The Heir of Bayneham

—AND—
Lady Hutton's Ward.

CHAPTER VI.

He looked kind, anxious, and affectionate; but if love be what Barbara Earle imagined it to be, he had none of it.

"I am willing," she said gently. "You are a dear, good, sensible girl," he replied, "and I will do all I can to make you happy."

He touched her forehead lightly with his lips, and so the wooing of Lord Bayneham and Barbara Earle ended.

"Come with me," he said, "and let us tell the countess it is all arranged. Mother," said the young earl, as they entered the drawing-room, "thank Barbara for me; she has promised to be my wife next spring."

"You cannot be more of a daughter to me than you have been," said the stately lady, clasping the young girl tenderly in her arms; "but the dearest wish of my heart will be gratified when I see you my son's wife. It is now March," she continued; "if we arrange the wedding for next May, that will meet all our wishes."

For once Lady Bayneham was too hasty. Bayneham Castle would require alterations; many of the rooms were to be furnished. There was much to be done. Lawyers, milliners, and a host of other people were consulted. Then it was agreed that the wedding should take place in the August of the year following. But for that postponement this story would never have been written. In May Lord Bayneham went to Scotland; and there, in the honny green woods of Bynnam, he met his fate. He returned home an altered man. His previous life seemed to have been one long, calm, unbroken dream. He was awakened now, and the dream had ended. The realities of life had begun for him. He had learned on that bright May morning a lesson that Barbara Earle had never taught him—how to love. He saw the preparations continued for his marriage, and made no comment. Whatever he might think or suffer, he was a gentleman, a man of honor, who would scorn to break a promise, and die rather than fail when honor bade him persevere.

Bottled Relief is the title thousands of people have given to SLOAN'S LINIMENT.

It is unequalled as a counter-irritant. Its beneficial and soothing effect when applied to any painful part is instantaneous. It is highly penetrative, relieves pain quickly, is clean and easy to apply and will not blister or cause soreness as is the case with mustard plasters.

Every drug in this bottle is medicine. Try it and be convinced.

CHAPTER VII.

The world generally did not call Barbara Earle a beautiful girl. The great charm of her face was the soul that shone there. Her eyes were magnificent, dark, dreamy, full of light and thought. She had sweet, sensitive lips, perfect in shape and color. People passed her by at first, considering her almost plain; at a second interview they would like her better. Then her face would grow upon them, until they would end by declaring that no other girl was half so beautiful as Barbara Earle. It was the beautiful, noble soul that gave the great charm to her eloquent, spiritual face. In repose it was calm and serene, but lighted up, as noble thoughts and noble words could light it—it was magnificent.

She gave one the impression of being what is commonly called "all soul." Her tall, graceful figure combined ease and dignity. No one could be more kind and winning; no one more dignified and reserved than Barbara Earle. She was not proud or haughty; no mean word or mean action ever escaped her. She was a true, noble woman, crowned with richer gifts than the merely outer ones of color and prettiness—a woman to inspire a man with a love of noble deeds, to teach him the higher and holier lessons of life; and withal, she had that nameless charm, that well-bred, refined, elegant manner that makes every woman beautiful to whom it is given.

Lovers in plenty sighed for Barbara Earle; she had no thought save for Lord Bayneham. It was characteristic of her that all who loved her were the better and more noble for it. No sullen resentment, no moody silence and bitter dislike ever followed her rejection of an admirer; and she rejected many before her engagement to Lord Bayneham was made public. Those who loved her best, and laid all they had to offer at her feet, left her presence disappointed, it is true, but bearing with them good and noble resolves. The chances are that if Lord Bayneham had met Miss Earle in society he would have been dazzled and charmed. Having from his very childhood associated with her, all her noble and grand qualities seemed mere habit to him. He was accustomed to her brilliant wit and quick repartee, to her generous and spirited defence of the weak and the absent to her scorn of all things vulgar and mean, to her amiable temper and self-sacrificing disposition; all these were part and parcel of Barbara. They never struck him; he admired her, esteemed her, loved her, in a quiet, calm kind of way, and had "no objection to making her his wife next spring."

It was far different with Barbara; with all the strength of her noble and constant nature she loved the handsome, clever young cousin whose wife she was to be. She idolized him—thought him perfect, thought him superior to any other man—loved him as only such women can, with a grand, noble love; but there were times when she felt half puzzled as to his feelings toward her. He was all kindness; but he said so little when he spoke of the future; it was in a quiet, matter-of-fact way, as of something that must be. Yet she knew that he cared for no one else; and Barbara Earle comforted herself by thinking that he was not of a demonstrative nature.

When he returned from Scotland she found him changed in every respect. He had lost the gay flow of spirits that once never failed him; he felt his dreary reveries, from which nothing could ever rouse him. He looked like a man whose aim and purpose in life were ended. He was kind to her, but indifferent to everything in the wide world. Nothing seemed to interest or amuse him. Even Lady Bayneham noticed and wondered at the change that had come over her son.

One day Claude was unusually busy, his lawyer was at Bayneham, and many business affairs were on the tapis. The steward was waiting, and an important paper was mislaid. Lady Bayneham was in the drawing-room with visitors, so that Claude could not ask for help from her. In his perplexity he sought Miss Earle.

"Barbara," he said, "like most people who undertake to do three things at once, I am making a terrible mess of it, will you help me? I have lost a paper—the plan for those new houses at Greystoke. Will you go to my study and look for it? The keys lie upon my writing-table."

Barbara gladly hastened to comply with his wish. Lord Bayneham's study was a room sacred from all intrusion. It was very rarely that any one obtained admission there. It was a pretty little apartment, overlooking the park.

Miss Earle searched for the lost plan in every available place; she went to a bureau where her cousin kept many private papers; there was no trace of it. One drawer smaller than the rest drew her attention; she opened it, and several papers fell out. One was the lost plan, another a picture that had been folded in paper. Barbara looked at it with surprise; she saw it was a sketch taken by her cousin; she recognized his style, and his initials were underneath it. It was a simple but beautiful subject, and the artist had done full justice to it—a young girl standing beneath the shade of large, spreading trees, the sunbeams falling on her golden hair. Her face, so wondrously lovely, was bent over some blue-bells that she carried in her little white hands; anything so fresh, so fair, so delicately beautiful as that face, Barbara Earle had never seen.

It was quite strange to Barbara, but who could it be? With a woman's keen eyes she noted the details of the dress. The original of the picture was evidently a lady; who could she be and why had Claude locked up what was certainly the best of his productions. He was too busy just then for her to mention it. He thanked her gratefully for the trouble she had taken, but Barbara Earle was ill at ease.

That evening, when dinner was over and Claude rejoined the ladies, Barbara went to the table where he stood, looking over some beautiful engravings that had just arrived.

"Claude," she said gravely, "when I opened the small drawer of your bureau this morning a picture fell out of it—one of your own paintings, I believe. Whose face is it? I never saw one half so beautiful before."

She was watching him keenly, and saw a slight pallor on his face.

"I cannot tell you whose face it is," he replied; "it is a picture I saw on my travels and thought it so beautiful that I could not refrain from trying to reproduce it."

"You have succeeded well," said Miss Earle.

He made some half-indifferent reply and turned away. Barbara Earle's eyes followed him with a sad, wistful look. What had changed him so?

"Protected Where the Wear Comes"

Bank Presents $1.00 to Every New Baby.

The Citizens Bank of Hutchinson, Minnesota, made popular a plan for opening savings accounts for children. For every baby born in Hutchinson and community the savings department of the bank presents a certificate of deposit for $1, together with a bank book and a small savings bank. Nine out of every ten parents have, so far, not only continued such accounts, but have added to them materially. The bank's gift to each new baby, coming at a time when the parent's chief interest is centred in the child and when, as the way with parents, they are already planning its future, is particularly appreciated. For both sentimental and practical reasons they will make an effort to maintain the account and to help it grow.

The Citizens Bank has opened 62 savings accounts for children by this method. Fifty-nine of these accounts have been continued with an average increase of $5.15 a year in the deposits. The most rapid growth in any one account has been $30.33 in one year. Maintained at its present rate of growth one of these savings accounts, at 5 per cent, will have reached the sum of $1,137.97 when the child is 14 years old, and amount sufficient to finance his training in almost any useful vocation. The growth of these savings accounts seems to indicate that parents in the community are acquiring habits of more than ordinary thrift and foresight.

From the bank's point of view this plan of starting savings accounts for new-born children have several advantages. Such accounts are likely to become permanent because they create a feeling of responsibility on the part of the parents, they undoubtedly stimulate the opening of accounts in the commercial department of the bank, in fact, they connect that institution with the home life of its patrons in a most friendly and helpful way.

Earls Came First.

OUR PEERAGE IS A THING OF SLOW GROWTH; AND IT IS STILL GROWING.

The oldest title held by members of the British peerage is that of "earl," which was first used during Saxon times. Earl Godwin was perhaps the most famous of these old Saxon earls. When the Danish King Canute became ruler of our land he appointed "jarls" to control large districts of the country, and these were known in English as "earls."

It was then considered as a title more of office than of rank; but, later, earls definitely occupied a place in the peerage, coming next to marquesses, and the title became hereditary.

The highest title in the British peerage—namely, that of "duke," was first introduced in England by Edward III, who made his son, the Black Prince, the first Duke of Cornwall, a title which has been held ever since by each Prince of Wales.

Next in order of precedence to a duke comes a marquess. The first British marquess was created by Richard II, who made his favourite, Robert de Vere, the first Marquess of Dublin, just forty-eight years after the creation of the first duke.

By Right of Purchase.

The title of "viscount," which ranks after that of earl, was introduced from France, the first viscount being created in 1446. The title signified one who represented an earl or count, but later definitely became a title of nobility.

The title of "baron" was used in this country after the Norman Conquest, but the first actual baron to be created by letters patent was so appointed by Richard II, in 1387, two years after the introduction of the title "marquess."

Baronets hold the lowest of hereditary titles. The first baronets were created in 1611 by James I, when the titles were granted on the payment of obtaining a title naturally led to large numbers of applicants coming forward, but the king limited the number of baronets to 200.

To-day there are about 1,500 baronets, and the number tends continually to increase. The first holder of the title was Nicholas Bacon, of Redgrave, Suffolk.

During the Middle Ages knights were only created for deeds of valour, and the title then was much more respected than it is to-day.

Politics and Codfish.

Continuing comment on the very voluminous address delivered by President Coaker at the Annual Convention held at Port Union last month, there is to be found a note struck by that gentleman, on what he pleases in his own peculiar style of language to define as "the cursed system of fish exporting," and his determination to remain in public life until he has destroyed it. Just what the President—by the way those of his apologists who are to-day defending him and his utterances once described him as the windy—no "Wordy" President. Just what the "Wordy," to quote the title applied to him by his for the nonce defenders, President means in his denunciation of the "cursed system of fish exporting" is not quite clear. Some old philosopher once said that language was given us to conceal our thoughts. Par excellence Mr. Coaker. No one knows just what he means, least of all himself. Possessed of a vocabulary which a Billingsgate fish wife would envy, he enshrouds his ideas in words which completely cover up and conceal his meaning. To talk much and say nothing has ever been the forte of the "wordy" President. One of his present guides, philosophers and friends, conferred that title upon him, and we do not believe that any honor was more appropriate or more applicable. Used in ironical pronunciation of the word "Worthy" by members of Councils, who drop the th and substitute d, the genius who made use of this title for the first time—and it has been conferred to remain—deserves well at the hands of the President. Apparently he is now receiving his reward, in the shape of government hand outs, approved of—of course—by the most high and mighty Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But Mr. Coaker has a long memory, when it suits him, and it is most unlikely that he will forgive the bestowal of the "Wordy" expression upon his august self. Somewhere there is the echo of a report. It sounds like "bottlewasher."

But as our French allies say Revonans a nos moutons. Mr. Coaker condemns and reprehends the United Fishermen's movement. It was a plunge taken without his advice, and for the purpose, according to his text, of undermining his influence. Does he mean politically or commercially? If the former then he is near about correct. If the latter he is utterly and radically wrong. As a factor in the business of the colony, the general manager of the Union Trading Co. must naturally expect competition. Were he an up-to-date business man he would welcome it, and regard it as a tribute to the influence of his company in the arena of trade. But the micro-psychic meanness of the man will not permit him to see beyond the bounds of his astigmatic horizon. Any movement inaugurated by the fishermen toward an amelioration of their living conditions is regarded by Mr. Coaker as a blow aimed at his own personality, and directed toward the business of which he is the sole head. But—and note the inherent courage of the man—he is prepared to stake his all on the hazard of the election die in Bonavista, and if the electors of that district don't want him, they can turn him and his colleagues down. Just consider how skilfully Mr. Coaker pours out the admixture of business and politics. He's a clever lad at this. And then again how shrewdly he shifts the responsibility from himself to the electors. Apres moi la deluge is his cry. If the people turn me down then I wash my hands of them. What noble self-sacrifice! What personal abnegation of principle! Why once the people of Bonavista make up their minds to consign Messrs. Coaker, Abbott and Winsor to political oblivion, there won't be enough left of either of the trio to make a decent come back. And the handwriting is on the political horizon. The shorthand of the Lord that appeared on the walls of Belshazzars palace at Babylon, was not more tremendous in its interpretation than will be the symbol marked on the ballots in the next general election, against Coaker and his followers.

HIS EXCELLENCY AND LADY ALLARDYCE ATTEND EVENING SERVICE.

The services at the Presbyterian Church yesterday were attended by large congregations. The pastor of the Church, Rev. Robert J. Power, M.A. preached an eloquent sermon at the morning service, which was listened to with rapt attention by the entire congregation. At the evening service, Sir Wm. and Lady Allardyce and suite attended, occupying seats of honor at the eastern end of the pulpit. The officers of the Newfoundland Highlanders attended in full military dress for the occasion. The pastor in his sermon made a stirring address to the members of St. Andrews Society. The singing by the choir at both services was all that could be desired, while the Anthem "By Babylon's Wave" was sung with very telling effect before the close.

A Newfoundland Sydney

The news comes to hand that a powerful group of English capitalists have taken up the development of a mammoth paper plant on the Humber River, Newfoundland. If good bankers and good contractors are a sign of a sound enterprise, this company starts under fair auspices, for the most powerful and experienced firms in the United Kingdom, and Barclay, Glyn Mills and the Commercial in the front rank of London banks. It recalls those days in a little Sydney when the Steel Works were passing out of the stage of a project into the beginnings of a great enterprise, which has more than quadrupled the population of Sydney and increased its economic output an hundred fold. There is no reason, as far as can be ascertained, why on the banks of the Humber there should not be a flourishing population dependent on the power which experts say can so easily be developed there. We wish the Ancient Colony well in the latest of the schemes for its development.—Sydney Post.

Fire Still Burning.

BLAZE SPREADS TO NO. 1 HOLD.
Although the firemen have been working continuously on S.S. Canadian Gunner since Saturday evening, they have not yet worked their way to the seat of the fire. Although the smoke from the burning hay and coal is stifling, the firemen stay for a considerable length of time in the hold of the ship directing their hose wherever the blaze shows. The Longshoremen worked all night removing cargo, but were obliged to cease their labors this morning, as the fire appeared to have made its way into No. 1 hold. In order to cope with the blaze extra streams of water were brought into play and an acetylene burner was used to cut a hole in the deck to put the hose through. Up to one o'clock it was uncertain about the extent of the blaze, but should it not be put out this afternoon it has been arranged to ground the ship in the shallow water near Stabb's premises and flood the holds. The ship has about 17 feet of water in No. 2 hold and is showing a heavy list to port.

The services of the firemen were not required.

THE MONDAY BLUES.

Good morning, satisfying Sunday, it seems to me. Reader F o l k s, are you suffering from the Monday readjustment to the routine and so on. Cheer up, so am I. Also, cheer up for to-morrow will be Tuesday. To-day you are feeling the disadvantages of your daily break from the routine. To-morrow you will feel the advantages of it.

That is, if the break was of the right kind. To some people Sunday is a day for overeating and under-exercising. To others it means trying to crowd into a day all the activity and exercise that would be spread through a week if they weren't tied up in an office. Either course makes Monday readjustment a great deal harder.

My Ideal Sunday.

To my mind the ideal Sunday is a day not of rushing about nor yet of lying around doing nothing. It is a day of relaxation. It's ideal background is the country or the village. Towns and cities always seem to me desolate places on Sunday. They are all right enough as a background for the busy, unthinking, pushing on, life of every day, but when the weekly lull in activity comes they seem almost absurd in their monotony and their ugliness. A really beautiful,

Be Gentle to Yourself.

It is my experience that when you push yourself against the grain to do a lot of work you take much more out of yourself and get much less done for the energy expended than if you ease yourself along and favor yourself on the bad day, and then just put in and work on the good day. There's no use being too hard on yourself just because you have the power to be. Leniency and consideration get the best results in your treatment of yourself as well as in your treatment of others.

British Fliers Soar Over Holy Land.

PICTURESQUE AIR ROUTE NOW LINKS CAIRO WITH BAGHDAD.

The most picturesque of the regularly traveled air routes and the one richest in historical associations is undoubtedly the 864 miles that separate Cairo, the capital of Egypt, from Baghdad, the principal city of Mesopotamia.

In one day the fliers of the British Royal Air Force go from the land of the pyramids over the Holy Land and across more than 500 miles of desert to the land of the date. All of these countries were the scenes of early civilizations and the planes carry the letters of European and American business firms above ruins that are 4000 years old.

The most difficult part of the journey is the 532 miles of desert that stretch between Palestine, or rather Transjordan, and the capital city of the land from which our dates come. There are practically no natural landmarks in all this distance; it would be comparatively easy, however, to navigate this by compass, but the risk of forced landings can never be eliminated and the problem was to provide some sure means by which help, if necessary, could be provided for the stranded airman.

This problem was solved by running a number of motor trucks and automobiles over the same track across the desert, and marking off a series of possible landing places that will act as a guide to a pilot and enable him to be located by wireless in the event that he has been compelled to come to the ground.

His Navigating Chart. Only this narrow track—two parallel lines five or six feet apart—is the fier's flying chart. On favorable ground it is easy to see it even from 8000 feet aloft, but, as may be imagined, it is none too easy to pick it up without some indication as to its locality, nor is it a simple matter to follow it, when found, if the nature of the ground has prevented the vehicles from making more than a slight impression on the surface.

One additional danger the fliers of the royal air force face on this journey—there is always the possibility that some desert dweller who nurses an antipathy to the British may take a shot at a low-flying plane, or that the airman, if forced to descend, will encounter hostile tribesmen. However, the nomads of this district have been inclined to friendliness through the action of the force in picking up and flying to Baghdad with a wounded sheik found in the desert and in procuring for him the medical treatment that saved his life.

But the fliers, when they are prevented from making the trip in a single day and are forced to land in the desert, are still suspicious of the natives. On one occasion a pilot, making a forced landing, was approached by a number of Arabs whose attitude was expectant rather than friendly. The man knew some Arabic and the following conversation took place:

"Are you alone?"
"No."
"How many other airplanes are there?"
"Ten."
"Are they coming here?"
"Yes."
"Have you told Amman (the nearest city) you are here?"
"Yes."

Convinced by these answers the Arabs allowed the engine defect to be remedied and the plane continued on its lonely journey to the date palms of Bagdad. Whether the tribesmen would have adopted a different attitude if they had known the answers to their inquiries were all untruthful, is a matter that must remain doubtful. The pilot himself is thoroughly satisfied with the outcome of his adventure and has no desire to pay the nomads another visit to find out the answer.

STILL LIVING.

WALT MASON

I have the quinsy in my throat. I have a measles and a hive, but still I sound a joyous note, for it is good to be alive. Some times I hear a voter say, when some cheap grim has made him sore, "This fierce old world is grim and gray, and I'll be glad when I'm no more." I hand him out a stern rebuke, and say, "Old fish, why wear a frown? If you find life so bald a fluke, there is the pond, where you may drown. I have my share of bitter woes, but seldom do I feel forlorn; I still can prize the blooming rose although I know it has a thorn." I have my friends; tried friends and true, they come to me, in blocks of five, to tell old tales when day is through, and it is good to be alive. I have the goat, I have the heaves, and yet I fail to understand the weary wight who weeps and grieves and piles a hammer with his hand. For every trouble I endure there are nine joys to compensate, and that one trouble I can't cure by putting up a hymn of hate. However much in joint and then the rheumatism may seem to thrive, I swing my hat and cry, "Hurrah!" for it is good to be alive.

Hope For The Fool.

Surgeons can operate for appendicitis, tonsillitis, and various other ills. But hitherto the malady of being a fool has beaten science. Once a fool, always a fool—so the old saying runs. If Sir William MacEwen is right, however, the fool may before long yield to the treatment of the knife and become a wise man. Extraordinary progress has been made lately in the study of the brain, and operations on the brain are likely to be among the wonders of the near future.

"Will it be possible," says the president of the British Medical Association "to find in the 'silent area' the secret of genius—of converting a dullard into a man of brilliant intellect?"

The brain is being mapped so minutely that doctors are hopeful, and it is "in what they call the 'silent area' that they hope to perform the greatest miracles. The 'silent area,' which lies towards the forehead, has so far baffled them, and makes no response yet to surgical and electrical devices.

It is regarded as the seat of the higher intelligence, however, and for

Severe Kidney Trouble

Mrs. F. Rinehart, Campbellville, Ont., writes:

"I had trouble with my kidneys and very frequent urination. This was followed by pains which at times were very severe. The doctor said I had inflammation of the bladder and that an operation might be necessary. To this I refused, and began using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. From the first few doses I felt the benefit. The pains left, urination was corrected, and I have had no recurrence of these ailments."

Stream is Ocean River.

Current toward the equator along the western shores. It thus becomes a grand circular movement, some parts being quite slow, and other parts very swift; sometimes there may be a temporary interruption in the slower portions, or perhaps even a reversal, but taken as a whole the movement is continuous.

"In the north Atlantic ocean the currents are probably more pronounced than in either the Pacific or the Indian oceans.

"The equatorial current is usually described as being a broad band of water moving across the Atlantic in the tropics. The portion of this current situated south of the equator is divided into two parts upon meeting the eastern salient of South America, Cape St. Roque. One branch turns south toward the Antarctic, while the other is forced to the westward along the shores of northern Brazil and the Guyana, and is called the Guyana coast current. The equatorial current north of the equator has an almost uninterrupted progress until it reaches the Windward Islands, but a portion of it also impinges against the Guyana coast and thus augment the volume of that current.

"All the Windward Islands both are united, and a portion of the flow enters the Caribbean through the various passages, crosses it to the Yucatan and Honduras coasts, and thence into the Gulf of Mexico, from which it issues through the straits of Florida as the Gulf stream. Passing onward toward Europe it is augmented in volume by a part of the north equatorial current that sweeps along outside the West Indian Islands and the Bahamas, and while this current is slow in movement in comparison to the Gulf stream, it doubtless carries a much greater number of heat units to help warm up northern Europe.

"The Gulf stream, or rather the combined flow mentioned above, divides as it meets the resistance of the eastern continent, one branch flowing south along the African coast, while the other proceeds northward into the Arctic toward Spitzbergen and Franz Joseph Land.

"It is difficult for the mind to grasp the immensity of this great ocean river. The straits of Florida at its narrowest point is about 40 miles wide, and observations here numbered between 3000 and 4000, surface and subsurface. A calculation of the average volume of water passing in one hour gives the enormous sum of 90,000,000,000 tons. If this one single hour's flow of water could be evaporated, the remaining salts would require many times more than all the ships in the world to carry it.

"When one is on board a vessel, floating upon its waters, one is not as much impressed at the power and grandeur of this wonder of nature as he is when he stands before a towering mountain, an immense iceberg, or a fall of water such as Niagara, but when one remembers that the mighty flow of water could be evaporated, the remaining salts would require many times more than all the ships in the world to carry it.

MISS HILDA WIDMAN, Jersey City, who, in a statement to the public, declares Tanlae has restored both herself and mother to splendid health.

Miss Hilda Widman, 245 Hancock Ave., Jersey City, N.J., is now an enthusiastic witness to the merits of Tanlae. Miss Widman is a talented artist whose beautiful paintings have won her an enviable reputation in New York and vicinity.

"Knowing Tanlae as I do," said Miss Widman, "I could not doubt anything good I read or hear about it. Before I took this medicine, I had so little energy that I dreaded to see any day, for I just dragged myself through my work, so to speak. I fairly ached from tiredness and got up mornings feeling just as worn-out as when I retired at night. Some days I could not eat, and being right down sick couldn't be much worse than this miserable, run-down feeling I suffered from.

"By the help of Tanlae I have overcome that condition and am feeling just the way I like to feel. My appetite never fails me, my sleep is sound and restful, and I am just as full of energy as I was listless and tired before taking Tanlae. The good Tanlae has done me is also very noticeable in my improved complexion as well as in the ease with which I do my work. Tanlae also made a different person of my mother after she had been ill and complaining for over four years and I think such a medicine is deserving of the highest praise."

Tanlae is sold by all good druggists.

Just Folks.
By EDGAR A. GUEST.

A PLEA.
Lord, let me bring a little grace To every dark and gloomy place; Let me rejoice that I can give Some splendour to the life I live. A little faith when I am tried, A little joy when I am laid, A little touch of friendship now and then To mark my comradeship with men.

Lord, let me bring a little mirth To all who share my days on earth; Let something I have said or done Remain, when I have traveled on, To prove the man I've tried to be And make men glad they walked with me.

A flower, a smile, a word of cheer, Make these my gifts from year to year.

Lord, not for high renown I ask, Let me bring merit to my task, A fair companion I would be For all who share life's toil with me; When heavy burdens weigh me down, Grant me the courage not to frown, And howsoever my hopes shall end, Let me not cease to play the friend.

Lord, let me carry where I go Some little joy to all I know, Let these into my life be wrought—A little faith, a little thought, A little mirth, a little grace To gladden the common plodder.

Lord, let some little epitaph shine To mark this earthly course of mine.

Easter Island Vanishes.

Easter Island, tiny land of mystery far out in the southeast Pacific, has sunk into the sea with its few hundred Kanaka inhabitants, as a result of the recent earthquake of Chile, according to the first reports sent out following the earthquake.

The little dot in the South Seas, an island with an area of only 55 square miles and of volcanic origin, did not answer repeated radio calls immediately after the earthquake. Because of the fact that the island originally thrown up in lava formation from out the sea, it is feared it retreated back into the water whence it came, and by the same agency.

For years the tiny lava formation, 2,500 miles from the nearest mainland, the Coast of South America, and covered by Chile, has been a spot of mystery.

The island was discovered first in 1687, following a terrific earthquake which destroyed Callao. While it was sighted in 1722 and was explored in 1774 by Capt. Cook and again in 1788 by the La Perouse expedition, it really was not discovered scientifically until a century later, when Americans landed there from the United States steamship Melican for the Smithsonian Institute.

GROTESQUE IMAGES CARVED FROM LAVA.

The most mysterious feature of the practically treeless island is found in the hundreds of grotesque images carved by some olden native hand from lava chunks cast up out of the sea with the island itself.

Some 600 in number and weighing from three to 30 tons each, the images, nevertheless, in some mysterious way, were dragged over the island by natives now long dead, and placed in scattered positions, some ten being set into the ground and brazen upright. The wonder is how the natives could move them without machinery.

It was on Easter Sunday, 1722, that the Dutch navigator, Roggeveen, discovered the previously unknown island in the Pacific, close to the Tropic of Capricorn.

The old navigator named the dot of land Easter Island, and, although he sailed around it, he did not attempt a landing. In his perusal of the island from his ship, however, he noted at intervals along the shore great platforms on which the huge stone giants stood in rows facing the sea.

REMAIN MYSTERIES.

That was the first discovery of Easter Island. What its previous history had been, how the giant statues were made, and by whom, and how many of them happened to be overthrown before the first discovery and the exploration of the island—all are mysteries.

"Easter Island is a volcanic land," says Mrs. Coresby Routledge, in an article in the National Geographic Magazine, "and in the earlier days of the world's history great lights and flowing lava must have gleamed across the expanse of water, then gradually lessened and died away, leaving their work to be done by wind and tide."

Mrs. Routledge and a party made a visit to the island and inspected the archeological enigmas it contains. How many of the mysterious statues are either on the island in full view or beneath its surface—buried from sight—perhaps never will be known, it is said by Mrs. Routledge and other authorities. The statues already found are in various stages of completion.

HOW WORK WAS DONE.

The surface of the lava rock which was to furnish the figure generally was laid bare by the ancient natives, it is thought, and then work on the statue was begun with the figure in a prostrate position as it was taking form.

Many of the statues were found to be surmounting piles of stone, known as "kahoi," burial places for their prehistoric Eastern islanders whose follows, it is believed, hewed out the grotesque figures.

"It was these burial places on which the images were then standing," says Mrs. Routledge, which so greatly impressed the early voyagers and whose age and origin have remained an unsolved problem.

"No one now living remembers a statue standing on an 'ahu,' and legends, though not of a very impressive character, has already risen to account for the fall of some of them.

Your skin contains more than 2,600,000 openings, which are the outlets of an equal number of sweat glands. You may think that you drink through your nose and mouth only—you shouldn't through the latter—but your whole body literally breathes through the two million sweat glands or respiratory ducts. It is probable, if you are an average individual, neither gluttonous nor unduly abstemious, that you take, on an average, 5 1/2 lbs. of food and drink daily. In a year you will have got through almost a ton!

Day by day, to assimilate this enormous pile, your stomach produces 9 lbs. of gastric juice for digestive purposes.

You may weigh 11 stones, and of that 28 lbs. is accounted for by the circulating blood in your body.

If your lungs are sound, then they have about 174,000,000 cells in them. After you weigh, say, 154 lbs. in the water you weigh 1 lb., and when you have been dead a hundred years you will weigh about 14 lbs.

If you had the misfortune to "break every bone in your body," the number of breaks would be 240!

Produce and Provisions.

Produce and Provisions.
Wheat.—The exports of wheat from the foreign markets, this week, amounted to 23,117 quintals as follows:
 To Liverpool, 10,000; to London, 10,000; to Antwerp, 10,000; to Rotterdam, 10,000; to Amsterdam, 10,000; to Bremen, 10,000; to Hamburg, 10,000; to London, 10,000; to Antwerp, 10,000; to Rotterdam, 10,000; to Amsterdam, 10,000; to Bremen, 10,000; to Hamburg, 10,000.
Winnipeg.—Winnipeg wheat went wobbling between 104 and 106 all the week. Chicago ran in the limits between 104 and 120. There is a marked scarcity of four in the local market owing to the support demand by fishermen and housekeepers for winter supply. The 65 Canadian Gunner, which sailed from Montreal Monday with consignments temporarily reduced the scarcity and three other vessels are due next week with part cargo. The 750 barrels by the Rosalind and 500 by the Sable I. were this week absorbed as soon as it arrived. The local price is now $9. to $9.50 per bushel.
Pork.—Pork prices are about the same. The first consignments of Ham for nearly a month, will arrive next week on the Red Cross boat. During the past three weeks this quality has been unobtainable. The market is not strong by any means at the present time, but as the available supply of hogs is short of normal, an increase in prices of barrel pork is quite likely in the near future. The St. John's quotations are as follows: Grocers Family Mess Pork $28.50; Grocers Family Mess Pork $28.50; Ham $28.50; Butt $28.50; The "S.S." Rosalind brought in 145 barrels of Rosalind.
Choice molasses.—Choice molasses in barrels now 80 cents per gallon in the market, the same price as fancy molasses. Stocks are now very low. Especially choice molasses and all circumstances indicate an early increase in price. It was impossible to get any quantity in the St. John's market until the arrival of the Elizabeth from Barbadoes Wednesday with about 200 puncheons. The cargo was last to come in from Barbadoes. The only chance of getting any now is from Halifax and Barbadoes Cargo. The Elizabeth arrived this week from Barbadoes and her molasses is now being discharged at the premises of the Baid Ltd. The cargo was made up of 175 puncheons, 55 tierces and 110 barrels. The Clutha is now on her way to Barbadoes, 20 days from St. John's with fish, sugar and molasses back part molasses cargo.
Sugar.—The sugar market advanced this week in the United States.

per pound. Refined American Granulated (no advanced fifteen cents per 100 pounds on Tuesday. There is quite a difference of opinion amongst dealers as to whether sugar will continue to maintain these high levels for any considerable time. The belief that is prevalent with the majority that after the Xmas season the pendulum will swing back on the advent of the new crop. The local price is now $11.75 per 100 pounds in barrels.

Potatoes.—Local potatoes are growing scarcer in the market and ready sales can be found for all that local farmers are willing to offer. The price is $3 to $3.50 per barrel of 180 pounds. Most of the crop now in cellars will be held till spring for higher prices. Canadian potatoes including P.E.I.'s will hold the market generally from now till April and big consignments will arrive next week by the S.S. Manoa from Charlottetown. The price in 180 lb. sacks will be $2.75 to $4.00.

Oats.—The local market ran bare again this week owing to the heavy demand from the outport dealers laying in their winter supplies. The S.S. Manoa making a direct trip to Montreal will bring back heavy consignments which in addition to what is coming from Montreal by the Canadian Government steamers will give supply sufficient for local requirements for several months. The market is growing stronger in Canada and Winnipeg quotations advanced 5 cents a bushel on Wednesday. The local price is still $3.80 for Black and $3.65 for white per sack of four bushels.

Hay.—The market is getting firmer and hay to arrive is quoted at $40 per ton. Meantime stocks on hand are selling from $38 to $39. The S.S. Manoa brought in 2773 bales last trip. Large consignments are due next week by the four steam boats that are now making their last trip down the St. Lawrence from Montreal. The S.S. Manoa is bringing the Charlottetown hay. Car lots are still selling in Montreal at $17 for No. 2 Timothy and $23 to $24 for smaller quantities.

Midshipmen From Annapolis.
 BROUGHT DISGRACE UPON THEMSELVES AND THE ACADEMY, AT FOOTBALL GAME, SAYS SECRETARY DENBY.
 Washington, Nov. 27.—The conduct of the Annapolis Midshipmen at the Army and Navy football game in Philadelphia Saturday was arraigned in a public statement to-day by Secretary Denby, of the Navy Department, declaring that members of the corps had brought disgrace not only on themselves but on the Naval Academy.
 "How many midshipmen drank heavily, I do not know," said the Secretary's statement, but he added that despite the good behavior of many, enough Midshipmen had failed to do their duty to their uniform and to their country to bring shame upon all.
 He announced that an investigation would be ordered.
 Secretary Denby's statement follows:
 "My attention has been called to the misconduct of a number of midshipmen from the Naval Academy on Saturday night last after the Army-Navy game. I have no desire to minimize in any way the fact that many of the midshipmen did disgrace themselves, and bring disgrace upon the Naval Academy for I know it to be true. I am shocked beyond measure that such things should have occurred. The misconduct on that occasion was as far as I know, the most flagrant that has ever been charged against the Academy. How many Midshipmen drank heavily, I do not know. The whole regiment was in Philadelphia. Only a relatively small proportion of the regiment attended the ball. Of this proportion I think the great majority conducted themselves with propriety, but enough failed of their duty to their uniform and to their country to bring shame upon all. But such an occurrence will never be repeated for such steps as are necessary will be taken to make it impossible in the future.
 "In this connection I wish to make it quite clear that the Naval Academy has hitherto set an example to the country for good conduct upon such occasions and will set that example in the future. I was so proud of them at the game, which was one of the most thrilling I have ever seen, and where I saw absolutely no evidence of drinking among the Midshipmen, that the latter event of the evening came as an absolute shock. When I think of the picture as presented by our 2,400 young men standing at salute in honor of the visitors, while the Cadets celebrated upon the field their well-won success, I can hardly reconcile their sportsman-like conduct then with what occurred afterwards.
 "An investigation will at once be ordered."
 Reports of excessive drunkenness among the Midshipmen during the celebration which followed the football game Saturday were given wide publicity.
 Philadelphia, Nov. 27.—James O'Connor, managing director of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, where the Navy ball was held Saturday night, to-day denied that there was unseemly conduct by midshipmen or others that attended the dance. "It was a nice and one of the quietest affairs I have seen for a big event. There were about four thousand persons present."

Irishmen Want
"Stone of Destiny."

JACOB'S PILLOW USED IN CORONATION OF ALL BRITISH KINGS.

Dublin, Nov. 6.—Among many antiques now in England which Irishmen say should be restored to Ireland by virtue of her new status, is the "Stone of Destiny" in Westminster Abbey, upon which every English king since Edward I. was crowned. While Irish antiquarians are not unanimous on this point, one school holds that this stone is the original "Lia Fail" from the hill of Tara, the ancient seat of the Irish kings.

According to one English tradition the stone was carried to Ireland from Bethel as "Jacob's Pillow," upon which Jacob slept when he dreamed. In Ireland it was the pillow of St. Columba at Iona, was removed to Scone, Scotland, by Kenneth II. in the ninth century, and then to Westminster by Edward I.

Some antiquarians dispute this, however, alleging that the stone was brought to Ireland by Tuath de Denann and his colony from Germany, and subsequently placed upon the hill of Tara. The stone was supposed to have supernatural powers, making a creaking noise when a legitimate king was being crowned, but maintaining a stony silence when a usurper sat upon it.

The Irish high kings who sat upon it during the Tuath de Denann colony, came to Ireland about 1896 B.C., and the stone, according to this legend, remained till the fifth century, A.D., and when Fergus Macero, then the high king left Tara on a conquering expedition he bore the stone away to Scone for his coronation. Edward is said to have taken it away in the thirteenth century. A Scottish tradition spun around this stone has it that:

"If the fates go aright where this stone is found,
The Scots shall monarchs of that realm be crowned."

which prophecy is supposed to have been fulfilled when James VI of Scotland became James I. of England.

There are Irishmen, however, who say that the real Lia Fail still reposes on the hill of Tara, and that the most reliable Irish annals give no hint that it ever was removed. The stone which these persons assert is the original now crowns the great central mound of the hill of Tara, where some 400 men were killed by English troops in the revolt of 1798.

The old Irish bards gave their native land the poetic name of "Innis-fail," incorporating the name of the historic rock. One ancient verse runs:

"From this strange stone did Innis-fail obtain
Its name; a tract surrounded by the main."

Money To Go To Her Two Husbands.

A complex situation has developed in a will case at Winnipeg following the disclosure in court that Mrs. Mabel Tyler, who died in Winnipeg in 1918 leaving an estate of $7,500 to her two children, had two husbands at the same time. The estate of Mrs. Tyler was about to be settled when John Allison appeared and claimed a share of it, producing a marriage certificate dated Chicago, November, 1905, while another certificate was produced in court November 22 showing she had married W. H. Tyler in this city on June 8, 1914. In March, 1920, the Toronto General Trusts Company had filed with it an assignment purporting to be an assignment of Joseph Allison's share of his wife's estate in favor of the children. Allison claims the assignment is a forgery. Tyler, the second husband, who died some time ago, left no will and no estate. The court has ruled that the Tyler estate did not control Allison's right to his wife's estate, and the children's guardian was granted two weeks to ascertain if the Allison assignment is genuine.

On Wednesday next, December 6th, at 8 p.m. A Lecture illustrated by moving pictures, will be given by Mr. J. W. Morris, in Cochrane St. Church Lecture Room, in the interest of the Cochrane Mission Circle. Admission 20c.; children 10c. Candy for sale.—dec4,11

Would Make Marriage More Difficult.

"I want to make it hard to get married. We always shall have the poor with us so long as it is easy to get married—so long as people can go into the great adventure of life as they would into a picture show," declared G. B. Clark, Secretary of the Social Welfare Committee, in an address to the Winnipeg Ministerial Association on November 20. The likelihood of a request being made soon for legislation aimed at preventing too early and unprepared-for marriages was foreseen by Mr. Clark. He stated 50 per cent of the girls who came within the scope of the Welfare Committee were married between the ages of 18 and 20, and the next group between the ages of 20 and 25.

Capital of Turkey.

HAS NOT RECOVERED FROM LAST CONFLAGRATION.

Smyrna burned and the world was startled.

Constantinople is partly burned—but the world has forgotten about it. "Traces of the fires that swept Baltimore and Chicago have been obliterated; but not so with disastrous blazes that charred whole sections of the Turkish city which just now is very much a centre of world attention," says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic Society, based on a communication from Salita Solano.

"The devastating fires that have been working toward the destruction of Constantinople caused the city to be built anew every 50 years, until a law was passed prohibiting the construction of wooden houses on the site of burned ones; in fact, it was provided that no houses at all should be built until the city government planned new streets.

"Nothing has been done about the planning, however, and the result is that one-fourth of Stamboul—more than 22,000 houses, burned during the past 12 years—still lies in ashes. Soutari, too, has vast ruined sections. So has Pera, on a much smaller scale.

"When a fire starts in Stamboul it nearly always assumes frightful proportions. In the fire of 1908, 1500 buildings were destroyed; in that of 1911, 2463 houses; the following day an entire Jewish quarter burned; in 1915 an immense area between Sancta Sophia and the Marmora was consumed. The fire of June, 1918, burned 8000 buildings, clearing a space from the Golden Horn through the centre of the city. These fires are enormously destructive because of the narrow streets, wooden houses and volunteer firemen who go to answer the call on foot, carrying a pump on their shoulders.

"The firemen of Constantinople are worth a story in themselves. Unpaid for their services, they reason like this:

"If we don't go to this fire, the owner will lose all his belongings. If we go and take some of them home with us and leave some to him, is he not better off than if we hadn't come at all? We give our services free of charge; the owner must give us bakshish if he wants us to risk our lives for him.

"We get to the fire as quickly as we can run, and if the owner does not consent to give us money at once, so we can get to work, the fire will gain headway; that is not our fault; but his."

"It was a cause for grief and accusations of injustice when the British installed their own fire system in Pera. By the time the Turks came panting down the street to bargain, the British have the fire out and are driving away.

"The walls that enclosed Byzantium and saved civilization for 1000 years are still standing and constitute, with the exception of Sancta Sophia, the most interesting historical monument in Turkey.

"The impression produced by these battered and lonely ruins is ineradicable. The lines of walls and towers still stretch out as far as the eye can see, rising and falling, tinted from dark brown to ochre and grey, sometimes covered with vegetation. They are barbaric, threatening, mournful. "Modern Constantinople is forgotten as one tries to imagine what these barriers seemed like to the hordes of barbarians who came every few years, looked at those miles of moated and turreted walls, and then turned back.

"Now gypsies and refugees live here and there in the ruins that extend for five miles across the isthmus, from the Sea of Marmora to the Golden Horn. They rob the gardens which are cultivated in the old moats, and watch with astonishment the occasional airplane that buzzes high over the walls of Theodosius II."

The Bible as a Code.

Speaking at the festival dinner of the British Empire Shakespeare Society at the Florence Restaurant, Rupert St. W. London, England, General Sir Nevil Macready said two books which he had found very useful in official communications were the Bible and Shakespeare. "If you put into a reply a reference to a certain chapter and verse in St. Matthew and the official turns it up and finds the words, 'Pilate said what I have written I have written,' you generally score." If the quotation from Shakespeare, "Time and the hour run through the roughest day," could be rubbed into the youth of to-day, he was sure they would find it most useful in school and after life.

Tongue Twisters.

Do you want some very good tongue exercises? You can get it by reading, or attempting to read, rapidly the following sentences. For those who may have in future life to read or speak in public, there is more in such exercise than mere fun:
Six little thistle sticks.

Flesh of freshly fried fish.
Two loads, totally tired, tried to trot to Tedbury.
The sea ceaseth, but suffeth us.
Strict, strong Stephen stringer snarred sickly six sleekly snakes.
She stood at the door of Mrs. Smith's fish-sauce shop welcoming him in.
Swan swam over the sea; swim, swan, swim; swan swam back again; well swam, swan.

A haddock, a haddock, a black spotted haddock, a black back of the black haddock.
Susan shineth shoes and socks, socks and shoes shineth Susan; she ceaseth shining shoes and socks, for socks and shoes shock Susan.
Some people also contend that it is extremely difficult to say even such a simple thing as "Troy boat" fast and many times over without getting the words mixed.
