Great Salt Lake. From an interesting description of the Great

Salt Lake, which we find in the Philadelphia Ledger, we make the following extracts: Away out in the western wilds, some three hundred miles beyond the Rocky Mountains, and amidst other and loftier mountains still, there exists one of the most remarkable natural curiosities in the world-the Great Salt Lake. All the streams and rivers which run into Salt Lake have their sources in the Great Basin, and what is remarkable, none of them find large rivers, swollen annually by their mountain tributaries, but in no very extensive degree are the waters of the lake increased during the seasons of the most copious flowing of these rivers. What becomes of the water is a question solvable only by the universal laws of nature, which keep the waters within these cir-VOTE BY BALLOT .- A meeting convened by the waters of the great oceans of the world .the Committee of the Ballot society, was held on Monday evening, at the Whitington club, to hear from the Hon. United States survey in 1850, says the water contains more than twenty per cent. of pure choloride of sodium, and about two per cent o other salts, , making one of the purest and most concentrated brines known in the world. The specific gravity of the water is very great this in the same analysis is given at 1.170, water being 1.000. The water is so heavy or buoyant that a person bathing in it can sit up-right, with head shoulders and arms out of the Great Britain will be able to send her troops water like sitting on a rocking-chair; and a person can lie on the surface with head, hands and feet out of the water. In the lake the color of the water is very deep, dark blue, much more so than the ocean, but when taken in the hand it is transparent. The water in the lake is generally very shallow for long distances from the shore, and though it is deener farther out, yet it cannot be said to be a deep lake. Its rapid changes, receding from one place and rolling out upor another, caused by the frequent and violent storms, which come sometimes add dealy without any premonition, sweep over it with the resistless fury of tornadoes, render it very unsafe for navigation in boats; indeed, it is not considered navigable. This great salt lake is only used at present for boiling a little salt upon its dreary desolate shores.

After grace had been said by the Rev. Mr. DeVeber, Rector of St. Paul's, the main business of the octasion commenced, and never did men appear to enjoy a feast more thoroughly than these guardsmen; they cheered for New Brunswick, and for St. John, and for Portland, and as each table was passed. they had never been so kindly treated, and that it was the happiest day of their lives-a day they could never forget, wherever the fortune of war might carry them.

SOLDIERS OF THE GRENADIER GUARDS:

We are glad to meet you upon this occasion, and to tender to you this trifling mark of our hospitality. We are glad to meet you, because many of us have not had the opportunity of seeing the soldiers of the Grenadier Guards, that celebrated and well-known regiment, --- wel known to your friends, but better known to your enemies. (Cheers.) We are glad to meet you because of your own reputation. We are glad to meet you, because your presence shows, forcibly, that we form an integral part of the great British Empire; that, humble as our position and limited as our means of self-defence may be the Imperial Government think it worth while to send their best troops to preserve our country

We are glad to see you, because your officersthe pets and favorites of the drawing-rooms and Clubs of London-have shewn that, when duty to their country requires their services, they can also endure the same hardships, and undergo because your coming amongst us at this time, in the depth of winter, must satisfy you and every one, that the harbour of St. John is accessible even at the most inclement seasons; and that no difficulty need be experienced in bringing troops to this port-the most central point of the Atlantic Provinces-at any time when required.

We are glad to see you here, because this spot where we now stand, forming part of the "European and North American Railway," we trust ill soon become, by connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, part of a great chain of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific, through British territory. (Cheers.) We regret that this connection is not already mpleted, as it would have saved you from this delay, and the hardships, and difficulties, of awinter ourney from Halifax, or St. John, to Canada, but we have a confident expectation that this great work will soon be undertaken, and that most of us will live to see that grand chain of or all her subjects. We-have heard that in coming to New Brunsrick some of you have said that it seemed like going to some distant county in England. We are glad that this is the case; we are proud of our loyalty, and deeply do we sympathize with our Royal Mistress in her late afflicting beeavement. Let us wish her every consolation and let us now join in the toast which I propose and which I know will meet with your heartfelt approbation " THE QUEEN".
