OPENING. MACKENZIE'S

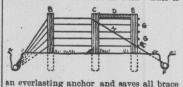

BRAN FOR HORSES.

It Acts as a Lazative and is Tempting to the Appetite.

Bran stands decidedly foremost as the food most generally in use for the invalid horse; it acts as a lazative, is frequently tempting to the appetite and easy of digestion. There is no part of the general with substance as a change of food. Does the horse show slight symptoms of cold or fewer, a warm bran mash is a convenient plan of steaming and consequently of soothing the irritable mucous membranes of the air passages; it is a substitute for the more stimulating diet he is seguromed to and gently promotes the asserting of the air passages; it is a substitute for the more stimulating diet he is seguromed to and gently promotes the bowles more susceptible of its action, and a smaller drug is therefore required to produce the desired effect. Bran mashes may be given hot or cold—cold of perhaps quite as grateful to the horse—but the nighting of hot mash in calculations of the steam.—Farm and Home.

The Ends of a Wire Fence,

There is nothing of greater importance to be learned by fence-builders than how properly to brace an end post. Not one in a hundred is braced properly. I have don't a good many of them wrong myself. After conditions all waves and experimenting AND IRON BLOOD MAKER

Now the other end of the wires need ratchets to tighten them by, and it may be desired to hang a gate thereto. So the "deadman" is used, but the fastening is done by means of 6 strands of No. 9 wire twisted into a cable and running to the second post at C. The horizontal brace D holds the main post E solidly in position. The wires pass through posts E C D. Ratchets at G take up slack in wires.

This is a brace that endures with no give or up-heaving of posts. There is no cheaper nor easier brace known. And, thank God, there is no patent on it!

A practical farmer of thirty years' experience, writing to the North British Agriculturist, on the subject, "Can Breeders Regulate the Sexes of Their Live Stock?" has some views that will be interesting even to those who do not accept them. His position is that while many theories have been advocated as to how the male or female offspring are produced, yet there is, after all, no theory about the matter, but simply a natural law, established from the beginning, based upon the necessity of maintaining the equilibrium of sex in the race. He holds that in the mating of cattle, for example, where the bull and cow are of the same age, and of equal vigor, the produce may be of either sex, but if the bull be old or weak or out of condition the calf will almost without exception be a male, the reason being that the bull, it to condition the talk. Smokers' Goods generally IMPROVED PREMISES Roger Flanagan's a male, the reason being that the bul a male, the reason being that the bull, in its condition, is likely to die first, and therefore nature's demand, as a rule, will be to replace him with a calf of the same sex. In short, the offspring, he thinks, will be of the same sex as the weaker of the two parents. He admits that this is contrary to the generally received opinion, which tends to a belief that the sex is impressed by the stronger of the two parents, but he says that after a study parents. parents, but he says that after a study of the matter for thirty-six years past he has found it to be true, not only in regard to cattle, sheep and horses, but even human beings. When the British colonies were first settled, and quantity rather than quality of stock was the one thing were first settled, and quantity rather than quality of stock was the one thing desired, young spring rams were put to old, broken-mouthed ewes with the result that ewes were produced in numbers as eighty is to twenty; but when the country had become fully stocked up and heavily fleeced wethers were wanted, old rams were then put to two-year-old ewes, and the result was that about three parts of the lambs were rams. In this connection he cites observations by Dr. Brooks, of Hopkins University, in this country, who came to the same conclu-Brooks, of Hopkins University, in this country, who came to the same conclusion with respect to the human race. Dr. Brooks is quoted as saying: "Whenever we are surrounded with a favorable environment there is a tendency to an excess of females; unfavorable circumstances, on the other hand, tends to an excess of males." By this he means that so long as a man has a good income and can live well the female part of the population will go on increasing more rapidly, because these conditions tend to render the mothers relatively weaker and more effeminate. So, many savage nations effeminate. So, many savage nations have been civilized off the face of the earth, because bad whiskey and wors rum have wrecked the constitution o the males so that their progeny are al of the male sex and in time the female gradually die out, and the males have only the poor satisfaction of following suit. The theory is an interesting one at all events, and has at least the advantage of stamping the production of sexes with a purpose, the purpose being to replace that parent which conditions show is likely to die soonest. A Novel Remedy.

A Virginia gentleman, during an athletic exercise one day, felt a sudden pain, and fearing some internal injury sent for a negro living on the plantation who made pretensions to medical skill to prescribe for him. The negro, having sagely investigated the case, prepared and administered a dose with the utmost confidence of a speedy cure. No relief being obtained, however, a regular physician was sent for, who on arriving inquired of the negro what he had given. quired of the negro what he had given. Sambo promptly responded: "Rosin and alum, sir!" "What did you give them for?" continued the doctor. "Why," replied Sambo, "de alum to draw de parts togeder and de rosin to solder 'em'

Annual Loss from Poor Roads

Annual Loss from Poor Roads.

Gen. Roy Stone, Government engineer in charge of the department of roads inquiry, said at the National Good Roads conference at Asbury Park last year that there are about 500,000,000 tons of freight hauled over roads every year in the United States, and 60 per cent. of the cost of doing it was due to bad roads. He believed that the loss from poor roads in this country would aggregate no less than $623,000,000 annually. BRAN FOR HORSES. ECONOMICAL DRAINAGE. Serviceable Drain That Can be Made En tirely at Home. The underdraining of land is one of the greatest aids to improved agriculture, ut many who are well acquainted with the beneficial results following drainage and unable to undertake the expense of atting in tile. Even in these days the expense of tile is a heavy load for the loor land owner to correspond to the many cases, very largely useless for rge part of the year. Surface drainal ill do something to aid in prompt eeing the land from surplus water, b not all. There is nothing like a good many of them wrong myself. After studying all ways and experimenting much, I decide that the best possible ways to brace a post are shown in Fig. 1. For an end to which it is not meant to hang a gate post, the wires may well pass through the post as at B and down to the "deadman" A, which should be a solid timber 6x6 and 3 feet long, or a round stick will answer as well. This is which the writer remembers to have seen illustrated twenty years or so ago, but which many young farmers of to-day may never have seen described or in practice. The ditch is dug with a flat bottom (flat from side to side), and of sufficient width to place three logs in it in the position shown in the cross-section. The two lower logs may well be pinned together, as suggested, for in such drains, and in stone drains, the tendency is for the sides to settle together by the pressure of the earth above and at the side of them. Secured in this way the three logs must maintain the same relative position, with reference to each other. If possible, let cedar logs, or rails, be used, but if these are not at hand, or if they are worth too much for such use, if at hand, then let the next most lasting wood be selected. Most kinds of wood prove very dumble when placed in the wood be selected. Most kinds of wood prove very durable when placed in the earth at a depth where they are kept constantly moist; so that such a drain will last and do good work for years. The logs should fit well together, so that the earth will not have large openings to sift down into, and the whole should be covered with hay, or some such material, before the loose earth is shoveled back into the drain. The earth will become well packed before the hay decays.

—Webb Donnell, in New York Tribune. A Widow Queen The widow of Capt. Richard King

owns a principality in Southern Texas. Her landed estate consists of about 1,250,000 acres—that is to say, nearly 2,000 square miles. For taking care of this vast square miles. For taking care of this wast domain a small army of men is required. The mistress is to all intents and purposes a queen. The owner of this principality is a liberal-minded woman about 60 years of age. Her ranch of Santa Gertrulis is the largest in the world It is bounded by Corpus Christi Bay for a distance of forty miles and by barb wire fence for 300 miles more From her front door to her front gate is thirteen miles, and she can drive in her carriage sixtynive miles in a straight line without going five miles in a straight line without going off her own premises. Her home is lik a castle on the Rhine—a typical baronia mansion. It is situated on a light emin ence, surrounded by the modest dwel of her dependents and by fields of cor Beyond on every side, is a green wilder ness of mesquite and cactus. The chatca is as completely furnished, and as hand somely equipped as any mansion on Fifth avenue, New York No luxury the money can buy anywhere is lacking to the widow, who, by the way, is the daughter of the first Presbyterian missionary to the Rio Grande, the latter part of the Grit programme. An Ottawa despatch of 28th ult. says :-"Holy Thursday saw a crisis in the affairs of the Printing Bureau. It will be remembered that no supply was voted for the bureau last session, and as there has been the bureau last session, and as there has been considerable extra work the vote passed at the session of 1895 had become exhausted. This being so, Mr. McDougall, Anditor-General, wrote Mr. Dawson, the Queen's Printer, pointing out that the vote being exhausted there was no money left to pay wages, and that no cheques would therefore be issued on account of the bureau. This letter was forwarded by the Dominion Police Postal Service, the ordinary mode of communication between the departments, and reached Mr. Dawson early Thursday afternoon. The Queen's Printer's position was an awkward one. There are 150 hands employed in the bureau, and a good deal of work yet to be done, but if the Auditor-General refused to sign any more cheques the only alternative was to dismiss the whole force.

the only alternative was to dismiss the whole force.

Anxious to avoid this if possible Mr. Dawson at once hurried to the Department of the Secretary of State, and was fortunate in catching Sir Charles Tupper just as he was leaving his office to catch the C. P. R. train for Montreal en route for the Maritime Provinces. The Auditor-General's letter was handed to the Premier, who hastily read it, and, as ever, fertile in resource, made up his mind instantly as to the course he would pursue. He caused the railway authorities to be telephoned to that he might be a few minutes late and to hold the train. This ended the crisis at the bureau, and the necessary work is going on."

"Yes; and this reminds me, I have not yet introduced myself. Here is my card." She placed in the hand of Madeline a delicate bit of cardboard bearing the name, "Olive Girard."

Silence fell between them for a moment, and then Olive Girard spoke.
"Won't you ask me to be seated, and hear what I wish to say, Miss Weir?" She hesitated over the name, and Madelline, perceiving it, said:
"You think Weir is not my name?"
"Frankly I do," smiled Miss Girard;
"but just now the name matters little. Stilence fell between them for a moment, and then Olive Girard spoke.

"Won't you ask me to be seated, and hear what I wish to say, Miss Weir?"
She hesitated over the name, and Madeline, perceiving it, said:

"Frankly I do," smiled Miss Girard;
"but just now the name matters little. Pardon me, but I am more interested in your face than your name. I came here because it seemed my duty, and to oblige a friend; now I wish to serve you for your own sake, to be your friend, if you will let me."

Still Madeline's brain kept thinking thinking; and she put har question, "Why did Mr. Vaughan send you to me?"

They had seated themselves, at a sign from Madeline, and Mrs. Girard drew her onair nearer to the girl as she answered:

Still with that air of unnatural calm, she arose and walked to the window.

Of the two, Olive Girard was by far the more agitated. "Tell me," she said, in eager en'reaty; "Oh, tell me, you are not going with him?"

Madeline turned sharply around. "I shall not add myself to the list of his victims," she said, briefly.

And then the two gazed at each other is lience for a moment. "What rash thing do you meditate? I will not leave you to face this man alone; I dare not do it."

Madeline came from the window and stood directly before her. "I am not the was the window and stood directly before her. "I am not the man, as he stood behind his master's him in my own way," she said, between her eeth.

Still with that air of unnatural calm, she hid her window. "I shall not add mysel for he list of his victims," she said, be more cosy. You may serve it, Henry," to the servant, Dinner was accordingly served, and Lucian found occasion to criticise, very severely, the manner of his serving man. More than once, his voice took on an intolerant tone.

Still Madeline's brain kept thinking. "Madeline and the man of the man of the man of the man of the conditi

And now, it being nearly morning, and dive necessary that you should be on your victorious march, let us consider final ways and means."

In a concise, business-like way, they arranged and discussed, the result of the whole being briefly this:

Loran would drive at early dawn to a suburban station, and from thence go by reil to a vilinge midway between the city and her final destination; and there avait her luggage, and the arrival of Lucian. He would join her shortly, and proceed with her to Bellair, in his charace of brother; see her comfortably settled, and leave her to her new undertaking.

And thus it was that in the companion's face.

Mrs. Girard continued:

"I will ask you once more, before I proceed to answering a few questions? Of course, I and will look full of pitying tenderness, for a few questions? Of course, I and will look full of pitying tenderness, for a few questions? Of course, I and will look full of pitying tenderness, for over the girl's face a look was creeping that you from the pity and look was creeping that Aunt Hagar, seeing, could readily have interpreted. She nodded her head, and said briefly: "Go on."

"First, then," said her interrogator, "are you entirely without friends in this city? Except, of course, I and the window, and never looked once at Olive after that.

"I will write my address on this card," said Olive. She did so; then turning on the girl a look full of pitying tenderness, for a few questions? Of one on tell you to be brave; I should rather bid you be cautious. Remember, your life is worth more than the love and loss of such a man. Put this behind you, and come to me soon, believing that you are not friendless."

She lowered her veil, and, casting one more wistful glance at the silent figure by the window, went out and closed the door softly.

"Yes." Madeline's countenance never all of the one and ones at Olive after that.
