VEGETINE.

IS RECOMMENDED BY ALL

Physicians.

VALLEY STREAM, QUEEN'S CO., LONG ISLAND, N. Y.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS writes: "I saw your Vegetine recommended by you. I have been a sufferer with the Dyspepsia for over forty years, and have had the Chronic Diarrhoea for over six months, and have tried most everything; was given up to die, and did not expect to live from day to day, and no physician could touch my case. I saw your Vegetine recommended to cure Dyspepsia. I commenced using it, and I continued doing so, and now a well woman and restored to perfect health. All who are afflicted with this terrible disease, I would kindly recommend to try it for the benefit of their health, and it is excellent as a blood purifier."

By Dr. T. B. FORBES, M. D., for MRS. W. M. H. FORBES.

VEGETINE.—When the blood becomes lifeless and stagnant, either from change of weather or of climate, want of exercise, irregular diet, or from any other cause, the VEGETINE will renew the blood, carry off the putrid humors, cleanse the stomach, regulate the bowels, and impart a tone of vigor to the whole body.

No Time Like the Old Time.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

There is no time like the old time. When you and I were young. When the birds of April blossomed. And the birds of spring-time sang. The garden's brightest glories. By summer suns are nursed. But oh the sweet, sweet violets. The flowers that opened first!

There is no place like the old place. Where you and I were born; Where we lifted first our eyelids. On the splendour of the morn. From the milk-white breasts that warmed us. From the clinging arms that bore. Where the dear eyes glistened o'er us. That will look for us no more!

There is no friend like the old friend. That has shared our morning days. No greeting like his welcome. No homage like his praise; Fame is the scintillating flower. With pearly crown of gold; But friendship is the breathing rose. With sweets in every fold.

There is no love like the old love. That we courted in our pride; Though our leaves are falling falling. And are fading side by side. There are blossoms all around us. With the colors of our dawn. And we live in borrowed sunshine. When the light of day is gone.

There are no times like the old times— They shall never be forgot! There is no place like the old place— Keep green the dear old spot! There are no friends like our old friends— May heaven prolong their lives! There are no loves like our old loves— God bless our loving wives!

UNDER FALSE COLORS.

They were making a railroad from a certain city to no matter where. Suffice that it was somewhere in the boundless "out west," and it ran thro' a wild, Indian-fested country, where the savages were uncomfortably familiar with the small army of employees was John Marshall, a civil engineer, in charge of a section in one of the wildest portions of the line. But he was young, fresh from college, and hard work and danger had no terrors for him.

John Marshall sat one day in the rude log hut which constituted his "office," examining plans, making out requisitions, etc., when a shadow across his paper caused him to look up. In the doorway stood a boyish fellow of apparently eighteen or twenty, with smooth face, fresh complexion, curly hair, and somewhat effeminate in form and figure. In response to Marshall's inquiring look, he said: "I have called upon you, sir, hoping to get work."

"Well, we are full just now in the section," was the discouraging reply. "What can you do?"

"I can write, keep accounts, or do something of that kind better than anything else; but I will do anything that—"

"I see. You haven't been used to hard work, as your hands show." "No, sir, but if you will only try me, I am sure you will find me willing. I am very anxious to get work."

"But what sent you to this outlandish place to find it?"

"The young man colored, but made no reply."

"Well," continued Marshall, "of course that's your own affair, not mine. I can't offer you anything in the way of work, because you don't seem qualified for severe manual labor. I want a clerk—an assistant—bad enough, but the Company would not pay you if I should engage you."

"That doesn't matter," said the young applicant. "If you could only give me board and lodging for a few months I would gladly stay."

"Very well. On those terms I engage you. But what is your name?" "Frank Burroughs, sir."

pleased to have you go with me. In fact I must insist upon it, for—in spite of your girlish ways—I should be loath to leave you society."

"No, I am very sad indeed," said John, rallying.

"It would involve a long story and a confession; one that requires a sacrifice of self-respect to make."

"But we are friends."

"Yes, and I feel that you have a right to know. So listen with all the patience you can. Away down in one of the lonely valleys that dot our beautiful New York State, situated near the headwaters of the Mohawk, there lived a few years ago a man named Lampot, with a family consisting of a wife and one child, a girl. Mr. Lampot had once been a prominent merchant of New York, but meeting with heavy losses in his business through wild speculation, he had sold out and with the remnants of his fortune had settled in the valley I have just mentioned. Here he resolved to begin the world anew. Possessed of a wife who sympathized with him in all his trials, he never despaired as he might have done."

"But one child had blessed their union, little Fanny, at this time about eleven years of age. In her, all her parents' love was centered. Mr. Lampot had been at his new vocation about three years, and was in a fair way to retrieve the losses he met with in his mercantile career."

"The little valley was but a few miles in length, but little more than a mile in width, surrounded on all sides by high mountains, thickly wooded. But few other families had their residence in the valley. The scarcity of neighbors, however, did not cause Mrs. Lampot to have any vain longings for the society in which she had been reared. Her nature was not of an ambitious turn. While her family possessed health, and the wolf was kept from the door, she would never complain, but would always be a loving and fitting helpmate to her husband. Mr. Lampot was fully conscious of the treasure he possessed in his wife, and they were happy indeed."

"Thus things went well for a time, and then calamity came. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lampot suddenly died, leaving Fanny alone and almost penniless. Paralyzed with grief the poor girl knew not what to do. The neighbors kindly came forward to assist her, and with a hundred dollars in her pocket, she went to a relative in New York—a widow lady, named Plesley. She was not a handsome woman; she was not particularly rich; she was not certainly over thirty. Those who merely saw her wondered at the immense popularity she enjoyed; but those who knew her intimately perfectly understood her fascination. Mrs. Plesley possessed a most brilliant intellect, spoke several languages, had read nearly everything that was to be read, and could talk on any subject in the world, from the most abstruse theological creed to the slightest pinprick of the Black Crook drama. She was the most amusing woman in New York. Her conversation was like the coruscations of brilliant fire works, so dazzling that it was almost impossible to analyze it; but those who had self-possession enough to close their eyes against the flashing light, saw in her thoughtlessness and carelessness for the feelings of others, and a thorough selfishness; she was as brilliant as a rainbow, but as cold."

"Fanny was taken into society, after only a few months, by Mrs. Plesley, who took every care to display whatever beauty or accomplishment her young relative possessed. Fanny soon made up her mind that Mrs. Plesley was using her for a speculative purpose, the desired end being a rich husband. While the widow lady was so much anxious to exchange her freedom for the matrimonial yoke, she schemed to gain for herself position and fortune by marrying Fanny advantageously. The waited for man came at last. He was a millionaire, and was sixty years old. The girl recoiled from the prospect of such a match with disgust; the venerable suitor pleaded; Mrs. Plesley commanded. Upon Fanny's final refusal, the widow ordered her to leave the house, never to enter again. With the remainder of the money she had originally brought with her, and which she had kept, because she had no time to spend it, she went out into the world."

Here the speaker hesitated as if loath to go on.

"Is the story finished?" asked John.

"No."

"Well, go on then. I should, of course, like to know what became of Fanny."

"Not knowing where to go or what to do, but with a vague idea of getting work somewhere or something, she applied to numerous warehouses and shops, but she was in every instance obliged to confess ignorance of the work in question. In some places her good looks subjected her to insult, and she had to bed at night in a cheap lodging, thoroughly discouraged. The next day she went through the same experience, with the same result."

"If I were only a man," she said to herself, "I could get on better. I would at least be free from insult, and I could seek my fortune much more comfortably."

"This set her thinking, and by morning she had resolved upon a novel masquerade. Very early she set out, and a short walk brought her to a clothing warehouse. She entered and thus addressed the shopman: 'Have you any ready-made clothing for boys or young men?'"

"Yes," was the reply.

"Please show me some."

"She selected a suit of clothes which she thought would suit her purpose, had them put in a bundle and took them to her room, together with a cap which she bought on the way. Half an hour afterwards she looked into the mirror and saw a smart young fellow of eighteen—but with her hair reaching to the waist. A pair of scissors, skillfully used, soon brought the hair into a proper condition, and then she scarcely knew herself."

With the next train she started for the West. Stopping at Buffalo, she obtained a situation in a warehouse to fill a temporary vacancy; but that lasted only a few weeks, and then she went to Chicago. There she looked for work in vain until her money was almost exhausted, and she found that being a man did not insure complete success. Her slender and youthful appearance debared her from work of a heavy nature; and lighter situations, such as book-keepers, clerks, etc., were scarce."

"At last, finding that starvation was her only prospect in the city, Fanny resolved to try the country. By chance she read in a newspaper of a railroad being in course of construction, and so she came here."

"Come here," ejaculated John Marshall. "Then you are—"

"I am Fanny Lampot," was the blushing reply.

John started back in amazement. He was naturally a bashful fellow, unaccustomed to female society, and the idea that he had been for months associated with a young lady who was as startling. Then he wondered that he had not suspected the truth before; that he had not more particularly noticed the clerk's effeminacy, girlish blushes and pretty ways, and now that he thought of it, he did not recall the idea of parting with it at pretty clerk."

A silence of some length ensued at the completion of Fanny's story, broken finally by John Marshall.

"I don't see," he said with some hesitation, "that we need part just because you have changed your sex; but then, you know, it wouldn't be exactly proper for you to stay here with me, now that I know you're a girl."

Fanny was silent. She was thinking of the bitterness of parting with the man she had learned to love. The months she had spent in his society had been the happiest since her parents' death.

"Do you wish to leave me?" inquired John.

"No, indeed," replied Fanny quickly. "Please do not make me go away. Nobody but you knows of my sex."

"I see but one way for you to do as you desire."

"Name it."

"By marrying me."

It was settled with a hug and a kiss. John Marshall went home to spend his vacation, which resolved itself into a honeymoon. When his friends asked him where he found his lovely wife, he always replied that there is a funny story connected with this courtship; but Fanny blushes at this point and he never tells the story."

Deferred Matter.

(Crowded out last week.)

The President's Inauguration.

Washington, March 4.—Despite the very unpleasant weather, the inaugural ceremonies to-day were of unprecedented brilliancy. The grand procession, which moved along Pennsylvania Avenue, escorting the President and President-elect, and with other prominent officials, to the Capitol where General Garfield took the oath of office, was viewed by more than one hundred thousand people. The decorations along the route were imposing and the enthusiasm unbounded. Gen. Hancock, Gen. Sheridan, the British Minister Thornton, and the entire diplomatic corps in full court costume, were present.

President Garfield proceeded to the portico at the east front and delivered his inaugural address. The President spoke earnestly of his faith in the country's future prosperity, indicated his purpose that the colored people who had been brought into citizenship should have their full rights as citizens, and insisted that universal education was the great lever for bringing all people up to the proper standard of a great government. He thought a proper funding bill should be prepared by Congress, and reiterated, on financial topics, the well known words favoring a sound currency so often expressed by him as a Congressman. Believing that no man's religious faith should receive condemnation, the President asserted that the evils of Mormonism should be prohibited. The interests of agriculture should receive greater attention from the Government, and the steady growth of our manufactures should be maintained. Indian canals were favorably treated, and strong views expressed regarding a proper civil service. The oath was taken by Mrs. Garfield, administered by Chief Justice Waite. Vice-President Arthur, upon induction into office, made a brief speech, in which he said that the Senators in the discharge of their respective duties as presiding officers of the Senate. The city is brilliantly illuminated to-night, and the streets are filled with people.

The Boer Trouble.

London, March 7.—A despatch from Durban to the Times: "It is rumored that Gen. Wodehouse has broken up the camp of the Boers, and has taken them fresh. The younger Burgers of the Orange Free State have become increasingly hostile and are reported to be looting wagons on the road to Natal. Seventy crack troops have been told off to fire in any future engagement at such men as Joubert may indicate. An additional three days' raiding has been ordered, and the city is brilliantly illuminated to-night, and the streets are filled with people."

Chicago, March 4.—A despatch from Sioux City says the present storm is particularly discouraging; all roads within 200 miles of Sioux City are blocked, some of them since New Year's. Nothing like the present has been in Chicago this winter. The snow is falling and drifting so fast as to make the side walks impassable.

ZOPESA from Brazil.—As a result of the new commercial enterprise just assuming importance with Brazil, is the introduction of Zopesa, so justly celebrated where it is used, as the best of all for the cure of indigestion. The company have opened a laboratory in Toronto. Zopesa comes to us highly recommended by the Digestive Organs, its certainty to relieve and cure Dyspepsia and Constipation, makes this remarkable compound a necessity in Canada. The company make samples at the trifling cost of 10 cents, to be had of Lee Street, Newcastle.
