strangely enough, with regard to SIN.

Mr. McGrath: That is, the proper use of SIN.

Miss Bégin: I do not wish to comment on moral grounds. The social insurance number is now required under section 237 of the Income Tax Act. If the form is devised to use the tax machinery and is connected to the tax system and, as the bill describes, we will check the income of the tax filers in cases where the parents are tax filers, we will probably invite mothers to write their social insurance number on the new form. If they do not have one, they will be asked to obtain one. This can be done very simply by filling in the form which is available at post offices or other government offices. I hope this answers the hon. member's questions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that, when the minister spoke during the debate on second reading, she dealt with some of the points I raised. Indeed, she dealt with two very important points. However, there are one or two others which I should like to invite her to speak about at this stage.

The two extremely important points that I raised in my speech on second reading and on which the minister commented were the matter of universality and the principle of indexation. I want to say again how much we welcome the fact that, even though a change is being made in the system of family allowances, we are maintaining the system of universality inasmuch as there will be a family allowance payment for every child in Canada up to the age set out in the legislation.

● (2042)

There was brought to my attention recently a statement which appeared in the "18th Annual Review" of the Economic Council of Canada. A new member of that council, Mr. Kalmen Kaplansky, commented on universality in a sentence or two that I think put it very well:

> The universal social security schemes now in place have been evolved painstakingly over a long time. That they are now as universal as they have become derives from the belief, well tested in experience, that universality is the way best to minimize arbitrariness of any kind in the delivery of these programs, and, accordingly, the way best to safeguard the dignity of each and every individual who comes into contact with them.

I have said a good many times with respect to old age pensions that it made all the difference in the world when the plan became universal. And it made all the difference in the world to family allowances when they were made universal. I am glad the principle has been continued and I appreciate the strong words the minister used in that connection when she spoke on second reading.

I am also pleased that as far as the continuing operation of this legislation is concerned, indexation is being maintained. It is true the government took away the indexing of family allowances for a year a while ago and that the government is taking away for 1979 all the indexing that has been accumulating since the basic rate was set at $20. Nevertheless, it is clear that in January, 1980, the $20 rate will be escalated in accordance with the rise in the consumer price index. It is also true that the $200 refundable tax credit will be escalated in 1980 and so will the $18,000 cut-off point. These are important aspects of our social security program and I am glad that, despite the voices which have been heard against continuing these principles, they still hold in this important piece of legislation.

These are two of the points I made on second reading. I am glad the minister agreed with me and perhaps expressed her views in even stronger terms than I did. There were also other questions I asked hoping that they would be dealt with at this stage. She has already touched on one of them. I indicated that in our view it was extremely important to get commitments from the provinces that they would not take advantage of the refundable tax credit and take away from needy families that amount of money or any portion of it. I was glad to hear she has made this representation to the provinces but I am sorry that she has not received any commitment from them. I do feel she should stay with the issue until she does. We cannot deny her this legislation if the provinces do not play ball, but to my mind it is important they should recognize the nature of this legislation and agree not to make any reductions in any other programs because of this refundable tax credit. As the minister has said, this credit is not to be treated as income as far as this government is concerned. That is good. I hope the provinces will be Canadian and follow suit.

Another issue I raised when speaking on second reading is one in which the minister showed some interest. I do not think she has yet commented on it. I refer to the changes which are being made in the way the consumer price index is computed. We have been told that the importance of food in the basket of goods and services which is used to make up the index is being downgraded. If there is any sector of our society to which the food component is important it is our children. If the change in the consumer price index results in a lesser indexation in 1980 or 1981, then a great disservice will have been done to the poor families of this country. The minister has just said, and I thoroughly agree with her, that for the provinces to take away any of the money which is being directed under the legislation to families in this country would be to defeat its purposes. I say to the minister that if her colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce permits a change in the computation of the consumer price index such that Canadian families do not get the indexation they ought to get in 1980 or 1981, it will be just as great a disservice.

I recognize that for the population as a whole changes have to be made in the consumer price index, maybe for statistical purposes, but surely for families with growing children to which food and clothing are so important, and also for older people, there is room for a special index. I do not know whether the minister has become familiar with this issue in the time she has been with the department; I know I placed the matter before her predecessor and I hope she will have something to say about it.

I move on to the question raised by the hon. member for St. John's East on the basis of the letter written to the Minister of Finance by Mr. Fairweather. I want to express the hope that the hon. lady will make the position clearer as time goes on. I have been reading the bill and reading Mr. Fairweather's letter, and I must say I am still trying to figure it out. If all that is happening in the bill is that a woman who is legally married is required to file a return jointly with her husband, whereas a woman who is living common law does not need to do so, then I do not see that as serious. But if there is a difference in the total income they report, if, for example, a legally married woman has to report the total income coming into a house whereas a woman who is not legally married does not have to do so, and therefore gets more, it seems to me that Mr. Fairweather's point is a good one. I shall not make a judgment until there has been more discussion of the matter, maybe when we get to the other clauses where the references to couples and marriage so on appear.

I move now to another issue to which oblique references have been made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance and by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance answered the hon. member for Villeneuve with respect to his remarks about discounters—and the same remarks were made by my friend, the hon. member for Broadview, the other day—by saying that the intention was to get these payments out fast, and in his view that meant that there really was not enough time to worry about discounters getting into the picture. I am not sure that that is a very good answer. If a mother knows she is going to get a $600 or $800 cheque in April and she is in need in February or March, the temptation to go to a discounter can be quite real. I think that should be looked at more deeply than was reflected in the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

● (2052)

This leads me to a concern about something to which the Minister of National Health and Welfare referred just a few moments ago. The minister made the point in her speech at second reading that a simple form would be sent out with the January family allowance cheque and that that form would be the kind which people who have never filed income tax returns could complete. The whole idea was that by getting that form out in January and getting it back very quickly, the work could be done and the refundable tax credit cheques sent out.

What concerns me is some language which I see in clause 5 of the bill where it says, in a proposed section 152(1) of the Income Tax Act, the following:

> The minister shall, with all due dispatch, examine a taxpayer's return of income for a taxation year, assess the tax for the year, the interest and penalties, if any, payable and determine—

Then it goes on to say that the Minister of Finance, having done that, may send out the refundable tax credit cheques. What I should like to know is very simple. Does this one-page, simple form which the Minister of National Health and Welfare says her department is going to send out in January qualify as the taxpayer's return of income for a taxation year, as referred to in clause 5? In other words, can we be sure that the clearly stated and completely approved position taken by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare is going to be implemented? Can we be sure that that will be done? Will that simple, one-page form about which the Minister of National Health and Welfare talks qualify as a taxpayer's return for the purpose of getting this refundable tax credit into her hands?

I think the minister said that 1.5 million mothers are non-filers. These will be women who are not in the habit of filing income tax returns and who are buffaloed by almost any legal document or questionnaire they have to fill out. I appreciate that what the minister wants to do is to get for those people a simple form so that the money will come back in two or three months. Is that going to happen, or are these people going to be told, "Well, you have not yet filed a taxpayer's return of income for a taxation year"?

Some of the things I have said have been part of the speechmaking we do around here. I want to emphasize again the importance of universality, indexation and so forth, but I would like to have the minister's comments as to her determination to get commitments from the provinces, as to what she is going to do about the consumer price index, and anything further she wants to say about Mr. Fairweather's comments. In particular I should like to know if we can be sure that there will be speedy delivery of these cheques to the 1.5 million mothers to whom I referred as well as to all the rest.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: May I take a few minutes to answer, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Agreed.

Miss Bégin: The first three points were probably comments made by the hon. member. I have listened closely to his explanation about the universality of indexation. I have already stated my commitment to those two fundamental features of our social programs. His third point concerned my reiterating the importance for the provinces to redistribute the money to needy mothers or families. Of course, the House can be sure that I will do everything I can to achieve that and I have sufficient confidence in the fact that my provincial colleagues are good politicians and could do it at no cost at all. That will give them good publicity and it will not cost them anything since the federal treasury will pay for this program on behalf of all Canadians. I am not prepared to ask all members to start submitting petitions to provincial ministers!

The fourth point was about the consumer price index.

[English]

I will not go into too many details regarding the consumer price index, but I want to make it quite clear that as far as I am concerned the new consumer price index will serve the clients of my department better. That is the attitude I would take if proposals like this came before cabinet. The new index is made up of an updated basket of goods. It includes the 1974 basket instead of the old 1967 basket to bring us closer to reality. It covers all family sizes rather than just two to six person families, as does the current one. It covers all income groups rather than just the $7,000 to $21,000 group referred to by the current consumer price index. In other words, all families earning less than $7,000 are now included. That will give a much better reflection of the needs of low income families. The new consumer price index covers more cities and more expenditure items.

All that being said, the net result is a relative decrease in the importance of the food index. It has declined from 24.8 per cent to 21.5 per cent of the consumer price index. By the same token, the importance of other items such as housing has increased. The housing factor has increased from 31.4 per cent to 34.5 per cent of the consumer price index. That part of the index will be important in the budgets of the families we are trying to help with this program.

With regard to the letter from the chairman of the Human Rights Commission, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred in his question to the treatment of married mothers compared with the treatment of common law situations in the income tax system. At the outset I would like to say that I do not think this bill will correct everything that is wrong in the system.

Having said that and protected myself from financial specialists, I want to say as Minister of National Health and Welfare and not as the former minister of national revenue that as far as I know common law situations have not been recognized by the income tax system. People living in common law situations usually have not enjoyed all the tax privileges offered to dependent spouses.

● (2102)

This time the common law situation is not viewed as it was before, and this legislation will permit in some cases mothers who are living in a common law situation to benefit from the credit, in contrast to families where the partners make good money. That is pretty theoretical, but if that is what the hon. member meant, it is theoretically possible.

Let me go back now to marital status as the criterion of eventual discrimination. I want to reiterate that the point raised by the chairman of the Human Rights Commission is not at all valid, so far as I can see. The married mother declares both incomes, or whatever income exists. The separated mother who has a legal separation declares her income, if any, from whatever source, as defined under net income in the income tax form, and will also declare the alimony, if there is any, or child payments. The situation is the same for divorced mothers. In the case of a de facto separation which is not legal——in the case of separations which are not legally recognized but which are actual separations, the mother is considered as sole parent and reports her sources of income. In the case of unmarried mothers, the woman of course reports her income once again whatever may be the source. Finally I do not see any case of discrimination based on marital status. The parents, when both are there, must report their income because the needs of the children must be determined and whether the woman is married or receives an alimony or is unmarried, as long as the family unit not within the fiscal meaning of the term, but as far as family allowances are concerned as long as the family unit does not have necessary earnings, the mother will receive a cheque. One might say that it is discrimination against men, but I am sure that was not the point which the commissioner wanted to make. I think that the commissioner was referring—and his letter is not quite clear in that respect to problems more especially identified by several feminist organizations a few years ago when the Carter commission was widely discussed. A point income tax or point returns were then mentioned. The Canadian system is not based on joint income tax reports. The mother, the woman, whatever her marital status, still files her own income tax report, if necessary. This I want to make quite clear. I do not really think that we should be concerned about it.

[Translation]

[English]

The sixth point had to do with tax discounters. There is a problem there. I would invite everyone to advise mothers to wait two months until they receive the full amount. Of course, cases might exist where mothers might wish to cash the anticipated benefits ahead of time. What was said last night in the House concerning the rate of 60 per cent which could be claimed by the tax discounters on the mother's anticipated return is quite incorrect. They cannot claim more than 15 per cent, all charges included. Hon. members will have to read the Tax Rebate Discounting Act.

An hon. Member: Read the form.

Miss Bégin: Officials from all the departments concerned have studied the matter. Perhaps 15 per cent is too much, but at least the amount is limited to a maximum of 15 per cent, interest and all charges included, which was not the case before. The complete system is geared toward sending out the cheques as soon as possible, and we hope to be able to start sending them out perhaps as early as the third week of March to the most needy mothers who do not file income tax returns.

The last point concerns tax forms. The hon. member referred to clause 5 which amends the old section 152 of the act. We are still working on the form. As I understand the situation, under the Income Tax Act the wording of the taxation form is prescribed by the Minister of National Revenue. We are working on a new form which we want to be as simple as possible. I hope it can be a one-page form which would follow the requirements of the Income Tax Act and at the same time provide us with whatever information is required.

Let me just go back to what I was saying under the heading of status of women. In the case of a family with two parents, the mother will fill out the form and ask the husband for his signature because both signatures will be required. Either parent will be able to fill out the form, but in all cases where there are two parents the two signatures will be necessary. I think this answers the questions put by the hon. member.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I notice that the minister said earlier that she would avoid answering questions based on moral grounds. I want to say to her that I consider the principle embodied in this bill to be totally immoral. I am talking about the rebate being based on family income. That principle, as the minister should very well know, she of all people in the House, is discriminatory against women. This is something which the minister has not really faced in her detailed answers to the various points that were raised. This principle is highly discriminatory against women.

She must recognize that in the legislation before us women are penalized. That is not new to the minister. She has heard me speak on this before in connection with other pieces of legislation which have been brought in by the government and which in fact she herself put forward. Not long ago I raised that question in the debate on the spouse's allowance. The kind of discrimination I am talking about here is the kind which takes away the sense of self-worth that a woman has as an individual in our society every time she must seek the approval of the older spouse—which, as the minister knows, in most cases is the man—to get the spouse's allowance. That is discrimination against women. This legislation discriminates against women also and it is contrary to the Human Rights Act.

The minister made reference to the letter which my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East, read into the record, the letter from Mr. Fairweather, the head of the Human Rights Commission. The minister indicated that this was the first time the subject had been brought up. Also she indicated that his presentation was not valid. That is not the first time it has been brought up. This point was raised with Mr. Fairweather, the whole approach of rebating or taking into consideration the concept of family income as some kind of a basis. It has been raised repeatedly with the Human Rights Commissioner by women's groups, individual women and individual members of parliament.

● (2112)

I should like to refer to one occasion when it was raised with the Human Rights Commissioner not long ago. The distinguished former chairman of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, Senator Florence Bird, raised this issue with the Human Rights Commissioner before the special joint committee on the constitution. In reply he said the following:

> I would be unhappy about a formula based on marriage. You know, we are over the days whether women have a right to work or not. 3.5 million women in this country work, and a quick answer would be that if a formula for eligibility is based merely on marital status, I think it is contrary to the Canadian Human Rights Act.

He went on to say:

> Women have the right to work and marital status in itself should not be used as an excuse for a different formulation.

I have put on record the question raised by the former commissioner of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, as well as the reply of the present commissioner of the Human Rights Commission, because they were both very concerned about this particular aspect. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said yesterday that she was delighted people here had suddenly found the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. I am sure the minister knows that there were some of us, including herself, who were involved in the writing of that commission report.

One of the things being fought for seven years ago, and again now, was equality for women in this country. This bill begins a regressive step toward that equality. The principle embodied in the bill is discriminatory, but it is also very regressive. It makes me extremely concerned and unhappy that this kind of legislation has to be introduced into the House.

I would think the minister herself must be very uncomfortable with this kind of legislation. I am sure she will appreciate that the entire thrust of the drive for equality of women in the past decade has been based on erasing the assumption that a woman is an extension of her husband. That is what the drive for equality has been all about, that a woman can be considered independent in her own right whether in the marriage unit or outside it.

This proposal puts her back into a dependent situation. It is no longer a question of having erased the assumption that she is dependent on her husband. The fact that her income is seen as an extension of her husband's income makes her a dependant in that category. For that reason I am concerned and upset that the minister, of all people in the House, should be lending her support to this aspect of legislation which is terribly regressive.

The minister will know that the ongoing reform to legislation at both provincial and federal levels, as well as the entire thrust of sections of the Law Reform Commission in the past decade, has been focused on reforming laws which discriminate against women, particularly women in the marriage unit.

This bill will add one more piece of discriminatory legislation to the statutes now on the books, at a time when we are attempting to eradicate them. There is a conflict between what we have been doing in the last ten years and what the bill introduces. The fact that the legislation is discriminatory and regressive shows a major step backward rather than forward.

In addition to this, the principle perpetuates injustice within marriage. Many laws have been introduced in the last number of years to improve the situation of women upon the dissolution of marriage. Many pieces of legislation have been introduced in many legislatures across the country. Regardless of the fact that these laws have been introduced to improve the lot of women upon the dissolution of marriage, the minister knows there is no guarantee of economic equality within marriage itself, and that a woman has no claim, save possibly her bare subsistence, on her husband's income. The minister must know that and recognize it. This proposal does not take that situation into consideration.

Over and over again we have stated that there are women, women's groups and organizations which are concerned. That was the concern of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women when its paper on taxation was produced. In part the paper read as follows:

Until Canadian women enjoy full economic equality within marriage, it is very important that no new measure be introduced that will further erode the independent financial position of married women.

That is what the council requested, that no new measure containing the concept of income based on family income be introduced to erode the independent financial position of women. In effect, it would make women more dependent.

There are a number of questions I should like to ask the minister, having expressed my concern about this legislation. I know she shared a similar concern at one point in time, and I hope she does now. Can she give us any idea how many women who would be entitled to the rebate on their own incomes will not be so entitled when their incomes are combined with those of their husbands? How many women will be affected by that? Has she made any effort to consult with the women who are going to be so penalized by this legislation? Has there been any effort on the part of anyone in the government or cabinet to find out what these women feel and think about the principle of joint income for tax purposes? Has anyone attempted to canvass the situation with women in order to find out whether they are willing, happy or receptive to this regressive legislation? Does the minister know if her colleague, the minister responsible for the status of women, has made any investigation regarding this matter? Has he attempted to canvass this situation? Has he made any real effort to find out what this legislation will do to the self-respect and dignity of women as individuals? Has that area been canvassed?

Has the Minister of Finance taken into consideration any other options for those women who do not want their incomes lumped with those of their husbands? Have other options been considered? Perhaps the minister could refer to the situation in the United States. The situation there is that there are several different options for tax purposes. A husband and wife in the United States can file jointly or separately for income tax purposes. Was that situation canvassed here? Was that approach considered? If it was considered, was it considered in light of an over-all revision to the taxation system? Did the minister look at that? Did she consider that perhaps, although that kind of legislation could be put into effect where women could file separately from their husbands, this aspect of the bill is premature?

• (2122)

Those are some of the questions I wanted to ask the minister. I should like to ask her as well if she has considered the possibility that whoever claims the children as dependents would be able to claim the rebate? Has this been considered, that the person responsible for the children within a marriage should be able to claim the rebate? I wonder whether the minister, in addressing herself to these questions, could tell me that in fact considerable discussion, considerable study and debate took place with her cabinet colleagues specifically regarding those points embodied in this bill which I find so immoral, regressive and discriminatory?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I would first like to say that it may be discriminatory that the cheques will be made out in the name of the mothers, but that is the thing of which I am most proud. I am also very proud of the bill and I want to clarify that once and for all. I am extremely comfortable with this reform which means, to anybody who understands and knows the taxation system, a refundable tax credit instead of a tax exemption. That is really what it is.

The purpose of this bill is to redistribute money within the system, making it more beneficial for families with children and small salaries who are in need. This has been achieved and the cheque had to be made out in the name of someone. The government decided the cheques should be made out in the names of the mothers of Canada, and this means that approximately $120 million more money will be placed directly in the hands of women. That is also pretty important and no one has mentioned it in this House. I want to make that point clear.

The way this bill was described by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, it is a bill which would change the taxation system in Canada. This bill is not introducing the principle of joint filing in this country. The hon. member addressed herself to the joint filing principle. There are opposite points of view on the principle of joint filing, but it seems to me we are not here to debate that. We are not here to debate the principle of joint filing, which is only a technique, a philosophy or a principle of taxation which, because it calls for different rates of taxation, would be beneficial to women.

However, we are not discussing that today. Opponents of joint taxation usually forget that aspect and discuss the matter on an ideological basis, questioning the fact that a woman would no longer have an income tax form in her name only. However, that has nothing to do with this bill. That involves a matter of joint taxation, something which does not exist in Canada.

Tonight we are discussing a bill which uses the tax system to create a tax credit associated with children. I want to confirm that we are not creating any discrimination or regressivity in this system, that being the other word the hon. member used. Eligibility is not based on marital status. I will repeat that because the hon. member said I did not explain it. Maybe I was not clear enough the first time. Eligibility has nothing to do with marital status. Anyone with children can receive the credit, be they single, divorced, widowed, married, separated or deserted. The credit is attached to the income of the family unit, which means two parents or one parent, whatever the circumstances of a given family, and there is no relation to joint filings of joint tax returns. This relates to parents, one or two, with children in a family unit who do not benefit from having enough money.

The purpose of this bill is to see that the children of the nation are provided for, and the credit is available to the parents, or the parent in the singular, no matter who looks after the children, in order that the parent or parents have enough money for the children.

I want to confirm that the wife's income is not treated differently than the husband's income. Both sign a piece of paper. There is a problem of which I am aware, as are many of my colleagues in this House. We will always fight in order to correct the situation, but this bill involves the redistribution of family allowances to the children of Canada.

There are just a few more points in order to clarify this matter. The federal Advisory Council on the Status of Women approved wholeheartedly of this reform, and made that approval known by a resolution of the complete council, as well as through numerous speeches and meetings. I have met with many women's groups all of which approve of this reform. Some of them regretted, as I do and as I have said often, the reduction in universal family allowances.

That is another question. Women's groups have told me that they approve of this reform, and I am reporting that to this committee. This reform has been requested of us by all provincial and federal advisory councils. They wanted a change in the tax system from tax exemptions to tax credits. This is a step in that direction of which they approve.

Quite rightly from their point of view, as well as from mine, they regret the fact that in order to create that new credit, one of the sources of the new money was found in a reduction of family allowances. We decided to reduce universal family allowance, although slightly, and to redirect the funds to mothers and children in need.

I think that answers the various points made by the hon. member. I want to stress again that the signing of a piece of paper in respect of the incomes of both partners in a family already exists, and I am not talking about a taxation system per se. This exists already in respect of GIS as well as in respect of every Ontario senior citizen program, low rental housing and in all our welfare schemes.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Chairman, before I get into the body of my remarks I would simply point out that the minister overlooked one question put by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, and it relates to the fact that both the husband and wife, or both parents, apparently have to sign the application form. Was that not one of the points that was made?

[Miss Bégin.]

Miss Bégin: Yes, both parents.

Mr. Friesen: Both parents have to sign, and that seems to me to be a point of discrimination. If the mother is an adult in every other way, why is she not considered an adult in this area?

● (2132)

I have been going over with some interest the remarks made by the minister in her speech two days ago. There are three words that keep recurring in her speech. One word is the word "reform". It is a very useful term but it can also be a very intimidating term in a speech like this. The purpose of this forum is to debate, and everybody is interested in reform, but how do you initiate debate when the minister uses that word? If I wanted to object to anything the minister has said, there is an implication that I am not interested in reform. If the minister wants to initiate debate on this bill, it would be better to use a more neutral word. Perhaps a better word would be "progressive". Everybody believes in reform and progressiveness, but if you disagree with a particular aspect of the policies that issue from those terms, then you are being retrogressive and not interested in reform.

The minister has used two other words which disturb me even more. One is the word "universality" which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is so interested in and takes great pride in, but which he is unable to get his caucus to agree with him on. I would like to ask the minister just how she intends to apply this principle of universality. Does she believe that everybody can be treated alike in this matter? She said in her speech, as reported at page 670 of Hansard:

> That is what we are proposing. In other words, we decided to put together the best of selectivity and universality.

I would like to have the minister explain how she can be a proponent of universality on one hand and selectivity on the other. The hon. minister cannot have it both ways, regardless of how good she is at gymnastics.

The third word which causes me concern is "redistribution". I take it the hon. member is referring to redistribution of wealth. How far is the minister willing to work toward the redistribution of wealth in this country? Obviously, if you talk about universality and about redistribution it infers government intervention. In fact, the minister makes a point of it at the bottom of page 672 of Hansard:

> This is the first time that the tax system will be used to deliver benefits to people. That is why we give it that funny name—the refundable child tax credit, although it is a cheque sent to mothers. It goes through the tax system and because of that this machinery has been set up only for annual deliveries.

Here is the sentence which really scares me:

> In future years it will be important to monitor what is best for, and what is wanted by, mothers.

Can the minister tell me to what extent the government is qualified to monitor what is best for mothers? The most fundamental institution we have in this country is the institution of the family and the integrity of the family unit. The thing which I find disturbing in this bill is not only the principle of redistribution which the hon. member refers to, but the intervention of the government into the sanctity of the family unit. I would like to have the minister explain that last sentence to me. To what extent is she willing to carry that out? The minister continues at page 673:

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked me that question. In all honesty I think members on the other side could agree with me that family allowances, no matter the economic circumstances of a family, are a right, by which the government shows that the nation is responsible for the well-being of . . . children—

When has it become the government's responsibility to look after children? If the government would like to do its job properly, what it needs to do is unshackle the parents so they can do their job. Perhaps we should restructure the tax system, not according to principles which the minister is introducing in this bill, but in such a way that the burdens are taken away from the parents so that they can spend their time bringing up the children.

SIN numbers have been the topic of questions and answers and repartee in this House, and I would like to ask the minister—and I am not punning on the word this time—whether the growing use of the SIN number is not part of the background, in the government's mind, of setting up the machinery for expediting guaranteed annual income. Would the minister answer those questions?

Miss Bégin: The first three points the hon. member has raised are of a philosophical nature. He has referred to three different concepts—reform, universality and redistribution. The hon. member, with whom I sat on the committee on immigration, is a great philosopher and well versed in rhetoric.

With regard to the word "reform", it is reform in the sense that I explained previously, in the sense of the tax system. It is a major reform. Reform is a normal thing on the government side, and we are very proud of the reform in this bill. We feel that it is a good reform and a major one.

The hon. member asked how far I am willing to go with regard to the word "universality". We are talking about family allowances and a universal program for every child in Canada. In terms of the money given out for each individual child, it is a modest amount, but the total expenditure amounts to $2 billion. I would ask the hon. member to read the first chapter of the report by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, which outlines the historical development of the economy of the family. At one time children of ages 12, 13 or 14 were considered productive assets, but that has changed and, therefore, so has the economics of the family. Perhaps the hon. member forgot that I had mentioned these aspects of family life.

When the government gives a family allowance to the families of the nation, it acknowledges that children are essential to this country. It decides that in dividing up the total pie of government expenditures so much will go for national defence, agriculture, wharves and fishing, and that a portion will go to children!

That is what we are saying. This universality has been maintained. It does not help to pretend that it was not questioned in many quarters in Canada and it will be questioned again. This government believes in the universality of family allowances, and when I spoke of the best of selectivity and universality, I very clearly defined the new reform. We want to maintain a relative universality for every child. We are redirecting to those children in need much larger sums of money than to the ordinary children of Canada who are in good economic circumstances. That is what I said.

● (2142)

On the third point, redistribution of wealth, I will go very fast. The hon. members asked how far is the minister ready to go. That is very, very easy to answer. I will go as far as necessary to make sure that no longer will we have in Canada 600,000 families with a total of close to two million children living below the poverty line.

Fourth, the hon. member did not quote me correctly; he forgot part of the sentence. He was referring to that part of my speech where I said we would monitor the program to see if changes were needed in future years. That was said in reference to an annual payment versus several instalments. If I recall correctly, and the hon. member can correct me if I am wrong, I said that it is very important to me that mothers be listened to, and that we hear their voices, not only the voices of all the social workers of the country. I do not mean that social workers do not do their job, they do a good job, but I would like mothers to speak for themselves, if possible. We will create the program first if hon. members pass the bill. We want to hear from mothers who will be living with that program whether they prefer to receive several instalments rather than one large payment.

In any event, for the first year the tax system being used is not a system geared to making several payments a year; the current mechanism provides for only one yearly payment. That was the context.

As for "SIN", which is the favourite topic tonight, I do not know what the hon. member thought first; perhaps he thought there was a monster on the horizon! He asked if the government was planning—I missed some parts of the sentence—to find some hidden way to introduce a guaranteed annual income through the use of a SIN number. I fail to see the connection because then I would have to have the SIN number right away, because it would mean that we would have the guaranteed annual income. The social insurance number, as I said earlier, and maybe the member was not in the House, is required as per section 237 of the Income Tax Act. If we use the tax system, I would invite mothers who do not have one already to get one.

I just want to mention that I do not want to mix different things here, but when an hon. member asked this question the other day, members of the House had just received their pay cheques as members of parliament with their SIN number on them. I would like to know how many members of this House refused to cash their cheques.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I should not want to miss this very special opportunity, the study of Bill C-10 which deals very specifically with the income of Canadian families, of saying what I think of this bill. Mr. Chairman, in the speeches made in this House by some of my colleagues, it has happened at times that an outline was given of the background of the act which first authorized the Canadian government to pay family allowances to our Canadian families.

Mr. Chairman, having been directly concerned with, and especially having participated with many others in the matter before that act was introduced in parliament, which authorizes the payment of family allowances, I must point out that we were often accused by opponents of such social legislation of being marxists and of wanting to give families things they had not earned. The young might be interested in this, to better understand the whys and wherefores of that very important social legislation, not only at that time but also in this day and age when amendments are being made to it on the basis of present needs. I should like to tell my colleagues that the legislation passed by parliament many years ago stirred up many a controversy. I remember, with considerable emotion as I remind the House of it, how a movement was organized among people who, at the time, wanted to look seriously into the situation of families with a view to introducing a policy to help the women better fulfil their role as mothers, and give the fathers additional income to enable them to assume their responsibilities.

● (2152)

We were regarded as general disrupters. Some even said that we were communists because we wanted to introduce in our society a social measure, a family measure, to acknowledge family needs and the sacred character of motherhood. But they forgot to say that when dramatic events occur, when the country is in a difficult situation because of war, it is in families that soldiers are sought to defend our liberties. It is in families that our technicians are sought as well as the professionals and the engineers who will, throughout the years, manufacture the weapons and the goods needed by the country to ensure its defence and security. We forgot that when some people really want to give more security to families the whole country, the entire population benefit by it.

As far as I am concerned—and I would not like to pose as an example, far from that, because many of my colleagues in this House had members of their own families who volunteered to fight abroad in order to ensure the level of security and freedom we are now enjoying—in my own family as in those of many of my hon. colleagues, it was the same thing. But should we go on imposing obligations only to those mothers and fathers, or should we on occasion recognize them certain rights and a degree of economic security?

That is why, in 1945, the Canadian government enacted the statute under which the government could pay family allowances, and at that time such allowances were paid on a universal basis. It was then recognized that mothers, whatever their husband's incomes—because at that time husbands in most cases were the providers—were entitled to some income.

Mr. Chairman, I remember at that time some rather deep minds were saying: If we pass the family allowances legislation, we will be unduly encouraging parents to bring up large families. The suggestion was that mothers and fathers would be increasing the Canadian population because of family allowances. The young people making such suggestions did not know what they were talking about because I for one, as many others, have a large family but never did I do my duty because of any social benefit, even family allowances, nor did other parents. Love is greater than that.

Nonetheless, Mr. Chairman, recognizing the right to allowances for families is a right of association in our society. Let those in our society who have the courage to give children to our country, the human capital that is any country's greatest resource. If this is not the greatest resource, Mr. Chairman, let people rise and tell me what is the greatest resource in the country. I have always considered that the most fabulous wealth is the human resource. Hence, if human resource is the greatest wealth in our country, it is the duty of the state, which is the association of individuals and families, to give special consideration to those persons who have the courage to give this human resource to our native land. This is not achieved without sacrifice; however, it is also the source of great satisfactions. When there is a new-born in the family, all parents are delighted with the birth of this child; however, the parents are still responsible for the child. They must see that the child's needs are satisfied in a normal way. They have to ensure his education until he is self-sufficient. That is the role of parents. I would like this role to be recognized, that it be on a continuing basis the role of all persons who enter into a partnership to lay the foundations of a family.

Mr. Chairman, we deplore today, and with good reasons, the many separations, the numerous divorces, whatever the reason for them, it is not my role to judge them, it is neither my line nor my business. But as legislators, as parliamentarians whose duty it is to administer the public good, to administer the country, we have a responsibility. It is not in our line of duty to go and see in people's bedrooms why they want to have one, five, or ten children. That is not our responsibility. That is not our business. But, Mr. Chairman, when in a household there are one, two, five, ten children, that represents a wealth for our country. And it is our role as parliamentarians to see that the rights of these parents are recognized. It is our responsibility to ensure that these parents have sufficient means to live up to their responsibilities. That is precisely the aim of Bill C-10.

I can see, unfortunately, that my colleague is most anxious to have the floor. I would gladly turn it over to her, but I think that tomorrow, even if it is in God's hands, we must continue our debate to ensure careful consideration of this bill. I am sorry.

[English]

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I want to make something very, very clear. In all modesty, I seem to be the person in this chamber who is most competent to speak for mothers, four times as competent. As a mother, I would like to state that family allowances are primarily for children, not for parents. I would also like—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will have an opportunity to state her views later in the debate. That is certainly not a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, if there is somebody in this House who holds mothers in high esteem it is certainly me, that is for sure! But a mother cannot be a mother by herself, she needs a father. May I call it ten o'clock?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to adjourn the debate, report progress and ask for leave to resume consideration of the bill at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—RAIL SERVICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) will stay because this has to do with a question he was asked on October 17. It has to do with the subject of murder, the murder of the Newfoundland railway by the inattention and lack of caring of this government, particularly the Minister of Transport.

The Newfoundland railway had been in existence since the 1890s, built through much toil and difficulty by the people of Newfoundland. Since 1949 it has been owned by the Government of Canada which has given it to CN to operate.

On July 24 the Sullivan commission made an interim report on Newfoundland transportation problems. One recommendation of that commission, which the government had received two months earlier, is that the Newfoundland railway be abandoned, be done away with over a period of five to ten years. That recommendation was immediately repudiated by the Newfoundland members of this House. It was repudiated by the Progressive Conservative caucus in Ottawa on August 14. It was repudiated by Premier Moores and the Newfoundland government on August 22.

• (2202)

On August 3 I wrote the Minister of Transport and I have not had any reply yet, Mr. Speaker. On August 21 I wrote the Minister of Transport asking him what attitude the government was taking with relation to the railway and the recommendation which had been made, and pointing out to him that business was leaving the railway because of the uncertainty and that certain trains had been discontinued from Bishop's Falls to St. John's. On August 22, as I said, the province repudiated that recommendation.

I wrote the minister again on September 6. None of these letter were ever answered by the three-in-one minister—justice, transport and wheat. He is not doing his job properly in any one of the three. He did not answer my letter of September 6 pointing out that business was leaving the railway because of uncertainty and because government was taking no position. I asked what was the position of the Canadian government.

On September 12 the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) spoke in St. John's and said the Canadian government accepted the position taken by the government of Newfoundland that they would not accept the position that our railway should be done away with, and that the onus was now on all concerned to test the validity of the proposition that freight traffic could be increased and the service made more attractive to users. He said there had to be a new sense of commitment on the part of CNR, that it must accept the decision. That is what the minister's colleague said on September 12.

I asked a question in this House on October 17. I said that nothing was being done to see that the system continued or to assist CN in operating it. I asked the minister whether the government would accept its responsibility to meet any losses proven to be properly realized on the Newfoundland railway system so that CN does not have to meet them from its own revenue from elsewhere—which it should not have to do; it is a government railway—and would the government direct CN to manage the railway efficiently and try to attract traffic back and give it a real chance to put in new management? I asked, would they set the uncertainty at rest.

I pointed out to the minister that there were 20 more lay-offs and two more trains cancelled in breach of an undertaking the minister had given that there would be no more lay-offs while the Sullivan commission continued its work. The minister said he would investigate the lay-offs. He has not reported to me since October 17, this indifferent and neglectful minister, so I do not know what investigation he carried out.

I gave up on the minister then, Mr. Speaker. He showed he did not want to meet with the railway unions, he did not want to have a meeting with anybody from Newfoundland. He said he wanted to wait for the final report of the Sullivan commission in 1979 before meeting anyone. He said that if Newfoundland wanted to have a railway the money would have to come out of other moneys for transportation in Newfoundland. That is his attitude.

On October 24 I gave up on him and wrote to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to ask him to convene a meeting. After that letter was delivered I got information indicating to me that CN had instructed their Newfoundland division to cut their next year's budget in half, by over half a million dollars. That is going to cost 200 people their jobs in the next construction season. They will not be improving the CN track. They are cutting their maintenance budget by $500,000, causing more lay-offs in January as well as the laying idle of equipment. As well, they are not to replace some 12 workers, who have left the department, responsible for constructing bridges and buildings. They are not to hire anyone to replace any of them.

I have now called on the minister, in another letter dated October 30, to take some action to convene a meeting with interested Newfoundland MPs—the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and myself; the Liberal members are showing no interest. I asked him to give instructions to CN that they are to stop this attempt to sabotage the Newfoundland railway by cutting away all its funds. I refer to the savage cuts in Newfoundland by comparison with only $173,000 in the budgets of all the other three maritime provinces.

What kind of a record of negligence does this constitute against a minister who has not answered these letters which have been sent to him since August 3? They are dated August 3, August 21, September 6; and on October 24 and October 30 I wrote to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister deliberately wants to see the Newfoundland railway go by neglect and inattention. It is a case of a battered railway, not a battered wife. It is a case of letting CN go ahead and finish the Newfoundland railway now or in 1979 so that there will be no business going on the railway; and then the story will be that there is no business on the railway, there is no railway to save and the 3,000 jobs have to go. Two thousand to three thousand Newfoundlanders are being sacrificed by this minister's inattention to his duties and lack of response to these requests.

● (2207)

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in March of 1977 a commission of inquiry into transportation in Newfoundland was formed under the chairmanship of Dr. Arthur Sullivan. The commission presented the first volume of its report in July of this year. In that volume the commission recommended, among other things, that the railway should be phased out in ten years; the railway would have an opportunity to demonstrate its continuing role; and re-evaluation of the decision to abandon would take place after a five-year period.

The minister has made it very clear that action in relation to the Newfoundland railway is expected by us to be a bilateral matter, just as the creation of the Sullivan commission, its personnel and terms of reference were agreed upon by both the federal and provincial governments. To this end a federal-provincial committee on the Sullivan commission has been set up to analyse all the recommendations with respect to implementation costs, decision timing and implementation processes. The committee has met twice and will continue to meet approximately on a monthly basis.

In addition, Transport Canada officials are discussing with Canadian National possible courses of positive action designed to make the railway more attractive to shippers, and the minister has had preliminary discussions with Dr. Bandeen about the railway as well.

There has been communication between the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and the government of Newfoundland and representatives of labour on a number of issues related to the Sullivan report.

While CN has made an alteration in train schedules, I emphasize that no trains have been cancelled. Basically the change referred to by the hon. member opposite involves holding over one train in Bishop's Falls each Saturday for 24 hours and adding it to the train going through Bishop's Falls the following day. This does not result in a change of service to shippers, and the CN has confirmed that the change was instituted solely in response to changes in the level and flow of business. Twelve men will be laid off as a result of this action. A further seven men will be laid off as a national agreement made between CN and the union with respect to a reduction in yard crew personnel comes into effect in Newfoundland. This agreement has already been implemented in many other parts of Canada. Canadian National has decided to postpone the regional implementation of this agreement affecting the seven men until April of 1979.

FISHERIES—RIGHTS OF INDIAN BANDS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, over the past fortnight I have twice been given the put-down, first on October 19 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and more recently on October 30 by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner), for asking very important questions about fisheries management. First the Prime Minister said that I was asking a goofy question. Then the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said I was asking a silly question.

My questions were quite legitimate, and they deserved straightforward answers. The replies were, in fact, goofy and silly because they were deliberate attempts on the part of the ministers concerned to sidestep the problem about which I was seeking clarification. By making light of my questions the respondents were obviously betraying their embarrassment and were hopeful that I would be put off or that the issue would be clouded by their frivolous replies. I am not to be put off; there is too much at issue.

When the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) displays petulance in this House at failure of a colleague to inform him of a matter which encroaches on his sphere of interest, concern and responsibility, and when he displays that petulance by spitting out that, in his view, somebody goofed—not in his department but in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—by not informing the Department of Fisheries and the Environment, there is obviously something important at issue. It was clear from the context that the goof was in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

This is how it all began. In September of 1977 an Indian band in British Columbia passed a bylaw claiming sole jurisdiction over fish passing through the reserve. On the face of it, this is perhaps no great deal, but section 91(12) of the BNA Act assigned to the Parliament of Canada exclusive legislative jurisdiction over sea, coast and inland fisheries. This responsibility for exercising jurisdiction is, by statute, passed on to the Minister of Fisheries. It is clear, therefore, that there was a conflict of jurisdiction in the making between that claimed by the Indian band, on the one hand, and that assigned by the BNA Act to the Parliament of Canada.

• (2212)

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has certain responsibilities here too. All bylaws passed by the Indian bands are to be sent to his department where he is to vet them, and if he considers any as claiming the exercise of powers beyond those to which the Indian band is entitled, he can disallow them under section 82, but he must do so within 40 days. That was not done. Therefore, by November or December of 1977 the bylaw became law.

Now we have to ask ourselves: was this an administrative slip-up or was it deliberate? Were the ministers' advisers not aware of the provisions of the BNA Act? If they were not, I think I am entitled to ask why they are the ministers' advisers. Did the minister decide on his own to withhold his powers of disallowance? We do not know. We can suspect, but we do not know for sure.

We do know, however, that the Minister of Fisheries was unaware of this development until it was brought to his attention in May or June of this year, six months later. How is the Minister of Fisheries to exercise his responsibilities under the constitution and under the statute if part of his jurisdiction is taken from him? The parliamentary secretary who will reply was parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Fisheries at the time, and he is in a spot. How can the Minister of Fisheries exercise his responsibilities in the international field, let alone the domestic field—that is, how can he exercise his responsibilities internationally with credibility—when he cannot assure his foreign counterparts that the management of the fisheries in Canada is entirely within his hands? He cannot say that now.

These were not frivolous, silly or goofy questions. These are serious questions going right to the heart of our constitution and the credibility of this government. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development might very well have had a scheme to extend some measure of jurisdiction, to winkle away from the Minister of Fisheries some jurisdiction which properly belonged to him. Why otherwise did he not alert his colleague that the bylaw would be encroaching on the jurisdiction of the Minister of Fisheries?

What makes me think that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development deliberately refrained from disallowing this bylaw is that I have another document which was prepared within the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicating that revisions of the Indian Act are in the offing and that they contain proposals to extend wide powers to Indian bands over fishing and hunting. If we get into the hunting business, we are into another department, namely, the Department of the Environment, because the minister has certain responsibilities with respect to the Migratory Birds Convention Act. What the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is doing is involving not only the Minister of the Environment but the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) in bilateral relations with our neighbour to the south. Is the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development now deciding to take upon itself the rewriting of our bilateral agreements? Should it be proposing legislation which would require Canada to open a treaty with a friendly power?

To come back to the fisheries, let me point out that the main problem, of course, is fisheries management. Management cannot be effective under two sets of managers, and I think the parliamentary secretary would probably agree if he were free to speak his own mind, particularly when each has its own separate objectives. No one is questioning the Indians' claim to a food fishery, or a food hunt for that matter. That is and can always be within their respective rights, but it is not clear how far this claimed jurisdiction would go into commercial fishing. Commercial fishing is legitimate and under licence by the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. I feel these questions deserve straightforward answers.

• (2217)

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, first may I say that recent problems in British Columbia concerning Indian fishing are merely symptoms of long-standing issues and uncertainties surrounding Indian fishing rights. As the hon. member is no doubt aware, the allocation of our increasingly pressured fish and game resources among different and competing sectors of society is a complex task. This situation forms the backdrop against which we are trying to find solutions to some of our current problems, solutions which will be compatible with legitimate Indian rights as well as with the exigencies of modern resource management.

There are two constitutional responsibilities at issue: to manage the fisheries as a whole, and to manage Indian lands in the perspective of a long-standing historical relationship with Indian people.

At the federal government level, an interdepartmental committee on Indian hunting and fishing now is tackling some of the underlying issues to which I have referred. It is developing long-term statutory, policy and administrative solutions. Both the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) have found through recent discussions that they are already in broad agreement on certain central principles and objectives. They share a sense of the importance of fishing to the social and economic well-being of Indian people. They recognize, as do the majority of Indian people, the need for wise management and conservation of fishery resources. They share the objective of increased participation by Indian people in the resource management area.

May I turn to the specific issue of the Squamish band bylaw No. 10. This bylaw, entitled: "A By-law for the Preservation, Protection and Management of Fish on the Reserve", draws heavily on fisheries regulations. It was passed by the band pursuant to one of its enumerated powers under section 81 of the Indian Act which authorizes an Indian band council to pass bylaws on a series of matters applicable within its area of jurisdiction, as the council of a local municipality does.

Although section 82 of the Indian Act empowers the minister to disallow a by-law within 40 days after a copy has been forwarded to his office, he is very reluctant, as is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, to interfere with the local government powers of a band council. As a result, he seldom disallows a bylaw unless it can be shown clearly to be patently ultra vires, beyond the band's jurisdiction or discriminatory within the context of human rights legislation. This is the crux of the situation. As Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, he must defend the rights and uphold the legitimate powers of a band council as enumerated within the Indian Act. He cannot co-operate with any attempts by a band council to exercise such rights or powers outside its jurisdiction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.21 p.m., without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 3, 1978

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1107)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PUBLIC WORKS

OFFICE ACCOMMODATION OWNED OR LEASED BY GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert de Cotret (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the federal government owns or leases 8,036,885 square metres of accommodation and facilities across Canada, an area equal to 1,236 football fields, and in light of a local media report that procedures for monitoring and control of these organizations have been suspended, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott):

That this House direct the Minister of Public Works to set up immediately a monitoring agency as recommended by the Auditor General last year and further recommended just recently by the Standing Committee on National Finance in the other place, and to make available to this House as soon as possible a report on the current unused accommodations and facilities owned or leased by the government across the country and particularly in the Ottawa area.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, under the terms of Standing Order 43, can be done only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FINANCE

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), when asked on Wednesday what the effect on Canada would be of the record increase in the U.S. of an interest rate of 9.5 per cent—the highest in United States history—stated, "I am not going to speculate and engage in the kind of business the hon. member enjoys", and that the move "has to be welcomed by Canada", and in view of the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) speculated on the question of the dollar and on increases in interest rates by stating that an increase in interest rates in the U.S. automatically compels the Canadian government to raise interest rates and that he expects the bank rate to go up soon, saying, further, that he "is not happy about the latest move by the United States", I would move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That the Prime Minister explain to the House, on motions, if he can, which of his economic ministers he agrees with and whether Canada has no choice but to increase interest rates, or that speculation is unwise, or whether the United States move has to be welcomed by Canada or whether he is not happy about the latest move by the United States, and advise the House whether he is happy with the Minister of Finance and unhappy with the Minister of Industry, or happy with the Minister of Industry and unhappy—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

* * *

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—REPAIR OF BOXCARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on an urgent and pressing matter arising from the fact that Canadian Pacific Railway has refused to participate in a program with the federal government to repair boxcars for grain service.

Since that company has been treated very generously by the Canadian taxpayer, receiving $102 million in direct hand-outs in 1977, the use of $135 million worth of new hopper cars with which to haul grain, and a tax deferral of $558 million of taxes owing, since the company bogged down grain movement so badly last year as to cost prairie farmers $90 million in lost grain sales and demurrage on waiting ships, and since Canadian National Railways has agreed to fix up 1,000 cars for grain service, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That the Canadian Pacific Railway be required to repair and substantially increase the number of its boxcars, and that Canadian Pacific be called to appear before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to account for its misuse of public funds and its failure to improve and increase its rolling-stock for grain movement.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, under Standing Order 43, would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

REQUESTED REPLACEMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF PRAIRIE RAIL ACTION COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the chairman of the Prairie Rail Action Committee stated in Calgary, on October 19, that the government should abandon a still larger number of miles of rail trackage from the basic network than was originally recommended by Chief Justice Emmett Hall in the Hall report, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House recommends to the Minister of Transport that Professor Fred Anderson be replaced as chairman of the Prairie Rail Action Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion at this time would require unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SOCIAL INSURANCE

EXTENDED USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas increasing evidence is becoming available that the government has broken its commitment that social insurance numbers would be used only with reference to social insurance matters, and whereas in the example of Walter Rudnicki, whose continuing difficulties and litigation involving the Government of Canada are a matter of public record, and that his social insurance number as well as his RCMP file number were quoted with reference to his security clearance by the Privy Council office, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey):

That the Solicitor General, on motions, indicate to what extent social insurance numbers are used in matters other than social insurance-related investigations and issues in his department and what limitations or safeguards. if any, are implemented by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate, pursuant to the Standing Order, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1112)

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS THAT DANYLO SHUMUK BE ALLOWED TO IMMIGRATE TO CANADA FROM U.S.S.R.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. My motion concerns Danylo Shumuk, a Ukrainian patriot who is reported to be dying of stomach cancer in the Soviet Union. Last Wednesday, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Siddon) moved a motion on this matter, and I believe there might have been unanimous consent at that time. In any event, I think there may be unanimous consent this morning. In light of the fact that the Soviet labour code itself provides that in the case of serious illness such a person may be released from prison, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House strongly urges the Soviet government, taking into account Danylo Shumuk's ill health, to release him from prison.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, there is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Clark: Wait a minute, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Clark: No.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member at a later time on a point of order. However, there are two minutes left of the time allotted for motions under Standing Order 43. I heard a dissenting voice.

Mr. Clark: You did not.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There was no dissenting voice.

Mr. Trudeau: The Tories disagreed.

Mr. Clark: That is offensive action.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TIMING OF AMENDING LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, many times in the past number of years I have had the privilege of naming, as the seconder for my motions respecting veterans affairs, the former member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. Today, I am happy again to name the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour) as my seconder. Accordingly, I move:

That this House calls on the Minister of Veterans Affairs to make a statement on Monday indicating what legislation respecting veterans he proposes to introduce prior to November 11, the sixtieth anniversary of the armistice which brought World War I to a close, in the knowledge that the House would be eager to pass such legislation without delay as a tribute to all of Canada's veterans.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister: it concerns comments made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce outside a cabinet meeting last Thursday. The comments were recorded in a taped interview with CHCH-TV Hamilton and CFGO Radio in Ottawa.

The minister stated that the increase in the American prime rate will, and I quote, "have the effect of forcing us to raise ours," meaning the interest rate, "or capital will flee this country into theirs". Asked, further, if he felt Canada could afford a rate increase, the minister stated, "It is not a question of can we afford to; it is a question of can we afford not to. If the United States raises their interest rates, they automatically force ours up". Would the Prime Minister indicate if the minister was speaking on behalf of the government when he made those comments outside the cabinet meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the comments quoted by the hon. member are out of date, because CP has issued a wire stating that the minister had not been quoted quite correctly.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I have the corrected CP story before me and, as CP has indicated, it was simply designed to change the emphasis of the minister's statement from a "positive" to a "possible" statement.

Mr. Trudeau: So what is your question now?

Mr. Stevens: The quotations I read to the Prime Minister were not taken from the CP, but from a verbatim tape taken off the radio as listened to by myself and certain members of our staff a few minutes ago.

In view of the fact that the minister categorically speculated on future interest rates in Canada, and has stated quite categorically that they will automatically rise with American interest rate increases, would the Prime Minister indicate whether he thinks the minister was acting in a responsible fashion by speculating on future interest rates in this country?

• (1117)

Mr. Trudeau: It is a difficult choice, whether I should trust CP or the hon. member. Just now he read a correction which says that the emphasis was changed from "positive" to "possible". If he is asking me whether it is possible that there will be a rise in the interest rate, of course it is; and if that is what the minister said, I do not see anything shocking about that. But it will still be the governor of the Bank of Canada who will decide, in consultation with the Minister of Finance. Certainly, that is a possibility.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed, again, to the Prime Minister. I would invite him, if he has not already heard the tape, in his own interest to listen to what his own minister said on the tape, and after he has listened to that, would he kindly go to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and suggest that in future he should make no such statements unless it is on behalf of the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to do that, he is quite free to do it; but I am satisfied, on the basis of this correction, that the minister has not indicated anything would happen. He said something might happen. If this is what he said, that is fine. If he said that the interest rate would go up for sure—

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. Trudeau: —which he did not, according to this correction—

An hon. Member: It's here.

Mr. Trudeau: If he said that, he did not state government policy which has been stated by the Minister of Finance.

Oral Questions

CABINET SOLIDARITY RESPECTING STATEMENTS MADE AFTER CABINET MEETINGS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Given the fact that there is so much concern about respect for parliament and the responsibility of cabinet, does he think it is appropriate for a minister to speculate on a question of this sort right outside a cabinet meeting since he just came out of cabinet? Where does the principle of cabinet solidarity lie? Whom is one to believe when trying to understand what government policy is?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, some ministers have been accused of not being sufficiently communicative and not speaking enough to the press. If the press would stay away from the cabinet door and not ask minister any questions, then, obviously, they will not get any answers. If they do get answers and then correct them, we should not blame the minister; we should just say he was misquoted.

Mr. Gillies: Again I ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question in all seriousness, because everyone in the country is concerned about parliament and its role in the country, the cabinet and its role in the country and the responsibility of all of us as parliamentarians.

I happened to listen to the tape, and there is no question that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said it is highly probable that interest rates in Canada will go up. He was speaking as a minister of the Crown. The problem with economic management in this country today is one of credibility, of uncertainty, of confused statements.

Surely the Prime Minister believes this is a serious matter which should be dealt with in some way. Can he give us some assurance that we can have a position stated by the government that the Minister of Finance will make statements on economic policy, and we will not have these ad hoc statements from irresponsible ministers which cause so much confusion around the country?

Mr. Trudeau: That is a reasonable request. I can give the undertaking that the Minister of Finance, or myself, will be making statements on this matter, and that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. However, since she has just stepped out of the chamber, may I pursue it when she returns?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT IS CONSIDERING RESCINDING SECTION 57 OF THE LEGISLATION

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration concerning the question I put to him on October 31 about that notorious section 57 of the regulations under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I have to raise it again on account of the numerous letters of rejection from workers in my constituency. I have now almost 100 and the authorities of the office have much difficulty enforcing that section because when they would like to do justice to those workers they are prevented from doing so by that provision. I merely wish—besides the minister promised the other day to consider the case and try to correct that difficulty—to ask the minister whether he has made some progress in that connection?

• (1122)

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there was progress to the extent that I checked out the representation made by the hon. member. Prior to 1967 there was a provision whereby agricultural workers could be exempted by doing it on a voluntary basis. As a result of that, there was more confusion and more difficulty administering the plan from the standpoint of the employee, the employer and the government. So that particular change was made in 1971 at the request of many organizations, including the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

I wonder why in all other industries a worker who has completed a week is entitled to a week of unemployment insurance while an agricultural worker is not. As a supplementary, I would also like to ask him the following: I am told that under the section he cannot earn over $280 or $285, I do not have the section in hand, but he has to earn less than a certain amount to be exempted from unemployment insurance. Could the minister tell us if for example a worker earns $300 he is entitled to unemployment insurance whatever may be the number of weeks or days even if he has not completed 25 days?

[English]

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the legislation regarding payment of benefit to agricultural workers is the same as that for other workers. I do not think that in the time allotted to me in the question period I can answer all the questions put by the hon. member; but I will undertake to write to him and give him a full précis of what the law is and how it is applied.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to challenge a point which worries me considerably. The minister has just said that the same act applies to all industries. I do not believe it is so. I should like to ask the minister to kindly check the matter.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ALLEGED HEALTH HAZARDS IN IMPORTS OF PEANUTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. One of the assistant deputy ministers in her department, namely, Dr. A. B. Morrison, head of the health protection branch, said on a Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television program last night that six shipments of peanuts and peanut products have been seized because of aflatoxin mould, a by-product which he called one of the most potent cancer-causing agents known to man.

In view of that statement, can the minister confirm the fact that these seizures were made? How significant are these procedures? Are they just spot checks, or is there something here which we should be really concerned about?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to confirm the seizure: that fact was just brought to my attention by the hon. member. As the House knows, we monitor regularly shipments of peanuts to Canada and stop those which do not conform to the rules. He referred to a problem where mould which causes cancer of the liver can develop on some peanuts. I am certain there is no reason to warn Canadians of any particular problem at this point. I want to conclude by indicating that peanuts are still a provider of vitamin E, which is a sexual energy vitamin.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the very virile Minister of National Health and Welfare. Apparently, a CBC television reporter went out and bought six or seven package of peanuts at random.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Apparently, the television reporter bought six or seven packages of peanuts at random and showed them to Dr. Morrison on the television program. On examining these peanuts visually, he said publicly he would only eat one or two of the samples.

• (1127)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: If this is the case, I should like to ask the minister why this screening mechanism does not work, as one would suspect if the head of the health protection branch who is making these decisions for Canada, on examining six or seven samples, came to the conclusion that he, personally, would not dare eat more than one or two of them because of the possibility that aflatoxin, which is a carcinogen, might be in them.

Miss Bégin: We do not as yet have one inspector for peanuts, Mr. Speaker. I just want to confirm, and I am now in a position to do so, that there is no reason to warn Canadians of any particular danger in relation to the purchase of peanuts. I have just received confirmation of that.

It may well be possible that some packages in shipments have not been identified properly. I do not know what the problem is with respect to Dr. Morrison not eating peanuts, but there is no reason to warn Canadians of a danger.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, Dr. Morrison is quoted by the Canadian Press, in the Toronto Globe and Mail this morning, as saying when speaking in Guelph on Wednesday:

—he will not eat peanuts or any other nuts that taste stale, are misshappen or are discoloured because a micro-organism linked with cancer could be present. The organism, aflatoxin, will cause cancer in about 15 species of animals—

In light of the concern of the deputy minister of the Department of National Health and Welfare, I would like to ask the minister whether, because of the assistant deputy minister's concern about the possibility of a carcinogen, the department is considering a warning in order that the ordinary people might be aware of the possibility of this deadly carcinogen, particularly as we have just finished the Halloween season during which many people may have purchased peanuts and other nuts.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I want to reaffirm that we have no reason to warn Canadians of a danger at this time. We have had regulatory mechanism in place for 15 years. We work in close relationship with our U.S. counterparts. If they find any signs that shipments do not conform to norms, we are informed immediately, and vice versa. We are confident that the system in place is really sufficient to assure safety to Canadians.

NUMBER OF INSPECTORS TO GUARANTEE SAFETY OF PEANUT IMPORTS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the grave danger that aflatoxin poses to human health, will the minister give us her unequivocal assurance that her department has a sufficient number of inspectors to guarantee to Canadians that all peanuts or peanut products, such as peanut butter, are indeed safe at all times? If not, could the minister tell us what action she is planning immediately to ensure that the deficiency is corrected?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the system in place satisfies me that the health of Canadians is well looked after. We are, indeed, concerned about mould that can develop in some peanut shipments and that this may lead to the development of cancer of the liver, but there is no reason at this point to create panic in the Canadian population.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose this final supplementary question to the Prime Minister, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare seems to be misinformed. The fact is that the food inspection service works in relation to about nine different food inspection acts. There may be a sufficient number of inspectors in total, but each one is responsible for only one segment of inspection. This creates a situation in which there may not be enough inspectors to do a proper job in order to ensure Canadians of proper inspection services.

Would the Prime Minister inform the House why he is not taking steps to incorporate these nine food inspection acts into one, thus enabling the inspectors to have a broader area of responsibility and to do their job more efficiently without the necessity of increasing their number?

● (1132)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under consideration. However, it is not without difficulty, because all these inspectors carry out different functions under the different acts. We want to make sure that if there is a smaller number of inspectors, they will be able to carry out different types of functions. This is under consideration.

* * *

FINANCE

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES—EFFECT ON INVESTMENTS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I should be asking for the lowering of tariff barriers on peanuts. I have a question for the Prime Minister. On October 13, Canada raised its bank rate three-quarters of a point, and on October 16 I asked the Prime Minister what the government's position was on that. He said, as reported at page 104 of Hansard:

—it was not an action based on the performance of the Canadian dollar on that day or days, but it was based on what happened in the United States—

In other words, Canada had no choice. In view of the action taken by the United States Federal Reserve Bank on Wednesday of raising the central bank rate by one point, could the Prime Minister tell us whether this automatically compels the federal government to raise interest rates or else take the risk of an outflow of investment dollars to more attractive foreign opportunities? Is this an automatic thing now, in view of his earlier reply?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the earlier replies stand for themselves. They do not stand for what the hon. member said when he attempted, wrongly, to sum them up by saying we had no choice. I answered exactly to the contrary yesterday to a question put by the hon. member for Waterloo, if the hon. member would refer to Hansard.

[Miss Bégin.]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the record of Hansard is there for anyone to read. Mr. Barry Bosworth, of the White House council on wage and price stability, has warned the United States that the actions taken Wednesday in that country could lead to recession. The growth forecast for next year was only 3 per cent to 3½ per cent, a factor which would have a very bad effect on our foreign trade.

In view of these warnings from Mr. Bosworth and the current situation of our own economy, that any further increase in the central bank rate could lead to the possibility of recession and a downturn in what is already a weak business situation, could the Prime Minister tell the House what policy options he will exercise in this situation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Waterloo. I am glad that the opposition is coming around to the realization that some of the economic effects of what occurs in the rest of the world have a bearing on the Canadian economy. The Minister of Finance has been saying that for the past year, and always there is scoffing from the other side saying, "You are always blaming it on some other country, or on the weather or something else."

I am glad that the opposition economic spokesmen are slowly beginning to understand that when another economy like the United States behaves poorly, it can have effects in Canada without the federal government being responsible.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's reply indicates that the government has a choice. The Canadian people are waiting to hear what that choice will be. The economic and business activities of this country depends on the government making a choice. When is the governmnent going to make the choice? In view of this action in the United States on Wednesday, will the Prime Minister tell the House how long he will continue dithering?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I answered a very concrete suggestion by the hon. member for Waterloo and I indicated the choice we had made. If the hon. member would follow the dialogue and read Hansard of yesterday, he will understand a little better.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

GOVERNMENT USE OF LEASED OFFICE SPACE

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works. Since the deputy auditor general indicated last week that the government has again this year shown its inability to monitor its use of office space, and since the deputy minister also told the Senate national finance committee last year that a committee of ten deputy ministers had been instructed to do that very monitoring and make reports on the departmental use of office space, will the Minister of Public Works assure this House that the committee of deputy ministers has been reporting all excesses in use of office space according to its mandate under the guidelines issued in May, 1977?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that assurance off the top of my head: I will have to verify it. I would like to indicate to the hon. member that in the Senate national finance committee report they recommended that the Department of Public Works, as the agent of the Treasury Board, have this monitoring role. In my testimony before that Senate committee, I said that while we are not eagerly seeking the role of policeman as far as the utilization of office space is concerned, I feel that with our operations right across Canada we are the logical people to fulfil that role and we would be happy to do so.

OFFICE ACCOMMODATION OWNED OR LEASED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Robert de Cotret (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works. As the minister knows, total accommodation inventory has increased from 6.2 million square metres to over eight million square metres, a dramatic increase of 23 per cent over last fiscal year.

Would the minister explain, in light of past statements made by himself and by his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, that public service growth would be held to less than 1 per cent, where all the additional space is going? What is this space being used for?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am of the older generation and have not yet quite mastered the metric system. I will have to sit down and multiply by 11 all the figures the hon. member gave, to verify them. I do know that we have not been increasing our total space.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Ho, ho!

Mr. Buchanan: I hear "ho, ho!" Perhaps the hon. member is talking about space that is owned, as opposed to space that is being leased or some other areas where there have been significant changes. We have been changing the ratios.

I dealt with the question of usage of leased space in response to a question put last week by the hon. member for Huron. I think we are doing a very effective job in this period of transition and in making certain that the space is effectively and properly used. We are right on the transition point—transition in the sense of moving from leased space into our own space—where, if anything, we would be at our maximum right now. As I indicated, within the last six weeks over half the space that was supposed to be vacant has gone off our inventory.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, in recognizing that there is fairly clear evidence of inadequate control and weakness in management of the over-all federal realty resources, as the Minister of Public Works himself admitted during the proceedings of the Standing Committee on National Finance in the other place, is the minister still satisfied that his department could accept the responsibility for ensuring effective use of accommodation resources so that Canadian taxpayers receive adequate value for the half billion dollars spent annually on the accommodation program in the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a repetition of the question put by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton. I indicated in my testimony before that committee that, while we were not eagerly seeking the role of policeman vis-à-vis space utilization, I felt very strongly that our department is the logical agency on behalf of Treasury Board to make certain that the space is being properly and adequately used.

* * *

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FUNDING OF PLANNED PARENTHOOD ASSOCIATION

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister assure the House that no funds from her department support the publication of the fall, 1978, edition of the Planned Parenthood Federation newsletter which, by despicable and insidious innuendo, vilifies the entire Catholic Church?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the funds granted to the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada do not support the preparation and publication of the newsletters. Our funds are used strictly for the operation of their national office.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

CONSTRUCTION OF TAXATION CENTRE AT SUDBURY, ONT.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that about two years ago the government announced, as part of its decentralization program, the building of a taxation data centre in Sudbury, in view of the fact that the government has obtained the land from the city of Sudbury and has proposed to start construction this fall, in view of the fact that we are sitting with one of the most massive rates of unemployment, second only to Newfoundland, particularly in the construction trade, and in view of the fact that the Minister of National Revenue informed me by letter on October 25 that because of cutbacks announced they cannot start construction this fall but would start construction in 1980, can the President of the Treasury Board or the Minister of Public Works give us the assurance, now, that they will review the situation in light of the very serious economic situation presently in that area vis-à-vis unemployment?

● (1142)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that particular program has to be examined in light of the funds available. The hon. member has had some indication of the possibility of delay. In co-operation with my colleagues, the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of National Revenue, I will take a look at it; but I am not too hopeful that we will accelerate it. I will look at it in full knowledge of the circumstances outlined by the hon. member and prevailing in the area which he and another hon. member very prominent in this House represent.

Mr. Rodriguez: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for that semi-positive answer. Coming from northwestern Ontario, the minister well knows the difficulty in the construction trade in northern Ontario. Can he assure us that, in reviewing the situation, he will consult the regional office of the Department of Manpower and Immigration in order to learn the facts about this serious unemployment situation in the Sudbury basin and make a decision on what is essential now, rather than show a carefree attitude toward a very serious unemployment problem in that part of northern Ontario?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, no Minister in the government takes a carefree attitude toward unemployment anywhere, in that part of the country or anywhere else. By adding that to the end of his question, I think the hon. member somewhat destroys the validity of his comment. Nevertheless, we will take those matters into serious consideration when we make our decision.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

INDEXING OF PENSIONS

Mr. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. On October 19, in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier, the minister stated that he hoped to be in a position to make an announcement in October on the amount of indexing which would be possible for public service pensions for the next three-year period.

Since it is now November, and Bill C-12 is before the House, will the minister tell us when he will make a statement on this important matter, in order to aid consideration of the bill and to reassure worried public servants that their pensions will reasonably reflect changes in the consumer price index in the future as a result of the bill?

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Will the minister also undertake to provide actuarial estimates by the chief actuary of the amount of indexing available for subsequent three-year periods if the actuarial assumptions used by the Tomenson-Alexander firm in their report to him are realized in the future?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to be able to make this information public by the end of October. The process by which we arrive at the amount of supplementation, quite properly, involves reference from the chief actuary to me, and from me to the advisory committee on superannuation matters which consists of representatives of the bargaining groups as well as officials of the government. That process is almost complete.

The only indication I can give to the hon. member is that I am optimistic about the degree of supplementation that will be possible for the next three years. I intend to place the detailed information before the House when we bring Bill C-12 in for second reading. I anticipate this will happen very shortly.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board did not answer the second part of my question about the providing of estimates by the chief actuary as to what will happen in subsequent three-year periods. I know it is inconceivable that he would introduce the legislation without some idea of what will happen.

In view of the fact that the bill is now before the House, that it provides significant changes to public service pensions, and in view of the fact that the Tomenson-Alexander report to the President of the Treasury Board recommended that the valuation of the combined pension programs be made whenever significant changes were made to the program, will the minister assure the House that the valuation of the Public Service Superannuation Act prepared in accordance with generally accepted actuarial principles as of the end of last year and which is now due, will be tabled in time for consideration of the bill?

Will the minister also assure the House that an actuarial valuation of the supplementary retirement benefit program reflecting the proposed changes will also be made available for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I did not spell out all the voluminous detail: I wrapped it up by saying those details would be provided to the House when I made my statement on second reading.

I think the hon. member's second comment indicated a different kind of actuarial review. The every five-year actuarial review required by law of the basic plan is a question of a different order. That detail will also be made available, but not necessarily related to second reading of Bill C-12.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISAS FOR PARLIAMENTARY VISITORS TO CANADA

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, or for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if there is a division of responsibility.

I should like the minister to tell us what the policy is, or if there is a change in the policy regarding visitors' visas for members of parliament and other citizens from NATO countries who are visiting Canada. I ask this question because at the time of a NATO subcommittee meeting in Canada recently, the Greek delegate had difficulty coming into the country. Much to the embarrassment of members of parliament here, he pointed out that one of his colleagues was refused an entry visa for Canada and that Canada is the only NATO country where a visa is required for Greek citizens.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the first I have heard of this matter. So that I may give a precise answer, I will take the question as notice.

* * *

STATUS OF WOMEN

LEGISLATION RESPECTING MARRIED, WORKING WOMEN

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the concern expressed by many women in the labour force, and particularly the reservations expressed by the commissioner of the human rights commission about the legislation before the House and the discriminatory implications of the "family income" provisions in the bill for married, working women, could the minister say whether he sought the advice of the law officers of the Crown prior to the introduction of this piece of legislation to see whether there were any aspects of the bill which were in contravention of the Canadian Human Rights Act?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the tradition in the House and, indeed, the rule is that law officers must look at legislation from the point of view of the Canadian Bill of Rights, and I have no doubt that this procedure was followed.

I am not sure that there is a specific procedure to test it against other legislation, but I will be glad to inform myself about that and to look at the pith and substance of the question being raised. I know, from listening to the debate yesterday, that the matter was discussed here in more appropriate form.

Miss MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister looks into this very important question—important because it is of such basic interest, such a fundamental concept to working women in our society today—will he undertake to table the opinion of the law officers of the Crown in this regard, so that we will not be left solely with the opinion of individual cabinet ministers but will have a legal opinion before the House as well?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, not only is it not a practice to table opinions, but it should be obvious to hon. members that when a piece of legislation is before the House it is a matter for debate and consideration of members of parliament as to what is to be in the law: that should be clear, and that is the forum in which it is to be discussed. I am somewhat surprised that these questions are put at this time, when there will be an opportunity to put them a little later.

* * *

SOCIAL INSURANCE

EXTENDED USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration concerning the fear that people have about the use, or misuse, of the social insurance number?

In view of the assurance the minister has given to the standing committee, that the issuance of the social insurance number would be tightened up and the use of the number would be tightened up, may I ask if it is common practice, as has been described by some people in the Unemployment Insurance Commission or in the department, to give confidential information to welfare agencies, provincial governments and, for that matter, private agencies, especially in view of the fact that the new Immigration Act requires some very detailed financial information on Canadian citizens who become sponsors of immigrant applications?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not a general policy.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Charlebois, the executive secretary of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, is reported to have said:

> The system works because officials recognize each others' voices. His officials won't give out information unless they are sure whom them are talking to.

In view of this, may I ask what procedure there is in the department to make sure the information is given to the legitimate organizations such as those within government? Is this the only security and the only check, namely, because the voice might sound familiar over the telephone, the department is now using, especially since the minister knows that even now that policy is under discussion within his department?

● (1152)

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in answer to a question yesterday, we are working to establish guidelines so that the invasion of or involvement in a person's individual rights will not be affected. We tightened up the legislation in so far as the issuance of unemployment insurance numbers is concerned, and also gave the minister discretion as to who, or who should not, get information that is available, switching that responsibility from the commission—which is always within the parameters of the legislation—to the minister.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Justice. It is supplementary to that put by my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. The Commissioner of Human Rights stated in September, in testimony to a committee of this House, and I quote him, "I think it . . ."—speaking of the proposal that is incorporated in the bill introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare—" . . . is contrary to the Canadian Human Rights Act." In other words, there was notice two months ago from the commissioner of his considered view that the legislation being introduced was in violation of the Human Rights Act.

Can the minister tell us—I notice he has had a conversation in the interim with the Minister of National Health and Welfare—if his memory has been refreshed as to whether an investigation has made been by the commissioner? If there was not, can he explain to the House why, when alerted by the commissioner, neither the Minister of National Health and Welfare nor the Minister of Justice ordered that such an investigation be made?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, incidentally, my memory is not refreshed because we were not speaking about an investigation into the matter. I should say to the hon. Leader of the Opposition, since he now makes it a matter for debate when the bill is before the House, that it seems obvious the proposal in the bill has the same kind of effect as the operation of family allowances generally. In that sense it is an improvement, only in the sense of helping the poor people more and not in any other way—a change in the fundamental principle or application of the law.

Since, therefore, it is a question for parliament to address itself to, to try to fill this issue at some point in time but not necessarily at this point in time, I make the very important point to the Leader of the Opposition that this same problem—if it is a problem—or to the extent that it is a problem, applies to the existing family allowance law. As a result, we would have to address the problem in a larger way. But in objecting to the particular change, all that he is objecting to is a transfer of more of the funds from family allowances in that broad area to families with many children and very low incomes.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of abusing the question period to debate, except to say the minister is wrong. But let me ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is responsible for the passage of this legislation through the House of Commons. We now have an invitation from the Minister of Justice that there will be an inquiry made as to whether or not the minister's proposed legislation violates the Human Rights Act. Could the minister tell us if she is advised that it will in fact, violate the Canadian Human Rights Act if she introduces an amendment?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised, and I told the House last night—I regret the hon. Leader of the Opposition was not there at that very crucial moment—

An hon. Member: Shame!

Miss Bégin: —that the point made by the Commissioner of the Human Rights Commission seems invalid. I am repeating that. I would like to repeat that all welfare programs in Canada, be they federal, provincial or municipal, operate on the basis of the parental income of the family unit, not the tax system. The tax system is based on individual taxation where both partners are treated equally. Discrimination there may be when a spouse can claim his other spouse as a dependant, therefore benefiting the material status in terms of additional tax privileges. That is not for me to judge: that is the nature of the Income Tax Act of Canada.

There may be another discrimination in that the bill creating the new child tax credit will have the cheques sent to mothers: that is the feature of the bill of which I am most proud, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: That means besides redistribution, about $120 million additional cash will be in the hands of women in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I must assure the minister that I had the great privilege of watching her on television last night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —and I appreciate that she missed my absence in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I presume that her leader, who was absent from the debate, was also watching her on television.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: But my question is, and it is quite important: is it the view—

An hon. Member: Simmer down.

Mr. Clark: I will refer the hon. member to the CRTC.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Is it the view of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and, therefore, of the government, that this bill as it stands, in the event of conflict with the Canadian Human Rights Act—as the minister is now introducing it—will prevail over the Canadian Human Rights Act? Is that the view?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is again trying to develop a theory based on hypothetical points. I would like to repeat that in Bill C-10 we are not interested in the marital status as a basis of the bill. We are concerned with motherhood, or the legal custody of the child, for the only reason that this is needed to determine who would be the beneficiary of the new child tax credit. This is not at all discriminatory. If the income comes from one source or two, if it comes from the father or the mother, if the mother is married, divorced, separated or unmarried, this does not affect the benefits to the children of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WOULD WELCOME DEBATE ON CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. First of all, I should like to assure him that, contrary to what Quebec Premier Lévesque claims, the vast majority of Quebeckers would be very happy to see the constitution patriated: they feel that matter should be dealt with as soon as possible.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if, after having discussed the constitutional reform with the provincial premiers, the right hon. Prime Minister would be willing to hold a debate in the House on the subject, to give federal MPs, who also represent the electors of those provinces, a chance to express their views on this important matter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion of the hon. member is excellent. I shall therefore suggest that the government House leader discuss this possibility not only with our caucus but also perhaps with the House leaders of the other parties. As for me, I should be happy not only to hear the views of the government members, but also to know exactly what the specific views are of the Leader of the Opposition about his negotiations with the premier concerning sovereignty association.

* * *

[English]

AGRICULTURE

STATUS OF CHICKEN MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Gray-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Whatever happened to the national chicken marketing agency? Whatever happened to the Minister of Agriculture?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Can the Minister of Agriculture tell us whatever happened to the national chicken marketing agency?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there never was a national chicken marketing agency, so nothing has happened to it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture has promised Canadian producers, on numerous occasions, that this government would act on short order to create a national chicken marketing agency. Can he tell the House why he has not delivered on his promise, and also whether he has been able to secure the support of his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? If so, what preconditions were put on that support by the minister?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of discussion about farming and a national chicken marketing agency. I do believe we have the support of the hon. member, speaking for the glorious old Tory party on the other side—the unanimous support of the Tory party even including all the new members recently elected in the by-elections, etc.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Hang in there, baby!

Mr. Whelan: Maybe we should go ahead with it at this time. But I think the hon. member should realize that because of the devalued dollar, the poultry producers in Canada are enjoying a very good income at the present time: they are not suffering at all.

* * *

SOCIAL INSURANCE

EXTENDED USE OF SIN

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question was going to be addressed to the Solicitor General, but because of the time it took for me to get the floor, I will put it to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In view of the answer to the question on social insurance numbers yesterday, I gather it is government policy not to encourage any spread of the use of the SIN number beyond the three fields to which parliament has given legislative authority.

My question is this: would the minister approach his colleague, the Solicitor General, and point out to him that in a pamphlet put out in 1978 in connection with gun laws, in the application for a fire arms acquisition certificate it reads as follows:

Applications for firearms acquisition certificates will include the following—

S.O. 43

Then it lists (d), social insurance number. Since this matter deals with the Criminal Code of Canada and is under all the penalties of that act, using a social insurace number, would the minister—following his policy indication of yesterday—approach his colleague and have him take that out of the application which becomes effective January 1, 1979?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Because it does, in fact, involve the Criminal Code, there very well may be some positive elements for the protection of the innocent. As a result of using the social insurance number in this way, the individual who is charged is the individual they mean to charge, and not somebody else.

● (1202)

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): My supplementary is very simple. I take it that the policy statement made yesterday by the minister, that they are not going to encourage the extension of the use of the social insurance number beyond the areas parliament has approved, is not going to be supported by the government when it comes to the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General putting Canadians on the computer in the event of any infringement of the Criminal Code; because that is what happens in the case of failure under this act to make a proper application—you become convicted under the Criminal Code, it goes on to the computer, that goes on to the American computer, and we cannot cross the border of another country.

I take it, then, that the minister is repudiating the policy statement he made yesterday in so far as the Criminal Code and the gun laws are concerned.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I would commend to the hon. member a careful reading of the question which was put to me yesterday. We do not encourage the use of the social insurance number beyond the government aspect. Some people have said we are encouraging banks to use it, or encouraging private enterprise to do so, and we are saying we are not. We say there is nothing in the legislation which would permit us to prohibit the use of the social insurance number.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS THAT DANYLO SHUMUK BE ALLOWED TO EMIGRATE TO CANADA FROM U.S.S.R.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There remain outstanding a number of procedural matters, and I think we should understand the proper order in which we ought to deal with them now. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is seeking the floor on a point of order, probably relating to the proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 43 earlier today. I received yesterday a notice from the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) of a question of privilege; he indicated he wanted to proceed with that today. In addition I have just received notice of a question of privilege from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Martin). I think the matter arising today pursuant to Standing Order 43 should probably be dealt with and set aside first. Then I will hear the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

Before entering into discussion on the matter pursuant to Standing Order 43, I don't know, but the impression may have been created that I set aside that motion simply because the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham was rising in his place on some point of order with respect to it. If that is the impression, it ought to be set aside, because that was not the case.

What happened was that the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) rose and indicated in his preamble that the motion he was about to put was similar to, or basically the same as, the one put by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Siddon) a few days ago. At that time there were a number of negative voices. However, as the matter proceeded the number of negative voices gradually diminished. Notwithstanding this, when I did get to the point of putting the motion there was still a "No". I cannot attribute it to a specific member, but there was a very clear negative voice when I said "The House has heard the question—". At the same time the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham was on his feet on a point of order. That was not the reason for the setting aside of the motion.

This would be two tries at the same motion with respect to the same subject. I do not know whether the House wishes to try one more time to determine whether there is unanimous consent to deal with and pass that motion. If that is the disposition of the House, I am prepared to try, but it is an extraordinary thing to do.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am not disputing that you heard a negative voice. I want you to understand that. I can say, as a member of the House like yourself, that I did not hear a negative voice, and others were in exactly the same position on both sides of the House of Commons. I think the best way to handle the matter would be to recognize that the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) had consulted appropriately with our party—there were also consultations with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson); I am grateful to him today for the consultations he had with me. I think it would be appropriate, now, if we were to revert to motions for the purpose of putting that motion and having it dealt with because it is important that the House express itself.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must say I had some impression that the resistance to the motion was not on the basis of substance but rather at the stage where the hon. member appeared to be moving a motion which was rejected at an earlier date—a similar motion from the other side of the House. It did diminish greatly, but it seemed to be still there at the end. I think it may be the disposition of the House to go ahead. If the House wishes to do so, by unanimous consent it could revert to the calling of motions pursuant to Standing Order 43 just for that purpose. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House having reverted to the order for motions:

Mr. Speaker: The motion which was put at that time was in the name of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House strongly urge the Soviet government, taking into account Danylo Shumuk's ill health, to release him from imprisonment.

The House has heard the terms of the motion. It can be put only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the moving of that motion at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAWRENCE—MINISTERIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I rise, having given you notice, to indicate to you that I do feel very strongly I have a valid question of privilege in relation to some matters going back a few years and, as well, to certain information which was made public just recently.

Basically, my question of privilege has to do with a letter received by me from a minister of the Crown in response to a very important and legitimate inquiry to me from a constituent. That letter from a minister of the Crown misled me. It not only misled me but it led me in turn to mislead my constituent. I further allege, and I claim now in this House, that the wording of the letter to me was drafted in such a way as to mislead me and my constituent intentionally and deliberately. Further, I claim that that letter, coming to me from a minister of the Crown, on ministerial letterhead, over the personal signature of the minister, involved me in relation to a very deep responsibility and duty I feel I have to my constituents, a feeling I am sure is shared by all members.

I further understand that there are technical, legal and, in some cases, outdated prerequisites, in this House and traditionally in the British parliament, before one can establish what has been called privilege. Basically, as I understand some these prerequisites with regard to privilege, privilege has to relate to a matter which either takes place in the House, or affects in the House the performance of the House or the House's attitude, or the attitude of a member in a particular way within the House. Second, there has to be a deliberate intention to deceive. My submission is that the facts to which I will now refer meet the prerequisites for a finding of a breach of privilege.

• (1212)

We have been told many times by ministers of the Crown in relation to inquiries from constituents, especially those which relate to law and order and law enforcement agencies, that it is unfair to spring the subject matter in the House on a minister in an oral question with no warning whatsoever. That suggestion has been made many times, and I have usually agreed with it. An inquiry of that nature should first be presented to a minister through correspondence so that some research can be done. Then, if the minister's reply by correspondence is not satisfactory, presumably we can raise the matter as a question during the oral question period in the House. In that way the minister at least would have full notice of a matter which, in many respects, we could not possibly expect the minister otherwise to have.

In this particular case I received an inquiry from a constituent about a very important matter, and I wrote to the minister involved, in this case the then solicitor general. The reply I received through correspondence with the then solicitor general very deeply affected my conduct and further questions I asked in this House later. I received a reply from the solicitor general of the day, and because of that reply I asked no further questions of the then solicitor general on that subject. Instead, I directed my inquiries to the then postmaster general.

My claim is that the reply I received was misleading. If it had not been false, I would have continued to ask questions of the then solicitor general. I would have asked different questions of the then postmaster general. Indeed, this is and was such an important matter that I would have directed my questions perhaps even to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). There is no question in my mind—and I make this allegation seriously now, knowing the consequences and the implications of it—that if I had been given a truthful answer by the minister involved, the performance of my responsibilities and duties in this House would have been entirely different in relation to the subject matter about which I am talking.

I claim to Your Honour today that the written misleading and false reply directly affected my capabilities and my attitude in this House. The incorrect information given to me in this House in relation to this matter also—and this is a matter of deep regret to me—materially affected my responsibility and my relationship with my constituent. There would have been further questions to the then solicitor general, but there were none. I would have asked different questions of the then postmaster general than the ones I actually did ask, and there would have been questions to the Prime Minister, had the thrust of my inquiries not been deflected by the false and misleading answer I received. There is no question in my mind that the answer I received was deliberately and intentionally misleading and that, whatever the source of information the minister had, which information he gave to me, that source knew that the information which was supplied to me was misleading.

Just to prove this I would like to quote a very short extract from a portion of the evidence before the commission of inquiry concerning certain activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I refer to the proceedings recorded at volume 88 for November 1, 1978, at page 14480. This relates to the interception of mails by a law enforcement agency in this country. I want to quote from the testimony of former commissioner of the RCMP, William Higgitt, as follows:

Well, no secret in—it wasn't cast to the four winds—

By that he meant information relating to tampering with the mails by the RCMP.

—but there was no secret that this was one of the investigative aids that was, from time to time, resorted to on a very restricted basis.

In volume 84 of the proceedings before the royal commission for October 24, at page 13781 there is further testimony of former commissioner Higgitt as follows:

Certainly there was no secret of the fact that we were doing it and that secret was not held from the ministers. They were seeing the results in various forms.

What he means by "it" is the tampering with or the interception of the mails of this country by the law enforcement agency concerned.

From volume 88 at page 14555 of the proceedings before the McDonald commission on November 1, this week, I would like to quote these five lines from the testimony of former commissioner Higgitt:

That is not, that is not an assurance the RCMP is giving to the minister at all, and as a matter of fact, the practice was in matters of this kind—

Former commissioner Higgitt is referring here to the letter I received and the statement I received from the minister.

—the practice was very often ministers' letters were not exactly drafted on precise statements of fact.

There is simply no question in my mind that the testimony of Mr. Higgitt to the McDonald commission brought forward two facts which cannot be denied. One is that the essence of the letter to me was a falsehood, and the second is that it was a deliberate falsehood. It was known to be false at the time it was drafted and handed to the minister for his signature. Your Honour will note that I am not making the allegation—because it is no business of mine as far as it is relevant to the matter before this House today—that the minister knew it was a falsehood, but the fact is, as far as I and my attitude and my capabilities in this House and my relationship with my constituent are concerned, it was a falsehood. There is no question about that. I think this therefore breaches my privileges as far as this House is concerned.

I would like to give the House a short description of what this is all about. On November 15, 1973, I received a letter from a constituent. That letter made three very serious allegations. I must explain that this letter came from a young constituent who is a poet. He writes his poetry in what he calls the computer language of the day, and he has as his pseudonym his social insurance number. He claims that he is well known for his poetry under his social insurance number as a pseudonym. He also claims that he has received mail many times addressed to him under his pseudonym, namely, his social insurance number.

He said in his letter to me of November 15, 1973, that a letter was mailed to him by a friend. The letter was addressed simply to him by virtue of his social insurance number and his postal code. The next thing he knew about this letter addressed to him was when his friend telephoned him and informed him that two RCMP agents had arrived on the friend's doorstep, the doorstep of the sender of the letter, to interview him, with a photocopy of the piece of mail in their hands. The further allegation was that the sender was told by the two RCMP agents that not only had the sender been traced but also the identity of my constituent had been traced solely and exclusively through their SINs which were in that piece of mail. In other words, the only identification of the sender of the letter was his SIN. That is also a pertinent point.

● (1222)

As a result of receiving the letter of November 15 I sent a letter on November 21 to the then solicitor general. I sent the letter rather than asking an oral question in the House, as a common courtesy, a point which I think has been well taken many times by several ministers of the Crown. In that letter I referred very specifically to the point that this is a very important matter because, first, there was an allegation of an invasion of the privacy of my constituent; second, there was an allegation of the disruption of the mail; third, there was an allegation of a photostat being made of private correspondence; and fourth, there was an allegation that a piece of mail had been prevented from reaching my constituent. I suggest to you, sir, that these are four very important matters, which were important then as they are today.

At the same time I sent a similar letter to the then postmaster general under the same date. I received a reply on December 10, 1973, from the then postmaster general saying to me, generally speaking, that it was simply not possible to account for how the mail eventually got into the hands of the RCMP. It was simple, blunt, but at least frank and honest on the part of the postmaster general.

I received a reply from the then solicitor general on December 4, 1973, the last paragraph of which I should like to quote. It is very well known now because it has appeared in the press lately. The letter was written on ministerial letterhead, addressed to me as an MP dealing with a legitimate and proper inquiry from a constituent, and it was signed by the then solicitor general, the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand). The last paragraph reads as follows:

I have been assured by the RCMP that it is not their practice to intercept the private mail of anyone and I trust that the above explanation will set your constituent's mind at ease.

In relation to the actual quotations that I have given to you already with regard to certain witnesses appearing before a royal commission, obviously that is patently untrue. Obviously as well, it was perhaps cleverly and subtly designed to mislead me. Of that I do not think there can be any question or doubt whatsoever.

I merely say to you, sir, that in this context it does not matter whether the former solicitor general was misled by his officials. What is important to me—and, I hope, is important to all members of the House—is that I should be able, as an MP, both in and out of the House, to trust the word of a minister of the Crown on a critically and crucially important matter. We should be able to trust the word of a minister of the Crown. My argument is not with the RCMP; my argument is with the minister's word to me. His argument might be with his officials or with the RCMP, but that is his argument, his problem, not mine today in my submission to you. Mine is with him, and as an MP that is the only recourse I have. I cannot complain to him in this context that he might have incompetent, lying or negligent officials. That is not my argument today. My argument today is that if I, as an MP, cannot trust the word of a minister of the Crown in respect of a legitimate inquiry from a constituent of mine, where do I go? What are we here for or, more important, what is the minister here for?

This matter affects my responsibilities and actions in the House, and my submission to you, sir, is that in actual fact it did affect my subsequent actions in the House. This is not a matter exclusively for the inquiry sitting two blocks south of here day by day—there can be 47 royal commissions—but this is a particular matter relating to a deliberate and intentional act to mislead me, and subsequently my constituents, and therefore I submit to you that it is a matter which should be examined by the House since it affects us. It might or might not be a matter that is under the jurisdiction of a royal commission—that is irrelevant. The fact is that it affects my capabilities and responsibilities to my constituents. In fact, it might be no business whatsoever of a royal commission.

I just want to finish up my rather lengthy argument to you, sir. I appreciate your patience and tolerance in allowing me to go on this long.

The essence of my argument is that I was deliberately misled by a letter from a minister, possibly with his knowledge or possibly without it, I do not know, but from my point of view I was misled.

I note that on page 67 of the nineteenth edition of May's, privilege is defined as follows:

> The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers".

That is, parliament's powers.

> They are enjoyed by individual members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its members; and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

Surely if anything inhibits the ability of a member of parliament to serve his constituents, it is the unwillingness or the inability of a minister of the Crown to provide him with truthful information when he writes to him or asks a question in the House. Surely it is the duty of the House to hold the executive accountable for its policies and actions. This right is also circumscribed by the executive's refusal to release large amounts of information necessary to any concept of accountability. We have had that problem before. What is left to the House if the executive is allowed to extend its prerogatives not only to the privilege of withholding information but also to the point of deliberately uttering falsehoods?

To support my contention that this letter offended my privileges as a member acting within the scope of his duties and protected by privilege, I would draw the attention of the Chair to page 88 of May, which states the following from a 1939 report of a Westminster committee on the Official Secrets Acts. By the way, sir, this is reproduced in our Beauchesne. The quotation reads:

> Cases may easily be imagined of communications between one member and another or between a member and a minister, so closely related to some matter pending in, or expected to be brought before the House, that, although they do not take place in the chamber or a committee room, they form part of the business of the house, as, for example, where a member sends to a minister the draft of a question he is thinking of putting down, or shows it to another member with a view to obtaining advice as to the propriety of putting it down or as to the manner in which it should be framed.

● (1232)

I suggest to you, sir, the circumstances in the case I am proposing to you fall squarely within that type of case referred to in May, and with some favour, in our own Beauchesne. That particular opinion was supported by a report of the committee on privileges of the United Kingdom. In its fifth report of 1956-57 at paragraph 12, it reads as follows:

> We adopt and follow the arguments and reasoning of the select committee of November 1939, and we are of the opinion that Mr. Strauss in writing to the Paymaster General on 8th February, 1957, directing his attention to matters of administration in the London area of the Nationalized Industry of Electricity and criticising the London Electricity Board was conducting or engaged in a "proceeding in parliament" and that in so doing he is protected by the privilege declared to belong to parliament by the Bill of Rights, 1688.

In other words, the committee said that even though that took place outside of the House, it affected the responsibilities, capabilities, and privileges of the House in such a manner that it was an actual breach of the privileges of the House.

Finally, sir, I draw your attention to page 141 of May, which reads as follows:

> It is a breach of privilege to present or cause to be presented to either House or to committees of either House forged, falsified or fabricated documents with intent to deceive such House or committees—

And the following page which reads as follows:

> The House may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt.

My proposition is that that obviously is extended. If there are forged, falsified or fabricated documents with intent to deceive the House or committees, obviously it means with intent to deceive a member of the House.

I realize many aspects of this matter are currently before the McDonald commission, but I feel obliged to raise it in the House at this time because only this House can focus on the narrow question of whether a breach of parliamentary privilege is involved, and further, under the rules, as Mr. Speaker has reminded us many times, I must raise a question of privilege as soon as it arises. I believe this prevents me, and I suggest the House, from waiting until the final report is in from the commission. We have to deal with it now.

Following Mr. Speaker's ruling of last year on questions of privilege involving "deliberately misleading", in which I was involved, I am prepared to move now, or at any subsequent time, a substantive motion which I hope will be accepted as involving a matter of privilege. If Mr. Speaker finds that there is a prima facie case, I would be prepared to move the following:

That in the opinion of this House the letter sent to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham on December 4, 1973, was a calculated attempt to deceive the hon. member by responding to his inquiries with a falsehood, and, that the said letter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for a report on the source and circumstances of the deception.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by stating most emphatically that members on this side and members of the government consider it of first importance to give as truthful and complete information as possible to members in the House, and indeed in their dealings with members outside the House.

All members will remember the date of November 9, 1977, when the then solicitor general indicated the discovery on his part of the fact of certain mail openings on the part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Prior to that time, as has been made clear by solicitors general past and the then solicitor general, they did not have knowledge of that fact.

I do not want to get into a particular debate on the facts, but in view of some of the things said by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), I must comment on one or two of them. He described the 1973 letter in question as misleading. Indeed, I would go further and say that it was erroneous, and not engage in subtleties about the use of the word "practice". The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham should not have used consistently the words "deliberate falsehood", "deliberately misleading", and on one occasion he said that it was something deliberately misleading by a minister, since the implication of that was to suggest that the minister himself was deliberate in the misleading. I see the hon. member is shaking his head. I am glad he does that now. In fairness to the minister in question, he should have separated that fact clearly when he was proceeding through his remarks.

Clearly it was a surprise and an important matter to all of us on November 9, 1977, when the House was informed of this matter. In the case of this particular letter, the solicitor general of the day who signed it, the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand), testified before the Keable commission on February 15 of this year that he had been assured on each occasion on direct questions to them that they did not open mail. I say no more about that fact and the question of any deliberateness on the part of the minister.

The hon. member has sought to extend proceedings in the House to the letter which was written outside the House. Perhaps Your Honour's ruling of yesterday, about proceedings outside the House and their relationship, may have some bearing on this question and indicate that it is not so. But, at the very best, he could try to bring himself within the position of a letter being equivalent to an answer or a response in the House. The important thing is that in the period prior to November 9, 1977, the solicitors general indicated that they had no knowledge of mail openings, indeed had assurances that there were no mail openings, and might well have answered questions along the lines of the letter received by the hon. member within that period of time. Clearly they would not have been happy about that fact, but indeed there were exchanges in the House which would show that replies substantially of that nature were given.

Apart from the question of it not being a proceeding of the House, even if it had been a proceeding of the House the important point is that the question of privilege matured on November 9, 1977, when it became apparent by the statement of the then solicitor general, after his investigations were renewed because of further reports about mail openings, that in fact there had been such mail openings. His investigation led him to disclose that fact to the House. That was almost a year ago. Since then the facts have been known in terms of the erroneous nature of the letter received by the hon. member some four years earlier. It is not a matter to be considered as a question of privilege at this time, even if it could be treated as a question of privilege before the House as a proceeding in the House.

Regarding such answers in the House based upon information given to ministers—and ministers have stated their positions in terms of their lack of knowledge of the contrary being true—the nature of the illegalities is before the McDonald commission at this very time. In this case, as in so many others, it really behooves us to let the McDonald commission continue its work and to explore the matters which are involved here. I am sure the commission will do that and, as a result, will in due course, throw further light on the background facts behind the position of the ministers. The ministers have made their position clear, and I think that is clear.

● (1242)

I am glad that, by the nod of his head, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham agreed that his use of words like "deliberate" and "misleading" were not meant by him to be attributed to the minister, and that, indeed, what we do not know is the source of the particular phrases in the letter. I take it to its highest when I say that answers in this House prior to November 9, 1977, when the then solicitor general revealed that his investigations that morning had discovered that mail openings had been taking place, and I refer to Hansard at page 742 for Wednesday, November 9, 1977, would also have been based on that lack of knowledge on the part of solicitors general, and clearly any question in relation to them was pertinent and relevant at that date, and nothing new has been added to our knowledge at this point in time.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have just one or two things to say following upon the remarks of the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). It is really quite easy to say that we ought to let the McDonald commission continue its work. Of course, the McDonald commission will continue its work regardless of what this House says about it. That is not the point.

The point made by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) in his very excellent presentation is one of importance that we ought not forget. It is not the McDonald commission that focuses on the privileges of this House. It is the McDonald commission which focuses upon the truth as a case is presented before that commission. It is only this House that can decide on questions of privilege as between members, and that is why the matter is raised here now.

Let me say, with respect, that I think if the House were to turn the matter aside on that ground, then the House would not be doing itself justice in respect of its own privileges which are important to the carrying out of its duties. Surely the McDonald commission cannot deal with questions of privilege. Merely because it deals with the case from which a question of privilege might arise is no reason to forestall the House from dealing with the matter. I think that point is extremely important.

I am not going to repeat the quotations referred to by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, but I commend them to you, sir, in respect of what is not an extension of privilege to a communication. It is not an extension of privilege at all. It has been established in parliamentary practice to be part of privilege that a member can expect the truth from a minister. I share the position taken by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham in respect of the minister's role in this, which has been reiterated by the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice. The precedents are, and the practice is, that it is within the matter of privilege and not an extension of it.

It is part of the law of privilege that a member of this House in the performance of his duty can expect the truth from a minister of the Crown, even if that truth should be that the minister cannot or will not answer the question raised. Those are the facts, and the member can expect the truth.

The first point dealt with, or alluded to by the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice, really is that this was not an act of the minister in the sense it was brought up in his mind, worked over, following which there was a deliberate misleading of the hon. member. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham has indicated that this too is his position, and I share it.

The fact remains that the letter referred to is a letter from a minister of the Crown which we should be able to rely on as the truth. It was not a letter signed by the RCMP or anyone else. If I assume that it is the rule of the Government of Canada, as it is the rule of any other responsible government, that a letter signed by a minister is accepted as that minister's letter, and if that letter, even through no fault of the minister's misleads a member of parliament, then the member of parliament has a grievance with which only parliament can deal. Those are the simple parameters of this case.

A case seems to have been made out here in the prima facie way it has to be made out in respect of the matter of privilege. Sir, I put that to you respectfully. The precedents which have been quoted, and which you will no doubt want to review, indicate that this kind of case, and this case specifically, fall within what has been established for some period of time as a matter of privilege, and not an extension of the law of privilege. There is no extension involved.

Imagine the sorry state we, as members of parliament, all of us, would be in if we could not count on or know that ministers are responsible for what they write. It would clearly be a very difficult thing for any member of this House to operate in those circumstances. Ministers write letters and say, "I hope this will assure your constituent", or they will add at the end of their letters, "I trust this information will permit you to explain this matter to your constituent." Members of parliament rely on these statements when making explanations, and part of our job certainly is representative.

In conclusion, if a matter can be brought up in the House of Commons by way of question and an answer is given which is inadvertently misleading, then surely the hon. member would have a question of privilege. If the same appropriate matter is brought up by way of a letter and a misleading answer is given, I submit to you, sir, the same thing applies and there is a privilege.

If, as the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham said happened in his case, the member tempers his questions or does not ask any further questions of the solicitor general because of the misleading reply, there is no doubt that the member's rights and ability to perform his duty are affected. We accept the word of all hon. members of this House. Therefore, sir, I submit respectfully that a prima facie case has been made, and I commend it to you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see two other hon. members seeking to participate, and I am anxious to hear them. I would like to hear some discussion on one point raised by the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) in respect of which I have not heard any other comment. I refer to the fact that because of the procedural requirement that questions of privilege be raised at the first available opportunity, the first available opportunity in this case was in fact the day the House was notified some several months ago, almost a year ago, by the solicitor general at that time that in fact what had been previous information, that mail had not been intercepted, was erroneous information, and on that day he had learned of this and was, therefore, advising the House that there had in fact been opening of the mail. At that time and certainly in subsequent answers in the House there had to be the indication that answers made in the House by previous solicitors general on the basis of that information were wrong answers and that the matter occurred not only once but several times.

● (1252)

It had to be brought to the attention of the House on several occasions in clear terms that answers which previously indicated that there had not been mail openings were wrong answers based on misleading information from officials responsible to the solicitor general of the day. That being the case, there would have been several occasions on which members either were or ought to have been alerted to the fact that the answers they had received prior to that time about mail openings, such as the answer received—which after all is the core of this question of privilege—were wrong answers. Despite the fact that it occurred almost a year ago, I still have to deal not only with the question of whether this is of such a nature as to be included in privilege, but also with a couple of procedural matters of that sort.

At least I am relieved of the obligation of having to decide whether the paragraph or sentence in the letter was misleading. The Minister of Justice has brushed this point aside for me. Even if I were to find all the necessary ingredients for privilege, how do I get around the fact that this was first brought to the attention of the House almost a year ago in such a way as to give rise to this question of privilege? Therefore, we are not only slightly but a great deal too late to deal with it on that basis at this time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in my view the request for this matter to be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections is one that ought to be granted. It is clear from what has been said on both sides that a misleading statement was made by letter, by a minister, to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) used the term "erroneous", but at least there is no denying the statement that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham was misled.

It is also part of the record now that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham has in a sense charged that he has received a letter which was misleading. That is something which ought to be cleared up by the House.

During the course of his remarks the Minister of Justice made the suggestion that is made almost every time any matter in this area is discussed, namely, that we should leave it to the McDonald commission. On that point, I agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), that the issue of the privileges of members of this House is not before the McDonald commission. Whether the commission ever completes its proceedings or not, we have a situation here where a member of this House has had his privileges affected. I think that it is this House that ought to settle this matter.

The point which you made after listening to the Minister of Justice is one that is almost as interesting and difficult as the question we have in another debate involving a letter written by the Commissioner of Human Rights to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). There are various angles to be considered. To put it hypothetically, if the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham had risen on November 10, 1977, on the basis of the statement made by the then solicitor general on November 9 to the effect that there had been mail openings, and had alleged that the letter he received three or four years earlier was therefore a violation of privilege, there would have been some difficulty about it. The member would have been asked, "How do you know that what was said three or four years ago was a misrepresentation?"

It seems to me that we have to put into the picture the fact that only a few days ago former commissioner Higgitt identified this particular letter and brought it out in the open—and now not only does the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham know about it, but the whole country—and that that particular letter was identified by the former commissioner as a misleading letter, or to use the word of the Minister of Justice, an erroneous letter.

I appreciate, sir, that you have to consider this very fine point, but what would you have done in my hypothetical situation had the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham raised this matter immediately after November 9, 1977? He would have been told that he did not yet have the evidence that that particular letter was included in the framework of misleading letters. Because this situation is really separate from the inquiry of the McDonald commission, and because a member of this House has had his capacity to do his job interfered with by a letter from a minister which, it turns out, did not tell what was true, I think that it ought to be considered as a prima facie case of privilege. The result, if the question of privilege is allowed and the motion is put and passed, is that what has happened between a minister and a member of this House would go to a committee of this House to determine how it all came about. It is totally different from what is going on in the McDonald commission hearings, and I believe that the question of privilege should be granted.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raises a point about the letter which I think comes to the aid of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. I confess that, while he made reference to it, I did not quite catch the significance of the fact that the testimony before the McDonald inquiry made specific reference to this letter. I was operating on the impression that the testimony, while it related to arguments, did not make specific reference to this piece of correspondence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It did.

Mr. Speaker: Thankfully, that lays that point aside, because if I do find that the other ingredients of privilege are present, I would not be very comfortable setting aside a matter of this importance on the basis of a technicality. I would only do it in the event that I was faced absolutely and categorically with a procedural requirement which I simply could not get around. I do not like to set aside important questions of this nature on a catch, but with the specific reference by the ex-commissioner to this particular piece of correspondence, I would think that that probably answers that one argument. Again, it is something I would have to look at very carefully.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, before starting my argumentation with respect to your remark and that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who said, and I quote:

[English]

—Higgitt brought the letter into the open in the last days. This letter was brought in the open by Mr. Higgitt, not in the last days, but on February 1, 1978, publicly at the Keable inquiry. I would like to refer this House to the report of the Keable inquiry, volume 102 at page 62, where Mr. Michel Decary asks Mr. Higgitt in reference to exhibit P-142:

Now on page two (2) Mr. Allmand writes, or maybe someone for him but it does bear Mr. Allmand's signature:

"I have been assured by the RCMP that it is not their practice to intercept the private mail of anyone and I trust that the above explanation will set your constituent's mind at ease".

Mr. Decary asks the question again:

Do you recall having discussed with Mr. Allmand in the month of November or December, but anyway before December of 1973, such a practice of interception of private mail of citizens of Canada?

A. No, I do not recall any such conversation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pinard: With pleasure, at the end of my intervention. What I want to say at this point, because I realize that it is very close to one o'clock, is that it is not exact to state that the letter on which the hon. member has based his question of privilege came out only in the last days. It was made public, and the hon. member should have known at least that it was public, at the Keable inquiry February 1, 1978. If the House is interested I can table part of this testimony so that hon. members will have knowledge of it.

● (1302)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the hon. member if, in that testimony before the Keable commission, specific reference was made to the fact that that was a letter addressed to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence).

Mr. Pinard: The answer to that question is very simple, Mr. Speaker; it is yes. May I quote the question put by Mr. Decary to Mr. Higgitt as follows:

Q. Now we have produced yesterday, under objection from your attorneys, a document P-142, exhibit P-142. Now this is a letter addressed by the Honourable Warren Allmand to Mr. Allan Lawrence, MP but I forget for what riding?

A. I believe it's an Ontario member.

Q. Yes, an Ontario member for the Conservative Party of Canada I believe. I refer specifically, and you may take time and a moment or two to look at the document, but I refer you to the last paragraph of page two (2) of Mr. Allmand's letter?

A. Yes.

Then a question by Mr. Pierre Lamontagne:

Q. If you take the position that we're dealing with foreign powers—

A. I have read this document.

I think this answers the hon. member's question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In any case, the discussion will obviously be interrupted by the luncheon adjournment. We are going to return to this at two o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.04 p.m. the House took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking at one o'clock I saw fit at the very beginning of my intervention to rectify a fact which undoubtedly the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) inadvertently brought to our attention. Though that has been clearly settled, I would like to make brief and clearer statements on that issue.

If we accepted the arguments given by the two members of the Progressive Conservative party and the member of the New Democratic Party who spoke before me, we would have to conclude that it is not because there is a royal commission of inquiry considering the practices of the RCMP that a committee of the House cannot study matters which are already the subject of the inquiry of the commission when privileges of members of the House are concerned. If we were to accept that assertion—which I do not—we would have to come to the necessary conclusion, in light of obvious facts, that the question of privilege as raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) was belated. It is belated because it is based first of all on a letter dated December 1973, one excerpt of which was quoted by the hon. member this morning. This excerpt has also been quoted by me when I read the wording of a question put to the Keable inquiry and which establishes clearly that the then solicitor general did inform the hon. member that the RCMP had advised him it was not current practice to open mail. Now, in 1973 the hon. member got that information which turned out to be erroneous. But last November, in 1977, in the House and more specifically during almost all the oral question period on November 9, it was clearly established, following a TV coverage from the night before, that there had been allegedly illegal mail opening.

It then became obvious to the hon. member who now raises this question of privilege that the information contained in the letter of December 1973 could be challenged because the facts contradicted the contents of that letter. I therefore believe that it is at that moment that the hon. member should have put the question of privilege, or at the latest the following day. The hon. member was indeed in the House that day and he had, along with other members, the opportunity to direct questions in that regard to the then solicitor general, the present member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox).

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to Hansard for November 9, 1977, page 742, where the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) directed specific questions regarding the illegal opening of mail to the then solicitor general, who answered unequivocally leaving the hon. member no choice but to conclude that the information contained in the December 1973 letter was false.

Therefore, the hon. member did not have to wait for the recent testimony of Mr. Higgitt who, as it was termed this morning, allegedly told the McDonald commission: "It was not cast to the four winds but no secret". I am sure that the hon. member is sufficiently clear-headed and intelligent that he did not have to hear Mr. Higgitt's testimony yesterday or the day before before the McDonald commission to understand, on November 9, 1977, in the House, that there was indeed a discrepancy between the information that he got from the solicitor general in 1973 and the many answers given in the House on November 9 by the Solicitor General and the Postmaster General to the effect that, unfortunately, there had in fact been mail openings. That is when he should have raised his question of privilege.

But allowing him a little more delay to understand, he could have had until February 1, 1978, at the latest—several months ago now, Mr. Speaker—to raise a question of privilege which could be receivable, in order or valid.

This morning I referred to that commission of inquiry which held public hearings and heard Mr. Higgitt. The latter, in answer to questions put by lawyers, and I will not quote again what I mentioned this morning, did indeed refer particularly to that letter of December, 1973, sent to the hon. member by the then solicitor general, even quoting textually the last paragraph of that letter which was also read this morning by the hon. member on his question of privilege. Moreover, an attorney even asked the Solicitor General who wrote that letter in December, 1973, whether, in the months of November and December prior to that letter, whether—

● (1412)

[English]

Such practice of interception of private mail delivered in Canada has been discussed with Mr. Allmand.

[Translation]

That question had been put to Mr. Higgitt. Mr. Speaker, this was public knowledge and the hon. member who brought up the question of privilege must have been aware of it. He therefore missed the boat twice. First, on November 9 in the House when the Solicitor General himself told him mail was opened, contrary to what the letter said which was sent to him in December, 1973. He also missed the boat when, on February 1, before the public inquiry commission mention was made of that same letter. His name was mentioned at the inquiry, the letter in question was also mentioned and tabled as documentary evidence; mention is even made of the Solicitor General who wrote it and who denies having discussed its contents with anyone.

Mr. Speaker, once again, if we accept the position of hon. members, excepting that of the Minister of Justice who spoke about the matter before me, one must of necessity conclude that the question of privilege, at least from the procedural point of view, comes at a late date.

In closing the discussion on this first point, I would be remiss if I did not quote ever so briefly for the record the principle generally recognized by Beauchesne, in his fourth edition, page 95, paragraph 104, and I quote:

(3) A matter of privilege which claims precedence over other public business should be a subject which has recently arisen and which calls for the immediate interposition of the House. The matter should be raised at the earliest opportunity.

A few lines further he adds, and I quote again:

(5) As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity. If he is not so satisfied he may allow the member to make a statement with a view to ascertaining whether or not a prima facie case can be made out.

Mr. Speaker, it seems obvious to me, even if it displeases some people, that the rules of this House should be followed at all times. It seems obvious to me that in this case the hon. member who raises today a question of privilege is several months late. In fact what is the object of his complaint this morning? He received false information from a minister and he has become aware of this fact only recently, following the testimony given by Mr. Higgitt before the McDonald commission. It is not true, Mr. Speaker. If he received false information, which might be possible, he should have known that this information was erroneous last November 9 in this House or at the latest on February 1 or the following days when his name, the letter and the whole matter were discussed publicly before an inquiry commission, the Keable commission. To conclude on this first point, it seems obvious to me that this question of privilege is not receivable because of this considerable delay.

The second point I wish to raise has been mentioned by all hon. members who spoke before me and concerns the role of the McDonald commission compared with the role of a House committee regarding a question of privilege on a matter studied by the commission. Here again the facts are quite simple. We know that the commission was established by an order in council on July 7, 1977. A brief passage of this order in council says about the authority of commissioners appointed pursuant to part 1 of the Inquiries Act, and I quote:

[English]

—to conduct such investigations as in the opinion of the commissioners are necessary to determine the extent and prevalence of investigative practices or other activities involving members of the RCMP which are not authorized or provided for and in this regard to inquire into the relevant policies and procedures that govern the RCMP in the discharge of its responsibility to protect the security of Canada.

[Translation]

Of course, the order in council is much more elaborate concerning the commissioners' terms of reference. But the last quote is specific, however, and indicates the essence of the work or terms of reference of the inquiry.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, that commission was established under a federal statute called the Inquiries Act and has the power to hear any witnesses. Let me simply refer to that act, part 1, section 4, which provides, and I quote:

The commissioners have the power of summoning before them any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence on oath, or on solemn affirmation if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and orally or in writing, and to produce such documents and things as the commissioners deem requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine.

In view of the mandate given by an order in council under a federal act of parliament to a royal commission of inquiry investigating RCMP activities, it seems quite improper to me, because an hon. member alleged his privileges have been infringed upon, that the same subject matter be referred to a parliamentary committee to examine that same matter exactly. This would be creating duplication. The motion put by the hon. member must be placed in context. In my view, he is aiming at the solicitor general who wrote the letter—and I see clear evidence of that in the very words he used in his motion, those of "calculated attempt to mislead". He is imputing motives to the solicitor general who wrote the letter in December of 1973. In his motion he asks that the Solicitor General be censored for deliberately misleading the hon. member, or if he is not attacking the Solicitor General, he has to blame someone else for the inconvenience resulting from the letter sent to him, and that someone else can only be the RCMP. So by complaining that he was misinformed in a letter signed by a minister, he wants to have the subject matter referred to a committee, not to determine whether that caused him inconveniences—it appears obvious to me that having been misinformed in 1973 could have prevented him from putting questions to the Prime Minister, as he mentioned, or the Solicitor General; those are inconveniences, I am not denying that—but what remedy is he seeking today, Mr. Speaker? Is it simply to have us say that he was unable to ask questions at that time or is he trying to blame the Solicitor General or the RCMP? In either case, that is exactly the terms of reference of the McDonald commission, to determine whether or not there were wrongdoings and whether people in the public eye are involved. That is going to be determined, and referring the subject matter now before us to a committee of this House could result in our arriving at different conclusions on the same matter. We could have a committee of the House blaming for one reason or another the Solicitor General for his integrity or knowledge or lack of knowledge of the facts in question and at the same time a judgment or a report by the McDonald commission exonerating the Solicitor General. And that is the nonsense situation in which we could find ourselves if we allow this kind of abuse, under the pretence that the privileges of a member of this House have been breached, of referring the subject matter that is already before a special commission, a royal commission, to a committee of public men, politicians, parliamentarians, particularly when there is, in my opinion, no remedy for the inconvenience which the hon. member is complaining about and which he could have complained about a lot earlier, Mr. Speaker.

In the circumstances, I think it is important to avoid, under the pretence that a privilege was breached, referring to two parliamentary bodies, a parliamentary committee and a commission set up by an act of parliament, the same inquiry into the same individuals. And that appears to me to be a nonsense that was certainly not on the minds of those who made the law and those who wrote the rules of this House.

One last point, Mr. Speaker, that seems fundamental to me is the intention of the Solicitor General who wrote the letter which was sent to the hon. member raising the question of privilege in December, 1973. At some point in his remarks this morning, the hon. member said:

● (1422)

[English]

"It does not matter if he knew or did not know about if he was wrong or not".

[Translation]

I cannot accept such assertion, Mr. Speaker. There is a world of difference between guilty intention and good faith. And if the hon. member suggests that the fact that the Solicitor General acted in good faith has nothing to do with the discussion, I believe he is completely mistaken, not to use an anti-parliamentary expression.

In matters of parliamentary privilege, just as in any matter of criminal or of any otherwise penal charge in society, it is important to respect two principles: first, the presumption of good faith. Good faith is always presumed, and whoever makes the allegations of bad faith has to prove them. That principle is generally accepted. But the second principle is that we can never condemn anyone for an act which may have bad consequences, which may cause prejudice or damage, if the act was done in good faith and without bad intention. And it seems to me obvious in this instance, Mr. Speaker, that through his question of privilege the hon. member gives only one version of the facts, one side of the coin.

There lies the danger when raising questions of privilege and calling the attention of committees of the House on matters which are now being investigated. To be fair to the Solicitor General who sent him that letter, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) referred this morning to the testimony made by the same Solicitor General on February 15, 1978 before the Keable commission. He quoted only one answer but he could have added the two following answers on pages 50 and 51 of the document he referred to. The then solicitor general, Mr. Allmand, said, and I quote:

[English]

"No, I was told on every occasion that they did not open mail."

[Translation]

And a little further during the same inquiry, the solicitor general said, and I quote:

[English]

"The first time I found out that they did open mail was when it became public after I left, you know, in recent months".

[Translation]

So I think that it is unfair, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that the solicitor general wrote the letter referred to by the hon. member in a calculated attempt to mislead. I think the hon. member is unfair when he says, I quote:

[English]

"The letter from the minister of the Crown deliberately misled me and my constituent".

[Translation]

I believe it is unfair to say such things in the House when the minister himself stated exactly the opposite under oath before a public commission. Mr. Speaker, the danger in all this would be if we, members of parliament, through a committee, were invited to question the same people and pass judgment on the same activities when a commission is now considering this same matter, and is now interrogating one witness, who gave his own version of the facts, and when the commission will then have the power to interrogate other witnesses.

It is obvious that all former solicitors general involved are impatient to testify before the McDonald commission. They have said so, they will do so and this is provided by the legislation, as I said earlier. Why then ask this institution to do the same work over again? I think we must be logical and respect the spirit of the law. There already is a commission established by an act of parliament which is now investigating the activities of politicians and the RCMP. Why then should we ask another agency of this House to do exactly the same work when the investigation is not yet completed and we have conflicting evidence? If, as each witness testifies before the commission, every member could rise in this House on a question of privilege and ask to refer the matter to a committee, there would be no end to the situation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is only logical and sensible to avoid doing the same thing twice. I believe that we should have enough restraint not to attribute intentions to the solicitor general, and I therefore believe that this should not be considered a prima facie question of privilege, first because it is belated, and second, because it is legally irregular and out of order.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to go over the arguments which were very ably made by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) and by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), but I want to re-emphasize, for your consideration, the principle of ministerial responsibility. This has been touched upon but not emphasized.

It seems to me that the fact that a minister sent out on his ministerial stationery and over his own signature an assertion to a member of parliament, in reply to a question which could have been taken as a notice of questions to be raised in this House, has to bear a good deal of weight on your decision. The minister knew what he was writing. He signed it. If he did not know what he was writing, he should have made appropriate inquiries at the time the draft was presented to him.

Either we, as members of parliament, on all sides of the House are entitled to rest secure in the knowledge that we are going to receive the truth in ministerial replies, or we are not, and obviously it is the opinion of all hon. members of this House in this instance that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham did not receive a truthful reply to this inquiry. Where does it leave us if we disregard the fundamental principle of ministerial responsibility?

There is no doubt in my mind, having regard to the circumstances surrounding the Keable inquiry, that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham did not know the facts. The facts as stated by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), with respect, are incorrect. Even if the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham did know of those facts, the question of privilege is still well founded, but the fact is that the hon. member first knew of the erroneous nature of the content of the reply only this week.

The Keable commission inquiry—and in this sense I feel as if I am speaking for a minority— was conducted in French. The transcript was in French, and I do believe the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham is bilingual in the sense that he speaks French and English. This matter did not, I am assured by the hon. member himself, come to his attention until this week. It came to his attention because two blocks away a royal commission is inquiring into these matters. A specific question about this specific letter was raised, and the matter has received much English exposure. That is how the hon. member came to know of it.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I could interrupt the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) just to direct his attention to a point which troubles me nevertheless, and it is very much related to the point he is now arguing. I am not very concerned about whether I should be looking for some procedural device with which to defeat the point of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), saying he should have raised this at the time it became known, turning back to the Keable inquiry and saying that if what the ex-commissioner said before the McDonald inquiry was in fact said before the Keable inquiry, that information is deemed to have been transmitted to the hon. member. It would seem that that kind of approach would be a little too technical. What troubles me is a little more substantial than that.

● (1432)

I have not looked at the remarks, but the day on which the former solicitor general stood in the House—I think it has been described in the argument as being on November 9, about a year ago—he said that he had then learned, and was informing the House, that the RCMP had in fact been opening mail. That was a revelation which was, of course, entirely contradictory to the information which had been given to him and to previous solicitors general. Upon hearing that, a number of letters were sent to the then solicitor general and questions asked in the House to which answers had been given.

Again I have not checked it in the record but I am sure there were numerous occasions in this parliament when members asked the solicitor general of the day in the House whether the RCMP was opening mail, to which the solicitor general of the day said no, that according to his information the police were not doing so. On the day almost a year ago when the then solicitor general said that his information was incorrect, every one of those questions and answers in parliament became a potential question of privilege. The then solicitor general said "We were misinformed, and I am telling the House we were misinformed", and therefore answers which he gave to questions in the House were incorrect on the basis of misinformation. Basically, as I recall, that is what the then solicitor general said about a year ago.

My point about timing is this: why then should we now at this stage concern ourselves, not with answers in the House—which are obviously a proceeding in the House and fundamentally related to the whole question of privilege—but go beyond them to a letter which might or might not be a proceeding in the House within the definition of privilege, and not only that but a letter which is not of this parliament but of the previous parliament? So the timing of the question of privilege that it be raised on the first occasion, is more than simply a procedural gimmick to put in the path of the question of privilege; it relates substantially to whether or not we can deal with a question of privilege on a different problem, on a new point, but I think it demonstrates the fact that it is more than simply a procedural matter. It is a substantial question, that if all these questions and answers put to the solicitors general become questions of privilege within this parliament, why do we now, some time later, go back to the letter which predated this parliament and try to stretch those two points? That is the point that concerns me.

Mr. Nielsen: Your remarks, sir, certainly indicate that you are taking the matter as a very serious question of privilege, which is only proper. With respect to the previous parliament, that is very novel. I had not thought of it before. But it is the same government and the solicitors general have been playing musical chairs with such frequency that this does not disturb the principle of ministerial responsibility, I think. May I point out with respect, sir, that if there had been a change of government, then the point might merit more investigation, but here we are confronted with a situation where we have the same government, notwithstanding the fact that we are in another parliament. So the validity of the first opportunity for raising a point of privilege, in my submission, still prevails.

With respect to the November 9 circumstances and the first time when this parliament was informed that there had in fact been the opening of mail—a fact about which I could say more, if we were not constrained by the Official Secrets Act, and about which those members who sat on the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in camera know full well—I would draw the attention of the Chair to the fact that the then solicitor general, the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand), had resigned, and the statement on November 9 was made by the new solicitor general, the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox). That has a bearing on the situation as well because the core of the question of privilege lies in the conduct of the then solicitor general, the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

I wish also to draw the attention of the Chair to the matters raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council. I followed the Keable inquiry quite closely, as I am following this one, and I have two points to make. I have already made one point, that it is not unreasonable to conclude that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham did not know of the testimony given by ex-commissioner Higgitt before that inquiry. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council shaking his head as though in disbelief, but that is the information I have from the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham and I take him at his word. However, there is a more important point to make with respect to that testimony.

As is apparent from the testimony before the present commission, ex-commissioner Higgitt believed, at the time he was testifying before the Keable inquiry, that what he was saying with respect to the letter under discussion was true. He has found out since that it was not as he stated it to be before the Keable inquiry because he had been informed since that inquiry that the letter was indeed drafted by the force. I abjure you, sir, to consider that very carefully. The ex-commissioner believed at the time that what he was stating was true, and not only did he believe it to be true, on the basis of the information he had at the time it was true. But he found out subsequently, and so testified before the McDonald commission, that his information was inaccurate.

Let us get back to the question of whether the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham knew at the time that the statement made to him was false. He first knew that the statement was erroneous, to use the more gentle term, early this week, and this was the first opportunity he had to bring the matter to the attention of the House. It is not a question of when he knew that mail was being opened in a general way—I knew that years ago—but the question is when it came to the hon. member's knowledge, and it came to his knowledge only this week, not a year ago, not last November. One cannot impose the burden on all members of parliament of following all commissions of inquiry and reading line by line all the evidence adduced at these inquiries in order to retain the privilege of raising a question of privilege in the House if one might arise as a result of that testimony.

With respect to the role of the McDonald commission and the emphasis placed on that by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) and by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council when they said "allow them to finish their task", permit me to be sceptical, sir. First, the matter affects the privileges of members of the House. That is not within the ambit of the mandate given to the McDonald commission. Second, as to my scepticism, having regard to the efforts that have been made by government counsel, as instructed by the Minister of Justice and God knows who else in PCO, I am not so sure that they will be able to see everything which would enable them to come to the proper conclusions. But putting that aside, the McDonald commission has no mandate to decide whether or not the privileges of a member or of members of the House have been breached.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council spoke about privilege, and asked that it be left to the McDonald commission. I am really surprised, but then it explains itself to me in this fashion, that they have very little regard for the rights and privileges of this place and its members when they suggest, as he did, that this matter should be left to the McDonald commission to decide. I disagree most violently with that. I am sure the view is shared by the majority of members in this place, that we, and we only, have the right to decide whether or not the privileges of a member of this place are being abused.

● (1442)

He said many things imputing motives to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. I did not detect that in the member's remarks in raising this question. Indeed he, the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), and the opposition House leader were on all fours when they assured the House through you, sir, that there was no imputation of motives here, that they were zeroing in on the principle of ministerial responsibility. Surely that is the crux of the whole question of privilege. Has the minister, or any minister of the Crown, the right to mislead members of parliament with impunity? I suggest a letter written to a minister, under the circumstances described by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, is a notice to the minister that the question will be raised in the House. That connection was made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, and the House leader for the New Democratic Party. In essence, an inquiry of the minister is a notice to the ministry that, unless a satisfactory answer is forthcoming, the matter will be raised. It was not raised because the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham was deceived by the answer.

I will confine my remarks to the emphasis on the question of ministerial responsibility and the question of the responsibility of the ministry. Whether it be in this parliament or the last, being the same government, or whether the last parliament is set aside, the fact is that when a minister signs his name to a letter, whether it is drafted by his executive assistant political, his executive assistant administrative, or any other of his officials, he is signing a letter which is tantamount to standing by all the statements put forth in that letter. If he did not do it in that sense, he cannot be heard to say, "Well, I signed the letter but I was misadvised".

I say to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council that when the then solicitor general saw that paragraph, he should have said to his adviser, "Is this true? Are we not opening mail, and if we are, I want to know?" In my submission that is what he should have said, and it is fundamental to the principle of ministerial responsibility. It is fundamental to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. If the minister did not ask that question, it is the central question we should be allowed to determine before the standing committee to which this matter should be referred, as urged by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in joining on the question of privilege by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), I should like to make specific comments concerning the points raised by the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). As I understood his representations, he indicated my colleague had sufficient advance warning of the possible misrepresentation that he should have raised his question of privilege at an earlier date.

I have had an opportunity to review the testimony before the Keable commission, to which the parliamentary secretary referred. He very kindly provided me with photostats of what he read from, and if the testimony by Mr. Higgitt before the Keable commission says anything, it would confirm that the letter my colleague received was accurate. There is no suggestion in Mr. Higgitt's testimony before the Keable commission which would cause my colleague to say that he was misled, if he knew of the evidence or not.

I should like to refer to the specific testimony which was referred to earlier, but in the context of what I am saying. I assume there was an unintentional misleading of the House in the manner the parliamentary secretary presented this testimony. Certainly on first blush it sounded to me that he meant Mr. Higgitt, as long ago as February 1, 1978, before the Keable commission, basically said the same thing as he said before the McDonald commission. That is not true. What Mr.

Higgitt said before the Keable commission is quite different from what he said subsequently before the McDonald commission.

I draw the attention of the House to page 62 of the Keable report, which was previously referred to by the parliamentary secretary. It reads as follows:

Q. Now on page two (2) Mr. Allmand writes, or maybe someone for him but it does bear Mr. Allmand's signature:

"I have been assured by the RCMP that it is not their practice to intercept the private mail of anyone and I trust that the above explanation will set your constituent's mind at ease."

We are all agreed on that quotation. It continues:

Do you recall having discussed with Mr. Allmand in the month of November or December, but anyway before December of nineteen seventy-three (1973), such a practice of interception of private mail of citizens of Canada?

A. No, I do not recall any such conversation.

If one follows the argument of the private secretary, why should my colleague have taken from that evidence that the letter was wrong? All the commissioner indicated was that he had no conversation. The report continues, with Mr. Pierre Lamontagne asking the following question:

While we are on that letter, Mr. Higgitt, there has been a suggestion made this morning by Mr. Cameron that very frequently the Department of the Solicitor General, whoever Mr. Cameron or somebody else, would ask the RCMP not only for an answer but also for a draft reply. Looking at that letter which has two (2) pages, exhibit P-142, could you tell us if according to your knowledge the practice in all this, the setup of letters etc. of the RCMP, if that draft was prepared by the RCMP?

Commissioner Higgitt's answer was as follows:

I would say with absolute . . . or with almost positive certainty that this was not prepared by the RCMP and I say that because of the phraseology. I say it also because of the setup of the letter itself. The RCMP did not set up letters in that nature and I would say from this superficial look that it is most unlikely that the RCMP had any part in actually writing that—

The next page was not given to me. In that part of the Keable evidence, Commissioner Higgitt again makes it clear that in his view—and he said that it was a superficial one—it was not drafted by the RCMP. My colleague had absolutely no reason to feel that the letter was in any way misleading, based on the evidence given before the Keable commission and referred to by the parliamentary secretary.

I should like to refer to the point raised by the parliamentary secretary initially concerning evidence in this House. In your remarks to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), Your Honour made specific reference to this. I am referring to the November 9 testimony of the then solicitor general of Canada. The parliamentary secretary referred to an answer given to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, but he did not refer to an earlier answer given by the solicitor general in response to a question posed by the hon. member for Central Nova. At that time the then solicitor general said the following:

In some instances, after my examination of the files with senior officers of the Crown, it clearly happened that the mail has actually been opened by the RCMP security service. Because of that, I referred the whole matter to the Attorney General of Canada and also to the McDonald royal commission of inquiry.

● (1452)

I would make two comments in regard to that answer. First, if I had been in my colleague's shoes it would have registered with me that the solicitor general had said, "in some instances". He did not say "in all instances". I would suggest he did not make any more meaningful comment than to say, "Yes, I have found instances where letters have been opened".

The second thing he said, which I think was very reassuring, was, "I have referred it to the Attorney General of Canada and to the McDonald commission". Is it not a natural thing to expect a member of this House to presume that any matter he had raised, such as the letter before us, would be looked into and, if found to be one of the instances when in fact there was an interception of the mail, it would be corrected and that correction referred back to him?

I would strengthen that argument, Mr. Speaker, with the fact that my colleague then did get up and in his question asked the minister why he evaded the question, and why he could not be more specific. It was then that the solicitor general came back and said essentially the same thing. He said:

—it became very clear to me during the course of that meeting that there had been indeed a number of instances in which the security service of the RCMP in particular areas of counterespionage, terrorism and countersubversion opened a number of pieces of mail.

Again, I would suggest there was nothing other than a general comment there. There was nothing to cause my colleague to suddenly think, "Well, I must have been misled in the letter I received sometime ago from that solicitor general."

I would then suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if you review the testimony before the McDonald commission, and I believe my colleague has already put some of this before you, you will find at page 14555 Commissioner Higgitt for the first time refers specifically to this letter, and for the first time indicates there was wrong information in it. That is the point on which I believe this all turns. This is the first time the letter we have under consideration was specifically indentified as a letter that fell within a situation which in fact had involved mail tampering, and in turn my colleague learned for the first time that the letter he had received was presumably misleading.

I hope I have made that clear, because I think what the parliamentary secretary said has clouded the issue somewhat. The hard truth is there has been absolutely no reason why my colleague or anybody else in this House who has made any specific request concerning the possibility of the interception of mail should have had his fears aroused in the sense that he had been misled, other than in the case of my colleague, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, as a result of Commissioner Higgitt's testimony before the McDonald commission, to which I have referred.

In this context, Mr. Speaker, let me ask you, if I may, to think of the almost impossible situation in which it would put all members of this House if it were otherwise. Surely there can be no suggestion that if general comments are made by ministers that would lead one to believe they may have made misstatements in the past, without any specific indication of when or where those misstatements had been made, hon. members would be aware of specific cases. Think of the position in which it would put all members of this House. They would have to act almost like computer machines, checking all previous correspondence and everything they had ever been told by a minister, and if they did not do that and immediately raised a question of privilege they would lose that right.

Surely the important question is, when in fact did a member learn specifically that a representation which had been made to him on a certain subject was misleading? I would suggest in this case it is very clear that it was made with Commissioner Higgitt's testimony before the McDonald commission and, therefore, there is reason for a proper reference to the appropriate standing committee of this House to consider this question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must say that the difficulty I have with that argument put forward by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is the fact, which he has just brought to the attention of the House, that on the day the solicitor general of that moment, November 9, revealed to the House that information in respect of mail openings was in fact incorrect information, one of those who questioned the solicitor general about this at the time was the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). I would then have difficulty saying he was not on notice of that fact when in fact he participated in questions—not so much having to do with the Keable inquiry but in respect of proceedings in the House. I have to examine the record in that regard as it is a point to which I must direct myself. It is a very serious point, involving going back in time and determining that a member who put questions to the solicitor general on November 9, 1977, thereby eliciting information which is fundamental to this question of privilege, should or should not be deemed to have been on notice at that time. I cannot do that on the basis of a cursory examination. I will have to look at the actual language used at that time.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I just want to point something out that is perhaps obvious, and something you touched upon a few moments ago. This is not a case in respect of which we have had any continuity in the office of solicitor general. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) has not had the opportunity for a long time to question the man from whom he got the letter. I think that is very important. One of the distinguished holders of that portfolio, the hon. Mr. McIlraith, held that post as solicitor general for many years. We have had a number of solicitors general in recent years, and it is very difficult for a member who feels he has been given an answer that is less than perfect to go back to it because of the rules that have developed.

As soon as that solicitor general who wrote the letter to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham left his portfolio we were pretty well precluded under the rules of this House from questioning him, or double checking on the authenticity of what he did.

[Mr. Stevens.]

To make matters even more complicated, the present Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), and his predecessor, have said as a matter of policy, pretty well unequivocally in this House, as I understand it, that they are not prepared to answer, as a matter of government policy, anything that could be remotely connected to the McDonald commission. They have taken the attitude, sir, that anything they could possibly attribute as being within the mandate, in the widest possible interpretation, of the McDonald inquiry is something that we, as members of this House, really ought not to be talking about, ostensibly on the basis of national security and for other reasons as well, which defies logic, in my respectful submission.

On the occasion when another question of privilege arose involving another matter, that of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), we were not allowed to pursue that either.

What I am saying to you, sir, is that if we are to get any useful mileage, as members of parliament, from the mechanisms that are in place, such as the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, we should not be as hesitant as we have been in the past to refer matters of substance which obviously affect our rights and privileges, in order that the committee can conduct appropriate investigations. Otherwise the committee is in existence but it certainly is not serving the purpose for which it was designed.

Those two reasons, namely, the practice which has developed, and I do not know since how long, of not allowing any meaningful probing of a minister when he leaves a portfolio, and the policy which has developed since the creation of the McDonald royal commission, which has certainly been to prevent us on this side of the House from pursuing matters which those on the other side can remotely claim are covered by the mandate of the McDonald commission, whether that is basically true in law or in fact, make it all the more important that you consider very carefully the appropriateness of allowing members of this House the opportunity to go into these things. We do have that mechanism available to us.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a technical point, and I think this would be useful to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) has a number of technical points he thinks would be useful to the House too.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I have a couple.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that everyone who has participated so far would like to re-argue some of the points.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Briefly, Mr. Speaker, the question at issue here is whether the disclosure at the Keable commission last November and questioning in this House would bar the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) from raising a question of privilege today, in that it has been alleged by the parliamentary secretary that at the time the hon. member was under notice, or should have been, that a letter he had received in 1973 was at issue, was wrong and was misleading.

• (1502)

It is stretching the point, and the best way I can qualify it is to say that the argument put forth by the parliamentary secretary has been a carefully devised red herring for the fundamental reason that while commissioner Higgitt was questioned by the Keable commission in November, 1977, at no time did he say anything, nor was he questioned, about the authenticity or the truthfulness of the letter written by the then solicitor general in 1973. I could question the parliamentary secretary and ask him directly whether that gentleman found any reference in the testimony in the Keable commission by commissioner Higgitt of an admission that the letter was misleading, as has now been done before the McDonald commission.

This is precisely what my colleague is complaining about, the letter he received in 1973 from the solicitor general and the fact that just this Wednesday before the McDonald commission the commissioner admitted under cross-examination that the letter was misleading. That was the first time there was direct testimony that that letter prepared for the then solicitor general was misleading and was intended to mislead the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

One can build all sorts of inferences, but is it to be attributed to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham that he should have been under notice that the letter he received in 1973 was misleading? The hon. member may have participated in the questioning in the House in November, 1977, which was his responsibility, but that does not include the authenticity of the letter because the commissioner had not said anything about the letter being misleading. The commissioner had admitted before the Keable commission that there had been some opening of letters, but he did not say anything about that particular letter.

I put it to you, sir, that it is the question of this particular letter, which the commissioner has now said was prepared in a misleading way for signature by the solicitor general of the day in order to mislead my colleague, which must be righted. With the greatest of respect, I would suggest that the arguments of the parliamentary secretary to counter this motion is a finely drawn red herring.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I have no legal knowledge at all, but I believe this has become a legal wrangle. I see no point in getting away from the statement that the minister had purposely misled the House. As far as I am concerned, it is the general responsibility of every member, whether it is a minister or a backbencher, to tell the truth, and we have all taken an oath to that effect. I do not see why we have to worry about a letter of this type when every day we have under Standing Order 43 and in preambles to oral questions statements and debates by the opposition calculated to mislead the House. It is about time we realized that the same red herring has issued from the other side.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There has been ample contribution to this question of privilege, and I know that all hon. members who have participated so far would like to reargue the points that are at issue. I hope that they will allow me to examine all these arguments and address myself to some of the considerations which I have tried to put on the record as the discussion progressed.

In response to the argument made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I think that it touches on a fundamental point about the role of the minister in this matter. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham was, in fact, very careful, by the tone of his motion, not to mention the minister in the particular circumstances.

It has been argued that the testimony of commissioner Higgitt, which is so material to this matter, is that the draft of the letter, if his testimony at the McDonald inquiry is to be accepted, was calculated not only to deceive the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, but the solicitor general of the day as well. That fact is rather central to the whole issue and is the point that concerns me. Did the solicitor general of the day on November 9 make that plain to the House? In other words, was the House on notice that questions which had been answered by solicitors general, obviously in good faith, on several occasions were in fact answered on the basis of misleading information from the RCMP?

My point is this: if that announcement and the questions of members at that time had the effect of putting the House and members of the House on notice to that effect, then surely questions of privilege about previous misleading answers, whether by letter or in the House, became operational at that time. These are arguments which I have to look at. I have to look at the content of the statement of the solicitor general on that day, and I will give careful consideration to all of the arguments.

I know that some of the members who participated in this discussion have to be away from the House for one or two days next week. It will probably be Wednesday before I would be able to assemble all these arguments, and I would hope to deliver my decision on the matter on Wednesday of next week.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, may I make one more point which has come up since my original submission on the matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not see how I can permit the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham to have that privilege and then deny it to all other members.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. So has the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not want to reopen the debate in any way, I appreciate that you have reserved your decision and I am not at all referring to this debate. I merely wish to rectify a fact mentioned by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who has suggested, if I understood him correctly—and I want to check the official record in Hansard and reserve my privilege—that I read in English some evidence given in French before the Keable commission. The Quebec judicial administration recognizes both official languages.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The arguments have been presented on both sides. In the course of debating and discussing a question of privilege, there are going to be several points on which there will be diametric disagreement. Disagreements have been put with different positions taken by others, and arguments made that not all of the testimony was put—the type of arguments which are fundamental to such discussions. I would hope that we are not now going to go over every contribution which has been made to this rather lengthy discussion today, take it piece by piece and determine whether something which is in disagreement or put into discussion is now going to found a separate question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I have been accused of having distorted the meaning of the documents tabled. I have here the record of evidence given in English, I have read them in English and the hon. member is accusing me of saying that this has been done in French.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The parliamentary secretary is rearguing the point he made earlier in the day. I am not going to allow all of the participants to do that, and, therefore, I do not think I should allow any of the participants to do that.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have yet to be recognized on a question of order which melds into a question of privilege. It has always been the practice in this House with respect to what you have just said not to apply the rule applicable in general debates limiting speakers on questions of privilege to one intervention. In particular, that rule has been applied over the years I have been here to members who raise questions of privilege.

There is one point that Your Honour, in my respectful submission—I should not use the term which I said I do not use—should be hearing from the mouth of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham and which you have not heard. It is central to the question of privilege and to the problem upon which the Chair has put its finger, namely, when did the knowledge first come to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham? The hon. member has been attempting to rise to reassure the Chair that that knowledge first came to him this week, and you, sir, should hear that from him.

● (1512)

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, I have heard that already from the hon. member for Yukon, who put on the record that he took the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham at his word. So do I. I have taken all hon. members who have contributed to this discussion at their word. I do not think I have to do it again; that is my point.

MR. DIEFENBAKER—BUREAUCRATIC USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, you indicated earlier today that my question of privilege would come forward. I am taking the opportunity to respond to the invitation you gave yesterday in regard to the question of privilege raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), when you indicated that the minister might care to make a few comments on the point that was raised.

The matter of the use of social insurance numbers has received a great deal of attention in the House recently in various debates. I think it is important to set out the facts relating to the question raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. He indicated that, in his view, the privileges of members of parliament were affected by the latest use of the social insurance number in connection with the cashing of Canada Savings Bonds coupons.

The point he raised is now part of the Income Tax Act and was part of the budget resolution of May, 1976, brought forward by the former minister of finance, the then hon. member for Rosedale, Mr. Macdonald. It became part of Bill C-22, passed in this House in February, 1977. Revenue Canada commenced administering the new regulations in July of that year so it is part of the law of Canada at this time.

This is not the only section of the Income Tax Act that relates to the use of social insurance numbers, as section 237 deals with the use of social insurance numbers on income tax returns and has been part of the law for several years.

The point raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert suggests that perhaps Canadians are not aware of the increased use of this particular piece of administrative machinery without adequate warning. I want to bring to your attention, sir, and to the attention of the House that when the legislation was passed a press release was issued by the then minister of finance dated June 2, 1977, which referred to the pending issue of Canada Savings Bonds. I should like to put one paragraph of that press release on the record. It reads as follows:

> When applying for purchase of new Canada Savings Bonds this fall, investors will be asked to provide their social insurance number if they have one. This information will be used exclusively as an account identifier and will form part of the base for a newly-designed computerized registration and retrieval system. The system will enable the government to provide better and faster service to investors when handling inquiries on their holdings of new Canada Savings Bonds. For the investor who holds bonds of several issues and counts on the annual interest income from them, the new system will ensure a single, prompt, accurately addressed payment by cheque or direct deposit.

In addition to that communication which received wide distribution, a press release was issued by the then minister of national revenue. It was labelled "For Immediate Release" and began as follows:

Residents of Canada who cash certain bond interest coupons will be required to provide a correct social insurance number or pay a 25 per cent withholding tax on their interest payment under an amendment to the Income Tax Act.

This new procedure has become necessary because some taxpayers have not been reporting the full amount of bond interest payments.

In addition, a wide advertising campaign was conducted in the same year by the Department of National Revenue which included an advertisement in all major newspapers in the country which was entitled "Notice to Bond Holders." It repeated much of the information contained in the other two communiqués. Teller cards were also placed in financial institutions across the country at the same time.

Just to summarize the background to this matter, Mr. Speaker, it arises from an administrative problem faced by Revenue Canada. Of course, it is important to ensure that investors correctly report their investment income. That point was brought out in a private member's bill just last week by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who acknowledged that this is part of the law and that he was not really questioning it. Some of the points made in the course of the debate that followed are worth mentioning, however. If a question of privilege is found on this issue, I would suggest that reference be made to that debate.

It should be made clear that no penalty or tax reduction whatsoever is involved. It is simply a mechanism for withholding tax. This is something which Canadians are used to in terms of salary payments or commissions or other forms of payments. Indeed, the withholding system has been with us for a long time.

I think it is important to know that there is no compulsion whatsoever for any bond holder to indicate his social insurance number if he does not wish to. If the number is not indicated, however, there will be a withholding tax which will be returned when an income tax return is filed. If no tax is otherwise payable, it will come back as a refund; but if tax is otherwise payable, it will be deducted.

There is another misconception which was put before the House on two or three occasions, although I am not sure if the right hon. gentleman specifically referred to it. I think it is important to mention that we are dealing only with interest, not with face value of the bonds. The procedure is intended purely and simply to assist in ensuring proper compliance with the income tax laws so that there will be no misrepresentation of income.

With these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I hope we can put this matter to rest. The facts are now clearly before the House should we ever get into further debate on the point.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We can certainly put the procedural aspect of the matter to rest. I do not know if the matter itself will be put to rest but it is not anywhere near a matter of procedure or privilege. It may be a matter of substantial interest to members of the House, but it is not necessarily a matter with which the Chair should occupy itself. It is not a question of privilege.

Order Paper Questions

SAFE CONTAINERS CONVENTION ACT

MEASURE TO IMPLEMENT INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board) (for Mr. Lang) moved for leave to introduce Bill S-3 (from the Senate), to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

* * *

QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 43 will be answered today in both official languages, as in the courts of Quebec.

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

PROFESSIONAL SERVICES—LABOUR

Question No. 43—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the fiscal year 1976-77, what contracts for professional services were let for studies, surveys and analyses into (a) present or future policies, programmes or information analysis and their efficiency and effectiveness (b) the examination of the administration or internal operation of the Department of Labour?

2. How much was committed on each contract and to whom?

Hon. André Ouellet (Acting Minister of Labour): 1. (a) Bossen, Marianne & Associates—study to determine the existence and availability of statistical and other information of the characteristics of the non-unionized Canadian workforce—$3,022. Campbell, Ian—provide advisory, consultative and coordinating services—$5,187. Cotterill, Murray—study of special mechanisms and processes for grievance arbitration now operating in Canada and to evaluate their usefulness within the federal sector bargaining relationships—$3,065. Craig, Alton—study of literature pertaining to labour-management negotiations and problem-solving in North America—$6,000. Crow, Ben & Associates of Canada Ltd.—study to examine opinions concerning the right to strike, effect of collective bargaining on inflation, role of unions, business and governments in the area of industrial relations—$17,000. Finkelman, Jacob—provide advice to the Department of Labour on special labour legislation in Canada related to the construction industry—$850. Funnel, Dudley—advisory services related to pension and retirement issues—$604. Markle, Gower—consulting with Department of Labour and management officials on the subject of labour education—$1,136. MacDonald, Ian—feasibility study involving the evaluation and production of audio visual instructional materials dealing with occupational health problems—$5,400. Martin, W. A.—study of material for the preparation of legislation that will be necessary to implement the federal Department of Labour's new policy on joint safety and health committees in industry—$2,500. McCaffrey, Gordon—evaluate the present and possible channels and substance of communication between unions, management and government and the related policies of the Department of Labour—$21,024. Plettenberg, Elizabeth—examine and appraise the industrial relations system of West Germany and the role of trade unions and the views of the participants and leaders at the union-government-sponsored labour studies centres—$3,000. Quantetics Corp.—study to provide Department of Labour with cost estimates for setting up various systems for information exchange in a collective bargaining information centre—$4,219. Pothschild, Robert—analyses existing adult educational facilities available in the community colleges and similar institutions—$878. Scott and Hart Associates Inc.—consulting on labour productivity in the automative industry—$975. Simmons, Prof. Gordon—advisory services related to protection of employees against wrongful dismissal and the arbitration of dismissal grievances—$1,104. Smith, A. & Associates Ltd.—provide advisory and consultative services to the Department of Labour with respect to the development of a framework for the implementation of expanded advisory services as part of the department's post-control program—$34,951. Willard, Joseph—provide advice in connection with policy related to the development of controls and post-controls related to inflation—$7,241. Willard Consultant & Research Services Ltd.—provide advice with policy related to the development of controls and post-controls related to inflation—$1,200. (b) Supply and Services Canada (Audit services bureau)—provide audit services relating to provincial safety inspection agreements and services provided by Workmen's Compensation Boards—$36,667. Capelle, Ronald G. Dr.—provision of advisory services related to organization development of the department—$937. Clarke, Richard—assist the Department of Labour in the preparation of labour standards documentation—$3,560. Weiler, Richard & Associates Ltd.—provide advisory and consultative services to the Department of Labour in the development of works councils (safety and health committees) and assessment of the progress of the department's reorganization and program implementation—$7,437.

2. see 1 (a) and (b) above.

Mr. Speaker: Question No. 43 has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CHILD TAX CREDIT

The House resumed from Thursday, November 2, consideration in committee of Bill C-10, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide for a child tax credit and to amend the Family Allowances Act—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

[Mr. Ouellet.]

The Chairman: Clause 1 is under consideration.

● (1522)

On clause 1—

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, the point I want to make comes under clause 1 because the bill does not especially deal with the particular subject. Some members of the House may remember that over the last four years I have pointed out that the family allowances bill of 1973, which the minister made very clear was a universal bill, was not in practice universal. I think the regulations will show that any person within the age set down in the act gets the family allowance, with one exception. That exception is if that person or child is an orphan.

Since 1974 I have been asking the minister's predecessor about this, and he was shocked that this provision would be in existence. The promise was made to bring in amendments to make sure that orphans would be protected by the universality clause of this bill. What the regulations actually say is that if any child has parents with any income whatsoever—and every child has parents—regardless of the income of the parents that child gets the family allowance. To put it into simple terms, a person could be a millionaire and have children within the age limit who would still be entitled to the family allowance.

However, when they brought down the regulations, with no approval of parliament whatsoever, the regulations said this does not apply to an orphan if that orphan has an estate which yields more than $1,660 a year. My point is that when these people drafted these regulations, approved by a committee of the cabinet, and which have been in effect for the past five years, they discriminated against a person who is a child, whether that child was two years of age or 16 years of age, merely because he is an orphan.

In my file I have a whole series of questions that I have asked every three or four months about this matter. I have a copy of a report on the Family Allowances Act which states flatly that the allowance is not paid for a child who has a taxable income. I am simply asking whether, after this bill is passed, the same discrimination will apply. The answer, as I read the bill, is that it will, because the eligibility sections of this bill are the same eligibility sections as those which are found in the Family Allowances Act.

My question to the minister is very simple. Would she consider an amendment to this bill to make it absolutely clear that no power is given to anyone to bring in regulations that destroy the principle of universality? I contend that if a child is an orphan and has lost both parents, whether he is under the care of uncles, aunts, grandparents or social agencies, that child by law of parliament has a right to family allowances. Under this bill, if it is passed, such a child should also have the right to the refund. I think that is a very clear question. It is a moral and a political question. If the minister wants, I can give the answer the minister gave as to why it is not being done.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, the member asks an important and appropriate question as to the situation of orphans regarding access to family allowances and the new child tax credit.

The new child tax credit will be given to individuals who have legal custody of an orphan, in a similar way as that person receives the family allowance right now. So I can assure hon. members that orphans who are in the legal custody of an adult will receive, through that adult, the new child tax credit.

With respect to those orphans under the care of an institution, we intend to send an amount of money equal to the family allowance, before reductions were made. This amount of money will be higher than the $20 that all other children in Canada will receive. The institution will receive, in the name of the child, an amount fully indexed to the cost of living, as would normally be the case in the month of January of each year. Right now they receive $25.68 per child. They will receive the fully indexed amount, which will probably be around $28 as of the month of January. Therefore, we keep the universality of the system.

We could not find any other mechanism by which a tax credit, based on parental income, could be transmitted to institutions. If we consider the institution as a parent, this would create easy tax loopholes. If the institution sent a list of children in their care at a particular date in the year, they would be reimbursed as parents, and then a month later they could discharge these children. There would be no way to control the number and identity of children kept by institutions. We are therefore proposing arrangements by which a fully indexed family allowance, higher than that for other children in Canada, would be paid as of January to all children in institutions, including orphans.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the minister for the courtesy and accuracy of her answer, but I would like to make just one point. The regulations have not yet been altered under the Family Allowances Act. They still remain the same. Therefore, as I read the terms of this bill, on page four the proposed section 122.2 provides:

(2) In this section

(a) "eligible child" of an individual for a taxation year means a child who had not attained the age of 18 years before the end of the year and in respect of whom the individual was entitled to receive a family allowance under the Family Allowances Act, 1973—

My question is this. I am referring not to a hypothetical case, but an actual case where two orphans are living with their grandparents. Will they now be able to get the family allowances which they are not presently getting? And, secondly, will they get the refund if their income is under $18,000?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, in the case of any child orphan in Canada today who is in the legal custody of a grandparent, that grandparent does receive the family allowance right now. There is no doubt on that point.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I can assume, therefore, that this report, which is dated for the year ended March 31, 1975, is in error and that the changes have come about, and that the provision that the allowance is not paid for the child who has a taxable income is out. Has that regulation been changed?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that if the child has a taxable income, which seems to be the case referred to by the hon. member, the child does not qualify for family allowance. Could I ask if we could have a look at the official documents and clarify the exact point made by the hon. member in a few minutes?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I think that is the proper procedure, Mr. Chairman. I would like to show the minister the actual file on this case when she is not too busy. I can show her the replies we have had from her predecessor. The question that now comes to mind, one which is proper at this time, concerns that phrase "taxable income." Supposing the taxable income is over $1,660 a year, the figure they were using two or three years ago, but still less than $18,000. As a result of the taxable income clause, that child at the present time cannot get the family allowance because the taxable income is over $1,660. Now, with this new legislation providing for a refund—negative income tax, if you like—after $18,000, will this refund apply to an orphan who does receive family allowances now because of the clause under taxable income?

● (1532)

Miss Bégin: I would like to deal with that point at the same time as I rise to answer the previous point, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped very much to be recognized by the Chair last evening when the debate at that time seemed, unfortunately, to be less even-tempered than it is this afternoon and several ideas were expressed in the speeches which disturbed me considerably. At the same time, I was anxious to accept the invitation of our Minister of National Health and Welfare for mothers to make their voices heard in this debate. As a mother, Mr. Chairman, I am more than willing to take advantage of that invitation and I hope I will do justice to the aspirations of the various mothers and their children who will benefit from this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Appolloni: I would also hope that by putting forward the point of view of mothers I might assist in getting rid of the empty time-wasting rhethoric which we have heard up to now.

Before we go into the merits of the legislation I think it is important to discuss the philosophy behind the provision of family allowances. To this end I did a little research and found that on July 17, 1944 the philosophy concerning family allowances was expressed by the then finance minister, who said:

In order to ensure a greater measure of well-being to the children of the nation and to help gain for them a closer approach to equality of opportunity—

That, Mr. Chairman, was the philosophy that led to the adoption of the family allowance program in 1944. Compare the philosophy of that time with that enunciated yesterday evening by our Minister of National Health and Welfare, who said:

> The purpose of this bill is to see that the children of the nation are provided for.

Hon. members will see from a comparison of those two statements that there has been no shift in philosophy on the Liberal side of this House. I can also state that this philosophy has been accepted and applauded all these years by the people of Canada and I hope this support will continue.

From there, Mr. Chairman, I move to the first troublesome statement in last night's debate. The member who made the statement is unfortunately not in the House at the moment. I refer to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, who said:

> When has it become the government's responsibility to look after children?

I hope the hon. member will read my remarks on his return to the House, because I would like him to hear my answer. I quote Mr. Gordon Graydon, leader of the opposition in 1944 who, if my history is correct, was leader of the Tory party. He said:

> The Progressive Conservative party takes a determined and vigorous stand in favour of meeting immediately the health and welfare needs of the people of this country, especially of our mothers and their children. Let that be clearly understood right at the beginning. We take second place to no party in this parliament in the advocacy, promotion and execution of the necessary measures to ensure decent, wholesome lives, social justice and equality of opportunity to all of Canada's citizens.

Those are noble words, Mr. Chairman. I continue the quotation:

> That, we contend, calls for governmental programs which will not only make possible equality of opportunity and decent levels of self-support for those capable of providing for themselves and their dependents in a civilized Christian state, but means also a fair and just bearing of the burden of meeting adequately the needs of those who by age, condition or circumstances would otherwise falter and fall in this race of life.

I think there lies the answer to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, who asked when had it become the government's responsibility to look after children. I think he will find that the answer was given in 1944 and, probably, long before that as well. So I say this kind of spurious question has to be abandoned and put out of the way as time wasting and contemptuous.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us what the vote was in 1944.

Mrs. Appolloni: I am sorry, I do not have those records at my fingertips.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was a recorded vote and it was unanimous.

An hon. Member: Were you here then?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Of course. Perhaps the hon. member might like to know that there was one Conservative member who was not in favour of the bill, but he was not here for the vote. So it was carried unanimously.

Mrs. Appolloni: The hon. member's good heart is exceeded only by his fantastic memory. To continue, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock has a command of English which is certainly to be admired—it is a matter of common knowledge in this House that his English is extremely good. As a matter of fact, I think he even taught English at one stage in his career. But "redistribution"? What does redistribution mean? I hesitate to impute motives to the hon. member, but if I am to understand the meaning of his question I suggest that instead of using the word "redistribution" one could more sincerely use the word "sharing". If the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, or any other member of the House, refuses the concept of sharing their wealth with the people of Canada who need it most, then maybe we are not quite so Christian or as civilized as we pretend to be.

Also in the debate yesterday we got into legalities. I do not profess to be a lawyer. As a person who is not a member of the legal profession, I may even admit to my own sense of frustration with the legal profession when they get so hung up on legalities and on so-called rights that in their efforts to discuss these things they totally ignore the passage of time wherein the victims of their procrastinations are left wondering and suffering.

This is what I wish to address myself to at the moment. I am not speaking as a lawyer. I speak as an extremely concerned parent who, incidentally, will by this legislation lose the money we have been getting. I would say God bless us, we are going to lose it, but we are losing it to aid children less fortunate. That is the whole philosophy behind this legislation. I will leave it to the lawyers to dispute whether or not we are infringing on human rights, whether women's rights are going to be subordinate to men's, or something like that. We are talking about sexual rights. I would in all humanity ask these legal brains to consider whose right is being overlooked in this terrible controversy. It is that of the child who needs this money.

● (1542)

If we are to be honest, sincere and responsible in our approach to the question of human rights and freedoms, surely the first thing we should want to do is ensure that the majority does not represent a tyranny which would overlook any hope for the poorest and weakest members of society. That is my concern at the moment. I am very much afraid that in this tangle of bureaucratese or legalese children's rights and needs are being overlooked, and we must avoid that at all costs.

What we are doing at the moment is clouding the issue. I shall refer again to the speech of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. He wonders if the government is not showing arrogance in proposing that the payments be made once a year and therefore telling mothers what to do. Here again I speak as a concerned parent. The government is not showing arrogance. It is displaying sound common sense, and I will explain why. This measure is very basic housekeeping. Some hon. members who have joined in this debate may be very good at debating some issues, but I must tell them that when they are talking about housekeeping and common sense methods, they are out of their trees.

The reason I think this proposal of a once-a-year lump sum, at least for a beginning, is based on sound common sense and good housekeeping practices is that that sum of money is going to arrive in the spring.

Mr. Epp: Just before the election.

Mrs. Appolloni: Unfortunately, children do not have the vote.

Mr. Benjamin: Theirs mothers do.

Mrs. Appolloni: If children did have the vote, I would be a shoo-in. As I was saying, this lump sum will come in the spring, election or not. Hopefully we will not have an election every year. Hopefully spring will come once a year. Spring is the time of the year to do the best shopping. It is that simple. People who have young children take advantage of spring sales to refurbish children's wardrobes for the following winter. People buy one or two sizes larger than what is required. That is common sense. It is not poetic; it is somewhat mundane, but we talking about things which are more mundane: the safety, health and improvement of conditions for children in this country. On that ground alone the government has acted not out of arrogance but with common sense.

If at a later stage some mothers decide that they would like to have their benefits prorated, that is fine. The government is not saying that cannot be done. The minister has said there will be flexibility, as there should be. I mention this just to point out that we are in grave danger of losing sight of the real issue behind this legislation. For the first time in many years we are offering to the poor of this country a beacon of hope which is really needed. Let us not blacken out that beacon with spurious charges of misuse of words and with legalities. Let us not charge that women will be offended because they will have to ask for their husband's signatures on a form.

We have been talking about the family unit. Marvellous words have been used to describe the family unit and its importance to Canadian society. As a member of a family unit, I must point out—and I think I speak for every mother in this country—that when it comes to necessities for my children and when it comes to benefits for them, I am not ashamed to ask for my husband's signature, and I do not think he thinks less of me if I do.

Some feminists are up in arms. They went to the commissioner of human rights. They stormed to his door asking what we are doing to the women of this country. I wonder who those women are.

The hon. member for Kingston and The Islands is very incensed by this measure. If she is so incensed, why does she not call a convention in Ottawa for all mothers in this country who object to this measure? I suggest that that convention would not cost her a red penny because it could be held in any telephone booth in this city.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions to ask of the minister. I do not intend to comment on the remarks made by the member who just preceded me. In reply to the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands the minister indicated that she had been in contact with a number of women's group and that they endorse the legislation in the form it is now before us. As recorded at page 758 of Hansard for yesterday, the minister said in reply to the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands, and I quote:

> There are just a few more points in order to clarify this matter. The federal Advisory Council on the Status of Women approved wholeheartedly of this reform, and made that approval known by a resolution of the complete council, as well as through numerous speeches and meetings. I have met with many women's groups all of which approve of this reform. Some of them regretted, as I do and as I have said often, the reduction in universal family allowances.

I wonder if the minister can tell us whether there was also correspondence from these groups endorsing this measure. The minister said that there was support from these groups. Was there any correspondence, and would the minister be willing to table it?

I wonder if the minister or the parliamentary secretary can indicate the amount of time which must elapse before a person can get a social insurance number; that is, the time lapse between the point at which a valid application is received and the point at which a social insurance number is received. This legislation will require persons to apply for social insurance numbers. A number of mothers will not have filed income tax returns before, and in order to file income tax returns they will need social insurance numbers. In her presentation the minister repeatedly said that there is no great difficulty in getting social insurance numbers. We have discussed this question for some time in the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. There is a long time lapse between the time a person applies and the time a person gets a social insurance number. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has often repeated that one reason for that is that there is now closer scrutiny of applications.

I want to debate that with the Minister of Employment and Immigration at some other time in order to follow that argument to its logical conclusion, but for now I will ask the parliamentary secretary how much time elapses before a person can get a social insurance number. Because it is my understanding that this takes a considerable amount of time. I think that should be clarified.

Yesterday in reply to a question the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that the lump sum payment of $200 maximum per child per year would be non-taxable. I believe I understood her correctly. I do not think that is the case, however, I would like to have clarification as to whether that lump sum payment is taxable, for example, if a mother who has a taxable income is filing an income tax return.

● (1552)

For example, if, for argument's sake, a mother is getting $5,000 and the total family income is below $18,000, and therefore she gets $200 per child, does the mother pay tax on the $200 per child, being in a taxable bracket although she is a low income earner?

The other question I would like to ask has to do with consultation with the provinces. The minister has indicated that there has been consultation with the provinces, and yet at the conference in September in Antigonish, where the various provincial welfare ministers met, a communiqué was issued complaining that they had not been sufficiently consulted on changes in family allowances. Not only did they mention family allowances but they also mentioned unemployment insurance. However, we will take that up when we have Bill C-14 before us. They requested at the time that the Minister of National Health and Welfare meet with them at the earliest possible opportunity. I should like to ask her if she has done so and, very specifically, whether she has consulted Alberta, Newfoundland and Ontario in view of the fact that all three ministers from these provinces have indicated clearly that there was no prior consultation.

I should also like to ask the minister whether she has had any clear indication from the provinces whether provincial welfare will be reduced owing to the fact that there will be additional income coming to families benefiting from provincial social assistance. I do not want a general response to that question. I want a specific response as to what the various provinces have indicated. Also, perhaps I could prevail on the minister to tell us whether she has correspondence or memoranda in that regard indicating a firm agreement or understanding between the provinces and her department. It would be beneficial to the House if we could have that information.

Ancillary to that question is the question of day care fees and whether there will be adjustments made to day care fees in view of the increased income which will be coming from this measure.

I have some other questions, Mr. Chairman, but in view of the advancing time I should like to give the minister some time to respond to my questions.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I will try to answer the three questions put to me, but before doing so I should like to assure the hon. member for York South that I listened to her remarks very carefully. I also want to say to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock who spoke with some indignation last night of the intervention of the government in the sanctity of the family unit, as he put it, that my answer to him is that that sanctity was surely lost the day public schools were created in our country. That should clarify that particular point once and for all.

The hon. member for Provencher asked several questions regarding consultation with women's groups or advisory councils. I suggest he could write to the president of the federal Advisory Council on the Status of Women, Mrs. Yvette Rousseau, to ask her for the three resolutions passed by the council with regard to this reform. I do not know whether or not I have received letters on this subject. The work I did was not for the royal commission of inquiry. I spoke and met with mothers and with women's groups because it is women's groups that have defended the interests of women in their role as mothers. I intend to continue these discussions, even if it is not within the scope of my portfolio, each time I attend public meetings in this country on the subject of this reform. My next meeting with women is to take place next week in Quebec city where several women's groups will gather to discuss this bill with me. Let me reiterate that all the women's groups I have met have backed the reform. Some have indicated disagreement—which I understand very well, of course—with the reduction in universal family allowances.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You agreed with them on that.

Miss Bégin: I myself regret very much the fact that, due to the economic situation of the country, these reductions in family allowances have had to be made.

With regard to consultation with the provinces, I have never said that there have been consultations with the provinces on the reform before it had been announced officially in August. However, when a guaranteed annual income as an objective of the Canadian government's social policies was rejected in June of 1976, the provinces instructed my predecessor to explore all possible tax related programs and mechanisms to ensure on a selective basis that whatever social programs are necessary are put into effect.

I have often publicly questioned tax exemptions and explained the advantages of tax credits, but obviously the official opposition is not aware of my public statements on the subject in the last six months. I have also identified the three most vulnerable groups in Canada, of which families with children are one.

There was no formal consultation in August but the general avenues we were exploring were well known. I have kept my provincial colleagues informed and I wrote to them formally in August—I do not know the exact date right now—asking them to pass on the full and complete benefits for children through every one of their assistance programs. As I said more than once yesterday, I have not yet received one formal commitment. I have met some of my provincial colleagues informally whenever circumstances allowed me to do so. They understand my viewpoint very well and I am confident that they will pass it on. I am meeting all my provincial colleagues later this month, I believe on November 20 and 21.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, may I just complete the answers to the points raised by the hon. member for Provencher before we move on to private members' hour.

With regard to application for a social insurance number, I have had the opportunity to have brief discussions with the Minister of Employment and Immigration under whose auspices social insurance cards are processed and he indicated clearly that the turnaround time in the employment and immigration offices in Ottawa is about five days. Sometimes there is the problem of getting data in and out by mail, but we hope there will be no such problem in the future. Assuming all things work well, he estimates that a period of two to three weeks should cover it adequately.

Let me answer briefly the other point raised by the hon. member for Provencher as to whether the $200 will be taxable. I say no, it will not. In fact, it is a tax credit, and if the individual is not otherwise subject to income tax—as is the case of many others who receive these credits—that person will receive a cheque in the amount of the credit and it will not be taxable. In the case of those who are taxed, the amount will be deducted from their income tax which would otherwise be payable.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I spoke to the parliamentary secretary about having a more detailed breakdown of certain of the savings and expenditures initially referred to by the Minister of Finance under this bill, and I thought it would be helpful if that schedule could be appended to today's Hansard.

Secondly, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could indicate whether the Minister of Finance will be with us when we resume on Monday.

● (1602)

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could go over this table between now and Monday, and if it is in order, consider tabling it at that time?

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Notice of motion No. 1, in the name of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion stands at the request of the government.

Motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion stands at the request of the government.

Office of Education

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF EDUCATION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing an office of education, to conduct research in the provinces with the co-operation of the provincial governments and also in other countries, to consider the provisions of federal financial assistance for second language training in elementary and high schools and to disseminate information with a view to improving the education of Canadian youth.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is about the time of the year that this motion comes up for debate. It has been debated in the House before. It was debated in October, 1977. It is just as well to use up some time going over the arguments which were presented for and against the motion at that time. In order to put things in perspective, perhaps I should quote from some of my remarks last year:

—such an office would be responsible for the collection, organization and dissemination of information on a Canada-wide basis, as well as for the promotion and support of an adequate program of research in education . . . Regional disparities in educational opportunity are a severe and persistent problem—

Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements have a decisive influence on the ability of the provinces to meet the cost of maintaining and improving the services provided by schools in their jurisdictions . . . The essence of learning is access to information. Agencies of the federal government have the capacity for the provision of information relevant to educational planning . . . The federal government has s specific financial obligation to education, and to establish a system of equalization grants which will enable each province to provide an adequate and comparable standard of education for every child in this country.

—the minister of education of the province of Ontario . . . was in general agreement with the need for national action.

It is interesting to note at the present time that the federal government is very involved in the field of education. One argument against the motion last year was that we were proposing action in a provincial area of responsibility.

I should like to make two comments on that. On Monday of this week at the first ministers' conference, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) corrected one of the provincial premiers who referred to education as being an exclusive provincial responsibility. He said that it was not so, that the federal government also had responsibilities in the field of education. That statement of the Prime Minister was not rebutted by any of the provincial premiers.

If the motion is read carefully, one will see, even in the narrow confines of what is generally accepted as a provincial area of responsibility, that there is no intention to intervene. Basically the motion calls for an office where information would be collated, not just right across the country in all provinces and the territories, but also from foreign countries. At the present time the federal government certainly is very much involved. A year ago I referred to the various departments which are involved: the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Department of the Secretary of State, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department of External Affairs, the Department of National Defence, and the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Depending upon how one compiles the figures, at the present time between $2 billion and $3 billion goes out of the federal treasury into the field of education.

I should like to refer to some of the remarks made by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) last year. A couple of his points are well worth repeating. He said:

—100 years ago we did not have to worry too much about the mobility of Canadians. At that time, if you grew up in one province, by and large you spent the rest of your life in that province.

—in 1977, with a very mobile population . . . Canadians are hampered severely because of the disparity of education standards in this country.

It is worth underlining that point. If we want to keep this country together, we should start to recognize some of the problems created by the present system. He went on to say the following:

We need a national perspective on education—

There is no national education policy which can direct the energies and aspirations of Canadians . . . Education systems should still be run by the provincial governments, but the federal government could establish broad national policies—

I am not suggesting that we intervene to establish any policy. I am suggesting that the federal government should set up an office which would be an office of information. It would put together information which is sometimes not even available within the provinces at the present time. For example, on the island of Montreal it is quite difficult to put together the two approaches to education provided by the two school systems, the Catholic and Protestant ones. This difficulty is compounded in that area by the fact that the sytems are also divided on the basis of language. Nevertheless, there is a recurring difficulty, aside from the restriction presently imposed by the provincial government, to easily transfer between the systems because of their different approaches to education. This is not necessarily intentional, but there is certainly a lack of information transmitted between those bodies. An independent office in the Montreal area would be an excellent idea.

We can consider a federal office as being independent. It could look at the different standards which exist across the country, and possibly the systems in other countries. The office could collate that wealth of information for the benefit of everyone in each province.

Certainly in the maritime provinces there has been a move toward the establishment of a maritime union study to bring together the maritime provinces so as to provide a higher and improved level of education there.

● (1612)

The subject of jurisdictional responsibility, which was raised last year, I find somewhat amusing. First of all, as I have tried to explain today, there is no intention in this motion to intervene in what was generally accepted as a provincial responsibility. Whether it is or is not is not the point. What I found difficult to understand was this attitude on the part of the hon. member of the official opposition who spoke last year that the motion I was proposing was in fact intervening. I found it the more amusing because the week before last I came up with a rather simplistic motion for eliminating the huge deficit, and that was to stop all our transfer payments to the provinces—transfer payments in the order of about $12 billion at the present time, approximately the amount of our deficit. No one disputes that these transfer payments are made in areas that are exclusively areas of provincial responsibility.

I was quite pleased, having made that motion, to read in a newspaper account, which I have not heard denied so assume to be correct, that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) during the course of a federal-provincial meeting of finance ministers announced yesterday that the federal government will not be proceeding with an expensive program for the block financing of community social services run by the provinces.

The reason I was pleased was not because I do not like to see federal moneys going to the provinces, but because I feel that any time federal moneys are being spent in an area which is generally acknowledged to be within provincial responsibility it should be for good reason. If we are maintaining minimum standards, if we are trying to ensure that the population can be mobile for such things as hospital and health care, then there is good reason why the federal government should use its fiscal powers to ensure either minimum standards or equality of treatment. But in the case of social services, the provinces have insisted that there be no strings. Furthermore, we were not even using this block funding for social services as a form of equalization payment.

Once again there is good reason for federal intervention in provincial fields through equalization payments to help provinces which are not as wealthy as some of our rich provinces. Under those circumstances we are making, or we were proposing to make, a per capita grant from coast to coast. I cannot see any point to providing funds for provincial governments, many of which are proportionately better off financially than the federal government. In principle, the persons who spend the money should have to raise the money.

What I found somewhat strange was that, having proposed the motion to discontinue transfer payments, by a simplistic motion, but one making a point, the following day the spokesman for Her Majesty's official opposition rose in anger proposing her own motion under Standing Order 43, suggesting that the very act of transferring moneys from the federal treasury to provincial treasuries was the linch-pin of confederation. The lady then went on to defend strongly the practice presently followed of transferring moneys from Ottawa to the provincial governments. On the same day the subject was raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), who also was apparently shocked. I will accept their point of view that we should continue these transfer payments. As I said earlier, I am not opposed to transfer payments as such; I am only suggesting that transfer payments should be for good reason.

In the case of an office to collect information on education, I am not suggesting any direct intervention in the provincial field, but I am suggesting it is an area where the federal government could have an impact on education in this country, if only to point out the differing standards, and if only to point out that because some provinces can spend two or three times as much per capita—per child—there is not equal opportunity in the educational field. Possibly this is one area, if the information was properly put together, where the provinces might agree that the federal government could intervene to ensure equal opportunity. The first thing to do is put the information together.

I hope with these few remarks I have pointed out why, in my opinion, the motion as such is certainly not intended to be an intervention in the provincial area of authority, and why at relatively small expense the approval of this motion could result in the dissemination of a lot of valuable information and ultimately mean better education for many children in those provinces where the educational system is below the average for Canada as a whole.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member who has presented this motion. He is known in this chamber for his independence of thought and for always being ready to introduce ideas that are new or that go against the stream of things as it has been in this country.

It is not my purpose this afternoon in rising to speak on the motion to oppose it in the normal sense of opposition, nor to enter very greatly into the jurisdictional question. I know that the virginity of the provinces in respect of controlling education was long ago seduced by offers of money in various fields, be they second language training or the development of facilities for education in areas like auto mechanics. That was one of the moves made some 20 or so years ago with a fair provision of federal funding. While all of these interventions, and there are others, are extra jurisdictional, they are so welcome that one finds increasingly almost every offer of money being accepted. Whether the money actually gets used for the purpose for which it is offered is one of the problems.

I realize too that the hon. member was not really speaking of large sums of money to be disseminated. That is not the role of the office, I gather, as he presents it. Whether the federal office of education could function today in Canada's somewhat shattered system of education, I do not know. At one time in British Columbia we had a system of education which was unique in that it was the most secular of all educational systems in the country. This was due to the fact that the people setting up the original system of education in the united colony decided prior to British Columbia's entry into confederation that they would establish a secular system of education.

● (1622)

Because that system was in place when British Columbia joined confederation and in the British North America Act, it had to remain, and remain it did until very recently. I suppose it still remains that way, although the provincial government is prepared to recognize independent schools and to provide public funding to them, I gather, in the next three years or so, under certain circumstances. So even in British Columbia there will be a breaching of the system and the setting up of additional systems, because I notice in the province a rush to establish independent schools. I am sure that some of these schools are being established, even though it is expensive to establish a school today, in the hope of assistance through public funds in the future. Of course, the hon. member was correct when he said there will be systems within systems.

The other thing which makes it increasingly difficult for the federal office to function is that even within the public system there are great differences. The "in" thing in education in the last years has been to individualize the instruction student by student, to introduce novel courses school by school and to have the school responsible for its curriculum in a way is not really the equivalent of the system in the United Kingdom, because we do not have anything comparable to Her Majesty's inspectors. In fact, that might be something to consider, that the federal office have a corps of educational inspectors to fan out across the country and to report, with no jurisdictional powers at all but armed simply with powers of persuasion and example.

I am a little concerned about the motion's emphasis on second language training because that is one of the areas where a good deal of money has been spent and, where even the Auditor General has expressed concern at the inability to obtain any clear indication whether that money was spent for its intended purpose. In realizing the problems that have arisen through the whole bilingual and bicultural program in this country and the way it has been administered, one would hardly recommend additional spending unless there was at the same time some great rethinking as to what have been the results of that effort and money.

I am sorry that the member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) has left, because after listening to her emotional and interesting speech a half hour ago and her defence of the lump sum payment of family allowances, one can foresee in the future where the result of a national education office would quite likely be payment of lump sums to every student of voting age quite close to the election date. One grows cynical at the way federal interventions are used and the way changes are brought about, apparently for the highest of motives. For we who are in the profession of politics, it is difficult not to grow a little cynical and impossible for us to totally disregard the timing of some of these federal initiatives.

A federal office of education will not improve the situation across the country. I agree with the hon. member's comment that there are great discrepancies in the quality of education. But I would argue that these have virtually nothing to do with money being available to the provinces, but have everything to do with the loss of nerve in the teaching profession. There has also been a loss of nerve by parents who have entrusted their children to the school system, and a willingness on their part to put up enormous sums of money for what are not necessarily the most beneficial aspects of an educational system.

It is a truth of modern education that every advance in the last 50 years has placed something between the teacher and the student, be it film strips, movies, television, overhead projectors, a semester system or a mini-course system. They are all devised to shorten the time that the teacher must spend with his or her students, in spite of the fact they have been hailed as enormous advantages. I can remember the day when it was forecast that television would remove the teacher from the classroom and would take over the entire educational system, save for the few people necessary to make the films. It has not worked out that way.

The people who have suffered most educationally in this country are those whose education was entrusted to the television box flickering away in the darkened classroom. I taught in such a school for a while, a new experience for me. I can remember that shortly after I began my teaching there, one of the great federal-provincial conferences started and was televised, just as this recent one was.

At the time I was teaching Canadian history in a school which was set up with devices to aid the presentation of televised material. All I had to do was call the co-ordinator, tell him what I needed and when I needed it, and everything would be set up for me. We darkened the room and the prime minister of the day and the provincial premiers began to move across the screen. I looked around the classroom and noticed a strange thing: student after student was folding his or her arms, placing them on the desk and putting his or her head forward. I realized that this had become a pattern in the school and that the darkening of the windows meant an hour of sleep until the lights came on again. Just because this marvel in modern technology came into the classroom did not mean that the next 60 minutes were going to be particularly educational, except in the role of restoration through sleep that had been lost the previous evening watching the late, late show. There was a double irony in the educational advance there.

I wandered up and down the aisles tapping people on the shoulder, pointing to the screen and saying, "Look, I brought this in for you to watch". There were expressions of surprise mingled with indignation that I should be so rude as to interrupt the rest period which they had already taken for granted. The students took the signal of the television starting as a time to drop off. It is the loss of nerve which is so terribly important, and it will take more than an office of federal information to restore that. What is required is the expertise to enable teachers to approach the classroom and the students with something to offer and with confidence in their role.

● (1632)

I believe the only successful educational process these days is the infectious one where the student captures interest and zest from another person, usually a teacher of ability with knowledge and scholarship. Those are some of the factors that have been missing from our classrooms.

I am sure anyone who has taught school in recent years has had the experience of sitting in a staff room when another teacher rushes in and asks if anyone has a film. One then knows that that teacher cannot face the class at that moment and wants any film to fill in. If someone in the staff room has a film on splitting the molecule, on ancient Greece or modern art, it is grabbed and immediately placed between the teacher and the student.

[Mr. Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay).]

Some years ago in the school where I was teaching I argued against the semester system, saying it was based on the philosophy of things that could not be borne. Certainly it saves money for the schoolboards. One of the purposes in reducing the school year from ten months to four and a half months was that the teacher only had to bear the class for four and half months and the class only had to bear the teacher for four and half months. It was assumed they could stand each other for that long but that ten months was too much. There has been an improvement with the introduction of the mini-course; the period that has to be borne has been reduced to about six weeks!

Therein lie some of the problems of education in today's world, Mr. Speaker, and money will not solve them. If the purpose of education is that it be a clearing house for information, more power to it.

Just the other day I was delighted to have a visit from a young lady from the Unity campaign. She brought along a kit containing beautiful material on Canada, presented in small doses, and told me that it would be available for schools—a hundred years too late.

I should like this office of education to be given the power-which I know it will never get—to demand that no student in the country be granted a secondary school leaving certificate of any kind unless he or she is able to answer two questions. First, he or she should be asked to give a simple explanation of the federal system. One of the greatest faults of our system is that people increasingly believe we live in a congressional system. They will argue that we should have elections every four years because the United States has elections every four years. They do not know that the United States have elections every two years because we do not see the mid-term elections here in Canada, only the four-year one.

I did not realize the profound confusion that exists about the federal system in the country until I campaigned in 1974. I knocked on doors and told people I was the Progressive Conservative candidate for the riding in the coming election. Many of them replied, "Good, we have to get those people out of Victoria." Of course, they did not use the word "people". That was in 1974. There was a time when I would have stood on the step and explained the difference between a federal and a provincial election. By 1974, however, I just said "Yes, I am just the fellow to do it," and went on to the next door.

The other question that should be put to students, and none should receive a secondary school certificate until they can answer it, is: What is meant in Canada by responsible government? I realize there are some dangers in that question because we have not had responsible government in this country since 1968. We lost it in that dark week when the government was defeated twice on the floor of the House and did not resign. We may have regained it in 1974 so perhaps one should say it was lost for those six years and restored in the defeat of the government in 1974, and the subsequent election. Perhaps if we could once more teach responsible government and what it means in this country, it would do wonders for unifying the country again.

One of the sad things about education in western Canada is the loss of appreciation of great names in Canadian history such as Champlain, Maisonneuve, Jacques Cartier, even La Vérendrye who broke through to the west—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak against the motion moved by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that the government should consider the advisability of establishing an office of education. I believe at this time when we are all concerned about fostering national unity that such a move would probably be regarded with deep distrust as an intrusion by the Government of Canada into an area of provincial responsibility. It could only serve to widen the gulf between the different levels of government rather than pulling us closer together, as seems to be necessary today.

I realize, as the hon. member for Vaudreuil said in his careful and balanced address, that if his motion is read carefully it does not really impinge upon provincial rights in the field of education, and that it is not his intention to do so. I am afraid the symbolism is against him, however. The creation of such an office would symbolize a federal intention to intrude in this provincial area of jurisdiction. That is my concern and that is why I cannot go along with the motion.

Historically, at the time of confederation the Government of Canada played no role in education in Canadian society and the British North America Act placed the responsibility for education with provincial governments. The Government of Canada has been and is directly responsible for education in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, in the armed forces, in the penitentiary service, and for the education of Canada's native peoples.

Throughout our nation's history there have been many occasions on which the Government of Canada has been called upon to play an active role in educational developments. For example, the Government of Canada became involved in education in response to the educational demands of industrialization in the early 1900s, to the demands of veterans returning from two world wars, and to the enormous expansion of post-secondary enrolments in the 1960s. In each case, participation by the Government of Canada was effected without usurping the authority of provincial governments and for the benefit of the country as a whole.

In 1966, Prime Minister Pearson clearly stated the position of the Government of Canada with respect to education. He said:

> Education is, under our constitution, a matter of provincial jurisdiction. The federal government does not dispute this or wish in any way to do so. At the same time, education is obviously a matter of profound importance to the economic and social growth of the country as a whole . . . the federal government accepts primary responsibility for employment and economic activity generally in the country. We recognize that provincial governments share our concern in these matters and pursue these common aims in the conduct of their own affairs.

● (1642)

That is the end of the quotation from Prime Minister Pearson. I believe that the federal government's objectives have not changed since that time. I believe that a review of the history of the involvement of the Government of Canada in education will demonstrate clearly that this involvement has occurred without usurping the constitutional rights of the provincial authorities.

Participation by the Government of Canada in education dates back at least to 1876 when, in an effort to train more Canadians to serve as army officers, the Royal Military College was established at Kingston. Another early step was a 150,000 acre land endowment to the University of Manitoba in 1885, as provision for capital expenditures and establishment of a permanent source of revenue for the university. Although these early steps were of considerable significance, federal involvement was still quite limited in the latter part of the nineteenth century. Indeed, at that time education was considered to be a family responsibility and participation was largely determined by social status and religious belief. Public responsibility extended only to elementary schooling, and secondary schools, which were usually supported by religious organizations, were reserved to train future elites.

There was additional pressure on the Government of Canada in the early 1900s. This was linked specifically to the flow of young people from farms to cities, which began to jeopardize agricultural production, and to the shortage of skilled manpower in manufacturing industries. Following requests for action from business and labour, the Government of Canada appointed the Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Vocational Education in 1910.

The work of the commission resulted in important legislation: the Agricultural Aid Act of 1912 and the Agricultural Instruction Act of 1913. The former supplied grants to provinces to develop agricultural education and techniques; the latter specifically gave assistance for training directly to the three existing veterinary colleges and indirectly, by channelling funds through the provinces, to agricultural colleges. This was the genesis of channelling federal aid for education through provincial governments.

In 1916, as a result of Canada's war involvement and a desire to improve research and development, the federal government formed the National Research Council. Initially, this was an effort to co-ordinate government research programs. During World War II, the National Research Council played a vital role in co-ordinating and conducting scientific research. The council now has an extensive program of grants and fellowships.

When the federal government established the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in 1918, provision was made for a division to be concerned with education statistics. The education division published its first statistical report in 1921, and it has expanded its services and publications considerably since then.

The economic depression of the 1930s served to identify a major problem within the secondary school system. On leaving school many students found that they had few occupational skills with which to enter the labour market. In an attempt to alleviate this problem, the federal government introduced a new program for technical education in 1937 with the Unemployment and Agricultural Assistance Act. This act, directed towards maintaining the morale and increasing the employability of young people, was negotiated in agreement with the provinces, on a cost-sharing basis, through the establishment of various occupational training projects. Eligibility was limited to those between the ages of 18 and 30. Emphasizing vocational and technical skills, this act initially provided funds of about $2.5 million during its two years, but corrected only to a limited degree the inadequacies of technical and vocational education.

The Rowell-Sirois commission was appointed in 1937 to make an assessment of the economic and financial basis of confederation; the distribution of federal and provincial powers; and federal-provincial financial relations. While its mandate did not extend to education, the commission felt that equality of educational opportunity did come within its domain. According to the commission, the concept of "education" had changed and expanded to include new dimensions since the time of the British North America Act. In view of this, the commission recommended that "the federal government should have full power to provide employment aid for those recognized as employable . . . (which would) make the training of unemployed youth a matter of even greater federal concern than at present." The commission assumed that the provinces would provide a system of courses to those Canadians requiring further training.

While the commission stated that a free hand in education was vital to provincial autonomy, it identified certain problems arising in this context. Representations were made to the commission concerning "the existence in several provinces of a sense of grievance which may well contribute to national disunity as well as to lack of harmony within the province concerned." Although the commission lamented the disparity in educational opportunity throughout the country, it made no relevant recommendations. Solutions rested on financial proposals which would place the provinces in a position to meet their responsibilities for education, if they chose to do so.

The commission also suggested that a council, analogous to the National Research Council, could be established to support research work in the social sciences in Canadian universities and elsewhere. The commission suggested, furthermore, that it might be appropriate for the federal government to establish a national library.

Growing Canadian cultural awareness and concern for a Canadian identity prompted the federal government in 1949 to appoint the Royal Commission on National Development in the Arts, Letters and Sciences. This commission, generally known as the Massey commission, after its chairman, released its report in June 1951. In the field of higher learning, the commission saw three major problems: scarcity of financial aid to the arts and humanities; the financial condition of universities; and orientation toward a small educated elite. As the commission noted, the number of veterans enrolling as students was quickly diminishing and, as a result, the federal aid that came with them was eroding. The commission believed that action was urgently required in this sector and that it was the duty of the federal government to assist in some way.

In view of the fact that the Canadian constitution did not forbid financial assistance to a citizen in order to help him to carry on studies in his chosen field, the commission did not feel that it would be improper to recommend federal aid in the form of contributions to individuals. A further recommendation was the continuation of federal support for the program of the National Research Council. As for disciplines outside of the boundaries of natural science, the commission recommended the establishment of what is today the Canada Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, with the stipulation that such councils receive an annual grant from the Government of Canada for the establishment and maintenance of an adequate number of scholarships, studentships and bursaries for post-graduate students of Canadian universities in the humanities, the social sciences and law. Further recommendations included a broadened and improved system of aid to undergraduates, and funds for exchange scholarships.

In 1963, in response to the increasing articulation of Canadian language and cultural problems, the Government of Canada appointed the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. The commission, also known as the Laurendeau-Dunton commission, received a broad mandate to inquire into and report upon the existing state of bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada and to recommend what steps should be taken to develop the Canadian confederation on the basis of an equal partnership between the two founding races. The commission was also to consider the contribution of other ethnic groups to Canadian society.

As a result of this mandate, the commission devoted much of its time to an investigation of the field of education, which is closely linked with language and culture. The commission examined the education of the official language minorities in each province, the teaching of French and English as second languages, and the image of the other cultural group which students may derive from their studies.

The commission affirmed that while education was a provincial responsibility, it was reasonable to expect that the federal government should reimburse the provinces for the extra costs involved in providing facilities for students from both language groups. In view of this, it recommended that the federal government accept in principle the responsibility for the additional costs involved in providing education in the official minority language.

● (1652)

The historical developments I have described illustrate clearly the philosophy of federal financial involvement in education. The Government of Canada has responded to changing educational demands which relate to federal responsibilities, and it has become actively involved in financial support to education while completely respecting provincial jurisdiction in this area. The Government of Canada has a responsibility for employment and social and economic development. Research has an important impact on productivity and growth, and the Government of Canada has recognized this through the creation of the various granting councils. A good central information system is critical for proper planning and policy, and the education division in Statistics Canada has responded well to the need for information.

In moving the motion, the hon. member for Vaudreuil noted that there are still inequalities in educational opportunity in Canada today. I can assure the hon. member that the Government of Canada shares his concerns. The Government of Canada as well as the ten provincial governments have repeatedly affirmed their commitment to the principle of equality of educational opportunity, and to ensuring that every individual has equal access to the public education system. The creation of an office of education as proposed by the hon. member for Vaudreuil would, at this time, Mr. Speaker, not necessarily improve the result and could adversely affect the spirit of co-operation that now exists in this area between the Government of Canada and the provinces.

I have spent a rather long time in describing some of the events which led to federal participation in education. There are many other developments that I would have liked to talk about—in particular the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act and the Canada student loans programs, but I should leave consideration of these matters to other members.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there is very little time left. There are a number of things I would have liked to say, particularly following the speaker who has just preceded me, in order to carry on, perhaps, with the kind of historical analysis he put forward. But perhaps the time has come, notwithstanding the critical time in terms of unity, the critical time in terms of seeking understanding and co-operation between provinces, for members of this House, if nothing else, to ask other some questions.

Surely, all of us as members of this House, independent members, members of parties, are aware that the school trustees across Canada have said there is a need for a larger, overseeing body in education to look after the concerns of individuals who are travelling extensively across Canada, and promote, for example, interest in Canadian studies, if one could presume to create an orbit or sphere within which an organization such as the one contemplated by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) would be able to operate. It seems it would not be unreasonable to hope there might be forthcoming from some body, be it the council of provincial ministers or a body created under the auspices of the federal government, the desire to create something called Canadian studies which would in effect be universal to all Canadians.

The difficulty we seem to face right now is that, if one goes from Newfoundland to British Columbia, frequently even the texts of the histories that are taught do not seem to relate to Canada. It may be that the reason is the absence of an all-encompassing, overseeing body that would be able to judge that there is a Canadian history, that there are Canadian studies that should be taught to students across Canada.

It is true that the federal government now spends in excess of $3 billion a year on education which is recognized by the federal government to be exclusively within the purview of the provinces. It is also true that the Auditor General has suggested that the accountability of those transfer payments leaves something to be desired. I am sure it is not fiscal accountability he is concerned about—certainly it is not fiscal responsibility which concerns me—but rather accountability in terms of whether or not the moneys being spent in the second language education programs are actually accomplishing their purpose. Are they actually accomplishing the objectives for which we, for all the right reasons, voted them to the provinces? I wonder whether the time has not come, notwithstanding the symbolism that might exist, notwithstanding the concern that might exist in the various provincial spheres with regard to an encroachment, real or anticipated, for hon. members to say there should be some type of universal scale, some method whereby we could ascertain at the federal level that the moneys we are transferring under the various programs are, in fact, accomplishing those ends which we all agree are necessary and correct.

Given the times we are experiencing right now, given the fact that we are holding constitutional conferences, the likes of which just closed this week, would it be inopportune for members in this House to suggest to the government of the day that perhaps this is something we should be asking to be placed on the federal short list, if you will, in terms of negotiating for increased federal powers? Would it be so wrong to suggest, not that the entirety of education be put into the federal sphere, but that if we are going to be asked to transfer funds, if we are going to be asked to participate in a financial way, we should be given the opportunity at the very least to set up a scale of accountability? Would that be unreasonable in terms of a question which members at the very least should be considering? This may be beyond the organization contemplated by the hon. member for Vaudreuil.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

It being five o'clock p.m. the House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 6, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROTESTED EROSION OF RAIL SERVICE IN NOVA SCOTIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that CN Express has arbitrarily proceeded with the construction of a $2 million terminal in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, thereby effectively destroying the employment opportunities of 14 express employees presently residing in Bridgewater, Liverpool, Shelburne and Yarmouth, even though the record shows that these operations provide a profit to the CNR, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the House directs the Minister of Transport, who has already approved the shutting down of the passenger service and the car-loading centre at Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, to stop the erosion of transportation services along the south shore by retaining the express terminals at the locations mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: The Standing Order requires unanimous consent for the introduction of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW FIGHTER PLANES FOR NATO FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43. The Canadian government has indicated its intention to proceed with the purchase of 125 to 150 fighter planes, at a cost of $2.3 billion, the bulk of which would be used for replacing Voodoo fighters in North America and the balance in conjunction with NATO ground forces in central Europe.

In view of the urgent necessity for cutting down and restraining unnecessary and wasteful government expenditures, and the wide-sweeping nature of proposed cuts in other government services, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House requires the Minister of National Defence and the cabinet to reconsider the proposed purchase of the fighter planes for use in North America and to postpone or cancel the orders, bearing in mind the fact that a threat against which the fighters might be employed, namely, an attack by manned bombers from the U.S.S.R., is so remote as to be virtually non-existent in the missile age, and that the proposed expenditure is therefore a colossal waste of public funds and taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSED REDUCTION IN BANK RATE TO CURB INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a question dealing with an important question of pressing necessity.

Considering that higher interest rates generally exert pressure on prices and raise the level of inflation; considering that for the sixth time since the beginning of the year the Bank of Canada has announced a one half of one per cent increase in its discount rate; considering finally that chartered banks will soon react likewise and that consumers will have to bear the burden, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to bring his authority to bear on the Bank of Canada so that it agrees to reduce its interest rate to stimulate economic growth and control inflation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

● (1412)

[English]

CANADA GAME ACT

IMPORTATION OF CARIBOU MEAT FROM NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter or urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the export of certain wild game and meat from the Northwest Territories without a permit or licence contravenes the provisions of the Canada Game Act and the Northwest Territories Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the Prime Minister determine whether or not the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has breached the law by importing caribou meat from the territories and, if so, take the necessary steps to discipline the said minister.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

REDISTRIBUTION

NORTHERN ONTARIO—CALL FOR REINTRODUCTION OF BILL C-60—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion, under Standing Order 43, for which party agreement has been obtained. In the second session of this parliament a bill was introduced by the government to rectify an anomaly created by the redistribution of northern Ontario ridings. The government bill received support on all sides of the House but time did not permit it to be finalized.

With a postponement of the anticipated general election, it might be appropriate for the House to give its consent to correcting these anomalies at this time. The effect would be to maintain the present boundaries in northern Ontario without affecting the redistribution of the other constituencies until the next redistribution takes place. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That government Bill C-60 of the second session of this parliament, 'an act to readjust the representation of Ontario in the House of Commons and to readjust the electoral districts in Ontario, be reintroduced this day at the appropriate time at introduction of bills and be proceeded with through all stages and disposed of without further debate.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

FLOODS

DEVASTATION IN PARTS OF NORTHERN B.C.—DESIGNATION AS DISASTER AREA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the unprecedented rainstorms which have dumped over 11 inches of rain in a few days and are ravishing parts of the constituency of Skeena, British Columbia, namely, the Terrace and Kitimat areas, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the federal government, in conjunction with the provincial government of British Columbia, declare this region a disaster area and take all reasonable and necessary steps to alleviate the suffering and damage being experienced by the people of the area.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion in the House at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN BANK RATE—INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of yesterday's announced bank rate increase, the fourth such increase since the April 10 budget, and this afternoon's increase in the Canada Savings Bond interest rate to 9.5 per cent, would the minister indicate when we may expect his budget, bearing in mind the fact that he has put the country into utter confusion with respect to the interest rate structure and the general position of the government today in relation to the over-all unsatisfactory condition of our economy?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be able to state to the House to morrow or the day after the date on which I will table the budget.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that the minister still is not able to give a definitive date. In the meantime, would the minister indicate to us why he felt it was warranted to raise our bank rate to the historically high 10.75 per cent, such as was done yesterday, bearing in mind that if the only excuse is the present rate in the United States, that country now has unemployment down to 5.8 per cent compared to our unemployment level of 8.6 per cent, and in view of such totally unacceptable high unemployment?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I received a recommendation from the governor of the Bank of Canada yesterday on this matter. We have discussed it, he made his recommendation and I did not disagree with it.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed again to the Minister of Finance. When the minister discussed this matter yesterday with the governor of the Bank of Canada, did the governor make it clear that the 10.75 per cent bank rate which we now have in this country means that we have the highest bank rate of any of the major industrialized western nations, certainly higher than Italy and Great Britain and higher than Germany, which is down to 3 per cent? If he made it clear, did he point out to the minister, also, that we have the highest unemployment of any of those nations?

• (1417)

If that was made clear, why did the minister not ask that the rate be kept to the historical ratio of one point above the American rate, instead of the current 1¼ points?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we discussed it on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. We looked at all the implications of that. Of course, with the balance of payments deficit in Canada, we have no choice but to make sure that the bank prime rate in Canada is higher than that in the United States. It is the lowest spread in many years. Some years ago the prime rate in Canada was four points above that in the United States; now it is only three-quarters of a point.

REASON FOR INCREASE IN CANADA SAVINGS BONDS' INTEREST RATE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is the new rate of 9.5 per cent assigned to Canada Savings Bonds today an attempt to spur the lagging sales which the government has been experiencing, caused by the public's lack of confidence in the financial policies of this government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we had to revise the Canada Savings Bonds' interest rates to make these competitive with other instruments used on the Canadian market and that is why we decided to raise them by one quarter of one per cent this morning.

[English]

HIGH INTEREST COSTS—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell the House what remedies the government envisages to overcome the effects of high interest costs on the construction industry in Canada, which is an enormous employer? Also, what will the effects of that be on the unemployment rate in Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course we are aware that the increase in interest rates is causing some problems in the economy. We had to act because we had no choice, having a balance of payments in a deficit position in Canada.

I hope this situation will not last very long. If the Canadian and American dollar stabilizes, of course, eventually—perhaps in the short run—the interest rate could go down. We do not know as yet. We hope that showing responsibility will induce more confidence. There are various fluctuations upward and downward in interest rates and some day it will go down.

Some hon. Members: Some day.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, since the effect of the interest rate increase is reflected by a shortage in the cash position of the government, can the minister say if the government will reconsider, now, the disposition of certain Crown corporations in order to give some relief to that situation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the comment of the hon. member, to the effect that it is difficult for the government to raise money, is not true at all. We have many ways to raise money.

Mr. Stevens: Which force up interest rates.

Mr. Chrétien: For example, our cash balances are very good and I am not worried on that score.

REQUEST HOUSE BE INFORMED OF REASONS FOR RAISING INTEREST RATES

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I also have some questions for the Minister of Finance arising out of the news on Sunday that the interest rate was increased to 10.75 per cent. In view of the fact that the result of this interest rate rise, inevitably, will be a restriction in growth, can the minister say when he decided to raise interest rates and if he had available to him any estimates of the effect that this rise would have on growth and industrial development? If he did, will he share those figures with the House?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a slight correction: I did not raise the interest rate; the governor of the Bank of Canada has that responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: That is the law of the land. I did not write this law.

Mr. Stevens: Did you object?

Mr. Chrétien: I have discussed that with him. I said just a minute ago that this will cause some problems. We hope this will not last forever. It is a problem we have to face because of high interest rates in the United States and a balance of payments deficit in Canada. These are facts we have to live with. Since our main competitor is the Americans, it has kind of a neutral effect in terms of our trade.

Of course, the performance of the Canadian economy on the trade side at this time is very good. I hope some of these temporary problems will cure themselves. We will take that into account in writing the budget.

● (1422)

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Finance is here, presumably he is taking responsibility for the decision and not shifting it over to the Bank of Canada.

In view of the fact that it is the lower growth rate that will have an inevitable and devastating effect on unemployment, would the minister please tell us whether he is now going to come clean with the Canadian people by indicating precisely what effect this change in interest rates will have on the unemployment rate?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the best advice I have received is to the effect that it will have a marginal effect on the performance of the Canadian economy at this time. I would like to repeat to the hon. member that the law of the land calls for responsible monetary policy to be handled by the governor of the Bank of Canada. Of course, he consulted with the federal Minister of Finance and, as I said earlier in the question period, I did not disagree.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it is our overreliance on foreign investment that has caused the problem in respect of interest rates and it is the relationship of our economy with that of the United States, so amply demonstrated by events over the past five days, that causes the interest rate to go up almost automatically, would the minister indicate whether in the months ahead he will be presenting policy to create an industrial strategy for Canada that will reduce our dependence on foreign investment?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, of course, anyone can argue that this perhaps is a problem; but there is the reality that 70 per cent of our trade is with the United States and if Canadians were to try to isolate themselves completely from the United States economy, the situation would be much worse than it is at this time.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER INCREASE IN BANK RATE WILL BENEFIT CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is direced to the Minister of Finance.

I was surprised to hear him say a moment ago, as if to wash his hands of any blame, that it was the governor of the Bank of Canada who in fact decided to increase the bank rate. That is beyond me. I always thought that the Minister of Finance was accountable before the House of Commons for the acts of the Bank of Canada. My question is therefore: in view of this decision which, according to him, is aimed at improving the situation, can the minister tell the House whether he believes he was adequately informed by his advisers that this action will stimulate construction, which is one of the major sectors of our economy?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I obviously discussed this problem at length with my advisers. I recognize that in the short term there are disadvantages to increasing the bank rate. The whole thing is due to other factors, namely the present stability of the Canadian dollar which was very much affected last week by the United States' decision to increase its interest rate; because of the numerous economic relations between Canada and the United States, this affects us directly. But this is a short-term solution, and if we take the necessary action to stabilize our economy, if world currencies stabilize, then of course the interest rates will go down.

EFFECT OF INCREASE IN BANK RATE ON GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Considering the explanation just given by the minister, would he say to the House that one of the means of stabilizing our economy and facing interest rates which could be established by our neighbours would consist in increasing by all possible means the gross national product so that we could be in better competitive position vis-à-vis other countries? If so, could he confirm before the House that the temporary action that has just been taken is likely to stimulate this increase in the gross national product?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that if we stabilize the economy, we would be more competitive on foreign markets and we would stimulate our internal trade and, in doing so, we would increase production within the country itself. That is why I suggest we should take all necessary means to make sure that both our currency and the economic position of Canada remain stable.

INQUIRY WHETHER INCREASE IN BANK RATE WILL IMPROVE CANADA'S BORROWING POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question for the minister.

Given the fact that we are now considering Bill C-7 in clause 2 of which the minister asks parliament to grant him borrowing authority for a sum of $7 billion, could the minister tell the House whether the raise announced by the Bank of Canada is likely to cause an increase in the interest rate on the borrowing the government is planning to make by means of Bill C-7?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the interest rate of the Bank of Canada obviously has an effect on the interest rate prevailing in the market and this raise in the rate of the Bank of Canada is going to cause a corresponding increase in the rate charged to the government on its borrowing.

* * *

• (1427)

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

INSTALLATION OF EMERGENCY LOCATOR TRANSMITTERS IN AIRCRAFT

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. On December 9, 1977, an aircraft crashed at Churchill Falls at about 6.50 o'clock in the evening, and eight people died.

There is now a magisterial inquiry under way in Newfoundland into that crash and the evidence shows that although the aircraft was only two miles from the runway, two people did not die from the impact of the plane with the ground but from exposure to the cold, some two hours later. The helicopter pilot on the scene has testified that if that aircraft had had an ELT, they could have been located and saved that evening.

Why did the minister permit his officials to change the findings of the Aviation Safety Bureau, as approved by the independent Accident Review Board on July 20, which say:

—the removal of the aircraft's emergency locator transmitters seriously delayed the search and rescue activity and may have caused unnecessary loss of life.

Why did the minister's officials interfere in a matter where some blame was being ascribed to his department?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, to put it more accurately, the various texts of the report to which the hon. member refers were going through final drafting before presentation to the public of the exact situation. I made it very clear to my officials that I was not very satisfied with the procedures which were adopted in this case.

We have taken steps to ensure that the version of the report approved by the Accident Review Board will be the version which the public has to deal with, and that will certainly be the case in the future. Of course, in this particular situation the various things that are being said before the inquest also emerged in the course of the earlier inquiry and are contained in the report.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the minister's officials changed that finding to state:

—on the assumptions that there had been at least one serviceable ELT on board, that it had been activated as a result of the impact or by other means, and that there was the capability at Churchill Falls of homing to the point of origin of the ELT signal, the rescue activity may have been expedited.

That is bafflegab and gobbledygook. Has the minister suspended any officials for interfering with the conclusions of this independent inquiry and the board? Do we understand from the minister, now, that in the future that board will be treated independently and that the findings approved by the Accident Review Board will not be changed by the Department of Transport?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, when listening to my last answer the hon. gentleman was still reading his earlier prepared supplementary and did not notice that I had, in fact, confirmed that there would be no changes and that that procedure had been established. I would also like to tell the hon. member that I trust that his language will not lead him into dispute with his leader, and that the use of "gobbledygook" is not necessarily grounds for firing in this government.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the minister, by his answer, has agreed that there is a real conflict of interest in the whole area of accident investigation. Will the minister now go further and say that legislation will be brought before this House of Commons to provide for a completely independent investigation procedure into accidents involving aircraft, with the minister and the DOT having no power or authority over it whatsoever?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, once again, I do not know where the hon. member has been, but that has been clearly stated and announced government policy which I announced in this House some time ago.

An hon. Member: When are we going to get it?

USE OF LITHIUM BATTERIES WITH ELT TRANSMITTERS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Transport. The two ELTs on that aircraft were removed pursuant to an order which was issued in October, 1977, as a result of the danger caused when the lithium battery used in this device corrodes.

• (1432)

I wonder if the minister has undertaken to investigate why that instruction was issued for the complete removal of the ELTs with these kinds of batteries, rather than giving a warning to the owners and operators of aircraft that if any lithium battery did corrode, there was a danger of explosion. Could the minister also indicate what the present policy is with respect to ELTs, as I understand that half of the aircraft flying now do not have the functional ELT on board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members may know, our department took a lead role in identifying the ELT as being a very useful device, and required it to be present in aircraft because of its helpfulness in locating aircraft that may be lost in circumstances where it is not clearly known where they went down.

When it became apparent that the ELT and its lithium battery itself was a source of danger, the people anylysing safety concluded that it was wrong to maintain in aircraft a real source of danger. Several of these ELTs had exploded, in addition to those which had been found corroded. As a result, rather than allow them to be the cause of an aircraft accident simply because they are useful in locating an aircraft which has been in an accident, the officials judged that it was better to have them removed while the search went on for a battery which was satisfactory. That search has been going on, and in many cases an appropriate battery has been found.

Where that has happened, the ELT may be returned to the aircrat. We have not yet been able to require them to be carried in all aircraft until the complete identification of adequate batteries is made and when we are sure that the battery itself will not be a source of accident. I would hope hon. members would recognize that avoiding an accident was a very important ground for not continuing the use of ELTs in aircraft.

Mr. Mazankowski: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I am simply asking the minister why they did not issue the order in October, 1977, which they issued in February, 1978, and which allowed for that provision. I would also ask the minister why they did not actively consult with the aviation industry. If they had, they would have found out that there was another way around this and perhaps we could have prevented this unfortunate accident.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that may be a matter of opinion, but I believe the right judgment was taken to see that the batteries which were a danger to aircraft in flight were removed. Since that was the battery which was in common use, in almost universal use, it was wise to get them out of aircraft as quickly as possible in order to avoid their causing an accident. I can imagine the uproar that would have occurred—including from the opposition—if there had been an accident as a result of such battery being in an aircraft, quite apart from the desirability of having a working ELT to identify where an aircraft is.

The fact of the matter is, at that time there was no satisfactory battery that was safe. Now, when such a satisfactory battery has been developed, obviously we have moved into the middle position where we encourage the use of the ELT with that safe battery; but we are not yet in a position to require it in every case.

* * *

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG INTERNATIONAL—FACILITIES TO ASSIST HANDICAPPED PERSONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. As the 1980 World Congress of Rehabilitation will be held in Winnipeg and many of the 4,000 to 6,000 delegates attending will be handicapped persons in wheelchairs and, as the organizers of the congress have stated, Winnipeg international airport will be an embarrassment to the city unless facilities are built to handle large numbers of handicapped people, I should like to ask the minister if his department is taking steps to provide facilities by 1980, or sooner, to handle handicapped persons.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the long-range planning for Winnipeg airport is going forward in terms of changes that are required. It may well be that those extra changes will not be complete or in place by 1980.

The hon. member knows that Transport Canada and this government have been very careful to provide facilities for handicapped people in all new facilities almost everywhere. Certainly, our airport facilities are built with that in mind. In the absence of the improved new facilities which will one day be present in Winnipeg, we will, of course, be looking at the question of what we need to do to accommodate the needs of passengers who arrive in numbers before that time.

Mr. McKenzie: A supplementary question. Mr. Speaker, the minister was not too clear about whether they had precise plans to provide facilities by 1980. I should like to ask if they are planning to improve the facilities. Actually, there are no facilities right now to handle the handicapped and the elderly at Canadian Customs. Is that area going to be looked at, and are there decisive plans to provide facilities by 1980?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in my answer I gave the hon. member the assurance that we would be looking at exactly that kind of question.

* * *

FORESTRY

RESEARCH—FUNDING OF FOREST MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Environment): it concerns the Canadian Forestry Service. Can the minister confirm that the Canadian Forestry Service is currently negotiating a $750,000 agreement with the Forest Engineering Research Institute of Canada to undertake research in forest biomass for energy? Could not some or all of this money be diverted to the Forest Management Institute which is threatened with closure and has the expertise to undertake this type of research?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is that negotiations are going on with FERIC, the Forest Engineering Research Institute of Canada. I suppose some or all of the work could have been done by officials in the Forestry Management Institute, which has a very talented group of people, but the Government of Canada has a policy of contracting out where possible to the private sector. In this particular instance, it was felt that this work could best be done through one of these contracts in the private sector.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PRIOR KNOWLEDGE OF MOST RECENT INCREASE IN BANK RATE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, listening to the Minister of Finance speak about the recent increase in interest rates resulting only in a temporary slow-up, I would remind him that we have heard the same story from successive ministers of finance for four long years.

My question is simply this: in view of the fact that apparently the government had nothing to do with the increase and it was purely a decision of the Bank of Canada, when did the Minister of Finance and other ministers of the government become aware that this last increase was going to be made? It can only have the effect of slowing development almost to a stop in production, particularly of new industries and the like. When did he find out?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said it is a decision of the governor of the Bank of Canada and that he discussed it with me and I did not disagree. It is the law of the land that was passed some years ago, and I think the right hon. member was associated with the device, that he has to consult with the minister of finance.

I said he has consulted with me. We discussed it on Friday, we discussed it on Saturday, and the final decision was made yesterday, Sunday. I was well aware of it. I just said that he made a recommendation to me that I accepted, so I was quite aware. I did not want to wash my hands of it; I just wanted to explain that it is the governor of the bank who makes the recommendation and I can disagree if I want. I did not disagree.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister became aware because the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce showed an unusual capacity for prophecy and prescience when he announced the increase in advance. I thought I ought to direct the minister's attention to that. Apparently nobody knew anything about it but the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the Minister of Finance. I would also point out to the minister that following the revelation of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, it began to look as if the Prime Minister had him on waivers.

* * *

FORESTRY

PETAWAWA STATION—REASON FOR TRANSFER OF STAFF

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Environment) and concerns his decision not to close the Petawawa forestry centre, but to reduce its staff by 20, and to transfer half the staff of the Forest Fire Research Institute and the Forest Management Institute from Ottawa to Petawawa and lay off the other 50 employees at the Ottawa centres.

● (1442)

Can the minister explain the scientific rationale behind this decision, after repeated government studies have shown that their location is more effective in Ottawa because of their access to advanced technology here?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, that is not the advice I am getting. If the hon. member has some papers which support him in this rationale, I would like to see them. My advisers have indicated to me that this move of the Forest Management Institute and the Forest Fire Research Institute will be a very good one. It will be good for those two institutes and good for Petawawa. It will, in fact, make Petawawa one of the most important forestry research centres in the country.

Mr. Symes: The minister's answer confirms that he has not been receiving the studies from the Canadian Forestry Institute which have shown exactly the opposite of what he claims, that indeed these cutbacks are irrational and are destroying the forestry service.

My supplementary question is this: the minister has announced that the government will save $3.3 million by turning over its only two wood products' research laboratories to private industry. Given the fact that any financial support given by private companies will be tax deductible and, therefore, the net saving to the government will only be $800,000 and not $3.3 million, does the minister still maintain that this minimal saving is more important than preserving the impartiality, independence and national focus that only government laboratories can provide?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, it just happens that I met at noon today with the Canadian Forestry Advisory Council, which is made up of representatives of the provincial governments, industry and universities. As they reminded me, privatization of these two particular labs was one of the recommendations made in 1973. Therefore, there is a large body of opinion which very much supports the privatization of these two particular forestry products laboratories. One of the things we will do is maintain the independence and objectivity of these labs. We will, in fact, strengthen these two labs by having participation of the private industry and, I hope, the provincial governments in them.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL MEASURES TO ASSIST EUROPEANS WISHING TO IMMIGRATE TO CANADA

Mr. Yuri Shymko (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On October 17, 1978, the minister announced that special measures would be taken involving the admission of Lebanese to Canada. Specifically, he said:

Those who are in Canada as visitors will be allowed to apply for landed-immigrant status from within the country. If they are unable to gain landed-immigrant status, they will be permitted to stay as visitors.

Recognizing the political if not strategic difficulty posed to residents of eastern and central European countries in approaching Canadian embassies, as well as recognizing the obstacles threatening their civil and human liberties when they request permission to emigrate, will the minister allow the Lebanese precedent of special measures to visitors to Canada from countries in eastern and central Europe?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on more than one occasion I have met with representatives to try to determine the best method to meet their requirements. At one point we talked about putting an office in those countries. That was discouraged. As a matter of fact, it was shot down.

Second, they talked to me about a quota system. They indicated that might not work so well either, because which quota would be used—the quota determined by the country from which they were leaving or the quota determined by Canada? On that basis, we indicated that we would bring about the sponsorship system where five individuals would have the opportunity to sponsor people who came from eastern European countries, that we would do that on a trial basis to see if it would work and accommodate the people we are hoping to accommodate in this area.

[Translation]

Mr. Shymko: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary since the minister did not answer my question.

I would like to know whether the minister is aware of the number of cases where people from central and eastern Europe came into Canada with a tourist visa, the only effective means available to them to go out of their country, and once in Canada made an application to our government for either political refugee or immigrant status, only to be forcibly deported from Canada to their country of origin. If indeed there are such cases, does the minister consider that a humanitarian action?

[English]

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I guess it depends on one's approach. There was a time when tourists were not allowed to come into Canada; they were not allowed to leave their own country. We had to decide whether to interfere in a direct way with that particular movement, as a lot of people want to come to Canada as tourists or visit families and go back to their own countries. If we set up a regime that would give easier access and destroy that particular mechanism, we might do more harm than good to those who want legitimately to come here and visit. Therefore, we have to look at these on a case by case basis.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBLE APPEAL BY CROWN AGAINST SENTENCE IMPOSED ON KEITH RICHARDS—RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROSECUTING APPEAL

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Attorney General: it relates to the conviction and sentence of Keith Richards of the rock group, Rolling Stones. Without making any representation about conviction or sentence, I wish to ask the minister about remarks attributed to him indicating that any appeal from conviction or sentence on behalf of the Crown would be in the hands of the provincial authorities. If I quote him correctly, I believe he said, "I think McMurtry can look after himself", presumably referring to the attorney general of Ontario.

Will the minister take this opportunity, to correct those reports, if they were inaccurate, and to acknowledge that any appeal on behalf of the Crown lies, as it has traditionally, solely with the Attorney General and his agents?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in any criminal case, of course, the matter lies strictly with the provincial attorney general. In this particular case, the matter was prosecuted by federal Crown prosecutors. The question of appeal will come before me in due course. I do not yet have a report on the matter.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for correcting earlier statements. I just wonder, in view of that answer, if it was a Freudian slip. The minister knows that prosecutions are carried on in large part by agents selected from a list of underprivileged lawyers supporting the Liberal party.

Provincial attorneys general have been asking for the power to prosecute for quite some time. Is there now some indication in the Department of Justice that a more favourable attitude is developing toward that request, so that provincial attorneys general may prosecute drug cases as they do all other criminal cases, as the minister quite accurately pointed out?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the broad question of prosecution by federal or provincial attorneys or agents is a matter of discussion among us. There are times when the provinces may resist the prosecution of offences falling under federal statutes. That is a matter which causes me a good deal of concern. We will be attempting to resolve it in further discussions among us. It is not, therefore, a clearcut question of prosecution by federal or provincial prosecutors, but a resolving of the whole issue of jurisdiction.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TREATY WITH U.S. TO FIGHT TRANSBOUNDARY AIR POLLUTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Just recently, the Congress in the United States passed, and President Carter of that country signed into law, a bill which in part calls on the American secretary of state to try and negotiate a treaty with Canada to attempt to fight transboundary air pollution. It has also been reported that the third annual report of the Michigan-Ontario Air Pollution Board indicates increases in certain kinds of transboundary air pollution in these areas.

Will the government immediately take the initiative to open negotiations for a treaty with the United States to enable both countries to fight transboundary air pollution more effectively, bearing in mind the relatively successful example of the treaty to fight Great Lakes' water pollution which has been in existence since 1971?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We will, of course, be pursuing the initiative which President Carter referred to recently and which we have been discussing jointly through the International Joint Commission for some time.

This gives me an opportunity to announce to the House what I know will be welcome news. It is that Secretary of State Vance will be paying an official visit on the twenty-first and twenty-second of this month. This will be one of the matters we will be discussing.

* * *

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF RAPESEED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport: it has to do with his responsibility for the Wheat Board. I ask this not only because of complaints from people in the cities, but the rural areas, the fact that rapeseed is outside the jurisdiction and control of the Wheat Board which controls quotas and sales, and the fact that farmers are anxious to get some cash flow because there is no grain moving.

● (1452)

Would the minister approach the Wheat Board with reference to rapeseed, to see that it will move? I would remind him we are not affecting rail transportation because much of this rapeseed will be moved by trucks.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Well, Mr. Speaker, rapeseed moving by truck has not caused any difficulty at all for the Canadian Wheat Board. to supervise space generally the Wheat Board, indeed, does have to look at quotas including, in relation to rapeseed, the point of view of assuming that there is adequate space and equipment available for the movement of wheat and barley as well.

Over the years, the Wheat Board has been very careful to assure that the fullest possible space was given to rapeseed, and I do not think anyone can make a case that it was anything but lenient toward its movement, as distinct from the movement of wheat and barley which is the board's major responsibility.

Mr. Woolliams: That is very good rhetoric on the part of the minister, but if he inquires of the producers—and some of them live in the cities as well as the country—he will find out that they are not able to move the only cash crop on the prairies. I am asking the minister, now, whether he will contact the Canadian Wheat Board with reference to this matter, as there is no cash flow at all to enable those producers to meet their expenses.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, rapeseed, as with wheat and barley, had an opening initial quota and under those quotas farmers were able to deliver their grain. The rapeseed quota is every bit as large, if not larger than, for instance, that for barley. So the hon. member, although he says he has some constituents in his city growing rapeseed, should not overlook the fact that we have to be fair to wheat producers and barley producers as well, even if they do not all live in Calgary.

* * *

FORESTRY

PRIVATIZATION OF RESEARCH FACILITIES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. The answers he gave the previous questions concerning Petawawa and the other institutes were not very satisfactory. He did not provide the rationale, first of all, for the closure of Petawawa and then the reversal of that decision. I would hope he would take the opportunity at some convenient time to do so.

Meanwhile, he was talking about privatization, and I was wondering whether he would give some indication to both the House and the nation of what progress he is making with the privatization of such research facilities as were at Petawawa and are going to be there in a reduced size, and also at the other institutes. Perhaps he would, at the same time, mention—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what else the hon. member was going to ask, but there has never been any talk about privatization in connection with Petawawa. We were talking about privatizing two labs, one in Vancouver and one here in Ottawa. These are forest products labs, and in answer to a question previously asked by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie I indicated I had met at noon today with the Forestry Advisory Council and they reminded me that the privatization of these two labs was one of the recommendations they had made back in 1973. So we are very much looking forward to the achievement of the privatization of these two labs.

As a matter of fact, we now have the wheels in motion as a result of the report of Dr. Solandt and we felt that with the involvement of industry and the universities and of the provincial governments we can strengthen these two labs.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That has to do with the recommendation in 1973 and the privatization in 1978. The hon. gentleman has not given any indication whatsoever that there are private interests interested in privatizing these operations. Second, the question of monitoring. In the second place, the hon. gentleman was talking about making them more effective because they were going to be very strictly supervised: how do you supervise privatized industry, and make them more effective?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, the answers to these questions will become a lot more clear as the recommendations of the committee I have set up come in to me. There are different options being considered. One is perhaps the establishment of a Crown corporation of some kind.

I would remind the hon. member that the total budget for those two labs was $7.3 million. We are cutting some $3.3 million off and privatizing that part of it. The federal government will still make a contribution of some $4 million to those labs, and as such we will have a monitoring role to make sure that as far as the objectives we have are concerned—the objectives of the forest industry and the country—they are achieved.

* * *

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG INTERNATIONAL—FACILITIES TO ASSIST HANDICAPPED PERSONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport along the lines of the question put to him earlier by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. My question is based on correspondence the minister and I have had about this matter over two or three months. I put it to him as urgently as I can.

In view of the fact that the government's long-term plans to provide for the needs of handicapped people at the Winnipeg airport do not seem to be in line for implementation until after 1980, when the World Rehabilitation Congress will take place, and in view of the fact that it has been suggested to the minister that temporary elevators be put in the Winnipeg airport from the second floor down to the first floor in the space near the baggage carousels, may I ask the minister if this suggestion is receiving active consideration?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): As I indicated in earlier answers, Mr. Speaker, we are most concerned to provide adequate facilities and we are looking at all possible solutions, which would include the one mentioned by the hon. member. As soon as I have any information on the question of how we will be able to solve the problem, I will let the House know.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister undertake, as a matter of priority, to have something done before the World Rehabilitation Congress meets in Winnipeg in 1980?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is certainly our objective.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROTESTED EROSION OF RAIL SERVICE IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice and Attorney General and Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, but my question is in relation to his responsibilities as Minister of Transport.

Since the CN Express terminals at Bridgewater and Shelburne, in Nova Scotia, have consistently shown a profit every month for the past eight months of 1978, which indicates the outstanding service provided by these facilities, as well as the dependence of the business community on CN Express, especially during the recent mail strike, would the minister indicate the reasons for phasing-out this profitable operation and, in light of their record, will he take whatever steps are necessary to retain these facilities along the south shore of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the day to day operations of Canadian National are not interfered with by me as minister. The interest we have, of course, in maintaining good service from our railways, whether it be from CN or another, privately-owned, railway, is clear. General management, however, is in the hands of management which also has objectives in lowering costs and assuring that through the use of the newest possible techniques, productivity is increased and freight rates and other charges are held as low as possible to the Canadian public.

Those are objectives which they attempt to put together in terms of management judgments, and I think that over all we have to agree that Canadian National has been doing an extremely good job of moving more and more freight over more and more distance at a cost which is very, very good as compared to rises in costs generally. That, I think, has to be the situation. Obviously, if there is any real deterioration in service which is affecting the community, we would all be concerned and representations can be made known to the management of CN.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have two procedural matters to deal with today. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has given me notice of a question of privilege, and I will hear him in one minute. In addition there is an outstanding point of order with respect to the application of Standing Order 43. I understand that there has been a consensus that that matter will be discussed as well. It has been held in abeyance pending a convenient opportunity for argument to be delivered to me on Standing Order 43.

● (1502)

I wonder if the parties involved in both these procedural questions would agree that we might, for the benefit of the House, attempt to clear away routine proceedings before the calling of these matters because I would not like to create the impression of keeping the entire House waiting for them. However, it depends on the nature of them. If I have the consent of the hon. member for Greenwood, I will deal with routine proceedings and then call his question of privilege immediately as the next item following routine proceedings.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. BREWIN—RAISING OF QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE POSTPONED

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, as Your Honour has said, I gave the Chair notice of a question of privilege which I wish to raise. It affects the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), who is not in the House today. I happened to see him this morning, and he said he could not be in the House today. I therefore ask that the matter be stood over until tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: That is perfectly proper, and the hon. member can raise his question of privilege, having given the Chair notice, at a time when he and the Solicitor General are in the House, tomorrow if possible.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MACEACHEN—OPERATION OF STANDING ORDER 43

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated, there has been agreement to proceed now with the discussion of the outstanding point of order regarding Standing Order 43.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, you will undoubtedly recall that on October 20 I raised a point of order on a motion which was attempted to be put before the House by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). I rose on that occasion because it seemed to me that that particular motion was an excellent example of the extent to which proceedings under Standing Order 43 had developed in the House of Commons. I use the word "developed" when I really mean the word "deteriorated." I believe it is very appropriate to draw attention to the concerns which we on this side of the House feel with respect to the operation of Standing Order 43.

The history of the Standing Order is straightforward. It was first introduced in 1867. It was revised in 1927 by the addition of the requirement of urgency for seeking unanimous consent to put motions without prior notice. It is interesting to recall that until 1969 the rule was used sparingly, but following that year, for some inexplicable reason—maybe not so inexplicable—there suddenly developed in Canada a flood of urgent and pressing matters.

In 1975 the procedure committee decide to revise Standing Order 43 by providing a 15-minute limit, and the proceeding was placed before the question period. That recommendation of the procedure committee was concurred in without debate or amendment. As Your Honour has indicated, the time limit introduced in 1975 introduced a self-policing feature. Requests for unanimous consent under Standing Order 43 cannot take more than 15 minutes, and presumably hon. members are encouraged by their colleagues to restrict their motions to genuinely urgent matters, and not to waste time with frivolous motions.

The theory that Standing Order 43 motions are restricted to genuinely urgent matters because of the limited time period has not proved valid. All the 15-minute period has policed is the period itself, and it has had little affect on what happens within that period. I believe that the content of the motions now proposed requires critical attention on the part of members of the House and, with due respect, of the Chair as well.

It is not my intention to limit the use of Standing Order 43. Fifteen minutes are set aside for private members to use this proceeding, and as far as I am concerned it can be used to the maximum. What I am concerned about is the misuse of Standing Order 43. When hon. members rise under Standing Order 43, they are asking the House to waive the normal requirement for 48 hours' notice to put motions before the House, on the ground that the matters involved are of pressing and urgent necessity.

The first requirement is that a matter must be so urgent and so pressing that the House will waive notice, and the motion can be put before the House with consent. I submit that the rule has not been used properly because hon. members have ignored the requirement of urgency. They have misused the rule by delivering speeches in the guise of lengthy preambles and lengthy motions. They have misused the rule by proposing frivolous motions. I can give examples.

Hon. members have misused the rule by making unsubstantiated allegations which cannot be replied to without debate, which is not normally possible and which, if it were possible, would waste valuable time of the House which could otherwise be used for public business.

Point of Order—Mr. MacEachen

The operation of the Standing Order has suffered greatly because its basic procedural purpose has been ignored regularly. Motions under this Standing Order must be of such urgency as to warrant asking the House to waive the normal notice requirement and to interrupt the normal order of business so that they can be considered. If a motion does not meet the criterion of urgency, it should be dealt with under the normal rules of the House by way of private members' motions, with 48 hours' notice. The result of the failure to observe the rule of urgency is that genuinely urgent matters which might deserve consideration are submerged or drowned in a flood of non-urgent, frivolous, and blatantly argumentative motions. This is a very troubling feature of these motions.

Let us consider, for example, the motion put by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) last Monday. He raised the question of social insurance numbers. That matter has been in the political atmosphere since 1965 at least, and it could hardly be described as an urgent and pressing matter. But within the preamble and within the motion itself there are a number of what I would regard as argumentative, unsubstantiated, and unfounded allegations.

● (1512)

The hon. member alleges that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is actively encouraging the expanded use of social insurance numbers by all levels of government, contrary to longstanding commitments by the Government of Canada. These are points of view with which we disagree. I have no objection to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar stating his views on this point—views with which I and other members of the House disagree—but when do we have an opportunity under this proceeding to say that we do not agree and that these are not the facts as we see them?

Within the motions and within the lengthy preambles all sorts of argumentation are contained, with no opportunity for hon. members on this side of the House to state the facts as they see them. I regard this as a very fundamental weakness of the present proceeding, that it is possible, under the guise of alleged urgency and pressing necessity, to put forward argument, debate and partisanship, all of which is quite acceptable provided there is an opportunity to deal with it by members of the House who disagree with the point of view that is stated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I ask hon. members to tell me where the urgent and pressing necessity is to be found in the motions put forward by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) on October 27, and by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on the same day, concerning trends in mortgages. Are these motions of such pressing necessity that the normal 48-hour notice should be waived? Obviously that is not so.

Also, take the disguised speeches that we hear from hon. members. Many motions go beyond the clear statement of urgency and they develop into detailed speeches. I ask hon. members to look at two of the most recent blatant examples, one put forward by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), in which he uses almost half a page of Hansard to put forward a carefully constructed speech under the guise of stating the urgency and pressing necessity. Or take, on the same day, the artistry—I can call it that—of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) who included, in the preamble of his motion, probably as much constitutional argumentation as, or more than, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) could put together in a 20-minute speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: All this is done in the name of urgency and pressing necessity. They are disguised speeches.

Then there are the frivolous motions, and they are very entertaining, mostly from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) who provides us with regular entertainment, his latest attempt being on October 19. I am sure he will be willing to concede that if this proceeding is a good one and if private members should have the opportunity to present motions, they should not waste that opportunity by putting forward frivolous motions.

Take the motions and the arguments which contain unfair allegations. Really I have reached, on my part, the end of my patience, and I believe I have an almost inexhaustible source of patience—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: —when it comes to suffering through the antics of members of the opposition. But my patience came to an end when the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings rose under Standing Order 43, as he said, asking:

That the government cease its present efforts to downgrade the role of the monarchy in Canada and, instead, give strong support to the Queen and the royal family as they carry out their duties with such dignity and effectiveness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings asked for consent to put a motion instructing the government to cease its efforts to downgrade the monarchy. That was a patently false allegation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: —as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has demonstrated on a number of occasions. I have no objections to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings being unfair, as he was on that occasion. What I object to is the lack of opportunity we have on this side of the House to rise and say, "That is untrue." It is very important that that be said because, if it is not said, those who are reading Hansard and those who are watching the televised proceedings of the House might conclude from the silence on this side that we were really accepting the analysis of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

There are numerous such examples, but I think that was the most blatant one when the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, under the guise of a motion of urgent and pressing necessity, asked the House to give its consent to instructing the government to cease its efforts to downgrade the monarchy. Hon. members on the other side with any fairness would realize that this is really going too far.

There are numerous examples of this tactic; some are the result of the co-ordinated effort of hon. members opposite, under the co-ordinated authorship of many of these House tactics, but some of them are the handiwork of individual members. I do not want to go into all the cases—we have them all documented—but I would say that the examples I have mentioned of ignoring the requirement for urgency, of bootlegging speeches under the guise of motions under Standing Order 43, of frivolous motions, and of unfair allegations, are just too numerous to list.

I just want to say that if this type of abuse is not curtailed, either by self-restraint on the part of members or on the part of the Chair, then the government will have to start putting its objections to these motions immediately when they are raised before the House.

I believe, quite frankly, that we on this side of the House up to the present time have been negligent in not raising points of order when these motions have been put before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: We have been negligent in not assisting the Chair in ensuring that the rules be observed because it was a tradition—we have seen the reaction of the Speaker, when it was apparent that the matter was not of urgent and pressing necessity—to stop the member in his tracks. I think we will have to go back to that unless members begin to co-operate and restrain their use of this Standing Order in the way it has been used. I hope that we can extend the self-policing feature of the proceedings to the content of the motions as well as to the 15-minute period, but I want to make clear to hon. members that we do not intend to accept the constant repetition of allegations that are unfair, and charges that are unfounded, under the guise of these motions, when we believe that legitimate points of order could be raised when they are put forward.

I would argue that every example I have put forward of these motions could be grounded in a legitimate point of order, and we have not taken advantage of that opportunity. I should like to refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 70(2), which reads as follows:

● (1522)

Any member is entitled, even bound, to bring to the Speaker's immediate notice any instance of what he considers a breach of order.

Unfortunately my conclusion is that there has been a breach of order in many of these motions, and we on this side of the House have been negligent in not bringing that forward on a more systematic basis.

I realize other hon. members will want to contribute, but I should like to deal with one aspect of this rule. Undoubtedly we will hear from hon. members opposite that my objective is to curtail the rights of private members.

Some hon. Members: That is right.

Mr. MacEachen: We will hear elaborate and indignant statements from hon. members opposite indicating that my purpose is to restrict the opportunities of private members. Let us improve the operation of Standing Order 43 so that an increasing number of private members will be able to put forward motions under this rule.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: If hon. members opposite are honest—and I admit they are—

Mr. Alexander: I am glad you added that.

Mr. MacEachen: —they will admit that the flowering of all these members at two o'clock every day, when a large number of members rise almost simultaneously to put forward motions under Standing Order 43, is not really the result of individual, spontaneous conclusions by each individual private member. It is part of a co-ordinated publicity effort.

Mr. Paproski: Prove that!

Mr. MacEachen: It is part of a co-ordinated publicity effort aimed at putting party positions on the record on a day to day basis. For this reason, the abuse or misuse of the rule is not as important to hon. members opposite as getting their message to the media, getting political points scored, and getting party positions on the record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I do not blame hon. members opposite for doing that. I blame hon. members on this side of the House for not stopping them earlier as they built their image through a systematic series of motions under Standing Order 43.

Occasionally the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) presents a motion under Standing Order 43. He does so usually to pre-empt the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party when an issue suddenly comes to the fore. That is all right too, but I should like to refer to the record of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. According to him, these are matters of urgent and pressing necessity, so important that the normal rules of notice have to be waived in order to get them before the House. During the last session, which was comprised of 151 sittings, he managed to dig up no less than 60 matters of urgent and pressing necessity.

Mr. Alexander: Was he right or wrong?

Mr. MacEachen: He presented one urgent and pressing matter for every three sittings of the House. That is really a record, and it is the result of a very prolific caucus research bureau. Undoubtedly each day there is a great bustle of activity in order to put together matters for presentation to the House which might be regarded as urgent and pressing.

Let us continue to use Standing Order 43. Let us give hon. members on both sides of the House a wider opportunity to use this device to bring important matters before the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: We are all in favour of that, but the use of lengthy preambles and motions containing arguments, false allegations, and unfounded charges, is a matter which has caused considerable trouble. In the future we intend to rise, when these abuses occur, in an attempt to enforce the rules of the House.

The rules of the House of Commons with regard to urgent and pressing necessity should be followed more carefully. If that is done it will not restrict the right of private members, but it will provide a greater number of private members with opportunities to take advantage of that critical period during the first 15 minutes of each sitting of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I gathered we were to discuss the rule of the House of Commons. My feeling is that the overriding problem of the hon. government House leader (Mr. MacEachen) is not so much the manner in which the rule has been administered, but the subject matter of some rather embarrassing issues which have been raised concerning the government's policy in many matters.

It is interesting the issue which gave rise to the explosion the other day by the government House leader was the motion by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) requesting that the government cease its present efforts to downgrade the role of the monarchy in Canada. That day I was of the impression that either the motion of the hon. minister was synthetic, on the one hand, or legitimate on the other. As my friend is never synthetic, I believe the rage of the government House leader on that occasion was genuine. What has happened is that the government has been found out concerning its feelings about the monarchy in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In fact the government is so sensitive about the matter that it included a note of faithfulness in the Speech from the Throne, unheard of heretofore. It had to listen to the representations in caucus of a number of hon. members, including the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette). As well, it had to listen to the Senators who appeared before the committee dealing with Bill C-60. They decried what they regarded as the intent of the government respecting the role of the monarchy.

Today we are not facing a mere procedural matter. We are facing an attempt by the government House leader, in his usual skilful manner, to turn the point of the spear away from the tender spot in the armour of the Liberal party, that is, the monarchy. That is what worries me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Another matter which worries me about the manner in which we are approaching this is the question of fairness. When the government House leader raised this issue in the House, he said that the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings had made a number of false statements, and that he was concerned about the fairness of debate in parliament. You will notice that he accused members of this party being the ones who have been unfair.

● (1532)

I was interested in the list of members to whom he referred. He referred to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), who is not a member of our party, and we do not want him, but he did refer to members of our party and others as being unfair. He said it was the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who was unfair. He said it was the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings who was unfair. Who else did he say was unfair? He said it was the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who was unfair, and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who is unfair and is engaged in this conspiracy, to which he referred, to operate a co-ordinated political attack.

What he forgot to mention was that it was the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), who the other day tried to imply that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was somehow the only political leader in Canada who is prepared to negotiate sovereignty association with a province, and that was unfair. I have no doubt in the world that that conspiracy was a co-ordinated attack. The two occasions on which the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier rose in the last few days were, I am sure, an attempt to embarrass.

The hon. government House leader has to be very careful when he talks about this matter of fairness. He asks why, in 1969, there was suddenly a flood of motions under Standing Order 43. I will tell you why there was a flood, sir; it was because the government changed the rules of this House of Commons in 1969, diminishing the right of private members, and had the temerity to push that change through by closure. That is what happened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What happened on that occasion was that the rights of private members were not only curtailed, they were damaged and diminished. The rights of private members on all sides of the House to ask questions were reduced. As a result, private members turned to whatever weapons they had. Certainly there are private members' motions and there are private members' bills, but there is also the procedure for motions under Standing Order 43. That is a right of a private member.

I am not suggesting or arguing at all for one moment, sir, that every member of this House has faithfully observed the rules in respect of Standing Order 43, but I am saying to my friend, the government House leader, that when he talks about this he ought to be fair. If it is improper for us to embarrass by motions under Standing Order 43, that impropriety ought to be attached to both sides, not just this side. If we cannot make political points under Standing Order 43, and if that is to be the way he wants the rule to operate, then he should stand up on his points of order, as he says he intends to do, and include reference to his own colleagues who make these points under the Standing Order.

Standing Order 43 is an order that is generally not understood in this House. It is not understood in parliament generally; it is not understood by members in the press gallery, and it is not understood by the public. At a time when parliament's rights are being diminished, and at a time when the government, never mind by its own words, but by the things it has asked this parliament to do, is slowly diminishing the right of private members to speak, I say it is very important that private members not lose this right under the Standing Order. While my dear friend says he does not want to diminish the right of the private member to speak, he shows that he does if what is said embarrasses the government or touches a sore spot. As a matter of fact, he is going to rise on a point of order, and that is what he really will be saying.

What Standing Order 43 says is this:

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the House without notice having been given—

Such a motion can be made without notice under the ordinary standing orders of the House of Commons. The important thing is that there must be, unlike Standing Order 26, a previous explanation by the mover of the motion. It can be a motion without notice, and is, therefore, unusual under our rules. The House must be asked to give its consent, and it is the duty of the Chair to ask whether that consent is given before the motion is even put at all. If the House decides that the substance of the motion is such that it ought not be put, whether the motion is embarrassing to the government or to the opposition, that is a decision of the House. It is the decision of the House whether the motion ought to be put.

There is another duty, and that is a duty of the Chair. I say, with respect, that the Chair has a role in this process. This is quite an uncomfortable responsibility, but it is a responsibility of the Chair. The Speaker's role, I respectfully suggest to you, is not to decide whether the matter addresses itself to something of urgent and pressing necessity. The Chair does not make that judgment. However, the Chair does make a judgment as to whether the member has addressed the question of urgency in the explanation he gives. If the Speaker finds that the member has not addressed the question of urgency, then I would be the first to say the motion should not be allowed. This is a responsibility of the Chair. A judgment has to be made quickly. This is an onerous responsibility, but it is one that rests with the Chair.

Once the motion has passed the scrutiny of the Chair, then the question as to whether it is to go to the House is a question left to the House to decide. It is not left to the government to decide on the basis of embarrassment, or anything else. It is not a decision left to the opposition or to any other member. In my judgment, this is the way the rule should operate.

There are matters which cannot be discussed under Standing Order 43. I think they are obvious. Something that is not within the competence of the Government of Canada is probably outside the ambit of Standing Order 43. Something that is of continuing concern may be outside the ambit of Standing Order 43. I suggest this depends on the wording of the motion, and I refer again to the use in the Standing Order of the word "may".

If the motion itself involves an expenditure of money it may well be outside the realm of Standing Order 43. I put it to you, sir, that if the form of the motion is such that it requests Her Majesty, the Queen, or her representative, for the royal recommendation in respect of the expenditure of money, that might be a different thing. If the motion engages in partisanship, is declaratory, or includes innuendo, these may well be cases where the Chair will find the member has not addressed the question of urgency in his explanation. That is the important thing.

If there is anything that would underscore what I am saying on this matter of the Chair's position in respect of Standing Order 43, it is a contrast with Standing Order 26. Standing Order 26 does in fact involve the Chair in deciding the question of urgency. The rules must be applied by the Chair. On many occasions when members have proposed motions under Standing Order 26, and have given the appropriate notice, the Chair has for various reasons ruled against them, perhaps on the ground, that there have been other occasions when such matters could be debated, or the matter involved a continuing concern and was, therefore, not urgent.

Under Standing Order 43 the rule, as I interpret it, and I say this with respect, puts an onus on the Chair to decide whether the mover of the motion has, in his explanation, addressed the question of urgency. If that has been done, then the motion must be allowed to go to the House, whether or not it is embarrassing to the government, whether or not the government has a right to reply; regardless of those things, that is the conclusion of the rule.

● (1542)

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if you are prepared to allow us to argue the question left open the other day of the priority of Standing Order 43 at the beginning of the question period over Standing Order 45(2). It is extremely important that this matter be settled because you, sir, did make some observations last week with respect to the arguments put by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. I believe you called them considerations which we would have to consider at some time. I hope that that is your position, sir, because I think there is a great danger, not only to the members of the opposition, in taking the position which you observed may be taken, of our entire practice falling down.

I presume that Standing Order 43 was not put there merely to have yes or no said to the issue raised, and the motion left at that—it is finished and, just for the record, if the answer from the House of Commons is no, there is no consent given. It is extremely important, whether or not there is consent, that we consider the rules of the House in a way that debate by members will not be diminished, the House having expressed itself.

I have some difficulty in concurring with the view that, merely because we have interposed a fixed period of time with respect to the question period—that it run from 2.15 to three o'clock—you, sir, are thereby in the position of having to wipe out the question period on the one hand, if the House says yes, or of wiping out consideration of the motion if the House says no. With respect, sir, it just is not so.

I would like to repeat in short form the arguments put forth by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. I re-read what you said on that day, sir, and I do not believe that you came to a conclusion with respect to the matter. I do not regard the position of the question period being fixed by time under our Standing Orders as any different than private members' hour being fixed by time. In this situation consideration of the matter before the House is interrupted—by a vote that may be fixed by consent, or by Standing Order of the House, or by agreement of the House—but it is no different than an interruption set by Standing Order for lunch adjournment on Friday, or the dinner adjournment on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. There is merely an interruption, and the time is subdivided, as the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar said.

There is no confusion, as there seems to be in the mind of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) with respect to a so-called collision between Standing Order 45(2) and Standing Order 43 regarding the time limit for the question period. It is quite clear that Standing Order 45(2) was not changed by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, not because they did not think of it or overlook something, but by virtue of the traditions of this House that a motion then before the House would go over to government orders. That is all it says. If the House has decided that it is going to adopt Standing Orders which say there will be a question period at a certain period of time, a private members' bill at a certain period of time, an adjournment for lunch at a certain period of time on a certain day, and if motions to concur in committee reports can go over this hurdle, then why does a motion under Standing Order 43 not have the same position? What is so magical about the question period? It, too, is set by the rules in terms of time. If all the other proceedings which happen here can take that hurdle, why is it that for some reason a motion under Standing Order 43, regarded by some as the lowest form of parliamentary debate, cannot take that hurdle as well?

If Standing Order 43 is not the same as a concurrence motion, in terms of an interruption, then I think there is a diminishment of the rights of this House and, indeed, an encouragement by the government to deny the rights of this House to debate motions under Standing Order 43. The Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization did not forget the interruption during the debate, the merely considered Standing Order 45(2) and its traditional application in this House. This is a practice which has gone on over the years with respect to the interpretation of Standing Order 45(2), and we cannot suddenly change that interpretation for the convenience of the government.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not see that Standing Order 43 running into the question period is any different than a motion to concur running into a dinner adjournment, which is the time set by the rules. As I have said, we have managed to leap that hurdle on the concurrence motion, and I cannot understand why we cannot do the same with respect to motions under Standing Order 43.

If you use my interpretation, sir, the duty of the Chair is to decide, first of all, whether or not the hon. member who has raised the motion has addressed the question of urgency. Once the Chair is satisfied that the member's motion is acceptable—a motion on a matter which may be affecting the hon. member's constituency, the country, or a whole host of areas within the national life of the country—it is up to this House then to decide whether the substance of the motion is such that we can in fact interrupt the proceedings of the House, to use the words of my friend, the government House leader.

Once the House has decided that the matter is of sufficient urgency to interrupt proceedings, then there should be no interpretation of the rule with respect to time, since there are so many other areas of the rules where there are time interruptions. Rather than using time as an impediment to debate, we ought to be using time and the consideration of rules with respect to time as a way of facilitating debate with respect to the matter. There is a host of interruptions which could occur. Black Rod could come in and interrupt, and do we then cease dealing with the matter before the House? There are the prearranged divisions, the private members' hour, the dinner hour, a whole host of areas.

• (1552)

If we have managed to interpret the rules of the House of Commons to get ourselves over that hurdle of interruption with respect to all the other proceedings, I do not see how Standing Order 45(2) and its so-called collision with Standing Order 43 somehow becomes a hurdle over which we cannot leap and that therefore when a matter has been found to be of urgency that this House cannot debate it—or can debate it but the price is loss of the privilege of question period and other penalties. I do not think that was ever the intention of the rules.

What disturbs me is what Your Honour said on October 26, 1978, as reported in Hansard at page 489, at the bottom of the second column, as follows:

It seems to me that we had two choices at 2.15. One of them was, by virtue of having put a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43, to set aside the question period at 2.15 because the debate was under way.

I respectfully say that was an observation, not a ruling, and I respectfully suggest that observation was not correct. I say that with great respect, because that is not the choice.

Your Honour continued:

Obviously the danger with that is that if we set aside the Question Period and the debate carries on—for example, until three o'clock or later—we would need the consent of the House to restore the question period.

I do not think you need the consent of the House. What you have now are rules and Standing Orders which would restore the question period. And then Your Honour said:

So, the risk is that if we continue with the debate at 2.15 we wipe out the question period—

I suggest not, Mr. Speaker, I do not think parliament is faced with that Hobson's choice. I say it would be appropriate, with respect, that in any interpretation of the Standing Order the 2.15 question period set by time, the private members' hour set by time, the dinner adjournment set by time, or the luncheon adjournment set by time, is no different than the question period set by time.

Since you left the question open, I feel it is important because it relates to the ability of this House to debate this motion. The question is what we do about it. There was some suggestion that we might go to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to discuss this, but I do not think that is necessary. All of us have duties in this House: the Chair has onerous duties and difficult responsibilities, my friends on the other side have duties and we have them as well. All of us have the duty to attempt to frame our motions as best we can, whether from this or the other side of the House of Commons; that they are reasonable having regard to the urgent aspect of them, the representations that are made, the lack of innuendo and a host of other things—these are duties on all of us and we have the standing orders to guide us in the operation of the House of Commons.

If we are to achieve the sense of fairness and the sense of justice that the minister has indicated he wants, I think that capability is within the standing orders and their enforcement. If the matter is urgent and the House itself has ruled the matter urgent, then it should be debated if the House chooses to debate it. That is where the fairness is. The unfairness my hon. friend complains of is in the fact that he did not have an opportunity to answer. The reason he did not have an opportunity to answer is that when the question was put to him in a particular case, he said no.

Mr. MacEachen: I never said no.

Mr. Speaker: With respect, on that particular point the hon. member is indicating that the yes or no must be made before the hon. member has an opportunity to answer. That is the fundamental difference.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am saying that once you have decided the mover of the question has addressed the question of urgency and that therefore the matter should be put to the House for consent, at that point there lies in the hands of every member of the House of Commons the responsibility and/or liability to say no to that. If the word is no, the issue ends there, but if the answer is yes on any matter, then the debate begins. It is in that debate that the issue can be discussed. Of course, if the Standing Order 43 motion is embarrassing, is an improper representation, if it contains innuendo, if it is a speech—all of those things are out of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They are out of order from both sides, so my friends opposite should not cheer too loudly. They are out of order, and there is a responsibility on the Chair to make the judgment on whether the question of urgency was addressed in the first place. I think there is that power in the rules.

I started off by saying there was a sense of responsibility on the Chair with respect to that first decision. It is the responsibility of the Chair. I hope, sir, that you will consider that. I submit that with the respect I have tried to impart in bringing that point of view to your attention. I hope you will also consider very carefully the observations you made in answer to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. My respectful submission is that if we have to make the Hobson's choice I spoke of, then the House of Commons itself, not just the government and not just the Leader of the Opposition, could be in great danger of either falling back on its motions under Standing Order 43, which is diminishing its rights, on the one hand, or losing the question period on the other. I suggest we should no more lose the question period than there should be more importance given to one break over another or any subdivision in the parliamentary day. Those are the submissions I have to make with respect to this very important matter.

Finally, sir, I want to say that we look to you as the protector of the rights of private members in this House. Through a variety of circumstances over the years, which the Chair has not been part of, the rights of private members have gradually been diminished. I hope, sir, that you will consider the question with respect to Standing Order 43 motions, the propriety of them coming forward, and the question as to the time limits and how they apply to impede the business of the House as consented to by the House. I hope you will consider very carefully the judgments you will make which may and could remove one of the rights of private members, that is, to have a motion accepted and debated in the ordinary course, and also the right to question the government during question period.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suppose we need to have this debate every once in a while, but I am not sure it is getting us anywhere today. If the government House leader (Mr. MacEachen) feels the debate is taking too much time, he has only himself to blame. If he had not raised the point of order and asked for a day's debate, we would be on government business now. I was a little sorry he took after the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) for bringing in frivolous motions, not just because my leader is not here today. He will be back shortly and can speak for himself. I think some of the frivolous motions brought under Standing Order 43 have made the point a lot better than some of the serious ones. If the government House leader is suggesting that we have to curtail our sense of humour around here, then I should like to have a little talk with him. I think a little more sense of humour might do us a great deal of good.

● (1602)

As for this debate today, there are one or two things I want to say first to clear the air. The government House leader several times talked about the 15-minute period. He did not say it just once. Five or six times he talked about that crucial, precious 15-minute period from two o'clock to 2.15. I remind him it is a seven-minute period, eight minutes at best.

The rule book states that motions can be made under Standing Order 43 starting not more than two minutes after the reading of prayers. It takes a while for the bell to ring in order to get a quorum. On many days the Speaker has to sit and wait until some ministers arrive so that he can say prayers. After all, who needs the prayers more than the ministers?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The bell then rings again for more members to come in. We sit around. Finally, at 2.07 or 2.08 we get to motions under Standing Order 43.

Mr. MacEachen: I accept your point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister says he accepts the point. Why then did he go out of his way to make out that somehow or other we had this 15-minute period, when he knows it is only seven or eight minutes?

Something else I want to say about the whole business of Standing Order 43 is that no parliamentary body can operate without a rule like Standing Order 43. I notice the government House leader has not proposed that it be abolished. As he said in his statement, it has been there under another number since the rules first started in 1867. That probably means they had it in the Assembly of the Province of Canada from 1841 to 1867, and probably had it in Lower Canada before that.

An hon. Member: Were you there then?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I will have to check. All that Standing Order 43 says is that with all of the strict and tight rules we have as to how things can get before this House, anybody with half an ounce of common sense knows there are times when something urgent will come up. If the House was tied by its strict rules and could not deal with anything new, we would be in a bad way. Therefore, we have the rule set out in Standing Order 43 which, as the minister says, has been there since the year 1.

I recognize right away that when it was put there it was for that purpose to which I have just alluded, namely, so that the House is not tied by its own rules and prevented from dealing with something that is urgent. It was not put there as a device to give private members an extra opportunity to do something on the floor of the House. Incidentally, that has actually developed over the years. The minister said something to that effect, and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) spelled it out at some length.

My friends across the way were teasing me a moment ago as to how long I have been here. I can say that in the first ten or 15 years I was here there was almost never a motion under Standing Order 43. If the government had something urgent, it just said so and got it by unanimous consent. It was not until a number of years in my experience here that members started putting motions under Standing Order 43. Why did they do it?

Limitations began to be imposed on the question period. Other things were cut out such as grievance procedures. Members reached the point where they were chafing at the bit to make their points. They could not get into the question period. They could not get their bills or resolutions discussed. Therefore we have Standing Order 43, and members use it precisely for that purpose. Frankly, I do not see anything wrong with that.

I do not see why the President of Privy Council thinks he is saying something high and mighty when he says these are part of a co-ordinated publicity effort. Members are using motions under Standing Order 43 to make their points. I do not know what the other parties do, but I know that my colleagues draft their own Standing Order 43 motions, and so do I. I was a little bit offended that when the minister quoted some examples today he did not quote any of mine. Are mine so perfect that he cannot find anything wrong with them?

Mr. MacEachen: They are pretty good.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe he should have quoted them and given them as examples. That would have been better than this tirade against the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). At any rate, what are we doing here as members? We are here to express our points of view, to make our views known, to say the things we think ought to be said on behalf of the Canadian people.

If there are not opportunities to say those things in speeches because the debates are limited to certain subjects, and there are not opportunities to say them on supply motions because that is something else that was cut out, members grab these opportunities. It takes much less time than some of the other things we used to do. I think it is an improvement.

I remember the old days when we did not have the practice of using motions under Standing Order 43 and we did not have late shows. Members would make a note matters they wanted to raise. They would wait for the appropriate estimate in committee of supply, or wait for a grievance procedure at the end of the debate on a motion that Mr. Speaker leave the Chair for the House to go into committee of supply. We lost those procedures. They were taken away.

In addition to the question period, private members' bills, and private members' resolutions, there are two ways for members to make points and make them quickly. One is by the use of Standing Order 43. The other is by transferring their questions to the late show.

I do not see what all the fuss is about. These things are good. I admit they get abused. Sometimes speeches are made in the late show period that are speeches rather than questions. At least the time limit there of seven minutes polices the proposition.

My experience is that the Chair seems to like the fact there can be a late show. He knows that if he sits a member down as far as his questions are concerned, that member can apply to have them put on the late show. Good use is made of that.

At times there are abuses of Standing Order 43. When my colleagues bring their Standing Order 43 motions to me to look at them, the usual practice is for me to strike out a paragraph because they are too long. My main reason for doing that is so that somebody else will have an opportunity to get one presented.

There are abuses, but let us not have that interpreted as though it is something contrary to the whole spirit of parliament or that it is something wrong because we have Standing Order 43. That order was not built that way in 1867, but it has developed that way. It is an opportunity for members to make points. They hope to get some publicity, to be noticed by the press, the media, or by people watching television.

We are here to make our points of view known. This is not a one party situation where the party that won the election runs the show for the next four, five, or six years, or however long this government plans to stay. This is a place where the importance of the opposition and the importance of private members are very great. We express that importance not just by sitting here and voting on matters that come before us, but by getting our ideas across.

I am glad we have the question period. I am sorry more members cannot get in. I admit if we lengthened it to an hour or an hour and a half, it would become dull. I am glad we have the late show for members to make their points, and I am glad we have Standing Order 43.

If anything comes of this discussion, I hope it will be that members shorten the preambles to their motions under the Standing Order 43. I suppose the reason the minister did not quote some of my motions is because I make them without a preamble. I believe you can say what you want in the motion.

I admit sometimes there is a bit of abuse. However, I do not know why the minister adopted the cry-baby attitude that they cannot answer. They can say no.

Mr. MacEachen: There are ten paragraphs of false allegations on the record. "No" does not answer that. That is the point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If there is a long paragraph containing certain things with which the minister agrees and one thing with which he does not agree, he can say no to the whole works.

Mr. MacEachen: That is not debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister says that is not debate. If the minister wants debate, he can say yes and we will have a debate on the matter.

Mr. MacEachen: One of your men may say no, as one of the opposition members said today. I have been living in the House. I know what is going on here.

• (1612)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is all right, Mr. Speaker, I still have the floor. This debate may amount to something yet. But it strikes me the whole business of raising these motions under Standing Order 43 is not bad, not against the tone and purpose of parliament, and I was glad at least that the government House leader did not propose that the order be abolished. As a matter of fact, he did not propose any amendment. He suggested more self-policing of it. Mind you, I think he went a little far when he said he was going to get up on points of order. Mr. Speaker might have something to say about that. After all, Your Honour simply listens to the motion before putting the question whether or not there is unanimous consent. Once in a while, as the minister did the other day, an hon. member raises a point of order and so we have a discussion such as we are having today.

If there is any value to this discussion it is that members generally will look more carefully at the motions they seek to present. But I urge strongly that no attempt be made to cut out altogether the presentations of these motions. We did the right thing when we changed the rules, when we set aside a special time for the presentation of motions under S.O. 43. The person who benefits most from that decision is Mr. Speaker, because when motions under Standing Order 43 were made after the question period under motions, they could go on all afternoon—Mr. Speaker found it difficult to cut them off, yet he had to cut them off somewhere. Now that they are dealt with in a prescribed period from about 2.07 to 2.15 p.m., Mr. Speaker knows that even though some of them are abusive of the order and not quite in line, come 2.15 p.m. it will all be over. So I have to question where this discussion is taking us. I wondered if it was taking us anywhere, but maybe it will help us do our own policing of the motions we make under the standing order.

Now I turn to the subject upon which the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton spent a fair amount of time. I agree with him that, this is an important issue but I do not think the simplistic solution he put forward will solve it. He argued for quite a while about the fact that we have things that run into the dinner hour and we hurdle the dinner hour. We may hurdle it as far as debate is concerned but, we do not cancel the dinner hour. When we reach the point at which the book says that at six o'clock we take dinner, we do not cancel it because there is something interesting or vital under discussion. We adjourn. Similarly, when we reach five o'clock and the rules say we should go on to private members' business, we do it no matter what is before us. How he can turn around from that position and say that when we reach the point in the book where it says that at 2.15 we go to question period we do not need to follow the book, well, that is a kind of lawyers' logic that I do not quite understand!

An hon. Member: You don't like lawyers!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Forgive us if in our party, we are impressed by the fact that we have doubled the number of lawyers we have in our caucus.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have to defend ourselves against them!

Mr. Brewin: Your arithmetic is wrong.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My legal friend from Greenwood says my arithmetic is wrong. We had two until a couple of weeks ago—the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). Now we have added the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour), and the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae). That makes four instead of just two.

Mrs. Holt: That is 25 per cent lawyers. Too many! You are in trouble!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Another voice being heard from! My lawyer friends got me off the track for a moment. But let me get back to it.

I think the statement made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, which got him off the track, was his attempt to say that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization in 1968 did not overlook the matter. He was not on that committee. I was. I am one of those who must make the confession. As a member of the committee I say we did not solve the problem. We made provision for motions under Standing Order 43 but we did not consider what the effect of what 45(2) would be. So we got ourselves into a tight situation. Now I thoroughly agree with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and my friend from Timiskaming may have something to say on this and he will press the point very strongly. But once the House has decided, by consent, that a matter is to be debated, then the House ought to debate it. But just saying that the House ought to debate it does not solve the problem of what we do at 2.15. I think that's the one thing about Standing Order 43 on which the procedure committee should meet and do something. It should not change the rule. Let's not try to build the policing into the rule. But I do think we have to make a provision as to when a debate should take place if there has been consent and the motion is put.

There was an example just the other day. My hon. friend from Sault Ste. Marie presented a motion on Arts Day and got consent for the motion to be put. The Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) got up and spoke until 2.15 p.m., and that ended debate for that day. It has now been transferred to government orders. It sits on the order paper, I think as No. 1 under government orders. Now how long is it going to sit there? It sits there until the government calls it. It might have been better to have called that today instead of this debate. It will sit there for the rest of this session.

I think we should solve this. We solved the problem of what to do about debate on motions to adopt a committee's report. That grew out of the flag debate back in 1964. But if a debate is allowed today, it goes under government orders and the government has the right to call it or not. But these private members' motions under Standing Order 43 which have been interrupted at 2.15 p.m. because the book says we have to go to question period, ought they to be at the mercy of the government House leader as to when they are called?

As I have said already—and perhaps I should wind this up now—I do not want to see the procedure committee trying to recast rule 43. I do not want us to try to write the policing mechanism into the rule. But I do think we should have a rule somewhere that specifies when the debate is to take place on a motion under Standing Order 43, once it has been allowed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, when listening to the minister presenting his argument at the outset of this debate I told myself that a government that fears criticism is a guilty government. The government House leader nearly lost his temper with the opposition for criticizing the government's administration through motions introduced under Standing Order 43 and using such motions to criticize the government. He is complaining about the government not having an opportunity then to answer those criticisms. Mr. Speaker, I think that if the government House leader wants to abolish Standing Order 43 because of the embarrassments it might cause the government, then maybe he should also consider abolishing the question period because it too tends to blame the government's administration and call for amendments to legislation and corrections in the government's administration.

Mr. Speaker, in his argumentation the government House leader blamed certain members of the opposition, particularly the leader of the New Democratic Party, for using Standing Order 43 to criticize the government's administrative failure. I think that at one time or another all opposition parties in this House have used that standing order to criticize the government. If we use Standing Order 43 to deal with matters of urgent necessity, it is because there is an urgency in a lot of areas of the government's administration because day in and day out we are able to see the government's administrative failure. We were able to see it right from the opening of this session because we had to deal with emergency legislation to provide for the resumption of postal services, emergency legislation to provide for the continuation of shipping, emergency legislation to provide the government with borrowing authority—three major pieces of emergency legislation we had to deal with at the start of the session. This illustrates quite well the situation the government's administration is in, and I think the opposition has the right to use all means available to show first to the government that it knows all the bad aspects of its administration and also use that standing order to make public opinion aware of the ill effects of that administration.

I listened attentively to the solution that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) proposed. I agree with him only in part because if we accepted what he proposed several times in his speech I think that could lead to situations contrary to what Standing Order 43 is meant to be used for. As far as I am concerned, if when a motion is introduced under Standing Order 43 and that motion is accepted—that happens from time to time when you put it to a vote—I believe the mover himself does not always want to have his motion accepted, but rather discussed.

For instance, there have been motions to congratulate the Montreal Canadiens on winning the Stanley Cup. When such motions are introduced—and I have seen this—they are accepted without debate. The motion is accepted, but without debate. On the other hand, when there is a wish to debate a motion which has been accepted, as on October 26 last, I believe you could choose to postpone the debate either until after question period or until some more appropriate time on the same day. I believe this would be satisfactory for all the parties and would not deprive the opposition of its right to make the criticisms that it considers appropriate about the administration of this government.

Mr. Speaker, I can recall that until a few years ago certain ministers would occasionally come to us in the opposition, mostly, I think, in the Social Credit Party of Canada—in any case this happened a few times—and suggest that we ask such and such a question. This no longer occurs, probably because of the televising of the debates of the House. Such messages are probably made on the side of the government. I believe that hon. members on the side of the government have the same privilege as we do in the opposition. They can also move motions under Standing Order 43, and occasionally they do so. However, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be somewhat embarrassing for a government member to introduce motions concerning urgent matters because the government or some department omitted to apply the law as they should have done.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we should not forgo this practice of using the provisions of Standing Order 43 to attempt to debate urgent matters. Another one of our rules, Standing Order 26, also contains provisions to this effect, but I believe that since the implementation of Standing Order 43, which enables members to introduce a motion at the beginning of each sitting, we make much less use of Standing Order 26 than before. Mr. Speaker, I believe that on one side or the other, we are not losing anything and we may be gaining something. I think we should continue to use the provisions of Standing Order 43 and I believe that Your Honour should decide, as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton requested, whether a matter is urgent or not, and whether it should be debated. I believe that this could encourage all the members who want to make use of Standing Order 43 to better prepare and better use the motions that they want to move.

● (1622)

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have some sympathy for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he talks about his years in this House. I am nowhere near being in his class, but I am in my twelfth year as a backbencher, and this rule has concerned me.

In introducing the debate this afternoon the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) said that there has been a concerted effort to get publicity. I will go a little further and say that the real reason we are having this debate this afternoon is that television cameras are in the House of Commons.

This rule has been abused. It was interesting to me that my friend, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), did not attempt to deal at length with that point. He admitted that the rule had been abused, but he seemed to glory in the fact that hon. members opposite have managed to put accusations regarding the monarchy on the record. He said that these were sensitive government matters and that he was proud that under Standing Order 43 it was possible to embarrass the government in this way.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was not very happy when my colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), pointed out that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) did not exactly have a mandate to negotiate the separation of Canada, even if a plebiscite showed that 60 per cent were in favour. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton felt that that was an abuse, and possibly it was, but surely the point of this point of order today is to call attention to some bad practices which have crept into our procedures. They will have to be corrected.

The abuses take four basic forms. It has ably been pointed out that preambles to motions under Standing Order 43 are long, and that the matters raised are not necessarily urgent. They are often frivolous. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says that frivolous resolutions are often better than serious ones. If that is the case, that is a poor reflection on this parliament. I do not think the hon. member presents frivolous resolutions any more than I do, but surely the frivolous resolutions which have been presented have not been the high point of humour in this House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Francis: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the hon. member recall the time I had the privilege to move a motion, after Mr. Benson said that people could live on $30 a week, suggesting that he do so for six months and report back to the House on the success thereof? Did not the humour make the point?

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the kind of thing with which we have to deal now.

Allegations put on the record without the opportunity for anyone on the government side to reply, represent the fourth line of abuse. We have seen a number of examples of this. I have one in front of me now. On December 8 the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton moved a resolution which would have been acceptable—

Mr. Alexander: What year?

Mr. Francis: December 8, 1977. The resolution is recorded at page 1671 of Hansard. The wording of the resolution was as follows:

That this House strongly condemns the government of the Soviet Union for violating the provisions of the Helsinki Accord in its imprisonment of Anatoly Shcharansky.

So far so good. Had the motion stopped there, I am sure, that there would have been unanimous support, but then the hon. member added the following:

This House further condemns the Prime Minister and his government for failing to show more concern for the rights of individuals in countries like the Soviet Union.

The hon. member knew that there would not have been the remotest possibility that hon. members on this side would accept that totally false allegation. If the hon. member had really wanted to have unanimous support for his resolution, he would not have incorporated that wording in the resolution. If his objective was to get an expression of sympathy for Shcharansky, he would have gone about it in a different way. I submit his objective was the TV camera, and I think he did it very effectively for his purpose on that day. But it causes a problem, Mr. Speaker. The problem relates to the response on the government side. The government side has the option of saying no.

● (1632)

I listened with great attention to my friend, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, and I kept asking myself: is he asking for a change in the rule, for the abolition of the requirement for unanimous consent? I really do not know. Having listened to his speech, I think he seemed to be arguing that Mr. Speaker should determine whether the motion was urgent. If the motion were deemed, in your opinion, sir, to be urgent, he seemed to say that it should be allowed to be put. But he carefully skirted the question of unanimous consent.

On another occasion his leader in the House argued that the procedure used by the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard) in rejecting motions on behalf of the government by refusing unanimous consent, was an irregularity, was something totally wrong. He implied that the hon. member for Drummond did this automatically. Well, there are motions that have been accepted by the House, and that is the proof that it is not done automatically. There are a number of them and I have the list here, which I will not read. My friend, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), had one not long ago which was unanimously accepted.

Surely the point which the hon. member has to face is whether or not he is asking for a change in the rule with regard to unanimous consent.

Then I think we must look at the consequences. If members on the other side or on this side have the right to put a motion which is deemed to be urgent and which meets the criteria set out in Standing Order 43 so as to have it debated, then what follows? I think that when totally false allegations are placed on the record, it is a temptation for members on this side to say yes and then rise to put the record straight. That will mean there will not be another motion under Standing Order 43 put that day. Maybe we should adopt that as a tactic; it might change the procedures with regard to members on the other side if the first such motion with a totally false allegation were accepted, if we debated it and attempted to answer the allegation, because then there would be no more motions under Standing Order 43 until 2.15. Then we would have the whole problem of the interpretation of the rule.

I submit that the rule is abundantly clear. You, sir, have interpreted it correctly and fairly, in my opinion. Standing Order 45(2) says that such a motion should be placed under government orders. That is what happened the last time the motion was put and the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) spoke until 2.15.

If hon. members on the other side want to change those rules, they should put a motion for a referral to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. If they want to change Standing Order 45(2) to say that the debate be not interrupted at 2.15 but that it be continued at some other time, then we must face the problem which my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, that is, when should the debate be resumed? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was much more explicit on March 8 of this year in the House, and he put it so nicely that I could not possibly choose better words. He said:

The difficulty, as I see it, is this: the government, as has been said today—and I agree—must have arrangements by which it can put its business before the House. There has to be a schedule which cannot be upset or interrupted in an unplanned way. I support that position. But it is also true that private members of the House ought to have an opportunity to present their ideas.

He went on to say:

It seems to me if we are to solve the difficulty of getting the proper balance between the government's rights and the rights of opposition members we shall have to find a means to get the government business through a little faster.

I could not agree more with the very concise, clear, and logical statement of the dilemma. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said we must find the time for the debate. When? What time is available? Let us just look at the opportunities that private members have. They were well recited by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but he missed one or two. He referred to private members' motions, private members' bills, question period, and the adjournment debate. There is also the opportunity under Standing Order 26 which calls for notice; there are supply days and allotted days.

All I can say is that in the time that I have been in this place—I was first elected in 1963—in my opinion there has been a substantial expansion of the opportunities for private members of the House, not diminution. Our practices have changed in some ways, but under Standing Order 43 we have today a very good, frequent and, I submit, for the purposes of the members concerned, effective use of Standing Order 43. However, there is an abuse of the Standing Order which has crept in whereby false allegations are being put on the record, with no opportunity for refuting them. That is a matter which gives the government House leader (Mr. MacEachen) concern and which, I submit, gives all of us concern.

The suggestion that this matter should be decided by yourself, sir, that we must develop some mechanism by which we could assist you in the proper interpretation of the rules and procedures of this place, is not really one which adds a great deal at this time. We have to recognize what is taking place. I for one have no objection whatsoever to a referral to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization where we can thrash out the question of the application of Standing Order 45(2), which seems to me to be so clear that there can be no dispute about it, but since some hon. members have raised the question, so the order could be reinforced. I believe your observations, Mr. Speaker, are very appropriate with regard to this.

When we come to the question of the development of unsubstantiated allegations and debating points in prime televison time, made for the purpose of scoring in a situation in which there can be no reply, I submit there has to be a mechanism by which an effective reply to a totally false accusation can be brought forward quickly and appropriately. It is not the same thing to throw it on the late show and have a reply at 10.30 in the evening. I submit we must recognize that where there is this kind of false allegation, someone on the government side must have the right to answer it then and there. That means that a point of order, or something like it, would have to be recognized during the period of motions under Standing Order 43. Hon. members on the other side would not like that.

Mr. Peters: Sure we would. What is good for the goose is good for the gander.

Mr. Francis: The fact remains that false allegations are put on the record in a way in which they cannot be answered. The fact remains that parliament, in consenting to, shall we say, glorifying it as a kind of abuse, is reflecting on itself.

I believe that the rules of the House in respect of Standing Order 45(2) are clear. I believe that the opportunities for private members to participate and make their points have been developed in many areas which are being increasingly recognized. I submit, sir, that there is an abuse under Standing Order 43 with regard to unsubstantiated allegations which, in my opinion, should be examined by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Point of Order—Mr. MacEachen

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was interested to hear the remarks of the last speaker and his argument, along the lines mentioned by the government House leader (Mr. MacEachen) that some of the points which are being raised in motions under Standing Order 43 demand a reply. He suggested that we should agree to the proposal of the House leader that he should be able to rise on a point of order, but that this would make opposition members angry. I am sure we would then return to a situation, which lasted for years where a member was able to rise as soon as a point which he had in question was raised. He could rise on a point of privilege, and away it went at any time, at every time, and sometimes almost all the time. If the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) thinks that the government is organized enough to handle that, perhaps he should give it more thought.

● (1642)

Can the dexterous government House leader rise on the spur of the moment, indicate disagreement, and receive a unanimous affirmative vote from his backbenchers so that the matter can be debated for the following 15 or 20 minutes? That is asking more than the government is capable of providing.

Motions under Standing Order 43 were introduced to safeguard the House and prevent explosions when emotions were high. This procedure has many safeguards, time limit being one. When I first came to this chamber, oral questions consisted of one, two or three questions. On other days no government business was done because oral questions continued until the House adjourned.

There was no time limit until 1964 or 1965. If the opposition did not like what the government was doing, it rose on a question of privilege and debated the subject. If Mr. Speaker ruled on whether it was a proper question of privilege, then the Chair was challenged, and there was a four or five-hour debate on whether Mr. Speaker was correct in arriving at his decision. The government House leader remembers those days when there was considerable opportunity for sometimes frivolous, violent, and less than truthful use of privileges. A solution to this problem was reached when opposition members were provided with 15 minutes to present motions under Standing Order 43.

I do not know how other parties make use of this procedure. Perhaps their bright boys from research and other departments engineer their motions under Standing Order 43. In the New Democratic Party it is one of the few things which have been left to the discretion of individual backbenchers. If I am entirely out of touch with my party and do not agree, I can rise and raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. Perhaps it is a matter which is of concern to my constituents, or even of national importance.

This Standing Order has been used by independent members as well. One must remember that they are growing more rapidly than any other party in the House. Not long ago there were no independent members. Now there are four or five such members. Soon they will be classed as a party in this House, particularly if it continues to grow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wonder who the leader will be.

Mr. Peters: They can fight about that themselves. Perhaps they will take turns. It would be very democratic; there would be a new leader every day.

An opportunity for debate has been developed. The government House leader would be very unwise to persuade the House, under the circumstances, to give him or any other member an opportunity to rise and object, on the basis of privilege, to a motion under Standing Order 43. Mr. Speaker would be required to take tranquillizers every day, if that were introduced in addition to his other responsibilities.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) indicated that at sometime in the future, we may reach a point where we accept such motions. If the hon. member for Ottawa West is correct, we will accept them with regularity so that they can be debated. If Your Honour finds that motions are of urgent and pressing necessity, and the House gives unanimous consent, what will happen to government orders? One must remember what occurred the other day. The matter was placed on the order paper as government order No. 1. The government or cabinet did not initiate that order; the House unanimously decided upon it. We are obligated to debate and formally conclude this matter. Under normal circumstances it would be called on either the second or third day, and it would be a priority until disposed of by the House. That has not been decided in this particular instance. Perhaps that is the best way to leave this matter.

One must consider that at some point in the future, the House will be faced with a matter which requires immediate debate until conclusion. The subject matter of the last motion in question was important enough to have the support of members of all parties, and it should not have been delegated to a position, where it perhaps will die on the order paper at the end of this session.

Surprisingly motions under Standing Order 43, and oral questions, are now regarded as a best seller on the television screens in Ottawa and other areas. I have had occasion to meet many people in stores who said, "You are Mr. So and So. I have seen you on television." I had never met these people before.

A great deal of enthusiasm is developing for the televising of the proceedings of the House. It is better than "The Edge of Night." It supersedes many other soap operas. It is cheap. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation can afford to run it. It is all Canadian talent. Certainly it has some comic relief for viewers. It has some good debates. Many people are becoming interested in the actual manner in which government is run.

Not only do people watch the question period, but they are tuning in to the debates which follow. In fact many people hurry home and turn on their television sets to follow a particular debate, in which they have become interested, almost by accident.

An hon. Member: No commercials.

Mr. Peters: That is correct; there are no commercials. I should also like to point out that at least a dozen members of the press gallery are now watching the proceedings of the House on cable television. The political party leaders are sitting in their offices watching the proceedings as well. Of course, this is quite different from the situation when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister and, seriously criticized for snooping on parliament without coming to the chamber.

Your Honour has been given a great responsibility. I am pleased, surprised, and very gratified by the manner in which Your Honour has handled motions under Standing Order 43. Perhaps I do not present such motions often, but I watch them with interest. Your Honour has arrived at some very good snap decisions, and has been taxed by the ingenuity of members who are out to put something over someone. Regardless of the party, the Chair is faced with that problem.

• (1652)

The House leader for the opposition indicated he wanted you, Mr. Speaker, to fulfil an additional role. He wanted you to decide in respect of the urgency and pressing necessity of matters in motions under Standing Order 43. I do not think you should be faced with that task. I am quite satisfied that on occasion you stand and say nothing, without putting the motion because it is apparently frivolous. I think there is a role to be played by hon. members, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on occasion, in moving motions that are frivolous. Hon. members do so on occasion to make a point, and that is the end of it, and no one expects the motion to go further.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I do not think you should be asked to assume the responsibility of deciding on the spur of the moment whether there is a matter of urgent and pressing necessity in a motion under Standing Order 43. This is something you are being asked to do all the time, and that is why I referred to television coverage of this chamber. I do not think you should have to make that decision as to whether someone has withheld unanimous consent.

It is very cowardly on the part of a member who objects to a motion to shout no from his seat, when you ask if there is unanimous consent. That hon. member does not have the guts to get up on his feet and say no. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) could stand in his place, and he will be seen when he says no. I think you, Mr. Speaker, should be able to point to an hon. member, and say that the hon. member for such and such a constituency says no. You should be in a position to state that someone has withheld consent. People who do not understand exactly what is involved in asking for unanimous consent, perhaps watching the television, often feel that you have made the decision that the motion is unacceptable.

Most motions, no matter how the government feels about them, are important to someone, or hon. members would not be getting up and proposing them. A number of people are watching these proceedings at this time and feel that you, Mr. Speaker, are saying the motion is unacceptable, and I do not think you should be burdened with that responsibility.

If the House leader wants to make a legitimate change, let him remove this responsibility on the part of the Chair so that the camera crew will be able to pick up the member who says no, withholding consent. In that way those hon. members will have the responsibility.

For some time I have felt that your responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, are very onerous. You are now being asked to assume another responsibility, that of deciding whether there is prejudice against the government in the wording of some of these motions. These motions must be short, sharp, critical, and to the point. If they do not offend the government, in some way they are hardly worth mentioning. As the right hon. member for Prince Albert said on one occasion, if a question does not embarrass the government it embarrasses the person who asks it.

If the House leader wants to provide leadership he should support me in my suggestions regarding unanimous consent. If an hon. member does not have the guts to stand up and be recognized as being in opposition to a motion under Standing Order 43, then there really is no opposition. The Speaker cannot recognize opposition to the granting of unanimous consent when it comes in the form of the word no spoken by an hon. member sitting in his seat. No one should be heard when speaking from his position in his seat. If we make this change it might make your job a little easier, Mr. Speaker, and it will certainly make it clear to the public that you are not really running interference for the government on motions proposed under Standing Order 43.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. I would like to say only a few words on this matter because I am aware that in the discharge of my responsibilities as a member as well as a minister, motions under Standing Order 43 have prevented me from fully exercising my parliamentary and my ministerial functions which are to answer from time to time questions regarding the administration of my department.

I would like to draw your attention to a fact which indeed has occurred repeatedly in many regards and which is probably very relevant to this debate. Indeed, on October 27 last, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) took the opportunity under Standing Order 43 to raise what she considered as an urgent and pressing matter. Of course, as you know, we government members on this side of the House cannot reply immediately to such a question asked by a member of the opposition, specially when it is raised under Standing Order 43. Now, during the oral question period which followed, this same hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton was recognized by you, Mr. Speaker, which gave her the opportunity to ask a question which, to my great surprise, was quite different from the one she had raised pursuant to Standing Order 43 before the beginning of the oral question period. And the day after, in the Ottawa Journal of Saturday October 28, there was a headline worded as follows and I quote:

[English]

Pigott query on vacant houses goes unanswered.

[Translation]

I believe, Mr. Speaker, this gives us another typical example of the abuse which may come from the part that a member of the opposition can play when he takes advantage of the rules. Rising under the provisions of Standing Order 43, an hon. member makes a certain number of points—knowing full well that the government is not in a position to answer—makes unsubstantiated allegations through the many questions put and then the hon. member sits down, satisfied with having played that part, since he knows the government cannot answer. Now I call your attention on this point, Mr. Speaker, because unfortunately I believe there is abuse of the provisions of Standing Order 43 in this regard and it is very simple to prove since the hon. member did not even have the courage to ask me a question on that subject during the question period. I find it urgent and important, if we are to keep Standing Order 43 and if you, as Speaker, are to continue to allow those questions, that you acknowledge at least that members from both sides of the House are on equal terms and therefore that, not during question period where, of course, you recognize more opposition members who perhaps have less chance than some others to ask questions from ministers, but for motions under Standing Order 43 you should at the very least recognize members to your left and to your right alternately in order to allow for better and fairer use of Standing Order 43 by all backbenchers.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—Forestry—Task force on future of Canadian Forestry Service; the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Airports—Food and liquor concession at Dorval; the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes)—Environmental Affairs—Forestry—Closing of government laboratories.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MACEACHEN—OPERATION OF STANDING ORDER 43

Mr. Speaker: In case there is any doubt as to what business we will be taking up at eight o'clock, it should be clear that although we are interrupting this point of order at five o'clock we will be returning to it at eight. We must interrupt this debate in order to proceed with private members' business, unless there is some disposition, by unanimous consent, to the contrary.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is not unanimous agreement to the contrary.

Incidentally, the difference which guides us in respect of returning to whatever business is before the House at this moment, when we do resume at eight o'clock this evening, is found in the language of Standing Order 15, which I will now recite to the House. It indicates, as hon. members will be aware:

● (1702)

(2) Not more than two minutes after the reading of prayers, the business of the House shall commence. Members, other than ministers of the Crown, may propose motions pursuant to Standing Order 43 at this time. Not later than 2.15 p.m. or 11.15 a.m., as the case may be, oral questions shall be taken up.

Here are the pertinent words:

At 3 p.m., or 12 noon, as the case may be—

In other words, at the conclusion of the question period.

—the House shall proceed to the ordinary daily routine of business, which shall be as follows:

In other words, the crisis comes not when we begin the question period, but when we finish it, because at the conclusion of the question period, by the operation of that Standing Order, the House is compelled to go to the business which is on the order paper. The fundamental difference between that and the situation we are in now—going to private members' hour at five o'clock as we are compelled to do by the standing orders—is that there is nothing which directs us in any way at eight o'clock this evening, other than the orders of the House that say that since we are on this business at five o'clock we must, of course, stay on it until we either adjourn that debate or adjourn the sitting for the day. Therefore, the two cases are fundamentally different. That is the reason why, if a motion made under Standing Order 43 happens to be on the floor of the House at the beginning of the question period, once we begin the question period we are locked in at the conclusion of it to proceed to other business. We cannot get back to that debate unless there is some procedural means for doing so.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

[Mr. Speaker.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[Translation]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING VOLUNTARY FIREMEN

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to exclude from taxable income all indemnities received by a voluntary fireman in the exercise of his duties, as well as to allow such firemen to deduct from their income all expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is the second time this year I have had the opportunity to ask the House, as mentioned in my motion, and I quote:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to exclude from taxable income all indemnities received by a voluntary fireman in the exercise of his duties, as well as to allow such firemen to deduct from their income all expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties.

Mr. Speaker, it is the second time this year that I have the opportunity to come back before the House with this motion. I had the opportunity to introduce this motion six months ago, and I have since received many letters and telegrams from all over the country in support of it. Part-time volunteer firemen would want to see it passed or a least referred to a committee for study, so they may come and show the need for that motion to be passed by the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, and as many people say, it takes a lot of courage to become a fireman and particularly a part-time volunteer fireman. But those who take it up on a voluntary basis must face many common dangers, financial, social and family problems.

Mr. Speaker, those who accept to become volunteer firemen certainly do not do so for the sake of glory. The municipality that cannot afford professional firemen must rely on the good citizenship of its people, so it is only normal that the government should do its share and help those courageous people, and particularly provide financial help for municipalities that face increasing financial problems.

The motion I introduced is designed so not to penalize financially those people who accept to become part-time volonteer firemen as well as their municipalities. It is true that those people receive a very small indemnity, but because it is an essential service, I would like it to be excluded from taxable income. Right now, Mr. Speaker, the law allows a deduction of some $300. Such a deduction is clearly not enough these days. Those people need the help of parliament and the respect of the people and civic and government authorities.

Mr. Speaker, I referred earlier to the sacrifices that no one can deny. First, when a part-time fireman accepts to go out very early in the morning, sometimes even in unbearably cold weather, and fight a fire, I believe that it is worth considering.

And, as I also said earlier, I received several letters from volunteer firemen and particularly city officials, and that is why I say this motion is very important and I ask the members of this House to pass it so it can be referred to committee.

● (1712)

I would therefore like the debate to be short so that this motion may be agreed to. I moved the same motion last year, but it was not agreed to. Because of this, many people and many municipalities were greatly disappointed. For a part-time volunteer firemen, firefighting does not take only courage, but also a lot of money. If the present situation is allowed to go on, people will die in fires, and later on I shall give evidence to the effect that many people do die in such cases.

Many municipalities have enormous difficulty in recruiting part-time volunteer firemen. They have enormous difficulty in finding such people to help the victims of fires and provide a service to which the taxpayers are entitled. To prove my allegations, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a letter that I received from the Amos volunteer firemen department, which reads as follows:

> Following a decision made at our last general assembly on September 22 last, it was unanimously decided to submit to you a request concerning the exemption of all indemnities received by volunteer firefighters for income tax purposes. The reason for that request is that we have a total budget of $28,000 for the 30 firemen who fight fires in our town, regardless of the number of fires that we may have to fight and of practices that we may hold, including preventive measures. You probably know that the majority of our firemen are low wage earners. Moreover, we use our own cars to go to the scene of the fire and we often lose personal belongings (watches, glasses, etc.) and damage our shoes and clothing.

Up to this point, Mr. Speaker, this letter shows that I am quite justified in proposing this motion. The letter goes on as follows:

> Another problem which affects our family life is that we must stay on standby during weekends for all summer.

I think there are few people who are prepared to sacrifice their family and their holidays the way our part-time volunteer firemen do. The letter goes on:

> It is a service we owe to the population; however, more often than not we do it to the prejudice of our families. Moreover, since you have taxed our members, we have had several resignations which are directly related to this situation. For all these reasons, we ask a total exemption for all volunteer firemen or a minimum of $1,000 before tax deduction.
>
> Considering that a Canadian citizen who has less than $1,000 interest in the bank is not taxed, we believed our demand is justified. We hope our elected representatives will settle this matter in the best possible way and thank you in advance for your goodwill and collaboration.

Mr. Speaker, as those firemen demonstrate in their letter, if a citizen who has less than $1,000 in the bank is not taxed, it seems just and reasonable to me to exclude from the taxable income any allowance received by a part time volunteer fireman for carrying out his duties. I am not asking for the moon, I ask a reasonable thing for these people.

Mr. Speaker, many small municipalities cannot hire full time firemen to do the job and must hire part time volunteers. Everybody knows that citizens are overtaxed yet we are grateful for the kindness of those people who are courageously fighting fires without begging from their municipality the salary increase that would cover part of their cost. You just have to think of the cost of suits, uniforms if you like, cleaning and so on. Furthermore you know that in an emergency a fireman does not notice the way he is dressed and does not waste time to change before going to the scene of disaster.

Still the Income Tax Act provisions concerning part time volunteer firemen were implemented in 1951. It was based on the cost of living at the time. Mr. Speaker, I do not ask much. I merely ask to study the possibility of renewing this legislation dating back to 1951 in order to take into account the present cost of living. The Amos fire department is not the only one asking for an increase of $300 to $1,000 of the present exemption, or the cost incurred by vulunteer firemen in the exercise of their duties. The Val d'Or fire department sent me a letter dated February 24, 1978. I quote:

> We, volunteer firemen of the Val d'Or fire department wish to make the following request:
>
> The Minister of Revenue now gives volunteer firemen a $300 exemption on their earnings for a given year and the balance is taxable. We want that amount to be substantially increased, or that the income not be taxable, or again to obtain the actual cost incurred in the exercise of our duties.
>
> The act concerning the $300 exemption was passed in 1951, 28 years ago. Since then, all costs have doubled, if not tripled, and we have not benefited from indexation.
>
> That work of volunteer fireman is a part time job that is practically unpaid. We must use our private cars to answer emergency calls and our expenses are not repaid. You probably know how much it costs to run a car. Furthermore, we run risks on our way to the scene of a disaster. Any fireman who has an accident on his way to a fire is not considered as driving a priority vehicle, and that is why he must pay for all damages as well as for ensuing actions. Also the clothes we wear for our regular work are often torn or burnt when we fight a fire, and we must pay such expenses.

However, Mr. Speaker, how many letters have we received as members of this House? I gave only two examples. We have also received telegrams not from brigades but from the Quebec section of the Professional Firemen Federation, and I quote:

> Quebec Professional Firemen Federation strongly supports resolution of Quebec voluntary firemen claiming income tax exemption for indemnities received when fighting fires.

The telegram is signed by Alfred Morin, the president of the Professional Firemen Federation of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, voluntary firemen are doing great services to the population. It would only be reasonable that we parliament members, supported as we are by the public, do justice to those firemen by allowing them an income tax reduction. Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude here because, as everybody knows, that motion must not die on the order paper. I know many members want to have the floor. For the benefit of all voluntary firemen across the country, I hope it will be possible for those people to win their point after the request they made to the federal government through me. In concluding, I would like to point out that this request was not made only to the federal government but also to the provincial governments as well. This afternoon I contacted the appropriate department in Quebec city and was told that Bill C-65 will allow voluntary firemen to deduct from their income tax all income they earned in the exercise of their duties. As citizens who may at one time need help from those people, we should do that much for them because we know that we may need their services one day.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the motion put by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), which reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to exclude from taxable income all indemnities received by a voluntary fireman in the exercise of his duties, as well as to allow such firemen to deduct frm their income all expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties.

Mr. Speaker, administering the Income Tax Act is a major challenge to the government, which is responsible for collecting revenues in a just and fair way and also for adapting the fiscal system to this country's changing economic needs. At the income tax level, the government tries to ensure fair distribution of the fiscal burden according to each taxpayer's ability to pay, with proper deduction of the individual's expenses to the extent allowed by his earnings.

Where a deduction results in alleviating the fiscal burden of the individuals directly involved, it weighs down that of other taxpayers that do not benefit but must pay the cost.

Mr. Speaker, the government has been constantly striving, even before the fiscal reform, to maintain and strengthen the principle of general, universal and fair administration of the Income Tax Act. However, due to certain economic circumstances and social changes, the government had to entertain exceptions. The eighteenth report of the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on the white paper concerning fiscal reform, published October 5, 1970, had this to say and I quote:

● (1722)

In the committee's view, not only equity but common sense prescribes that exceptions to the ability-to-pay measure, should be made only where a case is clearly made on general economic or compassionate grounds and widely accepted by other taxpayers, who will bear relatively more tax as a result of such exceptions.

I am referring to page 10 of the said report, Mr. Speaker. Moreover, the report finds a relevant difference between the government's point of view and that of the taxpayers about the equity of the fiscal system, a difference which often gives rise to lively discussions. For the reasons stated above, the government considers this notion in a general way whereas, the taxpayers found their general conclusions on their personal cases and needs. Mr. Speaker, I would point out that what the House is interested in today, is that the $300 tax exemption a voluntary fireman can deduct from his income for expenses and disadvantages inherent in the practice of a job, which is very important because it aims at protecting the lives and property of citizens, is in fact an exception to the general rule which says, that only income related expenses are tax deductible. The act recognizes exceptions to the rule when expenditures are incurred for the welfare of the community or of all taxpayers. The exemption for firemen falls in this category of exceptions.

[Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve).]

Many taxpayers have argued that the government should recognize as income tax exemptions, membership fees for sports associations, fees charged for private figure skating or piano lessons, maintenance and operation costs of a snowblower. Such deduction has also been suggested in the case of the salary paid to a maid and as a form of remuneration for a housewife. Although the government recognizes the merit of these suggestions, it is clear that the public purse could not sustain such fiscal losses, Mr. Speaker, unless it could find other sources of revenue. Obviously the government cannot set up a tax system encompassing all the proposals that it receives.

That being said, I will examine the measures taken in recent years by the government with a view to lightening the tax burden of all taxpayers. Since 1974, basic exemptions, running deductions and taxation brackets are corrected each year to compensate for the rising cost of living. The index factor for 1978 will enable Canadian taxpayers to save a total of $850 million in taxes. As previously mentioned, indexing is a taxation mechanism whose value has not yet been fully recognized. For the taxation year 1978, the personal allowance has been increased to $2,430, the allowance for married people to $2,120 and the deduction for old age and disability to $1,520. The deduction—

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to draw attention to the fact that we are not discussing the Income Tax Act in general. We are discussing a motion directly related to special exemptions for firemen.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: I am laying the groundwork for my intervention, and the hon. member will finally see that I share the interest of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) for the work done by voluntary firemen to protect the community.

The deduction for a dependent child has gone up to $460 if the child is under 16 and to $840 if he is over 16. In 1973, the government granted taxpayers a 5 per cent tax cut, subject to a $100 minimum and a $500 maximum. In 1974, the minimum amount went up to $150. For the 1975 taxation year, the tax credit went up to 8 per cent, subject to a $200 minimum and a $500 maximum. The budget of March 31, 1977, proposed an increase in the tax allowance within those limits. Thus, for the taxation year 1978, the taxpayer may deduct an additional amount of up to $50 per dependent child under 18 residing in Canada. Moreover, for the 1978 taxation year, the government has granted a $100 tax allowance to low and average income taxpayers, the minimum 9 per cent federal tax credit being increased from $200 to $300. There are more than 7,500,000 taxpayers who take advantage of this measure which represents a loss of over $700 million for the government.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening very carefully. What we are hearing is a summary of what has been done in terms of income tax changes for all citizens. It is very interesting, but the motion before us directly relates to a special exemption for firemen because of their exceptional duties. I suggest the hon. member stick to the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, if, as stated by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), he wanted his motion to be carried, having informed the House that he had moved it for the second time, if the hon. member for Villeneuve was really sincere, why did he not move his motion and resume his seat instead of talking for 20 minutes?

[English]

Mr. Peters: Because the last time they talked it out.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) would give me three more minutes—and if he had not interrupted me, I would have finished my speech and another member on the government side or from another party could have made his speech.

In response to the needs created by new economic realities, the Income Tax Act provides for some deductions for child care, employment and educational expenses, incomes derived from interests, dividends or pensions other than the income from the government universal pension system. Finally the act provides for deductions up to certain amounts for contributions paid to registered home ownership savings plans—RHOSP—or registered retirement savings plans—RRSP. For the information of the hon. member for Timiskaming, I am almost through.

● (1732)

[English]

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is an intolerable abuse of the rules. The hon. member who has the floor has not once mentioned the subject we are discussing but has been speaking in general terms about the Income Tax Act. I should like you to bring it to his attention that he should stick to the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest all members get back to the subject under discussion, volunteer firemen.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) says that I did not mention to the House the subject matter of the motion; he undoubtedly did not hear me, but I did mention it.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by saying this: in order to face these realities and to recognize the very important work done by volunteer firemen, I recommend to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), as some of my colleagues did on various occasions, that in preparing his budget, the Minister of Finance raise from $300 to $1,000 the deduction which has been in existence for about 20 years.

[English]

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) should be congratulated for once again bringing this matter to the attention of the House. I think it should not go unnoticed that this same matter has been brought forward from all sides of the House. I can recall in my short term in this House the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) bringing up this subject. That was in the last sitting. Great words were said on all sides about what should or should not be done.

There seems to be general agreement that the efforts of men and women who do give of their time in this kind of endeavour should be recognized. They do, in fact, already receive a measure of recognition not accorded to any other segment of our society. It seems that the $300 allowance which is currently received from the government, municipalities or other public authorities for expenses incurred by the firemen is something no other group receives in our society. That these firemen are performing emergency duties, we agree. We agree as well that damage might occur to their personal belongings and that there should be deductions recognizing this kind of expense.

It may be that this is not sufficient. It may be that the suggestion the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) is making to the minister is one we would have to recognize. But we should not fail to acknowledge that there are other groups which should be considered as well. I think, for instance, of the Volunteer Ambulance Association which has an organization not in my riding but in the riding adjacent to mine. I believe they call themselves the Amherstburg, Malden and Anderdon VAA. This consists of a group of individuals who go out and fight fires and who risk their lives as well. They are out on the highways on call in all kinds of weather, they save their community a great deal of money and they subject their goods, their clothing and their lives to jeopardy.

It occurs to me we might be acting illogically if we were to respond only to the volunteer firemen. I ask this question without diminishing in any way the merit of their case for an increase: Would it be right and just for us to respond to a cry from all volunteer firemen and their associations without bearing in mind there are other groups which deserve the same kind of recognition?

I acknowledge what the hon. member for Villeneuve has said about these groups. I have received all kinds of letters on this from my riding, a rural riding which of necessity has numbers of volunteer fire departments. We all recognize that small communities, rural communities, cannot afford full-time firemen in attendance, and as a consequence I have received letters from places like Tilbury and Leamington and I think we have to respond eventually to what they are saying. The hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon) has shown me letters he has received from places like Petrolia. We have all received letters, I am satisfied. But I wonder whether we shouldn't be looking perhaps at the larger question of volunteerism across the board and whether government should not be acknowledging in some positive way the work of volunteers throughout society, whatever they do, be it responding to fires, be it responding, as in the case of the Amherstburg group, to emergencies of a personal nature, or be it going into hospitals and acting as Candystripers and that sort of thing. It seems to me there is a larger question than whether we should be immediately reacting on an ad hoc basis, as I say, to one particular segment of volunteerism that we recognize is needed and does a service.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that given the report we have had, the Narcova Report, given that submissions have been made to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) by the national associations of volunteer groups suggesting we should be doing something positive in order to assist volunteerism in Canada, perhaps the time has come not only to take a look at a motion like the one made by the hon. member for Villeneuve or the suggestion made by the hon. member for Gatineau, but to consider whether or not there is a role to be played by government in terms of volunteer associations different from that played up to now. Should it be the role of government to provide moneys to voluntary organizations? Or, rather, should we be giving support to these organizations in other ways? Should we in fact be examining the possibility under the Income Tax Act, if we are going to use that vehicle, of requiring that if we are going to have an exemption—the $100 exemption for charities and religious donations—should we in fact be widening those two categories? Should we be enlarging that kind of deduction so that there would be greater incentive to and reward for volunteers?

This leads us to the question whether we should be exercising the kind of control the government has had in the past over voluntary associations and the spheres in which the volunteers have worked, or whether we should be withdrawing. Should we be allowing space or room for volunteers and voluntary associations in terms of deductions, such as I have talked about, or should we be withdrawing our control of those organizations, allowing them to get more funds from the private sector and, indeed, exercise greater control over their own destinies and ultimate aims?

Along with the other members who have spoken, we recognize the valuable services which volunteers in many fields perform for the good of the community, but we have to be very careful about using the Income Tax Act as the vehicle for recognizing and encouraging this kind of public service. If a deduction is given to the firefighters, as has been proposed, the House would then have to consider recognition in the tax system for all sorts of other volunteer activities. I think I have pointed that out.

● (1742)

Some hon. members may be aware that the Royal Commission on Taxation examined the question of expense deductions. The commission concluded in volume three of its report dealing with taxation of income that all income in the broad sense should be taxable. As a corollary the commission concluded that only those expenditures incurred in earning income should be deductible. In this context the commission observed that it is difficult to design a simple and fully enforceable system which will preclude the deduction of personal expenses.

The commission recommended that the problem of deductions for expenditures be approached in two ways simultaneously. There should be general rules that deny deductions of personal expenditures, and there should be specific provisions in the legislation which explicity deny particular kinds of expenditures where there is likely to be a substantial personal benefit involved. I think hon. members will appreciate that to rely solely upon general rules would make full enforcement virtually impossible, while to rely solely upon specific provisions denying deductions would place a premium on the skilful manipulation of the affairs of the taxpayer to avoid the letter of the prohibition.

Following the commission's reports and recommendations parliament adopted three general rules to govern the deductibility of expenditures which, I am advised, are now reflected in the tax law. The first of these rules has both positive and negative aspects in that there is some definition as to certain expenditures which should, and others which should not, be deductible. The other two rules are essentially restrictive in that they disallow expenditures which might otherwise be deductible.

The first general rule is that expenditures are deductible only if they are reasonably related to the gaining or producing of income. Thus, any expenditure not so related is not deductible. This rule ensures that expenditures of a personal nature arising out of personal choice or not related to the earning of income will not be deducted by any taxpayer. The second general rule is related to the first and is concerned with the amount of an expenditure. It introduces a concept of reasonable expenses to circumvent the possibility of tax avoidance. The third general rule focusses on expenditures made for personal use or consumption which are not allowed as deductions.

I could get into detail regarding the current tax law, but I would rather not do that. I want to demonstrate my concern, which is the concern of the hon. member for Villeneuve, about the plight of the voluntary fireman by speaking very briefly, sitting down and affording someone else the opportunity to participate. I want to make the same point which was made by the hon. member for Gatineau. There are general rules to be considered over and above reaction to the just demand which is being made by voluntary fire associations. Given the fact that we have been told that a new budget is coming, I think the appropiate route would be for all hon. members to indicate their support for this kind of action on the part of the Minister of Finance in terms of the budget. It might be reasonable to suggest that the allowance or deduction be raised from $300 to $1,000. While saying that, I want once again to reinforce the suggestion that we should not view firemen apart from the entire context of voluntary work in Canada. There is a greater concern to which this House must address itself, and I have already spoken about that.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add just a few words. I will take only a few minutes because I would like to see this motion tested. The first part of the motion says the following:

—the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to exclude from taxable income all indemnities received by a voluntary fireman in the exercise of his duties—

That part of the motion might be difficult. The last part reads as follows:

—as well as to allow such firemen to deduct from their income all expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties.

That is a good suggestion. Volunteer firemen in villages, towns and in various places across the country have to buy uniforms. They have expenses. Some are salaried people, some work on an hourly basis, and some may lose some of their earnings unless they are indemnified by their village, town or city. Any expenses they incur should be deductible. I have always thought that the law was unfair in this regard.

Some self-employed people are allowed to write off the cost of their tools. A lawyer can write off the cost of his library and other expenses. Why, then, should a carpenter who is paid by the hour not be able to write off the total cost of the tools which are necessary for his job? This should not be limited to a certain amount. Why should a nurse who has to buy her uniforms not be able to write off the cost? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says we have to differentiate between those who are on salaries and those who are self-employed. I do not think it would be very difficult to amend the Income Tax Act. People who earn salaries should be able to write off the cost of those things which are necessary to earn that income, whatever they might be.

I support this motion in every detail. If the second part of this motion passed, indemnities are so low and expenses are so high that they would be balanced off so that people involved in volunteer work would likely make nothing. I think we should consider seriously the matter which has been raised. I congratulate the hon. member for Villeveuve for attempting to see that people on salaries are allowed proper deductions. Surely we should pay tax on the money we earn, less our expenses. That is the simple principle of taxation. That is why I rose to support this motion, as far as deduction of expenses is concerned.

It is very important at this time to consider this matter, especially in Alberta. Just recently, on Hallowe'en night, the town of Olds sustained losses from a fire amounting to several million dollars. The two main grain elevators and the $1.5 or $2 million sports centre were lost. Volunteer firemen fought the fire all night to save their town, their tradition, and their culture. That is one example of many fire tragedies which have occurred over the years. Those firemen should be able to write off at least the cost of their uniforms and whatever equipment they have. They should also be able to write off any loss in salary. Those are proper deductions against any indemnity, if they are paid. Even if they are not paid an indemnity and it costs them money to do that kind of work for the community, surely their costs should be deductible from any income they earn.

I do not want to be one of those who would talk out a motion which probably should go to a committee for further consideration and possible amendment. Once again I congratulate the Social Credit party and the hon. member for Villeneuve for bringing this motion before the House.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I will take only a minute or two to state my support for this motion and to congratulate the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) for bringing it forward. The hon. member represents an organization in which people in my riding participate. Our firemen belong to the same organization. For the most part they are volunteer firemen. There is a large number of volunteers as well as a number of permanent firefighters. The volunteer firefighters work with a limited amount of equipment and they have less training than permanent firefighters. Nonetheless, they have done an exceptional job in northern Ontario and Quebec keeping loss of life and property to a minimum.

The hon. member for Villeneuve told us of the expenses incurred by volunteer firefighters. Twenty years ago or so the Income Tax Act allowed a deduction of $300. We are now asking for an allowable deduction of $1,000. It may be easier to get a $1,000 exemption for volunteer firefighters than to get exemptions for all their costs. In cases of large fires like the one mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) costs are often in excess of $1,000. There is loss of time, clothing must be replenished, and risks are taken.

• (1752)

I hope that this matter can be referred to a committee where there will be an opportunity to present the matter forcefully to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) so that he can make that change in his forthcoming budget.

Mr. Wm. Andres (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to thank the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) for providing us with an opportunity to debate the need for an amendment to the Income Tax Act with respect to volunteer firemen. I know what volunteer firemen have to put up with and I am familiar with what services they provide to communities at very little cost. They give of their own time at a time when most of us are out socializing or enjoying the comforts of our livingroom or even the comforts of our own bed. Often they have to brave the weather when it is less than satisfactory. In such conditions these men, and sometimes women, go out to protect property and lives.

We are looking for consideration for these men who give of themselves as a service to the community, and not only a service to their community but a service to society. It might well be that they incur costs from time to time; they might also incur losses. It has been suggested that we should at least consider the costs they incur in paying for their uniforms or other clothing, and in replacing articles such as wrist watches which they might lose when they are rushed to fires from whatever place they might be. At times they do not have time to dress properly when there is some urgency.

The government has considered granting them a $300 exemption. This might have been fine some years ago, but as I listened to some of the speeches made here today, I think we have probably missed the boat with regard to where the responsibility lies. We seem to be getting on the treadmill of exemptions. It is dangerous to start granting exemptions to people here and there. Where do we draw the limit on exemptions for volunteers? I appreciate the work these people perform, but there are many volunteers within a community who give of their time and who put in endless hours at great risk to their lives. This is what volunteer firemen do. Also, we have the auxiliary police and various other organizations that give of their time.

I believe that in this regard it is the responsibility of the municipality and the people it represents. In most cases they have assumed that responsibility, such as, for example, the municipality from which I come. We do not have a paid fire department; we have only volunteers, and I must say we have an excellent group of people. I have been connected with that group for many years in my municipal experience and I know about some of the costs they incur. I have taken a very firm stand in asserting that members of the municipality and those who are responsible should ensure that those volunteers who give of their time and effort are provided with all the equipment that is necessary for them to perform their duties.

I am very proud that my community, the town of Niagara-on-the-Lake, makes this available to these gentlemen who protect life, limb and property. I believe we should look all across the country and put a little responsibility on the municipalities to ensure that these volunteers are properly reimbursed for the cost that they incur directly in the performance of their duties.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Andres: I will pretend I did not hear that because I have a few things more to say on this motion.

Mr. Peters: You will talk it out.

Mr. Andres: It may be so; that is my prerogative. We cannot put everything at the feet of the federal government and say: "You owe these people this and that and you should make exemptions here and there". In these cases the direct responsibility lies with the municipalities involved and that is where, I think, we should put a little pressure to get them to accept those responsibilities. I am sure this matter has been discussed many times. It does not matter whether if these municipalities are in the province of Ontario, in the province of Quebec or any other province.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Andres: I suppose it does not matter whether it is a question on the order paper or whatever else it may be, we hope that the municipalities will come up with a uniform policy whereby volunteer firemen, those people who protect life and property, will be treated equally all across this great country. That is where the responsibility lies—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Andres: —and that is where it should be. I do not believe for a minute that we at the federal level should take on responsibilities which are those of the municipalities.

We have been referring to the great constitutional debate and the division of powers. There seems to be a tendency to put more power into the hands of the provinces. Perhaps we should take a closer look at placing a little more responsibility on the municipalities, the grass roots, the people whom they serve. This kind of service cannot be paid for in monetary terms because not one of these people gives of himself for a monetary return. These people are providing a service for the benefit of the community and for the benefit of society.

I am very proud to have been involved with this group of people who provide such a service to Canadian society. I believe we are doing them an injustice if we take away this responsibility from these people who are serving their country so well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Accordingly, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MacEACHEN—OPERATION OF STANDING ORDER 43

The House resumed consideration of the point of order (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of becoming involved in what I would call needless debate, but I should like to register my concern about a few matters. We are talking about Standing Order 43 and, as the government House leader has said, the use, misuse and abuse of it.

How did this come about? It is very simple. I have been here over ten years and I have never heard such a tirade of objections, concerns and words to the effect that there has been misuse and abuse of Standing Order 43. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) moved a motion under Standing Order 43, and the government House leader took some exception to it, unquestionably a great deal of exception. He rose at a time when he should not have been on his feet in terms of a point of order. Seeing that there have been changes in the procedures of the House, I believe that points of order should be raised at three o'clock. But no, the government House leader was up and blasting away immediately after the presentation of the motion.

The motion came about because of Bill C-60. I do not know what the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings had in his mind, but he was concerned about the role of the monarchy in our parliamentary institution. Bill C-60 has concerned many people. The hon. member was concerned, as were government members. We have heard and read of their concern. The matter to which the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings referred was an urgent one.

I do not have to remind Your Honour of the wording of the motion, but I should like to refer to Standing Order 43 which reads as follows:

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity—

I look at the government House leader as I say these words. It continues:

—previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the House without notice having been given under Standing Order 42.

Apparently Standing Order 42, to all intents and purposes, requires 48 hours' notice. The matter was urgent in the mind of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. He explained that it was a matter of necessity. Of course, there is a caveat that the motion should not be argumentative and that there should be no statement explaining the substance of the motion. Certainly we all agree with that.

I will not question the motives of the government House leader, because one cannot do that, but it seems to me that polls play a great part in his role at this particular time. There is a sense of desperation, fear and apprehension as to what the future may hold. Therefore, at every opportunity government members will rise and Raise Cain with the opposition. I listened to the government House leader when he referred to misuse and abuse of Standing Order 43, but I noted that he was extremely selective or perhaps forgetful. According to him, the only persons in the House who were abusing or misusing Standing Order 43 were those to the left of Mr. Speaker.

I notice that the minister sitting behind the government House leader is shaking her head. I will not mention her riding or portfolio because I do not want anyone to know to whom I am referring. But it is a fact that the government House leader referred to Conservative members exclusively. At no time did he indicate that his own members have misused and abused the rule. The only conclusion one could draw from his tirade was that members of the Conservative party were the guilty ones; we are with sin and they are without sin.

Mr. Reid: That is right. You have got it.

Mr. Alexander: I knew I would strike a chord. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) has said that I am right. When the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) jumped into the fray, the first thing he did was chastise my House leader, for play acting before the cameras. Then the hon. member for Ottawa West looked directly into the camera and started his little speech. One can see how facetious this argument becomes. Then the Acting Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) jumped to his feet and expressed concern about the comments of the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) respecting Standing Order 43. Apparently he picked up a daily newspaper and found that his department was being criticized to no end.

What is the answer? The government House leader indicated that we were negligent. We are not negligent; he is the one who is negligent. He has sat there for as long as he has held this office without making any comment whatever regarding the prerequisites of Standing Order 43. When we started to talk about the Queen it hurt him, touched him or moved him, and he then wanted to give what he thinks is the true message to the Canadian people. That just does not wash.

• (2012)

What could members on that side have done? They could always have agreed to a Standing Order 43 motion if they wanted to get to the nitty-gritty of it in order to present an argument or a rebuttal. Have you noticed, Mr. Speaker, the pattern of behaviour of government members? They always say: "No, no, no". They do not want to know the truth and they do not want a debate. Now they find that by saying "no" they have precluded the possibility of debate, and they are now becoming concerned.

What else could hon. members on that side have done other than agreeing to a motion under Standing Order 43? At any time at 3 p.m. when an hon. member on this or on that side felt there had been an injustice as a result of a statement by another hon. member, he could rise on a point of order. Perhaps he could not debate the issue, but at least he could bring out what he felt was the truth. Do you, Mr. Speaker, ever hear hon. members to your right standing at three o'clock on a point of order? They invariably allow these things to pass. Why can they not use that usual ploy of giving ministers a planted question, as they so often do?

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: An hon. member says "oh, oh".

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Alexander: Withdraw what? There is always a time for withdrawal, but we know how the system works and surely the hon. member does not want me to withdraw something like that.

Hon. members can clarify a situation or something that has happened by asking the minister concerned a question. Do we find them doing that, sir? When it comes to something regarding the Queen or a matter of contention, we finally hear something. I suggest they are otherwise all asleep, and that is where the negligence lies.

What else could hon. members on that side possibly do to correct the situation? If they were on the ball, and they have not been for at least ten years, they could issue a press release explaining the circumstances and pointing out why the hon. member who proposed the motion under Standing Order 43 was in error, as well as any shortcomings there might be.

Mr. Reid: We are trying to cut down on paperwork.

Mr. Alexander: You are not doing that. All I am suggesting is that it appears to me, for purposes I can comprehend, that hon. members opposite do not want us to speak out too forcefully. The government is trying to muzzle opposition members. Let us be very frank about the situation. There are very few opportunities for opposition members, particularly the backbenchers, as well as backbenchers on the government side, to bring their concerns not only to the House of Commons but to the people in general. Standing Order 43 provides such an opportunity.

I would not suggest there are no members who have abused the practice or misused the Standing Order. However, we should not allow the government House leader to leave the suggestion that we on this side are the only guilty ones; that is, those of us to the left of Mr. Speaker.

This debate today emphasizes one thing. It was stated earlier there was no need for this debate because the House leaders could get together and discuss the matter. I suggest that if anyone should be disciplined for abusing the Standing Order, members on both sides should be disciplined. Hon. members on the government side should not leave the impression that we on this side are the ones who are wrong, the ones who are misusing the rules, or the ones abusing the Standing Order. This is why I register my concern. We have to be very careful in matters like this.

You have a very onerous job, Mr. Speaker, but this Standing Order is very plain. It states that a member may, if he believes his case is one of urgency and of pressing need, explain his case in terms of its urgency and pressing need and then propose a motion. That is his right. If hon. members on the government side feel the point is argumentative and you, Mr. Speaker, so rule, the hon. member does not even get a chance to continue with his motion. Government members must realize that if they want to complain they must come into this House with clean hands.

An hon. Member: That's a dangerous principle for you to espouse.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) laughs. With all respect, I suggest that before they complain they should show over some period of time that they have some concern, that they are worried and feel the matter calls for action. What have hon. members opposite done? They have sat silently until a thunderbolt hit them. At that time the government House leader stood up with all his rhetoric, pleasantness and debating ability to complain about the Standing Order. His arguments were subsequently destroyed not only by my House leader but the House leader of the NDP, and I am attempting to help in that regard.

Standing Order 43 is of significance and meaning to many members of the House and it should not be tampered with lightly. We all have to learn how to respect it and how to bring about its use as was envisaged. Following this debate I hope hon. members will realize that it has served a useful purpose in terms of bringing forward the fact that there is a problem. Hopefully we can arrive at a solution acceptable to all.

I have a feeling that government members would like to make more use of Standing Order 43. I am not quite prepared to accept that idea. Those hon. members can always approach their ministers in caucus; I do not have that opportunity. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River waves his hands indicating there is no communication there either—and therefore they want to use the time of the House for this purpose.

Let me conclude with these words given to me by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald): Let him who is without guilt cast the first stone.

An hon. Member: That's sin.

Mr. Alexander: It is guilt the way she has written it.

• (2022)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to let this opportunity go by without making some remarks on this very hot issue. You will surely acknowledge the fact that I have often moved motions under Standing Order 43. The hon. member sitting there on my left and to your right, the parliamentary secretary, tells me so. He can speak from experience. Mr. Speaker, if I cannot speak from experience, I can at least speak from memory because I have witnessed the evolution of the House as did all my colleagues and I can say with pride and conviction that our democratic system is one of the most generous in the world because we have come to the point where the majority is allowed to complain against the minority.

That is just about what I have been given to understand this afternoon by listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) and also those of the hon. member who is now the Minister of Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). When the debate was resumed, I would have liked him to continue his remarks because he had made such a good start. We made some very accurate statements and I thought that when this debate would be resumed, he was going to continue making this type of observations.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to refer to certain studies which have been carried out on the role of the private member in parliament. I have here a study which was prepared for hon. members and which is not that old. It dates back to June 1977. In this study the following is said and it is precisely on these points that I would like to draw your attention and the attention of my colleagues, namely the fact that our parliamentary procedure is not just hard and fast but that it can evolve with time according to circumstances and to the needs of this assembly. It is said in that study that historians, legislators and philosophers throughout centuries have sought to determine if the elected representative had first and foremost to be loyal toward his voters, secondly toward his own party, thirdly his country or obey the voice of his own conscience.

Mr. Lapointe: The first point.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): As the member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) just said it is the first point, that is first to have a conscience. Over that subject we are in agreement. And I can see the hon. member is now retiring, perhaps to proceed with some soul-searching experience of his own.

An hon. Member: He will be back.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Aristotle had something to say on the subject we are debating tonight, and so did Thomas Jefferson and others who tried to clarify the matter. Edmund Burke was probably the most influential British writer and speaker.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, it seems appropriate, since we are considering a very serious matter, to refer to experienced parliamentarians, who may teach us some useful lessons as members of this chamber. This is what Burke had to say in a speech he delivered in 1774 to the electors of Bristol which, I imagine, is a riding in Britain. He speaks of the members' tendency to represent private interests. He reminds his audience that parliament is not, and I quote:

—a convention of ambassadors representing various opposed interests which they must defend against others, as officers and lawyers; rather, parliament is a deliberative assembly which represents the nation and shares the same interest, that of the people; local interest and prejudices should not take precedence over general welfare and the will of the people. It is true that the man is chosen; but once a member is appointed he ceases to be the representative for Bristol to become a member of parliament.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, as I always understood it members are elected, it is true, by a certain number of electors in a given riding. But once we are here, when we participate in the proceedings of the House we are spokesmen for the whole nation. And as long as these sacred responsibilities of the member are not recognized, whatever his language, his origin or his religion, we shall find it difficult to build a real country where people will live in harmony and have a good life.

Mr. Speaker, in 1867 at the outset of parliament as we know it the rules of the House of Commons of Canada recognized only the right to ask questions in writing. We have made a lot of progress since that time. Members of parliament later agreed to amend the rules so that questions might be put but not only in writing. However at that time rules were very stict. To ask a question to a minister you had to give him a 48 hours' notice and later it was recognized that oral questions might facilitate understanding and be more expeditive. I have been sitting here for many years and I remember that in the beginning the oral question period was reserved for members sitting on your left. It was a practice that opposition members could ask questions to government members on administration, the use of public funds, the policy considered by the government on such or such matter, even on an international matter.

Everybody seemed satisfied but after a certain time members sitting in the back rows, "backbenchers" as we called them—I do not like that word because I think that a member is a representative of the people just as any other whether he sits in the fifth row or the first row. This is my concept of the member of parliament. We should not belittle the members sitting on the fifth, the second or the first row. Everybody cannot sit at the same place. Sir, you are the Speaker in this House. You have assistants but you cannot all sit in the chair at the same time. It is one thing that must be clearly understood.

So, as time went on we have come to amend the standing orders of this House and tonight we are discussing Standing Order 43 which has been amended many times and we have changed the business order. The most recent one is the one we have for the opening of the House, after the members' prayer which I would like the public in our gallery to attend. That will come one day because such wish has been expressed by the House. It is a matter of procedure. Mr. Speaker, you already wrote to me about it and I understand, but the committee on procedure was quite stubborn. It is amazing how long it takes them to reach a decision and spell out a procedure so that the public could follow our first consideration, the prayer to God. In any event, Mr. Speaker, we did unanimously agree that motions under Standing Order 43 should be presented at two o'clock, after the prayer, until 2.15 p.m.

● (2032)

We agreed to this and you once recognized that government members had the same privilege as those who sit on your left to introduce motions under Standing Order 43. I have nothing to say against this. We are all parliamentarians, and I am convinced that government members have the best intentions in the world if they decide to move motions under the provisions of this Standing Order when they consider that it is in the public interest.

Mr. Speaker, like many others I have often wondered why it is that the Speaker rejects a motion and says that there is no agreement when we, at the other end of the House, have not heard the "no" of the member who opposes the motion. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that I have often raised this point, and I rely on your conscience as the Speaker of this House. I accept your decisions and do not criticize them, but since we have an opportunity this evening to discuss this matter, I want to say that I agree with my colleague for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), who spoke earlier quite honestly and frankly and said that the one who opposes introduction of the motion should have the courage to rise and identify himself, so that the public will know that someone does not agree. We could perhaps consider this matter further, but I believe that eventually—and the sooner the better—we shall need a specific interpretation on this point so that the Speaker will not be put in a difficult situation. I understand that it is not always easy to preside over the proceedings of this House, and I have always respected the rulings of the Speaker. But since we are discussing this matter tonight, I believe that Mr. Speaker has wanted to show generosity towards parliamentarians and allow them to express themselves on this matter so that we shall agree on a procedure which will be acceptable to all parliamentarians.

Mr. Speaker, I was struck by something that the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) said when he stated that government members do not have the opportunity to reply to motions introduced by members on your left. I am in total disagreement, Mr. Speaker, because when you accept a motion under Standing Order 43, every member in this House has an opportunity to be heard. And I do not feel it is quite acceptable that you appear to grant preference to hon. members on your left only, because when you find that that motion was not opposed when put forward, when debated, every member had an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Speaker, we have come a long way these last ten years or so. We accepted as a fait accompli that government members may put questions to minister during question period. I remember in the beginning this met with tremendous opposition. Indeed we tried by every means at our disposal, and I supported this personally, to prevent parliamentary secretaries from putting questions to their ministers. There should be a darned end somewhere—they are continuously—

An hon. Member: Discrimination!

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Well, now! That may be the hon. member's view, but I should be given a chance to express my views, and then we shall see. I cannot accept as flowing from common sense that an hon. member, a parliamentary secretary may put questions to his minister in this House, when that same member spent the morning with him. This has all the appearances of a gimmick set up for promotion's sake.

Mr. Speaker, particularly since we have had television in this House it seems like certain members—and I do take the responsibility for what I am saying, as I indeed always do, as General de Gaulle would say—

An hon. Member: Was he a separatist?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): —no, he was the president of his country, but he was not a separatist. I am a member of parliament for my country and I am not a separatist; I am a citizen of my country, a representative of my fellow countrymen in this House, and I want to express myself freely. Mr. Speaker, I would not want people to be left with the impression that there are a lot of people in the House when a minister rises to explain the nature of his bill, and members from the other end of the House move in like bees to sit behind the minister and give people the impression that the House is full of members. At that point, Mr. Speaker, if the cameras were to turn to the other seats in the House the viewers would be in for a surprise. I can uphold my opinions even if members are making a lot of noise. I am used to it.

I would like to say this, that as genuine democrats we should act openly, sit down seriously at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization and discuss whether Standing Order 43 should somehow be amended so we can use it more effectively to consider issues that arise, as that happened today. But, Mr. Speaker, I am so happy to be able to say to the minister in charge of urban affairs how much I shared the opinion he expressed at five o'clock.

An hon. Member: He is not here.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): It does not matter, I am paying tribute to him, and he will be told about it. He is the one who said that when—

An hon. Member: We do not make errands!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): You do not make errands, and I hope you will not make errors either!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): You are free to interpret that as you want.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Urban Affairs said that when a member of parliament moves a motion for discussion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 then he should have the privilege of asking the same minister a question on the same subject. I agree, Mr. Speaker, and there is a certain logic in that statement. I am happy to have the opportunity which has been given to me to take the floor now. I presented a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 to ask the House to urge the Minister of Finance to use his authority over the Bank of Canada for which he answers to the House as minister. I was a little disappointed to see him wash his hands of the matter, saying that if the interest rates were raised, it was the responsibility of the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, after that, during question period I had the opportunity and the good luck, thanks to your generosity, Mr. Speaker, to ask a few questions to the Minister of Finance on the subject and he tried to answer as clearly as possible, but he did not succeed in enlightening me much, not more than the other members of parliament. In any event, with our present procedure, we would not expect more from Standing Order 43. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I think we should change our procedure in order to do justice to all hon. members and at the same time to make full use of the time of the House so that it may be more profitable.

How time flies, Mr. Speaker! Last week we were studying Bill C-10 relating to family allowances. Because of some difficulties we faced, we were unable to resume the debate on that bill today. But that is part of our parliamentary system. However, if we really want to keep the House running efficiently, we must get toghether and change some of our rules.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Charlevoix is now playing behind the curtains over there. Frankly, I am sure that deep in his heart he would like it better if we could do more in this House. Today the Liberal party sits to your right, Mr. Speaker, but the future belongs to God. Tomorrow perhaps another party will be sitting to your right, but we will still live with the same rules. Government members who are now playing a game in trying to limit our rights as parliamentarians, maybe just for the fun of it, might have to live with what they find so funny today. Let us be careful. Tomorrow is coming fast.

Mr. Speaker, those are the remarks I wanted to make in this debate. My party and I are prepared to cooperate with the House and the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization in order that everyone may express himself freely, express the will of the people he represents and stand for the interests of his country for it to continue to grow and us to continue to love it, while working very earnestly at the achievement of our everyday duties. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your patience and I hope that the suggestions I made will be taken under consideration, as I listened to the remarks made by others and to which I am still ready to listen, in order to strengthen our democratic system and make it the best in the world.

Point of Order—Mr. MacEachen

• (2042)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are three members now seeking the floor; they were doing so earlier in the day. While I would not ever want to prevent any member from speaking, perhaps I could indicate to the House, and it may not surprise hon. members, that with all of the great assistance I have had in sorting out the shortcomings of the Standing Order, I scarcely feel the need for any more. I will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). I really do not know how long we ought to carry on with this; it is a matter that has been pretty thoroughly canvassed, but I now recognize those members who have been seeking the floor for quite some time. Even with that, I ask them to be brief.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief, but I point out that you do not make it any easier. This is a very important debate and I believe that the House is quite rightly seized with it at this time at some length. I think it has been a very useful debate.

At the outset I want to make it clear that I share the view put forward by my House leader and the government House leader that we should crack down on the abuse of Standing Order 43. I know it is difficult for Your Honour because you have to be fair to everybody, but innuendo and unfair or unfounded allegations have no business in the preamble to a motion under Standing Order 43. The motion should be able to stand on its own. Indeed, we should perhaps all follow the example of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in that regard.

I say that because of the importance that I and all members of the House attach to this provision of our Standing Orders. It has assumed a new importance because of the very few opportunities left to private members to put forward grievances. That is very important. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the previous practice of the House. Prior to the change in the Standing Orders, provision was made in the rules of the House to put a motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into committee of the whole on supply. That was a traditional opportunity for members to put forward grievances. It was used to that effect to great advantage. We no longer have supply in the House. Consequently that vehicle for putting forward grievances is no longer open to us. All we have now are Standing Order 43 and the adjournment motion for hon. members to put forward grievances.

With regard to the argument put forward by the government House leader, there is no other way, apart from the grievance aspect of Standing Order 43, for a private member to put forward a motion under our Standing Orders with the proper 48 hours' notice. Without Standing Order 43, a private member of the House would have no way of having a motion placed before the House.

Perhaps it might be worth while to take a look at little ways of improving our procedure without having to refer the whole matter back to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. For the life of me I do not understand why we cannot have the adjournment motion between six and seven o'clock, as it was for a short time. It would give us extra time. It would allow for more publicity on the grievance put forward. After all, the adjournment motion is a grievance procedure. It would take into account the fact that we impose an inconvenience on the staff and the table of the House by extending our sitting from ten to 10.30. We would eliminate that extra half hour by having the adjournment motion at six o'clock. Instead of a half hour debate, we should think in terms of making the adjournment motion a one hour debate. If we did that and tightened up the definition of what is within the rules under Standing Order 43, Your Honour's job might be a great deal easier.

Earlier in the debate Your Honour identified the problem that under the Standing Orders you had to call for private members' business, thereby emphasizing the fact that you really had no discretion under the Standing Orders, especially Standing Order 15, with respect to the debate on motions under Standing Order 43. I would draw Your Honour's attention to Standing Order 15(4) which seems to pre-empt any restrictions that would be placed on the Chair by Standing Order 45(2) regarding debates under Standing Order 43. Standing Order 15(4) reads as follows:

> Except as otherwise provided in these Standing Orders, the order of business for the consideration of the House, day by day, after the daily routine shall be as follows:

It then goes on to announce that. That part of Standing Order 15(4) which states "Except as otherwise provided in these Standing Orders" makes provision, I would argue, for a debate to follow under Standing Order 43. It provides for Standing Order 43 to pre-empt the other rules of the House with regard to daily routine proceedings.

Unless we interpret Standing Order 15(4) in that way, there is no possible way that the House can proceed with a debate under Standing Order 43 in the case where a motion is acceptable, receives unanimous consent and a debate ensues. It seems it is not intended by the rules for the debate to become a government order, which is now the case. The debate becomes a government order because under the interpretation Your Honour has placed on the Standing Orders, you must interrupt the debate at three o'clock to get on with the proceedings as set out in Standing Order 15. I lay that before Your Honour for consideration.

In conclusion, I repeat the importance to the House and the private members of the House of Standing Order 43 as a grievance procedure. I point out that we have very few grievance procedures left in this House since the right to withhold supply was taken out of the House under these same Standing Orders.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few comments to make on this very interesting debate which I feel has gone on too long. I will try not to contribute any more than necessary to its length. However, there are one or two remarks to which I feel there should be some response.

Both the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) made the point that we can say yes to a motion and then debate it. Unless I misunderstand your attitude, Mr. Speaker, I believe that in the event the House agrees unanimously to the presentation of the motion, if he or she stood up you would recognize the proposer of that motion. We have already been through the exercise where a person can then continue speaking until 2.15, at which time the debate is terminated by the commencement of the question period. Your Honour might clarify that point.

I do not think there is any way that we can be assured there can be a response to a motion, which is debated between that period some time after two o'clock and 2.15, by the government party, if it is an opposition motion, or a motion from someone of this side which the government may not particularly like.

Your Honour has said on many occasions that one cannot propose a motion which includes the words "without debate" and have it stick. Because the motion is then debatable, there is no way that, between ourselves, we can come to any agreement, even if there is discussion between the House leaders. We have several independent members in this House and perhaps members of both the government and opposition parties who may consider themselves independent in the sense of not agreeing that there will be no debate.

● (2052)

The problem, then, is one of response to a motion which is not approved unanimously, and one of response if the motion is accepted for debate and, as a result, one person decides to continue talking until 2.15 p.m. so that there is no time to hear a responder to the mover of the motion; or, as happened last week, one of the ministers rises and speaks on a motion proposed to the House.

The hon. member of Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) mentioned that all members have the opportunity to express themselves. That is the problem. There is no mechanism under this Standing Order by which members can express themselves on a motion. One point arises in connection with a remark of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) who discussed the problem of the negative voice not being identified—the anonymity of the person who says no. He made the remark that this is done by someone seated and who therefore should not be heard. Since the response of yeas and nays is given by hon. members from their seats, I hardly think it is a valid point but Your Honour might like to comment. If it is necessary for a person to identify himself I, for one, would be quite happy to do so. In the twenty-ninth parliament we had a well-known "Mr. No" in the House and there was no way that any motion under Standing Order 43 could be debated in those days.

Personally I consider the exercise a waste of time, but since it goes on I have used it and have been recognized by Your Honour. On occasion the motion was even accepted by the House. It does not make the procedure any better though.

One of the problems, is the question of the preamble. So often the preamble contains a lot of material which is objectionable in itself and puts us in the position, in effect, of saying no to the preamble rather than to the motion itself. Sometimes there is not much relationship between the preamble and the motion. This sometimes puts Your Honour in the difficult position of having to rule on whether the motion would be in order. This may more often be the case in the future than it has been up to this time. In my opinion Your Honour has up to this time tended to accept almost all motions. You did not like one of mine a week or so ago, but nevertheless I think there is a tendency to accept motions on the basis that it is up to the House to decide if they may be put.

If we are to be very rigid about these things in future, we are obviously going to engage in lengthy discussion as to the acceptability of a motion and Your Honour will be called upon to make some difficult decisions. I prefer the practice we have been following whereby the House is called upon to make that decision to an extent. For example, quoting from your response to one of my motions, Your Honour said that there was some question as to whether the motion was a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I am not disputing that opinion; all I am saying is that it is an opinion and therefore we could get into frequent argument as to whether a matter is of urgent and pressing necessity or not.

I raise this point because it is not very often that members, when presenting a 43, do discuss first of all just whether it is urgent or whether it is pressing. I took the trouble on the day I mentioned to give some of my reasons, but I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I could have gone on at considerable length explaining why the matter was urgent and pressing and trying to convince you that the motion should be regarded as acceptable. I make this point because I do not believe that any of us would wish to put Your Honour in the position of having to make daily decisions, first of all on the basis of whether a matter is urgent and pressing and whether the motion is acceptable. In other words, we could conceivably be facing procedural debates on every 43 brought forward. I am of the opinion that it is probably easier to say no to every 43 automatically and get rid of the problem that way.

It is true, and I admit to it readily, that we are using Standing Order 43 to make a point. I went fishing a week or so ago and I caught a big fish, because the very next day the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands responded, but rather strangely. Her criticism appeared in the preamble to the motion rather than in the motion itself. I found it quite effective in that even though a motion had been proposed—certainly not put because it was allowed to stand for this particular discussion—there was a response, a response, quite frankly, that I was looking for and it came. Even the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) later that day—at three o'clock—spoke of the motion as being a statement of devastating consequences.

This brings me to another point, which is that Standing Order 43 does not refer to importance. If we want to take this to an absurd degree, there are many matters in our own individual ridings which are of urgent and pressing necessity on a daily basis but are certainly not particularly important and may not be matters properly for discussion in this House. I think we should consider carefully whether we want to bring all these small details into the House for discussion.

There is only one more comment I wish to make here and that concerns the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). He talked about cracking down on the abuse. He said that a motion should be able to stand on its own. We can readily achieve that end by cutting out the preamble completely. Possibly we could reach a ready agreement among ourselves that motions from now on should be presented "neat", that is to say, with no preamble to discuss urgent and pressing necessity, no preamble to set up the motion. The motion should stand on its own and be one which is acceptable to the Chair. That would get rid of the lengthy preamble which, in the minds of many, is the most objectionable feature of motions under Standing Order 43 at the present time.

The hon. member also said that Standing Order 43 could pre-empt the other rules of the House—he was quoting Standing Order 15(4). Whatever your ruling on this, sir, if you agreed with the hon. member for St. John's East it could be of serious consequence.

Of course, one way of getting out of the difficulty automatically would be to make sure that every 43 received a "No". From my own point of view, I believe the problem has arisen not so much because of the multitude of motions, sometimes interesting, sometimes humorous, sometimes inconsequential, as from the attempt more recently to put into such motions matters of serious consequence to the country, to the government and even to the opposition from its point of view. This got everyone excited about the consequences of leaving unanswered a question of grave national concern.

I do not know how we can get around this difficulty. Frankly, at the present time, since nothing has been suggested and we are having a glorified and rather lengthy debate, it seems to me that, whatever Your Honour may have to say in the future between approximately 2.05 and 2.15, some of us will continue to rise and propose motions under Standing Order 43.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I shall attempt to be brief. As a backbencher, Standing Order 43 is the vehicle I try to use when I have to put forward matters of urgent and pressing necessity. I try to keep my motions as clear, precise and to the point as possible.

• (2102)

I come from an area where people do not receive daily newspapers. Crisis situations are brought on by government departments and Crown corporations, and I can cite a couple of them. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was being phased out in Churchill. The people of that community did not know that CHFC was to be phased out. I was the first to hear about it here in Ottawa. I telephoned the mayor of Churchill and a general meeting was held there. Everyone was up in arms. It was a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to that community. Standing Order 43 was the only vehicle I had at my disposal on the day I received feedback from the mayor of Churchill. Through the Standing Order I was able to bring the matter to the attention of the government.

When hon. members on the government side say "no" to motions under this rule, sometimes neither the minister involved nor his parliamentary secretary becomes aware of what is going on in certain remote areas. People in those areas cannot pick up the Sun, the Globe and Mail or the Gazette, and I think many motions under this rule are the result of newspaper stories.

My constituency does not have the benefit of daily newspapers, and I feel that the motions which I propose here are always on matters of emergency because the people in my constituency do not really know what this government is doing or what is happening. That is why things become matters of urgent and pressing necessity. It is very frustrating to put forward a reasonable preamble followed by a motion and then to hear "no", because I do not have a chance to explain just what the problem is.

Quite some time ago Your Honour did recognize in question period hon. members who earlier had proposed motions under Standing Order 43. That way hon. members could follow up their motions under the rule by asking the government questions. Answers were received. If an hon. member did not get an answer, he could resort to the late show. That was a good system because in one day or within a week a member could follow through and perhaps get an answer. A matter which involves the phasing out of an important service in a small community is something that is urgent and pressing, and a vehicle is needed so that a member can convey the message to the minister involved, who is not always aware of the situation. Taking any of that vehicle away is really taking away a private member's input in this House.

I would like to leave that with Your Honour because I do not feel I abuse the rule. Perhaps there are times when it is abused, but Standing Order 43 is the one vehicle I have. My constituency does not have a newspaper so that I can generate from it motions under Standing Order 43, but I feel that the motions I have proposed have been genuine.

Mr. Speaker: I indicated that I would like to close this discussion with the hon. members who have just spoken. However, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) was referred to in an earlier contribution in the debate, and I think it only fair that one member who has been singled out by another ought at least to have some time to make a contribution or a counter-balancing contribution.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) has been present during the debate and I believe he was trying to get the floor before five o'clock. I hope both hon. members will be brief so that we can close the discussion.

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I was not in the House when a minister criticized my use of motions under Standing Order 43. I feel very sad because I had hoped the minister would understand the grave problems, I as a member of parliament face when questioning a minister who does not even bring his estimates to committee. Sometimes, I find this minister very hard to question. Where there is smoke there is sometimes fire, and one has to be very careful about that. Sometimes I think the minister protests too much. The minister to whom I refer has three jobs, and he has many responsibilities. As a member of parliament, I have to use every tool at my disposal.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: We are on a point of order.

Mrs. Pigott: Members of parliament have to use motions under Standing Order 43. They have to use questions, debate and the late show. Hon. members have to do everything they can to get this minister to listen to them. There are serious problems in this ministers' departments. He is responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. There are demonstration projects about which I have questions I want answered. There are questions regarding NCC tendering practices. There are questions regarding York Place. One charge has been laid, but I hope there will be many more. There are hundreds of questions regarding Les Terrasses, and I have to use all the tools at my disposal to question this minister.

Standing Order 43, is a very important tool to backbench members. I appreciate this opportunity to say, that I am glad I have this tool with which to bring matters to the attention of a minister.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am one of those who is a Standing Order 43 enthusiast. I always enjoy the wit and care with which motions under this rule are prepared. I am fascinated by the way the parties opposite co-ordinate their strategies so as to use Standing Order 43, as well as the question period to their maximum effect. However, if anybody was to look in all honesty at the Standing Orders, and compare what they see with what we see regarding Standing Order 43, he would clearly be driven up the wall if he was trying to find out what was urgent and pressing in Canada. The first thing we have to do in looking at this, is to say that the way in which the rule is being used may be appropriate, but it is certainly not the way the rule was written.

The second point I should make is that, like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I am also guilty of having tried to rearrange the rules of the House of Commons in order to do something about Standing Order 43. I was a party to the move to take it from the end of the question period and to put it before the question period. We did exert some control over the abuses which existed at that point.

Having listened to the members on both sides of the House who have spoken, I think it is quite clear that there is concern about the abuses which have crept into the use of Standing Order 43. Everyone has agreed, in that regard, and I think we have heard some imaginative solutions to the problem. I really did not worry about Standing Order 43 until I listened to a speech given by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). That speech is recorded at page 521 of Hansard for October 26, and in it the hon. member made an interesting comment, which I would like to quote before commenting further, as follows:

> Just the other day a Liberal spokesman, the parliamentary secretary for urban affairs, came up with a very unique solution. His solution—and I have heard no minister repudiate what he had to say—was to discontinue all transfer payments to the provinces for social programs, whether for health, welfare or housing, social policy equalization. He would discontinue the whole lot.

What is important about that is not the criticism of the motion moved by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). That is perfectly legitimate and understandable. What is important—"and I have heard no minister repudiate what he has had to say"—is that there is no chance to repudiate anything proposed under Standing Order 43.

The essence of this place, according to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), is debate, but there is no debate under Standing Order 43. The problem which faces all of us and which has been discussed by many hon. members is that under this particular procedure there is no opportunity for a fair exchange of views. If we are talking about something which is urgent and pressing and which demands debate but there is no provision for such debate under our rules, there is no discussion. So the rule has become bad. Its utilization has become indifferent. We have something which at one point had importance in our rule book, but which has now become the focus for matters of trivia about which we seem to hear much from hon. members opposite in this House.

● (2112)

Now, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned before that I thought some imaginative solutions had been developed by members on the other side. I think the House leader on the opposition side, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), made an interesting comment, and it is one with which I personally find a great deal of favour. Basically he said we should look at it from the point of view of the two criteria developed in Standing Order 43. They are that members must rise and explain the reason their motion is of urgent and pressing necessity, how the world will stop if the House of Commons does not stop its other proceedings to debate the motion and decide on it. Then Your Honour would base your decision on whether or not the circumstances outlined by the hon. member were sufficiently grave to allow the motion to be put. If Your Honour made that decision, then the motion could be put and we could dispose of it in the way which has become a tradition in the House of Commons.

It seems to me that the point is well taken because if we look at the operation of Standing Order 26, which has a relationship with Standing Order 43, we see that for example, the same terminology is used. The only difference is that in the case of Standing Order 43 one proceeds immediately with consent while under Standing Order 26 Your Honour decides whether or not the criteria have been met. On that basis, it seems to me that there is no reason why Your Honour could not permit in this case a mini debate to take place on the question of urgency before allowing a motion to be put.

I think that is the essence of the frustration which exists on this side of the House and, I think, among other members who are interested in a number of the subjects brought up from time to time under Standing Order 43. It is patently obvious the way in which this rule, as it has been interpreted in the last few years, discriminates against the very essence of the House of Commons, which is the clash of opposite views and the element of truth as a result of debate. The way we have operated under Standing Order 43 certainly goes against that very principle.

I think that Standing Order 43 at one time played a legitimate function in our rule book. I am sure there were times when the escape hatch of the rule, which said we could deal with a matter of urgent consideration without the necessity of a 48-hour waiting period—which is the normal way we approach things in the House—was used, and it would be a useful rule; but it does strike me that the problem we have to face now with Standing Order 43 is that it does not do what it is supposed to do. It has degenerated as a rule and it makes us a laughing stock in terms of what we do with the rule and what is written in our rule book.

The other point I wanted to make—which was a point made by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) earlier this day—is this: The reason we are raising this problem is the impact that television is having on our proceedings. Television cameras pick up a member standing up and proposing a motion under Standing Order 43. Nothing is done and people say: "Why wasn't there a debate? Why wasn't there a decision made?"

It seems to me that this is only the beginning of the kinds of questions we must ask ourselves in terms of the way our rules make our chamber look to the audience outside. Until now people who came to watch the House of Commons were itinerant strangers, by and large. Very few people come here for major recreation; very few people follow our rules in debates of this nature. But the fact is that we have opened the doors, some fresh air is blowing in these stale corridors and we have to blow the cobwebs out of our rule book. An examination of Standing Order 43 can be one of the more important steps.

The last point with which I want to deal is the question of private members. I am a professional private member in the House of Commons, much more so than many of those members who have risen to speak on behalf of private members. Because I have been a private member longer than they have, and being a private member on this side is a lot more difficult than being one on the other side. The points I want to make have to deal with that factor.

The first factor is that I have noticed in the last five or six years—but particularly since television has come to the House—the desire, the greed even, of the parties to organize the time to their best advantage. On the basis of that, those of us in all parties who sit on the back benches have lost the rights, the privileges and the time that we used to have in the House. It used to be at one time that during the question period the parties would take up a little bit of the time, perhaps the first 15 or 20 minutes, but I notice that the time the parties are trying to grab now is slowly extending. I am certain that parties have a legitimate function to play in our political system, but it seems to me that we have to look at isolating some of the time that is available to members of parliament in the question period and in the debates of the House for private members on both sides of the House. I find it very difficult to accept the pious remarks on behalf of the private member which are made by certain frontbenchers on the side who have been the plotters and the schemers and who have been largely successful in removing that power away from the private members.

The second point I want to make about the private member is that, while we have more opportunity in the House of Commons to raise grievances and concerns for our constituencies, in theory and in point of fact the parties have again taken over. For example, I look at the utilization of time by the parties in terms of the supply day motions. We used to be able to get some time for grievances when the supply motion was debated on the floor of the House of Commons—not much but some time. Now we get almost none. Maybe members on the other side should present some general motions and just allow the backbenchers some free form operations once in a while to make certain we have a more ample opportunity to express the concerns of our constituents.

My last point concerning the private member has to do with the question period. I mentioned that Standing Order 43 to a large extent has become and adjunct of the question period. It seems to me that those of us who sit on the back benches on this side will want to have more of the fair share of the time that is available to backbenchers in general. I know that since you have been in the chair, sir, more backbenchers on this side have been recognized on motions under Standing Order 43 and on questions. We think that is an appropriate way to go about it. But we think also that government backbenchers—irrespective of which party forms the government—should have a more legitimate right to the question period. My information is that in Great Britain questions are alternated between the opposition and the government, and the same applies in the parliament of Australia, and nobody has been able to convince me that democracy there is in worse shape than it is in Canada. It seems to me that the government belongs to everybody and we want our fair crack at it too.

Mr. Speaker: I indicated on two earlier occasions this evening, I think, that the discussion should end here. I did want to extend recognition this evening to members who, throughout this debate, have been trying to get the floor. But now I think we have had ample discussion on this subject. Let me say that I want to thank those who contributed this evening for being very much to the point, very concise and very brief, in addition to being very helpful. Of course, the Chair never knows when it is going to get the best help and from what source. I have had contributions made tonight which have indicated on one hand, for example, that we should co-operate in minimizing the misuse of Standing Order 43 in order to strengthen respect for the rule, and on the other hand I have had suggestions and attitudes which have expressed points of view different from what I might have expected in respect of the use of this rule.

It is a very useful rule, one that we use very frequently and one that is an important part of our procedures. However, two or three times this evening I have heard re-emphasized the importance of a grievance procedure of some sort. The absence of that direct confrontation in a grievance procedure has been considered, I think, throughout the long debate this afternoon in the consideration of this rule which I think is so important.

The almost total absence of that grievance procedure is one of the difficulties we face in attempting to use this rule to do something which it was not intended to do but for which nevertheless there is no other convenient vehicle. Therefore, the suggestion that we should respect the rule a little more and perhaps tighten its application, but maintain very carefully the right of members of the House to take advantage of it on a consistent basis, is an observation that is certainly not lost on the Chair.

I wanted to attempt something that all hon. members agree was overdue, and that was, first of all, a very full and complete discussion on this important Standing Order. The second thing that is overdue is, after the discussion, a review by the Chair to pull together some of the salient points that have been made in the discussion of this rule. I will attempt to set them out with the greatest clarity possible.

• (2122)

I do not know if I can achieve it, but within a few days I should be able to respond to this very excellent and thorough discussion by attempting to bring forward a catalogue of the considerations we should have in mind in the use of this rule. We will see what ones we can usefully improve just simply for our own handling of the rule, and what ones might have to be improved in some other way. It is an undertaking which I am glad to embark upon. I only hope that it will finish with some quality. We all need to understand this rule a little better and perhaps apply it a little more with the intention for which it was originally framed. I will attempt to do that. In the meantime, this brings us in our proceedings to orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CHILD TAX CREDIT

The House resumed from Friday, November 3, consideration in committee of Bill C-10, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide for a child tax credit and to amend the Family Allowances Act—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: Clause 1 is under consideration.

On clause 1—

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, before I defer to my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe, I should like to direct a question to the minister regarding the letter of the Chief Commissioner of the Human Rights Commission. The Minister of Finance has had this letter since last Thursday. Has it been referred to the law officers of the Crown? Have the law officers of the Crown satisfied themselves that the provisions of the bill now before the House do not infringe upon or violate the spirit or the letter of the Canadian Human Rights Act?

Miss Bégin: I have the pleasure to assure the House that I have received from the Minister of Justice the assurance that this bill does not infringe upon the Canadian Human Rights Act. Of course, it has been tested as per tradition. It has been certified that it does not contravene the Bill of Rights.

Mr. McGrath: I will defer to my colleague in a moment. The minister has referred to the opinion of her colleague, the Minister of Finance.

Miss Bégin: No. I referred to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. McGrath: Before we pass clause 1 of this bill, can the minister table before the committee the reply which will go out to the Chief Commissioner of the Human Rights Commission from the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Justice? Perhaps that will satisfy the committee.

Miss Bégin: It is not the practice to table such correspondence. The question can easily be asked of the minister tomorrow during question period.

Miss MacDonald: This is the time.

Miss Bégin: The Minister of Justice is not in the House at this time. If the hon. member wants to question him, he will have to wait until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon. I have received from the Minister of Justice the assurance which I gave the committee a few moments ago.

Miss MacDonald: The letter referred to by the hon. member for St. John's East was written to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is channelling this bill through the House for the Minister of Finance. Since the letter from the Human Rights Commissoner has been read into the record and made available to all parties, it is perfectly proper to ask if a response by the Minister of Finance to that letter has been forwarded. If so, will the Minister of National Health and Welfare make it available to us? It concerns very much a point of contention in this debate.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to repeat my statement since I do not think it was understood. If in his capacity the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) answers Mr. Fairweather, the Chief Commissioner of the Human Rights Commission, the onus will be on him to decide whether or not he wants to table this document. After the press gallery and the opposition parties received a copy of it, the movers of this bill, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and myself received late Thursday afternoon a letter from Mr. Fairweather indicating as I said very ambiguously, that there was possible discrimination. This was proved by the fact that the opposition parties interpreted very differently the paragraph in which Mr. Fairweather expressed his concern. I am neither Minister of Justice nor Minister of Finance. It is our responsibility—and I am speaking on behalf of us both tonight—to state that we are statisfied and my colleague the Minister of Justice agrees with me on this point that the studying of Bill C-10 does not violate in any way the Human Rights Act.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, approximately three days ago I spoke privately to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. I asked him to be prepared at some future time to give us a much more detailed breakdown concerning the expenditure savings and tax cut ramifications involved in this bill. I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary if he can supply some of that information now.

At the time I referred to this, I made reference to the initial speech of the Minister of Finance on October 31, as reported at page 653 of Hansard. At that time the minister said that this was a tax cut amounting to some $810 million a year. Basically he was referring to the $200 per child tax credit. Will the parliamentary secretary give us the details as to how many people are involved in that tax cut? What year is he referring to specifically?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the simplest way around this would be to table the schedule which I think will be of some assistance to the hon. member for York-Simcoe. With the leave of the House I am prepared to do that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, nothing can be tabled while we are in committee. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary can ask the committee to put it on the record as part of Hansard. Tabling is of no use to most of us; it just goes to the table.

Mr. Martin: If that is agreeable, I would be happy to do it in that way.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to authorize the parliamentary secretary to present the schedule to the committee for inclusion in today's Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For table above referred to, see Appendix "A".]

● (2132)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I take it this is acceptable to the committee. Could the parliamentary secretary give us some photostat copies of what presumably will be appearing in Hansard?

Mr. Martin: I would be pleased to do that if I can arrange it through the services of the House at this time.

Mr. Stevens: While the services of the House are being arranged for, perhaps I could ask the parliamentary secretary a few questions on those statistics which I have not seen as yet. Could he tell us the specific year to which the $810 million refers in so-called tax cuts? What year is involved?

Mr. Martin: That relates to the year 1979-80.

Mr. Stevens: That is the fiscal year 1980. Could the parliamentary secretary give us similar figures for the ensuing four fiscal years, indicating what the government anticipates will be the tax cut or saving for each of those years?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, we do not have those figures available at this time. This would depend on many factors including the rate of inflation and various other things. I do not have those figures available.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I think prior to the passage of this legislation it would be important that the government supply us with its forecasts or projections as to what those tax cuts will amount to not only in the fiscal year 1980 but in the ensuing four years. The Minister of Finance said that the financing of this tax cut would take various forms, and the largest item of the savings in federal expenditures amounting to approximately $690 million a year had reference to the reduction in the family allowance from $25 and some cents to $20. Will the parliamentary secretary confirm that the statistics we will be receiving in due course give a more precise breakout as to how the $690 million expenditure reduction is arrived at and, secondly, what year this refers to?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, we are talking about the same fiscal year, 1979-80. Of course, the amount payable in January will be $20 plus the indexed amount. I believe that will work out to $28.80. The hon. member for York-Simcoe made reference to $20. It will actually be $28.80, but it will be less, of course, than what the amount would otherwise be, indexed on the basis of $26.

Mr. Stevens: I am not sure I understood the parliamentary secretary correctly. The clause that specifically refers to this in the bill before us is clause 10, which states that notwithstanding subsection (1), the amount of family allowance to be paid for a month in 1979 will be $20. The parliamentary secretary says it will be $28.

An hon. Member: With indexing it would have been that. The saving is the difference between $28.80 and $20.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I would like a couple of minutes to go into this a little further. The figure will actually be indexed on the basis of $20. The $28.80 is what it would have been, indexed on the previous amount. With the reduction it is brought down to $20. I would like to check this out further and get back to the hon. member, if I may, a little later in the debate.

Mr. Stevens: Let me remind the parliamentary secretary that we are dealing with hundreds of millions of dollars. I should have expected that with three officials sitting before him the answers to these elementary questions would be pretty readily forthcoming.

Perhaps I could put this question to the hon. member. It is certainly my understanding that, notwithstanding the possible indexing to a level of $28.80, the effect of clause 10 would be to reduce the 1979 monthly payment to $20, which the Minister of Finance states will result in a saving of $690 million. That presumably begins in calendar year 1979, which will mean it will be felt in fiscal year 1980. What will be the effect in fiscal year 1981?

Mr. Martin: As I indicated earlier, Mr. Chairman, we do not have the figures beyond 1980. It has not been past practice to make public the figures beyond one year's calculation, and we do not have them in respect of this bill.

Mr. Stevens: Let me put this to the parliamentary secretary. Is it not a fact that the effect of this bill is to reduce from $28.80 to $20 per month the family allowance during 1979? If you read the Family Allowances Act, unless a subsequent bill is passed the old indexed family allowance level will be revived in every ensuing year; is that right?

Mr. Martin: I would just like to clarify a point made earlier. The payments will be $20 as of January, 1979. They will then be indexed in subsequent years in the normal way on a base of $20 per month.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I would ask that the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the parliamentary secretary double-check that, because on reading the act it does not appear to be clear that indexing will take place in respect of only the $20 allowance. The amendment proposed in clause 10 is that, notwithstanding subsection (1), to which I referred, the amount of the family allowance to be paid per month in 1979 will be $20. If you read the section being amended it seems very clear that indexing is on the base as set out in 1974 and that it will continue in that way.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, the understanding is quite clear that the payment will be $20 for 1979 and indexing will take place in the normal way. In 1980 the payments will be higher, based on the indexing which will be carried out just as in the past. In other words, what this means is a new base starting in 1979.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate it if the parliamentary secretary would check that once again with his officials to make sure that is the effect of this amendment. Because as we read it, that does not appear to be the case. Let me draw the parliamentary secretary's attention to the actual wording of the Family Allowances Act. Section 13(1) sets out very clearly that family allowance from 1974 on will be indexed. I presume that section will still be in place, that all we are doing by the existing bill is making a special allowance for 1979, and that, notwithstanding section 13(1), in 1979 the actual family allowance will only be $20 per month.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, that is the section of the Family Allowances Act being amended by this bill and we will just have to take a look at it with our officials. The hon. member for York-Simcoe is partially right. The payment will be $20 per month for 1979, but I am not sure that he is correct in his assertion that this in any way precludes the indexing program which will carry on into 1980 and beyond.

• (2142)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, judging from the parliamentary secretary's response, I do not think that he comprehends the full thrust of what I am saying. The Family Allowances Act as amended, if this bill is passed, provides for a $28.80 payment per person, but only for the one year unless the parliamentary secretary can show me otherwise. That amendment is simply to the effect that during 1979 the rate shall be reduced to $20. My question is twofold. Can either the minister or the parliamentary secretary show me anything in this bill that amends the Family Allowances Act further than that; and, secondly, if that is the effect of the amendment—the $690 million saving referred to by the Minister of Finance—then it provides for a saving only during 1979, because immediately the old system will be put in place after 1979 and there will be a higher cost to the treasury in the ensuing years.

Mr. Martin: I have consulted with the officials and I find that section 13(1), subsection (1) of the Family Allowances Act of 1973 does indeed provide for this indexation. I see the point being made by the hon. member. He mentions section 13(1)(1) as the section being repealed, and I think we are referring here to section 13(1.1). Certainly the suggestion that the member is putting forward is indeed incorrect. If there is language which must be reviewed here we can do that, but it is clearly the intent of this amendment to change the base for only 1979; then the indexation will carry on in the normal way subsequent to that.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if the parliamentary secretary would check that out, perhaps tomorrow we could deal more fully with the true impact of clause 10 of the amending bill before us. I would point out to the parliamentary secretary, if he has not looked at section 13(1.1), that section that he is repealing is simply an earlier section which provided for 1976 that the ongoing family allowance rate would be $22.08, and that confirms what I am saying. For 1976, notwithstanding the indexing that was in place, the amendment of that year stated that the rate would be $22.08. In this bill the government is proposing that, notwithstanding the over-all effect of the section, the rate will actually be $20. My point is that, just as the old indexing took over in 1976, the same will occur in 1980 if there is no further amendment.

Mr. Martin: If I understand the hon. member, what he is saying is that he is not satisfied that the amendments as they are presently written will provide for the indexation to start once again. The intention is very clear that the indexation will start once again, and it is merely a matter of clearing up with the officials whether the wording of the amendment is indeed accomplishing that.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps we can come back to this tomorrow when there will be a further explanation concerning the true impact of both the anticipated tax cut and the expenditure savings which the government is representing will help finance what it is proposing.

I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the brochure put out with regard to the refundable child tax credit, various statements are made, including the statement on page 2 that the combined effect of these three changes—referring to the family allowance reduction, reducing the higher exemption in the personal income tax for dependent children aged 16 to 17 and the elimination of the $50 per child reduction—will affect 1.9 million families with the greatest need and provide a small decrease for 1.7 million families with incomes above the national average. Those two figures add up to 3.6 million families. Could the minister explain why, when we check the income tax returns for the calendar year 1976, there are only 1.7 million taxpayers who reported, either on a non-taxable basis or on a taxable basis, any family allowances? Would the minister give us the basis for her statement that 3.6 million families will benefit?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has not given the title of that document or the name of the company that printed it. As far as I can see from the cover, he is referring to a publication by the National Council on Welfare. This organization is an advisory body to me and prints its own opinions based on its own understanding of the various matters in the field of social policy. I do not know the basis for their calculations, and I would point out that it is an independent organization.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister if she disagrees with the document. Presumably she has had an opportunity to review it, so may I take it that what is stated in this brochure is correct, as far as the minister is concerned?

Miss Bégin: I do not have a copy of the document with me. I read it with great interest, and I was particularly pleased that such a body—with half its membership composed of people with low incomes and the other half of people who are professionals, working in the field to ease poverty—approved the new tax credit.

I did notice a few small errors, but I have not checked the figures. I do not recall the errors I noticed, but they were not important to the people working on the bill. For instance, I do not think that the council knew that the concept was based on net income. They may have thought that the tax credit would be subtracted from taxes and owed by fathers, which is not the case. If taxes are owed by fathers, the income tax people will get after them in the usual way and in a separate operation. Once again, I did not check the figures as to their accuracy, but the officials consider the work of the council to be satisfactory.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I have now had an opportunity to review the copy of the schedule which the parliamentary secretary gave to us, and which presumably will appear in Hansard. Frankly, it is totally unacceptable. It gives us no more additional information than the Minister of Finance gave us earlier. What I am requesting is a meaningful presentation that shows the basis upon which the various figures were arrived at. When the Minister of Finance says that there is to be a tax cut amounting to some $810 million, I think the House is entitled to know how many people are involved and the basis for that figure. This House is entitled to find out, for example, with regard to the $690 million saving in family allowances, how many taxpayers are involved and what income levels are considered in the act. This information is available. The reason I feel that we should strongly request this information, is that this is the only way we can make a reasonable forecast as to what the impact of these measures will be in the coming years.

● (2152)

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, the fact that we are living with this deficit of almost $12 billion is partly due to the ad hoc approach of this government, to hundreds of millions of dollars of expenditures. For them to come before this committee so ill-prepared to justify their request is unacceptable, to put it mildly.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to clarify one point. The last accusation made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe is unacceptable. He speaks of ad hockery without any reason whatsoever. As we have never seen him in social policies, it is understandable he does not know what goes on.

I should like to tell him a few facts which are public knowledge. Two years ago the first interdepartmental task force of finance, revenue and national health and welfare was created and put to work on this particular problem, of eventually replacing the tax exemptions by tax credits for the children of Canada. Then in August or September when I first became minister, the second task force was appointed to continue that work in more detail. The report was finished in March. This is public knowledge so I do not understand what the hon. member means when he speaks of ad hockery.

[Miss Bégin.]

I do not want to insult the hon. member by answering in lieu of my colleague, but he did not tell the parliamentary secretary and he did not tell me what information he wanted. Now he says he wants us to do the calculation. We can give him the number of children in Canada times 12 months a year, plus the savings per year. That is easy to do and he should be able to do it himself. If he does not have the elementary facts which appear in our proceedings, we will provide them to him.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, the minister indicated that the mother will receive the monthly cheque for $20 as well as the $200 maximum per year for every child. I should like to ask the minister to confirm whether the cheque will be paid to the mother. Also, if marriage breakdown has occurred and the father has gained custody of the children through court action, who will then receive the family allowance cheque?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I have answered that question a few times already, but I think it is important to clarify it. Mothers will receive the cheque for the new child tax credit in all cases where mothers already receive the family allowance. In the second instance the hon. member raised, where the father or any other person has the legal custody of the child, that person will receive the tax credit for the child.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I should like to come back to the line of questioning I was pursuing because I think the minister misunderstands my point. Nobody disagrees with the compassionate side of what we are talking about tonight, but I think we owe it not only to the House but to the people of Canada to understand exactly the impact of these amendments on the revenue of this nation. I should like to ask the parliamentry secretary to supply us with the background information that presumably was prepared to arrive at the various estimates set out in the initial speech of the Minister of Finance concerning this bill.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has served on many committees of this House and I have served on some of them with him. I think we are all quite used to the fact that when you receive figures on schedules you normally accept those schedules and do not obtain the various working calculations behind them. If we did, we would be faced with a multitude of figures for each of the committees and for every report from the private sector.

I submit that the detail of the changes are shown on the schedule. That is what we are looking at. It seems unreasonable to suggest we should come up with all the detailed working papers and computer runs that would be necessary to attach to Hansard in order to give the hon. member the type of background information I assume he is seeking.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I wish the parliamentary secretary and the minister would get their act together. The minister just finished telling me that what I was asking was of such an elementary nature that I could put the numbers together myself. This is their bill for which they are asking the House to give approval. If these are elementary facts, surely it is not too much to ask the parliamentary secretary to give us the basis for them. He cannot buffalo me with this computer run stuff. What we need are the supporting facts showing the taxpayers involved, the tax side and the expenditure side.

We are led to believe there will be an $810 million per year revenue cost and the expenditure savings will be $690 million in the case of the family allowances. I can only presume the Minister of Finance will have back-up information. I am not talking about computer runs but basic figures that would enable him to say that. If these figures cannot be produced, we can only guess that they have been pulled out of the air in the hope that they would not be questioned and the bill would be passed without proper documentation.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I would not want to interrupt the hon. member's dialogue with my colleague. He referred to savings made through reductions in family allowances which are part of the money used to create the new child tax credit. This is very easy to figure out. I will give him the figure if he does not have "Facts on Social Policy", which apparently he does not. It is arrived at by calculating the reduction of $8 per month times 12 months, times the number of cheques issued for the children of Canada—7.2 million. That amounts to $690 million. The tax exemption of $50 and the cancellation of the 16 and 17 year olds special tax privileges have been run by computer in the department. I do not have the working papers, which I do not think are necessary.

It seems to me very important to understand that the program finances itself entirely through the reduction in family allowances—the cancellation of a child tax credit of $50, a tax exemption in fact, and the cancellation of fiscal privileges for the 16 and 17-year olds.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I want to place on the record our concern about the fact that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is sitting tonight at a time when the House is in committee of the whole on an important finance bill. This bill has important social implications; we can see that. It deals essentially with family allowances but there are members who have to be at the finance committee who would like to be here. I want to put that to you as a grievance.

Mr. Martin: On that point of order, Mr. Chairman, I understand the reason there is a meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs this evening is that it was specially requested by the finance critic of the official opposition, the hon. member for York-Simcoe. Indeed, we on this side realized the inconvenience that having a meeting tonight would create for members on both sides of this House. However, the meeting was held in order to meet the request of the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

● (2202)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to delay the committee, but I cannot allow the parliamentary secretary to go misinformed. The fact is we were put under a guillotine with regard to Bill C-7. I said initially we could hear Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada. The governor informed us today that the only time he could be here was at eight o'clock tonight, because he goes to Vancouver tomorrow. I said we would not be difficult and if we could accommodate him tonight at eight o'clock, we would. It was the government's move to shorten our time as far as Bill C-7 is concerned, and I hope the view of the parliamentary secretary will in no way prevail.

The Chairman: We are getting into debate. I do not think we are making progress. As chairman of the committee, although I might sympathize with some of the grievances, I have no authority to organize the work of the House. That is done between House leaders. The government has the responsibility of putting forward the business.

It being ten o'clock p.m. it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progess reported.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I trust Your Honour will permit me to point out before this day ends that it was 111 years ago today, on November 6, 1867—

Mr. Woolliams: That you were born.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —that the House of Commons of Canada held its first sitting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: Stanley was there!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How well we have commemorated that day is for someone else to say, but at least I think we have proven that the House of Commons is still alive and well 111 years later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure hon. members appreciate the memory of the hon. member, or his endurance. It is appreciated that this fact has been brought to our attention. At the same time, all of us have a responsibility to continue in the right direction.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

FORESTRY—TASK FORCE ON FUTURE OF CANADIAN FORESTRY SERVICE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on October 31, 1978, I directed a question to the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand) with regard to the problems that have arisen in the forestry service of Canada because of the government's announcement of cutbacks. While my question related to the forestry industry, the forestry ministry and the agencies of the forestry department, and the impact of that department's work on the industry in Canada, the purport of my question in relation to government cutbacks applies to cutbacks of every scientific endeavour of every department of government.

I have not heard for a long time such an outpouring of concern by scientists with regard to the programs that will be affected by this latest series of cutbacks. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) said he intended to be tough. He should also have said the government intended to be stupid in the ill-considered and irrational way in which it has approached these cutbacks.

● (2207)

In my question with respect to forestry management I asked that the government give consideration to the formation of a task force to look at the future of the Canadian Forestry Service and the development and continuation of the federal forestry program. I asked the minister whether he had received that request for the setting up of a task force. He said he had. That request was put to him in a telex on October 12, 1978. The members of the Forestry Institute wanted him to examine the impact of the cuts and the whole relationship with the forestry service. That task force is important not only because it was requested by the specialists in the field but because its report was to be available quickly, much more quickly than was suggested by the minister. The date suggested by the Institute is December 15, 1978.

They asked as well that the cutbacks and changes be deferred until the report was received. That was a reasonable request, Mr. Speaker. In answer to the second request, the minister indicated he would consider the representation which was made by me, and I think it is important that he should do so and examine the matter in the light of the importance of this Institute and its relation to the forest industry.

The forest industry is vast. One of every ten Canadian jobs is connected with forest products. These products sell for $12 billion, 14 per cent of the value of all manufactured goods in Canada. Almost one dollar in every five earned abroad comes from forest products. The industry is our largest source of foreign exchange. Its earnings rival those of agriculture and minerals combined. A third of the world's exports of lumber, pulp and paper come from Canada. About $1 billion in tax revenue accrue to the government from forest products.

When a member of parliament is faced with a mindless and ill-considered cutback program embarked upon by a government which then, as a result of pure politics, changes its position and damages another agency of government, it is legitimate to say that perhaps the time has come when, with respect to these programs, and scientific programs in particular, a rational approach should be taken. So far, a rational approach has not been adopted, particularly with respect to forest products. That is why it is so important to consider favourably this request, coming from people in the Forest Management Institute, so as to ensure that any changes are made in an orderly manner. There are going to be losses. There are going to be changes. But I think we have to consider the importance of the forest industry and whether or not replacement funding can be raised to offset federal spending reductions in the time available, so that we may not lose the continuity of forest management research which has been conducted by the institute. While there is time, I think it is important that the government, through the parliamentary secretary, indicate to us that the ministry will consent to the establishment of this task force.

● (2212)

There have been representations that the specialists involved in the forest industry and in scientific areas of government be placed in other areas. Let us think about it for a moment. Where can we place, except in government, highly specialized men and women? I ask the government to think of the human side of it as well as the scientific side. Programs are stopped, careers are interrupted, and if this approach at rationalization as set forth in the request for the task force which I raised in the House of Commons is undertaken, I believe, with the expertise which is available from those men and women in the forestry service and in other scientific endeavours, ways could be found to give some respect to the proposition of restraint while at the same time not driving a horse and cart through these very important scientific programs which form the basis for job creation potential in those industries as we go down the road.

I ask these questions and request an answer because the answer is important for the people involved in the maintenance of the programs not only in the short term but also in the long term. It is important in the long term because of the employment, the job creation and the technology creation potential which is inherent in these forestry programs, which ought not be interrupted for any purpose. At least, they ought not to be interrupted in a mindless, irrational and blind way. This is the way this government has proceeded, and it has affected research programs in this country mightily. I ask the government to reconsider that mindless and irrational approach.

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the minister has in place a Canadian forestry advisory council chaired by Mr. R. C. Rogers, chairman and chief executive officer of Crown Zellerbach Canada Limited. It has members from labour, industry, the provinces and universities.

The minister met with the council today and asked for its advice on the federal role in promoting the rational use of Canada's forest resources, the needs, priorities and methods for co-ordinating forest research and development in Canada, and on important problems relating to the consumptive and non-consumptive use of Canada's forests. He also discussed with the council the need for a thorough-going review of forest research in Canada.

Since such a review would include the issues raised by staff members of the Forest Management Institute in their telex to the minister, it would not seem necessary to establish the kind of task force suggested by FMI staff.

AIRPORTS—FOOD AND LIQUOR CONCESSION AT DORVAL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to raise tonight has to do with the monopoly which appears to exist in the food and liquor concession at Dorval airport. While I raise this specific question I would like at the same time to open up the whole question of the government's method of tendering for airport services and concessions. This issue is not new. We have heard about Sky Shops and duty-free stores. We heard about the car rental fiasco of 1976, and now we have reference to this rather extraordinary monopoly involving a firm known as AFC.

The airport business is big business. In the year 1977 some 13 million passengers went through Canada's seven major international airports particularly at Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, Edmonton and Winnipeg. Given this huge potential, one would hope and expect that the government's tendering policy would provide not only the best service but also a fair return to the Ministry of Transport and a climate in which an open and fair opportunity for all those who may be interested in tendering for this business is provided.

This does not, however, seem to be the case. After 14 years the Ministry of Transport finally changed its policy with respect to car rental concessions in 1976. Two years later and with lawsuits of almost every description being filed against the Ministry of Transport and the minister himself for breach of contract, we are now informed that there is going to be a policy revision in this regard later this year.

In 1976, at the time the minister outlined the new policy, he promised open, competitive access for Canadian firms to the car rental business at Transport Canada airports. Regrettably, this has not come to pass. Budget Rent-A-Car, for example, in its call for unrestricted tendering for car rental concessions, called the present distinction between open and domestic bidders artificial and discriminatory. Holiday Rent-A-Car has complained that Canadian rental systems do not provide open access to airports nor the opportunity to compete on an equitable basis. Mr. James Tennant, vice-president of corporate development of Holiday Rent-A-Car points out that MOT did not accept realistic bids in 1976. They accepted Host's bid, which was unrealistic, and not Holiday's. Since then Host has only paid a small portion of its rental. Why Host is withholding payment and is still allowed to operate continues to be a mystery.

• (2217)

In July of this year MOT sued Host for $863,679.96, which represents the total arrears on monthly payments. From July to this date, this amount probably exceeds $1 million. Explanations are not forthcoming. Other competitive companies are infuriated, and it is passing strange that Host was one of those companies which did not complain about the car rental policy in 1976. In the midst of all this it continues to do business at Canada's airports without paying the rent.

Why the minister has not invoked section 27 of the tender contract, thus cancelling the contract, nobody really knows, nor is an explanation forthcoming. This issue is further clouded by the fact that the minister's brother-in-law is a member of the legal firm representing Host. Also, he happens to be a federal Liberal candidate in the forthcoming general election.

Conflict throughout MOT in its tendering policy is the rule rather than the exception. What is happening is that it is opening up more suspicion, causing cynicism and casting doubt upon any measure of fairness. In short, it creates doubt about the integrity of the government.

I now turn to the example of AFC. Apparently this firm has had a 20-year monopolistic lease to operate a food and liquor concession at Dorval airport. Today there seems to be a debate within MOT as to whether tenders might be called when that concession's contract expires in 1981. If tenders are called, it is my understanding that AFC is under no obligation to release its financial rent or sales figures to potential tender bidders. This gives an enormous advantage to AFC, and any semblance of equity is thrown out the window.

This issue raises several questions. First, why is there some doubt on the part of MOT as to whether or not to call tenders? Why is MOT not in a position now to state categorically that it will call tenders? What about AFC and its near bankruptcy in 1962? Was MOT satisfied that it had to negotiate its contract for lower percentages and cuts in revenue? It would also be of interest to know what provisions the tender contract has which provide for a company to renegotiate if that concessionaire has financial problems. Does MOT feel that it is fair to other competitive bidders? Was MOT satisfied that it gave AFC Limited $76,352 in an effort to streamline AFC's operation and to make it more efficient?

What about the precedent that is established here? We are now told MOT has a clause in its new contract requiring disclosure of sales figures, but AFC's contract predates this. Does AFC predate the new clause because of the many contract renewals given to it without calling for tenders? We had a renewal for ten years in 1961 and another renewal for another ten years in 1971. One wonders what legislative or moral authority allows MOT to renew the contract continually without tender. One would have to assume that it if goes on ad infinitum, AFC could always predate the new clause in its contract. These are questions which should be answered categorically and unequivocally. I hope the parliamentary secretary will be in a position to do just that this evening.

• (2222)

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we have the usual hotchpotch of the members opposite when they confuse everything, the rental of cars in airports related to an alleged scandal about Sky Shops as well as the presence of a Liberal candidate who as such should not be allowed to do any business in Canada. And the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) even seems to be shocked because we are reviewing our policy. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is wise to do so. As far as car rentals are concerned, it seems important to me that in Canadian airports we ought to encourage as much as possible the companies held by a majority of Canadian interests.

Coming back to the contract of the AFC Company Limited—

[English]

I should like to remind the hon. member that originally this lease was granted to AFC Limited in 1961 for a period of five years. It was renewable for two further terms of five years, each at the option of the concessionaires. The authority of the governor in council was obtained in 1971 to provide for a further five-year option to the lease, from 1976 to 1981, for the purpose of maintaining a sufficient period to amortize capital investments of $350,000 which had to be made on an immediate basis to meet traffic demands. The rates payable by AFC under the lease were increased in 1976 for the five-year extension period.

When the matter was being considered in 1971, there were a number of unknown factors associated with the proposed opening of Mirabel in 1974. The consequent shifting of traffic was expected to make a somewhat unattractive climate in which to go to tender in 1976. In light of Transport Canada's requirement to meet an immediate public demand and the uncertainties posed by Mirabel, a decision was made to proceed with the improvements in the restaurant and to extend the lease to provide the lessee with sufficient time to amortize his investment. As a general policy, concession leases are granted as a result of public tender calls, and their terms reflect the period of amortization necessary for the successful tenderer to amortize his investment.

The question of disclosure of information has been of some concern to Transport Canada for some time. In consequence of this concern, a clause was developed and is now included in all concession tenders whereby the successful tenderer agrees that, in the concluding years of the agreement, the department may publish the total of the gross sales by outlet reported by the concessionaire in each year of the agreement for the purpose of public tender information. This provision has been included in all new concession agreements since the latter part of 1976.

A new airport concession tendering policy was approved in July 1976. The purpose of this policy is to ensure that local entrepreneurs and other interested parties are provided with the opportunity to compete on an equal basis through the public tender process for the operation of concessions at Transport Canada airports. While this policy has not posed any major problems, it is being reviewed to determine where it can be improved.

• (2227)

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—FORESTRY—CLOSING OF GOVERNMENT LABORATORIES

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, this evening I want to pursue the issue of the reduction of moneys for, and the closure of, forestry research laboratories brought about by the federal government. I have raised this issue on a number of occasions. On October 19 I put the specific question to the minister, and I did so again today.

It is my contention that the government's restraint program is both arbitrary and irrational as it pertains to Canadian forestry services. What we have seen is that cutbacks and the elimination of important government services, because of the general restraint program, are having a devastating effect on the morale and the work of people in government forestry research laboratories.

Last August, out of the blue, the Department of the Environment was told to cut its expenditures by $40.5 million, including $11.7 million from its science support programs. This was a result of the general restraint program of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras). The closure of forests research stations is supposed to save the government $2 million, and the transfer of two forests products labs to the private sector will supposedly result in another $3.3 million saving. As I pointed out earlier today during the question period, because of tax deductions the saving in reality will only amount to about $800,000. The key question before this House is, will the reduction in government research and development and the privatizing of government laboratories have a beneficial effect on the forestry industry of Canada?

Why is the forestry industry so important, Mr. Speaker? We find that one of every ten Canadian jobs is connected with forest products, and these products sell for $12 billion, or 14 per cent of our over-all manufactured goods. In other words, the forestry industry is a crucial sector in Canada. Therefore, it is important that this industry be enhanced in any way possible.

One of the very important long-range effects on that industry is related to the level of research and development in this country. The private sector in the past has relied very heavily on government research and development. In reality, Mr. Speaker, when you look at the figures, the record of the private sector in research and development in forestry has been a very dismal one. For example, in 1975 the wood products industry invested only .31 cents per dollar of shipment revenue on research and development compared to 2.5 cents per dollar by the electrical products industry. As a result, this low research and development expenditure has meant a lower productivity and employment rate in the forestry industry compared to other sectors of the economy which spent much more on research and development.

When we look at research further, we find that in the private sector large companies carry out research that is mainly geared to design and marketing. This is quite natural because it enhances or maximizes their profits. The 8,000 small companies in the forestry sector hardly spend any money on research and development as they are small family affairs and cannot afford to. Therefore it is left to the government to fill the void. It is the government labs that work at the conceptual stage, bringing an idea along to the point where the private sector can take it over at the marketing and productivity stage.

For example, it has been government work that has led us to further development of non-toxic treatment of wood chips and a safer method of toxic effluent disposal. They have done tremendous work, for example, in a lab in my constituency on control of the spruce budworm. In other words, the role of government labs is crucial to the future well-being of our forestry industry.

What I regret is that this Liberal government, listening to Conservative cries for government restraint, has further arbitrarily cut back on procedures, undermining the forest industry. Its approach is irrational and arbitrary. We have seen, for example, the Petawawa forest station, that has been working for over 60 years doing world renowned research, being made the subject of cutback. The minister first announced it was going to be closed, but because of public outcry and public uproar from the scientific community the government reversed its decision. In the process of reversing its decision and keeping the Petawawa base open, the government caused a catastrophe in two other areas, the fire research centre and the forest management centre in Ottawa. One hundred employees were told out of the blue that in order to keep Petawawa open half of them would lose their jobs, the budget would be cut in half and that the other 50 would be transferred to Petawawa . All this was in light of study after study which showed the necessity for keeping those two institutes here in Ottawa close by the other agencies which they deal with, such as the National Research Council.

● (2232)

The government's approach makes no sense. There is no scientific rational basis for their flip-flop in policy, this arbitrary cuback and this ridiculous privatization which will not do the industry any good in the long run, for reasons which I have described.

I appeal to the parliamentary secretary and to the minister that if they are concerned about the state of research and development in the forestry industry in Canada, they should keep Petawawa open with a full complement and reverse their decision to close the two labs in Ottawa and transfer them to Petawawa. Surely, if the minister believes in the importance of research and development, he will reverse this irrational, arbitrary and unproductive decision.

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, of all the members in this House I can say to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) that I totally agree with his remarks, being one who has been associated with one of the largest pulp and paper companies in the world, MacMillan Bloedel, for the past 35 years. I agree that the forestry industry is a vital part of the Canadian economy and that a vigorous research program is essential to assure its future.

The minister regrets that any reduction in the budget of the Canadian Forestry Service has to be made. However, the Department of Environment was required to reduce its budget by $40 million plus, as the hon. member has mentioned. A reduction of that magnitude means that no one element of the department could remain untouched. Every effort was made to make the cuts in such a way that the high levels of service and essential research can be maintained.

It should be noted that part of the government's intention in cutting the departmental budget was to provide funds for more immediate economic stimulation measures. Some $15 to $20 million of these funds annually will be channelled into joint projects with the provinces to improve forest management. These joint projects will be conducted under agreements between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and provincial agencies. Environment Canada, through the Canadian Forestry Service, will provide technical and scientific input and advice.

As for the matter of privatization of the forest products laboratories, this has been under consideration for quite some time. In fact, the Canadian Forestry Advisory Council recommended in its 1973 report to the minister of the environment at that time that these laboratories be taken over by private industry. As the minister has stated before in this House, the total budget for these two laboratories was $7.3 million. If privatization were to become a reality, the continuing federal contribution of $4 million per year to the support of these laboratories would ensure the maintenance of a long-term research and development program.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.36 p.m., without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

Table 2
Child Credit Benefits Payable, 1979

Family Net Income		Number of children
		One	Two	Three	Four
	$	$	$	$	$
Under	18,000	200	400	600	800
	20,000	100	300	500	700
	22,000	—	200	400	600
	24,000	—	100	300	500
	26,000	—	—	200	400
	28,000	—	—	100	300
	30,000	—	—	—	200
	32,000	—	—	—	100
	34,000	—	—	—	—

Benefits are those payable in 1979 on the basis of 1978 incomes.

Table 3
Federal Fiscal Impact of Child Benefit Changes

Item	1978-79		1979-80
	Expenditures	Revenues	Expenditures	Revenues
	($ millions)
Refundable tax credit	—	—	—	−810
Reduction in family allowances	−170	−40	−690	−130
Elimination of current $50 child tax credit	—	+35	—	+260
Modification of exemptions for 16 and 17 year old children	—	+5	—	+25
Total	−170	0	−690	−655
Effect on financial requirements	−170		−35

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 7, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASES IN INTEREST RATES—STRATEGY TO OFFSET ADVERSE ECONOMIC IMPACT IN ATLANTIC REGION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of some urgency. Traditionally, the Atlantic region is the hardest hit when government, in the name of restraint, drastically changes its monetary and fiscal policies. Considering the fact that we are probably more dependent upon the small business community than most other regions of Canada, and that these very abrupt changes and abnormally high interest rates will have a very serious impact on that segment of our economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Prime Minister direct the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to cause the preparation of a strategy in the very near future which will have the effect of offsetting any major, unbearable and unacceptable economic impact in that area.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL-EGYPT PEACE TALKS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a question of urgent and pressing necessity to move the following motion:

That this House welcomes Prime Minister Begin of Israel to our country and commends President Carter of the United States, President Sadat of Egypt and Prime Minister Begin for their efforts to bring about peace in the Holy Land, and this House of Commons expresses the hope that the city of Jerusalem, on the basis of history and heritage, shall, in its entirety, be part of Israel.

Mr. Speaker: I hope that the right hon. member will understand, from the tone of the debate which took place yesterday, that the use of this Standing Order for such a complimentary motion will soon be fulfilled without the necessity of putting the question, because we expect this honoured guest to be here very shortly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the right hon. member will recall that several times in the past I have refused to put the question when there has been an endeavour to use this motion for congratulatory purposes of any sort, and I think I must be consistent with that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

POST OFFICE

RECOGNITION OF REMEMBRANCE DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House calls upon the Postmaster General to rescind the directive that post offices are to operate this Saturday, November 11, on a normal day service, it being the view of all members of this House that veterans employed by the Post Office should not be required to work on Remembrance Day, but that they and all Canadians should have the opportunity to show respect for those who gave their lives for this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

COMMITTEE STUDY OF COMPUTER FRAUD AND EMBEZZLEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the recent discovery of a computer theft in Los Angeles totalling over $10 million, considering that computer frauds are now expected to exceed $300 million annually, and in light of statements by Donn Parker, the world's foremost authority on computer crime, who said that security procedures had not kept pace with the tremendous advances in technology, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this very serious problem be referred to the appropriate standing committee for study to ensure the proper safeguards are in place for detecting computer fraud and embezzlement within Canadian government departments which have 18 large-size computers.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with unanimous consent of this House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FISHERIES

FISHING VESSELS' INSURANCE PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On October 10, I asked the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment why his department was getting out of the profitable fishing vessels' insurance business. I was not satisfied with the minister's answer as to why he thought it was necessary to privatize this plan which has been in operation since 1954.

At the end of October, representatives of all factions of Nova Scotia fishermen gave a rare show of solidarity at the second annual Nova Scotia fisheries conference—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should put his motion forthwith.

Mr. Hogan: My motion is that, since Nova Scotia fishermen gave a rare show of solidarity at the second annual Nova Scotia fisheries conference at the end of October, the federal government stay in the vessels' insurance business. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour):

● (1412)

That the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment reconsider this policy which is unacceptable to Nova Scotia fishermen.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EMPLOYMENT SITUATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, in view of the conflict between the current trend in rising employment and the statement by the governor of the Bank of Canada before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs last night, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration make a statement on motions as soon as possible to reassure the Canadian public that there will not be a rapid rise in unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

POST OFFICE

MEASURES TO RESOLVE LABOUR-MANAGEMENT DISPUTE—MOTION UNDER S.O 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) answered a question put by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) on October 31, 1978, as reported at page 637 of Hansard, as follows:

Reports I receive indicate that workers are back to work: they are working better than they have ever worked.

In view of the fact that is not so, because the mail sorting rate in some areas is less than 50 per cent compared to one month ago, and tension is mounting which has an adverse effect on employee morale, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris:

That the Postmaster General meet immediately with the Association of Postal Officials of Canada to attempt to resolve this unacceptable situation, because establishment of a Crown corporation will not remove the frustrations forced on dedicated postal workers, including management.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT HOUSE EXPRESS ITS REGRET AT INCREASE IN BANK RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a question of pressing and urgent necessity.

In view of the fact that the Bank of Canada has recently announced that the discount rate would be raised from 10¼ per cent to 10¾ per cent, considering that it is the third raise in the past two months, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House strongly disapprove that action of the Bank of Canada an effect of which among others will be to increase interest rates on mortgages to record levels, further impoverishing many Canadians and contributing to enrich our chartered banks.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, perhaps I can direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Governor Bouey, yesterday evening before a standing committee of this House, in defending his decision to raise the bank rate to 10.75 per cent, made it very clear that he felt we in Canada, were in a position where we must start defending the dollar at its present level. In fact, he went through the British scenario and said that now is the time to stop the guise, presumably, of allowing the dollar to fall any further. Will the Prime Minister indicate if, in fact, this means government policy has changed, that we do not necessarily have a floating dollar and, if it is floating, clearly in the future it will be anchored?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a rule on the desirability and wisdom of commenting on proceedings of committees of this House. The rule makes a lot of sense, because it covers matters which have been raised partly in committee and are not within the knowledge of anyone who was not on the committee. Personally, I do not know exactly what Governor Bouey said. I can say, unequivocally, that government policy on the dollar will be announced by a minister and by the governor of the bank. Beyond saying this, I do not know what the governor said.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I note the Prime Minister said that government policy will be announced by a minister, presumably not necessarily the Minister of Finance, as we have found in the past. Would he comment on a statement made in the House yesterday by the Minister of Finance? It indicates clearly that we have now developed an economic policy in Canada where we appear to be a mere echo of the United States economy, and the Minister of Finance has stated that, with the balance of payments deficit in Canada, we have no choice but to make sure that the bank rate is higher than that in the United States.

● (1417)

Would the Prime Minister tell the House what policy has permitted the current account deficit to prevail for four years at roughly $4 billion per year, when we were told repeatedly that the falling dollar itself would help cure that current account deficit?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is obviously some misunderstanding in the hon. member's mind. The dollar itself and the value of the dollar helps trade, visibly and invisibly, but it does not necessarily help the whole current account exchange situation. The flowing of capital movements is not directly related in the same sense as trade to the level of the dollar.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is to the Minister of Finance. Following the questions that I put to the Prime Minister in which I quoted the statement the Minister of Finance made yesterday, that there was virtually no alternative but to raise the bank rate to something above the American level as a result of Canada's current account deficit, would the Minister of Finance indicate to the House if he does not agree that a contributing factor to the objectionably high interest rate structure in this country is also his government's own deficits, the $11.8 billion financial requirement that is anticipated for the present year?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have made some announcements that we are planning to reduce the deficit, and we have cut the expenditures, as outlined in the August exercise, to reduce it by a very substantial amount of money next year. I am glad that the hon. member does see a problem in the deficit of the government, because when I look—

Mr. Stevens: Forty billion dollars.

Mr. Chrétien: —at the programs of the opposition, they have planned a deficit of $5 billion more than the government.

INCREASES IN INTEREST RATES—ADVERSE ECONOMIC IMPACT IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I would like to direct to the Minister of Finance. It arises out of the recognition that when the government imposes what can be described as restrictive monetary fiscal policies, it is the Atlantic economy that is first hit and which takes longest to recover.

I wonder if the minister, in consideration of what has happened in recent days and weeks, has come up with a specific and urgent proposal which he is now prepared to put forward that will help ease that type of historical, sudden and very severe impact on the economy in the Atlantic region?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has many programs to deal with the problems of regional disparity. When I present my budget, I will direct my attention to that problem.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who is fully aware of the historical impact to which I have referred.

In view of the inability or unwillingness at this time of the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister to indicate specific and urgent strategies which would help to offset this impact, what specific new suggestions has the minister put forward in recent days during his meetings with the Atlantic premiers regarding this type of impact and the very serious situation that faces us this winter?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, last week I had the opportunity of meeting the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces with whom I discussed the programs being implemented there. I advised the premiers, as well as my counterparts provincial, of our intention of increasing to the greatest possible extent some of our resource development programs such as in agriculture, energy and industrial structures. In coming weeks, we are going to see just how much we can add to some of those program in order to increase development in those sectors.

● (1422)

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I gather from what the minister said that there is no intention on the part of the government, or that he did not during these meetings bring forward any new initiatives based on the urgency that presently faces Atlantic Canada.

May I ask specifically whether the minister might not now reconsider the very serious cutbacks and their impact, coupled with the impact of the very high, unacceptably high, interest rates for Atlantic businessmen that he has made in his own development program?

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, the budgetary restrictions which may have affected the Department of Regional Economic Expansion were really quite minimal. One program only could affect the economy negatively, if one can speak of the economy as such, in the Atlantic provinces and that is the program on land registration. But there are other programs for which we shall increase our expenditures so that, all in all, the amounts of money spent by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the Atlantic region will not be reduced—in fact, they will be increased in coming months and next year.

[English]

INCREASES IN BANK RATE—FURTHER UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING THEREFROM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Considering that the unemployment figures which came out today still leave Canada with the highest level of unemployment in the industrial western world, would he confirm to the House that when he discussed the most recent increase of the Bank of Canada with Mr. Bouey—three times on the weekend, I am told—Mr. Bouey informed him that the inevitable consequence of a further increase would be further increases in unemployment? If he was not told that, did the minister ask Mr. Bouey if that would be the result?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member did not mention that in a year we have created more than 262,000 new jobs in Canada and that unemployment is going down.

Mr. Trudeau: Three hundred thousand.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, 362,000.

Of course, the government is always preoccupied with the level of unemployment and we keep working on it. I have discussed that problem with the governor of the Bank of Canada. As he explained yesterday to the committee of the House, if we had not moved, it would have created a bigger problem in Canada that in the medium-term would probably have caused more unemployment. I think the stability of the Canadian economy and currency is fundamental to proper economic growth in this land.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister took almost two minutes not to answer the question, so I will not trouble to repeat it. Considering that probably the most disturbing figure in all those that came out today showed that we experienced a net loss of 11,000 manufacturing jobs in the past month, for the second month in a row, would the minister not agree that we are now experiencing the delayed effects in the economy of the five previous increases in the bank rate?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, of course, the hon. member is very good at making good news into bad news: he lives on it. I think if you look at the performance of the Canadian economy over the last year, however, there has been a very substantial increase in the number of manufacturing jobs; in fact, it is more than 100,000. Of course there is a fluctuation from month to month, but I think one can have a larger view than just looking at only one month.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as usual, the minister has got his facts wrong. In the past two months only has there been a decline in the number of manufacturing jobs; in every other month this year there was a slight increase. I will let the minister correct that, but he should check the figures.

I should like to repeat the point and get an honest answer from the minister. If we have had a decline in manufacturing jobs two months in a row, would he tell us if he has received from the Ontario government a submission pointing out that, because of its fiscal and monetary policies, the federal government has made a mess of the manufacturing sector? Would he confirm that he has received that submission? More importantly, would he tell the House, at long last, what he intends to do to stimulate growth in the manufacturing sector, which is the crucial sector in the economy for long-range growth?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the best stimulus the manufacturing sector has received for some time has been the fact that in Canada we are more competitive in world markets. If the hon. member will look at the figures that we have on trade surplus, he will see that we are selling much more abroad than before. I know it took him a long time to recognize that there has been a substantial increase in the number of jobs in the manufacturing sector over the last year, but when the Canadian Manufacturers' Association came to Ottawa to make representation two weeks ago, that is what they said.

* * *

● (1427)

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REASON FOR REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF VOLUNTEER FARM WORKERS

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, once again my question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Referring to section 57 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the minister said, in his answer of November 3 that before 1967 the act contained a provision pursuant to which agricultural workers could be exempted by working on a voluntary basis. Since it seems this provision did exist before 1967, could the minister tell the House whether this change, that is the end of voluntarism, occurred following representations from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture or from the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it was due to both the federation and the public servants, because of administrative difficulties.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

HIGH RATE OF BANKRUPTCY IN SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put my question to the Minister of State (Small Business): it is with regard to the further increase in the bank rate, which the minister knows is so harmful to the small businessman.

In view of the fact that the small business sector is already experiencing damaging setbacks as a result of the uncertainty and confusion this government's ad hoc policies have created, and because the bankruptcy rate in this sector increased by an unprecedented 41 per cent in the first six months of this year over last year, has the minister made, or does he intend to make, any positive representations to the cabinet which would perhaps protect the small businessman from these exuberant bank rates, because without some kind of protection, as the minister knows, the very survival of many small businesses is threatened?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is trying to alert me or the government to the severe problems small business faces as a result of sharply increasing interest rates, I would agree with him that this is creating a very undesirable difficulty: cash flow problems are resulting, and it is a matter of very real concern. But I would say that the United States and, consequently, ourselves have not introduced these changes to punish the business community or to somehow depress the economy.

I would say that if the result of these stabilizing plans both in the United States and here have the effect of stabilizing North American currencies, have the effect of putting a damper on inflation and have the effect of restoring confidence in our business community abroad, then I would suggest that, despite the problems being faced, the cash flow problem is a result of higher interest rates and the price will be justified by the confidence that will be engendered. However, in answer to the member's point—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: I would say directly that I am—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that I would not have to alert the minister of the problem with bank rates: I just wanted to find out what he is doing. Obviously, he has not been able to answer that. The minister knows that small business usually operates on a relatively small profit margin, very often dependent on concrete and long-term interest rates.

Could the minister tell this House whether or not he has taken this matter up with the cabinet, or with the banks, requesting a form of favoured treatment for small business as far as interest rates are concerned? If not, is the minister perhaps prepared to look again at the Small Business Loans Act in order to include working capital at preferential rates for the small businessman within that act?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I consider it an important part of my job to advocate to the Minister of Finance, and other ministers who have a direct responsibility for economic change, ideas such as the last one expressed by my hon. friend. But I would reiterate that if he thinks that because interest rates are going up, this government is not concerned with their effects on small and medium business, he is wrong. I think our larger concern has to be with restoring, in the eyes of the world, the stability of the North American economies. For that reason, I enjoin him and others to make certain that they take a responsible attitude toward this problem.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We need an election for that purpose.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, the minister's rhetoric is not helping the small businessman. I have two questions for the minister. I ask him what, if any, steps he has taken in order to assist the small businessman in this regard. I would like to have a specific answer from him as to whether he has taken any steps, or intends to take any steps, to assist the small businessman in this specific instance.

● (1432)

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, last June certain measures were introduced to help small business. Other measures have been introduced of which the hon. member is aware. I reiterate that it is not my role to announce policies that directly affect small business. It is my role to attempt to advocate to the Minister of Finance suggestions along the line of the last part of the hon. member's previous question. I can assure him that is exactly what I am doing and will be doing in the weeks ahead.

* * *

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN TO EXPORT POSITIONS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport is in connection with the transportation problems that continually confront the grains industry. It arises from the statement made by a senior official of the Canadian Wheat Board that Canadian sales of export grain must be limited to 21 million metric tonnes because that is the maximum quantity that our transportation system can physically handle.

Since this is the same 21 million tonnes capacity that we had in the record year of 1972-73 which the minister refers to quite frequently, I would ask the minister how he can justify this further loss of sales, in face of the government's commitments at the WEOC conference in 1973 and in face of the Liberal government's commitments during the election period of 1974 which committed them to revamping the grain handling system from the granary to the ship in the harbour. Can the minister today offer any new hope to the producers of Canada who are becoming increasingly frustrated and fed up by our inability to move grain and take advantage of export opportunities?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give reassurances to the grain farmer as a producer of exports for the world. This year we have been talking about the challenge of trying to move 23 million rather than 21 million tonnes. I should emphasize that these figures were actually more than is produced in anything but an absolutely fantastic crop on the prairies in any one year. Therefore, we are able to move an amount of record production, plus some more.

The question is, how much more capacity should we have? I am one who years ago staked out the position that we must target on being able to move a billion bushels of grain rather than the 850 million or 870 million bushels I am talking about now. I believe that is still very true. It is for that reason we have been buying hopper cars and rehabilitating and rebuilding branch lines in a very important way. We have been getting a far faster turnaround time on our equipment, as the Snaveley report will show as soon as it is available to hon. members. We have a study now under way in relation to the total question of the parts of the system used for operating and moving grain more quickly. Obviously, while we want to go on moving more, we want to do it efficiently and at the lowest cost.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, surely the minister knows we have had to defer 1½ million tonnes of grain exports from the last crop year to this crop year, and that further deferrals are taking place in this current crop year with respect to movements out of Thunder Bay. The minister should also know that the Canadian Wheat Board had to turn down the sale of four million tonnes of grain into the export market. The minister should also know that we have a situation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member intend to put a question?

Mr. Clark: He is answering the minister's question.

Mr. Speaker: I was not aware, to answer the Leader of the Opposition, that it was a function of the questioner to answer the previous question.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister's statement cannot go unchallenged.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not asking that anybody's statements go unchallenged. This is a period for putting questions.

Mr. Clark: And receiving answers.

Mr. Speaker: There may be other occasions to challenge in debate. If the hon. member insists on debating, I will have to go to another question.

Mr. Mazankowski: A sort of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate your consideration. We have in Canada a country elevator system that is literally plugged. Our terminal stocks are down to one half. The railways have indicated that the utilization is less than a full 100 per cent in terms of their grain carrying capacity on an annualized basis. CP have indicated that during the months of September, October and November they were only called upon to utilize one half of their grain carrying capacity.

I ask the minister specifically if he is looking into this problem to ensure that the interface with regard to our grain sales and grain movement is better co-ordinated and better planned.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in addition to doing the things I indicated in my earlier answer and appointing co-ordinators at the terminals in Vancouver and Thunder Bay, the very purpose of having consultants in place is to look after this interface. The hon. member was apparently critical when we put these consultants in place, yet it is obviously important. Let me say, however, whenever we are moving an absolute record at the limit of our capacity, obviously there will be strains within the system. One of our objectives is to test those strains and to keep strain on the system. When the ships do not arrive on time, as they did not in August and September, that is a difficulty which piles up for later and that we all understand.

I would also like to point out to the hon. member, so that it is understood across this country as it is understood by the prairie farmer, that we have just had three all-time record crops. If only one of those had been average instead of record, it would be a problem of grain supplies rather than a problem of movement. Obviously, we want to be able to build toward moving a billion bushels of grain because we know we can develop even further productive capacity by doing so. But do not be too excited about difficulties when we are pushing the system to its maximum.

* * *

[Translation]

FLOODS

FLOOD PREVENTION PROGRAM IN NORTH MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment.

Considering the extent of the work being done to control the water level and reduce the risks of spring floods in the area north of Montreal, particularly in Laval along the Prairies river and the Mille-Isles river, and contrary to the press release issued by the local Parti Québécois members, does the minister intend to go on with this work until March 31, 1980, as was stated in the Canada-Quebec agreement signed in August, 1977, in order that the victims of these floods will rest assured that we will continue to improve this situation which has already lasted for too long?

[English]

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the hon. member that although we have had some cuts in our diking program both in the Montreal area and in British Columbia, we will be able to honour all of the commitments that we made under the 1975 agreement for diking in the Montreal area which was signed by my colleague, now the Minister of Communications. My office notified the hon. Yves Bérubé minister of natural resources, of this on October 18, 1978.

* * *

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MOVEMENT OF GRAIN TO EXPORT POSITIONS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Vegreville: it is addressed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board.

In view of the fact that recent statements by officials of the Canadian Wheat Board, grain companies and the railways indicate that because of strikes, underutilization of the railways and other factors in the grain handling and transportation system, grain sales have been deferred, delayed or cancelled, in view of the fact that deferral of deliveries this year to date has been 1½ million tonnes out of Vancouver and half a million tonnes out of Thunder Bay—in this crop year—and in view of the importance of the grain trade not only to western Canada but to the whole of our economy, will the minister take the first opportunity to make a statement on motions giving details to this House of the grain deferrals, lost sales and cancellations, in order that the producers of western Canada and the members of this House may be aware of the facts?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board has been making these reports to producers and will be the appropriate body to continue making them. I would like to add that we are taking all the steps we can take to try and minimize any problem in loss of sales and in moving more grain.

We are looking at the question of whether there is any possible way, for example, of getting any extra time on the functioning of the Seaway or other ways of moving more grain to market. That continues to be our pressing concern. When we were in a situation of trying to move the absolute maximum amount of grain, the fact of a strike on the Great Lakes was a clear minus in terms of how it would interfere with the movement to some extent. We do not know at this stage how far we can go in expediting the movement of vessels to make up for that loss.

● (1442)

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, the producer in western Canada looks upon the situation as being critical. I wonder if the minister is prepared to take immediate steps to have officials of the Canadian Wheat Board, grain companies and railways appear before either the Standing Committee on Agriculture or the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, so that members and producers can be made aware of all the facts and problems and consider any recommendations and suggestions which may be made by those officials and representatives of other organizations?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider that with officials of the Wheat Board and other organizations. However, I think the urgent thing at this moment is that they have all their time free to deal with the problem and to make sure they move as much grain as possible, rather than be deflected from that even to answer the very important questions of the hon. member.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF PRIME MINISTER MENACHEM BEGIN OF ISRAEL

Mr. Speaker: Before continuing with the question period, I know all hon. members will want to join with me in extending an extremely warm welcome and best wishes for a successful tour of Canada, and in all his other present endeavours which are of such an important nature not only to his own country but also to peace in the world. I refer to the presence in our gallery now of the very distinguished Prime Minister of Israel, His Excellency Menachem Begin.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FINANCE

FUNDING OF URBAN IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. When he told the provincial finance ministers last week that because they would not go along with his request to reduce federal cost sharing for hospital care, medical care and post-secondary education, he was deferring going ahead with the community services grants program, did he really mean that there would be no federal funds this coming year for neighbourhood renewal programs, sewage treatment programs and low-cost housing?

[Mr. Lang.]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have decided to postpone implementation of this program which was advocated by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. As for details on some programs which are terminated, those will come to an end while others will be maintained on the former basis. I cannot be more explicit for the time being. I suggest that this question be directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs when he is back in the House.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it is good to know that those programs which have been started will be allowed to continue. However, a large number of cities have plans which are almost ready for this type of program, and they certainly will not be able to proceed without federal funding because of their financial difficulties and the financial difficulties of the provinces in which they are located.

Can the minister give any idea as to when there will be a decision and an announcement by the federal government that there will be any money available for these programs which are so essential in the various cities of Canada?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, three programs were involved in the new proposition of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Two of them will be terminated by the end of the year; the third one will still be in operation. The hon. member can ask a specific question of my colleague, but if the provinces and municipalities are faced with financing problems, I suppose we have the same problems at the federal level.

* * *

[Translation]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO FINANCIAL MEASURES TAKEN TO REDUCE NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce but, in his absence, I shall direct it to my excellent friend the Minister of Finance. I say my excellent friend because we sit together on the committee.

According to a recent article Canada is in the leading position on the worldwide level as far as unemployment is concerned. This is not in accordance with the statements made by the Minister of Finance. The article says that Canada has a record 8.5 per cent of unemployed. I would like to ask the following question of the Minister of Finance: In the face of all those contradictory statistics, I would like to ask seriously of the Minister of Finance, who now has a budget to prepare and to submit to the House, whether those statistical data are really in accordance with facts and, if so, what he intends to propose to try to further develop the use of our manpower in order to increase our gross national product to become as prosperous as the other industrial countries in the western world?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's question requires a very long answer which involves a complete budget. I must say that it is true that our unemployment level is too high, and I regret it. But I would also like to point out to the hon. member that in the last 12 months we created 362,000 new jobs in Canada. Our performance as far as job creation is concerned is not equalled by any industrialized country in the world.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW FIGHTER PLANES FOR NATO FORCE

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. On September 6, the minister said that the proposal for the new fighter aircraft would go to a cabinet committee on September 13 and that there would be a final cabinet decision on September 20. Last Thursday, the Prime Minister said he did not believe that the fighter aircraft program had been before cabinet since last June.

I wonder if the minister can explain how he and the Prime Minister have such different ideas as to what is going on, and can he tell us what is causing this serious delay in the program?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's information is correct: to the best of my recollection this matter has not been before the cabinet since June. As hon. members know, the vendors asked for additional time to submit. We have given them that additional time to submit. I do not recall committing myself to specific dates, but I stand to be corrected, and I expect to have this matter before cabinet this month, hopefully with a decision on a short list before the end of the month or early in December.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, to refresh the minister's memory, I will say that he stated on March 18 that he hoped orders could be placed in late 1978 and that he was working to have the actual orders placed before the end of 1978.

Will the minister confirm that the armed forces have made their recommendations on which plane or planes they want, and that what is now holding up this program is lack of funding by the government to meet the $2.34 billion which has been promised for the purchase of the new fighter?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I did not quite hear the end of the hon. member's question, but if I may state the status now, there has been a deferment to give the various vendors an opportunity to resubmit. That has been very worth-while time spent for the vendors, for the procurement of the aircraft and, I might add, for the industry of Canada. The dates have slipped because of that. I am looking forward to the final contracts being negotiated and the final choice being made in the new year, but not before late spring of the new year.

* * *

FINANCE

PROPOSED CUTS IN UNCONDITIONAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. In his September 8 statement detailing cuts in government expenditures, and particularly in unconditional transfer payments, the minister announced his intention to reduce those payments by some $220 million.

Following the meeting with his provincial counterparts last week, can the minister tell us in what specific programs he now intends to make cuts, and by how much?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we said last week that we would be postponing social service programs which we were planning to introduce next year, and the community services program. We have decided to make some adjustments to the equalization formula. There will be an increase in equalization payments, but not as large an increase as has been predicted. There is a fourth program in which there will be a reduction, the public utilities income tax transfer program.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, since the minister's September 8 statement proposed to reduce payments under the Established Programs Financing Act, and since he now finds that because of the five-year agreement under those programs he can no longer make unilateral federal cuts, I wonder if the minister can tell us if it is his intention to compensate for that difference not only by forcing the Minister of National Health and Welfare to abandon her social service financing legislation, but will he also make larger cuts in the equalization program than he originally intended? Further, will the minister try to tamper with the agreed-upon formula under the Canada Assistance Plan?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the hon. lady the programs we are planning to use in order to take a contribution from the transfer payments. Of course, we cannot exempt the tranfer payments to the provinces. Those account for more than $10 billion. We have been relatively soft in relation to the other cuts in the system. Four programs were discussed with the provinces last week. Those programs will be affected.

In the case of established programs, I tried to modify the formula with the provinces last week. They did not agree, so I have decided not to move in that regard.

Oral Questions

IMMIGRATION

RE-ENTRY PERMIT SYSTEM

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the fact that the new Immigration Act came into effect in April with a provision requiring that certain steps be taken by landed immigrants who leave Canada for more than six months, would the minister inform this House and the public about the specifics of the re-entry permit system so as to prevent hardships and difficulties for bona fide returning residents?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the returning resident requirement does not apply to Canadian citizens. It was put into effect as an accommodation to permanent residents, some of whom found, as a result of being sent out of the country by their employers or because they had to move back to their homeland to straighten out business or private affairs, that they would have concern about getting back into the country; so as an accommodation to returning residents, that particular rule was put in place. It is not meant to be a hurdle to overcome: it is an accommodation to permanent residents.

* * *

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S COMMENT ON STATE OF CORPORATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last Thursday, admittedly after a rather heavy week, the Prime Minister answered the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi about CBC coverage of the federal-provincial conference. In the last part of his answer on page 728 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said:

I am sometimes amused when the CBC talks about the terrible state of the country, considering the terrible state of the CBC.

The Prime Minister has been the leader of the government for ten years. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a Crown corporation which spends over half a billion dollars. The president and the board of directors are all order in council appointments. I would like the Prime Minister to explain what he meant by "the terrible state of the CBC". Was he talking about the CBC in total or Radio-Canada? Has he expressed this concern to the Secretary of State, who is responsible? Would the Prime Minister please explain what he meant, as leader of this government, about a top Crown corporation to which he makes all the appointments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I explained it on television at the conference proper when I commented on the technical difficulties that the CBC had experienced on the first day of the conference. If the hon. member had been following the proceedings, he would have seen that as a rather light reference to the difficulties the CBC had. I stand by my remarks. The CBC is very critical of many institutions in Canada. It should not be without criticism itself nor beyond the scope of criticism. I often hear it from the other side.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, then can we assume from what the Prime Minister says today that when he referred to the terrible state of the CBC—this was after the conference—it was about the technical difficulties which we all noticed during the conference, that he was not making a blanket condemnation of CBC and that the fact that $71 million was cut from the CBC budget is not related to the Prime Minister's indigestion?

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, no, Mr. Speaker, I never make blanket condemnations, except sometimes of the hon. member. I think in the case of the CBC I was referring to some specific and recent events. The hon. member knows that I am a great admirer of the CBC and the media in general.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

● (1452)

FINANCE

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the response from across the floor is in reaction to the last Gallup poll, and I accept that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question is—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Whatever the cause might be, I wonder if hon. members could restrain their enthusiasm sufficiently to enable us to continue the question period.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, who said this morning that it was too early in the day for him to know whether or not the government had decided on a budget date. It is now later in the day, and I wonder if the minister can tell us if the government has decided on a budget date and, if so, when the budget will be brought down to the House of Commons.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the day is not over yet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the day might not be over, but certainly the government is finished.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I wonder if the Minister of Finance could make a radical change in the way he has approached his responsibilities and begin to approach them seriously and tell the House of Commons and the country, which is very much concerned about the uncertainty that has been caused by the mismanagement of economic events, when there will be a budget.

Will he tell us whether a date has been decided, will he tell us whether he will keep his word as to a mid-November budget, and will he tell the House of Commons and the people of Canada when a budget will be presented to this parliament?

Mr. Chrétien: I think the hon. member is getting a little excited. Yesterday I rose in my seat and said I would give an answer tomorrow or the day after. I am sure he could be patient for 24 hours. I said I would give the date on that day or the following day. I am not giving the date at this moment, and I have until tomorrow to keep my word. I usually keep it.

* * *

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN TO EXPORT POSITIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board arising out of events that have occurred over the last while and questions asked earlier today.

In view of the fact that the People's Republic of China was in the market for six million to seven million tons of grain, and that the Canadian Wheat Board signed a contract effective September 1 for three million tons, not because that was all China wanted but because that was all the Canadian Wheat Board was capable of delivering, and in view of the fact that Canadian Pacific, with a record profit of $233 million, refused to repair boxcars to increase our grain movement capability, I should like to ask the minister what measures he intends to take to require, first, the railroads to repair and return at least 5,000 railway-owned boxcars to the grain movement and, second, to co-ordinate rail and marine shipping so that the Wheat Board can bid and secure contracts in greater amounts than they have been able to because of this lack of capability.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will be interested to know that I have not really accepted a final negative from Canadian Pacific on the repair of boxcars. They did indicate they were satisfied that they could move their share of a 23 million bushel movement of export grain. I am a little doubtful about that, so I pressed them again to take up our offer to pay half the cost of repairing 1,000 boxcars.

Of course, we are constantly looking at ways of improving the movement of grain, and a consultant studying the situation might well help in that regard. The one difficulty we still have is in regard to shipping which is essentially under an international regime rather than under our own. A few years ago, the Canadian Wheat Board considered, through an expert committee, whether it should change its system of marketing to improve the shipping as well as the provisions of grain. They might have to look at that once again at this time in the context of the difficulties of ensuring that shipments arrive when they should.

GRAIN NOT BEING MOVED IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. Notwithstanding the statements which the minister made in reply to the hon. member for Vegreville and the hon. member for Moose Jaw, grain is piling up in western Canada on farms and in elevators—a $500 million loss which farmers experienced last year because of the inability to move the grain.

Can the minister tell the House what time we are talking about with regard to the recent floods and wash-outs of the railway lines affecting shipments of grain to Prince Rupert, and whether he has any alternative in mind?

● (1502)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are no easy solutions to the problems which arise from strikes, landslides or wash-outs when one is trying to move a maximum amount of grain. Again to put the matter into context, I wish the hon. member would not exaggerate. When he said that there was a loss of $500 million worth of grain shipments, he simply misstated the situation entirely. Last year the producers delivered over one billion bushels of grain for the first time in history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Even though we had an all-time record crop on our hands, we moved the whole of that crop plus a little more. The question is, how much more than that can we move in any given year, and our answer is that we want to be able to move a couple of million tons or another 50 million bushels more than that. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Yesterday the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) gave me notice of a question of privilege which he said he would proceed with when he and the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) were next in the House.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. BREWIN—CORRESPONDENCE RECEIVED FROM SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of raising a question of privilege. If Your Honour rules that there is a prima facie case, I will move the question of whether or not the letter from the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) to me, dated October 27, 1978, is misleading and should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Privilege—Mr. Brewin

On October 19, 1978, I put a question to the Solicitor General in the House. It arose out of a report that one Corporal Radey of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was being subjected to a secret trial because of information given by him—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have less noise?

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Brewin: The question I put to the Solicitor General arose out of a report that Corporal Radey of the RCMP was being subjected to a secret trial because of information given by him to the Laycraft commission in Alberta that he was the victim or one of the victims, or was concerned with a bugging incident by the RCMP.

The minister did not have the information available, but promised to supply it later. On October 27, 1978, I received a letter from the Solicitor General, which letter is the subject matter of my question of privilege. In my view, the letter is false and misleading. It attempts to dissociate the charges pending under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act from the matters arising before the Laycraft commission.

The letter indicated that Corporal Radey had been charged with two service offences pursuant to the provisions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, both of which related to his conduct as a member of the force. It is alleged that he made false statements in writing to his superiors and failed to obey the lawful command of his superiors. The letter indicated that Radey was one of the principal witnesses involved in the Laycraft inquiry, but that the Solicitor General was informed that the service offences referred to did not arise from the fact that he had given evidence before the Laycraft commission or from the substance of his evidence. Then the letter contains the following sentence:

The service offences relate to his conduct pertaining to an internal investigation and his conduct relating to a lawful command.

The clear implication of this letter is that the charges, for which Corporal Radey was being tried by the RCMP, were not connected with the evidence given or statements made by him in connection with the Laycraft inquiry.

I accepted the minister's statement in his letter, and decided, as the charges under the act against Radey were apparently an internal matter of the RCMP, unconnected with the Laycraft commission, that the matter did not require further concern by myself. However, later on, upon investigation of the actual charges against Radey, it was made abundantly clear to me that the letter was false and misleading.

The first charge against Radey related to an allegation that he had spoken to Chief Superintendent Schramm and Inspector Palmer. The matter in question was the evidence as to the alleged bugging to be brought before the Laycraft commission by Corporal Radey.

The second charge more clearly involved the Laycraft inquiry. It was that Radey disobeyed instructions from Inspector Palmer to discuss his evidence only with counsel for the RCMP, and the fact that, contrary to this instruction, he discussed the matters with the counsel for the commission. Inspector Palmer was said to have instructed that he must not consult or discuss with counsel for the judicial inquiry the matters in question, but that he must contact only one Stevens Guille, who was counsel appearing for the RCMP before the Laycraft commission.

The second part of the first charge against Radey employs exactly the same language, word for word, as does the report of the Laycraft commission. I can cite that reference in the report. The statement in the letter indicating the service charges did not arise from the fact that Corporal Radey gave evidence to the Laycraft commission, or did not arise from the substance of his evidence, was and is misleading.

Apparently the purpose of the misleading statements in the minister's letter was to make it appear that the proceedings under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and the secret trial were unconnected with the Laycraft commission. Of course this was false. Evidently someone wishes to discourage any attempt to link the internal RCMP charges with the Laycraft commission. The whole question of the use of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act to restrict and restrain an individual police officer from communicating to a judicial commission evidence he planned to present to that commission is raised by this matter.

I do not accuse the minister of deliberately misleading myself or the House, but I suggest that in sending out such a letter the minister was careless, reckless, and sloppy, at the very best.

I will not repeat the general observations of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) concerning the seriousness of misleading members of the House about matters inquired into in the House or connected with House business. Merely I want to emphasize that the whole function of parliament can be defeated if inquiries by members on matters of concern to the House are to be deflected by carelessly drawn or, indeed, intentionally misleading responses in letters. Our duties as watchdogs of the rights and freedoms of individuals will be frustrated if this sort of thing is permitted and becomes common.

If Your Honour rules that I have made a prima facie case of breach of privilege, I will move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae):

● (1512)

That the matter of the alleged misleading letter of the Solicitor General to me, his letter of October 27 relating to Corporal Radey and the charges laid against him under the RCMP Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for inquiry and report back to the House.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the hon. gentleman has said, and I take his question very seriously. I have no difficulty with the facts the hon. gentleman has advanced in terms of the correspondence being exchanged and the fact that a question was asked in the House. I quite understood the nature of the hon. gentleman's question when it was put in this House, and I replied at that time that I had just been made aware of the matter immediately prior to coming into the House and that I would look into it and reply to the hon. gentleman.

I quite readily accepted that the hon. gentleman had raised some connection between the charges and the Laycraft inquiry. That is why, contrary to his allegations, I was very careful in the reply that I forwarded to him. It was a reply which I reviewed quite attentively. I would cite again the paragraph to which he has referred. I stated that while this NCO was one of the principal witnesses involved in the Laycraft inquiry, I was informed that the service offences referred to do not arise from the fact that he gave evidence, nor from the substance of his evidence. The service offences relate to his conduct pertaining to an internal investigation and to his conduct relative to a lawful command.

If the hon. gentleman reviews the charges, which were the subject of a writ of prohibition application before the Federal Court, he will see quite readily that the charge under Section 25 of the RCMP Act refers, not to the evidence that he gave before the Laycraft inquiry, but to a statement that he himself made to his superiors quite categorically, and to a directive that had been issued to RCMP officers that was allegedly not followed. That is the pith and substance of the two counts this gentleman faced. Again, I would simply refer the hon. member to the specific counts that are identified in the internal disciplinary charge.

The service corps proceedings that the hon. member referred to were initiated against Corporal Radey in relation to allegations that he had, indeed, made a false statement and that he had failed to abide by the lawful command of his superiors.

An hon. Member: What were the orders?

Mr. Blais: The orders were that he was not to consult with solicitors other than those of the RCMP prior to giving evidence to the commission. Those were orders which were issued by the RCMP in terms of the organization of evidence for the Laycraft inquiry.

Corporal Radey was charged, pursuant to section 25 of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, and the service corps proceedings, which are internal disciplinary hearings in the RCMP and are authorized, are held strictly in accordance with the provisions of the RCMP Act. The procedures provided for the presentation of a full defence to the service charges. The member, subject to the hearings, has a right to be represented by another member of the force, and these hearings are held in camera. Members convicted in service court have a right of appeal to the commissioner and, of course, a right to apply for review under section 28 of the Federal Court Act.

In the case of Corporal Radey, the member representing him made a motion on the grounds that the tribunal lacked jurisdiction in that the proceedings were instituted more than six months after the alleged offence. That motion, which was as a preliminary objection before the hearing tribunal, was denied at the time it was moved. An adjournment was obtained so that the application could be made to the Federal Court. The Federal Court held that the motion was a proper one and that section 721 of the Criminal Code prevailed in terms of disciplinary offences under the RCMP Act. As a result of that, the writ of prohibition was issued.

Before the House last adjourned, Mr. Speaker, I introduced a bill, Bill C-50, to amend the RCMP Act. This bill died on the order paper. However, it is the government's intention to reintroduce the bill at the first opportunity. It will propose certain changes with respect to internal discipline in the RCMP and in essence it will provide for the enactment of a code of conduct which will apply to members of the force. Contraventions of this code of conduct can lead to informal disciplinary action or, in serious cases, formal disciplinary action.

This is why I was pleased that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) raised his question in the House at that time, because of my intention to introduce Bill C-50. I am sure the hon. gentleman is mindful of the fact that there has been a commission of inquiry set up under Judge Marin, who made a report relating to matters touching internal discipline within the RCMP. The bill which we will be introducing follows very closely the recommendations of the Marin commission.

Formal disciplinary action will require a hearing which will be held in private, under the proposals in this bill. Under this bill, the member whose conduct is the subject of the hearing, as well as all witnesses called to give evidence at the hearing, will be entitled to be represented by counsel. The bill will provide for two levels of appeal, the first being the internal board of review, which will review the proceedings on the record, and a further appeal on the record to the commissioner.

Provision is also being made for review by an external review committee if the member has been ordered to pay a fine. The review committee will examine the matter on the record, receive written submissions, and the member concerned may present argument personally or through counsel, following which the review committee will submit a report with its comments and recommendations to the commissioner.

Because of the general interest that has been manifested by the hon. member for Greenwood in this matter, I thought that it would be informative for him to be made aware of the fact that we are interested in proceeding with this bill. I would reiterate with regard to his question of privilege that I provided what I felt was forthcoming information relating to specific charges, that I had identified and described the nature of the charges. In the last paragraph of my letter I indicated that there was a writ of prohibition that had been filed with the Federal Court and that I felt that it would be inappropriate for me to make any further comment with respect to particulars. Therefore I kept my reply to the essential ingredients which he had addressed, and I feel that I discharged my responsibilities in accordance with those responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have had the feeling for some considerable time now that if one asks the question, "who runs the police system in this country, the commissioner of the RCMP or the Solicitor General" that one would, looking at the evidence, have to say that it is the commissioner of the RCMP, rather than the person appointed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and elected by the people to make these decisions. Everything which I have heard in the last month or so has confirmed that feeling.

There was the letter written by a solicitor general to the member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) and drafted by the RCMP, which was, to say the least, not in accordance with the facts. The direct question was whether mail was being intercepted. Now, we have this question. The minister talks about a bill which he introduced and which died on the order paper, a bill drafted on the basis of an inquiry held by a judge which recommended, among other things, that the RCMP Act be amended so that its members in such a difficulty would have the same rights as any other citizen in Canada, namely to be represented by counsel. The minister is stating a fact when he says that the bill died on the order paper.

• (1522)

Surely if the commissioner of the RCMP knows that inquiry has been held, if he knows that a judge has recommended against a section of the RCMP Act which prevents an RCMP officer from being represented by counsel, then as my colleague, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) suggested, what you have in such cases is a kangaroo court. If the RCMP commissioner knows that the government has accepted the recommendation of that judge and has drafted a bill, which bill has not yet been dealt with by parliament, surely the commissioner of the RCMP and senior officials of the RCMP do not need any more instructions, despite the fact that the act as written many years ago gives them the right to hold this kind of hearing in camera without the accused being represented by counsel. Surely they could have the decency and the common sense to permit that officer to have counsel there to protect his rights, as would any other citizen—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am a little worried that we are getting off the question of privilege of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), and perhaps getting on to a question of the privileges of Corporal Radey. I think we have to stick with the procedural aspects of the matter before us.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I was just coming to that, although I think what I have said is germane to the question.

The hon. member for Greenwood has said that the charges Corporal Radey is being tried on have to do with the fact that, he was instructed not to deal with the counsel for the Laycraft commission. I listened carefully to the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais). It seemed to me that he talked all around the question and tried to suggest that the charges were something else altogether, but he did not say that they were not, because I presume he realizes that eventually the nature of the charges will become public knowledge. The minister would not want to be accused of himself misrepresenting the facts.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Surely it is wrong for the RCMP or any other agency of government or any other individual to exert pressure, legal, moral or any other, on any person in Canada, particularly a police officer, so that they would not give whatever information they had to a duly constituted royal commission in this country. It seems to me that is the issue. If in fact that is what happened—and the minister has not said it has not happened—if the superintendent or senior officer of the RCMP instructed or directed an RCMP officer not to give information which he had to a duly constituted royal commission, then it is not Corporal Radey who should be on trial but the officers of the RCMP.

I hope that the Solicitor General will take this matter more seriously than he seems to have done, and I hope he will stop the practice which, I think solicitors general have had for so many years, of simply taking the word of the RCMP that what they have done is proper, correct, legal, and everything else. I hope he will look at the role of the RCMP and see that it deals with the problems it faces on a proper, legal, and moral basis, which in my view it has not done in this case.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be brief. I have taken the matter quite seriously. I have come into it completely fresh as I did not know what the facts were. But I listened very carefully to the minister and to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). The response contained in the letter read by the minister would suggest to me that it was calculated—I do not say deliberately—to set at rest the agitation, the anxiety of the hon. member for Greenwood, who is disturbed about this issue and quite properly so.

I am concerned here about the issue involving Corporal Radey and the RCMP. I think, as Your Honour has pointed out, that has probably decided our terms of reference.

We hear a lot of talk about ministerial responsibility. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has used that phrase quite frequently with regard to the right of the Privy Council and the Prime Minister to be the final arbitor of what shall be the scope of disclosure of documents, for example, in the McDonald royal commission. Ministerial responsibility should be at its highest level in this House. If I, the hon. member for Greenwood, or any of my colleagues on either side of the House, seek to ask a question, and it is then indicated that a letter will come in reply, we are entitled to accept the words in that letter at face value. I am sure the hon. member for Greenwood, receiving that letter, decided not to proceed any further with the matter because of the contents of the letter. I would have been in exactly the same position, saying "this is a good response. It settles my doubts and I am not going to proceed with it any more."

If that is ministerial responsibility, and I am not suggesting nor would I be allowed to suggest that the minister did this deliberately—he wrote this letter on the basis of what was put before him—then this is a sad commentary on this principle of ministerial responsibility.

How can we accept in this House such comments contained in a letter—not the kind of answers that come on the spur of the moment, in the heat of debate or the cut and thrust of question period, but comments made carefully and deliberately in a letter, calculated to respond to what the member had asked about this very serious issue?

Your Honour may decide the matter does not warrant being taken to a committee, but I think it is a very valid and legitimate complaint which could affect all of us in this House.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) put the facts as I would have put them to you.

I am speaking from memory now and I may be wrong, but I believe a writ of prohibition was granted against proceeding with those charges by the Federal Court. I believe Mr. Bill Gill, QC, of Calgary, appeared in Federal Court. Whether that has anything to do with the facts as set out by the minister or the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) I do not know, but I felt it my duty and my responsibility, being in the House now and hearing this matter argued, to bring this to your attention.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it is with some hesitation that I speak on this matter, not only because of my relative inexperience in the House but also because I was not sworn in at the time the original question was asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I agreed to second his motion, however, and therefore I feel I should speak on the matter.

The letter which was addressed by the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) to the hon. member for Greenwood raises very serious questions about the frankness with which questions are being answered in this House. The hon. member for Greenwood asked a question of substance dealing with the rights of a member of the RCMP in relation to an inquiry which was going on at the time. I understand the charges against Corporal Radey relate directly to his involvement in the Laycraft inquiry. The minister is as aware of those facts as we on this side of the House; in fact he is even more aware of them than we are.

It was at this point that the minister wrote the letter to the hon. member for Greenwood, to which the minister has referred and which will be put before the committee. The only conclusion one can draw from the letter on its face is that the charges being laid against Corporal Radey have nothing to do with the Laycraft inquiry. That is the prima facie reading of the letter. If that is not misleading, I do not know what it is. It is a fine point Mr. Speaker; it is a fine lawyer's point to say this letter does not specifically say that, but nevertheless it leaves that distinct impression because of what the letter omits to say and because of what it covers by its language.

To give you one example, the letter specifically refers to the fact that the allegations against Corporal Radey relate to the fact that he failed to obey the lawful command of his superior. Are we not then entitled to ask what the lawful command of his superior was? As I understand it, and I stand to be corrected, the lawful command of the superior was that the corporal involved should not speak to any commission counsel, even the counsel for the commission itself. That is not mentioned in this letter.

I think that when a member of parliament such as my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood, raises a question in good faith with respect to the rights of an individual charged by the RCMP, he is entitled, in a letter, certainly something written after some deliberation, to something which is completely frank and open, not something which is, with great respect, devious and dissimulatory at its best.

• (1532)

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that this particular matter would induce the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) to be a little more forthcoming in the type of explanation he gives in the House to avoid this type of situation. If he had been as forthcoming with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) at the relevant time, we would not be in this situation. I cannot help but remind him and the House that in 1976 when I asked his predecessor why they had the same people investigating l'Agence de Presse Libre du Quebec break-in who did the break-in, everybody more or less shrugged their shoulders. The minister at that time did not see fit to elucidate the matter in the House.

It seems to me that what the Solicitor General has been doing, and which is causing this problem, is that he has not been forthcoming enough in the House. He could easily have made available to the hon. member for Greenwood, who is a very intelligent legal counsel, some of the background documents. The case was being tried in Ottawa, and documents were around. While I do not know whether Your Honour will find a prima facie question of privilege, I would hope that in dealing with the matter that you would urge the Solicitor General to refrain from this specious doctrine. Every time a question is asked having anything whatsoever to do with police matters, he is using the coy doctrine of brushing it aside on some imagined ground of national security or super confidentiality. Surely matters of police and security are of vital concern to members of the House and, by the very nature of the subject, require complete and full disclosure by the minister.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I was moved to participate in this debate by some of the comments made by my seatmate, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who pointed out quite accurately that there are two points involved here. One is the question as to whether or not the letter itself can be considered as part of a proceeding of the House so that it would be within the purview of your jurisdiction. I think he has dealt with dispatch with that particular excuse, if it may be termed an excuse, quite well. The fact is that it was something which flowed out of the exchange in the House during question period. It was part of the response to be given to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) as a result of questions raised in this House.

To put it into perspective, I think the issue is simply this. If it was a clear case that a minister of the Crown in answering question in this House lied, that he gave a falsehood knowing it to be false—and I am not suggesting for a moment that that is what the situation is here—but if he did that, sir, you would be entitled to find, if you were able to determine that was the fact either by admission or otherwise, it would be the basis for a prima facie case of privilege, and then it should be investigated. I do not think there is any question about that.

I think the next step down the road must be: can the minister, under our system of ministerial responsibility, continue as has been the practice now which has developed over the past few years, can he, and may he indeed, according to our parliamentary tradition, fail to accept responsibility and not have this matter looked into, not on the basis that it is a lie with malice or forethought and so on, but somehow that the information given to them was false? I can give you a number of instances, sir, where that same argument has been brought up over and over again, unfortunately by members of this particular administration. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) on two different occasions, to my recollection, used that same doctrine that, while the information he gave he thought to be true, it was based upon misinformation given to him either by somebody in his office or a departmental employee.

I say to you, sir, that it is not good enough for the Solicitor General to stand in this House and suggest that there was a misunderstanding by him on the basis of information given, if that is what he said, or rather that he got information provided to him which tended to mislead the hon. member for Greenwood. I think the matter should be investigated because it is a fundamental question of ministerial responsibility. I simply submit, sir, that as I understood the excuse of the Solicitor General, it should not be enough to discount the matter, and for you to overlook it, but rather we should have the matter investigated to determine precisely what we mean in this House by ministerial responsibility and ministerial accountability to this parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have given very careful attention to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). As he will be aware, I have directed my attention already to many of the principles that have governed this question. They have been argued in a similar way, although in much different circumstances, only a few days ago in the question of privilege to which reference was made often this afternoon, raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence).

However, there is one very important difference that I am sure all hon. members will recognize in this instance over that other case. There are several differences, but one is quite fundamental to our procedure. That is to say, in his intervention today the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) did not in any way alter or change the content of his reply, or in any way indicate that he was dissatisfied with the reply he had given on an earlier occasion. In other words, in his intervention today he said, "Having had the question of privilege brought to my attention, I reviewed my reply. I stand by it; it is the reply I made at the time. It was on proper information at the time, and it is the reply I should have made under the circumstances at that particular time." Now whether that is right or not, it is not for me to judge. I am not the one in this situation to judge the accuracy of the facts involved.

I am certain there will be considerable disagreement, and interesting discussion is possible as to whether or not one side has merit or the other side has merit in these particular circumstances. However, that does not alter the basic fact that a question of privilege is essentially a procedural argument, and, once the minister has said that this is the reply he intended to give, and upon reviewing his information, he feels that it is the proper reply in the circumstances, it seems to me that that takes it out of the area of procedure and perhaps puts it into an area of debate or may raise it into the area of other remedies. Once the minister stands in his place and says "I have reviewed the reply, that reply was accurate and proper," I am bound to accept that, and the House is bound to accept that, no matter how violently the House may disagree with the interpretation the minister puts on that. It may pursue that violent disagreement another way, but in any case that seems to me to take the matter entirely out of the question of procedure and leave it in the realm of debate and disagreement, which is a different matter altogether.

Therefore, with that fundamental difference in mind, I really do not think at this moment, on the information that has been put before me today, that I can pursue this matter as a question of privilege.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 67, 164 and 279. I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

IVOR WYNNE STADIUM IN HAMILTON

Question No. 67—Mr. Beatty:

1. On the weekend of February 3, 4 and 5, 1978, did the Minister of Labour use government aircraft to fly to Vancouver and other places in Western Canada to convince owners of Canadian Football League teams to block the sale of the Hamilton Tiger Cats to Mr. Harold Ballard and, if so (a) what was the cost to the taxpayer for the minister's trip (b) who were the other members of the minister's party (c) in what way did the trip to western Canada relate to the official duties of the minister?

2. Does the Minister of Agriculture intend to make a grant to the owners of Ivor Wynne Stadium in Hamilton to cover 90 per cent of the cost of new seating as urged by the Minister of Labour and, if so (a) from what existing fund, if any, does the Minister intend to make such a grant (b) is the Minister of Agriculture and/or the Minister of Labour reconsidering making the grant in view of the fact that Mr. Ballard now owns the Hamilton Tiger Cats?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): 1. See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, citation 171 (11).

2. The Minister of Agriculture has not received an official application for assistance from the owners of Ivor Wynne Stadium in Hamilton. Any decision to assist this or any other project in the Hamilton area will be judged on its merits in line with service to the community and the general context of loans made to agricultural societies.

S. FREIFELD

Question No. 164—Mr. Roche:

1. Was a contract for $10,000 awarded on behalf of the Department of External Affairs to S. Freifeld, 606 Churchill Avenue, Ottawa, Ontario, to screen restricted files in Ottawa?

2. What is the nature of the files?

3. Is this sort of work usually contracted out and (a) if so, for what reason (b) if not (i) for what reason (ii) for what reason is an exception being made in this instance?

4. What qualifications does one have to have to screen the Department's restricted files?

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. Restricted files for the period 1950-1963 on Canada's relations with the United States, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, The Netherlands and Middle East.

3. Yes. (a) In order to utilize the expertise and experience of former senior officers of the department in determining whether previously restricted material has in the interval lost its sensitivity, thereby allowing its release to the public without endangering the conduct of Canada's international relations.

4. A thorough knowledge of the file subjects being screened, and their relationship to current international issues, plus a valid security clearance permitting access to restricted files.

U.S.S.R. EMBASSY—MOTOR VEHICLES

Question No. 279—Mr. Cossitt:

1. To the knowledge of the government, how many motor vehicles were licensed to the Embassy of the Soviet Union or to the employees in each of the past five years?

2. Does the government and specifically, the Department of External Affairs, have an up-to-date list of such vehicles and, if so, what is the current license plate, registration, etc. of each vehicle?

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. License plates for automobiles owned by the diplomatic, consular and foreign-based administrative and technical members of missions are issued by the provincial authorities. The list of the plates issued in Ottawa is sent every year to the Department of External Affairs. It is not however kept from year to year.

2. The following has been extracted from the 1978 list received from the motor vehicle bureau (Ottawa) of the ministry of transport and communications of Ontario:

Motor Vehicles Licensed in 1978 in Ottawa to the Embassy of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or to the Employees

Owner	Licence Plate	Colour	Make	Year
Amb. Yakovlev	CDA-088	(black)	limousine	1977
Amb. Yakovlev	CDA-188	(black)	Pontiac	1977
B.A. Soukharev	CDA-222	(silver)	Chevrolet	1977
Embassy	CDA-223	(beige)	Chevrolet	1977
Embassy	CDA-224	(blue)	Chevrolet	1977
Talanov	CDA-225	(brown)	Chevrolet	1977
Danilinive	CDA-232	(blue)	Chevrolet	1978
Souvorov	CDA-233	(blue)	Pontiac	1977
Ivanov	CDA-234	(red)	Chevrolet	1977
Borishpolets	CDA-235	(blue)	Pontiac	1977
Embassy	CDA-236	(brown)	Pontiac	1977
Embassy	CDA-237	(blue)	Chevrolet	1977
Skofenko	CDA-238	(yellow)	Fiat	1975
Vartanian	CDA-239	(blue)	Pontiac	1978
Meechulayev	CDA-240	(blue)	Chevelle	1977
Enguibarov	CDA-241	(yellow)	Chevrolet	1978
Enguibarov	CDA-242	(brown)	Mercury	1977
Enguibarov	CDA-243	(red)	Chevrolet	1978
Enguibarov	CDA-244	(red)	Buick	1978
Enguibarov	CDA-245	(tan)	Plymouth	1978
Embassy	CDA-246	(silver)	Pontiac	1977
Enguibarov	CDA-247	(beige)	Chevrolet	1978
Embassy	CDA-248	(blue)	Chevrolet	1977
Krioutchenov	CDA-249	(silver)	Pontiac	1977
Aleksansan	CDA-250	(blue)	Chevrolet	1978
Embassy	CDA-251	(tan)	Chevrolet	1978
Plavinski	CDA-252	(blue)	Chevrolet	1977
Movikov, Alex	CDA-274	(blue/green)	Chevrolet	1977
Press Office	CDA-282	(blue)	Chrysler	1977
Embassy	CDA-283	(yellow)	Chevrolet	1978
Embassy	CDA-284	(blue)	Chevrolet	1978
Embassy	CDA-285	(blue)	Chevrolet	1978
Plavinski	CDA-286	(red)	Plymouth	1978
Embassy	CDA-287	(beige)	Chevrolet	1978
Press Office	CDA-288	(red)	Plymouth	1978
Embassy	CDA-294	(brown)	Pontiac	1978
Krioutchenov	CDA-295	(silver)	Pontiac	1978
Bragin	XTR-013	(black)	Pontiac	1977
Palladin	XTR-004	(silver)	Ford	1978

Total: 39

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Point of Order—Mr. McGrath

● (1542)

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—COMMITTEES MEETING WHILE HOUSE SITTING

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, before orders of the day are called, I want to raise a point of order which I hope will not overtax your seemingly infinite patience, because we have had a number of procedural points of order raised in the House in the last couple of days. I am sure this point of order will commend itself to Your Honour because of the difficult if not impossible position in which it places the House.

The next order of government business calls for the House to go into committee of the whole to consider Bill C-10. The problem I want to put before you, Mr. Speaker, arises from the fact that as of this moment, 3.30 this afternoon, we have meeting the following standing committees of the House:

The first is the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. That committee happens to be dealing with a finance bill which is keeping the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) out of this House on a bill for which he has responsibility in this House, namely, Bill C-10, an act to amend the Income Tax Act with regard to family allowances. I could base my whole argument on that fact alone, but there are other committees meeting this afternoon as well.

There is the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. A number of people on that committee, two for sure, have a special interest in Bill C-10 which the House is now considering in committee of the whole, but feel they have to be at that committee meeting this afternoon. As well, we have the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts meeting later this day, as well as the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

I raise this at this time because the House will be dealing later today or on Thursday, as the case may be, in committee with amendments. This will tend to dramatize the dilemma in which the House finds itself.

First, there is the paradox of the House sitting in committee of the whole. That in itself would seem to exclude any other committees meeting at that time. When the House is in committee of the whole, that by definition seems to exclude any other meetings of committees of this House. The fact is there are committees of the House meeting today and will be meeting on Thursday while the House is in committee of the whole on a very important bill.

The problem is that when there are votes in committee of the whole there is no division bell. There is no way to alert members attending to their duties in committee that there are important votes taking place in the House. I submit this question should be of some importance to the government because the gap between the combined opposition and the government is closing as a result of the recent by-elections.

I have raised this matter before. I refer Your Honour to the House of Commons Debates for Monday, February 22, 1971, at page 3601. Apart altogether from the fact that we are thwarted in our efforts to be able to direct questions to the Minister of Finance on an important bill dealing with the Income Tax Act because the minister is present at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, there is the fact that members are precluded from attending to their duties in committee of the whole with respect to divisions that may take place, and probably will take place. I anticipate there will be amendments to this bill. Therefore this is a problem with which the Chair should certainly be seized.

I realize what is going through Your Honour's mind at the present time, that there is nothing in the standing orders to cover it. That happens to be the case. However, when we did away with the committee on supply and established standing committees of the House to deal with supply and legislation, that reduced the number of times the House was in committee of the whole. I do not believe it was envisaged at that time that committee of the whole would be competing with standing committees of the House either on questions of supply or on questions of legislation, as is the case we are faced with this afternoon. I leave that with Your Honour.

I raised this last night when we got on to this bill. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs was meeting last night at a time when we were in committee of the whole on Bill C-10. That committee was hearing evidence from the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance on another important finance bill. That placed the House of Commons in an impossible position, one which was never intended by the rules.

I submit with great deference that this is a situation where Your Honour should intervene. I leave it at that, and hopefully the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) will bring this to the attention of the government House leader and, if we are seized with the question on Thursday, Your Honour will be able to deal with it.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the point being made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I think it is fair to point out that the meeting of the finance committee last night was requested by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who at the same time decided to be in the House to accuse us of not having the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) here. Surely the opposition has a responsibility in this.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member denied that last night.

Miss Bégin: The hon. member was here last night instead of, as he requested, at the meeting of the finance committee on which he is the critic for the Tory party.

I say to the hon. member for St. John's East that the Minister of Finance would be pleased to come here to participate in this debate. At the moment he is at the meeting of the finance committee. However, he spontaneously offered to be with us for all of this evening. That was rejected by the hon. member for York-Simcoe who said he could not be here tonight. There is no meeting of the finance committee tonight.

[Mr. Speaker.]

It is unfortunate that the bill is being dealt with in his absence. However, I repeat that the Minister of Finance is willing to come here as soon as he has finished with the finance committee which is his first responsibility. I am piloting the bill as co-sponsor.

Mr. McGrath: His first responsibility is to be here.

Miss Bégin: The opposition members should make up their minds. They do not know what they want. They should not play games with this bill.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the minister entirely misses the point. I support completely what the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has said. This is not the first time this has happened. In fact while Your Honour was in the chair, and on one or two occasions when your predecessor was in the chair, members moved the adjournment of the House, a procedure which very soon stops meetings of committees and forces a vote.

The government should have the brain capacity to arrange that when the House is sitting in committee of the whole, standing committees do not meet. Surely a committee of the whole House has some priority over several standing committees meeting at the same time. The government chose to have this legislation dealt with by committee of the whole. Therefore standing committees should not be meeting at the same time.

Why were the committee meetings called? Some were called for organizational purposes and some of us should be at them. Some members will not be there because we have given this chamber priority while the House is sitting in committee of the whole. There are clauses members want to speak on, or vote for or against. The bells do not ring. How can you possibly attend a standing committee meeting in another building and at the same time take part in a committee of this whole House, something which should have priority?

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into the generalities of this discussion on the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). However, I would like to deal with the particulars he mentioned.

First, may I again clarify the situation with regard to last night, as I did when the hon. member for St. John's East raised it last night. Indeed, the reason there was a meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs last night was because it was specifically requested by official opposition members on that committee, led by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

There was no intention of having a meeting last night. As I indicated in the House last night, it was foreseen to be a problem to both sides of the House if that committee were to meet. However, in order to accommodate the official opposition and the official opposition finance critic, the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), decided to go ahead with the meeting.

● (1552)

As for the meeting today, the only reason the Minister of Finance is at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and not in this House is that the official opposition, again led by the hon. member for York-Simcoe and, I believe, by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), insisted that there be three successive meetings. The meeting of today was not set up by the government. It was set up by the standing committee, as are all standing committee meetings. That meeting was set up some time ago, and it is a coincidence, unfortunately, that we are still sitting here in committee of the whole considering an item of social legislation which I believe at least some hon. members opposite support and want to see passed.

Mr. Speaker: There are two others who want to contribute. In essence we are discussing a point over which I have no control. I think there is, therefore, a limit to how far we can go.

There have been contributions from both sides regarding the scheduling of meetings. Perhaps the point is properly raised. It is an advertisement to those who organize and agree upon the organizing of the scheduling of these meetings that perhaps more care should be taken to avoid conflicts. However, in the final analysis I do not have the power to arrange the scheduling of meetings or to cancel meetings, so therefore in the end, if the conflict cannot be resolved in the way which has been suggested this afternoon, there is nothing I can do about it.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding a statement made by the parliamentary secretary. I want to contradict his statement because of facts set out in the proceedings in this House last night.

At page 853 of Hansard the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is reported to have said:

> Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to delay to committee, but I cannot allow the parliamentary secretary to go misinformed. The fact is we were put under a guillotine with regard to Bill C-7. I said initially we could hear Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada. The governor informed us today that the only time he could be here was at eight o'clock tonight, because he goes to Vancouver tomorrow. I said we would not be difficult and if we could accommodate him tonight at eight o'clock, we would.

I think that should be on the record because it is not in accordance with what the parliamentary secretary said.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CHILD TAX CREDIT

The House resumed, from Monday, November 6, consideration in committee of Bill C-10, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide for a child tax credit and to amend the Family Allowances Act—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: Clause 1 is under consideration.

On clause 1—

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like at the outset of our proceedings today to amplify one or two points which were raised last night. The hon. member for York-Simcoe pointed out that 1.9 million families will gain as a result of this legislation, and 1.7 million will lose. That adds up to 3.6 million families. The hon. member then stated that taxation statistics show that only 1.7 million tax filers reported family allowances. In fairness to the hon. member for York-Simcoe, he may inadvertently have misread the taxation statistics which show that some 3.3 million tax filers reported $1.7 billion in family allowance benefits. In addition, there are about 300,000 poorer families who receive family allowances but who do not file tax returns.

Another point I would like to clarify is in relation to a request made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe for information on the financial implications of the proposed child benefit changes over the next four fiscal years. I indicated last night that indeed it is not a common practice in the House to provide revenue and expenditure projections beyond one fiscal year, but I should like to assure the hon. member, and all members of the House, that child benefit changes will be more or less self-financing in 1979-80 as well as in future years.

● (1602)

The expenditure savings through reductions in family allowance will remain constant in real terms over the course of time. The real value of child tax credits will also be maintained through indexing. Tax savings resulting from changes in exemptions for children aged 16 and 17 will also grow in line with inflation. Therefore the net impact of the proposed changes on financial requirements will really be marginal. The absolute dollar magnitude of each of the individual measures would depend upon the rate of inflation, incomes, and population growth, as well as other factors, as I indicated last night. I am not in a position to provide this breakdown beyond 1979-80.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the consideration of the bill I should like to raise with the minister, who is now answering our question, some of the concerns which I think have been enunciated in a number of areas but which have been brought into focus in a press release which was recently sent out by the National Anti-Poverty Organization. I am not sure whether the minister has had an opportunity to see that press release today, but this organization, of which, I am sure, the minister is aware, has raised some very legitimate question with respect to the effect of this legislation on an unfortunately large element of our society, namely, the poor. I want to put some of these questions to the minister at this time in the hope that she will be in a position to give us some information and guidance on some of the points that are raised in the press release, and then perhaps the minister will be in a position to answer the points at the conclusion of my remarks.

One of the points raised by the organization is with regard to the method of paying the refundable tax credit in one lump sum. The organization points out that this could adversely affect welfare recipients' cheques, depending on how individual provinces view this tax credit. The organization points out that welfare recipients are also restricted as to the amount of money they may have in the bank, so it may prevent them from saving money. So the organization does not know what effect this will have on provincial programs such as GAIN in British Columbia, or on GIS payments to the elderly. It points out that there are many senior citizens who receive family allowances.

It is suggested in the press release that an option to permit quarterly payments would benefit some, while still allowing others to receive a lump sum payment which would give them the money they would need to make a major purchase. People who choose to have quarterly payments could use it to coincide with school vacation, the start of school, Christmas, etc.

The organization goes on to point out that the new benefit is of concern to NAPO because of lack of consumer protection, affordable financial counselling services, and the need for legislation to prevent exploitation through the policing of tax rebate discounting. This point has been raised on previous occasions—as I know from having heard it in the House and from reading Hansard—by many of my colleagues in the House. I would simply like to point out to the minister again this concern of the organization.

There is another interesting point whch the organization raises, that is, that there are some groups of people for whom no policy has as yet been established. The organization refers to foster children, for example. For some foster children, it states it has been the policy to place family allowances in trust for their future. This income will now be reduced. The organization feels that losses sustained by these children should be compensated.

The minister will remember that during the question period I raised some questions with respect to social insurance numbers. NAPO makes some observations with respect to that.

Mr. Rae: Living in SIN.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Living in fear of SIN would be the more appropriate phrase. The fact of the matter is that status Indians and the Inuit, as is pointed out by NAPO, are not required to pay income tax. There are many other Canadians who do not require a social insurance number at this time. The organization, therefore, questions whether or not these people will qualify for the refundable tax credit and whether the obtaining of SIN is a prerequisite for participation in this scheme. Another question in the whole debate about social insurance numbers is where precisely status Indians and the Inuit fit into the scheme.

The minister has told us on a number of occasions, both in the House and privately, that although she has no direct responsibility for SIN, she is interested in the operation of this bill which she has taken upon herself to guide through the House as one of the co-sponsors. So I hope the minister can answer some of the questions that are raised here and can let us know how the government intends to operate this scheme in so far as status Indians and the Inuit are concerned.

The organization makes a technical point about children born in November who have reached the age of 18 and are not eligible for the tax rebate, while those born in December who have reached 18 reap a double windfall by qualifying for the tax credit and a higher exemption. Here I wonder what the minister's attitude would be toward the suggestion of the organization that a more equitable solution would be to allow parents of all 18-year olds to qualify for a portion of the rebate, or one-twelfth a month.

Finally, one of the most important questions they raise, as they put it, concerns lack of information regarding this program. The organization states in its press release:

> We feel an all out program must be instituted to inform family allowance recipients of their entitlement and what they have to do to get it. We have also recommended to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the outside of family allowance envelopes containing the statement of income form be marked with a special warning not to throw it away. We also recommend post offices keep a supply of extra forms together with income tax forms usually available there.

The point the organization is making is that there is a great number of people who will possibly be entitled to benefit from this program who should have more information regarding the availability of those benefits.

The minister has explained that the whole process will go through some kind of giant sophistocated computer in the department so that if the computer works properly, so will the system. But the initial concern, of course, is that those people who might be entitled to the benefits, who qualify for them—they are the most vulnerable in our society—might not be aware of this program because they do not follow the proceedings in parliament on a daily basis, do not read Hansard and do not necessarily read the newspapers. I would be interested to know from the minister what plans the department has to inform those people of the availability of benefits.

Those are the concerns expressed by the National Anti-Poverty Organization—

Mr. McGrath: And the official opposition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not even have to add that they are also the concerns of the official opposition, because it is known that these concerns, based on compassion, have been raised very articulately by the hon. member for St. John's East and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, who are concerned about giving the best effect to the plan, which the minister is now introducing in the House.

I think these are legitimate questions which require some explanations, some elucidation and enlightenment from the minister so that we can be sure that the plan as presented by the government at this time will be as effective as possible.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I think I have enough information with me right now to enable me to answer all the points raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. Of course I am aware of the press release put out by NAPO. My last meeting with them was held on October 16 during which we discussed the proposed bill at length. Whenever I have had a chance to be in another Canadian city in the last two months, I have made a point of meeting the local associations which are members of NAPO and, which represent those whom we want to help on a priority basis. Therefore, I can repeat here what I said to them.

The question of the annual payment which might eventually affect people adversely if provincial governments do not pass on the new allowance in its entirety to families, is one on which I have spoken often in the House and, I have stated what we have done. I want to stress in particular that older people receiving family allowances for their children, or for children whom they have in legal custody, will not be penalized under GAIN. I have said that often. The hon. member was probably absent from the House. The province of Ontario as well as the province of British Columbia have confirmed that. Therefore, the new child tax credit will not be considered as income. I can assure the hon. member that that applies also to veterans' programs and other programs. There is no problem on that front. I am still awaiting a reply from my provincial colleagues with a formal commitment. I have received it informally more than once, but I want a formal commitment that they will pass it on and that provincial governments will not recover that money either directly or indirectly.

The second point which the organization made, and which is particularly valid in the western part of the country, is the social problem of tax discounters. I have spoken in the House on the matter of tax discounting, but this will permit me to make my views public once more. I will do everything I can, in terms of making it known, to discourage mothers from cashing in their anticipated credit ahead of time. Under the new bill passed by the House a few months ago, no tax discounter can take more than 15 per cent of the child tax credit, including interest and other charges. However, some mothers might decide they want 85 per cent of the credit ahead of time. I will discourage mothers from doing so, and I hope to have the help of all hon. members in that. The abuses we have witnessed in the past, particularly in British Columbia, will I hope, be under control when this provision on child tax credit is in effect.

The third point referring to the need for information is a point which I would like to reserve for the end.

The fourth point deals with the treatment of foster children, in other words, children placed in foster homes, who do not receive family allowances. Let me give hon. members a legal answer. Those children receive a special allowance, similarly to children placed in institutions. That special allowance will be continued and is not diminished. Not only will it be $25.68, but with the indexation it will amount to $28.80 as of January. I think this answers the fourth point raised by the hon. member.

● (1612)

The fifth point referred to SIN, which is something I discussed with the hon. member privately. The hon. member wants to know where it is going to stop. He referred to the eventual abuses of the use of SIN. Apparently some ambiguity concerning this infiltrated our debates in the last weeks. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar several times indicated that he was not pleased with some of the things we were going to do. We are going to implement a new child tax credit, but by my reading of the press I conclude that his fears were not associated with that. He was concerned about the penalty on cashing bonds or other financial assets without providing social insurance numbers to the taxation people.

It is a requirement of the Income Tax Act that social insurance numbers be provided. Sections 234 and 237 provide for that requirement, and for the penalty. The hon. member referred to the penalty clause which is contained in a law passed by the House.

The child tax credit provision is a use of the taxation system. In that system people are required to obtain social insurance numbers by law. Mothers who do not have social insurance numbers will be invited to apply for one. We in the department have observed that a great number of mothers who have submitted social insurance numbers have given us their husbands' numbers. Possibly they have done so because of the practice established by credit card companies where wives use their husbands' credit cards. We invite people who do not have social insurance numbers to apply for them. They can go to post offices to pick up application forms which must be filled out.

The sixth point raised a question regarding Inuit and Indian children. We have not had an opportunity to clarify that yet. Clearly these children have the same rights as other Canadian children. Therefore they will receive, through their mothers, the new child tax credit. One must remember that the child tax credit uses the taxation system, under which Indians do not file. In this case it was clearly decided that Indian mothers will apply in the same manner as other Canadian mothers and will receive the credit for their children.

Some benefits and tax privileges are prorated in the tax system. Others are given as per status on December 31 of the tax year. The child tax credit will go to children who are below 18 years of age as of December 31 of the tax year for which people are filing.

The last point is a very important one. It concerns the needed information campaign to make sure all eligible mothers apply for and receive the benefit. Of course this applies more to mothers on welfare and working mothers of poor families who do not pay taxes, or are in no way related to the tax system. There are hundreds of thousands of such people. We are making maximum use of cheque inserts. There was one in October. There will be one in December and in January, together with the one-page new form. Also there will be one in February. In addition, we intend to have a special mailing to all family allowance recipients who do not have social insurance numbers. This special mailing will instruct them on how to receive their numbers.

I have written to all my provincial colleagues asking for their assistance in permitting social workers or professional field staff to assist all the people they meet in their daily work. Since most of these people are on social assistance programs, they will be provided with the required assistance in filling out forms. I would welcome suggestions from members of the House as to using voluntary organizations which are connected with women. I am referring to such organizations as those fighting poverty and to other women's organizations. They could be of assistance in the establishment of an information program. Also we are training our own field staff in every income security office in the country. In addition to their training on GIS, they will be trained to assist mothers and parents in general in filling out forms in January, February and March. I stress the importance of getting the mothers, particularly of families in need, to apply for this program.

Mr. McGrath: My question arises out of those posed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, but first I should like to clear up a misconception which was placed on the record by the Minister of National Health and Welfare when I raised a point of order. She accused us of playing games with this bill. I am sure she was implying that some kind of a filibuster was taking place. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The record will show that we first received this bill in committee of the whole on Thursday, November 2. On that occasion we had two hours to deal with it. On Friday, November 3, we were provided with one hour and 40 minutes in which to debate this bill. Yesterday, because of the procedural debate brought on by the government House leader, we were provided with approximately 30 minutes. Thus, we have spent a total of four hours on this very important bill, which is the equivalent of less than one day. The minister should not throw out irresponsible accusations of that kind. If anyone is playing games, certainly it is the government, as evidenced by the procedural argument of the government House leader yesterday and the failure of the Minister of Finance to be present in committee to answer questions on this bill for which he has responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The minister made replies to my colleague respecting no formal agreement or undertaking by the provinces regarding this bill, and that perhaps it stands a chance of being discounted respecting social welfare payments paid by the provinces.

I should like to refer to the case of my own province. This bill was brought in coincidental with a bill now before the House to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. That will mean a number of people in the Atlantic provinces and other parts of the country who heretofore would qualify for unemployment insurance, will now have to fall back on the overtaxed welfare agencies of our provinces and cities. The absence of a formal agreement or undertaking to deduct the amount of the tax credit from the amount payable in social welfare obviously will be irresistible to some of the provinces. When that is taken into account, together with the fact that universal family allowance payments have been decreased by the terms of this bill from $28—which would be the case in January under indexation—to under $20, then the very result of this bill could be opposite to what the minister is trying to achieve, namely, a net reduction in the total income to low income families.

● (1622)

Why has the minister proceeded with this bill without a formal undertaking from the provinces? We know that the provincial ministers, when they met in Nova Scotia in September, complained publicly of the fact that there had been no consultation with them on this bill. Surely, given the concern expressed by these ministers, and given the fact that the minister knew that she would be presenting this bill to the House in October or November, she could have made some effort to meet with the ministers and extract from them a formal commitment that they would not deduct the amount of the child tax credit from the amount now payable under various social welfare programs by the the provinces and the cities. Would the minister tell the committee why she is proceeding with this bill without such a commitment?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, what has been suggested in terms of a filibuster by the loyal opposition may have some truth. The hon. member did not even say that we sat on Thursday afternoon and Thursday evening regarding this bill. He missed two hours there. Then he repeats the question he asked me just the other day. Every one of these questions has been asked several times now.

The hon. member knows very well that, contrary to what the NDP say, the government has no choice in dealing with this bill other than through committee of the whole. We do not have the choice of going to the standing committee on finance. The opposition appears to be wasting time, but what they are waiting for I do not know.

Mr. McGrath: You don't understand the system.

Miss Bégin: The Minister of Finance will be here tonight, but the opposition does not seem to want that. The hon. member knows full well that the provinces have developed in recent years the bad habit of taking back from their citizens what is given to them through federal programs, be it old age pensions or family allowances.

Mr. McGrath: What are you going to do about it?

Miss Bégin: The hon. member for St. John's East should be putting that question to Charlie Brett in Newfoundland. I have written to the minister in Newfoundland, and we will be meeting on November 20 and 21. What the hon. member is attempting to do is to appear to be giving me hell in order to obtain a provincial agreement on something which is to go directly to the Canadian people from the federal government.

Mr. McGrath: The minister just doesn't understand what we are trying to do here, Mr. Chairman. First of all, she misleads the House. I would remind her that we started in committee of the whole on this bill last Thursday, and that we sat for 20 minutes before six o'clock. If the minister does not want to listen to the truth, I cannot help it.

Let me deal with what she is talking about. The minister is asking this committee to pass a bill the net effect of which will be, first, to reduce the universal amount of the family allowance by $8 as of January 1, and second, of reducing the income to low income earners in Canada in the absence of a formal commitment from the provinces that they will not subtract the amount of the child tax credit from the amount they are currently paying out on welfare. That is our concern, and it is the minister's responsibility to obtain that undertaking from the provincial ministers, not ours.

She was warned about this situation when the provincial ministers met in Nova Scotia in September, when they complained at that time that there was no consultation. She knows that the province of Quebec, which has its own family allowance plan, was not consulted, that the province of Alberta was not consulted, and that there has been no consultation with, or undertaking or commitment from the provinces that they will not in fact subtract the total amount that would be payable to a low income family under the tax credit provisions of this bill, the net effect of which will be the very opposite of what the minister is trying to do, and the result will be to reduce incomes for low income families. If she cannot give us some kind of undertaking in that regard, then she might very well have a filibuster on her hands, and rightly so.

Miss Bégin: We should not be debating in this House problems which are to do with the behaviour of the provinces. The Leader of the Opposition says that he will let the provinces do what they wish, but the member for St. John's East says that he does not trust the provinces. This government trusts the provinces. Many provincial officials have met with federal officials and told them that they will pass on the benefits. I am confident that I will receive a formal commitment from them.

We are doing this to help the people of Canada. I would suggest to the hon. member for St. John's East that if he knows anything about democracy he should write to his riding, if he will not go there, and ask the groups that represent mothers and poor families to lobby their provincial government in order to obtain something which is of provincial jurisdiction. The hon. member implies that I am linked to a provincial-federal agreement. I am not, because this is a federal program. The hon. member knows that, and it is dishonest for him to pretend that there is any link inherent between this proposal and the behaviour of the provinces. They have many ways of recovering the money if they wish. For example, they could do it through day care fees, a program classified as being under the education department, not a social program.

We must ensure that this money goes to the parents and does not become an indirect transfer payment to the provinces, but it is not a case for a federal-provincial confrontation, as the hon. member would define the situation. It is a federal program, and the government is giving it directly to Canadian families and asking them to lobby their provincial governments to make sure that their elected representatives leave it with their citizens.

If members would follow the development of social policy in this country they would know that the provinces instructed the federal government, through my predecessor two years ago, to explore tax related programs such as this one to help, on a selective basis, groups that are in need. The three groups which were identified specifically around that time as needing help were families with children, including single parent families, people between the ages of 64 to 65 who lose their jobs and can no longer work, and older people. This bill addresses the problems of one of these three groups. The provinces know that, and there is no opposition to it. We all want to see this bill passed and to make sure that it is respected by the provincial welfare programs.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to interrupt my colleague, but I think it is important that we keep the record straight. The minister has given the impression that we have been sitting in committee of the whole on this bill for a long time and that they have been answering questions. I have reviewed Hansard, and on Thursday we spent approximately two hours and 20 minutes on this bill in committee of the whole. On Friday there was a point of privilege raised by the member for Northumberland-Durham immediately after question period, which went through the morning session and into the afternoon session. We started in committee of the whole at 15 20 on Friday afternoon. I was here and wanted to ask questions of the minister. That was my first opportunity. Yesterday we started at 21 25 p.m. I am simply saying that the red herring the minister pulls across the trail that she does not want to answer questions may be true, but her reading of the time is wrong.

● (1632)

The Chairman: Order, please. I think we should drop that question. It is not the way to make progress. It is a point of debate more than anything. I will allow one last question to the hon. member for St. John's East. The hon. member for Athabasca, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, and the hon. member for Edmonton West have indicated they want to contribute to the debate.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I want to put this question to the minister once more, and I will ask it as directly and simply as I can. Given the concerns that have already been expressed in this House, by the Anti-Poverty League and others, that the amount of the child tax credit will be deducted from the amounts payable by the provinces and municipalities for welfare, and given the fact that the provincial ministers of welfare, meeting in Nova Scotia in September, complained that there was no consultation, why is the minister proceeding with this bill without a formal commitment from the provinces that they will not allow the amount of the child tax credit to be discounted from the amount payable by welfare.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I fail to see why the hon. member repeats three times a question to which I have given the answer. Even on second reading it was quite a long answer. I want to say to the hon. member that even if he opposes the child tax credit, non-taxable, going to mothers in the months of March and April of next year, of $200 per child if the family makes less than a certain ceiling, I do not oppose that. we are in favour of that on this side. I do not understand the ambiguous position of the hon. member.

This is a federal program that goes directly to the mothers of the country wherever need exists. It is quite urgent that this program be passed by the House, be implemented, and the cheques delivered to the families in order to make sure that the period of waiting time for the mothers of families in need will be as short as possible without them facing a relative deduction in the family allowance.

This has been said often. There will be a reduction in their family allowance cheques in the months of January and February. We would like them to get the new cheque as soon as possible, and that will be in March, but it will more than offset the other loss. It is going to be a net increase of around $140 per child per year, which means that cheques will go out in the hundreds of dollars for each family in the province of the hon. member because it is an under-privileged and poorer province. That being so, it will benefit from this new money as soon as this bill is passed. I think it is quite clear that this has nothing to do with the federal-provincial mood of the country.

I repeat to the hon. member, who is not listening, that this is a federal program. If it requires provincial adjustment we will be happy to help the provinces to come to an understanding of the new program and make the adjustments.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have the opportunity to ask the minister a few questions on this important subject. The minister claims she is very concerned about poverty and those people living below the poverty line, yet since the government of which she is a member has been in power, countless mothers live as have mothers of past generations—in a web of poverty. The policies implemented by this government over the past 15 years have not improved the situation at all.

The hidden community of the poor in this country remains in relatively the same state as it has been for some time—victims of circumstances beyond their control, victims of a totally insensitive and poorly informed government about the things that need to be done to correct poverty.

In short, Mr. Chairman, I am concerned and upset by the persistence of widespread poverty in our modern, prosperous society. Depending on which definition you use—I know the Prime Minister chooses to use the definition which makes it look better than it is, but if we take the definition of poverty used by the Senate committee, which I think is the best definition, we see that 20 per cent or more of Canadians are living in conditions of poverty.

To try to come to grips with the problem of poverty, it is crucial to understand the causes and effects of it. Contrary to popular belief in some circles, today's poverty is rarely caused simply by laziness. If we look at statistics we will realize that the greatest number of people living below the poverty line are working full time, but their full-time work does not produce enough income to meet their needs. There are loggers, fishermen, farmers and others who are seasonally employed, and then there are the elderly, the blind, the disabled, mothers of deserted families, and the young who are becoming more and more important in this category of poverty while this government is in charge. Perhaps less than 3 per cent of the people living in poverty are in that condition as a result of what might be described a laziness.

I am particularly concerned about the increasing and obvious evidence of the failure of welfare programs, which are increasingly costly and less and less effective, as weapons against poverty in Canada. That may be because the gradual development of poverty programs in this country is not guided by any over-all strategy or consistent goal. Rather, we have a jungle of programs developed in a patchwork manner, helter-skelter and unco-ordinated, and as a result nothing works.

The bill the minister has placed before the House is just another example of juggling a small patch in this patchwork of anti-poverty programs which, as far as I can tell, will do very little to come to grips with poverty. The minister has not said anything to make me believe differently.

We believe that reforms are required in the whole approach to poverty. As a party, we have stated this on many occasions in the past. Incentives need to be built into the anti-poverty program, and there is a need to emphasize the necessity of income development for individuals below the poverty line, as well as a need to assist all Canadians to develop the ability and the confidence to achieve greater income earning potential. Incentives are needed to encourage recipients to seek further employment or retraining. Programs which too often discourage such efforts must be reformed.

In the past we have spoken about an income development program the principles of which must be to create new incentives to encourage recipients to seek further employment or training; to establish a system which is fair for all those in need and perhaps re-assess completely the concept of universality. Some of these universal programs have become ineffective when applied to those in greatest need. I am glad to know the minister heard my last comment. She has spoken with liveliness and conviction of the program presented in this bill, saying that it will solve the problems of the poor. She specified particularly single mothers and elderly individuals.

● (1642)

If we look at the statistics again, we note that the poor have become poorer while the rich have become richer, and the gap is ever and ever widening. I want to ask the minister some questions in this particular regard. We know for example that in 1951 the lowest 20 per cent of income earners took 4.4 per cent of national income, while the highest 20 per cent took 42.8 per cent of the national income. After the implementation of the various welfare policies for which the minister, and for which the government she is part of is responsible, the 1976 comparable figures show that now 3.9 per cent of the national income goes to the group with the lowest 20 per cent of national income, and for the highest group the figure is 44 per cent.

If we are to believe these figures and I have no reason not to believe them—they are produced by a reputable body known as the National Council of Welfare, I ask the minister whether she can inform the House what she expects the effect of this particular measure to be on this income distribution to which I have made reference? That is what will be the percentage of national income going to the lowest 20 per cent as opposed to what it is now? Can she give us some idea what this figure would be and how she arrived at such a calculation? I will let the minister answer before asking the next question.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, on the description of poverty given by the hon. member for Athabasca, basically he is right except for one fact when he says, although he be saying it from his heart, that the gap is widening between the poor and the rich. Technically, that is not the description of poverty in Canada. If I take a scientific approach, at a time when some members use their heart, it is because the best way to attack poverty is to talk figures.

The gap is described as this: a constant trend over the last 30 years shows that the 20 per cent at the top of the socioeconomic scale live out of some 40-plus per cent of the revenues, and 20 per cent at the bottom of the scale live out of 4 per cent of the revenues.

As to the need to continue to fight poverty, I hope all hon. members agree in this House that is an urgent matter. However, in the last ten years absolute poverty in Canada, as given by the indicators of Statistics Canada, has been reduced from 20 per cent to 12 per cent. So there has been progress, and that is important to note. However, there is still a lot of work to do. The member refers to it quite properly when he speaks—I think he said it was hidden poverty. It is less flagrant, but it is still alive.

What it does in terms of redistribution is this. It will bring to families with children—and this is something which we have identified as one of the three most vulnerable groups in Canadian society—an additional $300 million, to about 700,000 families who are living below the poverty line. In terms of a particular subgroup of this group, it will give $106 million to single parent families. In other words, 87 per cent of all single parent families will receive some credit benefits, not necessarily the full credit because we have a decreasing scale. It is not a cut-off point at one level of income only. I think that is very important for both the subgroup of the single families and the families with children living below the poverty line in Canada.

As to a point which has nothing to do with the bill but which has to do with the social policy of the country, namely, the need to build in incentives to work in our welfare program, I do not know if the hon. member was referring to the problem we have in the provinces and under the federal CAP program by which for every dollar earned the person on welfare loses a dollar of welfare. This is a problem I find particularly in urgent need of being tackled. I am very pleased to announce to the House that some of my provincial counterparts are ready now to put that on the agenda for discussion.

Miss MacDonald: I am glad to hear it.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, as usual the minister spoke at length but did not at all address herself to the question which I put to her. She has just repeated things which I have heard her say before, and that is why I did not ask the question she answered.

My interest was to determine whether in fact this particular bill would in any way at all shift the income distribution for Canadians in any significant way from the way it is now in existence. She also seemed to misunderstand my comments about the ever widening gap in the income classification between those who are poor and those who are rich, and I will enlarge on that in a minute. But before doing that, I am rather curious as to why she insists on using Statistics Canada as a measurement for description of poverty. Perhaps it is just because their description happens to be the one which makes the government look best, instead of the description developed under the chairmanship of one of her colleagues in the Liberal party who headed up the Senate committee. If we look at his description of poverty line, it is quite clear that still more than 20 per cent of Canadians are below the poverty line. If we use Statistics Canada figures, it is something like 11.5 per cent.

It seems to me the minister is rather shamelessly trying to juggle figures to make a situation look a lot better than it really is. I am sure she should apologize to the House and to the poor people of Canada for that kind of shameless display of juggling statistics. In regard to the gap to which I referred, the same report, namely, the National Council on Welfare report, shows that in 1951 between the lowest 20 per cent income and the highest 20 per cent income, the gap in their income was $3,060. In 1976, adjusting for inflation, the gap was increased the $18,000. In other words, it had multiplied several-fold.

● (1652)

While the minister might claim that more welfare programs have been put in place, and the Prime Minister might claim that his redistribution of income policies have been effective, the fact is they have indeed been gross failures. The minister should admit that and dedicate herself to taking new steps which will come to grips with this problem in a meaningful way.

In addition to answering the first question about what the effect of this might be on income redistribution, I would ask her whether she knows what the effect of this bill will be on the gap in income between the lowest 20 per cent and highest 20 per cent in terms of real dollars.

[Miss Bégin.]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I thought the hon. member was in the chamber when we went through second reading of this bill. Possibly I was misinformed. I then refer him to Hansard for October 31 where there are two graphs describing the income and natural distribution of child benefits. I said graphs, not statistical table. The hon. member will find them appendixed to Hansard for October 31. That shows the before and after situation of what the new child tax credit does to correct the tax system as far as child benefits distribution is concerned.

As to the last question on how this new program will affect the bottom 20 per cent of the Canadian population with regard to poverty, we do not have any figures for that.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, the situation that exists today is that while the cost of welfare programs has escalated to a multibillion dollar security program, the gap between the rich and the poor has grown dramatically. Part of the reason, as I already stated, is that the programs have generally been universal. Some 80 per cent of all expenditures are on universal programs. The consequence of this universality has been a substantial dilution of the effectiveness of these programs. Therefore the target population, the poor, receive a substantially lower amount than if this program had been tailored in a specific manner.

To some extent this bill establishes a means test. Is this an indication that all current universal welfare programs will be changed in such a way that a means test will be applied and the target population, the poor, will be given substantially greater assistance in all ways and not just by way of handouts? We know that handouts do not solve anything. In fact people are often trapped in perpetuity by them. Does the minister plan to stick to the past Liberal policy of universality in all these programs, thereby diluting them and making them less useful, or does she feel that if these programs are specifically target-oriented they are perhaps more useful in terms of dealing with the poverty problem?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, there is something that surprises me very much. With regard to the hon. member's third question, I think I am justified in reminding him that approximately a year ago he gave me hell, to say the least, and issued a press release because he had interpreted some of my speeches as questioning the universality of social programs. I am not sure where the hon. member stands today. He seems to be no longer in favour of universality.

We said in the House last week that this program gives us what I portray to be the best of selectivity and universality. It is clear to those on this side of the House that the family allowance program, like the old age pension, should be of a universal nature for all Canadians. In one case, we have added the GIS. In the case of children, we are making a correction through the tax system in order to eliminate two tax privileges which do not benefit those it should benefit. We are introducing instead a new child tax credit on a selective basis.

We are not implying any means test. I do not know why the hon. member brought that in. This will be a declaration of income of the two parents in order to provide families below a certain level of income with an additional $200, non-taxable, per child per year. We on this side stand very firmly on relative universality for every child in Canada.

I have difficulty in answering the hon. member more fully until I know where he stands. I do not understand if he is in favour of or against universality in family allowances.

Mr. Yewchuk: The minister is obviously confused about the question I asked her last spring. I thought at the time she was rather confused because of the answers she gave. I will try to clarify it for her. At that time I took no position whatsoever on universality or anything else.

Mr. Nystrom: Where do you stand now?

Mr. Yewchuk: All I was trying to do was establish her position. At that time she had made some public statements to the effect that she would adjust or juggle some of the existing programs in order to get funds from that juggling to establish a guaranteed annual income.

Miss Bégin: Here it is.

Mr. Yewchuk: I asked her to tell us what programs she was going to juggle. I did not tell her not to juggle. I simply wanted to know which ones would be juggled. I took no position on universality.

Mr. Nystrom: What is your position now?

Mr. Yewchuk: I simply wanted to know where she stood, and she refused to tell us. Today she seems to be waffling again.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member for Athabasca is willing to answer one quick question before we call it five o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock p.m., it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill again later this day.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Public Service—Indexing of pensions; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Airports—Winnipeg international—Facilities to assist handicapped persons; the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis)—Public Service—Relocation and retraining of employees whose jobs declared redundant.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, and notices of motions.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, there is agreement among all parties to proceed with consideration of Bill C-211 and accordingly to stand all bills that come before it. This has been unanimously agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1702)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO OUTLAW CHILD PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher) moved that Bill C-211, to amend the Criminal Code (pornography), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in introducing Bill C-211, to amend the Criminal Code, I seek support from all quarters of the House. A similar bill was studied extensively in the House in the third session of the thirtieth parliament. Its subject matter was studied by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and a unanimous report of that standing committee was the result. The bill was incorporated in a government bill, Bill C-51, in the third session. That bill died on the order paper at the end of the third session, so I intend today to raise this matter again.

In view of the work which has already been done, I hope there will be unanimous consent to proceed with this subject matter. Hopefully we will receive from the government a commitment that the amendments to the Criminal Code which were incorporated in Bill C-51, specifically the amendments to sections 159 and 166, will be proceeded with and passed in this session.

Those amendments are endorsed by all hon. members on this side of the House, and it is with that in mind that I introduce this bill today.

In the last session hon. members on both sides of the House presented private members' bills on the subject of pornography. As I have already said, this subject matter was referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The bills of the last session, and Bill C-211 which I introduced today, had their geneses among the Canadian people, not in the House of Commons. There was a ground swell of public opinion against what people saw when they went into corner grocery stores, walked past marquise or wherever they might have been. They were confronted with explicit sexual material, with which they had to be content.

When various members of this House presented their bills, other hon. members were highly skeptical. The ominous threat of censorship was immediately raised. It was suggested that these members were trying to bring back the nineteenth century. While members of parliament might have been slow coming around, the evidence is that the public has been demanding that we take action. The public has been appalled at the sexually explicit material which has become readily available at outlets throughout our country. That material is available not just in our large cities but in almost every community across this land.

Calls for action came from community leaders, church leaders, parents and police departments. The calls were for amendments to the Crimical Code, not to stem the flood of this material, but at least to reduce its impact.

Often in the history of mankind it has taken tragedy to awaken people to what has been happening, and so it was in the last session of parliament. We were not receiving support from a number of members of parliament. We faced innumerable questions about censorship. Then something happened in Toronto which changed everything. It is so difficult for people to learn the lessons of life that it often takes tragedy to force us to face the stark realities of life. The tragedy to which I refer was that an 11-year old boy had to give his life to spark public consciousness about what was happening in our streets. I refer to the death of Emanuel Jaques. That highly publicized event suddenly raised the level of consciousness in the public and in members of parliament. Yes, something had to be done.

I and other hon. members were pleased that the government allowed this subject matter to be referred to a committee. After hearing reports on both sides of the issue, the all-party committee reported that a dramatic increase in the amount of sexually explicit material had become available in Canada. That finding was substantiated. Traditionally this material was in the form of magazines, but it became more sophisticated. In addition to magazines there were home movies, cassettes, and sexual paraphernalia which defied description.

In its findings the committee stated:

> A close examination of this development has revealed the emergency of a number of unhealthy social tendencies which are unacceptable to the vast majority of Canadians.

The committee found that too often the material involved was exploitive of women. The result was degradation not just of women but of all humanity.

The committee observed that there was an increasing amount of material vividly depicting the participation of children in sexually explicit acts. This material portrayed children involved in sexual acts individually, with adults, with animals, and with inanimate objects. What I found interesting was that this so-called "kiddie porn" was condemned by all witnesses who said that adults should have the right to decide what to read or view. When it came to "kiddie porn" all were appalled.

Even pornography peddlers said that this material should not be on the stands. But when pressed further they said they did not peddle it. If they do not peddle it, how can it be on the stands? When pornography peddlers—many of whom are fathers—were confronted with what this material is all about and its ravages on young minds, they were appalled. However, I assume the dollar speaks louder than their apparent disgust.

Bill C-211 addresses itself specifically to child pornography or "kiddie porn". I am dealing today with the most sordid element of pornography which is now in this country. According to studies, and also evidence before the standing committee, this material is almost totally imported into this country. It is estimated that between 80 per cent and 85 per cent comes from the U.S., and almost the entire remainder comes from Europe. Very little of it is Canadian made.

● (1712)

The customs and excise branch of Revenue Canada is authorized, under the Customs Tariff Act, to prohibit the importation of goods which are described as pornographic. The difficulty with the importation regulations, I suggest, is not a legislative problem but rather one of administration. What is interesting is that ministers of national revenue have been lax before, but the public outcry has suddenly toughened their resolve. Nevertheless, the smut still comes into the country. However, at least there is now a recognition that under the Customs Tariff Act much of this material can be kept out of the country.

The definition under section 159 of the Criminal Code is not totally clear, and so Bill C-211 attempts to define obscenity more precisely, thus giving our customs officers and other officials a clearer understanding of what this House means and how it defines obscenity.

What was pointed out also was that the material of which we are now speaking is produced almost totally by organized criminal networks which, as I said before, have their basic operation in the United States. It is organized crime that is involved in the production, transportation, and distribution of this material.

The Vancouver police department, in co-operation with two other metro police departments, in its presentation to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on February 21, 1978, stated the following:

> The Vancouver police department expresses a concern that the pornography industry has a major influence on crime. Pornography cannot be looked at in isolation. The city of Vancouver has a very cosmopolitan population, it is a seaport city with the largest drug addiction problem in Canada. The major prostitution problem involves both males and females and young children who have found the homosexual market to be a means of supporting themselves. It is our contention, that the pornography industry aids and abets the social problem of prostitution.

It is understandable why the purveyors of this filth would oppose any type of restriction on their trade. It is because their trade is highly lucrative. Mark-ups of 500 per cent to 5,000 per cent are common. But is it not an indictment of our society that we can grovel so low that we will even use children, some of them as young as three years of age, to depict sexual activity in order that a profit can be turned? What an indictment of society it is that a profit can be turned because someone is willing to exploit a three-year-old!

Section 166 of the Criminal Code is a section which my bill would amend. At present it pertains to female children only. I suppose that when that section was first drafted and passed in the House it was thought that only female children needed to be protected against rape or sexual exploitation. Well, the world in which you and I live is not the same any longer, and we find now that male children are as much depicted in these magazines as are female children. The exploitation of these magazines by the homosexual market is on the increase, and whether or not we like to raise the topic, it is with us, and it is we who will bear the blame if we allow it to continue. So Bill C-211 amends section 166 of the Criminal Code to include not only female children but also male children.

I was pleased to see that the standing committee in its seventh recommendation supported this bill. This is what the committee stated in its report:

Section 166 of the Criminal Code should be amended to make the procurement of children for the purpose of prostitution or to participate in the production of sexually explicit materials offences punishable by ten years in prison and the following or similar terms—

Those who are opposed to legislation such as I have introduced will argue that obscenity cannot be defined. They will refer, for instance, to the Hicklin test and say that it failed, or they will say that the Hicklin test has been relegated to a secondary position because section 159 of the Criminal Code takes over and there have been judgments where community standards have become the measuring stick. They will say that obviously community standards vary from place to place, from judge to judge, from jury to jury, or from courtroom to courtroom.

I find that in one area, no matter how you want to define obscenity, no matter what measurement you want to use, there is general agreement that there is a common measuring stick, and that is that child pornography is an abhorrence to people in this country. So I hope we will not get hung up again on legal definitions when we refer specifically to section 166 because we are dealing with children. We spend so much time defending the rights of Canadians, and so we should, but is there any greater exploitation than using mechanisms not to come up with a definition or with an amendment, thus preventing these children from having the protection of the law which they so rightly deserve?

I am the first to admit that amendments to the Criminal Code will not end this trafficking and human degradation, but I am convinced that members of the House can show leadership and that changes in the nation can take place and will take place if action such as is proposed today becomes part of our criminal law.

I want to commend the minister of justice who, after the committee reported, came up with the omnibus Bill C-51 in the last session. At page nine of the bill the minister amended section 166 along very similar lines to those proposed in Bill C-211. I want to say to the parliamentary secretary to the minister, who will be replying, that that amendment is totally in accordance with my views and is totally acceptable to me.

What I want to do today is to encourage the government to give us a commitment that either the amendments, as I have proposed in Bill C-211, or the minister's amendments in Bill C-51 in the last session, or a refinement of both, or even another one, would be acceptable. I believe it is utterly necessary that we receive a commitment today that this legislation, which has already received first reading in the previous session, will come back to the House and that, before this parliament ends, we will have an amendment to section 166 of the Criminal Code. I hope we receive that commitment from the government today.

• (1722)

I believe the time for action has come. We made progress in the last session, but we cannot allow this amendment to die on the order paper. The good words and good will of the previous session are still awaiting legislative action and passage.

In conclusion, I thank the House for its co-operation on this subject in the past. I hope that co-operation is still forthcoming. If strides cannot be made on the larger question of pornography, I see no reason why we cannot make the strides we want in the area of pornography as it relates to children and the exploitation of our younger citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the essence of the bill before us really is in two parts. The all-party committee which reported on this subject accepted in principle the proposed amendment to clause 166.1 of the hon. member's bill, but it rejected the amendment which he proposed to subsection 159(8).

The reason the committee rejected that particular amendment and replaced it with one of its own was to continue to permit this subject to be examined in a subjective way by a jury. The reason the committee in its wisdom felt that is: once one attempts to define specifically what is obscene between two consenting adults, one will define out of our literature a significant number of books which form a very important part of the heritage of western culture, including the Holy Bible, Finnegan's Wake, and a series of literature which was not written for the purpose of pornography. When one moves with this type of shotgun approach to the subject, instead of correcting the abuse in terms of pornography and permitting the free expression of someone with good intentions in the literary field, then the poverty in our literature would be extreme, particularly if this amendment should pass. Hon. members should be cautious when they approach this particular subject.

On the subject of child pornography the committee decided that it was a special area requiring special attention. It decided to provide an objective rather than a subjective test, which is something with which I agree. In fact we have a very special problem in terms of protecting those who cannot protect themselves.

Subsection 159(8) of Bill C-211 contains the following definition:

"obscene thing" includes any explicit representation or detailed description of a sexual act—

Then it goes on to define sexual act, and refers to one of those as being vaginal intercourse. There are a number of works of art and literature in our society which suddenly could be removed from the shelves of the libraries of Canada. We do not want to be some kind of cultural backwater in this country. With the best of intentions, the hon. member presented a bill which would be counterproductive if it were passed. If it passed, the objections to this bill would be overwhelming from a vast sector of our country.

In terms of the specificity under clause 166.1, I have no objection to that. We need special protection, but we cannot take away from a jury the question of what is undue exploitation. Lawyers, draftsmen and other people have attempted to define this for the last hundred years, and it just does not work. There has to be some value judgment about what the purpose was.

The hon. member had much to say about the promotion of pornography. The movie entitled "Deep Throat" cost approximately $25,000 to produce, and now it has grossed $50 million. That is the good old free enterprise system. If someone can make $50 million by investing $25,000, of course he will go into the business. There has to be some judgment, which judgment must be exercised by one's peers in a jury democratically. When one attempts to define that out of a jury by saying that a specific act shall be pornographic, with no questions asked or answered, and with no judge or jury looking into it, then one would impoverish the culture of Canada. I cannot agree with that, but I have no problem agreeing with the second part of the bill.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) for once again coming forward with this bill. Bill C-211 indicates his profound concern about pornography. As he well knows, members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs dealt with this matter and prepared a report. He quoted from the report by referring to recommendation No. 7 which he said in effect referred to his bill.

I was one of those who prepared the draft report, along with the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and several others who had bills which were considered at that time. There has been a great deal of input from all parties on both sides of the House regarding the whole question of pornography. It is still of tremendous concern. There is a great deal of difficulty in attempting to resolve this, not only from the point of view of what is or is not pornographic but in defining terms like obscene and others. Apparently that appears to be impossible at this time.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

According to the Oxford dictionary, the word "impossible" merely means that it is difficult; but I must say that it is so difficult that we have not yet been able to come up with a definition. The committee found the same difficulty. It was somewhat rushed in preparing a report before the House adjourned, and it came up with the best report it could under the circumstances. But certainly the report did not contain everything we wanted it to contain. In particular, subsection 159(8) of the Criminal Code probably should have been restated, if possible, so that we would have a much more definitive definition than the one we are still working with today in the Criminal Code.

A difficulty exists regarding the balance between the right to see, use, have, or even read pornographic material. On the other side, there is the whole question of censorship which might be involved, if an attempt is made to take such material away from people who wish to use it.

I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the Sunday Sun of October 22, 1978. It is entitled: "MD: Sex Never Corrupts Anyone", and reads as follows:

● (1732)

Caught junior looking at pornographic pictures or a sexually explicit film?

Don't worry, says leading sexologist Dr. John Money, of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

"If a youngster has been brought up with healthy attitudes he will suffer no harm," says the doctor. "Moreover, sexually explicit material never corrupted anyone."

In the same article they also talk about the question of censorship. So we have this balance that we are trying to adjust to, the question of having pornographic material being made available to those who wish to have it, while at the same time trying to deter others from using pornographic material when it is felt that it is not to their benefit.

I agree with the hon. member for Provencher when he refers to the whole question of kiddie pornography in his bill. It is something which I personally find absolutely reprehensible. It is the worst form of pornography and it is the most extreme form. I agree in part with the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) when he says that we must take a look at it in depth to determine how far we should go. There could in fact be historical works, works of arts and so on to consider. I have looked at works of art in libraries, and there is no question that according to some standards they would be considered obscene and pornographic. On the other hand, art has been there for years and nobody seems to be too concerned about it, and I suppose this is because it is not on the shelves in the grocery store.

There are some other points I would like to put on the record. As I understand it, the purported aim of this bill is, according to the explanatory notes accompanying the legislation, "to outlaw child pornography and spell out clearly the term "obscene" so that the courts may apply a more objective test than the present one that relates to the "undue exploitation of sex." It attempts to do so by repealing the definition to be found in section 159(8), which reads:

—a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence—

This bill substitutes in its place a definition of an "obscene thing". As is evident, an obscene thing includes any explicit representation or detailed description of a sexual act and any pictorial representation tending to solicit partners for a sexual act.

The so-called objective basis for assessing whether or not an act is sexual is said to be ascertainable by determining whether or not the act in question involves (a) masturbation, (b) any act of sado-masochism, or (c) any act of anal, oral or vaginal intercourse, whether alone or with or upon another person, animal, dead body or inanimate object, and includes an attempted or simulated sexual act.

Notwithstanding the desires of the author of this bill to limit and define obscenity with reference to objectively demonstrable acts, the descriptions and representations sought to be covered by the legislation are such that they will nevertheless be discoverable only by reference to a multitude of subjective considerations.

It is open to serious doubt that a workable standard of obscenity can in fact be an "objective standard". In an excellent "Study Paper on Obscenity" prepared for the Law Reform Commission of Canada by Professor Richard G. Fox, the following comments appear at page 3:

There is no tangible or verifiable reality corresponding to the label "obscenity". It is an expression of opinion rather than of fact. It is a value judgment based upon the emotive responses of individuals or groups to stimulation by exposure to tabooed materials. The emotions expressed are usually those of disgust, anger and indignation, but the elicitation of these responses is always relative, subjective and variable—

Professor Fox goes on to note that obscenity is an "inescapably subjective phenomenon." He also notes that one of the difficulties with the epithet "obscene" is that for some it "encompasses popular erotica such as the glamour of a pin-up magazine, while for others it is confined to written or photographic portrayals of bizarre sexual or scatological behaviour." Previous attempts which have been made to identify and categorize under the heading "obscenity" vary in approach. Some focus on format while others tend to examine content. Approaches of this nature usually suffer from the deficiency that they do not identify obscene material in a sufficiently distinct form to warrant their use as a basis for differentiating licit from illicit publications. The provisions of Bill C-211 suffer from this shortcoming as well.

It is quite clear that phrases such as "tending to solicit partners for a sexual act" or "detailed description of a sexual act" are vague enough in terms of the phraseology employed to ensure that subjective considerations will enter into the decision making process and thus render the intent of the legislation nugatory.

Before leaving this issue of the subjective nature of determinations of obscenity one should be aware that section 159(3) is untouched by Bill C-211. That subsection provides that no person shall be convicted of an offence under section 159 if he is able to establish that the "public good was served by the acts that are alleged to constitute the offence, and that the acts alleged did not extend beyond what served the public good". Therefore, notwithstanding the absence of the term "undue exploitation", there seems little reason to believe that such matters as "literary and artistic merit" and "contemporary community standards" will fall by the wayside in the event that Bill C-211 should become law. The bill impliedly retains and endorses both concepts. In the result it seems quite clear that the provisions of Bill C-211, which seek to replace section 159(8), hold little promise of providing a more manageable, more objective, or more effective basis for guiding judicial determinations on the question of obscenity.

Furthermore, if one contrasts the provisions of the proposed subsection (8) against those in the present section 159(8), it is clear that certain matters presently potentially included within the definition of obscenity will conceivably be excluded by the new proposals. Apart from the reference to "sado-masochism" there is no express concern in Bill C-211 for the undue exploitation of violence, crime or horror.

With respect to the provisions contained in Bill C-211 concerning child pornography, this ministry is in agreement with the intent of the proposals but not with its specifics. Bill C-51 which was tabled in the last session of parliament addresses the issue of child pornography in a somewhat different fashion. As hon. members are aware, the proposals in Bill C-51 were the result of the labours of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and those proposals first appear in the committee's unanimous final report to parliament on this subject. I would point out that the hon. member for Provencher was a member of that committee and had a tremendous input into what the report contained.

While the government expressed the caveat, in tabling the legislation, that the provisions of Bill C-51 were to be subject to possible future change as a result of public discussion and debate, it has nevertheless clearly signalled its intention to move in this area with new, provocative and far-reaching legislation. Certainly constructive suggestions for change, even to the proposed provisions of Bill C-51 dealing with obscenity, are welcomed by the government. Such suggestions for change, if meritorious, can easily be incorporated into the legislation at the committee stage once Bill C-51 is reintroduced during this session of the House.

One may also question the degree of punishment which has been selected for the new offence of child pornography contained in clause 2 of Bill C-211. That section creates a dual offence whereby the prosecutor can either proceed by indictment, which results in liability to imprisonment for two years, or on summary conviction, which carries liability only for a fine in the discretion of the court. The punishments which have been selected are therefore, to a certain extent, lesser punishments than those which are presently available under the general obscenity provisions of the Criminal Code.

The indictable offence punishable under the Code by section 165 possesses liability to imprisonment for two years—the same as Bill C-211—while the summary conviction penalty provided for by the Code results in possible liability to imprisonment for six months plus a fine of $500, or simply to a fine in the amount of $500.

If, as this bill presupposes, child pornography is a problem which has reached proportions justifying the creation of separate penalty and offence provisions in the Criminal Code, then one would expect that such an offence would merit greater maximum penalties than more general obscenity convictions would suffer. Instead, under the legislative scheme of Bill C-211 the penalty provisions are roughly comparable. This being the case, one wonders what the basis is for the provision at all inasmuch as the general provisions of the Criminal Code, or even of Bill C-211, dealing with obscenity appear to be equally applicable to obscene things and sexual acts involving the use of children.

• (1742)

To recapitulate, the validity of the premise upon which Bill C-211 is based is certainly open to serious question and substantial doubt. The bill proceeds on the basis that its authors have formulated an objective standard, but close examination reveals that this ideal has not been realized. Once again it is a question of the difficulty of trying to define the terms. I am sure the author of the bill realizes the difficulty still exists. Conceptually, one must acknowledge that there are great difficulties in attempting to formulate any workable objective standard. Finally, it must also be admitted that even a standard which on its surface appears to be objective is nevertheless subject to the subjective interpretations of judicial decision-makers. We all know how the courts can go from one extreme to the other. From court to court there can be a difference in the view that is taken.

With reference to the specifics of Bill C-211, there is serious reason to believe that both the content and the potential effectiveness of the bill are gravely deficient. Alternative schemes for dealing with child pornography have recently been before this House and will shortly be again. The penalty provisions of the bill are somewhat inconsistent with the intention of the legislation and consequently the passage of these measures would be ill-advised. Rather than proceeding further with Bill C-211, it is desirable that we maintain the status quo until clarification and redefinition of the existing law can take place on a better basis.

It should not be forgotten that there are those in the Canadian public who have argued that the existing law is satisfactory both as formulated and in practice. If there are problems, these people contend that they arise from discrepancies in enforcement. Enforcement decisions are discretionary matters for police officers and prosecutors who, as we all know, are individuals who have to act according to the climate of opinion in their local community. I suppose in this context we are taking the local community standard, although as we all know the standard can vary from community to community. Proponents of the status quo further contend that these local discretions provide a useful buffer between legislation which can only by defined in broad principles and which, because of its very subject matter, cannot provide elaborate, unambiguous guidance in specific cases.

[Mr. Robinson.]

As mentioned, the government has a commitment to the clarification and redefinition of the existing law. This, I understand, is the kind of request the hon. member was making and I am quite sure it is the intention of this government to carry out this kind of commitment. We are concerned with more than a mere "tidying up" of the present Code provisions and are of the view that major policy changes are necessary. We are also mindful of the fact that it would not be useful to permit obscenity laws as presently written to be swept out lock, stock and barrel. The present approach as evidenced in Bill C-51, an approach which, as we have mentioned, is subject to possible change, is to extend and expand the present legislative framework.

Our concern over child pornography is manifest and we recognize particularly that new provisions for dealing with this problem are urgently needed. While saying this, however, we are of the view that the provisions contained in Bill C-211 are not sufficient for this purpose.

To a certain extent, while we are aware that this problem must be tackled, we must also realistically acknowledge that it is unlikely that it will ever be totally solved. The subject matter which constitutes obscenity and the circumstances in which such material is regarded as being justifiably exposed to, changes over time.

While we as a government share the author's views with regard to the bill, we feel that existing law has been unable effectually to moderate the flow of pornography and that Bill C-211 does not change this situation substantially. A great deal more work has to be done with regard to the whole question of pornography.

A further point I should like to mention concerns the report submitted by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on the whole question of expert witnesses. This seems to me to be a real problem. I find it rather difficult to see why there should not be expert witnesses, whether psychologists, psychiatrists, other professionals or lay people with a great deal of experience, or members of the cloth. It seems to me that to deny the right for people to appear as expert witnesses is one shortcoming of the report prepared by that committee.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by extending my compliments to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) for bringing this legislation forward. I feel it is necessary for this House to consider it and pass it to committee stage so that it may be enacted into law.

Once again we see that some members of the House would rather preserve the sanctity of the purveyors of pornography than the sanctity of children who become victims of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: Is it not so? Listen to them. I hear the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) say "oh". He now becomes the authority on art and wants to preserve the Bible. He contends that the Bible could not be read if this bill were passed. I have read the Bible most of my life and have studied it extensively. The hon. member argues that if the proposed changes in clause 1 of the bill were passed it would mean that subsection 159(8) of the Criminal Code would prevent him from reading the Bible. If this bill fails—and I hope it does not—and if the hon. member's view prevails, I hope it will give him reason to keep on reading the Bible. I hope he will read it from cover to cover and not just those explicit sections to which he referred.

The issue of censorship is brought up every time we discuss this bill. I am sure there is not a member in this House who does not believe in censorship. Everyone here, including you, Mr. Speaker, believes in censorship. The only thing we differ about is what is going to be censored. If someone proposed that we legalize anti-Semitic literature, I think all of us would be horrified that we should go through that holocaust again. Every one of us would decry that type of publication and want it stopped.

We all agree there are some things that ought not to be published and which some people should not benefit from. What we disagree on is what is destructive. I maintain that the publication of anti-Semitic literature is destructive. I maintain also that the kind of literature referred to in this bill is destructive and that those who profit by it are even more destructive. So, Mr. Speaker, I ask hon. members whether they believe in censorship and whether they should not include in their definition of what is destructive some other elements in society which try to destroy us.

We want freedom of choice in this country and I want to see that preserved. But how are we going to preserve freedom of choice for the next generation if we allow these sordid people to influence the future thinking of today's children, to program them in such a way that in future they will not have freedom of choice?

The purveyors of this filth load it on to the newsstands. Ironically the drugstore newsstands, those areas that are supposed to be preserving the health of our country, are loaded with the kind of so-called literature that is destructive and is now programming the thinking of children who, when they become adults, will not be able to make rational and informed decisions. Children of an impressionable age have a high curiosity level, but they have a low level of information on the consequences of their decisions and a low level of experience upon which to draw. Now we have them being bombarded with this kind of material and they are programmed in such a way that they can no longer make a firm, rational decision later on in life.

● (1752)

What we are looking for is a freedom of decision making process in our society. What people who want to make money from the exploitation of these children want is to program them so that in years to come they have a ready market. It is ironic that this House several years ago passed Bill C-58 which was designed to close the borders to television from the United States. Whether or not we are for that bill is either one thing or the other. It is ironic that we should close off television from the United States but keep it relatively open for this kind of material. We cannot have it both ways forever.

One of the popular terms today is "sexual orientation". It is said that this should be a matter of individual choice. Individual choice has become such a buzz word, such a matter of sanctimonious discussion, that we really do not adopt a consistent attitude toward it. We do not allow individuals to express their individual choice when it comes to the handling of firearms, as the hon. member for New Westminster well knows because he supported the gun legislation. In that case we do not want to have individual choice because that would become destructive. A guy could take a "Saturday night special" and go to a store or bank and shoot somebody. We do not want individual choice in that area. Why is it, then, when it comes to sexual orientation, when it comes to sexploitation, when it comes to "child porn," that we all of a sudden become sanctimonious about the matter of individual choice?

I come back to my original statement, sir, that we are not in disagreement on freedom of information or freedom of publication; what we are agreed on is that we want to preserve choice, but we cannot preserve choice in our society if children are already programmed to think in a certain way before they are ready to make an informed decision.

I compliment the hon. member for Provencher for bringing this matter forward and allowing us to speak and make a decision on it. I ask hon. members to give passage to this bill so that it can go forward to the committee stage. If hon. members wish to make some changes to it, if they think there is merit to it, as the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) says there is and as the hon. member for New Westminster agreed, let them make amendments to the bill there. But let the bill go to committee so that we can discuss it further.

[Translation]

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) for introducing this bill, and I want to give the House my first reflections after reading it. First of all, I find it does not go far enough in its definitions. The definition it gives of an obscene thing does not seem complete or large enough to me, as several members who took part in this debate pointed out. I see the definition of an obscene thing not only in the area of sex but also in the exploitation of hatred, anger, false heroes in movies that lead young people to imagine a false society of false heroes.

A big thing has been made out of sex but when talking about sex I think we have to go further and after reading this bill and listening to the debate in the House this afternoon I wonder what kind of society we want to build for our young people if they are exploited even before they are part and parcel of society, even before they are of age and responsible within society, even before they have the right to vote, because the bill defines a child as being under 16. Those young people are being exploited not only in the area of sex but also by giving them false heroes, but showing them a future altogether different from reality. We do not show young people how to live. We do not take them through the normal steps of youth so they can become mature. They have been taught an idealized notion of love which has quite simply been reduced to sexual acts when love, Mr. Speaker, is quite simply the respect of the other person. They have shown obscene movies and literature—and I do say "obscene" and not only "sexual". They are not being respected. So it is up to us the responsible people in society who have to pass legislation, build that society for the people of tomorrow, to orient them. I was asked earlier if I was in favour of censorship. Well, yes, I am for censorship because there must be limits in our society, because, as we can see, some want to copy a type of society. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) or the hon. member for Provencher said earlier that 85 per cent of hate or obscene literature comes from other countries. Do we want to build a country like France, Sweden or Norway or do we want to build our own country with our own young people? If we politicians do not respect them in the legislation we pass, I think we will have missed the boat. The only people responsible are not the young but we, politicians, who must asked themselves the following question: Have we built for young people who still have as I say, a lot of ambition in life, we are still at the age when they are shown a bit of joy and hope in the future but what are we through our legislation or too much freedom going to do? I will now refer to Gustave Thibon who while taking a walk in Paris saw in the window of a bookstore the works of leftists among which one was entitled Comment bâtir l'avenir by the socialist party while another advocated freedom for women to dispose of her body and abortion on demand. And this is the inconsistency: on one hand they stated that we must build the future, on the other hand they maintained that a child must be killed before birth. Such is the policy of the party, I will not say of the NDP but of the socialist party or socialistic countries, that is to grant every freedom to the young people, to give much—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour provided for consideration of private members' bills has now expired. Perhaps the House will permit our going back to the committee of the whole before the Chair calls it six o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Guay.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CHILD TAX CREDIT

The House resumed consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-10, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide for a child tax credit and to amend the Family Allowances Act—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Turner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 1—

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I represent a constituency which is two-thirds the size of the province of Manitoba. Within that constituency are some 25,000 status Indians. A large majority of them, through no fault of their own and not by choice, are recipients of welfare on an annual basis. I have a number of questions. First, who is responsible for the payment of welfare to status Indians in Canada? I would like to establish that, please.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to consider that question a little more and get back to the hon. member later in the debate.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I find it rather odd that a simple question like that cannot be answered when we are debating a bill that will involve the status Indians of Canada probably more than anyone else.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I do not particularly have any apology to make for not having an answer at this point as to who makes payments to status Indians, when we are dealing with a bill to amend the Income Tax Act. However, I am prepared to determine that information for the hon. member and get back to him in due course.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, this answer has a direct bearing on my questioning. I would like an answer to this very simple question. Either the parliamentary secretary or the officials who are here should be able to give me that information. It is relevant to the information I need for the balance of my questioning. If he cannot answer it, I will attempt to go on. However, with his officials sitting there, I find it odd that he cannot answer a simple question like that.

I will ask another question to see if I can get an answer to it. In determining welfare payments to status Indians, is the family allowance income figured in the amount of welfare that would be paid to a status treaty Indian or an Inuit?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, the first point I would make perhaps relates more to the first matter raised by the hon. member. It deals with a matter directly before the committee at this time, namely the income tax provision of the $200 credit. The credit will indeed be payable to status Indians.

I will have to take the second question in reserve. The Minister of National Health and Welfare will be in the chamber shortly. As well, the officials are looking into this. I will get back to the hon. member. However, I want to make it clear that the $200 credit, which is part of the bill in front of the House at the present time, will be payable to status Indians.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Possibly I should turn the questioning over to someone else. There is no point in my continuing my line of questioning when I cannot get an answer to a simple question. I will take my place until someone is here who is qualified to answer my questions.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a point in connection with the matter raised by the hon. member for Churchill. I know his questions are well put. On the other hand, I do not think when we are dealing with an income tax amendment—

Mr. Smith (Churchill): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we certainly are.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has the floor.

Mr. Martin: I do not believe any question related to any matter that might come before the House of Commons can be considered to be necessarily relevant. However, I have indicated that an answer will be obtained. This has been done on two or three occasions when questions have been raised in the committee and we did not have immediate answers. I assure the hon. member that we will indeed have an answer for him.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member's question was really very relevant and very much connected with the bill before the House. It raises the question, where is the Minister of National Health and Welfare who has a responsibility for piloting this bill, and where is the Minister of Finance? Because this is a finance bill, an act to amend the Income Tax Act. We were told there was a possibility that the Minister of Finance might just favour the committee with his presence tonight. Is he going to be here?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I would like the hon. member for St. John's East, who has been up on three or four points of order, to relax a little. Just relax. First, the question that was asked should more properly be put to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development during question period.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Martin: I now have an answer, if hon. members are interested in hearing it. Is the hon. member for Churchill interested in hearing the answer?

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, if the parliamentary secretary can give me an answer, I will be very much interested in it. However, it seems he cannot give even a simple answer. The answer I am looking for pertains to this particular bill.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I was trying to indicate that I had an answer. I was wondering whether members opposite were prepared to listen.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): It's a good thing the minister has just arrived.

Mr. Martin: I have not had an opportunity to say a word to the minister yet. The answer to the question put to me a little earlier as to who is responsible for welfare payments to status Indians is this. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is responsible for Indians on reserves. The responsibility for Indians off reserves rests with the provinces.

• (2012)

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I would now like an answer to the second question I asked. Are family allowance payments to status Indians on reserves taken into consideration when welfare payments are made?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I understand that in this particular case it is up to local band councils as to how that matter is handled.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): That is an easy cop-out, but it is not that simple because many bands are under joint administration. Many bands to not look after their own welfare administration. In many cases this is handled by the federal government. Goodness knows, most Indians on reserves are living on welfare, and I want to know whether family allowance payments are taken into consideration in determining the amount of welfare. This relates to this bill because it involves family allowances.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, the answer is yes.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, that sets the tone for the remainder of my questions. I will tell the committee exactly what will happen. Most of the Indian people in my constituency who are on welfare are on welfare because they have no choice. The parliamentary secretary says that the family allowance an individual receives helps determine how much welfare that individual receives. As of January 1, 1979 there will be a reduction in the monthly family allowance payment going to an individual on a reserve in receipt of welfare of at least $8. In order to retain the same level of income this individual has been accustomed to, there should be a welfare payment increase of $40 per month. This calculation applies to a family with five children.

Will welfare payments be increased by $40 per month to make up for this reduction of $8 per child per month? What will be done at the end of the year regarding the $200 payment for each child? That amounts to $1,000 for a family with five children. Such a family will receive $1,000 at the end of this year. Will $480 be deducted from that in order to recoup the $8 per month per child welfare payment increase? I would like to know whether the family in this calculation will receive a cheque for only $520. The people in some of the communities in my constituency do not understand what this government is trying to do. There must be an answer to such a simple question, and I hope I can receive that answer right now.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I think we are wandering a long way from the bill we have before us.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, we are not straying from the bill at all. My question relates to family allowances, and that is what we are discussing here.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has the floor.

Mr. Martin: I repeat that I think we are wandering quite a long way from the bill. However, my understanding is that the mix of payments received by status Indians will perhaps undergo some change, certainly in the early months of the new year before the credit becomes due, as a result of the reduction in family allowance payments.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, that is no answer at all. The parliamentary secretary says this has nothing to do with this bill. That might wash with some people, but it certainly does not wash with me or anybody else on this side of the House. The government is asking for passage of this bill. Today the minister said we are filibustering, but the government cannot supply a simple answer to a simple question. I think my question is very relevant.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I would like the hon. member to clarify whether his question deals with the source of welfare payments to Indian mothers because of deductions which will reflect on the family budget, or whether he opposes the child tax credit being granted to Indian children.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I will go through it again.

Miss Bégin: That is very easy to answer.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): As hon. members know, most Indian people on reserves are living on welfare because they have no choice. I estimate that on the reserves in northern Manitoba 75 per cent of the people live on welfare. They have no hope whatsoever of getting jobs in the communities in which they live, so they will never earn more than $18,000 per year. Indians on reserves do not pay income tax on incomes earned on reserves.

[Mr. Smith (Churchill).]

I will try to explain my question carefully again. After indexation Indian families on reserves should receive $28 per child per month, but if this bill passes they will receive only $20 per month per child. Family allowances received are included as part of the unearned income of families living on welfare. For an Indian family living on a reserve to receive the same amount it received prior to this bill, its welfare payment will have to increase by $8 per month per child. What I am asking is whether families with five children will have to pay back $480 at the end of the year in which it gets a $200 per child tax credit, or will the government deduct that from the tax credit before the cheque goes out? That is my concern. I hope I have explained it clearly, and I hope I get a clear answer.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I think I understand the problem which is being raised by the hon. member for Churchill. Basically the aim is to see that no one receives less as a result of this bill. I think no one will. How the mix will be made up and how this will actually be done is still under consideration, but certainly the idea will be that people will not suffer in terms of the net amount they receive.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, that is all well and good, but I have not heard any explanation. I would like to hear a clear and precise explanation, because if I cannot explain this point to the people I represent, on January 1 there will be hundreds of telephone calls. Hon. members should realize that most of the people in my constituency do not receive daily newspapers, and I know I will be inundated with questions as to why family allowance cheques have been reduced. Before this bill passes committee stage I would like to have this matter clarified. I would like that clarification tomorrow, if I can get it, or even tonight. I would like to have something in writing so that I will have something to present to the people I represent.

● (2022)

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, we can clarify that tonight. Photocopies of Hansard will provide the hon. member with what he wants for distribution. I have put that exact problem to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I wrote to him requesting the co-operation of his staff in setting up a special information program. I made the same point with him that I made with the provincial ministers. The role of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in providing welfare for Indians on reserves is similar to that of provincial ministers of welfare for all practical purposes. We want the child tax credit to be passed on to the families. The increase will be $200 per year per child, minus the reduction in family allowance. As the hon. member said, the incomes of Indian families mostly come from welfare.

In the first two or three months, Indian mothers with large families will suffer to a degree because of a reduction in their family budgets. That decrease in budget will be supplemented by additional welfare whenever it is needed from the usual source, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am referring to Canadian Indians on reserves.

Outside the reserves they are treated similar to other people who receive welfare payments from the provinces. I took the same position with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as I took with the provincial ministers. I want to make sure that the tax credit is passed on to these families. As yet I have not received a reply, but I will continue to press for one.

The hon. member is correct when he indicated that Indians are the most vulnerable group because they do not pay taxes and they are not connected to the tax system. I will be meeting with the National Indian Brotherhood in approximately one or two weeks and this point is on the agenda of that meeting. Of course, I would like to have the co-operation of the National Indian Brotherhood. I will discuss with them a mechanism to reach the people in those communities.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Now that I have received the reply of the hon. minister indicating that she has spoken with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I should like the assurance that there will be no time lag in the payment of supplements to individuals who will lose $8 per month effective January 1. I want the assurance that it will not take the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development four months to catch up and provide that supplement.

There are many families on reserves in my area who have seven, eight or nine children. Those families are living on welfare. I want to make sure that there is no time delay. That is the guarantee the minister should receive from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We want to be assured that the system will be in place as soon as possible to assist families affected by this reduction. Will the minister assure us that she will receive such a guarantee from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development before January 1, so that I can tell the people I represent that they will suffer no loss of income whatsoever?

I am not clear what the minister meant by saying that there would be a loss of income in the first three or four months of the program. I understood that the $200 per child payment was to be made at the end of the year. Is my understanding correct?

Miss Bégin: No, it is not. Dealing with the first point raised by the hon. member, perhaps there will be administrative delays between a notification of a change in financial or family circumstances being sent to the Department of Indian Affairs and an actual readjustment to the funds being received. But surely the delay will not be as long as four months.

The first loss of revenue for families with more than two or three children will be at the end of January. Family allowance cheques arrive in homes usually on the twenty-first day of the month. For the first year the program is implemented there will be a loss of revenue at the end of January, February and eventually March. March is tax time and people will start filing their returns. At that time the first of the child tax credits will be sent to mothers.

Indian mothers should be the first group to receive cheques in payment of the child tax credit. So we are talking of a period of approximately two months from the end of January to March when there will be reductions in family budgets, reductions which will be supplemented by additional welfare payments.

The program will start at tax time this coming spring for the taxation year 1978. It will not start at the end of this year. Once in place, families will receive lump sums of a substantial nature. For example, in the case of a family consisting of five children, it will be in receipt of a $1,000 cheque. Mothers can decide to allocate that cheque over the coming months to make up for the reduction in family allowance, or the total amount can be used for a major purchase by the family. Families could purchase washing machines, refrigerators, or perhaps bicycles for the children. The payments will be used according to the lifestyles of the families. The families will decide how to invest the money. I am sure I have given hon. members the schedule of payments.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments before I ask any questions. Deliberately I refrained from taking part in the debate on second reading, but I want to assure the minister that I am well aware of what is going on here. I do not like clause 10 at all because of the reduction in baby bonus or child allowance from $25.65 to $20. This was not necessary in order to accomplish the tax credit for children, which the minister was successful in getting through cabinet. Over the last three or four years, since most cabinet ministers apparently have become strongly right-winged and conservative, she must consider this a victory. Nevertheless, I join with my Conservative colleagues in making that suggestion to the minister.

It is not my intention to filibuster this piece of legislation. I realize this is a federal bill. I have no ulterior motives. I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare cannot receive an ironclad guarantee from the provinces.

A considerable number of her constituents are below the poverty line. Having worked in a poor district in Montreal and as a member of the House of Commons, I am sure she realizes the provinces can play tricks with federal legislation and money, directly and indirectly. I accept the minister's challenge as a member of the House. I will do my part to make sure that volunteer agencies, social workers and the provincial government in my area will not use this legislation in order to prevent a real distribution of income to those families below the poverty line.

● (2032)

Having said that, let me point out that we should not exaggerate what has been done here. From a philosophical point of view, this is a small but important step toward the adoption of a negative income tax. But I, too, am concerned—and here I am repeating myself—because from my practical experience as a member of parliament in the last four years I know that unless great pressure by the federal government is put on the provincial ministers, there can be no guarantee from them, and unless we use our influence, this will be nothing more than a paper change in distribution, not a real change. I am terribly concerned about that.

I am not making these points to filibuster the bill. I repeat that if I were the minister, there is no possible way I could accept these promises as a guarantee. To be fair to her, I admit that if I were in her place I do not know that I could get the ten provincial ministers to guarantee that either they or some of the bureaucrats in their social assistance departments would not be tempted to use this money for some other purposes which might be of assistance to people but which would not help the most needy group, those who live under the poverty line.

One of the things about which I am concerned is the definition of income as given by the minister in a statement at second reading of the bill, and also in the speech she gave in St. John's in September, when she said:

The new program means—

Referring to the tax credit of $200 for children under the poverty line up to an income of $18,000, this amount being reduced as the income increases. She went on to say:

—that next year in Ontario a two child family making $7,000 will get $264 more, a family making $15,000 will get $229 more, while a family making $30,000 will get $52 less.

Surely the minister believed that when she said it. Accompanying the October baby bonus was a schedule according to which families making $26,000 to $30,000 will receive nothing. This was signed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. However, when the income tax people got to it, they changed the definition of income which she had spelled out so that deductions from income, for example for the registered retirement savings or registered home ownership plans will allow people making $30,000 and over to get as much as $200 per child in certain circumstances under this bill.

I am saying to the minister that if she has not yet corrected that, it should be corrected now, because by deducting registered retirement savings or registered home ownership contributions from income tax, people with much higher incomes than those specified by the minister will be able to get the full benefit of $200 per child. Can the minister tell me whether or not I am correct?

Miss Bégin: I think there are two points in the question. First I should explain the apparent disparity between the information contained in the insert mailed with the October baby bonus and that contained in my speech in St. John's regarding net income. In fact there is no disparity. The insert which went out with the baby bonus in October contained a chart of the amounts of the child tax credit according to family income and number of children. In the quotation read by the hon. member from the speech which I gave in St. John's, I gave as an example the situation of a family at the end of the year. It showed the loss of the tax exemption of $50 and the reduction in family allowance, and it expressed the net result at the end of a given year, while the insert in the family allowance envelope simply provided a table specifying the amounts of credit under the new program. It did not do the accounting for the whole year in a family's budget.

The second question asked by the hon. member was why net income was used and not any other measure. We had the choice between three measures of revenue used in the income tax form. We could not choose—and that is understandable because it would have created insurmountable problems as to what the definition should be. On the tax form first you state the total income, from which you subtract employment expenses and other expenses provided for under the Income Tax Act and whatever is subtracted from your pay cheque. Thus you arrive at the take home pay or, in other words, the net income. In order to arrive at this, one must subtract UIC payments, CPP payments, Quebec health insurance payments, payments under the registered retirement savings plan or under the registered home ownership plan, and so on. Also, depending on who gives what to whom, you have to subtract alimony and child maintenance payments, before arriving at the net income.

So the measure we have chosen is the take home pay. Another third possible definition could have been the taxable income, which is the net income minus personal tax exemptions and other tax exemptions per se. We decided that the net income—in other words, the take home pay—was the best measure because it reflects the real family budget; and second, it is the measure used in figuring out the GIS and the measure used by provincial welfare programs of all sorts. Also, it was the concept used in the federal proposal of two or three years ago for supplementary benefits. It permits many small, middle class families in need of financial help to obtain these benefits.

When the hon. member criticized the exemption of the registered retirement savings plan or the home ownership plan, which in practice has benefited people with some money as opposed to those who are really poor, I might say that he is partly right. But let me point out also that it benefits many average Canadians. I do not have the chart with me but this can be checked. I think this will really help many low and middle income families, those in the grey area which, to our regret, are not covered by the GIS. In our opinion this is the best measure and it is in line with the one used in all the social programs.

● (2042)

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Chairman, maybe I just do not understand the minister. In order that the financial people around her can confirm this, let me put the question in this way. We have a bill now before us which provides a reduction in the amount of credit for some families with an income of over $18,000, while allowing the full credit to other families with incomes approaching $30,000 because of the effect of the deductible provision in our income tax system. Is that right or wrong? This deductibility provision allows people who are in the higher income brackets to take advantage of such things as the registered retirement savings plan and so on.

Let me remind the minister of what the hon. member for Athabasca said earlier about the various percentages of people in the different income categories. If she looks at the statistics she will find that of the families with incomes of $6,000 or less only 2 per cent have taken advantage of the registered retirement savings plan in this country. What I am saying is that the impression should not be left that there is a cut-off point at the $26,000 income level. In fact, people with higher incomes can gain the benefits of this program because of the deductibility aspects of income tax. Those people with higher incomes in Canada, perhaps even in the top bracket, can still take advantage of this $200 tax credit for each child because of the deductibility provision. They can get, if they have two or three children, $200 or $400 extra. I do not call that redistribution in favour of the poor.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, if one studies the items that can be deducted from gross income to arrive at net income one finds that the only items that can be questioned as not benefiting the "poor" or "small income" people are the RRSP and the RHOSP, the registered retirement savings plan and the home ownership plan. The other items, including the Canada Pension Plan contributions, unemployment insurance, dues to unions, child care, etc., are not questionable items.

The hypothesis which is put forward by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond regarding RRSP and RHOSP is that many people can benefit because they can deduct contributions under these programs from net income and suddenly become eligible for the child tax credit. That will not be the case. We have studied this very carefully, and for each dollar in savings under these two programs that is deductible in arriving at net income there will be only a five cent credit under the child tax credit. As a result, someone who can contribute the maximum under home ownership or a savings plan, which is $1,000, would receive only $50 maximum in child tax credit, which is limited to $200 per child. This means that families with two or three children, the average in Canada, would get $50 maximum. This would qualify a family with two or three children for $400 or $600 under the child tax credit. In other words, a very small proportion of the child tax credit would be "acquired" by a family with enough money to contribute the maximum under the home ownership or retirement savings plans. I am convinced that we are not opening the door to people who should not be receiving the money.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for that answer; I think I understand a little better now. I hope she is right in what she says because her last explanation made it a little more clear to me, and made a little more clear her intentions in this regard. I hope this turns out to be the case with members of the Department of Finance.

The only other observation I want to make, to be followed by a final question, has to do with the total social budget of the minister. I know that one minister in government can have no control over this type of thing because of cabinet pressures, particularly in a time of restraint. I am sure that the provinces will try to get around this. The minister has indicated that she intends to carry out an educational program, and I am sure that those of us who believe in that tax credit system will do what we can to help out, mainly because we think this system is somewhat better than the situation we now have, and perhaps a step toward a guaranteed annual income when the economy picks up.

At this time our biggest problem results from slow growth or what the AIB has called a sluggish economy. It is comical to hear that body refer to the fact that an increase in interest rates such as the one just made will help inflation while at the same time it talks about restraints and a sluggish economy. If you substitute slow growth plus higher unemployment for the phrase "sluggish economy", then the board is praising the fact that the government is allowing this increase in already high interest rates along with increased restraint in order that we can have higher unemployment and slower growth. That is just an aside, but that is convoluted economy if I have ever heard it, and certainly poor social philosophy.

One of the things I am concerned about is the fact that at a time of government restraint CMHC is cutting back on such programs for the poor as the residential rehabilitation assistance program to the tune of $29 million, and now the minister has indicated cuts in respect of co-op housing, all of which will hurt the poor and those on low income. What I am afraid of is that the totality of these things, in addition to changes in unemployment insurance which will make it tougher for young adults to enter the labour force, will have a negative effect on what the minister is trying to do.

As my final question I would ask what percentage of the total social sectoral budget, if I can put it that way, which is under the minister's care—and she mentioned something like $300 million—is represented by this type of expenditure, what percentage does the total sectoral budget represent of the GNP, and what percentage is involved in this tax credit scheme?

Miss Bégin: I am not sure I have understood the question fully, but in the totality of the decisions made in August regarding the government budget, the result in respect of programs under national health and welfare, in what one could call the social sector under my responsibility, will be an increase in expenditure, but not an increase in taxes, of about $290 million or $300 million. That is the cost of the GIS increase. The child tax credit will finance itself within the system in the sense that it uses the savings through the cancellation of the $50 child tax exemption, and the savings from the cancellation of the special privileges for the 16 and 17 year olds and from the reduction in basic family allowance. In this way it is self-financing within the system.

An hon. Member: What about the budget for social expenditures?

Miss Bégin: I think the important question is, does it reduce the percentage of social commitment or social expenditures in the total budget of the government, and it does not. The distribution is changed slightly in that we have changed the tax privileges. I suspect it will slightly increase the budget for social expenditures within Canada within the total budget, but I do not have the exact figures.

● (2052)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I would like to intervene to refer back to the debate we had the other day on my private bill, Bill C-203, which was aimed at curbing the expansion of the illicit use of the social security number concept. I can recall when social security cards were introduced on a voluntary basis in 1964. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, for whom I have a great deal of personal respect, has become an innocent victim——of the civil service.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Do I look innocent?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Listen, you could be told something else, at another time and place, in other circumstances, but—

[English]

The President of Privy Council said in March, 1964 that the social security number would not be used for income tax purposes. The Prime Minister in April, 1964, in the same debate, said that it would not be used for purposes of income tax. In 1966, however, there was a very subtle introduction of the social security number for identification purposes on the income tax return as established under section 237 of the Income Tax Act.

I am concerned about the "Catch 22" situation I described the other day, that under the guillotine in 1976 there was passed a requirement under section 234 whereby a declaration of ownership should include the social security number of owner. I do not know what good it does because there is no way of checking on the number. There are people in this country who hold at the present time 30 to 40 numbers, albeit illegally. There is nothing to say when a person goes to a bank, trust company or any other institution that cashes Canada Savings Bond coupons issued prior to 1977 that the number on the ownership certificate is the right one. The ownership certificate, for example, could be that of my wife, and I may have filed it for her as her agent. It is not necessary for her to have a card.

There are many people in this country who refuse to have a social insurance card. If it is the government's intention that everybody shall have a national identification number in the concept described in George Orwell novel "1984", then let the government come forward and say so. It does not have to do it under the guise of the Income Tax Act.

I have in my possession letters from the Acting Minister of National Revenue written for her by her officials, and they are complete nonsense. There is a woman in this city who owns some Canada Savings Bonds, a gift to her from her husband. Under the requirement of attribution of income, the coupons were being credited to her husband's income, but ownership of the bonds is in her name. When she went to cash some coupons the bank insisted on her providing a social security number, and she refused to do so because she does not have one and does not need one. She felt that it was not necessary since she was not qualifying for the Canada Pension Plan and she was not employed. For not complying with the regulation there was a 25 per cent penalty imposed on the coupons of the bonds. The bonds were given to her at a time when these conditions did not apply.

The government through the Department of National Revenue, for which the Minister of National Health and Welfare is acting minister, has imposed a new rule on the game, and it is a breach of agreement with the purchasers and holders of Canada Savings Bonds prior to 1977, because bonds purchased prior to 1977 were never part of the game.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance and others on the government side said in the debate on my bill, that it was an easy matter to pay the 25 per cent penalty and then claim a refund on the income tax return the following year. There is a "Catch 22" situation here, however, because under sections 150 and 237(2) of the Income Tax Act the form requires a social insurance number. When the lady in question went to claim her money, she was told she would have to file an income tax return and that they required a social security number. She has no need for a social security number, but the income tax department through the bank was insisting, improperly and immorally, on a 25 per cent penalty on coupons prior to the 1976 bond issue. After receiving her money they turned around and said that she could not have the 25 per cent refund because she was not able to file a proper return. She complained that she had no need to file a return because this was her sole outside income and, it was being declared every year on her husband's return, according to the guidelines of the Income Tax Act.

This lady was not required to file a return because the income was being declared under her husband's name. The bank for this reason would not refund the 25 per cent penalty.

Finally, there was a weasel. The Department of National Revenue replied in a letter dated September 13, 1978:

> The social insurance number is required as an identifier of contributions and benefits of Canada Pension Plan and unemployment insurance.

Neither category is applicable to her.

> It is required to be reported on information slips and on individual income tax returns.

Once again, it does not apply to her, with the exception of ownership.

> It has become an integral part of my department's linkage in the processing of assessments and reassessments of individual income tax returns.

This is totally contrary to the undertakings of the minister of labour and the prime minister of the day in 1964.

> My department's computer system has been designed to automatically request a social insurance number where one does not appear on the return.

In other words, it is the computer that determines whether you need a social insurance number.

This policy has been the subject of an in-depth review by my senior officials. Although several arguments can be made for not requesting a social insurance number, the use of social insurance numbers is a great benefit in properly identifying the taxpayer.

It is merely bureaucratic convenience and expedience.

● (2102)

For this reason, the decision was made to continue requesting social insurance numbers where one has not been provided. If a social insurance number is not provided upon request, under certain conditions, the return may be processed; however, in all cases, a further request for a social insurance number will be issued.

In your case, my officials at the Ottawa district taxation office will be processing your 1977 return without your social insurance number but a further request for a social insurance number will be issued. I might mention that if your circumstances in respect of future taxation years are similar to those for the 1977 taxation year, your returns may be considered incomplete—

That is, under section 237(2). The letter continues:

—and not suitable for final processing until such time as a social insurance number is provided.

This is bureaucratic nonsense of the worst kind. This is what I want to bring into perspective with the requirements of this bill, particularly clause 7 which reads as follows:

(2) Every person who, knowingly, or under circumstances amounting to gross negligence in the carrying out of any duty or obligation imposed by or under this act,—

This refers to the Income Tax Act:

—has made or has participated in, assented to or acquiesced in the making of, a false statement or omission in a return,—

The omission referred to is the social insurance number from the form that has to be signed by the two spouses, because there are joint statements of income. There are hundreds and thousands of married women and mothers in this country who do not have a social security number and who do not need it, yet a 25 per cent penalty is imposed on a family unit where one spouse does not have a social insurance number. That is a big club, Mr. Chairman. Children who may have received a Canada Savings Bond from a grandparent for a birthday or for Christmas cannot get full value for it, because a child cannot get a social security number and would have to pay the 25 per cent penalty. But they are not taxpayers and therefore cannot file a return. It is a "Catch 22" situation all over again.

I am told on the quiet that this provision is included on the insistence of officials at the Department of National Revenue, so I am addressing the minister in her capacity as Acting Minister of National Revenue.

This provision is immoral. It is a breach of an undertaking of this House to the people of Canada that this would never happen. I see some hon. members laughing at this use of the word "immoral" in regard to the social security number. They should see some of the letters that have been written to me about their performance on television during debate on my private member's bill, Bill C-203.

I make this final plea to the minister, that this insistence on and extension of the use of the social security number is dishonest. If it is a question of ultimately getting total identification of all individuals, step by step and surreptitiously, then we must protest.

The other day the minister said quite candidly that she was responsible for the administration of $14 billion of social security legislation. I fully agree that was the purpose—and unemployment insurance—but nothing else.

Miss Bégin: But this is social policy.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is within taxation. These are amendments to the Income Tax Act and there will be no bootlegging through the back door. Perhaps I can emphasize this by taking my argument to absurd limits. I can see that the Department of National Health and Welfare will soon try to obtain sufficient information to put in their computers so that the minister will be able to engage in the mating game. She will have information on all males and females in this country and through her computers she will be able to match them up and perhaps send out little suggestions. So through the Department of National Health and Welfare the ultimate use of this information that is slowly being compiled will be for what I call the national mating game. I will not say this particular minister will do it because I do not see her future in this ministry for very long.

Miss Bégin: Where am I going?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not know but not over on that side of the ministerial benches. For the life of me, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see why we must have this extension, under penalty, of the use of social security numbers.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I know the hon. member for Edmonton West has some slight concern in the area of social insurance numbers. This was the subject of his recent private member's bill on which a number of members on this side participated, as well as in a question of privilege raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar also brought the matter up on one or two occasions.

I know from discussions publicly in this House and privately with the hon. member for Edmonton West recently that he is exercised about the relatively few Canadians who are themselves concerned about the law this parliament passed a year or so ago. It had nothing to do with bureaucratic nonsense; it was a law of this parliament. I am sure the hon. member for Edmonton West is as anxious as anyone that the laws passed in this House be obeyed throughout the country.

We are moving around in a wide circle in the course of discussions tonight, and I suppose we might as well continue that way. We are now talking about the use of social insurance numbers as a requirement for cashing bearer bond coupons.

In order to insist on proper compliance with our income tax laws, this parliament considered it appropriate to pass a law, which was enshrined in subsection (5) of section 234 in January, 1977, which said in effect that when you cash bearer bond coupons in the future, in order that the income tax department may have some hope of tracing unreported income, you must produce a social insurance number. I believe I am correct in saying that figures recently published show that about 80 per cent of Canadians now have these numbers. In any case, a large proportion of Canadians have social insurance numbers and it does not seem to be a matter that is creating a great deal of concern.

● (2112)

Nevertheless, if, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert indicated, you do not have a SIN number and simply cannot stand to have a number for that purpose, even though you will have numbers if you have any kind of a charge account card, a department store card, a bank account, a licence or a telephone, a mailing address etc., if you insist that you will not, under any condition, have a social insurance number, then fine, you are not obligated to get one. The Department of National Revenue says "All right, we will not be able to trace in your case, under normal circumstances, whether you declare that income or not; what we will do is withhold 25 per cent of the interest that is otherwise payable to you. You can then have that interest back at the time you file your income tax return."

I know the hon. member for Edmonton West is concerned that some people may have recieved bonds from their husbands, or husbands from their wives, and under certain provisions in the Income Tax Act which have been there for a long time, the income is deemed to fall in the hands of the donor, but they may not be subject to income tax and never ordinarily have to file an income tax return.

The point is that this 25 per cent deduction is not a penalty, it is a withholding tax. The hon. member for Edmonton West knows there is quite a significant difference under the Income Tax Act between penalties and withholding tax. They are entirely different things. A penalty is something that you have to pay because you have done something wrong in accordance with the requirements of the Income Tax Act. A withholding tax is something that is deducted and later returned to you if you are eligible, either in the form of a reimbursement or as a deduction from your tax otherwise payable.

In raising this issue here, I suggest the hon. member for Edmonton West is confusing two entirely separate issues. I have been speaking of the requirements under the Income Tax Act for a withholding tax under section 234(5) for bond coupons that are cashed. There is also, as he mentioned, a requirement in the Income Tax Act under subsection (2) of section 237 that requires you to use your social insurance number when you file an income tax return. That provision has been in the act for ten or 12 years, passed by an earlier parliament and enshrined in the laws of our country. He is confusing these two things with two other requirements under the Income Tax Act which have nothing whatever to do with social insurance numbers. He is relating the problem to clause 7 of the present bill.

I would be delighted to get to clause 7, but we are talking about it on clause 1. Be that as it may, the requirement under this particular bill has nothing to do with social insurance numbers. Indeed, it does speak to a penalty, not a withholding tax, and it provides a penalty if you make false statements.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Or omit to fill in a form.

Mr. Martin: That is already covered in the Income Tax Act under section 162, subsection (3)—failure to provide complete information. Also, I believe section 163, subsection (2), which is statements or omissions in filing returns applies. It is clearly indicated in the literature that accompanies clause 7 that all we are attempting to do in this particular clause is to extend the penalty provisions under section 163, subsection (2). In other words, if you make false statements under the Income Tax Act you have a problem and you are subject to a penalty of 25 per cent; not a withholding tax—a penalty, a fee, a fine. All that is being said in clause 7 of this bill is that that kind of a fine will also be applicable if you make false statements when applying for this new child tax credit.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Or omit to fill in a form.

Mr. Martin: It is as simple as that and nothing more. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the issue of the social insurance numbers, which I know still concerns the hon. member for Edmonton West. His concern may or may not be appropriate; I do not think it is. I do not think the argument has any place in this bill, particularly clause 7 which, as I say, has nothing to do with the particular problem relating to social insurance numbers.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Order. I must point out to the hon. member that the time allotted to him has now expired.

[English]

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I would like to place some questions before the minister and the parliamentary secretary and follow up questions put by the hon. member for Churchill. I do not think we have yet had the answers we need. First, respecting status Indians living on reservations, are they liable to the payment of income tax?

Miss Bégin: No.

Mr. Epp: In view of that fact, will status Indian mothers living on reservations have to file income tax returns to collect the child tax credit?

Miss Bégin: The child tax credit to be received will involve one form or more in connection with the income tax system. That is one of the points I intend to take up with the National Indian Brotherhood.

Mr. Epp: The Minister said this afternoon that we have spent too much time on this bill. I think we pointed out quite conclusively that this was not the case and in fact that two days had gone by without debate on Bill C-10 other than for some 40 minutes on the one day and 35 minutes on the other. Now the minister says she wants to meet with the National Indian Brotherhood to discuss certain aspects of the bill. And yet we are asked to pass the bill. The minister has comfirmed that status Indians living on reserves do not have to file income tax.

Second, the minister has said that she has no answer, no answer at all, as to how status Indians living on reserves will collect the $200 tax credit, or Inuits in federally administered territories. Is the minister telling us now that she has not discussed this with her officials and that she has no plan to pay these people the tax credit?

Miss Bégin: Of course not, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Provencher is getting excited without any reason whatsoever. The status Indians do not pay taxes for income earned on the reserves. They do pay taxes like any other Canadian on income earned outside the reserve even if they come back to live on the reserve regularly. I hope this is clear. We are talking now of another bill which will provide $200 more per child to each mother whenever the income is low enough. If the technicality to obtain that money is to be connected by a form to the income tax system, the Indian mothers will file that form. I do not see what is wrong with that. I would like the hon. member to tell the House what is the crime behind what he is making in terms of sous-entendus submissions and things that nobody understands. Would the hon. member be clear?

Mr. Epp: The point I want to make to the minister—and I am not excited—is that the minister has come in with a half-baked proposal that she herself has no answers to. That is the point. It has been a long-standing agreement between the status Indians and Governments of Canada that there would not be changes in the payment of income tax without full agreement between the two parties concerned. The minister does not have that agreement. She has not even sought the agreement. In fact, she has not even met with the National Indian Brotherhood. Now, suddenly the problem has developed and she says yes, I must meet with the National Indian Brotherhood.

● (2122)

She has no answer; she has evaded the question totally. I ask again: Will status Indian mothers living on reserves have to file income tax in order to get the tax credit?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I am, rightly or wrongly, suspicious of people who start taking as their victims the Indian mothers. I do not know why they speak only of them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: Where is it hurting? I would like to know if they are in favour of or against the child tax credit for Indian and Inuit children. They have never answered me. I wonder why that sort of question always comes from the same party, suggesting there will be misuse. I have heard it said more than once.

This bill will provide mothers with a child tax credit. In order to do that, it will connect them to the tax machinery. It has nothing to do with making them pay tax, and I hope the hon. member understands that.

Mr. Epp: What about filing?

Miss Bégin: If they do not pay tax, they will not file. That is pretty clear. Therefore, I would ask him not to throw in that kind of red herring. It is similar to the other one to frighten mothers who will be entitled to the new child tax credit.

Indian mothers will file, with the help of other Indians on the reserves, a form that will entitle them to a child tax credit of $200 per child. It will bear the name "child tax credit". It will bear the name "tax". However, hon. members know it has nothing to do with a tax in the sense of income tax. The hon. member knows that, so why play games? I do not understand his question. It does not have anything to do with income tax for Indians living and earning money on reserves.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, the minister knows full well that the official opposition has endorsed the $200 per child. I therefore suggest to the minister, in her frustration of not having looked at this bill carefully, that she not try and pull that kind of a stunt, making the allegation that a member on this side of the House gave her the impression that he was not in favour of the $200 per child credit for children who are status Indians. The minister should know that.

Miss Bégin: Good.

Mr. Epp: I am glad she finally understands it; it has taken a long time. The point we are trying to make is that there are certain procedures that native people have not had to fulfill vis-à-vis the Income Tax Act as have other people, or the Inuit people living in federal territories.

The minister has now said that a child tax credit form, or whatever she wants to call it, will be developed whereby mothers of status Indian children will apply for the $200 credit. I would like the minister to explain to which department that will be sent, her department or the tax department.

Miss Bégin: As I have often said in the House, and the hon. member for Provencher may have missed it, the 1.5 million mothers in Canada, including Indian mothers living on reserves, who are non-filers will send the form to the tax address which will be on that form. What is the difference between a mother who is on welfare or one who makes so little money that she is a non-filer, and an Indian mother in that regard? That is why I asked the question. I am very pleased to have clarification of where the official opposition stands.

Mr. Epp: May I then ask the minister whether native people need a social insurance number.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, everyone connected to the tax system will need a social insurance number as per the act.

Mr. Epp: Has the minister checked with her colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, whether the native people of Canada approve of that move?

Miss Bégin: I have nothing to report, Mr. Chairman. We have no suspicion of a problem there.

Mr. Epp: Can we have an assurance from the minister, before we complete committee of the whole stage of Bill C-10, on the position of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as to the requirement of status Indians who will apply for this tax credit with regard to whether they will need a social insurance number?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I can give that assurance to the committee tonight. In the discussion of and decisions taken on this bill, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was particularly pleased with the fact that it will cover the Indian mother in the way that it will cover other Canadian mothers. I have his whole support, I can assure the committee of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: The minister this afternoon spent a fair amount of time hurling a good bit of invective at members on this side, arguing that they should approach the provincial ministers of health with regard to the tax credit to ensure an equivalent amount will not be removed from the provincial welfare payments. She became excited about the possibility of provinces in fact reducing the provincial welfare payout commensurate with the amount of the tax credit. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond raised the same spectre—that provinces have done this in the past.

Status people are a direct responsibility of the federal government. I am speaking about those living on reserves and in national territories. I am not speaking about those who have left the reserves. Does she have assurance from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that the amount of welfare now paid to status people will not be reduced by a commensurate amount of the tax credit?

Miss Bégin: I answered that question earlier tonight, Mr. Chairman. As to the analogy of the provincial governments, I would be pleased if the hon. member for Provencher were bringing me a reply to my letter from the hon. Bud Sherman. I do not have any news from him as to the way he will treat the new child tax credit, but I anticipate the Manitoba government will follow good politics at no cost, except the cost to federal taxpayers, and pass that credit on to the children in the province.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I can ask the Manitoba minister of health and social development for that assurance. I am not sure whether the minister needs me as a mediary, but if relations are that bad, I am willing to perform that duty. The same can be said about her reply from Prince Edward Island.

The point I am trying to make with this minister is that while she has made the point about the provinces, this government has direct responsibility for status people. She cannot blame the provinces for not taking their responsibility. She cannot blame any organization. The buck stops right here with this government. Has the Minister of National Health and Welfare discussed this matter with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—yes or no? If she has, did she receive the assurance that the amounts payable to native people will not be reduced by the amount individual families will receive pursuant to the tax credit?

• (2132)

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I said earlier tonight—I thought the hon. member for Provencher was here—that I did write to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development about this very matter.

Mr. Epp: The minister says she wrote to her colleague. We write many letters to this government, but we do not get answers. Did the minister receive an answer relating to this matter?

Miss Bégin: I answered earlier.

Mr. Epp: Is the minister choosing not to answer that question? Has she no answer? Has she not received an answer?

Mr. Railton: You are off the bill.

Mr. McGrath: That is a proper and very important question.

Mr. Epp: I am right on the bill. The point of the matter is that hon. members opposite do not want to answer questions. All this government wants is a rubber stamp for its legislation. I say to the minister and to the hon. member for Welland—especially to the hon. member for Welland—that they have no concern for native people. In fact, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance gave the impression today that in his mind Indians do not count.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I would like to describe that as being a very cheap shot. I am sure the hon. member for Provencher knows that what he says is not the case. I put forward the argument—which I know was not acceptable to the hon. member for Churchill who was posing the question at the time—that getting into the matter of how best to handle welfare payments to Indian children was not perhaps related to any one of the clauses in this bill. However, we did go into further debate, and I believe every question put by the hon. member for Churchill was quite adequately answered.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): No, not yet.

Mr. Martin: I hope the hon. member for Provencher will take back the comment he made relating to my position on Indians. I have never made any such statement.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the same point of order. I would like to correct the hon. member for Provencher, who intimated or made the accusation that because I was trying to keep him on the bill, which he wandered away from for a long time—

Mr. McGrath: Who woke you up Doc?

Mr. Railton: —I was not interested in Indian people. I happen to be very fond of the aboriginal people of Canada. I think they need our support until they make the transition to a more lucrative or prosperous way of life. However, this has nothing to do with the bill in question. This bill is clearly about family allowances and how they are going to be administered. Having made that correction, I hope future questions will be about the bill.

The Chairman: I must say that the point raised by the parliamentary secretary is accepted as a point of clarification. As to the point raised by the hon. member for Welland, I am sure hon. members will accept the doctor's faith and beliefs.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I intend to continue my questioning despite the intensity of hon. members opposite, who obviously do not want to answer questions in this area.

Mr. Boulanger: You are wasting time and you know it.

Mr. Epp: As long as Your Honour will allow me to continue questioning, which obviously means your Honour feels my questions are related to the bill, I will not listen to the hon. member for Welland, whether he thinks my questions relate to the bill or not. As long as Your Honour thinks my questions relate to the bill, that is good enough for me.

Mr. McGrath: Doc is on the record. That is the important thing.

Mr. Epp: The question I am trying to raise with the minister is simply whether native people will receive the same benefits to which everybody else is entitled. That is one point. The second question relates to whether they will receive their benefits in a manner which will not violate agreements held or understood. Third, the minister has chosen not to answer the question about an assurance from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as to what his department will do when these tax credits go to the mothers of status Indian children.

I suppose we will have to wait and see whether we can ask that question of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development directly, but I want the record to show clearly that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has either chosen not to answer that question or does not have an answer.

Mr. Harquail: She has answered it twice already.

Mr. Epp: I will simply leave it at that. I would like to get to another point. Speaking at second reading of this bill on October 31 the Minister of Finance mentioned that there would be a $35 million saving in the next fiscal year over and above the amount of money which would have had to be expended if the present family allowance plan had remained in place. I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary or the Minister of National Health and Welfare about the annual administrative cost of paying out 12 monthly cheques on each account. A family receives 12 family allowance cheques per year. What is the administrative cost per family at the present time under the present plan?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I want to say very clearly to the hon. member, who acts like a Crown attorney, that I have not refused to answer. That is a pure fabrication in his mind.

I am suffering from a sore throat. That has been obvious to my colleagues for two weeks. I wish there was a rule providing that I should not have to repeat answers to the same questions. However, I will repeat once more. I have given this answer fully at least twice earlier tonight.

Mr. Harquail: This is the third time.

Miss Bégin: The hon. member for Provencher either does not listen or he is having fun instead of doing his work. The new child tax credit will not violate any agreement with Indians. Does the hon. member think we would present legislation to parliament which would violate agreements with Indians? That is a very strange question. I said quite clearly to the hon. member, who was killing time, that the treatment of the child tax credit for Indian children will be the same as for any other Canadian children. I want to repeat that. I hope the hon. member understands. I could put it in writing for him. In this regard I wrote to my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in a way similar to the way I wrote to my provincial counterparts. I have not received a written reply from my colleague. I hope that is clear to the hon. member now.

On the question of the administrative cost of sending out family allowance cheques, I will have to check the question to see how the hon. member wants it answered. If he wants to know the cost per family of sending out family allowance cheques, I know it is the lowest administrative cost of all programs but I will provide him with exact details.

• (2142)

Mr. Rae: I do not have many questions and those I have will not, I think, strike fear in the hearts of members on the other side or cause much surprise because they have been raised by my leader and by other hon. members here. However, for purposes of clarity, I should like to state, first of all, that while I agree with the minister that the discount rate is 15 per cent, when we talk about that rate on an annual basis it is 60 per cent. The government requires under Bill C-46—I would refer my friend to schedule 1 under the bill, and in particular to the last column to be filled out by the tax discounter—that the discount rate as an annual rate be 60 per cent. That is what I was saying in my comments earlier. I would be interested to hear the minister on this, but I want to make it perfectly clear for the record. I was accused by some hon. members of not knowing what I was talking about. There are many times when

I do not know what I am talking about, but this time I think I do.

An hon. Member: Are you sure?

Mr. Rae: I am sure this time. On a Master Charge or a Chargex account we pay the rate of 1.5 per cent a month. That is an annual rate of interest of 18 per cent. Similarly, the discount rate of 15 per cent expressed as an annual rate of interest is 60 per cent. That is what the government is telling discounters to charge, and that is what they have to state. That is the first part of the point I wanted to make.

The second part of the point I want to make is that when Bill C-46 was first drafted and brought before the House—let me say again that I do not say this in a spirit of antagonism toward my friends opposite but in a spirit of conciliation in order that we get the most we can for the people for whom this money is intended—it did not anticipate, I suggest, the creation of this tax credit scheme. According to the minister's own figures, about 1.5 million people will be filing a new tax form which they have never filled out before, and they will be in receipt of a sum of money which they have never received before.

What I am saying to the minister and to her colleague is this. If the government is not prepared under this bill to look seriously at this problem—and this is not a fictitious problem but a very real one—it will be in trouble. I say to the minister, with respect, that when she is asking me to tell my constituents to please not get their $200 less a discount of $30 in January or February but to please wait for their payments until March or April, she must recognize that these are not the wealthiest people in the world. I do not have the right to tell these people to hold off, nor does the minister. We are dealing by and large with people who are on welfare, who do not file income tax returns. Although I have been accused of assuming too much knowledge about the circumstances in which these people live, I think I am entitled to say that people living on welfare will certainly be interested in getting hold of $200 or, as it is now magically reduced, $170, as soon as possible.

I say to the government very seriously that I know they have special economic reasons for having to raise the interest rate to the usurious rate of 10.75 per cent, but in the name of heaven let them realize they have no obligation to subsidize the tax discounters in our country to the tune of several millions of dollars, which will be the result of this legislation. I would like some indication from the minister as to the government's willingness, if the government is not prepared to move on this front now, to at least give serious consideration to the payment of this money in quarterly instalments, not as an annual payment.

I think it was my friend—the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar who raised this as an issue brought forward by the national anti-poverty organization. I made that point in my comments at second reading and I repeat now—I do not say this in order to score points with the minister—that I am concerned that government money is paid out to people who need it, not to the tax discounters.

I think the government is hung up on this criminal rate of interest which is getting it into many problems and, with which I do not agree. But quite apart from this, when Bill C-46 was passed, the government did not anticipate the legislation before us now. Under this bill the government is creating a subsidy for these people which was never anticipated at the time it allowed income tax discounters to charge 15 per cent. I am saying to the minister that giving speeches and asking people to please hold off for three months will not work. Once she has found it will not work, I hope she will come back to the House and say: "Let us send out payments to those people every quarter." At least this would ensure that people will not have to wait for large chunks of money from the government, 15 per cent of which, in my opinion, is guaranteed to go into the hands of the usurers in our major metropolitan centres.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member raised a couple of points in connection with the tax discounting bill. The first point which should be made is that, whether or not all members of the House consider Bill C-46 perfect, it did indeed address itself to a particular problem which many people were facing in recent years, when they went to these people in the tax discount game and paid large interest rates on the advance payments which they received. This bill does limit the rate that the tax discounters charge to 15 per cent of the total amount being claimed. If that amount is outstanding for a year, it is a higher rate of interest. But let me point out that it is not being paid as a rate of interest but rather as a charge, and the point to bear in mind is that the charge cannot be greater than 15 per cent of the amount involved.

I do not think that when a bill is passed in the House members can anticipate what the future legislation will be in years to come. When the tax discount bill was passed, it was meant to deal with a particular problem at the time. I know the hon. member represents a riding that is adjacent to mine but for one riding between us, and we have a similar mix of constituents. I am very hopeful that people in his and in my constituency, as well as those in all constituencies throughout the country, who will be benefiting from this new tax credit, will avail themselves of the services of some of the professional accounting houses or of voluntary groups which offer services at a minimal fee, to assist those who have difficulties in filling out the very simple form which will be required under the circumstances.

The only analogy that I can draw is in the present situation in Ontario. Both of us represent Ontario ridings where people can apply for a property tax credit, and I believe that credit applies in some other provinces as well. In terms of the calculation required, this particular credit will be easier for the individual making the claim and, the form will be simpler to fill out than the one which people in Ontario are presently required to fill out in order to obtain the Ontario property tax credit. So far as I know, taxpayers generally have found they can cope with the Ontario property tax calculations, and indeed many people are receiving that credit who would not otherwise be income tax filers. So I think the same sort of thing will apply here.

I am sure all hon. members hope that, as result of this bill or any future legislation involving credit of this kind, we will not be faced with an offshoot of the tax discounters business which Bill C-46 last year attempted to address. I am sure that is the hope of all hon. members. Obviously, in the first year this credit is applicable people will run into certain difficulties. Once they have had one go at it, it will be a very routine procedure in subsequent years. It is similar to what happened when the Ontario property tax credit was introduced. Now that is a simple ritual which people go through year in and year out. Many people receive the credit even though they are not otherwise taxpayers.

• (2152)

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can comment on this. To make certain that no tax discounting is possible, the cheques are non-assignable. We have looked into that. I am familiar with non-assignability because when I was minister of national revenue the province of British Columbia asked me to look into that matter very closely. For instance, family allowance cheques are non-assignable and therefore cannot be cashed at tax discounting offices. A tax rebate cannot be non-assignable. Under the present system in Canada it is impossible. In the eyes of the income tax system, this payment is considered to be a tax refund. From that point of view, non-assignability is a technique of controlling tax discounting.

The possibility of several instalments rather than an annual lump sum in future years will be looked into. I will monitor these lump sum payments very carefully. I should like mothers to express their viewpoints. The two major factors which could lead us to reconsider this in future years would be the budget difficulty which is being created eventually for families and tax discounting practices. It is up to mothers to tell us whether they prefer a lump sum payment once a year or several instalments. In future years—not this year—we could move toward a system of several instalments.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Chairman, I do not share the optimism of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and her parliamentary secretary, but I appreciate that they are willing to look carefully at the administrative repercussions of this measure.

Referring to the matter of non-assignability, surely where there is a sovereign parliament anything is possible, provided the will is there. I do not accept the argument that it is not possible to make this form of credit a non-assignable security or something which cannot be borrowed against.

I think my second point has been talked to death, but I should like to give an example. The hon. member for Egmont was the first member to raise this on the first night of the debate. He was concerned with the fact that the chairman of the Human Rights Commission wrote a letter to the minister dealing with the possibility of this provision being discriminatory. Then we received the opinion of the Minister of Justice which indicated that the Income Tax Act was not an infringement of the Bill of Rights. That should come as no surprise, since the most recent supreme court decision in this matter was that the Bill of Rights has no cutting edge. If the Bill of Rights has no cutting edge against the Unemployment Insurance Act, surely it will have no cutting edge against the Income Tax Act. That does not mean it is not discriminatory; it means that we do not have an entrenched Bill of Rights.

I should like to refer to a common law relationship in which the woman earns $13,000 and her male friend earns $20,000. Under this scheme, their children would qualify, whereas the children of a wife and husband in similar circumstances would not qualify. I am not here to score any particular points. The minister has expressed her opinion, which I suggest was somewhat offhand. She suggested that the submission of the chairman of the Human Rights Commission was invalid. I do not think it was invalid. If my example is true—and I see that the minister is nodding—

Miss Bégin: No, I am not nodding.

Mr. Rae: Is the minister going to sleep?

Miss Bégin: Absolutely not.

Mr. Rae: If my example is incorrect, perhaps the minister can correct it. It is my distinct impression that a couple cohabiting in a different form of sin than that referred to by the hon. member for Edmonton West is able to claim a benefit for their children, whereas if a joint income tax return is filed as required by the act by a married couple, their children will not benefit.

This seems to be a common problem. In the spirit of conciliation, perhaps we can receive an agreement from the minister that she is prepared to look at it again, rather than dismiss the point out of hand because it comes from this side.

Miss Bégin: I am so concerned about the status of women that I would not dismiss it lightly. As I indicated the other night, from a legal point of view the opinion of the Minister of Justice is that this bill has no discriminatory features. The hon. member for Broadview referred to the Income Tax Act, which is a bill in itself and another matter altogether. It is not for me, the House or the commissioner of the Human Rights Commission to judge a bill in terms of a common law situation. I repeat that the letter of Mr. Gordon Fairweather is very ambiguous. People are still reading it and wondering what he actually meant.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No, they are not.

Miss Bégin: Well, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands referred to one sentence in the letter, and other members have referred to other sentences.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Miss Bégin: In the second paragraph of the letter Mr. Fairweather referred to marital status. Since it is ten o'clock, perhaps I can continue tomorrow.

The Deputy Chairman: Since the minister has not completed her remarks and hon. members are questioning those remarks, perhaps it is a good time to call it ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

• (2202)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—INDEXING OF PENSIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on March 9 last the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) announced that the government plans to introduce a bill to amend certain elements of the public service pension plan as concerns the indexation of pensions to the cost of living. A lot has been written about the special study on the provisions of public service pensions in the context of the government expenditure restraint program. In its publication Consensus, the National Coalition of Citizens said that it was abusive or exaggerated to index the pension plan of public servants, suggesting that federal public servants have a better pension plan than most employees in the private sector, and even saying that indexing these pensions would lead the country into bankruptcy.

• (2207)

The National Coalition of Citizens was firmly against indexing public pension plans. However, there is no need to prove that this Liberal government is aware that it must protect our retired people against the thief of inflation. Inflation takes away the assets of those who are on a fixed income. Inflation also affects the various groups of pensioners and widens the gap between the income of those who work and those who are retired. The indexing of pensions protects pensioners by readjusting their income according to the increase in the cost of living. This does not increase their purchasing power, but simply maintains it at the same level.

The financing of public service pensions is perhaps the most badly misunderstood aspect of the plan. This is not surprising since the financing of pensions is complex and very technical in nature. To better understand the present financial provisions, it should be remembered that they are governed by two separate and very different sets of rules. One applies to the financing of basic pensions and the other to the financing of indexation payments.

Basic pensions are fully funded, to use the terminology of actuaries. In other words pensions are financed in such a way that if the plan were suddenly discontinued the pension fund, without any additional contribution but with future interests, would indeed meet pensions payments to all present pensioners or their survivors as well as all pension entitlements of present employees earned before discontinuation of the plan.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have the time to explain in detail the source of funds which allow the financing of the plan. To put it briefly, funds come first from contributions of employees who pay 6.5 per cent of their salary, second from the employer contribution which is equal to that of the employee, third from an employer contribution to make up any actuarial deficit like a wage increase and so on, and fourth from the interest accumulated on amounts credited to the account.

In other words pensions are financed along the same actuarial principles as those usually used for pension plans in the private sector. So it is untrue that the whole public service pension plan is financed on a day to day basis. On the contrary, basic pensions are fully funded in a government account; both employer and employee pay enough into that account to keep it on a sound actuarial basis.

Furthermore, the pension account is increasing every year thanks to the significant accumulation of interests.

The matter with which we are dealing tonight concerns the financing of pension indexation which is based on completely different rules. Since April 1, 1970, all federal civil servants have been contributing one half of one per cent of their salary to the supplementary retirement benefit account. Honourable members will recall that in January, 1977, this contribution was raised to 1 per cent of the salary. It is the indexation issue which interested public opinion and which, we must admit, has been violently criticized by several observers. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, it is true that a real problem exists with regard to the automatic clause on pension indexation. Being aware of it the government asked that a study be made with a view to obtaining an independent opinion on the various aspects of pensions in the civil service.

The Tomenson-Alexander Associates study, tabled in the House by the minister on March 9 last, showed that if the pension plan were based on full funding, the non-capitalized actuarial debt would be very high. Bearing in mind the hypotheses formulated by the consultants, specially on interest income, full integral funding based on anticipated interest income proved to have actuarial weaknesses since the indexation was a continuous and automatic legislative commitment. In other words, doubts were expressed about the capacity of the program to generate sufficient funds to pay a continuous and automatic indexation. Last March, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) announced that he would be tabling a new bill limiting the legislative commitment on continuous and automatic indexation. He added that the rate of indexation would be reviewed on a three-year basis and that in October he would announce the rate that would apply to the years 1979, 1980 and 1981.

Last October 19, I asked the minister, first, whether the weighted interest rate, now on the increase, would be productive enough to pay full indexation and, second, what the rate of indexation applying to pensions would be for the next three years. The President of the Treasury Board answered that he hoped to be able to announce, in October as promised, the rates proposed for the next three years. Well, we are in November and no announcement had been made to date.

I admit that the problems exist and I do not like to push the issue but I would appreciate it tonight if the parliamentary secretary could give us the assurance that within a few days the minister will be making that announcement indicating firmly the rate of indexing of pensions for the next three years.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, once again I must congratulate the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr.Gauthier) for raising once again a problem affecting closely his constituents who include, of course, those who have retired from the Public Service of Canada.

As you know, this principle of maintaining the purchasing power of pensions to allow those who have retired to be able to continue to have access to the same food basket and the same services is one to which the government is and remains committed. However, would the government be also committed to the principle that the provisions dealing with pensions in the public service should be fair and equitable considering their incidence on Canadian taxpayers? The government does not believe that those two principles are incompatible. The March 9 statement by the President of the Treasury Board explained how the indexing could meet those two objectives. This is contained in Bill C-12 which the hon. member mentioned and which amends the statutory right to retirement pensions.

The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier also asks how the pensions of those who have retired from the public service will be adjusted for the next three years. I hope he can understand that I am not in a position tonight to tell him that but I would like to explain that the estimates and calculations that will have to be done before a decision is made are very complicated and require a lot of time. I can reassure him that this is being considered and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) hopes to be in a position to make a statement very soon on the pension adjustment which will be proposed for the years 1979, 1980 and 1981, and I assure the hon. member that the remarks made tonight will be brought to the attention of the President of the Treasury Board.

[English]

AIRPORTS—WINNIPEG INTERNATIONAL—FACILITIES TO ASSIST HANDICAPPED PERSONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in which I pointed out that in 1980 the World Congress on Rehabilitation will hold a meeting in Winnipeg, that 4,000 to 6,000 of the delegates attending the congress will be handicapped persons in wheelchairs, and that the organizers of the congress had stated that the national airport will be an embarrassment to the city of Winnipeg unless facilities are built to handle the large number of handicapped people expected to attend.

• (2212)

The minister's answers were less than satisfactory. They were very evasive. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) posed a similar question later in the question period and the minister stated the objective was to provide facilities. The answer is not satisfactory, Mr. Speaker.

Organizers of the congress have stated that Winnipeg International Airport will be an embarrassment to the city unless facilities are built to handle the large number of handicapped people who will attend the 1980 World Congress on Rehabilitation. Many will be disabled persons confined to wheelchairs.

I wrote to the Minister of Transport on September 19 regarding the problem faced by handicapped persons at Winnipeg International Airport customs area, on escalators and in other areas. We realize that the airport was designed in the 1950s and was not completed until the 1960s, when unfortunately we did not give much thought to handicapped persons and how to handle them. I hope the parliamentary secretary will give a firm commitment tonight that some temporary or permanent measures will be taken to facilitate the handling of handicapped people at the airport before 1980.

Mr. Ruffner, the director of communications for the United States president's commission for the handicapped was in Winnipeg to help local organizers plan the 1980 World Congress and he pointed to the very serious problems they had to face. Of the 6,000 or so delegates attending the congress there could be 500 or 600 in wheelchairs. The organizers are facing problems with hotels in the city as well.

The Department of Transport has assigned $174 million for improvements to the Winnipeg airport but the program will not begin until 1982. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that some of these funds should be allotted immediately to implement the needed improvements for the handling of handicapped persons at the airport.

I find it most disturbing to read articles in the Winnipeg newspapers about the airport, which is referred to as "bush league." An article in the Winnipeg Tribune quoted a reader, who often accompanied sick or handicapped people to and from the airport, as saying it is a disgrace to Canada. Mr. Speaker, we do not want it to be a disgrace.

In the 1950s and 1960s handicapped persons did not receive the priority they do today. Instead of suggesting we spend more funds to expand Mirabel airport, which is a white elephant, I think we should direct funds to a problem area like Winnipeg airport. Concerned citizens of Winnipeg point out that tourists arriving from overseas or from the United States are faced with long waits at the customs and immigration areas. Staff are often not ready for the flights or perhaps there is not sufficient staff on duty. These problems must be dealt with.

I am disappointed that I have not received a reply from the minister to my letter of September 19. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been writing letters to which he has received no satisfactory answers. I hope the parliamentary secretary will give us some assurance tonight that some definite action will be taken. Never mind wanting to meet the objectives in the future; this is a very serious matter. There are hundreds and hundreds of people in wheelchairs attending this congress and they want some assurance that at least when they arrive in Winnipeg they will be properly handled. That will take a great load off their shoulders. As I say, there are problems with the hotels and other facilities around the city. I am patiently waiting and I ask the parliamentary secretary to please give us some assurance that immediate action will be taken in regard to this serious problem at the Winnipeg International Airport.

● (2217)

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the minister stated yesterday, the long-range planning for Winnipeg International Airport will produce major changes which might not be complete or in place in time for the 1980 World Congress of Rehabilitation International. This does not mean however that nothing will be done by that date. Quite the contrary. Transport Canada is giving every consideration to accommodating handicapped people attending the congress in the most comfortable manner possible and to facilitating as much as possible their transfer from the aircraft to the terminal building and inside the building.

Unfortunately, details concerning the type of aircraft and the number of wheelchair passengers attending the congress are not yet available and final arrangements to accommodate these passengers cannot be completed until this information is available.

At a meeting of the Congress Planning Committee, held in Winnipeg on May 2, 1978, it was determined that 7,000 to 10,000 delegates might attend the congress. Of this total, it is anticipated that some 400 persons will be physically handicapped. In addition congress delegates will be using various modes of transportation including train, automobile and aircraft. This means then that they will not all come through the Winnipeg airport. Furthermore the majority of delegates are expected to come from Ontario and the United States and it is anticipated that many delegates will combine the congress with holidays and travel by car. It should be emphasized again that not all delegates are handicapped and of those handicapped not all will be using wheelchairs.

With this in mind, Mr. Speaker, a number of proposals are being considered for Winnipeg International. For those aircraft that are not able to connect to the terminal loading bridge, hydraulic lift vehicles can be used. They can be raised to the level of the aircraft door and lowered to ground level. The people arriving would then be transported to the first level of the terminal building. For those aircraft that can connect to the terminal loading bridges, and therefore the second level of the terminal building, a portable elevator can be installed which would accommodate wheelchair delegates as well as other handicapped persons such as the blind.

In addition to the above possibilities, adequate staff will be present to assist wheelchair delegates from the escalators, if they so choose. Special security and customs arrangements have been agreed to ensure the efficient processing of all delegate passengers. I must emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that until more information is made available concerning the number of wheelchair passengers, the proposals mentioned above cannot be considered as final. Again let me assure you every consideration will be given to accommodate congress delegates and no apparent difficulties are anticipated.

● (2222)

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE—RELOCATION AND RETRAINING OF EMPLOYEES WHOSE JOBS DECLARED REDUNDANT

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, on August 15 the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) announced a program of cutbacks which he thought could involve 5,000 positions in the public service of Canada which might be declared redundant. It is quite clear that not all of these positions are occupied but the people in such positions might find themselves surplus to requirements.

The Public Service Commission responded to this situation on September 22 with a priority clearance procedure. In brief, through the delegated authority provisions the commission said no new staffing would take place unless an opportunity was afforded those people who held positions that were declared redundant to qualify for the positions that were available. Staff associations have asked for a total freeze on the filling of positions from outside the public service during this period. The Public Service Commission has resisted this and so has Treasury Board on the theory that a total freeze is not required. Remember, we are talking about perhaps 3,500 people in a public service of over 300,000. It certainly should be possible with an orderly procedure in the ordinary course of turnover and attrition to take care of every one of these 3,500.

There is a concern that the way the policy is now being put into place is inadequate. I am looking at the November issue of the "Argus Journal" of the Public Service Alliance. They point out that the procedure is not to go into effect until November 15. They would like to see it placed in effect immediately. They would like to see that employees who face lay-off and who secure employment outside the public service receive their lay-off notice so that they can receive severance pay immediately. They are also asking for the waiving of all pension penalties for early retirement due to lay-off. These seem to be eminently fair and reasonable requests of the government as an employer, in the circumstances.

What is called for is something more than just saying if a person is qualified and a position becomes vacant, he has some kind of priority. A number of us who represent the national capital region—and I see my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) in the House this evening—have been saying that the government has an obligation to bring about a major retraining program for those who are affected. It is not easy to establish the program until you know precisely the numbers, in what departments they are employed and in what categories. These facts have not yet been established. The departments are in the process of working within the over-all cuts that have been imposed upon them in determining precisely where the redundancy notices are to be given. A plan has to be formulated for dealing with the situation and upgrading employees so that they can qualify on the basis of merit for the opportunities that present themselves.

I hope the Government of Canada will not say it is going to wait for the report of the D'Avignon commission, which is studying the merit principle within the public service and will no doubt be looking at training, and that this is outside what we are going to do. The situation is urgent. The need for planning is now.

The Public Service Commission, faced with a redundancy of 600 language teachers, put into place a special program to deal with that group within its own staff. The 600 are now down to 416 through the normal process of attrition and transfers. It is my sincere hope that the Public Service Commission will be a demonstration to the rest of the public service of what can be done to guarantee fair treatment to those who are affected.

Perhaps this would be a good time to refer to one other matter. I cannot help but feel, as my colleague the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier has said in this place on a number of occasions, that the retraining procedures within the public service of the Government of Canada are not adequate, and the case for a central training institute is a strong one. If one were in place at this time, it certainly would be of assistance in dealing with the very difficult situations which are coming to our attention.

• (2227)

Perhaps retraining is not the answer for the gentleman who sent me a letter today. This gentleman is 61 years of age and has 23 years of honourable public service and an incredible record of a professional nature. He received his redundancy notice just this week.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Shame.

Mr. Francis: Yes, I feel ashamed about that, but it is my sincere hope that the procedures which are put into place will give this gentleman an opportunity to serve to the normal retirement age, which he had every reason to expect and which his health and capacities would permit under normal circumstances. I think that the Government of Canada has an obligation not only to follow through with the priority clearance procedures which are established but also to do a good deal of retraining.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) has, as usual, brought to the attention of hon. members of this House and of the government another subject which is of concern to him on behalf of his constituents. He has thereby upheld his record of representing very well the people of his constituency who are members of the federal public service. That is a record of which he can be proud.

As the hon. member may know, government policy officially supports retraining within the public service, particularly to enable surplus employees to take on new duties. Through this policy the government hopes to avoid many lay-offs. The government has made it very clear to deputy ministers and officials responsible for staffing and training that retraining will be undertaken where it will enable a surplus employee to perform the duties of a new job. Deputy ministers have been given authority to provide formal classroom training which can exceed even the normal three-month maximum suggested in Treasury Board policy.

Retraining is common practice now, of course, since every employee new to a job must learn his duties and, in effect, is given on-the-job training. Depending on the learning required, this can be extensive, and more and more Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission are encouraging managers to view employees as flexible and adaptable and to make the most use of on-the-job training for new assignments. I emphasize that such practices apply with special force to surplus employees.

The costs of this kind of training are absorbed into normal operating budgets, and allocation of new funds by Treasury Board for this purpose appears unnecessary. Costs of formal training are separate items, but they too have to be funded from within existing budgets.

Finally, I should like to remind hon. members of the government's strong financial support for retraining generally to help Canadian workers adjust to new work. The programs of the Employment and Immigration Commission serve this purpose. These programs are available to public servants and, as I have outlined previously, a special task force in the commission will be making them aware of this retraining.

Another subject allied with this matter is relocation. The government's policy is to pay the expenses of moving surplus or laid-off employees. They will be reimbursed in the same way as other public servants moved to new jobs. This policy should help ensure continued employment for these public servants.

Costs of relocation should be absorbed within existing departmental budgets, and I do not expect special allotments to be necessary.

I wish to thank the hon. member for presenting his case to this House, and I assure him that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) will be made aware of his remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.31 p.m., without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 8, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BULLET-PROOF VESTS FOR POLICE OFFICERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that since the first of this year eight police officers have been killed in the line of duty, and during this time several others have been wounded seriously, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That immediate steps be taken by the government to do whatever is necessary, through legislation or other means, to assure that all members of all police forces in the country be issued with bullet-proof vests so that each and every one of them has some measure of protection at all times while protecting and defending the citizens of our country against all unlawful and criminal elements.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

POST OFFICE

RECOGNITION OF REMEMBRANCE DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a short motion under Standing Order 43. In view of the decision of the Post Office to break the laws of Canada, namely, the Holidays Act, chapter H-7 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and the Armistice Day Act of Newfoundland, by directing the Post Office to operate a normal-day service on Saturday, November 11, despite section 3 of the act, thus also showing disrespect for our veterans, the Canadian Legion and their fallen comrades, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the government direct the Post Office to observe Saturday, November 11, Remembrance Day, as a holiday, and that the Post Office apologize to the Canadian Legion and all veterans for this ignoring of the laws of Canada and for the disrespect shown veterans of Canada's wars.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pinard: The Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) wants to raise a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan).

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MEASURES TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC REGION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the adjusted unemployment rate for the province of Nova Scotia for October, as revealed by Statistics Canada, shows an adjusted seasonal rate of 10.2 per cent, and in view of the serious government expenditure restraints, plus the high interest rates policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That special capital works projects be immediately planned for Nova Scotia and the rest of the Atlantic region, to be implemented as soon as possible to avoid extremely serious conditions for the unemployed in these areas during the coming winter.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS IN DEVALUATION OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the accusations made against certain American banks which are under investigation by the United States Securities and Exchange Commission, given the fact that the accusations are to the effect that some banks lower the value of the dollar by selling large amounts and buying them back at a lower price a few hours later, and also given the fact that these banks once they have made a profit, use their subsidiaries in the Caribbean, where taxes are not as high, to evade the revenue department, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House request the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to proceed to an investigation to determine the responsibility of Canadian banks in the fall of the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion can be put for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

[English]

TRADE

EXPORT SALES OF GRAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago the United States Congress passed emergency legislation to provide credit for export sales of grain to China. This action by the United States government will, without doubt, endanger Canadian exports of grain.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That this House instruct the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to immediately reverse his decision to cut back the interest subsidies on export sales of grain and the market incentive program for grains and oilseeds.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES FOR CHILDREN WITH LEARNING DISABILITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that provincial facilities for children with learning disabilities are presently inadequate, and in view of the fact that the learning disability of a child is often health-related, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee):

That this House urges the Minister of National Health and Welfare to investigate the possibility of a federal-provincial conference with a view to providing adequate facilities for children with learning disabilities.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FISHERIES

ALLEGED HARMFUL EFFECT OF DEVELOPMENT OF ROBERTS BANK, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. This motion concerns the proposed massive development of the Roberts Bank superport in British Columbia.

In view of the serious impact to future enhancement of Fraser River salmon runs and other foods fisheries by the degradation of the Fraser estuary in this project, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That a moratorium be announced in respect of this project until the following take place:

(1) A full public inquiry dealing with the need for rationalization of all west coast ports, including Roberts Bank;

(2) A proper estuary authority, composed of federal, provincial and municipal representatives, be formed to prevent destruction of the Fraser estuary.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can be done, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF SPAIN

Mr. Speaker: Before beginning the oral question period, I know that all hon. members will want to join with me in signalling the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor and welcoming the first official visitor and leader of a delegation from Spain since the very recent passage of their new constitution, one of the principal architects of that new constitution and the President of the Cortes and of the Council of Realm, Dr. Hernandez Gil.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POLICY RESPECTING VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that the bank rate has now gone to its highest point in Canadian history, and there is general agreement that this will cause greater unemployment and more inflation, I should like to ask why, when there were other policy options, including allowing the dollar to float, the minister did not choose to allow the dollar to float?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have replied to that question. The governor of the Bank of Canada made a recommendation to me to the effect that in order to keep the Canadian dollar stable in relation to the difference between the interest rate in the United States and the interest rate in Canada, we had to increase the bank rate by one-half a point, and I did not disagree.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, given all these facts, including the traditional relationship between the Canadian and the United States economy, with their unemployment rate around 5 per cent and ours around 8 per cent—the differential is usually only about 1 per cent—could the minister be more explicit in saying why he rejected, or turned away from the traditional policy of allowing the dollar to float?

The reason one allows the dollar to float is to allow the government to operate a domestic economic policy that is appropriate for the times in one's own country. If there was ever a policy that seems to be wrong for the time, it is one of raising interest rates. Why did the minister move away from using a floating dollar as a way of permitting the government to follow a domestic economic policy which would be appropriate for the country at this time?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I reiterated in my answers that according to our monetary policy and to our policy of floating exchange rate, the interventions of the governor of the Bank of Canada were designed to see that the market operates normally and that the fluctuation is not so abrupt as to cause a disastrous effect on the level of inflation in Canada.

• (1417)

[English]

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Minister of Finance has missed the entire point. If a country has a policy of a floating exchange rate, it has that policy so that it can do domestically what it needs to do. Will the minister tell the House, quite directly and irrevocably, whether the government has rejected the policy of a floating exchange rate, because if it has, it makes no sense whatsoever to follow the policy the government is following with respect to interest rates?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dollar is a floating currency and therefore its exchange rate varies in the marketplace from day to day. The intervention by the banks is made according to the policy I outlined a few moments ago.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how to raise this question more directly, but an answer such as the minister gave is just incredible. A floating exchange rate is used by a country so that it can follow its domestic economic policies. Is the minister telling the House that he has a floating exchange rate, but still is not willing to follow a corresponding economic policy for the nation?

Is the minister saying, today, that the policy of the Government of Canada is to float the exchange rate, but at the same time it is to have high interest rates in the face of high unemployment and high inflation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I cannot add much more to what I have already said. The Canadian dollar is a floating currency. Intervention by the Bank of Canada is to make sure that fluctuation in the market occurs in a rational fashion and is not so abrupt as to cause too much inflation in the Canadian economy.

ECONOMIC POLICIES—REMARKS OF MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—RATE OF ECONOMIC GROWTH

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said, as reported in the Globe and Mail, that the economy is ready to move ahead. He said the Canadian——economy is posed to move ahead strongly "if our biggest purchaser, the United States, can only get its economics right." He did not elaborate.

Would the Prime Minister advise the House whether he intends to send the minister to the United States to advise them on their economic policies, and would he tell us which of the Canadian policies have been so successful that the United States will be advised to adopt them to get their economics right?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no need for the minister to go to the United States.

The United States have an ambassador here, and he has obviously informed the United States of our policies which are then being imitated by President Carter.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, God help poor old President Carter of the United States. Just when the president was having a comeback, he is doomed again!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: My supplementary is to the Minister of Finance. The chairman of the Federal Reserve Board of the United States, Mr. William Miller, says that the economy of that country is revising its estimates of growth for next year down to between 2.5 per cent and 3 per cent, as compared to earlier estimates of 3 per cent to 3.5 per cent, and because of the monetary tightening of the Federal Reserve Board which went into effect three or four days ago, they are now up to 9.5 per cent.

Would the Minister of Finance state to the House, now, his estimate of what our economy's growth will be and how much it will be slowed by his increase in monetary tightening as a result of the United States increase? How far will our growth rate fall, over the minister's earlier projections for next year?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question when I present the budget to this House.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, economists generally say that for Canada to have real growth in its economy next year it will have to be export-led.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, in view of the fact that the United States economy will drop in growth and that our main export market is the United States, does he still expect Canada to have any stimulus next year that it will be export-led, considering the possible consequences on the United States economy of this tightening policy?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I shall answer these questions with full details when I table my speech on the budget.

* * *

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED ILLEGAL SHIPMENTS OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO SOUTH AFRICA—RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. Serious allegations were made last night on the CBC program "Fifth Estate" regarding three specific illegal shipments of shells and other military equipment from Space Research Corporation of Canada to South Africa via other countries. Since it has been reported that the RCMP has investigated at least one of these allegations, could the minister inform the House of the results of such an investigation?

● (1422)

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman well knows that it has been the practice of solicitors general past and present not to comment on the progress of an investigation that is going on, but to keep their comments until it has been completed.

EXPORT OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO SPAIN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of National Revenue is in the other place, I shall have to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce the following question: since the Government of Canada authorized the shipment of shells to the government of Spain—that, I take it, is beyond question—during the present year, could the minister tell the House whether the government ascertained that those shells had, in fact, been requested by the government of Spain before it gave approval for the export permit?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I really do not think this matter should be dealt with in the House of Commons. As the Solicitor General has suggested, it is under investigation now and we want that investigation to go ahead as fruitfully as possible.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. We certainly have to get a report in the House at some point on this very serious matter, so I shall put my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Considering that the allegations are extremely serious, carry heavy penalties and involve the credibility of Canada living up to international agreements, will the minister assure the House that in terms of his responsibility to other countries as well as Canada, at some point he will bring in a full report on these serious allegations?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, I can give that assurance, Mr. Speaker. I think my colleagues have indicated that the investigation is under way, but I want to emphasize that it did not come about as a result of these most recent news reports. This matter was first brought to light some months ago during the visit here of Mr. Nkomo. It was at that time that the investigation was launched. So far, we have not had an official report or, in my case, any report from this investigation. But it is clearly government policy to ensure that the maximum amount of assurance is provided that no shipment goes to South Africa. If there has been a problem, obviously it will be dealt with. I shall certainly take the House into my confidence as soon as I have anything to report.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence on this important issue. He will remember that some months ago I made a very specific inquiry about the status of Space Research Corporation and he gave assurances at that time, by letter, that as far as he knew this corporation was quite all right. I should like to ask him today, in view of the questions raised and recent developments, whether that assurance still stands.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to change the answer I gave at that time, subject to whatever the investigation of the Solicitor General might disclose, if anything.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS IN DEVALUATION OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

As accusations have been made against certain American banks which are now the object of an inquiry by the United States Securities and Exchange Commission; as those accusations involve banks which force the decline of the dollar by selling huge quantities of dollars and buying them a few hours later, making profits through tax evasion achieved by selling the dollars through their Parisian office to a branch in the Bahamas where the tax rate is lower, so the dollars come back from the Bahamas at a higher rate after having evaded French taxes; as Canadian chartered banks have many branch offices in the Caribbean, can the minister tell the House whether or not he is considering holding an inquiry into the activities of our chartered banks with regard to the devaluation of our dollar?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity of discussing that problem with the governor of the Bank of Canada as well as the inspector general of banks. I asked them whether or not the same thing could have occurred in Canada. They assured me they did not think it had. The inspector general of banks told me, however, the he would look into the matter further. For the time being, I have no reason to believe the problem could have arisen in the case of Canadian banks.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, the minister informs me that he has asked the governor of the Bank of Canada. I would like to know if in fact he is investigating now or if the minister is prepared to go further in his inquiries?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the banks of Canada have a supervisor called the bank superintendent who communicates with them. I raised the matter with the superintendent who told me he was investigating. His preliminary report indicated that he had no reason to believe that there were undue interventions by the banks of Canada to have the Canadian dollar fluctuate.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, could the minister inform the House on when we will have the results of those investigations?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I shall have an answer if the inspector found something abnormal but up to date there is no indication of any problem in his preliminary report.

* * *

● (1427)

[English]

SHIPPING

PETITION ON SAFETY STANDARDS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Transport: it arises out of a very serious issue between his department and Canada's largest seafaring union, the SIU, centering around the question of safe-manning regulations at sea.

The union has charged that there is an inadequacy of regulations and rules and that this is a result of the government having left to the companies the identification maintenance of such safety standards. Is the minister in receipt of this petition, and has he responded to it? Could he indicate whether or not the government, his officials and the appropriate branch of the department are satisfied or otherwise with respect to safe-manning regulations on ships at sea?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the particular issue has been brought to my attention, and in a preliminary way I was given the information that this was an approach consistent with our approach in other areas with respect to inspection and licensing. We quite often depend upon the participant operators to assure that standards are met from time to time and then determine by assessment, occasionally, that they are, indeed, carrying out their responsibilities. I am having the matter looked into further. That is as far as I can go at this time. But the preliminary assurance was that this system was working well.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I want to interpret or put words in the minister's mouth, but are we to take from what the minister has just said that he is personally satisfied that there is, in fact, a system of regulations with respect to safe manning in effect at sea which negates any serious question of danger to ships, crews, life and property? Is that what I understood him to say? If it is, when can we, on the basis of that, expect him to reply in some detail to the petition which has been forwarded to him by members of the SIU?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the answer was that in a preliminary way I was satisfied. I would want to be more fully satisfied before making a formal reply.

* * *

TRANSPORT

FUNDING OF URBAN TRANSPORTATION SYSTEMS

Mr. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The hon. gentleman will recall that in Toronto in 1974, at the Toronto Dominion Centre, the Prime Minister announced a major promise with respect to funding urban transportation systems in the order of 25 per cent of capital funding. The hon. gentleman will also recall that in 1975 a further commitment and a reiteration of the commitment was made by the then minister of transport, Mr. Marchand, and in 1975 the Canadian Federation of Municipalities indicated that they wanted that commitment carried out. Finally, in 1977—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, all the municipalities of this country are waiting for the answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1432)

Mr. Crombie: Were these hollow promises, or does the government intend to live up to its commitment to support the urban transportation systems of this country?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the long premise of the question contained reference to a number of statements which I might have some doubt about and which I might want to check.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: The hon. member has already fallen into two traps of his colleagues, new as he is: one is not to give notice when he is going to refer to statements that go back three or four years; the other is to put a preamble to a question which ordinarily should not be tolerated in the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lang: In addition, it would be well known—and should be well known even to the hon. member—that a very firm answer has been given to this question, that we had to re-examine our contribution to urban transportation programs in the light of a fiscal restraint situation on the federal government. When we had to cut programs—and we had to cut many good programs across this country in the last three years—within federal responsibility, obviously the first place in which we had to exercise restraint was those areas where we were simply spending the money but where the responsibility was clearly that of the province and the municipality. That is what we did. We did not eliminate, but we limited the amount which we would spend. We created the urban transportation assistance program. I am sure the hon. member has known that for a year or so.

Mr. Crombie: I am sure the minister is aware that all of the municipalities in this country, particularly the largest municipalities, have major deficits with regard to an urban transportation system. When they do their budgeting, the question they have to consider is whether the government's commitment will be there for capital funding. Will the minister tell the municipalities of this country, and this House, whether there was a commitment to capital funding from the federal government? That is the simple question.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the simple answer, which has been given for at least a year now, is that the exact amount of our funding available for urban transportation purposes of a broad nature with a good deal of flexibility is—

An hon. Member: Zilch.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: —the urban transportation assistance program. A total of $10 per capita is available on the basis of provincial populations so that there will be equity across this country for all provinces. That fund is available. Beyond that, it is recognized, I think by everyone, that this is a provincial and municipal responsibility. If the hon. member is suggesting that the municipalities have a deficit to face, I trust he also knows that the federal government has a significant deficit to face in its manner of attempting to inspire further growth in the economy. On the other hand, many of the other provinces are not faced with such deficits.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

AIRPORTS

FOURTH RUNWAY AT TORONTO INTERNATIONAL

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in 1968 the government announced a decision to build a second airport in the Toronto area rather than expand Toronto international to provide additional air facilities. That decision was confirmed a number of times in this House. I now view with alarm reports of a study and proposed recommendation of a fourth runway at Toronto international airport.

Will the Minister of Transport clarify this apparent contradiction and assure the residents of Brampton, Etobicoke and Mississauga that a fourth runway is not in the immediate future?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to assure the hon. member that, there has been no change in our position against the fourth runway and the expansion of that facility at the Toronto international airport.

We had, of course, assessed a long time ago the costs to people in the area of much further expansion of the international airport. We had been willing to go to the cost of a second major airport in the area in order to avoid that cost. That, of course, has been frustrated by the action taken by the Ontario provincial government.

At this point in time, we are looking at every possible option in the way of trying to accommodate passengers into and out of the Toronto area, with the least inconvenience to them. It is a difficult question. As I said at the time Pickering was stopped, there is no assurance that convenient ways of solving the problem will be found. However, I do give the hon. member assurance that there is no change in our policy not to build a fourth runway. We are studying the feasibility of every option, including that one, because those who favour—

Some hon. Members: Order.

* * *

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the "umbrella" minister under his responsibilities as Minister of Transport. I would like to read one sentence from a newspaper quote and ask whether the minister subscribes to it. It relates to comments by professor Fred Anderson of the Prairie Rail Action Committee. The report, is "the chairman of the Prairie Rail Action Committee declared the process for doing a real rationalization on the basic prairie rail network is probably impossible." Does the minister subscribe to that position?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. membr had the whole of Professor Anderson's statement and views here, he would see that what Professor Anderson is really saying is that, because this government insisted on retaining a significant number of branch lines for the service of people and communities, the maximization of simple economic benefit based on transportation measurements alone is not being met. To that, we certainly do plead guilty.

We have taken into account the community benefits and the benefit to grain farmers. In that sense, we have a branch line system and rail line system that in simple, economic terms does not measure up as the best possible one available. I think, however, it is proper to take these other social matters and the farmers into account in these matters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, if Shakespeare were here, he would say "Such a foul or fair-haired boy I have never seen." Does the minister subscribe to the position of Fred Anderson that there is already too much mileage in the basic network that was recommended by Justice Emmett Hall? Is that the position of the department and the minister?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, obviously, it is not because instead of simply measuring the question in economic terms, we are also measuring the question in terms of benefit to communities and farmers. Measured in those terms, we believe the number of lines that have been retained is justified and that we are developing the right kind of grain handling system which balances properly the needs of farmers and communities with the interests of the taxpayer as a whole.

* * *

GRAIN

SALES TO PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport, who is also in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, a further question arising out of questions raised yesterday. The United States recently passed legislation to provide short-term credit for grain sales to the People's Republic of China. They have recently landed their first contract of 3.2 million tonnes because Canada could not take on anything larger than we have.

Would the minister prevail upon the government and his colleagues to reverse the restraint program of cutting back $5 million for programs of interest subsidies on export sales of grain and $900,000 on the grain oilseeds marketing incentive program? Will he also assure the House that any credit arrangement by the Canadian Wheat Board which may be needed to meet this additional competition from the United States will be made available to the Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that there is no problem in terms of sales by the Canadian Wheat Board and the kind of credit they can extend to China in order to accomplish those sales. Those sales to China—which have been very major and important these many years—have traditionally been on credit, credit guaranteed by the federal government in the usual way. We will continue to do that. I have no indication of any need for a subsidization payment in relation to that interest. Therefore, I can tell the hon. member, as he should know, that the Chinese still consider the Canadian Wheat Board the prime supplier of wheat to them. The Wheat Board expects to continue to be that supplier and on arrangements that are perfectly satisfactory to them.

● (1442)

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the fact that China has on occasion borrowed money somewhere else to pay off an advance for grain purchases, and since one of the commissioners of the Wheat Board, Mr. F.M. Hetland, has stated that 4,000 more rail cars in grain service would generate more than $700 million a year in additional foreign sales and foreign exchange for Canada, may I ask the minister whether he will now require the railroads to repair and put into place at least 5,000 more cars for grain movement so that we can enlarge our export capacity to China and other countries?

Mr. Lang: The House knows that we have held discussions with the CNR and entered into a successful arrangement with them to repair 1,000 boxcars, half at the cost of the government and half at the cost of the railway. We have sought a similar arrangement with Canadian Pacific and initially received a negative reply. I have supplied CP with some further argument and I am now awaiting an early response from them in relation to the same proposal.

* * *

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

EVALUATION OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board. He will recall that the Speech from the Throne indicated that parliament would be given an opportunity to review all evaluations of major programs undertaken by the government. The Comptroller-General is presently conducting such a review, but the President of the Treasury Board has indicated that such reviews will be confidential. It seems to me there is a conflict here, and I hope the minister can clear it up. Are these reviews presently being undertaken by the Comptroller-General confidential, or will the public be allowed access to the findings? After all, we are talking about waste and inefficiency.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the statement in the Speech from the Throne represented, I thought, a good advance. I thought the hon. member, along with others, would welcome it. This is something we have all wanted to see. Evaluations of major programs, as indicated in the throne speech, will be available to parliament.

* * *

TRANSPORT

INTERPROVINCIAL FREIGHT RATES

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport: it relates to the proposed 20 per cent increase in freight rates affecting food and food-related items moving between Ontario and Quebec. This latest increase would be in addition to the increase of an identical amount imposed one year ago. I am sure the minister is aware of the objections which have been lodged by the Ontario Food Processors' Association and I would ask him whether any decision has been made to prevent this freight rate increase.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): The minister has very limited power in relation to freight rate increases. These are filed by the railways, under the law, with the Canadian Transport Commission and there are certain narrow grounds on which they may be challenged there. I have no doubt the usual procedures will be followed in relation to this proposed increase.

Mr. Wise: Is it the minister's intention to accept, or to impose, another rate increase of such magnitude, particularly in light of the effect such a measure would have on consumer prices, especially in Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. Lang: For reasons which were fully set out by the MacPherson royal commission on transportation, the government was not given power to oversee individual rates imposed by the railways from time to time. In areas where competition was seen as being an adequate way of controlling rates—and this was seen as applying particularly in highly populated areas of Ontario and Quebec—the theory was that competition would have a restraining influence upon the imposition of rate increases.

As I indicated in my earlier answer, it is not a matter of my imposing a rate: that is a silly thing for the hon. member to say. Indeed, even my dislike of a rate can have no impact, because I do not have power in relation to that rate.

* * *

INDUSTRY

PRODUCTIVITY INCENTIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the principal reason for this country losing manufacturing jobs at the rate of 11,000 a month is that productivity here remains well below the level in the United States, thus causing our costs to be higher than theirs and making our products uncompetitive with those of our principal competitors, would the minister advise us when he intends to introduce productivity incentives to be paid in direct proportion to increases in productivity, so that we can stop this serious loss of manufacturing jobs which is going on at an annual rate of more than 100,000 jobs?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I want to thank the hon. member for his question, and assure the House that I shall be here for a long, long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I am very confident that my services as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will reflect beneficially upon the economy of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I also want to thank the hon. member for his question with regard to manufacturing jobs. Today, for the first time, Canada has developed a new aircraft for civilian use employing new technology, Canadian technology. Over 125 of them have been sold. It made its initial flight this morning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: It flew for an hour—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Hees: As I am advised that this airplane was built despite the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and as he knows perfectly well that these manufacturing jobs are being lost at the rate of well over 100,000 a year—he has not denied it—was not the minister's answer a clear indication of the reason he is being moved to another department where it is estimated he will do less harm to the economy?

Mr. Horner: I am pleased to see television in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I was not always in favour of it, but it allows the people of Canada to see the humorous way in which members over there take our economy. Canadair's "Challenger" flew: this morning it performed all the tests the pilot asked of it. It performed so well that they are taking it up again this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I think I should say it is a tremendous day for the Minister of Finance because it was he who convinced me, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, that the government would put support behind that industry which has led to the creation of something like 5,000 jobs in the city of Montreal alone. In all, it has created 100,000 more jobs in manufacturing.

● (1452)

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hees: The minister will be carried to his new job in his new airplane.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET—STEPS TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Hees: You'd better warm up that airplane, Jack, and be ready to move.

Mr. Horner: You are not moving anywhere yourself, only back to the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: If you want me to go and shut him up, I will, Martin.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that, in spite of five increases in the interest rate by the Bank of Canada in the past eight months, unemployment as measured by Statistics Canada actually fell by 28,000 persons—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connell: —and fell also, as a percentage of the work force, from 8.6 per cent in March to 8.2 per cent in October—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connell: —could the minister advise the House whether, in light of this Canadian experience with unemployment not rising in line with Bank of Canada increases, this latest increase in the bank's interest must, in his opinion, inevitably result in increased unemployment, as some allege; and can he assure the House that, in the interest of further lowering unemployment in Canada, he is giving serious consideration to the recommendations now made to the Government of Canada by labour and business representatives from the 23 task forces, and could he tell us when he intends to bring in his budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course, managing the economy is a very complex problem, but I am glad the hon. member mentioned the good results. Many factors are intervening and one cannot judge the trend of the economy by one factor alone, as the opposition members do so often. Yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition took an hour to make up his mind to ask me when the budget will be brought down. Today, he wants to take another hour, so perhaps it might be better if I told him right away. The budget will be brought down on Thursday of next week, November 16.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

FINANCE

PROPOSED REDUCTION IN TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): My question is for the Minister of Finance, who yesterday indicated he was abandoning any effort to reduce the established programs he had undertaken with his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, to reduce transfer payments to provinces by some $220 million; and having abandoned whatever percentage was to come from the established programs, he is now reducing the $220 million he was going to cut back, or will he make that up from some other source? Also, would he indicate the amount of the reduction of where he is going to make it up?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday when I said we had decided to postpone two programs and make some changes to the equalization formula. Thus, we will have managed to save through those programs the funds we had set ourselves to save when we published our conclusions last September 8.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would really like a simple, non-flexible answer from the minister. I heard what he said yesterday and I want to know, quite frankly, whether he is reducing the $220 million he was going to save, or whether he is making it up some other way. It is a very simple question. I do not want to know whether he is as flexible as the Minister of Transport, but will he give me an honest answer to that question?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to reduce the $220 million that was mentioned.

* * *

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

INCOME TAX REFUNDING—APPLICATION TO ALBERTA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the President of the Treasury Board announced that as part of the cuts in expenditures proposed by the administration there would be a repeal of the act which is known as the public utilities income tax refunding act. I want to put a question to the Prime Minister with regard to this act. Has he secured the support of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to this particular act in so far as it applies to the province of Alberta?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It would have been nice if you had said you directed it to the Prime Minister rather than to the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: He did.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Chrétien: This question was debated last week at the meeting of the ministers of finance. I intend to discuss it at the cabinet meeting tomorrow and will give an answer before the end of the week, as I said to the Alberta government I would do.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN SUDBURY, ONT.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that we who live in the Sudbury basin are suffering crushing unemployment of 11.1 per cent, according to the Department of Employment and Immigration, and in view of the fact that the government has announced that it will construct a taxation data centre—construction to start this fall—and in view of the fiscal restraint program this construction has now been put off until next year or possibly later; and in view of the fact that we have very serious unemployment in the trades in the Sudbury basin, and there is possibly a close correlation between crime and unemployment, can the President of the Treasury Board—since he has had five days to review the decision—tell the House and the people in the Sudbury basin that he is prepared to withdraw the restraint program as it affects the construction of the taxation data centre?

Mr. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): I gave the hon. member an answer to this question the other day, and the answer I gave him still prevails. My colleague, the Minister of Public Works, myself and the Minister of National Revenue, are looking at this question, but I cannot give the hon. member any such guarantee at this moment.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is, again, to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that recently the government was able to find $25 million to purchase Nordair from Air Canada—possibly owing to a lot of pressure from the provinces, etc.—can the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that he will look as assiduously as possible in his budget for financial arrangements to find $10 million to go ahead with the construction of that essential project in the Sudbury basin, and stop pussy-footing around?

Mr. Andras: The method of financing the Nordair transaction, when announced, will indicate that it is not in the same category whatsoever. The answer I gave the hon. member about our concern respecting unemployment in the Sudbury basin and in northern Ontario is also shared by a very prominent person in the House, Mr. Speaker himself, who represents Sudbury, and this problem is being given very serious consideration indeed.

ENERGY

REMOVAL OF RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has accepted the responsibility for, and given priority to, the removal of radioactive thorium from its current storage site in Surrey, British Columbia. In view of the fact that the minister and the AECB have not been successful in establishing that priority, will the minister state a priority target date for the removal of radioactive wastes from Surrey?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hon. member knows that the Atomic Energy Control Board has licensed the interim storage of the materials to which he referred, that they have found this to be a safe interim storage and, further, that the responsibility for finding another site which might be licensed under applications to AECB remains with the province of British Columbia. I believe that one or two departments in the government of that province are at present seeking another site for that material.

Mr. Wenman: I regret that the minister appears to be trying to wriggle out of the responsibility he has accepted on his own behalf of the board, but it just points out that the problems are jurisdictional in nature and the difficulty of storage, not only of radioactive waste but also of low-level active wastes and, in fact, toxic wastes which can be found across this nation. In view of that problem, will the minister sponsor an order of reference to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works so that it might study the matter and make recommendations on the disposal of low-level radioactive wastes and toxic chemical wastes, and on the jurisdictional issue?

● (1502)

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there is no question of wriggling away from any responsibility. I am quite prepared to accept my full responsibilities with respect to this particular question. Unfortunately, at the present time the act does not give me the kind of responsibility which the hon. member asks me to undertake. I think he made a useful suggestion when he talked about the standing committee. Perhaps the standing committee will look at this particular problem. I will discuss that with the House leader to see whether, under that reference or some other reference, this question might be considered by the committee.

Post Office

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR HOLIDAY ON NOVEMBER 13

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, since Remembrance Day this year falls on a Saturday and that according to what I have been told public servants are to have a holiday on Monday the 13, I would like to ask the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) whether he has considered the possibility of asking that the House do not sit on that day in order to grant the same holiday to House of Commons employees.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had informal consultations, and as a result of those consultations I have concluded that the House should sit on the Friday and the Monday, which are the working days before and after the celebration of November 11. I believe it will be possible for all members to travel to their constituencies to participate in commemorative ceremonies. On Friday the House of Commons will pay a tribute to those whose memory we commemorate on the following day.

I believe it was the conclusion of members of the House that it would be more fitting for them to continue their work as prescribed under the Standing Orders, rather than take a day in their constituencies.

* * *

POST OFFICE

REQUEST THAT EMPLOYEES BE ALLOWED TO PAY RESPECTS ON NOVEMBER 11

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Because of the wide protest from the public and the Royal Canadian Legion respecting the decision of the Post Office Department to operate on November 11 as a normal day—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Shame!

Mr. Dinsdale: —I wonder whether the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) would rescind the order, thereby allowing postal employees to pay their respects to those who gave their lives for the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank very much the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) for asking me that question on a point of order. I had many inquiries concerning this question when I attempted to seek the floor during motions under Standing Order 43.

I never gave orders to work on Saturday. Some of our workers have to work on Saturday. Being a veteran myself—and I know there are many veterans in this House and across the country—I have full respect for and know the significance of Remembrance Day. However, there are many regulations prevailing across Canada concerning official holidays, and there are different rulings according to different collective agreements. To entitle everyone to do their work and perform their duties, and at the same time to pay their respects, I have instructed the deputy minister of the Post Office Department to make arrangements to accommodate those of its work force who wish specifically to honour Canada's war dead on Remembrance Day, November 11.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

PRIVILEGE

MR. GUAY—REDUCTION IN SUBSIDY TO SHIPBUILDING

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and also on a question of privilege. I had a very important question to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade, and Commerce (Mr. Horner) concerning representatives of shipyards, in my riding, who are waiting to sign contracts. A grant was reduced from 20 per cent to 12 per cent since the end of October, and the future of our shipyards and the creation of new jobs there are contingent on the minister's announcement. These contracts must be signed within the next few days, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) 1978-79

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (A) of sums required for the service of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, was presented by Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 59, I move:

That the Supplementary Estimates (A), 1978-1979, tabled this day, be referred to the several standing committees of the House as follows:

Because there is a detailed allocation of the estimates to various committees, I should like to dispense with boring the House by reading the details. They have been circulated to opposition parties for perusal. If that is agreeable, I will not read the list, and I ask that it be printed in Hansard as if it had been read.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with our usual practice, Supplementary Estimates (A) were just tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras). The motion is accepted for introduction in this way. I presume it is the will of the House that the content of this motion not be read at this time, but that it be printed in Hansard as if it had been read. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The remainder of the motion is as follows:]

To the Standing Committee on Agriculture:
Agriculture votes 1a, 20a and 50a
To the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts:
Secretary of State votes 15a, 20a, 30a, 45a, 65a, 100a and 105a
To the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence:
External Affairs votes 1a, 10a, L15a, 25a, 30a and 31a
To the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs:
Finance votes 1a, 6a and 16a
Industry, Trade and Commerce votes 1a, L32a, L33a, 45a, 47a and 50a
Privy Council vote 20a
To the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry:
Environment votes 1a, 15a, 20a and 30a
To the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs:
National Health and Welfare votes 50a and 60a
Urban Affairs votes 10a and L25a
To the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development
Indian Affairs and Northern Development Votes 1a, 5a, L20a, 25a, 35a, L50a, L52a and 74a
To the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs
Justice Vote 5a
Solicitor General Votes 5a, L16a, L17a and L18a
To the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration
Employment and Immigration Votes 10a and 15a
Labour Vote 15a
To the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates
Privy Council Votes 1a, 5a and 30a
Science and Technology Votes 5a, 10a, 25a, 45a and 50a
Treasury Board Votes 20a and 35a
To the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works
Public Works Votes 5a, 20a, 25a and 45a
Energy, Mines and Resources Votes 5a, 6a, 10a, L26a, 35a, 40a, 45a and 80a
To the Standing Committee on Regional Development
Regional Economist Expansion Vote 30a
To the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications
Transport Votes 10a, L63a, 85a, 101a and 102a
To the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs
Veterans Affairs Votes 1a and 10a

Motion agreed to.

SHIPPING

TABLING OF PAPER "LEGISLATION GOVERNING LINER CONFERENCES SERVING CANADA"

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table, in both official languages, a paper entitled: "Legislation Governing Liner Conferences Serving Canada". A bill on this subject is being introduced today in the other place.

* * *

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND ITALY

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) and sections 22.2 and 22.3 of the Old Age Security Act, I am pleased to table, in both official languages and also in Italian, the agreement on social security between Canada and Italy, signed in Toronto on November 17, 1977, by the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada, and the Hon. Giulio Andreotti, President of the Britannica Council of Ministers of the Italian Republic.

* * *

[English]

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION ACT, 1978

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKING—REFERRED TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved that the subject matter of Bill C-15, to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and that during its consideration of the aforementioned matter the committee be empowered to engage expert assistance.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged, bill withdrawn and subject matter referred to committee.

• (1512)

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 44 and 252.

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

DIAND—PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 44—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the fiscal year 1976-77, what contracts for professional services were let for studies, surveys and analyses into (a) present or future policies, programmes or information analysis and their efficiency and effectiveness (b) the examination of the administration or internal operation of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. How much was committed on each contract and to whom?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

1.	Name of Contractor	Description of Contract	Value of Contract
(a)	Parker, Elyse	Feasibility study of "Les Forges du St. Maurice", P.Q.	$ 4,106
	Potvin, Claude	Feasibility study of Artillery Park, Quebec city, P.Q.	4,136
	Watson, Marilyn	Feasibility study of Artillery Park, Quebec, P.Q.	4,145
	Koester, G. D.	Implement and administrate the Canadian government policy on Indian treaties and reserves in the prairie region	5,000
	McGill, V.	Study of social impact of pipeline	21,986
	Roberts, A. B.	Reorganization planning	650
	Reilly, G. P.	Analysis of Mackenzie Valley pipeline inquiry	3,000
	Statistics Canada	Feasibility study on expanding the national labour force survey to include information on the Yukon, and associate costs.	16,365
	Davidson, D. A.	Political/constitutional development in the territories	2,000
	Woods Gordon & Co.	Study of Indian economic development fund to assess its effectiveness	98,000
	Laventhol & Harwath, Management Consultants	Percentage rental study—Hospitality industries in national parks	8,500
	A.R.A. Consultants	Research into the Indian housing program	23,920
	Crabbe, W. E.	Research for financial management manual	16,484
	D.S.S.	Evaluation of the arts and crafts program	20,500
	Dockstader, J.	Review, analyse and report on arts and crafts program proposal	3,500
	Human Behavior Research Group	Assess the effect of programs on the social, political and economic environment of native people	20,000

Order Paper Questions

	Name of Contractor	Description of Contract	Value of Contract
	McDowall, A.	Financial research into the arts and crafts program	4,700
	Milne, C.	Study regarding Indian housing policy proposals	2,750
	Quasar Systems	Systems specification for management information system	29,625
	Roberts, C.	Review of the off-reserve housing program	1,600
(b)	Kubiski, W.	Studies in organizational analysis and development	25,000
	Southam Marketing Research Services	Report on the goals and objectives for interpretation and extension division, Parks Canada	3,960
	Network for Developing Organization Inc.	Analysis and planning of the objectives, national parks branch, Ottawa	360
	Stevenson & Kellog Ltd., Management Consultants	Animator for internal dialogue to review and strengthen organization, Parks Canada	7,000
	de Jong, Dick	Study regarding establishment of an evaluation division within the policy, research and evaluation branch	6,400
	Knox, R. H.	Advise on operational improvement in economic development branch	23,000
	Malouf, N.	Study re Indian education administration	10,000
	Quasar Systems	Investigation of systems in the Indian and Inuit affairs program	38,000
	Spence, A.	Special projects and studies for the assistant deputy minister, Indian and Inuit affairs program	20,000
	Woods Gordon & Co.	Report on project management	17,850

2. See 1(a) and (b) above.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 252—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Department of Justice and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Faulkner.]

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAWRENCE—MINISTERIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Before calling orders of the day I should state that I said earlier I hoped to dispose of the very interesting question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) no sooner than today. I have found it is not possible to bring together all of the considerations involved. Indeed, it is a question of privilege which touches upon six or seven very significant aspects of our procedure. I hope to be able to dispose of this matter tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58(9)—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—LACK OF COMPETITIVE AIR TRANSPORT POLICY

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House lacks confidence in the government because of its failure to bring better air service to Canadians through the implementation of a competitive air policy, and condemns the state takeover of Nordair.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the very flexible Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is in his place in the House—the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Justice and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Indeed, as I saw him give instruction to you today, sir, I thought perhaps he had aspirations in respect of your chair as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: A great guy.

Mr. Clark: The purpose of this motion is quite straightforward, Mr. Speaker. What is quite remarkable about it is, that this motion appeared last night and I suppose several minutes afterwards we suddenly received a statement from the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice, his first statement in some time about national air policy. I naturally would not suggest there was any relation at all between the minister's choice of last night to announce some element of national air policy and, the fact that our motion was set down for debate today, just as I would not suggest there was any relationship at all between the fact that the government was condemning the program of restraint, that we had proposed and then began to adopt a pale imitation of it; or, indeed, any relationship at all between the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), standing in this place not long ago, condemned the Kingston conference of myself and various premiers, and then at the first ministers' conference the other day proposed what he had condemned; or indeed any relationship at all between the likely conclusion in the budget to come down next week and, the proposal calling for deductibility of mortgage interest payments. Those are all, of course, simply remarkable coincidences.

We have in this statement of yesterday the latest in a series of quite desperate acts by this government, all leading away from the development of any kind of comprehensive national air policy upon which Canadians can count or upon which the airlines can count. I should say in passing, sir, that this is simply one more act of indifference, to use a mild word in this House; this policy statement was issued outside this House of Commons, instead of here where it should have been issued by the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice speaking on motions. I know why he did not do that. He chose to go outside the House because he did not want to face questions here in parliament on the policy matter he was revealing. Nonetheless, this is an affront to this House and something which should not be indulged in, and it should not be the continuing practice of this government.

What we have here is not the first air policy of this government that has been brought down in an election atmosphere. I can recall another, as can my colleagues from Winnipeg, all of whom now sit on this side of the House. There were two members after the last election of the other side, but they are no longer there, and that is due in some measure to the fact that there was a promise made and deliberately broken in relation to the establishment of maintenance facilities at the Air Canada hangar there. Indeed, the government promised that the facility would be used for wide bodied aircraft, sir. One wide bodied aircraft showed up in that hangar, and that was on the day it was officially opened. Since then there has been nothing back of any width greater than the credibility gap between what this government says and what it does.

There are various elements I want to address in dealing with this country's air policy today. One element is overriding, and that is that we still have no coherent, long-range national air policy. I would hope that the minister will today at least do the House of Commons the honour of trying to explain his latest pirouette in the name of policy. I would like him to tell us, and I am pleased to see that he is taking note, the detailed nature of the consultations between his ministry and Air Canada before this policy was brought down. I suspect there was none, and unless the minister wants to let that suspicion stand on the record he will have to answer it by telling us precisely the nature and the detail of consultations with Air Canada relating to a matter which touches Air Canada directly.

We would like to know from the minister today, when he speaks to answer, the nature of the recent conversations between his officials, himself and representatives of Quebecair or of Eastern Provincial Airways, which are most directly affected by one element of the minister's statement in which he talked about the movement "towards the development of a smaller number of strong regional lines than are operating now."

The question we want an answer to is, who is going to absorb whom? What mergers is the government talking about? What has been discussed with the companies proposed to be merged, or is the government simply going to buy them all out—naturally not on a permanent basis, but just for a little while in order to sell them again, which appears to be the minister's program in respect of Nordair?

This government has frequently intruded into almost every other business in the country in the name, of course, of non-intervention—the policy announced by the Prime Minister the other day. It has now become involved in the airline business. I should say to the minister, if I can get his attention, that we would be particularly interested if he would tell us his plans and the plans of the government in regard to Quebecair. We would like to know particularly if it is Quebecair that is the favoured purchaser of all or of part of Nordair and, indeed, if this policy which was created and announced last night is designed for some reason which the House has not seen to serve some interests of Quebecair, or to meet some concerns that the Government of Canada might have in relation to that particular company. I hope the minister will be forthcoming in all of those particular matters.

I want to take in order some of the questions which arise here. First I want to deal with the very novel idea of the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice, and presumably of his government since he occupies so many of its portfolios, that the best way for the Government of Canada to protect the private sector is for the government to buy an airline that members of the private sector themselves want to buy. The minister knows that Great Lakes, at least, was ready to match the Air Canada bid, and he knows there was at least one other private sector industry in the Hamilton area prepared to buy Nordair. He knows that these offers exist already and he does not have to wait or to shop around for somebody to buy what the government is buying. He knows these offers exist already.

I must say, sir, that only this government could pretend to protect the private sector by bidding against it. The minister says in his release that it is his objective to return Nordair to private ownership within a year. We in this House of Commons have heard that line before, sir.

● (1522)

In 1974 the then minister of industry, trade and commerce, who was I think also in orbit although perhaps not quite as high or as briefly as the present minister, told us that de Havilland and Canadair were being purchased by the government on an interim basis so that they could be resold to private investors. That was four years ago and there has been no action whatsoever on that undertaking. I feel very safe in predicting that as long as this government is in office there will be no action either to return Nordair to private ownership.

If it was the government's real intent to return Nordair to private ownership, it had a very simple, very direct course of action open to it. It could have ordered Air Canada to withdraw from the initial attempt to purchase control of that company and allow new, private owners to bid for its shares. After all, it was not exactly a fire sale in this case. The company has been a profitable carrier. There were at least two, and there may well have been more, private groups ready to bid for its shares.

Air Canada, acting with this government's blessing, did not act to save an airline, it acted to increase its share of the Canadian market and thereby to further restrict competition. The minister's action yesterday in putting Nordair into direct government ownership simply serves to make a bad situation worse. The government's action yesterday helps put its restraint program in the proper perspective. In the name of restraint it has been cutting out research projects and provincial programs. They have been aiming at programs where they know there will be very strong resistance, so that the velocity of the resistance will make it look like this government is in fact taking a strong stand in the name of restraint. Indeed, relating to the air industry, the government proposes to increase the taxes on Canadian passengers, but with all of this they still go out and buy an airline which they do not need and which does not need to be the subject of government spending.

I am sure that most Canadians will remember and contrast the statement by the Prime Minister on television in early August when he said he was going to reduce government intrusion into the private sector. Now, three months later, in the name of reducing intrusions into the private sector the government buys a private sector airline for which there were private sector purchasers.

An hon. Member: That is called flexibility.

Mr. Clark: My colleague says that is called flexibility. It is also called an absolute inability to keep its word to the Canadian people which sets in very clear context just how hollow and how much of a sham is the commitment by the government to restraint. Indeed, it underlines once again that this is a government which has very little respect for the partners in the Canadian economy or the Canadian community. This is a government whose instinct is to intervene and to attempt to control. We are talking about the air industry here today, but the interventionist attitude which has injured the air industry in Canada is the same attitude which has caused an atmosphere of conflict within this country, whether it is with the provinces, the private sector, voluntary groups or among ordinary Canadians.

This attitude on the part of the government corrupts the idea of government involvement through Crown corporations or other means in the private sector economy. It corrupts the idea of the Crown corporation being established as a last resort. This is another classic case of the government moving into the private sector, not because it needs to—because there were other purchasers and alternatives—but simply because the Government of Canada wants to own another airline. They have said that they will divest themselves of it, as they said four years ago they would divest themselves of Canadair and de Havilland. Their word is as good today as it was four years ago, which is to say it is not worth the paper on which the minister has stated his intentions, as his colleague did some four years ago.

We on this side of the House understand, as this government very clearly does not, that there is a very real threat in terms of both cost and unfair competition when a government unnecessarily creates state-owned ventures that are not subject to the same kind of financial restraint as private industry. We understand, too, as this government obviously does not, the inherent conflict of interest in having a state-owned company competing with privately owned corporations in a field like transportation, where the government sets the rules and regulates so much of the activity. Indeed, there are occasions, as there have been in the past, when it makes sense for the government to establish Crown agencies or Crown corporations.

I am privileged to be the leader of a political party that in its past has had the courage to recognize that because the private sector could not meet particular needs it was essential for the public sector to move in. It also requires courage and imagination to recognize that there are many times when activities are best left to the private sector. This is clearly one of those circumstances.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Clark: A member on the other side, I think a member who is interested in transportation issues, asks why. The answer to the question is quite simple. There were private sector purchasers available and therefore there was no need for the government to intervene.

An hon. Member: What about Pacific Western Airlines?

Mr. Clark: Another member has asked about Pacific Western Airlines. It is my understanding that the government involved with Pacific Western Airlines does intend to divest itself of that corporation. More to the point, there was a substantial difference between the acquisition of PWA and the acquisition that is proposed here of Nordair, and that is a matter to which I hope members on the government side will pay some attention.

I want to make our position very clear. On September 15 in Winnipeg I said that this party opposed the acquisition by Air Canada of Nordair. We oppose this acquisition at arm's length of Nordair by the Government of Canada, and as a government we are certainly going to do all that we can to reverse any takeover that is approved by this government. That remains our position today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I would like to say a word about Air Canada in the context of the policies which this party supports with regard to the direct role of the state in the Canadian economy. There was justification, without question, for the initial creation of Air Canada, and there remains justification today especially in regard to the international air services and for maintaining a strong national flag carrier for Canada. This, however, is not a justification for stifling competition within the Canadian air industry to the serious detriment of private carriers and the people of Canada, who are the ones in the final analysis who will pay the real cost of expensive or inadequate service.

Air Canada is a mature and successful airline. It is one of Canada's major corporations with assets in excess of $1 billion. Just recently it reported nine-month profits of some $50 million. The company has excellent staff and high quality management, and it can stand on its own without the comfort blanket of excessive government protection. It does not need the Government of Canada to prop it up. What it does need, what regional carriers in this country need, and what third level carriers in this country need, is a government which establishes a clear and coherent policy framework in which all of the airlines of this country, all of the carriers of this country, all of the people who want to use air service in this country, can plan with some sense of clarity and certainty.

Because we respect Air Canada's ability to stand on its own feet in a competitive environment, it will be the policy of the Progressive Conservative government after the next election to expand and diversify the air services available to Canadians.

[Translation]

That is something truly essential and important to the whole country. For instance, Quebeckers are right in complaining about the quality of air services. In the Lac-Saint-Jean area, for example, air service was not maintained on a continuing basis and schedules are no longer convenient since Air Canada cancelled its regular service two years ago now. Trois-Rivières is not being serviced by any airline company although the demand is there. If we had a well coordinated national air transport policy those centres among others would be served by third-level carriers or existing regional carriers. However, you cannot plan services for Bagotville or Trois-Rivières without considering the rest. You have to plan on the basis of national transportation systems.

● (1532)

[English]

The minister made the grandiose gesture last night of saying he has no objection to allowing the Canadian Transport Commission to consider extending Canadian Pacific Air routes east of Montreal. This sounds very strange coming from a minister who has delayed that very request by Canadian Pacific Air for at least two years, a minister who still refuses to face his responsibility—and it is his, not that of the Canadian Transport Commission—to lay ground rules for airline competition in this country. There are no ground rules now; there are none that touch regional air carriers and that gives those carriers a sense of confidence in planning to serve the communities and the people they want to serve.

The House may remember that in October, 1966, the then minister of transport, the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, outlined the role that regional airlines would be permitted to play in Canada. Regionals would provide regular service to the north as well as operate local and regional routes that would complement the main trunk carriers. That 1966 policy envisaged, where appropriate, the transfer of routes operated by the mainline companies to regional airlines.

To date, the intent of that policy has been ignored. The mainline carriers have entrenched themselves into the role of regional carriers. Air Canada has been unwilling to give up its routes in southwestern and northern Ontario, where regionals should be operating under the government's 1966 policy. Regional carriers identified a need for trans-border flights to the United States as well as charters to warm weather locales in the southern United States and the Caribbean. Both of these services allowed regionals to use their aircraft during off peak periods.

However, part of this market has been turned over to United States competition as a result of a bilateral air agreement between Canada and the United States. This was a bilateral air agreement in which any of the gains that came to Canada came to the large carriers, the mainline companies, but the regionals fared very poorly, losing their share of a lucrative market without any compensating return.

[Translation]

I would now like to deal with the burden imposed by the great many regulations in the air industry. The Carter government made substantial progress when it came to abolishing unnecessary regulations in the air industry in the United States. That proved beneficial to all parties involved. For the first half of this year, the number of passengers traveling on U.S. airlines increased 16 per cent and Americans who could never afford to fly can now use that means of transportation if they want to.

Contrary to what the Government of Canada has been saying, stiffer competition strengthened rather than weakened the economic position of airlines in the U.S. Finally, as a result of stronger competition, profits will reach record levels this year despite reduced fares.

Mr. Speaker, let us compare that policy to help the industry and consumers with the old outdated protectionist approach of this government. This government stifled competition at the national level and prevented regional carriers from developing both within this country and in the area of chartered flights.

In spite of the promise made in this House by the Minister of Transport five years ago, he has yet to set out a policy for third-level carriers. As in anything else, the policy of the federal government is devoid of imagination, orientation, and fails to take Canada's potential into account.

[English]

We intend to change that. A Progressive Conservative government will empower the Canadian Transport Commission to ensure safe and reliable air service for Canadians; it will not empower the CTC to stifle competition.

We will encourage more competition on major national routes, starting with CP Air's request to serve eastern Canada.

We will significantly increase the routes open to regional and third-level carriers. It makes sense to have major trunk routes served by national carriers; it makes no sense to allow them to dominate regional and local services. Our general approach will be that regional routes of up to 300 miles and turn-around routes of up to 500 miles will be reserved for regional and third-level carriers.

As a further step toward increased competition—so that Canadian consumers can enjoy the widest and most economic choice of air travel plans—we will loosen the totally unrealistic restrictions this government has placed on charter and other special package fares.

There is a basic element of Canadian air policy virtually neglected by this government and which we, as the government, will correct. I refer to the need for the closest possible integration between Canadian air services and Canadian aerospace manufacturing. This government has no policy to ensure that the market from an expanding Canadian air travel industry is available to Canadian aircraft manufacturers. We will have such a policy. We in this party, when it is our responsibility to form the government after the next election, will insist on such a policy on a priority basis.

One aspect of it will be to encourage the maximum use of STOL aircraft like the Dash-7 to service local routes. Expanded competition on such routes will expand that market. We will further support it—as recommended by the Air Industries Association—by assisting the development of short take-off-and-landing facilities at regional airports instead of wasting the taxpayers' money on more white elephants like Mirabel.

Those will be the major elements of our domestic air policy. It is a policy based upon competition, based upon the evidence that the role of the Government of Canada principally should be to set the rules and not to intrude automatically by reflex simply because government wants to control everything in the private sector.

It is quite clear that we have a long and admirable history of innovation and risk-taking by many people involved in the airline industry in this country. Recently I was in Gander, Newfoundland, with one of my colleagues. I had an opportunity denied most Canadians, because this government has sealed it off, to see the air museum at Gander airport. In passing, sir, it might be of interest to the House to know that the museum can be seen by foreign visitors to Canada, but unless one has a special pass or happens to be leader of the opposition, it is not seen by ordinary Canadians for some reason known only to this minister. The Government of Canada has sealed this museum of Canada's past from the eyes of Canadians present.

It was an interesting experience to go through some of the displays at Gander. By virtue of its location as the easternmost extension of this continent, Newfoundland was deeply involved in the earlier flights across the Atlantic. Much of the aviation history of this continent touched on that province and its coast. Looking at the displays I became aware again of the high qualities of innovation that existed through time in the Canadian airline industry and with the people associated with it. One becomes aware of the imagination, the willingness to face risks and to rise to the risks that exist in that industry on the part of the people associated with it.

Those of us who come from different regions of the country, certainly those of us who have a respect for the private sector of this country, know that Canadians involved in regional airlines, Canadians involved in private airlines and, indeed, many Canadians involved in the management of Air Canada, are themselves still seized with that sense of innovation, that ability to imagine, that ability to build. The problem is that they have been literally flying blind as an industry because there has not been any context of national air policy established by this government. That lack of policy has cost Canadians in terms of the fares they pay, in terms of the service they receive, and in terms of the possibilities that could exist in this country for Canadian airlines to take advantage of Canadian manufacturing.

• (1542)

That is a failure that lies squarely at the doorstep of this government. It is one of the policies we, as a new government, intend to change. It is a failure that this motion and this debate in the House of Commons today is designed to help draw to the attention of the Government of Canada and to the people of Canada so that they will know that they need not put up much longer with the incompetence and the continuing refusal to establish a context for national air policy which has been characteristic of this government and of this minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) accept a question?

Mr. Clark: Certainly I will accept a question.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition indicated in his speech that he saw some difficulty about and was opposed to the notion of Air Canada remaining in some points of northern Ontario. Is it the policy of the Leader of the Opposition to remove Air Canada service from North Bay, Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie, Timmins and Thunder Bay? Because those are the only points where Air Canada is in contact with northern Ontario.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I must say that that question is in the character of the attempts to sow fear and indeed sow confusion and almost hatred among Canadians which has become so marked among members of the other side—

[Translation]

—in both official languages, and perhaps particularly members from New Brunswick who speak from time to time in this House. But—

[English]

If I might reply directly to the question put by the hon. member, we are interested in providing the citizens of northern Ontario with a much wider mix of air services that will be available to them together with strong regional air carriers and strong local air carriers that will serve not only the large centres of northern Ontario, but also the smaller centres of northern Ontario. And that is clearly possible if, but only if, there is a change in the approach by government to the climate in which regional and third level carriers have to operate in this country. That is the change this party believes is essential now and to which we will give high priority when we are elected as the government.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am indebted to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) for asking that question of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). It is noted all around that the Leader of the Opposition did not answer the question. He did say during his remarks that he was in favour of Air Canada getting out of certain routes in northern Ontario and southwestern Ontario. It is now apparent from his refusal to answer the specific question that he is in favour of their getting out in general, but he will not be in favour of their getting out in any specific case. Community interest in maintaining service by Air Canada has very often restrained Air Canada from moving in the direction of giving over those services to the regionals, and many of these communities feel very strongly about retaining that particular link and service.

I noted that the Leader of the Opposition began in a manner that is fairly characteristic of him—and I would have to call it a in small-minded way—by discussing first of all the timing of our announcement. I would think cabinet procedures are well known to him. He might have calculated that the decision which was announced yesterday was indeed taken on Thursday in cabinet and that the announcement was made before I had any knowledge that this subject was chosen by him and his party for debate at this time.

The Leader of the Opposition will go on making points like that. Quite often he manages to persuade at least the press, and perhaps thereby some of the public, that certain things may be true when they have no basis in fact at all. I noticed the CBC decided yesterday to pick up that in some fashion our policy was really a complete steal from the policy of the Leader of the Opposition. I find it passing strange that he can both adopt that position on the one hand and criticize our policy vehemently on the other. He goes both ways. He tried the same thing by making reference today to the Kingston meeting he had with certain premiers and likened the events to a first ministers' conference.

In fact many of the substantial matters which in specific terms were contained in our proposals at the first ministers' conference referred back to proposals we had made in 1969, 1970 and 1971. The specific proposals on individual powers which might be transferred to the provinces were indeed new, and I think less than half of those had any relationship to things which the Leader of the Opposition has said. But the important thing, and the fundamental difference between the policy this government will continue to fight for and put in place and that of the Leader of the Opposition, is that the Leader of the Opposition believes in giving away important powers to the provinces which would prevent the federal government from operating in a Canadian economic context at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: In that he joins the premier of Alberta who believes that the Canadian government need not have the major economic and important power to assure freedom of trade and freedom of movement of people, and indeed even principles of equalization of opportunity which are so closely tied to financial equalization in this country.

An hon. Member: That is not correct.

Mr. Lang: The premier of Alberta has taken that position. He is an outstanding separatist in taking that position and I am delighted to see that in recent days the papers in Calgary and Edmonton have taken him on specifically on that issue. I would hope now the Leader of the Opposition would see the sense of avoiding that particular policy and form of action.

The Leader of the Opposition also made some serious critical comments about the existence, still in Canadian ownership, of Canadair and de Havilland. Then he had the strange ability, later on in his remarks, to argue that we should have far more manufacturing ability in the air industry in this country than we do have. In fact, the stories of Canadair and de Havilland are the beginnings of great success stories. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) featured that in answers today as the Challenger begins to go into its tests.

Hon. members opposite amaze me with their lack of understanding of the development of an aircraft. They were so critical and amazed that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce found it important that on its first test everthing had gone well. The aircraft had gone through an hour of tests and the opposition found that amusing. If they knew anything about the interesting challenges facing new aircraft and the importance of what this aircraft is starting to prove to the people who envisioned it and said could happen, they would not laugh in that way.

In fact, Canadair and de Havilland were a rather special case in that federal involvement in financing was essential even to maintain them before they were taken over and retired by the government. The question facing the government at that time was how much further we would go to help without taking on the equity ownership and control so that the eventual benefits which we thought would come could also be proved to the people of Canada. It is still our intention to do this when they have proved and established themselves and do not need that kind of federal help any more.

● (1552)

This kind of industry in the private sector would once again give full value to the Canadian people for what they have financed and developed. As a result of these enterprises and our various programs of government purchases and, indeed, as a result of insisting with regard to Air Canada that there be Canadian content and offset in Canadian purchases which are made, we have developed a much stronger and healthier industry in the whole area of aviation than ever existed before, at least for many years. Back in the days when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was Prime Minister, a strong industry existed until he dealt it a near death blow at that time. It has now at last begun to recover.

The Leader of the Opposition spoke about the role of Air Canada and Canadian Pacific in this country. There is existing the oft-stated policy in relation to them as the mainline carriers in the country. These are statements which have stood the test of time and do not have to be modified and changed from day to day.

Air Canada has gradually had removed from it the special privileges and position in which it found itself under the original policy through which it came into being. It was the policy of this government which removed the monopoly position of Air Canada in relation to post office carriage. It removed the position of Air Canada before the Canadian Transport Commission and, through legislation adopted last year, made it an airline like other airlines in terms of most of these rules. Indeed, it was this government which saw the sense of gradually allowing Canadian Pacific more freedom and room to compete. Accordingly, last year the government gave CP the opportunity for taking a larger share of the growing market. It has for several years been considering the question of the new arrangement and the removal of restrictions, perhaps altogether or in a different way.

I have to say to the hon. member that in thinking that a completely competitive airline industry would be possible, that he would somehow benefit from having everything wide open, he is making a fundamental mistake about the nature of the problems which face the provision of regularly scheduled service efficiently, safely and at as reasonable a rate as possible. He simply fails to see the dangers that throwing the situation wide open would create. He looks south and says it is possible there. The Carter government is looking in this direction more and more. I advise the hon. member to wait and see what that experience may bring.

While we are affected by, and in some cases have to alter our own policies to reflect or react to, some of the policies adopted in the United States because of the continental nature of some of the markets, we have grave concern about what it may mean to the real provision of good, efficient and safe service in this country and cannot pretend that unregulated competition is possible.

[Mr. Lang.]

The Leader of the Opposition asks us to move in that direction with regard to air policy. In the area of trucking it is easier to move because of the greater volume of traffic involved. The Carter administration has moved in that regime as well. The responsibility in Canada is that of the provinces. Do we find the Conservative governments with whom he likes to try to have an affinity moving to deregulate? He does not see that in Ontario. He does not see it except in one specific place in this country where it existed before that Conservative government came into power, and that is in Alberta.

In the case of air policy, it is necessary to combine competition and a significant degree of co-operation. The hon. member referred to the statements in 1966 of Mr. Pickersgill. In his statement setting out the basic role and place of the regional airlines, Mr. Pickersgill said there would not ordinarily be expected to be competition between the regionals and the mainline carriers, because indeed there would be serious problems with the regionals in trying to stand up to straight and direct competition.

What is needed, and what we have provided, is some assurance of co-operation as well as certain limited forms of competition where it is possible for both carriers to serve the same route. Even there we must remember the concern and warning of Mr. Pickersgill, that the Canadian Transport Commission must see to it that competition between the regionals and the mainline carriers is fair and reasonable in cases where they are on the same routes, because of the different position they are in.

We have therefore progressively moved to remove the advantages of Air Canada, to remove the restrictions from Canadian Pacific and to enlarge the scope of regional carriers. We helped quite directly in ensuring discussions last year between Air Canada and Eastern Provincial Airways, allowing for the exchange of certain routes between them as the policy of 1966 had intended. That was to the benefit of both airlines.

Air Canada is now making a profit. That is something that should be welcomed on all sides. Indeed, as long as Air Canada is competing in any way with airlines in the private sector, it is important that it be asked to achieve the same kind of profit level, which would be required in the private sector in terms of providing cash flow and return on investment so as to allow for the acquiring of new equipment and the ongoing operations of an airline.

I say to the Leader of the Opposition that it may be well if he restrained some of his colleagues at a particular point in time when they ask that we oppose a certain rate increase which Air Canada may be putting in place. Then they will be citing profits as a reason for not going ahead with that increase. I ask him to commit himself to the principle that until the profits arrive at a level that is adequate, so that if it were a private carrier it could attract further investment in order to re-equip and expand, he not support that kind of request from his colleagues. If he does that, we will arrive at a very important place indeed.

With relation to freeing restrictions on Canadian Pacific with regard to cross-country traffic, I have had one serious concern. That was to ensure that, as a result of competition, we did not move into a situation where extra capacity was put in place and, an attempt made to meet particular competition without concern for the convenience of the travelling public.

We do not want large numbers of empty seats being flown across this country. Those must invariably be flown at a cost to Canadians, either through the fares which are charged or a payment to the airlines in any way by the government. It is therefore our policy to move progressively toward an atmosphere of competition, in which other techniques are in place to ensure that over-capacity does not occur at the expense of the travelling Canadian public.

It has been one of my strongest drives to have airlines, regionals as well as mainlines, look at their capacity and not offer so much that in the end their profit position was worse and they needed help in some other way in order to provide service to the Canadian public.

In the case of the mainline carriers, we will be seeing a removal of the remaining restrictions that exist in terms of competition between them, but with the substitution of certain other restrictions, likely in the hands of the Canadian Transport Commission, to ensure that that competition does not do disservice to the travelling public in terms of higher costs and higher fares.

We have seen competition increase through the loosening of charter rules. Even before today, the Canadian Transport Commission had before it certain other proposals as to whether more should be done in that direction. Again, however, we do not believe that a wide open, unbridled situation with regard to charters is possible. That would mean a taking of the routes by charter service where that taking is profitable, and a failure to offer service in many other areas where service is required.

It is significant that the carriers have been speaking very kindly of me and of the changes in policy which have been coming about in relation to the opening up of our charter regulations to the extent we have. However, it is significant that when the charter proposers were before the Canadian Transport Commission a year ago, they proposed charter service on the routes that are easiest to handle, the Vancouver-Montreal, Vancouver-Toronto kinds of routes. They did not show any great interest in relation to Grande Prairie to Saskatoon and other places of like size throughout this country. It is important that we continue to have scheduled services, and that we protect sufficiently the mainline carriers and the regional and third level carriers so that service can be provided adequately.

● (1602)

In the case of the extension of CP and the possibility of their service into Halifax, I believe I heard the Leader of the Opposition say quite flatly that he would see to it that they extended service into that region. We rather more cautiously said we would remove a restriction to that happening but would not interfere with a function which I believe is very important, that of the Canadian Transport Commission to consider whether at a particular point in time this would be in the public interest. Before the Canadian Transport Commission one may hear from other carriers and the implications to them of having a third carrier on the routes. That question would be decided from the point of view of public interest before the commission where we could all be aware of the arguments and analyses and see the right decision arrived at.

In 1966 Mr. Pickersgill, and later other ministers, were able to contemplate a country in which five regional carriers would serve. With a growing boom in air travel it seemed for a while that this might be a sound and solid policy. It has appeared through the last several years, however, that there are significant challenges and difficulties for the regional carriers. Existing as five regional carriers attempting to supply very often jet service to the routes which are appropriate to their operations, and to which the Leader of the Opposition referred as though it was new, although it is the exact standard route analysis which was part of the policy these last many years, it has been difficult for the regionals with reasonable fares to obtain the necessary return on capital, thus to assure they could restructure and acquire new equipment as necessary.

A couple of years ago the same difficult circumstances faced Transair. We know, also, that Pacific Western Airlines, after a good deal of discussion with me, moved to acquire shares in Transair, looking toward the more effective operation of regional service in western Canada.

I may say, also, that some were surprised that at the same time I was moving in the House a bill whose effect was to change the Aeronautics Act to give us the chance to prevent provincial governments from acquiring airlines and air services, and at that point we did not object. We did not object because the structure of the new airline and the joint operation seemed to be a very useful one in terms of future service. As well we did not object because, in discussions I held with the premier and deputy premier of Alberta, they indicated to me that the long-term holding of controlling interests in that airline was not a necessary part of their philosophy and that they could progressively divest themselves of a lot, if not the greater part, of their interest in the airline. So Transair had its difficulties.

In various ways other regional carriers have been facing the problem of getting adequate returns which would assure that they could reinvest. A couple of years ago major shareholders in Nordair began to seek buyers. It was not easy for them to find a buyer at that time who would offer a satisfactory price even when measured in terms of the value of equipment that the airline owned. At that time it was partly my concern whether or not the airline would continue to operate at all and I did encourage Air Canada to take a direct interest in the possibility of acquiring those shares and assuring the future of Nordair.

It was that acquisition which was confirmed by the announcement yesterday and by the decision arrived at by cabinet last Thursday. At the same time the government was concerned about the public worry that the combination of ownership of Air Canada and Nordair would lead to a removal of competition in certain places where it has been possible between the two, and that it would possibly result in an even larger single airline with certain disadvantages such as at times of labour unrest and strikes. Therefore, we made clear yesterday our determination that Nordair would be operated separately, as the Canadian Transport Commission had recommended in its decision.

We do not, however, wish to remain the owners of that airline for long. In view of the number of policy questions which arise in trying to produce a restructuring of airlines in eastern Canada, it did seem appropriate that we play a more direct role in the ownership question itself. The fact of the matter is that in the days when the sale of these shares were first being discussed I began to work on the process of bringing the airlines in question together in an attempt to work toward a combination of actions—a merger or joint action—which could, in accordance with figures which have been analysed, produce a far better return on investment than is possible as long as they are operating separately. That had not succeeded and I had no way of knowing whether it would easily succeed if the purchase were thrown out and the question of ownership of the shares was up in the air and in doubt once more.

It is important to note, I think, that between the time that Air Canada first offered to purchase these shares in Nordair and the time of our final approval of that purchase by our decision last Thursday, the assets of the company had increased in value fairly significantly. It is true that this arose directly as a result of changes in the value of currency but nonetheless that was a significant factor in our decision to move forward with this acquisition and to having the airline in our hands to continue the process which was already far advanced of seeking out investors who might be able to operate these airlines in a joint fashion.

Yesterday I indicated my interest in seeing whether Great Lakes has an interest in this operation and certainly we will again be speaking to other regionals. There are Canadians who are interested in the economic, financial prospects of the airline in its merged form who would not have been interested in the operation of particular parts of it alone.

We will see regionals operating as efficiently as possible and therefore capable of providing as low fares as possible to the people in the eastern part of Canada which they serve. That is fundamental. The efficiency we seek is not efficiency for its own sake, but surely through that efficiency, through a better return on investment, it is possible for the fares to be lowered without the taxpayer having to intervene to pay for the acquisition of further equipment and the continuation of the line. That is the kind of intervention I would like most to avoid. That is what I see continuing to happen.

The Leader of the Opposition speaks of competition as his guideline in this area. And yet at every step of the way it is sensible to balance a reasonable amount of competition with a good deal of co-operation. It is essential that airline schedules mesh and that the regionals come together with mainline schedules so that passenger convenience is best served. It is important to have co-operative analysis of fare structure so that both can live side by side and the sharing of the revenue when there is a link is fair and just. These will continue to be our guidelines in air policy. We will try to find as much avenue for competition as is possible.

● (1612)

We will try to provide service which is as good as possible and fares which are as low as possible. Through charter changes and the introduction of charter services, Air Canada and Canadian Pacific are now offering charter rates, throughout the season, on their regular services. That means they are offering them to Grande Prairie, Saskatoon and Timmins as well as simply to Vancouver and Toronto, which would have been the way if only charter lines had been offering this service. That is what we will continue to see. In other words, we will see strong management operating our airlines, competition where that is possible, co-operation where that is necessary, and a close watch through the Canadian Transport Commission on such activities which, if allowed under the name of competition, would lead to higher cost operation directly at the expense either of the taxpayer or of the travelling public.

Not only do we have in this country a good and solid policy with regard to airlines—one that has stood the test and needs modifications of a gentle, steady nature, not violent or abrupt ones—but we also have in this country service at prices which compare favourably to those anywhere else in the world, for travel both at home and abroad; and we have a quality of service on our main airlines which is second to none in the world and of which we can all be proud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, we have heard two very interesting speeches indeed, at least interesting to my party. According to the official opposition, their position on the takeover is that it should be private enterprise today, and according to the government, as befits the time and the spirit of August 1, it should be private enterprise tomorrow. There is no difference in principle; the question is entirely one of time. The Tories would do fast now what the Liberals will put off, presumably at a cost to the public, to one year from now.

Normally I address my comments in such a debate first to the government because it is ultimately responsible for policy, but we have known for many months now that the government has abandoned any pretence at determining any policy itself; it takes it directly from the research staff of the Tory party or from the speeches of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). So I want to begin with the case of the Leader of the Opposition. I must say that in listening to him I thought of the first prime minister of our country—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I am not sure they will applaud when I conclude my observation, Mr. Speaker. I thought of the first prime minister of Canada because in the nineteenth century, to a Canadian Tory no idea was good unless it came from Great Britain. Now, to the twentieth century Tory no idea is good unless it comes from the United States. That is the gist of the Tory policy today. I suggest that Alberta is having more influence than normally on the Tory party. What functions for that country of more than 200 million souls to the south of us, with a set of very different historical circumstances, now dictates Tory policy, whether it is transportation or anything else.

However, I also thought of other Tory ideas when I heard the Leader of the Opposition. To have heard him speak you would never have thought that the Conservative party of Canada brought in Hydro as a public enterprise in Ontario, and you would never have thought that Bennett was the father of the central bank, the CBC and the Wheat Board. There was a time, I say in all seriousness, when the Conservative party of Canada did indeed recognize that, for a variety of historical reasons, the public sector was to be used not only as an inferior variant of the private sector but that it had a legitimate, important and independent role to play in the development of our country. Those days are gone, Mr. Speaker, because now for the Tories it is private enterprise all the way, as if the 100 years of history—including a good part of the history of the Conservative party—did not exist.

I listened with care to most of the speech of the Leader of the Opposition and I noted that there was no reference at all in it to the judgment which was handed down by the Canadian Transport Commission and to the argumentation which had been put forward by the very body which the motion put forward by the official opposition is calling into question. I find that, to say the least, passing strange. If you are going to deal with such an important and complex matter as transportation, it seems to me you should deal with the arguments that have been put forward in favour of the decision which you are opposing. However, I will return to that point in a minute. The reality is that the Conservative party is attacking the Air Canada takeover because it rejects holus-bolus any serious argument for the public sector in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We should not be put off—I say that frankly to the Leader of the Opposition—by his passing comment that he seemed pleased to see Air Canada was making a profit, and he implied that the current Conservative policy presented no threat to Air Canada.

I want to quote the financial spokesman for the Conservative party, or at least one of their spokesmen because they vary from day to day. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is normally thought to be the Conservative party's financial spokesman. This is what he said about Air Canada, and I think the people of this country, especially in regions which depend on Air Canada, should keep these words in mind. I quote from page 6020 of Hansard of May 27, 1977. It reads:

> —when successive news reports indicated the minister was investigating means of turning over Air Canada to private hands, we thought this would be the logical place to begin a constructive diminution of government control.

If that does not mean phasing out Air Canada, I do not know what it means. But just in case it was not clear, the financial spokesman for the Conservative party of Canada stated, as reported in Hansard two pages further on:

> I suggest it is time to stop counting and to start subtracting.

He is talking about public enterprises. He went on to say:

> It is time to begin divesting ourselves of some of these Crown corporations, rather than creating new ones.

He referred specifically to Air Canada.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Broadbent: So let us have no illusions about the Conservative party's position with regard to Air Canada because their financial spokesman, at least when he is speaking for the party, says they would like to get rid of it. The leader of the party, as is frequently the case, did not make his case clear at all. He made a passing reference to the possibility that the Tories would accept Air Canada. Let me emphasize that he did not say that, he made a passing reference to it, so the only explicit comment we have is from their financial spokesman, which is that they would get rid of Air Canada. That is where they stand.

I want to return to our arguments, which will be positive and in favour of Air Canada's action, but I cannot forgo this opportunity to make two central points. The Conservative party of Canada is now rejecting its own historical commitment to the independent need for public enterprise in certain sectors and is now trying to come down on both sides of the fence in this debate, pretending, on one hand, that it is for Air Canada, and on the other hand, that it is not. You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): You are right, for a change.

Mr. Broadbent: The Liberals are cheering. Now I am going to turn to them. If we think the Conservative party is presenting us with some problems in understanding where they really stand, what about the government of the day?

Mr. Woolliams: I knew you would come to them.

Mr. Broadbent: As I said, until August 1 there was a pretence, if I understood the Liberals at all, that they did believe, perhaps reluctantly, in a mixed economy and that they would use public enterprise, if necessary, but not necessarily public enterprise, and they would grudgingly do certain things.

Certainly since August 1 the spirit of R. B. Bennett has drifted up from his grave and moved out not only into the shadow cabinet but right across the chamber to take over entirely the Government of Canada. It is privatization with a small "p" on the part of the Tories, but if Your Honour will excuse the expression, it is a big "P" when applied to the Government of Canada. We have no policy at all which indicates serious thought on the part of the government. It is responding to what it perceived to be an economic drift in the country which required them to move in a conservative direction. Holding to a principle, even if the principle is the government's particular version of a mixed economy, rather than abandoning any claim to a principle, accounts for the government's tumbling month after month in the Gallup poll.

● (1622)

The present position of the government on this issue demonstrates this reality better than anything else. What is the policy of the government? It has had an ongoing study for two years. It was my impression that the minister's department had finished the study, and that we would have the benefit of looking at it, but it has not been produced.

When the takeover bid by Air Canada in its attempt to buy control of Nordair was before the Canadian Transport Commission, did the Government of Canada make its view known? Did it state its views regarding competition in clear terms? Did it make a case for private versus public sector? Did it have a clear or coherent policy on regional carriers? Did it put any of these matters before the commission? No, the government was silent, because such action would have demonstrated leadership. We know the government has not had leadership for many years.

I should like to refer to the press release of the minister. It consists of one page containing two paragraphs. That is the new air transportion policy on the part of the Government of Canada. What is this policy? It boggles the mind to make any sense of it at all. The first point is that the government will allow Air Canada to purchase Nordair. A lot of people will nod their heads and say that it is a fine idea; others will say it is not. At least that is clear.

The second point of the Liberal policy is: after Air Canada buys Nordair, Air Canada must sell it immediately to the Government of Canada at a negotiated price. Presumably that will cost Canadian taxpayers more money. On the one hand, a Crown agency will buy it, but then the government will force that agency to sell it to the people of Canada via another agency, the Government of Canada, at a higher price.

The third point is: the government announces its intention to sell it back to the private sector within a year. Socialists are supposed to be the dialecticians, but we have been outdone on this one. It begins as a private enterprise; a Crown corporation is permitted to buy it; the government then purchases it from the Crown corporation; and then a year later it will be sold once again. Is that a brilliant policy? The would-be purchasers of this airline have been told a year in advance to sit around and wait. They have been told not to increase their bids, to keep their bids down, to put in the lowest possible bids because at the end of the year the government is committed to selling.

My question is not facetious or rhetorical. Is the government now saying that whatever price it receives at the end of the year from the private sector for this airline will be sufficient to sell Nordair? Surely Canadians have the right to know that. If the government does not receive a reasonable price or offer, even in terms of its sense of management, which is bad enough, the government should say that it will not be selling it regardless of the price. But the minister said, "Yes, within a year it is going to go back to the private sector". If the government believes that it should be in the hands of the private sector, the whole thing should have been left alone in the first place, instead of going through the ridiculous process announced in the minister's one-page press release.

In the brief time I have remaining, I should like to state the position of my party on this issue. We do not have any qualms about saying that certain sectors of the Canadian economy ought to be publicly owned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We do not have any qualms in saying, along with two-thirds of the nations in western Europe, Australia, New Zealand and a good part of Latin America, that the public sector can make not simply contributions which the private sector has failed in, but independently worth-while contributions which are better in many cases than those offered by the private sector.

There are certain human activities which provide good cause for the government to move forward proudly on behalf of its people, rather than timidly and shamefacedly. Frankly we believe a good part of the transportation industry is one of these.

We approach the question of this takeover with a philosophical commitment that in the transportation sector, which requires much capital investment, it makes a lot of sense to have public enterprise.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition did not think it was worth-while to read the evidence before the Canadian Transport Commission. In reaching its decision, the CTC pointed out associated problems. Because I am only allowed 20 minutes to participate in this debate, I cannot go on at length. In fact, books have been written concerning what lies behind the commission's decision on this point. In part the findings and conclusions of the commission were as follows:

> I am of the opinion that if the Canadian industry had been subject to the full forces of competition, that we would not have the air industry we have today with the sophisticated equipment and service that is provided to the Canadian public. It has only been as a result of the limitation of competition that the regionals have grown and extended their routes and acquired the pure jet equipment which now serves most areas of Canada.

If we are debating a complex matter seriously, we should pay attention to a commission which is based on expertise in looking at the experiences in other countries as well as our own before reaching a conclusion.

One conclusion in our country, as well as other countries around the world, pertaining to air transportation is that competition in such a capital intensive industry has not been an advantage to the public ultimately, but rather a disadvantage. Basically that is why my party is fully committed to Air Canada as a public enterprise. Through Air Canada, with all the difficulties which arise from time to time, we believe we can obtain the best benefit for Canadians.

In the remaining minutes I should like to deal with the competition argument. Briefly I made reference to the fact that in such a complex activity as modern transportation, particularly air transportation, the diminution of competition makes a lot of sense if we are to obtain maximum benefit.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has moved a motion which dealt with the area of competition. If he had read the ruling of the commission, he would have realized in most areas that Nordair and Air Canada are not competing at all. In fact, only two routes overlap in terms of air service. Even if competition is a central ingredient in an air transportation policy, one should remember that it is virtually absent from this particular case. On general and particular grounds, certainly the case of the official opposition falls down.

The absurd position of the government of buying today from the private sector and selling back tomorrow does not merit any more than two minutes of consideration.

● (1632)

In conclusion, I want to say we support the recommendation as originally handed down by the Air Transport Committee. I would point out to the House that in making its recommendation it underlined—and I could quote at length in support of this—that Air Canada was not given the right to destroy the subsidiary, it was not given the right to remove competition, and that the functions which are currently permitted Nordair by regulation will have to be maintained or it will have its permits taken away.

The concerns expressed by some people, I think genuinely, about regional services not being lived up to in terms of expectations, or charter services being reduced, are legitimate concerns. There is no doubt about that. But I want to suggest that they are misplaced in respect of this particular ruling, because the ruling makes it clear that Nordair itself cannot become a subsidiary of Air Canada, but that Nordair is expected to carry on with its traditional mandate.

I conclude by saying that the opposition case in this debate is bad, the government's case is worse, and I am proud to speak for my party in support of a recommendation handed down by a regulatory body established by the Government of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I have read the motion of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and feel it is timely. Though I do not accept its tenor word for word, I feel it does allow us to draw the attention of Canadians to the lack of leadership in matters of transport policy in this country.

Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to go back to the month of June 1975, when the then minister of transport and hon. member for Langelier, now a senator, revealed the principales that would guide the government in its transport policy. At that time, three main points emerged from his statement, namely accessibility, profitability and active government predominance in the establishment of the transportation system in Canada. Mr. Speaker, I shall quote one of the basic principles found in the statement of the minister:

> The transportation system should be accessible, equitable and efficient rather than economic, efficient and adequate.

That meant very simply that the government no longer relied on the mechanisms of competition to guarantee services to the people as a whole. The government intended to make of transportation a political tool of national scope rather than an instrument of passive support for private enterprise.

As usual, in the three years following this statement of intent, little was done except for the establishment of VIA Rail. I have always supported the VIA Rail project because the duplication and in many cases the multiplicity of railway passenger services was contributing to the deterioration of services and the putting of trains to another purpose. Because of the railroad policy of the government, passenger trains nearly suffered the same fate as our merchant marine. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly have the opportunity to come back to the merchant marine in the next few weeks. Today, I shall limit my comments to the issue mentioned in the motion.

Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, that air transport is vital for this country because of the great distances that separate our various regions. Many times last year I requested improvements to the utterly inadequate air services, especially in the Lower Gaspé area and the Magdalen Islands. Airports in Gaspé and the Magdalen Islands still do not have the facilities required for instrument landing. To come back to the specific case of Nordair which is mentioned in today's motion, this company serves northwest Quebec mostly and also operates chartered flights. Of course, it is a viable company. What I find reprehensible is the fact that the government simply went over the head of Quebec, which is the province most concerned by this takeover. Quebecair played an important role in the improvement of regional transport in Quebec by acquiring several small regional carriers which could provide only incomplete if not mediocre services.

As the former minister of transport stated in 1975, it has become necessary to integrate regional air services so that these services will be available to all centres in a region. The case of Nordair has been outstanding for a few years. Quebecair made an offer to buy it. Unfortunately, it did not have the required financial support; according to Quebecair, the price of shares was higher than their real value. The intentions of Air Canada certainly contributed to increasing the price of Nordair shares, and since Air Canada had the support of the federal government, it was able to take over the company.

Today we learn that Air Canada will give its shares back to the Canadian government which intends to reintegrate Nordair into the private sector later. My God, Mr. Speaker, I am really confused by the inconsistency of this government! Why all this bargaining and fiddling about to end up back on square one? We should ask ourselves the following question: In whose hands will Nordair finally land? I would like to know why there was no co-operation between the federal government and Quebec which has a thick file on Nordair. There had been contacts between Nordair management and Quebec government officials. However, they were not ready to take over Nordair. As concerns private enterprise, particularly Quebecair, it appealed the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission.

If the federal government really wants Nordair to stay in the hands of private enterprise, why did it contribute to eliminate Quebecair from the running? It is important that regional transportation in Canada be integrated on a provincial or interprovincial basis. The Maritimes are serviced by Eastern Provincial Airlines and western Canada by Pacific Western Airlines in which the government of Alberta has interests. If this integration is necessary as a result of a stronger demand and efficiency requirements, the federal government must support this reorganization instead of doing the contrary. If we decide to leave regional transportation to private enterprise, we should not authorize Air Canada to establish itself where it should not. Air Canada has mainly a transcontinental and international transportation role.

As concerns the return of Nordair to the private sector, I wonder on what basis it will be done. Are we going to sell back Nordair for peanuts at a loss of several million dollars to the taxpayers? In any case, I sincerely hope that the province of Quebec which is particularly concerned will not be forgotten when the time comes and that throughout the province of Quebec and the rest of our country we will get an air integrated and well administered transportation system.

● (1642)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott). I would like to point out that this is the hon. member's maiden speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I, through you, sir, express my sincere thanks to hon. members on all sides of this House for their warm good wishes in welcoming me back to Parliament Hill. It is a high honour to be back here in my new capacity and to be speaking on behalf of the people of Hamilton-Wentworth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Everywhere I go these days people keep asking, "How does it feel to be sitting down here after watching the scene for so long from the press gallery?" I guess it is like jumping from the frying pan into the frying pan, but I must say that the greatest major difference that has struck me has involved you, sir. There is, unquestionably, a difference in viewing the Chair from below and in front rather than from above and behind. One quickly acquires a sense of pre-eminence of your office from this vantage point, a backbench seat in the House of Commons. I assure you, sir, that I will try to demonstrate in this chamber the spirit of restrained behaviour accompanied with good humour which, as you know, has always been a hallmark of both members of parliament and members of the parliamentary press gallery.

Today's subject matter does not permit me to give the House a travelogue on the beauties of Hamilton-Wentworth riding, which I understand is a traditional feature of a member's maiden address. Besides, given the sprawling and diverse nature of my constituency, it would take the rest of the afternoon. I would, however, like to pay tribute to my young and dedicated predecessor, Sean O'Sullivan. He was a good MP for the people of Hamilton-Wentworth. He has now gone to a higher calling for which, as a Presbyterian, I am entirely ineligible.

What brings me close to home, both to my constituents and to this debate, sir, is Mount Hope airport, which lies within the newly defined boundary of Hamilton-Wentworth. Mount Hope, or Hamilton Civic Airport, has to be the most intensively studied airport in the country, and still there are questions and concerns on the part of many thousands of my constituents about this government's plans for it.

What will surely heighten concern about the future role of Mount Hope and raise many more questions is the federal government's non-solution concerning the takeover of Nordair. People in the Hamilton area have come to rely heavily on Nordair's first rate service in and out of Mount Hope airport. Since Air Canada indicated its interest in acquiring this highly successful and aggressive private company back in the early summer, there has been a very real concern that, with Nordair owned and controlled by the government airline but competing with Air Canada on southern Ontario routes, Nordair's service to Hamilton could be placed in jeopardy. Some reduction in the number of flights, and certainly in efficiency, is almost inevitable.

Yesterday's announcement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) that the government is indeed taking over Nordair, that hopefully a private buyer can be found within the year, but that Nordair might emerge in a "new form" after the government arranges things with other regional airlines, will come as cold comfort to those who have been thrown into confusion by this government's recent moves in Canada's airline industry.

I should point out that I have always viewed the government's acquisition of Nordair as potentially harmful to the interests of the area I have the honour to represent in this chamber, Mr. Speaker. Any further intrusion by this or any other government in the free marketplace goes against the better judgment of the people of Hamilton-Wentworth.

What makes the Nordair takeover difficult to understand is that this government set down its own clear policy guidelines in the late 1960s to leave Canada's regional air carriers in the hands of the private sector. The government has now contradicted its earlier position by allowing Air Canada to buy

Nordair. That decision also goes against the government's own Combines Investigations Act, against the Consumers' Association of Canada, against the governments of Ontario and Quebec, against even a Canadian Transport Commissioner who flatly called the takeover "against the public interest."

This was after the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went on nation wide television pledging less government intrusion in the private sector. Now, in the face of high and heavy flak from all sides, the government is admitting it was a bad move at the outset. I can see a government becoming involved in this kind of venture if there is a groundswell of public opinion that it should do so, or if the company has a national security problem, or if the government is a buyer of last resort. None of these factors, to my knowledge, determined the Nordair purchase by Air Canada.

I take similar exception to the takeover of Pacific Western Airlines by the government of Alberta, and particularly to PWA's takeover of Transair. In the Alberta government's case, as my leader has pointed out, there is a substantial difference; PWA was financially hard pressed and Transair even more so. Premier Lougheed is committed to reprivatizing PWA and to that extent the Minister of Transport is following in his footsteps.

In the case of Nordair, however, as my leader has already pointed out, there were other buyers in the private sector. I fail to see why the government had to put everyone through this confusion and uncertainty in the airline industry in the first place by authorizing the sale to Air Canada. For the first time in my memory I found myself agreeing with the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Maybe it was because Air Canada wanted to flex its muscles as a separate Crown corporation, independent of Canadian National Railways. Certainly Air Canada cannot be blamed for seeing a good investment and grabbing it, along with a smart Nordair charter operation and northern expertise in the cargo field which is second to none.

I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, of the traditional restraint that should guide a new member in his maiden address, so I do not want to appear too critical of the government in what I know is a highly complex area. I get the feeling though that the government is running its domestic airline policy on a wing and a prayer; they are taking over the wings, now all they need is the other half.

There are many more questions raised by the minister's announcement that really concern me as a new member interested in the direction Canada's regional and national air policy is to take. While the government is buying time in order to straighten out its policy, what happens to those Nordair flights which are in a head-to-head or wing-tip to wing-tip competition with Air Canada? What will be the actual effect of this so-called competition? Will not direct service to Toronto from western Canada, or from Montreal, necessarily mean a reduction in the number of daily flights and a lessening of efficiency into and out of regional airports like Mount Hope?

What happens to Nordair's pilots, who want their seniority list amalgamated with Air Canada's list? Because Air Canada pilots fly a higher percentage of higher paying routes, does this mean the government will be paying Nordair pilots the 15 per cent more, as requested by the Canadian Airline Pilots' Association? Will this in turn not result in greater cost to the Canadian taxpayer in the long run?

What is behind the rumour raised by the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) of a fourth runway and a third terminal building at Toronto International Airport, as reportedly recommended by Ministry of Transport planners? The minister is now calling the report "just another interdepartmental feasibility study." The result of that expansion could also have an impact on Nordair's Hamilton service.

If there is to be no expansion at Malton, and since the new Pickering airport has been indefinitely shelved, and since Toronto International will be thoroughly congested handling some 14 million passengers a year by 1980, what kind of spinoff of carriers might result in greater use of the regional airports? Because if Hamilton's civic airport—even with its $100 million expansion—may be expected to accommodate jumbo charter jets, then thousands of my constituents and I want to know about it.

● (1652)

So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that this government must come up with a sensible transportation policy. In my view it should leave the regional carriers to carry out their roles with government guidelines, not government ownership and control. And the government must decide on the kind of competition it will allow between CP Air and Air Canada on a transcontinental basis.

I am afraid that in view of the way this government has been proceeding lately with its patchwork, haphazard approach to our domestic airlines, some pretty firm policy directives will need to be forthcoming soon if the people are to have any confidence at all in the Department of Transport's air planners.

This whole exercise of the Nordair takeover—by a giant Crown-owned airline or by the Government of Canada itself—goes right to the heart of why I entered political life. More and more, I have become concerned with the extent of government involvement in the lives of Canadians. I do not believe in government takeover simply for the sake of government takeover. I believe that nothing functions like free competition. It was competition that built this country to the second highest standard of living in the world. It is the erosion of competition and government intervention in the marketplace that has contributed to reducing Canada's standard of living to seventh place. This Nordair takeover negates competition, Mr. Speaker, and I feel it is about time that the Government of Canada stopped interfering with the marketplace and with the lives of Canadians and got out of areas where it has no place.

In the area of regional air carriers which is under discussion here today, I want to assure the Minister of Transport again that I am aware of the highly complex nature of Canada's domestic airline policy. I know it takes time to integrate routes—national versus regional versus local services—always keeping in mind that the people who have to foot the bill for all this, whether they are paying fares in the air or paying taxes on the ground, are the consumers of Canada.

I also wish to serve notice on behalf of the people of Hamilton-Wentworth that there are answers we must get from this government, and I will be pressing the Minister of Transport for these answers in this House and in committee.

In closing, sir, may I pay tribute to my new and distinguished colleagues from the by-election wars of October 16. Several of the new members have launched their parliamentary careers with the tension and excitement I have experienced this afternoon. Good luck, gentlemen. And now, Mr. Speaker, we have work to do for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) on his election and on his maiden speech. I hope, however, that it will not be taken as an unfriendly or unkind remark if I say there are those on this side of the House who hope that one result of the next election will be that he will be continuing his work in this chamber but from a seat above and behind the Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, in opposing this motion I want to speak primarily of the government's decision on Nordair yesterday and about its present meaning and its implications for future government policy. I look on yesterday's decision as a victory for myself and for those who have opposed the Air Canada's takeover of Nordair, as I did from the time Air Canada's intentions first appeared in the press. The decision means success for my efforts and the efforts of groups like the Consumers' Association of Canada who did not want Air Canada to be able to direct the operation of Nordair.

The approach used by the government to bring this about is certainly novel and complex. It will allow the controlling shares of Nordair to be sold to Air Canada but, as I understand it, they will immediately be transferred to the government and the government will hold the shares with the objective of selling them to a non-government body within twelve months so that Nordair will continue as a private sector operator.

As I understand it, however, the twelve-month period, contrary to what was suggested by the leader of the New Democratic Party, is not a deadline; it is an objective. The government is not locked into selling at whatever price it offered within the 12-month period.

As I see it, the government is, in effect, acting as trustee of the controlling shares of Nordair while a satisfactory purchaser other than Air Canada is found for it and while a general restructuring and reorganization of regional air services in eastern Canada is worked out.

By proceeding in the manner announced yesterday the government has at one and the same time achieved two important objectives that would not have been accomplished simply by rejecting the Canadian Transport Commission's decisions to allow Air Canada to take over Nordair. What are these objectives, Mr. Speaker? On the one hand, the group presently controlling Nordair will be able to sell their shares and get out of the picture. On the other hand, this would be done without the result being that Air Canada would be involved, directly or indirectly, in the operation of Nordair. The group presently controlling Nordair suggested that if they could not now sell their shares on the terms set out in their agreement with Air Canada, they would begin selling the planes used by Nordair since they could gain a very good price on world markets for aircraft.

I must say that I have always been skeptical about this. I say this since the operating licence awarded Nordair imposed on it legal obligations to provide scheduled services in the terms set out in the licence to the routes listed. I had always doubted that Nordair could simply abandon these routes without facing legal sanctions by the Canadian Transport Commission.

It appears clear, however, that the Nordair control group are not interested in having their capital involved in Nordair. If they are not fully interested in doing so, keeping them in place against their will for some period of time could mean some deterioration in the level of management, efficiency and quality of service offered by Nordair, plus a possible lack of aggressiveness in seeking and building additional business for it.

Also, simply rejecting the Air Canada-Nordair transaction would mean that efforts by private groups to buy Nordair would start from scratch. The Nordair control group could begin bargaining afresh, asking for different terms and conditions than those in their agreement with Air Canada. Time would be lost in ending any present uncertainty about Nordair's future, while leaving in place an ownership group not totally committed to its most active and efficient operation.

By having Air Canada carry out its existing agreement with Nordair shareholders, the transaction would be completed relatively soon on terms and conditions which the controlling shareholders are already committed to accept, and the government, in acquiring the shares immediately thereafter, could move more quickly than would otherwise be the case to carry out the sale of Nordair to other interested groups or another interested group in the private sector.

The government decision on Nordair and the announcement yesterday is part of the process to renew and update the present regional and national air carrier policy. In his press conference yesterday following his announcement of the Nordair decision the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) appeared to suggest he had in mind that as part of the development and implementation of the new policy there would be changes in the present pattern of service on some routes. He appeared to be saying that on some routes service may not be provided in future by both Air Canada and the regional carrier once the restructuring he has in mind is in place.

I would like to remind the House and the minister of the principal reason for my opposition to the takeover of Air Canada by Nordair. It was this: I did not want to have people in the Windsor area and Canadians generally lose the benefit presently available to them through having both Air Canada and Nordair offer competitive service between Windsor, Hamilton, Ottawa and Montreal.

● (1702)

The leader of the New Democratic Party is quite mistaken in saying in his speech a few moments ago that Air Canada and Nordair do not compete except in a limited way. In fact, they compete in the main population corridor of Canada which is between Windsor and Montreal. Allowing the acquisition of Nordair by Air Canada could not in my view work in the best interests of the travelling public or the public generally.

This competition presently existing between Air Canada and Nordair over the past several years has meant better service for travellers. It has kept Air Canada on its toes. Nordair has broadened the range of scheduled flights between Windsor, Hamilton, Ottawa and Montreal and has offered fares in a number of cases lower than those of Air Canada. I have argued that if the takeover were allowed it would take away these benefits of competition and generally would not be in the best interests of the Canadian public. In my view, any restructing the minister may have in mind must not mean any lessening of the present level of competitive air service presently available to the people of Windsor and the travelling public in that corridor. I will be following developments in this area closely and I will be opposing any moves which would mean a lessening of service presently offered in the area I have mentioned. I say this even though I commend the government for the effect of yesterday's decision, that of preventing Air Canada from being involved in the operation of Nordair.

Air Canada's president argued during the Canadian Transport Commission hearings that it would be possible for Nordair to operate independently of Air Canada if Air Canada bought control of it. But, at the same time, his evidence at the hearings indicated that this would not really be possible. He said that Air Canada would be appointing the board of directors of Nordair and would be giving directions to Nordair by way of guidelines for its operation. After the Canadian Transport Commission's decision, Air Canada agreed with its pilots to have a merged seniority list for both airlines, once Air Canada took Nordair over, and not the other way around, as the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth suggested. I think this further added to the scepticism of myself and many others about Nordair ever being able to operate truly independently of Air Canada if a takeover had taken place, especially in cases where they competed directly along the same routes, as they do between Windsor and Montreal. The government's evolving national and regional transport policies must ensure that to a greater extent than at present the benefits of competition are available to air travellers in Canada, and those travelling to and from our country.

Achieving this through lessening regulation of the industry and allowing more competition, for example between Air Canada, Canadian Pacific and other carriers, would be welcome in my view in so far as it leads to Canadians being able to use a wider range of scheduled services at fares equivalent to those they would pay to fly the same distances in the United States and overseas.

We need to take steps to end situations in which it appears to cost Canadians less to fly on scheduled routes outside of Canada, sometimes even on Canadian carriers, than it does to fly within Canada unless people make reservations and pay fares many weeks in advance on a special charter class basis, that is, assuming such special charter class seats are available, which is not always the case. But at the same time deregulation should not proceed to the extent that it means a withdrawal of scheduled air services from certain communities because of their size or because of their distance from the core of Canadian population making these routes less profitable for air lines and other routes. There must be a balance in our national air policy between measures to maximize rates of return for airlines and the legitimate need for air service throughout our country.

The regulations should not mean simply providing additional competing scheduled service to some areas and its withdrawal from others. Our new policy as it is implemented must have this necessary degree of balance between competition and service. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, even though I commend the government for its objective in its announcement yesterday—the objective of preventing Nordair from being taken over by Air Canada—that there is need for improvement in the method by which appeals to cabinet from decisions of the Canadian Transport Commission and other regulatory tribunals are carried out. At present there is uncertainty about the exact nature of the process involved and how it works. There is need, therefore, for the cabinet to set out at the very least a minimum set of rules by which it will consider itself bound to make that process more open and to ensure that members of the public involved in such appeals will always get a full and fair hearing.

A federal court judgment now under appeal suggests, I understand, that this is not necessary because of what the cabinet does in considering that an appeal from a decision by the Canadian Transport Commission is essentially political. In my view, however, there is as great a need for guidelines to ensure a fair hearing in appeals to cabinet as in other kinds of government decision making.

I recall not one word of complaint made by the official opposition in past months about the takeover of Pacific Western Airlines by the Alberta government. I hope that there is no double standard here. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) suggested today that he and his party accepted the takeover of Pacific Western Airlines because the Alberta government intends to divest itself of it at some future date. But I recall no date being set for this by the Alberta government, not even as an objective to be met, as was done by the Minister of Transport in his Nordair announcement yesterday.

The Leader of the Opposition gave us none today. Instead of divesting itself of Pacific Western Airlines, the Conservative government of Alberta has been extending its involvement in the private sector. Under Alberta ownership, not long ago Pacific Western Airlines went on to acquire Transair—not that this should not have happened under the circumstances, but it still does mean another form of extension of government ownership.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We do not have an air service in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Gray: I think Canadians could well be troubled at seeing the official opposition remaining silent at a time when a Conservative provincial government gets involved in the air travel industry and, also opposes decisions made by the federal government that involve efforts on a national basis in the interests of all Canadians. After all, much of the past history and future of Canada are based on the development of its transportation systems.

This provided a reason, one important reason, for the regions of Canada coming together as one country in 1867 and afterwards. Transportation systems on a national basis are essential strands in the fabric holding this country together. The expertise of Canadians in transportation provides one of the key areas for the industrial strategy we need to make our economy more innovative and more competitive in domestic and international markets. The valuable and useful transportation policies we have had in the past, the necessity and the ability to improve them to meet the needs of Canada today and tomorrow show us why we must continue to have a strong federal government, which is not just one out of 11 governments within the land mass called Canada, but instead is a strong national government working in the interests of all the people of this country as Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: To conclude, the opposition motion, as explained by the Leader of the Opposition, conflicts with this essential objective for this country and its people. Therefore, I say it should not be supported. We should defeat it and go on to put into effect policies maintaining a strong central government, one which responds to the challenges and potential of this country and its people.

● (1712)

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I count it a great privilege to address this House today, sparsely populated as it is. I had hoped the minister would be here to hear my remarks because I have some things to say to him. It gives me great pleasure to be here together with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and with my highly respected colleague from Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott), and to speak in support of the motion before the House.

This motion of non-confidence cites a failure by government members opposite, a failure to implement a competitive air transportation policy which recognizes the legitimate and rightful aspirations of our private sector airlines. Indeed, this motion indicts the government for its repeated refusal to pay more than lip service to the common-sense principle that private sector airlines be allowed far greater freedom to compete with Air Canada. To be more specific, we believe that privately financed airlines should be entitled to a much greater share of the air transportation business in Canada, and that future growth must be directed almost entirely toward these privately-owned industries.

Today I will discuss the long and frustrating struggle of CP Air, formerly known as Canadian Pacific Airlines, which, as members know, is Canada's only privately-owned international flag carrier. In spite of its outstanding record of service to Canadians for more than 36 years, CP Air is restricted today to only one third the service volume of its major competitor, the government-owned Air Canada.

These unfair and inequitable policies of discrimination against private airlines such as CP Air must be laid squarely at the feet of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and his predecessor, Mr. Marchand. These ministers have, since 1973, demonstrated a remarkable dexterity. On the one hand, the ministers have repeatedly announced new initiatives which created the appearance of favouring CP Air's case for greater access to air routes.

On the other hand, and in each case, these same Ministers of Transport have reversed their earlier public commitments by giving approval to CTC recommendations and policies which were highly favourable to Air Canada and generally detrimental to the future of CP Air. The record bears close examination on this score and I intend to return to this point later to cite specific instances.

Mr. Speaker, as this occasion might be deemed my "maiden speech" in this House—I do not feel much like a maiden at the moment, but I will not go into the technical details of that—I beg your indulgence to allow me to digress for a few moments. It is certainly a great honour and a great obligation to be elected to this House as the representative of more than many thousands of people in the British Columbia riding of Burnaby-Richmond-Delta. I look forward to a healthy and productive fellowship with all members of this House and intend to conduct myself with diligence, decency and dignity in the prosecution of my duties here.

However, it would be remiss of me if I did not underscore the nature of my mandate for the next few months. I have been elected to bring the strong feelings of my constituents to bear on the deliberations of this government during its final days in office. I have been elected to help reveal the ineptitude, the inefficiency, and the callousness exhibited by the present administration during its ten years of dominance over this House.

The people of my riding have spoken, as did many other Canadians in at least ten ridings across this nation on October 16. Canadians are demanding a return to integrity and efficiency in the management of Canada's economy and of our human and natural resources. Canadians are fed up with this rudderless, bankrupt government. They are fed up with a persistent erosion of individual rights and freedoms by an increasingly authoritarian, centralist power. They are fed up with socialistic over-regulation of the private sector, excessive taxation, and irrelevant, wasteful spending from the public purse, a purse which is now empty save for some staggering IOUs. They are frightened by a growing tendency for a guilty government to cover its tail in secrecy, by a breakdown in parliamentary traditions, and by a dwindling lack of optimism in the future of this country. My constituents are frustrated with a government run by back-room empire-building bureaucrats who have had their job security guaranteed by decades of Liberal dominance in Ottawa, a dominance which attaches very little importance to the problems and aspirations of western Canadians.

The people of Canada spoke out on October 16. They are calling for new leadership from a new national government. They want leadership which reflects the hopes and dreams of all Canadians, not just a narrow few. They want relief from the burden of excessive taxation, over regulation and regimentation which has so stifled the independent spirit of Canadians these past ten years under the leadership of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). They want an elimination of waste, bureaucratic red tape and palatial extravagance as practised by the present government. Make no mistake about it; there is only one political philosophy which recognizes that productivity and prosperity can only be achieved by hard-working individuals, freed of the heavy hand of government. There is only one national leader today who can build a team to implement that philosophy, indeed who has built a team to implement that philosophy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: I look forward to serving with that leader, as a member of a new government, in a new era for Canada.

Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. The point I was making was that the October 16 indictment, the appallingly weak record of this government, is reason enough for members present to support the motion of non-confidence which is before this House. However, I wish now to return to the question of a more competitive air policy, a concept which has been denied to Canada's privately-owned airlines for far too long.

I submit that if Canadian airlines had greater access to competition with Air Canada, if Air Canada would stop growing at a faster rate than any other Canadian airline, indeed if Air Canada would consider the possibility of zero growth for a while, we would have far less trouble and conflict among the privately-owned regional and third-level air carriers. We would not have shutdowns, lay-offs or squabbles with Time Airways, Transair, PW Air, BC Airlines, West Coast Air, Great Lakes Airways, Quebecair, Eastern Provincial Airways, Nordair and all the rest. These Canadian airlines would have more room for growth and more opportunity to flourish. These private airlines must already operate with greater efficiency than Air Canada, not having the benefit of the public purse to bail them out, as was the case with the recent recapitalization of Air Canada to the tune of about $1 billion.

I turn now to CP Air and place it in special focus for two reasons. First, CP Air has maintained its home base of operations for many years on Sea Island, in the municipality of Richmond, a part of my riding. In 1978, CP Air will pump more than $280 million into the B.C. economy. Of this, $106 million will be the payroll of CP Air employees in the Vancouver-Richmond area. These persons account for 4,400 of the total work force of 7,100 people employed by the CP Air system, which spans five continents. CP Air also makes a significant contribution to local property taxes raised by the municipality of Richmond.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, CP Air is a spirited industry, built on the dreams of the late Grant McConachie, one of Canada's bush-flying pioneers. There is a family-like quality among the employees of CP Air. At all levels of responsibility there is a high degree of mutual support, a pre-occupation with excellence of service, and an instinct for corporate survival on the part of everyone who works for the airline. Would that the same could be said about the government airline, Air Canada.

As I indicated earlier, CP Air has had its share of false optimism from the present Minister of Transport, and his predecessor, Senator Marchand. Now the minister has tried it yet again, in his press release of yesterday, November 7, wherein the minister stated, and I quote:

> The government is considering the manner in which current restrictions on CP Air Limited should be eased and how CP Air and Air Canada, along with regional airlines and Wardair, a major charter operator, may continue to be strengthened as our major airline operators in Canada and abroad.

Such a statement probably sounds impressive to the average voter, at whom the minister's press release is obviously aimed. However, in the eyes of private sector airlines these statements are little more than meaningless, hollow, baffle-gab. They have heard the song before somewhere, and it usually means "watch out, there's trouble coming!"

Experience has taught the private airlines that a one night stand with the Minister of Transport generally leaves nothing more than a headache the morning after. I would like to elaborate, Mr. Speaker. In its international aviation policy of 1965-66, the government clearly established the right of CP Air to serve the low volume, long range routes to the Pacific rim nations—Asia, Australia and New Zealand—southern and southeast Europe and South America. To Air Canada were assigned the more lucrative routes to the United Kingdom, western, northern and eastern Europe and the Caribbean. Subsequently, CP Air found a way to make many of its marginal routes productive.

● (1722)

Then in a major statement on air policy in November of 1973, the minister at that time, Mr. Marchand, said:

> While Air Canada remains the pre-eminent carrier in terms of its very significant domestic role as well as its international role, there is room for a substantial expansion of the second, privately-owned airline.

Hon. members should remember those words "there is room for a substantial expansion of the second, privately-owned airline".

As part and parcel of this 1973 air policy the minister then proceeded to reassign many areas formerly in CP Air's territory to Air Canada. Thus, Air Canada picked up access to Venezuela, Colombia, the former Guianas, Yugoslavia, Lebanon, India and Pakistan as well as popular destinations in Southeast Asia such as Hong Kong. Together with Brazil, these were reassigned to be serviced either by Air Canada or CP Air, or both. All these destinations had formerly been the exclusive right of CP Air and many had been developed successfully into paying ventures. The 1973 policy also assigned all of Africa to Air Canada with the exception of a few sparsely populated North African countries which were cast off to CP Air. So much for CP Air's share of Air Canada's world.

In his 1973 policy statement, the former transport minister, Mr. Marchand, also stated:

> This transcontinental policy, favouring 75 per cent pre-eminence by Air Canada, is basically to be retained although I have asked for a report on the feasibility of relaxing certain restrictions on CP operations which now oblige them to originate and terminate all flights in Vancouver and Montreal.

Some five years have now passed, Mr. Speaker, but that promised report has never reached this House. CP Air is still required to turn around its transcontinental flights at Vancouver and Montreal resulting in sections of some flights being forced to operate at times when the public does not want to travel. Because of government interference, CP Air is unable to provide a completely competitive product to the travelling public. Indeed, CP Air has to absorb the costs of this inefficiency against its operating margin, all because of this ridiculous government regulation.

What would be the practical solution to this turnaround problem? To use the words of Mr. H. D. Cameron, a vice-president at CP Air, it would be—> —to have the same type of licence as Air Canada: all their Canadian points are licensed without restrictions against turning flights around at any point.

CP Air has repeatedly attempted to obtain such a consolidated licence which would serve to integrate several of the point to point domestic licences the airline has obtained over the years.

On June 28, 1977 the present minister was quoted in a press release as saying:

> The government will have no objection to consolidating all CP Air services in Canada under one licence to allow it to operate flights between any two points named in the consolidatd licence.

Well, Mr. Speaker, CP Air subsequently made formal application for such a licence and the request was turned down. So much for the public commitment by the Minister of Transport.

Perhaps the most incredible injustice of all occurred as a result of the Canada-U.S. air agreement of 1974. In his 1973 policy statement the minister of transport announced he would "encourage more co-operation between CP Air and Air Canada in the context of benefits to Canada." I ask members to listen carefully to one example of such co-operation as described by the president of CP Air, Mr. Ian Gray, in his recent address to the Men's Canada Club of Ottawa:

> We recognize that it has been government policy to assure the pre-eminence of Air Canada. But in the case of the allocation of the new trans-border air routes as a result of the Canada-U.S. air agreement of 1974 we believe there was a serious miscarriage of justice.
>
> Both carriers had to make costly concessions in the form of new competition from U.S. carriers as part of the agreement. It was understood that each of the two Canadian carriers would be compensated proportionately in the award of the new routes. Certainly, few anticipated that the division would be anything less than the 25/75 ratio which exists between CP Air and Air Canada on the transcon route. To our astonishment and chagrin, however, Air Canada was handed 11 of the 12 non-regional type trans-border routes and CP Air got only one—Vancouver to Los Angeles.

Mr. Gray of CP Air went on to state:

> Air Canada was assigned Montreal-Toronto-San Francisco giving them an additional competitive entry into the Pacific rim market and further encouraging the flow of Canadian traffic across the Pacific by means of inter-line connections with foreign carriers to the detriment of the Canadian economy.
>
> Also damaging to us was the award to Air Canada of direct services from Edmonton and Calgary to San Francisco and Los Angeles. This has the effect of diverting substantial traffic from our services to California.

Such decisions are certainly not in the national interest. I understand that Air Canada is now actively promoting Pacific Rim travel packages from Eastern Canadian points to the Orient and Australia via Los Angeles and San Francisco. Air Canada flies the 20 per cent portion across North America while various foreign air lines fly the remaining 80 per cent portion across the Pacific. What does this do for Far-Eastern tours operated by CP Air out of Vancouver? Indeed, what does such foolishness do for the Canadian economy generally?

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, giving examples of questionable commitments by the Minister of Transport. However, I will close with just two more bafflegab utterings by the hon. gentleman. On June 28, 1977, he said:

> CP Air is currently allowed 25 per cent of the trans-continental market capacity between Vancouver and Montreal and while this base ratio will be continued for current capacity the airline will be allowed a slight increase through a larger share of growth in traffic to 35 per cent in 1978 and 45 per cent in 1979.

This statement does not say what it appears to say. It does not make any commitment to increasing Canadian Pacific's share to 35 per cent or 45 per cent of the total pie. Given a fairly healthy rate of air traffic growth at 4 per cent per year, the minister's statement merely allows for an increase in CP Air's share of the transcontinental market capacity to about 28 per cent by the end of 1979. My recommendation would be that CP Air should enjoy 100 per cent of the growth on transcontinental routes each year for the next few years until it has achieved an equitable 50 per cent of the trans-continental service. We could then begin to talk about true competition between our two flag-carrying national airlines.

On a final note, Mr. Speaker, I refer to yesterday's press release by the Minister of Transport in which he announced that the government "has no objection to CP Air applying to the Canadian Transport Commission for permission to operate into the Atlantic provinces in conformity with the CTC's regulatory requirements." The truth of the matter is this: CP

Air has requested the minister's permission for access to Atlantic Canada on a number of occasions during the past two years. Competitive service is justified now between Vancouver and Halifax via Toronto. The applications have been put in for some months. What we have here, as so aptly put in a recent edition of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, is a case of "Too Lang a delay".

An hon. Member: Oh!

Mr. Siddon: To sum up, Mr. Speaker, we hope this House will tell the government what it thinks about its creeping socialistic takeover of private sector industries. I appeal to members on the opposite side of the House who truly believe in the principle of private enterprise to join with us today in support of this motion of non-confidence in this most incapable government.

● (1732)

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to speak at this time. Having heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and a few members of his party who spoke on the motion, I admit that we could easily be led to believe that they are arriving today from some unknown planet and that they have never opened a Canadian history book. All we heard, Mr. Speaker, are the words competition and private enterprise as if it were a cure-all, as if they did not know that Canada—the second largest country in the world—is sparsely populated and without state intervention as far as air services are concerned, hundreds of communities in our country would be without them.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how the Leader of the Opposition sees our country. He voices approval at Alberta's purchase of an airline, but is suddenly shocked because we have a successful national airline, Air Canada, and because the government buys a regional carrier on behalf of Canadians. Why should we be shocked, Mr. Speaker, because Canadians are the owners of air lines? In that respect I think I share the view of the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) who feels that we do not have to be ashamed because we have spent public funds to provide essential services for Canadians scattered throughout the country. And if we take a look at the way things are done in several other countries, be it in France, in Italy, in Germany, in Switzerland or in Australia, we can see that these countries do not hesitate to have only one national airline responsible for both domestic and international services. We can see, therefore, that we should not hesitate to do our utmost to protect Air Canada and other regional air carriers in Canada.

In his speech, the Leader of the Opposition said that it does not make any sense that national carriers should take over the regional markets; he also complained about the fact that Air Canada has flown right out of Bagotville. Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of a more obvious contradiction. When one of my colleagues asked him whether he thought Air Canada should abandon the service in northern Ontario, for instance North Bay, all he could say was that he did not know if it was better to maintain competition with local, regional, third- or fourth-level carriers, but as he mentioned in his speech he did not want to commit himself and say whether Air Canada or any national airline should withdraw from regional markets.

He also said in his speech that if he were to take office he would develop a whole new policy involving the utilization of the short take-off and landing aircraft. He probably took his ideas from the report published by the Department of Transport under this minister on the future utilization of the STOL aircraft between Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and, eventually, Quebec city and Windsor. He also said in his lengthy speech in support of his motion of non-confidence in the government that once in office he would set up a policy governing chartered flights, as if he was not aware that last spring this government, at the suggestion of the Minister of Transport, set up a chartered flight policy in Canada which is most advantageous for Canadian people who want to visit their country from east to west.

Mr. Speaker, commenting on the takeover by the government of Canada of Nordair shares, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard) said that we wanted to cut the ground from under Quebecair's feet. I think this is the most frivolous allegation made during the debate this afternoon, because we know very well that Quebecair made no offer for the purchase of Nordair when the company decided to sell.

Mr. Speaker, in light of this debate, I think it is important to have an idea of what kind of country we want. Do we think that by opening all valves on behalf of sacrosanct competition and private enterprise we shall eventually have ten or fifteen airlines, all the while applauding any province anxious to buy its own airline and forgetting the national interest, Mr. Speaker, which, I believe, should override all regional interests?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to state clearly and unequivocally that Nordair will remain a regional carrier and that, in the next twelve months, when we will be trying to find a better way of ensuring a coalition of regional carriers in the east, we will be able to maintain all air routes now served by this airline. We are trying, through this measure, to strengthen in some way the position of regional air carriers in eastern Canada. We are considering some changes at the regional as well as the national level. By strenghtening the activity of regional air carriers, we are hoping to improve service as well as to increase competition between carriers. This must be achieved, Mr. Speaker, without the participation of the government and of Nordair's management and operation. What the government would want to see is some form of regional merger to improve commercial operations on a greater number of routes in eastern Canada.

When it comes to merging, eastern Canada airlines such as Quebecair, Great Lakes and Eastern Provincial Airways immediately come to mind. However, one must not exclude any other group which would eventually be interested in purchasing the shares now held by government. Although the government now owns these shares, it must be pointed out that the company will continue under the present management team. For example, the president, Mr. Lefrançois, will not quit. Quite the contrary, during this interim period the management and the operation of the company will continue as they were in the past. Taking over the financial aspects of Nordair for the next twelve months will enable the government to ensure the funding and merging of regional carriers. Quite obviously, too much dissipation of efforts on a regional basis will not give good results. By acquiring Nordair, the government takes advantage of an excellent opportunity to review the whole network of airlines in eastern Canada, on a current as well as future operational basis.

In reorganizing regional air transportation, I do not see any problem in there being both competition and co-operation between regional and national carriers. So there can be competition for routes and co-operation with regard to schedules, the main objective still being to provide an efficient service at a reasonable cost. Mr. Speaker, last week I had the pleasure of a discussing this problem rather specifically with representatives of the Miramichi economic society and representatives from Chatham who complained for instance of a lack of co-ordination between EPA schedules on flights between Chatham and Fredericton and asked for a connecting Air Canada flight to Montreal. So I think there is much room for greater co-operation among airlines and for competition.

Mr. Speaker, there is another thing I want to point out and which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) mentioned in his speech, namely his shocked attitude when he spoke about Canadair and de Havilland operations. One might have thought the Leader of the Opposition was jealous of Canadair's unprecedented success, and I would have liked him to say to the 500 Canadair skilled workers and technicians that, in his opinion, it was high time this great state-owned and highly successful corporation be handed over to the private sector. He forgot to mention also the role of the government in the expansion of the Fleet company in southern Ontario which manufactures parts for long range patrol aircraft and how, as a result of government intervention, the number of employees has gone from 200 to 1,000 within 18 months.

To want to sacrifice everything for the sake of free enterprise and competition in this country is, as I said earlier, to disregard the entire history of this country which was first developed, if we go back to the beginning of the railways, thanks to the CNR and also, of course, because the fabric of our history could be protected precisely by keeping a strong government hand in business while at the same time promoting a free enterprise system which could also make profits.

So I think that the motion before us today should be unequivocally rejected by all members of this House.

I think we picked up today in the statement of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) the most obvious contradiction that could be expected from a party which wrongly hopes—and very much so, Mr. Speaker—to replace us. On the one hand they argue that national airlines should not fly regional routes, but on the other hand they complain about the fact that national airlines no longer serve cities such as Bagotville and they are unable to say whether the national airlines or rather, in this case, Air Canada, will continue to operate in northern Ontario. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that by talking on both sides of the fence, as did the Leader of the Opposition today, we will succeed in setting up sensible guidelines in the field of air transportation.

The present policy of the government is to continue to have two main regional carriers and two main—

• (1742)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 58(9).

Therefore, the question is on the motion of Mr. Clark. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Clark) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 9)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Andre
(Calgary Centre)
Baker
(Grenville-Carleton)
Cadieu
Caouette
(Villeneuve)
Clark
(Rocky Mountain)
Clarke
(Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Corbett
Cossitt
Crosbie
(St. John's West)
Crosby
(Halifax-East Hants)
Crouse
Darling
de Cotret
Dick Dinsdale
Elzinga
Epp
Forrestall
Fraser
Friesen
Gauthier
(Roberval)
Gillies
Grafftey
Halliday
Hamilton
(Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)
Hamilton
(Swift Current-Maple Creek)
Hare
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Holmes
Howie
Huntington
Hurlburt
Janelle
Jarvis
Jelinek
Jones
Kempling
Knowles
(Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lambert
(Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Lawrence
MacDonald
(Egmont)
MacDonald (Miss)
(Kingston and the Islands)
MacKay
Macquarrie
Malone
Masniuk
Mazankowski
McCain
McCrossan
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Mitges
Muir
Munro
(Esquimalt-Saanich)
Murta
Neil
Nielsen
Nowlan
Oberle
Paproski
Parker
Patterson
Pigott (Mrs.)
Ritchie
Roche
Rondeau
Rynard
Schellenberger
Scott
(Hamilton-Wentworth)
Scott
(Victoria-Haliburton)
Shymko
Siddon
Smith
(Churchill)
Stanfield
Stevens
Stewart
(Marquette)
Towers Wenman
Whiteway
Whittaker
Wise
Woolliams
Yewchuk—93.

NAYS

Messrs.

Abbott
Anderson
Andras
(Port Arthur)
Andres
(Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker
(Gander-Twillingate)
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Benjamin
Blackburn
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Breau
Broadbent
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss)
(South Western Nova)
Campbell
(LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Condon
Corbin
Corriveau
Côté
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Dionne
(Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas
(Bruce-Grey)
Douglas
(Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Duclos
Dupont
Duquet
Ethier
Firth
Fleming
Fox
Francis
Gauthier
(Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Gray
Guay
Guilbault
Harquail
Herbert
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Horner
Isabelle
Jamieson
Johnston
(Westmount)
Kaplan
Knowles
(Winnipeg North Centre)
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc
(Laurier)
LeBlanc
(Westmorland-Kent)
Lee
Lefebvre
Leggatt
Lessard
Loiselle
(Chambly)
Loiselle
(Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald
(Cardigan)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Maine
Marceau
Marchand
Martin
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Nicholson (Miss)
Nystrom
O'Connell
Olivier
Orlikow
Ouellet
Parent
Pearsall
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Rae
Railton
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rodriguez
Rooney
Roy
(Timmins)
Roy
(Laval)
Saltsman
Savard
Smith
(Saint-Jean)
Stewart
(Cochrane)
Symes
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Yanakis
Young—132.

● (1812)

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion defeated.

It being after six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 6.15 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 9, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

FISHERIES

SPOILED FISH BEING SUPPLIED TO INDIAN BAND IN SKEENA, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity relating to some food provided to an Indian band in the Skeena area.

In light of the supply of low quality and even rotten fish to the Indian band in the Skeena area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment take the necessary measures to discipline the official who selected and is now insisting that the spoiled fish be provided to the Indian band, and that the band's needs be met without further delay by supplying tinned salmon unless good quality, freezable and smokable salmon can be found.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1407)

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

TESTIMONY BEFORE McDONALD COMMISSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to move under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the statement by retired RCMP security chief John Starnes at the McDonald inquiry yesterday, that only an idiot would not have been aware that the RCMP were breaking laws in the line of duty, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House consider whether Mr. Starnes' statement completely and utterly exonerates the entire cabinet from any wrongdoing.

INDUSTRY

PRODUCTIVITY INCENTIVES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As this country is losing manufacturing jobs at an annual rate of more than 100,000 jobs a year—

Mr. Horner: Those figures are completely false.

Mr. Hees: —and due to the fact that productivity in Canada is 20 per cent below that of the United States, our chief industrial competitor, making our products cost more and selling higher prices than theirs, and as the only answer given—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hees: —by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner)—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would refer the hon. member to the very excellent interventions made by two or three of his colleagues who sit very close to him in the debate last Monday. If the hon. member has a motion, would he put it forthwith.

Mr. Hees: As I was saying, the only answer he gave was about airplanes.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That this House direct the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to immediately introduce productivity incentives, to be paid in direct proportion to increases in productivity, so that this country can bring its productivity at least up to that of the United States and stop the loss of more than 100,000 manufacturing jobs a year.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, under Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Horner: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Since the inception of the procedures which we have been following with respect to the order of business at two o'clock, every day we begin with applications pursuant to Standing Order 43, followed by the question period. The direction upon which the Chair has felt bound, and which seems to me to be quite satisfactory to all members, is that points of order during that period are taken up at three o'clock, not during the period for Standing Order 43 motions or the question period.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

HIGH RATE OF BANKRUPTCY IN SMALL BUSINESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, if the high-flying Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) would cool down for a moment, I would like to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that exuberant bank rate increases will further adversely influence the record-breaking number of bankruptcies within the small business sector, resulting from costly and inadequate financing, and because a recent survey indicates that more than 95 per cent of small businessmen applying for a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act were turned down due to a lack of government initiative in promoting the program, along with a lack of co-operation by the chartered banks themselves, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. de Cotret):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to encourage chartered banks to co-operate fully under the provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act, and at the same time enhance and promote the act by amending it to include venture capital loans at preferential rates for the small businessman.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the CPR has refused to co-operate with the government of Canada to repair boxcars to increase our grain movement capability.

Because our deteriorating ability to move grain is costing the Canadian economy $700 million per year, and in view of the precedent of this House in legislating Canadian workers back to work, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That this House request the Minister of Transport to present a bill to legislate the CPR back to work hauling grain for the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require unanimous consent, pursuant to Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AIR TRANSPORT

NATIONAL AIR CARRIERS' ROLE IN REGIONAL AIR TRAFFIC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In light of the apparent adoption yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition of a policy that Air Canada should be excluded from regional air routes in southwestern and northern Ontario, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine):

That this House go on record as affirming that national air carriers should not be excluded from a role in regional air traffic.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House, in accordance with the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY LINES RECOMMENDED FOR FURTHER STUDY BY HALL COMMISSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43.

In light of the fact that information collected gives every reason to suspect that those railway lines that were recommended for further study by Chief Justice Emmett Hall are receiving a consistently and extraordinarily low level of service, probably with an intent to force the ultimate closing of those railway lines without community hearings, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the Minister of Transport institute a parliamentary committee to do a full and thorough investigation of the seemingly unjust working arrangements with the section of the rail network that was recommended for future study by Chief Justice Emmett Hall.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS OF WAR VETERANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of all the poppies being worn in this House, I hope no one will say no to this very reasonable motion.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That, in recognition of this Saturday as Remembrance Day, this House expresses the hope that steps will soon be taken to improve the pension position of all widows of Canada's war veterans.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

HIGH LEVEL OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board.

Supplementary Estimates (A), tabled yesterday, indicate that the government has a long way to go to bring government spending under control. In fact, in April, the Minister of Finance forecasted expenditures of $26.9 billion, but we find out from the supplementary estimates tabled yesterday that the spending will be $47.8 billion, representing $4,561 for every working Canadian.

Is it the government's intention to revise the inaccurate forecast of last April and give the House a true indication of its budgetary expenditure plans, and will the President of the Treasury Board commit himself unequivocally not to seek any further spending authority from this House for the rest of the current fiscal year?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the total spending of the government for fiscal 1978-79 will be $48.3 billion, including meeting budgetary and non-budgetary cash flow commitments. The totality of the main estimates and supplementary estimates tabled could be higher than that before the final supplementaries are in.

As has been the tradition in the past, we have committed to spending ceilings in 1976, 1977 and, now, in 1978. In 1976, we came in $1 billion under that ceiling; in 1977, we came close to $1 billion under the original ceiling, and we will meet our commitment of $48.3 billion in 1978-79.

Mr. Andre: A supplementary question. As the President of the Treasury Board knows, that can only be done through inappropriate manipulation of Crown corporation books, as was done with CMHC. An examination of the supplementary estimates tabled yesterday shows that there was some $200 million transferred from capital expenditures into operating expenditures.

If these were not needed as capital expenditures, during this period of constraint, how can the President of the Treasury Board justify this increase in operating expenditures, and why did he not just cut off that $200 million of capital expenditures which the supplementary estimates say are superfluous and not needed this year?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, it has been the tradition in this House over many years that spending authority is sought mainly by the main estimates' procedure, but by supplementary estimates through to the end of the fiscal year. It has not been the tradition that expenditure reductions, as a result of executive action after that authority has been received from parliament, are entered into supplementary estimates to make those kinds of adjustments.

• (1417)

What the executive is empowered to do is to spend up to that authority, but it has total authority in that authorization to spend less, and that is what we will be doing.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. An examination of these estimates and the main estimates show that the fastest growing component of government expenditures is operating expenditures. This year, the final year of the anti-inflation program under which Canadian workers are asked to keep their wage increases to less than 6 per cent, government operating expenditures are growing at over 14 per cent, more than twice as much.

Will the President of the Treasury Board indicate, by way of a statement on motions or before the appropriate committee, just how and, more important, just when government operating expenditures will be cut back to at least no more than the growth in the over-all economy?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would examine a speech I made during the throne speech debate, he would get a clear indication of the areas of growth in what he is terming direct government expenditures, which I do not call direct government expenditures. The transfer payment section of our expenditures are the areas of transfers to persons and transfers to provinces where there is an inexorable escalation formula built in.

We are trying to negotiate that problem with the province to try to share with them a general restraint program. The direct operations of the federal government next year will have a 0.8 per cent growth factor from this year and, in fact, if you remove the Department of Defence, in absolute dollars it will be less spending next year in the direct operations of the federal government than this year.

Oral Questions

CUTBACK IN CMHC ESTIMATES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board.

In August of this year, the President of the Treasury Board indicated that the government would be cutting about $500 million in its expenses. Now there is a very striking feature in Supplementary Estimates (A) in terms of $368 million being used in terms of cuts by CMHC which, in effect, I think leaves no room for any other department and in fact it shows no restraint in terms of government operating expenditures.

How can the President of the Treasury Board indicate that there has been some cut which would leave room for other governments when here you have one department alone which has an illusory cut of some $368 million?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a contradiction in the hon. member's question. On the one hand he talks about cuts being detrimental to other levels of governments, and then says it is an illusory cut. You cannot have it both ways. In fact, Mr. Speaker, for the details of the reductions in the Ministry of Urban Affairs or Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I ask the hon. member to pursue those details with the appropriate minister.

I can say that, generally speaking, those reductions on the capital side of CMHC were done after consultation with the provinces; and the hon. member will note that there is a possibility of giving more subsidy to certain programs, such as public housing and that sort of thing. But we think the provinces can share with us the burden of raising money for the capital cost of their housing programs.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, the reason why I used the word "illusory" is that it is my opinion that the $368 million referred to by CMHC should have lapsed and is really not a reduction in supplementary estimates. In other words, there is more flim-flam and more manipulation by Crown corporations.

The minister has undertaken to introduce an omnibus Crown corporations bill in order to bring about some control, direction and accountability with respect to Crown corporations. Seeing that there is manipulation by these Crown corporations, which the government is feeding on, can he give us some indication of where this omnibus Crown corporation bill is that means so much to not only the government but to the people of Canada?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the hon. member to explain his "flimflam" when he talks about manipulation by the Crown corporations. That is a serious allegation. I suggest he back up his flimflam with some precise statements of where this comes from.

[Mr. Andras.]

Mr. Alexander: Answer my question.

• (1422)

Mr. Andras: As to the illusory question under which he cloaked that preamble, the Crown corporations bill will be coming before the House in due course.

Mr. Alexander: You promised the people of Canada this Crown corporations bill, and it is time you brought it in. You are flim-flamming the Canadian people.

* * *

TRANSPORT

SHIPPING OF CARGO TO FROBISHER BAY, N.W.T.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It pertains to the failure of the St. John's vessel, appropriately named the Crosbie, to unload all its cargo in Frobisher Bay and the resulting hardships that have been inflicted upon the people in that area. The minister knows that it is a serious matter.

Considering that the minister said in the House last week that discussions were under way as to how this cargo was eventually going to be delivered to the people in Frobisher Bay, is he now in a position to report to the House? In addition, is he in a position to assure the House that the additional costs which will have to be borne as a result of this will not be inflicted upon the people of the Frobisher Bay area?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would only say at this time that the vessel was putting into Montreal. At that point, the cargo was going to be assessed in its various categories and also in terms of its essential nature and its immediate movement. The broad assessment of this is being handled essentially by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the government of the Northwest Territories. I will see if my colleague has anything to report to the House at this point in time.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed by the officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that the government is at this moment in the process of opening crates in Montreal, making arbitrary decisions between essential and non-essential items, presumably on the ground that some will be shipped and some will not. The people in the north will have to pay for those items that are not shipped, to be shipped again.

Since the people in the north are dependent upon these shipments once or twice a year and have ordered in good faith, I would like an assurance from the minister that the government will not make such a distinction and all the goods ordered by the people in that northern region will be delivered. Will the government offer assurance that no distinction will be made between essential and non-essential items, because while recreational facilities, furniture and appliances fall in the non-essential category in the south, in the north they are regarded as essential?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to tell the hon. member that it is not our intention to make any arbitrary judgments about the matter but, rather, reasoned judgments will be made. As soon as the assessment can be completed, I am sure the minister will be glad to give the House further information.

Mr. Broadbent: This government has always defined reasonableness in terms of arbitrariness. I want assurance from the minister that the government will ensure that all the goods ordered will be shipped to the people who ordered them, and if there is a battle between the government and the shipping company, the people in the north will not have to pay for it.

I will direct my final supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Considering that inflation in that part of Canada is normally worse than it is elsewhere, for obvious reasons, will the minister ensure that a small body of officials will be set up to monitor prices in the Frobisher Bay area for the coming six months, so that price-gouging in any form does not take place and the people there do not suffer additional hardship?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take steps to see what happens to prices in that area, but I cannot promise we will set up a small group of officials, as asked by the hon. member. I will try to do it in one way or another.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

RECRUITING OF UNITED KINGDOM SKILLED PERSONNEL FOR CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Department of National Defence confirmed today that the armed forces were recruiting medical doctors and marine engineers in the United Kingdom for service in Canada's armed forces. Will the minister advise whether these openings were advertised in Canada Employment Centres and, if not, why not?

● (1427)

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I am not familiar with that specific move on behalf of the Department of National Defence. However, I think DND draws attention almost daily to the many fine openings there are in that tremendous professional service, inviting people to make application through the Canada Employment Centres. So there is wide advertising by DND to fill these positions. If they are moving outside without advertising, I will check with my colleague.

Mr. Epp: The department says these marine engineers should have either a chemical engineering degree or a mechanical engineering degree. In view of the fact that unemployment among the youth of Canada is roughly double the national average, how does the minister explain that young Canadians are not filling these jobs in the armed forces, and that the department is now authorized to go abroad for recruits, despite a domestic unemployment rate of 8.2 per cent?

Mr. Cullen: Having been a parliamentary secretary in the Department of National Defence, I know that there is a fantastic group of professionals who operate our armed forces and that there is a glorious opportunity for young people to get a university degree and join the forces. I am surprised more are not taking advantage of it. As I said, as far as the recruiting aspect abroad is concerned, I am not familiar with it and I will check it out with my colleague.

* * *

[Translation]

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER IS CONSIDERING SHUTTING DOWN LAPRADE PLANT IN QUEBEC

Mr. Richard Janelle (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that many municipalities and organizations of my constituency are concerned about the future of the Laprade plant, I would like to ask the minister whether new developments have occurred in that connection or if an agreement has been reached with the Quebec government?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would hope there would be a movement on the part of the government of Quebec with respect to the proposal I have put to the government which would call for the renegotiation of the agreement to complete that plant by 1982.

The reason for renegotiating that agreement is that there would be savings of some tens, if not hundreds, of millions of dollars in energy costs to consumers in Quebec, and at a time when the Quebec government has itself announced a 33⅓ per cent increase in the rate structure for electric power over three years it would appear to me they should be a lot more sensitive to this issue than they have shown themselves to be.

* * *

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED NEW AUTOMOBILE PLANTS IN CANADA

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a report out of Washington by the U.S. Department of Commerce indicates that the Canadian automobile industry will be in a serious deficit position up to, including and beyond 1985. To be specific, the report states that the cumulative deficit from 1978 to 1985 will be in excess of $10.3 billion. This is in addition to the $7 billion cumulative deficit already on the books.

I should like to ask the minister, where are these new plants he has been talking about? We know about the Ford plant that the government of Ontario and the federal government put together with the aid of a grant, but where are the other three or four plants that the minister said were coming to Canada to help overcome this adverse balance?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I assume that question is directed to me, Mr. Speaker. The deficit in automobile trade this year will be exactly half of what it was last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I am very pleased that the U.S. Department of Commerce is aware of the need for Canada to get additional auto plants.

An hon. Member: Where are they?

Mr. Horner: I want to assure the House we are doing everything we can, even cajoling, as we did, the Ontario government into putting up $28 million to help us get the Ford plant. We shall continue to do that.

Mr. Kempling: The report out of Washington was put together by Data Resources of Canada for the U.S. Department of Commerce. Noting that General Motors has now pulled back on its proposed aluminum casting plant in Canada, can the minister tell us when there will be some firm statistics regarding the Canadian automotive industry? We do not have a report. We are the only country in the world which has an automotive industry but which does not have an annual report on it. When are we going to have that report? When will we see the Reisman report which the minister commissioned?

● (1432)

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the Reisman report is a large document which outlines some of the figures, and I am sure it will help the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby because he is always having difficulty with figures. We are studying it and I hope to be able to make it public.

Mr. Kempling: When?

Mr. Horner: Very soon.

[Mr. Kempling.]

THE PARLIAMENT OF CANADA

VETERAN PREFERENCE FOR SUCCESSOR TO GENTLEMAN USHER OF THE BLACK ROD

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Inasmuch as Major A. G. Vandelac, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, has announced his wish to retire from that office, and as a meaningful recognition of our war veterans at this time of Remembrance Day observance, will the Prime Minister pledge to continue the principle of veteran preference in appointing a successor to this high and important office?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question.

* * *

POST OFFICE

RECOGNITION OF REMEMBRANCE DAY

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Postmaster General. Yesterday, the minister announced that postal employees who wish to do so, will be permitted to attend Remembrance Day services on November 11. That, in itself, is commendable; but why is the Post Office not to be closed completely, as are government offices here in Ottawa, to allow the staff to observe Remembrance Day, rather than the crazy policy of having an undefined number of people leave their posts, which will effectively close the Post Office in any event?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think I explained very well yesterday that in some areas postal service is essential and we have to provide that service. In many ways, some of our workers work in the same way as Air Canada pilots, policemen or anyone else who has to work on that day.

I said that we would accommodate and allow all latitude possible to veterans who want to participate in Remembrance Day ceremonies. I remind hon. gentlemen that I am a veteran myself: I know the meaning of this day, and I will see that all veterans who want to participate in Remembrance Day ceremonies will be able to do so.

* * *

[Translation]

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY WHETHER CFER-TV, RIMOUSKI, WILL BROADCAST PROGRAMS IN GASPÉ AREA

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications.

A few months ago the minister attended the opening of CFER-TV station in Rimouski. This new station covers only part of the lower St. Lawrence and the north shore. The minister has promised that she would intervene on behalf of the people of the Gaspé Peninsula to obtain coverage for that area. Could she tell the House whether the requests made by the population of the Gaspé Peninsula to Télécapital will soon be answered?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the problem experienced when Télécapital began broadcasting its programs in the Gaspé Peninsula. I have communicated with the authorities of Télécapital. There are three or four options which would enable the residents of Cap Chat, Tourelle and Sainte-Anne-des-Monts who are situated in a kind of small enclave to provide that service in a rather short time. I think that changing the direction of the antenna would make it possible to provide both services so eagerly expected.

* * *

[English]

FINANCE

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Anti-Inflation Board third-year report released just this week indicates that, on a national accounts basis, federal government spending went up 13 per cent in 1977 as well as in 1978. That is approximately 3 per cent higher than the gross national product increase for each of those years.

Would the Minister of Finance tell us whether he agrees with the national accounts calculation of the AIB?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Anti-Inflation Board uses a different base than the one used by the government. For our purposes, the base is taken over a period of years. We have managed—and the same will be the case for the third year in a row—to keep growth below the growth of the gross national product.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the minister says, "for our purposes". Presumably, the government has used a certain base for political purposes. Would the minister go further and tell us what is wrong with the AIB figures? Do they not represent a fair presentation, namely, 13 per cent actual growth in each of those years, compared with growth of roughly 10 per cent in the gross national product?

Second, would the minister tell the House what he had in mind at various private meetings when he said that, if necessary, the government would extend the mandate of the AIB beyond December 31?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have said repeatedly that the Anti-Inflation Board would complete its work by the end of 1978, but that an evaluation of company reports would have to be made for part of the year, which work would probably be completed towards the middle of 1979. As for the figures we use in assessing government expenditures, we use those of the public accounts of Canada which really are the most acceptable basis in all fields.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORT

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.—CUTBACKS IN EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES BY CNR AND CN MARINE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in receipt of a telegram from several unions involved in the work force of Canadian National and CN Marine at North Sydney, requesting him to meet with them concerning the drastic and continual cutbacks in employment opportunities in the shipping of freight to Newfoundland through that port?

If the minister is in receipt of such a telegram, copies of which went to cabinet representatives in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, would he be good enough to advise whether he could arrange the requested meeting at a location convenient to him, as he was good enough to do some years ago?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet seen the telegram to which the hon. member refers, but I have had discussions with my colleagues, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Deputy Prime Minister, about their interest in our examining the employment situation and the implications of changes being made in the Port aux Basques and North Sydney areas. I will certainly look seriously at the question of the kind of meeting which may be helpful in resolving these difficulties.

MOVEMENT OF GRAIN—AVAILABILITY OF BOXCARS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I am sure the minister is aware that nearly all elevators on the prairies are plugged, that there is space at the Thunder Bay terminal and that that route will be freezing up at about Christmastime. There will be an emergency soon if the grain in these elevators is not moved quickly.

Would the minister use his good offices to demand that CPR repair quickly some of its boxcars and that both CN and CP, on an emergency basis, put boxcars on their lines to haul grain to Thunder Bay before freeze-up?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be glad to convey to Canadian Pacific that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville agrees with me that it would be useful if Canadian Pacific undertook additional repairs of boxcars. I am sure that when CP learns that the hon. member is on the same side as I on the argument, it will give way.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I feel I should reassess my position. I am given to understand by the Canadian Wheat Board that we have sold about three million tonnes of grain to China, that we could have sold about four million tonnes if there had been additional rolling-stock, and that there could be a market for six million tonnes if we had an efficient transportation system. The Canadian Wheat Board also said we could have grain sales amounting to an extra $700 million per year if we had a good transportation system.

Instead of talking very nicely and cuddling up to CPR, will the minister bring in legislation which would require CPR to put more boxcars on the rails and ensure that we have enough rolling-stock to haul farmers' grain to market?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly reflect on that recommendation as well. I would welcome discussions with members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, who may not be quite so co-operative in offering assistance in relation to legislation. I believe that some very important steps have to be taken in order to continue to improve our grain handling system.

An analysis of how boxcars and hopper cars work and how fast they can be moved from the prairies to terminals is under way. That analysis is very important. As the recent report from Mr. Snavely indicates, the turn-around time on these hopper cars has dropped by about three days in the last few years, and we want further improvement in that regard. I firmly believe that an expansion of facilities on the west coast would also be a very important aspect of improvements to come, and I will continue to press for that.

If the hon. member would join in representations in another direction, it might be in relation to elevator companies so that they move quickly in order to put up additional facilities.

* * *

● (1442)

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

LACK OF REFERENCE TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN IN MATERIAL CIRCULATED BY NATIONAL UNITY INFORMATION OFFICE

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. In the propaganda emanating from the National Unity Information Office, no mention whatsoever was made of the Queen and her position in our federal system. Will the minister be kind enough to tell us why this serious error occurred? Why was there such a serious omission? Will it be rectified and, if so, when?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must have misread the information and publications which are coming from that office. The position of the Queen has always been recognized by this government. We have stated quite clearly in all our publications dealing with the constitution that Canada was living under the monarchical system. The position of the government is that this is the way it should be in the future.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from his very department suggesting that certain information should be supplied to constituency offices and given out by constituency offices. A person from that department came to my office with the material and admitted that there was no information in that propaganda or the brochures which mentioned the Queen. He admitted the omission. Would the minister now be agreeable to admitting it and having it corrected?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the documents to which the hon. member is referring is a series of publications which explain mineral resources in Canada, how equalization functions in this country, the size of the country, how many Canadians there are, the population of every province, and so on.

If the hon. member would like to have the Queen mentioned on every page of every document published by the government, I think that would expose the monarchy to ridicule. I am sure that is not what he has in mind. He should have more respect and common sense than that vis-à-vis the monarchy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FISHERIES

DEPLETION OF INSHORE LOBSTER FISHERY

Miss Coline Campbell (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. It is further to correspondence and meetings with both myself and other groups, such as the Nova Scotia Fishermen's Association, concerning the depletion of lobsters in the inshore lobster fishery and the potential total destruction of the thousands of formerly successful inshore lobster fishermen.

After two successive bad years, will the minister now consider, pending the outcome of the study on the relationship between offshore and inshore lobster fishermen, closing Brown's Bank to the eight or nine offshore lobster boats and request them to fish further offshore, and thus save the livelihood of thousands of inshore fishermen who are affected by this?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, while I am not accepting fully the rather pessimistic conclusions drawn by the hon. member, the fact is scientific evidence appears quite convincing that there is a relationship between offshore and inshore lobster fisheries. Officials of my department and American scientists have been working together. Now we will consult the fishermen to see how this fishery should be managed as one unit with interrelations with the other.

Obviously, these measures may mean restrictions in some of the fishing efforts in the next few years. We are discussing the matter with fishermen's organizations. We will keep hon. members informed.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ACTION AGAINST MEMBERS OF CUPW INVOLVED IN STRIKE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and Minister of Transport. It arises out of a statement which he made to the Canadian Press, that it is his intention to take action against local union leaders of CUPW.

If those charges have been laid, were they laid under the Criminal Code of Canada? Will those charges be under the direction of the Department of Justice? If not, will they be under the direction of the various attorneys general departments in the various provinces in which the five cities referred to by the minister in the press release are situated? I will not set them out in the House.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have signed four additional indictments against members of the national executive of CUPW which, along with the five previously signed, were laid under the same section of the Criminal Code. Also, they were laid by way of direct indictment. The charges against CUPW itself were laid by way of indictment under section 115 of the Criminal Code. The federal Department of Justice will proceed with the prosecutions.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, since the Department of Justice will be initiating the charges and the court procedure, I take it the minister and his department will take responsibility, rather than pass it off as was done with the question as to whether the Rolling Stones had a right of appeal under the drug laws of this country. Will the minister and his department take responsibility for these charges and this procedure?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has repeated what I just said in my answer. We are in charge.

* * *

[Translation]

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON FISHING BOUNDARIES—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and has nothing to do with lobsters. Since Ambassador Marcel Cadieux, the Canadian negotiator with regard to maritime boundaries, has been assigned other duties in the field of national security, would the minister be willing to make a statement in the House on the present state of affairs with regard to those bilateral negotiations with the United States? What progress has been made?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), to whom Mr. Cadieux reports, should not be the one to answer that question but I can, in general terms, say that Mr. Cadieux is pursuing his work. Anyway, I should remind the hon. member that he was our former ambassador with the community. As he is now in Ottawa, he is even more accessible than before. We met him after his most recent conversations with the American negotiator, Mr. Cutler, early this week. It seems possible, subject to discussions with representatives of the industry, both fishermen and industrialists, and of course with the provincial governments concerned, that an agreement could be reached on the fisheries. Of course, as I have already said, all this is subject to discussion, but it seems an agreement is possible; still, we have acquired some experience in this regard over the past year, and the fact remains that the optimism of Thursday is often followed by the pessimism of Monday.

[English]

TRIBUNAL TO DECIDE UNRESOLVED QUESTIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Are the unresolved questions, whether they be on the Georges Bank on the east coast or on the Dixon Entrance, likely to be assigned to an arbitration tribunal, whether it be an arbitration tribunal in The Hague or a special tribunal? Can the minister say anything along these lines at this time?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer not to be too specific because negotiations are continuing. However, I think I have said on a number of previous occasions that we have never discarded the option of possible reference to a third party, or arbitration, whichever word the hon. member of the House wishes to use. However, as of this moment negotiations are continuing. No definite decision has been made regarding whether to refer all or part of the boundary question or other related issues to a third party.

Incidentally, during the coming visit of Secretary of State Vance, I hope that he and I will have an opportunity to review the total picture. At that time, or shortly thereafter, it is conceivable that we may be able to come to a mutually satisfactory decision on the unresolved issues.

PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS ON SAINT PIERRE AND MIQUELON ISSUE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, on October 12 I raised this issue with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At that time I asked him for an update on boundary questions and he said that they were still under discussion. I presume his response today applies to the west coast and to Georges Bank.

● (1452)

Would the minister tell this House, now, how negotiations are proceeding between Canada and France with regard to Saint Pierre and Miquelon, and if the question of Georges Bank goes to third party arbitration will this area of dispute also be included for arbitration, and where will this arbitration be held?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the two issues are totally unrelated. The negotiations with the government of France with regard to some delineation relating to St. Pierre and Miquelon have involved two meetings, as I recall, over the last few months. The talks have been quite amicable and there have been no tensions at all. There is still a great deal of talking to be done. Therefore, we are proceeding and will continue to do so on that particular issue. The question of third party arbitration regarding St. Pierre and Miquelon has not come up and it would be hypothetical to even postulate that likelihood.

With regard to the situation of Georges Bank, I think that the hon. member is aware that when I answered him before I said negotiations were continuing. A set of meetings were held early this week between the negotiators and, I believe, as of yesterday there were consultations between the governments of the provinces concerned on the east and west coasts and also the fishermen's representatives.

We are trying to be very comprehensive in the consultation process, and this is designed to bring it to the point—and I repeat—where during Mr. Vance's visit, or shortly thereafter, we may be able to make a mutually satisfactory decision on how the final settlement is to be brought about.

* * *

TOURISM

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON TAXING OF CONVENTIONS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in his capacity as the minister responsible for tourism.

Was the minister able to report to the provincial ministers of tourism, with whom he met this morning, on the progress and/or resolution of the problem with the United States in terms of the tax convention, whereby offshore conventions in the United States no longer qualify as a business expense? This has caused a lot of irritation and loss of revenue to our tourism industry in Canada.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting with my counterparts in the field of tourism tomorrow morning, and I hope then to give them a report on the situation. The people concerned in the United States have already made some modification in their law with regard to conventions outside the country.

I would also add that Canada has had a tremendous growth in tourism this year from offshore countries: it is up by 20 per cent over last year. There has also been a decline in the number of Canadians visiting the United States. Our tourist picture has improved substantially.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his brief report on the state of tourism in Canada. Perhaps he will submit a longer one on motions, when it would be more proper. We on this side do not like to tolerate things either, in view of some of the things said in this House in the last two or three days.

In the discussions which the minister has had—perhaps this question should be directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—with the United States, have they confronted either the minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs with their problem, that before there are any concessions on the tax convention for offshore conventions, Canada will have to give something in terms of Bill C-58, the broadcasting expense problem?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has made a lengthy representation of which I have taken note.

* * *

AIR CANADA

SERVICE IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice. Yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition indicated that it was the policy of his party to replace Air Canada with regional carriers, and he specifically mentioned northwestern Ontario and southwestern Ontario. When the question was asked of the minister about specific points—North Bay, Sudbury, Timmins, Sault Ste. Marie and Thunder Bay—with regard to a move from those communities, he evaded the question completely: he did not mention Air Canada or the communities.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McRae: Would the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice affirm that the government has no intention of removing Air Canada service from any of these communities?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the government has no such intention. Any such change would require an application by Air Canada before the Canadian Transport Commission and they would then make a judgment on the matter.

However, the matter is academic at the present time because Air Canada itself is very conscious of the fact that those communities in northern Ontario wish to continue to be served by that carrier. I was as astonished as the hon. member to hear the Leader of the Opposition suggest that he would remove the service from them.

* * *

POST OFFICE

DISCIPLINARY ACTION AGAINST MEMBERS OF CUPW INVOLVED IN STRIKE

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that Post Office management has been sending letters to hundreds of individual members of CUPW threatening disciplinary action and saying that the threatening letter will be attached to their personal files, in view of the fact that this is not limited just to the leadership of CUPW but in some areas to the total local membership of CUPW, in view of the fact that this action can only be seen as a harassment of the employees, and in view of the fact that the Postmaster General has promised that there will be no harassment, can the Postmaster General tell this House if he was aware that these letters were, indeed, being sent out to thousands of members, and can he also assure us that instructions from his office will now go out to Post Office management asking that these letters be not placed in the files of the workers?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, when I listen to a question like that, I wonder if the attitude of the hon. member is not one of protecting the workers who got involved in illegal activities or actions disrupting the postal service.

Mr. Broadbent: Come off it.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I say to you what I said very clearly to the news media, that there was no witch-hunt at the Post Office, but there will be justice and that is what we intend to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: I would like to quote one passage of the letter we sent to many of our workers:

> You will be advised of either any administrative action or disciplinary action which may be taken in regard to your action.

There is an article in the collective agreement which tells us that we must send these letters within ten days of whatever accusation or allegation we have against the workers. In cases where there is no allegation or accusation, these letters will be withdrawn. We had ten days to do it and I think in the name of justice we had to do it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that in all modern industrial relationships in the private sector after a prolonged strike, modern management never proceeds with a witch-hunt and sending out letters as the Postmaster General is doing, can he give the assurance that these letters will not remain on the files of the CUPW members across this country permanently?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, obviously, we are talking about one union, CUPW. In answering the question put by the hon. member, I would ask him to read the constitution of this union, which constitution says there is to be no fraternization with management. They negate completely negotiations or communication with management. How can we—

Mr. Rodriguez: Answer the question.

Mr. Lamontagne: I am answering the question, but when talking about a union like this, and when we hear on television and read in the papers what their leaders are saying, and even what Mr. McDermott, the President of CLC, has said about this, I wonder if the hon. member is not part of the Charge of the Light Brigade.

* * *

SPORTS

CANADA'S PARTICIPATION IN MOSCOW OLYMPICS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). On May 24 I wrote to the minister, and I have not yet had the courtesy of a reply to that letter. I would like to read part of the letter in order to put my question in perspective:

> Our own House last week passed a unanimous resolution expressing our concern for the abridgement for freedom of thought and expression in the Soviet Union as demonstrated by those trials.
>
> In view of the upcoming 1980 Olympics to be held in Moscow, could you tell me whether there are any plans in your department to re-examine our country's position vis-à-vis participation in the Moscow Olympics?

Would the minister answer that question?

● (1502)

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the hon. member has not had a reply. I will see that that is done immediately.

In the matter of the question, however, I am quite prepared to accept that there be sport boycotts when related to sport, but when the matter is outside the realm of sport I do not feel the sport should be used as an instrument through which retaliation is executed.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of consistency—and I know this government would always want to be consistent—is the minister prepared to apply that policy to all other countries where discrimination is going on?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I have been told the Russian Olympic team is more than one-third Jewish, I think the hon. member's question is not relevant.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIONNE (NORTHUMBERLAND-MIRAMICHI)—REMARK MADE BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from a remark made yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition in which he cast aspersions on all members—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may want to consider giving the Chair proper notice of this question of privilege under the terms of the Standing Orders.

MR. RODRIGUEZ—ANSWER GIVEN BY POSTMASTER GENERAL

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from the answer the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) gave me this afternoon in this House to the first question I put to him.

The point I want to raise is the suggestion or the accusations in the answer the Postmaster General gave, that I was more interested in protecting lawbreakers in the Post Office than in coming to grips with the problems in the Post Office. At no point in my question to the Postmaster General did I raise any concern with respect to those who have been indicted and those who have been charged with having broken the law. I raised specifically the question of letters which have been sent to employees in the Ottawa local, for example. Some 800 letters have gone out to CUPW employees of the Post Office.

I should like to put the letter on the record. This one is addressed to Mr. Patrick Berry, machine processing, and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Berry

A review is currently being undertaken of all the activities which occurred during the period from 19th October 1978 to 26th October 1978, inclusive.

Your actions during the above noted period will be investigated further. You will be advised of any disciplinary action which may be taken in regard to your conduct.

A copy of this letter is being placed on your personal file.

Yours truly

A. Clare
Plant Manager

The question I asked dealt with the fact that this letter was being placed on the personnel files of hundreds and hundreds of CUPW employees of the Post Office. In trying to make political points or whatever, the Postmaster General said to this House that I was more—he was imputing a motive to the question I asked—said I was more interested in protecting lawbreakers than raising a legitimate question. I say that the Postmaster General is certainly being irresponsible and certainly disrespectful to members of this House when he stands up and imputes motives of the kind he imputed to me.

The second point I want to raise, is that the Postmaster General accused me of being part of "The Light Brigade Charge." Mr. Speaker, I happen to be the Post Office critic for my party in this House. Questions which arise with respect to human relations within the Post Office at this particular time are extremely important. We are in a period following a strike, Mr. Speaker, and tension is high. We are in a period where very shortly we will be dealing with a Crown corporation in the Post Office. It is absolutely essential that there be good industrial relations in the Post Office. It is with that concern, and with the agreement of my party, that I raised this question today. We are absolutely at the crux of the relationship with the Post Office.

I pointed out in my question that in modern industrial relations in the private sector, after a strike, where there are modern and avant-garde approaches to industrial relations, no witch-hunting takes place after a long and bitter struggle in the work place.

I asked the Postmaster General if he would reconsider this letter which he has told workers will be placed on their personnel files and if he would give us an assurance that it would be removed. The Postmaster General got up and accused me of being part of a "Light Brigade Charge". That is contrary to the concept of responsible ministers responding to critics in the opposition parties of this House. The Postmaster General wraps himself around Dennis McDermott. I want to say, while Mr. McDermott is not here to claim privilege, that to accuse Mr. McDermott of abandoning the rights of workers in the Post Office—that he made a broad statement that in effect—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the hon. member has left his original point which had some bearing in privilege in respect to a response that he got in the question period. He is now going into a criticism of the response given by the minister. I am sure he is aware that he cannot, at this point, be critical of the minister's answer. That is a matter for debate. If the hon. member has a question of privilege I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. Rodriguez: In conclusion, then, Mr. Speaker, I believe I do have privilege in this matter. I think the only honourable thing for the hon. minister to do is to withdraw those remarks which imputed motives to me this afternoon.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I ever questioned the motive of the hon. member. I said I wondered if—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lamontagne: I do not think there was any question of giving motive to whatever he thought. The way he asked the question there was nothing else left in my mind but maybe that was his thought. If it was not, good for him. As far as my allegation regarding the charge of the Light Brigade is concerned, I have the article here. Mr. McDermott said it; I did not say it. I said I wondered if he was part of it; I did not say he was part of it. It is up to him to judge.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. The issue being raised here, I think, is of very great importance indeed, whether the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) recognizes it or not. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) asked a question, and he asked it not about people who were breaking the law; he asked a question not about people who have been charged; he asked a question about hundreds and perhaps thousands of men and women currently working for the Post Office who had a letter sent to them from the Post Office which I say, coming from an industrial town, would never be sent by General Motors to UAW members under such circumstances.

Not only did he ask a question about men and women who were not breaking the law but about men and women who are good citizens of this country and in whom he is interested. The question of privilege pertains exactly to what the minister said. I do not have the "blues" here but I know I have exactly the gist of his comments. The minister said in reply that the hon. member for Sudbury—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —that the hon. member for Nickel Belt was more interested in protecting lawbreakers than he was in coming to grips with the problems of the Post Office. Mr. Speaker, that is a very serious accusation regarding any member of this House, that he is interested in supporting lawbreakers. The hon. member for Nickel Belt never, inside or outside this House, at any time, has taken that position that I am aware of nor in this question specifically does the minister's irresponsible reference have any appropriate reference to what the hon. member, for my party, asked in very good conscience for a very good cause.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will have to examine the record. There is an allegation that the answer given by the minister did make some sort of imputation of motives to the hon. member for Nickel Belt. The minister in response has said—I take it his response was that if he did that, he did not intend it, but intended to say that he wondered whether that was the case. I do not know.

● (1512)

I shall have to examine what was said in the first instance by reading the record, and then in turn examine the contribution of the minister today to determine if in fact there is any basis for a question of privilege. I will undertake to do that and we can raise that in the House tomorrow when we have had an opportunity to examine the record.

MR. HORNER—STATISTICS USED IN STANDING ORDER 43 MOTION

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of the abuses occurring, to me particularly today, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Standing Order 43 was re-adopted in the House of Commons in 1975. It is to allow the opposition or government members to bring to the attention of the ministry matters of urgency and pressing necessity. Standing Order 43 is being used to make false accusations against ministers, and questioning minister's words, as was done today with regard to the figures used in manufacturing. There are more people working in manufacturing today than ever before in Canada. There are 2,006,000 people working. There are 130,000 more people working in manufacturing today than there were a year ago.

Those are Statistics Canada figures. I have them here with me. Why did I have them with me? Because I am aware of the abuses that are occurring under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and I got into a discussion yesterday during the question period, if you recall. One could go back and check the pattern. He apparently thought he lost that round, so he came in with a cheap attack on the manufacturing figures by the use of Standing Order 43, whereby I could not rise to correct him.

He did not dare ask me a question on manufacturing today, but he uses that tactic. He is an old boxer and telegraphs his punches, and he telegraphed this one, so I came—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: As a House, Mr. Speaker, we have to help you create an order of some semblance of fairness so that the people of Canada can have an accurate picture of what is going on in this country. You cannot allow the use of Standing Order 43 to abuse the words of the ministry and not be challenged. I really believe the accusations which the hon. member made on the question of manufacturing figures really put my word in jeopardy. I cannot allow that to happen because I am not wrong, I have the figures here. And you, Mr. Speaker, cannot create an order of good will, or a semblance of order which lends itself to rational debate, if continued abuses of the provisions of Standing Order 43 are allowed to continue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, to begin with, the minister started with a false premise. He said I was under the impression that I lost the debate yesterday. I won it hands down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Secondly, I based my question yesterday and my motion under Standing Order 43 today on statistics that were produced in his own department, Stats-Can. These figures were produced very recently, which stated that the manufacturing industry in Canada in each of the months of September and October lost 11,000 jobs.

An hon. Member: What year?

Mr. Hees: That is this year. And, Mr. Speaker, 11,000 jobs a month is at an annual rate of 130,000 jobs.

I would like to repeat the question on which this is based and which I asked the minister yesterday. You will see the figures that I used, and that I used again today. Here is the question I asked yesterday and repeated at the beginning of my motion today. I said:

As the principal reason for this country losing manufacturing jobs at the rate of 11,000 a month is that productivity here remains well below the level in the United States, thus causing our costs to be higher than theirs and making our products uncompetitive with those of our principal competitors, would the minister advise us when he intends to introduce productivity incentives to be paid in direct proportion to increases in productivity, so that we can stop this serious loss of manufacturing jobs which is going on at an annual rate of more than 100,000 jobs?

Mr. Speaker, on that very serious question, which you can hardly find more important to the country, the minister chose to ignore it. He did not deny any of the figures, and then simply told us about a new airplane that he is building.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Something that he was so proud to tell us, that it was able to stay in the air for an hour, something a little better than what the Wright brothers were able to do at Kitty Hawk 70 years ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, what he is objecting to are my figures, and I repeat, I say his department stated recently, "We are losing manufacturing jobs at the rate of 11,000 a month" which is 130,000 a year, very much in excess of 100,000 a year. So he is wrong, and obviously I am right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In any case the House will realize at once that we are locked in a classic disagreement and not a matter of either privilege or order under the circumstances.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. LANG—INCORRECT REFERENCE TO DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In answer to a question put by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) I made reference to the Department of Justice, when obviously I should have referred to the office of the Attorney General. I would like to make the record clear in that regard so there will be no misunderstanding.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the wondrous thin skin developed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) since he has left us.

In any event, I ask a question of the government House leader with respect to the business of the House of Commons. What is his intention for today, tomorrow and into next week, up to at least the budget? Could he at the same time designate next Monday as an allotted day in accordance with the discussions we have had?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to designate Monday as an allotted day. And in reply to my hon. friend's question with respect to the business of the House, I would like to advise that for this afternoon we will be continuing the discussion on Bill C-10, the child tax credit measure. At eight o'clock we will move to Bill C-14, the unemployment insurance amendments. This change in business has been worked out co-operatively in order to take into account the desire of a number of members to be present at the state dinner being held tonight in Toronto for the Prime Minister of Israel. I appreciate the co-operation that has made possible this rearranged business.

I would gather the Unemployment Insurance Act amendments will be debated for a day or so. Following that we would attempt to return to Bill C-10 if it is not completed, which is unlikely, certainly not third reading. Then we would deal with the old age security bill and the borrowing authority bill, both of which, I understand, will be returned from committee today. That, I think, will probably take us well into next week. If necessary I will add some more items to the list.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there are two matters arising out of that answer and connected with the budget to be brought down on November 16, that is, the government's intention with respect to the carriage, and more important at the moment, the beginning of the debate on the budget.

● (1522)

I understand there is an agreement to begin the budget debate on Friday, November 17. I assume it is the intention of the government to carry it on for the balance of the week, although there might be some change in that. However, with regard to Friday, can I have the government's undertaking that it intends to begin on Friday as we discussed and, I believe, agreed?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I propose to call the first day of the budget debate on Friday in order to give members of the opposition an early opportunity to extol the virtues of the minister's budget.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I want to assure my friend we will not let such an opportunity pass by. The final matter is with regard to the commodity sales tax review and the reference with regard to it. As I mentioned last week, we are prepared to agree to have that reference go without debate if my friend wants to make the appropriate move. As he perhaps knows, there are over 100 briefs waiting to be considered by the committee. If he could do that today or tomorrow, it could be done without debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): First, Mr. Speaker, may I thank the government House leader for designating

Monday as an allotted day. I believe the arrangement is that the motion for that day will be put down by the New Democratic Party. With regard to Bill C-14 which we shall commence tonight, although the government House leader did not say it in so many words, I take it we shall stay with it tomorrow. Hansard might note the minister is nodding his head up and down.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In a wavy line.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The government House leader referred to a couple of other bills being reported back from their committee study today. Because Bill C-5 is a bill that comes into effect when it has finally been passed and been given Royal Assent, that is, the old age security bill, and therefore affects the discontinuance of the spouse's allowance of widows who may lose their husbands this month, I hope that can be brought back very soon so we can pass it, get it over to the other place, and finally get it on the books.

We agree to the suggestion that the budget debate, apart from the minister's statement next Thursday night, start on Friday, November 17.

I have just one further comment to make. It is the same one I made last Thursday. In view of continuing misunderstanding as to what is in Bill C-12, having to do with the indexing of pensions of public servants and others, I hope that debate might get started fairly soon so there can be exposed to the public what the government's intentions are under that bill.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the comment by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) about Bill C-12, I will be in a position very shortly to convey the information which I know is pertinent to the deliberations on that bill. I will consult with the House leader for the timing of such a reading at which time all the pertinent factors, specifically the degree of supplementation possible for the next three years, which I think is the key issue, will be made clear. I say to the hon. member that I think he will receive my information favourably.

* * *

[Translation]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CORBIN—REMARK MADE BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria on a point of order.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, referring to Standing Order 35 which says, and I quote:

No member shall . . . use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof.

Committee Reports

Yesterday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, as can be read in Hansard for Wednesday, November 8, page 928, the Leader of the Official Opposition said at about 3.42 p.m., and I quote:

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not have any way in which I can receive the point from the hon. member at the present time unless it is by way of a question of privilege. If it is a disorder that took place yesterday, it would need to have been raised or brought to the attention of the Chair at that time. If it relates to privilege, having occurred in yesterday's proceedings, and being raised today by way of privilege, it would have to be upon specific notice under the standing orders. In the absence of that notice, I have no jurisdiction to proceed with it at this time.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, the matter I wish to raise occurred at a time I was serving as a member of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, which is my duty as a member of the House of Commons. At that time the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) made a comment in the House which was offensive. It only came to my attention during today's question period when I read the comments he made at that time. I take the earliest opportunity to raise this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to advise the hon. member that, although I understand his dilemma, namely, that he was serving on duties of the House of Commons when what he considers to be an offence was made, I have to consider whether I have jurisdiction to take it into account and, if I do, if it was disorder I would have had to take it into account at the time it occurred. If it is privilege, the only basis upon which I can deal with comments made yesterday in today's proceedings is if I have received proper notice under Standing Order 17, and I have not. Therefore, I have no jurisdiction to deal with it.

If the hon. member feels aggrieved, perhaps he can take the earliest possible opportunity in debate to refer back to that remark. I would guess there would be opportunities in future debates to do that, but I regret procedurally I have no power to deal with it at this time.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

First report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—Mr. Kaplan.

Order Paper Questions

[Translation]

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

Second report of Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs—Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier).

[Editor's Note: For texts of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

TELECOMMUNICATIONS ACT

MEASURE ESTABLISHING NEW POLICY

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-16, respecting telecommunications in Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[English]

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS ACT

MEASURE TO PROMOTE SAFETY AND TO PROTECT ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-17, to promote public safety and the protection of the environment in the transportation of dangerous goods.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

QUEBEC AND MONTREAL PORT WARDENS ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-18, to provide for the appointment of a Port Warden for the Harbour of Quebec and to amend an act to amend and consolidate the acts relating to the office of Port Warden for the Harbour of Montreal.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 147, 247, 249, 256, 257, 271, 272, 274 and 417.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

BUREAU OF PENSIONS ADVOCATES

Question No. 147—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Where are Bureau of Pensions Advocates offices located in Canada?
2. How many Pensions Advocates are assigned to each office?
3. How many claims were processed in each office for each year since 1970?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1.		2.
	St. John's, Nfld.	1
	Charlottetown, P.E.I.	1 (part-time)
	Halifax, N.S.	3
	Saint John, N.B.	2
	Quebec, P.Q.	2
	Montreal, P.Q.	3
	Ottawa, Ont.	4
	Toronto, Ont.	1
	Hamilton, Ont.	1
	London, Ont.	3
	North Bay, Ont.	1
	Winnipeg, Man.	3
	Regina, Sask.	1
	Saskatoon, Sask.	0 (serviced by Regina)
	Calgary, Alta.	1
	Edmonton, Alta.	1
	Vancouver, B.C.	3
	Victoria, B.C.	2

3. Bureau of Pensions Advocates—Applications to Canadian Pension Commission, Requests for Entitlement Board and Quantum Hearings and Appeals to the Pensions Review Board by Districts—1969-70 to 1977-78

District Office	1969-70	1970-71	1971-72	1972-73	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76	1976-77	1977-78
St. John's, Nfld.	117	88	180	150	110	117	125	161	211
Charlottetown	127	74	209	167	209	166	187	204	259
Halifax	534	435	833	1159	1167	959	1261	1716	1528
Saint John, N.B.	344	303	334	494	579	422	522	670	621
Quebec	405	404	412	482	490	413	442	638	399
Montreal	534	442	624	871	969	994	1061	1180	1275
Ottawa	1014	838	1055	1256	1283	1326	1482	1759	1531

[Mr. Speaker.]

3. Bureau of Pensions Advocates—Applications to Canadian Pension Commission, Requests for Entitlement Board and Quantum Hearings and Appeals to the Pensions Review Board by Districts—1969-70 to 1977-78

District Office	1969-70	1970-71	1971-72	1972-73	1973-74	1974-75	1975-76	1976-77	1977-78
Toronto	496	391	475	530	504	466	528	529	485
Hamilton	308	196	186	336	333	273	581	680	508
London	505	440	836	787	942	865	1057	1427	1410
North Bay	266	249	265	359	448	636	384	413	387
Winnipeg	394	422	760	809	1133	788	827	994	920
Regina	166	165	221	232	246	187	178	241	171
Saskatoon	130	95	103	203	143	167	193	213	219
Calgary	392	365	670	607	491	417	354	517	511
Edmonton	262	225	278	253	380	295	325	434	312
Vancouver	839	736	952	990	1112	848	857	1288	1191
Victoria	389	358	555	589	611	602	494	641	661

URBAN AFFAIRS—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 247—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

AGRICULTURE—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 249—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Department of Agriculture and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

FEDERAL PROVINCIAL RELATIONS—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 256—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Ministry of State for Federal-Provincial Relations and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

LABOUR—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 257—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Department of Labour and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

MULTICULTURALISM—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 271—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Ministry of State for Multiculturalism and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 272—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 274—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Department of National Defence and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

AGRICULTURE—TAX WRITE-OFFS

Question No. 417—Mr. Brisco:

Are the same tax write-offs allowed for greenhouse agricultural projects, such as the growing of tomatoes, as are allowed for field grown products outside of a greenhouse environment?

Points of Order

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): See reply to question No. 1,718 of the third session of the thirtieth parliament, Hansard No. 146, page 6724, dated June 26, 1978.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. McKENZIE—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 238

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This afternoon the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) stated that he would be providing us with the necessary information to deal with Bill C-12, to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. I wish to ask the parliamentary secretary and the President of the Treasury Board whether they would consider answering a question I placed on the order paper on October 17. It was in regard to whether there was in excess of $9 billion in the Public Service Superannuation Account. That is question No. 238. The answer to this question would certainly help hon. members to deal properly with Bill C-12 concerning retirement benefits.

● (1532)

MR. ELZINGA—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 223

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): I, too, rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with regard to question No. 223. This is the third session during which it has been on the order paper and the government has had some two years to answer it. It simply deals with special or annual air passes granted to presidents of Crown corporations and government commissioners, and asks how often these special passes have been used. I wonder if I could get a commitment from the parliamentary secretary allowing me to expect an answer in the near future.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as regards the first intervention, we will give the question serious consideration, and attempt to provide the best possible answer, as quickly as we can.

As for the second intervention, the hon. member must understand that his question is directed to several agencies and departments. It will certainly cost Canadian taxpayers a lot of money to satisfy his fancy, but we will nevertheless take his question in serious consideration.

[Mr. Brisco.]

[English]

MR. ORLIKOW—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS ON CROWN CORPORATION SALARIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise more in sorrow than in anger to ask the parliamentary secretary whether the government will, some time this session, answer a series of questions which have been standing in my name on the order paper for a long time—I think this is the second year—having to do with senior officers of Crown corporations, who they are, and what salaries they receive. If the government does not want to answer the questions, I wish the parliamentary secretary would tell me so, in which case I might pursue them at some appropriate time in one of the standing committees. It does seem to me that the questions are not so complicated nor so difficult that the government cannot answer them in a matter of two years if ministers put their minds to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): With respect to this intervention, I can tell the hon. member that I can see his name very often in the questions I have the occasion to answer. I can see he looks happy. I will try my best to keep that happy look on his face as long as possible.

* * *

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAWRENCE—MINISTERIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I want to indicate to the House today that I have come to some conclusions with respect to a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) on November 3, having to do with a number of matters which were the subject of an interesting discussion at that date. I have not made up my mind on two or three issues which I think should be discussed further; I want to leave them with the House in the hope that they may be argued at some convenient time.

Perhaps I might simply say at this stage that on November 3, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham raised a question of privilege which came to his attention as a result of certain testimony before the McDonald royal commission. Briefly, the facts are as follows. In reply to a query on behalf of a constituent, the member for Northumberland-Durham received from the then solicitor general, on December 4, 1973, a letter which read in part:

> I have been assured by the RCMP that it is not their practice to intercept the private mail of anyone and I trust the above explanation will set your constituent's mind at ease.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham indicated to the House that in testifying before the McDonald commission in relation to this particular letter, former Commissioner Higgitt had said:

That is not, that is not an assurance the RCMP is giving to the minister at all and as a matter of fact the practice was, in matters of this kind, the practice was very often ministers' letters were not exactly drafted on precise statements of fact.

On the basis of this evidence the hon. member alleges that a deliberate attempt was made to obstruct him in the performance of his duties to the extent that the minister's letter to him, dated December 4, 1973, was not exactly drafted on precise statements of fact.

The law of privilege in this regard is stated in Erskine May in the nineteenth edition at page 136:

It may be stated generally that any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

More specifically, under the heading "Presenting Forged, Falsified or Fabricated Documents to Either House or Committees of Either House", May goes on to say:

It is a breach of privilege to present or cause to be presented to either House or to committees of either House, forged, falsified or fabricated documents with intent to deceive such House or committees or to subscribe the names of other persons or fictitious names to documents intended to be presented to either House or committees of either House or to be privy to, or cognizant of, such forgery or fraud.

That appears in the nineteenth edition at page 141. At the same page May deals with conspiracy to deceive either House or committees of either House, as follows:

It has already been seen that the giving of false evidence, prevarication or suppression of the truth by witnesses while under examination before either House or before committees of either House is punished as a contempt; and that persons who present false, forged or fabricated documents to either House or to committees of either House are guilty of a breach of privilege. Conspiracy to deceive either House or any committees of either House will also be treated as a breach of privilege.

The very interesting debate on this question of privilege which took place on Friday last has left me with a number of issues to resolve. The first of these, of course, is whether or not the hon. member, within the classic definition of the law of privilege, has in fact a matter of contempt or a matter of privilege.

In addition, there were a number of ancillary items which I felt arose during the course of debate. I will enumerate five of those now. The first deals with whether the complaint was raised at the earliest possible moment. The second is whether a letter from the Solicitor General to a member can be treated as a proceeding in parliament in order, therefore, to qualify for consideration under our rules of privilege. Third, can a contempt committed during one parliament be dealt with in another? The fourth point which I want to bring before the House now is: does the sub judice convention impose any constraints upon the House in this case? Fifth, does the constitutional doctrine of ministerial responsibility affect in any way the law of privilege?

I have no difficulty in disposing of the first three of these ancillary items. I am prepared to find that, first, the complaint was raised at the earliest possible opportunity. It was before the McDonald commission that Commissioner Higgitt acknowledged for the first time that the letter in question was "not exactly drafted on a precise statement of fact". Nothing said before the Keable inquiry earlier in the year would lead to that conclusion, and what was said in the House on November 9 by the then solicitor general indicated that the RCMP opened mail only in certain very distinct cases and circumstances. Furthermore, in connection with certain questions put by the hon. member to the solicitor general in respect to that pronouncement on November 9, I am satisfied that the hon. member can draw a relationship between the letter and his questions on that particular occasion.

His questions were directed to the Solicitor General at that time on the grounds of asking whether the Solicitor General was sure that these were the only categories in which mail openings were conducted by the RCMP, and I therefore accept the hon. member's argument that there was a direct relationship between his letter and his conduct on specific occasions in the House. I find, therefore, in that relation the letter does become a proceeding in parliament for the purposes of privilege.

I can also easily deal with the problem about this House dealing in this parliament with a contempt committed by an earlier parliament. I would refer hon. members to the nineteenth edition of May at page 161, where it is stated:

—a contempt committed against one parliament may be punished by another;

The matter is obviously put to rest by that quotation.

The last two ancillary issues, however, give me greater difficulty. I want to indicate to the House at once my own preliminary analysis of these two problems and also of the form of the motion, which is the third matter which I want to leave for the House, because we did not have argument directed to that question.

● (1542)

I want to refer hon. members to paragraph 24 of the recent report to this House of the Standing Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members on the sub judice convention, which reads as follows:

Your committee recommends that the Speaker should remain the final arbiter in the matter, that he should retain the authority to prevent discussion of matters in the House on the ground of sub judice, but that he should only exercise this discretion in exceptional cases where it is clear to him that to do otherwise could be harmful to specific individuals. In exercising this discretion your committee recommends that when there is a doubt in the mind of the Chair, a presumption should exist in favour of allowing debate and against the application of the convention. In the view of your committee prejudice is most likely to occur in respect of criminal cases and civil cases of defamation where juries are involved.

My preliminary analysis of the question of matters sub judice is, in the first place, that this touches privilege, and surely no body but this House can have jurisdiction where matters of privilege are involved if, in fact, privilege is found.

The second thing is that in my preliminary analysis the proceeding which is the parallel inquiry about which concern might be expressed if the sub judice convention were to apply is not in fact a trial. It is not a civil or criminal court. There is no verdict to be given, and therefore no prejudice, it seems to me, could result from discussion in this House parallel to the discussion taking place before that royal commission. Therefore, on the face of it, because it would involve privilege, which is in the jurisdiction only of this House, and because no prejudice would be apparent, it would seem that the sub judice convention ought not to be applied. However, that was not argued, and I would like to hear argument, if there is any to be made, contrary to my preliminary analysis.

I am also concerned that although the sub judice convention may not have application in this forum, the wisdom of avoiding parallel inquiry is something which was not argued. When we draw upon the testimony before an inquiry, at what stage is it appropriate to draw upon that testimony to proceed with another inquiry here? That testimony can be cross-examined. It may be contradicted. On the other hand, surely this House is not about to wait patiently for the conclusion of the proceedings before the McDonald inquiry before it takes steps of its own, particularly if the House feels that it has been treated with contempt and that a matter of privilege is involved. That is an issue upon which I would like to hear further discussion.

Furthermore, the matter of ministerial responsibility is a question which gives me some concern, and while I recognize that ministerial responsibility is a constitutional doctrine, again I say my preliminary analysis is that it does not have procedural significance as far as the Chair is concerned and, in any case, does not override privilege even if it did have some procedural significance. Nevertheless, it has been quite a generally accepted extension of that doctrine of ministerial responsibility that when serious dereliction of duty by an official of a minister takes place, the minister is expected either to assume responsibility for that in the House or, alternatively, to advise the House of the appropriate disciplinary measure which has been taken.

I say to the House that while I do not think there is procedural significance to the doctrine of ministerial responsibility, it appears that we are now embarking on a different course in having the House, through a question of privilege, reach around the minister and examine directly the conduct of an official. Both of those—parallel inquiries and taking that step in terms of ministerial responsibility—it seems to me are probably not procedural matters but are risks the House is taking. It may be that they are risks which will be examined in debate, and the House will take decisions. They are substantive matters to be considered by the House and not properly procedural matters for the Chair. Those are two concerns I want to leave over for further argument. I do not expect hon. members to be prepared to argue without having time to put their thoughts together.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The final concern I want to leave with the House—and I freely say that it would not be looked upon by me in any case as a fatal concern—is the form of the motion. The customary form of a motion on a question of privilege is very precise and explicit, in that the matter is referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The form of the motion put forward by the hon. member, on the one hand, seems to make a declaration which is in fact a finding that contempt has taken place. On the other hand, it calls for an inquiry to be made in the committee. I have looked at the form of the motion, and it is a departure from previous motions of privilege which have been accepted, but I am far from satisfied that it is out of order. I am not at all convinced that it is out of order and, frankly, I think if there is a procedural irregularity regarding the motion, I would not want to stop an important question like this on that ground. However, if the motion is found to be procedurally irregular or a departure from our regular procedure, I would be sympathetic to an amendment or an alteration to the motion, if we were to carry the matter forward.

I have not, and I do not think I should go on to deal with the basic question of whether the question of privilege has been decided finally by me in favour of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. I will not do that until I have heard other argument.

These other considerations having been set aside, and in line with the precedents I have cited I think most members of the House would find it very difficult to accept that this House is powerless to do anything about a deliberate act to deceive either a minister or, through the minister, the House. However, the final determination will be after argument on those other three points.

I do not want to hear any further argument on the points I have set aside, but I would be grateful if the House would direct itself, at a time which is convenient, to further argument on the questions of whether a parallel inquiry should take place and whether the doctrine of ministerial responsibility in any way affects this question of privilege. I have said already—and I want hon. members to look at my remarks—that I do not think that those are procedural questions, but I would like argument on them nevertheless, as well as on whether the form of the motion should be altered in order to keep it within our practices, if we set these other objections aside.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for your indication as to how we will proceed. I will be conveying that immediately to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) who, no doubt, in the usual way will have discussions with the other House leaders in order to determine the convenient time to which you refer.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to express the same thing, except in reverse. I will be speaking to my friend as well as to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree to come to an agreement as to a reasonable time to do this.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CHILD TAX CREDIT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 7, consideration in committee of Bill C-10, to amend the Income Tax Act to provide for a child tax credit and to amend the Family Allowances Act—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Turner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on Tuesday, November 7, 1978, clause 1 was under consideration.

On clause 1—

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, as you can see from a reading of Hansard for Tuesday night, I had not finished my contribution. May I be given a few moments to finish my reply to the hon. member for Broadview?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Miss Bégin: The hon. member for Broadview spoke of a problem which surely does exist, but I do not think we can bring about any change. The problem is the difference between the treatment of common law marriages pursuant to the Income Tax Act, and legal marriages. The hon. member gave an example of two common law parents with two salaries which total more than $18,000. This mother would be entitled to the child tax credit. If these two people were legally married, they would not qualify for the child tax credit. If common law marriages were recognized under the Income Tax Act, the door would be open to uncontrollable situations. Because of that, I do not see any valid amendment to the bill presently under study. Common law marriages do not have the factor of stability which legal marriages have. That is the basis around which the social policy in Canada has been built. I think this is accepted by hon. members.

● (1552)

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I should like to enter into this debate for a few moments. I would like to have an explanation from the minister concerning what I consider to be major differences between the speech she made during the debate on this bill, and the speeches she made before the bill was introduced. I am referring to the area in her speeches relating to the extent and depth of poverty in this country.

First I will refer to a couple of examples, and then I will put on the record what is the real situation in the country, for the benefit of all hon. members. On Tuesday, November 7, as reported at page 883 of Hansard, the minister said:

> However, in the last ten years absolute poverty in Canada, as given by the indicators of Statistics Canada, has been reduced from 20 per cent to 12 per cent.

She said the same thing in the speech which she gave when the House was considering second reading of the bill. The minister should think about the statements which she made the other night and compare them with the statements which she made in a speech to the Sherbrooke Federal Liberal Association. Her speech was made on March 13, 1978, and it is entitled, "The Myths of Social Policy". She was referring to the dangers of people not understanding what is going on in the country when she said:

> That danger is that in the current swing of the political pendulum we will overlook the needs of millions of Canadians who are far less fortunate than we are. It is, after all, very easy to turn our backs on poverty.

Later on in the speech she said:

> Many, many Canadians believe these myths; you may believe some of them too. But many others know differently. The others are found among the 600,000 working families who must spend two thirds or more of their income to provide the basic necessities of food, clothing and shelter. They are among the nearly two million children living in families with incomes that are inadequate for their needs. They are among the hundreds of thousands of elderly who live below the poverty line.

Further on in the speech she said:

> —Canada's poor families are getting along on an average of one seventh of the income of families in the upper one fifth of our population.

She was referring to her audience when she used the word "you", and I am sure she would say the same thing about members of parliament.

She continued:

> You are likely all in that upper one fifth. Divide your family income by seven and try to imagine what it would be like living on that one seventh.

What happened to the minister between March and November? In March she made that speech, and in November she came into the House to explain and defend the bill which is a good one. Surely the minister knows that there is poverty in Canada. I do not know if anyone else on that side of the House or any other cabinet minister realizes that. The minister was aware of that fact last March. Thus, I cannot understand how she reached the position which she has taken in this debate.

In the minister's speech on second reading, she created the impression that we did not have much poverty, yet approximately two days ago she referred to the fact that the percentage of Canadians living in poverty has dropped from 20 per cent to 12 per cent.

The figures reported by Statistics Canada do not bear out the 12 per cent referred to by the minister. In its fifth annual review in 1968, the Economic Council of Canada indicated that, based on figures from the 1961 and 1965 census, 20 per cent of Canadians were living below the poverty line at that time. Its most recent figures are for 1975 and 1976. They indicate that 11.8 per cent of families and 38.1 per cent of unattached individuals are living below the poverty line. If those figures are combined, approximately 19 per cent of all Canadians were living below the poverty line at that time. I emphasize that the figures used by the Economic Council of Canada and Statistics Canada are conservative ones. They are much lower than the ones used by Senator Croll in his study as a member of the Senate committee.

I should like to refer to the most recent figures for September, 1978. The definition of poverty by Statistics Canada is a conservative one. Perhaps a lot of people classified by Statistics Canada as not living in poverty are living under straitened circumstances. According to the latest income distribution figures, there were 712,000 families and 779,000 individuals living below the poverty line in 1977. This is an increase of approximately 66,000 families and 98,000 individuals who fell below the poverty line in 1977. The minister should tell Canadians and hon. members that in fact there is a great deal to do before we can boast about moving toward a more equitable society. We must move toward eliminating a substantial proportion of the existent poverty.

On second reading the minister argued, because of the very substantial increase in the Canadian gross national product over the last few years, that there has been an increase of 25 per cent in the standard of living of people above the poverty line. If one wants to compare the manner in which poor Canadians live to the lifestyles of poor people in South America or Africa, one would have to say that poor Canadians are living in luxury. The governments of all countries should compare their peoples with the lowest incomes to those with higher incomes.

The minister indicated that Canada had not changed very much in the last 25 or 30 years, that people at the lowest tip of the income distribution scale are receiving between 4 per cent and 6 per cent of the gross national product, and that people in the top one-fifth are receiving something over 40 per cent. That is just the point. We are all living today better than we were five or ten years ago.

● (1602)

The question which has to be faced, and I would have hoped that this minister was just the person on that side, if anybody, to address this problem, is that we have made no real changes in the distribution of wealth in this country and that the people in the bottom fifth of our society are still getting a disproportionately low percentage of the gross national product. There are still far too many people, and they are not in the 12 per cent which the minister spoke about, living in poverty in what should be an affluent country that can look after the needs of all of the people, and which we are not doing.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, my stand and opinion on poverty in Canada have been consistent. Perhaps the hon. member is using my speech as a vehicle for speaking to other members in this House, possibly those to his right. He cannot be talking to me because he knows very well that I have always said that there is still too much poverty in this country of affluence. Many times I have mentioned the 600,000 families with close to two million children who live below the poverty line. I find this unacceptable, and I want to help to erase that situation.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Stevens: Your government has contributed to that.

Miss Bégin: The hon. member for York-Simcoe, the social specialist for the Conservative party, says that we have done nothing about poverty. That is not true. Many things have been done to erase poverty, and it is important to remember what this government has done. Poverty had decreased to a certain degree in this country. The measure of redistribution, however, has not changed, and this bill will help that by putting $300 million more into that group of poor families living below the poverty line. It will be quite a step, certainly not revolutionary, but it is of great importance.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue with the Minister of Finance a line of questioning that I originated during this committee stage with his parliamentary secretary. It has to do with identifying the on-going expenditures with respect to the family allowance program and then relating it to the on-going loss of revenue which may ensue as a result of the tax credit proposal. When I raised this question I specifically requested more detailed information that led to the government telling us that the total savings and costs of these various programs are X hundreds of millions. I was looking for a more detailed breakdown showing the number of family allowance cheques that were involved and the number of tax credits that the government anticipates will be going out.

I suggest that perhaps the parliamentary secretary misunderstood what I was getting at. He tabled a list of certain expenditure reductions and revenue additions or reductions for the year 1978-79 and 1979-80, but perhaps the parliamentary secretary was not aware that the list he tabled had already been put into Hansard. I was well acquainted with that list and, in fact, it was what prompted me to ask for further details.

The refundable tax credit, according to the minister, will result in a loss of revenue of $810 million in the fiscal year 1979-80. Can the minister give us more detail as to how he arrived at that figure, which is the first entry on the table I referred.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we take the number of children receiving family allowances who are, according to the information we have, in families where parents do not pay income tax or pay just a little amount and compare it with the number of family allowance cheques we issue during the year with all the information we could get from the Department of National Health and Welfare and from the Department of National Revenue, based on income tax return forms filled by Canadians, we came to the conclusion that the total amount for fiscal year 1979-80, which is the first year in which these tax credits for children will be paid, will be $810 million.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, what I am asking the minister for is at least an outline of the detail behind the statements which he has made. When the minister says that he takes the number of family allowances and calculates from there, can he tell us the actual numbers behind the $810 million estimate he has given us?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we made a model of certain family incomes that would be involved, and we processed that scientifically with the departments involved. I have explained the ingredients in the model. I cannot bring the model here because it is an IBM machine and there is no room in the House.

Mr. Stevens: The minister may jest, but I think it is a very important question. In the past we have found in many instances that government figures have been proven wrong, literally within six to 12 months. In this case we are being asked to accept an estimate of $810 million as the net revenue loss for the fiscal year 1979-80. Would the minister give us back-up figures to substantiate his estimates?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think that it is one of the elements of the program. There is the refundable tax credit which will be a loss of revenue for that aspect, and we have said there will be an offsetting element, a net gain to the government of $35 million.

Mr. Stevens: You are just dealing with one element.

Mr. Chrétien: It is the process of paying back the credit to the people who will qualify. There is also the reduction in the family allowance, the elimination of the $50 tax credit per child, and there is the modification to exemptions for children age 16 and 17. These elements will offset the $810 million for a net of $35 million. Those are the ingredients which make up the model and enabled us to arrive at an estimate of $810 million.

There are many things that can go into such a model. Can the hon. member provide, for example, the total number of children, the number of families earning under $22,000 a year, their exemptions and so on? It is a complicated question, and we rely on the figures provided by the experts.

The hon. member made a statement to the effect that the government was seldom correct. I was pleased to report to a committee, where the hon. member for York-Simcoe and I seem to meet so often, that we do make errors, and that this year we underestimated our revenue and over-estimated expenditures. That kind of error pleases me.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I will not make any comment on the last little misrepresentation.

● (1612)

Mr. Chrétien: With the reduction of 16 and 17-year olds, 250,000 families will be affected. With the elimination of the $50 credit, 2.7 million families will be affected. The child tax credit that we are introducing will affect 2.5 million families.

Mr. Stevens: I think that is partly the information I was looking for, Mr. Speaker—2.5 million families will be affected as a result of the tax credit. How many children are involved?

Mr. Chrétien: About five million children.

Mr. Stevens: Let me go to the next stage. That is fiscal 1980 which, if we accept the minister's figures, indicates a loss of revenue of $810 million. Could the minister give the House the estimate for fiscal 81-82?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I must say that we do not make such estimates precisely because we do not prepare estimates five years in advance. To be able to give precise figures in this area it is necessary to make very difficult extrapolations because it would be necessary to know the exact income levels of Canadians in two, three and four years, as well as the exact level of inflation during the same years. The hon. member mentioned a few moments ago the difficulty of obtaining very precise figures for a single year and then he asks me for something which is almost impossible to give under the circumstances, namely to give him the figures with the same precision for the next five years.

[English]

We have a good idea that this program will not become more expensive to the government because the revenues it is based on have been indexed and the tax credit program has been indexed as well. They will move parallel. With the higher income and growth in the GNP, the program will move up on both sides of the ledger. The one forecast I can make without scientific information is that the number of children is going down, relatively speaking, so the impact will tend to diminish on the expenditure and revenue side of the government over a period of time. This is a phenomenon that has been in existence for many years. The family allowances program is taking less of government expenditures than before because families tend to be smaller.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister may say it is impossible to give these longer range projections, and he refers to five years. I think that was more than just a slip. He must know that in the United States at the present time all budgetary presentations are made on a five-year basis, showing two years of fairly definitive figures, and three years of forecasts. In the United Kingdom all budgetary calculations are based on a five-year period. If the minister is unaware of this I will be pleased to send him the last United States budget and the last United Kingdom budget. He can then see for himself that what he says is impossible is exactly what our two biggest trading partners have been doing for some time.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I just want to explain to the hon. member again that this program is designed, in terms of expenditures and revenue, to be neutral because it will move on both sides of the ledger. We are making forecasts for five years ahead of time with all sorts of estimates, but we do not go into every aspect of every program. That would be a waste of time. We deal in bigger figures than that, trying to analyse what would be the growth of the economy and so on. In fact, for the first time in Canadian history, last February for the first ministers' conference I tried to make a planning program for five years ahead. Sometimes that comes back to me because we have set a pattern of growth that would be the ideal for the country that we are not achieving at this time. It was done in order to have a model against which to measure performance, so I am ahead of other nations.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, one thing we know that this government and this minister are not ahead on, and that is performance. He has just admitted he is finding it hard to live up to his target of only a few months ago.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reply to that comment. The hon. member's party has acquired a new member for Ottawa Centre who is supposed to be challenging the hon. member for the position he occupies. But the hon. member for Ottawa Centre predicted, on a very neutral basis, not in order to boost the party in power, a 5 cent growth. He was obviously not a friend of ours. Of course there is fluctuation in the pattern of growth, but to the chagrin of the hon. member opposite last month he realized we were quite close to target and forecast a surplus in trade.

Mr. Stevens: The minister is overlooking the fact that when my colleague made the 5 per cent prediction he made it in the context of responsible government, but the fact is that we have not had the leadership to achieve a 5 per cent rate of growth. The 5 per cent rate of growth minimum in Canada is not a totally unachievable target. There is no reason why we could not achieve it if we had better government.

What disturbs me about this bill is the lack of planning with regard to expenditures and revenues. One of the problems this government is now living with—and I think the minister might agree—is that Ministers have indexed the revenue sources available to them. They have indexed many of their expenditure programs and are now in the difficult position of having expenditures indexed to inflation, revenue indexed to inflation, so the revenue is levelling out and expenditures are going up. The result is a $12 billion deficit. That is exactly what this bill is going to put in place.

We reduced the $20 family allowance and the minister says that gave us a $690 million reduction in expenditures, but then it is indexed again. The only year we gained the $690 million reduction in expenditures is one year.

Miss Bégin: No; wrong.

Mr. Stevens: Surely the minister understands that on a $20 basis the expenditure that is said to be saved in reducing the family allowance from $28 to $20 is again indexed next year. What I am saying is that when you have the expenditure side indexed and you have the tax credit indexed, it means there will be an error, increasing loss of revenue, tax revenue, yet an ever expanding expenditure on family allowances. I am saying that if we carry on with the 8 per cent inflation this government has inflicted upon us, once indexing takes hold, the $20 family allowance goes up $1.60, and the $200 tax credit under the same 8 per cent calculation goes up $16.

The dilemma we are faced with in the country is that loss of revenue and rising expenditures in the years ahead—not speaking of this year—are going to widen that much more with every family allowance going up $1.60 per month, with every tax credit going down, as far as revenue is concerned, by $16. If either minister could respond to that I would be very interested to hear their answer.

• (1622)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we can have a long argument about that. In the process by reducing the basic payments that we were making to all families, rich and poor, we have saved a total of $690 million. We have reduced the base from $25.85 this year, which was supposed to increase to $28.80 next year. That has been reduced and has resulted in a saving of $690 million. This saving will be forever because the indexing will be based on a lower base, that is the programs henceforth will be parallel. I do not say there will not be a few dollars here and there, but the principles are such that the program is self-financing, even more with the diminution of children. Relatively speaking it will probably be less expensive in terms of loss of revenues to the government in future years.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister has a staff of three, and he has more staff within calling distance all waiting to work their calculators. I would ask the minister to take a static situation, the same number of children, do not worry about income increases, and tell us what fiscal 1981 will look like, assuming we have 8 per cent inflation for indexing purposes. I believe, if I judged correctly from the minister's response, that the consequence of what I have described as indexing on the tax credit side and indexing on the family allowance side has not been driven home to him yet. Sure, he can say that they have a national expenditure saving of $690 million by reducing the family allowance amount from $25 to $20. But unless the minister makes it very clear to this House that if inflation continues there is a $1.60 extra per $20 payment in the following fiscal year—

Miss Bégin: Per month.

Mr. Stevens: Per month, fine. Any way you want. In other words—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. We will recognize him later.

Mr. Stevens: Maybe I have consent to carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member's allotted 20 minutes have expired. I recognize the hon. member for South Western Nova.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I know we are all anxious to get on with the bill as quickly as possible. However, I think it would save time if I could have an assurance from the minister that, on the basis I have represented, he will get his officials working on 1981 figures just so we can see the impact of an 8 per cent inflation if the situation is still static. Could I have the assurance that the minster will be doing that?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, he loves to have a lot of people work for nothing. I think I have explained the principle. I will make a calculation on the assumption that there will be no more children and inflation will be 6 per cent.

Mr. Stevens: Eight per cent.

Mr. Chrétien: It will not be 8 per cent. I will not buy that one. I will make a calculation that everyone will be quiet for next year and there will be no more children, as you mentioned.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, this is an innovative bill. I say this because the refundable tax credit and its application, in my opinion, introduces for the first time a negative income tax system. In other words—and one of the ministers may wish to correct me on this—the refundable tax credit will not only apply to families with children who are taxpayers but to families with children who owe no taxes and who, in the past, would have been unable to take advantage of the credit. These people, the ones who owe no taxes, the most in need, will receive a benefit for the first time from the tax system. I feel that the use of the tax system to provide a benefit for families, whether or not they owe taxes, brings us a step closer toward the restructuring of our whole system of income support programs. In so doing we come closer to the implementation of guaranteed annual income.

In my opinion a guaranteed annual income program would do away with a lot of income support programs now in existence, such as the old age security, spouse's allowance, guaranteed income supplement for persons 65 years of age and over, family allowance, provincial assistance and other programs of assistance. If we had a guaranteed annual income program I feel we would lessen the burden on the taxpayer, first by reducing the administrative costs of all these individual programs and the duplication of services therein, and by eliminating some of the disincentives to work that are there in the present system.

What is proposed in this bill, in my opinion, is a restructured system of financial support for families with children. I have some concerns, and before I go on to this, Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk about this restructured system. The federal income system will be used to deliver benefits to low and middle income families, including those families below the poverty line who would normally not be affected by the usual tax cuts.

Let us look at the present system. What do we have for families with children? We have the family allowance which provides a taxable benefit of $25.68 a month for each child under the age of 18 in the past year. The dependant's exemption excludes from income tax $460 for each dependent child aged 16 and under, and $840 for a dependant 16 years of age and over but under the age of 18. Both of these two items are presently indexed to the cost of living. We also have an additional measure in the personal income tax which allows a taxpayer, with children, a reduction in federal tax of up to $50 for each child, up to an income of $26,000. This measure has been in existence since the 1977 tax year.

I have looked at the financial implications for 1979-80 concerning the changes as announced in August by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare and now incorporated in this bill. They may be outlined as follows. First, we have the basic federal family allowance which will be reduced to $20 per month per child beginning January, 1979. The current rate is $25.68 a month, and because it is indexed to the cost of living it would have risen to about $28 in January. The savings from the lower payments to be commenced in January are $690 million, so I am informed. The reductions in tax revenues are $130 million, since allowances are taxable. The net saving is $560 million.

Second, the current tax credit of $50 per child under 18 years of age would be eliminated. The savings in this case amount to $260 million. Third is a refundable child tax credit which is going to be introduced to take effect based on the 1978 taxation year. The basic credit will be $200 a year for each dependent child under the age of 18. It will be available in full to any family with net family income of up to $18,000 a year. The credit will be reduced 5 per cent of net family income above $18,000, for an expenditure of $810 million, and fourth, the tax exemption for children age 16 and 17 will be reduced from $840 to $460, the same level as for children under 16. This change is being phased in over two years. Hence taxpayers now benefiting from this deduction will not be affected. The saving will be $25 million.

● (1632)

If one worked this out on paper, he would see that the restructured system will result in a net saving to the government of $35 million in fiscal year 1979-80. In other words, the aggregate benefits provided under the child support system will decline marginally with the new system. The incidence of benefits, however, will change significantly. Benefits to the poorest families will increase. Families with incomes close to the national average will be about the same, while benefits to high income families will decline.

The exact impact of the restructured system on families with different levels of income will vary with the number of children and the province of residence since income tax rates differ from province to province. The effect of the proposed changes will be to redistribute benefits from the wealthier to the lower-income families with children. Since Nova Scotia is a low-income province, relative to the Canadian average, it stands to benefit under the new system.

I am advised that of the total of about 130,000 families in Nova Scotia affected by the proposed changes, roughly 105,000 will be net gainers. The over-all net benefit to Nova Scotia, that is, the increase in benefits over the current system, will be $8 million in 1979, $6 million of which will accrue to families falling below the Statistics Canada poverty line of $9,700 for a family of four members.

The impact of the proposed system on a two-parent family with two children under 16 and living in Nova Scotia can be stated as follows. The definition of net family income is income after deductions for contributions to Canada Pension Plan, unemployment insurance, retirement savings plan, home ownership plans, union dues, tuition fees, child care expenses and other expenses. However, net income is calculated before subtracting personal exemptions.

Going back, a family with an income of $5,000 in Nova Scotia under the 1978 benefits, the existing system, would receive $616. Under the 1979 benefits, the proposed system in this bill, they would receive $880, a positive change of $264.

A family in Nova Scotia with an income of $15,000 would receive under the 1978 benefits, the existing system, $813. The 1979 benefits under the proposed system will be $1,047, a positive change of $234. A family with an income of $20,000 would, under the 1978 benefits, the existing system, receive $832. Under the proposed system, the 1979 benefits would be $984, a positive change of $152.

When you reach the $25,000 family income, the 1978 benefits under the existing system would be $838. Under the 1979 benefits proposed in this bill, they would receive $771, a negative change of $67. I could go on and quote all the changes. However, I am just trying to show what would happen with a family of two parents and two children.

As the foregoing indicates, the benefits under the restructured system vary inversely with family income, with higher income families being net losers. The Department of National Health and Welfare estimates that families with net incomes in excess of $25,000 a year will receive $165 million less in 1979 than they would under the present system. Families with less than $25,000 will gain about $130 million. In terms of the number of families involved, there are about 1.3 million families with incomes in excess of $25,000, and 2.3 million families with incomes below this amount.

How will it work? The first benefits under this new child tax credit program will be paid during the early months of 1979. I do not question the administrative end of it, but I look forward to the Income Tax Department doing its share of the work. It will take effect on the 1978 taxation year and it will, as I have already stated, be based on net family income.

An application or a one-page claim form will be included with each January family allowance cheque to be completed by the parent who normally receives the family allowance. Normally this will be the mother.

I now wish to return to the two areas of my concern. One has to do with the parent who normally receives the family allowance cheque. I am not sure whether it states in the Family Allowance Act that the cheque should be sent to the mother or the father, or whether the father has a right to the cheque if he designates he is the one to receive it. In other words, there may be a change with many families as to who would receive the cheque on a monthly basis. In most cases, it is the husband who is working. He may want to take advantage of the set-off between what is owed under this child tax credit and the amount of his taxes.

How will this affect the receipt of the monthly cheque by the mother if the father is in a position to receive the cheque? I can see a situation where the father did not receive the benefit last year but, under the new plan, will exert a certain amount of pressure within the family relationship in order to receive it in the future.

The other area of concern is the way this is to be paid out. It seems it will need to be done in instalments. Due to the circumstances this year, I feel that a lump sum payment could be made. However, I would like to know whether the Department of National Health and Welfare, in conjunction with the Ministry of Finance, is considering making quarterly instalments on family allowance cheques so that there will be more benefit over the year. Also, if the cheque were received next June, it would be at a time when most people on the Atlantic coast are working. Has the matter of instalments under the family allowance scheme been studied?

These are my two areas of concern. First, can the father be designated to receive the family allowance cheque instead of the mother to whom it has normally been sent? Now that it is being tied into income tax, can this be changed? Will there not be a great revolution with the fathers asking for the cheques?

The other concern is with regard to the lump sum payment or whether this can be done in instalments. I realize that for 1979, because of the implementation of the program for January, it has to be done this way. I would like to know whether it can be done another way in the future.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I have taken note and agree with what the hon. member for South Western Nova said regarding the establishment of a guaranteed annual income as an objective of social policy in Canada as well as being a completely restructured system with tax benefits.

• (1642)

The thrust of her presentation this afternoon, it seems to me, had to do with the effect on Nova Scotia families, and more particularly on families which are now good middle-class families with the money which goes with it but may be of a more recent character. The fact remains that this bill wants to redistribute family allowances within families to those most in need. To Nova Scotia it does bring benefits, and taking into account the slight monthly reduction in family allowances it would bring to the province a net additional $8 million in 1979, $6 million of it going to families in Nova Scotia who live below the poverty line right now. That, I think, is an advantage. Of course some of the wealthier families in the province will lose a bit every year, but we have kept family allowances and that is what I want to stress.

As to what measure of income we propose to use, I want to confirm that it is net income, the take-home pay. All the deductions the hon. member referred to will help bring back into the picture lots of families who make good money but who are not rich. As to the problem of the struggle of mothers versus fathers in the Canadian society of the future, who is going to get the cheque and the "tractations" which may take place within such families, I want to assure the hon. member that there will not be such a problem and that mothers can continue to receive the cheques without any disadvantage to the income tax position of the fathers. This is for the simple reason that the new child tax credit of $200 a year per child will be non-taxable; it will not be declared on the father's income. It is a net benefit and it does not prejudice the other partner in terms of income tax.

We have taken the decision to send the cheque to the mothers in recognition of the present Canadian reality and in accordance with our long standing policy. In cases where fathers have the legal custody of children, fathers will receive the new child tax credit.

As to the last point made by the hon. member for South Western Nova about making the allowance in instalments more frequently than on an annual basis, we shall, of course, be monitoring the situation. I have spoken on that aspect on several occasions in the House. We shall welcome hearing the viewpoint of mothers on this question after the first year of the program's operation. Right now, there are pros and cons on both sides. While possession of a lump sum will have certain great advantages, it is true that there may be abuses by tax discounters. It might assist family budgeting if the credit were made available in several instalments. This is simply a matter of an administrative decision to be made in future years. We intend to monitor the situation carefully and may well recommend payment by several instalments in future years.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that always when I begin a speech by saying I would like to "say a few words" I try to make it a declaration of intent rather than a rhetorical cliché. I say it now. It is a pleasure to be participating in this debate. I haven't heard all the speeches, but I have read them all and understood some of them. I have not been able until this week to be in the chamber this session except on Thursday and Friday, and when people say they have not seen me since God knows when, that is a reflection on their own attendance pattern. But it is not for me to go into that.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare was suggesting that the hon. member for Winnipeg North was really directing his remarks to people sitting right of him, and I want to remind her that I am sitting to his right and I did not need that kind of direction she made.

Miss Bégin: Then he was talking to the angels!

Mr. Macquarrie: The score is, too, that I am sitting on his right, and to the left of most of my colleagues. If that be treason, then make the most of it, as Patrick Henry might have said if he were here.

I am pleased to be associated with a debate led in part by the Minister of Finance who is a man I have known for many years, a man of great charm and humour—and heading the portfolio he heads in the way he heads it, he needs a sense of humour. I am delighted he has one. I was impressed to read that he had declared this debate as one of the most significant social policy reforms in a decade. That is quite a sweeping statement. The minister, as I say, is a charming man, but if we ever had in this country a post similar to the oracle at Delphi I would suggest that he not even apply. I say this in terms of his prophetic record.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: I was impressed by some concerns which have been raised by many of my colleagues in a matter which, in general, is one which looks pretty appealing. I think the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and the hon. member for Egmont have still to get fulsome answers to the anxieties which they expressed with reference to certain very important matters. I was impressed too by the address by the new hon. member for Rosedale and by that of my colleague for St. John's East.

There seem to be some contradictory elements in this measure which mar our enthusiasm a bit. The lady minister is one of my favourite ministers in the whole cabinet. I cannot even hope to come close to the honourable, learned, and venerable member for Winnipeg North Centre who praised her so fulsomely, but if she would not consider it praising with faint damns or damning with faint praises I would say she is one of the most enlightened ministers of the particular group now in charge of our destinies.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The trouble is she is so lonely in that cabinet.

Mr. Macquarrie: The hon. member says she is lonely and I notice he goes over and talks with her every so often.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: But I, Mr. Chairman, am too young and too shy to go over and talk with good looking women.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: I admire him for doing so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You may find yourself there some day yourself.

Mr. Macquarrie: The thing that does appeal, of course—and no person with a social conscience would be too disturbed by this—is that basically we are trying to direct government assistance where it is most helpful. Someone long ago, who did not belong to this House, said, "To each according to his needs", and that is not a totally erroneous description of how the power of government should be used. It is not an improper position in any way.

I have certain little anxieties that in this measure we are, to a degree, assaulting the principle of universality and moving in effect, if not by declaration, back toward something a little closer to the means test mentality. That is something which has always upset me because I began my political career 22 years ago, when we had to deal with all sorts of senior citizens in this country who would ask the Conservative candidate, "Is it true that if you win we shall lose our old age pension?" That is something I shall never forget. It was a very mean abuse of our older people. I have a deep-seated emotional anxiety about that. Perhaps if I were back in university I might be tempted to use the word "syndrome". But what is becoming increasingly apparent—and I noticed it earlier this afternoon when my colleague from York-Simcoe, who has a calculator here—and the Minister of Finance has one over there—was engaging in a discussion about, as I recall, de-indexing, non-indexing and re-indexing. I am not a geronton by any means but I have been here a long time and one thing I am certain has happened—this is no cause and effect relationship; I have watched it—is that our legislative measures are becoming constantly more complicated.

I predict to both ministers that there will be trouble ahead in interpretation; there will be trouble ahead in administration. And I always believe it is basically a bad thing a priori if you confuse, compound and complicate the relationship of a citizen with his government. That is most assuredly going to happen with this measure. God knows that the Minister of Finance deserves credit for being persistent, and I am quite sure that he will continue to make predictions. I am also sure that as month follows month it will be discovered that the hon. member for York-Simcoe is far more capable of predicting the future than is the minister.

● (1652)

I do not applaud the elaborateness which is coming into this measure. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is a Canadian with a very highly developed social conscience, and I think the intent of this measure is not at all bad, but I have a feeling that as it is administered the Canadian people will find that it is not nearly so great a measure as the Minister of Finance proclaimed it to be in his opening paragraph.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I want to reply to three points made by the hon. member. There is no means test at all. No bureaucrats from the Department of National Health and Welfare will be moving into houses, looking at people's assets and so forth. There is no danger of that.

The universal aspect remains, but we are trying to target surplus funds to areas where they are needed. I recognize that the system will be more complex, but we have to live with that if we want to achieve our goals.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that my fears are not at all allayed by her remarks about who will be allowed to claim family allowance cheques. When I was working on my private member's bill regarding parental kidnapping, I discovered that it really is possible for husbands to abduct their children and get family allowance cheques, even though they are not granted custody. That has happened. The minister shakes her head. I will send her a copy of the correspondence which indicated that to me.

My question is really to the Minister of Finance. I listened to his response to the hon. member for York-Simcoe, and in his response he used the term "self-financing". I want to make sure I heard him correctly. The government collects taxes from Canadians across Canada and, to use a favourite word of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, "redistributes" that revenue in $20 cheques per child and in $200 tax credits per child. Does the minister consider this continuous accumulation of tax revenues and continuous redistribution to families across Canada to be a self-financing proposition?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, if we look at both sides of the ledger we find that we are reducing some payments and changing some exemptions in order to introduce refundable tax credits. The two are in balance.

I said earlier that at the end of the year there will be a difference of $35 million, that difference representing more cash in the hands of the government than before. The hon. member for York-Simcoe asked me to use my calculator. Using all the assumptions he has made, the amount will be $45 million rather than $35 million. The hon. member for York-Simcoe is not listening. Perhaps I should repeat what I said in French so that he can understand. We have made the calculations he has made. I do not now if his calculator is as good as mine, but assuming the same number of children and a rate of inflation of 6 per cent next year, the difference will be $45 million and not $35 million, as it is this year. It is virtually the same thing.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I assure the minister that neither calculator is at fault. Perhaps the inputs are different.

Mr. Chrétien: I used your input.

Mr. Stevens: I would like the minister to tell me where I am going wrong. On November 6 his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, told us that the $690 million figure was arrived at by taking $8 per child—that is the proposed reduction from next year's figure—times 12 months times the number of cheques issued for the children of Canada, which is 7.2 million. If the minister puts that through his calculator, he will find that he gets approximately $690 million. I took the minister's own 6 per cent calculation, which means that there will be $1.20 more on every $20 payment as a result of indexing. I went through the multiplications and got $103 million. With regard to the credit, if we take five million children, which I think was the minister's number, times $12—I have extended it, in fact, the minister might be interested to know, until 1985 using his inflation figures on both sides—what we find is that the net cost to the treasury, if things simply stay static through the loss of revenue and the expenditure increases, will be $1 billion in that year.

Am I wrong to conclude that there will be $103 million in added expenditures due to indexing alone based on the 7.2 million cheques to which the Minister of National Health and Welfare referred earlier?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we could go on ad nauseam making calculations. The hon. member asked me a precise question. I asked my officials to make calculations. We used the figure of 6 per cent. We multiplied the figures by 6 per cent, and we came to a net gain of $45 million for next year rather than $35 million. That was the calculation the hon. member asked us to make. If he changes the hypothesis and goes on to something else, we could spend eternity calculating. The hon. member's calculation included the $690 million figure. The hon. member came to that. I do not think it is fair to ask me to make calculations in the House of Commons. There should be a limit to this nonsense. We are wasting time. I enjoy it; I do not mind—hon. members opposite can put all kinds of questions to us, and we can put figures into computers and produce replies—but this is just a waste of time. We have a good bureaucracy in this country, and it can make these calculations.

Our officials do not try to fool anybody. They are honest people who want to give us honest answers. I do not do the calculations myself. I do not pretend that I do, and I never will. I think it is pure nonsense to be caught up in this situation. I am in the midst of preparing my budget, and I am fed up with this kind of nonsense.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The minister knows that I have requested this information twice. He has failed to give it to us. If he wants time, that is fine. I do not expect him to be able to calculate on his knee, but I have asked for this information twice. May we have it tomorrow, and not just for next year, in which I think there will be $160 million at stake?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for York-Simcoe that this is not a point of order but a point of debate.

Progress reported.

• (1702)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Transport—Movement of grain to export positions; the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Request for explanation of Prime Minister's comment on state of corporation; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Finance—Funds research and development.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills. since there are no items on the order paper under private bills and notices of motions (papers), the House will proceed to the consideration of private members' public bills.

Item No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion stands by unanimous consent.

* * *

BILL OF RIGHTS FOR CHILDREN ACT

MEASURE TO PROTECT FREEDOM AND DIGNITY OF CHILDREN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved that Bill C-204, respecting a Canadian Bill of Rights for Children, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before proceeding with the consideration of item No. 4, I would appreciate if the House would allow me a few minutes to put in front of hon. members some of my preoccupation regarding a few private members' public bills which, at this time appear on the order paper.

At the beginning of every session the Chair always is in a situation to authorize the first reading in one block of a great number of private members' public bills, without having the chance to pass judgment on their procedural acceptability. Thus, it is always with a reservation or caveat that first reading is given, with the understanding that the Chair may, upon consideration of second reading stage of such bills, inform members of some irregularities or infringement of the rules or practices of the House.

Although there seems to be a disposition by unanimous consent to refer the subject matter of Bill C-204 to committee, and I am sure no member would oppose the objective of the bill which is scheduled today for private member's hour, this bill includes an irregularity which creates a doubt about its procedural acceptability; not really in itself, but in the fact that it opens the door to further abuses on other occasions.

Despite the fact that this bill, or an identical bill, was allowed to be debated earlier this year during the previous session, the Chair feels it is necessary at this time to intervene and interpose its authority, because now it becomes quite clear we will be faced within the near future with a far-reaching precedent which could be set for many other such bills already listed on the order paper.

Before proceeding with the consideration of this bill, I thought it was appropriate to make the case and establish the position of the Chair. It appears to me that this bill, and other similar ones, are out of order at first glance. This bill seems to infringe the financial initiative of the Crown.

Clause 4 of Bill C-204 reads as follows:

> Such officers and employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the work of the task force may be selected from the Public Service of Canada and the public service of the provinces.

That clause, as well as the objectives laid down in clause 5, will necessitate expenditures of a nature which would require the financial initiative of the Crown. These financial initiatives are the first items mentioned at page 754 of May's nineteenth edition under the appropriate heading, as follows:

> MATTERS REQUIRING THE QUEEN'S RECOMMENDATION
>
> 1. Moneys to be Provided by Parliament
>
> The most frequent case of expenditure of this type is that of charges upon moneys to be provided by parliament for salaries and other expenses caused by the imposition of novel duties upon the executive government by the legislation of the session.

Further down the page, it reads as follows:

> Instances of charges imposed upon moneys to be provided by parliament occur in abundance every session. The following examples may be given:
>
> (1) The expenses connected with the establishment of a new department—
>
> (2) The expenses arising out of the imposition of new duties on an existing department or authority—

If this bill is to impose a new duty on officers of the Crown, it falls within the citation in May's to which I have referred.

Another point is disturbing for the Chair. Clause 6 of the bill reads as follows:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed as requiring an appropriation of any part of the public revenue.

Similar clauses are found in many other bills. Of course the Chair is not concerned with the application which might be made of the clause, if the bill becomes written in the statutes. That is a matter for the courts to decide. But the House should be cautioned that the Chair could not interpret the incorporation of such a clause in a private member's public bill as an acceptable way of eluding the requirement for a royal recommendation where such recommendation is required.

The practice of incorporating clauses of this nature in private members' public bills is relatively new, but it is being applied to an increasing number of bills, all of which have this in common: that there might be some doubt as to the need for a royal recommendation for the implementation of a bill because of financial requirements.

It should be understood clearly that the Speaker, and only the Speaker, has the duty and responsibility to determine whether any bill requires a royal recommendation, and that the Speaker is empowered to decline to put the necessary questions on bills which require royal recommendations but fail to obtain it.

• (1712)

It is equally clear that when the required royal recommendation is not obtained in relation to a bill, the Chair must interpose its authority before any further proceeding is embarked upon on the bill. Under the heading "Enforcement of Rules of Financial Procedure", May's nineteenth editon, page 709, states:

> Questions of interpretation are decided by the Speaker, or if they arise in committee, by the chairman. In discharging its duty of disallowing any proceedings which would infringe the rules of financial procedure, the Chair relies in the last resort upon its power to decline to propose the necessary questions. It is principally by the action of the Chair that the financial practice of the House has been developed, its principles defined, and any deficiencies in the standing orders (such as those mentioned on p. 710) supplemented.

And a few lines further down its says:

> Unless the recommendation of the Crown enjoined by SO No. 89 be signified, the Speaker cannot propose the question on a motion which comes within the scope of this standing order. Accordingly, if any motion or bill or proceeding is offered to be moved, whether in the House or in a committee, which requires but fails to receive the Queen's recommendation, it is the duty of the Chair to announce that no question can be proposed on the motion or to direct the withdrawal of the bill.

I am sure all hon. members are aware of our Standing Order 62, but this same requirement is also provided for in the British North America Act under section 54.

The rules of financial procedure are so stringent that there is no provision whereby the Speaker might leave it to the House to decide whether or not a royal recommendation is required for a particular bill or to allow the House to do it by unanimous consent. It is interesting to note—and this is important—that even if the Chair were tempted to abnegate its responsibilities in this area by allowing a bill to be proceeded with on the basis of the inclusion of a clause claiming that no appropriation would be made of any part of the public revenue, it would not be the House but one of its committees which would in fact decide on the application of the financial initiative of the Crown, because it is in committee that the various clauses of a bill are dealt with. For example, clause 6 or a like clause could be defeated in committee and removed from the bill.

The Chair has therefore come to the conclusion that clause 6 of this bill, and similar clauses in other bills, whatever their purpose or object may otherwise be, will not be given any consideration in determining whether or not there is any infringement of the financial initiative of the Crown. I therefore intend to continue, according to past practice, to examine every private member's public bill as it is proposed for consideration to ensure that the provisions of Standing Order 62 are not violated.

In the case of Bill C-204, however, it is my view that the peculiar circumstances surrounding this bill are such that its further progress should not be impeded. In fact, it has already been debated in this House during the previous session. The money implications, if not minimal, are difficult to identify, and perhaps the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), in his eloquence, may have been able to convince the Chair to that effect.

With all these things taken into account, I am ready to allow the consideration of Bill C-204, but I would caution the House that this decision is not to be considered as a precedent for similar bills in the future. With this proviso, I am ready to put the question on second reading of Bill C-204, but I would add that there are at least two bills which give great concern to the Chair, Bill C-210 and Bill C-237, because they involve public moneys, one of them hundreds of millions of dollars, and they both bear a type of clause 6 which I do question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, were it not for your charm and graciousness in handing down your ruling, I would feel obliged to place on the record of the House the fact that you, sir, have already taken up 20 minutes of the one hour set aside by the House for this bill. I will resist that temptation excepting to say that I hope in the future it will be possible for the Chair to give these rulings before these bills come up for second reading so that they will not cut into the very precious few minutes we have in private members' hour.

You must bear in mind, sir, that these bills are drafted by the law officers of the House of Commons, the very people who advise Your Honour at the table. Having said that, I also hope that you will, like Admiral Nelson at Trafalgar, cast a blind eye to the clock when it comes six o'clock so that some of my colleagues will be able to make a contribution to this debate.

I will not make a speech because this bill was debated in the House in the last session on May 12, 1978. I would simply refer hon. members to page 5390 in the May 12 issue of Hansard. I will not repeat the statements I put on the record at that time, except to bring the House up to date on what has happened since then.

This is the fourth occasion that I have had the honour of presenting to this House a bill dealing with the rights of children, the exploitation of children on television, the impact of television on children and the home, and the impact of television violence on children. I am particularly concerned with this bill which deals with the rights of children, because next year will be the International Year of the Child. It was so designated by the United Nations in 1976 in order to draw attention to the Declaration of the Rights of Children, a protocol which was accepted and signed by the member states of the U.N. 20 years ago in 1959. Canada was a signatory to that declaration.

I would refer hon. members to the protocol which is attached to the bill. Each member state of the UN was expected to establish a commission to mark the International Year of the Child and to draw to the attention of that state the obligation that it had assumed as a signatory to the protocol. The United Nations set out as its objective in establishing the International Year of the Child:

> To provide a framework for advocacy on behalf of children and for enhancing the awareness of the special needs of children on the part of decision-makers and the public.

● (1722)

> (b) to promote recognition of the fact that programs for children should be an integral part of economic and social development plans with a view to achieving, in both the long term and the short term, sustained activities for the benefit of children at the national and international levels.

We were a little late getting started, but we established our commission and in Ottawa we have a secretariat with inadequate funding. I hope that is something the government can be advised of in a more forceful way than I intend to pursue in this House.

As you have indicated, Mr. Speaker, there is a disposition by the House, by agreement, to have this bill discharged and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs where witnesses can be heard. I will enlarge on that later, Mr. Speaker, but I do not want to take up too much of the time of the House now. The objectives and functions in the International Year of the Child that Canada has assumed are stated as follows:

> Promote observance in Canada of 1979 as International Year of the Child through the encouragement of the widespread involvement of individuals, communities and organizations in activities designed to advance the rights, interests and well-being of children in the context of their families and society.

The specific aims are set out as follows:

> 1. To stimulate families, communities, societal institutions, organizations, governments and all persons concerned to review the quality of childhood in their respective purviews;
>
> 2. To encourage all concerned to work together to establish long and short-term plans, programs and services aimed at strengthening the forces that enhance optimal child development and parenting;
>
> 3. To encourage the celebration of the joy of childhood and the very special place that children have in society and to create a milieu in which children's activities, creativity, imagination, ideas and thinking can be widely portrayed and demonstrated;
>
> 4. To recognize and enhance the role of parents and the art of parenting, and to find ways and means to support parenthood and the family in the Canadian society; and
>
> 5. To enhance in children the concept of their personal identity and worth as individuals belonging to a given cultural, linguistic, religious, social or ethnic group, and to the Canadian and world communities.

I thought it would be worth while to put these objectives on the record of the House of Commons.

Almost by happy coincidence with the introduction of this bill for the second time for second reading, the Canadian Council on Children and Youth issued a report of a task force which the council established in 1975 under the honorary chairmanship of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall. It was a distinguished task force representing all parts of the country, with various professional expertise in the field of children, children's rights and the family.

I had the honour of making a submission to that task force in September, 1976. It was that submission which prompted me to place this bill before the House. It was the catalyst that brought this together and brought into perspective, in so far as the Parliament of Canada is concerned, the rights of children in this changing society. I would commend the report to hon. members. It is entitled "Admittance Restricted" with the subtitle "The Child as a Citizen in Canada."

It is interesting that the title is "Admittance Restricted." Just a few days ago we read of a highrise apartment building in Toronto which advertised for tenants but stipulated "No Dogs Or Children." That is an interesting, ironic and sad commentary on our times and the changing society in which we live.

The rights of children are summed up in this paragraph on page 17 of the publication:

> While insisting on the universality and individuality of human rights, we recognize the need for society to take special responsibility for identifying and safeguarding the rights of those who are incapable of doing so for themselves. Children have no claim on special freedoms which should not be available to all citizens, but their inability to insist upon their rights is an argument for special representation, not an excuse for ignoring them.

We have been ignoring the rights of children because they are not vocal. For example, we addressed ourselves to the rights of women because they were a vocal group in our society and we were able to redress some of the injustices that had crept into society with respect to the rights of women. It was not too long ago, and the House would do well to remember, that women's rights in Canada were not talked about. Women were looked upon almost as the chattels of their husbands in terms of law. They had virtually no rights before the courts of the land. We changed that, but that is the position children are in today; they are the chattels of their parents and very often the chattels of the surrogate parent, the state, the foster parent, the single parent.

The ultimate right of children is the right to life itself. I cannot resist bringing that in, because we should become more and more concerned with the ultimate right, namely, the right to life itself. Abortions in this country are growing at a rapid rate. There were 11,152 recorded abortions in Canada in 1970; in 1976 the number had risen to 54,536. How many of those pregnancies were aborted beyond the stage they could even be considered, in the widest interpretation, on therapeutic grounds? I will not go into that any further, Mr. Speaker.

I believe that by allowing the subject matter of this bill to go to committee, the House is addressing the fact that the Parliament of Canada should properly involve itself in the International Year of the Child. This would be the most meaningful way we could do so, by having a committee of the House examine the area of children's rights in Canada.

I believe the country looks to us as legislators to provide leadership in this field, as we had to provide leadership in the field of human rights when dealing with the rights of women, minority rights, and discrimination on racial or religious grounds. There is a large segment in society to whom we deny those basic rights. We do not give them rights before the court; they have no advocates; they are nameless, faceless, until they appear in the form of a tragedy reported in the newspaper as battered children, murdered children, abused children. Then it is too late. That addresses itself to the negative aspect of our law dealing with the rights of children. The law cannot act until an offence takes place; then it is too late. I hope the committee will address that problem when it meets.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the House in anticipation for the consideration this bill will receive. I end it by reminding the House that it is about time we considered the position of children and their rights as citizens in our changing society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief because, I hope we will be able to refer the subject matter within the time allotted, as has been agreed.

I should like to start by congratulating the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who has the peculiar facility of getting his bills accepted in the House and in committee. I have often wanted to talk to him about his success. I suspect the eloquence he displays in this place must be displayed to individual members on a continuous basis. He seems to have made a very significant contribution—and I say this in all seriousness— not merely to the question of the rights of the child but to sensitizing the Canadian constituency to the problems of children. I refer, of course, to his success on the subject of advertising and the manipulation of children by advertising.

● (1732)

Unfortunately that unanimous recommendation which was initiated by the hon. member for St John's East has not yet seen legislation, but we are still hopeful we can begin to look at this whole question of restricting advertising. The reason I want to commence my remarks about the subject of advertising, which the hon. member for St. John's East has raised before, is that when we are dealing with the rights of children and dealing with a piece of legislation which wishes to place in the law the protection of children, if one looks at the question of advertising that justifies the need for a general law. We tend to be hypocritical in this country about how we treat our children. We should see ourselves as children see us. We still consider children to be chattels or property.

As the hon. member for St. John's East pointed out, there is a movement concerning women that recognizes that there is less of a feeling of property toward them, but we have not progressed very far along the road in that respect with regard to children. Let me give some examples of why this attitude toward children is so strange, unnatural and inhuman. First, how many of us have seen the example of a group care home or a home for unwed mothers attempting to settle somewhere in a subdivision. Over and over again we hear "It is okay to have it, but do not put it next to my house".

The urban areas of Canada have experienced that over and over again. This is best illustrated by the number of people who show up at protest meetings and those who go down to the city council and say, "We cannot have those disturbed children in our area." All those people, of course, will insist that they have a very humane approach to their own children and to other children, but their actions belie this statement. They have more concern for the value of their property than they do for the tremendous resources we have in the children of this country. So there is this attitude of looking at children as chattels.

Our commercial world looks upon children not as children but as a market. This is a market to be manipulated by advertising, a market to make sure that the child will persuade the parent to buy a particular product and too often that product has no nutritional value at all. Again, there has to be something in the law that says Canadians must change their attitudes toward children. Last but not least, and it is something that the hon. member touched upon, is the whole question of discrimination against children. The hon. member referred to the commonly seen sign saying that children and dogs are not wanted. Presumably they will accept a boa constrictor and birds, but children have no place there. We are letting our children grow up in segregated areas; by this, I mean places where they do not see their grandparents. As the family network is broken down nothing has replaced it.

If a child was abused there was a time when the grandfather would beat up the father who abused the child. But that does not happen any more. Children have been left in limbo with no protection. Because our society has changed and the extended family has broken down, we in this place must replace it with rights and law.

I want to speak about one special area that the bill does not deal with specifically but which would be covered. That area concerns the problems of the native children in Canada. This group of children is more abused than any other. This is due to the native culture being under attack. It has been ever since western Europeans came to North America. When you look at that culture under seige, the victims are mostly native children because they come from a different tradition. Native parents by tradition have been kinder to their children. Europeans have tended to be more disciplinarian and have tended to use corporal punishment. However, if you look at numbers for Canada as a whole, the most abused child tends to be the native child. As I say, his culture is under attack and in our community we have tended to take away the pride of his heritage. This is a special problem we will also have to deal with.

The hon. member for St. John's East also referred to the question of the right to life, the question of the right of a child to be born. He and I have some differences over how we can accomplish this. I just want to say briefly that I do not know anyone in this place who is not seeking to reduce the number of abortions that take place in Canada. I am not sure the law that we have in fact has contributed one way or the other to the increase in abortions. But I do know this, that unless a child is a wanted child and unless we concentrate on family planning and birth control so that those who are born are needed and wanted, then we cannot begin to get a handle on the question of the abuse of children.

It is all very well to talk about the right to life, but it must be talked of in the context of the right to happiness and the right to a child's existence. Instead of arguing about what we are going to do in terms of the abortion law, let us get down to arguing about the reality of birth control. Let us get down to arguing about the reality of allowing parents to decide whether or not they want children so that every child is a wanted child, a cherished child and a loved child. This is one way we can make a substantial contribution to the prevention of child abuse.

Lastly, in the field of child abuse and in the field of crime we have arrived too late on the scene. In Canada the theory is, in order to solve a crime the criminal is the one to be attacked rather than the cause of the crime. The same is true with regard to child abuse. We do not have preventive programs, such as programs to identify the high-risk parents, being those parents who are likely to need some kind of counselling and support so they will not abuse their children.

There is one program in North America, I believe in Colorado, that has shown a good deal of success. In my community of New Westminster we have one of the better child abuse programs, but it needs some additional help. There is an application presently before the minister of health to fund a prevention program, a program which will seek to identify high-risk families and prevent abuse of the child before it becomes a reality. If we can do that in the area of child abuse, we should think about doing it also in the area of crime, in terms of preventing anti-social behavior, identifying, for example, psychopathic behaviour earlier. There is not much point in the long run in attacking the parents and the victims without attempting to prevent the occurrence.

I would like to congratulate the hon. member for St. John's East who I think is doing a fine job of sensitizing the Canadian people to this particular problem. I wish him the very best. He certainly has our support to move this subject forward.

● (1742)

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) in congratulating the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and recognizing with him the need to make Canadians and this House aware of the importance of protecting and promoting children's rights. And in that respect, in the little time I have—as the hon. member suggested, we are looking forward to having an opportunity to consider that question more fully in the committee on justice and legal affairs—I would yet like to point out a few of the accomplishments that have been made in the area of the protection of children's rights.

Children's rights may be affected in various ways, particularly by what is called family law. First, several legal decisions can affect the individual status of children. Adoption and status claim actions are exemples of that. Second, certain matters can affect the material or financial status of children. That is the case of alimony claim actions or support orders that nearly always accompany separation as to board and room and divorce. Third, certain matters have to do with the protection and social well-being of children. I will mention petitions to get the care of the child, tutelage, and judicial hearings in the area of juvenile delinquence.

Most of those matters come under the jurisdiction of the provinces and not the federal government as child protection is obviously a shared jurisdiction. However, the Department of Justice made remarkable efforts in areas under its jurisdiction to promote legislation to provide better protection for the rights of children. Some of those efforts, for example, were intented to strenghten as much as possible the family tie and find human and constructive solutions to problems which could be solved through unified family courts. There are now some provinces four or five different courts dealing with family law. Household breakdowns raise several problems that can all be brought before one traditional court or another. No court has jurisdiction to pass judgment on those matters, let alone assess the problems from which they origin. The federal government considers it necessary to put up a system of courts which would be the only one with jurisdiction in family law, not only to put an end to the scattering of family problems in federal courts but also to make available to the people a judicial institution specially designed to deal with the family as a distinct entity.

This is a new concept which offers tremendous advantages as regards the settlement of disputes and which proposes many alternatives for solving various family problems. Most of these courts would not only allow couples in the process of separation to avail themselves of consultation or reconciliation services, but they would especially help married couples from getting to that point by facilitating their reconciliation. The principal mandate of this court would be to offer services likely to help people, if at all possible, to come to some common ground of understanding, instead of resorting to prosecution. Of course, the federal government cannot institute, by its own will, such courts in the provinces, as the administration of provincial justice, including the setting up and organization of civil and criminal courts as well as civil procedure, are, in terms of legislation, a provincial responsibility. However, the Department of Justice, following the recommendations contained in the Law Reform Commission's working paper on family courts, published in 1974, has made available to the provinces funds aimed at promoting pilots experiments by way of family courts.

Another area under federal legislative jurisdiction that involves children's rights is of course the matter of divorce. As many members are aware, the report on family law put out by the Law Reform Commission of Canada was tabled by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) in the House on May 4, 1976. The report urged that the children of estranged parents be the legislator's first concern. To that end, the commission recommended that the Divorce Act be amended to recognize two basic rights of children, when their parents are divorced. The first was the right to social and psychological help, in terms of reaching the best possible arrangement in the circumstances concerning custody and education. The second was the right to financial help. The commission further recommended the establishment of a new divorce process ensuring that arrangements concerning children be made in an extra-judicial context, to reduce the current need for a defensive position in husband-wife dealings that lead to the divorce. The commission is of the view that a legal framework based on confrontation and responsibility without social and conciliation services hardly protects human or psychological values, the key factor in safeguarding children's interests.

The commission concluded that under the current Divorce Act, it is improbable or impossible in practice to examine a number of factors that are vital to children, and to openly discuss those factors. The commission recommended the setting up of a new mechanism to solve children's problems arising out of divorce, a mechanism aimed at supporting parent and court efforts to arrive at a sensible and human solution. Within that process, the commission recommended further that the court be empowered to order that a child be represented by counsel other than that of either parent. The commission finally recommended that the Divorce Act take into account children's desires, to the extent the court finds this appropriate, based on children's age and maturity. The Department of Justice is studying the recommendations put forward by the Law Reform Commission of Canada and their report on family law, as well as numerous briefs sent to the department in response to that publication and recommendations by the Law Reform Commission and other recommendations by a number of bodies, groups and individuals concerning the current Divorce Act reform.

[English]

Another area of concern of the Minister of Justice has been the problem of abduction of children by non-custodial parents. The Minister of Justice, as a result of his deep concern, introduced Bill C-51 on May 1 of this year in the last session of parliament. This bill proposes to amend the current section 250 to create the offence of abduction of a child under 14 by a parent either in contravention of a custody order made by a Canadian court or in special circumstances where there is no custody order in relation to that child made by the court anywhere in Canada, but the child is taken with intent to deprive the other parent or guardian or any other person who has care or charge of that child of the possession of that child. The offence would not apply to a person who abducted a child in circumstances where the court is satisfied that the obtaining or retaining of possession of that child was essential for the welfare of the child, but the amendment specifically provides that the court shall not be so satisfied by reason only of the granting of a custody order in favour of the accused after the possession of that child was obtained or retained.

In addition, the Minister of Justice has actively encouraged the provincial attorneys general to enact provincial legislation that would provide for the mandatory recognition and enforcement of foreign custody orders in Canada, and to date eight provinces have done so. In 1976, Canada proposed that the 1980 Hague Conference on Private International Law deal with the problem of international child abductions and it appears that formal approval has now been given by the Netherlands State Commission to include the subject of child-napping on the agenda for the 1980 meeting.

Another question of concern is child abuse. The Minister of Justice has also shown concern over increasing the responsiveness and the effectiveness of the criminal law in cases of child abuse. This concern has resulted in an amendment proposed to section 4 of the Canada Evidence Act contained in Bill C-51, introduced on May 1 of this year and, we hope, reintroduced soon in this session. This amendment recognizes that criminal convictions are difficult to obtain in child abuse cases because it must be established beyond a reasonable doubt that a particular person assaulted the child.

Abuse of children generally takes place in the privacy of the home in the absence of witnesses who can or will testify. Normally the only witnesses to the abuse are the other members of the family, that is, the other parent and other children. Under existing evidence rules, if the parents or adults of the household are not legally married, the law considers them strangers for the purposes of criminal proceedings and the prosecution can compel one to testify against the other. However, if the parents are married, the spouse not charged is neither compellable nor competent to give evidence for the prosecution, even if he or she were willing to do so, unless the offence is one of a number of specified exempted offences, and a non-sexual assault on a child is not one such offence. The amendment proposed provides that the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence against any specified code sections where the victim is under the age of 14 is a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution without the consent of the person charged. The specified sections include common assault.

Additional study is continuing in the Department of Justice in an attempt to increase the effectiveness of other Criminal Code provisions relating to cruelty to children. In particular, this involves the offences of abandonment and exposure, failure to provide necessities of life, and assault as well as the provision relating to the right of a parent or school teacher to use reasonable force by way of correction against a child.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I lack the time to go over the list of measures that the government has taken over the years to promote children's rights. In this regard, I think the move by the hon. member for St. John's East, which will allow us to discuss the matter at lenght in committee and formulate any recommendation that may be necessary to improve the situation further is welcomed by the Minister of Justice and the government. I expect that later on in the debate, which is unfortunately getting shorter, somebody will seize the opportunity to move that the subject of the bill, once it is withdrawn, be referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

• (1752)

[English]

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for presenting this bill for further consideration, despite the fact that it has been before the House before but was not referred to committee for consideration.

I assume the Chair will give us a little extra time because of the remarks made at the outset of this private members' hour. I intend my contribution to be very short and I do not propose to encroach upon the time limit.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) talked about group homes. I should like to say that in my riding of Toronto-Lakeshore such a home was opened only last week. More and more communities are realizing the feasibility of providing such group homes. I am glad that the subject matter of this bill will probably be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for consideration; it is to be assumed that no one will talk it out today. I will therefore restrict my remarks to the question whether the implementation of a bill of rights for children is the best mechanism for reaching the objective the hon. member has in mind and also whether the timing is right.

The several principles of the United Nations declaration of the rights of the child which are included in Bill C-204 can be summed up as a child's right to an environment which encourages his or her physical, mental, social and spiritual growth. Quite frankly, I am not sure how we can legislate for that, or even legislate against actions which would interfere with growth. We are, in fact, faced with a dilemma because children are so completely dependent on adults for their development over such a long period of time and under conditions of such intimacy that I think a positive declaration of rights can amount to nothing more than guiding principles with little impact in law. Yet despite the probability that there would be little legal impact, I recognize that the bill would still be very useful as this nation's statement of its ideal role vis-à-vis children regardless of the reality. There is, though, a danger, as I see it, in such a document. We risk assuming that in the act of printing words we have made the ideal reality. Let us not fool ourselves. Not all of Canada's seven million children are assured protection, health, social security, an atmosphere of affection or full opportunities for play and recreation. And saying they should be won't make it so.

Another danger with respect to the bill is that it introduces a subtle adversary concept. The idea of children's rights or "kids' lib" is too often pitted against the concept of parental rights. I have had this experience myself. In my constituency, some parents who are excellent at the job of child rearing and who have made the UN's ten principles a reality in their homes have a real distrust of the concept. One man said to me the other day that children would be able to call an ombudsman who would decide whether he had a "right" to stay up until 9.30 p.m., decline to practise the piano, skip breakfast, etc. We know this is not the intention of the legislation before us but I do not think we will be any further ahead if we implement legislation which parents distrust and fear. For some time to come, children will be living with their parents or other caretakers. What the family needs, regardless of its constitution, is not a divisive mechanism but rather as much support as possible in as many ways as possible.

We hear a lot these days about parents who abuse their children. The parents we don't hear enough about are those millions and millions who are doing a superlative job in the face of almost impossible odds. Often it is one parent alone who must provide loving care to increasingly sophisticated children in a world where the only constant is change. Then when the parent turns to experts for help, he or she receives conflicting advice.

Parents, too, are sometimes confused about the changes in spiritual values and social values which are taking place. Take the prevalence of violence, for example. If our objective is to assure that children grow up in an environment which encourages their physical, mental, social and spiritual growth, I must seriously question the extent to which a statement of rights would go in meeting it. When I examine the United Nations declaration of the rights of the child, I noticed that the word "need" could in every case be substituted for the word "right". To my mind this would be a much more positive and productive way of thinking.

I want at this time to refer, as did the hon. member for St. John's East, to the excellent report "Admittance Restricted" which has been put out by the Canadian Council on Children and Youth. I would recommend it for reading by anyone who is interested in this subject. I had myself intended to place a portion of it on the record but time will not allow me to do so. Reference is made to it in a report which appeared in the Globe and Mail earlier this week under the heading "Children neglected, study says" and in the Winnipeg Free Press over a CP story headed "Children's needs ignored: report—parental neglect criticized." Unfortunately, I cannot go further into that aspect because of the time restraint.

Let me add one further point before resuming my seat. Next year, 1979, will be considered the Year of the Child. The United Nations has taken up this concept and we in Canada are doing likewise. I might mention that the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) was one of the first in this House to consider that the government should become involved in the Year of the Child. I can only say that advances are being made, and will be made, and that next year will be a year in which Canadians as a whole will be involved in children's issues.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) should have brought this measure before the House again for the second time this year. I am also delighted to note that we have been able to put aside partisanship and have agreed that we should refer the subject matter of the bill to committee. It will be my pleasure to move such a motion in a moment.

I am very glad we have an opportunity to debate this question so near to the year when countries around the world will devote their attention to the needs of children. The subject should certainly be sent to a committee of the House where it can be discussed in a fulsome way. I look forward to participating in that discussion. There is already growing up around the world a practice of adopting children who cannot get enough to eat, who lack proper clothing and who have no prospect of an education. There are members of this House who have adopted children around the world and I wonder whether I could put forward the suggestion that, as a gesture to launch the International Year of the Child, all hon. members give close consideration to this possibility.

I understand, of course, that we cannot get into the question of abortion in a debate of this kind, but I am sure this subject and related matters will receive attention during the discussions in committee. I say this because if there is any group of children in need of a voice, it is that group of children who are in their mothers' wombs and who are crying out in their silence for us to defend them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving us a few minutes extra before terminating this debate.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Smith):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-204, respecting a Canadian bill of rights for children, be not read a second time but that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Stewart, Cochrane) agreed to.

Motion (as amended) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being after six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6.04 p.m. the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am getting off to a good start with this bill; I have had three notes tonight about immigration cases, and I am talking unemployment insurance! It is evident that this is a somewhat versatile ministry; not only do the questions come from the other side, but from this side as well.

The government has decided, as one of the major features of its revision of priorities, to recommend changes to the unemployment insurance program, coupled with a significant redirection of its employment strategy. The essence of the changes we propose to the unemployment insurance program is twofold. First, we want to reduce some of the disincentives to work which are present in the program. Second, we want to encourage workers to establish more stable work patterns and develop longer attachments to the active work force, thereby reducing their dependency on unemployment insurance.

The proposed changes to the unemployment insurance program should, therefore, be considered both as program improvements in themselves, which will reduce the negative aspects of the program, and as cost savings to be applied to other more productive programs. The cutbacks are necessary and will result in a better, more balanced program than ever before. The new emphasis will be on encouraging all Canadian workers to look for, accept and remain at work.

I want to emphasize again, as I did in my announcement on September 1, that the government has moved on several fronts to provide more work for people who would otherwise be on unemployment insurance. The employment strategy in 1979-80 will have an impact of some $710 million, creating an estimated 113,000 work-years of employment and training for some 360,000 people. A further $300 million of funds for economic development activities have been announced.

Our new target for jobs and training in 1979-80 represents a 70 per cent jump over what we have accomplished and are accomplishing in the current year. By any standard that is a very significant increase.

On the job creation front, we could not be content solely with the strategy as outlined for 1979-80, substantial as it is, so we announced an immediate start-up of a job experience training program involving some $45 million, which should mean that some 58,500 young Canadians already should be employed in meaningful work by this winter. Also we have made changes to the employment tax credit program to make it more acceptable to the business community.

The growing costs of the unemployment insurance program, which were just over $4 billion in the latest fiscal year, could not be ignored. Nor could we ignore the employment disincentive effects which were adding to other problems in the labour market.

On September 1, I outlined the thrust of the government's proposed changes. As I said at that time, we are determined that the program be realigned to meet today's economic and social needs, and in particular, to contribute in a positive way to strengthening the labour market. The bill provides for six major amendments which would require some claimants to work longer before qualifying for unemployment insurance benefits; change the minimum insurability under the program; reduce the current rate of benefits; require high income recipients to repay a portion of unemployment insurance benefits received; and provide a new financing formula for the labour force extended phase.

● (2012)

In our original proposal applying to repeaters, it had been contemplated that if an individual drew down 26 weeks of benefits, he or she would have to work that same number of weeks in order to establish a new claim. However, thanks to the solid representations of caucus colleagues, particularly those in the Atlantic region, we made two significant changes to the definition of repeaters so that it would create less hardship in those regions of Canada with high unemployment where jobs are harder to find.

Under these changes, repeaters would need to work up to six additional weeks of insurable employment over and above the usual variable entrance requirement of from 10 to 14 weeks. By way of example, if an individual in Alberta drew down 16 weeks of benefits, that individual would have to work the required 14 weeks in any event, plus two additional weeks to establish a new claim. Similarly, if an indidivual, again in Alberta, drew down benefits of 26 weeks, then that claimant would only have to secure the 14 weeks plus six weeks. The ceiling, therefore, in areas of low unemployment is 20 weeks and in areas of comparatively high unemployment is 16 weeks.

Not satisfied that this was going far enough, the government is now proposing that the repeaters provision would not apply in any region where the applicable regional unemployment rate used for the program is over 11.5 per cent. For example, this means that in Newfoundland and its three UI economic regions, the repeater section would not apply, should the unemployment rate remain over 11.5 per cent.

Turning to another important provision, "new entrants" and "re-entrants" are those claimants who either enter the labour force for the first time or who re-enter it after a period of absence.

In simple terms, new entrants and re-entrants are people who do not have 14 weeks of insurable employment in the year preceding their qualifying periods. New entrants and re-entrants would be required to have at least 20 weeks of insurable employment in a qualifying period to gain eligibility for UI benefits.

The change in the minimum insurable earnings is meant to make the program more equitable in relation to part-time workers. The present structure excludes from insurable employment those who work 20 or more hours a week at less than the provincial minimum wage, such as domestics, but it includes those who earn high hourly wages in only a few hours a week.

A section of the bill provides the necessary regulatory authority to ensure that a minimum of 20 hours of work in a week will be needed for any employment to be insurable, no matter what the wage rate.

The other changes proposed in the bill, namely the reduction in the weekly UI benefit rate from 66⅔ per cent of average insurable earnings to 60 per cent, and the transfer of the labour force extended benefits from the government alone to tripartite financing, would not, of course, exclude anyone from benefits.

I should emphasize here that when all these amendments are fully implemented and despite the correction of the anomaly which will now see government, management and labour sharing the cost of the labour force extended phase, there will be savings to employers and employees and therefore it will not be necessary to increase premiums.

The government also proposes to provide for a repayment of UI benefits by higher-income UI claimants. Higher-income claimants are defined in the Act as those with net incomes of over 1.5 times the yearly maximum insurable earnings, an amount estimated to be $20,500 in 1979. Claimants with incomes over this level would be required to repay a portion of the UI benefits received in that year at a recovery rate of 30 per cent. Any repayment, of course, would not be included in taxable income.

Representations from many sources resulted in a further amendment which will increase the minimum fines for employers who deliberately give false information on insurable earnings or insurable employment or reasons for separation from employment generally on the record of employment. The present minimum fine is $25. The government proposes to increase the deterrent effect by raising it to $200.

All the changes to the UI program I have proposed will result in a net program cost reduction of $935 million in fiscal year 1980-81, when fully implemented and matured.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of concern expressed about those who will be prevented from establishing UI claims. I share those concerns, but I may point out that for new entrants to the labour market it is far preferable in my view, both socially and economically, that they be given meaningful work experience rather than just income maintenance. It is also preferable that those who are marginally attached to the labour force, either by choice or circumstance, be helped to become more substantially employed and, hopefully, not to make unemployment insurance a way of life.

I mentioned earlier in my comments that the employment strategy for 1979-80 will have an impact of some $710 million, and that a further $300 million of funds are available for economic development activities. This means over $1 billion will be available next year to provide jobs for Canadians.

We are examining ways of deploying these funds to alleviate the effects of the expenditure reductions in the UI program as much as possible. For example, the previous formula for distributing Canada Works funds is being revised, and we are discussing with provinces ways to tailor the mix of employment strategy programs to best meet the needs of each province.

I recently met with my provincial counterparts and I am pleased to say that some provinces responded positively to my suggestion that funding be shifted more towards high unemployment areas.

I have also reviewed with provinces the potential impact of the UI changes on welfare costs. I advised them that, even if there were no employment strategy, our estimate is that additional welfare costs in 1979-80 would not exceed $51 million, of which 50 per cent is paid by the federal government. In other words, we are talking of costs to the provinces of $25.5 milion in 1979-80 and $43.3 million in 1980-81. While all provinces have not fully accepted these estimates, they have not refuted them. Nor have they put forward any alternative changes which will be as feasible, equitable and cost-effective as those I am proposing today, in this bill.

It is virtually impossible to make changes to a program like Unemployment Insurance, without affecting people. What I have tried to do is wield a scalpel instead of an axe, eliminating anomalies and excesses while strengthening the basic purpose of UI. Nevertheless, I realize that people are involved and we must and shall do our best to help them.

One particular group which feels it is a target for government expenditure reductions is women, and I would like to devote some time to try to allay their concerns.

Women should be entitled to the same opportunities and benefits as their male co-workers in the labour force.

Some of the UI changes may well affect women but they also affect men, and in terms of absolute numbers, more men than women will be affected. However, to the extent that the work patterns of women tend to be somewhat different from those of men, they may be more affected by the new entrant and re-entrant provision. Similarly, because a larger percentage of women tend to be employed in part-time work, they will be more affected by the minimum insurability provision than men. But we will compensate for the effects of these changes by increased and continued efforts to improve the status of women in the labour force.

I would like to clarify our aims with respect to women on employment training. It has been charged that recent changes in training allowance rates are an attempt to discourage women from taking training. This reveals a misunderstanding of the purpose of the allowance, which is not to provide a training incentive. Rather, it is intended to remove financial barriers to training. What we are saying now is that any person, male of female, living with a fully-employed parent or spouse should continue as a dependent during training. The basic allowance provided to such people is only intended to offset additional costs, such as transportation, incurred in training.

We will monitor very carefully both the number of women in training and the quality of their training experience to make sure the program becomes even more effective in serving women's employment needs. I can assure this House that we will quickly take any steps needed to achieve this aim.

● (2022)

Over the years, female participation in training programs has increased substantially, to the point where about one-third of the trainees are women. We are, however, not satisfied that women are receiving the types of training that can best improve their opportunities for employment. Too much of the training taken by women is still concentrated in the traditionally female occupations and academic upgrading courses. We want to redress this imbalance to ensure that training leads many more women into satisfactory employment.

The main thrust of recent policy developments in the training program is to improve effectiveness by linking training more directly with skill needs and job opportunities in the labour market. This will benefit all clients—both men and women—who look to training as a way to enhance their employment prospects. And we are taking special steps to ensure that women share equally in these opportunities by reserving places for them in those skill courses in which women have been under-represented.

We believe that the industrial training program, which offers trainees the opportunity to gain work experience as they learn skills directly relevant to the employer's requirements, is particularly valuable for assisting women to enter non-traditional, better-paid occupations. Accordingly, we are placing special emphasis on increasing female participation by setting targets for women. This cannot be done by governments alone. It must be done through the concerted efforts of employers, unions and women themselves. I emphasize "women themselves" because it is they who will provide the impetus, when all is said and done, to bring about the needed improvement in their own status. As full members of the labour force, they must demonstrate the ambition that will justify their promotion to a fair share of the top jobs in the future. They must not hang back from competing for the jobs that were once considered those of men alone.

I would also like to clarify a misconception which appears to exist in the House and elsewhere. Specifically, it has been claimed that women have been dropped as a target group in all our various employment programs. This is not so. In our small Outreach program, however, we decided last year that priority must be given to a number of specific categories of severely disadvantaged and chronically unemployed workers. Severely disadvantaged female workers are certainly included. But women can in no way be considered severely disadvantaged just because they are women. The directive for the Outreach program established priorities for, first, isolated or remote communities; second, native people; third, the chronically unemployed, such as welfare recipients; fourth, the mentally or physically handicapped; and fifth, persons who find great difficulty in entering or re-entering the labour force, such as ex-inmates, alcoholics, etc.

Earlier last week the Supreme Court handed down an important decision relating to unemployment insurance and women. I refer to the case of Stella Bliss. Notwithstanding that the Supreme Court has ruled in favour of the government in this case, I have directed a thorough and sympathetic review of the maternity provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act. When that review is completed, I shall be recommending changes to the cabinet. Because the review will take time, such changes would be the subject of a future bill. My only regret is that it is not possible to include these changes in the bill before the House today.

I have heard arguments that rather than amending the act, all we need do is to tighten up our administration and get rid of the cheaters. This is simplistic, and I must emphasize strongly that stricter administrative controls are no substitute for the package of amendments we are presenting in this bill. We have introduced additional controls and are planning to put others in place.

I want to close on one important note. We are in the House to represent the people of Canada. That is our function. We must ask ourselves, therefore, what it is that the Canadian people expect from their unemployment insurance program. Do they want it to be tightly administered, with a firm but fair hand? Do they want it to be free from work disincentives? Do they want it to do the job it was designed to do—provide temporary financial help to Canadians who are between jobs?

I know the answer to all those questions is "yes". I know it from a continuing series of studies which the unemployment insurance program has commissioned over the last year. These nation-wide studies have told me Canadians strongly support the directions I am proposing. The views they express have hardly changed at all from the first study in September, 1977 to the latest, in September 1978—after I announced the changes to the UI program. I tabled the detailed findings of the first three studies with the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration earlier this year, and I am prepared to do the same with the latest.

Whenever the government moves to tighten its administration of a major social program such as this, criticism is to be expected. Informed criticism which is sensitive to the views of Canadians is the lifeblood of parliament. We welcome this sort of constructive comment.

But in considering this bill, I ask the House to consider not only my words and the government's reasons for amending the Unemployment Insurance Act, but to listen to the Canadian people. From the evidence before me, the measures we have proposed are administratively sound and equitable both to those who pay premiums and to those who receive benefits. They will, to an important degree, permit the government to reallocate funds to more positive uses. I know Canadians will approve of this legislation.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): I was very interested, Mr. Speaker, to hear the minister's presentation of numbers. He is very good at that, and I will put forth a few numbers myself in a few minutes to compare with those that he has given us. There is one number that the minister did not mention, and that is the reduction of 250,000 beneficiaries under his proposal. He has not in any way indicated to the House that the savings that will result from having 250,000 fewer people on the program will solve the problems the minister has been told about so often with regard to the very program he is now adjusting.

The minister has said that $51 million will be transferred to the provinces. Even though 50 per cent of the proposed cash outlay will be paid by the federal government, by the minister's own calculations there will be a burden of $25.5 million transferred to the provinces, including those that can least afford it. I am sure that some of my colleagues from those areas will have a lot to say about that. I expect that the $51 million he has proposed will probably range as high as $80 million.

The minister in his speech referred to the government's policy on women vis-à-vis the UI program. I do not think there is any reason to accept the minister's statement that he could not have the amendments before us now to deal with the problems of pregnant women, particularly as they were brought to light in the Stella Bliss case, even though the ruling by the Supreme Court was handed down only a few weeks ago. The minister's first statement, which was later changed, was made only a little over eight weeks ago, and the minister knew full well the problems illustrated by the Bliss case. Even though the Supreme Court ruled, as the minister said, in favour of the government, the government can take no pleasure in the fact that they have not yet proposed amendments that would deal with such a problem. Perhaps when the bill gets to committee there will be time for the government to present an amendment to alleviate that problem.

Women who are adoptive mothers face another problem. There is discrimination against adoptive mothers in favour of natural mothers. A minor adjustment would correct this. The minister need not look very far to determine that adoptive mothers need a period of adjustment every bit as much as natural mothers.

● (2032)

Before I get into debate on Bill C-14, I would like to take the House back to August 1, when I am sure all Canadians welcomed the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), concerning restraint of government expenditures. He had been to the conference at Bonn and had learned to his surprise, we presume, that some other governments thought that perhaps Canada was spending too much money and had too much debt. After having his knuckles rapped at Bonn, on August 1, he announced, apparently without consulting his ministers, that Canada was in for a period of restraint and there would be cutbacks in government expenditures.

[Mr. Cullen.]

We now know that what the Prime Minister meant was a cut-back in planned expenditures or, as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) put it last year, a decrease in the rate or increase of government expenditures. All that means is that perhaps we are not going to spend some money that the government at one time planned to spend. Inevitably, it also means that under this government expenditures will increase.

After the Prime Minister's address on August 1, Canadians were anxious to hear what the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) would have to say. In the mood of restraint, the people of Canada thought that some of the problems in the unemployment insurance system would be corrected.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration made two announcements, both dated September 1. The minister is very good with numbers. He indicated that the savings through changes to the unemployment insurance program for the fiscal year will be $580 million; for the 1981 fiscal year, the total annual savings will be between $750 million and $1 billion, and the figure he gave us tonight is $953 million. On September 1, the minister said he was going to save us $580 million, but in his other release on the same day concerning employment strategy for the fiscal year ending 1980, he told us that it will cost $710 million. The minister is quite good at calling deficits by some other name. I think he calls them "commitments." In this case he claimed to save $580 million and then announced another program that will cost $710 million. I think the people of Canada might be forgiven if they wonder what the minister means.

It might be useful to go over the history of unemployment insurance, Mr. Speaker. I often think that the minister and the government believe that we on this side of the House are against unemployment insurance or do not think that social programs are a good thing. I want to remind the House and the government that it was actually this side that proposed many social reforms, particularly the original employment and social insurance act which was proposed by the Bennett government in 1935.

Mr. Cullen: That was the year they were defeated.

Mr. Clarke: The important thing to remember is that it was a Progressive Conservative government which proposed the legislation. It turned out to be a little slow to get going so it was not until the 1940s that the program went into operation.

In 1971 when the Liberal government enacted the proposals of the then minister of whatever it was called, Mr. Mackasey—

Mr. Alexander: He was the architect of disaster. I remember him.

Mr. Clarke: —the proposed changes included a reduction of premiums. I believe this minister may have obtained some of his skill in numbers from the former minister who proposed the changes in 1971. That minister was confident that he was going to save money through the changes although the premiums were actually being reduced. It was the old Liberal trick again—they indicated they had discovered how to pay out more benefits at less cost. I have a chart here, Mr. Speaker, which will show how they worked it out.

It became obvious that the combined premiums of employer and employee could never meet the cost of the program. With the abolition of the unemployment insurance fund, general revenue moneys were transferred to the unemployment insurance account without the requirement of a vote in this House. That is where the present minister comes in with his cute terminology. We are straightforward people on this side of the House and it seems to us that if you spend $4 billion when you only have an income of $2 billion, you end up with a deficit of $2 billion. The minister refers to it as a "commitment" and apparently believes the taxpayer is willing to make up the shortfall.

It is interesting to know that these tricks used by the government result, as the Auditor General noted recently, in an overstatement of the assets on the statement of assets and liabilities of Canada of some $2 billion because the expenditures are not matched with the fiscal period into which they should fall. For instance, on March 31, 1978, the statement of assets and liabilities of Canada shows a $2 billion advance to the unemployment insurance account. It will never be recovered, yet it is shown as an asset. It will be written off next year. Not all of us can defer a $2 billion expenditure into another accounting period.

Since 1971, despite the increase in premiums, combined payments have never covered the cost of the program. The schedule I have here shows that in 1970-71, the year before most Liberal amendments were made, the deficit or shortfall or whatever was $300 million. Immediately after the changes were made in 1971, the deficit was $686 million. It ranged around the billion dollar mark in 1975, last year it was $1.6 billion, and although the figures for 1978 are not final, the interim figures are sufficient to show that the deficit will be over $2 billion this year.

That is not the only problem, Mr. Speaker. An additional problem is the precipitous increase in labour turnovers. The costs of those turnovers may represent our single largest factor in terms of lost productivity. It is very difficult to quantify that kind of a figure but it could well exceed the losses in Canada due to strikes. Concerning the strike situation in Canada we find that the Prime Minister said that Canada has the worst record for strikes.

● (2042)

Again, that is not the only problem members have had. Members on all sides of the House have found themselves over the past six or seven years turned into ombudsmen for unemployment insurance claims. The jungle of the Unemployment Insurance Commission has become vast and I have forgotten how many of hundreds of offices there are. The number of unemployed is so great that Canadians cannot cope with the system themselves and the number of appeals to members of parliament has become enormous. Largely these problems are caused by inequities in the system as it now exists. We were quite hopeful the minister would give us some kind of a program that would clear up these inequities. I would like to mention a few, especially the forcing, through the regulations, of self-employed and retired taxpayers to contribute to the deficit through the income tax system. That may not seem unusual, but if we are going to have an insurance scheme, and the government still persists in calling it an unemployment insurance scheme, then to force individuals to pay for that scheme without permitting them to participate in the benefits, because they have no coverage, certainly has to be considered inequitable.

According to the annual report of the unemployment insurance account, which I have here, the total cost to the government for the extended benefit period of the program—and the minister indicates that is all paid by the government—is over $1 billion. The total cost to the government in the 1977 calendar year was approaching $2 billion. The interesting factor that is revealed by the financial statements, however, is for phase 2 and phase 3, the initial benefit period and the re-establishment benefit period. In those two cases in 1977 the government cost was only $1 for every $3.60 paid out. In 1976 the ratio was even wider; the cost to the government was $1 for every $4.50 paid out. That illustrates that the scheme could be an insurance scheme if the government was able to keep the economy rolling, as we have been urging them to do for the many years I have been here. Because of the government's other policies which have created the situation where we have so many people unemployed and where people are unemployed for so long that benefits run out, the government has to pick up the total cost. The original good idea of having an insurance scheme to protect Canadians when they need protection has gone down the drain. The government is now complaining about the cost.

It is now the minister's intention to say that he is going to share the costs of the extended benefit period with his other partners, as he calls them, the employers and employees. I will be saying something about the plan to share that cost with other partners, but I think that employers and employees may wonder if they really need partners of that kind.

On September 1 the minister said "It is anomalous that the entire cost of this benefit . . ."—referring to the extended benefit—"should be borne by the Canadian taxpayer. I propose that it will now be partly financed from employer-employee premiums." Extraordinarily enough, he continues in his remarks by saying "This will in no way mean an increase in employer-employee premiums for 1979. In fact there will be a net annual saving of $50 million to $100 million to the employer-employee account. It is likely therefore that premiums can be reduced for 1979".

It is obvious that this minister learned well from his predecessor that on the one hand you can have a saving and on the other hand reduce premiums. The minister has just said by his explanation that the $2 billion deficit or short fall can be eliminated by reducing premiums. I am sure his partners will be glad to read that now, Mr. Speaker, but I am not so sure they will think it is right or true when they get the final bill next year.

Is it any wonder, we have to ask ourselves, that the administrative side of the department is such a nightmare given this bit of history? I want to refer to a remark made by the Auditor General in his 1977 report where he had this to say about the operation of the unemployment insurance. On page 68 of his report he says:

The over-all system, when viewed as a financial system, does not contain control procedures sufficient for ensuring that claims for initial and continuing benefits are adequately validated before or after the issue of the warrant.

The second point the Auditor General makes is as follows:

There are also weaknesses in the control and balancing of data throughout the entire system that could allow unauthorized transactions to be entered or cause valid transactions to be misplaced, without being detected.

We have heard a lot over the past few years of the problems in administration of the fund, not to mention the abuses. The Auditor General commissioned the firm of Clarkson, Gordon and Company, chartered accountants, to do a study of the benefit and overpayment system of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In the report that was given to the Auditor General under date of February, 1978, we find two interesting tables showing the analysis of a statistical sample of 1,027 claims. The 1,027 samples included a total of 122 overpayments. That is a rate of 12 per cent, which resulted in the figure we heard mentioned earlier this year in the House of $95 million. I do not think that is the most important figure because the government does recover some of that. The more important figure which shows the chaos which reigns in the department in so far as the handling of cases is concerned is a different summary of the same sample results which, in addition to showing the 122 cases of overpayment, showed another 180 cases of follow-up inadequacies and 320 cases of compliance deviations.

● (2052)

When you add all of that, you get 622 cases or 60 per cent of claims which contained some kind of irregularity. Only 12 per cent resulted in overpayments, but 60 per cent contained some kind of irregularity. With that kind of experience, I do not know how we can expect the administration to solve the policy problems they have. They cannot even solve their administrative problems.

We will soon have the Auditor General's report for 1978. The Minister of Employment and Immigration will no doubt again be in trouble, trying to explain what his department has been doing with all its money. In his report on the 1977 accounts, with regard to the unemployment insurance account the Auditor General indicated there were $142 million in overpayments during the 1977 calendar year. That is the comparable figure to the $95 million for 1976. I do not think I need say any more on that. The government increases its expenditures and overpayments at about the same ratio.

I do not want the minister or hon. members to think it is just people outside of the government who think the government is not handling things properly. I refer the minister, because he mercifully might have forgotten, to a letter which emanated from his office on June 30. I quote:

In 1977, for example, we imposed 62,104 administrative penalties and initiated 6,854 prosecutions. Over 500 employers were prosecuted. Overpayments related to unreported work and earnings and other forms of abuse and fraud were valued at $37.6 million in 1977.

Those were the department's figures, not the Auditor General's. Of course, they do not balance. If the department admits to 62,000 administrative penalties and nearly 7,000 prosecutions, that is an indication that the minister must take a very serious look at this.

A further statement was put out by the minister's office on October 26 this year. It is a five-page document explaining the $142 million in overpayments. The minister admits to 447,000 overpayments detected by the commission, a healthy increase over previous years.

The minister must also take a close look at the administrative side. I do not like to belabour this. However, there is no point in tidying up the policy if you cannot tidy up the administration. I refer to the matter recently brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt). It is raised every time there is a postal strike in this country, which has been quite a few times in the six years I have been here. I remind the minister of this because he said he would look into it.

This year across Canada there were 150,000 unemployment insurance cheques that were not picked up at special distribution centres during the postal strike. Of course, the government has explanations for this. The minister stated the staff would attempt to find out why the cheques were not picked up. He predicted the investigation would reveal in the vast majority of cases that the recipients were either unaware it was possible to pick up the cheques or were back at work and could not leave the employment they had recently obtained.

They may have been out of the country, they may have been at work, they may not have known. However, the minister was not above spending a million dollars not too long ago to warn claimants and all Canadians about cheating the system. The indication is that there were obviously a lot of people in Canada who were entitled to their insurance benefits but did not need them that particular day or week.

Perhaps it would be appropriate to try and assess the real problem in unemployment insurance. It is becoming more and more clear it is not an insurance scheme. No insurance scheme could continue to have losses as this scheme has over the many years it has been in existence.

In answer to my question in the House in April of this year, the minister said the government was considering a type of means test by which an individual's total income would be taken into account. There is something in this regard in the proposals in the bill before us. We will talk about that in a moment. In the same answer, the minister said something that caught my attention. He referred to the top echelon of the salary range who contributed a substantial amount to the fund and derived very few benefits in unemployment insurance.

The minister is sucking and blowing at the same time. On one hand he says he will tax back the benefits from high income earners. On the other hand, he says the commission are making quite a profit on the high income earners, because they pay a lot into the fund and, in his words, derive very few benefits in unemployment insurance.

The government has to decide whether it is going to have an insurance scheme or a welfare scheme, as many Canadians think it is. There are certain people in this country who are wondering about that. After the minister's statement, the Globe and Mail in an editorial of October 4 observed, and I quote:

A participant in an insurance plan is entitled to receive whatever benefits he has purchased, regardless of whether they exceed or fall short of his needs at the time he becomes eligible to receive them. Not so the participant in a welfare program, who is—or should be—entitled to receive benefits sufficient to meet his needs, neither more nor less.

On one hand the minister says there are certain people who are getting benefits who should not receive them. On the other hand, he says there are certain people who will have to pay more but they will not get any benefits. That is not a consistent view. The Globe and Mail continued in its editorial, and I quote:

For too long, Canada's unemployment insurance plan has been operated as though it were an insurance plan, plain and simple. But the plan is not funded solely through premiums, as are insurance programs; the size of benefits do not actuarially reflect the cost of purchasing them, as do insurance benefits.

It is interesting to note that in 1971 the ratio of heads of households, which is what some of the minister's amendments are aimed at, numbered about one third of the beneficiaries of the plan. By 1975 the proportion of heads of households was 14 per cent of those receiving benefits. Where is the minister taking us with these policies? Will the next step be family income? We wish he would share that information with us so that we may know where we are going. It is obvious that this is not an insurance scheme.

● (2102)

We on this side are calling for a complete overhaul of the system which would restore it to its original function or else change its function. We do not have the troops over here to analyze things the way the government does but it may be that the government is moving increasingly toward a guaranteed income scheme. I am sure the Prime Minister would like it—everybody gets a certain amount of the dole, enabling us to do away with all this nonsense about unemployment insurance premiums which, after all, represent merely another form of taxation. It is not a premium any more, as we know.

In past years we on this side have called for a special inquiry. Failing that we have sought a complete overhaul of the system. It was appropriate and timely for the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) just seven days before the minister made his statement on September 1 to have spoken as he did in Halifax about the developmental use of unemployment insurance funds. I think it might be a good idea to get some of that speed on the record. He said:

Unemployment Insurance

First, we will use funds from the present $4 billion unemployment insurance budget to help private employers create new jobs which give on-site training to Canadians who are now unemployed. Such a program will be of particular benefit to young Canadians who lack practical work experience but it will not be limited to them. Care will be taken in restructuring the program to ensure that support is limited to jobs which are, in fact, new and permanent. Incentives would be highest during the intitial hiring period. That program will offer employers a major incentive to create new jobs. It would give the unemployed a working wage income plus the chance to develop work skills.

Let me stop there for a moment and ask hon. members to compare that statement with the statement made by the minister on September 1. There was probably a similar desire but in no way the kind of program which would achieve what my leader has proposed.

The second proposal of the Leader of the Opposition was this:

—to redirect unemployment insurance funds to help fund the payroll costs of hiring unemployed Canadians to work on worthwhile new capital projects. I am not talking about simply another version of LIP or OFY or similar programs, too many of which fund projects of little ongoing economic value.

The kind of projects we will fund will be those which have permanent value in adding to the social or economic wealth of a community or region. The major role in deciding specific project categories will be with the provinces and local governments who know local needs better than Ottawa does.

This kind of thing would encourage Canadians to work and ease the burden on Canadians who are paying the bill. It would ease their minds, too. What they see now is money going out to encourage people to lie around instead of getting into the mood of work.

Given the climate of restraint, Canadians were looking forward to the minister's statement on September 1; people were probably quite pleased to think the government was moving to cut down the unemployment insurance deficit. The minister made six proposals. It is interesting to note they were not the same six proposals as are embodied in the bill which came out this month—we may find out the reason for this difference as the discussion proceeds. Those proposals covered a higher entrance requirement for repeaters, a higher threshold for new entrants, an increase in minimum insurable earnings, the reduction of weekly benefits, special recovery from high income claimants and the refinancing of the labour force extended phase of benefits. On the last proposition the minister said, laughably, it would be more equitable because the cost of second phase benefits would be shared.

On the same day as the minister made his statement, I made a response for this party in which I noted that in our view the measures proposed by the minister were a step in the right direction. No one would argue that it is not essential for the government to get its expenditures under control or that something should not be done, in particular, about abuses of the unemployment insurance scheme. However, I went on to say:

Even so, we realize there will be unequal hardships felt in the five eastern provinces where jobs are scarce. For example, the finding of 30 weeks of work after a 30-week claim period will be impossible in many areas. The government does not take that into account.

Toward the end of my statement I said this:

Missing from the government's announcements is an over-all plan to make Canada once again an attractive place in which to invest and to stop the flow of investment dollars from Canada which has taken more than $1.5 billion to other countries, principally to the United States.

At that time we demanded the recall of parliament and the presentation of a new budget. Keep in mind that this was over two months ago. We looked for an incentive budget. It did not take long for other sectors of opinion to respond. The minister's statement was made on September 1. On September 6 the Globe and Mail reacted in this way:

The federal government has finally admitted that unemployment insurance is not insurance.

The editorial went on:

Employment Minister J. S. G. Cullen has now admitted the non-insurance of Canada's unemployment insurance by tying the size of benefits to the total of the beneficiary's annual income.

That is a means test, if you like. Then the provincial governments took stock of what was going to happen to them. In addition, the churches, the missions, in Toronto were moved to worry about the effect of the number of jobless who would be on their doorsteps when people ran out of benefits and were no longer the government's responsibility. The message finally got to some of the members of parliament who come from areas which would be hardest hit by the new programs. By September 18, the Globe and Mail was reporting:

Liberal MPs from the Atlantic region are "strong and solid in their opposition" to some of the Liberal government's proposals to tighten the unemployment insurance program.

Said the Citizen in Ottawa, "Unemployment Insurance Changes are Unfair". The Journal said the new measures were a political program. The Edmonton Journal said the Liberals were flouting parliament and introducing all these new programs and taking the country in a new policy direction without going to parliament. We agree with that. The bill to amend the Financial Administration Act which would allow the public accounts of Canada to delete—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the time allotted to him has expired.

An hon. Member: No!

Some hon. Members: Unlimited time.

● (2112)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Perhaps I was ill advised. The hon. member may continue, and I ask him to forgive the Chair for this interruption.

Mr. Clarke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was my impression that as the responder to the minister I could go on for a little while longer. I assure the Chair that I will not be standing here at 12.30 tomorrow, but I would like to continue my remarks.

I was saying that it had been pointed out forcefully by the Auditor General that a tiny piece of legislation which would certainly not upset anyone on this side was required. The President of the Treasury Board has been advised that a small amendment to the Financial Administration Act would allow an item called "accounts internal to the government" to be deleted from the public accounts. That would include the little item of $2.1 billion to which I referred earlier by which the assets in the statement are overstated as of March 31, 1978, in the public accounts volume 1 which came to us this month.

After the press noted what had happened here I think it was predictable that people in sensitive areas would get in touch with their members of parliament, particularly with hon. members opposite. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) was quoted as saying that he doubted the legislation would even get through parliament, given the number of other bills which had to be dealt with before a spring election. The combined force of hon. members opposite who, after all, have access to the minister, and through him to the cabinet, apparently succeeded in their efforts at having the minister withdraw measures which would hit repeaters in favour of a scheme to tax back a portion of the benefits received by members of families which have excessive total family incomes. The minister has not quite succeeded in that part of it, but it was interesting—

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I know he would not wish to mislead the House. I know he is misleading us unintentionally, but never at any time was it suggested by members of this House from the Atlantic region that we should deal with unemployment insurance on a family income basis. That was not their emphasis at all. I do not know where that story came from—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra.

Mr. Clarke: This was written by a woman. Perhaps she was angry with the minister and wanted to put that in. If I made an incorrect statement, it certainly was unintentional. I was reading only what I saw. In any event, I do not want the House to think for a minute that hon. members opposite from sensitive areas have a monopoly on compassion. There are very many members on this side of the House who are much more familiar with their areas than is the minister, and they realized the very serious implications of that bill for their own areas. My colleagues from poor provinces, if I can call them that, will be speaking in the debate and drawing these matters to the attention of the minister. Suffice it for me to say at the moment that the only reason the minister heard nothing from these MPs was that there was a summer recess. The government would not recall parliament, and even though we have been back for a month now it has taken this long to introduce this bill, which the government says is very important.

Having observed what was in the newspapers, the government decided that perhaps it was being a little too tough. The Globe and Mail was moved to observe on October 13 that the government was retreating from the stiffer standards it said it would require of applicants for unemployment insurance benefits. The government's problem was that it would not admit what the country in general knew, that unemployment insurance benefits had little of insurance about them and much of welfare. The conclusion of the Globe and Mail—which I think will be borne out as time goes on—was that the piece by piece approach of the minister simply would not work, even if the government had the courage to stick to it.

I think it was predictable, and it is a fact now, that the bill as presented to us this week differs from the September 1 proposals. The minister did not tell us why the proposals have changed, but I could suggest a few reasons. Before doing so, I should give the House an idea of what the changes are. First, the proposal originally was that so-called repeaters would have to work the greater of the number of weeks that they had been on claim or the number of weeks ordinarily required under the variable entrance requirement for their region.

The example I used was that of a worker who had been unemployed and on claim for 30 weeks. He would then require 30 weeks' employment before being eligible for benefits again. The government completely ignored what we pointed out, that in many areas in Canada it is impossible to get 30 weeks of employment, and those are the very places where there are likely to be claims for 30 weeks. It is interesting to note also that the effective date of that original proposal was to be April 1, 1979. No one can tell me why it was necessary to delay the effective date seven months from the date of announcement, but now it will be effective on proclamation.

We find that the number of weeks has been changed to "up to an additional six weeks more than the variable entrance requirement." In an attempt to recognize some of the problems which I have been outlining and which the House will be hearing more about, the government then decided that in regions where the unemployment rate was above 11.5 per cent the new provisions would not apply at all. Are we to take it from that that if the unemployment rate in a particular region is only 11 per cent or 10.5 per cent, that is not a serious problem? I do not think we on this side would agree that high rates of unemployment like that are not serious.

In any event, that is one of the changes the minister proposed. Another change is that where originally 40 weeks of insured employment within two years was required for new entrants, the requirement will now be 20 weeks of insured employment or only the variable entrance requirement; in other words, the 10 to 14 weeks, if a claimant works 14 weeks the preceding year. I suppose we could say that the 40 weeks has now been reduced to 28. Again the effective date has been advanced to the date of proclamation rather than April 1, 1979.

Regarding the increase in minimum insurable earnings, while the minister was unable to give any details in his September 1 statement, the provision was to be effective April 1, 1979. In the next two months prior to this bill's introduction the minister came up with details, and he now says in the bill that the minimum weekly insurable earnings will be increased to 20 hours for hourly or salaried workers and to 30 per cent of maximum insurable earnings for others. Again the effective date has been changed to January 1 instead of being April 1. That is a very serious change because there are many jobs, particularly seasonal and part-time jobs, which just do not exist for 20 hours in any given week. That means that nobody who has an opportunity to take a two-day a week job, 16 hours, will be able to take that job because of the complications there will be regarding benefit rights. Instead of encouraging people to go to work for 20 hours or whatever, the minister has introduced another disincentive for people to go to work.

• (2122)

The reduction of the payment rate to 60 per cent from two-thirds has not changed. It has the same effective date of January 1. But the government seems to have overlooked in that reduction that for some people two-thirds of the wage is closer to a necessity, and 60 per cent to some at the other end of the scale is still more than adequate for an amount to be paid for not working. Undoubtedly my colleagues will have more to say about that aspect.

Referring to the recovery of benefits from high income claimants, the minister reduced his proposal from the $22,000 trigger level to approximately $18,000. Many workers in many cities in Canada would be faced with a problem if they lost their jobs at $18,000 or $22,000. I listened for the minister to explain how the new amounts were arrived at. The wording is 1.5 times the maximum yearly insurable earnings. If that was in effect this year, the income threshold would have been $18,000.

There has been no change in the refinancing of the labour force extended benefit stage. I commented on that earlier. It seems to be an attempt by the government to transfer the burden of the unemployment insurance deficit to the provinces. We will hear from some of my colleagues concerning the problems their provinces will have in meeting this increased burden.

Perhaps it is a good move to change the minimum fine to $200. Missing from the minister's statement was the revision of the amount of money which the proposals were going to save. In September he gave us a range of figures which would reduce the expenditures of the program because of the amendments proposed. Now he has made some substantial changes from the proposals of September 1 to the time the bill was presented; but he has not given any indication as to what the saving will be.

Another thing which the minister did not do was attack the basic problem. In the abuses and overspending of the unemployment insurance account, the basic problem is payments made to people who quit their jobs because they would rather go on unemployment insurance, or those who are fired for cause, sometimes the cause being that they simply do not want to quit and choose to wait around until they are fired. Obviously there are some problems in that area. Instead of attacking it at the administrative level, the minister took a shotgun and fired it at all repeaters. He shouid have taken a rifle to get at the 20 per cent of claimants who are estimated to be abusing the system.

Not all of those people are abusing the system on their own; some are abusing it with the help of the system. We have heard of cases where individuals, through no fault of their own, were paid benefits only to be told later by the government that they had to pay back this amount of money. When one receives unemployment insurance, it is traditional to spend it as soon as it is received. In most cases these people have found it impossible to pay back the amounts which they have received. My colleagues will have more to say about that as well.

The minister has provided us with a further disincentive to work, especially in the seasonal job area. Apparently the government has ignored completely the fact that any insurance scheme will be subject to widespread abuse, if the replacement ratio is high enough so that there is no significant penalty to not working. Actuaries call that anti-selection or moral hazard. Private insurers have found, as the benefits increase, that the incentive to collect benefits is very much greater. Private insurers have moved to reduce the benefits paid for that very reason. It is amazing how much better one can feel if one knows he has to go to work, rather than lie at home and get paid for not working.

In addition to the government mounting an attack against working Canadians who happen to be unemployed by taking this shotgun approach rather than the rifle one, it is attacking the provinces by attempting to force them to pick up these higher bills. It will be especially hard on the poorer provinces. I have heard that it will amount to some $80 million for the Atlantic provinces.

It reminds me of the maiden speech of the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) when he told the House that we have two nations in Canada. Of course, he was not referring to geographical regions; he was talking about the haves and the haves nots. He made a very sensitive speech outlining the problems of the haves and the have nots.

The minister has created another kind of two nations: the Canadian who wants to work and cannot, and the Canadian who does not want to work if he does not have to. By its policies the government has destroyed the initiative of a whole generation of Canadians by making it easier for them to sit around on pogey rather than work.

We all know of people who accept unemployment insurance benefits because they have paid into the fund and feel entitled to such benefits. A recent study by the Fraser Institute in British Columbia indicated that no more than 10 per cent of those who exhaust their unemployment benefits go on welfare. That was more or less confirmed by Mr. St. Laurent of the minister's own department. It indicates that a large measure of the people who are receiving unemployment insurance are doing so because they feel they are entitled to it, and not because they need it. This fact is supported by the number of cheques which remained unclaimed during the recent postal strike, and only 10 per cent of those who exhaust their benefits go on welfare. I suppose this policy is an aid to the Liberal government policy of having more and more state intervention, with expenditures now at $50 billion in Canada and rising.

With difficulty this week I obtained a figure from an official of the Department of Finance which indicated that when all the government's current borrowing authorities are taken up and after Bill C-7 is passed, the total debt of Canada will be $69 billion. That works out to just about $3,000 for each and every Canadian.

• (2132)

The question the government does not seem to have addressed itself to is how it is going to pay back this $69 billion. Has the government considered seriously that $6 billion, which is something like 8 per cent of the total budget, is the amount that Canada is paying in interest on the debt? When looking at the $3,000 for each and every Canadian, and that might not sound like a lot of money, we should keep in mind that the personal federal income tax statistics for 1976, just released, show that the total revenue raised by personal income tax in 1976 was less than $14 billion. We have an annual bill for interest on debt of $6 billion. In 1976 there were only 8.8 million taxpayers in Canada. If we try to relate the national debt, which is $69 billion, at $3,000 per capita, to the amount of money paid by the taxpayers, which averages out at $1,600, those who do not pay taxes are not going to help us pay back that $3,000 per capita.

If we look at the national debt on the basis of the number of taxpayers we find that this averages out at well over $7,000 per taxpayer, yet taxpayers are only paying on the average $1,600 each. We have not heard anything from the government in the six years I have been in this House about how it is going to create any kind of government surplus with which to pay back this deficit. All we get are more and more deficits. The very deficit we are talking about now in the unemployment insurance fund has been caused by the policies of this government, a government which is not considering these factors.

I am going to close, and I do not want to hear too many cheers—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clarke: —but before closing I must stress a number of problems which have been created for residents, workers and would-be workers in the eastern provinces particularly, as well as in other depressed areas in Canada, and there are many. There are depressed areas in the north, in the west and in the centre of Canada. Perhaps those in the east are a little more vocal, particularly the Atlantic provinces, so we think of them more often.

There are problems in the opposite direction for the working areas of the country, if I may call them that, those areas of high employment where any number of employers are having great difficulty in finding workers to fill the jobs because this government is encouraging workers to sit around rather than work. Instead of trying to get at the real problems, this government has used the scatter-gun approach.

We must stress again what can be done by this government to get the economy straightened around. This will go a long way toward solving the unemployment problem and, therefore, the unemployment insurance difficulties.

If the minister had more co-operation from his many colleagues who have held the finance portfolio during his time here, he would not be here debating this bill with us at this time. We are anxious to get this bill to the committee because we need much more information from the minister. I intend to indicate what it is that we do need. Much more study is required and many questions have to be answered. It is likely we will be proposing amendments in the committee. We want to have a very much closer look at the 11.5 per cent trigger rate for the suspension of the repeater penalty. It is entirely possible that the 11.5 per cent is too high in certain areas, and that a cut-off should be based on some lower percentage figure. The minister has not indicated how he arrived at the 11.5 per cent figure.

It is possible we will want to propose an amendment having to do with the 20 weeks of insured employment, suggesting that perhaps there should be some revision there, with some scaling on a regional basis. The minister has seen fit to have 48 regions now instead of 16 so it should be easier to make calculations and pinpoint problem areas. It may well be that in some areas a lower threshold than 20 weeks should be adopted.

It may be that areas of the bill which will deny benefits, for one reason or another, as proposed by the minister, should be reconsidered, and that certain people should be exempted from paying premiums. After all, if this is to be an insurance scheme, if one does not have coverage one should not have to pay the premium. We are going to need more information in this regard.

I have prepared a memorandum for the minister regarding information we will require. It is a little longer than I want to read into the record at this time and I will have time to do that in committee. I have two copies here which I will send to the minister right away. This memorandum requests quite a number of pieces of information about the number of unemployment insurance beneficiaries in various areas. I would ask the minister publicly now to bring the information requested in this memorandum with him to the first meeting of the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, for a moment there I thought we were in reversed roles. I would have liked to have had the opportunity of leading off. I would then have had every reason to take as much time as the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke). Our position will be very clear in respect of this bill from the opening gun, and it will be clear consistently throughout the debate here and before the committee.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I am glad you are all anxious to listen. I am glad that you have all now come awake and are prepared to listen. I have witnessed in the last couple of years—the last three years at least—

An hon. Member: From the riding of Nickel Belt.

Unemployment Insurance

Mr. Rodriguez: During the last three years I have seen introduced in this House Bill C-69, Bill C-27 and now Bill C-14. This reminds me of the old rape victim syndrome. This bill is the epitome of placing the blame on the rape victim for the predicament in which she finds herself. I think in that same way we can look at Bill C-14.

Before getting into a discussion of the bill I think hon. members ought to be very clear on a few background facts. I think it is important to set the stage with these background facts. The first fact we must keep clearly in mind as we take part in this debate is that Statistics Canada tells us that on a day to day basis there are 40,000 full-time, part-time and casual jobs available in this country. I want you, Mr. Speaker, to keep that in mind as we take part in this debate.

Secondly, the unemployment rate in this country according to the latest figures is 8.2 per cent, with the number of persons unemployed, seasonally adjusted, being 910,000. The minister confirmed just the other day that in effect all the indicators show that high unemployment will continue for the rest of this year and into 1979. Those are the facts I would like to put as a backdrop to this debate in principle on Bill C-14.

• (2142)

Superimposed on those facts I would also like to put before the House a quote from the Economic Council.

Mr. Railton: Yawn.

Mr. Rodriguez: Doc, it's past your bedtime. Daddy Warbucks, it is nine o'clock. I would like to put a quote on the record from the latest report of the Economic Council of Canada, the chairman of which is that darling of the Liberal benches, Sylvia Ostry. At page 97 of that report it says that it is evident that the most efficient method of reducing the cost of unemployment insurance to the taxpayer is to reduce the incidence of unemployment itself, and that this obviously presupposes measures to re-energize the economy. That is a statement from a far more respected council than the Fraser Institute, which has also been quoted in this House. I believe the Liberal government hooks up these right-wing institutes out on the west coast, subsidizes them and then has them come up with these right-wing reports.

We all know that we are debating the principle of this bill at second reading. I like to think that a principle is much the same as a theme. What is the theme of Bill C-14? I think that the theme which the government has taken is that if things can be made tough enough, if the government can dismantle enough of the unemployment insurance program, it will force the unemployed to take jobs. Throughout the government's explanation for the bill and throughout the government's propaganda we find the same song and dance over and over. The government says that it will cause more people to work because it is removing the incentives which stop people from working. I do not know how the tightening of the unemployment insurance program rules will create one single job. The unemployment rate in my own area is 11.2 per cent. How will the tightening up of the program help Inco or Falconbridge to create more jobs?

An hon. Member: The government will do it.

Mr. Rodriguez: The government has not done it. The government made a prediction that it would create 50,000 jobs, but it created only 8,000. The program was a miserable failure, so I do not put much stock in the prediction that they will create jobs.

The central thrust of this bill is to make the victims pay for the predicament in which the government puts them. It is a principle which is dead wrong. We have no consideration on this side of the House where we stand with respect to the principle of this bill.

The minister announced cutbacks and changes to the UI program in September. While watching a program on national television the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, the UI critic for the official opposition, stood up, looked right into the camera and said: "If we were the government, we would have gone further with these cutbacks." Tonight, he is sitting all over the fence. He cannot do that. Television is now in the House and it will show where the Tories stand, whether they are from eastern, western, central, northern Canada or wherever. They will not be able to get off the horns of this particular dilemma.

Mr. Nystrom: They tend to get slivers.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member says that these people tend to get slivers, and that is right. There are not enough jobs available in this country for the number of people who are registered officially as being unemployed. I mentioned earlier in my backdrop that there are only about 40,000 full-time, part-time and casual jobs on a day to day basis in this country and that there are 910,000 people looking for work. That means there is one job for every 20 people who want to work and who are looking for work.

Hon. members must keep in mind that we are not dealing with real unemployment figures. We are not talking about the unofficial figures, which tend to be much higher than the official figures. The minister has gone into secrecy with regional figures on unemployment because they are too embarrassing, and very shortly they will probably stop producing the figures showing the ratio of the number of persons unemployed to the number of jobs available. Many of these jobs are not available permanently. The Social Planning Council of metro Toronto in their study entitled "The Problem is Jobs, not People", found that of 16,900 jobs that existed in Ontario in August, 1978 only 5,000 were available for a period of longer than four weeks. That means that of those jobs surveyed, 11,900 of them were for less than four weeks' duration. Conveniently, the department considers a permanent placement to be longer than one week with respect to collecting unemployment insurance benefits.

This legislation will not do anything about unemployment except make it more difficult to be unemployed. Once again, the government is saying they have no responsibility for unemployment and that the unemployed are to blame. It is a lie we are becoming familiar with, a lie used to cover more government inadequacies. Legislation like this has one major purpose, and that is to cover up the fact that we have a tired and morally bankrupt government that has no policies to deal with the problems which we face in this country. At a time when it is critical for us to have economic planning to deal with a failing economy, instead we get knee-jerk policies based on gallup polls.

The Economic Council of Canada stated the situation correctly in their last annual review when it said that "in devising unemployment strategies there is a need for selective targeted policy instruments. In this way, the particular problems of women and the young, as well as of certain provinces, industries and occupations, may be recognized specifically." Obviously, Bill C-14 was conceived as a knee-jerk reaction. There was no consultation with the provinces, labour or anybody. It was conceived and dropped on the people of Canada in September of this year, and there is no doubt that the government through this bill has focussed its attenion on many of these particular groups I have mentioned. In so doing, they are trying to make a bad situation even worse.

• (2152)

Let us look at the situation as it applies to women in this country. I do not think the minister and his bureaucrats have spent much time looking at the facts as they relate to women as employees and as potential employees in this country. The major change this bill seeks to accomplish is to deny unemployment insurance benefits to those people who cannot find long-term work. We all know it is a fact of Canadian life today that women as a group are last hired and first fired. It seems to me they fall squarely into this category where the Unemployment Insurance Act is being amended.

Further, these changes, as they apply to women, seem to be largely based on the results of the comprehensive review of the unemployment insurance program that was released in 1977. That review made the dubious statement that women misuse the UIC program through non-availability and refusal to work. The review also suggested that women, as secondary wage earners, generated unexpected increases in UIC expenditures.

The Advisory Council on the Status of Women correctly pointed out that such sweeping generalizations had no facts to back them up. That did not deter the minister and his nabobs in the Unemployment Insurance Commission. They are not confused with facts and should not get credit for seeking out facts.

There are facts available about women in the labour force but the government chooses to ignore them. I will put them on the record tonight, however. Labour Canada figures for 1975 show that 31 per cent of women in the work force are single and need a job to support themselves. They show that 9.4 per cent of women in the work force are widowed, divorced or separated and must work to support themselves. They show that 20.7 per cent of women in the work force are married to men earning less than $10,000 a year and must work to support both themselves and their families. They also show that 47 per cent of families where both husband and wife work earned less than $15,000 in 1975, below the median income.

Thus we can plainly see, Mr. Speaker, that most women in our society are like any other workers. They are working to support themselves and their families, not to buy a second car. Working women are not "a social phenomenon", as one of our Edmonton Conservatives once said in this House. They work to earn a living and as such deserve the protection of an unemployment insurance program.

This is especially true because, bad as the unemployment situation is for men, it is even worse for women. The situation will be worse yet if this legislation passes. Women often find it more difficult than men to find long-term jobs, so the requirement for people to work longer to be eligible for benefits if they have previously been on claim will hit women hard. Keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that all of this is happening at a time when there is evidence that the use of unemployment insurance by women is actually decreasing.

A comparison of unemployment insurance claimants over the last ten years in Ontario, again done by the social planning council of metro Toronto, shows a discernible downward trend in the use of the program by women. In other words, while more women need to enter the work force to make ends meet within families, they are actually able to use UIC less and less as the government attacks them, first through regulations and now through legislation.

The requirement that new entrants must work longer will hit young men and women equally hard, but it will particularly attack older women who might be returning to the work force after raising a family for a number of years. Many of these women who have spent many years in the home lack necessary skills and find it very difficult to find other than casual jobs. Many of these women go to work for such firms as temporary employment agencies. Now they will not only have to work for these leeches but they will also lose their eligibility for UIC benefits.

The same thing is true of the amendment limiting benefits to those people working more than 20 hours a week. This section of the bill is not aimed at people making a lot of money in a few hours, as the background to the bill suggests. It is aimed at the thousands of women who work part-time in department stores because they cannot find full-time work.

The federal Liberal government has talked a lot about changing the legislation to cover only those with a stable attachment to the work force, but this sort of legislation makes it clear they will never admit that women are not attached to the work force only because there are not enough jobs for them.

The author, R. H. Robinson, dealt accurately with this point in an article in the Canadian Forum. He wrote:

> Working women and women wanting to work are coming more under attack with rising unemployment. There are multiplying signs of a drive, like the one which followed the Second World War, to make women believe that their true place and role is not at work but in the family and at home. Instead of being marginally attached to the labour force, they would be completely detached from it. This is like treating an illness, not by curing the patient, but by denying that she exists.

How familiar that sounds, Mr. Speaker, to those of us who have sat in this chamber for years hearing the government deny that the problems of this country, like unemployment, existed. The government is once again trying to have it both ways. First the government accuses women of being only secondary wage earners—those who are going to be discriminated against in this bill—taking jobs away from men. Now they are saying that they do not want women to work enough to be eligible for benefits. It is all part of the same Liberal game plan to blame the unemployed for unemployment.

I see it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, so I will call it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—MOVEMENT OF GRAIN TO EXPORT POSITIONS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question tonight arises from the continuing problems Canada is experiencing with its grain handling and transportation system. The time has come when something must be done to jar this minister and this government into action, because we have a grain handling system that is inadequate and underutilized in certain areas at certain times. It has been in this state for some period of time.

The inadequacy of our grain handling and transportation system is responsible for loss of sales in the international export market. It is responsible for our loss of reputation as a reliable supplier of grain in the export market and it is responsible for the build-up of frustration and disgust amongst producers. And to put it bluntly, it is causing farmers and this economy a loss of untold millions of dollars. Unless something positive is done very soon—perhaps even something revolutionary—Canada will suffer and lose its traditional position as a leader in grain sales throughout the world. It will no longer be in the forefront of the world grain trade picture.

We need a quantum leap in our system to capture the growing market opportunities of the 1980s. The minister has spoken of studies, of co-ordinators, of consultants and of straining the existing system. In answer to my questions on November 7, he replied, in part, as reported at page 865 of Hansard:

> One of our objectives is to test those strains and to keep strain on the system.

Mr. Speaker, it is going to take more than strain on the system to move the amount of grain we must move if we are to capture the potential market. The minister is indirectly blaming the farmers in his answer. We must bear in mind that this is the same minister who brought in Operation LIFT—that disastrous policy of paying farmers not to grow wheat.

● (2202)

He said as reported at page 865:

—that we have just had three all-time record crops. If only one of those had been average instead of record, it would be a problem of grain supplies rather than a problem of movement.

He is saying that it is the farmers' fault that we have a problem in moving our grain because they grow too much wheat. There is not much hope in the statements of the minister in his response to my question of November 7. Quite frankly, what we need in this country, in addition to an improved grain handling system, is a full-time Minister of Transport. We need a full-time minister in charge of the Wheat Board because this minister has been a flop in those two portfolios. I am not sure about justice; I am not qualified to comment on that, but in terms of transport, in terms of moving grain and in addressing himself to those very serious problems, he has been a flop.

We know there are inefficiencies in the system. At a recent meeting in Calgary of the Canada Grains Council the railways pointed out there was underutilization of the system, and that of course raises the question of whether we need additional hopper cars or additional rolling stock. Frankly, I think we do, but that does not mean that we should not be utilizing the system to the fullest extent.

In Canada today we have a primary elevator system that is literally plugged 75 per cent to capacity, 35 per cent more than last year. The terminals are half full, down 35 per cent from last year. The producers' stocks are up by 20 per cent; they are carrying about 42 millions tonnes of grain in stock. We are losing sales to our traditional customers. As a matter of fact representatives of the United States have served notice that they are going to pursue the Chinese market very aggressively.

Today we have a system in this country that is limited to moving 21 million tonnes of grain, and our export sales are limited by that amount. We had the promises of WEOC in 1973 and we had the promises of this government in 1974 that they were going to overhaul the grain handling system from the granary to the ship in the harbour. Since that time we have not increased the capacity one iota.

I want to quote from an address given by the senior economist to the Canadian Wheat Board, Harold F. Bjarnason, on October 18, 1978, who was talking about the 21 million tonnes that we have moved and then went on to say:

The only reason that this near record export volume did not exceed the 1972/73 level of 21.4 million tonnes was that our transportation system could not physically handle any more grain exports during the prime demand period. A yearly volume of about 21 million tonnes thus seems to be the maximum quantity our present system is capable of moving into export. If we had had greater capacity in our system, we would not have to defer 1.5 million tonnes of export grain to the 1978-79 marketing year.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

He goes on to say:

All in all, it seems safe to say that, if transportation had been available when the demand was, exports last year could have reached 25 million tonnes.

That means, Mr. Speaker, that we have lost a sale of 4 million tonnes of grain in the last crop year and that means a direct loss to the farmers of something in excess of a half a billion dollars. If one considers the ripple effect in the economy, it works out at about $2.75 billion.

What about the future? To quote Mr. Bjarnason again, he states that:

—by 1985 we should be able to export roughly 20 million tonnes of wheat and up to 10 million tonnes of feed grains—

In addition there were 1.5 million tonnes of oilseeds. That totals 31.5 million tonnes. That means we must increase our grain handling and transportation capabilities by 50 per cent.

It is significant to know as well that the bulk of this increase will come from the west coast, so we must move very quickly. We must prepare to move well in excess of 15 million tonnes from the west coast. The most we have ever moved, and that occurred in the record year of 1972-73, was nine million tonnes. We must develop Prince Rupert and increase its capacity of moving anywhere from three million to four million tonnes, which is the equivalent of 125 million to 150 million bushels. We must expand Vancouver's capacity to reach 11 million to 12 million tonnes. That will give us 450 million to 475 million bushels. We must also move quickly to expand Thunder Bay and Churchill.

● (2207)

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, lamentations, jeremiads, complaints, criticism, negativism, but never constructive suggestions, never positivism. That is the typical attitude of the Progressive Conservative party which is content with destroying everything and is not—I am convinced the public realizes this—really playing the role of a responsible opposition. All the hon. member did was criticize regardless of the facts and the excellent policy of the Minister of Transport who is doing one of the best jobs ever done in the whole history of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this government is very concerned about the difficulties we have had this fall with the movement of our grain for export markets. In fact, it has been concerned about that for several years and has many programs to reduce this problem in future years.

Last year, transportation and grain handling systems moved nearly unprecedented volumes of grain in spite of the transportation problems which were much more serious than in 1972-73 when this record was achieved.

Capacity was increased to the point where we expected to export 23 million tonnes during the current crop year before the strike occurred which could reduce actual exports a little under that level. This is substantial increase in capacity over the seventies when our capacity was 21 million tonnes.

To a large extent that increased capacity is the result of the guidelines the government set for the grain industry. We indicated in 1974 that we would be upgrading the grain handling system from the grain warehouses to the ships in ports. That we are doing, and everyone can see striking examples of it.

In 1973-74, the government bought 2,000 hopper cars. Since that time, we bought 6,000 more. In 1977, the hopper cars bought by the Government of Canada carried 38 per cent of the grain shipped from western Canada. Since 1974 those hoppers cars have also contributed to the improvement of the operation of our transportation system. Since then, the turn around time of cars was shortened by four days, that is 17 per cent, which allowed the average car to carry about 3.3 more loads per year.

The federal government has also contributed to the repair costs of several thousand boxcars that will increase our capacity in the short term. Recent improvements to branch lines to Churchill under the prairies branch lines renovation program have also effectively increased our grain exportation capacity through that port.

We are also increasing the capacity of grain terminals in Canada. Under the storage improvement program of the Canadian Wheat Board, the storage capacity should improve by 40 per cent in Vancouver. Half of the storage capacity increase of 5.8 million tonnes must be done before the coming winter. The rest will be completed by the end of next year.

Major improvements are being made to increase our present and future export capacity. We are now studying all possible means to transport a maximum quantity of grain through the St. Lawrence Seaway before its closing, including the extension of operating hours whenever possible. But we do not deal only with those urgent problems, Mr. Speaker, we are also concerned by problems that will be faced in the long term by our grain transportation and handling system. We commissioned an inquiry, the Hall commission on complex social and economic factors related to that system. We should soon establish in the prairies a comprehensive basic branch line system that will be operated at least until the year 2000.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S COMMENT ON STATE OF CORPORATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this adjournment debate on a matter which was raised in the House last week and this week. It started with a question, albeit a set-up question, from the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asking about coverage of the federal-provincial conference. I wish to quote the relevant words. The hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi asked the Prime Minister to check with the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) so that, among other things, and I quote:

—we can determine whether the CBC is trying to fulfil or thwart its mandate as a force for unity in this country.

● (2212)

As part of his answer the Prime Minister said several things. Then he said:

I am sometimes amused when the CBC talks about the terrible state of the country considering the terrible state of the CBC.

That was said on Thursday, November 2. I rose in my place, Mr. Speaker. This occurred at about five minutes before three o'clock and I was trying to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister about what he meant about the terrible state of the CBC. I know the right hon. gentleman's mood that day, at the end of the federal-provincial conference,—perhaps he was tired—but I wanted to find out whether this was a flippant or facetious remark, and I wanted him to define what he meant about the state of the CBC. After all, he is the leader of the land, a prime minister who has been in charge of cabinet and orders in councils for ten years, but unfortunately I did not catch You Honour's eye until Tuesday. When I did put the question to the Prime Minister, as recorded on page 868 of Hansard for Tuesday, the Prime Minister answered my question as to what he meant. He had the nerve, Mr. Speaker, and he smiled when he said it, to say:

—when I commented on the technical difficulties the CBC had experienced from the first day of the conference. If the hon. member had been following the proceedings, he would have seen that as a rather light reference to the difficulties the CBC had. I stand by my remarks. The CBC is very critical of many institutions in Canada. It should not be without criticism itself nor beyond the scope of criticism. I often hear it from the other side.

Those remarks were greeted with loud applause from the government benches, as was the initial statement back on Thursday. It is patently clear to anyone in this House that the Prime Minister was not referring to technical difficulties in the CBC. The question by the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi was about coverage and the seriousness of his question was for the Prime Minister to check to see if the CBC is trying to fulfil or thwart its mandate as a force for unity in this country.

I wondered if I would raise this matter in the adjournment debate or accept the Prime Minister's facetious answer to me on Tuesday. The more I thought about it the more I thought I would take the time and trouble of the House tonight to make a point that I think in capsule commentary summarizes why the mania over Trudeau in 1968 has frankly become the delirium with him in 1978.

In that remark on Thursday, without any qualification, when questions on technical difficulties of transmission were never asked, the Prime Minister replied in the most insidious form of criticism which really has been a hallmark of his administration against institutions. That, I submit to you, Mr.

Speaker, is one of the reasons this country is so divided that it is searching almost for its constitutional soul, its internal soul.

I am not denying that all members and all Canadians have many strong feelings about the pros and cons, the good and the bad, the plusses and the minuses, of the only national broadcasting system that we have. But that is not the issue. The issue is not that there should not be criticism of the CBC. We all know that. But this man was asked that question as the Prime Minister of the land. He is not an ordinary citizen. He is supposed to be the leader of the land exercising responsible leadership. And for him to give blanket condemnation without qualification, saying "considering the terrible state of the CBC", is demoralizing to those who work within it and is most unfair.

It is not just a case of the CBC. That is a popular whipping boy. This Prime Minister, unfortunately, because he has intellect, abuses it by appealing to the baser instincts of his constituents. And frankly, Mr. Speaker, his constituents are from coast to coast because he is the Prime Minister. You can take the symbolic head of this land, the Crown, and where do we find the Prime Minister in England? Pirouetting behind the Queen. If it were an individual act, one would not think too much about it, but it was just one of many incidents which I suggest in all seriousness appeals only to the baser instincts of many Canadians.

• (2217)

It was the Prime Minister who not many years ago said that opposition members were nobodies. If opposition members are nobodies, let us just imagine what government backbenchers are. I do not want to proceed too far with that.

It was the Prime Minister who, on August 1, appeared on the nation's screen with his reformation after his trip to Morocco. The conversion of Saul on the road to Damascus looked like a little exercise compared with the Prime Minister's conversion regarding economic realities.

What did the Prime Minister say about another institution of ours, a popular whipping boy, the Post Office? I still remember it: "Canadians are getting sick and tired of the Post Office, and so am I". Of course he is, but the man forgets that he has been the leader of the land. He has had responsibility for doing something about the Post Office, the CBC and parliament, if he has felt so aggrieved. One of the problems of our land is this Prime Minister and his sophistry which, for those who do not know, is false argument intended to deceive. That is not acceptable any more. That is why I have taken the time to participate tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the hon. member's feeling of frustration to a certain extent. He obtained an intelligent answer to his question, and I think he would like to have a leader who would be as gifted as the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). I have the feeling, and this is unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is not used to accept clear, precise and brief answers, and I think it would be a good thing to check and to review what the Prime Minister told him.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

To put it in a nutshell, the whole problem arose when the Prime Minister, answering a question asked by an hon. member on the government side, said last November 2, and I quote:

[English]

I am sometimes amused when the CBC talks about the terrible state of the country, considering the terrible state of the CBC.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on November 7, 1978 the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) merely asked the Prime Minister to explain that part of his answer. The Prime Minister replied that he had referred to the technical difficulties that the CBC had experienced on the first day of the constitutional conference. And he told the hon. member that if he had been following the proceedings, he would have seen that as a rather light reference to the difficulties that the CBC had. The Prime Minister added that he stood by his remarks. He said that the CBC was very critical of many Canadian institutions, that it should not be without criticism itself nor be beyond the scope of criticism, as he has often heard it from the other side of the House. That was the reply of the right hon. Prime Minister. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley, returning to the charge again, still on November 7, asked the right hon. Prime Minister: Then can we assume from what the Prime Minister said that he was referring only to the technical difficulties which we all noticed during the conference, that he was not making a blanket condemnation of CBC? Then, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister answered, and I quote:

Oh, no, Mr. Speaker, I never make blanket condemnations, except sometimes of the hon. member. I think in the case of the CBC I was referring to some specific and recent event. The hon. member knows that I am a great admirer of the CBC and the media in general.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to that brief reply. As answers go, it is simple, brief, concise, complete. Even an ignoramus, whether he be a fool or a simpleton, would refrain from asking that changes be made to such a masterpiece.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

[English]

FINANCE—FUNDS FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on June 1 of this year, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan) announced a new science policy for this country. He made a statement in which he promised that the government would set as an objective the expenditure of one half of 1 per cent of the gross national product for scientific research and development by the year 1983.

• (2222)

When the minister made that statement, some of us, including myself, pointed out that he was setting an objective for five years from now which would be substantially less than what was being spent by most of the other industrialized countries of the western world. I pointed out to the minister that countries such as West Germany, Japan and the United States already spent substantially more than 2 per cent of their gross national product on scientific research and development. The minister promised that five years from now we would be spending less than those other countries spend at the present time.

The truth of our contention was demonstrated this week by six background papers issued by the Department of State for Science and Technology. It reported that Canada's research and development effort has been inadequate to maintain an internationally competitive economy. It pointed out that R and D expenditures in Canada are only 0.92 per cent of the GNP Also it indicated that this ratio was disturbingly low compared with other developed countries. It went on to point out what some of the other countries were spending. The papers noted that between 50 and 65 per cent of R and D was performed by business enterprises in most industrialized countries, while in Canada, only 40 per cent of such research was carried out by business.

The minister's present proposal is that the people and the Government of Canada offer to the business corporations of this country, particularly the multinational corporations, further incentives in an attempt to persuade them to do more research and development in Canada. Despite the fact that over the years there have been a host of these programs, such as PAIT, DIP and others, none of them have succeeded in persuading the Canadian business community, particularly Canadian subsidiaries of multinational corporations which virtually do all their research and development at home bases mostly in the United States. Despite this fact and the lamentably low objective of the government, and without waiting to see if incentive programs worked, as part of its restraints program the government announced major cutbacks in government expenditures and support for research and development in the field of science.

I raised this question with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) a few weeks ago. In view of the cutbacks which were announced, I asked the minister if the government had set a new target date at which time it expected the government, universities and the corporations of this country to be spending 1.5 per cent of GNP on research and development. This percentage was announced by the minister on June 1. The Minister of Finance said that a new date had not been set and that the government was reordering its priorities.

By way of a supplementary question I asked the minister if he could explain how cuts were being made in fields in which Canada plays a leading role, especially those which gainfully employ many Canadians such as agriculture, fisheries and forestry. The minister rejected my suggestion and said that there had been no cuts for scientific research in agriculture.

I want to put on the record what the situation is. In the Department of Agriculture there have been cutbacks in the estimates of $8.5 million for the coming year. One of the projects eliminated involved $3 million for the Lethbridge research laboratory. In the Department of the Environment there was a cutback of $11.7 million in scientific research, including $2.8 million for a Newfoundland environmental centre and a maritime forest research centre.

• (2227)

In the Department of Fisheries, which is increasingly important because of the 200-mile limit—and for the first time we had hopes that the tens of thousands employed in the maritime fisheries would begin to enjoy a decent standard of living—what do we find? We find a cutback in the Department of Fisheries for scientific support of $11.9 million, one example being a $2 million cutback in a technological development program which is to be reduced and eventually transferred to the private sector.

It makes no sense at all to me or to the people involved in scientific research and those who benefit from it that the government should make these cutbacks without considering the tremendously harmful effects not only on the industries concerned but the people of Canada as a whole. I would urge the government to reconsider its position and restore what already was woefully weak support for scientific research.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commence my remarks in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) by thanking him for giving me the opportunity to bring some facts to the fore in respect of the government's position regarding research and development.

As the hon. member stated in his remarks, the minister responsible for science and technology in Canada stated clearly in June of this year the importance the government attaches to this very important aspect of the Canadian economy. The minister has clearly stated that Canada's aim and target in respect of research and development expenditures will be of the order of 1.5 per cent of gross national product by 1983. This is the goal that has been set and I think the minister has made the position of the government very clear.

As well, Canadians will realize that the Canadian government purchases each year $4 billion in goods and services. The procurement practices of the government will be changed to ensure their effective use to stimulate Canadian industrial research and industrial development.

It will be appreciated as well that for the first time the minister has convened a conference of federal and provincial ministers, in fact this week in Ottawa, to review the current state of industrial research and development in Canada. These ministers have collectively agreed that they must make every effort to ensure a higher level of support for research and development and innovative activity in Canada through encouraging and stimulating the private sector.

Tax incentives are an essential tool to encourage the private sector to perform more industrial research and development. As well, procurement ought to be used to promote and strengthen research intensive industries, and a subcommittee of the working group established by ministers of industry should also be encouraged to examine this most important matter.

The ministers have agreed that they will get together from time to time to keep abreast of the developments and results of these tax incentives, as well as the benefits that will accrue from these programs. It was agreed as well that the results of their conference should be submitted to the first ministers' conference.

I think the importance the government does attach to research and development and to science and technology in Canada is made abundantly clear by the fact that this first ever conference was held this week at the initiative and as a result of the leadership of the minister, taking into account the statements and announcements by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) and the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) concerning renewable energy and communications technology that the 1978-79 expenditures on research and development will be higher than provided for in the 1978-79 main estimates. Thus, while cuts have been made in research and development, as in many other areas of governmental activity, research and development also benefited substantially from the reallocation of resulting savings as shown by the doubling of that fund for 1979-80. I think it is abundantly clear that very definite steps are being taken and will be taken by the government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.31 p.m., without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 10, 1978

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

REMEMBRANCE DAY

TRIBUTES TO MEMBERS OF CANADIAN FORCES WHO SERVED IN WARTIME

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, each year, on the eleventh day of the eleventh month, Canada pays tribute to the memory of her heroes of two generations who laid down their lives in the cause of freedom. Three times this century, Canadians went off to war to defend our basic aspirations, freedom and peace. Tomorrow will be a time of remembrance. Once again across this vast land we shall honour Canada's heroes of two world wars and the Korean conflict, recognizing the sacrifices they made.

Tomorrow is a very special day, for another reason: November 11, 1978, marks the sixtieth anniversary of the armistice which ended what they called the war to end all wars.

I should like to take a moment to tell hon. members of the House that this morning I met upward of 100 First World War veterans whom I brought here for a special occasion this year; to take part in ceremonies at the monument, to attend a state dinner and various functions such as that. Among that group was a gentleman who will be 108 years old on November 19. He is from Elk Lake, North Bay, Ontario. His health is exceptionally good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1107)

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): He had just finished a 20-minute interview on the radio before I left.

Nearly one in every ten Canadians who fought in that First World War did not return home. More than 50,000 lie in the war cemeteries of France and Belgium. Others found their earthly resting place in graves in the United Kingdom, in the Near East, in north Russia and Siberia, or in native Canadian soil. Some were lost at sea.

Few members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force were soldiers by profession; the force was largely an army of citizen soldiers. From every walk of life they came to render their service, and those who did not return left their country—our country—the poorer for their loss.

At the outbreak of the First World War, with a population of just over eight million people, Canada was on the verge of attaining nationhood, with a future full of promise. In 1914, as part of the British Empire, we faced the most imposing threat to peace and freedom ever experienced up until that time in history. Our very existence, and that of other peace-loving nations, was threatened by war in Europe. For that reason, as war was declared, a generation of Canadian youth lined up and marched off to defend their nation.

Even after 60 years, the mention of such names as Vimy, Passchendaele, Ypres and Arras evokes memories in the minds of many Canadians. Tomorrow, some will remember the mud, the trenches and the suffering. Others will sadly recall the death of a buddy, a friend, a father, a brother, a son. But Canadians collectively should remember with pride the bravery, the heroism and the great military achievements of our Canadian servicemen and women.

Those of both world wars and the Korean conflict who served and returned home, as well as those who stayed "over there", had an ideal. They served, suffered and died to ensure that Canada's path would be upward, that she would take her place in the world as a great, prosperous and happy nation. Tomorrow, with the poppies in our lapels, as wreaths are laid at our cenotaphs, let us all as Canadians observe a few moments of silence and remember the sacrifice of our war dead. Let us, at the same time, reflect on what they gave their lives for; a Canada united, strong and free. We owe it to all of them to keep it that way.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, before I pay tribute, on behalf of the official opposition, to this speech and these special people, I would preface my remarks by paying my thanks to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) who early this morning sent me a copy of his remarks. I especially commend those who made it possible that this tribute should be made at the very beginning of the proceedings of this House. We feel, now, that it has a priority which it so justly deserves because we are as close as possible to the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month.

We are, once again, summoned by a most solemn admonition to pause for a moment amid this busy world's activities, to pay silent, moving tribute to the memory, not only of those fallen in battle but also those who faced the ordeal of combat and now lie in hospitals and nursing homes with broken bodies and disturbed minds, who, as someone has said, "limp and grope their way down the corridors of time." In the words of President Lincoln, "The world will little note nor long remember what we say here today".

• (1112)

By the sacrifice of thousands of young Canadian men and women who put their very lives on the line for king and country, this day has been hallowed far beyond our poor power to further consecrate it.

Canada forged her nationhood with the sacrifice of her sons and daughters on land, on the sea, in the air and at home in field and factory. The debt Canadians owe to that generation of valiant men and women can never be completely and adequately discharged.

However, successive governments, following World War I, have over the intervening years put together a framework of legislation to try to compensate our veterans and their families who gave their all, and lost so much, that we might today live in a land where "freedom slowly broadens down from precedent to precedent". These acts of parliament on behalf of veterans are collectively referred to as the veterans' charter. We are still correcting and replacing old laws and enacting new measures in light of today's lifestyle.

While we on this side of the House continue to press for more improvements, we recognize in the present Minister of Veterans Affairs a man who bears the painful scars of conflict and a man who conscientiously and faithfully works for the welfare of veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): We also know his activities are limited in this field, and that he has difficulty in convincing certain cabinet colleagues that aid to veterans is the very last place in which spending restraints should be applied. We feel they have their priorities all wrong.

On this Remembrance Day in 1978, therefore, we once again press this government to give all widows of veterans with disability pensions some form of widow's benefit, and to adjust ceilings and other constraints affecting war veterans' allowance to a figure commensurate with today's cost of living. This would be the very best wreath to deposit in memory of our veterans.

In closing, I call upon all Canadians, as they bow before cenotaphs across this land, to renew their covenant in the fallen and carry high the torch of freedom thrown to us, which is also a touch of Canada united from coast to coast.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I join the spokesman for the official opposition, on this sixtieth anniversary of the armistice of 1918, in congratulating the minister for bringing to Ottawa 100 of the World War I veterans, including one of my constituents from Elk Lake who is 108 years old.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Mr. Lepage will be able to remember, I am sure, many of the promises that were made and how well we, as members of parliament, have or have not fulfilled those promises over the years.

[Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand).]

November 11 should not be considered a holiday, Mr. Speaker. It is a day when we should remember the sacrifice that was made by the young people of Canada from 1914 to 1918, the young people of the generation who made the sacrifice from 1939 to 1945 and, later, the conflict in Korea. The soldiers and servicemen of Canada today are still serving the interests of peace around the world, in many countries. We should remember the sacrifice they are making for us and the reasons why they are willing to make that sacrifice.

Too often, when we watch television today, Mr. Speaker, we see war glamorized. All the uniforms and the movie plots developed around war glamorize it. But war was not like that: for those who served, it was a matter of deprivation and many, many hardships. Those who were able to return gave up much: many paid the supreme sacrifice and did not return.

This is the sixtieth anniversary of that war to end all wars, and it behooves all of us to indicate to young people that the sacrifice that was made, was made to keep Canada a free country; that they made that sacrifice, and they made it freely. They made it in the knowledge that it would be a sacrifice that would not have to be made by people who followed. Our young people should know that, because our veterans will not have paid the price in vain if we are able to ensure that there are no more wars and the problems of the world are settled in a more satisfactory way.

• (1117)

I am pleased that the minister has seen fit to honour 100 of those veterans of the First World War. They are getting older, and they will not be with us very long. I join with the opposition member who indicated that we have an obligation to those who did return, and I congratulate the minister for what he has done in the past. As our veterans of the Second World War and the Korean war reach the age where assistance is necessary, we in Canada have an obligation to repay them. We are not repaying them entirely. We should be repaying them with the idea that they fought in three major wars to make this a free country, a united country. Unless we keep faith with them, we will not be assured of the success of the endeavour which they voluntarily and so expensively undertook on behalf of our nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to take part in this tribute. I wish to emphasize, like the hon. minister and my colleagues before me, the human contribution, the sacrifice of these men whose courage stood up even in the face of death itself. It is fortunate that we set aside a day to pay tribute to those who died but also to those who remain and bear the consequences of war. Among them are many handicapped who are a living proof of the atrocities of war. This day gives us a special opportunity, to us who have known war, to repeat to the younger generations that others have made the ultimate sacrifice to ensure their future. I am proud of the special attention that the House of Commons has always bestowed on veterans and their plight. It is my hope that through the coming years we will be able to improve their fate and their condition. Mr. Speaker, as we remember on this day the sacrifices demanded by war, let us all be ever more thankful to God for the gift of peace.

* * *

MANPOWER

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—LIAISON BETWEEN MINISTER AND QUEBEC COUNTERPART TO SETTLE PROBLEMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with a very important and urgent matter.

As some of Canada Works projects are having problems as a result of the regulations of the Quebec Construction Office as it is abnormal that in a single country one government should spend money to create jobs while another government applies rules the nature of which tend to paralyse the work, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House recommend to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) that he meet the Quebec labour minister to look into this serious problem and come to an agreement so that Canada Works projects can be carried out without further trouble.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, that motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1122)

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SAFEGUARDS AGAINST OVER-USE OF REGULATORY POWERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43, without any preamble. If permission is given, the motion would be as follows:

This House, alarmed that the extraordinary use of regulatory powers is becoming oppressive and stifling to individual incentive and business development, a view implicitly shared by the first ministers, as expressed in their communiqué last February, and concerned that there is no adequate government action to deal with this danger, and that the unanimous recommendations made by the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments have been largely ignored, proposes that parliament act immediately to deal with the danger of this continued despotism by the executive and the bureaucracy in using such authority and to provide greater safeguards for scrutiny to be made of requests for regulatory powers before such powers are granted.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion could be presented for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

URBAN AFFAIRS

EFFECT ON AHOP OF INCREASED MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that most major trust companies yesterday increased their mortgage interest rates to 11½ per cent, and realizing the dramatic increase in AHOP defaults, currently four times greater than conventional mortgage defaults, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott):

That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs make a statement on motions today outlining what specific measures the government intends to take to avoid the certain disaster for Canadian AHOP families as a result of the high interest rate caused by the failures of this government.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion could be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ISSUANCE OF TEMPORARY SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBER AT UIC OFFICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that citizens who wish to exchange their bonds for the new issue are being told that they must present a social security number, and in view of the fact that when they make application at their local UIC office they are told that the process may take more than three weeks and, therefore, pass the deadline for the purchase of new bonds, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration instruct his offices to issue at the counter temporary numbers for these Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of this motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

PURCHASE OF NORDAIR BY AIR CANADA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, the Prime Minister and the President of the Treasury Board, I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance: it has to do with the government allowing Air Canada to spend up to $28.4 million to purchase Nordair.

Can the minister now inform the House where the $28.4 million purchase price that the government is contemplating will come from?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer precisely the question as asked by the hon. member. I will take note of it and transmit it to the Minister of Transport.

[English]

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the minister is, after all, Minister of Finance and I would hope he would have some idea about this transaction and some of the particulars in terms of what has just taken place. I have to direct my supplementary to the Minister of Finance. I hope he can give me a better answer than his previous one.

The transaction has been profitable for the Nordair shareholders, but questionable for the Canadian people. There are still a number of questions to be answered. One has to do with the $1 million allocation for what is termed out-of-pocket expenses in connection with this whole deal. Can the minister give a more precise answer as to what this $1 million covers? Legal fees are expensive, but surely not that expensive on this kind of transaction.

● (1127)

Mr. Chrétien: I am aware of the transaction, Mr. Speaker. We approved it in cabinet, knowing that it was the best decision that could be made in the interest of the Canadian public. As to particulars about lawyer's fees, and so on, I am not knowledgeable about that aspect. I will ask the Minister of Transport to reply to the hon. member.

[Mr. MacFarlane.]

Mr. Murta: Perhaps the Minister of Finance or the Deputy Prime Minister could answer this question: when the government finds a buyer for Nordair, what guarantee has the taxpayer that the full investment of $28.4 million will be recovered?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, of course we will take all the necessary means to ensure that our investment is profitable. I think that Air Canada's takeover of Nordair at this time is a very fortunate move and we do not intend to lose out in the transaction a year from now when we decide to return this enterprise to the private sector.

[English]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): The Minister of Finance indicated he attended the cabinet session when the government was giving consideration to getting into this merchandising, so to speak, of used airlines. Would he tell us how they arrived at their valuation of approximately $12 to $13 per share for Nordair, bearing in mind that only last year the stock sold for $2.10? How did they arrive at that evaluation, which would indicate they paid, in the aggregate, over $20 million more than the stock sold for last year?

Mr. Chrétien: I have just explained that I am not the one who made the transaction for the government. I said I approved the terms and conditions. This information has been known to the public for a week, yet no questions were directed to the Minister of Transport on this aspect. The file is in the hands of the Minister of Transport, and I will ask him for particulars. I am amazed that the hon. gentleman did not address his question to the Minister of Transport when he was in the House.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps I could address my next question to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council. In view of the apparent lack of knowledge displayed by the Minister of Finance with respect to the true nature of this Nordair deal, will the hon. gentleman ask parliament to make a reference to the appropriate committee of this House so that all details, including the shareholders involved, the method of evaluation used, and the excessive resulting payment may be reviewed by that committee?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): The hon. member will recall that on Wednesday of this week the House of Commons itself supported the takeover of Nordair, and that the motion put forward by the official opposition which condemned the takeover was defeated.

I do not see the value at this point of making a reference to the standing committee, but I can advise the hon. member that if he places on the order paper these detailed questions regarding financial transactions, I will make sure that answers are given forthwith.

Mr. Stevens: I do not have to remind the hon. House leader that the vote only carried in this chamber when the government brought in its socialist partners on my left—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Stevens: —to sustain its further intervention by the state into the private sector. When this deal is completed with Nordair, how many Crown corporations or state enterprises will we then have in Canada, give or take, say, ten?

• (1132)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will not answer that question because I do not carry these facts in my head.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I will not go any further except to say that I do not carry those numbers in my head. If the hon. member wants to put that question on the order paper, we will try to answer it. However, I will comment on the observation the hon. member made about socialist partners. That motion of the official opposition would have been defeated in any event, regardless of the support we received from the New Democratic Party, which on this occasion showed unusual and rare good sense in supporting the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN PROFITS OF LARGE CORPORATIONS—EFFECT ON INFLATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Current reports show that profits of the largest corporations in Canada increased, on average, by 25 per cent to 30 per cent in the first nine months of this year compared with last year.

Will the minister inform the House whether his department is undertaking an investigation into these spectacular profit increases and their harmful inflationary consequences related to recent price increases?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there has, indeed, been some amelioration in the profit picture for corporations. There is absolutely nothing wrong with that. I think corporations need to make profits in order to reinvest. We should see that as an improvement in the Canadian economy. The profits of corporations which are still under AIB guidelines will, of course, be investigated to determine whether the guidelines are being breached. But I want to say to the hon. member that when we talk about corporate profits, we have to keep the base in mind. Sometimes an increase of 30 per cent from a very low base does not amount to very much money. The same base is not used when we talk about salaries which increase from year to year.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that, while workers are being asked by the government to limit their requests for wage increases to only 6 per cent, banks and trust companies in the first nine months of this year reported profit increases of 25 per cent to 30 per cent? Incidentally, those increases have taken place in each of the last four or five years.

Will the minister urge these financial institutions to rescind their latest increases in mortgage rates for homes, which are causing tremendous burdens for prospective home owners?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government is to let market forces determine the level of interest rates on mortgages, and so on; as everyone knows interest rates have been rising in Canada and, because of competition on the market, interest rates on mortgages have been rising more slowly than other interest rates within the Canadian economic system.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the large newsprint firms of this country have increased their Canadian prices while experiencing tremendous profit increases, such as 179 per cent for Abitibi Paper and 40 per cent for Crown Zellerbach? If so, will he urge those companies to rescind their recent price increases, which just contribute to cost of living pressures in this country?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have put an end to controls and the hon. member and other members of his party have regularly made long speeches in the House against the control program we had set up in Canada from October, 1975, and today he comes and asks me to set new controls. I am not prepared to do it.

* * *

MANPOWER

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—LIAISON BETWEEN MINISTER AND QUEBEC COUNTERPART TO SETTLE PROBLEMS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): My question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

It relates to the motion I introduced earlier about the difficulties which certain sponsors of Canada Works projects experience because provincial government inspectors are visiting sites—and I have here the complaint of a mayor who is carrying out a contract for his municipality under Canada Works. On the one hand people want to work, and on the other there are inspectors going around sites so they will not work, and I find that abnormal. So I would like to ask the minister if he is aware of that, if many cases were brought to his attention, and if so, does the minister intend to have talks with the Quebec labour minister with a view to coming to an agreement on that question so the work can be carried out normally as submitted by project sponsors?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard about that problem. I thank the hon. member for his interest in this matter and I will call Mr. Pierre-Marc Johnson if possible to find out about that.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, since this issue is very important, could the minister settle once and for all not only this issue but all others, and ensure that the standards and the criteria are amended so that we can truly live what was said this afternoon and live in harmony in Canada. This is what I wish. Will the minister agree to come to a definite agreement on this matter?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, we in the House of Commons know that the hon. member is a good federalist and that we must find the means to bring about the harmony that he referred to. I shall call immediately the Quebec labour minister about this matter and other questions.

* * *

[English]

SOCIAL INSURANCE

USE OF COMPUTERS LINKED WITH SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we now have the support of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration respecting social insurance numbers.

The minister is aware that we have a minimum of 1,381 presently listed information data banks in the federal government. Many of them are in such disparate agencies as the Department of External Affairs and the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. The prime identifier is the social insurance number.

I would like to ask the minister what specific controls he plans to introduce to guard against the interconnection of computers by means of social insurance numbers, which poses a threat to individual privacy.

Miss Bégin: What about your pay cheque?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to determine just where the opposition stands on this matter. When we bring in legislation which gives access to these banks by individuals so they know exactly what information the government has, hon. members opposite say that is what they want, but in the next breath they suggest we are being too open. In 99 per cent of the cases, the use of the social insurance number is advantageous to the individual, who can receive cheques, refunds from the Department of Finance, social insurance benefits and benefits from a myriad of other programs which are in place.

In deference to the hon. member, I too am concerned about data banks. We list them. We indicate what is in those data banks. In cases where ministers have responsibilities for one thing or another—the security of the country or the protection of the reputation of individuals—we want to see to it that everyone does not have access to certain information. We are moving into the computer age. There is a concern which is shared by my colleague, the Solicitor General, and we are looking into this matter to see what can be done to build in as much protection as possible so that individual rights will not be infringed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about preventing the kind of data traffic which is taking place, involving unscrupulous computer manipulators who are misusing this kind of information, as well as potential misuse. Quite apart from the fact that the minister now appears to have endorsed the idea of extending the use of social insurance numbers throughout government agencies—and he appears not to be concerned—what is his attitude with respect to putting curbs on private use of this government-issued number?

Specifically, does he intend either to make a strong statement in this House or to bring forward legislation or guidelines to restrict the use of this number outside government, which is getting to be more and more a factor in terms of getting service at banks and other private establishments?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misinterpreting what I said. I said that the government does not encourage the use of social insurance numbers as identifiers outside federal government agencies. That particular number is given to an individual for his or her convenience. Whether or not it is used is a determination to be made by the individual who has the social insurance number. I indicated three areas where there is legislative authority requiring that an individual provide the social insurance number. In other areas, this number might be asked for, but there is no requirement on the part of the individual to give it.

● (1142)

USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBER IN PURCHASE OF CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that a member of the government, a parliamentary secretary, thought this matter important enough to try to obtain consent under Standing Order 43—which was denied by the government—with respect to the use of SIN in the purchase of Canada Savings Bonds, and the problem this is causing in the already stormy passage of the government's present issue of Canada Savings Bonds, would the Minister of Finance, to facilitate this matter, withdraw the provision making it mandatory to produce SIN for the current issue, until the matter has been resolved with respect to Canada Savings Bonds transactions?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, that is the law and I do not intend to change it.

[English]

USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBER—REQUESTED COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject matter and I should like to direct it to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Considering the wide public concern and some misunderstanding about the use of social insurance numbers, and some opposition questions, as we have heard today, which I think have unduly alarmed many Canadians, will the minister recommend to the government House leader that this subject be referred to the appropriate standing committee?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Trouble in the ranks. That makes two.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is probably one of the better suggestions we have had from the House—

An hon. Member: Follow it up, then.

Mr. Cullen: —and probably that is why it comes from the government side.

An hon. Member: You have not answered the question.

* * *

GRAIN

MOVEMENT TO EXPORT POSITIONS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, in the absence of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

An official of the Canadian Wheat Board has stated that 2.3 million tonnes of grain sales have been deferred this year, which will mean, ultimately, a loss of income to the farmers of something in the order of $350 million. He stated, as well, that four million tonnes of additional export sales could have been realized in the last crop year if we had had sufficient transportation capacity, which amounts to a loss of something in the order of $500 million.

Since these losses can be laid at the door of the government, may I ask the minister, in his over-all capacity of minister looking after the welfare of farmers, what action he is taking to ensure that these deferrals will become future sales, and what action he is taking to ensure that there will be no more deferrals of grain sales during this crop year? Has he had any discussions with the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and other ministers to ensure that we will not continually lose these potential sales?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the speech which the hon. member made was somewhat difficult to follow. As to the figures he used, and the suggestions and accusations he made about the loss of sales, I will have to check them to make doubly sure he is right. But his accusations are the type of accusations one would make if one said, for instance, that had it not rained this year, the grain would have been of a higher grade and we would have had so many million dollars more for it. So many of these things are acts of God, such as stopped shipments of grain which do not get to the port.

This has been one of our greatest years in the history of grain exports, in the most difficult of conditions. All I can say is, yes, we do have a close rapport among the people concerned, such as, for instance, the grain stabilization people, people who work in my department and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. We are watching the situation closely, and I think we can be proud of what they have done this year. It is easy to make these sweeping accusations.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, my so-called accusations come directly from the lips of Canadian Wheat Board spokesmen. I should like to ask the minister a further question. Having regard to the fact that the capacity of our handling system has not increased since 1973, in spite of the 1974 election promises, and given the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board has predicted that Canada's export potential by 1985 would reach 31.5 tons—that is roughly an increase of 50 per cent over the exports we had last year—that means that the shipping capacity must increase by 50 per cent and by 70 per cent on the west coast, and having regard to the fact that most of the increase in those shipments will occur on the west coast, does the government have an over-all plan, or is the government discussing such a plan to meet the potential targets for 1985?

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member said that these words came from a Wheat Board spokesman. All I can say is, I am sure he is aware of the report put out by the Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta pools, which shows that if the facilities were used to their utmost, every grain that is exported out of this country could be exported out of the west coast ports; that is, if the facilities that are there at present were used. They are not being used to the fullest, and we are concerned about that because we want them to be used to the fullest.

We are working on new programs—I am sure the hon. member is aware of that—to try to use to the utmost the railway facilities that are there. I am sure the hon. member is also aware of the statement made the other day about the use of hopper cars, and so on: that if there were a quicker turn-around, we could handle the grain that is produced with the facilities we have, and in a more efficient manner.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

SHIPPING OF CARGO TO FROBISHER BAY, N.W.T.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and of the Minister of Transport, may I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The leader of my party and I have tried, on two previous occasions, to receive an assurance from the government that the freight which failed to reach Frobisher Bay, in the Northwest Territories, as a result of the aborted sea lift will be flown to Frobisher Bay at no extra cost to the people of that community. So far the government has not given us that assurance. I should like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he would make a commitment to the House and to the people of Frobisher Bay to have the entire cargo flown to Frobisher Bay without delay and, above all, without forcing the people of Frobisher Bay to pick up the bill for this operation.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, attempts are being made to have a responsible shipping company make the arrangements for the airlift. However, as expressed in the message to the leader of the NDP yesterday, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would have the freight moved to the north at its own expense initially if the first arrangement could not be made.

Perhaps I could point out at the same time that yesterday a reference was made to the note having been supplied by an official of the department. I must correct that by saying that it was supplied by myself.

USE OF DND AIRCRAFT TO MOVE CARGO TO FROBISHER BAY, N.W.T.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, that was not a really satisfactory answer, especially for the people of Frobisher Bay.

May I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister this time, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence? I believe the military have many Hercules aircraft throughout the world: they have 20 or more of them. Can the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that the military will be involved in assisting the people of Frobisher Bay by airlifting the cargo in Hercules aircraft? I am sure this could be done very rapidly.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of National Defence, I will take the hon. member's representations as notice and convey them immediately to the minister and to his department so that they can be considered.

[Mr. Whelan.]

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO IMPROVE LANDING STRIP IN MADAWASKA REGION

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport.

I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could assure me, on behalf of the minister and the department, that before they invest millions of dollars in a fourth runway at Malton airport in Ontario, they will first fill the basic and vital needs of areas such as mine, for instance, which do not even have proper runway facilities, so that recognized air carriers such as EPA could land the aircraft for which they are already licensed by the Canadian Transport Commission?

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the minister stated in this House earlier this week there was no policy change concerning the fourth runway at Toronto's Malton Airport, which means that for the moment we are opposed to such expansion of the airport.

As far as development is concerned, I feel the representations made by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria are extremely important and legitimate because, while we desire that Canada's large cities such as Toronto have the best possible level of service, we must also of course consider areas such as St. Léonard in northern New Brunswick and others in every Canadian province, where the development of airport facilities is needed for economic development.

* * *

● (1152)

[English]

FINANCE

SALE OF CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would first like to congratulate him for being here in the House of Commons—I know this is a busy period —when 20 of his colleagues are away. He is one of 14 who are here.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Crosbie: My question is this: yesterday at the finance committee—

An hon. Member: Where is your leader?

Mr. Crosbie: Listen to them bray over there, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday at the finance committee, in answer to a question as to where the authority would come from to cover the present Canada Savings Bonds issue, the parliamentary secretary to the minister said there would be between $3 billion and $4 billion of the current Canada Savings Bonds issue authorized by Bill C-7.

My question, therefore, to the minister is this: is it the position that unless Bill C-7 is passed by parliament, there cannot be completed the current sale of Canada Savings Bonds which is to total, in gross, from $6 billion to $8 billion; that these bonds cannot be sold and the transaction consummated unless Bill C-7 is passed? Is that the reason the minister agreed to drop his abominable $10 billion additional imposition of authority for next year?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, we are not afraid that the Canada Savings Bonds issue will not be pursued. There is no problem. We have enough borrowing authority to go through with the campaign. We hope this bill will be passed as quickly as possible, as we need the authority to carry on for the rest of the year after that campaign.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the minister that on October 19, as reported in Hansard, the minister said:

> The bill now before you requests supplementary borrowing authority of $7 billion to cover the balance of the domestic debt program for the current fiscal year, including a new series of Canada Savings Bonds—

The corollary from that is that you cannot sell Canada Savings Bonds without Bill C-7 being passed. My question to the minister, again, is this: is the government engaged in misrepresentation to the Canadian public in attempting to sell this issue amounting to $6 billion to $8 billion, when it has not yet got the legal authority or authorization from this parliament to do so? What I ask in that connection is, where is the planning function of the Department of Finance, if this is the way the minister runs his department, and the government?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have plenty of borrowing authority to carry on with the Canada Savings Bonds campaign, and I think it is irresponsible of the hon. member to try to create a false impression.

REPEAL OF PUBLIC UTILITIES INCOME TAX TRANSFER ACT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On Wednesday, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Edmonton West, the minister said he would be discussing with cabinet the question of repealing the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act and would be in a position to give his answer by the end of the week.

Can the minister give the House the good news that the government has decided not to proceed with this repeal?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give any information at this time.

SMALL BUSINESS

DEBATE ON HARMFUL EFFECTS OF OVER-USE OF REGULATORY PROCESS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Small Business), who has the special responsibility of trying to prevent the extinction of small businesses under this government.

Having in mind the dangers posed, as he is well aware, by the over-use of the regulatory process in relation not only to small business but to all business, will he discuss with his colleagues some method by which this House in particular, and parliament in general, can examine the extent to which regulatory powers are to be used, and the purpose for which they are sought, before the legislation is actually passed, rather than having to deal with this matter after the event?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I hardly think the question the hon. member asks about the over-all problem of de-regulation is one he should particularly ask of me. We have certainly gone a long way in establishing the office to control paperwork. I think that, while the hon. member may chuckle, this process is achieving real results. I am sure he should be addressing his question on the over-all matter of de-regulation to someone other than me.

Mr. Baldwin: I was not chuckling, Mr. Speaker, really; I was crying. I will address my supplementary question to the government House leader. He is as aware as I am that this is a problem which has been dealt with to some extent by the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. However, it only deals with these matters after the event.

Would the minister consider seriously whether there is some machinery by which, at the time legislation is being discussed, there could be reference to a committee for consideration of the purposes for which regulatory powers are sought, and what use will be made of them afterwards? I think this has been done in other jurisdictions, and I would ask the minister to give it some thought.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will accept the hon. member's invitation. I believe he is aware that in the normal consideration of the legislative process, beginning within the cabinet committee system, there is consideration given to the use of regulations under any proposed bill. We attempt very frequently to reduce the use of regulations, an obligation which we both share. Of course, his committee does it after the fact.

Mr. Baldwin: In post-mortem.

Mr. MacEachen: It is also possible for members of the House of Commons, in the standing committees, when bills are before them, to scrutinize very carefully the use of regulations and the regulatory authority, to see whether they can be reduced in any way.

I believe both in the standing committees of the House and in the other place probably more could be done to draw to the attention of ministers and the government where, in the view of members, the regulatory authority may have been overextended and may be reduced by amendment.

* * *

LOTO CANADA

COMPUTER CONTRACT WITH GENERAL INSTRUMENTS CORPORATION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). In view of the fact that presently under negotiation is the completion of the $23 million contract between Loto Canada and General Instruments Corporation, and in view of the fact that over and above the $23 million originally committed there is a commitment of $2 million for communication lines, $300,000 for consultation fees, and the expenditure of a lot of money which cannot be recovered in respect of leasehold improvements, is it correct to say that the government is presently also paying off 50 computer technicians and terminal operators who will not be required for their jobs, giving them six months with full pay and not using any of their services whatsoever?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, that is a very long and involved question, and you will understand that certain parts of it, I believe, should be answered on the order paper. However, on the matter of the termination of employees, we have taken a responsible course of action, one which I think is justifiable in view of the circumstances. Indeed they are receiving the six months' separation allowance.

Mr. Dick: That is very generous, since they have not worked as yet. I am wondering whether the minister would table the agreement which Loto Canada made with General Instruments, and would she also table the agreement which Loto Canada made, on behalf of the Government of Canada, with the provinces which got the provinces out of the $10-and-above games and the federal government out of the $9-and-below games? Would she table those two documents, please?

● (1202)

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to table the document concerning the agreement with the provinces; but as to the General Instruments contract, I think that it would be more appropriate to consider tabling it when the final resolution of that contract is reached.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

EMPLOYMENT

CRITERIA USED TO FIND CANADIANS TO FILL JOBS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration: it concerns a problem which is causing great difficulty and embarrassment to many employers trying to fill job vacancies.

I am sure the minister is familiar with certain public bodies, such as the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, and Malaspina College, which have been looking for top executives, the fact that the problem is also affecting couples looking for household help. The problem occurs when selection is made and then the minister's department says that an inadequate search has been made in Canada. How are employers to know what is an adequate search if the minister will not see that the criteria are made public?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that information is available to all employers. Dealing with the Malaspina College situation in particular, the individual responsible for hiring in that institution came to Ottawa and received all of the information that is required and that could have been secured from our office in British Columbia. It is not information that is hard to find.

EMPLOYMENT OF NON-CANADIANS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. With regard to hiring persons who are not Canadian citizens, I asked the minister yesterday whether he was aware that the Department of National Defence was hiring medical doctors and marine engineers recruited in the United Kingdom and are not making these jobs available to Canadians first. Will the minister now fulfil his undertaking of yesterday and report to the House what is happening with respect to these hiring practices?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, a portion of the hon. member's preamble is in error, because the Department of National Defence conducted an extensive search into securing medical practitioners; in fact, that need is met by Canadian universities.

In so far as marine engineers are concerned, not only did the Department of National Defence conduct a strong recruiting campaign right across the country, working in conjunction with my department and the universities, but they found there is no institution which graduates marine engineers who meet the standards of the Department of National Defence. They must be trained after they graduate from college in the course of their military training to meet the capabilities of the marine engineer.

Because of the increase in shipbuilding activity, both in the private sector and in DND, these marine engineers are in great demand. Many of them leave the Canadian forces and move into the private sector, and on that basis we have agreed to allow recruiting for that position by people other than Canadian citizens because it is, in fact, in the national interest.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, while the minister has partially answered my question, he still has not answered one portion, namely, that there are many graduate engineers who lack experience but who have the paper qualifications to take these jobs. Can the minister tell this House if the department has adopted a policy that it is easier to buy expertise than to train Canadians?

Mr. Cullen: That is not so, Mr. Speaker. Unless the hon. member is talking about conscription, it is voluntary as to whether an individual joins the Canadian forces, and if those with those talents and skills see fit not to join, there is no way in which they can be conscripted.

* * *

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NEWSPAPER REPORT ON ALLEGATIONS OF LIBERAL CANDIDATE

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. I refer to an article which appeared in yesterday's Globe and Mail concerning allegations by a Liberal candidate in the Ottawa area that, rather than show passionate interest in their country's future, too many Canadians are either bored with the issue of unity or hostile toward Quebec, and that Liberal party officials are trying to shut her up. Would the minister please inform the House if these allegations are true?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party of Canada is well recognized as being a party of freedom, and that includes freedom of speech. I do not think there is any substance to this particular report.

On the first point, the question certainly deserves serious consideration and a serious answer. Contrary to many allegations, Canadians have shown a lot of interest and concern about their country and its future. The best evidence of this has been the great interest shown by the Canadian public at large in the publications the government has put out, especially in connection with the constitutional review and the white paper on the constitution. Over 80 per cent of the close to 700,000 documents that were made available to the public through the post offices in the country during the course of the summer have been picked up by the public.

* * *

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REDUCED BUDGET FOR FAMILY PLANNING PROGRAM

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare: it concerns the tremendous cut by her department in family planning allocations. The current budget shows a 50 per cent cut in family planning allocations, from $2.1 million down to $1.1 million.

In the last year legal abortions increased by 5½ per cent. In view of the representations the minister has received from the Family Planning Association of Canada, members of parliament and citizens across the country, will the minister now give reconsideration to this subject and will she restore at least the amount of last year's budget to the family planning associations of all kinds in Canada, so that they can try to do something about preventing pregnancy?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret that cuts became neessary to improve our economic situation in Canada. That being so there has been a very small number of cuts, which I deplore in the Department of National Health and Welfare. I had to take $1 million from the annual budget of all family planning services. It must be recognized that this service was in addition to federal-provincial agreements under which considerable amounts are given to the provinces to cover 50 per cent of the cost of family planning services for needy people. I cannot find anywhere an equivalent amount. All programs have been slightly reduced but we shall continue to offer services. In any event, as concerns national family planning agencies, in future local services should be more and more the responsibility of communities, groups and provincial governments that have already money for that purpose.

* * *

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

FREEDOM OF SPEECH OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations: it arises from his representation that his party is a party that favours freedom and freedom of speech.

I refer the minister to section 31 of the referendum bill that is his responsibility, which prohibits certain classes of public servants from participating in any plebiscite or referendum; and, moreover, for the first time in Canadian history, by order in council.

Does the minister think that that is an appropriate way to deal with the matter of freedom of speech about which he has just spoken? If he does think it is appropriate that this should happen and public servants cannot express themselves like other Canadians with respect to the future of the country, would he indicate clearly and unequivocally to the House, before this bill is brought forward, that he will pull that odious section out of it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that a man with legal training, as is the hon. member, would so misinterpret that particular provision. I would remind him that in the referendum bill we have tried to follow the provisions which are provided under the Canada Elections Act at the present time, provisions endorsed by all parties in this House.

The referendum bill will come before this House and there will be an opportunity to debate it. If hon. members from all sides have constructive proposals to make on how to improve the bill, then, of course, the government will show a reasonable approach and will take into account all views from all sides, as it has done with all bills brought before this House.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, under the Canada Elections Act and the Public Service Employment Act, public servants have a right to vote and to elect members to this parliament. Is there any justification whatsoever, in the minister's mind, for limiting the right of public servants to vote on a question affecting their country?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no justification whatever for limiting the right to vote of public servants in any referendum, any more than in an election.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Then take it out.

• (1212)

Mr. Lalonde: If the hon. member does interpret the legislation in such a way, I am saying he has interpreted it in the wrong way. If it needs to be further clarified and guaranteed, obviously, it will be; but I am telling the hon. member that I am convinced that again he is raising a phony question and misreading the bill.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANDERS—REMARK MADE BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have received notice from the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers) of a question of privilege, pursuant to Standing Order 17(2), which follows on attempts yesterday by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) and the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) to give notice of a question of privilege with reference to certain remarks made by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) on Wednesday afternoon during the debate on transportation policy.

Obviously I have to follow the same ruling I made in respect to those notices yesterday, that a reading of Standing Order 17(2) tells me that questions of privilege, or points of order, arising out of remarks made during debate have to be raised during the course of that day, or as has always been our practice in interpreting the standing order, to indicate that an hon. member may require an opportunity to verify the record and determine the nature of the comments, that he ought to have another day in which to do that. However, notice which comes to the Chair after that day is not really proper notice within the terms of Standing Order 17(2).

I want to say, however, that the three hon. members from New Brunswick have given me notice of an intention to raise this question of privilege. Although I have to say that procedurally I cannot entertain that, all three notices pertain to the following remarks made by the hon. Leader of the Opposition on Wednesday afternoon, and are contained in Hansard at page 928, as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I must say that that question is in the character of the attempts to sow fear and indeed sow confusion and almost hatred among Canadians which has become so marked among members of the other side—
>
> [Translation]
>
> —in both official languages, and perhaps particularly members from New Brunswick who speak from time to time in this House.

Again I say I am procedurally without jurisdiction in this matter because the time has gone by.

I simply want to ask the Leader of the Opposition to reflect on those remarks, and particularly to examine the pages of Hansard with respect to a similar occurrence involving the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) just a few months ago when remarks were made of a similar nature. The Minister of Transport at that time indicated he had made those remarks not concerning members of the House of Commons but, in fact, concerning people outside the House of Commons. After considering the arguments it was my disposition of the matter that the Minister of Transport owed it to the House to be absolutely certain that those remarks were not directed toward any member of the House of Commons.

I cannot require that of the hon. Leader of the Opposition in this particular case because, procedurally, I am without that authority. I simply invite the hon. Leader of the Opposition to examine his remarks in the light of that very clear precedent. In any event, if he wishes to take no action, which he is perfectly free to do, I invite him simply to reflect on that choice and the propriety of the language he used last Wednesday.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I intend to bring this matter to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I think I must say, with great respect, however, that this matter could have waited until the Leader of the Opposition was in the House today, or whenever he is in the House, so that he could have the opportunity of answering.

The situation in which we find ourselves as a result of your intervention in this matter, in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition, is that these remarks and your disapprobation of these remarks, stay on the record. They will be the subject of public comment over the three or four days of the weekend without the Leader of the Opposition having the opportunity to raise a defence.

I say that with respect, but I think it is most unfair of you to the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that, first of all, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is out of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In any case, the first two attempts made to raise any reference to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition were made yesterday, and I set them aside. I surely would have to believe that the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton would have been on notice, if they had any intervention to make at that time. All I said to the hon. Leader of the Opposition today, or to his House leader, was that I compared this with an earlier occurrence. I indicated that the Leader of the Opposition was not required to do anything, that if he wished to do so he was perfectly free to do so, but procedurally he was not required to do so.

I deeply resent the last remark of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton that anything I have done is in any way unfair to anyone. I simply pointed out that the hon. member may reflect on those remarks, and that he is perfectly free to do nothing if he wishes, because that is his right.

I deeply resent the remark that that is in any way unfair to any member of the House of Commons. I think I had been very careful to treat the Leader of the Opposition, in the circumstances, with great generosity.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would not want you to leave the chamber today having any resentment toward me for any remark that I made in this House of Commons, and so I would withdraw it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I say that without equivocation.

My recollection is that the Leader of the Opposition was not in his place. I am sure he will address himself to the remarks that were made and perhaps deal with the precedent you have mentioned which concerned the Minister of Transport.

I want to explain to you, as a member of this House who holds you in considerable respect, that the Leader of the Opposition is not one to show intolerance, and has not shown intolerance. The Leader of the Opposition in many ways is an example to many members of this House of Commons on tolerance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am satisfied that he will indicate that, as he has indicated it on other occasions.

I want to say to you sir, that I have tried to conduct myself in this House in a responsible way, and I hope you will agree that is the case. I would not want those words to remain. I intend to protect my leader and to stand by my leader on every occasion, but I do not intend to do that by way of disorder, and therefore I withdraw the remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wanted to make it perfectly clear in what I was saying, for the benefit of the record, that this was the third attempt by members on the government side to raise issue with the remarks made on Wednesday afternoon. I have indicated that the manner in which it has been done is not procedurally correct.

I have examined the language used by the Leader of the Opposition on Wednesday afternoon, which is the subject of the complaint. I have not found, and I do not think it is procedurally appropriate for me now to find, that this language was necessarily unparliamentary. I simply made an observation upon which I know the Leader of the Opposition will reflect. I can confirm quite emphatically that his conduct in the House has always been exemplary. In the time that he has been Leader of the Opposition I have never found him to strain the patience of the Chair. On this particular occasion the remark was in response to a question in the middle of a speech. It was not a planned remark and it was, I presume, in response to heckling of some sort which does not show on the record of Hansard.

I simply said I have examined the language. I could not resist the comparison with an earlier occasion. I am simply inviting the hon. Leader of the Opposition to take the opportunity to compare his language with that used on a previous occasion which was the subject of a complaint, and take whatever action he sees fit, which in the circumstances I say may be no action at all. In any case, I simply wanted to bring it to his attention.

If I was in any way condemning him in the language that I used, I want to withdraw from that position because I was not making a final judgment on it at all. On some occasions, several occasions in the past, I have simply said to members when they have made a remark in the heat of debate that they might want to reflect on the use of that language. That is an indication that it may be something close to unparliamentary language which they would want to avoid in the future. It may also be language which they would want to explain to the House and, perhaps, withdraw. I do not know. In any case, I am simply saying that out of caution, as we always attempt to exercise ourselves on the side of decorum in the House of Commons. All I am suggesting is that the Leader of the Opposition would want to examine those words and, perhaps the next time he is in the House, make some comment on them.

● (1222)

MR. FRANCIS—CANADIAN PRESS REPORT ON AUDITOR GENERAL'S ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of a Canadian Press report concerning the timing of the Auditor General's report. The Canadian Press report, which was carried in the Gazette and the Toronto Globe and Mail, suggests that the Auditor General deferred the tabling of his report from November 21 to November 23 because of pressure from government members. In fact the press report goes on to say, quoting the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

—It is clear the government does not want any criticism of its finances to come to light during the budget debate.

There can be no greater distortion of the facts.

The Auditor General announced that in view of the importance of his report, on the one hundredth anniversary of his office, and in his opinion the most important report to proceed from the office in its entire period of existence, it would be subject to special provisions. Hon. members of this House are invited to attend the lock-up session starting at ten in the morning. The committee will sit at 3.30 in the afternoon of the day of tabling.

As a member of the committee and vice-chairman, senior from this side of the House—I am quoting now from the transcript of the committee—I said:

Mr. Chairman, could I interrupt to make an observation . . . This may be relevant to the Auditor General. The Minister of Finance has announced a budget on November 16. The budget debate will be in its third day, the day we will be tabling the public accounts. I wonder if this will in any way affect the timing of the tabling of the Auditor General's report.

The Auditor General went on to say:

—I always feel that when the report is ready it is my duty to deliver it to the Speaker. As to whether that will be an appropriate day for the arrangements that you have asked at the previous meeting I would leave that entirely to the committee. In other words, if you were to advise me that would not be an appropriate day for the committee, who obviously have an interest in this matter, to carry out the arrangements that were described by you the other day then I would certainly like to reconsider the date that I would submit it.

It is an affront to the Auditor General to suggest pressure in any way. Those of us who know the man, know very well that he would never be influenced by pressure from members on any side of the House.

It was clear to those of us who are members of the committee that there is a considerable overlap between the membership of the public accounts committee and those who hope to participate in the budget debate. Frankly, we could not see how we could guess the kind of attendance at the lock-up and the participation at the committee session that was planned for 3.30 that afternoon at a time when there was priority given in the House to the budget. We simply called that to the Auditor General's attention.

The matter was referred to the steering committee and was considered later. I am sure reference to the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), would amply confirm these facts. The committee asked the Auditor General if he would be prepared to advance the date of this tabling to November 14. After reflection, he felt that he was not in a position to do so. It was then unanimously agreed at the steering committee, at which the hon. member for Red Deer was present, that a more appropriate day might be Thursday, November 23. The Auditor General, after conferring with his staff, decided that he would perhaps make that recommendation and, sir, it comes into your hands when he lays his report before you.

I want to repeat that the only consideration was the convenience of the members of the House in order that the very important report of the Auditor General could receive the attention that it deserves from members on both sides of the House. There was never at any time any suggestion of political motivation or any pressure put on the Auditor General, who is a man, very much his own man.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member on the government side. Unfortunately I was not at the steering committee meeting to which the hon. member has referred, but I would point out to Your Honour that the steering committee meetings are generally looked on as confidential matter. But certainly the hon. members on our side most directly responsible for this, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), gave me an entirely different version of what had happened at that meeting. I would ask Your Honour, before you consider this matter any further, that you at least wait for the return of those members in order to hear their side of what actually transpired with regard to this unfortunate postponement of the Auditor General's report to this House.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I was present at the meeting of the Public Accounts Committee when this subject came up for discussion. I would like to read, for the record, my intervention as given by the official transcript of that committee meeting:

MR. LEFEBVRE: Mr. Chairman, could I make a comment on this?

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes, Mr. Lefebvre.

MR. LEFEBVRE: There is no doubt with the budget being announced Thursday evening on November 16 we all know as parliamentarians the first three or four days of the budget debate are probably among the most important, with votes on the second and fourth days, et cetera.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I made a slight error when I added these words:

Parliament will sit longer hours. The lock-up day will take place on a day where maybe the House will be sitting starting in the morning.

I was getting mixed up with the budget debate and I realize that now. I continued:

I am not trying to even suggest to the Auditor General when he should table his report. That is not the purpose of my intervention. It is just that I would hope that it would be on a day when all parliamentarians who wish to can attend your briefing, sir. I would agree with Mr. Francis, I would hope you consult with the Chairman and between you perhaps come to—if it remains November 21 that is up to you but perhaps the Chairman and Mr. Macdonell could meet on this and inform the committee at our next meeting.

MR. MACDONELL: Could I offer a suggestion please Mr. Chairman? Again, I am a servant of parliament. I am in the hands of your committee and I will certainly do my best to defer to your wishes. There is nothing very particularly sacred about the tabling date so far as our office is concerned. We just feel that it is our responsibility to deliver it when it is ready. Would it be possible, sir, for a short meeting of the steering committee this morning at which we could discuss alternative dates with you? Would that be possible, say at 11.45 a.m—

THE CHAIRMAN: Having looked at the subject matter of the agenda this morning I do not know if there will be any time for a steering committee meeting following this meeting. There could be. We could meet at lunch or you and I can get together as has been suggested.

MR. LEFEBVRE: How about just the Chairman and the Vice Chairman getting together with the Auditor General and inform the committee?

MR. CHAIRMAN: All right. That is perhaps the easiest way to do it.

MR. MACDONELL: Okay.

It seems obvious from this transcript that the article referred to by the vice chairman of the committee, my colleague, that this write-up in the Globe and Mail, is completely erroneous. Anyone who is a member of the public accounts committee or takes any interest at all in the office of the Auditor General knows that the Auditor General is a completely independent person. He is an officer of parliament and not of the government. Anyone who thinks he can put pressure on the Auditor General certainly does not know what the hell he is talking about.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think probably we have gone fairly far on this matter, which is essentially a grievance by members of the House of Commons about an erroneous press report. We have always taken some caution to make sure that members who find that any incident in the House has been erroneously reported, either about a member or matters of the House generally, have an opportunity to say so. In the circumstances, that seems to have been amply done.

I do not know that the Auditor General needs any more defence in respect of this. In any case I am not sure there is any question of privilege involved. The matter has been contributed to on both sides. I note the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) made an intervention which indicated that the two active members of his party who are involved in the arrangement of business for that committee are not here at this time, that is to say, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). If, when they return to the House, they have any contributions to make to this, I will be only too glad to hear them in the interest of fairness. But I think, so far as the matter has gone this morning, it really ought not to go any further at this time.

* * *

● (1232)

POINT OF ORDER

MR. LANDERS—TIMING OF NOTICE RESPECTING QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Point of Order—Mr. Landers

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to point out to Your Honour that my respect for the Chair is monumental, but I find myself suffering from a degree of confusion. The first time I learned of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was at approximately 2.50 p.m. on November 9, 1978. I sent your office notice by hand at approximately 5.10 p.m. the same day.

In my four years of service in this House of Commons, I have only raised one question of privilege. On that occasion Your Honour ruled that notice given at the first available opportunity was suitable to satisfy the rules. The time lapse on the previous occasion was considerably longer than the time lapse in this particular case. I therefore wonder if Your Honour can help me clear up my confusion.

Mr. Speaker: I will be glad to do so. I attempted to do that yesterday for the benefit of the two other members who endeavoured to give notice. Both members endeavoured to give notice to me yesterday during yesterday's sitting of an event that took place in a previous sitting.

Standing Order 17(2) will indicate that notice must be given one hour before the sitting in which it is intended to raise the question. I have always tried to intrepret that order generously in order to accommodate members where reference is made, for example, to a particular member when at the time the reference is made he is away from Ottawa, and upon his return to Ottawa takes up the matter at the first available opportunity.

I would only reasonably interpret that rule to mean that questions of privilege which arise as a result of remarks which are part of the record, and part of the debating record here, must either be raised during the sitting in which they are put forth on the record or, according to Standing Order 17(2), raised in the following sitting, provided, of course, that notice is given to the Chair within the terms of Standing Order 17(2). That means the Chair receives notice of the intention to raise the question of privilege one hour before the sitting on the following day. That has always been extended to members.

In this particular case, I received two notices of an intention to raise this question yesterday, which I would have permitted except that the notices were not received in time. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers) gave me notice today of his intention to raise this question which arose out of Wednesday's proceeding. I therefore find that that notice is too late.

Granted, as I said today, I was taking a strict line in respect to the interpretation of that, but I think I have to do that. That is the explanation the hon. member was seeking.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 204, 266 and 282.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

WORLD FESTIVAL OF YOUTH AND STUDENTS

Question No. 204—Mr. Jones:

1. Was there a Canadian delegation sent to the recent World Festival of Youth and Students which was held in Cuba? What were the criteria used in chosing the Canadian delegation to this conference? Who were the delegates chosen from Canada and what are their ages and addresses? Do any of these individuals represent a particular organization, association or institution and if so, what are they for each individual?

2. What was the objective of the recently held World Festival of Youth and Students? Will Canada be participating in future Festivals of this kind and if so, will there be equal representation from all parts of Canada?

3. Were there any federal, provincial or local grants given to any individuals who attended this Festival and if so, how much were they, where were they from and to whom were they given?

4. Is the government aware of an article which appeared in the newspaper L'Évangeline on August 19, 1978 concerning Acadians at the World Festival?

5. Was this Festival held in Cuba organized by the Communist Party? Were the ideologies of the Communist Party presented at this Festival?

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The recent 11th World Festival of Youth and Students was non-governmental in character; the Government of Canada was not involved in the selection of delegates and the Canadians who attended did not represent Canada in any official sense.

2. See 1 above.

3. The Government of Canada did not provide grants or subsidize in any way the attendance of Canadians at this festival.

4. Yes.

5. See 1 above.

SECRETARY OF STATE—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 266—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Department of the Secretary of State and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

CANADIAN POSTS ABROAD

Question No. 282—Mr. Jones:

1. What language is used as a greeting for incoming telephone calls at the Canadian Embassy in Melbourne, Australia?

2. Are efforts made at each Canadian Embassy around the world to answer incoming telephone calls with the language of the country in which the Embassy is located or are the "official" languages of Canada used regardless of the native language?

[Mr. Speaker.]

3. Are employees of the Embassy chosen with the language requirements of the country in mind? Are services offered at each Embassy in the native language of that country?

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. At the Canadian Consulate General in Melbourne, Australia, incoming telephone callers are greeted in both official languages of Canada as follows: "Bonjour, Canadian Consulate General".

2. The telephonists/receptionists employed at Canadian posts abroad are generally speaking citizens or residents of the host country as one of the major prerequisites for the position is knowledge of the local language(s). On receiving incoming calls, the receptionist initially communicates with the caller in both official languages of Canada and thereafter responds in the language used by the caller to the greatest extent possible and practical.

3. The selection of personnel for posts abroad is based on operational needs, one of which is linguistic capability. If needed, language courses are offered to personnel to ensure provision of services in the language of the host country.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cullen that Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, last evening in the second reading debate on Bill C-14 I made a few opening remarks. I think it is wise to go back and capsulize some of the points I was making.

First, I said that the problem in Canada is not fiddling with the Unemployment Insurance Act, trying to tighten it up. The problem is not people, but rather jobs. I said last evening that the government, through Bill C-14, has chosen to scapegoat the unemployed, that since it is bereft of any solution to the unemployment problem, the next best thing is to pick on the victims of unemployment. In other words, the government is making the unemployed the scapegoat for its inadequacies with regard to planning the economy so that it may grow and stimulate the creation of jobs necessary for those who want to work.

The other point, which is quite important, is that the government has ignored its own studies and statistics compiled by departments of government. For example, I quoted from the latest statement by the Economic Council of Canada to the effect that the problem is not unemployment insurance, but in effect the whole question of employment and what the government ought to do is busy itself with re-energizing the economy of Canada.

I also pointed out that Statistics Canada informs us that on a day to day basis there are only about 40,000 jobs. That includes full-time, part-time, and casual jobs. The latest figure of the number of persons unemployed, on a seasonally adjusted basis, was 901,000 people seeking work in this country.

I want to refer to the Manpower office in Toronto. In yesterday's Toronto Star there was an article written by Carola Vyhnak entitled "Job-hunting Help? It's Off The Wall". It points out that as at the end of September, 1978, there were 12,298 vacancies listed with the metro area Manpower office. At the same time there were 110,281 jobless clients registered with that office. Therefore, even in an area where there is a much greater chance of getting employment, the number of people seeking work through the minister's office exceeds five to one the number of vacancies available.

The last statement of the article is rather interesting. I quote:

> Recently a pizza parlour put in an order at one office for 145 positions. More than 1,000 applied.

That is the story across the country. There are too few jobs available for those who are seeking employment.

What does the minister do in Bill C-14 of which he is so proud he trumpets it in the House of Commons? He says this bill will remove 250,000 people from the unemployment insurance rolls. Where will they go? They will go onto the welfare rolls of the provinces and municipalities. Bill C-14 does not deal with the problem, only the symptom.

● (1242)

As I was pointing out last night, this bill was designed on the philosophy held by too many people that when a crime is committed the victim is to blame. One might call it the rape victim syndrome. You blame the victim for the predicament in which she finds herself.

This is a vicious bill, because not only does it discriminate against the unemployed generally but it specifically picks out women from among the unemployed. As I pointed out last night, women are usually the last to be hired and the first to be fired, so the amendments dealing with re-entry into the work force and the repeating of claims within a year can only make it even more difficult for women, who already find they are discriminated against when it comes to securing and retaining employment. It is all part of the scapegoat process.

The government was telling us last year that the reason the program was in trouble was because too many women and young people were collecting benefits. This measure is the fulfilment of a search for scapegoats which has been taking place in the last couple of years. If the minister would examine the facts he would see that the relationship between women as workers and women as recipients of unemployment insurance has been declining since 1972.

I turn, now, to consider another group which is being "scapegoated" in this bill. I refer to the youth group. The government is asserting that young people have only a marginal attachment to the work force and that they are abusing the unemployment insurance program. In many respects young people are in the same situation as that in which women find themselves. In other words, they are among the last to be hired and the first to be fired. Since they are just entering the work force they have little seniority and are extremely vulnerable to lay-offs. For example, I know that when Inco cut down its labour force those with less than two years' experience were all laid off.

Thousands of young people who enter the work force every year have very limited work force experience. Many of them find it very hard to get work at all. Yet in spite of the difficulties they face, these young people are actually under represented on the unemployment insurance rolls. This is an interesting point. Young people make up 43.2 per cent of the unemployed, yet they account for only 18 per cent of unemployment insurance claimants.

If ministers looked at their own statistics they would find that young people are not out to rip off the unemployment insurance program. If they looked at their own Statistics Canada figures they would find that young people leave their jobs at the same rate as older workers. Roughly one half of both groups left their previous employment because they were laid off. These people need the same protection as older workers and ought not to be discriminated against.

The changes in unemployment insurance legislation over the last few years, particularly the amendments before us, are going to hurt students. In the past, a student who found work for one summer would have been eligible to draw on unemployment insurance the following summer while looking for permanent or temporary work. That is no longer the case. From now on students who graduate, or who must look for work in the summer, will be left to rely completely on their own resources. As we know, in an economy beset by such high unemployment, those resources today are pretty slim. With only one permanent job for every 20 people seeking it, the graduate will face the same problem as other workers, except that he will be unable to draw from the unemployment insurance fund into which he had paid the previous summer. The person who wants to go back to school will also face problems. There are few enough summer jobs available, yet at the same time the government is cutting back on funding to post secondary education.

Even in the face of its own evidence, the government is trying to convince us that young people and women are cheats and leeches on society. In an endeavour to avoid being blamed for the lack of jobs in the economy, ministers are trying to convince us that young people really do not want to work. My party, Mr. Speaker, prefers to believe the findings of the study published in 1975 for the Department of Manpower and Immigration, "Canadian Work Values, Findings of a Work Ethic Survey and Job Satisfaction Survey". This study found that Canadians have a very strong motivation to work and that young people and women have exactly the same attitudes as older people and men. These people want to work, and the government, which in the past has followed a policy of creating unemployment, in denying them the opportunity. Now an attempt is being made to deny them even minimum protection under the unemployment insurance program.

I have already mentioned the position of women and young people. The bill before us also discriminates against those whose attachment to the work force is marginal. In times of high unemployment, trades people such as carpenters, electricians, and plumbers, are very susceptible to changes in the unemployment insurance program. The changes contemplated by the government will act as a disincentive. Suppose, for example, that a carpenter in the Ottawa area has the prospect of a job which will last only four or five weeks. These amendments might very well constitute a disincentive to taking a job which might only last for a short period.

There is also in the bill a provision which would discriminate against persons who are not in long-term jobs. For example, there is a requirement which says that in the case of part time work it will be necessary to be employed 20 hours a week to be considered as "attached" to the work force. Formerly the requirement was for a minimum earning capacity of $48 a week.

In an area like the one I represent, which at the moment is experiencing 11.2 per cent unemployment—that is the official figure; it is up to the figure experienced in the Atlantic region—women and young people who may have been selling on a part-time basis, working in a store, are now not even able to get two days of work. This is because the depression in the economic conditions in the area is resulting in retail sales cuts. Employers will have to cut back work formerly available to these people. Many are greatly concerned about the new requirement which will call for 20 hours of work a week. They will not be able to get that number of hours of employment in order to qualify.

The new provisions also discriminate against those in the work force who are in seasonal types of occupation. As well as being unfair to the people with marginal attachment to the work force, women and youth, they are also unfair and discriminatory to some of the regions in Canada. When the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) first announced the changes, he was flailing around looking for some popular policies to follow this fall. His first announcements suggested that the amendment dealing with repeaters would affect all provinces, not just those with below 11.5 per cent of unemployment. That kind of amendment would have disqualified most of Newfoundland's fishermen and would have cost the Newfoundland economy $11 million. Now the legislation is before us we see the government has changed its mind on that. It will exempt areas with devastating unemployment as opposed to areas with just plain awful unemployment.

● (1252)

What was the rationale for suggesting the 11.5 per cent figure? Any area with 11.5 per cent unemployment or more will be exempt from the provisions regarding repeating claims. What is the difference between 11.5 per cent and 11.2 per cent? I suggest that an area like the Sudbury basin which has 11.2 per cent unemployment is just as hard hit as an area which has 11.5 per cent unemployment. The region I represent will be discriminated against, and the effects of unemployment will be just as devastating as it will be in regions which are arbitrarily exempted.

I am sure the government would like us to believe that it made this decision out of concern for people in high unemployment areas, but I do not see how it can claim that. I think the by-elections which were coming up were good reasons. The minister did not consult the provinces regarding effects. He did not consult the trade union movement or representatives of labour. There were no consultations whatsoever. At the beginning of September the minister made a knee-jerk statement, but he had to backtrack.

Last night in the House he told us that he had been advised by Liberal backbenchers, but the fact is that his bureaucrats proposed this program. The minister announced it without proper consultation. There was a knee-jerk reaction to the announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that there would be cutbacks, but it was not properly thought out. Now the minister is backtracking, and I think that the reality of a certain by-election is one of the major reasons for his backtracking.

The fishermen in Atlantic Canada were petitioning. They were all up in arms. There were over 20,000 of them, and the government could not resist that kind of pressure. It seems to me that this is not a very well thought out program. Atlantic Canada will not get off scot-free with respect to the effects of these amendments, because cutting back insured benefits from 66⅔ per cent to 60 per cent will cost the Newfoundland economy $18 million. Newfoundland has the highest unemployment rate in the country. I cannot understand why the federal government would remove that amount of money from an economy which needs every penny it can get. Areas with high unemployment and people who find it difficult to find work will be hardest hit by this bill, but so will other areas.

The chairman of metro Toronto has said that the cutbacks will cost the metro Toronto welfare scheme an additional $10 million. If $10 million more is spent on welfare in metro Toronto, that money has to be taken from other programs which may have a higher priority with the local people. The metro chairman said that the changes would put another 2,500 people on the welfare rolls in metro Toronto, which would eat into other programs. It is clear that these changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act have nothing to do with the economy but everything to do with the government's trying to win back popularity. The government thinks there is a right-wing mood in this country. It is trying to ride that right-wing mood by bringing in this kind of retrogressive legislation rather than coming to grips with the serious economic problems we have.

The solution is to order the economy in such a way as to create the jobs needed by those who are looking for work. The government is playing the old shell game. The 250,000 people affected by this measure will not disappear. The facts we have put on the record indicate that 250,000 people may not qualify for benefits as a result of the changes the minister has brought forward, but that does not mean they will not have the same economic needs they had when they were on unemployment insurance.

They will find themselves going on welfare rolls, or they will steal. In my area there is a study under way which indicates that there is a distinct correlation between crime and high unemployment. The crime rate clearly increases with the unemployment rate, so this is not just an economic problem. That is what this government would have us believe. It is also a very serious social problem with which the government refuses to come to grips.

The Social Planning Council of metro Toronto conducted a study entitled "The problem is jobs, not people". The government uses its energy dealing with the unemployed. It seems to have a titanic philosophy: women and children first. The government seems to be applying that philosophy to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Why does it not use its energy to come to grips with some real problems? Just yesterday in the Toronto Star an article written by Richard Gwyn appeared under the headline "Foreign Firms Blamed for Loss of 200,-000 Jobs in Canada." Richard Gwyn wrote:

Foreign-owned branch plants have cost Canada up to 200,000 jobs, a just-published Science Council study states.

The government's own agency, the Science Council of Canada, under Dr. Shepherd, has pointed out that foreign ownership has cost us 200,000 jobs since 1972. That is a problem on which the government ought to expend its energy. It should be dealing with the effects of foreign ownership on the Canadian economy vis-à-vis jobs. Why does the government not use its energy to come to grips with the problems caused by multinational mining corporations in Canada?

Last fall International Nickel laid off 2,600 people in the Sudbury Basin. This government could only wring its hands. It said it could not interfere, that it did not know what to do and that there was no solution but to put these people on unemployment insurance. The government should be coming to grips with the problem of the exploitation of non-renewable resources in Canada. Why is the government not doing so? The government seems to be tying up the House of Commons and the energies of the Department of Employment and Immigration by fiddling with the Unemployment Insurance Act. It is trying to give the impression to the Canadian public—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Who said no?

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

● (1412)

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, I think if anyone is seriously looking to see the difference between Liberal and Conservative philosophies, this present debate is an excellent example of the difference between us. I have been reading the debate in Hansard of yesterday, and I believe some of the statements by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) were absolutely punitive. If that is the idea behind unemployment insurance, then it is wrong.

The unemployment insurance system is not a punitive system; it is a system which is supposed to help those people who, through no fault of their own, have lost their jobs. It is a program of temporary assistance until such time as they do find other jobs appropriate to their talents, and certainly with sufficient money to cover their basic and just needs.

What has happened in this regard? I suggest that by innuendo and insinuation on the part of members of the official opposition, helped unfortunately by many members of the media, there has been such a hate campaign conducted against recipients of unemployment insurance that genuine recipients of benefits are now in a corner, almost afraid to admit that they receive benefits. To disparage an entire community of people for the sake of a few abusers is, to me, unethical and dishonest.

Let me refer to some of the points raised so far in the debate. I start by referring to one statement that I consider as being almost cause for a question of privilege. I quote a statement by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra last night as reported at page 987 of Hansard. He stated:

We are straightforward people on this side of the House—

To imply that the only straightforward people in this House sit on that side is absolutely and grossly unfair and untrue. I can assure that hon. member, and any other members who share his views, that there is no monopoly held by any party in this House in respect of being straightforward.

The hon. member also seemed to imply that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) wanted to save money, but for what purpose he was not sure. I can tell the hon. member, because the minister made it very clear in his statement last night when he said that the savings are to be applied to other more productive programs. This is a most valid point, and one which warrants support of this House in respect of this program. What the government is trying to do is weed out the abusers who, I repeat, are in the minority, and put the money that is saved to much more constructive use, particularly in the creation of jobs.

There is another point I would very much like to underline, and here again I am referring to what was more or less an innuendo, but extremely dangerous and insidious. To quote again from that hon. member of the Tory party:

> This year across Canada there were 150,000 unemployment insurance cheques that were not picked up at special distribution centres during the postal strike. Of course, the government has explanations for this.

Of course the government has explanations for that, Mr. Speaker, yet by innuendo the hon. member is impugning the integrity of thousands of innocent beneficiaries of the unemployment insurance scheme who, for one reason or other, mostly legitimate, I am pretty sure, could not pick up their unemployment insurance cheques during the postal strike. Let me give you an example. It could very well be that many of those cheques were in respect of maternity benefits. I can guarantee that if you are expecting a baby within a few weeks you are not going to run around Toronto trying to pick up your cheque. You just simply cannot do that. That is impossible.

Some of these cheques could have been for sickness claims, and some of them may have been, as the minister replied in answer to a question in the House, payable to people who had already found other jobs. They would be entitled to the cheques, but now could they leave their new jobs to go down and pick them up?

This is the kind of insinuation which, unfortunately, has been spread throughout Canada, and this has caused, yes, invited, hatred and distrust.

If there is one thing that Liberal philosophy supports it is the absolute and vital necessity for a sufficient amount of mutual trust between human beings. I am very proud of the fact that the Liberal government first asks questions, finds out the facts and, if necessary, will punish. To punish the innocent before questions have even been asked is totally unfair and disparaging. These are the kind of attacks which, unfortunately, have led what is essentially a good system into tremendous disrepute. This has caused real beneficiaries of the system to be almost ashamed to admit they are collecting unemployment insurance to which, by the way, they are entitled. The abusers are few and, through good controls, they will be caught. As a result of provisions in this bill many of them will be caught, but perhaps not all.

No one, least of all the minister, is going to pretend that the system is perfect. If it were not so good there would not be so many people trying to abuse it in the first place. There are some abusers because of human nature. We must admit there are some abusers and we have to do our best to get at them, but in getting at them we must do our best not to hurt the innocent.

There was another point in the hon. member's speech which I am sure the youth of Canada will be interested to study. I refer to the hon. member's statement that there is now a generation of Canadians who have no incentive to work. That is a shameful statement and implies that the youth of Canada does not want to work and has no incentive. That is absolutely shameful and is an attack which should not be allowed to continue.

Let me quote yet another statement. He said that there are "any number of employers . . . having great difficulty in finding workers to fill the jobs". First, I would like to know to what kind of jobs the hon. member has reference. I myself was very recently at an employment centre in Toronto and asked if there were any vacancies there. I was told there were, and I asked what type. I was informed that most were very menial jobs. Unfortunately on that particular day the people looking for jobs were people with high qualifications.

What are we trying to do, and what is the Tory philosophy in that kind of situation? Are we, on the one hand, to encourage our children to stay at school acquiring increasingly higher education, and then when they have made the sacrifice of years at school, are we asking them to accept jobs as dishwashers? Is that all the hope we are offering the youth of Canada?

An hon. Member: There is nothing wrong with washing dishes.

Mrs. Appolloni: There is nothing wrong with washing dishes, but I think we should be honest in all our policies. We have no right to encourage the children of Canada to stay in school to become overqualified and to give them unrealistic expectations. It is our duty as a society to provide jobs which will in some ways satisfy those children. We cannot expect them, after they have spent all those years obtaining an education, particularly a higher education, to take on jobs as dishwashers. It is absolutely wrong. As I said, my understanding of the situation in Toronto is that there were vacancies and jobs to be filled, but they were of a more menial type such as dishwashers, or short order cooks.

● (1422)

I wish that the opposition would clarify their position. An hon. member on the opposition side has suggested that the aim of Liberal government policy is to have more and more state intervention. On the one hand we are accused of having more and more state intervention, and on the other hand we are accused by the same party of not doing enough to create employment. They cannot have it both ways. I myself lean toward free enterprise, but I realize that there are times, particularly in a mixed economy such as ours, when the government must intervene. I do not say that it should be done in every instance, but if the private sector is not taking up the slack then government must step in.

The Liberal government has taken some very constructive steps in this regard. As an example I cite in particular a report by the second tier committee on policies to improve Canadian competitiveness. This committee was a tremendous breakthrough inasmuch as it was made up of members from the Canadian Labour Congress, representatives of private industry, and officials from the provincial and federal governments. The objective of this conference was not to listen to empty rhetoric, but to examine the whole economic situation of Canada and explore how the situation of job creation could be improved. The report, under the heading "Manpower and Labour Relations", at page 14 reads:

Manpower policy should be, in the view of the committee, a full employment policy. It should be a policy that endeavours not only to ensure industry with a labour force necessary to meet its needs but also aims at providing the individual Canadian worker with the opportunities to improve his or her level of skill, encourages mobility, and enables the individual to have a more fulfilling and satisfying work experience.

It would be interesting to contrast that quote with some of the statements to which I have referred, in the speech made last night.

Having said that, I would like to state to the House, and to the minister who is present in the House, some of my own reservations. I feel that the bill is an honest attempt to stop the few abuses made against the program. However, I have some reservations with regard to the section dealing with training allowances. The minister in his speech said, as reported at page 984 of Hansard:

The basic allowance provided to such people is only intended to offset additional costs, such as transportation, incurred in training.

The people in my constituency who most benefit from the manpower training program are the families with one parent, in most cases women. It is usually mothers who have been abandoned by their husbands and who are usually unskilled, scared, and on welfare. This training allowance enables them to upgrade their skills or to learn new ones. They need this help because if we do not get these people off welfare the person or persons who suffer in the end are the children. By cutting down the basic training allowance we are, ipso facto, denying these mothers the right to training programs under manpower. I still have to be convinced, and I am open to discussion, on how we can avoid cutting out these mothers from the training allowance programs and at the same time cut down their allowance. Welfare simply covers their nutritional needs, their rent, and the needs of the children, but it does not cover, for example, baby sitting, which these women would require if they were to attend a training program. These women need help. Their situation can best be described by an old Persian proverb, "Give a man fish and you feed him for a day, but teach him to fish and you feed him for a lifetime."

I am pleased to see that the minister has made reference to on-the-job training programs for youth. The reports which come from my own riding say that the on-the-job programs are the best thing this department has introduced. They are well received by employers and employees. I doubt, however, that the on-the-job program will be of much benefit to lone parents. If she had a proper job, and I am thinking particularly of women again, she would not need training and she would not need an allowance. The point is that these mothers need training in order to get jobs.

The on-the-job training program is directed primarily to youth, male or female. I was glad to see that the minister emphasized the fact that these training programs will be open to women, especially in sectors where they have been under represented in the past. It is a step in the right direction. I am not convinced though that by cutting back on the basic training allowance for women that we are doing them a service. In a year or so, I believe that we will be regretting this decision, but, as I said, I am open to discussion and, no doubt, I will hear more on the subject when we reach the committee stage on this bill.

● (1432)

I should like to refer again to the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra last night when he was referring to people who leave their jobs. He said that an additional problem is the precipitous increase in labour turnover. That is also a matter of great concern to us and one that, I think, needs to be discussed outside the parameters of this bill.

Of course it is very unnerving, unsettling, and uneconomic for the country to have people leave their jobs with great frequency. With this bill the government does not intend to tell people they must stay in a job where the working conditions are appalling or where their abilities are not being recognized. It is not the government's policy to impose that on any person who has a grievance in his job and, therefore, must move. What the government is saying in this bill is that if you really have to change jobs because you cannot find your niche, you are free to do so, but not at the expense of other taxpayers who may be gritting their teeth and staying in their jobs a lot longer.

I think this is typical of the Liberal approach being taken in this bill. The idea is to cut out the obvious abusers, not to put money into the state coffers as such but to devote that money to a much more constructive program such as job creation which, I believe, should be the top priority of all of us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, probably one of the most important bills to come before the House in this session. It is a difficult bill, and I understand the difficulties of the minister and maybe even sympathize with them. I can practically tell him the kinds of problems he is having in his caucus are not dissimilar to the kinds of problems I am having in my caucus, because that is a fact of life in the country. It is a fact of life that was rather dramatically addressed by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) in his speech when he quoted Disraeli's eloquent description of the two nations—the nation of the haves and the nation of have-nots.

That dichotomy is a fact of Canadian life. It is a more important fact of Canadian life than any other aspect of our national problems, whether national unity, constitutional problems, linguistic problems, or any other. Until we solve the problem of economic disparity we are not going to have a united country. We cannot have unity when we have widespread disparity.

I just heard my friend, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), make a remark, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to see he is in the House today. He is a good friend of mine. I have great respect for him. I hope he is going to participate in this debate, because one of the concerns about this growing problem of nations of haves and of have-nots is that it is no longer a regional problem; it is a problem in the big cities as well as the small cities and in the Atlantic provinces.

It is interesting that the constituency of the hon. member for Welland is in the Saint Catharines-Niagara area, which has the third highest rate of urban unemployment in the country. That is the area that we in the Atlantic provinces look upon as the banana belt of the country. In the pretty, seemingly prosperous cities of Saint Catharines, Welland, Thorold and Niagara Falls, you would wonder why unemployed could be such a problem as to represent the third highest rate of urban unemployment in the country at over 11 per cent. I know the hon. member for Welland is just as concerned about that as I am.

Mr. Railton: That was one year ago; It is not the same now.

Mr. McGrath: I listened very carefully to the minister's speech. I have to tell him I was disappointed—disappointed because he showed an insensitivity to the subject that is out of character with the minister or my perception of him. He is not a heartless person; he is a compassionate man. In delivering that cold, sterile speech, prepared for him by faceless bureaucrats who really do not have a feel for the subject, he was demonstrating a rather uncharacteristic insensitivity to a subject that touches directly the lives of so many people.

I was surprised at the brevity of the speech. I would have expected he would go into it in more depth and greater detail to lay the problem properly before the House and set the stage for the debate, but he did not. A few things he said rather surprised me. For example, in the context of justifying the changes in the present unemployment insurance bill, he said he was doing so in order that unemployment insurance will not become a way of life. It is not with any sense of pride that I state to this House that I come from a part of the country where, through economic circumstances in many instances, unemployment insurance has in fact become a way of life. It is an economic fact to be reckoned with in the Atlantic provinces, that visible have-not part of the nation.

It is a way of life in the Atlantic provinces, especially Newfoundland, because unemployment has become a way of life in those provinces. It is ten years since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) campaigned in the Atlantic provinces for the election in 1968, and promised to end all this disparity of high unemployment and low incomes. He was going to end it by bringing in a Marshall aid type plan for the Atlantic provinces. We all know what the Marshall plan did for war-torn Europe. As a result of the Marshall plan, today the Deutschmark is the strongest currency in the world. Europe is prospering with an employment rate that is the envy of Canada. The economic growth rate is the envy of Canada. That is what the Marshall plan did for Europe. We see what United States aid did for war torn Japan. The Japanese yen is now one of the two strongest currencies in the world. Their economy is the envy of the world.

That is what we were promised in the Atlantic provinces in 1968—a Marshall plan type of aid to end the traditional curse of regional disparity which we inherited in 1949 and, which our neighbours in the Atlantic provinces have had to live with for considerably longer. That promise was as rhetorical and empty in terms of its sincerity and intent as the same promise made by the same Prime Minister in the same election campaign with respect to a just society.

The result is that over the last ten years—I can only take ten years because it coincides with the administration of the right hon. Prime Minister—we have had a pattern of rising unemployment in these four provinces. Where there is no permanent employment all anyone can expect is to get a seasonal job in the fishing industry or the forestry industry in the maritime provinces or, perhaps, farming, or the tourist industry. That is the best you can expect. Or, you can look to what I look upon and what many people see as a glorified form of federal welfare, and that is the Canada Works program. That is all there is. There is nothing else to turn to except unemployment. And now the minister wants to take that away. He wants to take that away from our economy without adequate planning and without adequate regard for the consequences of what he is doing.

● (1442)

As for consultation, Mr. Speaker, this is a word this government has thrown out. There was no consultation on this bill, neither was there any consultation on the family allowance bill. One can ask: why should the federal government consult on an area of federal jurisdiction? The answer is: for the simple reason the transfer payments in these social programs are vitally and crucially important to the economy of the four Atlantic provinces. There are the consequences of cutting back on unemployment insurance without consultation. A province may have a debt somewhere between $1 billion and $2 billion and half a million people. It has to go to the money markets of the world every now and then to borrow money to service the debt to keep the current account going. The consequences are horrendous. It means the people who are deprived of this unemployment insurance will have to fall back on provincial welfare. Surely with that kind of a result one would expect that there would be some kind of gradual process in order to ease the economic impact on provinces, such as Newfoundland. Unemployment insurance is a very important part of the economic fabric in that part of the country.

The minister talked about using a scalpel instead of an axe. I think it is probably easier to use an axe without anaesthetic than it is a scalpel, because at least an axe implies a sudden quick cut, a sudden jolt, whereas the scalpel is a precise instrument that has to find its way in a precise fashion. In order to use the instrument, first of all, one has to anaesthetize the patient. What the minister is doing in the Atlantic provinces and parts of Quebec is applying a scalpel without the benefit of anaesthetic. The result is going to be painful, very painful.

It is a paradox of our nation that I, as a member of this House, representing the oldest settled part of this nation, should speak in these terms. We are not a have-not province, just as the Atlantic provinces are not a have-not region. How can a province that has the greatest potential in terms of hydroelectric resources, both developed and undeveloped, be a have-not province in this energy starved world? How can a province that counts within its territorial jurisdiction 67 per cent of the 200-mile economic zone of Canada's east coast, containing within it the most prolific fund of fishery in the world—how can that province be a have-not province in this protein starved world of ours?

How can a province that has underground vast exploited and unexploited mineral resources—to name a few; iron ore, copper, lead, zinc and—be a have-not province? Half of the iron ore produced in this country is produced in the province of Newfoundland. How can that be classified as a have-not province? How can a province be a have-not province with the tremendous timber resources that the province of Newfoundland and Labrador has, undeveloped, waiting to be exploited? How can it be a have-not province? There is something basically out-of-whack. There is something wrong when that kind of a treasure house of unexploited wealth cannot provide an adequate income for a half a million people. It is crazy. It is insane.

I went to Iceland one time. Here is a country which is not dissimilar to Newfoundland in terms of its climate, in terms of the economic factors that are at play there. Iceland has half the population that we have in Newfoundland. They do not have the mineral resources that we have, apart from thermal resources which they use for hot houses and so on, but that is not a big factor. Iceland does not have the energy resources, apart from what they can generate from the natural steam that is in the ground. They do not have the timber resources. All they have is the same fishing industry selling in the same market, with the same products that we have. And yet with that as an economic base they have achieved a higher standard of living than Canada has. Iceland has practically zero unemployment. They do not worry about inflation because a lot of their inflation is imported. But they have virtually zero unemployment. Their fishermen are the elite of the system. They are the elite of the nation. They are rewarded with an income commensurate with that of the mandarins in the public service of Iceland.

Icelanders come to Newfoundland and look at us and what we have, the climate we have which is so similar to theirs. It would surprise hon. members to know that sheep can graze in the eastern part of Newfoundland all year round, and yet we do not have a woollen industry, like they have in Iceland. Icelandic woollens fetch the highest price in world markets. Some day, Mr. Speaker, in the not too distant future I will not have to stand in this House—and I hope to be here—and complain about the Government of Canada cutting back on unemployment insurance benefits because it will be almost as academic as it is for some of my colleagues in Saskatchewan and Alberta.

It was not very long ago that Alberta was a have-not province and the nation had to come to the rescue of Alberta. Now they have oil and they are well away. So the minister comes to us and applies the scalpel and he applies it without the benefit of an anaesthetic because to us unemployment has come to be an unfortunate way of life.

Let us take a look at the facts—first of all, long-term unemployment in the Atlantic provinces. The figures I am using are from the minister's own source of statistics, Stats-Can. Newfoundland has, as of the last figures released, 34,000 people unemployed. These are official seasonally adjusted rates, so this figure will be considerably higher than that and I will explain why in a moment. Officially Newfoundland has 13,000 people who have been unemployed for three months or more. This represents 45 per cent of those people looking for work. I can take hon. members to parts of my province where the people have been unemployed for years, apart from the couple of months' work they can get from Canada Works or the couple of months' work they can get in a fish plant or what have you. That long-term unemployment situation stands out like a sore thumb in the Atlantic provinces. Nova Scotia has 12,000 people unemployed for 3 months of longer, representing 38 per cent of those looking for work. In New Brunswick the figure is 12,000 which represents 41 per cent of those looking for work. Now we come to the province of Quebec where there are 104,000 unemployed, representing 41 per cent of the people looking for work. Long-term unemployment because of the mismanagement, the gross mismanagement of the economy by this government, has become a fact of life, and hence unemployment insurance has unfortunately become a way of life.

● (1452)

I wish that the minister, in keeping with the compassion that I know he has, had hesitated before bringing in this bill. I do not believe a bill like this should be introduced during a period of high unemployment. At least it should not apply to an area where unemployment is chronic and long term in nature.

The hon. member for York-South (Mrs. Appolloni) talked about abusers. There are abusers. There are too many people abusing the system. That is because the system has been badly managed. However, for the one person in six who abuses unemployment insurance, why make the other five suffer by tightening it up? That is exactly what is happening.

We have no time for abusers. Neither do we have any time for those who work the system and quit their jobs, come back on unemployment insurance, and it becomes a cycle. I have no sympathy for that kind of person. Anybody who has a job, all things being equal, should be penalized severely if he quits that job. Most of the people whom I represent would certainly subscribe to that view.

There are a number of things about this bill I would like to mention. I would first like to express my surprise with regard to the Stella Bliss case. We have this bill before us with no intention to amend it to reflect the decision of the Supreme Court, the views of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and, indeed, the views of the minister, because he said in his speech last night they intended to take this into account at a later date.

I remind the minister of this because I do not like what is implied in this bill with regard to women. It is not only the Stella Bliss case, but the implication of taking women out of the Outreach program. I will deal with that in a moment. However, getting back to the Stella Bliss case, the Commissioner for Human Rights on November 2 commended the minister. He said:

> It is the hope of this commission that your recommendations to cabinet will result in amending legislation being presented to parliament as part of the bill encompassing the changes which you announced on Septemer 1—
>
> If section 46 were amended so that the question of a woman's availability and capability for work were not unilaterally and arbitrarily determined without consideration of her particular circumstances, but was established according to the individual case, section 46 would then become consistent with the principles already accepted in the 1975 amendment to section 30.

Why does the legislation not reflect that fact? We are obviously passing a bill that is not consistent with the Canadian Human Rights Bill. Any woman in Canada will be able to challenge this bill and challenge it successfully. Obviously we are being asked to pass bad law.

Why does the minister tell the House that he intends to amend the bill when it gets into committee? Failure to do so is not good enough. He expects us to give speedy passage to this legslation, yet he just gives us a passing undertaking that this fact with regard to the rights of women, pregnancy and their entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits, is something that the minister intends to correct at a later date. We will have more to say about that when this bill goes to committee.

With regard to the Outreach program, this defies logic. I have yet to see or hear a rational explanation as to why, in this period of unprecedented high unemployment, women are taken out of the Outreach program. A large part of the unemployment in this country is chronic. A large number of the people affected by this chronic unemployment happen to be women, as well as young people, women in particular.

In periods of high unemployment it is always women who suffer most as the natural tendency is to give the job to the man because he is the provider. I suppose that is understandable in a way, but the facts of life are changing. In fact, they have changed. Women, both married and single, are now a part of the work force. Both spouses now work, a situation brought on by inflation, not by choice but out of economic necessity.

We have the situation of the single parent family, a growing part of the Canadian social fabric. There are more and more single parent families in this country, either by choice or circumstances, by divorce or what have you. Obviously these women have to work. They have no choice.

I believe I have accounted for two thirds of the women in the work force. That leaves one-third who must work in order to provide for themselves. They are as much if not even more affected by chronically high unemployment as their male fellow citizens. However, for reasons which defy logic, the minister decided as an economic move to take women out of the Outreach program.

Mr. Rodriguez: Scapegoats.

Mr. McGrath: They are being used as scapegoats. Maybe he did so because women are vocal and this will draw attention to the fact the government is doing something in the area of restraint. That seems to be the strategy of the government in its restraint program, to cut back in visible, highly vocal areas because it will draw attention to its plans to cut back on government spending.

If you happen to be on Bell Island, Newfoundland, where the mines have been closed for the past 11 years, and you are a woman, jobs are just as difficult and as remote to you as if you were a man. You are going to need the same training and guidance to get into the work force as a man who has been unemployed for the same period of time.

That could apply in any situation across the country. Therefore, I hope the government will reconsider its decision with regard to the Outreach program. I could quote from the memorandum, but I will not do that. I think I have made my point. I suspect we will hear more about that before this bill receives final approval in the House. There are several major proposals in this bill. I would like to dwell on them in detail. I have already alluded to a proposal that bothered me. It is causing a great deal of concern to anyone who comes from the Atlantic provinces.

I am sorry there are not more members here who represent the Atlantic provinces. Where is the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) who is so vocal and threatened to revolt within the Liberal caucus unless the minister changed his original proposals? Where are his colleagues, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), and the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Rooney)? Where are the members from northern New Brunswick where the problem is chronic? Why are they not in the House today?

I respect the fact that this is Friday and tomorrow is a national day of remembrance. A lot of members had to go to their constituencies to participate in Remembrance Day services. However, I must question their sense of priority. They would be doing more honour to the dead of this country of two world wars if they were here addressing the economic disparities of this nation rather than travelling to some symbolic gesture at a provincial cenotaph in this country. I believe that to be a fact. My responsibility is to be here addressing this bill so that veterans, ex-servicemen, their sons and daughters, will have half the chance at equality of opportunity their neighbours have in other parts of this country.

The 20-week provision is something the minister is going to have to reconsider. If not, I suspect he is going to have more problems in his caucus. There is no possible way that we can countenance this provision in the bill whereby the entry or re-entry of a claimant will require 20 weeks of contributions. By definition, that eliminates the seasonal worker, whether it happens to be someone employed in the tourist industry in Prince Edward Island, the fishing industry on the north coast of Newfoundland, or in the farm industry of the maritime provinces. So I would say to the minister that he must be prepared to consider amendments in this area.

● (1502)

The last time changes were before the House the minister was very wise and quick to accept suggestions we made with respect to qualifying periods. There was a regional factor built in to the qualifying period so that people in Newfoundland, say, would not have to work as long to qualify for benefits as would those in Calgary, Alberta. The same factor should be brought to bear in connection with the 20-week provision, even more so now because of the economic impact it will have on the Atlantic provinces. Most of the seasonal fish plants operate for about three months. That is about the length of the tourist industry. That is about the length of time that people can find jobs in various sectors on the fishing industry, the lobster and that kind of fishery. To be realistic, one must think in terms of anywhere between ten and 14 weeks' employment in that industry in the Atlantic provinces if the bill is not to be discriminatory. In its present form, Mr. Speaker, the bill is discriminatory to the Atlantic provinces.

The second proposal I wish to turn to has to do with the variable factor wherein we talk about 11.5 per cent as a triggering mechanism for this bill. That figure of 11.5 per cent is high. But high as it is, it means that the bill will still have application to the province of Newfoundland where unemployment is officially hovering around 16.8 per cent. Indeed, if we could get down to 11.5 per cent unemployment we would feel we were getting close to full employment. That is how bad our economic situation is at the present time. As I see it, 11.5 per cent would apply to the province of Newfoundland, the Cape Breton part of the province of Nova Scotia and probably to the northern part of the province of New Brunswick. So the minister will need to re-examine that part of the bill because it does not take into account the facts as I have tried to put them before the House with respect to the Atlantic provinces.

We intend, Mr. Speaker, to move amendments in this area. My colleague the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), who made such a great and comprehensive speech last night, referred in passing, I think, to these amendments. The present provision is an empty one, sir, and implies that there is something acceptable about the kind of situation about which I have just commented.

The proposal to lower the benefit rate to 60 per cent as a work incentive is, to me, of questionable value in terms of its potential impact. Again, if you take the case of the unemployed family head who needs to feed, house and clothe a family, it is just as strong an incentive to seek work actively at the present time as would be the case if the benefit were lower. Lowering the benefit to 60 per cent of the present amount will not provide any greater incentive to work. All it will do is impose an additional hardship on heads of families who are forced to live on unemployment insurance in this period of inflation. This is a factor which I think should be taken into account, on a regional basis if you like.

With respect to the fifth proposal in the bill before us—that with regard to placing a ceiling on income—I do not think anyone will quarrel with this. People who imply that the large number of unemployment insurance recipients are lazy and do not want to work are blind to the facts. If you happen to be a fisherman on the coast of British Columbia or a fisherman owning a long liner in Atlantic Canada earning $20,000, $40,000 or $50,000 a year, then obviously you do not need unemployment insurance and you should not get it. To that extent I think the minister is taking a step in the right direction to eliminate what is, in some cases, an abuse of the system. I heartily endorse and support that move.

We shall also be questioning the minister, Mr. Speaker, on why he did not move to extend the disqualification period for job quitters. I have already referred to that but it seems to me that here is an area in which the minister could really bring in meaningful reform by increasing the penalty to job quitters. Currently the period stands at six weeks, and I could see the minister doubling that to 12 weeks unless the circumstances were such that the person quitting the job had no other choice open to him.

I believe that the Economic Council of Canada said it all in its 1976 publication "People and Jobs". It dealt at some length with unemployment insurance, as the minister well knows, and I quote one part of that report:

> It would, of course, be possible to try to eliminate abuses by cutting certain categories of claimants or the duration of benefits, or by extending the period of work before claimants become eligible for benefits. But such recommendations could prove harmful to persons most exposed to periodic and genuinely involuntary unemployment—

That is precisely what the minister is doing in the bill we are considering here. He is penalizing people in the Atlantic provinces, parts of Quebec and in other parts of the country, but especially in these five eastern provinces which through no fault of their own, because of the economic situation, because of economic mismanagement, are exposed to periodic and genuinely involuntary unemployment. Sir, in regions of high unemployment this bill will represent a substantial burden on people who are unemployed through no fault of their own.

We are not talking about unskilled people who are always the hardest hit. We are not necessarily talking about women, who are often the hardest hit, and young people who are also hardest hit. We are talking about every sector of our society in this era of critically high unemployment—school teachers, university graduates. Let us consider the tragic case of a young person who works his way through college or university, at considerable hardship to himself and his family. He graduates and becomes an engineer, a school teacher or a lawyer. He is very proud of his accomplishment. He goes out into his society and says: "Here I am. I have this skill. I have applied myself. I have put much into this because I want to make a contribution. Give me a chance to contribute. I am ready". But the country is not ready for him. What does he do? Where does he go?

● (1512)

Mr. Rodriguez: Welfare.

Mr. McGrath: This young person suddenly has to come to grips with the trauma of unemployment.

An hon. Member: He could go to Edmonton.

Mr. McGrath: People do not want to go to Edmonton any more. They do not want to take that road. That is typical. People are coming out of university, and they resent the fact that people in this part of the country say that they should go to Upper Canada or Alberta. Why can there not be jobs for people in their home towns and provinces?

People want to work in their home towns and provinces because they want to hold on to the lifestyles to which they have become accustomed. They want to contribute to their home cultures and be part of them. People believe that they have the right to stay, and that is a factor in this ongoing unemployment situation which the minister and the government ignore. They ignore it at their peril because there is unrest among educated and articulate young unemployed people in this country. That unrest is manifesting itself in organizations such as the Organization of the Unemployed. The minister will be hearing more about that. Hopefully we will be hearing from that organization as this bill gets into committee, and we will have more to say at that time.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Paproski: Never mind.

Mr. Nystrom: I wonder if my friend, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), could answer one short question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He could answer a question only with unanimous consent because his time has expired. Is there consent to allow one question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Paproski: No.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I sincerely regret that unanimous consent was not given to the hon. member to ask his question because what we just heard was very thought-provoking and obviously carefully researched. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) was obviously sincere. I think the question of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) would also be sincere and that the hon. member for St. John's East would be happy to respond.

Mr. McGrath: I would be happy to respond, with the consent of the House.

Mr. Dawson: Tell that to your whip.

Mr. McGrath: I cannot speak for my whip, just as you cannot speak for yours.

Mr. Paproski: I said no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, we listened to a very eloquent and thought-provoking speech by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), and we were all hoping to find out how he would vote at second reading of this bill.

Mr. McGrath: May I respond to that point of order, with the unanimous consent of the House?

Mr. Paproski: No.

Mr. Dawson: Now we know who is boss.

Mr. McGrath: I can respond in a word, if there is consent. It is our intention to vote for this bill at second reading because we are anxious to get it into committee. That in no way implies that we are supporting the principle of the bill. We want to get this bill to committee because we are going to move amendments, and we want to see just exactly what the government intends to do with this measure.

Mr. Paproski: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think we should allow the hon. member who is seeking the floor to begin his remarks.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am slightly bemused, as I suppose all my colleagues on this side of the House are, that the Tory members opposite cannot agree amongst themselves as to whether they should answer questions. They cannot quite agree as to what their policy is. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) refused his own colleague permission to answer.

Mr. Paproski: Did you hear the answer?

Mr. Nystrom: The Tories are scared.

Mr. Young: I would like for a few moments to participate in this debate to make some comments on the substance of the bill. Basically we are discussing unemployment and unemployment insurance, and in a sense also attempts to get people back to work in meaningful jobs. Before I touch specifically on the points contained in the bill, I would like to make a short rejoinder to the hon. member who has just finished speaking, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), because he did mention the Niagara peninsula, and I represent part of that area.

In his remarks the hon. member seemed to blame all our economic and unemployment problems on what he called mismanagement on the part of the present government. I take strong issue with that. I would like to point out some of the causes of unemployment in this country. It is true that in the Niagara peninsula we have more unemployment than we would like to have. I believe at the present time our rate of unemployment is slightly above the national average. That is not entirely unexpected because much of the work in the Niagara area is seasonal. Our tourist season is 90 or 100 days long, and that is equivalent to the fruit growing season. We do have short-term employment in that area, and there are few alternative jobs for people who work in the tourist and fruit-growing industries during the off season.

The hon. member for St. John's East says that unemployment is caused by government mismanagement. Let me tell him what causes unemployment in an area like the one I represent. On balance the rate of unemployment in my area at the present time is about 10 per cent, but in the town of Fort Erie the rate of unemployment in the last couple of years has been 18 per cent, 20 per cent or 21 per cent.

This problem has been far from anything over which the government has had a great deal of control. In the town of Fort Erie in the last four years unemployment has been caused by events which have taken place in four major industries. I can name the industries. The first one was a battery manufacturing plant where there was a labour dispute and 110 people became unemployed. That had nothing to do with government management or mismanagement.

The second largest lay-off in that town occurred at Horton CBI Limited. That company manufactured steel plate pressure vessels. The reason for the lay-off at that factory was the cancellation of the company's building contracts by Ontario Hydro. That company held contracts to build steel pressure vessels for nuclear-generating stations which Ontario Hydro decided not to move ahead with. A couple of hundred people lost their jobs with the overnight cancellation of those contracts.

The third industry involved was the Ontario Jockey Club. Because of the turn down in the American economy the Ontario Jockey Club decided to take racing dates from its Fort Erie racetrack to its Toronto racetrack. This decision was a necessity and it was the result of the good management sense of the club. I cannot blame the club for this. I discussed this matter with the president and the chairman of the board, but because people in Buffalo, New York were suffering 18 per cent and 20 per cent unemployment, there just were not enough two-dollar betters coming across the Peace Bridge and putting down money to keep that track viable in terms of the racing industry. Racing dates were shifted to Toronto.

Four or five years ago in the town of Fort Erie a company called Fleet Industries employed 750 employees. Two years ago it employed about 350, approximately a 50 per cent manpower reduction. That occurred not because of anything the government did and in spite of anything the government could do to prevent it. It occurred simply because of a turn-down in the aircraft industry which started to take place in the United States following the four-fold increase in oil and fuel prices levied by the OPEC nations in the early 1970s. When the cost of aircraft fuel went up, the cost of air travel went up. When the cost of air travel went up, along with it went the cost of buying and flying planes, and it became a little less interesting for people to have to spend large sums to do some travelling around the world. The tourist and aircraft industries suffered and the airlines bought fewer and fewer planes. That resulted in people being laid off in aircraft factories.

• (1522)

These are four very poignant examples of how unemployment occurs in a riding. None of those was, as my friend the hon. member for St. John's East would say, government mismanagement. It was not government mismanagement at all; it was due to a downturn in the aircraft industry, a labour-management dispute at a battery factory, a change of racing dates by a company which wanted to keep up its corporate production, a change in racing dates by the Ontario Jockey Club, and also the cancellation by the provincial Conservative government through Ontario Hydro of its contracts to build nuclear generating stations and the pressure vessels that were involved in that construction. That is what caused unemployment in that community.

I hear some strange comments from the other side. A couple of days ago I heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) blaming this government for its involvement in the aircraft industry and its intervention in airline policies. I have pointed out to you, Mr. Speaker, what happened in terms of unemployment in an aircraft parts manufacturing company in my riding—50 per cent of the staff were laid off.

Now let me tell hon. members the success side of the story, the upturn. Two years ago, because that company was the successful bidder through Lockheed Corporation for contracts to build a long-range patrol aircraft—in my riding we are building the nose cone and flight deck for those planes—and because that company is successful and works hard, its labour force is good and it has had for a long time many experienced people, and because this government had a policy of producing in Canada as many of the parts of those long-range patrol aircraft as possible, that company survives and is doing as well today as it ever did before 1958 when the administration of a former leader of the government who now sits across the floor, namely the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his cabinet at that time, decided to scrap a plane we all know as the Avro Arrow, and thus just about decimated the Canadian aircraft industry.

Never in the history of this country and never in the history of my riding has this plant in my riding been doing so well except for the years before 1958. We had 350 people employed there two years ago, and by 1980 we expect 1,000 people to be employed in that factory, more than they have ever had. That is due to government support for industry and jobs in this country and good management on the part of this government.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know the hon. member well and I know he would not want to misinform the country, but on two occasions he has mentioned that the LRPA program was to the benefit of industry in this country. He should say of central Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, you have implied that that was a matter of debate and not a point of order, but I will answer the hon. gentleman anyway for the sake of the record. There are offset contracts, about which he knows very well, some of which apply in the aircraft industry and some of which apply outside the aircraft industry. They apply all across the country and benefit employment throughout the country.

What I find strange also are the comments I heard from the Leader of the Opposition some time ago and also last year when he set about every day roundly criticizing the Export Development Corporation for its assistance to industry in this country. He wanted us to cut down the Export Development Corporation, dismantle it, chop its budget here and there. I invited him to go down and give the speech he gave in the House to my constituents. I would love to have him go down there because I would like to campaign against a man giving those kinds of speeches. If it had not been for EDC, I would not have a plant in my riding today which employs over 200 people and is selling $85 million worth of heavy construction equipment to the Russians.

An hon. Member: Patronage.

Mr. Young: It is not patronage, as the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) said, not patronage at all. That company bid with the Russians for the supply of heavy moving equipment, 200 and 300-ton capacity heavy-duty vehicles. Because EDC guarantees the sales to the Russians, this company could count on being paid and could count on being able to pay its workers. They have built a new factory, a whole new production line, and they are selling $85 million worth of trucks and looking forward to selling another $30 million or $40 million worth of trucks, which will mean increased employment. I suggest that that is the result of government good management and good support mechanisms on this side of the House.

The point of the debate and the point of this bill could be summed up by saying that undoubtedly there is a continuous need to revise and to re-examine systems and programs—

Mr. Baldwin: And governments.

Mr. Young: —no matter what the government. In the case of unemployment insurance, we have a program which was meant to be a temporary income support for people between jobs, not an alternative to employment itself. I do not think anybody wants to contemplate a system of unemployment insurance as the only alternative to employment. I think we can contemplate quite happily a system of income maintenance for people who are between jobs and progressing in their career development. However, through pressures, the system has become stretched and distorted, and some of that distortion has come about through abuse of the system. I do not think anyone would deny that there has been some abuse. The question with which all of us have to grapple is how much abuse there is and how many of the problems we face are there because of a distorting or stretching of the use of the programs in the system.

The problem is that it is not just the employees who stretch the unemployment insurance system. Some employers, through the terms of the work arrangements they have with their employees with their semi-lay-off type provisions, have also stretched that system. At times there has been complicity between the employers and employees which has made it very difficult for government to grapple with in terms of a fair and honest administration of this system. I know that sometimes in my riding, where there is a number of seasonal workers, especially in tourism and the fruit farming industry, there are methods whereby an employer, through a small agreement with an employee, will agree to continue employing him on a part-time basis with some little task from week to week, enough to make sure that the partially laid off employee is still collecting some unemployment insurance and not costing the employer too much but costing the government—a fine balance to pick up the chips and to keep them both in a state of semi-operation. I know that that happens.

I suppose that in many cases these people cannot be blamed for stretching the system. The problem we have in an area such as mine is that many of the people who have taken up seasonal work which is there have really done so honestly believing that they would probably have available to them three to four months' work. They know that that is the way life is on the peninsula. If they are not year-round employees in a factory, there is work on the fruit farms, in motels, hotels and dining rooms in the summer time when the majority of our tourists are there. Not many people honestly expect, because of our climate and the seasonal nature of those industries, that that work will of necessity carry on during the winter period and during the shoulder seasons of early spring and late fall. If you approached them and asked them to tell you honestly, when they took the seasonal jobs, did they expect year-round type of employment, I am sure they would say no. If you approached them again and asked, on the basis that we consider unemployment insurance to be a temporary or stop-gap measure between jobs, and their expecting when they took seasonal employment to be laid off and that it would be seven or eight months until they got back on seasonal employment, whether they felt they should be entitled to collect unemployment insurance over that seven or eight-month period, I am sure you would again find that they would say no. Many of these people who honestly look at the situation and consider the costs to themselves as taxpayers and to the country agree it places a very heavy burden on the system to continue to pay these benefits. I am sure many of them agree that this is not totally "honest", and that there is some doubt as to whether we can continue to bear these costs.

● (1532)

Some of these people no doubt find it very necessary to have this income. In some cases it is a meagre income which they receive from seasonal jobs, but in other cases the income is very good. Tips to waiters and waitresses can be pretty good these days if they work hard. A number of jobs in the tourist service industry pay fairly well. Many of these people would say in all honesty that they have had a pretty good job, that they only expected it to be seasonal to begin with, and that they really do not demand or press too much for unemployment insurance in the winter, particularly when the cost to everyone as taxpayers is pointed out to them.

We must look at the system, assess it and revise it if necessary. We must do as much as we can to remove the disincentives to work. We must always leave the incentives in place so that people will feel they should have or should be looking for jobs and should be prepared to work. That is the only psychologically healthy way to go through life.

The government's programs in terms of job experience training, employment tax credits and small business tax incentives are all important things with which we must grapple.

Let me close by saying that we have fallen short in this country in terms of apprenticeship training. There is no greater lack in our system of programs in this country than apprenticeship training. We should be training people to fill skilled occupational positions which will continue on into the future. There is no doubt that the kings and queens of this country in the future will be those people who have good, solid, skilled occupational trades which they can carry with them. These skills are portable and can be taken anywhere in the country on a moment's notice to those areas where jobs are waiting. The shame of it all today is that we have thousands of skilled jobs in this country begging for someone to fill them, while at the same time we have thousands of unskilled employees looking for almost non-existent jobs.

This situation is a very important topic of discussions that have been taking place in this country, such as at the federal-provincial conference last week. Under our constitution, education and that kind of training falls squarely on the shoulders of the provinces. These training programs have not been forthcoming. It is only recently that we have begun to really look at this issue of apprenticeship training.

If I may just make one last rejoinder to my colleagues opposite in the Conservative party, if the hon. lady and hon. members over there are so proud of their provincial Conservative premiers and governments, they should be out there elbowing those governments into action, stirring them up so they will bring forward some of these apprenticeship training programs that are so necessary. That is probably one of the best services they could perform for this country. They should get together with some of their provincial Conservative colleagues, stir them up and get them at the job of providing skilled labourers to fill the skilled job vacancies we have in this country.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make about a two-minute contribution to this debate, mainly because I would like to ask the hon. member a question; but if I did so, that would be ruled as debate.

Let me point out that during the debate on long-range patrol aircraft, provinces such as British Columbia were promised several percentage points of the offset work. The quarterly report, as the hon. parliamentary secretary well knows, given to me by the directorate of the Department of Supply and Services, courtesy of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, shows the breakdown in respect of offset work plus parts work for the long-range patrol aircraft contract that has now passed the $400 million mark and is nearly half way through. It shows that British Columbia, with 10 per cent of the population and with an industrial capacity to match, has in total received one-third of 1 per cent of the offset and parts work.

I can well understand the hon. member, living as he does in the golden horseshoe, being very happy about the LRPA contract, with the province of Ontario receiving 50 per cent, Quebec receiving 40 per cent and the other provinces splitting up the remaining 10 per cent. We are not as satisfied, and we are not as complacent about the situation as the hon. member, and rightly so. We believe some of this work should be going to provinces such as Newfoundland, which has received nothing under this contract. I feel the parliamentary secretary is in error in trying to pretend that this whole situation is great for the country as a whole. It is great for Ontario and Quebec. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I recognized the hon. parliamentary secretary a moment ago. He can only be recognized again for the purpose of speaking if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There is not unanimous consent.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I assume it would be appropriate in the circumstances this afternoon to call it four o'clock and proceed with private members' business. That would certainly be preferable as far as I am concerned.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Does the House agree to call it four o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: We agree entirely with the suggestion of the hon. member, and we are prepared to proceed to a private member's public bill.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, private bills.

Order No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). Shall the order stand?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Is there unanimous consent to proceed with the study of Bill C-206 and to allow all the remaining bills to stand?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Hon. members have heard the request of the hon. parliamentary secretary that all the orders before No. 6 relating to Bill C-206 be stood. Is it agreed?

Mr. Paproski: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we so agree.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HOSPITAL TREATMENT FOR DANGEROUS OFFENDERS

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South) moved that Bill C-206, to amend the Criminal Code (hospital orders), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

● (1542)

She said: It may be useful, Mr. Speaker, to give a brief history on this bill. Approximately one year ago a 67-year-old Toronto man was charged with indecent assault on a three year old girl. As a result of plea bargaining a lesser charge of common assault was accepted, and as the defence lawyer proposed that his client would voluntarily undergo psychiatric treatment, the judge released the offender on probation. For a short while the offender did undergo psychiatric treatment, but it was for alcoholism, not for sexual deviation. Soon he stopped attending the hospital altogether.

Two months later he repeated his offence, this time on a five year old boy. The police added to the charge of indecent assault a second one of breaking parole. Again the offender was allowed to go free, and after three months he molested a three year old girl. Despite the pleas of the police officer to the presiding judge, the offender was released again. In July of this year he claimed his fourth victim, this time a seven year old girl. Only after this man had assaulted four small children did the judge commit him to the Clarke Institute.

What I have documented are bleak facts which cover the agency of an entire community fearful of the fate of its children, and the extreme frustrations of a police force hampered in its efforts to protect that community by what it perceives to be a loophole in the Criminal Code as it now stands. This bill does not pretend to be a panacea for preventing the evils of sexual abuse, but it is an effort to plug that particular loophole which has caused so much frustration to the police of Toronto and I am sure other communities across Canada.

Following the episode I have just described, 74 parents, teachers and other concerned individuals of York South submitted a petition to the attorney general of Ontario pleading for proper protection for children. I have no idea what the answer was, but I do know that over 500 of my constituents signified their approval of the substance of this bill by writing to the former minister of justice. I am now led to believe that the Toronto chief of police himself not only approves of the principle of this bill, but would be prepared to appear as a witness should it make its way to committee.

In its report of 1969, the Ouimet committee saw the criminal justice system as existing primarily to protect society. I believe that I have fully documented the fact that society was not protected in the case under reference, and I fear there are many other such cases.

I would like to take a look now at the sentencing procedure in this case. The judge was, presumably, reluctant to send the man to jail, well knowing that the imprisoned child molester lives in constant fear of being assaulted or even murdered. Here again the brutal justice meted out to child molesters by their fellow inmates has been well documented. The judge could not commit the man to a psychiatric institution either because the man was not legally insane.

In reply to letters from my constituents, the previous minister of justice mentioned provisions in the Criminal Law Amendment Act allowing offenders to be classified as dangerous offenders in order to be kept in preventive detention. I have two criticisms of this procedure. The first is the lack of treatment programs. It is estimated that approximately 80 per cent of offenders charged with having approached female children are in need of treatment for deviant sexual preferences. The question whether the conventional psychotherapy is effective in dealing with these patients is still open. There are, however, other more psychological therapies that can be taken into account, and uncertainty relating to therapeutic effect must not lead to the abandoning of all therapeutic efforts.

My second criticism of the preventive detention procedure concerns the safety of the offender. In fact, in his testimony at the trial of the murderers in the riot at Kingston penitentiary, one of the inmates who had been brutalized told of his fear, saying that "the general thing was my offence for which I was serving a sentence of preventive detention as a dangerous sexual offender." Preventive detention did not save this man from the wrath of his fellow inmates.

It may be useful to cite the definition of dangerous sexual offender. It means a person who, by his conduct in any sexual matter, has shown a failure to control his sexual impulses, and who is likely to cause injury, pain or other evil to any person, through failure in the future to control his sexual impulses.

I need not dwell on the pain, both emotional and physical, suffered by the young victims of sexual molesters, and the incalculable amount of pain and misery caused to society. The effect of sexual abuse on children is still largely and tragically unknown, but at least one group of child psychiatrists in the United States said in 1977 that their experience leads them to suspect that the repercussions of early sexual experiences may be subtle and varied, manifesting themselves immediately after the event or considerably later in life.

My own belief is that the feeling of personal security which has been violently wrested from the child cannot be restored. The problems of dangerous and repetitive sex offenders are not new and are certainly not peculiar to Canada. Mrs. Carole Anne Searle, the criminologist, documented the situation very well in her appearance before the subcommittee on the penitentiary system in Canada on March 11, 1977. Her description of the Fort Steilacoom program is worthy of study. Financial constraints present a serious obstacle to the adoption of this particular method, but surely a similar project could be tried in Canada, perhaps in existing hospitals.

Naturally, the Steilacoom method, or even the one advocated in this bill, would require consultation and the co-operation of all provinces. I am confident that the provinces will agree that the most urgent consideration of penal law must be the assurance of public safety.

I would be remiss if I were to overlook the serious question of the civil rights of the offender who has no obligation to submit to psychiatric examination or treatment. Indeed, the judge must keep the delicate balance between the interests of the offender, however abnormal and dangerous he may be, and the interests and the protection of the public. The civil liberties of an accused could, I submit, be reviewed and perhaps made the subject matter of discussion if this bill is allowed to go to committee.

I believe at this stage we must show concern for the protection of the innocent, especially the young innocent who are the weakest members of our society. Only yesterday this House witnessed a debate on the rights of children. My contention is that the events which provoked this bill are clearly indicative of the dearth of rights allowed children in this country, and if we ignore this situation we do so at our peril. Thousands of parents across Canada are pleading for the protection of their children, particularly from men who cannot control their sexual urges.

• (1552)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise to speak briefly in support of the hon. member's bill and to congratulate her on the responsibility and initiative she has shown in bringing it forward. I do so within 24 hours of this House moving on a bill that I had the privilege to sponsor, Bill C-204, respecting a Canadian bill of rights for children. The House was favourably disposed toward that bill, and with its traditional sense of compromise—saving at all times the jealously guarded right of the government to legislate—the House by consent allowed the bill to be withdrawn and the subject matter to go to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

If this bill before us does not meet with the same treatment—and I commend the bill to the House—then I would suggest to the hon. member that committee study of Bill C-204 will give her the same opportunity, although not the same exclusivity of the particular area she is addressing by her bill. In any event, Mr. Speaker, it is well that we address ourselves to these more troublesome questions regarding children, the rights of children and the growing incidence of the abuse of children—in this particular case the sexual abuse of children. The bill deals specifically with child molestors.

I recall visiting a maximum security institution, which I will not identify because even prisoners have some rights. It was a famous maximum security institution in this country and I spent a day touring it and speaking with the inmates. I was fascinated to see the "hole," as the isolation cells are called. A number of prisoners were in isolation. One person in particular attracted my attention. He was in semi-isolation but within the isolation area, where he was locked up. A man was sitting there dressed in a blue serge suit, with a tie, a pair of glasses, a bald head, a pair of brown shoes. He could be the next door neighbour, the young fellow up the street, the corner shopkeeper—any number of people, even the fellow you would get to babysit your children. He was in that isolation unit for his own protection because of the law of the prisoners. He was the lowest in the social strata, so low in the eyes of the other inmates that he required special protection to preserve his life. He was a child molestor, apparently an incorrigible child molestor, and had been put away for the rest of his life.

Therein lies the problem, Mr. Speaker. These people cannot be identified. They are ordinary looking people. They are sick but they are ordinary, so ordinary that they can easily merge into society and be the next door neighbour or whoever. That circumstance magnifies the problem the hon. member has so eloquently addressed in her bill.

There is another aspect of the problem that I should like to draw to the attention of the House for a moment. I refer to the social stigma attached to sex oriented crimes or child molestation. They are not all reported. For some strange reason families tend to look upon this condition as a source of embarrassment, not in all cases but I suggest in a good many cases. This is especially so with the crime of incest. We do not like to talk about it but it is on the increase. It is on the increase because of the changing society we live in, because of the new sexual mores of society, because of the permissiveness of society and the impact on society of the media, which tends to reflect this permissiveness, which in turn tends to reflect itself in this kind of crime that is not reported.

That in itself draws attention to another interesting facet of our changing society, and that is the traditional extended family which an hon. member from Vancouver referred to yesterday and, which I referred to in a speech on my bill on human rights for children last May. The extended family is no longer a part of our urbanized society. The umbrella protection afforded by the extended family is gone. The child is one of the inocent victims, the first victim of the loss of protection afforded by the extended family. I am in the situation in which most of us grew up, where the grandparents were accessible, uncles and aunts were accessible, the neighbourhood clergyman, whether a priest, a minister or a rabbi, was accessible. Indeed, the corner storekeeper was often a close friend of the family and children could run to him.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): And the policeman.

Mr. McGrath: And the policeman, as my hon. friend points out. In our changing society we no longer have the friendly, familiar neighbourhood policeman on the beat. He is gone. He is sitting in some fancy cruiser with a radio telephone. I think that is a sad commentary because the policeman on the beat who became familiar with the neighbourhood was an important element in the protection of children. He knew all the local characters and could identify them. The police were an important element of protection for children. I thank my hon. friend for reminding me of that. But they are gone, Mr. Speaker, and we have not anything to replace them. We have left our children exposed, with no place to seek refuge. In many cases both parents are working so children cannot go to them. It is often six or seven o'clock in the evening before the family gets together as a unit for the one meal of the day that they enjoy together.

There is also the one-parent family, whether the parent happens to be the man or the woman. In most cases it is the woman, and she has to be away from the children in order to provide for them, so again they are left exposed. Then, of course, we have the children in various foster homes or with custodians that I would describe as surrogate parents; in other words, children who are wards of the state in various circumstances.

We have lost sight of the fact that when society changed, the umbrella of protection afforded by the extended family disappeared and we put nothing in its place. As a result we have an increase in the incidence of crimes against children.

I find it alarming to witness the rate of suicide among children, Mr. Speaker. I am sure hon. members would be surprised to know that between 10 per cent and 15 per cent of all suicides in Canada are of people under 18 years of age. Members would be equally surprised to learn of the number of children who commit suicide, children who have nowhere to go, nowhere to turn. I believe this problem of child molestation, of the child abuser, is a manifestation of this fact. In the society that existed before we got into the urbanization that is now Canada, protection was there in the form of grandparents, uncles and aunts, the neighbourhood storekeeper, the neighbourhood policeman. But all that is gone.

I suggest that we have to take steps to protect children, and perhaps we can address this problem when we get into committee dealing with children's rights. Perhaps if the House is agreeably disposed to this bill we can address this question as a specific part of the over-all problem in the area of children's rights.

I feel like a millionaire, Mr. Speaker. I have no income apart from what I get from the taxpayers of Canada, but I have six children that the good Lord blessed me with. I am rich. My refuge, my oasis, is my children. They give to me as much as or even more than I give to them. I know what they mean to me. I know how I would feel if something were to happen to one of them. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I was one of 15 children, 14 of whom were beautiful!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: We grew up in an area where we had the protection of the extended family. This was a time when children were important, child abuse was practically unheard of, and the battered child was practically unheard of. Any battered child could go and complain to his grandfather or the local clergyman.

● (1602)

Then there is the sexually molested child. This problem is not new; it has been with us from time immemorial. The problem is on the increase because of the permissiveness of this modern society of ours and because of the influence the media has in reflecting that permissiveness on children; and thus it influences those who abuse children.

I think it is only right and fitting that the House should address itself to this question. I congratulate the hon. member for bringing her bill forward and I commend it to the House.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) has put a very important question before us today. It is a question that those of us who were on the subcommittee on penitentiaries a year ago had to give some thought to, although we never had to face the issue directly. Our problem at that time was the penitentiary system. We had to take the sentencing process as given in order to narrow our work into sufficient compass so that we could deal with it. We dealt purely with the penitentiary aspects of the question. I am well aware from that experience how central this issue is to many of the problems we face today in the criminal justice system.

The solution which the hon. member offers us is a very tempting one, and indeed I am tempted by it. I do have a reservation which I suppose is based more than anything else on the experience in the Soviet Union, where the principal means of dealing with dissenters in society and people engaging in what we might consider to be ordinary political protest is to subject them to psychiatric treatment in so-called hospitals. In our world we cannot neglect that kind of policy. It seems to me that we have to consider this question here in that type of world context. Therefore, there are very real problems in attempting to deal with the very tragic circumstances which the hon. member for York South mentioned through the device of compulsory hospitalization and psychiatric care.

Bill C-206, which has already received first reading, reintroduces with only slight modification the private member's bill, C-444 which was given first reading on April 14, 1978. The explanatory note to this present bill states:

> The purpose of this bill is to grant special power to the criminal courts to make "hospital orders", as opposed to imposing the standard terms of imprisonment, where it is obviously appropriate that an offender, deemed to be dangerous by the Criminal Code, should receive medical treatment rather than being simply removed from society and eventually released into the street in a worsened condition.

When the hon. member for York South first introduced her bill on April 14, 1978—I am quoting from her speech at that time because I was not quick enough to write down what she was saying today—she expanded on the purposes and principles which underly this bill, as reported at page 4508 of Hansard:

> This bill is premised on the acknowledgment of the fact that because brutal "justice" is frequently meted out by fellow inmates to child molesters, judges hesitate to sentence these offenders to prison terms. By granting special power to the criminal courts to make "hospital orders" as opposed to usual terms of imprisonment, this bill is designed to provide needed medical treatment to offenders suffering from psychopathic disorders and, especially important, to protect the public from the risk of further offences being committed if the offenders are at large.

In summary, the bill appears to have three related but separate purposes. The first is to protect society by ensuring that only medically treated, and presumably cured, dangerous sexual offenders, such as child molesters, are released back into society. Dangerous sexual offenders are now dealt with under the dangerous offenders provisions in part XXI of the Code. The new part XXI which was substituted for the old part with similar numbering in 1977 refers to the "dangerous offender," and replaces the "dangerous sexual offender" and the "habitual criminal". A finding that one is a dangerous offender results in an indeterminate penitentiary sentence.

The second purpose of the bill appears to be to meet the offender's needs, especially the need for treatment and protection from inmate retribution. I might add that those of us who were on that subcommittee for penitentiary reform last year are indeed very conscious of this. Those of us who overlook this—no one in this debate has, but some commentators in our society sometimes do—really overlook a very important aspect of our penitentiary system. While it is true that in the United States people do not usually have to be segregated as such in order to protect them in the same circumstances, one cannot really transpose the conditions of one culture, be it an outside culture or a prison culture, to another.

Those who have been guilty of sex offences need protection from other criminals. It is almost as if the other criminals feel a psychological need to look down on someone else; and the people who are looked down upon, above all others in the penitentiary system, are those who have been convicted of sexual offences.

The third purpose of the bill is to overcome a perceived judicial reluctance to sentence dangerous sex offenders to imprisonment under part XXI of the code. The suggestion is that judges will hesitate to impose penitentiary terms because the penitentiary cannot ensure the safety of the offender, and therefore such a sentence is in effect a sentence of harassment, mutilation and perhaps even death. In the case of the Kingston riot, as I recall there were two prisoners murdered at that time and 16 others who were maimed for life. To facilitate more appropriate sentences from the point of view of protection of society and the offender, it is necessary to provide a sentencing alternative such as a hospital order for dangerous sexual offenders.

There is a long history of problems encountered in dealing with abnormal offenders which has been categorized succinctly in the paper entitled "The General Program for the Development of Psychiatric Services in Federal Correctional Services in Canada" published in 1973, at pages 5 to 12. This history is one of the reasons the Ouimet report in 1969 and more recently the Law Reform Commission recommended the implementation of a system of hospital orders as a new sentencing alternative. The documents of the Law Reform Commission which ought to be referred to in this debate are "The Criminal Process and Mental Disorder", which was working paper No. 14 published in 1975, and then based on that the "Report to Parliament on Mental Disorder in the Criminal Process" in 1976, and a related report, "A Report on Dispositions and Sentences in the Criminal Process: Guidelines", in 1976 also.

The hospital order is a mechanism to allow a judge, after imposing a sentence of imprisonment, to order that all or part of that sentence be served in a psychiatric facility. The essential feature of the Law Reform Commission's variety of hospital order is that such an order applies only to a sentence of imprisonment. It can be considered only after such sentence is imposed, and the consent of the offender and of the psychiatric facility are conditions precedent to the making of a hospital order.

I am informed that the Department of Justice has been concerned for some time with the procedures and dispositions for the mentally disabled offender in the criminal justice system. On September 22, 1977, the law reform planning committee of the justice department gave initial approval to a mental disorder project. This project is to study the present management of the mentally disabled offender. The project is also studying official and professional reactions to the law reform commission reports that I have already referred to.

● (1612)

The need for law reform in the management of mentally disabled offenders is well documented. The hospital order or hospital permit proposal in a variety of forms and applications has received widespread support. Indeed, a form of hospital order has been operating in England and Scotland for almost two decades.

The subject of mentally abnormal offenders and the U.K. system for managing them was exhaustively studied by the Butler committee in England which reported in 1975. The Butler committee recommended changes which tend to bring the U.K. system closer to what our Canadian Law Reform Commission recommended.

Therefore, the Department of Justice has studied Bill C-206 with a great deal of interest. The ideas and the intent contained therein reflect modern perception and thinking regarding the mentally abnormal offender. However, every policy initiative, and therefore every sentencing alternative, regardless of its own merit must also be considered within the over-all context in which it will operate. In this case, Bill C-206 must be evaluated in relation to both the existing criminal justice system and the mental health system.

The proposal of hospital orders as a sentencing alternative is a matter of considerable continuing priority in the department. Preliminary informal results of departmental work on the subject I understand will be made available, and at some time undoubtedly could be made available to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs if this measure or another one like it were referred to that committee for study.

Hospital orders raise the issue of treating that whole range of people presently not covered by the criminal law, people who fall between those who are normal and those who are insane under section 16 of the Criminal Code or unfit to stand trial. The Law Reform Commission's report dealing with mental disorder in the criminal process uses the phrase "psychiatric disorder that is susceptible to treatment". This phrase could include alcoholics, addicts, and psychopaths, including sociopaths, depending upon the availability of psychiatrists at the local level willing to define such disorders as "susceptible to treatment". The breadth of the definition used will determine what percentage of offenders will be eligible for a hospital order.

It must be noted that Bill C-206 embraces a potentially unlimited range of psychiatric disorders once the finding of "dangerous offender" has been made. The criteria set out are:

(i) the court is satisfied, in the evidence of two psychiatrists,

(A) that the offender is suffering from mental illness, psychopathic disorder, subnormality or severe subnormality; and

(B) that the mental disorder is of a nature or degree that warrants the detention of the offender in a hospital for medical treatment; and

(ii) the court is of opinion, having regard to all the circumstances, including the nature of the offence and the character and antecedents of the offender, and to the other available methods of dealing with him, that the most suitable method of disposing of the case is by means of an order under this paragraph.

The purpose of hospital orders as a sentencing alternative is a matter of continuing priority for the government. I believe it would be extremely useful if this matter were given the opportunity of being aired in more detail before the standing committee.

The resulting costs, and the impact upon prison populations, of giving judges the power to order psychiatric treatment could be substantial. At present, when passing sentence judges can only recommend treatment. Such a recommendation is now binding in law upon prison authorities, a most important distinction in their work given the presently inadequate psychiatric facilities, although that certainly is not the factor which should decide whether such legislation is needed.

Bill C-206 empowers the judge, in certain circumstances, to order a dangerous offender to serve all or part of his sentence in a psychiatric facility. Neither an agreement to treatment by the offender nor by the facility are prerequisites. Ordering treatment without requiring the agreement of patient or facility was a feature of the old U.K. hospital order system. This approach was found to be problematical and was therefore amended.

The Ouimet committee studied the concept of hospital orders under the English system almost a decade ago and found that the Canadian reaction across the country was mixed but basically against the English system. The committee concluded, however, that "the Code be amended to authorize the court to issue a 'hospital permit' to allow an offender to benefit at once from treatment in a psychiatric facility". The concept "hospital permit" incorporates the criterion of prior agreement to treatment by both the offender and the facility.

At present, psychiatric facilities are provincial or private. In some provinces they are almost non-existent. Until we consult with the psychiatric community concerned with forensic psychiatry, we cannot be sure that a hospital order will not give the courts the power to force provinces to provide psychiatric facilities they cannot afford.

Additional federal psychiatric facilities as part of the penitentiary system are being built now across Canada. However, they will not be completed until 1981 and we do not yet know, without further consultation, whether these facilities could handle the numbers that a judicial hospital order might produce or whether they could adapt to admitting this type of program.

A hospital order is a sentence of custody. Therefore, should the judge not have the power to specify the terms of that custody—open or secure custody, in-patient or out-patient? But a hospital order is also a sentence of treatment. Therefore, should not the psychiatrist have complete control of the terms of sentence?

The conflict is between security and treatment; psychiatrists want to treat, not to provide custody. In England a court may accompany a hospital order with a restriction order, which prevents the hospital authorities and the review tribunal from discharging, transferring or allowing temporary absences without the prior consent of the secretary of state. Such orders have been severely criticized in England.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

Without some judicial power to guarantee security, judges will be reluctant to use hospital orders. Such reluctance will mean that hospital orders will not live up to the right to treatment that they are supposed to guarantee. On the other hand, hospital orders containing terms and restrictions, in relation to sentences under two years, will give the judges power to deal with matters presently dealt with by provincial corrections officers.

Bill C-206 in clause 2 decisively shifts the power to control the terms of sentence into the judicial sphere. The amended section 688.2 would provide that no release on parole or temporary absence is possible without a court order. Unfortunately, this does not deal with the fact that courts lose touch with the course of an offender's progress.

Tentative indications from consultations with key officials and professionals indicate that psychiatrists will not accept long-term prisoners for treatment if the completion of treatment means a return to prison which will undo the treatment. In fact, this is one of the problems which the subcommittee observed last year with the federal facility in Matsqui, British Columbia. Prisoners were admitted without consultation with the psychiatric faculty and removed without consultation. Assignments and withdrawals were made purely for disciplinary reasons without consultation with the staff and adequate attention to psychiatric needs. It is the long-term prisoner who is most likely to have the severest psychiatric disorder and the longest record. Therefore, mechanisms guaranteeing input by psychiatrists into the decision-making process with regard to how the remainder of a sentence is to be served after treatment must be developed and some form of sentence shortening must be considered.

The sensitive issue of sentence shortening on successful completion of treatment must be answered. If the psychiatric cause of the crime is removed, should not the sentence be shortened once treatment is successfully completed? Preliminary indications are that the majority of judges do not want to get into sentence supervision.

● (1622)

Psychiatrists are unanimous in the view that no treatment should be ordered without the consent to treat of the psychiatric facility. Psychiatrists and hospital administrators are also unanimous in the view that the treating unit should also be the assessing unit. This will mean that a hospital order would have to be based on the diagnosis of the psychiatric facility which will be doing the treating. The court will not be prevented from hearing the opinion of a psychiatrist in private practice that the offender needs treatment as long as someone else does the treating, but the court would not be able to base a hospital order solely on that opinion. Psychiatrists emphasize the great differences of opinion that exist as to the treatability of various disorders. Therefore it is important that the treating unit also be the assessing unit.

The Law Reform Commission places consent at the very heart of the hospital order proposal. It says that after considering the psychiatric report and the representations of both defence counsel and the prosecution, the presiding judge "may, with the consent of the accused and the agreement of the appropriate psychiatric institutions", order that the accused spend part or all of his sentence in a hospital or psychiatric institution.

The matter of consent is argued by the Law Reform Commission as follows:

> The most contentious aspect of our proposal is that the offender must consent to the hospital order. This is in contrast to the position taken in two earlier Canadian studies recommending a similar disposition and is also at odds with present practice in England. Nonetheless, we feel such a requirement is essential. Compulsory treatment conflicts with our previously stated sentencing policy that within the context of a just sentence the offender should not only have access to adequate psychiatric treatment but should also have a right to refuse such treatment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. However, he may continue by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacGuigan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall not take the time of the House much longer but I shall finish, if I may, the quotation I was reading.

> We feel that an offender who has been found responsible for his acts and capable of being tried should also be capable of consenting to or refusing medical treatment. His status as a prisoner should not deprive him of the right to make this decision any more than it does his right to decide whether he will have his wisdom teeth pulled.

Here we see the dilemma raised by this bill. On the one hand, there is an interest on the part of society in ensuring that people who have been convicted of criminal conduct of a particularly unpleasant kind and who are likely to repeat their offence should be dealt with by the law; on the other hand, there is the knowledge that merely putting them in prison is not the answer. Sometimes it makes things worse. It exposes offenders to unconscionable treatment from other prisoners, and while they do not deserve much from society, justice demands that all who are in prison should be subject only to the sentences imposed upon them and not to a whole array of other punishments, especially when administered arbitrarily by fellow prisoners.

Then there is the Soviet experience, not a very encouraging one. This is apt to become a large scale way of dealing with people who are not like ourselves. I do not believe that this should hinder or prevent us from dealing with the subject, but it does indicate the need for considerable caution in dealing with it. The English are moving away from their system which, until now, has not required consent. The Law Reform Commission here has recommended that we do require the consent of the inmate.

Thus it is an intricate question, and it seems to me the best way of dealing with it would be to study the subject thoroughly in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It is certainly not one we can deal with this afternoon, involving as it does all the considerations I have mentioned in my speech and others which I have not had time to discuss. I hope it will be possible in the near future to examine the subject thoroughly in public, if possible before a parliamentary committee.

Mr. C. Douglas (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have not intended to become involved in this debate and I do not intend to take part very often in these discussions during the private members' hour. However, I feel bound to comment on some of the arguments which were put forward by my hon. friend from Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), a learned member of the legal profession.

I am pleased that this bill has been put forward not by a member of the legal profession but by a concerned mother, a member of this chamber. I am pleased also that the spokesman from the opposition benches is not a member of the legal profession either. I say this because many times when we consider questions which are subject to legal interpretation and documentation we find ourselves moving away from the plain common sense of the issue. The common sense approach to this issue is: what are we as legislators doing to protect our children from the habitual sexual offender, particularly the sexual offender who wants to attack the young?

The hon. member made a good point when he said society itself was responsible in part for an alarming increase in the numbers of habitual sexual offenders. He mentioned that in times gone by the extended family comprised not only relatives, uncles, cousins and so on, but neighbours and friends right up to the policeman on the beat. That kind of society would not accept moral standards which are accepted now. In those days society itself presented opposition to the sexual offender which is not in vogue today.

I want to carry a little further the analogy of the policeman on the beat. If there is anything that policemen in this country view with alarm, it is the increase in sexual attacks on youngsters. I do not believe there is a policeman in this country who does not dread, in the day to day carrying out of his duty, the possibility of being called upon to investigate just such an attack on a youngster as was described by the hon. member who presented this bill. Policemen have an aversion to this type of crime. You can imagine a young policeman with children probably of the same age, six or seven years old, being called upon to investigate this type of offence. In some cases natural revulsion would almost prevent them from carrying out the duties they must perform as policemen in a logical manner.

I also want to discuss for a few moments the effects such cases have on a community, perhaps not on the large urban communities—I am speaking primarily here of small communities in which the residents and citizens are virtually a family in themselves. They see themselves and their neighbours as something of a family relationship, and when a crime takes place such as that described by the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni), it splits the community much more than it does those in the large urban centres. This is not to say a split does not take place in the large urban centres, but it is of much more concern to the small communities.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville at one point mentioned that if this bill goes through it could result in extremely high costs for the courts and extremely high costs for psychiatric treatment. What price are we going to put on the safety of our children? We cannot put a price on the protection of our children from attacks such as those outlined in this private members' hour.

● (1632)

The hon. member also talked about the agreement of offenders to receive treatment. I simply cannot accept the suggestion that society can honestly say that a perpetrator of such a crime should be allowed to refuse treatment. How can we bring that into contention at this time, whether that treatment be out-patient treatment or treatment in a psychiatric institution? Who should have this responsibility? Should it be the judge who passes sentence or the psychiatrist who gives treatment? The buck has to stop some place. We can argue that this is not the judge's, society's or the psychiatrist's responsibility. That buck has to stop some place, and I suppose it stops here. If we decide that the judge has the responsibility to order treatment, then that responsibility is the judge's; and if he is going to be a judge, he has to accept that responsibility and act accordingly.

We cannot get into an argument about whether it is the judge's responsibility when he passes sentence or the psychiatrist's responsibility when he finishes treating the offender. It might be suggested that the psychiatrist might resent being told that he cannot let an offender go when his treatment is completed, but that is well taken care of in this bill. Proposed section 688.2(3) reads as follows:

> The court shall order that an offender detained pursuant to a hospital order be set at large where
>
> (a) the offender would, but for the hospital order, have been set at large, and
>
> (b) the court is satisfied, upon the oral evidence of one of the psychiatrists upon whose evidence the hospital order was based, that the offender, if set at large, would not pose a serious danger to the public.

I think we also have to look at this matter from the viewpoint of the offender. Often these people know they have problems and desperately seek treatment, psychiatric or otherwise. Whenever an offence such as the one described by the hon. member for York South is committed, the community knows about it. In many cases the families of victims decide that they would prefer not to press charges.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) spoke of cases of incest. Those cases are also known about in communities. I think the protection we provide offenders is important, because if a judicial order provides that an offender shall receive treatment whether he wants it or not, the offender can then return to society after treatment and say: "I have undergone treatment, and according to the experts, the psychiatrists and the psychologists, I am now cured". As the law now stands, after serving sentences offenders must then return to society under the stigma of not having received treatment or recognition by society of the problems they face.

I wholeheartedly support this bill. If it cannot go from there to the committee I hope we can have some assurance from the Department of Justice that within at least a year this matter will be reviewed and that some form of compulsory treatment will be put into the Criminal Code so that people such as the ones we have been talking about can receive the assistance they require.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, debates during the private members' hour are fascinating in that they enable all hon. members to express openly their opinions and their concerns about current issues and to introduce in the House bills which, we must admit, illustrate some very valid concerns. In this regard, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) for her initiative in introducing today Bill C-206 on hospital orders.

I was particularly pleased to note today that three of the hon. members who took part in this debate, one from the opposition and two from the government, have no special legal training, and it was very interesting to be able to benefit from their views especially since they can approach this problem from something other than a strictly legal viewpoint because we must recognize that the question of hospital orders involves very serious legal problems. In this regard, I wish to thank the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) for his extremely well-documented analysis on various problems that the implementation of Bill C-206 or any other similar legislation could cause to the operation of our penal institutions and the good administration of justice if we are not careful to ensure that these measures, that is hospital orders, have been studied in depth.

In this regard, I would like to reassure those who spoke before me, and especially the previous speaker, the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas), who asked the Department of Justice for special guarantees, by saying that the Department is paying particular attention to the question and that it is deeply concerned about it. I can reassure him on this point because the Department of Justice, following the publication in 1976 of a study of the Law Reform Commission, a report to parliament on mental disorder in the criminal process, established an internal all-level consultation mechanism to assess the impact that the implementation of the Law Reform Commission's recommendations could have on the workings of our institutions. This task force has met with experts in the field of correction, treatment—especially psychiatrists, psychologists, police officers, and consultative bodies—community work or services, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this committee intends to report and—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order simply to ask whether there was not some understanding that the subject matter of this bill would be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada on a point of order.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I believe we will have the opportunity to resume this debate at some later date when the bill reappears on the order paper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 4.40 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 13, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ENERGY

PURCHASE BY PETRO-CANADA OF SHARES IN PACIFIC PETROLEUMS LTD.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This motion deals with Petro-Canada purchasing 48 per cent of the shares owned by Phillips Petroleum in Pacific Petroleums Ltd.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the minister in question make a statement on motions, immediately, and table a financial statement of both Petro-Canada and Pacific Petroleums Ltd., as the purchase of these shares will not produce one new barrel of crude petroleum for Canada. The statement should supply the House and the country with full details, particularly as to the amount of money borrowed, and from whom, the rate of interest, the profits of the enterprise, the tax lost to the treasury of Canada, and the future financial commitments of Phillips Petroleum Company so as to explain in detail the full effects of this purchase on the economy of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can only be done, pursuant to Standing Order 43, with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PROTEST AGAINST ALLEGED SECRET TRIALS OF MEMBERS OF FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Corporal Radey, of the RCMP, is being charged in a secret RCMP hearing with having entered into consultation or discussion with counsel to the Laycraft judicial inquiry contrary to what is described as the "lawful" commands of Inspector Palmer.

It being apparent that the instruction to Radey that he should not discuss the matters before the Laycraft commission with counsel for that commission was itself, in fact, unlawful and an attempt to restrict the commission from fulfilling its duties, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That the House instruct the Solicitor General to communicate with the appropriate officials of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and have the charges against Radey withdrawn, so as to demonstrate that no member of the force can be prosecuted by secret trial or otherwise for disclosure of evidence relevant to a judicial inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

NATIONALIZATION OF PRIVATE SECTOR COMPANIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In the throne speech of October 11, 1978, the government committed itself to less involvement in the private sector. Specifically, the throne speech stated that the government's objective was "to encourage a more vigorous expansion of the private sector by reducing governments' share of the nation's wealth". In view of the fact that less than 30 days after this statement of intent, the government nationalized an airline and, now, an oil company, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House order the government to cease any further nationalization of private sector companies and that the Prime Minister be asked to make a statement on motions detailing which parts of the throne speech are to be accepted as true and which parts are not.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF INCREASE IN FREIGHT RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, in view of the announced intention of the CNR to increase its freight rates by as much as 30 per cent for the movement of forest products in northern Ontario, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis):

That this House do instruct the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to inquire specifically into the operations of the CNR in northern Ontario to determine whether this Crown corporation is, in fact, impeding rather than encouraging regional development.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

ENERGY

CONSULTATIONS WITH MUNICIPALITIES TO EFFECT ENERGY SAVINGS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of evidence from a study done by K. M. Jardine, a professional engineer and editor of the Manitoba Association of Professional Engineers' November periodical, which showed that vehicles at one four-way stop intersection in the city of Winnipeg consumed an additional 12,500 gallons of fuel annually and if that figure were applied nationally, the excess fuel consumption figure would be astronomical, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources study the findings of the report and, with an eye to energy conservation, direct his energy-saving officials to consult with municipal officials nationwide to review the necessity for as many four-way stops in Canadian cities and towns.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

ALLEGED LACK OF EFFECTIVE POLICY—CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to Standing Order 43.

In view of the recent Science Council of Canada report that Canada has lost some 200,000 jobs because of our foreign-owned, branch plant economy, in view of the fact that FIRA has turned down only 4 per cent of foreign investment applications, and in view of the fact that the prestigious United States business publication, Barrons, summarized FIRA's track record as "the only United States business that wouldn't be welcomed in Canada is Murder Incorporated", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce resign.

* * *

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUESTED REPLACEMENT OF DEPUTY MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Jean Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the reported highly political statements of the deputy minister of urban affairs, and the vice president of policy for CMHC, to the effect that Canadians are too well housed and Canadian home owners are apparently well-to-do people who do not require government help, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this House direct the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to make the necessary arrangements for a permanent leave of absence for the present deputy minister and replace him with an individual who is sensitive to the realities of the housing situation in Canada, and stop covering up the failures of this government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

● (1412)

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, we can hardly understand one another in this large room. My question is directed to the Minister of Urban Affairs—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Proceedings under Standing Order 43.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF REMARKS BY LEADER OF OPPOSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the intemperate language used by the Leader of the Opposition on Wednesday last in relation to Liberal members of parliament from New Brunswick, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon):

That this House urges the Leader of the Opposition to withdraw his offensive remarks and apologize to the hon. members concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

NATIONALIZATION OF PRIVATE SECTOR COMPANIES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question would be for the Prime Minister if he were here, but I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. In a speech on August 1, the Prime Minister stated on national television:

We will remove the intrusion of many government policies from individuals and businesses; in some cases this will mean returning functions to the private sector.

He went on to reaffirm his faith in the private sector. In the throne speech, this pledge was repeated on three or four occasions.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to this House why there has been this failure on the part of the government to fulfil these commitments that were made, and why the government has taken action with regard to Nordair and, now, Pacific Petroleums directly contrary to its own stated policies?

An hon. Member: Esso is next.

An hon. Member: Have you given up the ghost?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to the very significant transaction which occurred over the weekend; the acquisition by Petro-Canada of the controlling block of shares in Pacific Pete—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: This transaction is a major building block for the future energy security of Canadians—

An hon. Member: A major block in building!

Mr. Gillespie: It is a major investment in our future. It is no way inconsistent with the statements made in the Speech from the Throne which highlighted the importance of major energy investments for our future.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, that flimflam does not deserve reply.

My follow-up question to the Deputy Prime Minister is with regard to these commitments made, I thought in sincerity, to the people of Canada on national television and again in the throne speech, that there would be no further nationalization and there would be a return to the private sector on the part of this government. Will the Deputy Prime Minister give his firm commitment that there will be no further nationalization of private companies—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Andre: —at least until the government works up the courage to seek a renewed mandate from the people to pursue a policy of state ownership of the Canadian economy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. gentleman that there is no nationalization involved in this particular transaction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What do you call it?

Mr. MacEachen: I also ask him to probe more deeply beneath the surface of this transaction to discover for himself that the purchase was made entirely without government funds. It is entirely a commercial transaction. It is not drawing upon the revenue of the Government of Canada. Further to that, probably because of this strengthening of Petro-Canada it will be possible at the same time to strengthen activity in the private sector because, as the hon. member knows, virtually all the projects undertaken by Petro-Canada are joint ventures undertaken in co-operation with private sector firms.

I believe if the hon. member will probe more deeply, he will abandon this effort of his to paint this as a further incursion of the government into the private sector.

● (1417)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister would strengthen the private sector by having those who run the Post Office run the oil industry. If the Deputy Prime Minister is not aware, he should be aware that Petro-Can, by statute, is an agent of Her Majesty; therefore, its expenditures and debt obligations are obligations of the Government of Canada and the taxpayers of Canada. This, obviously, makes a mockery of the minister's previous statement and a mockery of any commitment to restraint.

Did the Deputy Prime Minister seek, and get, the approval of the President of the Treasury Board to grossly exceed his commitment to hold expenditures this year to less than the total growth of the gross national product, which is clearly impossible in view of this new commitment of the taxpayers' money?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should realize that all the questions which he put together in his last intervention are totally without foundation, because this does not represent in any way a demand on government resources. It is totally a commercial transaction, financed outside government expenditures by commercial transactions by the private banks of Canada. That is the private sector, in my view.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EVALUATION OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES PURCHASED BY PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance, who is the chief financial minister in this cabinet. As his deputy sits on the board of Petro-Canada, will he tell the House how they arrived at the evaluation of $65 per share for Pacific Petroleums shares, bearing in mind that that is 17 times the diluted earnings for that company, compared to other companies selling at roughly eight times earnings and it compares to the price of $10 originally paid by Phillips for the stock?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can add to what has been said by the Deputy Prime Minister. This transaction was made by Petro-Canada in order to strengthen the participation of this company in an area where most of the industry is foreign-controlled. The commercial transaction has been carried out according to the rules of the market. It was approved by the board of Petro-Canada. It was a good transaction.

Mr. Stevens: Nobody doubts it was a good transaction for Phillips. My question for the minister is this: The minister states that this is a period of restraint. He has admitted to the House that he will need $11.8 billion for financial requirements in the current year, and another $9.7 billion for the 1980 fiscal year. How can the Minister of Finance justify, in the name of restraint, an expenditure by this 100 per cent Crown-owned company of $671 million, bearing in mind that it will not produce one extra barrel of oil or one job in this country?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that it is a commercial transaction and Petro-Canada pledged the assets they have gained in making the transaction. This was analysed by those who were loaning the money. They found that the assets being given against the borrowing were very good indeed, so they went along with the transaction. I believe it is a very good transaction for Canada. It will help Canadians to participate in the resources of Canada. I will not apologize for that.

Mr. Stevens: The Minister of Finance knows that on behalf of the people of Canada, this government has invested half a billion dollars in the capital of that corporation. Will the minister advise whether it is true that, as well as any Pacific Petroleums stock pledging, the Crown assets of Petro-Canada have also been pledged?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I just said that, as a commercial transaction, it is a very valid one. We have acquired a lot of assets in the oil and gas business and other activities in Canada. It is good that Canada is taking some aggressive action here. When this House voted on having a Crown company in that business for Canadians, we said we wanted to have a good one. I repeat, it was a good commercial transaction and I am pleased with it.

REPORTED PROPOSED ACQUISITION BY BANK OF MONTREAL OF NEW YORK CITY BANK BRANCHES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, only an Alberta Tory and a Bay Street banker would make this government look progressive.

I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister advise whether his department has been informed by the Bank of Montreal regarding its intention to acquire 89 New York city area bank branches, at a cost of over $1 billion in investment? If so, what has been the government's response?

• (1422)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not have the opportunity to look into that transaction. The Bank of Montreal, as all other banks in Canada, operates of course under the Canadian Bank Act. I was not notified that there were some unusual aspects in that transaction. I will surely inquire about the matter and report to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that the $1 billion required for this takeover would create thousands of jobs at home if it were invested here, will the minister tell us whether he is concerned about this outflow of Canadian capital and, if so, what he is prepared to do about it?

Mr. Chrétien: I think Canadian institutions should have the possibility of expanding, and not only in Canada. If Canadian institutions which can provide good business direction and give leadership wish to expand, we should welcome such efforts which prove that Canadian business is not restricted to Canada but can get into other areas where it can do a good job. This is something which can be looked at positively, rather than negatively as the hon. member does all the time.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like the minister to name one benefit to Canada which flows from investing Canadian dollars to acquire new banking assets in the United States. Considering that Sweden, the United Kingdom and a number of other countries in western Europe have established agencies which ensure that before capital is exported for investment purposes, a domestic benefit must be shown, will the Canadian government consider establishing such a mechanism here so that we might get the kind of investment in Canada which would generate the jobs we need?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that at times I do not share the views of the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I think that if Canadian films can be shown abroad, they will eventually generate profits which would be repatriated to Canada. It would be the reverse mechanism to that of foreign investments in Canada. If we believe in a market economy and in the normal flow of capital between Canada and other countries, it is entirely normal under the circumstances for Canadian institutions to invest abroad.

* * *

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INCREASED ASSISTANCE FOR CMHC HOUSING

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs with regard to low-cost housing projects. Anyway, he must have received my letter. I tried to reach him last week. I was unable to do so, but I should have liked to discuss the matter with him.

Some owners are having financial problem since Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has reduced its assistance from $89 that it was in May to $48. In fact, in May the owners who bought low-cost housing received up to $89 a unit, but since the middle or the end of June that amount has been reduced to $48.

Can the minister say whether that policy of CMHC in this regard applies right across Canada? Is it a national or a regional policy?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the question of the hon. member. I believe he is speaking of one particular case, of a project in his riding. I shall obtain the pertinent information from the hon. member and give him an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): On a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, so that the minister can study my question in depth. In any event, my letter must be on his desk already.

That project was authorized in May and until the end of that month Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation granted $89 for each new unit; but now that the tenants are ready to move into their apartments the grant is only $48, which throws off their budgets completely. That is why I am asking the minister to give special attention to this case.

* * *

● (1427)

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PURCHASE BY PETRO-CANADA OF SHARES IN PACIFIC PETROLEUMS LTD.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it is also in relation to the Pacific Petroleums transaction.

Because Petro-Canada's subsidiary has already paid out $670 million and has committed itself to a further $730 million on condition that the existing management and personnel of Pacific Petroleums stay on in office, and because they were not consulted in any manner, shape or form prior to the pay-out and the transaction being consummated on Friday morning—there is, therefore, no guarantee that they will stay on—is there any way by which Petro-Canada can recover the $670 million already paid if Pacific Petroleums' people do not stay on?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I made it quite clear that this is a major building block for the energy security of Canadians. There is no intention whatsoever on the part of Petro-Canada to back away from this transaction. Indeed, the intention of Petro-Canada is to move forward and to pick up all the shares of Pacific Petroleums.

EFFECT ON ECONOMY OF PURCHASE OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the answer is no. My supplementary question is to the Minister of Finance. The United States Securities and Exchange Commission this morning estimated that 70 per cent of the shareholders of Pacific Petroleums are American. This means that roughly $1 billion Canadian will be flowing south of the border to finalize this transaction.

The Minister of Finance was part of the cabinet which had to approve this transaction. What effect will that $1 billion Canadian flowing south of the border have on the Canadian dollar on foreign exchange markets?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that Petro-Canada will be borrowing the money it needs for this transaction in American dollars, so that will have no effect on the Canadian dollar.

REASON ANNOUNCEMENT OF PURCHASE OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES NOT MADE IN HOUSE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, there will still be, obviously, an effect on Canada's credit. My final question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Parliament was ignored in this transaction which calls for a financial commitment of the taxpayers of this country for a back-up of $1.4 billion.

Mr. MacEachen: Wrong.

Mr. Lawrence: The agreement was signed on Friday morning. Trading was stopped Thursday night. The minister left this House on Friday and made the announcement in Toronto at five o'clock Friday night. What possible justification was there for the announcement not being made in this House, so that it could at least have been sensibly discussed in this House on Friday afternoon?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's facts are not accurate. Trading was not closed off on the Canadian exchange until very early on Friday morning. A few shares did, in fact, trade that morning, but it was closed just as soon as it looked as if it was going to be possible during the course of Friday to put together a very significant transaction.

As the hon. member will undoubtedly understand, this matter had to be handled with very considerable confidentiality, in view of the values involved, and that is the reason the stock exchange ceased all trading. During the course of that day, the financial arrangements were put into final form and the final agreement for purchase and sale was negotiated and settled among the partners. That did not take place until very late on Friday. As a matter of fact, I was present for the final ceremonies, and that was at five o'clock on Friday.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF FINANCIAL REPORT ON PURCHASE OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

● (1432)

In light of the answers we received, that it is an independent Crown corporation and the government and the taxpayers of Canada have already bought $500 million into this company, and in light of the fact that the stock was trading on the stock exchange at $45 and they paid $65 a share, and in the last few weeks there was an increase by $7.50 because of rumours of this takeover, I ask the minister—because he has glossed over the truth today—if he would be prepared to table in the House the financial report of Pacific Petroleums on this deal and on the agreement between Phillips Petroleum and Petro-Canada, so that the Canadian people and this parliament will know the real facts from the documents in question, rather than from the rhetoric of the ministers?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes much of the fact that this is a government-financed operation. It is not. This deal is a commercial transaction which has been financed without any government assistance, without any government funds and without any government guarantee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: This a commercial transaction which has been financed by a normal commercial financial instrument—

An hon. Member: Guaranteed by you.

Mr. Gillespie: —and it will have the effect of reducing the demand or the requirement for government assistance in the future, because this corporation was highly profitable and has considerable growth possibilities.

As to the question about the tabling of certain documents, I would be very pleased to consider that suggestion. As the hon. member might know, the board of Pacific Petroleums will be dealing with the transaction later this week. There has already been consultation between the senior officers of Petro-Canada and those of Pacific Petroleums and I am told that a meeting will be held later this week, at which time the board of Pacific Petroleums will consider that company's position on this question.

Mr. Woolliams: I have one further question, Mr. Speaker. In light of that fact, would the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions so that we might have an opportunity to ask questions in reference to this deal, particularly in view of the fact, as I have said, that the Government of Canada and the taxpayers have already put $500 million into this Crown corporation and that the stock, which was trading on the stock exchange at $45, is now selling at $65, not only for 48 per cent but, as I understand the deal, also for the remaining 52 per cent?

Mr. Gillespie: I believe that that might be a useful suggestion and I will be pleased to consider it. As I have indicated to the hon. member, there is an important meeting this week and I think it should take place outside the political arena, if the hon. member is agreeable. In any event, I will be pleased to discuss the suggestion with the House leader.

ADVERSE REACTION BY ALBERTA LIBERAL PARTY LEADER TO PURCHASE OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. In view of the fact that the leader of the Liberal party in Alberta, Mr. Nick Taylor, was angered at this purchase and said that the purchase is a waste of the taxpayers' money, can the minister state what his reaction is to that statement?

REASON CHAIRMAN OF BOARD OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS DID NOT MAKE ANNOUNCEMENT OF PURCHASE OF SHARES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If it is the government's position that this is a strictly commercial transaction and the government has nothing to do with it, why did the minister make the announcement, rather than the chairman of the board?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Quite clearly, this transaction, because of its size and importance in terms of the energy policy of Canada, involves some very important energy policy questions. That is the reason the minister made the statement.

An hon. Member: Very good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHETHER PURCHASE OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES WILL INCREASE OIL PRODUCTION IN CANADA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? In view of the statement that the acquisition of Phillips Petroleum will not add one barrel of oil to the production in Canada, and in view of the fact that in 1974 the oil industry in this country sent drilling rigs down to the United States and cut back its drilling program so as to force the government to raise the price of oil, can the minister assure the House that Petro-Canada, with its new acquisition, will be used to ensure that Canadians will be able to get oil produced in this country and will not be held up to ransom by the multinational oil companies in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there are two points in the hon. member's question with which I would like to deal. The first one is that one of the reasons why it is important that this transaction go forward is the heavy oil potential associated with Pacific Petroleums and the initiatives Pacific Petroleums have taken in recent months which included, right from the very start, Petro-Canada, just as Petro-Canada has been involved in the heavy oil initiatives with respect to Saskatchewan. So I see this transaction as an opportunity for Petro-Canada to accelerate the development of the heavy oil potential in western Canada, for the benefit of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: The second point I would make is that this transaction will place Petro-Canada among the top ten petroleum corporations of this country. Therefore, it will be able to take its position alongside many of the multinational corporations on a much more equal basis.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. In view of the statement that Petro-Canada bid up the market price of Phillips Petroleum, and this involved the sending of Canadian capital out of the country, has the minister investigated the action of Alberta Gas Trunk Ltd. last spring when they prevented Petro-Canada from buying out Husky by running the price up nearly $20 a share?

Did this not involve paying a higher price than the market price, and did this not also involve sending Canadian money out of the country in order to keep Canadians from gaining some control of the heavy oil in western Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: There have been a number of very significant transactions involving the repatriation by Canadians of their oil properties over the past year. I can think of Ashland Oil, in which Canadian participation, for example, will go up significantly as a result of the purchase of Kaiser Resources Ltd. I can think, as well, of the Husky purchase by AGTL. There are a number of other Canadian corporations which were foreign-owned and which have been repatriated recently as a result of new initiatives by significant Canadian corporations. All of those have involved a transfer of funds from Canada to the United States.

This particular transaction has been organized in a different way. The funds have been borrowed in the United States, so there will not be a net flow of funds from Canada to the U.S. and, therefore, it will not have the same negative impact on the value of the Canadian dollar that some of these other desirable transactions have had.

* * *

[Translation]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STUDY BY ECONOMIST HAZELDINE OF JOBS WHICH WOULD BE LOST TO QUEBEC IN EVENT OF SEPARATION

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Federal-Provincial Relations.

In view of the study conducted by Mr. Hazeldine, an economist, to the effect that a separate Quebec would lose only 21,500 jobs, can the minister tell the House if this conclusion is realistic, especially since two recent studies conducted by the federal government concluded that, should it separate, Quebec would lose 140,000 and 325,000 jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that Mr. Hazeldine's study is but one of the studies conducted by the Economic Council of Canada and that another study, conducted by two renowned economists predicts a possible loss of 152,000 jobs and an increase in taxes of about 19.8 per cent for Quebeckers, should separation occur.

As for this particular study, I will leave it up to professional economists to analyse it fully and completely. At this point, I can tell the hon. member that this morning I have discussed with government economists of these various studies, and they have assured me that the economic analyses contained in the Government of Canada studies concerning sovereignty-association and commercial realities are still quite valid, and that some of the working hypotheses in the Hazeldine study are absolutely unrealistic.

* * *

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

PURCHASE OF NORDAIR BY AIR CANADA—RECOVERY OF TAXPAYERS' INVESTMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport: it has to do with the purchase of Nordair by Air Canada and what could be termed as a sweetheart deal for the Nordair shareholders, possibly at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers.

My first question to the minister is: what guarantees do we as taxpayers have that the investment of some $28.4 million will be recovered when Nordair is supposedly sold to private hands?

• (1442)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the key question is whether the price is a fair and reasonable one. When a buyer and seller are negotiating, obviously the seller will seek to obtain the highest price possible, and the buyer will seek to obtain the property at as low a price as possible.

I find it strange to have these questions and the similar ones which were posed by the opposition on Friday, since earlier, as the Nordair transaction unfolded, the accusation from the Conservatives was that there were other private buyers willing to pay the same price. That seems to me to be some evidence of the nature of the price which they saw as being available. It was not necessarily quite true, but it was true enough, given normal Tory approaches to the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Of course, the fact of the matter is that it is our belief, and Air Canada's belief, that this was a fair and reasonable price. Having regard to all the facts, I refer hon. members to the testimony given before the Canadian Transport Commission where this matter was canvassed. I think they will find there a good deal of the answer to their questions.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the same supply and demand criteria which the minister just used may be the reason why prospective buyers, knowing what the price is already, will not be willing to pay the amount the government has allowed Air Canada to pay for Nordair.

I have a supplementary question for the minister. Out of the total price, there is a figure which we feel should be questioned in some way, and that is the $1 million which was termed as out-of-pocket expenses and included in the total price of $28.4 million. Can he explain exactly what the $1 million out-of-pocket expenses are for this kind of transaction?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am sure in the ordinary course I can provide an answer to that question. Obviously, it is the kind of question which is detailed and more suitable for the order paper. But I will be glad to do it in due course.

* * *

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CMHC ACCOUNTING PRACTICES

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

In light of the fact that approximately 70 per cent of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation executive staff have either been replaced or have resigned, and in light of the ongoing Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigation which reveals shockingly inadequate accounting procedures and very questionable management decisions, can the minister assure the House that senior management attention is being given to improving the accounting procedures involving over $1 billion of taxpayers' dollars? Will the minister undertake to direct his department to prepare a full report of the CMHC internal accounting practices and make this report available to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the two premises of the hon. member's question are totally wrong. To say that 70 per cent of the top direction of CMHC is gone, is untrue. Second, to say that the RCMP is investigating the over-all operation of CMHC also is untrue.

It is accurate that the RCMP is looking at the file of a specific projet named York Place, in Hamilton. The CMHC administration has been willing to co-operate with the RCMP. Indeed, it has given every support asked for by the RCMP to conduct its investigations. To attempt to take one specific case and generalize, as the hon. member is trying to do, is very inappropriate. I am surprised the hon. member acts so irresponsibly in this House.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mrs. Pigott: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is: in light of a confidential cabinet document outlining federal housing priorities for 1978-79—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Pigott: All right; calm down now.

An hon. Member: Yes, mother.

Mrs. Pigott: The cabinet document estimates that there are 438,000 Canadian households paying over 30 per cent of their income for rent and over 155,000 households living in sub-standard conditions. Can the minister confirm whether it is a policy of the government to ignore these problems and assume, as the Deputy Minister for Urban Affairs seems to, that Canadians are too well housed? Or is the vice-president of CMHC policy, Mr. Adamson, more accurate in describing the principles of government housing policy when he stated on the weekend that home owners are already well-to-do people and therefore do not require government help?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, there is one thing I want to say. The hon. member referred to a secret document. It is not a secret document. It is a study which has been requested by CMHC to help us to design better policy in the field of housing.

An hon. Member: You sure need it.

Mr. Ouellet: This study has been completed. I am glad to hear the hon. member has a copy of it. I hope she reads it more accurately and will know a little more about housing in Canada after careful study of this document.

Mrs. Pigott: What about Mr. Adamson?

Mr. Ouellet: The consequence of this study is that the federal government has changed the over-all position of the government in relation to housing: it has decided to spend more money for low income and old-age people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: This is why we have stopped giving direct loans to the provinces and various groups which are building housing accommodations in Canada. Rather than give loans, we have decided to increase substantially our subsidies in order to help low income and old-age people have better accommodations. If I have to take advice continually I will take it from my officials, rather than from the hon. Leader of the Opposition who favoured a policy which will provide a break for high income home owners while discriminating against renters and the elderly—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Ouellet: —a proposal which could disrupt financial markets—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ABILITY OF PETRO-CANADA TO INCREASE ENERGY EXPLORATION FOLLOWING PURCHASE OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The takeover of Pacific Petroleums by Petro-Canada last Friday will give Canada increased ownership in this strategic industry which is over 90 per cent foreign-owned at the present time.

Will this transaction provide the financial position for Petro-Canada to press ahead with the development of frontier oil and gas reserves and transportation systems, as well as heavy oils which the minister mentioned already?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, yes, the transaction will provide additional financial muscle for the corporation through the profitability of Pacific Petroleums.

Some hon. Members: Reading!

Mr. Gillespie: So it will be possible to place less reliance on government investment in the equity of Petro-Canada. It will enable Petro-Canada to focus on some of these major challenges such as liquefied natural gas in the high Arctic, heavy oil and the offshore drilling which is ongoing at the present time, or has gone on during the season, in the eastern offshore of the country.

* * *

FISHERIES

CLOSING OF ST. LAWRENCE, NEWFOUNDLAND, FLUORSPAR MINE—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT IN INDUSTRY

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. As he knows, last February the St. Lawrence fluorspar mine closed, leaving hundreds of men out of work, and a proposal was put forward involving the construction of a fish plant in St. Lawrence by Fisheries Products Ltd., assisted by both governments.

Since August, when construction was to have supposedly started, everyone has been waiting for the minister to give his approval to the acquisition of two Portuguese fishing vessels to deliver fish into that plant. It cannot operate without additional fishing capacity. Will the minister tell the House whether he has made a decision yet? If he has not, when will he make a decision, so that this can get off the ground and employment will be provided in St. Lawrence?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, from the very beginning we made it clear that we were trying to help the community of St. Lawrence, while not jeopardizing the very fundamental policy of fisheries, which was not to allow for expansion of licences, especially those foreign-controlled and foreign-owned. This is a policy which goes back to my predecessor. We approved the proposal presented by the company.

However, in August or early September—I would have to check the exact date—we were informed that the proposals, as agreed to, had been changed very substantially, especially in the area of the ownership of the licences involved. I informed the company that this was not acceptable, no more than the Nord Sea proposal which was advocated by the hon. member. We have tried to find an alternative which would allow the plant to go ahead, but under strict Canadian control.

● (1452)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, as there are a lot of men and women in the St. Lawrence area who are without employment, in an already highly unemployed area of Newfoundland, when will the minister take steps to either come forward with a proposal that is acceptable, or solve his problem so that construction can start?

In answering that, would the minister remember that the St. John's Daily News asks the question whether the minister is completely heartless, excessively stupid, or has somebody failed to inform him of the plight of these 3,000 people? When will the minister act to cut this Gordian knot so that the people in St. Lawrence can be given some hope?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what adjectives the member may want to use to describe me, but one which I can apply to him is that he is "misinformed". The proposal was changed very substantially. I could not accept it as it was subsequently put forth. I will be meeting this week with the company and putting forth a proposal which, hopefully, will solve the problem. If the company does not accept the counterproposal which will be made, then we will make other provisions with another organization to move in.

* * *

POST OFFICE

REACTION OF UNIONS TO PROPOSED CREATION OF CROWN CORPORATION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. Now that the Postmaster General appears to be changing his posture, and instead of confronting the union is discussing with the four unions vitally involved in the issue the draft of the Crown corporation legislation—as he promised he would in answers to questions in this House—will he indicate whether the response of the unions to the legislative proposals has been positive or negative?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it is true that we have had consultations with all the unions in the Post Office, including CUPW. For the time being, these discussions are in camera. As soon as we have an agreement—and I can assure hon. members that things are progressing in a positive manner—we will table it in the House.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the unions have stated that the draft legislation covers only Mickey Mouse matters, for cosmetic reasons, rather than resolving substantive issues of disjointed collective management and domination of collective bargaining by Treasury Board—which brought about the recent impasse in labour-management relations in the Post Office—will the Postmaster General continue these consultations with a view to resolving these major issues, thereby encouraging the new support for consultation being displayed by the unions as a hopeful policy for the future?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, the consultations we have had with the unions are much more serious than the preamble to the hon. member's question. Discussions are going very well, and the hon. member does not have to worry. I am sure that the unions and management in the Post Office will get along well together and provide the best Post Office service possible.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FINANCING OF PETRO-CANADA'S PURCHASE OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES—EFFECT ON LEGISLATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Having regard to the fact that, under the financing of the Petro-Can takeover, preferred shares are to be issued to the banks as part of that financing proposal, and because Petro-Can's statute is quite clear that preferred shares, if they are issued, are to be sold only to the Crown, is it the government's intention to bring in legislation to amend the Petro-Can statute order to allow this financing to be carried out under the law?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has misinterpreted the provisions of the statute. There is no intention to bring in any amending legislation.

* * *

TRANSPORT

CNR POLICY ON EAST COAST

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. The employees in the marine service of Canadian National's Gulf service on the east coast have expressed concern about CN's recent policy of diverting a portion of its freight traffic from the Gulf run to a Montreal company, Federal Commerce Shipping Company, operating between Halifax and St. John's, and about CN's policy of using private charters on the Labrador service when the company has three ships lying idle at North Sydney.

Can the minister explain to this House why Canadian National is adopting this policy, and can he further assure the House that no workers in the marine service of CN on the Gulf run or in Port aux Basques will lose their jobs as a result?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the general answer to both questions which the hon. member has posed is that Canadian National seeks to accomplish the task facing it, at the lowest cost, and in that sense it examines which vessel is best for it to use and also which route should be used to send goods in order to avoid unnecessary expenditures.

The question of the implications of this with respect to jobs, particularly in places like Port aux Basques and North Sydney, is a matter of great concern to all of us, as was indicated in the House last week to myself and several of my colleagues in the government. We are looking at the situation constantly with CN, in an attempt to provide mechanisms through them and through other ways to offset any job loss which is threatened.

Mr. Faour: Mr. Speaker, it appears to me—and, I am sure, to many workers on the railway and in the marine service—that this diversion of freight traffic from the Gulf run to the Halifax run will have the effect of less traffic being carried on the Newfoundland railway and that it is just one further chapter in the downgrading of that railway. Can the minister explain why this is happening, especially in light of his commitment not to further downgrade the service until the final report of the Sullivan commission?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it is happening, as I say, because of economic considerations which show lower cost opportunities for movement of the same goods. In fact, some of the greatest changes taking place in relation to the Newfoundland railway are changes which have led to a great volume of goods being moved by truck instead of rail. It may sound like and odd development to hon. members, but the figures show that the movement to truck from rail in Newfoundland is behind that kind of switch in other parts of the country. In other words, there are many factors at work, including the size of shipments, particularly small shipments, the flexibility of the vehicle, and so on, which make the truck the best vehicle for a lot of goods.

One of the things we will be doing in our attempt to make sure that an effective railway is operated for the next number of years is to examine all of the shippers involved, most of whom are all good Newfoundlanders themselves, as to why they are moving goods by truck rather than rail, and we will be making every effort to urge them to use rail as much as is practical.

FISHERIES

SOCIAL BENEFITS AVAILABLE TO PERSONS EMPLOYED UNDER FOREIGN FISHERIES OBSERVER PROGRAM

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries concerning the Foreign Fisheries Observer Program, a program which I assume the minister feels is quite important in monitoring the activities of foreign fleets. Is he aware that some of the participants hired under this program by means of personal service contracts have an uncertain status regarding unemployment insurance benefits and perhaps workmen's compensation, and has he taken steps to monitor this program to ensure that these participants are fully protected, keeping in mind that foreign countries are paying for this program in the first instance?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I became aware of the problem as a result of the hon. member's and another hon. member's query. Obviously, these are personal service contracts and they normally do not include payment of unemployment insurance and such benefits. The employee is paid at the end of each trip and if a person is satisfactory to his employer, he may be hired again. I should say "he or she", because it is a fully liberated program.

I am concerned perhaps because of the many restrictions that caused us to take that route. I would be interested in seeing the development of a corps of observers who would be competent, experienced and would regard this work as suitable employment and, in fact, would help us in the program.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer. I would like to ask him about another point concerning this program. Is he aware of statements made by at least one of the participants hired under this personal service contract, that there seems to be a serious variation of job instructions between, for example, the duties on a Russian boat compared to a Japanese vessel? Is there some sort of liaison to make sure that these foreign fleets are given consistent and fair treatment in order to encourage them to co-operate fully with this country as far as the criteria are concerned?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, we have bilateral agreements with both countries mentioned by the hon. member, and certainly I would want to make sure that there is total fairness in dealing with both of them. There is a period of training before these people are put on board foreign fishing vessels. I shall inquire with regard to the hon. member's question and pass along the information I receive.

World War I Veterans

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PURCHASE BY PETRO-CANADA OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES—FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to make sure that I understand what he said earlier.

Is the minister saying, in connection with the Petro-Can purchase and the financial transactions involved, that there is absolutely no financial responsibility on the part of the federal government? Is he saying, not only that the federal government did not engage in any express guarantee, but that by virtue of Petro-Can being an agent of the government, and the implications of that under the Financial Administration Act, there is no financial responsibility on the government of Canada in connection with this transaction by way of guarantee or otherwise?

● (1502)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear that this was a commercial transaction. It was negotiated and financed by normal commercial instruments. There are no government guarantees.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DINNER IN HONOUR OF WORLD WAR I VETERANS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with your kind permission there is a word I should like to say about a matter of which I gave Your Honour notice. It has been my privilege to attend a good many functions on Parliament Hill, but I must say I have seldom attended a function that was so delightful and so thoroughly enjoyed by those in whose honour it was given as the dinner given last Saturday evening by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) in honour of the 89 or 90 veterans of World War I who were in Ottawa over the Remembrance Day weekend.

The minister was a most gracious host, and the members of his staff went out of their way to see that everything was thoroughly arranged. I must also say that those 89 or 90 men really were touched when, at the end of the evening, each was given a special certificate with his name on it, signed by Her Majesty the Queen.

I felt there should be some mention of this in the pages of Hansard. In my view the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the staff of his department deserve full marks for what they did on Saturday evening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

LOTTERIES

TABLING OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table, in both official languages, a Memorandum of Understanding between nine provinces and the Government of Canada concerning future arrangements in government lotteries.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 133, 156 and 376.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

LOTO CANADA

Question No. 133—Mr. Diefenbaker:

What provisions were taken with respect to Loto Canada's draw for $1 million in gold in order to ensure the integrity of the draw and (a) how was the winning number drawn (b) what was the date the number was drawn (c) were all the tickets to the draw distributed prior to the number being chosen?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Loto Canada's $1 million gold draw was conducted by Roblet Inc., consulting engineers, with 2 amateur athletes to roll the dice. It followed standard Loto Canada procedures and its integrity was certified by:

a member of Samson Belair, external auditors;

a member of Blaney, Pasternak, Swela, public attorneys and Loto Canada's operational auditor.

(a) The winning number is drawn in the same manner as the intermediate and main draws: i.e. computer random selection.

(b) The Draw for the $1 million in gold was drawn on October 6, 1978 at 6.30 p.m.

(c) Yes.

ARMED FORCES

Question No. 156—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What was the actual strength of the (a) Regular (b) Reserve Forces as of October 1, 1978?

2. How many Armed Forces personnel as of October 1, 1978 were (a) male (b) female?

3. What was the (a) military (b) civilian strength of National Defence Headquarters as of October 1, 1978?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) 79,033; (b) 21,178.

2. (a) 74,326; (b) 4,707.

3. (a) 2,753; (b) 4,255 (includes term, casual and FLIP employees).

CUSTOMS OFFICE—EDMONTON

Question No. 376—Mr. Malone:

How many items that passed through the Customs Office in Edmonton in (a) 1969 (b) 1976 (c) 1977, were destined for the Alberta towns of (i) Camrose (ii) Hay Lakes (iii) Armena (iv) Kingman (v) Round Hill (vi) Viking (vii) Sedgewick (viii) Lougheed (ix) Ohaton (x) Bawlf (xi) Daysland (xii) Strome (xiii) Killam (xiv) Forestburg (xv) Heisler (xvi) Ankerton (xvii) Rosalind (xviii) Kelsey (xix) Donalda (xx) Meeting Creek (xxi) Edberg (xxii) Ferintosh (xxiii) Bashaw (xxiv) Duhamel (xxv) New Norway (xxvi) Gwynne?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister of National Revenue): The information is not readily available for the following reasons: For shipments arriving by air, highway and mail, customs entries are prepared which show the importer's name and address. These entries are filed in Edmonton by customs entry number and are held on file for five years. All entries for goods cleared at Edmonton, numbering approximately 225,000 for 1976-77 would have to be reviewed to determine if the address of the importer was one of the 26 locations mentioned. For shipments arriving by mail which are released as being free of duty and turned over to the post office for delivery to the importer, Customs maintains no record of the number of parcels so released.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

STANDING ORDER 26

PETRO-CANADA—PURCHASE OF SHARES IN PACIFIC PETROLEUMS LTD.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I gave you notice that I intended to ask leave today to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

On Friday afternoon, after the House adjourned for the weekend, Petro-Canada, a federal Crown corporation, committed itself to buy 48 per cent of Pacific Petroleums Ltd. of Calgary, and further committed the government to a potential minimum liability of $1.4 billion, without reference to parliament. This agreement is subject to conditions respecting the management of Pacific Petroleums Ltd. which must be made almost immediately. We heard the minister indicate today that there is an important meeting on Thursday respecting that very matter.

If parliament is to have any input at all into the decision which substantially alters the nature and structure of the market, and commits parliament to massive but unapproved expenditures, it must intervene, in my submission, to defeat this matter immediately before the transaction is finalized. Therefore I move:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, of course, would have to have the permission of the Chair to make that motion and then, in accordance with the terms of Standing Order 26, the motion would be made, not at this time but at some time later if it was my disposition pursuant to that standing order to grant his application that this was a proper matter to be discussed within the terms of Standing Order 26.

There are a number of aspects within the standing order to which I want to refer briefly. The first relates to a matter coming under the administrative competence of the government. According to subparagraph 5 of the rule, in determining whether the matter should have urgent consideration I have to give some consideration to the opportunity to discuss it in other ways and the extent to which that might be satisfactory in the circumstances.

Finally, subparagraph (16)(a) of the rule reads:

The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;

There has been some body of law or some argument that under Standing Order 43 the urgency really need only be urgency of consideration, but under Standing Order 26 this subparagraph of the rule certainly takes it simply as urgency of consideration and introduces an element of genuine emergency. In order to accede to the hon. member's request at this time, therefore, it seems to me I would have to find that a transaction, which on the face of it appears to be within the normal orbit of the purpose for which this Crown corporation was set up in the first place, had in some way become an emergency.

While it is obviously an impressive transaction and a very important transaction and, therefore, certainly cannot be brushed aside as an unimportant matter, nevertheless I do have the view, at least on the basis of the information I have at the present time, that there was nothing irregular or extraordinary about the transaction, and that it was within the competence of the Crown corporation which was set up for this kind of transaction by this parliament. It would therefore seem to me that without some element of an extraordinary nature or irregularity, at least by an initial impression, it would not be the proper subject for consideration pursuant to Standing Order 26.

In other words, the Crown corporation, being a creature which is given an independent life and authority by parliament, I think it would be quite extraordinary for parliament to recall the activities of that very independent Crown corporation each time the Crown corporation entered into a transaction. While it may wish to do so, I think it would have to do so in regular ways, such as the examination of the minister upon his estimates, or by participation in a budget debate, which we know is going to begin later this week. There is nothing to stop discussion of it in parliament obviously, as was evidenced in the question period.

In order to qualify for consideration under Standing Order 26, however, something of an emergent nature or extraordinary nature would have to be demonstrated. Whether that would be in the nature of an irregularity or not, I am not sure, but in any case at this time—always without prejudice to the right of any member upon further information to apply again—upon the information available to me I do not consider it to be a proper subject for consideration as an emergency debate pursuant to Standing Order 26.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58(11)—ALLEGED SHORTCOMINGS IN MOVEMENT OF GRAIN FOR EXPORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its failure:

(a) to require the railroads to add 4,000 hopper cars and 5,000 repaired boxcars to their grain fleet; and

(b) to give the Canadian Wheat Board total authority to co-ordinate all aspects of grain movement and any other authority necessary to protect and expand grain exports.

Mr. Speaker: Members will note that proceedings on this motion expire in the ordinary course later this day pursuant to Standing Order 58(11).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion has been apparent during the course of the late summer and this fall. It was obvious in this chamber through the number of questions raised on the matter by members of the opposition parties.

Since we are faced with the requirement to move a record or equal to record volume of grain over the coming winter months, my colleagues and I thought this an appropriate motion through which to bring to the attention of parliament, as well as to the minister, some factors that have put Canada and Canadian producers into the present situation.

● (1512)

This is the situation in a nutshell. In spite of the fact that the minister and the government have provided 8,000 hopper cars, and I am certain he will mention this two or three times in his speech—by the way this was a measure supported by members on all sides of the House—we have a smaller capacity and capability to transport grain now than that existing at the end of 1972.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Further, the reason for the motion is to illustrate how the railroads have betrayed and double-crossed not only the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) but the taxpayers and the grain producers in western Canada. While the minister is busy telling us that all is well, in my opinion the railroads are on strike. They are threatening the Canadian Wheat Board's ability to compete for grain sales. When I say railroads on strike, I mean railroad management.

To put it mildly, the Canadian Wheat Board is the farmer's friend. It is doing a good job. It is doing the best possible job it can, but it needs more authority to co-ordinate grain movement in order to protect our present grain sales and to expand them. At present, sir, the Canadian Wheat Board is not in a position to take on new and additional contracts because our capability and our capacity to move grain to export positions has not increased, in spite of the contributions of the Canadian taxpayers. They have, in my opinion, decreased.

More than ever before the Canadian Wheat Board needs more authority. Yet I find this incredible situation where the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) attacks the principle of orderly marketing in the Canadian Wheat Board itself.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Benjamin: It is bad enough that the Conservatives supported the minister in charge of the Wheat Board when he took feed grains away from the exclusive jurisdiction of the board. But the Leader of the Opposition said in August of last year that the private grain trade should be allowed to compete with the Canadian Wheat Board for export sales. The whole purpose of setting up the Wheat Board in the first place was to eliminate the private grain trade from export sales.

Mr. Mazankowski: Who set it up, the CCF?

Mr. Benjamin: That would lead to the ultimate destruction of orderly marketing in the Canadian Wheat Board. What R. B. Bennett gaveth in 1935, the present leader of the Conservative party is going to taketh away. The Wheat Board can sell wheat; it has sold wheat. It needs the support of everyone in this chamber, let alone everyone in this country in order to get on with the job. Let us not burden it with the so-called free market thinkers and, an unco-operative railroad system.

The advisory committee for the Wheat Board has said that transport delays in the last crop year damaged Canada's reputation as a supplier, and cost farmers $150 million in lost grain sales. Canadian Wheat Board spokesmen are now saying that deferred sales so far this calendar year total $350 million and that demurrage charges on ships, mostly waiting in Vancouver harbour, will add another $25 million.

Deferred sales is a nice term for lost sales, or sales for which we did not apply because of the Board's knowledge of our inability to meet those commitments. That is money out of the farmers' pockets. It is a lost opportunity for the Canadian economy. It is money out of the Canadian economy. We cannot expand grain sales because of transport constraints. Once more, once we get behind in shipments of grain, we stay behind. There is no surge capacity between our two major railroads to catch up on shipments. The Canadian Wheat Board just signed a three million tonnes contract with China, not because that is all it wanted to supply to China, not because that is all that China wanted, but because that is all the Wheat Board felt it could live up to in deliveries.

There are two reasons why we are not moving the wheat we could be moving. First, the railroads give low priority to grain movement, and are phasing box cars out of grain service at an excessive rate. Second, the Canadian Wheat Board does not have the authority required to co-ordinate the entire grain movement system. It is compounded by the government's open market feed grain policy, which is plugging the system.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is not. Prove it.

Mr. Benjamin: My colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), says it is not. I would refer him to a statement, which I cannot lay my hands on at the moment, I believe from an official of the Canadian Wheat Board—there is also a statement by a minister in the government of Saskatchewan—confirming that off board grain sales are plugging our Canadian country elevator system and preventing the Wheat Board from doing a better job on our export commitments.

Mr. Mazankowski: Document your facts.

Mr. Benjamin: Both of these problems have been caused by private enterprise governments which say they favour competition and free enterprise in transportation and grain markets. They have forgotten about the competition we have with other exporting countries. They have forgotten that Canadian grain producers compete, they have always had to compete, with the treasuries of other grain exporting countries.

Who is running this country? Is it an elected democratic government and a democratic parliament—

An hon. Member: The CPR.

Mr. Benjamin: —or is it Cargill Grain Company and the CPR? The railroads, particularly the CPR, are phasing box cars out of grain service at a phenomenal rate. They have reduced our capability to move grain. They are blackmailing the taxpayers and the grain producers. There are not enough railway cars to get the grain to waiting ships even though the government, as I said earlier, has provided the railroads with 8,000 new hopper cars. As the government has bought these cars and put them on stream, the railroads have phased out their own boxcars and utilized these free hopper cars which they got as donations from the taxpayers.

At the end of 1972 the two major railroads had 26,000 boxcars which they owned in grain service. By July 31, 1978, that figure was less than half; there were only 12,800 boxcars available. They had taken 13,200 railway boxcars out of grain movement. The 8,000 hopper cars we provided them is equivalent to 12,000 boxcars. On those figures alone—and there are others to make that picture look even worse—we have something like 1,300 fewer rail cars available for grain movement now than we had before the taxpayers bought any hopper cars six years ago.

The government and the minister have known the railroads are scrapping their boxcars. What have they done about it? The government provided incentives totalling about $4 million a few years ago for repairs. The railroads have been given another 15 per cent depreciation allowance for purchase of new rolling stock. They now have a deal to repair up to 1,000 box cars each, with the government paying half the cost, and the CPR says that it will not do it. Even if the CPR did do it, it just is not good enough. The Canadian Wheat Board says "We need a minimum of 5,000 repaired boxcars returned to the movement of grain." Not only has the CPR refused to co-operate and repair the boxcars, it has said that it will not repair boxcars unless it requires less than 40 man-hours of work.

Since 1955 the railroads have laid off 48,000 employees. According to Mr. Justice Hall, most of the jobs were made obsolete in the repair and maintenance of way divisions. They were made obsolete by the policies of the railroad management. Let's put people back to work. One way of putting some people back to work is repairing railway equipment which the Canadian Wheat Board says is needed for grain movement.

● (1522)

We need 4,000 new hopper cars. That takes time. The railroads should be required to order those new cars now so that when they start coming on stream 12, 15 or 18 months from now, they will be available to add to our grain movement capability. However, that will not get us through the crunch coming this winter.

In addition to phasing out boxcars, the railways are giving grain movement a low priority. That is being done for one reason only, blackmail for abolition of the statutory or Crowsnest grain rate. Last year there were grain cars sitting on sidings all over the prairies waiting for days and weeks to be moved, while trains carrying other goods rushed past. The National Farmers Union, in an aerial survey and other investigation by individual members, found 1,213 boxcars sitting on sidings unused, with only minor repairs needed to put them back into service.

The railways' campaign to bog the system down will intensify this winter. Even if we have no snow, they will close hundreds of miles of branch lines for weeks and months on the excuse it is due to winter conditions. This is something the Minister of Transport has not told parliament or the people of Canada, although I am sure Canadians are intelligent enough they do not need to be told.

When the ground freezes in the winter, you can run trains over railway track even if it is in poor condition. The excuse of heavy snow conditions last year applied in a few small areas. In most of the prairies it was an average or less than average snowfall, yet hundreds, of miles of branch lines were closed, some for as long as three months. Our grain producers are getting fed up. I hope the Canadian people are getting fed up with this kind of blackmail. It is time to legislate the railroads back to work.

The way to get railroads to move grain is not to cave in to their blackmail, but to make them live up to their statutory and historic obligations to provide service. The government can and should require the railroads to add 4,000 new hopper cars, for which they pay, and 5,000—although I would prefer 6,000—repaired boxcars to their grain fleet.

The addition of 4,000 new hopper cars would generate more than $700 million a year in additional foreign sales and foreign exchange for Canada. Therefore, this would not benefit only the grain producers. It would benefit the nation as a whole.

Handing the railroads more money and more hopper cars will not guarantee better service. Surely the minister has been double-crossed enough times to realize that. Grain rates in the United States are more than four times as high as those in Canada, yet they have a chronic shortage of grain cars. In fact they keep trying to use as many of ours as they can. They have a grain movement or railway system that has broken down even worse than our own.

The governments must require the railroads to provide service. The Canadian Transport Commission, which is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, has that authority under Section 262 of the Railway Act. Why is it not being enforced? Section 262 reads:

> The company shall, according to its powers,
>
> (b) furnish adequate and suitable accommodation for the carrying, unloading and delivering of all such traffic;
>
> (c) without delay, and with due care and diligence, receive, carry and deliver all such traffic;
>
> (d) furnish and use all proper appliances, accommodation and means necessary for receiving, loading, carrying, unloading and delivering such traffic; and
>
> (e) furnish such other service incidental to transportation as is customary or usual in connection with the business of a railway company, as may be ordered by the commission.

The authority is in the law now. Why is the Canadian Transport Commission not enforcing the law? Why is the Minister of Transport, who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, not calling upon the Canadian Transport Commission on behalf of Canada and the Canadian grain producers, to enforce the law which requires the railroads to furnish adequate and suitable accommodation for the carrying, unloading and delivering of all traffic?

The railroads have been treated very generously. They receive $160 million a year in branch line subsidies. They have been given the use of 8,000 hopper cars with which to haul grain. They have been promised something in the order of $700 million over the next eight years to fix up their railroad lines.

Mr. Justice Hall said, "Stop giving out gifts." He said giving $600 million to the railroads is totally unjustified. He said the railroads should continue to charge the Crow rate for moving grain, and any losses they incur for that service should be paid directly to them by the Government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada. We support that basic and fundamental recommendation of the Hall royal commission.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

The statutory grain rate is not some handout or subsidy to western grain producers. It is an essential tool for this nation through the Canadian Wheat Board, to compete with other exporting countries, to allow Canada to place its grain in export position in competition with other grain exporting nations. Any other benefits to the statutory grain rates are ancillary to that basic fundamental principle, the reason for having statutory grain rates.

If there are proven losses in the transport of grain under the statutory rates, we agree with Mr. Justice Hall that, since the nation as a whole benefits from these massive grain export sales, the nation as a whole has an obligation to share in the costs that are incurred in arriving at these benefits.

Mr. Justice Hall also said the railways must be made responsible once the first recommendation that I mentioned has been accomplished. They must be made responsible to use that money to buy grain cars and to fix up their track. The Hall report has provided a framework within which the Canadian Wheat Board and the country elevator system could serve this country even better than they have for many years.

Mr. Justice Hall also recommended that the Canadian Wheat Board be given a greater role in coordinating the movement of grain. He said the railroads must be required, and the minister can do this, to give the Wheat Board all the information the board needs. At present the Wheat Board is not even provided with the serial numbers of individual railway cars in the grain fleet. The Wheat Board therefore cannot check on where the cars are.

The Wheat Board knows how to coordinate the movement of grain. It can look at the whole system, from the farmers' yard to the country elevator system, to the ships in the harbour where the grain is loaded. It knows the kind and quality of grain needed at each terminal to fill waiting boats.

I have not said anything about waiting boats. That problem is not peculiar to Canada. It occurs in all grain exporting nations. Any time there are 15 or 20 ships waiting in Vancouver harbour, you will find either the same or a worse situation in Sydney, or Melbourne, Australia; in New Zealand, Seattle, or Buenos Aires. There is nothing unusual about it. The government through the Minister of Transport and the Canadian Wheat Board, should be getting together with other exporting countries to have some kind of co-ordination in the movement of marine shipping which presently, in my opinion, is operated like a bunch of gangsters.

• (1532)

The Wheat Board needs to be given exclusive authority to market feed grains. In 1974 the minister, with the support of the Conservatives, took that power away from the board and, as a result, the parasites who speculate on the farmers' labour have gained, and the farmers have got less.

The result of this for our transportation system this year will be near disaster unless something is done to remedy the situation. There are no quotas restricting delivery of non board feed grains. The delivery system has been plugged, forcing the Wheat Board to allocate cars, not to move grain to Vancouver or Thunder Bay or Churchill or Prince Rupert for export, but to move the private enterprise off-board grain. The unrestricted delivery of non-board feed grain is destroying the equality of the quota system for which farmers in the west have fought so hard. Every bushel of non-board grain entering the system displaces capacity to handle the export grain which is the bread and butter of the grain farm economy. There will be a serious shortfall of grain movement this winter unless the government finds the will to take action.

In the short-term, we need to speed up grain movement this winter. In the long-run, we need basic structural changes to make sure that railways serve people and serve the country, instead of serving a board of directors concerned only with a profit motive. The CPR does not intend to co-operate with this government. It has not co-operated with any other, so why should it co-operate with this one? For years it has dictated policy to successive old-line party governments. And it has the muscle to do it; it is a large corporation with a lot of friends in political circles. Indeed, one John Turner who used to be in this place is now on the board of directors.

Even the Leader of the Opposition is going in to bat for the CP to get it more airline business. After all the help we have given the railroads, after all we have given CP since 1885, the Leader of the Opposition says "Let's give them some more". If there was any validity to his claim that Canadian Pacific should be given a larger share of the airline business, I would say to the Leader of the Opposition: make it conditional. He should demand that the railway substantially improve tracks and its capacity to move grain, in which case consideration might be given to letting it have more airline business.

I never thought I would have to say this, Mr. Speaker, but the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice is chicken. I had always thought that was one of the last things he would be. He has been double-crossed by railway management, one publicly and the other privately owned. It is true Canadian National has agreed to repair 1,000 cars, half the number it should be attending to, provided the public pays half the cost. The Minister of Transport, the Minister of Justice, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board—they are all the same person—lets them get away with it. He has the authority under the law or, if he does not, he can damned soon get it either from cabinet or from this parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He should talk turkey.

Mr. Benjamin: Yet the Leader of the Opposition is so mesmerized by private profit in transportation that he has joined those who do not want to make the CP provide the service it is supposed to offer. The CPR won't carry grain, it won't carry people and, under successive old-line governments, it has the country to gain and nothing to lose except the taxpayers' money.

The Leader of the Opposition defends an outfit like the CPR and wants to give it more. Already that company owes the people of Canada $580 million in deferred income tax. I could be a big wheel private enterpriser too, with a deal like that. If it had not been for subsidies paid every year to CP since the middle of the "dirty thirties"—there is no need to go back to 1885—the company would never have shown a profit in all those years. It could not have survived had it not been for largesse from the people of Canada. The company received $102 million in handouts last year. And what do they do? They sabotage grain movement, and the Leader of the Opposition says, "Let's give them some more." He wants to give them more of Air Canada's routes. Those routes were built up by the people of Canada at a time when private enterprise would do nothing. Now that they are established, now that Air Canada is a money-making corporation, along come CP together with the private enterprisers and their supporters, and say, "We want the gravy; we will leave the non-gravy, the money-losing parts, with public enterprise; the taxpayers can pick up the tab."

Canadian Pacific does not even like to tell us how much its president is paid. We had to get that information through the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. Poor fellow, he lived up to the guidelines. He only got a 10 per cent increase last year. He went from a salary of $300,000 a year to $336,000 a year. But we had to find that out under the laws of another country. This is symptomatic. It indicates the political power and muscle which the CP possesses. That corporation is a law unto itself. Canadian Pacific is bragging about a record profit of $233 million. But it will not co-operate when it comes to repairing its own equipment even though the taxpayers are prepared to pay half the cost. Of that $233 million profit, $51 million came from CP Rail.

We should not forget that the empire which CP has built up was made possible in the first place by public gifts provided to the company in exchange for a commitment to supply public services under principles enshrined in the statutory grain rate provisions, the Railway Act, the Canadian Pacific Act, and other legislation going back to 1881. Canadian Pacific has chosen to relieve itself of the obligations it assumed in exchange for these gifts from the people of Canada. I might add that these gifts were not looked upon as such at the time they were made. They were regarded as part of a contractual process, part of a bargain under which the company would provide the transportation services required by a country with our geography and climate. That contract has been broken.

The people of Canada have been double-crossed. CP has thumbed its nose at successive national governments and has given the grain producers and the taxpayers to understand that it has no intention of carrying out its responsibility to maintain and increase its grain carrying capability. Canadian Pacific has no intention of fulfilling its responsibility to enlarge its capacity in order to increase still further our grain export sales.

The minister will talk about the movement of 850 million bushels. That is good. That is a large amount. But where do we go from there? If we do not keep moving ahead we shall start falling back, as the figures I have given illustrate. Our capacity is at best only equal to what it was six years ago. I submit that it is, in fact, less than it was six years ago.

We believe the solution is to make the major elements of transportation a public facility, with public ownership and control, with public accountability—

• (1542)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my hon. colleagues for giving me a few more minutes. I promise to take only a few more minutes. I will complete the sentence I had begun. Since Canadian Pacific has chosen, being a law unto itself, to relieve itself of the obligations it took on in exchange for the gifts of the Canadian people, the agreements entered into and the law of the land, it is time for Canada to bring the entire operation of Canadian Pacific Limited under public ownership and control. It is past time.

I want to close my argument by spending two or three minutes discussing our grain exports and our capacity to meet increased demand for grain. I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks that the Canadian Wheat Board completed a contract with the People's Republic of China for some three million tonnes. This contract took effect September 1.

Last spring—and I raised this matter in the House in questions to the minister—the U.S. department of agriculture predicted that Canada would not be able to take advantage of increased opportunities for enlarged grain sales to China. The U.S. department of agriculture said that that would be because Canada's capacity to deliver grain was seriously in question and, that this would be evident by November of 1978.

The Americans have not been able to get into the People's Republic of China market for a number of reasons. One has been that some of their own laws have prohibited credit sales to China by either the United States government or any other seller in the United States. However, as of just a few weeks ago the United States completed its first major contract with the People's Republic of China for 3.2 million tonnes of grain. Had our railroads lived up to their responsibilities and transferred some of their activities to the rehabilitation of their plants, the repair of their equipment and the purchase of equipment for grain movement to a greater degree than they did, that would automatically have placed the Canadian Wheat Board in a position to move to even larger contracts.

I do not doubt for a moment that the Canadian Wheat Board could have negotiated a contract with Red China for four million tonnes instead of three. Had the capability been in existence, the Canadian Wheat Board could have negotiated a contract for up to six million tonnes, which would come out of the total Canadian production of 38 million or 39 million tonnes.

Excellent work is being carried on at Vancouver with the expansion of our grain terminals. The minister has mentioned that. I am sure he will mention it again. We all agree that that is good. United Grain Growers, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and Alberta Wheat Pool have been and still are expanding and improving their capacities and capabilities at Vancouver. Work is in progress, or will be, in Prince Rupert. There is not much use in doing all that if the key part of the grain movement chain between the farmers' own elevators and those ports remains inadequate to keep doing even as well as we have been doing, and we certainly will not be able to increase our exports to countries such as China.

Mr. Forrest Hetland, a Canadian Wheat Board commissioner, spoke to the Canada Grains Council semi-annual meeting last October 18. Incidentally, I cannot help but say that that was a great day out west, at least in one part of the west. Mr. Hetland said that rapid expansion for world wheat and feed grain export markets is projected. He said that even if Canada's export market share stays where it is, more farm production will be needed and more will be expected from the grain handling system. He said that by 1985 Canada could be exporting about 20 million tonnes of wheat and about 10 million tonnes of feed grains. The most Canada ever exported was 21.4 million tonnes, and that was six years ago. Mr. Hetland said that increased rail capacity, more terminal storage, and aggressive marketing from the Wheat Board is needed if Canada is to reach its potential. He went on to say:

> We will have to have a handling and transportation system that can cope, not just with the average months and years, but with the peak months and years as well.

I am happy to see the country elevator system and the grain elevator companies, particularly farmer-owned elevator companies, the pools and the UGG, moving ahead, upgrading and increasing their capacities at their country grain elevators, and upgrading and increasing their capacity at their grain terminals at Vancouver, but that has not been the case with both our railroads. I have said before in this House that we should re-nationalize CN and nationalize CP. Unless there is massive investment to improve railway plants, then the beginning of the system, the country elevator, and the end of the system, the terminal elevator, will sit inadequately used and not capable of living up to their potential. Our railroads are the pipelines between those two systems, and there has been a breakdown.

I urge this government and this minister to accept the recommendations of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall on the matter of statutory grain rates. The railroads should be reimbursed for any deficit on the cost of moving grain. The railroads should be required to purchase equipment. The government should not have to do this. The railroads should be required to live up to their responsibilities.

I urge this minister to enforce the Railway Act. I am not a lawyer. I am just an ordinary, innocent country boy—

An hon. Member: Innocent?

Mr. Benjamin: —but as I read the Railway Act and as I understand English, there is authority there for the Canadian Transport Commission and the minister to require Canadian Pacific or any other railroad to live up to its responsibility and to meet the transportation requirements of the people of Canada.

Another reason so much has been done for and given to Canadian Pacific since 1881 is that the people of Canada recognized at that time that our climate and our geography must be taken into account and that, because of the nature of our country, there cannot be competition, duplication, and private ownership in transportation. In a country such as Canada those things do not work. It is totally unfair to expect one individual or company to carry a load and suffer a loss on something which benefits the nation as a whole. I do not expect the board of directors of Canadian Pacific to donate $100 million a year to Canada if that means a loss for them in their total operations, but I do expect them to contribute their share.

Surely transportation costs should be shared by the people of the nation as a whole. That sharing can best be done through a publicly owned transportation system which is paid for by the people of Canada, and is accountable to them. With public ownership Canadians would know that they would be provided the kind of service, the amount of equipment and the quality and capability which are needed for our grain production to continue to compete and to allow us to increase our share of the responsibility for feeding the world.

● (1552)

I want to close by saying one last thing. This situation is not peculiar to just the transportation of grain. There has been a never ending problem with our railroads from coast to coast. Newfoundland is still not part of confederation when it comes to transportation. Transportation has been a chronic problem for decades in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick because of insufficient railway equipment and low locomotive power to move their potato crop.

For decades there has been a never ending problem with transportation in all parts of Canada because of insufficient railway equipment and inefficient locomotive power to move livestock. It has been a never ending problem in southern Ontario and in British Columbia, which has been going on for years because of insufficient railway equipment and insufficient capacity to move our fruit crop.

Every year when it is time to export lumber, there has not been sufficient equipment to meet the demands. So the situation is not just peculiar to the transportation of grain. For decades both our major railroads have set a record in inadequacy. The matter has been brought up in parliament year after year, by members in all parties, and the situation has never been corrected.

This government and its predecessors have continued to cling to and clutch the concepts of the 1890s of competition and profitability in transportation. No other country in the world, other than Canada and the U.S., cling to and clutch that concept any longer. In other countries, private enterprise and governments have taken action decades ago, and have shown what can be done. It is time that this parliament acted.

Movement of Grain

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House also welcome the opportunity to debate this very important issue, and I am particularly pleased to enter the debate at this time. It is certain that this debate is timely. With each passing day we find the transportation system in this country becoming progressively worse. There is no question but that it requires some serious attention very soon.

I want to join my friend, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), in condemning the government for its failure to provide strong and firm leadership in this area. I want to condemn it as well for its failure to live up to its commitments given at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in July of 1973, and reiterated in the election campaign of 1974. Those of us who campaigned at that time all remember that great declaration by the transport minister, echoed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), "Elect us and we will revamp the grain handling system from the granary on the farm to the ship in the harbour." It is significant to note that since that election campaign of 1974, the record will clearly show that the over-all capacity of our grain handling and transportation system has not increased and we have not come close to meeting the targets of which the minister spoke so boldly during that election campaign.

Quite frankly, what is happening is that the producers and the people of Canada simply do not believe the government any longer and do not trust it. Anything that is said by the government is taken with a grain of salt and considered as a measure of jockeying for maximum political advantage.

What is interesting to note as well is that in the throne speech which opened the last session of parliament—I presume it is the last session—no mention was made of grain handling and transportation, notwithstanding the fact that the Speech from the Throne addressed itself to two very important issues in the country, namely, national unity and the economy. I find that very strange, because surely maximizing our grain export opportunities is one way in which we can assist our balance of payments, stimulate the economy, and improve the over-all position of the western grain producers.

Having said that in dealing specifically with the motion, I have to say that I find it far too restrictive and too narrow in its over-all approach. To listen to my friend, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, you would have to conclude that if the minister forced the railways to add 4,000 hopper cars and repair an additional 5,000 boxcars, and gave the Canadian Wheat Board more power, all our problems would be solved.

Mr. Benjamin: Move an amendment.

Mr. Mazankowski: We have not resorted to that rather unorthodox exercise of moving amendments to motions. This has been the habit adopted by the NDP.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Careful! You tried to bring in an S.O. 26 today.

Mr. Mazankowski: Quite frankly, we think this is an opportunity to bring forth comments and recommendations by the respective political parties. To be quite honest, I find the motion very simplistic. We think that the problems with respect to grain handling and transportation require a much more comprehensive analysis and solution, and that simply to confine ourselves to the two elements contained in the motion, I do not think, with all due respect to my friend, would resolve the problems in grain handling and transportation.

Once again we have noted today that the NDP is using its age-old whipping boy, the CPR, to advance its solutions to the problem. I was wondering whether the hon. member was going to go so far, but he finally did get to the point when he renewed his party's suggestion and belief that CPR should be nationalized. That too is a very simplistic solution which, in my opinion, does not deserve serious consideration. While saying that, I acknowledge, as, I am sure, do all other members of the House, that certainly the railways must share the responsibility in this very important issue, but it requires a much more penetrating insight than simply to attack the railways, as did the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. I suspect he thinks it is great political fodder for him in his constituency and indeed in the province of Saskatchewan, and perhaps to some extent in Alberta. Quite frankly, I think he is less than fair in confining his remarks to that particular sector. I think he is being unfair, and he should know that there is a whole lot more to the question of grain handling than simply the railways.

There is much hypocrisy which emanates from my friends to the left. We have been talking about the importance of moving grain to export, and yet when the government brings in legislation to end the engineers' strike on the Great Lakes—an action which received almost unanimous support from western Canada, including the socialist premier from Saskatchewan, urging the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to end this strike—what did my friends from the NDP do? They voted against that measure.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Mazankowski: Whom do they serve, the union leaders or the farmers? They cannot have it both ways. Here is a classic example of the kind of hypocrisy that emanates from those members time after time, and the plot seems to thicken when we get to an election period. My friend cannot have it both ways—he has to serve one master, not two.

The hon. member says that the Canadian Wheat Board should have more authority. I am not sure to what authority he is referring. He also pointed out that one of the problems we have in the country today is that the system is plugged with non-board grains. I challenged him to document that evidence, but he could not or would not. I am not sure whether he has that information, but my figures indicate that the stocks of non-board grains range anywhere from 3.5 per cent to as high as 6 per cent in some elevator systems.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

• (1602)

If he and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) knew anything about farming and had to face the challenge of meeting fertilizer and fuel bills, they would know very well that the open market price for barley is the same and sometimes greater than the initial price paid by the Canadian Wheat Board. If farmers want to maintain a cash flow and pay their bills, they are forced to sell on the open market, because the Canadian Wheat Board simply is not selling barley. I challenge the hon. member to telephone the Canadian Wheat Board. He will be given the same answer. There does not seem to be much opportunity for an additional quota on barley in the foreseeable future. At least that is what I have been told by officials in the Canadian Wheat Board.

There are many complexities in the grain handling and transportation system. They involve producers, grain handling companies, railways, workers involved in the various sectors of this business, shipping fleets, the Canadian Wheat Board, and customers. The smooth operation of the grain handling and transportation system is affected by internal and external influences. As a matter of fact the weather has a great bearing on the success of the operation of the entire system.

Mr. Benjamin: That is Otto's excuse.

Mr. Mazankowski: I have to agree with the minister in that regard. Anyone associated with the production and movement of grain would realize that the weather cannot be overlooked.

Today the system is in a mess. The mood is strong in western Canada. There is frustration and disgust over the inability to move grain. The country elevator system literally is plugged. More than 75 per cent of its potential capacity is utilized. The stocks are 40 per cent to 50 per cent higher than a year ago. Producer-farm deliveries this year are down 35 per cent to 40 per cent from a year ago. Farm stocks amount to approximately 42 million tonnes. They have increased 20 per cent from a year ago. I see the minister shaking his head. These figures come from the Canada Grains Council and the Canada Grains Commission. Perhaps they have changed in the last week or so, but they are the ones I have. The terminals are less than half full. There are 35 per cent less stocks than a year ago.

The Canadian Wheat Board stated categorically that it has turned down barley sales. We are losing out traditional markets of Russia and China. I agree with the hon. member when he expressed concern about the fact that we face some stiff competition from the United States in terms of maintaining our market with China. According to the Canada Grains Council, our present stocks of wheat, including the production of this year and the carryover of last year, are in excess of 30 million tonnes. That represents almost half of the total world wheat trade.

There is concern about the breakdown in the co-ordination of the movement of grain in the country and the interface between matching up our markets and our shipping targets. The Canadian Wheat Board has summarized this problem by pointing out three needed requirements to bring about some relief. It suggested that rail rolling stock is declining, rail capacity through the mountains is limited, particularly during the winter when cars are available and demand is the heaviest, and that the terminal capacity on the west coast is not adequate to buffer present shipping variations or to meet the increased requirements of importers in the future. I am referring to an address which was given by Mr. Harold F. Bjarnason, senior economist of the Canadian Wheat Board, before the Canada Grains Council meeting in Calgary on October 18.

To counter that, we have heard claims by the railways of underutilization of railway capacity. At the present time there are suggestions which indicate that only 50 per cent to 70 per cent of railway capacity is being utilized en route to Thunder Bay, and 40 per cent to 60 per cent is being utilized en route to Vancouver. Those statements seem to conflict. They bear close scrutiny and study. There have been labour problems which affected the Port of Churchill. There were two labour disruptions which affected the Port of Thunder Bay. In some measure that disruption resulted in the differential of 2.3 million tonnes of grain between this calendar year and next. Translated into dollars and cents, it amounts to approximately $350 million to $400 million of loss to Canadian producers.

The Canadian Wheat Board study of the last crop year, which was attested to by its senior economist, Mr. Bjarnason, indicated that we could have sold 25 million tonnes of grain if we had the capacity to move that amount. As it was, we settled for sales in the order of just over 21 million tonnes. That four million tonnes represent a direct loss to the Canadian economy of approximately $500 million. There is a major breakdown in the system. Unless we do something immediately to turn this situation around and correct it, Canada will face the prospect of losing its traditional position of leader in the forefront of world export trade.

We must address ourselves to two matters immediately. First, we should clean up our act immediately. We must utilize to the maximum the existing facilities and capacities. A number of suggested solutions have been advanced, some of which are being considered, some of which have been implemented partially, and some of which are not being considered. Second, we must build in sufficient additional capacity to meet the market projections of the 1980s. We are looking at a very significant quantum leap in our ability to move grain to export markets.

Rather than pointing the finger at the railways, Canadian Wheat Board, or grain companies, I hope we can rationalize this issue in a serious and sensible manner. Structural changes are required, and perhaps there should be changes respecting detail.

I should like to advance some solutions, solutions which can be implemented in the immediate future, and some which will assist us in addressing the challenges of the future. First of all, it has become increasingly clear that we need a minister who can spend more time and give more attention to this very serious problem. I have no qualms about the minister's ability in discharging his responsibilities, but I think, in all fairness the farmers in western Canada, indeed, the agricultural sector itself deserves a minister who can spend more time and provide more leadership in addressing this very important issue.

● (1612)

We have studied this system almost to death. There are some very concrete suggestions and solutions that have been advanced by the Hall commission, and my colleagues will be talking about them throughout the course of the debate. We have appointed co-ordinators, commissions, and have had all kinds of studies. It is time we started implementing some of the recommendations which have been advanced.

In this area I do not think that we are moving fast enough. The minister talks of straining the system and seems to sidestep the issue by suggesting, "Well, if we didn't have so much grain produced on the farms, it wouldn't pose the kinds of problems we have." I often wonder what has happened to his great theme "building for a billion." It seems to have gone by the wayside. In that connection we cannot overlook the fact that it was this minister who conceived the idea of operation LIFT which paid farmers not to grow wheat. When he uses this kind of rationale we get a little suspicious.

As my friend from Regina pointed out, the system as it now stands restricts our capability and therefore our potential in the international market, by some 21 million tonnes. I would like to quote again from the speech of Mr. Bjarnason:

A yearly volume of about 21 million tonnes thus seems to be the maximum quantity our present system is capable of moving into export. If we had had greater capacity in our system, we would not have had to defer 1.5 million tonnes of export grain to the 1978-79 marketing year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. However, he may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 58(13) it says:

—and the member speaking immediately in reply thereto may speak for 30 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I would suggest that the portion read by the hon. member applies to the member who introduces the motion and the member who speaks for the government side. All other members are allotted 20 minutes.

Mr. Mazankowski: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I will be as brief as possible. I would simply point out, as my hon. friend has pointed out, that the current capacity of our facilities restricts our capability of moving more than 21 million tonnes of grain to the export position at the present time. If one looks at the fact that we have problems with respect to co-ordinating our movements, one has to question whether or not we are receiving effective management in that particular area. One wonders why we cannot develop the kind of marketing strategies that would coincide with the low demands in our shipping season.

As it now appears, the demand to move grain is the greatest in the winter months. It has been pointed out by the railways that the uneven utilization of their capacity, as a result of erratic shipping demands, causes their capacity to be reduced by something in the order of 20 per cent to 25 per cent. There is the problem of reducing the car cycle. If the car cycle were reduced by 10 per cent it would be the equivalent of providing some 2,500 additional box cars. The CN has stated that if they could reduce the car cycle by five days, west coast deliveries would increase from 350 million bushels to 525 million bushels. There is also the cleaning of grain which could be done on the prairies. We should be considering the utilization of the Canadian government elevators and increased utilization of the port of Churchill.

We must move quickly to increase our capacity on the west coast. If we are to export 31.5 million tonnes, it has been suggested that 50 per cent or even 60 per cent of that movement will be through the west coast. The most grain that has ever been moved through the west coast is nine million tonnes. The capacity will have to be increased at least to 15 million or 16 million tonnes, an increase of roughly 70 per cent. This is the area in which the government has failed miserably, because there are interested parties who wish to establish the kind of facilities, as for example, in Prince Rupert, which would give us the capacity or potential of moving 125 million to 150 million bushels annually. As well, we must increase further the terminal capacity in Vancouver. Clearly, it would be in the best interests of the grain producers in Canada and certainly of those producers who hail from the western part of Saskatchewan and the province of Alberta, because there are economic factors to consider as well.

I had a number of other suggestions I wanted to advance. Time does not however, permit. But I would like to conclude by saying that the farmers of western Canada and, indeed, the Canadian economy, can no longer tolerate the chaotic paralysis which presently exists. It seems to resemble the paralytic state of this government, and as a result the whole country is suffering, not only the farmers and the agricultural industry, but the economy as a whole, for when you run that $500 million in grain sales to the export market down through the economy, it has a ripple effect of five and a half times that much and provides jobs, homes, cars, etc. to people clear across the country.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Before addressing my remarks, Mr. Speaker, to the words of the motion put by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), I would like to deal with a number of observations we have just heard from the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). In the course of his remarks he talked about a problem of credibility for this government. Certainly the misstatement of facts coming from him would scarcely bear out any case for credibility in his direction.

In his opening remarks the hon. member mentioned a transportation system that is getting worse—I forget what he said, whether it was day by day or week by week, but certainly he meant that over time it was deteriorating—and that is complete and absolute nonsense. We have freight systems, whether by highway or by railway, which are effective and efficient, and more so year after year.

I presume the hon. member was addressing himself particularly to the railway method of carrying freight. The facts there show that the performance of railways is improving in a significant way year by year, measured in terms of productivity and the amount of volume carried, which is increasing, even though at the same time it is going to techniques which are more efficient, effective and are being carried out by a smaller number of people. That is the sign of an improved system and improved productivity, not the reverse.

The hon. member talked loosely of deliveries being down by 35 per cent, I believe his figure was, this year over last year by producers. That, again, is quite wrong. I do not have the latest figures in front of me but I hope to have them before I finish. I think they will show that we should be talking about closer to 10 per cent, and this after a year of all-time high producer deliveries. That is what we are comparing it with, not an average performance but an all-time high performance. I think this kind of factor should be known.

• (1622)

It should also be known that we are dealing with deliveries into the world market at record levels. We were within a hair of that last year, and this year with exports running at about 400,000 bushels above last year, it gives us every opportunity to reach a record performance again. These amounts are not insignificant, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre may say that the record we are talking about of nearly 830 million bushels of exports was six years ago. It should be remembered, however, that that particular level of exports and the fact that we were building up to those record levels during the years after I took responsibility for the Wheat Board and the grain business in western Canada—that record was possibly because of the accumulation of grain that farmers had on hand prior to 1970-71 and 1971-72. Prior to that, some individual farmers had unsold grain from three or four total crops on their hands.

That puts an important perspective upon the record deliveries of grain that we are achieving. It is only because we have had, in the current year and the two previous years, three crops which themselves are in the record setting category, that we have enough grain to deliver to go on testing the system year after year.

Let me put this another way, Mr. Speaker. Last year when there were record deliveries by farmers and nearly record exports by the Canadian Wheat Board, we also had the previous year's good production of nearly 44 million tonnes upon which to draw. If the crop had been even 10 per cent smaller we would have ended the year with something like 2½ million tonnes less grain on hand than we had going into the year. It was only because we had the record that we have a marginal increase this year over last year of stocks on hand on the farms. That is important because it bears on the question of how much capacity we ought to have and whether it is right to build a system that can move 30 million tonnes today. I agree with the Canadian Wheat Board that a target of 30 million tonnes going into export in 1985 is realistic. Obviously by that date we will want to have built the parts of the system required to move that volume.

I agree with the faith of the Canadian Wheat Board, along with some significant groups of people, including farmers on the prairies, that we can increase production to sustain those sorts of levels of production which require us to export that amount, if not year after year, at least sufficiently often to require the equipment.

As the hon. member for Vegreville pointed out, I was perhaps one of the first to say that a billion bushels of exports is a realistic target to bear in mind and, when considering our rail system and the equipment we should have, that is the target for which we should aim. The Canadian Wheat Board calculations of earlier this year—not made on October 18 as was referred to by an hon. member but earlier in a meeting at which prairie ministers of agriculture attended to examine these questions with me and with the Canadian Wheat Board—arrived at a figure somewhat higher. The problem is how to build an effective and efficient system and how to do so at least cost.

The hon. member for Vegreville said that this is a complex system and that a very important issue is the interface, that is, the way in which different parts of the system work together. That is precisely why at this point, as part of our over-all move toward the efficient ability to handle 30 million tonnes of export, we have consultants in the field studying the interface. We expect them to come up with practical suggestions on exactly how the grain handling system should be improved to meet the expected growth.

I do not have to apologize that in the year 1978 we have a system which could probably move over 23 million tonnes if it were able to move that volume in a steady way as and when there is space and when the system has the capacity to carry it, and when we will move something in the order of 21½ million tonnes, even allowing for problems. We want to build properly for the future and, of course, we will do that.

Let me turn now to the motion moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. As is not too surprising on an opposition day, he starts by condemning the government, but then when he comes to the failures for which he condemns the government, he says particularly that it is our failure to require the railways to do certain things, such as to acquire 4,000 hopper cars and 5,000 repaired box cars, that should be condemned. Another part of his motion refers to giving the Canadian Wheat Board more authority to co-ordinate grain movement. I have some doubts about whether that additional authority is lacking at the present time, but that is another and complicated part of his motion.

His motion, therefore, says that we should have required the railways to buy these additional hopper cars and repair some additional box cars. He does not say whether we have the power to do so, but he was good enough to say that if we need the power we can quickly come back to parliament and get it. Mr. Speaker, it is not often the government is assured that parliament will give power to it to do several things but, of course, railways are not treated by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre like other citizens might be.

Having said we should tell the railways to buy these hopper cars and repair the box cars, the hon. member then went to the question of financing. He criticized us for what he called "give aways"—presumably when we put up money to buy 8,000 hopper cars. He is presumably criticizing us for putting in $100 million last year and this year, and $70 million next year and in the future to rehabilitate branch lines, rebuild them, put on new rails, new ties and new ballast so they can carry fully loaded aluminum hopper cars, if not the steel variety, both of which we purchased. He said these things had been criticized by the Hall commission as well. Of course he is a little inconsistent there because Mr. Justice Hall also said that we need not buy any more hopper cars. The hon. member says that we ought to require the railways to buy them, however. He picks and chooses what we should do from the recommendations of the Hall commission report.

Having said we should not be giving things away to the railways, he made it clear that we should implement the next recommendation of the Hall commission report, that we should, presumably forthwith, begin to pay the railways the difference between what they get for moving grain on the Crow and what it costs them to move that grain. We had the Snaveley report on that, and an update of it will soon be available to the public. I can tell hon. members that the difference in the cost of moving grain and what the railways get for moving it, even after the branch line subsidy is deducted, is in the order of $175 million per year.

The hon. member wants us to stop buying hopper cars, stop rebuilding branch lines—to stop what he calls give-aways to the railways, but on the other hand he wants us to give the railways $175 million per year. I take it that what he is honestly saying with this motion is not that we are failing simply by not requiring the railways to build these cars, but that he is condemning the government for failing to pay the railroads $175 million or more a year and then require them to build some hopper cars and repair some cars. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the railways would be delighted with that arrangement. They would not quite understand the hon. member's logic of being against give-aways but being in favour of giving away more to the railways for less performance than we are now getting from them. It simply does not make a great deal of logical sense.

● (1632)

In building a railway and transportation handling system which can handle a large volume of grain into export, every part of the system has to be looked at in turn. Hon. members know that in looking at this I had detailed and careful discussions within the government about the question of hopper cars and exactly when they are needed. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, there can be two views to that question at any given point in time, whether the hopper cars need to be bought in 1978 or whether one can indeed wait until 1979 to place the order for them. It is a very complex question based in part upon what consultants will tell us about how fast we can turn hopper cars around.

The reason that Mr. Justice Hall said he thought perhaps no more hopper cars were required—and I am not looking at page 173 of volume 1 of the Hall commission report—was that he noted how quickly improvements in the system in terms of carrying grain can come about if the turn-around of cars improves, that is, if you get more trips out of the same car in a year, obviously you do not need so many cars. With these vehicles costing $40,000 a copy for hopper cars, it is important that we improve the turn-around time.

What Mr. Hall and the commission are saying is that with a reduction of 7.9 days to a 15-day cycle, present equipment could carry a potential 1.1 billion bushels, or a 52 per cent greater rate of volume than is now carried. In other words, with a car cycle reduction of 7.9 days to a 15-day cycle, 1.1 billion bushels of grain could be carried.

We have been working on the system. As we have been bringing the parties together to discuss their problems mutually in a quiet and calm way. We have in fact been improving that turn-around in time. And as we have in place at the terminals in Thunder Bay and in Vancouver co-ordinators who can play a role in trying to make effective use of the system. We have been improving that turn-around time.

The Snavely updating report comparing 1977 with 1974 finds very significant increases in productivity by both CN and CP with regard to the carrying of grain. With regard to car cycle, Mr. Snavely finds that in the three-year period from 1974 to 1977 the car cycle has been reduced by about four days, or 17 per cent, permitting 3.3 more loads per year from all of the cars. If I put that picture in terms of what it would mean in terms of cars required, the reduced car cycle means that 34 per cent fewer cars were required in 1977 than would have been required to move that same amount of grain if the improvements had not been made. Obviously continuing to work on those improvements is the challenge facing us with regard to car building.

I said there could be two views about how many cars are needed. Naturally those of us who are particularly interested in being sure that a peak period can be handled, even though the peak period is a short period, will tend to argue for more cars on the side of safety. It will help. The Canadian Wheat Board will be very conscious that even though they may only use those cars for three or four weeks in the year, it may be useful to them that they are there in that particular year. That will leave the Wheat Board itself to consider what its role should be in assuring that cars are there for that three, four or five weeks in which they may be needed.

The government as a whole has to look with more testing eyes at the question of the investment being made and the short use of time that the equipment is involved. The government will have to look at whether there are other things which need to be done, as important or more important, which may justify that kind of an investment. In particular, at the present time there are important improvements required on the west coast. Here again it is a matter of action which has led the elevator companies to move forward with expansion of their grain holding capacity.

More than ten million bushels of extra space on the west coast will be there, thanks to specific action by the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, United Grain Growers and Pioneer. This space will all be at Vancouver. This government has been concerned that additional growth on the west coast is clearly needed and that that growth should occur at Prince Rupert. That is why we have agreed to investments which will improve the dock and facilities at the present terminal so that it can handle more grain. We have also agreed to a significant investment in the basic infrastructure at a site like Ridley Island where we want to attract an additional grain facility of major proportions.

It will be much better to put that kind of major grain facility in place on the west coast so that it is there to be filled up in those periods of time where we may have equipment which otherwise would be empty, than to spend unnecessarily on cars and equipment. But that is a fine line.

How many cars do we require? An hon. member knows that I have had some discussions with the railways about this. The government has not come to a decision in favour of building more hopper cars at this very point in time, partly, I have to confess, because of fiscal restraint and the careful, careful review of every dollar being spent that that entails. In other words, I say that perhaps a year or so earlier with the same set of figures I might have been able to go after more cars. But we were able to agree that there should be a car rebuilding program. Just as a few years ago we saw that boxcars were coming out of the system faster than they really should because of their natural death, and yet we saw there was going to be a need for boxcars for quite some time to come. At that time we assisted with a program for both railways which cost several million dollars, where we paid half the cost of rebuilding a significant number of these boxcars and so extending their life for the grain movement.

This year cabinet approved a similar kind of program with regard to repairing 2,000 boxcars. I put that proposition to the Canadian National Railway. After they did an analysis of their figures, I received their agreement that they would go ahead with that car program. That repair program is now under way. I put the same proposition to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and their analysis, which coincided with ours in terms of what kind of car supply is required, came back somewhat more optimistic than anything I have been willing to credit. They did not in the first instance at least agree to a car repair program. I say in the first instance at least, because they are reconsidering their figures at my request. Perhaps next week I will have a further answer from them if the speeches in this House are conveying a message to the Canadian Pacific that we would expect them to reconsider carefully, and hopefully to enter into that car repair program. I will be very happy indeed about that.

I say to the House that if, in view of the analysis which we and they have made, there is during the course of the year any grounds at all for using the powers which do exist, limited as they are under the Canadian transport legislation which we have, to require the railways to act in a particular way, I will not hesitate to use it to see that that is done.

The grain movement is complex and we do have to work at every aspect of it. It may well be that in Thunder Bay this year problems in regard to how the yard of a particular railway can perform are more important and vital to the issue of how many cars are unloaded, and what kind of a car cycle we have, than the actual number of cars themselves.

● (1642)

It is easy with parts of the system, sometimes inspired by criticism from politicians, particularly in opposition where their role is criticism, in grain handling and transportation, to try to point a finger at other parts of the system and to say that if only such a thing had been done at such a time, everything would have been well. It is very possible for other parts of the system, railways, terminals, Wheat Board or local elevators, to join in that and accuse the other of some failure. I do not believe that kind of accusation is helpful.

I believe the basic motivation of all people involved, from the farm truck right through to the loading of grain on the ship, is to try and make the system work as quickly and effectively as possible. Naturally, when costs are required to be borne by a particular part of the system, there is a tendency to wish that somebody else will solve the problem for them. However, I believe the best way of solving our problems, of hauling more and more grain to export and therefore encouraging more and more production, has been to encourage the participants to sit down together in an atmosphere of trying to work out problems, where the government can be a catalyst in assuring that if one part of the system can do a lot more at low cost to help everybody in the system, that part of the system ought to be urged at the right time to do it. That is the way we have been moving, and that is the way in which we have been making progress. We have been looking at each part of the system.

I mentioned Prince Rupert. There, of course, I should avert to a current problem which is the kind of thing we all regret happening but which, nonetheless, causes significant problems to our grain handling system. There have been slides and problems to the track because of severe weather conditions, putting parts of it out of use for a significant amount of time. There again is demonstrated the need to have some residual capability in the system to handle more grain.

In looking at the movement of products to the west we have to be conscious of the fact that large volumes of traffic are now moving through the mountains to the west coast for export to the world. It is not just grain, but potash, coal, and sulphur. The volumes involved have been increasing very rapidly. This has led us to examine, with the railways, several features of our grain handling system and of our whole transportation system to see what needs to be done to make sure we have the capacity to move the product. Of course our examinations always try to run far enough ahead of the fact of critical capacity limits so that whatever has to be done can be built and completed by the time the need is there.

Hon. members have paid slight attention to changes in the tax structure in relation to railways in the last two budgets. These changes have improved the capital cost allowance position of the railways, making cash available immediately for the construction of improvements in the coast-mountain area of our rail system.

Canadian Pacific, which had the greater problems in this regard, both with regard to cash flow and capacity, has been progressively working toward double tracking or removing difficult grades in its system so that its capacity is increased.

Several years ago we undertook a joint track usage study. It is an examination of the possible increase in capacity from the prairies to Vancouver by treating the two rail lines as though they were in one system for purposes of moving products. With overloaded parts of the system, traffic would move in one direction on one line and in another direction on the other line, thereby increasing the actual train capacity which is possible as a result.

Our studies showed, and these are now available to the railways for their examination and implementation, that until 1985 the changes now in progress will likely provide the kind of capacity required for the prospective freight to be carried. By and after that time, problems could begin to arise.

Those studies also showed that the joint usage of track could indeed be an effective solution to some of those problems. It is not a solution without cost. It is not a solution that takes place without planning, because a variety of structures connecting the two rail lines across the river are needed in order to allow interchanging at different points, depending on construction or repair problems on the line. However, I fully expect that the analysis of these studies, in plenty of time to do the work that is required, will ensure that we have very good results in terms of carrying the grain across our rail system and, indeed, of carrying all the other products which are increasing in volume as well.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre made special reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway. He talked about the need to rearrange its structure and organization. Without ever wanting to become a defendant of a particular rail line, I would only say that it is interesting in its defence to note that until about three years ago it tended to do a little better than Canadian National in terms of responding to the traffic problems and needs of the day. Its branch lines on the prairies were in better shape in terms of weight of steel, and a lot of its other capacity was there in greater supply.

It was only after Canadian National came under renewed management and, perhaps even more important, a spirit of being aggressive about how it is structured and goes about its business, when it was given a mandate of attempting to be effective instead of always simply responding to policy dictates of the moment from one hon. member or another in this House, perhaps through the Minister of Transport, that its performance improved dramatically and tremendously.

While it is beginning to make profits, it is at the same time doing so with these increases in productivity, more freight being carried for more miles at lower rail cost, than in a period three or four years before. That is a sign of an attitude toward trying to do a job effectively. It would be beneficial to both the shareholders and the railway, in this case Canadian National, the people of Canada, and also to the people of Canada in terms of service provided to them. The attitude of trying to be efficient and effective is a good one, not one to be knocked and criticized in terms of how to run a railway system. It reinforces my belief it is not right for us to interfere on a day to day basis with the operation of Canadian National and to ask it to do well and to function effectively in the days ahead.

I appreciate the kind suggestion of the hon. member for Vegreville that it would be useful if I had more time available to spend on the problems of the grain industry and the Canadian Wheat Board. I am happy to tell him that the Manitoba Wheat Pool, with which I met last Friday, passed a resolution that would ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to lighten my responsibilities in order that I can spend more time on grain and Wheat Board problems. I must say I am pleased with the implications of that kind of resolution and attitude. I have no doubt the Prime Minister will be responding—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the minister have consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I was at that stage where I was ready to conclude my remarks in any case, by simply saying to the House that I have no doubt the Prime Minister will take note of the request, particularly from the Manitoba Wheat Pool, if not from the hon. member for Vegreville. I am delighted to assure the hon. member I will continue to give good time to this problem.

While I was at the Manitoba Pool meeting, provincial ministers of tourism were complaining because of my absence at a meeting here in Ottawa. I do not understand their complaint. As soon as I was told they were interested in having me with them, I let them know I had committed myself to the Manitoba Wheat Pool meeting in Winnipeg and that I could not, therefore, be with them. I do not apologize for having placed that commitment to the Manitoba Pool ahead of the later request of the ministers of tourism. I was a little surprised at the way in which they referred to the matter.

● (1652)

The House can be assured that this government will continue to take action, as required, to improve the grain handling and transportation system. It was this government which did spend $255 million on hopper cars, and which began to take such action before members of the House had taken note of the need to do so. That is a significant fact, in view of the ease with which it is possible for opposition members to ask that things be done without regard to the expenditure involved.

This government also instituted a rail rebuilding program, having set up the Hall commission to study the question of branch lines to see what ought to be done with them, and, later, the Prairie Rail Action Committee.

It was this government which faced the tough question of which lines should be identified for rebuilding. It was a reasonable analysis on our part, and on the part of the Hall commission and on the part of the Prairie Rail Action Committee, that not every branch line on the prairies could survive—but with the elevator companies themselves drastically reducing the number of elevators at which grain could be received, it did not make sense to maintain the number of tracks which had been put in place in the horse and buggy days. The cost of rebuilding these lines meant it was not fair to the people as a whole to try to spread those elevators out along the exact lines which had existed, bearing in mind that as convenient an arrangement for farmers could be arranged along a smaller number of lines.

The significant thing is that at the conclusion of the work of the Hall commission and of the Prairie Rail Action Committee, and at the conclusion of the studies carried out under the rail rebuilding program, we will have certainty as to the rail lines which exist, and we will also have certainty that those lines are capable of carrying the grain and carrying it well.

Just as the hopper car is an immensely superior vehicle for carrying grain to the hopper car of old, so the branch lines must be in shape in a way they never were before. The hopper car is top-loaded by gravity. It is unloaded through the bottom by gravity. Members in other parts of the House may never have seen the astonishing sight of an elevator agent having to cooper a boxcar, nail a door against the side of it, or sometimes laboriously repair the pillars upon which the door is nailed. They may never have watched it in the hands of a dumper after it arrives at the terminal, or seen the machinery which crushes that car in order to empty the grain from it.

The modern hopper car carries 50 per cent more grain than the boxcar. It can be loaded and emptied in a matter of minutes and seconds compared to a much longer period.

In the same way the rail system on the prairies, when it is completed, when our rebuilding programs are completed, will have all its mileage in shape to carry fully loaded cars well into the future. Consider the ballast that goes on the line, crushed rock that some of them have never seen in all their days, the weight of rail which would allow these cars to be carried. New ties were required, as well as track widening to ensure that snow does not gather on the lines. Lines must be put in shape so that snow ploughs can clear them, as is not always the case today. The government is spending more than $100 million on this program. That is the figure for last year and this. Next year it is committed to spending $70 million, and has made a general commitment to carry out the program in the seven, eight or nine years to come. The certainty of that commitment is exemplified by the action we have already taken.

Prairie farmers can know that just as we built hopper cars, rebuilt branch lines, and encouraged the railways to improve the handling of cars in their yards, so will we assure that steps are taken progressively in the ensuing years to achieve the one billion bushels about which I spoke some years ago, and that we shall, by 1985, have a system capable of carrying into export the 30 million tonnes to which the Wheat Board referred earlier this year as being a realistic figure. Action taken by this government, which is willing to spend large sums of money in order to make the system better, is surely grounds for confidence that further steps will be taken to produce this result.

The prairie farmer can accept the fact of what we have done and that we are pledged to continue building the system effectively and solidly into the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the subjects to be raised on the adjournment motion this evening. They are as follows: The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy)—Floods—Flood prevention program in North Montreal—Government position; the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Fisheries—Closing of St. Lawrence Fluorspar mine—Effect on employment in industry; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour)—The Canadian economy—Inquiry whether government has special economic program for Newfoundland.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58(11)—ALLEGED SHORTCOMINGS IN MOVEMENT OF GRAIN FOR EXPORT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benjamin:

That this House condemns the government for its failure:

(a) to require the railroads to add 4,000 hopper cars and 5,000 repaired boxcars to their grain fleet; and

(b) to give the Canadian Wheat Board total authority to co-ordinate all aspects of grain movement and any other authority necessary to protect and expand grain exports.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has demonstrated one thing with which all members will certainly agree. It is that after the next election he will be a great professor of economics or political history back at the University of Saskatoon. It is obvious he does not make his living selling grain on world markets or he would not have spoken as he did, trying to gloss over problems which are on the minds of many who are concerned with grain handling and transportation at the present time in western Canada. All the minister talked about was what the system would be able to do in the future. That is important, it is true, but there is another and more important aspect still. It is what the system can do now. That is what is important to the pocketbooks of prairie farmers. We can all speculate about what is likely to happen in the future, and I am sure that a number of speakers will do so in the course of this debate.

After talking to a good many grain growers, especially from Manitoba, and after talking to representatives of the Wheat Board, I have come to the conclusion that we are facing a crisis in grain transportation as the motion before us suggests. Responsibility for failures which the minister sought to gloss over must be laid at the door of the government itself. After all, the present administration has been in office since 1968, during which time the present situation was developing. Despite the urgency, little action was forthcoming, other than promises.

I should like to spend a few minutes analysing what is happening to grain transportation. Most of the figures I intend to present were obtained from the Wheat Board. They cover the period ending November 11, just this past week. No one in the grain industry really believes these figures are likely to change significantly during the rest of the winter, though some believe the picture is likely to be less satisfactory than those figures suggest.

The Wheat Board has made predictions, as it does each year, concerning the number of grain car unloadings on a weekly basis at Thunder Bay. If the system were operating as well as could be expected, the projection is that 7,000 cars could be unloaded per week. What is actually happening at Thunder Bay is that 5,500 cars of grain are being unloaded per week. During the recent Great Lakes strike grain stocks built up at Thunder Bay, but since the end of that strike three boats have been waiting. The reality is that at the present time there is not enough grain arriving at Thunder Bay to keep the terminals working on a full-time basis.

● (1702)

The Canadian Wheat Board projected that 3,000 to 3,500 cars per week would be unloaded at Vancouver. As of the week of November 11 some 2,400 cars per week have been unloaded. The port of Vancouver has been and will be operating literally from hand to mouth for the remainder of this crop year. As of the end of last week nine ships were waiting at Vancouver harbour. Based on what is happening at the present time and on the problems which have become very apparent in the system the projection is that the number of ships which we can expect to be waiting some time in January or February could be in the neighbourhood of 30 or more.

According to the latest Canadian Wheat Board figures, the port of Vancouver will be deferring—or rolling, the term which is used in the industry—some 300,000 to 600,000 tonnes per month, or about 11 million bushels. Those are sales which could be made. In addition, because of problems caused by weather at Prince Rupert, the board is losing sales of an additional 30,000 tonnes per week.

What has happened to the grain transportation system in this country is that it has been allowed to slide into such a state of ineffectiveness that the system does not have any surge capacity. It cannot handle any additional sales opportunities which may, from time to time, be thrust upon it. The truth is that the situation is getting worse every year. Elevators are very nearly full and terminals are less than half full. Producer stocks on the farm are up some 20 per cent. Farmers are holding more grain than they did last year. If the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board and for transportation had to make his income from grain he had to sell through the quota system to the Canadian Wheat Board, he certainly would not have spoken the way he did this afternoon.

At the present time the Canadian Wheat Board is actually working harder at deferring wheat sales than it is at selling grain. That is the state of the industry in 1978.

I am especially concerned about the province of Manitoba. The grain being sold by the Wheat Board at the present time is number one wheat. Movement of that grain is primarily out of Saskatchewan, the tip of southwestern Manitoba and parts of Alberta. Because of this, very little grain is moving out of the remainder of Manitoba. The reason for that is that the grade of grain in Manitoba has not been as high as it is in parts of Saskatchewan. By the Wheat Board's own admission, movement of grain out of the province of Manitoba will be almost non-existent until the first part of January 1979.

Elevators in Manitoba are full. Farmers have very little, if any, cash flow, and the cash advances farmers can get from the Canadian Wheat Board are so small that they are almost useless in terms of the amount of money it takes to operate a modern grain farm. How does the government or any part of the grain industry expect the Manitoba farmer to pay his bills in a time of rising expenses?

Barley is not being sold because number one wheat is the only grain which is being moved. The Wheat Board has said that it has backed away from barley sales. The Board does not even use the expression "deferred barley sales". The Board says it has backed away from barley sales. The government must obviously share much of the blame for this because it has had opportunities to make changes and to accept recommendations.

The railways have also entered into the fray. The problem has been confused. For example, CPR says it has all kinds of hopper cars and boxcars and that it does not need additional rolling stock. CNR says it does not have enough rolling stock. This confuses the matter and makes it difficult to distinguish the real crux of the problem. The Canadian Wheat Board feels that 4,000 hopper cars are need immediately. The board would like to see a total hopper car fleet of about 20,000 cars in ten to 15 years.

The 1978-79 shipping season looks truly dismal. There will be hundreds of millions of dollars in lost sales. The grain industry is already talking that way. There will be large demurrage payments. That is inevitable. That is coming, as sure as winter comes to the prairies.

Farmers will be frustrated because they will have very little cash with which to operate their farms. This will be especially so for exclusively grain farmers. We might even see China becoming a traditional customer of the United States, if the situation is not corrected relatively quickly.

In view of what I have stated it is no wonder that the present government's electoral fortunes on the prairies are so dismal. Rail problems have mounted while this government has been in power. The Liberal government has done little more than study these problems, and it must bear the blame for the loss of millions of dollars in sales.

Some days ago the minister said to me that the Wheat Board is studying continuous seven-day a week operations. He also said that there are problems with labour unions. Both those statements are true, but the whole question is really academic because there is not enough grain being delivered to Thunder Bay to allow it to be unloaded around the clock on a seven-day a week basis.

The big challenge which we as a country will be facing will be the tremendous leap in capacity which will be necessary to meet increased export opportunities by 1985 and even by 1990. Because of delay and lack of action by this government in moving to a rational grain handling approach, we will have to accomplish this in a very short period of time at possibly much greater cost to the government, industry, and farmers than should be the case. We could have developed this rational grain handling approach over a longer period of time if there had been more rational planning.

Foreign demand for Canadian grain will increase, as will foreign demand for grain from other countries. France is said to be planning a 67 per cent increase in grain exports by 1985. The United States Feed Grain Council thinks its exports will increase by some 50 per cent in the next four years, while Japan and China are said to need between 40 per cent and 50 per cent more production or, very likely, imports by 1985. Canadian Wheat Board officials have said that they feel that these intentions, along with the goals of both the importing and exporting nations, are a positive proof of trends in the grain industry which will certainly continue into the next decade. This is an additional reason why Canada must act quickly to protect its traditional markets, let alone develop new markets to widen the variety of Canadian grain products. Certainly the loss in sales over the past 12 months to the People's Republic of China is an indication of the kind of action the industry and the government must avoid.

• (1712)

If we look into the future there is no question that grain will be one of the major export dollar earners for Canada. In fact, for any of the major exporting countries grain will be one of the major export dollar earners. In my opinion, we must make a commitment to move the kind of grain and volume of grain required. The dollars invested in the grain industry will be numerous but the invested return on those dollars will be four or five times greater than the original investment. Time is of the essence and action must be taken now.

What should be done? The government has spent a large amount of money on numerous studies, but one which we consider to be especially good is the Hall commission report. I believe that action should be taken immediately on some of the recommendations in that report. We, as a party, had hoped that the prairie rail authority, the establishment of which was the cornerstone of the Hall commission report, would have been instituted. Had the prairie rail authority, rather than the Prairie Rail Action Committee which the government established, been instituted, it would have given an over-all co-ordinated approach to the grain transportation problems in the country. However, that has not taken place because of the reluctance of the transport minister to do anything in terms of that recommendation.

We feel that another recommendation of the Hall commission should have been adopted, that is, that the railways be compensated for the cost of moving grain by rail. Railways must also be responsible for adequate maintenance and upgrading of the lines now within the basic network, or which would be added to the basic network. The latest costing report by the Snavely commission is out and it shows that the cost of shipping grain under the Crowsnest pass rate totalled some $354 million. The railways' cost came to $175 million, the farmers' cost came to $115 million, and the federal government's cost came to $64 million. In view of those costs, I do not think anyone would suggest that the railways could devote much time and money to moving grain at the statutory rate. They lose money on every bushel that is shipped, and the more grain they move, the more they lose. Farmers and farm organizations and governments should not expect the situation to improve. In fact it will only get worse in the months and years to come. When you think of all the problems we have had this year, just think of what will happen in a few years from now if the government continues to adopt the same system.

We on this side of the House believe that the railways should be compensated for hauling grain. We also believe that farmers should continue to receive the benefits of the Crowsnest pass rate, and in return for the money received for hauling Canadian grain, the railways should upgrade western rail lines. We think expenditures should be made on parallel rail lines in certain areas in western Canada, mainly in the mountain areas. We also think that stop-off charges in most cases should be eliminated in moving grain in western Canada.

We believe that the principle of the off line elevators should be adopted as a realistic alternative in those areas of Western Canada that do not have rail service. We also believe that money should be spent in the area of ports and terminals. Expenditures should be made, for example, on dredging at Thunder Bay, on Canadian Wheat Board co ordinators for all grain going through Thunder Bay and on enabling the Canadian Wheat Board to play a more prominent role in the over-all co-ordination of grain movement on the prairies. We believe that all these recommendations should be adopted if we are going to move grain in the volumes mentioned by the minister, by us on this side, and by the NDP. So far the government has shown itself to be sloppy and lacklustre when it comes to most things, but especially in grain transportation.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, let me say that this year the country will lose hundreds of millions of dollars because we cannot fill our export commitments. That amount of money would buy many hopper cars. We will end up with large demurrage charges and with economic hardship for western farmers. We will also have a loss in foreign dollars to Canada because of losses in sales in western Canada. This is the legacy that the minister and the government will leave to the western grain farmer—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous support. Is there unanimous support?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I was just about to conclude. I said that the mismanagement by the government and the present Minister of Transport will be the government's legacy to the grain farmers in western Canada This is just one reason why, when the next election comes, we expect to see, if not all, certainly most of the seats in western Canada go to the PC party.

In conclusion, I would like to say that the problems are immense and it is most unfortunate that the man at the centre, the Minister of Transport, is not up to coping with these immense problems.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon. This is a timely motion, but I am surprised that it is the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), a member of the NDP, who should bring forth this motion and cry crocodile tears for farmers in western Canada, remembering that ten days or two weeks ago when a bill was before the House legislating the marine engineers back to work, whose strike was costing the farmers in the Wheat Board area some $10 million a day, the NDP voted against it. They voted against a bill which would mean money in the pockets of western farmers, despite the fact that the premier of the province of Saskatchewan, a New Democratic Party member, had sent a wire to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asking him to legislate the workers back to work.

● (1722)

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre was shedding crocodile tears today. When western farmers learn the way the New Democratic Party voted on that piece of legislation, they will have second thoughts about what those members are doing in Ottawa.

Previous members have supplied many statistics to the House, and I do not propose to go into all of them. The situation in western Canada is very serious. Country elevators are bulging at the seams. The stocks in the terminal elevators in Thunder Bay and on the west coast are low. The movement of grain by railways ranges from 50 per cent to 70 per cent capacity. We have received reports of a deferral in deliveries of some 1.5 million tonnes, cancellation of contracts, and lost sales. The producers in western Canada have lost hundreds of millions of dollars.

For the first time in four years China has purchased wheat from the United States amounting to some 2.5 million tonnes, grain which the farmers of western Canada could have and traditionally would have sold to China. The reason China looked to the United States was because Canada could not guarantee delivery. The figure of the loss to the prairie farmer is not available. If one spent time going through all the papers and listening to the speeches made by representatives of the Canadian Wheat Board and other organizations, one might determine the losses. The producers and members of parliament should know the facts.

On November 7 I asked the minister to make a statement on motions setting out in detail the situation as far as sales, deferrals, and lost sales was concerned. The minister declined to do so, saying that the Canadian Wheat Board had made these facts available to the producers, that it was the appropriate body, and that he did not feel it was up to him to give this report to parliament. It is his responsibility to do so, but of course he has been very busy. He wears three hats as Minister of Justice, Minister of Transport, and minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang). I do not envy him his job. Those three portfolios are more than any man can handle. It is vital that the Prime Minister take immediate steps to divide those responsibilities so that whoever takes charge of the various portfolios can do a proper job.

The grain handling and transportation system is important and vital to the economy not only of western Canada but of Canada as a whole. It brings in billions of dollars in foreign exchange each year. It has a multiplier effect of some 5.5 times the amount which comes into the country, and a domino effect which spurs the economy of the whole country. Yet we continue to lose millions and millions of dollars in sales. Why has this happened?

Why is the grain handling and transportation system in such chaos? One only has to read the report of the agricultural task force of 1969 which was commissioned by this government. At that time it indicated that there was no future in the grain trade. That was the essence of its report. The task force recommended getting rid of half the farm acreage and two out of three farmers. The government brought in the LIFT program and paid farmers not to grow grain, a form of stabilization program which did not make sense, and a small farm program, and other programs developed to do what the agricultural task force suggested. Later the Prime Minister told the farmers in western Canada to sell their own wheat. He said, "Sell your own wheat".

If we look back over the past few years, we find that there have been a series of studies and royal commissions. Many of their recommendations were ignored by the government. There was the Hall commission report, the Snavely commission, and others. The Hall commission report was an excellent one on the grain handling and transportation system in western Canada. Mr. Justice Hall made some excellent recommendations, one of which was the setting up of the Prairie Rail Authority. Of course that recommendation was ignored by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Instead he set up the Prairie Rail Action Committee.

The functions of the proposed Prairie Rail Authority were to examine lines which Mr. Justice Hall said were in doubt, listen to representations, and to monitor these lines to see whether they should remain. But the minister set up the Prairie Rail Action Committee which made a final report and a holus bolus decision to shut down lines, without study and input from the people concerned: the railways, the elevators, and the people on the lines. The chairman of PRAC has indicated that there was too much mileage in the basic network recommended by Mr. Hall. Mr. Hall was not even invited to meet with the minister in charge of the Wheat Board for almost a year. He would not have been invited if it had not been for the fact that members of the opposition were able to pass a resolution in the Standing Committee on Agriculture which requested Mr. Justice Hall to appear before it. Then the minister in charge of the Wheat Board decided to meet with Mr. Justice Hall.

Another of the recommendations of Mr. Justice Hall was the utilization of inland terminals to service primarily the port of Churchill, which I am sure the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) will speak about later, as well as the port of Prince Rupert. Now the minister is putting the elevators and government inland terminals up for sale with no explanation as to why they are to be sold. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), in a statement which he issued, said that selling the government elevators would save the sum of $8.3 million. This was at a time when the elevators at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon were being utilized to maximum capacity and were showing larger profits than ever before. The general manager of the inland terminal system said that he could not understand where the President of the Treasury Board got the figure of $8.3 million because the system, he said, would earn between $4 million and $4.5 million.

● (1732)

I was interested to read in the supplementary estimates which were tabled in this House a few days ago, at page 10 under vote 20a, that deducted from the estimates that are supplemental funds available from vote 45 amounting to $930,000, which amount is due to cancellations in respect of the planned sale of Canadian government grain elevators. On the one hand the President of the Treasury Board says that selling these elevators will save $8.3 million; on the other hand the estimates indicate a saving of $930,000. I do not understand it.

It is also interesting to note that we are doing away with the inland terminals in the west but building new terminals in eastern Canada. I received a news release the other day to the effect that four or five elevator companies or private concerns will receive either grants or loans to build terminals in eastern Canada. Two years ago this House passed estimates of $8 million to help build a terminal elevator sponsored by the Ontario co-operatives for the purpose of servicing an oil seeds plant that would be built alongside it in the Windsor area. The oil seeds plant was not viable unless the elevator was built; therefore the government provided $8 million to help and this was at a time when oil seeds plants in western Canada were having difficulty surviving.

The government is not interested in the viability of the agricultural industry in western Canada. They have decided to sell these inland terminals at a price which nobody knows. We do not know if there is a reserve bid or what will happen if they are not sold. We do not know what will happen to the employees.

Both the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board have said in the past that these elevators are underutilized. It is true that they are being used only at 20 per cent to 25 per cent of their capacity, but even so a profit has been made. They contend that the reason these elevators have been underutilized is due to the wheat pools and UGG, but it is interesting to note that the elevators in Moose Jaw and Saskatoon are being utilized to capacity now, mostly by the pools.

I do not believe that the Minister of Agriculture and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board have ever sat down and discussed the utilization of those elevators with either the railways or the farm organizations. They are all part of the system which the minister spoke about. Whoever buys the terminals will have to recover from the farmer the interest costs of the purchase price and the capital costs. It may be said that the capital costs should not be taken into consideration, but if the elevators are purchased by a company they must at least recover their investment as determined at the time of sale. These elevators were built in the 1920s.

The elevators should be utilized fully after consultation with the line company elevators, the railways and the farm organizations by supplying their services to the various grain companies at cost. By "cost" I mean the actual cost of operation and cost of keeping the elevators in good repair. The government cannot include capital costs because they have been written off many times over. If this were done, grain could be moved through the system faster to the export position, we would not be faced with bottlenecks on the west coast or with demurrage charges, and there would be a more even flow of grain.

The New Democratic Party has suggested that the government call upon the railways to add 4,000 hopper cars to their fleets. The government has already supplied some 8,000 hopper cars to the railways at no cost to them except that they must keep the hopper cars in good repair. It is my understanding that at the present time the railways are operating at between 50 per cent and 75 per cent capacity. I suggest that possibly we do not need any more hopper cars but instead we should take a look at the utilization of cars, whether they be hopper cars or boxcars.

Perhaps the Wheat Board should, if the minister will not, sit down with the elevator companies, the railways and the farm organizations to determine how they can best utilize the system. I do not believe such a thing has ever been done. There are many other things that could be done in the system through the co-operation of the various organizations and components. This has been the problem, a lack of cohesiveness.

If the grain could be delivered to the west coast or Thunder Bay on time it would save many millions of dollars in demurrage charges. The minister in answer to questions put to him regarding demurrage charges says, "Oh well, we never know when the boats are coming in." He talks as though the boats float out of the sky and land in the harbour. I suggest that these boats are at sea for some considerable time and are always in contact by radio. Contracts are made weeks and months in advance, and the Wheat Board and elevators know when these boats will be coming in.

In closing, I would say that we in Canada have the potential to produce a lot more grain. We have the potential to deliver that grain to export position if the various components of the system would only co-operate and if the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture would do their jobs. The markets are available and more will be available. There is a need for more and more food in the world. But if we continue to lose our reputation for delivering grain, then we will continue to lose the markets. The effects on the economy not only of western Canada but of the whole of Canada will be very drastic.

• (1742)

Mr. J. Larry Condon (Middlesex-London-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate briefly in this debate in order to tell the people of western Canada that we in the east and particularly in southwestern Ontario have concern for them and their problems.

The lament of gloom and doom is with us again in this debate, Mr. Speaker. For the last few years the people of Canada have been told how tough, how really bad, things are. I begin to wonder whether the politicians in this House and the media across the country understand the situation or ever ask people individually what the problems are.

I bring this point up very sincerely because I think one of the problems in Canada today is an illusion of things going bad. This illusion has been fostered by the opposition parties and in some cases by the media. They have been trying to spread the impression that things are very bad and that this is a very bad government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Condon: I hear a comment from a member of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Nystrom: No, no.

Mr. Condon: Well, I should like to comment on the New Democratic Party for a moment. This party is supposed to be backed by labour, is supposed to be leading labour and wants the responsibility that labour could give them after the next election. On two occasions recently, however, the party completely forgot about the people of Canada, once during the marine strike and once during the post office strike. I feel this fact should be brought to the attention of everybody in Canada. If I remember correctly, and I could be mistaken, two and a half or three years ago parliament was recalled to deal with an emergency concerning the grain handlers. On that occasion the NDP again stuck with one particular segment of the country and forgot about the rest of the country.

I will read today's motion just to clarify matters. It says:

That this House condemns the government for its failure:

(a) to require the railroads to add 4,000 hopper cars and 5,000 repaired boxcars to their grain fleet; and

(b) to give the Canadian Wheat Board total authority to co-ordinate all aspects of grain movement and any other authority necessary to protect and expand grain exports.

On the one hand the opposition are concerned about grain exports, yet on the other hand they will vote in the House against a motion designed to get products to the export market. This leaves me a little confused. I hope the people of Canada will note this, however, and not forget it at the next election.

I should like to turn now to the condemnation of government policy by the official opposition. In the past two or three years their practice seems to have been to condemn everything. The acquisition of hopper cars was mentioned briefly by the opposition but they maintain they would have done more. In the past the cabinet has recognized the deteriorating condition of the boxcar fleet and has purchased 8,000 hopper cars made up as follows: 2,000 in 1973; 4,000 in 1974 and in 1975, and 2,000 in 1977, at a cost of approximately $260 million. The opposition did not mention that nor the evident success of the program.

These cars have had a significant impact upon the movement of grain as the grain farmers well know. Some of the commitments made to the western farmers will not only help them but help the farmers of eastern Canada as well. I want to say to grain farmers in the west that we in the east are very concerned about them and their problems. When I return to my riding of Middlesex-London-Lambton and hear comments about the problems of the farmers in Canada, I know that although the eastern farmer understands the problems of the western farmer, sometimes there is a lack of communication between them. The farm organizations meet once or twice a year. I think some of the misunderstandings between east and west could be resolved in the farming community. They have much in common. They depend on the weather, they depend on the soil, they depend on the use of the proper fertilizer; they have a common denominator. All this could serve to unify Canada in the way we all want to see it unified.

The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) mentioned that over the last ten years this government has done nothing that will be beneficial to farmers in western Canada in the future. I disagree. I think that under the direction of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, more has been done than was done by anyone who previously held that position. It is very easy to say that more should be done, but I think credit should be given for accomplishments. There is only a certain amount of money available to all the ministries and the 28 or 30 cabinet ministers try hard to get their share of the funds.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why did they buy Pacific Petroleums Ltd., Nordair and all that?

Mr. Condon: Mr. Speaker, obviously I am getting to the core of the problem when I draw comments. Not only does the opposition inadequately condemn but they fail to put forward a platform that would be accepted by the electors.

An hon. Member: Just call the election.

Mr. Condon: They say "call the election", but I am sure when it is over they are going to say, "Why did you call the election?"

Mr. Stevens: Why wait? Let's go.

Mr. Condon: Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the opposition finance critic. He is probably one of the greatest opposition finance critics and I may say that I hope he keeps that position for some time. I notice he takes an interest in the farmers as well as all other areas that come within his purview. It is amazing that one man can know so much about everything yet never give credit to the government for anything it has done since he has been finance critic. With all this heckling from the opposition, Mr. Speaker, I think I must have hit the core of the problem. It may be a possibility that when the next speaker from the official opposition steps up to express his opinions on this particular motion, he may say at the beginning of his remarks: "You are doing a good job;" but I will not hold my breath. It does not matter if there are a lot of boxcars and a lot of special grain cars, without the tracks to run them on there is a problem. Neither does it matter what expenditure is made on hopper cars. In the recent past, while the Government of Canada has certainly gone ahead strongly on the rehabilitation of branch lines, the rehabilitation and upgrading of the system cannot be carried out until the size and extent of the basic network is known. A start has to be made some place, but it has been let go. I would agree partially with some of the criticism that has been voiced. It has been let go, and maybe for too long. But at this particular time we are moving ahead to make it better than before, and as well looking forward to the next 30 or 40 years.

• (1752)

If I may digress for a moment, we are not as aggressive as we should be. I think in the future Canada will be in a similar position to that of the OPEC nations. I can see in the future the importance of the food dollar with Canada being the centre of the food dollar chain because of Canada's great areas of agricultural land and also because of the productivity of the farmer. I was talking to a farmer the other day in my riding of Middlesex-London-Lambton, just outside of Strathroy, and I said to him: "You are producing so much now; how much could you produce if you had to?" He replied: "If we were pressed to increase our productivity, we could maybe increase it by 150 to 200 times and have the same product we have now." Obviously the farmers are producing; there is no question about that. The figure is 100 per cent in the last ten years. They are the type of people who would do so providing they are compensated in the proper coin of the realm. Sometimes I question whether they are but I think farmers are in an improving position.

Regarding branch line rehabilitation, almost 50 per cent of the existing prairie rail network can carry only boxcars. It is essential to upgrade the lines to be retained in order to gain full impact from the use of the heavier loading hopper cars. New hopper car acquisition must be co-ordinated with improvements to the system. Seventy million dollars has been allocated for this program for the next year.

To date the following improvements have been carried out. Two subdivisions have been upgraded to carry fully loaded hopper cars. Cut widening and track stabilization has been carried out on approximately nine subdivisions. This will help to reduce problems caused by snow drifting and soft tract in the spring and fall. Many of the lines concerned were built to very low standards in the first place and such work represents a permanent, lasting improvement. Because of these expenditures I think we are at the beginning of great things for the western farmer. I believe the farmers' production will increase in proportion to the facilities that we have available in Canada. This will help the export market.

Returning to the question of being critical of government and critical of the Canadian people, we do not realize what we can do until we have to. In the past Canadians have had fairly secure and good lives. Different government agencies have helped out in certain areas. We never get complaints about that, and why should we? We are trying to help people to be more productive, thus making Canada a better country and a leader in the world's export markets.

Permafrost research is being carried out on the Churchill line to establish ways and means to stabilize the subgrade. This section of line, which is unique in the world for its permafrost problems, will remain at boxcar standards until the early 1980s when stability problems will have been resolved. A party of permafrost experts from many parts of the world, including the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China, toured the lines this summer. We were seeking the best expert advice available.

Why did we do that? Canada is a complex country. It is a country of differing climates, attitudes and feelings. The most important thing we have in Canada is our land. We have a lot to learn yet about our land. I do not think enough research has been done in that respect. The government is doing more in the area of observation and spending money to make sure that these particular things are good not only for the present but for the next generation and the next century.

In summary, the rehabilitation program will eventually ensure that we have a basic network secure to the year 2000 that will not suffer from winter disruptions by reason of snow drifting. It will not suffer from soft track and drainage problems in the spring and fall. It will not suffer from rail buckling problems in the summer. It will be capable of carrying aluminum hopper cars unrestricted. In short, the rehabilitation program will greatly assist the utilization of the current rail car fleet.

We must recognize that there are problems. Certainly the government has worked very hard to solve them, and it will continue to work to solve these problems not only for this generation of grain farmers but for all grain farmers in the future. This government is thinking not only of today but of the future of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—POSSIBLE MISLEADING REPLY BY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, today in the House of Commons I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) a question with regard to the financing of the Petro-Can takeover. I do not want to go into the details of the question and cut into the time of those engaged in the allotted day. However, in his answer, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said: "Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has misinterpreted the provisions of the statute. There is no intention to bring in any amending legislation."

If that is the case, I have no question of privilege. If that is not the case, however, and I have not misinterpreted the statute, the minister may have misled the House, albeit inadvertently. Therefore, I wish to reserve my question of privilege so that I can go into the statute, because it is rather complicated.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is so ordered.

MR. STEVENS—MISLEADING REPLIES BY MINISTERS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which is somewhat similar to the question of privilege referred to by my colleague, but much more specific. On three occasions during the question period today, ministers of the Crown misled this House by indicating that a certain transaction had been completed, by either a subsidiary or a Crown corporation known as Petro-Can, and that there was no charge against the resources of the Government of Canada as a result of this transaction.

In reply to a specific question raised by my colleague from Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) stated: "Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear that this was a commercial transaction. It was negotiated and financed by normal commercial instrument. There are no government guarantees."

At another point, in response to a question put by my colleague from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), a similar comment was made. In response to a question put by myself to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), dealing specifically with the nature of this transaction, the Minister of Finance stated that "it is a commercial transaction... This was analysed by those who were loaning the money. They found that the assets being given against borrowing were very good indeed."

The act incorporating Petro-Can could not be more clear. They act as an agent of the Crown. In similar circumstances, the Export Development Corporation has legal opinions which state in that case that the Crown is bound by every obligation entered into by the Export Development Corporation.

We will be looking into this more fully. However, I would like to give Your Honour notice that we think we have a most substantial question of privilege to be raised at the earliest opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed that we take this as notice?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58(11)—ALLEGED SHORTCOMINGS IN MOVEMENT OF GRAIN FOR EXPORT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benjamin:

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

That this House condemns the government for its failure:

(a) to require the railroads to add 4,000 hopper cars and 5,000 repaired boxcars to their grain fleet; and

(b) to give the Canadian Wheat Board total authority to co-ordinate all aspects of grain movement and any other authority necessary to protect and expand grain exports.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, this debate on the NDP motion moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) is very important. It is an important topic for all members of the House, particularly those from western Canada. This debate has dealt with a number of circumstances and situations dating back not only to the four or five years I have been here, but many years beyond. That is as good an indication as any that the problems which plague the grain industry do not go away but recur, not only for the grain producer but for the grain industry as a whole.

Hon. members who took part in the debate referred to two issues that continually arise. I refer to labour unrest, strikes in various sectors and by various unions involved with or affecting the movement of grain. That has been referred to by most members who have spoken today. The second is natural disasters, such as extreme snowstorms which plagued a number of branch lines in western Canada last year and the torrential rains in British Columbia this fall which washed out the rail line to Prince Rupert. That will disrupt the movement of grain to that port, as well as shipping and the programs of the Wheat Board and grain companies. Those two situations continue to recur.

I thought either the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre or the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) might have recognized the tremendous progress made over the past eight to ten years in resolving some of the problems which cause difficulty to the grain farmer and grain producer. As usual, opposition members have totally disregarded the tremendous advances made over the years in solving these problems, learning what causes them and dealing effectively with them. Producers and organizations are more effectively involved in developing policies and solutions to many problems that have been with us for a long time.

● (2012)

Hon. members forget the years not so long ago of very poor sales and very poor prices, when there was no real policy on domestic feed grains. It is not so many years ago that damp barley in Saskatchewan next to the Alberta border was 25 cents or 30 cents a bushel; that was in the late 1960s. Next door in Provost and Camrose in Alberta, just across the border, it brought twice that much purely because of a regulation which had been in existence for years of not allowing trade in grain under the Wheat Board between the provinces. So we have seen the clearing away of an awful lot of that kind of pure nonsense which was certainly a hindrance to the development of normal trade and sales as far as grain was concerned.

Many hon. members opposite, whether the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, the member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) or others, if they were to go back into their constituencies, as I know they do, and travel up and down the grid roads and municipal roads of their constituencies and compare the situation today of their farmer friends, their grain producer friends they have known for years, as I can certainly do in my area, with the economic situation in those very farmyards ten or 15 years ago, I am certain they will find a great difference.

Life then was a great deal tougher than it is today. I suppose that in essence what I am saying is this, that while there are problems in the field of grain handling and transportation as well as in grain production generally, there are far fewer problems than there were. In the meantime, despite those problems the grain producer over the last several years has enjoyed an economic benefit which neither he nor any of us in this chamber in any political party might have believed possible five or six years ago. If hon. members from various rural constituencies would do what I suggested, drive through their own areas and look at some of the farm operations and compare them with conditions eight or ten years ago on smaller holdings, contrasting their net worth today with their net worth eight, ten or even 15 years ago, they will find that—

An hon. Member: What about inflation?

Mr. McIsaac: —despite inflation and even with an 85-cent dollar they are still immeasurably better off than their brothers who may be working in a small town as mechanics, or working in Calgary or other places. Although they are doing quite well in their own profession, the chap who has stayed home on the farm in Rosetown, Lisgar or any other farming community has also done quite well in the field of grain production over the last number of years, inflation notwithstanding.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw, I think it was, applied some interesting logic which to my mind was somewhat inconsistent with proceedings earlier in the day when there was great opposition from hon. members opposite to more Canadian ownership in the oil industry.

An hon. Member: Not at all.

Mr. McIsaac: That is the truth. There is no question about what was involved. They are not concerned or interested in Canadian ownership or government involvement in that area. Yet when it comes to the grain industry, which has traditionally been owned by Canadian farmer-producers, the opposition take a different stance. Years ago the Canadian government put up a number of storage elevators on the prairies, and it seems to me that there really is not very much need to continue inland terminal storage. Major companies which are Canadian-owned, farmer-owned, are engaged in the storage business, as I say, and it seems to me that in an industry which is highly government regulated in any event it makes sense for those elevators, whether they be in Moose Jaw, Saskatoon or elsewhere, to be under the control and jurisdiction of the grain companies themselves.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw was very concerned that the government should be getting out of that operation, yet earlier in the day the Conservative opposition was very concerned that the government should be getting into the energy business in an effort to ensure adequate supplies of energy at a reasonable price for prairie farmers.

An hon. Member: What price would you sell them for?

Mr. McIsaac: The price and the arrangements can certainly be negotiated, and I am sure both the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board have already held discussions with grain companies and other interested groups in that regard. It seems to me to make a great deal of sense to place those facilities under the jurisdiction of the grain companies themselves.

The motion before us condemns the government for its failure to require the railroads to add 4,000 hopper cars and 5,000 repaired boxcars to the grain fleet. It goes on to say the Wheat Board should be given total authority to co-ordinate all aspects of grain movement and any other authority necessary to protect and expand grain exports. I am sure that on reflection the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre might wish to modify some of the wording of that motion. I am sure he does not really want to bring all aspects of the industry under the Wheat Board. He might wish to extend the Board's authority, but I do not believe he would want to see the government or the Wheat Board or any other agency getting into the movement of grain from farm to farm, from farm to feed-lot, what might be termed community sales.

It seems to me that more attention should be paid to the progress which has been achieved in terms of grain movement and storage. This aspect has been touched on by the minister and by some other speakers. It is not only a matter of more boxcars or hopper cars. There are factors involved in grain movement quite aside from boxcars. I am sure most hon. members are aware of the advantages of the hopper cars over the old-fashioned boxcars. In my view, we could use still more but I would question the advisability of turning the money over to the railroads, as was suggested in the Hall commission report and again this afternoon by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, for the purchase of the cars and for the re-grading which must take place if many of these branch lines are to be able to carry those hopper cars. Repairing all those branch lines is a big job. There is a good deal of that going on now.

● (2022)

I am more than happy to see what is going on in my part of Saskatchewan, and I am sure other hon. members are too. On weekends when I go home, I see rebuilding, re-gravelling and new equipment. Going from Saskatoon to North Battleford I see 50 to 60 tanker or ballast cars hauling ballast out to those lines to get them rebuilt. That is a big program which will cost an estimated $700 million. That program will go on into the 1980s before it is completed. About $70 million is projected to be spent in the forthcoming fiscal year. Almost $100 million has been allocated or spent this year for new equipment and for upgrading.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) and the authors of the Hall report suggest that this government should merely turn over to the railroad companies those large chunks of cash necessary to make grain hauling an economic operation, and that we should ask the railroads to go out and buy boxcars and rebuild rail lines. When they make that suggestion, they are really not looking at the facts and the history of the last eight or ten years.

I remind hon. members of the last time the National Transportation Act was amended by a minority parliament in the 1960s. One of the solutions to the problem of upgrading rail lines at that time was thought to be a provision to allow the railroads to apply to abandon branch lines on which they were loosing money, which, of course, they did. They applied to abandon many lines. The solution decided upon by parliament, which met the approval of most parties in this House ten or 12 years ago, was to say that the treasury should pay by way of branch line subsidies to the railroads the amount of the loss which was estimated. What happened to that subsidy? It grew to be about $100 million in the past year. The money went to the railroads, but did it go to the rebuilding of branch lines? Of course it did not.

Mr. Benjamin: They took the money and ran.

Mr. McIsaac: My hon. friend says they took the money and ran. That is why I go back to the point I made earlier. I wonder why my hon. friend gets up, as he did today, and suggests to the government that we continue to pour in $100 million or $200 million a year with no strings attached.

Mr. Lang: Or more.

Mr. McIsaac: This is the suggestion I gathered the hon. member made in his remarks, as did other hon. members opposite. The experience of the last number of years demonstrates to me that the Hall commission made a mistake with that recommendation. I suggest the hon. member is wrong in endorsing it. We cannot give the money directly to the railroads with no strings attached and expect them to build boxcars and rail lines and haul grain. They have not done that in the past, and I am not sure what has changed which would ensure that they will do that in the future.

That is why I endorse the approach taken by the minister, his department and the government in terms of providing funds for specific purposes; for example, the purchase of hopper cars, rebuilding and upgrading equipment or rebuilding specific lines, either CN or CP. The money should be paid when the job is done. It seems to me that is a much better approach than to expect them, as we have in the past—and we were disappointed—to take that money and make the improvements all of us want to see in the grain handling network.

I mentioned that in the past that not only has the government purchased 8,000 hopper cars, but we have also rationalized the whole rail network. Hon. members will be aware that a problem and an issue for years and years has been the threat of rail and branch line abandonment. That threat has largely been removed and cleared away by the Hall recommendations and that commission's handling of that entire question. There are still some lines which are being dealt with by the Prairie Rail Action Committee.

Mr. Benjamin: That is the problem.

Mr. McIsaac: It will not be a problem much longer because that committee's report will be in by the end of the year, and we will finally know what its recommendations are. There will still be an opportunity for the hon. member, for me and for other hon. members to make recommendations to the minister in that respect if we do not like some of the committee's recommendations. Of those lines in doubt, which used to add up to 8,000 or 10,000 miles, today there are less than 2,000 miles of lines in doubt and they are still being dealt with by the Prairie Rail Action Committee. In that respect we have come a long way.

Hon. members referred to improvements in car utilization and in car turnaround. There has been improvement in this regard, and there are railroad figures to demonstrate that. We are moving much more today with the same number of cars and the same kind of equipment than we did in 1974. We are moving about 30 per cent more, but I am sure many hon. members of all parties will also agree that we could continue to improve that car turnaround and car utilization in order to get more mileage out of the equipment which we have in operation.

There have been improvements to the terminal elevator system. At Vancouver expansion is going forward. That in itself will assist a great deal. I think hon. members are aware that there are other bottlenecks associated with getting grain to Vancouver. These are being worked on, and gradually the list of difficulties over the last number of years has been narrowed down quite considerably.

I do not say we do not still have problems. I just say that the system has been substantially improved. I agree that there are improvements yet to be made, and they will be made as the various segments work together to try to resolve the problems they have. I do not think more hopper cars alone or additional and wider powers for the Wheat Board will completely resolve these problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Speaker, I was at the conclusion of my remarks. I was watching the clock, and I appreciate the fact that my time has expired. I will be interested to hear my hon. friend, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), and others. I hope they will put forward some concrete and specific suggestions.

Mr. Benjamin: We did. They are in the motion.

Mr. McIsaac: There were a couple of suggestions, impractical as they may be, from the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. We heard a few more today from the Tories, and they were a little more specific than usual. We did not hear just the usual doom and gloom which we have become used to hearing from them; they were a little more specific. They did not bring forward their leader's suggestion of a year or two ago to abolish the Wheat Board or to supplement it with some other export agency.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. McIsaac: The Tories were a little more specific today. I hope later hon. members opposite will get into the debate and spell out specific solutions to some of our problems.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the proceedings at this time, but I would like to ask the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) if he would be prepared to quote the reference in which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) allegedly said he would abolish the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the reference here with me, but I will be glad to check into that. It was a speech made in Manitoba. I may have erred in saying "abolish the Wheat Board", but the suggestion was that the Wheat Board be restricted or that additional agencies be added to take away power from the Wheat Board.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think it might be helpful to hon. members if I make it clear that what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) did say was just what the minister of agriculture of Alberta said the other day. He was in favour of letting many other people into the export selling business instead of letting that be the exclusive preserve of the Wheat Board. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is quite right that this is not quite the same as saying that you would abolish the Wheat Board, but it is really just a way of undermining and destroying the Wheat Board.

● (2032)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

Mr. Andre: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: A point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I recognize the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) on a point of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ANDRE—INACCURATE REPLY BY DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I give notice of a question of privilege similar to that raised earlier by my colleagues, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), with regard to an answer given to me this afternoon by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) which I believe to be inaccurate. I have just had a chance to peruse the blues and I should like to point out the inaccuracy of his reply that the purchase of Pacific Petroleums by Petro-Canada will not in any way draw on government resources. I would like an opportunity to gather evidence to pursue this later.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): This will be brought to the attention of Mr. Speaker tomorrow.

* * *

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58(11)—ALLEGED SHORTCOMINGS IN MOVEMENT OF GRAIN FOR EXPORT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benjamin:

That this House condemns the government for its failure:

(a) to require the railroads to add 4,000 hopper cars and 5,000 repaired boxcars to their grain fleet; and

(b) to give the Canadian Wheat Board total authority to co-ordinate all aspects of grain movement and any other authority necessary to protect and expand grain exports.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Just so I can mediate the dispute between the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac), let me say that by chance I happen to have the quotation of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

An hon. Member: Let us hear it.

Mr. Nystrom: The Leader of the Opposition is a real hazard to grain farmers in the west. I am quoting from the Valley Leader issue of August, 1977. In the riding of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), the Leader of the Opposition is quoted as having said:

—marketing boards to be set up only if industries request them.

—expansion of the Wheat Board's selling efforts, but permission given to private organizations to sell grain in competition with the Wheat Board.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: Do you want to emasculate the Wheat Board?

Mr. Nystrom: Further, the Leader of the Opposition said that private organizations working alongside the Wheat Board would stimulate the board's efforts, and so on. So here is the Leader of the Opposition saying we should be setting up private organizations to compete with the Wheat Board, which is the first step toward destroying and abolishing the Wheat Board altogether.

Mr. Andre: They cannot compete.

Mr. Nystrom: Continental Grain and other big grain multinationals in the country competing with the Wheat Board are like having an elephant dance with chickens in the chicken coop. The Wheat Board is a small organization compared with these huge multinationals. I think the position of the Leader of the Opposition is very clear: he would like to abolish the Wheat Board, to get rid of all these public organizations. For the same reason he was opposing today the takeover of the Pacific Petroleum Company by Petro-Canada.

An hon. Member: You should resign.

An hon. Member: So should you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: I see we have ruffled the feathers of the Conservative chicken before he even starts debating.

The motion before the House today is very clear, and I want to point this out in response to my friend, the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley. It says clearly we want to add 4,000 hopper cars and 5,000 repaired boxcars to the grain fleet, and we want the railways to pay for this. He was criticizing the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre by saying that that hon. member wanted to give a handout to the railways by subsidizing the railways for the real cost of hauling grain; in other words, covering the difference between the Crowsnest pass rate and the real cost. What we are saying is that if they do not haul the grain, they will not get the money. The quid pro quo here is that if they get the money compensating them for hauling grain, they should damn well pay for hopper cars, repair the boxcars and meet all the other costs required for hauling grain. Railroads have been given sufficient subsidies over the years so that if they are making a decent buck hauling grain, they should darn well pay for the hopper cars and pay for repairing the boxcars needed to haul that grain.

Some Liberal members have asked us why all those boxcars. I just want to quote an article in the Leader Post in which officials of the Wheat Board themselves give us an idea what to say in the motion which is before us. This is an article dated July 22, 1978. At page 22 we find the following:

> A spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board in Winnipeg said the federal government has been told an additional 4,000 new hopper cars plus 5,000 rehabilitated boxcars are required to meet present grain movement needs.

Here is the Wheat Board saying they need these additional cars. The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley thinks the opposition is often too negative. I agree that some of the speeches we heard from members on my right have been negative, but I think the speech made by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre on the motion was very positive. We have a lot of respect for the Wheat Board, we think they are doing an excellent job, but we also think they need a few more tools with which to do a better job. One is the availability to them of a larger grain-moving fleet. That is what our motion is saying.

If hon. members want to find some other data, look at some of the concerns expressed by some of the commissioners of the Wheat Board about our recent sale to China. As hon. members know, we sold around three million metric tonnes to China. One of the Wheat Board commissioners told my friend, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, that if our grain had been moving efficiently, we could have sold about four million tonnes to China; and if it had been moving really efficiently, we could have sold six million tonnes to China. That is a really big order. It means a lot, not just to farmers, but in terms of Canada's balance of payments, in terms of our dollar, our economic activity and our unemployment situation, and in terms of all kinds of other things that are needed in this country.

We are having such a problem trying to balance those payments that a small investment in boxcars alone would help go a long way toward making our economy more healthy. Commissioner F. Hetland said that if we had some 4,000 extra hopper cars, we would have a net increase in sales of grain worth $700 million a year. That would even help Newfoundland, even though that province does not produce grain, because it would give stimulus to the economy, it would strengthen our dollar, it would create more jobs, it would help our balance of trade, and it would make Canada a much more attractive place economically of which all of us could be proud.

Let me go on to quote the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board who was speaking at the same convention as that attended by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I am referring to Mr. Esmond Jarvis. On November 9 he said that in the last year we had some $350 million worth of lost sales because of the deferred sales. They turned out to be a real loss to the Canadian economy, according to the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board.

I think the motion before us today is a very sound one, a very positive and constructive motion. I notice the minister in charge of the Wheat Board himself is waffling on this. He said, if I remember correctly, that if this were last year, if we did not have the cutbacks that the heavies in the cabinet, such as the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde), had forced on the government, perhaps we would have already put in an order for more hopper cars. But because we have restraint in the government, the minister cannot make that argument forcefully enough at the cabinet table. So I am not sure precisely where the minister stands. He said clearly that there were two arguments. One is: yes, we need more hopper cars; the other argument is: no, we do not need them at this time.

In terms of the second part of the motion which gives to the Wheat Board total authority to co-ordinate grain movement in our country, our party is clear on this. We think all grains should be co-ordinated by one grains board which should have authority on behalf of the farmer. We are talking here about total authority. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board said, if I remember correctly, that he thinks the Wheat Board could have that authority now under the legislation which is being passed through parliament. The minister is a lawyer and it seems strange to hear him say he thinks it might have that power. I should like to hear from him whether or not he really believes it does have that power, and if it does, is he willing to use it? Is he willing to give the Wheat Board power to co-ordinate grain movement in the country, which I know some of the commissioners want?

Those are the two main thrusts of the motion before us today. Now I want to present some arguments as to why I think this House should strongly endorse the position taken by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. I sincerely believe that the CPR in particular, and the railways in general, are on strike against Canadian farmers. Basically they are on strike because they want more money to haul grain. What they are receiving now is the amount guaranteed by the Crow rate. American companies receive approximately three or four times as much for hauling the same bushel of grain over an equivalent distance. This makes our railways very envious, so they continue to run down the service. They deplete services and do not repair boxcars. They put less and less money into the system until the government perhaps bails them out totally and completely. If that is not a strike against Canadian farmers, I do not know what a strike is.

● (2042)

We should use all the available precedents for legislating workers back to work, be they grain handlers, postal workers or any other group. We should legislate the CPR back to work. Under section 262 of the Railway Act, the government has the power to legislate the railways in this country back to work.

I want to illustrate what I really mean when I talk about the railways striking. Through its generosity, the government of Canada in the last few years has purchased 8,000 hopper cars to move farmers' grain. Because of that, many people think that Canada has more grain moving capacity now than prior to the purchase. Back in 1972 the CNR and CPR had 26,000 boxcars moving grain in Canada. In 1978 the number of boxcars was reduced to 12,800. That is a loss of approximately 13,200 boxcars. If one combines the 8,000 hopper cars and the 12,800 boxcars, one will find that Canada's grain moving capacity is less than it was before the hopper cars were purchased. Each hopper car is equivalent to 1.5 boxcars. Thus, 8,000 hopper cars equals approximately 12,000 boxcars. If that is added to the 12,800 boxcars which the railways have presently, one will find that there are 1,200 boxcars less than there were in 1972.

Mr. Lalonde: There was more efficiency.

Mr. Nystrom: If it was for efficiency, I would be very, very pleased. I should like to tell the minister in charge of Canadian unity what he means by efficiency. The National Farmers Union, good friends of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, had an operation last year which was called "Car Wars" or "Sky Spy". In operation "Sky Spy", they flew over approximately 6,000 miles of railway track in Canada to spy on the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board to see what he was doing about moving grain. They saw the efficiency which the minister in charge of the unity question is so concerned about. They found that hundreds of cars were sitting at delivery points for over a month after being filled but before being moved to the terminal. That is not efficiency. Also they found that thousands of CN and CP cars—I am not talking about hopper cars—had been on the sidings with "bad orders" forms, some as old as 1974.

I should like to refer to part of a brief which was released by the National Farmers Union a couple of months ago and reads as follows:

> Our members found thousands of boxcars sitting on sidings or on abandoned lines with "bad order" forms on them. The state of disrepair was assessed by qualified railway engineers and in a substantial number of cases the cars have minimal damage. We have found bad orders forms dating from 1974. That means boxcars have been sitting idle for four years when a small investment on repairs could have put them back into service. Instead they are left abandoned and some cars have been badly vandalized. We have seen a bad order form dated 1975 which indicates the cars merely needed cleaning.

Further on in the brief it continues:

> As you already know, we have found CN and CP boxcars in the U.S. hauling American grain. We found, on average, three Canadian cars for every mile of American track flown over. Recently 20 CN hopper cars were seen as far south as Fort Pierre in South Dakota close to the Nebraska border. CP is shipping American grain through Canada on the backaul to help American grain companies get their shipments through to the U.S. west coast ports.

I could refer repeatedly to the study made by the National Farmers Union.

Mr. Lang: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member make it clear that none of these cars were government purchased hopper cars, and that any hopper car found in the United States may very well have carried Canadian products to the American market, and therefore were perhaps slowly on their way back.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Slowly is the correct word.

Mr. Lang: It was as a result of taking Canadian products to the American market that they were there.

Mr. Nystrom: Slow like molasses, and as an old railroader I am sure Mr. Speaker understands what I mean. I was not referring to government hopper cars. I was referring to hopper cars owned by the railways.

Mr. Benjamin: They ship American grain to Canada in Canadian cars.

Mr. Nystrom: Clearly the railways have gone on strike against ordinary Canadians and farmers. They are not repairing their boxcars, and they are being very inefficient about the manner in which cars are allocated. They are going on strike because the rail sectors of the CPR and CNR are not paying very much in terms of profit, and they do not believe they are receiving enough for handling grain. As I said before, the railways in the United States receive three or four times as much for hauling a bushel of grain over the same number of miles.

We should legislate them back to work. We believe this can be done under the Railway Act, as the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) and I already have said. If the minister legislates them back to work, I guarantee the support of my party. They should be made to allocate a certain amount of their investment money and cash reserves to purchase hopper cars and to purchase and repair boxcars in order to move grain in the country.

The minister went part way this afternoon by indicating he will ensure that the CPR will repair its cars. I hope he really means that. I hope he uses a heavy fist with the CPR. I hope this is not just rhetoric but that he really means it.

As we have indicated in our motion, 1,000 boxcars are not good enough. Approximately 5,000 in this country require repair. The situation is serious. Some people have asked, "What does repairing a few boxcars really mean? Is the problem not really the production of grain, the over-production of it and the acquisition of more markets?" I should like to refer to my riding and the stockpile of grain in Canada.

Last week a little survey was conducted in my constituency, and we found that most of the elevators were plugged, there is a shortage of boxcars, and there is a lot of concern, as I am sure is the case in the Marquette constituency of Manitoba, about the situation because most of the grain goes through to Thunder Bay. Despite the fact the elevators are plugged, we have found out that there is space in Thunder Bay. That does not make very much sense.

One must keep in mind that in approximately three or four weeks the Thunder Bay route will be frozen due to weather conditions; if we do not move the grain to the terminals in Thunder Bay very quickly, it will be stuck for the winter; and that there are tremendous stockpiles of grain in the country. This year Canada will sell approximately 21 million tonnes of grain. Just a few years ago our biggest sales were 21.6 million tonnes of grain. The most recent estimates of the farm stocks by the Canadian Wheat Board show that we will sell this year 20.4 million tonnes of wheat, 3.3 tonnes of Durum, 1.8 million tonnes of oats, 8.7 million tonnes of barley, .63 million tonnes of rye, .65 million tonnes of flax and 3.7 million tonnes of rape, a total of 39.3 million tonnes. Because of the lack of grain handling facilities we are capable of handling only 21 million tonnes, approximately 50 per cent of the farm stocks.

● (2052)

The Wheat Board talks about the lack of boxcars and hopper cars and the damage it is causing to the Canadian economy. Not until 1985 are we expected to be capable of handling 35 million tonnes a year. This indicates the urgency of the debate before us today and, it is why we must insist that railways repair their boxcars and begin purchasing hopper cars and boxcars from their own funds.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may proceed if he has the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: I shall be finished, Mr. Speaker, in three or four minutes. I would like to remind the House that we have a deficit in our balance of payments this year of $4,150 million. If it was not for the tremendous surplus in wheat and barley sales, that deficit would be well over $6 billion because our sales last year were $2,273 million in those two grains. As Commissioner Hetland said, if we had 4,000 more hopper cars we would have another $700 million in grain sales every year. It is important that this House express very strongly to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the railroads, the fact that we are serious about wanting them to repair their boxcars and about having them put more hopper cars on the rails for the farmers of this country.

There is a lot of concern in Saskatchewan that the off-board grain is eroding the superiority of the Canadian Wheat Board and hurting the quota system which is the basis by which farmers have an equal shot at hauling grain to the elevators. Many spokesmen in the west, such as the commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board and the head of the UGG, are concerned about this very thing. In fact, the only people who are not concerned about the off-board grain situation are the spokesmen for the Conservative party and for Cargill. I have a quote here from Cargill grain about the fact that the Wheat Board is getting tougher in off-board grain and, that they are getting very defensive because they are saying it will destroy competition in the wheat market.

I know that members of the Conservative party are the apologists for the open market, firms like Cargill and Continental. They want to abolish as well the Canadian Wheat Board. That party is the only party in this House that has really come clean and said that they would definitely like to do all these things. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board wants to be half pregnant because sometimes he is on the good side and, sometimes he is on the bad side, but you really never know where he stands. I admire the Conservative party for standing clearly on the side of firms like the Richardson Grain Exchange and the private grain enterprise in this country and for adopting the policies of the nineteenth century. In fact, the hon. member for Vegreville has boasted about barley on the open market and how great the situation is.

The Canadian livestock feed board in its weekly feed grain market report for the week ending October 25, says that the per tonne price of off-board barley was $75.80. If you look at Wheat Board barley, the price was $97.10, substantially higher. If all grain was sold through the Canadian Wheat Board, all Canadian farmers would get a much better price for their barley. However, this is not the philosophy of the Conservative party; their philosophy is to make sure that the grain is sold so that the speculators benefit and be damned the price the poor farmer gets.

I can recall the stories of my father and grandfather when the Canadian Wheat Board was formed in 1935. Then the price of a bushel of wheat was only a few pennies, but when it was sold in the spring, after the boys in the grain exchange had finished with it, it was being sold at well over $1 a bushel. They were overcharging the consumers, other nations around the world, and at the same time were parasites, living off the backs of farmers.

Those are the issues confronting us in this debate today. I am very pleased that the Conservative party has taken a clear position, as I said, in its support of the policies of the 19th century. I just hope that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board will get off the fence or fall off on the side of the Wheat Board, giving it more strength; and also that he will get really tough with the railways, as he is being with some of the working people in this country, so that they will do a job on behalf of the farmers and on behalf of each and every Canadian.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) is asking me what a bushel of grain looks like. Well, of course no grain is grown in the area of Quebec where I come from and also there is no railway system going through my area, but I can assure him however that the well-being of western farmers and the fact that the greatest possible number of bushels of grains are being moved on Canadian systems and exported is a blessing for the whole economy of this country as much for the constituents of my riding as the constituents of his riding.

● (2102)

Mr. Speaker, after listening today to the speeches made by hon. members on the other side of the House, an unaware listener could be led to believe that there is not an ounce of grain being moved at this time on railway systems in western Canada. Speeches like that, Mr. Speaker, can mislead not only this House but also all Canadians. Of course there are problems in the movement of grain, and we are aware of that; members must not only mention those problems but they should also be aware that this year as in past years more than 700 million bushels will be moved on those systems which members of the opposition consider inefficient and also as being the universal cause of the failure of grain transportation in Canada. There is no failure, Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary, there is a steady increase in the potential of that system. The motion introduced by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is important, and I believe it is essential to discuss the movement of grain as often as possible both in this House and other forums in Canada because it is one of the most important elements of the Canadian economy. And, Mr. Speaker, all Canadians must be aware that grain export is the major factor allowing us to maintain a steady balance of payments in Canada.

To improve the system, the mover asks or demands that railways, and I quote:

—add 4,000 hoppers cars and 5,000 repaired boxcars to their grain fleet;—

He also adds that the Canadian Wheat Board should have more authority. That might be a good suggestion, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member carefully omitted to say what his request means in terms of dollars. He also omitted to put a timeframe on his request. And why did he avoid, Mr. Speaker, setting this timetable and quantifying the amount of money his demand can represent? Simply because the New Democratic Party is most likely a party which will never exercize the responsibility of taking real decisions in this country.

The other solution put forth by the New Democratic Party is to nationalize the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. Nystrom: It is a very good idea.

Mr. Lapointe: I confess that I feel some sympathy for this suggestion and that it may appear to be rather appealing solution in areas of Canada where the railway companies, either Canadian National or Canadian Pacific, have tried not to provide the necessary service for Canadians. However, I think that the middle of the way solution put forth by this government and those which preceded it and which consists in maintaining the powerful state owned network besides a privately owned network is probably the best solution. It is also important aggressively and efficiently with private networks such as Canadian Pacific in such a way that the latter will be compelled to follow the same course and provide the best possible service to the western farmers as well as all Canadians in the field of commodities transportation.

On the Tory side, Mr. Speaker, we have my colleague for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who naturally deals very seriously with the issue of grain movement as with all the issues in the field of transportation in Canada, with great sincerity I am sure of it. He rightfully tries to find which solutions would be best to provide the best possible service to Canadians, be it in the field of grain movement or in other fields.

However the speeches delivered by my Progressive Conservative friends contain the same basic and unfortunately regular inconsistency of that party. On one hand they ask for additional or increased public funds to enable the railways to purchase their own hopper cars or improve their lines and they say to the government: "Give more money to the railway companies". However, on the other hand, for the sake of the sacrosanct free enterprise and competition they say: "Mind your own business, we have enough state intervention." Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that the inconsistency is apparent and with such a base for discussion, we cannot go very far.

Having briefly dealt with the comments of my colleagues opposite, let us see what the government has done and continues to do to improve the grain transport system. It is appropriate, Mr. Speaker, to remind the House that in 1973 the government purchased 2,000 hopper cars. In 1974-75 we added 4,000 new hopper cars and in 1977 we added another 2,000. In other words, Mr. Speaker, over the last five years the government gave to the grain transport system 8,000 hopper cars at an approximate cost of $260 million, and this is only one of many sides of the governmental action in this field.

Another aspect which is worth mentioning is the upgrading of rails. As the minister said this afternoon, and this was repeated by some of colleagues, it is good to know that last year the government invested $100 million to upgrade rails and that it plans to invest $70 million in similar works next year. Right now, Mr. Speaker, 50 per cent of the rail system in western Canada cannot accommodate these new hopper cars because they are too heavy for the existing rails. So, through this railroad upgrading program in which we already have invested $170 million and in which we have undertaken to invest more than $500 million in the coming years, I believe the improvement of the system will enable us to reach, in years to come, the target of one billion bushels of grain moved over that network, objective set for 1985, I think. It should be achieved easily.

Mr. Speaker, speaking now of another matter, namely increased storage of grains, I should like to quote the excellent reply given by my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), to the hon. member for Vegreville in the House last Thursday November 9; I quote from the Hansard for that day, on page 997. The parliamentary secretary was answering the hon. member for Vegreville. After having summed up our interventions with regard to hopper cars, our interventions in the field of railway line improvements, the parliamentary secretary said, and I quote:

> The federal government has also contributed to the repair costs of several thousand box cars that will increase our capacity in the short term. Recent improvements to branch lines to Churchill under the prairies branch lines renovation program have also effectively increased our grain exportation capacity through that port.
>
> We are also increasing the capacity of grain terminals in Canada. Under the storage improvement program of the Canadian Wheat Board, the storage capacity should improve by 40 per cent in Vancouver. Half of the storage capacity increase of 5.8 million tons must be done before the coming winter. The rest will be completed by the end of next year.

I should like to quote another paragraph where the parliamentary secretary says, as follow:

> Major improvements are being made to increase our present and future export capacity.

● (2112)

> We are now studying all possible means to transport a maximum quantity of grain through the St. Lawrence Seaway before its closing, including the extension of operating hours whenever possible. But we do not deal only with those urgent problems, Mr. Speaker, we are also concerned by problems that will be faced in the long term by our grain transportation and hauling system. We commissioned an inquiry, the Hall commission, on complex social and economic factors related to that system. We should soon establish in the prairies a comprehensive basic branch line system that will be operated at least until the year 2000.

Mr. Speaker, an hon. member, the one for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) I think, was telling this afternoon that the grain hauling system out west had been studied to death. Yet it is surprising to note that at the first opportunity opposition members do not hesitate to refer to findings of the Hall commission to state that the government has not been up to its commitments, etc., whereas since the tabling of the commission's major recommendations the government has been busy acting with great celerity to protect immediately, and until the year 2000, all the lines recommended by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, those which should be part of the basic network of the prairie railway. Also concerning a second category of lines to be studied, the government has acted very rapidly to protect the 2,344 miles of lines which were categorized as "uncertain" and it is expected that by the end of 1980 a decision will be made about those lines. It means, Mr. Speaker, that is in less than a year and a half from now western farmers and all users of the railway service of this region will be able to count on an improved system serviceable all year round.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members readily refer to the conclusions of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall's report, and in the past they used to refer also to another report, namely the Snavely Commission report. But by sheer accident, members opposite have refrained from referring to it because in its final report the Snavely commission states that Canadian products are arriving on export markets faster and in better condition than they have since many years. Of course, by all means our hon. friends opposite will avoid publicizing those positions, those extremely positive conclusions by the Snavely commission. Furthermore, the report indicates that the financial help of the federal government contributed to improve considerably the transportation system since the advisers of the Board have begun studying the cost structure in 1974.

The Snavely report also emphasizes that in 1947 only 9 per cent of grain cars were modern hopper cars whereas in 1977 the proportion was 30 per cent. In addition, more efficient planning enabled us to make better use of the cars since in 1977 an ordinary car made 3.3 more trips than in 1974. This shows that improvements to the system combined with the use of more powerful engines and better tracks reduced by one third the total number of cars which were necessary to transport the grain last year. The report also indicates a marked increase in grain markets in the ports of Vancouver and Churchill. In 1977, 34 per cent of the export business was made in Vancouver compared to 27 per cent in 1974. In Churchill, the export volume increased by 62 per cent between 1974 and 1977 and 3.6 per cent of the total of Canadian exports were handled there last year. Of course, all those conclusions are ignored by our colleagues opposite. And the name of the report, the name Snavely, has totally disappeared from their vocabulary since the publication of this document.

My colleague from Regina-Lake Centre says that Mr. Snavely is wrong, Mr. Speaker. I cannot, in tonight's debate, go into a long discussion with him on that issue, but I would be very happy to sit down with him and do so. Together we could review Mr. Snavely's conclusions which show, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the variable costs of grain transport have risen from $247.1 million to $355.9 million in three years, which means an increase of only 13 per cent per ton. Producers' costs have also gone from $89.7 million to $114.8 million, a comparable increase. So, Mr. Speaker, there are not only negative sides to grain transport, and I think that the government can be proud of the action it has taken in this sector and of the improvements in rolling stock, ways and volume of grain export.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to the importance of this issue for all Canadians. The importance that is recognized by this House and by the government points to one of the most significant facets of our Canadian federation. As I said, grain is one of the key positive factors in our Canadian economy, and grain exports account for some degree of equilibrium in our balance of payments. Quite understandably hon. members from the western provinces and governments of those grain producing provinces as well as farmers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are trying all they can to improve the movement of grain, their potential for larger and larger crops and more and better conditions for maximum revenues. It is quite understandable these concerns are expressed here at the national government level, just as the regional concerns of another province I am more familiar with, the province of Quebec, because we from Quebec have legitimate demands within this federation the same way as the western provinces, the Maritimes or British Columbia. Of course, we all have very strong regional concerns and therein lies the wisdom of our parliamentary system, under which we have a strong central government ensuring some balance between regional interests and a fair redistribution of wealth and interests between the various parts of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this important debate opened today by the motion put forward by my friend the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre gives me an opportunity to conclude on that vision of our country that is most important, namely the meeting of regional interests in central parliament where, side by side, whether opposition of government members, we have a duty to try and give Canadians across the country the best possible service, the fairest redistribution of wealth, and I rest assured that the hon. member put the motion forward in the best of spirits, and I would like to commend him for having shown such a spirit of generosity toward all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the chance to speak on the problems of the western grain industry made possible through the motion put by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) regarding hopper cars provided by the Wheat Board. Being an ex-station agent he is no doubt an expert in this field. This is a problem we have had for a long time. In the issue of the Western Producer for October 26 the headline is: "Railways, Government blame each other for Grain Shortfalls". The article reads:

> Railway company spokesmen and government officials pointed accusing fingers at one another when short-falls in the grain handling system were discussed at the Canada Grains Council semi-annual meeting here Oct. 18.
>
> Spokesmen for Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways said they had sufficient capacity to move grain to export shipping positions if winter shipping surges were spread out over a 300-day shipping season.

I think this is of interest whatever private industry and nationalized industry have to say; they both get together when discussing grain at this time. On a more local level, I remember meeting a grain area supervisor in my riding a few years ago. I asked him, "How is the grain business?" He answered, "When the cars arrive and they are one week late—they are supposed to come on a Tuesday and they arrive on a Thursday—well, we eventually get things done, but sometimes it is rather difficult." We do not know whether the answer lies in more expenditures by the government out of treasury to buy hopper cars. We are not even sure they are being used to full advantage, even when they are under the control of the Wheat Board or the railroads, but this provides them with an opportunity to discuss their problems.

There is no doubt about the seriousness of the transportation problem, at least from an export point of view and the point of view of the good of the Canadian economy. Although sales are good, probably surprisingly good, the farmers have not been able to capitalize on the saleability of their products so that many elevators are congested. While we talk about record grain movement, in some grades such as No. 3 Utility wheat and No. 3 Red there has been little movement, at least in my riding, and the barley producers have been left with little opportunity to sell their grain unless it is to the local feed mill operator. There is practically nothing moving through the board.

It is small wonder that the farmer finds the movement of his grain curtailed or controlled by the Wheat Board. These grain handling companies are often farmer owned, but the farmer finds himself isolated and cut off from the management, all of whom issue contradictory statements and seem to be taking positions antagonistic to what he regards as his best interests. I would like to say that with this conflict of interest coming up, I am glad to have my chance of speaking as a permit holder. Grain is grown by some 200,000 permit holders. It is handled by a monopolistic Wheat Board supposedly working in the farmers' interest and by the railroads and other parts of the transportation system. In many cases the movement of grain seems stymied. Of course, there are government regulations covering the Wheat Board, the railways and the grains commission. Many of these seem to have the effect of limiting the movement of the farmers' grain.

• (2122)

In a general way, I am not in favour of the government of Canada purchasing hopper cars for the use of the railway and the grain-handling system, at least without considerable strings attached. As a starter, hopper cars may have seemed a more feasible method of transporting grain than boxcars.

Why are hopper cars not purchased by the railways directly, or even better, by the grain handling companies? Railways purchase their own rolling stock. I understand the oil companies have found it to their advantage to own, manage and route their own cars. If the grain handling companies were charged with moving the grain under their jurisdiction, with the Wheat Board giving them a target to move, they would do better than at present. This possibility deserves to be carefully investigated.

Much better use apparently is made of cars as far as oil companies are concerned when they are owned or at least leased by the oil company. Unfortunately, the manufacture of hopper cars is being directed by the government into areas of high unemployment, and to some extent they represent an unemployment measure rather than their primary purpose of providing service to the western grain producer.

The western grain transportation system is approaching the limit of chaos and recriminations fly thick and fast. The Wheat Board has implied that the railroads are not pulling their weight and in this regard, for once, the railroads have fought back. Both the privately owned CPR and the publicly owned CNR say that their facilities are not being used in a proper manner and that they could haul much more grain if orders were placed in a rational way. Merely increasing the number of hopper cars to sit around deserted sidings or hidden away in isolated gravel spurs is not a particularly good way of moving the grain.

Either the railroads or the grain handling companies should provide the hopper cars or other means of transportation necessary for the movement of grain. Merely the government producing hopper cars is not enough. If the government does pay for the building of those cars, they should be leased to the railways. I understand there is no assessment as to the cost of these hopper cars and no method to provide for their upkeep.

Recently in my constituency there was a shortage of boxcars or hopper cars. It was found they were available, but there were no work crews and no power to haul the cars because of cutbacks and other activities of the railroads which had sopped up their working force. In my constituency, the CNR is the only railway of any consequence.

Obviously one of the important things to consider is who should supply the hopper cars, who should pay their initial cost and who should control them. Should it be the Wheat Board or the grain handling companies? Should producers have the right to order cars? Under the new order of the past few weeks, it seems that right will be taken away from producers or at least be restricted. That right seems to be challenged by the Wheat Board. The producers have fought for these rights over the years. They have fought to order their own cars. At the moment, this right is being jeopardized. It is being challenged by the Wheat Board on the basis that it must control the movement of grain. This is an important principle to consider.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

In other words, should we become more and more bureaucratic, controlling the movement of grain in a bureaucratic way, which the NDP would like, or attempt to free it in order to provide a degree of competition that does not seem to prevail at the moment?

Overriding all that, of course, is the problem of the Crowsnest rates. It is now generally realized that it is not practical for the railroads to haul grain at the rates set out in the Crow rates and maintain a viable rail operation. For many years the railways have complained they have not been making money. It seems that the Crowsnest rates were not unreasonable until the last three or four years. While their costs increased, their efficiency increased as well. Therefore, four or five years ago they were still in the black with regard to hauling grain.

Railways are becoming an increasingly expensive operation. Wage structures have continued to rise along with those in other parts of industry. The price of grain at the moment is low. Indeed, in many respects it approaches the low levels of the depression years. It is perhaps fair to say that a grain grower with a section of land might gross $30,000 a year in returns and, after his expenses and a modest return to himself and his living costs are taken out, there is certainly not much left. Can he afford to have his grain hauled down the track by a railroad whose wage structure is much greater than his own? Can he afford to have his grain hauled down the Great Lakes by engineers who earn much more than he would hope to make out of his crop? This gives us considerable food for thought. I would calculate that if present prices in the grain industry are projected, they would probably return something like $3 to $4 an hour for a farmer's work. It certainly puts him in at the lower end of the scale.

The question arises, can the farmer reduce his dependency on the grain handling system and can he profitably take over some of the grain handling transportation that has hitherto been reserved for the railroads? The grain handling system was built for the horse and wagon and elevator points were situated accordingly. But grain hauls of 40 to 50 miles are now common, and as roads improve, highways open up and farms get bigger, transportation is made available. It certainly seems possible that farmers who invest $50,000 or $60,000 in a combine or a tractor would not be able to invest similar prices in a truck to haul their grain to more central gathering points. A haul of 50 or 60 miles may not seem much when the grain is destined for Thunder Bay, a distance of 700 to 800 miles. However, if a producer lives on a branch line, a haul of 50 to 60 miles may well mean that the grain, from an economic point of view, has been hauled half way to Thunder Bay. The farmer's costs may not have been so much out of line with what it costs the railway to maintain a short branch and the attendant large number of people involved in merely standby operations to maintain services.

Construction in the grain transportation system is having some important effects. It seems that with longer hauls by farmers and reduced quotas they have to turn more and more to crops that produce a large amount of money per bushel. Therefore, in areas that are suitable, special crops are receiving more and more attention. The growing of oats has practically ceased, except for local use, as they are pretty well defeated by the high cost of tranportation. Barley is fast approaching the same point and there may well be a reduction in the amount of barley produced if this congestion increases or, conversely, barley will be fed at a local level. We may also be faced with increased pork production.

I now wish to refer to the off-board quota. This has become a bone of contention. In fact, if there had not been off-board quotas, many farmers in my area would have delivered no wheat or barley this past season. For instance, we have quotas of, say, five bushels for wheat. But five bushels of No. 1 and five bushels of utility wheat mean a great deal of difference in dollars, because No. 1 brings twice the amount per acre as No. 3 utility, yet for many farmers there was only No. 3 utility wheat last year. Again this year most of the crop seems to be No. 3 red or No. 3 utility. In fact, there was practically no movement of No. 3 utility out of my riding last year. The Wheat Board could not seem to find any sales for it, they said. Without off-board quotas, it does not seem likely any would have moved.

● (2132)

Perhaps this situation will change but the Wheat Board will have to show that it can move the grain. As I understand it, the Montreal feed market is the place where most of the off-board grain is going, so presumably if there are no off-board quotas Wheat Board sales to that market would increase. But there feed grains are in competition with American corn, and in many practical ways it is easier to obtain American corn in the eastern market than western feed grains. A good many farmers have been able to sell grain whereas without the off-board quotas they would have had no market whatsoever and would have been reduced to selling at the local level if they could find any buyers.

It is some years since there has been a glut of feed grains on the prairies, and since then agriculture has changed a lot. There seems less possibility of a greater food-producing industry developing than was the case seven or eight years ago. There are fewer people on the farms and they are not of an age group to be able to involve themselves in the feeding of pigs, always the main meat raised when there is a surplus of feed grains. So the problem becomes relatively greater than it was eight or ten years ago.

Then what about the selling of No. 3 red under the quota system? I am thinking particularly of the Parkland area. It seems likely that with the change in the grading system we shall rarely produce anything more than No. 3 red wheat, at least half of the time anyway. It seems the best the farmers in the Parkland area can get is No. 2 red; with the first shower it is down to No. 3 red and with the second shower it is into the No. 3 utility grade.

The Wheat Board does not seem to be able to move this grain and perhaps I can understand some of the reasons. After all, No. 1 and No. 2 grades bring much more in the way of price, and it costs no more to move than a bushel of No. 3 utility. As they bring a dollar or two more a bushel, I can understand the desire of the board to move them. But is this the fairest way of doing things? Should the board be put in the position where it must ration available sales? And what about the barley growers? They are even further down the ladder than the utility wheat people because their grain is less saleable. These are some of the problems which have to be addressed, particularly in the northern parts of the prairie wheat growing area.

I would like to end with one problem of the grain industry which should be set at rest once and for all, and it is this. Does the government intend to put into effect the restricted hours of work for elevator agents? The minister in charge of the Wheat Board is quoted in the Winnipeg papers as telling the Manitoba Wheat Pool that there will be an indefinite suspension of the so-called 40 and eight hours of work by country elevator agents. I think this is important because a great deal of rationalization, a great deal of the future of the country elevator system, is bound up with this apparently simple question. In the elevator system it is a very important factor, and while the minister perhaps does not have full authority to make an announcement, I hope he will prevail on the Acting Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) to make this announcement in the very near future.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we have heard today from non-farmers and retired station agents. I would like to put my two-cents worth in as a member of parliament from an area which has the only inland port in central Canada.

The present government's blatant inability to program grain shipments has cost Canada an additional 4 million tonnes in foreign grain sales and a deferment of 1.5 million tonnes for delivery in 1979. Our grain transportation system is choked by a tremendous backlog in deliveries that has delayed grain shipments right from the start of the 1978 shipping season this spring. Following three record crops, producers have stocks overflowing their on-farm facilities. Prairie grain elevators are stuffed, holding 35 per cent more stock than a year ago, yet deliveries to these primary elevators are lagging behind 1977 figures. At the same time grain stocks at the major export terminals are down 33 per cent from last year. The problem is rail movement of grain to export positions, and more specifically, the scheduling of deliveries.

In this debate on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), I am speaking on behalf of the port of Churchill as well as the hinterland to the port of Churchill, which covers most of Saskatchewan where there are at least 118 million bushels of grain which could be destined for shipment through Churchill.

Instead of increasing our grain exports and developing new markets, Canada is losing her traditional customers. Foreign requests to purchase Canadian grain are being turned down because of this government's lack of foresight and initiative to update our transportation system to meet even present demands.

Our national deficit could be lowered significantly. Instead, grain handling facilities from country elevator to the port terminal limit us to 21 million tonnes of grain exports annually. And as far as this government is concerned, that is all they will supply.

This anomaly in government policy is best exemplified by the port of Churchill. This Manitoba port provides western producers a 10 per cent to 14 per cent higher net return, yet the government refuses to direct more than a nominal shipment of grain through the port. Grain shipments for the 1978 season through Churchill totalled 23 million bushels—down nine million bushels from the expected 32-million bushel quota.

Since only 23 million bushels have been shipped through the port, the port is in a cash loss position. This means that the deficit will have to be picked up by the taxpayers of Canada. Had the port been allocated a few million bushels more, its accounts would have been in the black, and there are not too many ports in Canada which find themselves in the black at year end.

● (2142)

The port of Churchill has a storage capacity of about four million bushels. A few years ago this facility had to be used for grain storage, but for some reason this government takes the approach that it is not going to store grain at Churchill. One of the excuses is that the government does not know just what grain sales it will have next year through that port. However, in this particular year there have already been cargoes sold for shipment next year through the port of Churchill. I therefore see no reason why—with this huge capacity—grain could not be moved into place.

This motion is before us today because there is a shortage of boxcars. It is my understanding that even if boxcars were made available at some later date, the port of Churchill would have to be opened during the winter, which might not be too acceptable. If cars could have been available this fall, the four million bushels could have been put into place before the ice and snow came. It is time the minister took off his blinkers and lifted his eyes to the north.

One-tenth of Canada's total grain exports moves through the port of Churchill. A senior economist for the Wheat Board, Harold F. Bjarnsson, has said that in just six years—by 1985—Canada should be able to export 20 million tonnes of wheat, up to 10 million tonnes of barley and 1.5 million tonnes of oilseeds, for a total of 31.5 million tonnes. That is an increase of 10.5 million tonnes, which will call for a 50 per cent increase in transportation and grain-handling facilities.

The port of Churchill can play a large role in the expansion of Canada's grain export industry. The Hall commission recommended an increase in grain shipments through Churchill to 55 million bushels, but to date this government can see its way clear to allow only a two million bushel per year increase in shipments. With the loss of some nine million bushels this year, it will take us up to five years to make that amount up.

Moreover, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has virtually ignored the Hall recommendations and commissioned a second study, the Bryden report, to which I have referred before and which views further development as uneconomic. Now we are waiting for the results of a third report on grain handling and transportation. This government claims to be fighting for a strong federation, but until it can envision Canada as stretching north and south as well as east and west, it cannot hope to maintain a unified and prosperous country.

This year it was expected that the m.v. Arctic would be going to Churchill for a cargo of grain on November 15. I asked if the minister would consider also sending in or having three or four other ships accompany the m.v. Arctic, which is a class two icebreaker. In his reply the minister said he did not think that would be a feasible operation and that no one would want to send ships in there.

That is not the kind of approach I would like to see taken. I think the minister should have pursued this matter in order to get at least another four million or five million bushels of grain out through the port of Churchill. Because the nine million bushel shortfall at Churchill will have to be made up through Prince Rupert and Vancouver this winter, and looking at the track record of grain handling facilities in this country, I am sure we will end up having that nine million bushels still sitting there next spring.

When I mentioned the m.v. Arctic, the minister said that it had encountered bad ice conditions and that a hole had been ripped in its side. The minister was clouding the issue for the simple reason that at that time the m.v. Arctic was coming from the Nanisivik Mines with a load of ore and it was out on the other side of Baffin Island in Baffin Bay. It was nowhere close to the shipping routes out of Churchill. It was on October 20 that the minister brought to the attention of the House that the m.v. Arctic had encountered ice. The last ship clearing Churchill this year did so on October 24 and encountered no problems whatsoever. I just wanted to clear that up.

The minister was saying that the m.v. Arctic was going to be scheduled for Churchill for November 15. It could not go there because of damage. I understand that it has to go to Rotterdam for complete repair. Because of the slow movement of grain in Canada, I ask the government to schedule the m.v. Arctic to go to Churchill by at least July 1, 1979 and to provide at least four or five ships to accompany the icebreaker to Churchill. Let us get the season started so that we can handle not only the anticipated 30 million or 32 million bushels out of Churchill but also set our goal a little higher than that.

I speak for grain handlers and those who work for the National Harbours Board in Churchill. Some of those fellows have lived there for 25 or 27 years, and it is a personal challenge for them to be able to reach and better what they reached in previous years. We have to have a commitment from the government. The minister must work with the Wheat Board, convince it that the CNR can get grain to Churchill and that ships can be scheduled to handle grain through that port.

One other concern to me regarding the port of Churchill also involves the ports of Montreal and Halifax. It is my understanding that an in-house National Harbours Board task force has just been struck to examine the prospects of leasing the ports of Churchill, Montreal and Halifax. I do not know what the idea behind this is. I have not seen the terms of reference. Perhaps the government wants to lease these ports, for example, to Cargill, which would then be responsible for the ports. However, tied to that there would have to be some commitment that Cargill would have the necessary cars to move grain to those ports and thus increase the flow of grain. I look forward to the report of the task force, which is supposed to be released in two months.

The government and the Canadian Wheat Board must think of transportation of grain in this country on a north-south basis as well as on an east-west basis. The old east-west concept which was born at the time of confederation is just not sufficient to handle the amount of grain we are producing in Canada now. We are going to have to use the port of Churchill. When the government is replaced, and I do not think will be too long, I am sure the port of Churchill will be used to its maximum capacity in order to relieve the situation on the prairies and get grain moving.

We talk of boxcars' not being available. The distance from Saskatchewan to the port of Churchill is only half the distance from Saskatchewan to Thunder Bay, and it is a little further to Prince Rupert. We must use the port of Churchill so that we can move grain quicker. That is a commitment our party will make to the farmers and producers of this country.

● (2152)

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity of closing the debate on this major problem which exists in western Canada.

I should say at the outset that history is repeating itself. There is no doubt that today we are going through almost the same thing that grain producers went through 22 years ago. At that time grain was piling up on the prairies and the government of the day was not doing anything about it. It was defeated first in 1957 and then completely defeated in 1958. I see the same thing happening now when I witness the so-called experts on the government side ganging up together with the NDP against the Conservatives. This shows their tunnel vision. They do not realize what the problem is. It is very simple: get out and sell the grain that is there. If you sell it, you move it. These are the two simple things that need to be done.

This is what happened in 1960 and 1961. Hon. members opposite should realize that the then minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), made a trip to China at that time. One would have thought the world was coming to an end when those sales were made, and the NDP together with the Liberals of the day criticized those sales bitterly. Now they are following that example.

There is no doubt in my mind that the government will not be in a position to win the next election and that we will have the opportunity to move this grain, because it has to be moved. You can blame whom you like, the government, the railroads or the Wheat Board. Nevertheless, the real crux of the problem is, first of all, to go out into the world market and sell it. We are competing now with other countries for grain sales because of the fact that there is a small surplus.

I am particularly concerned about some of the comments made by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) when he said that the western grain grower has fewer problems now than he had eight or ten years ago. He went on to say that if you compare the western grain farmer's net worth now with his net worth a number of years ago, you would find it is a lot greater. It is not the net worth that is important because many cemeteries are full of rich farmers. It is the net income that is important, and this is what members opposite do not seem to realize. The grain farmer must have an increase in profit so as to stay in business.

As much as I do not like statistics, I think I will have to put some on the record to set it straight. In the last five years, if we compare the cost of wheat with the increased cost of production, we find that it would have to sell at approximately $3.62 a bushel. What is it selling at? It is selling at $3.19 a bushel. This means that the western grain producer is falling behind and his costs are increasing tremendously. In the last 27 years the cost of machinery alone has gone up over 100 per cent.

I should like to impress upon members of the House that 30 years ago this fall feed grain in western Canada was selling at exactly the same price as it is this year. How in the world can anyone survive in that kind of situation, with increased cost of production, increased taxes, increased cost of fertilizer? That is why it is so urgent that the government realize the predicament of the grain farmer. Many grain farmers are going further into debt. The farm debt in western Canada has doubled in the last five years. This means added cost in interest. We have seen the cost of borrowing money go up in the last several months. The bank rate has increased six times this year. This is reflected in the cost of operation of the western grain farmer.

We cannot fool around with this situation because it is too important to our economic well-being, too important to those who are involved. Let me show exactly what is happening. I wish the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, his parliamentary secretary or anybody else on the other side would come over here so that I could show him a picture of farmers loading their own grain on their own cars. They have to go back to doing that because the elevators are plugged. This year alone 1,042 producer cars have been loaded between the beginning of the crop year, that is August 1, and the end of October. This compares with 250 producer cars shipped in the same period last year.

This proves the agility and versatility of the western grain producer, but let me impress upon members that he can only go so far; he can only spread himself so thin. If hon. members opposite, in the short time they have left on the government side of the House, do not do something about this, I can assure them that they, together with the NDP, if the latter continue to support the government, will not find any of their members elected in any of the western provinces in the next election, and I would be prepared to wager that with any of them.

There has been a great deal of discussion with regard to the problems associated with the Crowsnest pass rate. I have to impress upon hon. members opposite and on the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who is also the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), that problems in western Canada connected with the movement and sale of grain have created a schism between beef producers and grain producers. The government, the minister or the cabinet—I do not care who—are the logical people to get busy and alleviate this serious problem.

I hope that as a result of this debate the minister has become cognizant of the serious problem which exists on the prairies, because I have a great fear that hon. members opposite, who have never had to rely on net income from grain to pay for their groceries, to pay their bills or to maintain their families, do not realize the seriousness of this situation. I cannot express more firmly that it is very important that action be taken now.

* * *

● (2202)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if somebody on the other side of the House would let us know what the business is for tomorrow. Perhaps the government whip might be able to inform us.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will deal, in the following order, with Bill C-7, Bill C-5, and Bill C-10, whether or not we get to the final one. That is the order in which the government will put forward the business tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock p.m., the proceedings on the motion have expired in accordance with Standing Order 58(11).

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Translation]

FLOODS—FLOOD PREVENTION PROGRAM IN NORTH MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, first I thank you for giving me this opportunity to rise once again on an issue which has been the subject of several interventions not only from myself but also from the hon. member who took the floor before me as the representative of Laval riding, our good friend and colleague, Mr. Jean Rochon. It concerns the flood problem. We have been informed of the budget cuts made by the Government of Canada, and I think we all agree that budgets must be seriously trimmed down, but when we are directly concerned we may not agree so readily. So to lessen the effects of those budget cuts, considering the seriousness and the priority of our problem, floods in the Montreal area, I communicated with the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand) last October 16 in a letter referring to the agreement made on October 4, 1976 between the Government of Canada and the government of Quebec whereby $5 million were to be earmarked for undertaking works in the Montreal region to reduce damages due to floods.

In August 1977, having examined together the situation, the two government levels agreed to extend the agreement for two years, in other words until March 31, 1980 and the Minister of State (Environment) confirmed that agreement to the Quebec natural resources minister on October 31, 1977. I expressed my concern over the possibility that this budget might be cut due to restraint measures.

I mentioned that I wanted to advise him that a cut would be hardly acceptable to people who live on the shore of the Prairies and Mille-Isles rivers and who must suffer those floods every spring time since almost 30 years. To make the public aware of that situation, all we have to do is to make them read again newspaper reports from 1963-64 and 1971. And now that almost everybody has a television, it is even easier to witness it through images.

Given the importance of those works, I asked a question of the minister last November 7. I asked him if he intended to cut expenses regarding the commitment I referred to earlier, and I learned that the release had been issued by some PQ members coming from that area who had mentioned that we were refusing to go ahead with our commitment before 1980. In his answer, the minister referred to an agreement of 1975.

I have with me a press release mentioning the implementation of a diking program in accordance with an agreement on hydrometrical survey cost sharing which was reached on March 17, 1975 between the Liberal government of Quebec represented by then minister Gilles Massé and the Canadian government. I was not completely satisfied with the minister's answer because it seemed to me that we did not directly tackle the problem I had raised. However I was a bit more optimistic when the minister told me that he would be on the site last Friday. The minister was given the opportunity to fly over the concrete dike built along the river to control the water level and also over the pumping station system established with a view to draining the water which could cause damage in spite of the dikes. I am optimistic about the minister's attitude but I am still concerned with the situation.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we put this question on top of our priorities in view of the damages that have been caused by spring floods in 1974. I refer here to a document issued by the department stating that the cost incurred by the Canadian government for damages caused by floods in the Ottawa River, the Mille-Isles River, Bizard Island and the Prairies River amounted to about $25.5 million for 1974 alone. It seems to me as was stated in the agreement, half of this amount would be sufficient to avoid any additional spending and that it would contribute considerably to improve a situation which has already lasted for too long.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned this problem to make my colleagues in the House aware of the importance of this situation. The time allotted to me is limited but it seems to me we should give consideration to the natural resource contained in these two rivers, the Prairies River and the Mille-Isles River. This touristic attraction, this holiday attraction should not be a polluting factor, this natural resource should become as soon as possible a regional waterway centre, by the development of the Prairies and the Mille-Isles rivers and thus contribute to economic progress of the area north of Montreal. So it seems to me the provincial, municipal and federal governments should join hands in the pursuit of this goal.

• (2207)

[English]

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as a result of flooding in the Montreal area in the early 1970s the federal government, in full and equal partnership with the province of Quebec, conducted a comprehensive study of the causes of flooding and developed an integrated plan to remedy the problem. This plan included needed liaison with the bodies responsible for regulating the Great Lakes and in particular the flows in the St. Lawrence River. Schemes were mapped out to enlarge storage capacity in the upper part of the Ottawa basin and to provide for local diking and for control works at the head of the Mille Isles River, the most northerly outlet of Lake of Two Mountains. The integrated plan also included flood risk mapping.

The plan of which I speak was prepared by a federal-provincial committee in 1976. In October of that same year, implementation of its recommendations began. Since then, diking has been completed for three of the communities most severely affected and work should commence soon to protect a fourth community recommended as part of the integrated plan. Mapping of the flood risk areas in the Montreal region at a scale of 1 to 10,000 is complete, and a series of 22 maps is available to ensure that people know where the flood risk is greatest.

On May 11 of this year, the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) and the responsible provincial minister jointly designated the flood risk area, thereby assuring that the provincial and federal as well as local governments would discourage development in those areas, development that would be liable to future flooding. All the work that has been done to date has been done under formal agreement with Quebec, and this includes the studies, the mapping and the diking.

There are a number of communities in the Montreal region which remain unprotected, and discussions have been held with provincial authorities on this problem. Obviously, not all communities can receive protection at the same time, but our record in the Montreal region is one that the federal government can be proud of. Anyone implying anything else just does not understand the complexity of the flooding problem. As I stated earlier, we cannot work everywhere at once.

Flood control is extremely expensive and there are often alternative ways to provide protection. I have already mentioned the use of a storage reservoir in the upper basin and of control works at the upper end of the Mille Isles River. These alternatives to local protective works such as dikes can be just as effective. We—and I speak here of the federal government in conjunction with the province—have not completed all the work we have in the Montreal region; because of the cutbacks, the job will take longer than we previously thought. In the interim, studies are continuing jointly with both Quebec and Ontario on the best way to use the storage capacity of existing reservoirs, and of Lake Ontario, to reduce flooding in the Montreal region.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

• (2212)

FISHERIES—CLOSING OF ST. LAWRENCE, NEWFOUNDLAND FLUORSPAR MINE—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT IN INDUSTRY

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the town of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, was sentenced to death by Alcan when they decided to close their fluorspar mining operation at St. Lawrence. The provincial government of Newfoundland together with Fishery Products Ltd. devised a scheme together with the local citizens' committee in St. Lawrence to resuscitate the town economically by constructing a fish plant in St. Lawrence, which has a fine harbour, and providing employment in the fish plant for the fishermen in that area who were formerly miners. Everything has been done, everyone is ready to go ahead except the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc), who is dragging his feet, who has been delaying for some three months the decision whether or not two Portuguese gill-netting draggers can be permitted to fish into this plant and land their catch there so that there will be enough fish to keep the plant operating a reasonable length of the year to make it economic and viable.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the situation we are in now is that our fisheries dictator is dithering while the town of St. Lawrence is withering. The people are on unemployment insurance there and their unemployment insurance is starting to run out.

All arrangements were made for construction to start on this plant on August 1. It has been held up because we are waiting for the Minister of Fisheries of Canada. It is now November 13. The project is going to be supported by DREE. Fishery Products Ltd. is putting up its own money and there is a contribution from the provincial government.

Last January 20, a DREE assistant, Mr. Tom Webb, was quoted as saying that the federal government was a long way from making any decision on the proposed fish plant. Here we are eleven months later and there is still no decision on it. A spokesman in the minister's office on the same date, January 20, was non-committal when asked to predict the future date for a federal decision on the St. Lawrence proposal. He might well be non-committal. All the work has been done and in July, when the minister thought a general election was imminent, he gave general approval to the scheme.

Landed immigrant status was to be granted to Captain Almeida, the Portuguese owner, and his crews. The proposal was that the vessels would operate under a Canadian company. The fishermen would be landed immigrants and teach Newfoundlanders their techniques. Apparently, these vessels are really excellent and with their new methods, they catch a lot of fish. The Portuguese government objected to that method, however, and now the proposal has been before the minister for several months that there be a charter arrangement for these vessels so that they can land their fish under contract to this new fish plant in St. Lawrence. But still the minister does not act.

Today he said he was going to send a changed proposal to Fishery Products Ltd. this week. This means there will be no construction. It will not be ready in the spring. It will not be ready to receive fish next year. People will be coming off unemployment insurance and going on welfare, degraded, because of the lack of action by this minister.

This minister stopped the Nordsee investment in Harbour Grace that would have provided year round employment there. He is against any foreign control, any foreign entry into the fishery in Canada, but he has agreed to all kinds of deals with the Bulgarians and Russians for buying fish from the union in Newfoundland. He has agreed to East German trawlers landing fish at the lake plants on the south coast of Newfoundland—Canadian quota fish for the lake plants. He has agreed with Norwegian vessels landing fish at four fish plants at Conception Bay and one in Trinity Bay, but he will not agree to or make up his mind about this arrangement with two Portuguese vessels so that this new fish plant can be built in St. Lawrence to give those abandoned miners some hope for the future, some employment, some occupation to go back to. Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is carrying on like this?

It has been stated by the provincial government, by Fishery Products Ltd., by everyone involved, that the only thing holding this plant up now is the minister. I should like to put on the record some quotations from a column entitled "Double 007 Seven" which appeared in the Daily News on November 8. This column is usually very favourable to the minister and to the Liberal party. It reads in part as follows:

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Unfortunately Ottawa, in the person of the Minister of Fisheries, Romeo LeBlanc, is being something less than co-operative.

In July, when a federal election appeared imminent, he quickly agreed to the proposal which included the use of two Portuguese-owned vessels to supplement locally caught fish and thus ensure a year-round production at the proposed plant.

A little later this statement appears:

His procrastination has prevented a goodly number of St. Lawrence men from obtaining work on the project during the winter months.

And still later the writer had this to say:

Either Mr. LeBlanc is completely heartless, excessively stupid, or someone had failed to inform him of the plight of the nearly three thousand people in the town.

The writer goes on to mention that their only hope is the member for the district, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson). I say, where has the Secretary of State for External Affairs been while this affair has been going on, while this hang-up has been in effect since last August, while St. Lawrence is abandoned, while this fish plant has been stopped? Where is the Secretary of State for External Affairs? Is he going to be dictated to by the Minister of Fisheries who will not move, who is incapable of making up his mind—who only makes his mind up when the president of the fisheries union in Newfoundland, Richard Cashin, tells him to make it up? When is the Secretary of State for External Affairs going to make the Minister of Fisheries move on this matter which is preventing the fish plant from starting production down in St. Lawrence?

The new play is no longer "Waiting for Godot"; the new play is "Waiting for Romeo". There is decision after decision in his department waiting for him to make up his mind on. He has a pathological disdain for anything to do with countries outside of the Iron Curtain apparently. It is all right for East Germans to go and land their fish at lake plants on the south coast under an arrangement, but not for Portuguese to land fish at the town of St. Lawrence on the south coast. It is all right for Bulgarians and Russians too. It is all right for Poles. There is a deal that has been negotiated now with Poles for winter fish, but for some reason when it comes to the West Germans, Portuguese or whatever, he is incapable of making up his mind.

● (2217)

Captain Almeida and his two ships cannot control the fishery of Newfoundland; they cannot control this fish plant. The fish plant is going to be owned by Fishery Products Ltd., fully owned by them. These vessels will come under Canadian control. There is a simple chartering agreement that is put before the minister. He has agreed to charters for all of these other vessels I have mentioned. What is holding them up in agreeing to the chartering arrangements so that construction can start on this fish plant? It is now November 13 and it is unlikely that construction can even be started and be finished for next spring. They are going to lose their whole year's fishing in St. Lawrence. They will lose a year's employment. They will have to go on welfare. These are the people who have been laid off because the fluorspar mine closed down.

If the minister can give us some reasonable explanation, Mr. Speaker, we would be pleased to have it. But until we get it, we have to tell the minister that it is time for him to stop dithering and take action on this very serious problem.

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, no one is more anxious to solve the unemployment problem in the community of St. Lawrence than the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc). This is evidenced by the fact that the minister approved two licences for Fishery Products Ltd. and so advised the company on May 3 of this year. If the company had stuck to this original agreement we would have been able to provide the needed jobs for the community, and at the same time maintained control of fishing licences in the hands of Canadians.

However, this company was not able to stick to the agreed approach. They informed the department on August 15 of this year that they could not carry out the terms of the original proposal. The department immediately exchanged letters with the company and met with their principal officers in Montreal on October 3 in order to try and reach a mutually satisfactory solution. The terms the company was now proposing were considerably different from what they had agreed to earlier. In essence, the new proposal invclved foreign ownership of the licences and this is unacceptable to the government and unacceptable to those Canadians in whose name we fought for the 200-mile zone.

The minister informed the House today—and I can only reaffirm it again tonight on his behalf—that the government will be making another proposal to the company which will allow them to proceed with the fish plant and, as a consequence, to supply the much needed employment for this community. The proposal should be made in a matter of days, and certainly no later than the end of this week. It is the minister's hope that the company will be able to proceed with the government's second offer when it is finalized. This offer, like the first, is consistent with the over-all policy for a controlled expansion of the fisheries, with control remaining in the hands of Canadians.

The Minister of Fisheries also assured the House that if the second proposal was unacceptable to Fishery Products Ltd., then other avenues would be quickly explored. In short, the minister has asked me again to assure the people of St. Lawrence that something will be done for them, and done by 1979.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT HAS SPECIAL ECONOMIC PROGRAM FOR NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my comments this evening concern a special economic program for the province of Newfoundland in view of the high unemployment in Newfoundland and the sluggish performance of the economy, especially this year. I addressed a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) on October 30, 1978 to that effect and the minister answered by saying that consideration is always given to parts of the country like Newfoundland. He cited the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and government employment programs such as Canada Works as ways in which the federal government helps. Although DREE and the work programs have been in effect for many years in the province of Newfoundland, we still have a depression level of unemployment.

● (2222)

These programs of the federal government do not get at the root causes of unemployment in Newfoundland. The root causes are not served by these federal programs. Unemployment in Newfoundland is directly related to the province's position with the rest of Canada. A good example of how its position with the rest of Canada has a detrimental effect with regard to government programs was the 3 per cent remission of sales tax enacted by the federal government last spring. It was of little benefit to job creation in Newfoundland.

The benefits of any increased spending in the consumer-purchasing area are felt in Ontario and other areas where manufacturing industries are concentrated. This is, of course, concentrated in central Canada. That area of the country benefits from a policy such as the 3 per cent remission of sales tax, but not an area like Newfoundland, which does not have this type of industry.

The structure of the economy of Canada militates against Newfoundland ever improving its position in the Canadian federation. I quote from the report of the People's Commission on Unemployment in Newfoundland, released earlier this year, page 15:

> Tariffs and import duties protect the market for Central Canadian industry, and government stimulants encourage consumption, but there is no such protection for producers or raw materials. If the Aluminum Company of Canada can get cheaper fluorspar in Mexico, the miners of St. Lawrence lose their jobs, but they and their families must still buy goods that are not produced in Newfoundland—
>
> Transfer payments from Ottawa can be viewed as an indirect subsidy to Central Canadian industry: a subsidy which, while keeping Newfoundlanders alive, also serves to keep Newfoundland's economy underdeveloped.

The present structure tends to perpetuate the inequalities of income and opportunity that exist in this country with regard to an area like Newfoundland. Federal programs hailed by the minister as special considerations have been a dismal failure. The minister relied upon DREE as a program to help Newfoundland.

Let us look at DREE. When it was set up in 1969, its stated objective was to redistribute wealth from the have provinces to the have-not provinces on an enduring basis. What has been the result? Up until 1975, $185 million was spent to provide a total of about 3,400 jobs. The Economic Council of Canada in its 1977 report stated that in the period 1970-75 over 8,300 jobs were needed just to reduce unemployment in Newfoundland by one half of 1 per cent.

As for where the money was spent by DREE, I go back to the People's Commission report, page 70, and I quote:

> Between 1969 and 1975 DREE spent more than 75 per cent of all its moneys in the province on what the Economic Council of Canada calls "non-rural infrastructure"—

The commission finds nothing wrong with the construction of roads and the building of schools. But we must seriously raise the question as to whether DREE has, through its support of urban development, made our rural areas less competitive in terms of economic development and job creation.

DREE seems to have contributed to the non-viability of our rural areas without any redeeming contribution to our urban areas. In view of this type of situation, it is incumbent on the minister to give this House some concrete proposals as to what he is prepared to do in his forthcoming budget to realistically meet the pressing needs of the province of Newfoundland.

I call on the minister to bring in a new deal of a Marshall plan type of economic package that will radically change the position of Newfoundland within the Canadian economy so that real and lasting benefits might result.

● (2227)

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond on behalf of my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Martin) who has been unavoidably detained elsewhere this evening.

As the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour) indicated earlier, the Conference Board in Canada has forecast that real output in Newfoundland will decline by almost 2 per cent in 1978. However, it is important to note—as the Conference Board has done—that this contraction is in large part due to the protracted strike, which lasted from March to July, in Labrador's iron mines. Production has since resumed, and indeed the Conference Board forecasts a real growth of almost 4 per cent in 1979 which will more than recoup the losses of the previous two years. In spite of this decline in real output in 1978, the Conference Board also forecasts a growth of 2.9 per cent in employment in Newfoundland in 1978; but as in the case in the rest of the country, the growth of the labour force is even greater and consequently the rate of unemployment has risen.

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) indicated on October 30 when the hon. member first raised the question, the national and regional economic situations are taken into account when the budget is drafted. Moreover, as all hon. members know, the provisions of the budget are not discussed prior to the presentation of the budget, and hence they will have to wait until later this month for the budget.

I should, nevertheless, make note of a few points with regard to the request that some special economic program be set out for the province of Newfoundland. First, as I mentioned at the beginning in noting the Conference Board's forecast, this year's decline in real provincial output is in large part due to strike activity. This is now past and, more important, no structural change had occurred to bring this decline about; consequently, the need for special consideration does not arise because of this forecast decline.

Second, as the Minister of Finance stated on October 30, there already exist numerous provisions and measures which do provide help and incentives to those provinces such as Newfoundland which have higher than average unemployment rates and below-average per capita incomes.

Finally, I should remind the hon. member that the Economic Council of Canada has currently under way a major study of the Newfoundland economy; the government will wish to consider this study and its recommendations when it is completed, and subsequently take appropriate actions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m., without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 14, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

RESEARCH

URGENCY OF ADEQUATE FUNDING FOR MEDICAL AND SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Standing Order 43 is to make it possible for the House to deal with something that is urgent. I suggest there is nothing more urgent than the need for the government to review its cutbacks respecting medical and scientific research before it is too late. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House calls on the government to institute an immediate review of its cutbacks respecting medical and scientific research, it being the view of this House that adequate funding of such research is a matter of urgency and that the time to act is now.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST GOVERNMENT CONTINUE SUBSIDIZATION OF CANFARM PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that the Canfarm program is an important service whose objective is to help farmers in the administration of their operations; considering that almost one-third of the farmers subscribing to that program are in the province of Quebec; and considering that the Department of Agriculture has decided to withdraw all financial assistance granted under that program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That the House instruct the Minister of Agriculture to reconsider his decision to end financial assistance under the Canfarm program.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion can only be put with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

ENERGY

SUGGESTION NON-RENEWABLE RESOURCES SHOULD BE NATIONALIZED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my motion arises over the takeover of Pacific Petroleums by Petro-Can. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That this House congratulate Petro-Can for its foresight, and urges the federal government to co-operate with the provinces to devise a joint plan to bring all of Canada's non-renewable resources under public ownership.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

STATISTICS CANADA

PUBLICATION OF JOB VACANCY SURVEY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the job vacancy survey by Statistics Canada is being cancelled as part of the $13.5 million spending cut for that department, and in view of the fact that this is the only good measure of demand for labour that we have in Canada, it is obvious that there is political involvement in this cut to avoid embarrassment to the government over the unemployment crisis. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That for the sake of freedom of information in our democratic society, StatsCanada be required to publish the vacancy survey as in the past and with improved regional data.

S.O. 43

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONSTRUCTION OF TAXATION DATA CENTRE IN SUDBURY, ONT.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to seek the unanimous consent of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the unemployment rate in the Sudbury basin is 11.2 per cent, second only to the Atlantic region, the fact that construction of the taxation data centre for Sudbury has been put off until next year because of the government's cutback program, and the fact that workers, provincial leaders and municipal leaders in the Sudbury basin want the project started now, not next year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House instructs the President of the Treasury Board to rescind the rescheduling of the construction of the taxation data centre in Sudbury so that it can be built now.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASYLUM IN CANADA FOR SOUTHEAST ASIAN REFUGEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Yuri Shymko (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It relates to the tragic plight of more than 2,000 human beings escaping from the holocaust of genocide by regimes in Southeast Asia, 1,200 of them children, now stranded on a ship off the coast of Malaysia, reminding us of a similar tragic plight of Jewish refugees who were seeking the assistance of humanity prior to World War II.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman):

That this House give consideration as the only country in the world to launch a rescue operation with relation to the plight of these people and offer them asylum in Canada.

[Mr. Hogan.]

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate can be done at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PURCHASE BY PETRO-CANADA OF SHARES IN PACIFIC PETROLEUMS LTD.—REVISED CAPITAL BUDGET FOR PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance: it arises out of answers given yesterday by the minister and by certain of his colleagues with regard to the Petro-Can takeover of Pacific Petroleums Ltd.

Does the minister recall an order in council being filed in this House on October 10 which set out a revised capital budget for Petro-Can, stating it was approved specifically by the Minister of Finance, the revised budget calling for Petro-Can raising either in direct debt, or through share issues, $819 million. If the minister does recall this filing, will he tell the House what he had in mind when he approved that $800 million further capitalization for Petro-Can?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I replied in the House yesterday that the buying by Petro-Canada of Pacific Petroleums was announced last week. This was done under the operation of the board of Petro-Canada: they used their borrowing capacity in order to get the necessary funds in American dollars from Canadian banks. This was approved.

As far as the particular question in relation to this order is concerned, I will have to check and give a reply to the hon. member.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again the Minister of Finance has avoided answering the very specific question.

Let me go to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, whose name is also included as being one of the three cabinet ministers who approved the supplementary capital budget for 1978 involving Petro-Canada. As this budget includes preferred shares of $64.5 million, common shares of $205 million, and debt financing of $504 million, will the minister indicate to the House what he had in mind, or what he thought Petro-Can was going to do with this money when he granted his approval?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, when I answered questions in the House yesterday, I indicated that an opportunity had come to Petro-Canada to make a very significant transaction which members on this side of the House and some members on the other side supported. At that time, the particular deal had not come to fruition: it was not possible to speculate about it at that time. Indeed, it did not come to fruition until late Friday afternoon of last week.

Mr. Stevens: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, together with the President of Privy Council and the Minister of Finance, created—or attempted to create—the impression yesterday that this was just another commercial transaction. Yet we find they had already filed, on October 10, a budgetary addition of $809 million, presumably in anticipation of this.

● (1417)

My question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is: would he like to reconsider his answer, given yesterday, that Canada is not involved, federal government-wise, bearing in mind the provisions of section 14(1) of the act incorporating Petro-Can, which states that corporations may exercise this power only as agents of Her Majesty?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I shall need your guidance with regard to this question, because the hon. member has given notice of his intention to raise a question of privilege dealing, I believe, with this point. I am quite prepared to deal with it right now and to cite from the Petro-Canada act the relevant passages; but I would seek your guidance before fully answering the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I shall not be able to deal with the question of privilege until later in the day.

VALUE OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): My question, also, is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. This morning, trading in Pacific Petroleums was reinstituted. The stock was trading at $55, and by eleven o'clock some 280,000 shares had been traded.

Since the market is discounting from Petro-Can's price the shares of Pacific Pete by $10, and since Petro-Canada did not consult with the management of Pacific Petroleums in advance of this purchase and there is no guarantee, therefore, that the management will hang around to protect its investment, my question is: what guarantee does Petro-Canada and, by extension, Canada as responsible for Petro-Canada, have from Phillips Petroleum that the investment of taxpayers' dollars made will not be subject to jeopardy in the event of the deal falling through, in the event of the market being correct that the shares are overpriced or in the event of Pacific's management depreciating the value—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The press release which was issued by Petro-Canada and by Phillips Petroleum on Friday dealt with these issues. It clearly indicated that the purpose of Petro-Canada was to obtain all the remaining outstanding shares of Pacific Petroleums; that it had an obligation to seek the support of the management and the board of directors of Pacific Petroleums. Those discussions have already started, and I believe the board of directors of Pacific Petroleums will be meeting later this week to deal with that specific question.

Mr. Andre: On September 26, Petro-Canada issued a statement indicating it had no interest in acquiring Pacific Petroleums, and a number of investors made investment decisions based on that statement. What obligation does the hon. gentleman feel he has to those shareholders who made investment decisions based on that statement by Petro-Canada, an agent of Her Majesty?

Is he aware that Petro-Canada and the Government of Canada are open to a class action suit by the previous shareholders in Pacific Petroleums who sold their shares on the basis of a categorical statement by Petro-Canada that it had no interest whatsoever in Pacific Petroleums?

Mr. Gillespie: There has been a considerable amount of speculation in the marketplace with respect to the shares of Pacific Petroleums. I saw a letter from "the street" dated October 21, from one of the brokerage houses, indicating there was a very good chance that there would be a takeover of Pacific Petroleums if only for the reason that it was thought to be known that the ownership of the shares—that is to say, Phillips—would be available at a price of about $65.

Mr. Andre: In early September, the President of the Treasury Board, during a cross-Canada tour publicizing his so-called budgetary cuts of $2.5 billion, stated in Edmonton that much of the money being cut from the budget would be reinvested in Alberta in the oil industry, in an equity position, to enhance federal government control. Was the President of the Treasury Board referring at that time to the acquisition of other oil companies, including Pacific Petroleums, by Petro-Canada?

An hon. Member: I hope so.

Mr. Gillespie: If the question is meant for the President of the Treasury Board, I think it should have been so directed.

* * *

● (1422)

URBAN AFFAIRS

COMMUNITY SERVICES GRANTS PROGRAM—INQUIRY AS TO BUDGET FOR 1978

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Most of the cities and municipalities of Canada have been very interested in participating in the community services grants program which funds the Neighbourhood Improvement Program and sewer and water extensions.

In view of the discussions which the Minister of Finance had with provincial ministers of finance about a week or ten days ago, in which he indicated that this program would be discontinued or put back to a later time, is there a community services grants program with a budget for 1978 and, if so, of what does it consist?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at the federal-provincial meeting of ministers of finance there was a consensus to delay the implementation of the community services grants program for one year. Therefore, this program will not operate in 1978. I understand that municipal incentive grants and sewage treatment programs will continue until December 31, 1978, and the decision which was taken was that the community services grants program will commence as of January, 1979.

Mr. Orlikow: Is any consideration being given to the extension of the Neighbourhood Improvement Program so that municipalities which had plans to improve run-down areas can proceed with their work; or are they to assume that there is no more money for this kind of neighbourhood improvement until the new agreement is put into effect?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, some neighbourhood improvement projects were designated by the provinces this year and some activity took place during 1978. Under the new community services grants program, it will be possible for municipalities, with the approval of their provincial governments, to designate some areas for neighbourhood improvement. That will be under the new scheme which will be implemented in January, 1979—not under the previous program. Many municipalities will be able to take advantage of the new program and undertake some neighbourhood improvements.

Mr. Orlikow: I assume from what the minister said that whatever was planned for the future will have to wait until money is available and the program is allowed to go ahead. As a result of the negotiations with the provinces which are being carried on by his department, have any of the provinces signed a new agreement? If so, which ones; and has the federal government signed the agreement so that work can proceed?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, those signatures had to await the discussions which were to take place at the meeting of the federal Minister of Finance with the provincial ministers of finance: they had to wait until a decision was reached at that meeting of ministers of finance.

Now that a decision has been taken, it is possible for us to sign some agreement with the provinces. I have received indications that provincial authorities are ready and willing to sign an agreement.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST GOVERNMENT CONTINUE SUBSIDIZATION OF CANFARM PROGRAM

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of his department's recent decision to cut back $6 million which were allocated to Canfarm to help farmers in their agricultural operations, and in view of the fact that this is a very valuable program for agriculture, can the minister inform the House if he intends to revise his decision of allocating these $6 million, as this has proven extremely valuable for the management of agricultural lands and for farmers, especially in Quebec?

● (1427)

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure the hon. member knows that there have been submissions and propositions made by several different farm organizations through the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. That is being considered at the present time. A final decision has not been made to go along with their request, which involves some financing by the federal government, but it is being considered at present. However, the hon. member can rest assured that I will do everything I can to see that Canfarm stays alive.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW FIGHTER PLANES FOR NATO FORCE

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Last Tuesday, when I asked the minister about the delay in selecting the new fighter aircraft, the minister blamed the plane manufacturers for the 3½ months' delay since the companies submitted their final bids. Now that he has had a chance to review the facts, would he care to tell the House the real reason for this delay? Also, would he tell the House in which month he expects to sign the final contract?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I was certainly not blaming the aircraft manufacturers: as a matter of fact, I welcomed the opportunity for them to give more comprehensive bids which were extremely valuable in the whole process. As I said the other day, I am still targeting a final decision for late spring. However, I think it would be unwise to be tied down to a specific date on a contract of this importance, because we must make absolutely certain that we get the best deal for Canada that is possible, with the best industrial benefits possible. If that takes a couple of weeks more, those are weeks well worth taking. On the other hand, I would like to see the decision taken as quickly as possible, because this contract will be a great boon for Canadian industry.

Mr. McKinnon: The minister did not answer my question as to when he planned to sign the contract. Would he be prepared, either this month or next, to appear before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, together with his officials, to answer questions on both the schedule of funding for the new fighter aircraft and on the government's recent announcement of a further $150 million cut in his budget which, as many believe, is the real reason for the delay in the NFA contract?

Mr. Danson: I did not say when I was going to sign the contract, first of all because I am not the one to sign it: as the hon. member knows, the Minister of Supply and Services oversees these contracts. Second, I would not presume to want to sign a contract until it is negotiated. I gave the explanation as to when it would be negotiated, and how.

So far as the funds are concerned, this is in our financial envelope. We fully intend to meet our commitment to a 12 per cent growth in capital equipment. The budgetary savings in the calendar year 1979-80 will not affect this project, as the hon. member continually implies.

So far as appearing before the committee is concerned, the committee is master of its own business. I always appear before the committee when I am asked to so do, and would welcome any opportunity, as would my officials.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS' ADHERENCE TO ANTI-RUST GUIDELINES

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and it has to do with the voluntary anti-rust guidelines set down by the government. Has the minister held discussions with the automobile manufacturers; have they agreed to comply with the guidelines: and, if so, was any time-frame or deadline discussed?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we introduced this code in January of this year. It provides a one-year warranty against surface corrosion, three years against perforation, and a six-year warranty against structural damage. We did meet with the automobile companies. So far, 13 companies have accepted the code, ten have introduced specific warranties which are similar to the code, and two have not responded. But nobody has refused so far.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Can the minister tell the House how he proposes to monitor adherence to the guidelines, even if some of those companies have accepted the code? Does the government intend introducing any legislation in this regard?

Mr. Allmand: We did carry out a preliminary monitoring program last summer in Montreal and Toronto, through the Canadian Automobile Association, and we have submitted proposals to the companies and to the consumers' associations for a more extended monitoring program for next summer, following this coming winter. We are still awaiting a response from some of the companies on that.

With respect to legislation, we would prefer not to legislate. We feel that if the voluntary code is a success, we will not have to legislate.

* * *

COMMUNICATIONS

SUGGESTED ROYAL COMMISSION ON COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. I wonder if the Minister of Communications is prepared to communicate today. Perhaps she could confirm the reports across Canada indicating that officials in her department are requesting very distinguished Canadians to sit on a royal commission on communications.

● (1432)

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that: there are no officials of my department crossing Canada to set up a royal commission.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. If these communications are not to inquire about setting up a royal commission on communications at this late date in this parliament, and/or to seek employment in some other parliament, can the minister tell the House, in view of the introduction of Bill C-16, if she intends to proceed with that bill prior to the federal-provincial conference in February? What has happened to the timetable for the pay television model and/or her review on an earth satellite station policy?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the model on pay television will be submitted to the next conference of provincial ministers of communications to be held in the month of March. It could be accelerated and prepared before that date, if there is need to discuss that at one time or another in the course of our discussions with the provinces regarding federal-provincial relations.

As for the earth station policy, I think I will be in a position in a short while to give the House and the public an idea of the manner in which this will be reviewed.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

PROCESSING OF RAW MATERIALS IN CANADA IN ORDER TO CREATE JOBS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but as I understand he has been dispatched to Barbados during this critical budget week, I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

In order to start creating the additional 800,000 jobs which the Canadian Manufacturers' Association recently indicated can be made available in this country if we can overcome our $12 billion a year trade deficit in fully-manufactured products, when does the government intend to introduce legislation requiring those who export our primary products in their raw state to process a far higher proportion in this country as a condition of exporting, and in this way make available the jobs which Canadians have a right to expect and need very much indeed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because the House is well aware of the hon. member's propensity for vacation spots, I think I should correct him: the minister has a trade conference in Trinidad, not in Barbados. Therefore, I urge the hon. member to change his airline tickets so he can go and talk to the minister in Trinidad rather than Barbados, as I know he planned. He would find out what the House knows, that the government has done many things to produce expansion in Canada of the developmental sector. In practically each budget for the past several years, incentives have been given to the manufacturing and processing sectors, which the hon. member could find out about.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister did not answer my question and did not make any attempt to answer it, it is very obvious that the government has no intention at all of introducing necessary legislation such as I have outlined to him. Is it not obvious, when we receive vacuous answers such as the Prime Minister just gave, why the economy is in the terrible shape it is today?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Egmont.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS—GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIONS AT UN—HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSIONER

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to the recent establishment by his department of a new branch having to do with human rights issues. It also relates to his speech at the United Nations in September which took particular exception to human rights violations occurring in democratic Kampuchea.

What action has the government taken with regard to furthering its general concern for human rights in the United Nations and, in particular, the establishment of a human rights commissioner to which I believe the government now is committed? Has any particular action been taken by way of follow-up to our concern about human rights violations in Kampuchea, as expressed today by the hon. member for Parkdale in his motion under Standing Order 43?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the matter of the human rights commissioner, other than having made our position known at the General Assembly, I have also had our officials advocating this course not only with the officials of the United Nations but with other countries which we hope will support the idea.

On the democratic Kampuchea situation, I was pleased to learn that the Secretary General of the United Nations received an indication from the government of that country to inspect, himself, the human rights conditions. I can only assume that this was, at least in part, as a result of the statements we made at the United Nations. Since the Secretary General is going there, I consider that perhaps the most appropriate course is to await his return to see what kind of a report he makes, before taking any further action.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, respecting the establishment of the human rights commissioner, since Canada has let its position be known at the United Nations, have we taken any initiative to either initiate or co-sponsor a resolution which might effect the achievement of this position which has been discussed for a number of years at the United Nations? I do not believe that Canada, to date, has given any unique or forthright leadership in order that that post can be established and to make the UN more effective in dealing with human rights violations.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, it sounds to me like a worthwhile suggestion. It may very well have been done at some time in the past, before I was minister, but I do not recall it having been done in the last year or so.

In connection with whether we should put it forward formally, as the hon. member knows, that would depend upon how much support we could assess would be available, by consultation with friendly countries and the like. I will ask my officials to look into it and discuss it myself.

Also, may I just add, lest there be some misunderstanding with regard to Kampuchean refugees, when I mentioned doing nothing until the Secretary General returned, I meant on the broader question. On the question of individual families, I think I announced, at the same time, that we were increasing the assistance to refugees and boat people generally, as they are called.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORT ON SURVEY OF LARGE CANADIAN CORPORATIONS

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Today, the Toronto Globe and Mail reported on a survey of 300 large Canadian corporations that a 16.2 per cent rise in business spending is indicated for 1979. Will the minister indicate the basis for this improved position of Canadian business and how it might relate specifically to government policies?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question contains the answer: there is much more confidence in Canada than there was before.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

TRANSPORT

RAIL NETWORK FOR WESTERN CANADA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question involving basic government policy which I should like to direct to the right hon. Prime Minister. It arises out of actions by the government when it fully accepted the recommendations of the Hall royal commission on the basic rail network for western Canada as government policy.

In light of the fact that the chairman of the Department of Transport's Prairie Rail Action Committee has called the basic network itself an irrational collection of lines derived from a series of politically expedient decisions, and that events show there is too much mileage in the basic network, can the Prime Minister advise whether this is a change in government thinking or policy? If not, will he ask the Minister of Transport to dismiss Mr. Anderson?

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this was discussed at length yesterday. The government was very prompt to consider the Hall commission report. Two days after its publication, it had already acted, through an order in council, to protect the more than 1,000 kilometers of tracks which, as recommended by Mr. Justice Hall, should be part of the permanent system. Afterwards, more than 1,444 kilometers of the network were included in a second category for further consideration, and that part of the network was referred for an in-depth study to the commission mentioned by the hon. member.

By 1980, I believe western farmers as well as other users will have at their disposal a permanent railway system which will allow them to move their goods most efficiently.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I find it strange, when an officer of a commission appointed by the government flies in the face of government policy, that the Prime Minister will not deal with it and the minister's parliamentary secretary attempts to do so. The government has accepted the recommendation of Mr. Justice Hall as government policy, and Mr. Justice Hall also said that the task committed to the Prairie Rail Action Committee was premature and impossible of fulfilment within the time-frame given that committee.

● (1442)

May I ask the Prime Minister whether he will instruct the Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice to dismiss Mr. Anderson and disband the Prairie Rail Action Committee?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may not like parliamentary secretaries to deal with matters which come under the ministers to whom they are assigned but I would remind him that all members on our side of the House agree we are fully entitled to look after matters related to grain transport or other relevant matters whenever they come under our responsibilities.

It may be true that Mr. Fred Anderson flies in the face of the government, as the hon. member put it, but I would remind him that in past months it did happen that Mr. Justice Hall referred to other conclusions which perhaps did not agree with government policy. Still I wonder if he agrees with one of Mr. Justice Hall's recommendations, for instance when he suggested that there is no need for more hopper cars in the fleet used for moving western grain.

* * *

[English]

IMMIGRATION

ASYLUM IN CANADA FOR SOUTHEAST ASIAN REFUGEES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration: it relates to the plight of the 2,500 refugees now on the high seas who have been trying to get to Malaysia as the country of first asylum. This mattter, as the minister knows, was raised under Standing Order 43 by the hon. member for Parkdale.

I would ask the minister whether the Canadian government has contacted the United Nations high commissioner for refugee matters and committed Canada to accepting a number of these 2,500 refugees. If no contact has been made specifically in respect of these boat refugees, rather than the additional families regarding which the minister made a commitment earlier, will the minister indicate when contact will be made? If contact has been made, what has been the response?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations high commissioner for refugees commended Canada for its role in the refugee program. As you know, we announced the policy respecting the 50 small boat refugees and have increased that by another 20 families which we are taking by month for those going overland.

The present situation, as explained to us, is that the United Nations commissioner is, in fact, endeavouring to board that particular ship to find out what can be done. Normally, we wait for the approach to be made by the United Nations high commissioner. In light of the history and the excellent record Canada has in this regard, I would expect that we will probably be one of the first countries he would contact. We are looking at that issue now.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister whether he has been contacted by the church officials of Canada, of various denominations, who have been in contact with my office stating they would be willing to sponsor some of these refugees. Has the minister had these contacts; and, if so, what has been his response to these church officials?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, it is pretty difficult to make a response to the church officials until we know precisely the magnitude of the problem as discovered by the United Nations high commissioner for refugees. Once we have a contact from that particular office, we will be in a better position to respond. I do compliment the church officials for being quick off the mark on this one.

* * *

FORESTRY

DECISION NOT TO CLOSE PETAWAWA RESEARCH STATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State (Environment): it concerns the proposed amalgamation of the work of two of the forestry labs in Ottawa with the work in Petawawa.

Is the minister prepared to let the House know what study or what group recommended, first of all, the elimination of the establishment at Petawawa and, secondly, the basis for the reversal of that decision followed by the decision to integrate the work of Petawawa with the work of the two forestry institutes from Ottawa?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, these were internal decisions taken with my departmental officials.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I assume the minister is saying that the decisions were taken by the people of Petawawa and the institute itself, but that is not the story I am getting. Will the minister indicate whether any consideration at all was given to cutting the administrative costs between the operating end of the forestry service and the home base in Ottawa as a means of implementing the restraint program?

[Mr. Cullen.]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, the amalgamation of the Forest Fire Research Institute and the Forest Management Institute at Petawawa will result in considerable reduction in administrative costs.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

STABILIZATION PLAN RESPECTING WHITE BEANS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and it relates to the stabilization plan in respect of white beans.

It seems that producers who have worked hard to harvest their beans and sell them, but who had them graded as feed beans—and I said "feed", not "seed"—are now not eligible for stabilization. I am also advised that some producers received payment and are now being asked to send the cheques back. Will the minister advise us whether this is, in fact, the case and the way the plan was supposed to work? If that is so, will the minister have the plan changed, because these are the very producers who are most in need of this stabilization assistance?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of what the hon. member says about the stabilization board action regarding white beans. I will certainly look into it and report to the hon. member.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Since it took only six days to create the earth, and this is the seventh day I have been trying to get recognition, I shall rest, particularly as the question was asked by a member from Winnipeg.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POLICY RESPECTING CANFARM

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I would like to return to the subject of Canfarm in Guelph, Ontario. The decision of Canfarm's future was scheduled for announcement last Friday. In view of the fact that each day that goes by without a decision being made makes it that much more difficult for Canfarm to keep dedicated and qualified employees and to sign up new clients for the year 1979, may I ask the minister whether he can give the House a date when a decision will, in fact, be announced on Canfarm's future?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the people in Canfarm know what we are doing and how concerned we are. The people who use Canfarm in Canada know the very same thing. As I said earlier during the question period, we are doing everything we possibly can to make sure it stays alive. There may be some cutbacks in Canfarm, even with the submission made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, but I am not in a position to say at this time. All the technicalities, etc., of that proposal are not ironed out as yet.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the minister whether he will at least give the House the assurance that Canfarm will be kept alive until the time when it can be turned over to the private sector, something which is strongly supported by the employees, the farmers concerned, and certainly by me?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am condemned on the one hand for not keeping it alive with government funds; and when I said it should be privatized, I was condemned for that. I am glad to see that the member has come around to agreeing to both sides. I just want to say that I can say no more at this time, other than to suggest that our concern seems to be the same, that Canfarm should stay alive and we will do everything we can to make sure that happens.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RAYMOND CHUNG, VANCOUVER, B.C.—REUNIFICATION WITH FAMILY

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to Raymond Chung, of Vancouver, the beloved founder and master of T'ai Chi in Canada, who has for 16 years sought to be reunited in Canada with his wife and two children in mainland China.

Since the Peking government has been telling the free world it will act to honour our goals toward the free movement of people and family reunification, will the minister press China to prove its integrity and sincerity by reuniting Raymond Chung with his family?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have made a number of representations to the government of China on this particular case, as well as, of course, on the whole issue of family reunification. I regret to say that in this particular instance I have not had as much success as with many other family reunification matters, but I can assure the hon. lady that I will take it up again with the appropriate authorities.

* * *

● (1452)

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EVALUATION OF PACIFIC PETROLEUMS SHARES PURCHASED BY PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Why did Petro-Canada buy into Phillips Petroleum when it was at the end of a long rise in share prices of the past four years and only a year ago averaged $31? On what grounds did Petro-Canada evaluate the purchase, which seems to be some $20 higher than it was on the trading day? Is this to be another Texas Gulf type of transaction, when the CDC bought at the height of the market and the stock has not done very well since?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada paid a premium over the then market price, as the hon. member has noted. That is not extraordinary; indeed, every oil company takeover this year has involved a significant premium over market.

As to the actual price and what might be an appropriate price, this, of course, is a professional judgment. A professional judgment was taken by the board of directors and those who advised the board of directors of Petro-Canada.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT IN THEATRE IN NATIONAL PRESS BUILDING

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology: it deals with reports that between $500,000 and $1.5 million have been invested in the theatre at the National Press building.

Could the minister tell the House what the intention is for future use of that theatre, having regard to the fact that the Prime Minister seems determined to move his press conference out of that particular locale?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will have to investigate the figures suggested by the hon. member. They sound rather on the high side, and I am not sure whether he is talking about the original construction or the modifications to the building. It is my understanding, however, that the theatre will continue to be used in the future.

MOVING OF PRESS CONFERENCES FROM THEATRE IN NATIONAL PRESS BUILDING

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? He will recall that the Secretary of State made a long speech at UNESCO with respect to what we regard as freedom of the press in this country. In view of the statements made by the Secretary of State on this important topic, will the Prime Minister reconsider his plan to move press conferences to his own locale to allow him to stand in front of the television cameras, rather than being seated, as he is apparently concerned about this?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is an urgent question of national importance and I am anxious to answer the hon. member. It is precisely in keeping with the freedom of the press that we are moving to a larger room, because of the great onrush from the press of all quarters to hear me speak.

[Translation]

AGREEMENT CONCERNING RENTAL OF NEW MANPOWER DEPARTMENT OFFICES IN ROUYN, QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear the Prime Minister's answer where he seems to attach some importance to the space for newsmen.

My question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. An agreement was made in Rouyn to rent new offices for regrouping unemployment insurance and manpower offices to give more space to the staff, and this agreement was delayed over the years to the point that employees work in offices which are too small. They were advised to wait for the new offices which would—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question he should ask it immediately.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): My question is coming and if hon. members on the government side would listen perhaps they would understand. As a matter of fact, there was an agreement to rent new offices. Is the minister aware that recently his department cancelled that agreement and that they do not want to reconsider it in any way? Is the minister prepared to reevaluate this situation?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this fact, but I shall be very pleased to inquire about this and to inform the hon. member.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

EXPANSION OF ROBERTS BANK, B.C., FACILITIES—EFFECT ON SPAWNING GROUNDS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment: it concerns the rather massive expansion of the Roberts Bank port in the estuary of the Fraser River.

Clear evidence has been presented to the environmental panel that there will be substantial damage to about 300 acres of spawning grounds, with the potential loss of some $60 million in the future. Would the minister advise the House whether it is his intention to use the new fisheries legislation to ensure that construction does not destroy the fish habitat at the estuary in the Fraser River?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the hon. member has obviously read what officials of my department put forward as a position of sound conservation and protection of the habitat.

The legislation, which was passed unanimously by this House and which gives us power to prevent damage to spawning grounds, will be utilized if it is found to be applicable in this case. Certainly, the position taken by my officials was cleared with me and I intend to act accordingly.

COST OF EXPANSION OF ROBERTS BANK, B.C., FACILITIES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of State (Environment). I am pleased to hear that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment indicates that he will act in accordance with the law.

My question to the Minister of State (Environment) concerns the environmental assessment panel, under his jurisdiction, with regard to the Roberts Bank development which is now looking into environmental questions. One question that has not been put before the panel is the matter of the estimated cost of the construction. The chairman of the Vancouver harbours board indicated he would not release that figure to the commission. Could the minister indicate to the House why the estimated cost of that project has not been put before the public and before that inquiry?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, this question should more properly be put to my colleague, the Minister of Transport, who is acting as proponent of the project. I will check, on behalf of my colleague, to find out why that kind of figure could not have been put. It is my view and my wish that all kinds of information pertinent to that project going ahead should be put before the panel.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PURCHASE BY PETRO-CANADA OF SHARES IN PACIFIC PETROLEUMS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? Is the offer being made by Petro-Canada to Phillips Petroleum being made to all owners of outstanding stock of Pacific Petroleums Ltd. at the same price?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I made it quite clear that Petro-Canada wants to pick up all the shares of Pacific Petroleums, and it is the intention of Petro-Canada that all shareholders would get the same price.

Mr. Gillies: A supplementary question. Could the minister explain why shares of Pacific Petroleums were selling at $10 below offer price on the Toronto Stock Exchange today?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, it is not for me to speculate on that matter. It may have something to do with the fact that the board of directors of Pacific Petroleums has not yet met. They will meet on Thursday, at which time they will consider the proposal put to them by Petro-Canada.

* * *

FISHERIES

PLANS FOR DEVELOPMENT OF ATLANTIC FISHERIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. Could the minister tell the House if he will have some specific proposals for federal development of our fisheries when he meets with his four Atlantic provinces' counterparts, and will he take a more conciliatory attitude with them than he has heretofore?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I certainly found most interesting the points made by my colleagues at the meeting of the Atlantic ministers last Friday. I was trying to ascertain what their position was on sharing, consultation, etc. I found a fair difference of view as to what the words meant in English. Maybe if we had been speaking my other official language, I might have understood more clearly.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if it is the government's intention to participate in the development of our fisheries in the Atlantic provinces and, specifically, if it is the government's intention to co-operate with the government of Newfoundland on the excellent proposals they announced yesterday, so that we can maximize the opportunities open to us by virtue of the 200-mile limit and help reduce the substantial unemployment in the area?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the substantial budget of this department, plus the $200 million-odd we put in to keep the fishery alive since 1974, indicates, obviously, the level of commitment of all parties in this House.

As for the plan of the Newfoundland authorities, since I was not consulted and was not informed before the plan was made public, I am at a bit of a disadvantage to comment. I was a little surprised, frankly, that provinces which constantly ask me to consult with them should have—from the meeting last Friday—not informed their colleagues of the details of the new project.

* * *

● (1502)

PRIVILEGE

MR. CLARK—WITHDRAWAL OF IMPLICATION IN REMARKS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My seatmate, the House leader of the official opposition, has brought to my attention some debate that occurred in this House on November 10 in relation to a statement I made during debate in the afternoon of Wednesday of last week. That was a statement I made, sir, in response to an interjection by my good friend, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), who had moved within shouting range of me and invited me to make a remark which, on reflection, was more extreme than I intended.

As you made clear in your remarks on Friday, it is quite open for me to take no action at all on this matter; that that would be quite within my right. However, I have a very deep respect for the traditions of this House and I am conscious of the example that we can set here in this House, an example which will be seen and, I trust, followed by Canadians across the country.

I want to make it clear, therefore, that I had no intention of suggesting that any member of parliament from the other side of the House, or indeed any member of parliament at all, would deliberately seek to sow hatred in the country, and I want to withdraw any implication to that effect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am very grateful to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) for taking that step.

MR. STEVENS—PETRO-CANADA'S USE OF FUNDS TO PURCHASE SHARES IN PACIFIC PETROLEUMS LTD.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of the various exchanges that occurred in yesterday's question period, and particularly the exchanges with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), and also the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). Speaking very generally, the impression was left by those three ministers that the actual takeover of Pacific Petroleums on the part of Petro-Can had no federal implication. It was presented to us that this was a commercial transaction that the government felt Petro-Can were right in entering into. But, in any event, there was no consequence as far as the federal treasury was concerned. Perhaps one of the most direct answers to that effect was given by the President of Privy Council when he stated, as reported at page 1042 of Hansard:

> It is totally a commercial transaction, financed outside government expenditures by commercial transactions by the private banks of Canada.

I rise on a question of privilege because I feel the answers given by the ministers yesterday interfere in a direct way with my ability to perform as a member of parliament in this House.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, in the budget that was delivered on April 10 of this year, rather than reflecting the borrowings of certain agency corporations the Minister of Finance chose to make it simply a noted item. At that time the Minister of Finance stated:

> Direct market borrowings, of $463 million in 1976-77 and some $350 million in 1977-78, by agent Crown corporations, specifically Petro-Canada, the Export Development Corporation, and Eldorado Nuclear, which have been authorized to borrow under their respective statutes, are not included in Government of Canada financial requirements. In the projection of financial requirements for 1978-79, it is envisaged that such direct borrowings by agent corporations will continue—

Having noted that reference in the budget we on this side of the House took some pains to find out if the minister was saying there were no liabilities involved, and that was the reason why he had chosen not to reflect the borrowings I have referred to of such corporations as Petro-Canada, Eldorado or the Export Development Corporation, or alternatively, was the minister simply saying because the funds did not come directly from the Consolidated Revenue Fund that he chose to show them as a noted item. The answer was the latter. Simply because the funds were not being routed through the Consolidated Revenue Fund the government felt in future that, notwithstanding there was no disagreement, it had to stand behind those corporations, that they in effect were the principal behind those corporations and said it would prefer to show them as a separate item.

The reason I would suggest that my ability to function as a member of parliament has now been somewhat harmed is that if we accept at face value the statements which were made by the minister, to which I referred yesterday, it means Petro-Canada can literally borrow money to an unlimited amount with no covenant of the Dominion of Canada being involved. If that is so we must get it established before budget night this Thursday. In responding to the budget our members in this caucus, and certainly myself specifically, need to know are these liabilities of Petro-Canada in fact an obligation of Canada? Are the obligations of the Export Development Corporation of a like nature an obligation of Canada? If so, should they not be included in the general financial requirements of Canada, as the budget will outline? I stress this point because up until the rather startling statements made by the minister to which I have referred, there was really no question about this. I draw your attention to Section 14(1) of the Petro-Canada Act of Incorporation which states:

The corporation is, for all purposes of this act, agent of Her Majesty, and its powers under this act may be exercised only as an agent of Her Majesty.

It goes on to state in subsection (2):

The corporation may, on behalf of Her Majesty, enter into contracts in the name of Her Majesty or in the name of the corporation.

I take it that is simply empowering it to sign directly in its own name, that is, Petro-Canada, or to sign on behalf of Her Majesty. In either event it is acting as an agent for its principal, Her Majesty in the right of Canada.

In subsection (3) it goes on to state:

Property acquired by the corporation is the property of Her Majesty and title thereto may be vested in the name of Her Majesty or in the name of the corporation.

Subsection (3), I think, is particularly relevant. In response to a question put by myself to the Minister of Finance yesterday he responded at page 1042 of Hansard as follows, referring to the Petro-Canada, Pacific Petroleums deal:

I just want to say that it is a commercial transaction and Petro-Canada pledged the assets they have gained in making the transaction.

Subsection (3) of Section 14 of the Petro-Canada Act of incorporation makes it clear that they are not Petro-Canada's assets to pledge. To repeat that subsection again it says that the assets are the property acquired by the corporation and they are the property of Her Majesty and title thereto may be vested in the name of Her Majesty or in the name of the corporation.

If I may point out, other sections of this act make it very clear that any obligation of Petro-Canada may be sued for in the name of the Queen. Second, in Section 7(5) of this act it is stated that all the borrowing authority of Petro-Canada are only operative provided they have a proper order in council. You will recall, sir, that I referred to the fact earlier in today's question period that in this connection an order in council was passed on June 16, 1978, in which, on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) and the Minister of Finance, pursuant to section 7(5) of the Petro-Canada Act, the supplementary capital budget of Petro-Canada for the financial year 1978 was approved.

There is a schedule attached. That schedule shows there is contemplated a supplemental or extra usage of funds on the part of Petro-Canada in their 1978 capital budget of $819.9 million. They show the source of those funds. They say that the common shares that will be issued by the corporation will supply $205 million, the preferred shares $65 million, debt financing $504 million, and there is a certain adjustment figure to come out to the $819.9 million.

● (1512)

I suggest that schedule is doubly important. First, it confirms that Petro-Canada is certainly acting under the provisions, as you would expect, of the act incorporating them. They specifically sought the consent of the governor in council. Second, it provides for the actual issue of preferred shares and common shares of this corporation. Those shares, certainly in the case of the preferred shares, can only come under another section of this act from the Government of Canada. They are the only ones who can subscribe to those preferred shares.

In looking for some reason as to why the government might have presumed it had the right through Petro-Canada to borrow moneys and yet not involve the covenant of the Government of Canada, I can only assume it has turned to section 23 of the Petro-Canada Act of incorporation. In that section it is stated that the corporation, that is, Petro-Canada, may issue certain debentures, have securities guaranteed under another section, and may put out certain loans, or issue preferred shares. But, in any event, they may not exceed $1 billion.

The reason I think this is significant is because, in effect, what this section is saying is that there is a limit as to how much the Government of Canada can put into Petro-Canada, either in the form of capitalization, in the form of direct loan advances, or in the form of gurantees of a direct nature as far as the corporation is concerned.

The subsection that the government may be relying on is subsection (2) of section 23, which states:

> Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as limiting the amount > (a) that the corporation may borrow without a Crown guarantee; or > (b) that a subsidiary of the corporation may borrow.

If in fact the government is relying on that section, I think that a legal opinion should be supplied to show why that section has an overriding effect on section 14 to which I originally referred, which makes it very clear that Petro-Canada throughout their entire activities act as an agent.

I am advised by my legal counsel that the statutory interpretation of section 23 is not in any way to minimize the agent principal relationship between Petro-Canada and the Government of Canada. It is simply to make it clear that the total limit of any direct guarantee of any advance or of any capital infusion on the part of Canada is $1 billion.

Beyond that point my legal counsel tell me the section simply says they can borrow other moneys, but if they borrow those moneys relying on section 14, which is the overriding section, they clearly have borrowed those funds as an agency of Her Majesty in the right of Canada, and as such the covenant of Canada goes with those funds.

To support that argument I would refer to the comparable act in this regard, a very similar act incorporating the Export Development Corporation. In fact, section 14 as it appears in the Petro-Canada Act is almost, with the exception I think of three words, identical to the section you find in the Export Development Corporation Act. In short, that corporation under their act, like Petro-Canada, not only are designated an agent of Her Majesty in the right of Canada, but they are both put into Schedule D of the Financial Administration Act.

Dealing with the Export Development Corporation, various prospectuses have been filed, mainly in the United States. Those prospectuses, for example, make statements such as this:

> Export Development Corporation

Immediately under it is shown:

> (An agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada)

It is then stated that the notes, that is, the notes that are being proposed to be sold by the Export Development Corporation under this prospectus, and I quote:

> —will constitute direct obligations of Export Development Corporation and as such will constitute obligations of Her Majesty in right of Canada. Payment of the principal of and interest on the notes will be a charge on and payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

It is my submission that Petro-Canada has no different status under its act of incorporation under the Financial Administration Act than the Export Development Corporation, and any debts they incur are in fact incurred as an agent on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada. We must identify those because, when a budget is presented in this House, it will be a total distortion of the facts if the direct and indirect obligations of Her Majesty in the right of Canada are not identified as such. That is why I am suggesting that our rights, certainly my rights within this House, to act in an effective way, are being hampered.

If for the first time there is some doubt being shown as to what is the effect of an agency corporation of Petro-Canada borrowing money, then we must get this clarified. Certainly I do not want, unintentionally or otherwise, to be making statements as to what in fact are the gross or net obligations of Canada if in fact the ministers are correct in making the statement they have made. However, to the best of my knowledge, certainly on the advice of counsel that we have consulted, the ministers are not correct in making this suggestion that the resources of Canada in the name of Her Majesty are not charged.

For the Minister of Finance to suggest that the Petro-Canada assets acquired on this takeover of Pacific Petroleums are being pledged seems to be in direct defiance of the act which states that all assets of Petro-Canada are assets of the Crown.

I could give further evidence of the point I am making. I acknowledge that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, during today's question period, said that he felt he had an answer. I will certainly look forward to what he has to say. However, if he is relying on the provisions of Section 23 of the Petro-Canada Act, he is relying on a very weak argument. It can only be accepted on receipt of proper legal opinion indicating that, notwithstanding Section 14 of the Petro-Canada Act, the Queen in the name of Canada is not bound by Petro-Canada borrowings or any other obligations.

I feel it is a very material matter that is before us, particularly in this budget week, because an understanding on the finances of this government is essential to the proper operation of this House. In truth, if these are direct or indirect obligations of Canada, we must know that. If, presumably unintentionally, the ministers have misrepresented the facts, they should be allowed to clarify the record to that effect.

If you, sir, find that I have a question of privilege, particularly as it relates to my ability to function as a member of parliament and certainly as my party's financial spokesman, I would be prepared to move the proper motion to have a reference to the suitable committee of this House so that the matter may be gone into in some depth.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the opening remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), he referred to the fact that ministers had described this transaction as a commercial transaction. That, of course, is precisely what it is. It is a commercial transaction. It was financed by a normal commercial instrument which has been used by the private sector repeatedly. It was handled by the commercial banking system of Canada. So let me reaffirm it was a commercial transaction entered into by a Crown corporation under the legislative authority provided by parliament in the act setting up the corporation.

● (1522)

I think it is important to recognize that parliament did set up this Crown corporation. It did give it powers, and it did give it latitude and flexibility with respect to some of its financial arrangements. As to the nature of the financing, I do not intend to go into the details of that; I think it would be more appropriate for that information to come from the officers of the corporation. But the transaction was financed through a subsidiary of Petro-Canada, Petro-Canada Explorations Inc., which holds all the revenue producing assets of Petro-Canada.

During the debate yesterday, in the notice with respect to the question of privilege which the hon. member for York-Simcoe gave, considerable doubt was cast on the question of government guarantees. Let me deal with that one. There is no question that Petro-Canada as an agent of Her Majesty is covered, as are other Crown corporations, by the Financial Administration Act. That is common knowledge and is not in question. But I was asked by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) whether or not there were any expressed guarantees by the federal government. I would refer the House to Hansard, page 1050, I believe, in which yesterday's debate is reported. That is a fair question, Mr. Speaker.

I would draw to the attention of the hon. member and of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, section 21 of the Petro-Canada Act in particular, which is subtitled "Guarantees." Section 21(1) reads:

> Subject to section 23, the governor in council may, on the recommendation of the minister and the Minister of Finance, authorize the Minister of Finance to guarantee on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada, the principal and interest of any debentures or other securities issued by the corporation for the purpose of raising capital otherwise than from Her Majesty in right of Canada.

Section 21(2) goes on to say:

> The Minister of Finance may approve or decide the form, manner and conditions of guarantees under this section.

It seems quite a proper question to address. Were the guarantees which were anticipated in the legislation setting up Petro-Canada sought from the Government of Canada? I can tell the House that those guarantees were not given under this section of the act, nor were any other express guarantees with respect to this transaction given by the Government of Canada.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the minister has brought me into this and I rise because I do not think in all fairness he gave a proper summary of the question I put to him and which he answered. I asked him whether he was saying in connection with this transaction that there is absolutely no financial responsibility on the part of the federal government. Is he saying not only that the federal government did not engage in any expressed guarantee but, by virtue of Petro-Canada being the agent of the government and the implications of that under the Financial Administration Act, there is no financial responsibility on the government in connection with this transaction, by way of guarantee or otherwise? I do not think that anybody could have read his answer or listened to his answer today without coming away with the impression that it was calculated to give the impression that the answer was no, that there was no financial responsibility, not only no expressed guarantee but no financial responsibility on the part of the Government of Canada.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

An hon. Member: Read his answer.

Mr. Stanfield: I have read his answer very carefully. I want to say there is only one reasonable impression one could get from reading his answer. It may be that the answer is worded in such a way that he can say he did not answer my question. But he purported to answer my question. He certainly gave the impression he was answering my question and he certainly gave the impression that the answer was in the negative, that it was a purely commercial transaction and there was no way in which the government is involved.

I got the impression today that he is not maintaining that position, that he is not maintaining the Government of Canada is not financially responsible for this, he is not denying the point made by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe.

I feel deeply aggrieved. I have always regarded the minister as being an honest man. I have not always agreed with him, but I believe I have a question of privilege. I think he tried in a smart way to mislead in this matter, and I do not think this is the sort of thing which should be allowed to pass unnoticed in this House.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will not take up too much time of the House. I rise because I gave notice last night to the Chair of my intention to raise a question of privilege. I did not give notice today because it follows the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). It relates to an answer given to me by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) in connection with the same matter. I asked about the liability of the Crown, and the Deputy Prime Minister stated, as reported in Hansard at page 1042, "This does not represent in any way a demand on government resources."

My hon. friend from York-Simcoe presented detailed, accurate, and sincere arguments about the impact this has on our ability to operate; whether this is, indeed, a factual statement of the circumstances. I shall not go over that again but I want to reiterate one point.

Section 14 of the act is very clear. It states that in terms of every transaction Petro-Canada might undertake it is an agent of Her Majesty. Therefore the principal, Her Majesty, or the Government of Canada cannot avoid being responsible for the actions of the agent and therefore maintains a liability in terms of any debts which might be incurred by Petro-Canada. Section 14(3) points out that all property of Petro-Canada, owned directly or indirectly, is the property of Her Majesty. Thus, any pledge of property to support any debentures, or other documents which have been sold by Petro-Canada, are pledges of property belonging to the Government of Canada, to the people of Canada, and therefore there is a government liability; it does represent a demand on government resources, totally contrary to the statement made by the Deputy Prime Minister.

I sincerely hope the Chair will give serious consideration to accepting the motion put forward by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe so that this matter can be referred to the committee, because this whole question of Crown corporations—their liability, the way they operate, how their books are accounted for, and how their spending is accounted for—is not a new issue; it is an issue which has been with us for a while, and one which is in considerable dispute not only between this side and the government but between the Auditor General and the government.

A related matter is this question of the capital budget of Petro-Canada which was approved by the cabinet on June 16 in Privy Council document 1978/1975, by outlining the capital budget which has a source of funds of $205 million in common shares and $269 million in preferred shares.

● (1532)

The Petro-Canada Act states quite specifically that only the Government of Canada can purchase the common or preferred shares of Petro-Canada. This was approved on June 12. I have looked through the main estimates for 1978-79. I have looked through the supplementary estimates which were tabled just last week. Nowhere in those estimates is there a statement by the government that it has put up the cash to purchase these shares, yet the act states specifically that the purchase of common shares is a demand on the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and that therefore that should appear in the spending estimates of the government. This was authorized in June.

There is every reason to believe that money has been committed or spent in terms of the purchase of share in Pacific Petroleums, yet nowhere in the miscellaneous estimates does this item appear. I think there may be a separate item of privilege in the sense that the estimates do not reflect the factual position of the government in terms of the commitment it has made.

I would like briefly to make one further point. I refer to the position of the Auditor General. Just weeks ago the Public Accounts of Canada for 1977-78 were tabled. The Auditor General mentioned again, as he has repeatedly in the past, that the manner in which the government treats the accounts of Crown corporations, the manner in which it includes within its own budget certain expenditures of Crown corporations and the manner in which it excludes certain operations of Crown corporations from its public accounts, create an inaccurate picture of government assets and expenditures. I think that in itself constitutes an item of privilege because an inaccurate statement of accounts is presented to us, as members of this House of Commons, as a factual statement in terms of government spending.

While this is somewhat separate from the point raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, it is related. I think this is a grand opportunity to have this issue explored in depth in the appropriate committee so that we can reach some final decision as to what the liabilities of the taxpayers are with regard to Crown corporations and what declarations must be made public in terms of Crown corporations. I am sure the government would have to admit that it is in the best interests of good government and our democratic system to have the rules out in the open and accurate information placed before the House. I strongly urge acceptance of the motion of the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as regards the question of privilege directed to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), I would like to add the following: it was the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) who put a specific question to the Deputy Prime Minister as reported on page 1041 of Hansard, and I quote:

—Will the Deputy Prime Minister give his firm commitment that there will be no further nationalization of private companies—

It was in that context, Mr. Speaker, that the Deputy Prime Minister answered the hon. member for Calgary Centre. He wanted to know whether the government was going to nationalize other private companies and the answer to that specific question was also quite clear. The Deputy Prime Minister answered:

I also ask him to probe more deeply beneath the surface of this transaction to discover for himself that the purchase was made entirely without government funds. It is entirely a commercial transaction. It is not drawing upon the revenue of the Government of Canada.

However, Mr. Speaker, if the question put by the hon. member and the answer given by the Deputy Prime Minister are examined in their proper context, it becomes obvious there is no breach whatsoever of the hon. member's privileges. The hon. member is making a fanciful interpretation of a federal law, namely the Petro-Canada Act, and he is giving interpretations. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) even went so far as soliciting legal advice to ascertain whether section 23 of the Petro-Canada Act could be interpreted in such or such a way in light of other sections of the same act. This is a purely academic debate, Mr. Speaker. It is interesting to hear legal advice in the House, but it is equally interesting to note that some questions of privilege are ludicrous and do not hold water. In this case, it is much more a point of debate and a matter of interpreting answers given to quite specific questions than a matter of whether there has been any breach of the privileges of the hon. members for York-Simcoe or for Calgary Centre in carrying out their duties as members of parliament.

I suggest the facts speak for themselves, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Calgary Centre wants to know whether the government intends to nationalize other companies. The Deputy Prime Minister said we have no intention of nationalizing any company whatsoever, and in this instance the government is spending no money. A corporation created by a federal act is investing funds through the intermediary of the bank: it is a commercial transaction. There is nothing dishonest about that, nothing that is contrary to the Petro-Canada Act; moreover, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) himself gave the answer about the whole matter saying it was strictly a question of debate. He referred the hon. member to section 21, paragraphs (1) and (2) of the Petro-Canada Act where the legislator saw fit to specify that in certain cases, circumstances or procedures might necessitate the intervention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) or the government to guarantee a commercial or financial operation on the part of Petro-Canada.

Now, in this instance, neither the government nor the Minister of Finance had to resort to the provisions of section 21, paragraphs (1) and (2) of the Petro-Canada Act. It is in that context, Mr. Speaker, that we must interpret the replies of both the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Deputy Prime Minister to the questions of the hon. members for York-Simcoe and Calgary Centre.

If one is taking into serious consideration the facts which are the very basis of the questions of privilege brought up today, one realizes that we are dealing with what is far more a matter of legal interpretation, discussion or debate than a matter of privilege of hon. members of parliament.

[English]

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my contribution will be short. I find myself compelled to say a few words because I do not believe that the motion of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is very serious.

Petro-Canada has had very rough going at the hands of many hon. members, particularly hon. members opposite. I think we should look back to when the bill setting up Petro-Canada was undergoing study in committee and in this House. After second reading there was a clause or clauses in the bill which made the relationship between Petro-Canada and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources much closer than is normal with Crown corporations. Clause 2 of the bill was before the committee for about 13 meetings, and in order to pass the bill it was agreed that the relationship between the minister and the corporation would be broken and that the relationship would be at arm's length. I think that was at the insistence of the opposition. Now we have the opposition claiming that for every step Petro-Canada takes, and every time it buys a paper clip, the government and the minister must be responsible.

There was an attempt to separate the corporation from the government. That proposal was accepted by our party in the interest of getting the corporation going. No matter what happens, the opposition will constantly berate Petro-Canada in this House. It happened with regard to the purchase of Husky and is happening with regard to Pacific Petroleums.

I believe Petro-Canada is an imporant part of the petroleum industry of this country. It is important that we have a national petroleum company, in the same way Britain has one and Italy has one. Some foreign state-owned petroleum companies are operating in Canada. The opposition constantly seems to be trying to undermine Petro-Canada. I understand that, if they had the power, they would immediately sell its assets.

• (1542)

I believe that in the course of the debates in committee it was clearly developed that Petro-Canada and the minister were separated in the interest of getting the bill through.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but I rise on the same point. I would simply like to serve notice—I think this is the first time I have had to give you notice—that I would like to consider bringing in a question of privilege myself in view of the answer given me yesterday by the minister. I took his answer at face value, but in view of the fact that the law as expressed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), and apparently accepted by the minister himself, puts a different light on it, I should like to reflect on whether I will raise a question of privilege against the minister. This is not something I would do lightly, but I simply want to give you notice, sir, and in view of the lapse of time I regard this very seriously.

If I come to the conclusion that I will raise a question of privilege, I would like to do it tomorrow. I will do it reluctantly, but if my present impression with regard to how the matter stands is correct, I will be proceeding with it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course I will grant the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), as I would any other member, the right to reflect on the matter which he considers so seriously. Therefore I will stand the matter over until the hon. member for Halifax has had a further opportunity to examine it, and if he or other hon. members want to make further contributions after that time, I will be glad to hear them.

I think all hon. members will have to recognize, however, that the basic difficulty of the Chair in matters of this sort stems from two problems. When a minister, after a matter has been raised in this way as a question of privilege, returns to his reply and indicates that that was the reply he gave and that he has examined the matter, given it further consideration, and still stands by that reply, from a procedural point of view the Chair has two difficult decisions to make. The first is that if I were to try to make a decision, I have to make a substantive decision on the basis of facts, as to what set of facts is correct. Essentially that is a disagreement on facts, but often, to resolve it, the test that the Chair has to apply is whether it is a disagreement as to facts or a question of privilege by virtue of an attempt to mislead.

If the Chair finds itself in the position of having to make a decision between the two sides on a interpretation of facts, that is enough for the Chair to surrender the question of privilege and say that on procedural grounds, and in the circumstances, it has no jurisdiction. The difficulty is even more severe here because we are not even arguing about a question of facts but rather about an interpretation of the statute. Therefore the matter seems to place upon the Chair the obligation, not only of deciding on the correctness of facts but also of making a judgment as to which argument is correct under the law.

While I would concede generally that because of the clarity of the opinions which have been expressed this afternoon I would have no difficulty in deciding on the facts, the intricate arguments of the law would be more than I would be expected to decide. Therefore, I say, in a serious way, that if this is where these discussions are leading us, no matter how great the grievance may be, it may leave me in a situation in which procedurally I would have no authority to act, because if we have a disagreement of law and facts, surely that is not a procedural matter on which the Chair should decide.

However, I say that today only in a preliminary way, and I will stand the matter over until I have heard further from the hon. member for Halifax as to whether he wishes to proceed, and if at that time there are other hon. members who have contributions to make, after reviewing what I have had to say this afternoon, I will hear them then.

MR. RODRIGUEZ—ANSWER GIVEN BY POSTMASTER GENERAL

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) gave notice earlier of a grievance with respect to remarks made by the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne). I think it was understood that when both members were back in the House, they would address themselves to it. Do I have an indication now that either hon. member wishes to develop that point further?

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I raised my question of privilege last week and went through the details at that time. Furthermore, I sent to Your Honour's office today a further addendum dealing with that question of privilege. I believe you are to make a ruling today, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Both hon. members made a contribution to this point the other day. After examining the record, I found some difficulty because the words which the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) used in reply to a question put by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) were the following:

> Mr. Speaker, when I listen to a question like that, I wonder if the attitude of the hon. member is not one of protecting the workers who got involved in illegal activities or actions disrupting the postal service.

The situation is this: I think there are two things which would tend to cause me to set the point aside, expect that an abundance of caution would tell me that I might ask the Postmaster General to make his position clear. I think that might be the safer course to follow.

It seems to me that I should ask for the withdrawal of the language only when the language used clearly imputes motives which are unsavoury, or else where the language is unparliamentary. In the circumstances, in looking at the language I find that certainly unparliamentary language was not used, but it may be, as the Postmaster General attempted to say on that day, that his answer contained a more generous interpretation than appeared at first. If that is the case, that the Postmaster General was simply concerning himself with whether or not the hon. member was protecting union members who were being charged with offences, that seems to me to be a legitimate objective of the hon. member. It is not protecting union members who have difficulty in the courts, and it is certainly not an unsavoury implication.

However, it appeared in the answer that, because of the last couple of words "or actions disrupting the postal service" the impression might have been conveyed that the Postmaster General was attempting to say that the hon. member was concerning himself with protecting those who were disrupting the postal service, instead of putting a question. If that is so, I would ask the Postmaster General, out of an abundance of caution, to clarify to the House that he did not intend to impute that kind of motive to the hon. member. If that could be done, the matter could be gracefully retired.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I can say clearly that I did not intend to impute motives to the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). However, I would like to stress the fact that in reading the question of the hon. member I find I could probably have raised a number of questions of privilege because the question is full of insinuations that we are threatening the employees and that harassment is our policy. I do not think that is the way to ask a question in the House, with that presumption.

I am not imputing motives to the hon. member nor, I am sure, is he imputing motives to me or to the Post Office Department. The fact is that when we have good, law-abiding workers, they do not have to worry, and if they have nothing reprehensible in their record we would be glad to withdraw the letter of intent. In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the words went beyond my meaning.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POLLING DAY

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-442, to amend the Canada Elections Act (choice of polling day).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the need for this bill arose during the recent by-elections when the government called the by-elections on a religious holiday. There appears to be a lack of flexibility in the legislation at present which requires that an election be held on a Monday or, in certain cases, on a Tuesday.

● (1552)

One of the thrusts of this bill is to permit an election to be called on a Wednesday, Thursday, or subsequent day, if a religious holiday intervenes. A second thrust of the bill is to provide that the advance polls be open until ten o'clock at night, because Saturday advance polls always conflict with the Jewish religious holiday. It would extend the voting hours until ten o'clock to overcome that problem.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 246 and 254.

[Text]

VETERANS AFFAIRS—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 246—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Department of Veterans Affairs and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

ENVIRONMENT—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 254—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Department of Fisheries and the Environment and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1978-79

MEASURE TO GRANT SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING POWER

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-7, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1978-79 and to amend the Financial Administration Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before putting the question, may I advise the House, pursuant to the special order adopted on Thursday, October 26, 1978, a total of five hours has been allocated to report stage and third reading stage of this bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not including any time spent on votes.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved:

That Bill C-7, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1978-79 and to amend the Financial Administration Act, be amended in clause 5 by striking out lines 22 to 24 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"5. (1) This act shall come into force on a date, after royal assent, to be fixed by proclamation."

He said: Before Your Honour leaves the chair, could we have a clarification of your interpretation of the House order under which we are operating? Quite rightly Your Honour referred to five hours of debate for report stage and third reading of Bill C-7, but I understood that was exclusive of any time to be taken in the voting proceedings. Is that correct?

Mr. Speaker: That is my specific recollection. If there is any disagreement on that, I can be informed, but my specific recollection is precisely in the terms stated by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

In order to set the record straight, the last paragraph of the order reads as follows:

That the report and third reading stage of the bill not exceed a total of five hours in addition to any time required for divisions.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In speaking to my motion today, I feel hon. members may be interested in an explanation of why I feel this motion deserves support. If hon. members refer to Bill C-7, they will note that the clause I am proposing to change simply reads as follows:

This act shall come into force or be deemed to have come into force on November 1, 1978.

During committee proceedings there was considerable questioning of the minister and certain of his officials respecting the present state of the borrowing authority of the Government of Canada. They were asked to what extent debt already was incurred under previous borrowing authorities, and to what extent is there room to borrow more funds.

The reason this questioning was so significant was because last March the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) secured an authority to borrow an additional $5 billion. At that time he indicated that that borrowing authority would be sufficient to suit the government's needs until the end of fiscal 1978-79. In short, the authority was granted to the minister by parliament on the understanding that that was all he needed. Then, on the introduction of this bill, the minister stated that an additional $7 billion is needed. He gave various reasons why that additional amount was needed. For example, he stated that foreign borrowings had exceeded expectation, and that the Canada Savings Bond issue had to be covered.

I should like to make two points respecting those comments of the Minister of Finance. When he introduced this bill, certainly foreign borrowings were contemplated to the extent of $3 billion to possibly $4 billion. They were in hand on March 22 when the minister asked and secured the $5 billion authority to which I have referred. It is unfortunate that he would attempt to fudge this issue by saying, "We said $5 billion, but we did not realize the foreign borrowing was going to be a little bigger; so please give us more money". Before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the government made it very clear that borrowing authority to the extent of $3 billion or $4 billion was in hand.

My second point deals with the Canada Savings Bond issue. At the present time the Canada Savings Bond issue is outstanding. In fact it was supposed to close tomorrow, in the sense that if one wanted to pick up one's bonds, one could do so tomorrow. During committee stage we became very curious as to whether the Canada Savings Bond issue could be closed if this bill is not passed. In short, has the government sufficient available borrowing authority, be it $5 billion or some other authority, to close the present Canada Savings Bond issue?

Rather than refer to the various minutes of the committee, perhaps I can summarize them. It was said before committee, "No, we need the bill passed or we cannot close the Canada Savings Bond issue to the extent we would like". When the government sensed what we were getting at, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Martin) then started to waffle a little in committee. He said that really on reflection it was a question of whether the net borrowings were sufficient. Without unduly delaying the House, I should like to summarize what happened in committee.

The real story is: if the government has to exercise its full lines of credit with foreign and Canadian banks, literally there would not be enough room left to finish the Canada Savings Bond issue, certainly if sales under the current issue are in the order of $6 million to $8 million, which is the government's hope. If there is any single example of government economic policies being in a chaotic state, this is it. To have a government, on the eve of closing Canada Savings Bond issue, come before the House requesting a fast and quick $7 billion borrowing authority, leaves some doubt as to whether it will be able to close the Canada Savings Bond issue.

The government is attempting to keep a stiff upper lip and to pretend to the outside world that there is no problem. Why did it have to extend the time from November 15 to November 22 when people could pick up their bonds with no loss of interest? The truth is that the government cannot close the deal as it intended because the bill has not been passed as yet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: The government has put itself into another corner. Can it be believed that it is in a corner with something which could have been anticipated 12 months ago, namely, the financing of its Canada Savings Bond issue for the fall of 1978? That is the kind of governing we have, and that is the type of government with which we have been living. Is it any wonder the government is so reluctant to face the nation? This government knows this type of irresponsibility would certainly be condemned by the voters of Canada. This is symbolic of how this government has been handling the economic affairs of this country; it is ad hockery gone wild, simply an attempt to solve yesterday's problems today, with new problems requiring solution developing very quickly. This government is stumbling and bumbling.

● (1602)

I feel this November 1 date is of importance for a number of reasons, specifically in view of the answers to direct questions put to officials who appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We asked what the significance of the November 1 date was, and the officials replied that this was the beginning of the Canada Savings Bond issue. In short, unless this legislation is passed in a retroactive fashion, this government is in trouble. It will be in trouble because there is a serious legal question as to whether it can actually complete this Canada Savings Bond issue without authority.

As we know, the borrowings of this government are very clearly covered by the Financial Administration Act. It states that no money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of parliament. This government has put in place a Canada Savings Bond issue. It has placed advertisements and has agents working, and it has increased the interest rate on the issue twice during its sale. It has extended the free period from November 15 to November 22 in order to attract more buyers. Incidentally, we think that extension is also because the government thinks that will provide enough time for this bill to receive passage in this House. As of this date we do not believe the government has the clear authority to close this deal.

Let us put this into perspective. What will that free week, the extension from November 15 to November 22, cost the Canadian taxpayers? During that week buyers will be able to pick up the extra interest, notwithstanding the fact they will not have to put out the cash. I suggest this will cost the taxpayers an additional $13 million. By this one example of maladministration the Canadian taxpayer is being asked to pay an additional $13 million in added interest that will have to be paid for funds which will not be received until November 22.

Just consider how ridiculous the situation is in which this government finds itself. If for some reason this bill has not received passage by November 22, the government will literally have to postpone the closing date, perhaps until November 29, hoping parliament will finally give authority to complete the deal.

You might ask, Mr. Speaker, why we are suggesting that the November 1 date, to which I have referred as the date in relation to the Canada Savings Bond issue, should be changed. I suggest it should be changed because it is contemptible for the government to take parliament so much for granted as to bring forward a bill that will give the government retroactive authority in respect of something it should have brought forward in advance, allowing us a proper opportunity to appraise the situation.

You may ask, Mr. Speaker, why we want to embarrass the government in this way, by changing the November 1 date to some other date. Obviously if the government is caught in this deal it will be caught royally, because it will not be in a position to close the Canada Savings Bond issue. I suggest this is one instance when we must take the minister's words at face value. We must accept what he said literally, and I think he misled the House. I think it is in the interest of every hon. member to hold him to his word.

Last Friday when I asked the minister directly if he had the authority to close the Canada Savings Bond issue he replied categorically that he did. That reply was in direct contradiction to the evidence given before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—a truly remarkable thing. Having given that reply, we should take the minister at his word. If he does not really need, or does not rely on the November 1 date, he should support this motion which simply states that authority will come into effect after royal assent, whenever the government wants to proclaim it. That is what we are saying in this amendment.

The reason we included the words "after royal assent" is simply that we did not want the government to play games. Had we simply said the government would have authority following royal assent and by proclamation, the government might retroactively have proclaimed the act, effective November 1.

Let us check to see what the minister actually said in respect of this direct question. He was asked a question by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), as to whether he had sufficient authorization available to close the Canada Savings Bond issue, to which the minister replied that he had. Let me read into the record exactly what was said as it appears in Hansard of November 10, at page 1008:

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would first like to congratulate him for being here in the House of Commons—I know this is a busy period—when 20 of his colleagues are away. He is one of four who are here.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member corrected that, saying it should have read "one of 14 who are here".

The hon. member went on as follows:

My question is this: yesterday at the finance committee—

AN HON. MEMBER: Where is your leader?

MR. CROSBIE: Listen to them bray over there, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday at the finance committee, in answer to a question as to where the authority would come from to cover the present Canada Savings Bonds issue, the parliamentary secretary to the minister said there would be between $3 billion and $4 billion of the current Canada Savings Bonds issue authorized by Bill C-7.

My question, therefore, to the minister is this: is it the position that unless Bill C-7 is passed by parliament, there cannot be completed the current sale of Canada Savings Bonds which is to total, in gross, from $6 billion to $8 billion; that these bonds cannot be sold and the transaction consummated unless Bill C-7 is passed? Is that the reason the minister agreed to drop his abominable $10 billion additional imposition of authority for next year?

[Mr. Stevens.]

The minister in his reply said:

No, Mr. Speaker, we are not afraid that the Canada Savings Bonds issue will not be pursued. There is no problem. We have enough borrowing authority to go through with the campaign. We hope this bill will be passed as quickly as possible, as we need the authority to carry on for the rest of the year after that campaign.

On the basis of that answer by the minister, I think it is proper for us to assume that he does not need the retroactive date. It was made very clear to the committee that this date dovetailed with the Canada Savings Bonds issue. If that is the only reason for this inclusion, then I suggest it should be removed. Rather than the November 1 date it would be better to have the act come into force on the date following royal assent, by proclamation.

We should make it very clear that the minister, in giving that answer, was counting on everything working in his favour. He clearly hoped, for example, that the line of credit to which I referred would not have to be utilized too quickly. We have been pressing the government to indicate whether the borrowings of Petro-Can represent obligations on the part of Canada or are, as the ministers have been implying, some other kind of strange things such as borrowings, but not borrowings that obligate Canada. One of the reasons we are pressing is that surely, when considering the over-all debt position at the federal level, including the authority to borrow even more money, it is absolutely essential to have a definition of what is included in the debt calculation, and what is excluded.

● (1612)

That is why I suggest that members who may agree to join in this debate on Bill C-7 should do so bearing in mind that we are dealing with the whole conscience of why we are here. It is the question of parliament's control of governmental expenditures, including governmental borrowings.

When this bill was at second reading I put certain facts on the record about how desirable it would be to get better control of expenditures. I mentioned that the debt level in Canada is almost triple what it was a few years ago. I would reiterate that because I think it is absolutely essential that parliament regain its position as the controller of Canada's treasury. I therefore urge hon. members to support my motion. I feel this would be a better piece of legislation if it were made clear that it will only be operative from the time parliament passes it, as opposed to being retroactive to November 1.

The more I think about the consequences of the government's borrowings, the more I reflect on what its attitude seems to be with respect to $671 million it has to put up for the purchase of 48 per cent of Pacific Petroleums Ltd. I become alarmed particularly when I hear the attitude of my colleagues to my left, the socialists, who have been egging the government on. Today they presented a motion under Standing Order 43 urging members on the government side to go further. I presume the thrust of that motion was to encourage the takeover of the whole resource industry in Canada and be done with it.

I think this is unfortunate. This government, though Liberal in name, is essentially socialist in nature and is being encouraged by a party which calls itself the New Democratic Party, and which is not socialist in name but is socialist in reality. When we see this kind of attitude I think it is time for those who believe in the free enterprise system in Canada to stand up and be counted. It is time we stopped being apologetic for the system that has given us our present prosperity, and started laying a few facts on the line.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Our present troubles too.

Mr. Stevens: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) speaks about our present problems. Who in this House would know better than he why we are in this present predicament? It was his party, in conjunction with the minority government of the emperor himself, that seeded the expansion in our monetary system and fiscal system that gave us the inflation we are now living with, gave us our high interest rates, and caused the lack of real growth. In short, it was that little partnership that surfaces periodically that has ravished this country, and it was particularly hard on the poor to whom the NDP like to pretend to be the great protectors—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Stevens: After I am through, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Obviously the hon. member is not used to direct answers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am used to courtesy.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, it was only yesterday that we were questioning the government about why it saw fit to commit possibly $1.4 billion to the takeover of Pacific Petroleums, Ltd., bearing in mind that it will not bring in one extra barrel of oil to Canada and will not create one more job. Does it not reflect the true attitude of my colleagues to my left that their leader stood up and said that was the type of question that makes the government look progressive, in the sense that the government was doing something progressive by the takeover of a free enterprise company such as Pacific Petroleums?

Perhaps I should mention that I think we have to start taking a new message to the Canadian public, a message of new hope. I think we have to acknowledge that although in Ottawa we are buffeted with requests for the government of the day to do this or that, there is always the assumption that government action is needed and that such action will be beneficial. Rarely is it suggested that often the best thing for governments to do is just nothing. Rarely is it realized that the government does not create wealth.

Mr. McKenzie: Just debt.

Mr. Stevens: To me that is the crux of what we have under review. As my colleague has just said, the government in this case does not create wealth but it sure knows how to create debt.

The socialists on the one hand, with almost religious zeal, feel that more government involvement can help solve our problems, while the statists, particularly the present government, crave power for the sake of power. It is in this atmosphere that I want to suggest a really new thought to most members of the House. I suggest it is perhaps a brand new thought for those to my left, and for many on the government side it is something that, if they ever thought of it, they have tended to forget. It is an idea that we appeared, a decade ago, to have turned away from, with the election of the emperor we have in Canada. Yet it is an idea which once turned a raw and underdeveloped continent of poverty stricken colonies into two of the richest nations on earth—Canada and the United States.

It is a concept which, invented 200 years ago in England and then fuelled by the individual dreams of millions of immigrants, became the most forceful engine for the creation of wealth and prosperity the world has ever seen. That idea, of course, is the free-enterprise system. I know that over the past decade it has become fashionable to portray the free enterprise system as simply the pursuit of shallow materialism, as the socialists would say, by "Greedy, selfish and self-serving men." In contrast, socialism and the centralist philosophies have been portrayed as a new form of egalitarianism—of people living for society and for each other. This concept, though widespread and popular, is based in myth, and not in fact. The sooner we start laying a few of the particular facts on the record of this House, the better.

The central planners rarely admit, as they seek power in the name of the people, that it is power for themselves they seek. To the extent we give them that power we lessen our freedoms.

We should be encouraged to note that in recent polling in the United States, 90 per cent agreed with this statement, "We must be ready to make sacrifices if necessary to preserve the free enterprise system. In 1976, almost three-quarters disapproved of the view that "the country would be better off if big businesses were taken over by the government as in certain European countries."

Throughout mankind's civilized history, central control of national economies has been the rule, not the exception. That is often forgotten, Mr. Speaker, so let me repeat it—throughout mankind's civilized history, central control of national economies has been the rule, not the exception. In each case central planning has not proven successful, and as the centrally planned state has faltered, tyranny has increased, with people becoming more and more the serfs or vassals of the state. That is what the socialists want to put us back to.

● (1622)

The free enterprise or capitalistic system, as we know it, is unique in the 4,600 years of mankind's experience. For the first 44 centuries of our civilized existence, we find that the well-being of individuals ebbed and flowed with little or no real gain. But with the birth of the industrial capitalist system some 200 years ago, there was an explosion in mankind's well-being. Suddenly, as a result of technology breakthroughs of industry of the accumulation of wealth through corporations which helped productivity, it was found that more and more workers could be employed. In turn this gave rising real wealth for their families and for the nation, and with it disease lessened. Food became more plentiful as production grew.

We find that it takes the same amount in gold today to buy a loaf of bread as it did two centuries ago, yet in the past 200 years the real earnings of workers in the western world have risen sevenfold. Notwithstanding this success, it is strange to find that many today, wittingly or unwittingly, suggest the free enterprise system should be virtually replaced, without realizing that what they are suggesting is a return to the world of 200 years ago.

If one is curious to see what that world was like, I ask any member of this House to go and view the slums of Calcutta, or many of the streets of Cairo, and see first-hand how most of our forefathers lived before they and their descendants were lifted by the free enterprise system to our present prosperity.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance has asked twice what this has to do with Bill C-7. Mr. Speaker, this is what it has to do with it. Bill C-7 will be an extension of the borrowing authority of this government by another $7 billion. To the degree the government is now spending a dollar of which it can only finance out of revenue 75 cents of that dollar, 25 per cent ends up in debt or in the creation of artificial money. To the degree this continues, there is absolutely no doubt that the government will continue to generate inflation. To the degree the government generates inflation it is going to separate still further the wealthy from the poor. This government is going to devastate our economy and, in short it will cause this country to evolve into something not a free enterprise system any more, but a state controlled system, which presumably their socialist friends would love. But I can assure hon. members the people of Canada will not enjoy that should it ever occur.

I have just touched on what I think is often overlooked, and that is that we do have a good system traditionally in this country. The enterprise system has produced great prosperity, but it cannot continue to produce that prosperity if we allow government to encroach on it continually, if we load the system with undue taxation, or if we load the system with the type of borrowing that has been taking place at the federal level for the last three or four years. That is why I urge hon. members to consider my motion. I think it would make this bill more meaningful in relation to the Canada Savings Bond question. I would hope also that all members, before voting on Bill C-7, would think of the consequences. I remind hon. members they will be giving this government more funds, because of the lack of restraint shown at the spending level. This has to end. I hope that, whatever debate ensues on Bill C-7, that point will be driven home to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, at the point when I asked the hon. member if he would permit a question, he was complaining about some of the things that had happened during the parliament of 1972 to 1974. He was complaining that we had co-operated with the government of that day in getting certain legislation that, in his view, was the cause of all the troubles we are now experiencing. I ask the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) if that means that he would like to undo the social legislation, the increases in pensions and family allowances, and also in veterans benefits, that we achieved during that period of time. Is he telling us that if his party came to power they would turn back the clock on the social legislation we won during the period from 1972 to 1974?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my good friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has not been following me. His question is in relation to something about which I made no comment. I was talking about the expansion of our monetary system during that period. Certainly when "Blue Eyes" was here, the minister of finance now known as Mr. Turner, that is when the explosion took place. Government spending went up over 100 per cent during his 44 months as minister of finance. You will recall it was that minister, to the great delight of the liberal NDP members to my left who, at committee, said it is political expediency that dictates, not economic reality. It is that type of thinking that caused the monetary explosion that we are now getting the fallout from in this country. That is what I was referring to; never once did I refer to that legislation. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre must have been snoozing or something if he thought I did.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since my question had to do with social legislation which is closely related to the increase in spending by the Government of Canada, may I ask him if, like others in this House, he is simply refusing to answer my question as to where his party stands on expanded social legislation?

Mr. Stevens: I can give the hon. member, my good friend, a very short answer; all he has to do is try us. Another election is coming along and, with his support and the support of other NDPers—and I know we have millions of Liberals who are supporting us now—we will form the government and he will see one of the best run countries he has ever seen.

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I continue to be amazed at how wide our rules are in this House, but perhaps it is of general benefit. But here we are dealing with report stage of Bill C-7, which would authorize the government, when needed, to obtain additional borrowing funds. This bill has been debated at great length on second reading in this House. This is a bill on which the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) participated both in this House and in committee at great length. Nothing new has been raised today.

In the course of report stage debate on this borrowing bill, the hon. member for York-Simcoe has been up to one of those old tricks of trying to piggyback in all sorts of general philosophical discussions involving what should or should not be done in the economic field and ranging all over the map. Because he has done that, it seems only fair that we at least respond to one or two of the points he has made.

● (1632)

I am delighted that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) posed the question that he just did to the hon. member for York-Simcoe. It shows over and over again that the official opposition are trying to snow the Canadian public with regard to their ability to form a government of this country. They will not answer hard questions on hard points. They will not state where they stand on important matters of social legislation.

The official opposition have told the Canadian people that if they are put in power they will get rid of Petro-Canada. They have said they will get rid of the instrument the Canadian people have to involve themselves directly in the oil and gas resources of this country. That is what they have indicated about an instrument that most countries in the western world have.

They have not indicated their position on matters of social legislation. This has come up over and over again, including the debate on Bill C-10, which is also before the House at the present time. They will not state their position. That party is trying to maintain that within several months it will form the government of this country. It seems rather incredible, therefore, that they are prepared to try and snow the Canadian public without giving concrete answers to simple questions of that type.

I made a very quick calculation, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe was speaking. He probably did not do it intentionally, but a type of arrogant approach was perceived in some of his comments. Canadians need to be worried about this posture by the chief financial critic of the official opposition. Were he to be the finance minister of this country, what position would he take in matters that are very sensitive to Canadians? Would it continue to be that type of attitude whereby that party simply says they know what is best for Canadians, this is what Canadians are going to have, they are going to cut out various programs, they will get rid of a lot of civil servants, wind up Petro-Canada, and get rid of a great deal of legislation that has been on the books of this country for the past 50 years? This question will have to be addressed at some point. I presume there will be opportunities as the coming year develops.

The party opposite has been in power in this country for only 19 years in this century. It has been in power for 19 out of 78 years, roughly 25 per cent of the time. What immediately comes to mind is, why is that? Why is it the party opposite has not been able to sell itself to the Canadian people for more than 25 per cent of the time that has elapsed in this century?

The answer is very simple. It is shown in the kind of comments being made here this afternoon by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. He is not prepared to answer simple questions as to what their answers will be on key issues. In addition, he and his party continue to criticize legislation whereby the Canadian public, having been faced with an extremely serious problem during the time of the OPEC oil crisis, have moved to establish their own national petroleum corporation. The party opposite has stated that before that corporation is more than two or three years old, it will get rid of it. They have said that will be one of the first things they will do. I do not think the Canadian people will buy that kind of approach. They will not buy the approach indicated in the comments of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, the finance critic of the official opposition.

I come back to one or two other points that have been mentioned. The first is the question of the borrowing authority and how it is to be used. In the course of his address during second reading, in debates in the House and in discussion in committee, the minister clearly indicated the purpose of this borrowing authority. He gave the exact reasons why the government is coming before the House at this time.

This takes us back to another point raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. He indicated that the total outstanding debt of this country places us in a very precarious position. I forget his exact words. Facts were placed before this House during my speech on second reading of this bill indicating that the percentage of debt outstanding in this country as a percentage of gross national product is less than the percentage in the United States, a fairly successful country to the south of us. It was also clearly indicated, and the hon. member can check this in Hansard, that the improvement in that ratio over the past ten years has never been more significant in this country, compared with the United States.

The other point in relation to his general remarks was that he continued to push the concept of gloom and doom to the Canadian people, trying to convince the Canadian people that their economic situation is far worse than it actually is. During the course of second reading of this bill, I responded to some comments by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. At that time I indicated where Canada stood in relation to other countries that he enumerated in the western industrialized world, and how Canada ranked in relation to those countries in certain significant areas. I will not repeat all of that, but I wish to repeat one or two facts today, because once again the hon. member has left the innuendo that when you match Canada against many other free enterprise capitalist-oriented countries, we are in horrendous shape.

We have not done badly in the 78 years of this century in which this government has led the country for 75 per cent of the time. Here is where we stand in one or two of these areas. I will repeat some figures I mentioned during the debate on second reading.

In the rate of growth in our labour force from 1968 to 1977, Canada is in first place in relation to the six countries mentioned by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, namely, the United States, West Germany, Switzerland, Belgium, and Denmark. In terms of the cost of living index, that is to say, the smallest increase in 1978, we are second to the United States in relation to these other countries. In relation to food prices, the least costly in 1978, we came out in first place. In relation to the rate of growth in our real domestic product for the period 1968-1977, we are in first place. In relation to housing starts 1970-1977, we are in second place, right behind Belgium, with the United States in third place.

There are many more statistics. They are based on very reliable sources. They indicate to the hon. member for York-Simcoe and the Canadian public, if ever they are given a chance to see these kinds of statistics, that the Canadian economy is not in that bad shape, particularly when matched against the economies of the major countries of the industrialized world.

I hesitate to repeat this kind of detail, but it seems we have to do this over and over again because the gloom and doom philosophy and the approach of the official opposition are being pushed on the Canadian public, day in and day out. Whenever they get an opportunity, either in this House or in speeches outside, they try to connive the Canadian people into thinking they have a bad deal going for them with the present government in Ottawa, that if given the chance the official opposition will shake up and improve the situation. The substantiation of their claim does not add up when you look at the facts of the situation and get away from their innuendoes which cannot be supported.

● (1642)

I am not sure whether the hon. member for York-Simcoe was bringing things out of the air or not when he referred to the slums of Calcutta and the streets of Cairo. Most Canadians are concerned about the conditions they see in Third World countries, but to suggest for one minute that our situation in Canada is inferior to that of any other major country is to fly directly in the face of the information available. He will get the straight facts if he talks to new Canadians who have come to this country in the last ten, 15 or 20 years. These people will tell him how Canada ranks in relation to other countries around the world. They will give him the story straight, and I am sure he has a good number of new Canadians in his riding, as I have in mine.

An hon. Member: Three years ago, or five maybe.

Mr. Martin: Many of these people have been here during the years of progressive Liberal government from 1963 to the present time, and many of them will also be here as those progressive years of Liberal government continue in times to come.

Mr. Stevens: I was rather enjoying the babbling of the hon. member but I must correct a misundertaking he must have taken from my remarks. I was saying that if you want to see the living standards which existed 200 years ago you can see something comparable in Calcutta or in the slums of Cairo. In no way was I referring to them as being of a contemporary nature in Canada. There is no mystery about the conditions in which people used to live before private enterprise enabled us to reach our present standard of living. In true Liberal fashion, what I said on that subject got distorted.

Mr. Martin: I am delighted to accept that explanation, and I am pleased the hon. member is in no way attempting to indicate that if his party were to become the government of the country we would move any closer to the conditions which exist in those countries. I believe, though, that Canadians would be taking an incredible risk, and I am sure all of them will realize this as the months transpire between now and the time of an election.

The electorate will be asking some of these questions. Questions will not only be coming just from the mouth of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in the House of Commons. They will be asked on the streets. They will be raised on campaign trails. They will come one after the other, and the hon. member for York-Simcoe, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and others over there who are eagerly getting ready in their own minds to assume grandiose positions in Ottawa with need to be ready to answer these questions.

An hon. Member: We did in the by-elections.

Mr. Martin: No, you didn't have to answer them in the by-elections because in the by-elections there was one thing the Canadian public knew. They knew that going out to vote against the government could in no way affect the leadership of this country. That was a very important factor to them.

At some point, Mr. Speaker, it might be useful for me to get back to the subject at hand. The only reason I am off it again is because the hon. member for York-Simcoe spent 75 per cent of his debating time on other issues so I am tempted to spend a little of mine responding to him. Again, I want to get back to Petro-Canada and the proposal put forward by that corporation to take over the assets of Pacific Petroleums.

I think it was mentioned by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), or perhaps by the parliamentary secretary to the House leader or it may have been the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae), that on every opportunity available to it the opposition decries Petro-Canada. Every time they have a chance, they have to try to talk down this corporation, the great work it is doing and the great place it has in the eyes of the Canadian public in attempting to bring us to a position of self-reliance in oil and gas. They do this because they have to back up the statement they have made.

They are stuck with this idea of getting rid of the corporation. So now, having decided they are going to do that, they have continually to find ways of supporting their argument, and every day and every week it gets more difficult to support that particular plank in their platform. It cannot come out of the program now because it is indelibly there in stone, and they are going to have to speak to it over and over again as the months go on. I am not going to get into an argument. We discussed this at great length when the legislation was before this House. I would simply say this to the hon. member for

York-Simcoe and to hon. members opposite: Canadians, by and large, are very supportive of the idea that we in this country should do all we can to move toward self-reliance in the area of oil and gas.

Mr. Stevens: What has that got to do with Petro-Canada?

Mr. Martin: The sole raison d'être of Petro-Canada is to help us move toward that goal and if, by doing the kind of thing exemplified by this offer for the shares of Pacific Petroleums, they can gradually reduce the horrendous percentage of our over-all natural gas resources petroleum industry that is controlled outside the country, I suggest the Canadian people are going to be very supportive of it.

I suggest to hon. members opposite that they have taken hold of a tiger by the tail by putting into their platform already at this early date an undertaking that they will, once in power, immediately unwind and dispense with Petro-Canada.

I should like to come back now to the amendment the hon. member for York-Simcoe made. Here again, the question whether the date of the bill should be November 1 or some later date was discussed at great length in committee, and I think the hon. member for York-Simcoe was given all the answers he was seeking. However, I am prepared to read into the record a little further explanation or to make a further explanation why we on this side are not prepared to accept that amendment.

One of the purposes of the bill is to clarify for greater certainty that it is the net amount of any increase in oustanding indebtedness which is to be charged against the borrowing authority. This was explained at great length in committee. It is an important point to make. For instance, in the case of the current Canada Savings Bond issue, it is not the total amount of the bonds that are sold that will be charged against the borrowing authority; rather, it is the net amount of new bonds sold as against any conversions made of old issues. Calculated on this basis the government is satisfied that in the normal circumstances existing borrowing authority would indeed be sufficient to meet both the full amount of the current Canada Savings Bond issue and any borrowings which might take place under the revolving credit agreement recently negotiated with Canadian and American banks.

However, there is a possibility that an unusually large Canada Savings Bond issue coupled, perhaps, with the need to borrow under one of the revolving credit agreements, could deplete the existing borrowing authority. It only makes sense in a situation of that kind to ensure that the necessary arrangements can be made should the need arise. Under the circumstances, if this were to happen and we did not have the additional borrowing authority, yes, one would then have to cut off sales of any further Canada Savings Bonds. Again, I say this is a remote possibility, but it is good business practice and good housekeeping to be protected against that sort of thing. To preclude this remote possibility the government is ensuring that the bill comes into force on November 1, which is the effective date of the Canada Savings Bond issue.

• (1652)

I want to make one other point clear because the hon. member for York-Simcoe raised it in committee. He always comes back to this November 22 date. He knows—it was explained to him in committee—the reason for the extension from November 15 to November 22. It is normal to have 15 days. There is nothing unusual about that. The reason for the extension is the latest change in the interest rate which, as the hon. member well knows, was the result of a Bank of Canada increase. An additional week is being allowed to give Canadians an opportunity to take advantage of this new issue at the new rate, and in order to give them extra time to complete their transactions. That is the reason for that. There was no secret motive, which I think has been imputed. Perhaps that was done unintentionally. I am not entirely sure, but that was certainly the indication in the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

With those comments, both of a general nature and a specific nature, regarding the amendment, I encourage hon. members opposite to support the November 1 date as it now stands and to defeat the amendment, which would simply put an unknown date on the bill, namely, the date it is given royal assent.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to become involved in the debate on Bill C-7 regarding borrowing authority. I always enjoy rambling and wide open debates like this one, and I always like to follow the parliamentary secretary so that I can correct all the statements he makes and the misleading information he gives the House and the Canadian public. He is becoming a master at that.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) if he would consider withdrawing that comment. He has indicated that I have made misleading statements to this House. He has done that without any substantiation whatsoever, and I do not think a comment like that should be allowed, unless the hon. member is prepared to be specific and indicate the erroneous information I have put before this House.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with that at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on this point of order?

Mr. McKenzie: I have been on my feet for only one minute.

An hon. Member: That is too long.

Mr. McKenzie: When I make statements like that, I intend to substantiate them in my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I should intervene. That might calm everything down. I must say that I was speaking with one of the clerks and did not hear the exact words which were spoken. However, if, as the parliamentary secretary says, the words were to the effect that his remarks were not factual or were misleading, that is not necessarily unparliamentary. It becomes unparliamentary if the hon. member says the misleading was done intentionally.

Mr. Beatty: Which he did not say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If it is just a matter of opinion, and as long as the hon. member did not attach a qualification regarding intentional misleading, that is permitted by the rules. Such words are used regularly in the House. If the hon. member pursues his insinuation or reflection on the remarks of the parliamentary secretary, I might have to decide otherwise.

Mr. McKenzie: I have no problem qualifying my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I would never make a statement like that without going into it a little deeper. I suggest that the parliamentary secretary listen to me for a few minutes before he starts challenging me.

The parliamentary secretary said that the Conservative party would fire many civil servants. We have never at any time said we would fire many civil servants. We said we would not hire any more civil servants. We feel that half a million is enough.

I listened to the adjournment debate here last week. Two members of the Liberal party, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), were pleading with the government not to fire any civil servants. It is the Liberals who will be firing civil servants, not us. We have said we would not hire any more.

The parliamentary secretary discussed whether we supported social legislation in the last parliament. We certainly did support social legislation. We had to support social legislation in the last parliament because of double digit inflation. That was what the last election was about. Our incomes and prices policy was designed to assist the five million people who were below the poverty line and who needed assistance. It was the Conservative party which showed leadership in the last federal election in dealing with the underprivileged and with the need for proper legislation to help people.

I listened to the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who said that the best parliament we have ever had in this country was the last parliament. He spoke of all the great legislation which was passed. I found his comments very strange, because it was an NDP motion of non-confidence which brought the government down. That motion was not presented by us. If the last parliament was so wonderful and if the legislation was so great, why on earth did the NDP present a motion of non-confidence to bring the government down?

The parliamentary secretary said that for the last number of years the federal government has been Liberal. That is quite true. The Canadian people have been very generous and tolerant with this government, but that is coming to an end. The by-elections proved that. The parliamentary secretary has much praise for this government. I am sure he must have campaigned in Toronto. I am sure he must have gone from door to door praising this government. If he did, I wonder why the Liberals did not sweep Toronto.

The parliamentary secretary spoke about how great things are in this country. Unemployment costs us $8 billion a year. Over $4 billion is spent on the unemployment insurance plan and $2 billion on welfare, and $2 billion in taxes is lost. The parliamentary secretary says he is proud of that. He says that that is just great, and that it is terrible we should mention it.

If the rules had never been changed, we would not need this borrowing authority bill. Since 1963 parliament has not had effective control of public expenditures. The Auditor General has said that the Liberal government has lost control or is close to losing effective control of the public purse. In a subsequent report he stated that he felt very strongly about the fact—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Regional Economic Expansion—Funding of land registration and information service; the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell)—Fisheries—Depletion of inshore lobster fishery; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Public works—Construction of taxation centre at Sudbury, Ont.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 2), 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North) moved that Bill C-202, to amend the Criminal Law Amendment Act (No. 2), 1976, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before discussing the details of this bill I should say that this bill relates to preferring indictments respecting retroactive and retrospective legislation. This is a very technical matter. As hon. members know, I usually speak with just a few notes, but because I am limited to only 20 minutes I will speak from a prepared text.

Private member's Bill C-202 would amend the transitional sections of the Criminal Code approved by parliament at the time the death penalty was abolished for all offences under the Criminal Code, particularly treason, piracy and murder. The abolition of the death penalty by the present government was proclaimed on July 16, 1976. In this debate I wish to deal with the question of murder alone.

● (1702)

Prior to July 16, 1976, there were a number of murder cases in which no charges had been laid, or, if a charge had been laid, the process of law had not been completed when the new bill was proclaimed. The rule that was followed was that if the alleged crime had been committed and the process of law commenced prior to July 16, 1976, the charge was continued and the trial proceeded under the former law, except with regard to the penalty, when the charge was either capital or non-capital murder.

Prior to the 1976 law, murder was classified—I want to emphasize the word "classified", instead of defined—as capital and non-capital murder. Conviction of capital murder called for the death penalty, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, and all murder that was not capital murder was classified as non-capital murder under the Code and the penalty called for imprisonment, meaning 21 years. Under the penal rules, most people, depending on the facts of the case and the character of the accused who was convicted, could make an application for parole to the parole board within the time frame.

This bill deals only with persons who, prior to the abolition of July, 1976, were convicted of non-capital murder and appealed their conviction to the authorized provincial appeal board and the said appeal tribunal quashed the conviction and ordered a new trial. That was after July 16, 1976. Before 1976, that person, under the ordinary rules of jurisprudence would be retried on the charge of capital murder or a lesser inclusive charge of manslaughter, or some such charge.

The section of the code I am proposing to amend is known as the transitional section dealing with pending cases, in other words, the transitional period from the time the murder was defined as capital murder and non-capital murder until the time when it was redefined or reclassified as first and second degree murder. The only change that was made at that time was the nature of the penalty. The section to which I refer, and which has caused great embarrassment to people whom I have already mentioned and to the courts, reads as follows:

Where proceedings in respect of any offence of murder—

I have left out the other two.

—whether punishable by death or not, were commenced before the coming into force of this act, and a new trial of a person for the offence has been ordered and the new trial is commenced after coming into force of this act, the new trial shall be commenced by the preferring of a new indictment before the court before which the accused is to be tried, and thereafter the offence shall be dealt with, inquired into, tried and determined, and any punishment in respect of the offence shall be imposed as if it had been committed after the coming into force of this act.

What it says, in brief, is that if you were convicted of non-capital murder and you went to the court of appeal—such as in the three cases of which I know, one in Ontario and two in Alberta, and there may be others—and your conviction was quashed because you were wrongfully convicted and a new trial was ordered, the Crown, that is the attorney general in the province, may prefer a new indictment. Under the old law, in the case of non-capital murder, if a person is convicted, he received a sentence of life imprisonment or 21 years with the right to parole. But if he was found guilty of capital murder, he was sentenced to the death penalty. What they have done now is not to prefer a charge of second degree murder, which is similar to non-capital murder—I will go into that in a moment—but to up it to first degree murder.

In the three known cases—I will not name the accused because they are still before the court, but let us call them Mr. X, Mr. Y, and Mr. Z, one of which was tried in Ontario and two in Alberta—following a successful appeal by the accused, the charge was upped from non-capital murder to first degree murder, which would be like changing it from non-capital murder to capital murder. Therein lies the injustice.

Let me explain that briefly. Because the accused exercised a right in law to appeal his case, upping the charge is an abuse of the due process of law, because the Crown upped the charge of non-capital murder, by preferring an indictment without the right to a preliminary hearing, to first degree murder which, under the former law, is classified as capital murder and calls for the death penalty.

If this is the law of Canada, it can still reach back to a person who has successfully appealed and charge that person with a new offence calling for a greater penalty. As I said, murder was never redefined in the Criminal Code. It was merely reclassified for the sole purpose of changing the punishment.

My amendment would prevent this abuse of the due process of law by preferring an indictment of first degree murder only if the new trial ordered by an appeal court was from a conviction of capital murder, or of lesser offences, or in the case of a new trial ordered for an offence of non-capital murder to a new indictment no greater than second degree murder, and a lesser offence, if the Crown saw fit, as it has in some cases.

Why do I suggest this? Section 27(2) is retroactive and retrospective legislation. It is against all the principles of justice known to mankind and not in accordance with the principles of British justice. I have found in research that

Henry of Bracton, under the rule of Henry III between the years 1222 to 1272, said the following in Latin:

Omnis nova constitutio formam futuris imponere debet, non praeteritis.

It means that every statute ought to prescribe a form to the future, not to the past. This principle dates back to the time of Cicero. My pronunciation of the name might be questioned, as it seems to be, but I pronounce it Cicero—with a hard C.

Mr. Ellis: Only in Calgary is it pronounced that way.

Mr. Woolliams: If you had gone to a Latin school, you would have known the correct pronunciation is Cicero—with a hard C. My friend from the province of Ontario may pronounce that name differently, but I will not get into an argument about that. That was the way they pronounced it in Rome.

Section 27(2) makes a sham out of every successful appeal in that under that section the freedom of the accused is jeopardized for a longer term. Mr. Justice Brooks, in a dissenting judgment of the court, put it succinctly in the recent case of Regina v. Pineault 1977, 32 c.c.c., second edition, Appeal Court of Ontario, when the appeal court considered an application under section 613(8) of the Code, which reads as follows:

Where a court of appeal exercises any of the powers conferred by subsection (2), (4), (6) or (7),—

Such as directing a new trial and quashing the conviction, the court may also make an order in addition to what justice requires. In other words, it was argued by Mr. Greenspan in the Court of Appeal in Ontario, and properly so, that the court could have ordered that the accused be charged with the crime of second degree murder. This is what he said:

● (1712)

Having regard to the whole of section 27 of the act, it seems clear that parliament set a cut-off date. It said that after the coming into force of the act all charges of murder would proceed as murder in the first degree or murder in the second degree and an accused not yet tried and one for whom a new trial had been ordered by an appellate court would accordingly be similarly treated. To this extent parliament has declared what is fair and just. However, the important distinction (and really it is a safeguard) is that where a new trial has been ordered the appellate court was under a duty when directing the new trial to make an order that justice requires. It is the presence of this obligation that is perhaps an answer to Mr. Greenspan's submission that this man's successful exercise of his right of appeal from his conviction for non-capital murder is no more than a sham.

In other words, the fact that he was successful in his appeal makes it a sham, because the charge is moved up from non-capital murder to first degree murder where he would be subject to a penalty of 25 years without the right of parole, unless he made an application to the chief justice after 15 years.

In my opinion section 27(2) is ultra vires or inoperative in view of the Bill of Rights. The Bill of Rights provides that every law of Canada enacted before or after the coming into force of the Bill of Rights, unless parliament makes an express declaration to the contrary, is to be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgement or infringement of any right so recognized and declared.

At committee stage I examined this and asked questions. There was no express declaration by parliament as to section 27(2) to create a new classification of murder in reference to an alleged crime committed prior to July 16, 1976 and tried under the former classification of murder. In other words, to make it retroactive legislation there was no express declaration that parliament could do that, and if it did not make that declaration, it would be inoperative. This is retroactive legislation of the rankest, most oppressive and tyrannical form.

I should like to refer to section 2 of the Bill of Rights which reads as follows:

Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an act of the parliament that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgement or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared, and in particular, no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to

(e) deprive a person of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations.

How can one say that these three persons, and perhaps others, will receive fair trials under the circumstances? Section 27(2) abridges the Bill of Rights, as it denies a fair and just hearing, and therefore is inoperative.

I do not have to refer to the Drybones case where an Indian off a reservation was charged as being drunk because he was an Indian off a reservation. The Supreme Court of Canada indicated that that discriminated against race, and therefore, that section of the Indian Act was inoperative and ultra vires.

The Interpretation Act of Canada reads in part as follows:

Every enactment shall be deemed remedial, and shall be given such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as best ensures the attainment of its objects.

The courts of appeal of two provinces have already ruled that this is retroactive legislation but parliament must have intended it, even though there have been a few dissenting judges. Section 35(b) reads as follows:

Where an enactment is repealed in whole or in part, the repeal does not (b) affect the previous operation of the enactment so repealed or anything duly done or suffered thereunder.

Thus, it runs in full face of the Interpretation Act. Section 36 reads as follows:

Where an enactment (in this section called the "former enactment") is repealed and another enactment (in this section called the "new enactment") is substituted therefor,

(d) the procedure established by the new enactment shall be followed as far as it can be adapted thereto in the recovery or enforcement of penalties and forfeitures incurred, and in the enforcement of rights existing or accruing under the former enactment or in a proceeding in relation to matters that have happened before the repeal;

(f) except to the extent the provisions of the new enactment are not in substance the same as those of the former enactment, the new enactment shall not be held to operate as new law, but shall be construed and have effect as a consolidation and as declaratory of the law as contained in the former enactment.

To charge a person with first degree murder after a successful appeal from a conviction of non-capital murder changes the law as known at the time of the trial. Capital murder as first degree murder in 1966 was described as planned and deliberate, identical to the wording in 1976 of section 214(2) of the Criminal Code, and any other murder was non-capital which today would be known as second degree murder. One asks, "So what, the death penalty is abolished?"

The difference in penalty between first degree and second degree murder is substantial. As I said at the beginning, the government is merely classifying murder to change the penalty. Second degree murder calls for 21 years of imprisonment with the right to make an application to the Parole Board in ten years, depending on character, facts, etc. First degree murder is 25 years of imprisonment without the right of parole. One might make an application to the chief justice after 15 years.

One might ask how this mistake occurred. Well, it occurred. I should like to refer to a rather interesting quote from the book entitled "Preparation of Legislation in Canada" by Mr. E. A. Driedger, Q.C. at page 293, which reads as follows:

What is a draftsman or a draftperson's job?

—His function is to prepare the legislation desired by someone else; and it follows that there must be a transfer of ideas to the draftsman. He must understand precisely what the new law is to be. He may draft a perfectly plain amendment but if that amendment is not the desired amendment he has not done his work properly—

Is that not quite a statement coming from a former deputy minister of justice who is now director of legislation?

Over 100 years ago Bentham talked about legislation like this which was retroactive and reached back into the past. For example, as far as I know today, it is legal for me to make this speech in the House of Commons. If parliament, in its insane sense, passed an act tomorrow which indicated that what I did today was illegal, it would be called retroactive legislation. Surely Canadians are supposed to know the law as they run, walk or are involved in their business and social arrangements with their families and other institutions. Bentham said that such legislation is ambiguous, imperfect, redundant, long-winded, entangled and, above all, naked and without any boundaries. That is exactly what we are faced with here.

As I have said over and over again in the House of Commons, and I will never tire of saying it as long as I am here, let us have a new Criminal Code of Canada rather than one made up of amendments or a band-aid deal which causes confusion to jurists and all Canadians.

I ask the House to consider this bill in light of the fact that it affects the freedom of Canadians who have the right to a fair trial and the right to appeal, and when they win their appeals they are penalized for winning them. That is an abuse of the process of law in the worst form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-202 which was presented to the House by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). Of necessity he requested permission to speak from some extensive notes. I can appreciate why, because the matter is technical in nature. I hope the House will allow me the same courtesy during the course of my reply.

● (1722)

I should like to say at the outset that it is a pleasure to consider measures proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North because he has a reputation as a lawyer and a parliamentarian which I think elicits our respect and our very close attention.

We are considering today a measure which would draw to the attention of this House a specific anomaly which he perceives in respect of the transitional aspects of the Criminal Law Amendment (Capital Punishment) Act (No. 2) 1976, passed by this House on July 14, 1976, and proclaimed as law on July 26 of that year. On behalf of the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) I would like to congratulate the hon. member for his suggestion, and for the good intentions which so evidently have gone into drawing up the bill before us.

If I understand it correctly, the bill we are considering would amend the transitional provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (No. 2) 1976 in respect of persons who were charged with murder before this act came into effect but who were ordered to stand trial again as a result of a higher court decision. In these cases, the new trial is to be commenced by the preferring of a new indictment, with such new indictment being drawn up in terms of the new act. The effect of this would be that persons originally tried for capital murder would be tried for first degree murder, and that persons originally tried for non-capital murder would be tried either for first degree or second degree murder, depending on whether the facts were such as to support a charge of first degree murder on the grounds that there was planning and deliberation involved, that the murder was a "contract" killing, or that the offence was committed in the course of committing or attempting to commit aircraft hijacking, kidnapping and forcible confinement, rape or attempted rape, or indecent assault on a female or a male.

These latter elements of first degree murder previously would have resulted in a charge of non-capital murder, and the difference in penalty for first degree murder and non-capital murder is, I take it, the point which concerns the hon. member. Under the previous legislation, a person found guilty of non-capital murder was liable to life imprisonment with parole eligibility not available for at least ten, and as many as 20 years, depending on the order of the trial judge having considered any advice the jury may have had to offer. Under the Criminal Law Amendment Act (No. 2) 1976, a person found guilty of first degree murder is now liable to life imprisonment with parole eligibility not available for 25 years, with that eligibility date being reviewable after 15 years.

Mr. Woolliams: By the Chief Justice.

Mr. Young: The hon. member argues that a hardship is worked on those individuals—those very few individuals, I might point out—who fall into the category of having originally been convicted of non-capital murder, but have been ordered to stand trial again, this time for first degree murder.

I would like to assure the hon. member that I think his argument is an important one, and it is one which deserves the closest consideration. There are, however, some points which I believe merit examination in the course of considering the bill we have before us, and I would like to turn to some of those points now.

In the short time I had available to review the hon. member's proposal, I found two reported cases bearing on the point at issue. I am not certain whether there are any further appeals outstanding in either of those cases, so will necessarily restrict my remarks somewhat, as I noted the hon. member did too.

In a general sense it seems to me that neither case offers much support for the hon. member's argument that the transitional aspects of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (No. 2) violate the Bill of Rights, or are subject to the interpretational principles which he cites in the explanatory notes to his bill. Again, I would like to make it clear that these are questions which occur to me from a brief perusal of the hon. member's proposal, and I offer them as lines of argument which I think merit further examination in the context of further examination that should be given the proposal. Having said that, let me express the concern I have with the hon. member's point. In arguing that the section in question violates canons of interpretation, I am not sure whether the hon. member had an opportunity to reflect on the finding of the Alberta Supreme Court, Appellate Division, in the case of Regina v. Budic (No. 2).

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and I hope you do not deduct the time I take from the time allotted the hon. member. That case has been quoted by me in a court room. I understand the case and it does not apply to hijacking, and does not apply to the other offences the hon. member has mentioned. I know the facts of the case. Under the normal conditions the person would have been charged with non-capital murder, as there was nothing planned or deliberate. In fact the second trial ended up in the court of appeal, from a second appeal, and he was found not guilty because of insanity. In the Regina v. Pineault case the attorney general of Ontario repented and preferred an indictment of manslaughter.

Mr. Young: I thank the hon. member for that interjection, Mr. Speaker. He undoubtedly does know about the case. All I was going to say, very briefly, in reference to that particular case, was that in looking at the comments of Mr. Justice Clement, he argued that the transitional section of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (No. 2) which is the subject of the hon. member's amendment "leaves no room for argument, or the application of canons of construction. The language is plain and imperative." Mr. Justice Morrow, in the same case, also found that it was "clear to me that the legislation has expressed an intent to have the newly enacted provisions take effective retroactively".

The hon. member for Calgary North referred to the Pineault case before the Ontario Court of Appeal. That case considered the provisions we are discussing this afternoon.

Mr. Justice Arnup also referred to the clarity of parliament's statement in respect of the preferring of a new indictment and thus, I would argue, called into question the basis for the hon. member's argument that the canons of construction are required to be brought into effect to the extent to which a clarifying amendment is required.

I must say I am even less certain about the argument made on Bill of Rights grounds by the hon. member. I do not intend to go into a great deal of detail on that argument. I think one of my colleagues may wish to make some comments in that regard a little later on. I would only suggest that we must take into account cases other than Drybones in assessing the impact of section 2 of the Bill of Rights on any given provision.

All I am saying here is that the provisions suggested by the hon. member affect a tiny number of persons, and it is not at all clear that an amendment such as that he proposes is required in practice. I have raised some arguments which, at the very least, leave some unresolved doubt in my mind as to the legal basis for the argument advanced by the hon. member, and attempted to tie them in, in a general way, with the two reported cases on the issue of which I am aware. I think we should leave it at that for the time being, and I would like to suggest that further consideration is merited in the areas I have mentioned. Also, I am sure no hon. member would wish to make specific comments which might have prejudicial effects on individual cases which might yet be heard, and I repeat the point that I am not aware of the current standing of the two cases to which I made brief reference.

In examining the proposal put forward by the hon. member, I think we must look at the assumptions which lie behind it in order to see if it can be supported as it stands or if it requires some further thought and study.

I have made very brief reference to the Bill of Rights argument which was advanced in the explanatory notes, and to the argument put forward by the hon. member involving canons of construction. I would like further to mention two other points which I believe also merit consideration. These involve the hon. member's interpretation of the intent of parliament in passing the Criminal Law Amendment Act (No. 2) 1976, and some of the remedies which may be available to individuals who believe themselves to have been unfairly affected—remedies not referred to by the hon. member.

● (1732)

First with respect to the intent of parliament, the hon. member in his explanatory notes appears to be taking the position—I am sure he will correct me if I am not interpreting him accurately—that parliament intended to ameliorate penalties under the terms of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (No. 2), either throughout that act, or in the transitional provisions, or both. To be sure, capital punishment was abolished under the terms of the act. But I would question the interpretation that the terms of the act were designed to be purely ameliorative, aimed at lessening penalties throughout.

I am sure hon. members will recall the fact that several speakers in the capital punishment debate advanced the position that the sanctions for murder were too harsh; some said they were harsher than capital punishment itself. I do not comment on the merits of those arguments but simply note that they were made during the course of debate.

I would also point out that the solicitor general of the day, commenting on those arguments, made the point that the "Canadian public are concerned about crime, and have a right to expect protection." He said that "murder is a horrible and heinous crime and must be punished severely if we are adequately to express society's outrage against the murderers."

Indeed, the entire peace and security program, of which the Criminal Law Amendment Act (No. 2) was only a part, was aimed not at lessening penalties but at affording to the Canadian public a greater degree of protection against violent crime. All of the measures—legislative and administrative alike—which were included in that package were designed with that one aim in mind: giving effect to realistic and effective measures of protection.

The package contained a range of measures—from dangerous offender legislation, to gun control, to restrictions on the release of offenders, to crime prevention measures—and while each of us may have questioned particular elements of the package, the point I wish to stress is that the over-all intent of the package was to increase effective protection, not to lessen penalties. It is in this context that I would question the hon. member's interpretation of the intent of parliament in passing the section which we are considering today. And in challenging that interpretation, I believe there can be some question raised as to the underlying rationale of the proposal put forward in Bill C-202. Again, I raise this argument not to refute the hon. member but simply to suggest that a great deal of careful consideration should be given to it before we move any further with it.

The second point I would wish to bring to the attention of hon. members involves remedies. The hon. member for Calgary North, based on the interpretation he has given to the intent of parliament and to the legal merits of the case, is suggesting to us that an amendment is required to the transitional provisions of the act. As I have said, the arguments made require careful consideration, and I would welcome discussion of some of the aspects of the argument I have raised already in the course of that consideration.

It may be that we will conclude that the hon. member's amendment, or one similar to it, would be a useful addition to the statute law—I have been very careful not to prejudge that. But in considering the issue, I would also like to see consideration given to certain other recourses which are available if we accept the arguments advanced by the hon. member with respect to the merits of the case. As I have said, an amendment is one possible course of action. A court challenge, brought on grounds similar to those raised by the hon. member, is another possible course of action, and I for one would not feel comfortable placing myself in the position of the courts with respect to the issues at hand.

Let us look at other existing courses of action which are available. Let us, for the sake of this discussion, accept the hon. member's point of view that there is an injustice involved—or that there may be an injustice involved—under the section under consideration. As I say, I am not prepared to accept that argument without first having given the matter a great deal of thought, but for the sake of this discussion let us proceed on that basis.

If therefore, an individual, found guilty of first degree murder having first been found guilty of non-capital murder, is sentenced to life imprisonment without eligibility for parole until 25 years, I think we should not overlook the fact that that individual is also eligible to have the parole eligibility date reviewed after 15 years under the terms of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (No. 2).

Under section 672 of the Criminal Code, an application may be made to the appropriate chief justice in the province or territory for a reduction in the number of years of imprisonment without eligibility for parole. Such an application is to be heard by a jury specially empanelled for the purpose, and the jury may advance the parole eligibility date having regard to the character of the applicant, his conduct while serving his sentence, the nature of the offence for which he was convicted and such other matters as the judge deems relevant in the circumstances. Additionally, I would draw attention to the fact that there is the royal prerogative of mercy which can be brought to bear with respect to a sentence being served.

Arguably, then, if there are cases of injustice or hardships being worked in individual instances, there are available remedies other than those put forward by the hon. member in his bill. Again, I would like to examine these possibilities in considering whether the proposal made by the hon. member is required, whether a similar proposal is required, or whether there are already sufficient remedies available to meet any problems that might conceivably arise.

In conclusion, having discussed several points which occurred to me upon a quick reading of the hon. member's proposal, I want to return to the point I made at the outset of my remarks. I think the bill we are considering today is an important and worthwhile contribution to the continuing debate which is aimed at improving the criminal law of Canada. The hon. member for Calgary North, as was to be expected, has given us much food for thought and is to be congratulated for his proposal, for the thought, research and excellent motivation which went into its preparation.

In raising some questions which I would like to see given further consideration, I would not wish to leave the impression that I am rejecting the hon. member's proposal. Indeed, I cannot see how such an impression can be left. All I am doing, Mr. Speaker, is raising a number of points which I think merit further, in depth consideration. I would welcome interventions during today's debate, as I would welcome them at any time. I have raised certain points because I am not completely certain in my own mind as to the complete ramifications of the proposal advanced today. Perhaps other hon. members can offer additional insights and material on the important question we are examining.

One thing, however, is clear to me. It is that the hon. member for Calgary North deserves the thanks and congratulations of the House for his excellent intervention. You may be assured, Mr. Speaker, that the Solicitor General—and I can say this on his behalf as well as my own in my capacity as his parliamentary secretary—intend to examine the issues he raises with careful attention.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate briefly in this debate and to congratulate the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) for a well reasoned and effective contribution to the criminal law of Canada. I listened with some impatience to my hon. friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Young), however. One of the things he said was that there are really only three people involved in this particular situation. The day that we in this House cannot take the time to make sure that the law is applied in accordance with the well tried principles of justice and common law is the day we should not waste our time here. There are three people involved and those people deserve to have the law applied in accordance with the proper principles.

The Criminal Code, which we amended in the unfortunate package that we bought a few years ago in this House, has resulted in a very severe injustice. It is all very well for the parliamentary secretary to say we are taking this question under study. While we are doing that people are rotting in jail. It is nice and easy for us to sit in our comfortable offices studying matters, but people are sitting in jail as a direct result of this anachronism, this violation of the bill of rights.

● (1742)

I also congratulate the hon. member for Calgary North for raising in this House again a most important principle basically, the supremacy of parliament. When parliament passed a federal bill of rights, it was not a direction to the courts to do everything in their power they could to avoid the consequences of that bill of rights. Many of us who have had some experience in the law are continually disappointed by the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada when they come up against the bill of rights and try to apply it to specific statute law.

There has been a quick reference made to the Drybones case. I recall very well the Lavelle Bedard case in which a native lady was denied her rights on the sole ground she was a female. The Canadian Bill of Rights purported to protect that situation. She received no protection from the courts of the land.

The principle which the hon. member for Calgary North is attempting to apply to the Criminal Code and, which is so fundamental and so vital is this: When a person commits an offence the law that applies on the date of that offence is the law. Only totalitarian regimes attempt to correct and change the law and then apply it retroactively; only totalitarian regimes do that, not decent, civilized societies. Surely this is one of the things that we have great respect for in this country. We do not attempt to create offences that occurred in the past by changing the law in an umbrella or catch-all fashion, as we unfortunately did in this place when the insertion was made of section 27(2) in the Canadian Criminal Code.

[Mr. Young.]

That section which went into the code at that time, the hon. member for Calgary North and I had differences on. It concerned the ultimate penalty with regard to murder. But we are in some agreement in terms of what the alternatives have been. The 25-year sentence, for example, now that we examine it in operation, has got to change. We are placing people in prisons with 25-year sentences with no option whatsoever to see the light of day. They have three alternatives. The first is to commit suicide; many do or have tried to. The second is to attempt to escape and perhaps inflict harm upon the people who are guarding them within the prison system. Lastly, prisoners can serve their sentence and thereby suffer the kind of brain damage they are bound to have developed by the time of their release after 25 years. Many of these people are living in appalling conditions in solitary confinement.

The hon. member for Calgary North and I will probably never agree on the ultimate penalty, but certainly the package that was bought at that time was a bad bargain. It was a bad bargain for the criminal justice system, and it was a bad bargain for providing any kind of safety measure to the public. The 25-year sentence is a horrendous change to our criminal law. It has disrupted the prison system of Canada. Parliamentarians will have seriously to look once more at the sentencing procedure under the murder provisions of the Criminal Code.

I congratulate the hon. member for raising this issue; it is a fundamental and important one. It may also serve to sensitize us to the Canadian Bill of Rights and to possibly having a look at the way in which we can see that the courts take that law seriously, instead of seeing them continually attempt to interpret their way around the plain meaning of the bill, which the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) originally brought forward in this House.

I hope my friend the parliamentary secretary will look seriously at this change. I hope that it will not be a case of saying, "We will take it back to our officials and we will see you next year." This is a matter which the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs would wish to speed through quite quickly in order to see this obvious injustice in the code removed.

● (1752)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have always had much esteem and consideration for my colleague from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and I am always quite pleased to note that he has the necessary readiness of mind and courage to offer hon. members ideas which deserve to be taken into account. Mr. Speaker, I think that in such discussions we must try to avoid any partisanship and stick to the basic issue, to wit, the freedoms that we want to uphold for all individuals, even those whom society has branded as criminals and who are often less guilty than those enjoying freedom.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the bill introduced by my colleague from Calgary North deserves not only thorough but also speedy consideration. The rights involved in such an amendment concern the most basic rights of individuals—freedom and justice. Looking over my colleague's bill and the clause to which he refers, I note that the sentence at issue is the last one which reads as follows:

—the accused is to be tried . . . as if . . . the offence . . . had been committed after the coming into force of this act.

After having acquainted myself with the original section, I hesitate to reach the same conclusion as my hon. colleague. Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to recognize that the present section provides for a more severe penalty, but not that the new section allows for the possibility of a more serious offence or indictment than that the Crown could have preferred before implementation of this bill. Obviously, the severity of a penalty can lend itself to many interpretations and discussions. Is the death penalty more severe than 25 years in prison? I doubt that anyone can argue clearly, conclusively which of the two is most severe, most inhuman. I doubt that it is possible to do so because, since the new act was passed, according to the reactions of prisoners, my hon. friend from Westminster mentioned it in his speech—personally I feel that in some regards a 25-year term in prison is far more severe penalty than capital punishment—as I was saying, prisoners with whom we have had occasion to discuss the matter often tell us: "I would have preferred the noose to 25 years in prison." So I think that one must not go too far in saying that the present legislation is less or more harsh than the preceeding one. It is a matter of interpretation, but one thing is certain, neither capital punishment nor 25 years' imprisonment are going to solve our social problems and put an end to the violence which exists in our society, because I do not think that by increasing violence, in the form of capital punishment or 25 years' imprisonment, we are going to improve our world. This is of course my personal opinion, but I am sure that it is shared by members from both sides of the House. As law makers, we are often forced to pass extremely harsh laws, in the hope of solving problems, but we are not, in fact, going to the root of the problem, which is to be found in discussion, dialogue, brotherhood, friendship and co-operation. And this is often forgotten in many sectors.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Calgary North referred to the human rights bill and said that the bill that was passed was in fact a violation of the Bill of Rights. That might true because I think he nearly convinced me with his usual vitality and persuasion that there was an anomaly which deserves not only to be considered by civil servants but which calls for a quick and specific response. And if it was established that a serious injustice was committed, as my colleagues mentioned, I think there should be no hesitation or delay in introducing before the House an amendment which should be approved by all parties as this affects the basic rights of individuals.

Generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, the present Bill of Human Rights certainly does not provide adequate protection and if the bill introduced by my friend and colleague could convince governments, parliamentarians and people in general that we have to pass quickly a constitution in which those basic rights would be recognized and preserved without parliamentarians being able through subsequent legislation or governments to change those basic rights which are above political parties, provinces, countries and which are in fact the basic foundation of our democratic society, that would be fine.

Mr. Speaker, I think that my friend and colleague will surely get positive results with the bill he introduced. And even though I am not prepared to follow him immediately in the course he chose, namely that there is a contradiction between the law as it stands now and the one he would want to see in place, in view of the principle involved, I am prepared to lend my co-operation so a serious and quick examination can be made, so that if it comes out that my friend and colleague is right we can leave aside the fact that he comes from a party of the opposition and we can consider seriously an amendment which could be brought in after serious consideration.

I congratulate my colleague, and I see that once more we have been able to have a discussion above political partisanship, a friendly discussion with both my colleague from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and my colleague from New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) with whom we sit on the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which is recognized, I must admit, as the best and most productive committee of the House under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) who is sitting beside me.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate with very few minutes remaining. This is probably to my benefit because I have a great deal of trepidation in speaking since I am the only non-lawyer so far to speak on this subject in this debate. I see my good friend from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) is also interested in this bill.

First, I want to pay the obeisance that others have to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), with all sincerity to his extreme wisdom and experience in the law and his high reputation as a trial lawyer. Even if I am standing as a government supporter close to the end of the private members' hour, if does not change for a moment my absolute support for the principle he puts forward. I put on record the fact that I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) has no other choice but to go back and look at the situation as drawn out and pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary North.

I want to make a couple of very quick points in defence of the parliamentary secretary, who is trying to carry out his job very ably in presenting some concerns about the wording of Bill C-202. As I understood the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), and I will try to quote him correctly, he said that people are sitting in jail at this moment as a result of this anachronism. Unless he is saying that they are sitting in jail pending their trial because of these complications, in fact those in jail as a result of convictions rendered would be there in any case whether convicted under the old law or under the new one, because 10 years versus 15 minimum, 20 years versus 25 years maximum, would mean that they would still be there now, even though several years have passed after passage of the new bill.

Mr. Leggatt: Would be.

Mr. Fleming: Yes, in time to come. I argue, as I did during the capital punishment debate as a very much committed abolitionist, that one of my great hopes when we introduced and then passed as a parliament that very tough legislation was that if you had to judge that legislation alongside the legislation preceding it, which provided that a few people could be hanged by the state, then compared generally with what the new legislation provides, it was much tougher, much more severe, and I would even admit regressive in the long run. I think I expressed in debate at that time my hope that we can show in time that we must reduce the length of that penalty yet still have an effective deterrent. I hope this will be done before 15, 20 or 25 years pass.

The other point I want to make is in defence of my colleague. He mentioned that only three people are involved. I do not believe that the parliamentary secretary any more than other members who have contributed to this debate for a moment minimizes one person's rights before the law and his right to absolute justice. Any law which would in the process of carrying out justice create injustice for one, two or 200 is a wrong law and should be changed.

Finally, I would like to add my voice, and I am sure that of all hon. members here present, in support. I see our very distinguished chairman of the justice committee here. I heard his applause in support of the hon. member for Calgary North. I think there is general sympathy that the Minister of Justice must look at this problem. As easy as it would be for us to take the soft course and to say we are talking about potential murderers, alleged murderers, people who defy our society and the highest principles of it, those principles are not worth a damn if we cannot give an equal measure of the law to all people who come up against it in our society.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would very much like to congratulate the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). I am an admirer of his depth of perception and the deep sense of justice he has—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1978-79

MEASURE TO GRANT SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING POWER

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-7, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1978-79 and to amend the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the motion of Mr. Stevens.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, before five o'clock I was explaining how uncontrolled government spending, uncontrolled growth of government departments and uncontrolled borrowing started in 1963 under the Liberal government. I want to put on record the statement made by the Auditor General:

> We feel very strongly about the fact that unless the systems are corrected the day may well come when I cannot give a clear certificate on the accounts of Canada.

Remember, all this happened during the term of office of the present government. The Liberal government has become a spending machine without a control centre. This has been verified by recent reports of the Auditor General. That is why we cannot rubber stamp authority for these loans and this latest request for additional borrowing of $7 billion.

I wish to explain to the House how this situation arose a number of years ago. The erosion of parliamentary control over government spending has its genesis in certain parliamentary rule changes instituted in 1969. In the summer of that year the government invoked closure, which, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is the termination of debate, to ram through a rule, Standing Order 75C, permitting a minister to close debate within ten days where there is not agreement between all parties, with a maximum of four days' debate. This was a dictatorial, unilateral action on the part of the government. The rules are the property of parliament as a whole, not just of the government. The government used closure to get a new closure rule.

This rule has effectively prevented parliament from properly scrutinizing government expenditures. Departmental estimates are shuttled off to already overworked committees and then reported back to the House where debate on them is limited, and thus seldom meaningful. As well, the number of votes on estimates has been reduced, further restricting parliamentary debate on government spending.

I could go on about this, particularly the "ramming through" back in 1969. What it means is that there is no itemized accounting of government expenditure today, and that is why we are protesting. The first responsibility of an elected official, I do not care at what level, is to see that tax dollars are properly spent, and we do not know whether they are being spent properly because of this rule change which was rammed through by closure.

I will give members a further example. It has to do with the money supply and it all ties up with the bill before us and the reason the government is asking for authority to borrow $7 billion, borrow $10 billion—borrow, borrow, borrow, print, print, print, spend, spend, spend. The money supply, the chief cause of inflation, is constantly being increased. Money should just not be printed but must be related to the gross national product. In the period from October, 1970 to October, 1976 the federal government expanded the country's money supply by 10.2 per cent in contrast to a real growth in the economy of only 31.7 per cent. Inflation increased 55.3 per cent over this period. In the previous six-year period the money supply expanded by 43.2 per cent compared to a real growth in the economy of 34.2 per cent. Inflation totalled a relatively modest 24.1 per cent. The huge amount of financing required by the federal government to finance its deficits was unquestionably one of the main causes of this excessive and inflationary monetary growth.

We are still at it today. I listened to the parliamentary secretary and other members on the government side trying to justify this borrowing. It is such a fraud. Here we are, expanding the department of the Auditor General. He does not know where all the money is going, where all this mad Liberal spending is leading us. We have to appoint a Comptroller General, and he says he is going to need a staff of 300, probably all chartered accountants, and hopes he is not around when this staff of 300 begins to find out where all the money is going. He recently stated that restraint being realized in Ottawa will take a decade to filter down through management. So we come back to that rule change.

● (2012)

We are told that everything is just rosy and sweet and that we should not be saying anything about doom and gloom. We had to appoint a Comptroller General at an initial cost of $6 million to Canadian taxpayers. The Comptroller General says he will need a staff of 300 to find out what on earth this government has been doing over the last 10 or 12 years. One of the frontbenchers of the Liberal party who has been here for years sits there laughing and giggling. This is all a big joke to him.

I would like to list the principal faults of Bill C-7, a bill which is needed because of bad financial management in Canada over the last 15 years. This is the third time that the government has sought to raise borrowing limits for the current fiscal year. First, there was whatever was left from the $9 billion new authority granted by Bill C-11 in December, 1977, which applied to the 1978 and 1979 fiscal years. Then in Bill C-31 the government sought a further $5 billion in borrowing authority in March of 1978. Now Bill C-7 asks for a further $7 billion. This bad planning of debt needs is the same kind of bad planning which caused the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to make three quasi-budget presentations within one year. That is a clear indication that the government really does not know what it is doing.

Federal figures do not add up. For fiscal years 1978 and 1979 borrowing limits have been raised by $28 billion, including those contained in Bill C-7. However, the sum of actual and forecast cash requirements for the two years totals $20.3 billion. The extra authority is needed, according to the Department of Finance, to allow foreign bond issues and to permit full draw-downs of foreign currency lines of credit. The extra amount is also needed to cover a large Canada Savings Bond refinancing and to provide a reserve for contingencies.

What the department and the minister do not mention is that foreign currency borrowings can be used and are being used to satisfy the domestic cash requirement. Bank of Canada purchases of Canadian dollars in support of our currency are transferred to federal cash balances, thus reducing the need for domestic financing. Both the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada have pointed this out in the past. Previous requests for new borrowing authorities have referred to the amounts required for foreign exchange support, Canada Savings Bond refinancing and reserves for contingencies.

The obvious question is, how many times in one year must Canada Savings Bonds be refinanced—our financial critic, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) covered this very well this afternoon—and how many reserves for contingencies does the government require.

Economic policy has changed significantly since the last borrowing authority was sought. The government has proposed expenditure cutbacks and several reallocations. Parliament has not had the opportunity to examine and debate the new policies. This goes back to 1969 when all the rules were changed. In those days there was full and itemized accounting and documentation of the expenditures of every government department. Parliament could sensibly debate what was being spent. Ministers were on the hot seat. They really had to be on their toes to explain the expenditures of their departments. Now they can bluff their way through.

We have slower economic growth than that forecast. The forecasts of ministers of finance have been wrong so often in the recent past that whatever the Minister of Finance forecasts is suspect. There is certainly much to suspect with regard to Bill C-7. Lower than anticipated economic growth will result in lower revenues, higher deficits and the need for more borrowing.

There is a need for change in economic policy. The Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) in a joint statement on September 8 raised the possibility of a tax cut. Since the Minister of Finance attacks our tax cut proposals on the ground that tax cuts would increase the deficit, tax cuts in the next budget would, by his own analysis, increase borrowing requirements. Conversely, the federal government may at last concede that much of the current federal spending is still excessive. The government may propose further cutbacks in areas where there should not be cutbacks.

This is all part of a Liberal plot. Anyone who attacks these "high profile" cuts will be told that they should not oppose cutbacks, but there are many departments and agencies in which cuts could be made. There are about 400 federal government departments and agencies, some of which we have never heard of, which are serving no useful purpose at all. They could be eliminated, but what does the government do? It cuts forestry research expenditures. The forestry research people have not completed all the research that is required. The government is also eliminating weather stations. This is all trickery. That there might be meaningful cutbacks is an unlikely prospect, but cutbacks cannot be ruled out, given the sudden shifts in economic policy this government has been making. Lower expenditures may mean that this borrowing authority is excessive.

While most observers think our currency is undervalued, a further decline in our dollar is a realistic possibility. Further borrowings may be required. If one accepts the minister's claim that foreign currency borrowings require new borrowing authorization, then the present $7 billion authority being sought might be too little.

I would like to talk about the proliferation of public debt. Total borrowing authorities requested for the fiscal years 1978, 1979 and 1980 are $38 billion. That is unbelievable. When this government took over in 1963 total federal government expenditures were only about $6 billion. Now we are talking about $38 billion in borrowing authority. If this authority is fully utilized, the unmatured debt of Canada will be 90 per cent higher in 1980 than it was in 1977. That is unbelievable.

There are parliamentary secretaries and others who stand up in this House and tell us how wonderful things are and that we should not talk about this because it is doom and gloom. All they want us to do is keep rubberstamping bills to allow the government to borrow $7 billion, $10 billion and on and on. Everything is just fine as long as the government can borrow more money. That is the Liberal rationale, and it is totally irresponsible.

The parliamentary secretary says that we will have a difficult job going into the next federal election explaining that it is wrong to keep on borrowing money. I will have no trouble with that, and the Liberal in my riding will lose his deposit. The rate of public debt expansion to which I referred will be unprecedented in peacetime history. Interest costs for servicing the public debt are skyrocketing. Debt charges will be much higher than they have been. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Martin) says we will have a difficult job explaining that in the next federal election. I will have no trouble explaining that. These new borrowing authorities will guarantee that the debt interest spiral will continue. The only way this government wants to govern is by borrowing more money, printing more money and spending more money.

Extensive foreign borrowings are a short-term solution but they create long-term problems. Federal foreign borrowings undertaken in the last year must be repaid. The interest charges on the debts will add 5 per cent to Canada's interest and dividends trade deficit.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are on the edge of your seat, so I will bring my remarks to a close by making it perfectly clear that I will not be voting for this bill or in any way supporting this irresponsible borrowing.

• (2022)

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this borrowing bill and to reiterate our concern about the difficult situation in which we find ourselves with the ever increasing deficit which we are running. For instance, in the two years from 1966 to 1968, the net financing requirement of the Government of Canada was for $2,578 million; from 1969 to 1971, the financing requirements were for $3,671 million; from 1972 to 1974, the financing requirements were for $3,271 million; and from 1975 to 1977, they were for $14,334 million. The projected figure for 1978-1979 is over $20 billion; that is not taking into account the foreign borrowings with which this bill is dealing.

I think these figures are significant. For instance, in the two years from 1969 to 1971, the deficit amounted to $3,671 million, or an average of $1.8 billion a year. The g.n.p. for this year is projected to be around $260 billion, but in 1971 constant dollars it was only $130 billion. So, in effect, our deficit is around five to six times what it was in 1971, based on the value of the dollar that year.

I think we should also remember how the government, through inflation, has taken a great deal of money from bond holders. It has filched that money from them through the mechanics of inflation. For instance, a $1,000 bond bought in 1971 would only be worth $500 in buying power today, based on the present inflation rate. How long can we continue to be bond holders if we are rooked this way? Taking out a Canada bond is an invitation to certain loss, because not only will the bond purchaser see the value of his bond depreciate by 10 per cent a year, but he will also be taxed on the interest, so that he will not even be able to keep even.

When the Government of Canada, in the two years from 1972 to 1974, had a deficit of $3,271 million, the Bank of Canada purchased $2,172 million, or 66 per cent of that deficit. It meant that the bank just monetized the debt. It did not take the money from the public or out of its savings, but merely printed money to carry us through. What we must keep in mind in discussing this amendment to the bill is: Will the Canada Savings Bonds which are now being sold be taken up? Will we have enough in borrowings to cover the $10 billion to $11 billion necessary for this year, and how much money will the Bank of Canada print? I suspect the amount will be pretty substantial.

It is obvious that the inflationary pressures are continuing. In today's issue of the Globe and Mail, an article in the report on business is entitled "Money growth rate causes concern." It is written by Hugh Anderson who states the following:

Increasing concern over the high rate of growth in the money supply in both Canada and the United States is being shown by financial market commentators.

The situation is more clear-cut south of the border, where the picture is not clouded by such temporary phenomena as a postal strike and a banking year end.

The article goes on to say that it has been concluded:

—that money supply growth will have to be curtailed if the Federal Reserve Board's targets are to be met.

Speaking of Canada, Hugh Anderson has this to say:

Similar problems may well be building up in Canada where the chart lines showing the rate of growth in M-1 have shot well above the Bank of Canada's target range of 6 to 10 per cent, measured on a weekly basis. The central bank has warned that recent numbers may be misleading because of the unknown effects of the brief postal stoppage last month . . .

The fact remains, however, that curbing money supply growth seems likely to become a preoccupation for the central bank . . .

It seems to me that the somewhat more vigorous rate of Canadian economic growth expected in 1979 and the amount of federal debt to be monetized both suggest further upward pressure on M-1 after the January-February seasonal decline.

The problem of inflation remains with us, and much of what we will be seeing and watching for depends on the success or otherwise of the recent issue of Canada Savings Bonds—on how many of these bonds will be taken up by the Bank of Canada.

The real wages of the average Canadian worker are falling because prices are rising faster than his pay. The normal and natural thing for him to do is to try to get enough pay to keep his standard of living from falling any further. But the government has been trying to persuade him to grit his teeth. As the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada stated:

Canadians will be wise enough to recognize that the burst in consumer prices is temporary and that it should be met with moderation and patience.

But is this inflation temporary? I doubt it. What are some of the indications? We find that wholesale prices are on the rise, which is a fairly sure indicator of inflation down the road. It is a sign of higher retail prices to come. Until recently, the wholesale price index has been trailing behind the consumer price index, but it has now surged ahead and is quoted at 14 per cent for September.

High interest rates are both an indication and a cause of high inflation to come. One element in interest rates is an allowance for future inflation. At the same time, increased interest rates feed into prices by raising costs of production, of construction and of holding inventories.

Those of us who have studied the inflationary process since as far back as 1970 have noted, as did the current finance committee, that the real interest rate had to be 3 per cent and that anything above that figure was what the lender expected inflation to be; and since he made that allowance, the raised interest rates and the higher inflation were taken into account by him.

We are likely to get secondhand inflationary pressure as a result of the slump in the U.S. dollar, and of course our dollar has slumped much more. The U.S. dollar has dropped 20 per cent in relation to the German mark and more in relation to the Japanese yen. Therefore, we are bound to have inflation as a result.

The U.S. president has attempted to contain inflation through voluntary guidelines. Where can he hope to go? We have had them in Canada. We had the Food Prices Review Board and voluntary guidelines. This indicates that they are merely a smokescreen to obscure what is really happening. Inflation is like a hot potato, tossed from one section of the economy to another, each sector hoping that the other one will take it up. Labour will decline to hang on to the hot potato of the inflationary spiral without demanding further wage increases, which bring on the demand for wage and price controls. The borrowings indicate that our accounts are pretty well out of control. The seeking of additional borrowings indicates the bad state of our economy.

● (2032)

I should like to refer to the recent takeover of Phillips Petroleum by Petro-Canada. That takeover does not seem to make much sense. This company was paying taxes, and I understand that it was a well-run company. It is being taken over by Petro-Canada, which takeover will be financed by the borrowing of American dollars. Perhaps one can say that this is the repatriation of a company which is owned approximately 70 per cent by United States interests.

Is exchanging equity for a mortgage any better? In a mortgage the interest and principal must be repaid, regardless of whether Petro-Canada makes any money or what its profitability is, whereas when there is equity investment and the company does not make money, the people who have invested in the company do not receive dividends either. To go forward with the borrowing of $1 billion to buy a well-established company in Canada makes no sense at this time. It increases liabilities by another $1 billion. The government has said that it is not responsible. As a federal company, Petro-Canada in the final analysis must be backed up by the Canadian government. Its borrowings and losses are picked up by the government.

Last spring the Export Development Act was before the House. Everyone who studied that act realized that in effect the Government of Canada was the covenant for the borrowing of the Export Development Corporation. On that occasion the government was honest enough to admit, if the worst came to the worst, that EDC could call upon the federal treasury to cover its borrowings. The Export Development Corporation raised money in the Eurodollar market, which action increased the pressure on the United States dollar.

In the Eurodollar market, the holders of foreign dollars have a defence against the devaluation of the American dollar and hence the Canadian dollar. They create more dollars by borrowing. Loans create deposits faster than engraving greenbacks. All the Eurodollar need to do is increase strong currency loans to Eurodollar accounts, thereby building up dollar deposits without an obligation to liquidate assets put up as collateral. In effect, EDC is adding to our debt responsibility abroad by borrowing in the Eurodollar market. In turn, pressures are created on the American dollar and finally the Canadian dollar.

The objective of this amendment is to ensure that this act shall come into force on a date, after royal assent, to be fixed by proclamation. To date it back to November 1, 1978 is not in the best interests of this legislation. I hope the government and hon. members see fit to support the amendment before the House at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to rise on the amendment put forward by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) at the report stage of Bill C-7, an act to provide the government with supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1978-79.

First of all, I should like to say that I am against the amendment because I think that it is useless and, second, that it is contrary to parliamentary practice relating to government business put before parliament, that is to say that on budget or tax matters it is normal for the government to propose legislation subject to parliament approval. When the government introduced this legislation at the outset, it felt that to ensure the orderly issue of Canada Savings Bonds it was better to have a set date for the coming into force of such a legislation once passed by parliament, that is November 1, which coincides with the issue of the new Canada Savings Bonds series.

So that is why I find the amendment moved by the hon. member for York-Simcoe to be useless and contrary to the practice in budget and tax matters put before parliament. However, Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on that amendment and on the general issue, because it should be noted that we are now merely discussing the question of increasing the borrowing authority of the federal government and not necessarily of authorizing expenditures. During the debate on second reading of Bill C-7, as in committee, I was a member of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, when members criticized the bill they wanted to deal with government expenditures. The bill does not provide for any government expenditure but it is aimed at allowing the government to increase its borrowing authority. Of course, if the government is borrowing, before those expenditures can be made, they must be approved by parliament. This is not a debate on government expenditures but on whether or not to increase the borrowing authority of the government. Once the government has borrowed, before spending that money, it must obtain authority to do so.

In this debate we are obviously getting the same reaction from the Conservative party when they tell us that the government spends too much, that government borrowings will fuel inflation, that its spending is ill-conceived, that its intervention in the Canadian economy is excessive, yet in all debates or every day some members on the other side who pretend they speak for their parties have nothing else to do than to propose measures which would imply more government spending. Whenever the government proposes reductions, the Conservatives stand on both sides of the fence at the same time. On the one hand, they say, "Cut the spending, reduce the government's deficit. You interfere too much in the economy. It's bad." But the minute the government proposes a reduction, the same people on the other side who said "Cut, cut, cut" stand up one after another and say, "It's terrible! You are going to close a laboratory here. Shame, you are going to close a laboratory there. It is awful, you are going to put people on unemployment." Well, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives should make up their minds about whether they want the government to reduce its intervention in the economy or to increase it.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

In my opinion, additional fiscal measures by the government are healthy for the economy. Those who want better redistribution of wealth and more social justice must recognize that it is up to the government to do that on behalf of Canadians. It levies taxes or uses its borrowing power to redistribute this wealth. It is the only way to do it and anyone suggesting that we can build a better society without doing that either fails to understand how the economy works or is being a hypocrite. It is one or the other.

Mr. Nystrom: That is socialism.

Mr. Breau: No, it is not necessarily socialism. My friend from Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is still confusing socialism and pragmatism.

I did not understand what the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) meant but I think I know what he will say during this debate. He will likely say that the government—I should not anticipate on what he is going to say but sometimes it happens that we know in advance what people are going to say—he is going to say that it is a terrible thing for the government to spend more and to have an oil company such as Petro-Can. He is going to say it is bad for a country to have that kind of company while the British or the Mexicans or other countries have similar national companies but, in his opinion, it is bad for Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: France and England!

Mr. Breau: I said the British, and that means England.

Mr. Speaker, this is one example where on the one hand the Conservative members are telling us to do more for society. I am astonished by some of the eloquent speeches that we have heard from the Conservative ranks in the past two or three weeks. They are telling us to do more to help the poor and to eliminate the disparities that exist in our society but on the other hand, they are rising to say: you spend too much, you undertake too much, you collect too many taxes, you use too freely the borrowing authority of the government.

Mr. Speaker, there is no way to build a more just society if the government does not use its borrowing and taxing authority to distribute the resources and benefits in the economy and in society as a whole.

● (2042)

[English]

It is very funny that when the government proposes to privatize some services which have proven to be self-sufficient, as for example the program of insurance for fishing vessels, research facilities of the department of fisheries in Halifax and some research facilities for the forest industry, we hear members of the Conservative party particularly criticize and suggest it is terrible to privatize in that way.

An hon. Member: He is not a Conservative.

Mr. Breau: I am not referring to him, I am referring to the Conservative party. They say it is terrible to leave these services in the hands of the private sector. I have been here for a little more than ten years.

An hon. Member: Too long.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) says "too long". I have not been here as long as he, so if it is too long for me it must be very long for him. During the ten years I have been here, the Conservative members have been saying we should leave these things to the private sector because the private sector is more efficient and can do things better. When the government does exactly that, members of the Conservative party, including that hon. member from Victoria—I forget the name of his riding right now—

An hon. Member: You mean Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Breau: He gets up and says it is terrible to privatize. I heard him during the question period about ten days ago say it was terrible to privatize some of the research facilities of the federal government.

Mr. Orlikow: And he was right for a change.

Mr. Breau: Hon. members should make up their minds. Either we give more to the private sector or we do not. I do not think the Canadian people or this parliament will be fooled by the people over there who cannot make up their minds and try to be on both sides of an issue at the same time.

Mr. Woolliams: Why don't we go to the country? You would not have an election in the spring or in the fall. Let us have a decision.

Mr. Breau: If the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) wants to speak he should do so. I am sure he is not shy. Normally he is a very good orator. He can get up during debate and make quite a good speech on any subject. I am sure he will continue in that tradition and make a speech if he wants to respond to what I am saying.

I am one who believes the government must use its borrowing power to intervene in the economy. It should use its power to redistribute the fiscal resources of the country in order to ensure a better sharing of the riches of this country. I have suggested to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), and he has told me he would give this serious consideration, that one of the things we should do in order to stimulate the economy is devise a special program whereby the government would help start large industrial infrastructure projects in the field of energy, in the field of fisheries and in other fields that normally are left to federal spending. Because we cannot expect the private sector to do everything. For example, in respect of fisheries we must provide wharves and marine facilities, and in respect of energy we must provide pipelines and other things that will be needed in the future.

Mr. Andre: The private sector is quite ready to do that. You do not have to get involved.

Mr. Breau: The government should help support any project that requires public spending. We have a surplus of manpower, or a surplus in the labour force. After all, that is what unemployment is. We should have a special authority for borrowing abroad, as that will not influence interest rates in the country, using these funds precisely for the purpose of helping the provinces and the private sector in large industrial infrastructure projects which will be needed in the next 20 or 25 years, even if we have to pay higher interest rates. Perhaps many of these projects are not economically feasible at this time, but when considered in the long-term they may be feasibly attractive at some time in the future.

What I am suggesting is that we use our borrowing authority now in conjunction with our surplus in the labour force to start these projects. Many studies have confirmed that within ten years we will have a shortage of skilled construction workers. This means that we will be engaged in large industrial projects requiring a great deal of construction activity and will have to import workers from outside. I suggest we should borrow now in order to start these projects now.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill should be passed by parliament for the reasons explained by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in committee and in the House. First, he had to borrow outside the country, particularly in Germany and the United States, so as to change those funds into Canadian dollars with a view to ensuring an orderly fluctuation of exchange. As the situation of our dollar has improved, we can now sell dollars to ensure an orderly increase. It is important to act that way when there is pressure on the dollar, pressure which is very often speculative. For that reason it is important for the government to exchange foreign currencies from borrowings or national reserves into Canadian dollars to ensure an orderly fluctuation. Even on that issue it is difficult to understand what would be the position of the Progressive Conservative party because every time we had data indicating that the government had converted its foreign currency reserves into Canadian dollars, opposition members and particularly the Progressive Conservatives rose and said it was dangerous for the economy, that it was an evidence of the malfunction of our economy because we converted foreign currencies from borrowings or Canadian reserves into Canadian dollars to insure an orderly fluctuation on the exchange market.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the opposition members would do if they ever had the power or the responsibility to act. Would they merely leave the market to its own devices when there is a run on the dollar, when it is obvious that speculative forces are reducing the value of the dollar, that the dollar is artificially reduced by speculative forces? The hon. member is laughing, does he believe that there is no speculation against our dollar?

● (2052)

[English]

There is never any speculation against the dollar?

Mr. Andre: That is not what is causing it.

Mr. Breau: I am not saying that is what is causing that. I am saying that at times pressure on the dollar is caused strictly by speculative forces. At times that is what happens and that is why it is important for the government to intervene and make sure that upward fluctuations on the dollar are orderly.

On that point I should like to know what the Conservatives would do. If they found out there was speculation against the dollar, would they let the speculators have a holiday on the dollar? Is that what they would do? Of course, we do not get an answer; all we get is criticism when the government—

Mr. Andre: I am going to speak in a minute and I will give you the answer.

Mr. Breau: I am glad that we will finally get a position on that from a member of the Conservative party in the shadow cabinet. He may speak with authority and tell us what the Conservatives would do. Would they intervene when there is clearly an artificial downward pressure on the dollar, when there is speculation on the dollar, or would they let the market settle exactly where the dollar should be? I should like to hear that, because I believe it is the responsibility of the government to make sure that fluctuation in the exchange markets is orderly, and when there is speculation we should intervene. We should do so when there is downward pressure on the dollar as well as when there is upward pressure on the dollar.

In these last few days we have heard again the great Tory pronouncement of how dangerous it is, how terrible it is, for the government of this country, for the parliament of this country, to set up a national oil company like Petro-Canada. When the Conservatives attack the government for keeping Petro-Canada, for shoring up Petro-Canada, for making sure it plays an important role in the development of oil and gas in this country, what they are saying is that Canadians are not good enough to have a national oil company like the British have, the French have and the Mexicans have.

I hope in the next election campaign they will come to eastern Canada, where Petro-Canada has been the only company to invest money and make sure there is exploration there for oil and gas. I just cannot wait until the Tories come there and tell the people they do not want this to happen, that they do not want a national oil company. We will see what the country says about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, there was so much nonsense in that speech that to reply to all of it would take up all the time I am allotted so I will just touch on some of the most obvious points.

First of all, the hon. member contends that it is evil speculators who have driven our dollar down to 84 cents or 85 cents and that the government is intervening simply to stop these evil speculators from driving the dollar down. That is absolute nonsense. The dollar is being driven down because Canada has one of the highest inflation rates—

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege.

Mr. Andre: You have just finished speaking.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) on a point of order.

Mr. Breau: No, a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I believe the rules provide that when a member is being misrepresented that is a question of privilege. The hon. member is misrepresenting what I just said when he said—

An hon. Member: No, he is quoting you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I understand the hon. member for Gloucester wants to debate or argue a point that was just made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). He may have that privilege if we have the unanimous consent of the House. Nevertheless, if he has a point of privilege to raise it might be done at a later time but certainly not at this time. I feel it is quite argumentative. The hon. member for Gloucester wants to debate or argue a point made by the hon. member for Calgary Centre. I cannot recognize him on a point of privilege.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. I am not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

An hon. Member: You have made your speech.

Mr. Andre: You sit down, you nincompoop!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I should not like to have to cite any quotation or any rules of procedure that I have to live by, but I have to regretfully say that I see no point of privilege. I recognize the hon. member for Calgary Centre.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Name him.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I was in the House but did not hear the explanations of the hon. member who wanted to raise a question of privilege. It is rather difficult for me to judge whether there was indeed a question of privilege. I am referring to Standing Order 17(2) which provides for a question of privilege to be raised at the first opportunity. I do not know, however, what the hon. member was going to say, so it is difficult for me to decide whether he was raising a question of privilege. I respectfully suggest that he be heard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I think—I am listening and it is precisely what hon. members are saying and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), and I quote, said he had been misquoted. If one refers to Standing Order 37, one can see that a debate cannot be interrupted and above all that a member who has had the floor cannot speak again to say that he has been misquoted. I therefore recognize the member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

[English]

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege.

Mr. Corbin: You have to listen to him, Mr. Speaker. He has to be heard.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Name him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I have recognized the hon. member for Calgary Centre and I have ruled there was no question of privilege; therefore, I cannot entertain any discussion on the matter. The hon. member for Calgary Centre.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Stanfield: Filibuster.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Gloucester on a point of order.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, if hon. members would just keep quiet, I am just trying to make a point. I do not want to question your decision—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, you said in your ruling that I had said that I was misquoted. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I had not said that. I said that the hon. member for Calgary Centre was misrepresenting what I said. I believe that a member—

● (2102)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I read from Standing Order 37:

(1) No member may speak twice to a question except in explanation of a material part of his speech which may have been misquoted or misunderstood, but then he is not to introduce any new matter, and no debate shall be allowed upon such explanation.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, before I was so rudely interrupted five or six times I was saying the hon. member's contention that the dollar has dropped because of evil speculators is nonsense. The dollar has dropped in value because Canada's inflation rate is higher than most other western industrialized countries. Our government is running a deficit higher than any other country, with the exception of Italy, and the international monetary fund has no confidence in this government's ability to run the economy. That is why the dollar is dropping, and the parliamentary secretary knows that full well. He knows exactly why the dollar is dropping in value and why we are running the huge kind of trade deficit we have.

There were a few other remarks made by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) that I would like to touch on. His opening statement made reference to the fact that it was perfectly reasonable—in fact, it was more than reasonable, it was highly desirable—for the government to involve itself physically in the economy, to borrow money and to take money from the state, spread it out and do good works on behalf of the people of Canada. That was his statement. He said that anyone who opposed that was really being mean and cruel.

I would like to remind the hon. member of a speech made by his leader on August 1. That is not long ago and he should be able to remember that far back. They were planning an election at the time but maybe this is only valid during pre-election periods and we should not believe what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said after he has changed his mind about an election. He said, however:

We will be cutting $2 billion from current and planned expenditures . . .

According to the hon. member for Gloucester, what the Prime Minister said he was going to be doing when he spoke on August 1 is exactly the wrong thing to do. The Prime Minister also said:

We will achieve zero growth in the federal public service.

The hon. member for Gloucester thinks that is terrible. But that is what the Prime Minister promised on national television on August 1. The Prime Minister went on to say:

We will remove the intrusions of many government policies and regulations from individuals and businesses—

That is what the Prime Minister promised on national television on August 1. Continuing, he said:

—in some cases this will mean returning functions to the private sector—

That is what the Prime Minister promised. And again the speech continues:

—in others it will mean removing the heavy hand of government and its drag on personal initiatives.

He said that on national television.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Obviously some of the members of the Liberal party disagree with the hon. member for Gloucester and his contention that the government should get in there and get involved.

An hon. Member: We disagree with you.

Mr. Andre: Much of this, of course, was repeated in the throne speech of October 10. Then less than 30 days later an airline and an oil company were nationalized.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Who in their right mind, Mr. Speaker, would believe anything that anyone in that group says?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: People in Canada do not.

Mr. Andre: This is a debate about government spending and about government debt. That is what I am going to talk about but the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Martin) made some comments about Petro-Canada that I must respond to. In particular, he said that Petro-Canada was needed so that the government could have control over an important part of the oil industry. That was his statement.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know how you will rule on this matter. I think the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has indicated that I have made definite, specific statements. I simply want to say that those were not the statements that I made. I could ask him to withdraw those remarks until he has at least read the transcript.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I heard what I heard, and I heard both the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Gloucester say that Petro-Canada gives the government control over an important sector of the industry. It is impossible to run a seismic line, it is impossible to drill a well, it is impossible to put in some pumps, it is impossible to put in a pipeline, it is impossible to put in a refinery, it is impossible to do anything without getting government permission. There are several hundred employees of E M and R, under various pieces of legislation plus something called moral suasion, exercising tremendous control over the oil industry. There is the National Energy Board with its several hundred employees licensing virtually every activity of the oil and gas industry. It is one of the most regulated industries imaginable.

An hon. Member: But they pay no taxes.

Mr. Andre: What the government is saying is that all of these hundreds of civil servants and hundreds of thousands of other people cannot control the industry. The government has to own it to control it. At least we have to say: "If that is the route you are going, get rid of these other redundant people. If they are not doing the job of controlling it that they are being paid to do, get rid of them." Why have both?

An hon. Member: That is a good point.

Mr. Andre: Why can we not have a national oil company since Mexico has one? Obviously they do not know anything about the history of the Mexican oil industry. In the 1930s when Mexico's industry was privately run, Mexico was the second largest producer of oil in the world. It was the largest exporter of oil in the world by a long way. Then the Mexican government nationalized the industry and for the next 40 years Mexico was a net importer of oil. That nationalized oil company went from the largest exporter in the world to being a net importer of energy, at great cost to the people of Mexico through lost opportunity, lost revenue, lost jobs.

This situation must be put in the context of the geology Mexico happens to have under its land. It has some of the most attractive geology in the world in terms of oil and gas reserve; only Saudi Arabia surpasses it. So this national oil company for 40 years drove Mexico from being the largest exporter of oil into a net import position. And that is what hon. members opposite want to do to Canada, and we will not let them. That is the point.

If hon. members want to choose examples, at least use a little more care about the examples we should emulate. If hon. members want to emulate something, emulate British Petroleum. That is a good exemple. That is not a Crown corporation. The British government owns shares. They do not control it. It is not an agent of Her Majesty. It does not have a monopoly. It does not have special rules. The government is not allowed to dip into the till and the liabilities of British Petroleum are not liabilities of the British Crown. If there is a national oil company to be duplicated, for goodness sake duplicate BP. Do not duplicate Pemex and do not duplicate these other ludicrous examples that hon. members are putting before the House with no knowledge whatsoever.

Next we come to the question—I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance will be interested in this—of the method of financing this takeover. The method of financing used in this takeover by Petro-Can of Pacific Petroleums is through the sale of something called an income debenture. An income debenture is a loophole in the tax law. It allows the interest on this debenture to be treated on a tax-free basis by the bank. That is the reason for the 7 per cent. The bank does not have to treat it as income. It goes right to the bottom line as profit. There is no tax on it. It is a loophole in the tax law which the banks have taken tremendous advantage of, and they are not to be criticized for that.

● (2112)

The net effect is that the banks in Canada now pay an interest rate of 30 per cent, not 50 per cent as they are supposed to, because a lot of their income is derived from this loophole, these income debentures and so-called term preferred. The net result from this little transaction of Petro-Canada using the banks is the loss of income tax revenue to the treasury of $84 million a year. That is the loss of income tax revenue to the treasury of Canada as a result of this bill. If I were a betting man, I would bet this loophole will be closed on Thursday night.

Is it not interesting that this Crown owned company, our own oil company, should take advantage of this loophole at this point to not only saddle us with $1,400 million in debt but do it in a way that costs us $84 million a year in lost revenue? That is very "responsible" government.

The debt burden that we are forced to bear as a result of irresponsible government over the past few years is absolutely horrendous. Fourteen per cent of government expenditures this year will be used to pay interest on the debt.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says we are concerned about spending. He says this is because we want to cut back on social programs. In fact, he asked us which social programs we would cut back. Old age security payments in this country account for $5,375 million. The interest on debt is $6,500 million. Next year, as a result of the borrowing authority in this bill, it will be over $1 billion more. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would agree it would make a lot of sense to stop this kind of irresponsible spending, take the extra $1 billion in interest and give it to the old people in this country who deserve and need it. That is the kind of policies we want to see.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what capitalism lives on.

Mr. Andre: Instead of spending $1,400 miilion on the takeover of Pacific Petroleums which will not generate one job or one extra barrel of oil, let us use the interest on that money to help the old people, pensioners and veterans that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is genuinely concerned about. That makes a lot more sense than taking over an oil company in some sort of empire building operation.

Mr. Nystrom: Nonsense.

Mr. Andre: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) says "nonsense". He does not want to help the elderly of this country, he wants to take over the oil companies.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Your finance critic would not answer our question.

Mr. Andre: The debt in this country is absolutely incredible. There are no plans, statements or indications as to how it is to be paid off. That $6,500 million does not pay off anything. It is just interest. That is equivalent to one half the total income tax collected in this country. In other words, one half the income tax taken off our pay cheque goes to pay the interest on our national debt. What an incredible figure! Next year it will be larger. We have had no indication from the government of how it plans to pay this off.

Mr. Stanfield: They will bring in John Turner.

Mr. Andre: Marvellous. Before John Turner we had roughly balanced budgets. Turner was the guy who launched us on this blooming program. He was the most pathetic finance minister we ever had. Most who came after him learned from his bad example.

The reasons given by virtually everyone for our debt position are the tremendous drop in the value of the American dollar, the American budgetary deficit, American inflation and American trade balance problems. In every one of those circumstances Canada has done worse and is in a worse position. Our deficit this year is at least four times as much as the United States on a per capita basis, and theirs is considered totally unacceptable. Our inflation is higher and our trade balances are worse. I do not see any action from the government to correct the situation.

If you looked around the world for examples of situations that resemble our economy today, Mr. Speaker, you would find that the most similar circumstance is New York city. We are using borrowed funds on which to live. We pay our operating expenses with borrowed funds. Our situation is like going to Household Finance to borrow money in order to buy groceries without knowing how we will repay it. You keep borrowing more money for groceries. The interest piles up and eventually you have had it. You borrow money to pay the interest and on and on it goes.

An individual can only do that for three or four years before he gets caught. A country can do that for quite a while before getting caught. Unfortunately the government has discovered they can do that past the next election. By the time the country has to pay for this irresponsible behaviour, the electorate will have forgotten who caused it. Therefore, the government will not have to pay the electoral price. That is absolutely irresponsible.

Horrendous as our debt is this year—at least 11.8 per cent declared deficit; that is an understatement by a long ways—much of this government's spending is disguised. It is not declared but simply hidden. Year after year we have listened to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) reading his pronouncements that spending had been cut to less than the growth in the gross national product; 9 per cent this year, 9.8 per cent last year, 8.2 per cent the year before.

When I look at the figures produced by Statistics Canada and the Canada Tax Foundation, I find that the percentage of gross national product consumed by individuals has gone up. I wonder how that is possible since government spending is less than the growth in the gross national product. However, the total portion consumed by individuals has gone up.

Mr. Lang: It is provincial.

Mr. Andre: The minister says it is provincial. The federal share is growing faster than the provincial or municipal share. It is from the Canada Tax Foundation that I discovered the notion of national accounts and public accounts. Public accounts are the figures presented to us by the government. National accounts are all aspects of government, including Crown corporations.

When you look at the national accounts, which are all of the government's operations as well as all the Crown corporations, you find that spending by this government is far in excess of the growth in the gross national product. It is not less, as the President of the Treasury Board has been claiming in this House, it is more. They have merely shifted from the consolidated revenue accounts into Crown corporation acounts certain spending, which heretofore had been part of the public accounts, thereby disguising their true spending habits.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (2122)

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I feel bound to interject here—

Mr. Breau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Welland. I just want to ask Your Honour a question.

[Translation]

I merely want to ask the Chair at what stage of the debate an hon. member has the right to invoke Standing Order 37(1) when he has been misinterpreted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I believe I can answer that fairly quickly. At the beginning, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) did not mention the words quoted by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). If he did so, I was unaware of it and did not hear him attribute statements or a quotation to the hon. member, which could lead the hon. member for Gloucester to say he was misinterpreted. Then, the hon. member for Gloucester rose, saying he has been misunderstood or misinterpreted. The point he could certainly argue and bring up, but he surely had to give the Chair a chance to hear what the hon. member for Calgary Centre had to say. Moreover, I could not, at that point, accept the question of privilege as I had not heard what the hon. member for Calgary Centre had to say. The question of privilege was raised and I told him there was not a question of privilege. The hon. member for Gloucester has the floor.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I admit you are right about what you heard or not; however, the hon. member has clearly interpreted my remarks, I did hear him clearly and I think he himself would recognize he did. I can understand Your Honour may not have heard or understood, but I simply want to tell you, that I heard the hon. member for Calgary Centre give a quite wrong interpretation of the position I have stated in my speech on a certain matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): One certainly cannot raise the question of privilege to quote the interpretations of a position taken, or of what one intended to mean; it can be done only if one quotes the exact words that have been said and that have been given a wrong interpretation. Then one can certainly seek rectification by raising the question of privilege. However, I must say, I did not hear the hon. member for Calgary Centre quote words he had said and say——the hon. member for Gloucester said this and this and this and I will quote. I did not think there was a question of privilege and I so ruled.

[English]

The hon. member for Welland.

Mr. Railton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am really rising because I cannot quite stomach some of the remarks tonight—

An hon. Member: Get a doctor!

Mr. Railton: I have plenty of tablets at my disposal for dealing with ordinary stomach ache, but it would take a peculiar type of medicine to enable me to put up with the sickness engendered by irresponsible talk from the other side. This talk about irresponsibility on the part of the government is ludicrous. I think some of the members on the other side should remember what Gordon Sinclair, that good old war-horse, said a year ago—that our leader is the most maligned man in Canada and that he is getting tired of all the blame and approbrium being heaped on his shoulders by small minds. And small minds come from the other side. I think this kind of debate tonight has been taken a little too far.

Way back in October and a little later we were discussing Bill C-7, and at that time the opposition was still talking about irresponsibility as well as about unemployment and inflation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, unemployment is no fault of the government. In fact, we have been creating more jobs in the last ten years than any other country in the world. I have to keep repeating this because people do not listen. We have to keep repeating the simple truth. In some years the number of new jobs created has been 250,000; in other years 350,000. It is usually between 250,000 and 275,000 jobs every year. No other country has done as well either in terms of percentage or in absolute figures.

If you want to talk about the growth of the labour force and the reason for the present unemployment, there are some encouraging figures to go on. As the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) told us a few weeks ago, for every 100 people employed in Germany ten years ago there are today some 96. The figure for the U.K. is around 110. In Italy it is around 112 and the figures for France are roughly even. In the United States it is 125 but in Canada it is between 145 and 150. There is no other industrial country in the world which has experienced such growth in the labour force. We want to see participation by women and young people. We have more young people than most other countries—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Railton: There is no doubt we have experienced a bigger population growth through the birth rate than most other countries since the end of the Second World War and the Korean war. We are not complaining about it; we are glad to have these people and glad they are willing to work. We are trying to find work for them and we are doing better than most countries.

As far as inflation is concerned, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) put us down in thirteenth or fourteenth place. This was refuted by the hon. member from Scarborough. We are really not in that position. We are in the first two, three or four or whatever it is in those categories, so we are not thirteenth or fourteenth among the industrial nations at all as far as inflation is concerned. Our performance has been better than that of most countries.

I have no idea what the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) was talking about when he spoke of nationalization. We are not nationalizing anything. Does the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) have anything against Crown corporations? Is he telling us he would not like to see Air Canada continue, that he would not like to see the CBC continue, that he would not like to see the CNR continue, that he would not like to see the Post Office turned into a Crown corporation? Just how are we going to perform?

This idea that the government must not intervene is rather naive. There is no country in the world which has not intervened in business. This idea of private enterprise making everything sweet and rosy is probably the most old-fashioned idea since Eve tempted Adam with an apple.

Mr. Andre: Why don't you read your own Prime Minister's speech. That is what he said.

Mr. Railton: Take your choice. You have totalitarian countries whether on the left or on the right. You have countries with so-called democratic governments. But none of those countries with so-called democratic governments can get along without intervention by sensible, responsible administrations once in a while. This is how Petro-Can will have to be regarded.

● (2132)

Petro-Canada was set up for a definite purpose. The hon. member for Calgary Centre was with me and a number of others who went up north to study energy, mines and natural resources. The hon. member saw the beginning of the Syncrude project. He saw Great Canadian Oil Sands work in the tar sands. He went up to Yellowknife, Inuvik and the Arctic islands with the rest of us. We saw Prudhoe Bay. The hon. member talks about the wonderful oil fields in Mexico. We have just as much oil in the Arctic islands and gas in the Beaufort Sea, in Alberta and all through the Mackenzie basin as there is in Saudi Arabia or Mexico. But let us get at it and make ourselves self-reliant.

It is about time we realized why Petro-Canada was set up. Canada's oil and gas industry has been taken over by foreign oil companies. Let us not kid ourselves about that. There are very few Canadian oil companies except for the ones in which we are trying to intervene. Petro-Canada is providing guidance, inspiration and leadership to other oil companies in Canada. Let us not forget that after the quadrupling of oil prices by the Arab world in 1973 and 1974 oil rigs disappeared from Alberta and the north. That was because we did not have Canadian oil companies. We did not have an oil policy which included Petro-Canada. Foreign oil companies wanted to kid Canadians into believing that we had to depend on them. That is why Petro-Canada was set up.

That government intervention was very important, and it will help ensure self-sufficiency. We have done a great deal more than has been done in the United States. It took about two years for good old President Carter's energy package to work its way through congress. We made a start a year or two before President Carter did. Because of its size and the fact that it is our neighbour, the United States cannot see our arguments because of fancy and expensive lobbying in Washington. The United States has not really listened to us, but it will be glad to do so as time goes on.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre was criticizing our social security policies. I wonder what social security program he would like to abolish. Would he like to see old age security wiped out? Would he like to see family allowances wiped out? Would he like to see medicare and hospitalization wiped out? What social security program would the hon. member like to see disappear? He talks about irresponsibility. There is probably no government in Canada which has done as much for the average citizen and the poor person in Canada as this Liberal government has done in the last ten years.

I would like to deal with the question of the national debt. If I said that our national debt per capita is higher than that in the United States, that is actually not so. Per capita the national debt in Canada is less than that in the United States, and it has come down in the last ten years. It has also come down in the United States. The figure has gone down from 35 per cent to 27 per cent.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Oh, come on.

Mr. Railton: Did the hon. member not hear that two or three weeks ago? These are accurate figures, and the figure here is 2 per cent lower than the figure in the United States.

Hon. members talk about our children being saddled with this terrible debt. Is this debt not actually an investment in Canada? Listening to the hon. member for Calgary Centre, one would think he had no faith in Canada's future.

Hon. members should realize that the national debt of Canada could be paid off with one quarter of our gross national product in one year. When we think of it that way, the national debt is not so big.

I have just received a note from the parliamentary secretary. I do not know if he is attempting to correct me, but he points out that proportionately our debt per capita is lower than it was ten years ago, and it is reducing faster than is the national debt in the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak for the amendment to Bill C-7. I have been in various committees with the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), and I always find his rhetoric interesting, but I think today he reached new levels. He made many statements, but if he had to back them up he would have some difficulty. I am sure that in his professional days he would have been much more successful backing up his diagnoses than he was tonight backing up his statements.

Tonight the hon. member for Welland mused in the same manner as his fearless leader has mused. Hon. members will recall that one New Year's Eve—

Mr. Harquail: Wouldn't you like to have a leader?

Mr. Epp: I have a leader, and you are on the way out, friend. On that New Year's Eve the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) mused along the same lines as the hon. member for Welland tonight. He said that he thought the market economy was not really working very well. Once someone established that, the next step is obvious. If the market economy does not work well, you intervene and nationalize.

The hon. member does not know what all the fuss and bother is about with regard to nationalization, so I will tell him. Through this bill the government initially asked for authority to borrow $17 billion. Because of opposition to granting authority to borrow $10 billion next fiscal year, the government was forced to back down. An amendment was introduced to delete that request for $10 billion in borrowing authority from Bill C-7.

The government now goes forward and makes additional borrowings. For what purpose? It wants to take over a company at a cost of $1.4 billion. The government has allowed another Crown corporation to buy out a profitable free enterprise carrier, Nordair, despite the objections of almost every province which is served by Nordair. I see that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is in the House tonight. The provinces involved are concerned that if Nordair is vulnerable, who is next and will there be regional carriers? I believe that there are a number of hon. members opposite who are totally convinced, even though it is not very popular at this time, that the market economy does not work and that it is up to them to intervene in the market economy.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) would want to be clear about the facts. The fact is that this request for borrowing authority has nothing whatsoever to do with Petro-Canada's potential to buy this, that or any other company. The current proposal of Petro-Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp).

● (2142)

Mr. Epp: The point that is important is that the government wants to intervene, and it is flirting with the Canadian public when it says: "We must allow the private sector to do more."

[Mr. Railton.]

It is the musing of last August 1 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said he would allow the private sector to do more, that he would not intervene. But that is a slight retreat from his goal and his plan. Mentally and philosophically he has always been an interventionist. He has wanted to control the lives of Canadians and control the market economy. There is a wide body of people in Canada who are now totally convinced that given half the chance, the Prime Minister would intervene even more in the market economy if the politics of it were such that he would not lose at the polls.

All we have to look at is the last ten years and the further intervention by this government in the marketplace. Just take Nordair and Petro-Can as examples. But when anyone criticizes this intervention, hon. members opposite wrap themselves in the Canadian flag and equate any criticism of the Liberal government and of the Prime Minister with criticism of Canada. It is not criticism of Canada that we are putting forward tonight; it is criticism of the leadership of this government and of the economic malaise to which they have brought this country.

No matter how they trumpet and bray from the other side, the Canadian public has finally seen through this crew. Government members opposite are now facing more than anything else a credibility gap, first of all with the Canadian people, and secondly with the international community which does not believe what the government are saying. Let us go back to price and wage controls. Did they support wage and price controls in the 1974 election campaign?

Mr. Béchard: No.

Mr. Epp: Of course they did not. Six months later, on October 14, did they support it? Of course they supported it then, because suddenly the shoe was on the other foot. And that is where the credibility gap started for this government.

Despite the Prime Minister's protestations that he will allow the private market system to work, his actions in the last two weeks have proven again that this is so much rhetoric and that his real philosophical bent is toward intervention. Given half a chance, that is what he will continue to do. No member on the other side of the House can refute what I am saying and defend the Prime Minister. No member on the other side can deny that the Prime Minister's first goal is to make the market economy work and that above and beyond that it is his own private and personal goal to control the Canadian economy.

The result is that today in Canada we have a situation where the potential of this country has been frittered away. Canada can be strong, but not with the type of leadership that this government is giving in economic matters. Read all the comments about the economy. What can the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) do on Thursday night? His hands are tied. Why? Because the Prime Minister and the long list of finance ministers who went to their reward in Toronto and in various such spots have put us further into debt.

The hon. member for Welland is right that a national debt can be created, for instance, as an investment toward to the future. I agree with him. A national debt has also been created during times of crisis. I agree with him, but I do not think this period of crisis should be equated with a period of war or depression. However, the point is that these debts we are now incurring are not long-term investments. Basically, they are debts to cover ongoing expenses of the government, daily expenses.

I will give you one example, Mr. Speaker. We have before the House Bill C-14, which is now in committee. I do not want to get into a debate on the bill, but it is a bill amending the Unemployment Insurance Act. The other day I asked Mr. Speaker for the official consolidation of the act. I received a message from the legal department of the House that there is no such animal. What they did do was give me two pages of amendments and references to the Unemployment Insurance Act passed in 1971.

What I am pointing out is that this is another example of lack of credibility. The then minister of manpower and immigration said that the plan will not cost Canadians any more money than did the previous plan. Yet what is it costing us? It is costing us $4 billion. The point I am trying to make is that every member on this side of the House has said, "Let us make the unemployment insurance program work." But the leakage—or is it the haemorrhage—continues and continues. When anyone criticizes, immediately members on the government side rear up in great protestation and say, "Are you trying to remove money from the unemployed?" They have always tried to project the image of competent managers with experience. They have tried to say that we on this side do not have experience and therefore it will be in the interest of the Canadian people to elect them. I say that the type of experience we are having at present with the government Canadians can well do without.

Why does the government need this $7 billion? Has the parliamentary secretary given us a clear indication of what they need that money for?

Mr. Martin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The question has been posed by the hon. member for Provencher and the answer is yes. The reasons and explanations have been given time and time again, at second reading, in committee—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I understand the parliamentary secretary would like to debate this, but this is certainly a point of debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Epp: Surely it is quite simple. Let us go back to March, 1978. What did the present Minister of Finance say when he asked the House for an additional borrowing authority of $5 billion? Does any member on the government side care to give us the words of the finance minister? I am sure the parliamentary secretary can, but twice he has been shot down by Mr. Speaker for being out of order so perhaps I had better help him out. The Minister of Finance said that the $5 billion in borrowing authority would be sufficient to see the government through to the end of the fiscal year which ends on March 31, 1979, plus, he said, it would be sufficient to meet further contingencies.

What happened then? When we came back on October 10 he asked us, not for $7 billion for this year, but for more. How much did he want? He wanted another $10 billion for next year. Did he give us any answers as to why he wanted the $7 billion? No, but I suppose he must have thought Christmas is coming when everybody gives gifts, and that if the Canadian people have been gullible for so long, they will be gullible once more. What has the government had to do? They have had to withdraw their request for the $10 billion authority because of opposition from this party—because we said no and the Canadian people said no. Despite all the promises of the Minister of Finance, how are we to believe his March statement that $5 billion was sufficient when now he wants another $7 billion? Is it because we are purchasing certain things or is it because we have to prop up the sinking dollar? Is it because the commitments of the government are so high that despite its attempt at restraint, its cash flow is such that it has to go back to the trough for more borrowing?

• (2152)

The Prime Minister went to Bonn and rubbed shoulders with the great leaders of the world. I imagine he hoped the aura of greatness surrounding him would rub off a little bit on him. What did he commit Canada to at that point? He committed Canada to 5 per cent growth and a restraint program. What happened? He came back to Canada after a slight respite in Morocco. What did he come back to Canada to do? He went on national television and told us about the restraint program. Again he said that the government was going to allow the private market economy to take over.

What is the real growth of Canada? We require 5 per cent just to maintain present employment levels and the revenue demands and commitment of the government. We are not meeting a 5 per cent real growth despite the solemn promises of the Prime Minister. That is the reason the government now needs an additional $7 billion and that 14 cents of every tax dollar goes to service debt, not amortize it.

The hon. member for Welland said that the hon. member for Calgary Centre was opposed to social service programs. That is not the case. He pointed out that under the old age pension program we are spending less in Canada on senior citizens than we are spending on interest. The greatest tragedy is that this generation is spending the legacy of our children. We are placing upon our children and their children a debt, not a debt incurred on the basis of investment which will be of benefit to them, but a debt for our own profligate ways. The government has led the way. It needs $7 billion now, and before the next election rolls around it will need additional money.

Mr. Andres: That is correct.

Mr. Epp: The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Andres) agrees. I should like to point out to him that Canadians are tired of handing out more money to a government which cannot manage its affairs.

The amendment by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) to bring at least some semblance of responsibility to the government is highly desirable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part very briefly in this debate to emphasize the good use the government generally makes of the funds voted by the House. I heard this evening several remarks by hon. members, mostly from Alberta, a province which is fairly rich compared to other provinces more to the east. We in the east are very sensitive to the good use the government makes of public funds. With all the social policies we have had in the country for a few years, we can see to what extent the government takes seriously its role of redistributing as fairly as possible all the wealth of this country. If some hon. members from the west find it difficult to agree to share or to have a fair redistribution of the wealth of this country, I find it is shameful and unacceptable. It is still more unacceptable to use the debate on the bill before us to blame the government for its sense of justice and fairness. As far as I am concerned, I represent an area where industry is being really diversified thanks to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

It will be remembered that in 1969 that department was created specifically to fight against regional disparities. That is the very best example one can give of the fair use the Canadian government made of funds. Thanks to the money Bill C-7 will authorize us to borrow, the government will be able to pursue the many projects and programs already in progress. For instance, it will enable industries in ridings like mine to get subsidies for job creation.

Since 1969, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has spent $12 million in the riding of Drummond. It has created hundreds of jobs. In an area like mine, where textiles represented 40 per cent to 45 per cent of the industrial sector ten years ago, it now stands at only 8 per cent of the active population in the whole riding. That change we owe in major part to the policy of the Canadian government with regard to regional economic expansion, a policy of diversification of industries in the larger centres where, unfortunately too often, the economy was dependent on a single sector which in this instance was weak.

Mr. Speaker, when I hear some hon. members from the have provinces complain about the use this government has made of its funds, I can only answer by giving them that example which speaks loudly of the sense of responsibilities, of equity and fair distribution of our wealth across the nation, which this government has. There are also the numerous other programs financed by the Canadian government all of which are in the common interest. We always act in that spirit of Canadian solidarity. Today I heard the member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre)—unfortunately, he left the House—blaming us for nationalizing a private oil company through Petro-Canada. I say that it was a wrongful not to say a misleading way to put it. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before beginning the adjournment debate, I wonder if I might put a question to the Parliamentary secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), concerning the House business tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): That can be done with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that time is of the essence respecting Bill C-5, because certain spouses become widows day by day and lose their benefits until the bill is passed, would the government canvass the possibility of Bill C-5 being given priority over Bill C-7, particularly if it is possible to pass it quickly?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to consider all possibilities, but we will probably proceed with consideration of Bill C-7, then study Bill C-5 and finally come to Bill C-10.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—FUNDING OF LAND REGISTRATION AND INFORMATION SERVICE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pursue the matter which I raised on October 18 with the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) was not in the House. It concerns one of the more unbelievable decisions made by the government in the name of reducing federal expenditures. It has to do with the termination at the halfway point of support for the land registration and information service, a program and agency which the federal government helped to create in 1972-73.

● (2202)

When I indicated to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council on October 18 that not only would this reduce employment by some hundreds in the Atlantic provinces, but lead to millions of dollars in waste as well as to the loss of a new high-technology export industry, the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council seemed to be primarily unaware of this, or certainly gave argument at that time which bore no relationship to the facts.

I think it is very clear that prior to 1972 the over-all program of mapping, and to a certain degree the monumenting system that had been implemented, was totally under the control of the federal government. Indeed, as the premier of Nova Scotia at that time, Mr. Gerald Regan, said in a press release on September 14:

> We were encouraged to get into this program by the federal government five years ago, when the costs were borne 100 per cent by the federal government—

I simply put that on the record at this point to indicate that this is a process by which the federal government seems to be reneging on its basic responsibility.

The 1973 agreement was entered into between Canada and the maritime provinces, introducing a four-phase program designed to provide a simple and understandable land titles system with easy access to property owners. Eventually this system would substitute picture identification of property for the legal identification now used by most offices, introducing really and quite dramatically one of the most up to date land registry systems anywhere in the world.

It was clearly understood that this project would take some ten or 12 years to complete, some time in the 1983 to 1985 period. There were four very clear phases to the program, and it was very clearly outlined in the agreement that the federal government would pay 75 per cent of the cost under that agreement. Because of the policy of the federal government not to enter into contracts ordinarily for longer than a five-year period, the initial agreement was signed to cover the period from 1973 to 1978. However, there was certainly no indication in any way, shape or form that at the half way point the federal government would suddenly terminate its support for this important project. Indeed, the first indication that the federal government was making this unusual decision came with an hour's notice to those directly involved in the LRIS system. As a matter of fact, perhaps the words of Premier Regan indicate more clearly the shock and inability to accept this decision than anything I could state. Premier Regan said on September 14:

> This is the first hint . . . that we have had that this program was not a priority of the federal government. The cutback places all three provinces in an extremely awkward situation. The LRIS program will require seven more years and $40 million if we are to complete it on schedule by 1985. These facts were known by both parties before we embarked on this program in 1973. That the federal government would withdraw support half-way through this capital project is hard to believe.

That is certainly, if anything, an understatement, because not only was there no consultation with any of the three governments of the maritime provinces, and no forewarning to those directly involved with the system, but it seems clear that the department which has been responsible for the implementation of this program, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, was offered almost no consultation or advanced notice. That kind of pursuit of priorities seems to be hard to understand.

As one journalist has pointed out, we are faced with a kind of Hobson's choice where the federal government has pulled the plug at the half way point. As Jack Willoughby wrote in the Toronto Globe and Mail of September 15:

> The withdrawal of federal money from a plan to computerize the land title system in the maritime provinces has left the provinces with the Hobson's choice of paying $40-million to finish the half-completed project or spending large sums to move back to the old system.

We do not have the luxury of simply abandoning the project at this stage because obviously we are at the stage where mapping has been completed in Prince Edward Island, mostly completed in New Brunswick, with a significant portion still to be done in Nova Scotia.

As I pointed out originally, the loss of a new industry of high technology, offering long-term employment in the Atlantic provinces, is really hard to believe. It is a kind of "anti-DREE" decision.

I think it is ironic that we had filed last year, which was prepared for in the original contract, a cost-benefit study produced by P. S. Ross & Partners last April 1977. This is a benefit-cost study of the LRIS program. I want to offer two brief quotations from this study to show the ridiculous position the federal government has taken. Under the subheading "Overview of the Study's Results", the following is reported at page 3:

● (2207)

> The results of the benefit-cost analysis of phases I, II, and III show that the benefits realized in the later years of the study period far exceed the annual operating costs.

At page 5 there appears the following statement:

> In addition to the benefits listed above, all four phases of the LRIS program support the region's economic development. This benefit takes the form of faster implementation of capital development projects, savings in the costs for interim financing for these projects, and savings in the actual cost of the projects that otherwise could be increased by inflation.

In fact, this decision is, at its worst, a kind of anti-DREE decision—a decision against removing or reducing regional disparity. The fact that the department had an evaluation on its desk a year in advance of this sudden decision by the federal government simply defies the imagination. I think one journalist put it best when he said, when reporting on this, that it is now up to the politicians and other interested parties to howl loudly enough to make Ottawa think twice—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity in this adjournment debate to bring the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) up to date on what the federal government has been spending through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and what it has really meant to LRIS in particular. First of all, I think it is important to consider and understand what has happened in the past ten years, and then I will bring the hon. member up to date on the present situation as well as on what LRIS may offer in the future.

The federal government commitment in the past ten years was on a 75-25 basis with Ottawa paying approximately $34 million. This means that phase I of the program is practically completed and at the end of the fiscal year, March, 1979, there will be four years remaining in phase II. This means in reality that the legal design for land titles is not complete. More than that, a computer support system design will almost be complete by the end of the fiscal year, so a great deal has been accomplished. Perhaps most important of all, several regional land title offices are ready to be turned over to the provinces. This, in effect, means some very valuable work has been completed and recorded and so will always be there.

In the past few years—and here I want to speak for a moment on a more personal note—I have used the small aerial photos and the larger ortho maps. I grant that in recent years hardly any of those have had the elevation contours on them, but nevertheless these maps were very useful and will be very useful for identifying property and property lines. So in reality there is great value in the money that has been spent.

That brings us up to the present. The work of the LRIS as an agency, as such, will be terminated by the end of the fiscal year, but until that time the federal government will continue to assist as we have been assisting up to this stage, even though there was no agreement since the end of March last year. This will be done through the original source, the Council of Maritime Premiers. Until the Council of Maritime Premiers has had an opportunity to do a full assessment of the valued work done and make a future commitment to land registration, I think it would be quite improper to influence or perhaps even jeopardize the decision it now had before it.

It is all very well to speak about accomplishments and spending money, but that is only part of the possible termination of LRIS. There are people involved who may lose their jobs. I have talked to many of them as I am sure the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) has, and I am as concerned as he is. The people at LRIS are all professionals, however, and I am confident that individuals of such high calibre will find jobs without too much trouble.

I think it is important to keep a few pertinent facts—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

FISHERIES—DEPLETION OF INSHORE LOBSTER FISHERY

Miss Coline Campbell (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise regarding a question I put to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) on November 9 about the relationship between inshore and offshore lobster fishing, and particularly the closing of Browns Bank pending the outcome of this study. I do not trust statistics, having seen what they do with the UIC amendments, but the statistics since 1973, which is the first year I have been able to find statistics concerning district 4 offshore lobster fishing, show that the quantity of lobsters caught in district 4 has decreased.

[Mr. Wood.]

● (2212)

In 1973 we had the first full year of offshore lobster fishing although fishing had commenced in 1972. The percentages of quantity offshore lobsters caught rise quite spectacularly between 1973 and 1977. There were eight boats fishing in that period and 2,800 inshore lobster fishermen who fish in district 4 from the end of November until the end of May under very hard circumstances. People like to eat lobsters and they consider lobster a delicacy. But it is a difficult task for the fishermen who have to go out at the end of November and into December at the beginning of the lobster season. However, the quantity of offshore lobster in comparison to the total quantity fished works out to 7.9 per cent in 1973, for a value of 6.6 per cent of the total catch. I am now referring to total offshore lobster fishing as related to total lobster fishing in district 4.

As I have mentioned, in 1973 the quantity was 7.9 per cent and the value of that quantity was 6.6 per cent. In 1974 the figure is 8.3 per cent of the total lobster catch for a value of 6.8 per cent. In 1975 the figure goes up to 10.3 per cent for a value of 7.7 per cent. In 1976 the figure is 17.8 per cent. In 1977, the figure goes down to 15.08 per cent in total quantity. In 1976 it went up to 13.2 per cent of the total value and came down to 11.2 per cent in 1977. In 1977 the only statistics available covered January to October. When we find out what the total offshore lobster catch was in 1977 I am sure we will find it comes close to that of the previous year.

As I have mentioned, the percentage in quantity of the offshore fishing in relation to the total catch has increased remarkably from 1973 to 1977 with only eight offshore lobster boats operating. At the same time, the inshore lobster fishery, which supports approximately 2,800 fishermen in district 4, has decreased. Starting in 1973 there were 5,299 metric tonnes of lobsters landed. In 1974 the figure was 4,404 metric tonnes, in 1975 the figure was 4,676 metric tonnes, in 1976 3,124 metric tonnes, and in 1977 covering January to October the figure is 2,516 metric tonnes. I have already shown what percentage of the total this is.

● (2217)

I regret we are allocated such a short time. However, the history of this problem between the inshore and offshore lobster fishermen has gone on since the commencement of the offshore fishery late in summer of 1971 with the banning of the sale of swordfish in Canada. The swordfish was banned at that time because of its unacceptable mercury content. As a result, the offshore lobster fishery was set up with only two restrictions. One was that they use lobster traps rather than otter trawls which the Americans used. The second was that they not be aallowed to fish within a 50-mile radius.

This was fine at the beginning because they went quite a bit further than the 50 mile line. In fact, they were fishing 125 to 250 miles southwest of Cape Sable Island. Then commercial fishing areas were discovered in the Browns Bank and Baccaro Bank area 50 to 100 miles off the coast and very close to the inshore lobster fishing areas. Last year the eight or nine offshore lobster boats were given a quota in this area of 900,000 pounds or approximately 450 metric tonnes. The same quota exists this year.

It was felt by the department that some quota should be imposed in order to preserve whatever lobster stocks there might be there for the inshore fishermen who fish adjoining and up to the 50-mile limit. With the commencement of the inshore lobster fishery at the end of November, and pending the outcome of the study that was commissioned in 1975 by the minister of fisheries, of which preliminary indications show that there probably is a connection—and Dr. Cady was quoted in a recent article in the Chronicle Herald as saying we have to protect this valuable inshore fishery—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but her time has expired.

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the minister has asked me to express to the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) his personal concern for the inshore-offshore lobster problem. I would advise the hon. member as follows.

The results of a meeting held October 24 to 26 between Canadian and American scientists on the above subject provided evidence, although not 100 per cent conclusive, that an inter-relationship between inshore Nova Scotia lobster and offshore lobster, including Browns Bank, does exist. Also, there is some evidence showing movement of individual lobsters between Browns Bank and Georges Bank.

Evidence shows there is significant larvae production on Browns and Georges and drift patterns of the larvae from Browns inshore. The data lead to consideration of the option to close a portion of Browns Bank to the offshore fleet and at the same time try and move the boundary between inshore and offshore closer inshore to create a closed "spawning stock area".

A firm recommendation from the meeting was the need to raise size limits along the entire eastern seaboard. The Americans will be making public the results of the Canada-U.S. discussions and the Canadian media were informed by a news release on November 6, 1978.

Another conclusion reached at the meeting is that it seems clear that the area east of Cape Sable Island, where the lobster landings are going down, is not affected by any offshore-inshore inter-relationship. Rather, the decline appears to be due partly to over-fishing and partly to a change in the ecology. Evidence shows that kelp beds in that area are being eroded and denuded by sea urchins. The relationship between ecological change in kelp beds and lobster stocks is continuing to be investigated, but the decline in stocks is clearly not an effect of offshore fishing.

Tagging experiments are being conducted both by federal scientists and by New Brunswick.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

● (2222)

PUBLIC WORKS—CONSTRUCTION OF TAXATION CENTRE AT SUDBURY, ONT.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, on November 3, I raised a question with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), regarding the construction of the taxation data centre in Sudbury. This centre was announced in the summer of 1977 after I had raised the matter with the then minister of national revenue, as her letter to me dated July 19, 1977 confirms.

Construction of the centre was scheduled for this fall but, it was announced that because of drafting problems the contract would not be let until next year. I thereupon wrote to the Minister of National Revenue, asking him to end what appeared to be political horsing around with an extremely important capital project in the Sudbury basin. The minister wrote back to me on October 25. His letter stated:

In fact, plans for the proposed Taxation Centre for Sudbury are proceeding. Although originally scheduled to commence operation in the fall of 1980, it has now been deferred until the fall of 1981 due to the recent government financial restraint program. In the meantime, my staff along with employees of Department of Public Works and their private sector architectural and engineering consultants are proceeding with the planning phase, with the intention of calling tenders for the general contract in the summer of 1979, with construction to commence in September or October.

We received a commitment for this taxation data centre. We were promised it would be under construction this fall. That, of course, was when there was speculation that there would be a fall election. Now it has been rescheduled for the fall of 1979. Is it because we must have a spring general election in 1979, that the people of the Sudbury area are in effect being told that if they do not vote the right way they may not get the taxation data centre at all? We do not appreciate that kind of stick and carrot approach.

The fact is, our basin is suffering a viciously high unemployment rate of 11.2 per cent, and in the various trades unemployment is running as high as 80 per cent. Moreover, last fall Inco and Falconbridge gave us a Christmas present, an annoucement of some 3,000 lay-offs. Neither Ottawa nor Queen's Park could deal with the reality of mobile capital and resource domination by multinational mining corporations. In spite of the fact that the community was mobilized to petition the government to take action and that specific, positive proposals were made, not a bloody thing was done, not a bloody thing, and these layoffs took place. What a sad commentary on the leadership in this country of ours today. This government was completely immobilized when it came to dealing with unilateral action on the part of multinational mining corporations. Our workers demanded employment but the government turned a deaf ear to them.

Now here is a $12 million construction project, the data centre, which would stimulate considerable employment in the area, especially in the trades and construction sector. The President of the Treasury Board has a responsibility to withdraw the freeze on the project. We face a long winter of discontent as it is. Preliminary studies indicate a high correlation between crime among our citizens and the high unemployment rate in the Sudbury basin. The minister must be aware that a plant similar to the one contemplated in Sudbury has been given the green light in St. John's, Newfoundland. As a matter of fact, Lundrigan's Limited has been awarded a contract and work is already started. We know that the cutback program has been alleviated in areas where the effect would be adverse, and that is as it should be. We in the Sudbury basin should be treated in the same way. The government has a most serious responsibility to ensure that every opportunity for employment is made available. That means construction of the data centre now and not next fall after a general election.

An hon. Member: Great speech, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: Those are the realities, brother.

• (2227)

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) indulged in his usual rhetoric tonight. His remarks had nothing to do with drafting and everything to do with accusations of electioneering. He has bootlegged accusations in here this evening. He has spoken about subjects other than the one he put down for the adjournment debate.

This debate does give me an opportunity on behalf of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan) to set the record straight. I know from personal experience that the minister has been involved in this matter just recently. He is very seriously interested in the ongoing developments with respect to the Sudbury data taxation centre. Construction was originally scheduled to begin in the late fall of 1978. The schedule proposed completion of the facility in the late fall of 1980.

During the review of the Public Works Canada program as a result of fiscal restraint, it was decided to delay this schedule by one year; that is, to begin construction in the fall of 1979 with completion in the late fall of 1981. That is the schedule being followed now.

Our analysis indicated that for construction to begin in the fall of 1978 it would be a requirement that Public Works Canada use a system of phased construction. It was also established that if a construction start were deferred until a complete single contract package could be completed, there would be cost savings on the project. This was estimated at approximately $390,000. This factor, coupled with the fact that Public Works Canada would be able to secure interim accommodation to permit the start-up of national revenue operations in 1978 and carry this interim operation through to 1981, led us to conclude that deferral of this project for one year was preferable.

The present schedule for this project calls for tenders to be called in mid-June, 1979 with a construction start in mid-September. This schedule is based on an expenditure of $4 million in 1979-80. Public Works Canada will make every effort to call tenders in mid-April, 1979 and to have construction start in mid-July.

Whether or not this early schedule is possible depends on two factors: first, whether the department can allocate an additional $1 million to the project in the 1979-80 fiscal year; and second, if Public Works Canada and its consultant can manage within the exceedingly tight schedule to complete the contract documents to permit an April tender call.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m., without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

END OF VOLUME I