The question which the Indian authorities ask is whether they are correct in assuming that the present extent of Canada's Mutual Aid to India should be regarded as a monetary quota of approximately $33 million and does not merely represent one-third of the value of India's share of trucks, whatever that may be, subject only to an outside limit of $33 million. The point is of some importance to the Indian authorities in view of the fact that their latest estimates indicate that of the total of army trucks supplied to India during the current financial year, those utilised for India's own purpose amount to much less than 50% and that accordingly one-third of the value thereof will be substantially less than $33 million. They therefore enquire whether they may assume that the whole and not merely one-third of India's share of these trucks will be provided under Mutual Aid subject only to a maximum of $33 million. They further ask whether they may assume that if the value of all trucks whose cost is attributable to India comes to less than $33 million, then the balance of this sum can be regarded as available against other Indian requirements from Canada which the Canadian Government may consider to be eligible for Mutual Aid.

I should be very grateful if you would inform me what reply should be returned to Mr. Symon to enable him to answer his Government's enquiries.

Yours sincerely,

R. GORDON MUNRO

Dear Dr. Clark,

I should like to refer again to the question of the provision of military trucks produced in Canada for shipment to India about which I wrote to you on the 2nd March. We have now heard from Mr. Symon of the India Supply Mission that the estimated value of the Canadian trucks likely to be utilised for India's own defence purposes comes to about eight crores of rupees which is equivalent to approximately $26,400,000 Canadian.<sup>326</sup>

This means, of course, that the questions which I put to you rather hypothetically in the third paragraph of my letter of the 2nd March, have now arisen on the facts—that is to say, whether it may be assumed that the whole of India's share of these trucks will be provided under Mutual Aid and whether the balance of the $33 million may be regarded as available against other Indian requirements from Canada which might be eligible for Mutual Aid. I should be most grateful if you could let me know as soon as is convenient what reply I can give Mr. Symon on these two points.

Yours sincerely,

R. GORDON MUNRO

Dear Mr. Munro,

RE: FINANCING OF RAILWAY ROLLING STOCK FOR INDIA

Following our discussions with Lord Keynes and others last December on the financing of railway rolling stock being produced in Canada for India<sup>327</sup> and the discussion which you and I had after your return from your recent visit to the United Kingdom, I again took up this question with the Mutual Aid Board, pointing out the arrangements which you had described to me by which India was obtaining rolling stock in the United States and noting that a portion of the cost of such rolling stock was being provided by the United States as Lend-Lease. I also drew to the attention of the Board the views of the Treasury which you had communicated to me regarding the principle of borrowing for the financing of war requirements of this nature.

The Mutual Aid Board gave very careful and lengthy consideration to this matter. They appreciated the reasons why the U.K. would prefer not to pay for this second lot of rolling stock in U.S. dollars, as they had agreed to pay for the first at an earlier date, in view of the arrangements reached with the U.S. On the other hand, however, they were unable to agree that equipment of this highly durable nature should be furnished even in part as Mutual Aid. While noting the views of the U.K. Treasury regarding the principle of incurring indebtedness for equipment that is urgently needed for war purposes, the Board felt that the Government of India could hardly have objections in principle to the incurring of liabilities in wartime, in view of the huge claims on the U.K. which they have accumulated. The Board have asked me to inform you that they would not be prepared to supply any part of the cost of this rolling stock as Mutual Aid, nor to see the requirements for Mutual Aid on other items increased by reason of the use of Canadian dollars currently accruing to the sterling area for payment of the cost of this large order for rolling stock. They have asked me to propose that this second lot of rolling stock should be financed either from the sale of U.S. dollars to Canada, or by means of a medium term credit to be provided either to the Government of India or the Indian State Railways, presumably along the lines tentatively agreed with the Indian authorities in respect of the first order early in 1944.

In connection with the suggestion that a part of the cost of this equipment might be supplied as Mutual Aid, you will no doubt have observed that the

See Document 523.

U.S. has agreed with France to provide locomotives and railway cars to France on long term credits rather than on Lend-Lease. This American decision is subsequent to that relating to India, and has been made public. As you are probably aware, Canada has been asked to supply rolling stock to Belgium and France. I feel it would not be possible for us to supply such equipment to India on more favourable terms than we would to France and Belgium, and, on the other hand, I do not see how we can supply equipment to France or Belgium on more favourable terms than the U.S. is doing. Consequently I think this American decision in respect of France makes evident the very difficulties which have faced us in this matter from the beginning. There is no question but that the rolling stock is urgently needed in Europe and in India for war purposes while the war lasts and for the replacement of war losses when the war is over, but it is, we feel, not the type of equipment that can reasonably be supplied on Mutual Aid or equivalent terms.

In view of the above, I hope we can now proceed to complete the arrangements already agreed upon in respect of the first 145 locomotives, which arrangements were, of course, settled before the Americans altered their policy in respect of India and the completion of which, therefore, ought not to raise any difficulties with the U.S. In the meantime, I understand that production is proceeding with all possible despatch, so that there should be no delay in delivery.

One further point occurs to me as worth comment in this connection. You have pointed out that there might be criticism in India if at the time that the Government of India was accumulating balances in London, they were compelled to borrow in Canada in order to finance essential requirements. I take it from this that some reflection might appear to be cast on the convertibility of these sterling balances if we were not prepared to accept them in payment for the rolling stock in question. It might be pointed out that Canada's action in this matter is not related to the convertibility of these balances in any way, but is based simply upon a consideration of Mutual Aid policy and its relation to the various alternative means of financing. The sale of railway rolling stock on credit is a normal commercial practice and we feel that it need not necessarily give rise to any serious objections in principle.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

Ottawa, March 31, 1945

Dear Mr. Munro,

Your Ref. 915/289

I am writing in answer to your letter of March 2nd, 1945, regarding the provision of trucks to India on Mutual Aid, and your further letter of March 22nd on the same subject.

Your letters were placed before the Mutual Aid Board at their meeting on March 30th and the whole matter was carefully considered in the light of the Board's intentions at the earlier meeting when the previous decision on this matter was reached. The Board took also into consideration the general financial arrangements in effect between India and the United Kingdom and between Canada and the sterling area as a whole.

The Board have requested me to reply to you stating that they wish to interpret their earlier decision as being to supply as Mutual Aid to India one-third of the military trucks being received in India for the account of the Government of India, subject to a limit of $33,000,000 in value. Consequently they are not prepared to provide as Mutual Aid the whole of the smaller number of trucks now found to have been for Indian account. They assume from the contents of your letter that the value of this one-third of the trucks received for Indian account will amount to approximately $9,000,000, and propose to show some such figure in the accounts which may shortly be presented to Parliament regarding Mutual Aid for the fiscal year now closing. Of course these trucks will be in addition to the wheat which is being supplied to India as Mutual Aid, on which the Board has expended something over $5,000,000 this past year.

In regard to the further question of the Indian authorities, as to whether they may assume that they have a monetary quota of $33,000,000 available for Mutual Aid which might be taken in other forms if not as trucks, it must be pointed out that the Board does not allot monetary quotas of Mutual Aid in the way that is implied in this question. Any further items which India wished to obtain as Mutual Aid would have to be considered in the light of their purpose, their nature, and the ability of India to pay for them without Mutual Aid.

I assume that since the inquiry came through your hands, you will transmit this reply to the Indian authorities and that it will therefore not be necessary for us to notify them directly.

Yours very truly,

A Mutual Aid Agreement between New Zealand and Canada<sup>328</sup> was signed this afternoon by the Prime Minister and Mr. Howe for Canada and the Hon. Walter Nash and Mr. Firth<sup>329</sup> for New Zealand. The Agreement is identical with those signed with Australia, United Kingdom and other countries, except for change of names and a reference in Articles one and eleven to the Mutual Aid Acts of 1943 and 1944 in place of reference to 1943 Act alone.

2. The Agreement will be tabled in Parliament on June 30th and no previous publicity will be given to signature. Mr. Nash will inform New Zealand Government of these arrangements and no action on your part is required.

Ottawa, December 11, 1944

Dear Mr. Master,

SALIENT FACTS CONCERNING NEW ZEALAND AND MUTUAL AID

In the early summer of 1943 it was indicated to New Zealand that we would welcome their approaching Canada for Mutual Aid. It was not until Mr. Nash's visit in June, 1944 that New Zealand specifically requested Mutual Aid, which was approved as of July 1st of this year. Mutual Aid to New Zealand, therefore, has actually been in force less than six months.

New Zealand, at the time of accepting Mutual Aid, indicated her desire to retain as much trade as possible in ordinary commercial channels. We indicated that this policy was very acceptable to Canada. The Mutual Aid

Acting High Commissioner of New Zealand.

Agreement was concluded with New Zealand more or less on the understanding that New Zealand's deficit of Canadian dollars could be conveniently covered by a number of large items such as the Air Training Plan, the supplying of the PB2B1 flying boats and a number of other items of a military character, including certain contracts placed through the Department of Munitions and Supply. It soon became evident, however, to the Canadian Mutual Aid Board Administration, from the number of varied requisitions being received from the New Zealand Supply Mission, that there had been a change of policy on the part of the New Zealand Government, and this was later confirmed. Instead of New Zealand confining her request for Mutual Aid to a number of outstanding large items, the Administration has been faced with trying to decide on a large number of small items as to whether they are or are not eligible for Mutual Aid. The Canadian Mutual Aid Board, while pointing out to the New Zealand Government this changed policy, has nevertheless every wish to treat New Zealand on the same basis as Australia and to the extent of New Zealand's deficit in its balance of payments with Canada. The items supplied, however, have to be eligible under the definition "war supplies" and some difficulty has been experienced in this respect. Some of the items are part for direct war, part indirect war and part essential civilian.

Mutual Aid is taking over the New Zealand contracts which the New Zealand Government had placed with the Department of Munitions and Supply as of July 1, 1944. These contracts run to well over $1,000,000 (see first item on enclosure I).† The question may arise as to whether Mutual Aid intends to reimburse the New Zealand Government for payments which have been made subsequent to July 1st and which would not have been paid if it had been possible to take the contracts over immediately. The answer to this question is "yes" and the sum involved is approximately $79,000.

New Zealand was somewhat disappointed when the Canadian Mutual Aid Board did not take over the large amount which was owing as her share of the Air Training Plan prior to July 1, 1944, but the Chairman of the Canadian Mutual Aid Board felt that, in taking over the payment for the Air Training Plan services, this payment should be dated from the Mutual Aid Agreement, namely, July 1st. This means in effect that New Zealand will receive services valued at not much more than $385,000, instead of several millions.

The attached statement† which we prepared some time ago indicates that New Zealand will have an estimated deficit of $10,000,000 as of March 31, 1945 apart from the New Zealand Air contracts, the Air Training Plan and our supplying of the PB2B1 aircraft, the total of which amounted to some $12,000,000 or making a total deficit of Canadian dollars of some $22,000,000.

In an effort to keep many of the border-line type of items in commercial channels, we are still endeavouring to confine Mutual Aid to New Zealand to large items which will have the same effect of meeting the deficit of Canadian dollars but will retain in commercial channels many products for comparatively small amounts and which are sometimes difficult to justify in their entirety as war supplies and involve decisions on a great number of small items.

Wheat and Flour and other cereals have been made available to a number of countries receiving Mutual Aid and there is every reason to believe that the Canadian Mutual Aid Board would approve of Wheat and Barley, for example, to New Zealand under Mutual Aid.

We are paying the ocean freight on Mutual Aid goods to New Zealand, when transported on Canadian ships.

We have no form of reverse Mutual Aid in force at the present time although reverse Lend-Lease by New Zealand to the United States amounts to a very considerable item.

Yours very truly,

Ottawa, February 9, 1944

I attach for our approval a letter addressed to Mr. Tounkin<sup>330</sup> which is to be used to cover the transmission to him of the completed Mutual Aid Agreement with the U.S.S.R. The purpose of this letter is to inform the Soviet Government that we consider it most unlikely that we will ever ask them at the end of the war to transfer back to ourselves or to an international relief agency aircraft, automotive equipment, etc., in the circumstances contemplated in Article VIII. From the first the Russians have been told, with the authority of the Mutual Aid Board, that this Article really had no application in their case. It has been inserted in the Agreement partly because we might want to use this procedure in the case of some of the supplies given to the United Kingdom and partly for political reasons to avoid too strong a contrast between our procedure and that of the United States. The United States can demand at the end of the war the return of everything still in existence which they have provided under Lease-Lend.

We had great difficulty in persuading the Russians to sign the Agreement containing this Article. They pressed very hard either for its deletion or for our nullifying it by an exchange of notes promising never to use the procedure in their case. Its deletion from the Soviet Agreement, however, would probably necessitate its deletion from all the agreements with other countries, and the Mutual Aid Board felt that its nullification by an exchange of notes would be not altogether honest. The Russians, therefore, eventually agreed to accept the Article on the understanding that we would give them formally a statement, which had repeatedly been given to them informally, to the effect that we considered it most unlikely that we would ever use the Article in their case.

This is not in the least dangerous, as I can imagine no circumstances in which we would want to try to recapture equipment of the types mentioned delivered to Russia. Incidentally, they have received scarcely any equipment from us of these types as we have provided them with no aircraft, motor trucks or ordnance under Mutual Aid. They have only got from us some special forms of automotive equipment, chiefly mobile machine shops and bren gun carriers, and we are certain to have far more of these in our own Army stores at the end of the war than we can possibly use.

I have the honour to transmit to you, herewith, the signed original Agreement, dated February 11th, between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the principles applying to the provision by Canada of Canadian war supplies to the Soviet Union under the Canadian Mutual Aid Act.<sup>331</sup> It was explained to you during the negotiation of the Agreement that it was the policy of the Government of Canada to conclude similar agreements, which would be as far as possible in identical form, with all the Governments which are receiving war supplies from Canada in any volume under the Mutual Aid Act. In this connection the Government of Canada considers it most unlikely that they would make any request to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under Article VIII of the Agreement for the re-delivery on the cessation of hostilities of any supplies in the circumstances contemplated in that Article.

I should be glad if you would convey to the Soviet Government the satisfaction of the Canadian Government over the signature of this Agreement, which is further evidence of the desire of both countries to collaborate as fully as possible towards bringing about the defeat of the common enemy.

Ottawa, June 23, 1944

Sir,

Replying to your despatch No. 1261 of May 22nd, on the subject of the Fourth Soviet Protocol, the Mutual Aid Board, at its meeting on June 22nd, approved of the following alternative wording for paragraph 3, Article IV:

"The financial arrangements between the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the one hand and the Government of Canada on the other in connection with the supplies to be furnished by the Government of Canada in pursuance of the present Protocol shall be in accordance with the terms and conditions of the Mutual Aid Agreement of February 11, 1944, between the two governments for such supplies as the Government of Canada may authorize under Articles I and III thereof, and for other supplies shall be in accordance with the terms and conditions of special agreements or understandings between the two governments."

Will you please advise the Canadian Secretary of the Joint War Aid Committee so that he may in turn inform Brigadier General York, the Acting Executive of the President's Soviet Protocol Committee?

The Board gave its general approval to the draft of the Fourth Protocol proposed by the United States authorities with the substitution of the paragraph quoted above. Before, however, the United States authorities are informed that we agree with their draft it would be desirable to examine any changes which the United Kingdom Government may propose. At present, perhaps all that should be done is for the Canadian Secretary of the Joint War

Aid Committee to notify Brigadier General York that we desire this particular change to be made in the draft and would like to have an opportunity of learning the views of the United Kingdom Government before approving the amendments to the language of the Third Protocol which he has suggested.

Washington, July 24, 1944

SECRET

Sir,

With reference to your despatch No. 933 I have to advise that your revised wording for paragraph three of Article IV of the Preamble to the Fourth Soviet Protocol was duly transmitted to Brigadier General York, Acting Executive of the President's Soviet Protocol Committee. Copy of his acknowledgment is enclosed. The text was transmitted concurrently to the British Supply Council.

2. Mr. Allen has been handed the enclosed draft text of the U.K. Preamble† which, in general, conforms to the United States draft except for certain additions which are underlined. This draft has been transmitted to the President's Soviet Protocol Committee for their comments. Mr. R. B. Stevens of the British Supply Council in handing the United Kingdom draft to Mr. Allen mentioned that they expected the Russians would object to the refinement proposed in the first paragraph. He felt, however, that this difficulty would have to be met when it arose following submission of the Protocol in draft to the Soviet authorities.

3. So far no definite date has been set for the completion of the schedules and agreement by the three supplying countries on the text of the Protocol due in part, to delays in submission by London of lists of industrial materials etc. to complete their schedules. In addition, it is rumoured that United States agencies have not yet decided how to treat certain industrial items requested by the Russians which will obviously not be completed and shipped before the end of June, 1945. At present the United States are regarding requirements which cannot be produced, shipped and installed in Russia within eighteen months as ineligible for Lend-Lease. Special financial arrangements other than Lend-Lease, to take care of orders which will fall into this category, have to be considered.

4. It has been suggested to us informally by British and American officials in Washington that the Fourth Protocol might well be signed in Ottawa. On the assumption that this suggestion will meet with your approval we have intimated that such an arrangement would be welcomed by the Canadian government.

5. If you have any comments to make on the United Kingdom draft, which, you will note, does not incorporate the alternative Canadian financial clause given in your despatch No.933 of June 23rd, I shall be glad to have them.

Your messages WA-5165† and 5167,† Fourth Soviet Protocol. The draft quoted in your 5167 is acceptable to us. Please advise manner in which U.S. and U.K. Governments propose to communicate it to the Soviet authorities. We should, of course, submit it ourselves simultaneously (or if they intend to do it jointly we should be associated with them).

2. We have been informed by U.K. High Commissioner, with reference to informal discussions in Washington, that the U.K. authorities would be entirely agreeable to the suggestion that the Fourth Protocol should be signed in Ottawa. They enquire whether we propose "to make the necessary approach to the Americans and Russians with a view to obtaining the general concurrence of the other signatories." Have you taken up this question with the U.S. authorities since receipt of my EX-3605 of August 29th and has it arisen in the course of any discussions between the Canadian and Soviet Embassies?

Dear Mr. Ambassador,

I enclose a copy of the preamble to the proposed Fourth Protocol between your Government and the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada. I understand that the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom are also transmitting the enclosed text today to the Soviet representatives in Washington and in London.

I had hoped to be able to send you at the same time the Schedule of offerings by Canada to be attached to the Protocol but this is not yet entirely completed. I expect to forward it to you within a day or two.

It has been suggested that it would be appropriate if the Fourth Protocol were to be signed in Ottawa since the first three Protocols have been signed respectively in Moscow, Washington and London. The signature of the Fourth Protocol in Ottawa would be entirely welcome to the Canadian Government and I should be glad to learn whether the Soviet authorities concur in this suggestion.

Yours sincerely,

We expect to be able to forward the Canadian Schedule to Mr. Zarubin tomorrow or at latest by Wednesday.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for H. H. Wrong from L. B. Pearson, Begins: Re Fourth Soviet Protocol. Martin, United States Secretary of the Joint War Aid Committee, has reported that Protocol on United States side has reached the stage where they are lining it up for signature. We gather that they would like to have the Protocol in shape for signature by the end of this month at the latest although they hope to be in a position to sign the week after next. The trend of the thinking however, is that if the United Kingdom and Canada do not receive definite replies from the Russians shortly, the United States would prefer to sign a unilateral Protocol in order to avoid endless negotiations.

United States have informally taken the same attitude with the British authorities. The British here have had nothing from the United Kingdom recently either as to the Russian reaction to their offers or in regard to progress in their financial negotiations. Meanwhile, shipments of necessary items are continuing without hindrance from the United Kingdom. British have asked us in order that they may inform London, what our attitude would be in the event of our not hearing from the Russians before the end of the month. May I please have an early reply on this point and an indication of the present status of the Russian reply to the Canadian offerings? Ends.

Dear Mr. Howe,

May I have your views on the reply which should be sent to the attached secret and immediate message from the Canadian Embassy in Washington concerning the Fourth Soviet Protocol? The position seems to be that the Americans are nearly ready to sign, that the British have never received the Soviet reply to their offerings and have not finished their financial negotiations, and that we, not having received a Soviet reply, are not yet able to put our schedule into shape for signature. Since we have been shipping supplies to Russia for five and a half months which are intended for inclusion in the Fourth Protocol the position is irregular and disturbing.

I have checked the main dates in the negotiations. We received the Russian request for supplies from Canada on April 21st<sup>1</sup> and the Americans and British, I think, got their requests at about the same time or a little earlier. After the supply possibilities had been canvassed between the supplying countries all three communicated to the Russians the draft for the body of the Protocol on September 11th. We communicated our own offerings on September 16th and the British and Americans took similar action about the same time. The Russians made known to the Americans their selection from the American offerings some time between November 1st and 6th. Neither the British nor ourselves, however, have yet heard from them as to their selections.

I do not much like the idea of a separate U.S.-Soviet Protocol which is being informally canvassed in Washington. I think that we should do our best to stick to the tripartite arrangements and to have them concluded as soon as possible. Do you think that we should take this line with both the Americans and the British?

Of course there is some advantage from the point of view of the supplying countries in not having any Protocol with the Russians at all at this stage of the war. Fundamentally the Protocol is a promise by the supplying countries that subject to the conditions stated in it they will deliver specified supplies during the period of one year. Without it the Americans, the British and ourselves could continue to supply the Russians under Lend-Lease and Mutual Aid and none of them would have the extra commitment contained in the Protocol added to their regular machinery for furnishing supplies to other belligerent countries. Especially in view of the uncertainties of the next few months and of the fact that almost half of the Protocol year is gone, I think that we could well drop the idea of having a Protocol at all if one condition were met. That condition would be that the Americans and British take the same line. It would, however, be most unfortunate if there were a U.S.-Soviet Protocol and no supply agreement between the Russians and the other two countries.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

Re Mr. Wrong's memorandum to you of December 15th referring to the Fourth Russian Protocol.

We agree with Mr. Wrong's suggestions; from the background standpoint the purpose of the Russian Protocol, as you well know, was to secure for Russia pre-assignment of their military needs. The need for this pre-assignment procedure would seem to have passed, and from our way of thinking as long as the three countries followed the same procedure there should be no objection from our standpoint of dropping the Protocol. However, I think that the situation should be summed up as follows:

(1) That if the United States wish to sign the Protocol under pressure from the U.S.S.R. that it should be a joint Protocol as heretofore.

(2) We might suggest to the United States that we dispense with the Protocol procedure, but in either case, for your consideration I would recommend that the three countries follow similar practice.

Mr. Wrong has asked us to endeavour to get a reply to him on Monday as he has telegraphed Washington that he hopes to have a reply ready by Monday of next week.

Dear Mr. Wrong,

I have your letter of December 15th, enclosing Secret and immediate message from the Canadian Embassy in Washington concerning the Fourth Soviet Protocol.

I agree that it would be most unfortunate if there were a U.S.-Soviet Protocol and no supply agreement between the Russians and the other two countries. Our three countries have agreed to act together in supplying Russian requirements, and it seems important that we take similar action in the matter of the Fourth Protocol.

I would have no objection to supplying Russia under our standard Mutual Aid agreement and without the Protocol, provided the U.S. and the U.K. would do the same. Unless we can get an agreement that Russia will purchase goods in process in the event that Russia no longer qualifies for Mutual Aid, there may be some advantage in such procedure.

In any event, I would take the line with the U.S. and the U.K. that the three countries should keep to a common procedure, whatever it may be.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Robertson,

In connection with the offerings of the Government of Canada under the Fourth Protocol, which were handed to me as a supplement to the letter of the Department of External Affairs of September 11, 1944<sup>337</sup>, I have the honour, on the instructions of the Soviet Government, to inform you of the following:

The Soviet Government duly appreciates the assistance which Canada is rendering to the Soviet Union in the cause of waging war against the common enemy, by providing military supplies, equipment, raw materials and foodstuffs on the basis of the United Nations Mutual Aid Act.

In these efforts of Canada the Soviet Union sees an acknowledgment of the great significance of the contribution which the Soviet Union is making to the struggle for the defeat of the common enemy.

In submitting to you the attached proposals† concerning the programme of supplies under the Fourth Protocol, I wish to state that the Soviet Government agrees with the offerings of the Government of Canada, with the exception that (in the Soviet proposals) the scale of supplies of foodstuffs is somewhat reduced in proportion to the scale of commitments accepted by the Government of the United States regarding the allocation of shipping tonnage under the Fourth Protocol.

In connection with the above, the total programme of listed supplies is set at 476 thousand short tons, including the programme of shipments to the amount of 356 thousand short tons and the unshipped balance of supplies to the amount of 120 thousand short tons.

Basing itself, however, upon the statement of the United States Government that the quantity of shipping tonnage specified by them is considered a minimum and that the United States Government admits the possibility of this minimum being exceeded, the Soviet Government is counting upon obtaining additional shipping tonnage for transporting from Canada to the Soviet Union the total quantity of foodstuffs offered by the Government of Canada.

Enclosure: Proposals of the Soviet Government regarding the programme of supplies under the Fourth Protocol.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I wish to acknowledge your letter of January 10th,† enclosing a copy of a letter of transmittal and schedule of supplies† from the Soviet Ambassador, dated January 5th, on the subject of the acceptance of the Canadian offer of certain supplies from Canada to be made available to the U.S.S.R. under the Fourth Protocol.

I note that, with the exception of foodstuffs, the Soviet Government has reduced our offer of 300,000 tons of Wheat, Flour and Cereals to 215,000 tons because of the shortage of shipping space, but reserve the right to request up to the 300,000 tons if additional shipping tonnage becomes available. I question the desirability of carrying into the Fourth Protocol Canadian schedule commodities undertaken but not delivered within the period of the Third Protocol. If we included these items in the Fourth Protocol schedule it might lead to confusion, and we might be faced with a demand for these items if they appeared in the Third Protocol and the unshipped portion re-appeared in the Fourth Protocol. Accordingly I have had a schedule prepared which could form the basis for the Fourth Protocol. This schedule includes only items not included in the schedule of the Third Protocol and has been compiled on the basis of our offers and the Soviet Government's acceptance, plus certain additional items which have been requested by the Soviet authorities since our original offer and accepted by the Mutual Aid Board.

I am aware that many of the items requested under the Fourth Protocol have already been shipped and that most of the Soviet Government requirements for Industrial Equipment (Fourth Protocol) are held in abeyance pending some decision from the Soviet Government in regard to financial arrangements to which they have not referred in their letter of acceptance. With seven months of the Protocol now completed, and requisitions for the major part of the Industrial Equipment not yet placed, you will appreciate that it becomes doubtful if any large portion of the Industrial Equipment requested would be available by the end of this Protocol year even if immediate acceptance of the financial guarantee requested is received. Therefore formal signing of a Protocol, in view of the above situation, would seem to be somewhat of an empty gesture, but, as stated in my letter to you of December 18th, I believe that a common policy should be adopted by the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada.

Yours very truly,

Sir,

Attached please find six copies of the Canadian schedule of supplies to the Soviets under the Fourth Protocol. As we advised you in our teletype EX-362 of to-day's date,† these replace the schedule forwarded you September 18. Would you please give copies to the United Kingdom and United States authorities.

Some slight changes have been made in the introductory matter due to the fact that we are no longer treating the carry-over from the Third Protocol as a separate schedule. You will see too that many changes have been made in the list of supplies. These changes are the result of discussions which have taken place between the Mutual Aid Board and the Soviet authorities since the first list was drawn up.

We attach too for your records copy of a letter of January 16, from Mr. Howe to Mr. Robertson. Mr. Fraser advised us this morning that the Russians have to-day indicated to him that they will purchase the undelivered quantities of industrial equipment on the cessation of hostilities at terms to be agreed upon by the two Governments; the price to be the cost to the Mutual Aid Board.

United States schedule submitted to you with my despatch No. 273 of February 5th,† page 45, shows offer by United States of 5,480 tons. To correspond, our figure should be one-half of this amount, although bonus shipments over and above joint supply by United States and Canada of 8,220 tons are being made on a quarterly basis, in accordance with fluctuating supply position. Revision of this figure will avoid impression that we are treating Russians better than the United States, although in view of actual performance in shipment of nickel, it is admitted here [that] this point is rather an academic one.

ARTICLE III

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics undertakes to make available to the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada, within the period covered by the present Protocol, such raw materials, other supplies and services as may be available and as are desired by said Governments in the prosecution of the war.

ARTICLE IV

The lists of supplies shall also be subject to review and variation by the three supplying countries in the event of major changes in the war situation. #### CANADIAN SCHEDULE OF SUPPLIES

Subject to the provisions of this Protocol, the Canadian Government offers in the following Schedule, for shipment during period July 1, 1944 to June 30, 1945, supplies totalling approximately 490,000 short tons, shipping weight dry cargo. It will be necessary for the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to select, for shipment during the Protocol period a program which, together with other supplies to be shipped from the Western Hemisphere, does not exceed the shipping capacity to be made available from this area. The items which comprise the unshipped balance of the Third Protocol, amounting to approximately 100,000 short tons, are to be included in the selection.

It is appreciated that reasonable stockpiles of stores must be maintained, so that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics can select cargo for shipment that is most needed to meet the ever-changing requirements of war. However, Canada reserves the right to limit the size of such individual stockpiles either by control of production or diversion of product, or both, when in its judgement such action is in the best interests of the common cause. In taking such action due consideration will be given to the expressed needs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Except as specified, supplies for the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics from Canadian schedules will be made available as nearly as practicable in equal monthly instalments. The items in these schedules of supplies are offered subject to the ability of Canada to meet the specifications requested by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Washington, May 5, 1945

Dear Mr. Howe,

RE: FIFTH RUSSIAN PROTOCOL

As far as I can observe to date, I think it is doubtful if the U.S. will enter into a formal Fifth Russian Protocol. The matter has not yet been definitely decided and in the meantime the U.S. is doing nothing with the Russian requests received to date. These requests, sent in at the invitation of the U.S., cover raw material requirements, steel, non ferrous metals, etc., for the last six months of this year.

I believe that from now on all Russian requests will be much more carefully scrutinized and unless there is much more definite evidence than now exists that Russia will enter the Japanese War, offerings will be reduced to a minimum.

At the present time there is a very large volume of material to move under the Fourth Protocol. Some of this consists of equipment which is not scheduled for delivery until early in 1946. In view of the lack of any statement of Russia's intention in the Pacific Theatre, the U.S. does not want to put itself in the position of supplying goods and materials under Lease Lend for Russia's post-war program. This feeling, of course, is accentuated by the recent criticisms of the use of Lease Lend funds for financing post-war requirements, and in fact, this is probably the major factor behind the present U.S. attitude.

As far as Canada is concerned, I do not think that anything we do would embarrass the U.S. unless it happened to be in connection with supplies to Russia of certain scarce materials such as lead, nickel, copper, etc. In other words, as far as I can see, from now on, except for these scarce materials, they are not particularly concerned about our joint programming.

It is rather interesting to note that the present U.S. thinking is that in any event Russia's entry into the Pacific war might be of very little value. If Russia declared war on Japan and Japan were to seize Vladivostok, air fields available for use in Russia would then be as far or farther removed from Japan as the island bases which the U.S. now has or will obtain. It is also claimed that Russian troops would be dependent for supplies upon a 9,000 mile railway. This may not be as big a factor as stated to me because it is, of course, true that the railway has moved tremendous tonnages of supplies from Vladivostok and there seems to be very little accurate knowledge of the extent to which these Siberian railway facilities have been expanded.

As you know, the Russians requested a thirty-year loan of 6 billion dollars for reconversion and reconstruction. I understand that the Americans were prepared to meet this request at the interest rate of 2-3/8%, which the Russians refused to accept. The Russians were the first to whom such terms were offered and as that rate of interest has now been accepted by France, and possibly other European countries, it has weakened the Russian bargaining position, as it is quite obvious now that the U.S. cannot offer better terms to Russia than have been offered to other countries. Capital goods specifically mentioned in the Fourth Protocol agreement would have been eligible under this arrangement if it had been accepted by the Russians.

Yours sincerely,

G. C. BATEMAN

Dear Mr. Bateman,

Thanks for your letter of May 5th, re Fifth Russian Protocol.

You can take it as definite that Canada will not enter into a Fifth Protocol unless in the meantime Russia declares war against Japan. Whether Canada will enter into a Fifth Protocol in those circumstances, will require further consideration.

Russia has undertaken to pay through a long term credit for all industrial equipment shipped after Russia is no longer at war. Therefore, we are continuing to ship Russian industrial equipment now on order. We are also shipping food and metals to the amount covered by the Fourth Protocol, provided these can be shipped before the end of June. We have agreed to repair and furnish ship supplies for all ships that were in harbour on V-E Day, but will require payment for anything undertaken subsequently to that date.

Details of the long term loan have not been arranged as yet. I presume that Russia is delaying until the U.S. terms have been settled.

Principal officers of the Soviet Mission are away from Ottawa at present. As soon as the election is over, we will get to grips with the situation, but in the meantime any new sales to Russia will be for either cash or credit.

It would seem to me from your report that the action proposed by Canada parallels that of the U.S. I will be glad if you will keep me advised of any departures from the practice on the part of the U.S.

Yours sincerely,

CONTINUANCE OF MUTUAL AID TO THE U.S.S.R.

1. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY raised the question of continuing Mutual Aid to the U.S.S.R.

Since the end of hostilities in Europe, the Mutual Aid Board, with government approval, had limited shipments to a number of specific items, it being agreed that further supplies could be provided only under special arrangements and that industrial equipment would be paid for under terms and conditions to be established by negotiation between the two governments.

The Canadian policy in this respect was at variance with that being followed by the U.S. government, who were continuing to provide, under lease-lend, supplies for the Far Eastern theatre.

In the circumstances, the Mutual Aid Board requested reconsideration of current policy with respect to Canadian shipments, it being suggested that a certain relaxation be now permitted with respect to items produced under the 4th Protocol, principally metals, foodstuffs, ship repairs and victualling.

2. THE CABINET, after discussion, agreed that Canada continue to provide supplies to the U.S.S.R. under Mutual Aid, as follows:

(a) certain items produced under the 4th Protocol and presently stockpiled in this country, including principally nickel, magnesium and other metals;

(b) ship repairs and victualling for vessels engaged in carrying supplies from Canada to Russia; and

(c) certain foodstuffs, mainly flour and wheat, and certain raw materials such as nickel and aluminum, as approved from time to time by the Mutual Aid Board.

Your EX-3353 of September 17,† termination of Joint (United States-Canada) War Aid Committee.

The following is the text of a formal note from the State Department dated October 19th and signed by James F. Byrnes, Secretary of State, Begins:

One of the agreements of the Quebec Conference in August 1943 was the announcement upon August 22nd, 1943 by the late President Roosevelt and Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King of Canada of the creation of the Joint War Aid Committee, United States-Canada.<sup>339</sup> The jurisdiction of this Committee was the study of problems arising out of the operations of the United States Lend-Lease and Canadian Mutual Aid programs and, where necessary, the making of recommendations concerning these programs to the proper authorities of the two Governments.

I understand that the members of both Sections of the Committee are in agreement that there is no longer any necessity for its continued existence. The Government of the United States concurs in this view. If the Government of Canada also concurs, I shall, upon receipt of a note from you to this effect, advise the interested authorities that the United States Section may be disbanded forthwith. I should like at this time, however, to express the appreciation of the United States Government for the co-operation extended by Canada in connection with this Committee which has dealt successfully with so many problems of importance and which has, in so doing, contributed further to the splendid tradition of Canada-United States collaboration in matters of mutual concern.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.
Ends.

We had previously indicated informally to the United States side of the Joint War Aid Committee that the Canadian authorities concurred in the view that no useful purpose would be served by continuing the Committee. We should be grateful for your suggestions as to the nature of the formal reply which this note requires.

I have the honour to reply to your note of October 19th on the subject of the termination of the Joint (United States-Canada) War Aid Committee.

The Canadian Government concurs in the view of the Government of the United States that there is no longer any necessity for the existence of the Committee, and is advising the interested authorities that the Canadian Section may be disbanded.

The Canadian Government expresses its thanks to the Government of the United States for its part in developing the relationship that existed in the Committee, where, as in the other joint war agencies established by our two countries, we dealt usefully, expeditiously and in friendly fashion with problems of mutual concern. Dear Sir,

I am authorized by the Honourable the Minister of Reconstruction to request that the appropriate representative of the Government of the United Kingdom be approached with a view to obtaining their agreement in the matter of disposing of Canadian owned surplus which becomes surplus within the territorial limits of the Government of the United Kingdom.

The policy recommended and adopted for this purpose is part of a document dated February 14, 1945, titled

Crown Assets Allocation Committee,

Recommendation for the Disposal of Surplus Canadian Property, becoming surplus within the territorial limits of any Allied Nation and is covered in Clause (1) and the first paragraph of Clause (2) of the said document, copy of which is attached.

Could you please, therefore, proceed accordingly and at as early a date as possible, as the question of surplus disposal within the territorial limits of the Government of the United Kingdom will, I believe, reach some proportion in the near future.

It may be of assistance to you to know that during a visit to England last fall, I discussed this matter informally with the United Kingdom authorities who will be most closely concerned with the disposal of surplus and the policy suggested received very favourable comment.

Yours very truly,

J. H. BERRY

SECRET AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, February 14, 1945

RECOMMENDATION FOR THE DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS CANADIAN PROPERTY, BECOMING SURPLUS WITHIN THE TERRITORIAL LIMITS OF ANY ALLIED NATION

A preliminary survey and informal discussions with representatives of Great Britain and the United States indicate that it is unlikely that any Allied Government will permit the sale of surplus Canadian property within its territorial limits without exercising strict control of such sales. It appears that such control would prevent any satisfactory operations for the sale thereof by any direct agency of the Canadian Government and it is, therefore, recommended that agreements be negotiated with the Allied Governments concerned along the following lines:

1. That the official disposal agency of the Government of the Allied country in which any surplus Canadian Government property is situate act as an agent of the Canadian Government in the disposal of any such property which the Canadian Government desires to dispose of in that country, or which the Canadian Government agrees should be sold by such disposal agencies directly to purchasers outside the country in which the surplus exists, provided:

(a) That such official disposal agency is acceptable to the Canadian Government;

(b) That the net proceeds from the disposal of such Canadian property will be paid or credited to the Canadian Government in a currency acceptable to the Canadian Government;

(c) That no disposal of such surplus Canadian property will be made without the specific or general approval of the Canadian Government or an authorized representative thereof;

(d) That, if the Canadian Government does not so approve the disposal of any such surplus Canadian property, the Canadian Government will agree not to dispose of such property for use within the territorial limits of such allied country.

2. Should the surplus Canadian property consist of items of a type common to both Governments, then in proper cases, subject to specific or general approval by or on behalf of the Canadian Government, such surplus property may be pooled and, at the end of suitable periods, a proper proportion of the net proceeds thereof paid or credited to the Canadian Government.

It is further recommended that persons vested with authority as representatives of the Canadian Government in respect of all questions affecting the disposal of surplus Canadian property within respective specified areas be appointed by the Minister of Reconstruction, at such places as may be deemed advisable, and that each of such persons be designated a "Director of Canadian Surplus (name of country),” and be authorized and empowered to employ such staff as may be necessary to carry out his duties.

It is further recommended that Advisory Committees be established at such places as may be advisable to act as advisers to the respective Directors and to be known as “Canadian Surplus Committee (name of country),” each consisting of (when possible):

- (a) The Director of Canadian Surplus (name of country) who shall be Chairman,
- (b) a member or members of the Armed Forces,
- (c) a representative of the Department of Trade and Commerce,
- (d) a representative of the Department of External Affairs,
- (e) a representative of Canadian business.

London, June 26, 1945

Your telegram No. 1438, June 21st.† Disposal of Canadian surplus assets in the United Kingdom.

At an interim meeting this afternoon, United Kingdom Treasury officials said that the machinery proposed in the memorandum from the Crown Assets Allocation Committee of February 14th seemed to them, in principle, satisfactory. However, it could be finally approved only after the Ministry of Supply and the War Office had been consulted. The Treasury have promised to arrange, as quickly as possible, a meeting at which these other interested Departments will be represented.

The financial arrangements proposed in the memorandum would face the Treasury with very considerable difficulties. They would like to handle this matter through a suspense account in accordance with the suggestions put forward in the letter from Lord Keynes to Dr. Clark on the 4th June.<sup>340</sup> Further progress in reaching agreement will be difficult until there is some indication of the Canadian response to these proposals. This question is particularly urgent, since the type of machinery for disposing of surpluses which will be acceptable to the United Kingdom is, in some measure, dependent on whether Canada will insist on payment in hard currencies or will be willing to use the device of a suspense account. The United Kingdom Treasury would also welcome some indication about the totals and types of surpluses which may have to be disposed of, although they realize that even rough estimates may be difficult to provide at this stage. They do not wish to raise unnecessary financial difficulties if it is expected that the surpluses will turn out to be quite small.

They assume that materials in United Kingdom which are no longer needed by the Canadian forces overseas, but which are required for relief and rehabilitation in north west Europe and are, therefore, not true global surpluses, will be transferred directly by the Canadian Government to, say, the French Government, or UNRRA, or Military Relief, as the case may be. In such cases, they would be prepared to act as agents for the Canadian Government if that is desired, although they assume that all accounting would be done between the Canadian Government and the recipients. They would be glad to know whether this arrangement will be satisfactory to the Canadian Government.

London, July 5, 1945

My telegram No. 1791 of 25th June, disposal of Canadian surplus assets in the United Kingdom.

A further meeting on this subject was held at the Treasury yesterday. Representatives of the War Office and of the Ministry of Supply attended and, as a result of their approval, I can now inform you that the procedures and machinery proposed in the memorandum from the Crown Assets Allocation Committee of February 14th will be satisfactory to the United Kingdom Government, provided that a suitable method of accounting and final payment can be agreed on.

McKim, of Munitions and Supply, and Wilmot, Financial Secretary CMHQ, were present and gave the Treasury as much indication as they could of what the final magnitude might be of all Canadian surpluses to be disposed of in the United Kingdom. Priestman was also present at the meeting, representing Trade and Commerce.

Treasury officials once more urged the necessity of the Canadian Government expressing its views of Lord Keynes' proposals for a suspense account if progress is to be made in this matter. McKim is flying to Ottawa on Saturday to discuss the whole question. He promised to investigate with the Canadian authorities:

(a) Whether the device of a suspense account will be acceptable to the Canadian Government;

(b) Whether disposals in the United Kingdom could properly be included in the suspense account.

One proposal was that only those items which were not intended to fill a demand of the Service Ministries would be handled through the suspense account.

Representatives of the Navy and RCAF were not invited to attend since, I understand from McKim, who acts for the Crown Assets Allocation Committee in London, that the problem of surpluses in the United Kingdom at this stage concerns the Army almost exclusively.

Ottawa, July 23, 1945

Dear Mr. Bryce,

Confirming my telephone conversation with you of July 20th, it appears necessary that we define a financial policy with regard to the sale of surplus assets abroad, more particularly as to the acceptance or non-acceptance of various currencies.

I think there are actually two parts to this question, the first being the sale of surplus within the territorial limits of the United Kingdom, and the second being the sale of surplus outside the territorial limits of the United Kingdom.

In accordance with policy which has been forwarded through the Department of External Affairs to the United Kingdom, we have requested the Government of the United Kingdom to dispose of such surplus as is located in the United Kingdom and which we consider should be disposed of in the United Kingdom through their own appropriate agency. This has been generally agreed, I believe, in principle, with the exception of the question as to whether the proceeds arising from such disposals are to be forwarded to us in the form of hard currencies or whether we are prepared to accept the device of a suspense account to be part of our overall financial considerations as and when the time arrives for such considerations.

This is covered generally in cables 1791 dated June 26th and 1880 dated July 5th from the High Commissioner for Canada in Great Britain to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as per attached copies.

I am also attaching copy of the policy dated February 14th, 1945, which it has been agreed we follow opposite the United Kingdom.

In connection with sales other than within the territorial limits of the United Kingdom, I suggested to you on the telephone on Friday that such sales should be made preferably in U.S. or Canadian dollars but, if these currencies were not available, then we could be free to accept the currency of the country in which the sale was completed.

This, I believe, you approved of generally as being the only practical method of operating.

You indicated to me that you would clear this matter for me at the earliest possible date and I shall be glad if you could do this.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, August 9, 1945

Dear Mr. Berry,

I must apologize for not having answered your letter of July 23rd before this, but there are more jokers in this subject than appear on the surface, particularly the rather innocuous appearing proposal of the U.K.

First as regards the U.K.: when we spoke on the 'phone you mentioned their proposal for placing the proceeds of sales of surplus in [a] suspense account, and I thought this simply meant that we would decide later what was to happen to this amount. However, on examining the documents which you sent me over, I find that this is a particular suspense account which Keynes has proposed to us in connection with some other transactions, and that to approve the placing of these proceeds of disposals into this account involves approving quite a substantial number of other matters as well. We are not prepared as yet to reply to the U.K. on the other aspects of this general suspense account proposal—partly because our settlements with the U.S. in respect of Lend-Lease supplies received overseas are involved. To obtain a decision exactly along the lines suggested by the U.K. in the cable of July 5th would probably involve going to the Cabinet, and I doubt if it could be done until the whole question of future Mutual Aid policy is brought up. On the other hand, it would not be so difficult, I think, to get a decision simply to hold these proceeds in suspense for the time being and arrange that the manner of settlement will be determined later. However, I suspect that the British might demur at this simpler suggestion. The reason is that the effect of the British proposal would be to earmark the amounts placed in the suspense account against repayments of certain obligations they have to Canada in respect of air training in years past.

I am afraid this answer is not very useful to you. I think on the whole it might be best if we took up this question directly with the U.K. Treasury. We have not as yet replied to Keynes' letter to which reference is made, but we have explained to the representatives of the U.K. treasury that the reason for the delay is the large number of questions, particularly the settlement with the U.S., which are involved in making a decision.

In regard to sales in Western Europe, you will recall that on the telephone I said that we should attempt to obtain U.S. dollars or, failing that, Canadian dollars, but that if it was not possible to obtain dollars, then it might be feasible to accept local currencies, and I added "provided that these local currencies were not 'blocked'." I have now gone into this side of the matter somewhat more thoroughly with the F.E.C.B. and with a representative of the French Treasury, who was here this week. As a result of these conversations, I think I can give you more definite information.

As regards France, I am informed that all surpluses to be sold in France must be sold to a specified agency of the French Government, which has just recently been established. I understand that the proper man to see in this connection is M. Jacques Levy, Chef du Service d'Aide aux forces alliées, Président du Conseil Français des Surplus, Place du Palais Royal, Paris.

The French Government apparently permits no sales of foreign-owned surpluses to private individuals or businesses. The French representative here this week, M. de Clermont-Tonnerre, requests that all sales to France be for U.S. dollars or for Canadian dollars in official French accounts in Canada which France is permitted to use to pay for exports from Canada. I think it would be proper for us to agree to this request of the French and, indeed, it is in our interest, as we would prefer to get U.S. dollars or their equivalent wherever that is possible.

M. de Clermont-Tonnerre said he understood that Belgium has a similar arrangement of their own and, if that is the case, I think it would be well that we should follow the same policy and not sell surpluses in Belgium except for U.S. dollars or Canadian dollars at the disposal of the Belgian Government for paying for exports from Canada. I have not yet been in touch with the Belgians about the matter, but I think it might be well if this Department took it up directly with the Belgian authorities. I would be interested to know if you agree, and I would like to have any comments that you care to make before we initiated any discussion.

I do not know what the situation is in Holland, which I suppose is one of the most important countries from your point of view. I gather from M. de Clermont-Tonnerre that there is some chance Holland is following, or will follow, the same policy as France or Belgium.

In any event, I think it would be essential for Canada to avoid building up any accumulation of European currencies as a consequence of disposal of surplus assets in Europe. Therefore, I think that any sales of Canadian-owned surplus in Europe should require payment in U.S. dollars or in Canadian dollars in official accounts of the country to which the sale is made which are available for the payment for exports from Canada to that country, or for local currency, provided that Canada is free to use such local currency for any payment within that country, and to obtain U.S. dollars for any surplus of that local currency which we are not able to use currently. This all means in effect that we would ask for payment in U.S. dollars or in currency equivalent to U.S. dollars.

There is still another aspect to this matter: some of the Canadian dollars at the disposal of these European countries are obtained from export credits advanced under the Export Credits Insurance Act. These credits might legally be used for paying for Canadian-owned surpluses which were manufactured in Canada; they could not legally be used for paying for Canadian-owned surpluses manufactured elsewhere. Consequently if the amounts to be sold are substantial, they may raise problems in regard to credits. In this connection, I wondered whether you had given any thought to the possibility of making any sales in Europe on credit terms. We would prefer not to sell surpluses for credits, but rather to sell them for cash. Therefore, if any question of sales on credit arises, I would be glad if you could let me know.

I realize this is not a very satisfactory situation from your point of view, particularly in regard to the U.K. arrangements. I would be glad to discuss it with you at some stage, if you would give me a call.

Yours truly,

R. B. BRYCE

Ottawa, August 14, 1945

Dear Mr. Robertson,

This Department has had some discussion and correspondence with Mr. Berry, Chairman of the Crown Assets Allocation Committee, regarding the means of payment for Canadian surplus assets sold in the United Kingdom and in France, Belgium and The Netherlands. I understand that Mr. Bryce of this Department sent to your Department a copy of his letter of August 9th to Mr. Berry, outlining some of these problems and the suggestions which this Department made for dealing with them.

In regard to the United Kingdom, I have written to Mr. Munro, of the High Commissioner's office, making the following suggestion in respect of the proceeds of the disposition of Canadian surplus assets in the United Kingdom:

"While for these reasons we are not prepared as yet to agree to the suggestions put forward by Keynes, we do feel it desirable to make some arrangements regarding surplus disposals, upon which Keynes touched at several points in his letter. We understand that the disposal in the United Kingdom of some supplies which might be useful to the United Kingdom itself is being delayed for lack of any agreement as to how it would be financed. We would suggest in these circumstances that the proceeds of any sales made by the United Kingdom Government on behalf of Canada or its agency, the War Assets Corporation, might simply be placed to the credit of the Canadian Government on the books of the United Kingdom Government, to be settled later when agreement is reached upon this and related matters. We feel it desirable that no financial impediment should be raised to the prompt disposition of those surplus supplies which can be of use to the United Kingdom, and that an arrangement by which the proceeds of such disposition are simply held in suspense for the time being would leave us both free to determine later the proper means of settling for the amount in question."

In regard to France, you will note from Mr. Bryce's letter to Mr. Berry that it is proposed all sales should be for payment in U.S. dollars or Canadian dollars in official French accounts in Canada which France is permitted to use to pay for exports from Canada. I understand that Mr. Berry is arranging to have their overseas representatives get in touch with the French authorities concerned with this matter without delay.

As respects Belgium and The Netherlands, we would suggest that this subject might be taken up by the Canadian Embassy in Brussels and the Canadian Minister to The Netherlands, and we and Mr. Berry would appreciate it if you could arrange by cable to have this done. We would like to propose to each of these countries that any purchases of Canadian surplus assets should be paid for in U.S. dollars or in Canadian dollars in official accounts of Belgium or The Netherlands, as the case may be, which are available for the payment of exports from Canada to the country concerned. We would be prepared to accept some payment in local currency, i.e., Belgian francs or Netherlands guilders, provided that we were free to use such local currency to meet our current requirements in Belgium or The Netherlands, as the case may be, and to convert any surplus into U.S. dollars. Payment in local currency, subject to such conditions, however, amounts in substance to the same thing as payment in U.S. dollars or from official Canadian dollar accounts.

Your representatives might inform The Netherlands and Belgian authorities that any payments made to Canada in U.S. dollars for surplus assets, as noted above, would be regarded by this Department as part of the agreed purchases which those countries will make for cash in connection with the credit agreement between Canada and The Netherlands and the proposed credit agreement between Canada and Belgium.

We would be glad to discuss this problem with representatives of The Netherlands or Belgian Governments here or to receive any messages through our representatives abroad. We have suggested taking up the matter through our representatives abroad, as we felt this would expedite consideration of it. There is some urgency about the matter, we understand, because certain of these surplus assets, particularly motor trucks, are already available for sale, and we understand that Belgium and The Netherlands are interested in obtaining some of these without delay. We do not know the magnitude of the total sales under consideration either of trucks or of other equipment.

Yours very truly,

Ottawa, September 14, 1945

Dear Dr. Mackintosh,

In the fifth paragraph of your letter of August 13th, you made certain suggestions about the handling of surpluses of Canadian origin in the United Kingdom. I have now heard from the United Kingdom Treasury, to whom I referred your letter, that they are in agreement with these suggestions and that they are asking Departments in the United Kingdom to proceed on the basis you propose.

The Ministry of Supply have pointed out that it will not be practicable in the majority of cases to segregate Canadian-owned surpluses from other surplus stores of a similar character. Before it is possible, therefore, to earmark the proceeds of sale and place them to the credit of the Canadian Government, it will be necessary to devise some method of splitting receipts from the sale of surplus goods of mixed origin. One solution which has been suggested is that the proceeds might be divided in the ratio which the total value of Canadian imports of stores in any particular category, plus the value of goods in that category which are of United Kingdom origin and have been purchased by Canada through the War Office, bears to the total of United Kingdom war production of similar stores.

The technical details of this problem have for some time been under discussion between the War Office, Ministry of Supply and the Canadian military authorities in London. The United Kingdom Treasury have accordingly communicated the substance of your proposals and of this reply to them and are suggesting that they should continue their talks in London with a view to completing appropriate arrangements. In these circumstances you might perhaps consider it most convenient that further communications from the Canadian authorities on this subject should continue to be made via Canada House.

Department of Finance advise that they are prepared to agree that any guilders received for sales of assets of the Canadian Army to The Netherlands will be utilized by the Canadian Army in The Netherlands, and that the sale of the remaining guilders for dollars shall not be made until three months after the final departure of Canadian troops from Holland.

2. They are prepared to receive payment for these remaining guilders in either Canadian or U.S. dollars.

3. If payment made in U.S. dollars, they are prepared to regard it as part of the payment which The Netherlands will make in accordance with the covering letter attached to the credit agreement between Canada and The Netherlands dated May 1, 1945.†

4. Department of Finance anticipates above reply will be satisfactory to Netherlands Government and if so suggests that sales of surplus assets could be made immediately for guilders which will be placed in a special account in The Netherlands and that the necessary exchange of documents with The Netherlands Government covering this account can be made at a later date.

5. Please hand copy of this cable to Major-General D. E. Dewar, Department of Munitions and Supply, London and also hand him copies of all subsequent communications on surplus disposal.

Dear Mr. Munro,

I have your letter of September 14th regarding the disposition of Canadian surpluses in the United Kingdom. I am glad to note that your Treasury is in agreement with the suggestions in my letter of August 13th† about this matter, and that they are asking the Departments in the United Kingdom to proceed on that basis.

I have noted the point raised by the Ministry of Supply, that in most cases it will not be practicable to segregate Canadian-owned surpluses from other surplus stores of a similar character, and that it is therefore proposed to devise some method of splitting receipts from the sale of surplus goods of mixed ownership and origin. This Department would be quite prepared to agree to this principle, but I would suggest that the formula to be applied in making such division should be settled directly with the representatives of the War Assets Corporation, Canadian Defence Departments, or other Canadian Departments directly concerned. I would therefore suggest that your Departments might get directly in touch with the U.K. representatives of these Canadian agencies in working out some formula along the lines suggested.

I take it that the disposition of these surpluses can now proceed without further delay on financial grounds.

Yours very truly,

W. A. MACKINTOSH

Ottawa, October 2, 1945

Officials of the Department of Finance have had discussions with the French Representatives in Canada concerning the disposal of surplus Canadian assets in France.

The Department of Finance understands that all purchases are to be made through a single Government agency known as the Conseil Français des Surplus and that payment for the surplus is to be made in the same way as payment for exports from Canada, that is, in U.S. dollars or in Canadian dollars from official French accounts in Canada.

The French Supply Mission enquired whether purchases of Canadian surplus could be brought within the proposed credit arrangements between the two countries. The Canadian authorities would prefer that the funds provided as export credits should not be used for the purchase of surplus Canadian supplies overseas, but they would be quite prepared to have payments for surpluses regarded as part of the purchases for cash that the French would make in accordance with the agreement to extend credit to them.

The Department of Finance have asked us to have you take up these questions with the authorities in France to confirm the tentative decisions that have taken place here.

Ottawa, October 26, 1945

Sir,

I refer to your telegram of October 18th† and to the statement telegraphed to you yesterday given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the House on the subject of export credits, in which he announced the conclusion of an agreement for the extension of a credit to Belgium of $25,000,000.<sup>341</sup> I enclose copy of the Agreement itself<sup>342</sup> and of a letter from the Minister of Finance, dated October 25th, to the Belgian Ambassador in Ottawa† dealing inter alia with the understanding reached as to the further amounts which might be provided.

The discussions which we have had with the Belgians in recent weeks dealt in the main with the following six topics:

- (1) The credit of $25,000,000.
- (2) A further credit of up to $75,000,000.
- (3) Unfreezing of Belgian assets in Canada.
- (4) Deliveries of Belgian goods and services to Canadian Forces.
- (5) Deliveries of Belgian goods and services to Canadian Forces after November 8, 1945 (end of Belgian-U.K. Mutual Aid Agreement.)
- (6) Disposal of surplus Canadian assets in Belgium.

Item (1) has been disposed of by concluding the enclosed Agreement.

The position on item (2) is referred to in the letter enclosed. You will note that the amount of the additional loan has not yet been determined. The $75,000,000 mentioned will probably be considerably reduced because the Belgian requirements will be lowered by the payments to be made by Canada for goods and services supplied to the Canadian Forces.

On item (3) an agreement has not yet been reached between the Custodian and the Belgian authorities. There is agreement on practically all points save that relating to the release of information by the Canadian Custodian on the individual ownership of the assets.

On item (4) the Belgians estimated that a total of $251,000,000 will have been provided to the United Kingdom, half of this before VE-Day and half from VE-Day to November 8th, the date of expiry of the Belgian-U.K. Mutual Aid Agreement. The Belgians estimated that about 20% of this amount was for the Canadian Forces. Determination of the exact amount will be attempted in London by the Belgian authorities and the Canadian and British military authorities.

On item (5) an attempt will be made to apportion the amount of supplies for which we will have to pay. This will also be discussed in London. While arrangements for payment for supplies already received and to be received are not yet definite, it is probable that we will settle in dollars for all supplies already received or to be received. Settlement after November 8th will be on a cash basis.

On item (6) it is probable that Belgium will pay us cash in dollars for surplus assets bought from us in Belgium. It has already been agreed that all sales made by us in Belgium of surplus Canadian assets will be made to the Belgian Office of Mutual Aid or will be authorized by that Office.

The credit negotiations were led by M. C. Gutt, Minister of State and official Belgian representative on lend-lease and allied matters. The negotiations relating to supplies and services furnished our troops and to surplus assets were conducted for Belgium by Colonel Jacquemin, Chief of the Belgian Office of Mutual Aid. M. Frère, Governor of the National Bank of Belgium, negotiated with the Custodian on the release of Belgian assets.

Washington, August 29, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my note No. 206 of June 8, 1945,† and your note of May 7, 1945,† regarding the disposal of surpluses arising from the manufacture of warlike stores owned by the Canadian Government in the United States as well as those owned by the United States, but situated in Canada.

The Crown Assets Allocation Committee has requested me to propose that, in view of the great demand upon its time with the early ending of hostilities, and in view of similar demands on the time of the United States authorities concerned, this matter be disposed of by correspondence rather than by a group proceeding from Canada to hold discussions in Washington with the United States authorities.

In accordance with this proposal, I am requested by the Committee to convey its suggestion as to the disposal of United States-owned surplus property within Canada, which is as follows:

“We have previously advised the U.S. authorities of our willingness to clear all their surplus in Canada through War Assets Corporation in a manner parallel to the operations being conducted on behalf of the U.S. Army under the terms of what is commonly known as the 33rd Recommendation.<sup>343</sup>

We think the only major change that would have to be made under the proposed setup concerning U.S. surplus in Canada is an agreement that any manufacturing contract which contains provisions to the effect that the revenue derived from the sale of scrap or surplus be credited to that contract would have to be revised and the revenue from the sale of any U.S. owned scrap or surplus in Canada credited to a common U.S. account in parallel with the credits now coming forward under the operations conducted within the 33rd Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Defence Board.”

I have also been requested by the Committee to submit for the consideration of the American authorities two alternative procedures regarding the disposal of Canadian-owned surpluses in the United States.

As one alternative, the Committee suggest that it would undertake to report to the United States disposal agency, under whose jurisdiction any surplus would fall, the details of each item of surplus as it became available. The United States agency could, if so desired, request the surplus to be transferred to it for disposal, the Canadian Government being credited with the proceeds of any resultant sale. If it preferred, the United States agency could state that it would be in order for the Canadian authorities either to instruct the contractor concerned to dispose of the surplus within the United States, or to have War Assets Corporation take over the surplus and dispose of it through its own channels within the United States.

As the other alternative, the Committee suggest that the United States authorities might agree to disposal either by the contractor, or by War Assets Corporation, without prior reference to the United States agencies.

Crown Assets Allocation Committee also wish me to state that, while it is not possible at this time to estimate the size of the disposal problem of surplus of the type under consideration within the United States, it anticipates that it will be far below amounts previously thought probable, and it does not anticipate that sale in the United States would have any effect on the United States disposal problem.

I would be grateful if you would let me have the views of the United States authorities on the suggestion to continue this matter by correspondence rather than by conferences. If this suggestion is agreeable to them, I would be glad in due course to receive their comments on the proposals put forward by Crown Assets Allocation Committee.

Washington, September 28, 1945

Excellency,

I have the honor to refer to your note No. 305 of August 29, 1945, concerning the disposal of surpluses arising from the manufacture of warlike stores owned by the United States Government but situated in Canada as well as those warlike stores owned by the Canadian Government in the United States.

In discussion of the Canadian Embassy's note No. 305 of August 29, 1945, representatives of the Agencies of this Government concerned with the disposal of surpluses reached agreement upon the following points:

1. Regarding the disposal in the United States of the Canadian Government's subcontractor inventories, the first of the two alternatives proposed by the Canadian Embassy's note is acceptable.

2. While it appears from the phrasing of the Canadian Embassy's note that it covers not only United States Army and Navy subcontractor inventories in Canada, but other United States surplus property in Canada as well, it is desired to confine the scope of this reply to the single category of United States Army and Navy subcontractor inventories. It is believed that existing arrangements adequately cover surplus property other than the sub-contractor inventories.

3. In lieu of the suggestion made in the Canadian Embassy's note with regard to the disposition of United States subcontractor inventories in Canada in line with the so-called 33rd recommendation, it is proposed that such inventories be turned over to War Assets Corporation for immediate appraisal and purchase, the proceeds to be paid directly to the United States Government. The appraisal would be based upon market conditions in Canada for similar material and would be designed to place on the inventory the net value which the Canadian Government would expect to realize from a sale of the property in accordance with its established procedures governing disposition of its own surplus property of the same kind. Following the appraisal and purchase the United States Government would have no further responsibility with respect to the disposition of the property or its removal from the Canadian subcontractors' plants. Each appraisal would be subject to approval by a United States Government representative who would be designated and authorized in behalf of the United States Government to act in Canada. The inventories to be offered and sold to War Assets Corporation would be limited to the residual inventories remaining after removal of such property as is to be shipped to the United States and after retention by Canadian subcontractors of any items at cost.

4. It is further suggested that in accordance with arrangements already in effect with regard to many of the United States Army and Navy subcontracts with Canadian manufacturers, the services and assistance of the Canadian Government's technical inspection representatives and auditors be made available upon request in connection with the verification of contract termination claims presented by Canadian subcontractors under United States Army and Navy prime contracts. Such services will include determinations as to allocability, verifications of inventories, accounting reviews of claims, et cetera, in line with the standards and procedures customarily followed within the United States, which are understood to be substantially similar to those applicable to termination claims under Canadian Government contracts.

5. It is recommended that in connection with Canadian import duties and Canadian Federal taxes which may have been imposed upon Canadian subcontractors under United States Army and Navy prime contracts and which will therefore form an element of such subcontractors' termination claims, the Canadian Government recognize as the basic principle that such subcontracts are part of the War program of the United States and accordingly, the United States Government should not be called upon to pay such Canadian duties and taxes in connection with termination claims or in connection with disposition of subcontractor inventories in Canada. It is suggested that appropriate means be found for the absorption of such duties and taxes by the Canadian Government, either by direct reimbursement from the Canadian Government to the Canadian subcontractor for that portion of his termination claim, or otherwise.

The Department has been informed by the interested Agencies of this Government that under existing procedures an authorization from the Surplus Property Board appears to be necessary in connection with the implementation of the points enumerated above. If these points are agreeable to the Canadian Government, it is my understanding that the Surplus Property Board would take action to issue an appropriate regulation.

Washington, November 24, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your note of September 26th, concerning the disposal of surpluses arising from the manufacture of war-like stores owned by the United States Government but situated in Canada as well as those war-like stores owned by the Canadian Government in the United States.

Following informal discussions that have taken place between representatives of the surplus disposal authorities of our two governments, the Canadian Government submits a proposal to replace the alternatives suggested in the Canadian Government's note No. 305 of August 29th relating to the disposal of Canadian-owned sub-contractors' inventories located in the United States.

It is now proposed that the Canadian Government, through its appropriate agencies, instruct their prime contractors to proceed as follows in the matter of disposal:

The Canadian Government agencies involved will advise their prime contractors that they may instruct their sub-contractors in the United States to dispose of such surplus inventories, as they may be holding for the prime contractor to the account of the Canadian Government in the United States, in a manner parallel or similar to the arrangements adopted by the authoritative United States disposal agency for the disposal of like surplus United States Government-owned stores.

If the United States Government agrees with the above proposal and such instructions are in consequence issued, the Canadian Government would not, of course, be in a position to ensure the compliance of United States sub-contractors with the instructions.

If the United States Government accepts the above proposal for the disposal of Canadian-owned sub-contractors' inventories located in the United States, the Canadian Government will accept the arrangements proposed in the United States Government's note of September 28th for the disposal of United States sub-contractors' inventories in Canada.

With reference to paragraph 5 of your note of September 28th, the Canadian authorities are investigating the possibility of absorbing duties and taxes. The Canadian Government would appreciate it if the Government of the United States would explore the possibility of granting reciprocal treatment in this regard.

I would appreciate being informed whether the above proposals are acceptable to the United States Government.

Washington, December 1, 1945

IMMEDIATE. My WA-6042 of December 1st,† surplus property disposal.

Following is text of State Department note received today; Begins:

December 1st, 1945

Excellency:

I refer to your note, No. 433, dated November 24th, 1945, concerning the disposal of Canadian-owned sub-contractors' inventories located in the United States. In this note as a result of further informal discussions between the interested United States and Canadian authorities you submitted on behalf of your Government a proposal to replace the alternatives suggested in your note No. 305 of August 29th and to which this Government had previously indicated its agreement. I now have the honour to inform you that the United States Government accepts the terms of this new proposal.

In consequence of this acceptance by the Government of the United States and in view of your statement that contingent upon such acceptance, the Canadian Government would in turn accept the arrangements proposed in my note of September 28th, 1945, for the disposal of United States sub-contractors' inventories in Canada, I take pleasure in confirming that the understanding between the two Governments on this matter is as follows:

Relating to the disposal of Canadian-owned sub-contractors' inventories located in the United States

The Canadian Government through its appropriate agencies will instruct their prime contractors to proceed as follows in the matter of disposal:

1. The Canadian Government agencies involved will advise their prime contractors that they may instruct their sub-contractors in the United States to dispose of such surplus inventories, as they may be holding for the prime contractor to the account of the Canadian Government in the United States, in a manner parallel or similar to the arrangements adopted by the authoritative United States disposal agency for the disposal of like surplus United States Government-owned stores.

2. If the United States Government agrees with the above proposal and such instructions are in consequence issued, the Canadian Government would not, of course, be in a position to ensure the compliance of United States sub-contractors with the instructions.

Relating to the disposal of United States-owned sub-contractor inventories located in Canada

1. It is desired to confine the scope of this arrangement to the single category of United States Army and Navy sub-contractor inventories. It is believed that existing arrangements adequately cover surplus property other than the sub-contractor inventories.

2. United States sub-contractor inventories in Canada will be turned over to the War Assets Corporation for immediate appraisal and purchase the proceeds to be paid directly to the United States Government. The appraisal would be based upon market conditions in Canada for similar material and would be designed to place on the inventory the net value which the Canadian government would expect to realize from a sale of the property in accordance with its established procedures governing disposition of its own surplus property of the same kind. Following the appraisal and purchase the United States Government would have no further responsibility with respect to the disposition of the property or its removal from the Canadian sub-contractors' plants. Each appraisal would be subject to approval by a United States Government representative who would be designated and authorized on behalf of the United States Government to set in Canada. The inventories to be offered and sold to War Assets Corporation would be limited to the residual inventories remaining after removal of such property as is to be shipped to the United States and after retention by Canadian sub-contractors of any items at cost.

3. In accordance with arrangements already in effect with regard to many of the United States Army and Navy sub-contracts with Canadian manufacturers, the services and assistance of the Canadian Government's technical inspection representatives and auditors will be made available upon request in connection with the verification of contract termination claims presented by Canadian sub-contractors under United States Army and Navy prime contracts. MOST SECRET. We have been following with considerable interest the work of the Advisory Council for Italy both because of its general importance and because a Canadian Army Corps is participating in the Italian campaign. We have noted that the Council is being enlarged to include Greek and Yugoslav representatives, and also that Soviet and perhaps French members are being added to the Control Commission established by the Italian Armistice.<sup>1</sup>

2. We have considered carefully the relationship of the Canadian Government to the Council and we have decided not to press for the representation of Canada at the present time. We should, however, have to reconsider our position if the Council were to be enlarged by the addition of representatives of states without important political interests in the Mediterranean. We appreciate the reports of the proceedings of the Council which we have received from the United Kingdom Government and we hope that they will continue to keep us well informed.

3. Our disposition not to seek representation on the Council is based on the belief that it can operate most effectively if there are represented on it only those countries most directly concerned with Italian political problems. This does not mean that we are prepared to acquiesce in the establishment on a similar basis of other international bodies in the functions of which we may have a more direct interest.

4. Will you please transmit to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs the view expressed in this telegram?

SECRET

Sir,

In our telegram No.263 of February 10th we requested you to transmit to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs a statement of the attitude of the Canadian Government towards the representation of Canada on the Advisory Council for Italy. I should be glad to learn whether you have received any reply from the United Kingdom authorities to your representations on this subject. The announcement of the impending appointment of a Soviet Diplomatic representative in Italy, together with the decision of the United Kingdom Government to appoint Sir Noel Charles as United Kingdom member on the Advisory Council, and thus to separate their representation on the Council from the post of resident Minister at Allied Force Headquarters, Mediterranean Command, indicates that the importance of the Advisory Council is likely to be enhanced. The presence in Italy of a large body of Canadian troops naturally gives us a special interest in the relationship of the United Nations to the Government of Italy. While these recent developments would not justify in themselves a reversal of our decision against seeking representation on the Advisory Council, we are anxious to follow its proceedings closely and to be in a position to review our decision if this should prove to be desirable.

Ottawa, January 6, 1945

Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 1885 of December 29th† reports that the United States Government are pressing for the conclusion of a "partial peace treaty" with Italy. The object would be to terminate the state of war and the special military arrangements now in force for protecting Allied interests. The partial peace treaty, however, would not include "matters relating to the post-war settlement." Their proposals are being considered in London and seem also to have been put to the Soviet Government. They intend to inform the other Governments represented on the Advisory Council for Italy—i.e., France, Greece and Yugoslavia.

If this plan makes progress it raises the question of Canadian association in the negotiations and Canadian signature of the partial peace treaty. We have concurred, although with some reluctance, in exclusion from armistice negotiations, and this position can be justified on the ground that the conclusion and execution of an armistice is part of the general direction of the war in which the great powers must play the leading role. A treaty with Italy such as is proposed would, however, put to an end the state of war between Canada and Italy, which arose from the Canadian declaration of war with the approval of Parliament. It seems, therefore, that such a treaty could not be signed by representatives of the great powers alone even if they signed with our full approval of the contents of the treaty.

I think that we could not unreasonably agree<sup>2</sup> to a limited treaty of this sort being drafted without our full participation in the negotiations. We should perhaps, however, indicate at this stage that we would expect to be fully informed of the course of the negotiations and to be a party to the treaty, which would be signed by a Canadian plenipotentiary. We might go further and maintain that in view of the large part played by the Canadian Army in the liberation of Italy, we should be associated throughout in the negotiations. We have not, however, sought membership in the Advisory Council for Italy on the ground that our military activity did not carry with it a corresponding political interest. If you concur in this note, we shall prepare a draft telegram to London on these lines and I think it might be well also for the matter to be mentioned to the Department of State of the U.S.<sup>3</sup>

Dear Mr. Massey,

With your despatch of June 16th† you enclosed a letter from Mr. Shannon in the Dominions Office, dated June 15th,† to Mr. Holmes, forwarding a preliminary draft of a proposed treaty with Italy, together with an explanatory memorandum prepared in the Dominions Office.†

It is understood that the memorandum has not yet been submitted to United Kingdom Ministers and cannot be regarded as representing at this stage United Kingdom Government policy. We welcome, however, this opportunity of expressing in an informal manner some views resulting from a preliminary examination of these documents in the Department. It would be appropriate for Mr. Holmes to pass these comments on informally to Mr. Shannon.

According to the Dominions Office memorandum, it is apparently contemplated that the peace treaty should be concluded between Italy on the one hand and the United Nations at war with Italy on the other; and that for the purposes of the treaty the United Nations would be referred to collectively by some such designation as "The Associated Powers." It is not clear either from this memorandum or from the "Draft Heads for Political Sections" what countries are intended to be designated as Associated Powers. It is, however, our view that any peace treaty with Italy (as distinct from an armistice) should be concluded as between each state at war with Italy on the one hand and the Italian Government on the other. We feel that each of the United Nations at war with Italy should be a separate signatory of the treaty and should therefore necessarily have had an opportunity of being officially consulted regarding the terms prior to signature.

The negotiation of the treaty is a different matter and here we recognize the validity of the argument that the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States, the Soviet Union and France should accept primary responsibility. As suggested in para. 3 of the Dominions Office memorandum, certain United Nations having a more direct interest in Italy might properly be associated with the negotiations.

We would be inclined to agree that the aim of such a treaty should be to arrive at a final settlement with Italy. This would be likely to have the effect, as suggested, of encouraging the restoration of healthy political and economic conditions in a democratic Italy.

We are not sure as to the meaning of para. 5 of the Dominions Office memorandum, but assume from the Heads for Political Sections that it is intended that the treaty should cover all territories which Italy will be required to cede, although the final disposition of some territories by Italy as between the several claimants among the United Nations might be left for further consideration. This appears to be an essential arrangement and we should be glad to be informed as to whether our understanding is correct.

We recognize the validity of the conflicting factors in the Italian problem: the desirability on the one hand to establish a democratic and secure regime in Italy, and on the other hand to demonstrate to the Italian people that aggression does not pay. We are not, however, clear as to the meaning of the phrase that there cannot be "any question of admitting Italy's former pretensions to be a Great Power." Possibly the intention is that Italy should be excluded from a permanent seat on the Security Council in the new International Organization or in any other similar body to which Great Powers alone have claim. This in our opinion would be a reasonable attitude and one borne out by the history of Italy.

We would not undertake at this point to offer any comments on the detailed territorial arrangements suggested in the Draft Heads for Political Sections, but it would be appreciated if Mr. Holmes would discuss informally with Mr. Shannon these proposals, emphasizing in particular our interest in the form of the Treaty and the procedure for its negotiation in the light of our comments above.

Yours sincerely,

J. E. READ

London, July 6, 1945

Dear Mr. Read,

In your letter of 25th June you raised several questions for informal discussion with the United Kingdom authorities in connection with the preliminary draft of a proposed treaty with Italy which I sent to you under cover of my despatch No. A.221 of 16th June.† Mr. Holmes has discussed these matters with Mr. Shannon of the Dominions Office. The results of this discussion indicate that there is little, if any, difference of opinion between the United Kingdom and Canadian authorities on this subject.

(i) In the third paragraph of your letter you commented on the apparent intention to refer to the United Nations collectively in the treaty as "The Associated Powers." The United Kingdom proposal is that each nation at war with Italy should be a separate signatory. It is necessary, however, that some term be used in the text of the treaty to represent all the signatory nations and it is proposed that this term be "The Associated Powers." This custom, although a different designation, was adopted in the case of the Treaty of Versailles, and is, I believe, customary in such documents. A definition of the countries included in the term or terms used will presumably be included in the introduction to the Treaty. The United Kingdom apparently envisage also the official consultation of signatory powers on the terms of the Treaty but they are not certain how far the Soviet and United States governments will be prepared to go in this direction.

(ii) Your understanding of paragraph 5 of the proposed peace treaty is correct. Mr. Shannon admitted that the wording of the draft was not very precise. It is not precluded that the actual disposition of Italian territories to be removed from Italian control should be stipulated in the Treaty, but it is expected that the Treaty will do no more than state what territories are to be taken away. The fate of the Italian colonies must await decisions in the field of international trusteeship, and it is doubtful if the Treaty should be delayed until these questions are settled. The exact "extent," i.e. boundaries, of the ceded territories may have to be left for subsequent surveys. Mr. Shannon indicated that the United Kingdom saw the only satisfactory solution of the problem of Venezia Giulia in a division of that territory between Yugoslavia and Italy. He also indicated that they were reconsidering their earlier disposition to hand over South Tyrolean territory to Austria as there seemed no particular reason why Austria should be compensated at Italy's expense.

(iii) Mr. Shannon stated that your assumption as to the meaning of the statement that there was no question of admitting Italy's pretension to be a Great Power was also correct. Italy might take her place on various international bodies in accordance with her functional interests and stature, but in the case where special positions were conceded to the Great Powers, i.e. those which are great for reasons of military potential, she would not be an aspirant to such a position.

As for the timetable of the treaty negotiations, Mr. Shannon said that it had been hoped to get some decision from the Cabinet before this. There is, however, little hope of the Cabinet's considering this subject until after the election results are announced, i.e. about the end of July. In the meantime this subject will probably have been discussed at the Berlin Conference, in which case the draft proposal under reference would be given to the Prime Minister to put forward. By the time the Cabinet considers the subject the attitude of the other principal powers will be better known.

Mr. Shannon said in conclusion that if the Canadian Government wished to make any specific suggestions concerning the territorial arrangements or other related matters, they would be glad to see them if possible before the Three-Power meeting.

No further steps seem to have been taken concerning the secret armistice terms with Italy.<sup>4</sup> However, at a press conference in Milan on 21st June Field Marshal Alexander<sup>5</sup> is reported to have said that he saw no reason why the armistice terms should not be published, although there might be some political reason. Some political elements, he said, might want to make capital out of any publication. At the same time he said that Italians had worked their passage very well and had given very important help to the Allied cause. Venezia Giulia, he said, would remain under Allied trusteeship until its future had been decided at the peace conference.

Yours sincerely,

VINCENT MASSEY

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 597 of April 12† and my telegram Circular D. 1224 of today†, paragraph 2(1). Proposed Peace Treaty with Italy.

1. On present information it seems unlikely that question of Treaty will come up at Berlin meeting save in a preliminary way for discussion of principle involved. We think, however, that it will be useful for United Kingdom delegation to be furnished with guidance as to our views and with draft heads for political sections of Treaty.

2. We therefore propose to give United Kingdom delegation statement which was summarized in note communicated informally to your High Commissioner's office in London on June 15th, draft heads which were also enclosed and certain additional points which are contained in my two immediately following telegrams.† Should be greatly obliged if you would let us know before the end of next week whether you have any comments.

TELEGRAM

TOP SECRET. Your circular D. 1225 of July 14th and related telegrams† dealing with proposed Peace Treaty with Italy.

1. We agree that the time has now come when a Peace Treaty should be concluded with Italy which would have the effect of encouraging the restoration of healthy political and economic conditions in a democratic Italy and which would enable her to play a useful, if relatively modest, part among the Nations. The Canadian Government are in general agreement with the terms outlined in the Draft Heads for the political sections of the Treaty as contained in the Dominions Office informal letter of June 15th and supplemented by your circular D. 1226 and 1227 of July 14th.†

2. We also agree that a public statement by the United States, United Kingdom and Soviet Governments at the Berlin meeting that they favoured the early conclusion of a Peace Treaty and would recommend this course to other interested Allied Powers, would be desirable, all the more so as it seems to us particularly important that Italy and the world at large should be impressed with the joint and agreed character of Allied policy with regard to Italy.

3. We consider that the admission of Italy to the World Security Organization would in due course be desirable and indeed essential to the restoration of Italian self-respect and to the assumption by Italy of her international responsibilities.

4. We are particularly impressed (a) with the necessity of preventing the Italian question becoming a cause of dissension between the United Kingdom, United States and Soviet Governments; (b) with the desirability of maintaining a moderate and genuinely democratic government in Italy. With these objects in view we consider:

(1) That it might be desirable in view of the known attitude of the United States to avoid insistence on severe treatment of Italy which would fail of acceptance by the United States Government and might identify the United Kingdom Government in the minds of Italians with a policy of severity towards Italy.

(2) We agree that it is essential, as suggested in your circular D. 1224 of July 14th†, that the United States should be encouraged to take a continuing interest in Italy. On the other hand, as you no doubt appreciate, some sections of United States opinion are inclined to be critical on this subject. It is therefore obviously desirable to avoid anything which might convey the impression that a deliberate attempt is being made to involve the United States in Italy.

(3) We also consider, and we are sure that you are in full agreement with this view, that every possible effort should be made to insure Soviet agreement with the main policies adopted towards Italy.

5. In addition to the general considerations outlined above, there is the question of the position of Canada and other United Nations with regard to the proposed Peace Treaty. As explained in my telegram No. 11 of January 16th, the Canadian Government would expect to be a party to the Treaty and to appoint a Canadian plenipotentiary to sign on its behalf. We agree that the Peace Treaty with Italy should be concluded as between each state at war with Italy on the one hand and the Italian Government on the other. As each of the United Nations at war with Italy would be a separate signatory of the Treaty, we consider that they should therefore necessarily have had an opportunity of being officially consulted regarding the terms prior to signature, and we hope that the Russians can be induced to agree to this procedure.

6. The negotiation of the Treaty is, of course, a different matter and we recognize that the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States, Soviet Union and France should have the primary responsibility. As you have suggested, certain other United Nations having a particular interest in Italian questions might properly be associated with the negotiations.

With regard to the proposed peace treaty with Italy, I have studied the draft telegram to the Dominions Office and also considered your suggestion that there might be separate instruments with Italy, such as a general peace treaty signed by all the United Nations at war with Italy and a treaty in which the provisions placing special obligations on the great powers would be segregated from the rest and would be made between them and Italy without the participation of other countries. I attach a memorandum on this suggestion which has been prepared by Mr. Ritchie. I think that it would be difficult to work out this idea in practice for the reasons which he gives.

We cannot, however, very well reach even a tentative conclusion on the United Kingdom drafts until the political sections of which we have been informed are supplemented by the military, economic and financial provisions. According to the memorandum sent by the Dominions Office to Canada House of June 15th<sup>1</sup> these provisions were being considered separately. It may be that they will contain articles to which we would not be willing to subscribe.

None of the Dominions Office telegrams mentions the opposition likely to be encountered from Greece to the early admission of Italy to the International Organization and the restoration in general of that country to respectable international society. I recall that at San Francisco the Greek representatives were very anxious to make sure that Italy was regarded as an enemy state under the articles of the Charter (53 and 107) which make special provision for action against enemy states. This aspect, however, seems to be a matter we can leave to the British Government in view of its special interest in Greece.

I think that we might consider the following changes in the Draft telegram to the Dominions Office:

1. I am not sure of the wisdom of supporting the admission of Italy to the International Organization as a special case ahead of neutral states and all other ex-enemy states. We might, therefore, add to paragraph 3 of the telegram a sentence on the following lines:

“In view, however, of the voluntary declaration of war by Italy in 1940 and the severe losses and hardships inflicted by Italy, on Greece, Yugoslavia, France and countries of the British Commonwealth, we feel that consideration should be given to the earlier or simultaneous admission to the World Security Organization of some of the neutral and former satellite states.”

2. We might add at the end of paragraph 5 something like the following:

“Unless arrangements could be made for effective official consultation which will give a real voice to countries that fought and suffered in the war against Italy, it might prove desirable to conclude a brief general peace treaty with Italy signed by all concerned and to supplement this by a separate treaty between the Four Powers and Italy dealing with all the matters left over for settlement by the Four Powers.”

H. W[RONG]

The reason for the desp[atch] of comments on these lines has now passed. Doubtless something now will emerge from next month's Council of Foreign Ministers, wh[ich] will have this Italian Treaty at the top of their agenda.

PEACE TREATY WITH ITALY

The territorial provisions in the United Kingdom Draft Heads† for the Peace Treaty are contained in Part II: Political (Europe) as outlined in the Dominions Office informal letter of June 15.† Under Section I General, Italy is required to recognize as null and void all territorial acquisitions made by her since June 9, 1940. There then follow specific renunciations of territories and claims of territory which are required of Italy. These may be roughly divided into two categories (although provisions with regard to the Tangier Convention, mandates and Congo Basin Treaties do not fall into either category). The first category are renunciations of territories belonging to other states, including France, Albania, Ethiopia, etc. The second are renunciations made by Italy in favour of the Four Powers. These refer to Venetia Giulia, Zara and the Dalmatian Islands, Pantellaria and the Pelagian Islands, the Dodecanese, and Italian Colonies. Italy is called upon to recognize the arrangements for the interim administration of such territories by the Four Powers and to accept in advance the final settlement in regard to these territories made by the Four Powers.

The suggestion that there should be two Peace Treaties with Italy, one signed by all the United Nations at war with Italy from which the territorial settlement would be excluded, and the other signed by Italy and the Four Powers which would deal with the territorial settlement, would appear to involve the following considerations:

1. Canada would not be called upon to underwrite the decision by which Italy agrees to cede certain territories to the Four Powers for their ultimate disposal. This may seem logical in so far as Canada and the other United Nations, with the exception of the Four Powers, will not presumably participate in the eventual disposal of these territories;

2. There would, however, likely be objection on the part of the Great Powers to a suggestion for two separate treaties with Italy on the following grounds:

- (a) The Great Powers will wish to associate as many of the United Nations at war with Italy as possible with the territorial settlement;

- (b) It may be argued that if the territorial terms of the peace settlement with Italy are dealt with in a separate instrument, the Italians might later argue that this latter instrument had less moral validity than the main peace treaty to which all the United Nations at war with Italy are parties;

- (c) In any event the treaty incorporating the territorial settlement would have to be signed by other United Nations in addition to the Four Powers. These would include those United Nations involved directly by Italian renunciation of claims on their territories such as Albania, Ethiopia, etc.

It would hardly be possible to separate the territorial clauses which relate to cessions of territory to the Four Powers from the other renunciations of territory which Italy is called upon to undertake. Such an arrangement might give a handle to later Italian propaganda to the effect that while they were willing to abide by their cessions involving territories of other United Nations such as Albania, the cession of territory to the Four Powers came into another category and had been extorted from them.

3. It is quite possible that other United Nations may object to being left out of the Treaty incorporating the territorial cessions by Italy (e.g. Yugoslavia and Greece). South Africa might wish to be a signatory to the clauses whereby Italy renounces her Colonial claims in Africa.

4. A possible way of meeting some of these difficulties might be to omit the specific clauses dealing with territorial cessions by Italy, from the main Treaty but to leave in a general clause which might read something like this: "Italy is to recognize as null and void all territorial acquisitions made by Italy since the 9th June, 1940, and to agree to such other cessions of territory as may form the subject of a further Treaty to be concluded between her and the Four Powers." It would presumably be very difficult for the Italian Government to sign a Treaty which contained so vague and general a clause regarding cession of Italian territory. Moreover, there would be little real advantage from our own point of view as we would be committed to the principle that territory ceded by Italy would be left to the disposal of the Four Powers and that is in any event the principle to which we are committed by the present Draft Heads. We should simply avoid being signatories to the clauses spelling out the specific cessions of territory demanded of Italy.

5. We have also to bear in mind the possible effects of the precedent that we shall be creating by our suggestion that the territorial settlement with Italy should be the subject of a separate treaty to which we are not a party. This may be regarded as a merely formal point in view of the fact that in any event we shall probably have no say in the disposal of the territory ceded by Italy. On the other hand there is already a tendency to ignore even the formal claims of smaller Powers in matters connected with the peace settlement in Europe and presumably we do not wish to encourage this tendency. By signing a full treaty including the territorial cessions we and all the other United Nations at war with Italy will have set the seal of approval on the principle that the Four Powers should dispose of certain former Italian territories. Presumably we have no objection to this decision in principle and as a belligerent against Italy it may be argued that we should be responsible parties to this decision which is an essential part of the settlement with our former enemy. We are not called upon to accept any responsibility under this Treaty for the disposal of those territories or for such frontier arrangements with regard, for instance, to Trieste as may be decided by the Four Powers. It would obviously be open to us at a later date, if difficulty arose regarding the disposition of these territories, to point out that, although we had been a party to the decision that the Four Powers should dispose of them, we were not a party to the arrangements which they had made among themselves for the final allocation of the territory.

MEMORANDUM ON THE COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS AND CANADA'S PARTICIPATION IN THE PEACE SETTLEMENT

The establishment of a Council of Foreign Ministers as described in the communiqué of the Potsdam Conference,<sup>6</sup> does little to change the essential position so far as the participation of Canada and other United Nations in the peace settlement is concerned. It is, however, quite clear that Canada cannot under these arrangements expect to participate directly in drawing up the peace treaties or in the negotiation of a new territorial settlement in Europe or Asia. Our claim as belligerents will not under the proposed arrangements be admitted as giving us any right to participate as principals. So far as the negotiation of the peace treaties is concerned, nations other than the 5 Great Powers would only be invited to participate when "matters directly concerning them are under discussion." It is hard to think of any question which under this formula would be recognized as directly concerning Canada. The Potsdam communiqué does indeed state that the peace treaties are to be prepared "with a view to submission to the United Nations," but this would in all probability be a pure formality.

The situation is put clearly enough in the Dominions Office telegram to Dr. Evatt of August 6th,<sup>7</sup> which states, "The whole conception on which we are now working is that it is no use bringing forward matters which will have to be settled at the Peace Conference unless and until the issues in question have been worked out beforehand in a smaller body, and the body which it is contemplated should do this work is the Council of Foreign Ministers now set up as a result of the Berlin Conference." A Peace Conference, therefore, if it is held at all, will simply give the other United Nations an opportunity to register their formal approval. Indeed, it would appear from the Dominions Office telegram of August 6th that it is doubtful whether Canada and the other Dominions would even be invited to give their separate signature to the peace treaties. The proposals contained in this telegram for consultation with the Dominions do not, of course, refer to official consultation as principals in the peace settlement, but simply to consultation between the United Kingdom Government and the various Dominion Governments.

Insofar as the Council of Foreign Ministers is authorized to deal with other matters than those arising out of the peace settlement, the position with regard to the participation of other United Nations is the same. They are to be invited to participate when a question of direct interest to them arises.

It appears that the Council of Foreign Ministers is to be a semi-permanent body. It is referred to in the telegram of August 1st from the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to the Prime Minister† in the following terms: "In the new Council of Foreign Ministers we hope to have a machine for continuing co-operation between the Great Powers." It is, therefore, apparently not intended merely to fill the gap during the transitional period before the United Nations Organization begins to function. No attempt is made in the Potsdam communiqué to relate the functions of the Council of Foreign Ministers to those of the Security Council. It is possible, however, that questions may arise, e.g. in the sphere of peaceful settlement of disputes, which might be dealt with by either body. It is possible that such questions may tend to be referred to the Council of Foreign Ministers in preference to the Security Council on the ground that they arise out of the peace settlement.

Dr. Evatt's Demands—Dr. Evatt's telegrams to the Dominions Office, although couched in characteristically truculent language, contain much that is well founded and reasonable. On the other hand, it has been perfectly plain for some time that none but the Great Powers would play a part as principals in the negotiation of the peace settlement, at any rate in Europe. Dr. Evatt is well aware of this and he is also aware that the United Kingdom Government is in no position to alter the situation which appears to result from the insistence of the U.S.S.R. and perhaps to some extent, of the United States. There is therefore an element of bluff in Dr. Evatt's arguments for Australia's full participation.

Canada's Position—Canada is in much the same general position as Australia with regard to participation in the peace settlement. We should find ourselves in agreement with Dr. Evatt's analysis of the implications of the establishment of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and we have in communications to the United Kingdom Government advanced many of his arguments in favour of our own participation in the peace settlement.<sup>7</sup> But it is now sufficiently obvious that the Great Powers intend to keep the negotiation of the peace settlement in their own hands with the minimum of consultation with the other United Nations. It is therefore necessary to consider the line which we should adopt in view of this situation.

On the grounds that we do not wish to be associated with territorial settlements for which we are not responsible, we might put forward the suggestion that there should be two sets of peace treaties. In the case of Italy, for example, there might be a general treaty terminating the war with Italy to which all countries which had been at war with Italy would be signatories. There might then be a further treaty dealing with the disposition of territories removed from Italy and presumably with other questions which are to be decided by the Great Powers. The latter treaty would be signed only by the powers directly responsible for the settlement.

It is not altogether easy to estimate the reaction of the United Kingdom Government and of the other Great Powers to a suggestion for double sets of peace treaties. It is rather to be anticipated that the United Kingdom Government would prefer to see the Dominion Governments separate signatories to one full and entire peace treaty with each of the ex-enemy states. It is possible, on the other hand, that the suggestion for two sets of peace treaties might be welcome to the United Kingdom Government who may be faced with difficulties in obtaining the assent of some of the other Great Powers to our separate signature of the peace treaties. It is probable that some of the middle and smaller powers would wish to be signatories to the terms incorporating the territorial settlement with the enemy, so that in practice it would probably not be possible to have one set of treaties for the signature of the Great Powers only and one set for general signature.

One objection to this suggestion seems to be that the gap between the Great Powers and the other United Nations would be widened by such a procedure. By suggesting two separate peace treaties with each belligerent, we should be taking the responsibility for a step which would regularize this distinction between the Great Powers and the other Allies. It would be difficult after taking such a step to complain of further instances of our exclusion from the councils of the Great Powers. It would seem important for the record that it should be quite plain that it was the decision of the Great Powers that led to our exclusion from the negotiation of the peace settlement and that it should not be possible to argue (however mistakenly) that we had voluntarily withdrawn from responsibilities arising out of the war.

Another difficulty which might arise is due to the misunderstanding of the position of the Dominions which exists to some extent in many foreign countries. If the United Kingdom Government is left to sign alone the main treaties incorporating the peace settlement in Europe and in Asia, will there not be a tendency in certain foreign capitals, e.g. Moscow, to assume that the United Kingdom Government is signing not only in her own name but in ours also? Although we may do our best to make it plain that this is not the case, our position will be understood with difficulty in foreign countries, particularly as it is known that we and the other Dominions have been consulted by the United Kingdom Government at every stage of the negotiation of the peace settlement.

Finally, it would not be easy to abstain from signing the treaties incorporating the territorial settlement in Europe and Asia without conveying the impression both at home and abroad that the Canadian Government did not approve the settlement contained in these treaties.

It may be decided not to proceed with the suggestion for two separate sets of peace treaties but rather to continue to press for a greater measure of participation in the peace settlement. In that event we might prepare a statement of our case for communication to the United Kingdom Government and possibly also to the United States, Soviet and French Governments. This need not necessarily be a formal communication, but might take the form of instructions to our representatives in London, Washington, Moscow and Paris on which they should base conversations with the Foreign Ministers of these countries. Our claims should be moderately stated. We should make it plain that we recognize and indeed welcome the leadership of the Great Powers in the negotiation of the peace settlement. We should refrain from putting forward the impracticable demand advanced by Dr. Evatt for participation as principals in all decisions involved in the peace settlement in Europe and in Asia. We should, however, point out that in view of the sacrifices and exertions of Canada in this war, we cannot acquiesce in our total exclusion from the negotiation of the peace settlement and we should certainly be signatories to the treaties which end the war.

It would be optimistic to suppose that these representations would be productive of any very substantial results. If they were made in Moscow and Washington, they might be expected to have a somewhat negative reception, and it is likely that they would only draw a weak and worried reply from the United Kingdom Government. The fact of the matter is that no course open to the Canadian Government will have much effect on the plans laid down at Potsdam. It may be argued that in such a case when any action is likely to be ineffective, inaction is preferable. On the other hand, by making representations we should at least put our case on record so that it could not be said that we had acquiesced in the present arrangements without making our position plain. We might even secure for Canada a further measure of official consultation and our representations might have the effect of strengthening any later claims which we may put forward for participation in any special question arising out of the settlement in Europe or Asia.

In this general connection it may be advisable to take advantage of the suggestion contained in the telegram of August 1st from the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to the Prime Minister† for consultation with the Foreign Secretary. Possibly Mr. Pearson while he is in London might have a talk with Mr. Bevin.

Questions which it is likely to discuss raise issues of grave importance not only as regards Europe, but as regards the world as a whole and the future stability of the peace. For instance, the settlement of peace treaty with Italy involves future of the Italian Colonial Empire and this in its turn is linked with the question of the Mediterranean and Middle East generally. In addition, the question of Trieste is vital to trade from the point of view of access to Central Europe. Moreover, it seems clear that Far Eastern problems will necessarily have to come before the Council. A sound solution of these problems is as vital for other Commonwealth countries as for the United Kingdom and I am anxious, therefore, that there should be the fullest and most effective consultation between us in the hope that on all major issues, at any rate, we may succeed in establishing an identical point of view. This is the more necessary in view of the indications which the Russians, more especially, have given of their probable attitude. By their statements at the Berlin Conference, they have shown disturbing signs of wishing to expand their influence both in the Mediterranean and the Middle East (for example, they may well lay claim to trusteeship over one of the Italian Colonies in Africa) and it is evident from their actions that they intend to expand in the Far East. The United States, on the other hand, though not in sympathy with the Russian attitude, cannot be relied on to press their opposition except where their own interests are obviously and directly involved.

The close and vital interest of the Dominions in issues of the kind referred to is plain and we, for our part, think that this should be recognized by the admission of Dominion representatives to participate in meetings of the Council when they are discussed. We shall do our utmost to secure this under the appropriate provision of the Council's constitution but cannot, of course, guarantee that we shall be able to carry the other members of the Council with us and we see no hope of arranging this specifically in advance of the meeting.

Having regard to the essential importance to each of us of the issues involved, we should like to ensure closer consultation between us on these matters than is possible by the normal channels of telegraphic communication, especially at a time when immediate decisions may have to be reached. We will, of course, keep you fully informed both of our views and of developments and shall welcome your comments on these. But we should hope that, particularly having in view the possibility of Dominion participation in the Council meetings as explained above, you would find it possible to arrange for current and continuous personal discussion as well while the Council is sitting. The most valuable course of all would naturally be if you and the other Prime Ministers felt able to come to London for this purpose and we should greatly welcome this if it were feasible. We recognize, however, the great difficulties which this may involve for you. If in view of these you could not arrange to come yourself, could you designate some special representative fully conversant with your views and able to speak with authority on your behalf.

I should be grateful for your views upon this at the earliest possible date. I much regret having to raise such a proposal at such short notice, but the recent course of events and the magnitude and significance of the issues with which we are faced have convinced me that it is only by some such personal contacts that we can hope to safeguard the interests which affect us each and all so vitally. Ends.

Ottawa, August 28, 1945

Herewith are copies of Dominions Office telegram D.1542 of August 24th from Mr. Attlee to the Prime Minister and of the draft reply† you went over this morning.

You have asked for a note listing consideration which might be urged for or against Canadian acceptance of the invitation to send a special representative to London to be present for consultation with United Kingdom Ministers during the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers and, if so invited, to attend meetings of the Council.

Arguments which might be adduced in favour of acceptance include

1. We have from time to time expressed a desire to have an effective part consonant with our war effort in the determination of the peace settlement and this proposal goes some way towards falling in with our views.

2. The emphasis placed by Mr. Attlee on effective consultation with the Dominions differs from Mr. Churchill's attitude which has often been the cause of embarrassment and difficulty to us.

3. To reject the invitation might be regarded as evidence of lack of interest on our part which might prejudice our position later on.

4. The extension of the invitation will become a matter of public knowledge. Any reply which may be sent must be weighed in the light of public and parliamentary opinion here.

5. We shall be involved before long in grave decisions concerning the atomic bomb, a matter on which for the moment at least we probably rank with the great powers. This is likely to be a subject of discussion either in the Council or behind the scenes during the sessions of the Council.

The following considerations however appear to outweigh the arguments for acceptance of the invitation as now put:

1. "An identical point of view" on matters respecting the settlement can only be achieved through Cabinet decisions and not through consultation in London between the British Government and representatives of the Dominions.

2. The invitation is to consult during the Council's proceedings with the United Kingdom representatives and any influence we might exert on the Council's decisions would be through the United Kingdom representative and not direct unless we were invited to sit with the Council.

3. It is obvious that the Prime Minister cannot go to London at present nor [can] any other senior member of the Government. It seems fairly certain that the other Dominion Prime Ministers cannot also leave their countries although they may send Cabinet Ministers. Australia is sending Dr. Evatt. We have no word yet as to how South Africa or New Zealand is replying.

4. The form of the invitation is open to criticism on several points. Furthermore, it is open to question whether its acceptance might not be regarded in some quarters as a reversion towards the "one voice" doctrine.

5. While Canada will be very directly concerned with the end result of the Council of Foreign Ministers' efforts to prepare a general European settlement, this country has not a specific and distinctly Canadian interest in most of the individual questions which make up the agenda for the London meeting.

Ottawa, August 28, 1945

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. Addressed London No. 199, repeated Canberra No. 15, Wellington No. 16, Pretoria No. 12. Following personal for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: Your telegram D.1542 of August 24th.

1. I appreciate your efforts to devise some workable arrangement for associating other Commonwealth countries more closely with the deliberations of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and I recognize the great importance of the issues which will be considered by it. I also share your desire for full consultation between Commonwealth Governments on questions of common concern, and I shall be very glad, if opportunity occurs, to talk over with you all matters of mutual interest to our governments. As things stand, however, with the first session of a new Parliament opening on September 6th, it is quite impossible for me or one of my colleagues to go to London to attend Commonwealth discussions held on the margin of the meeting of Foreign Ministers.

2. Fortunately our channels for swift and direct intergovernmental communication are excellent. As you know, I have long held the view that the most effective means of consultation within the Commonwealth are provided through the continuing Conference of the Cabinets of the Commonwealth which use of those channels makes possible. Neither I myself nor anyone whom I might designate could without prior consultation speak with authority in London on behalf of the Cabinet on issues arising there from day to day.

3. I recognize in your proposals a desire to associate other Commonwealth countries more closely with the taking of decisions likely to affect their immediate or ultimate interests. With this object I am in full sympathy. As you are aware, the Canadian Government has from time to time felt impelled to take exception to the operation of war-time arrangements under which responsibility for major decisions on the direction of the Allied war effort was concentrated in very few hands. We have felt that this centralization of authority, defensible in war-time, would at once become harder to accept and explain when the fighting was over.

4. I acknowledge gratefully the steady flow of valuable information which reaches us from London, but I cannot consider that the receipt of this information gives to Canada effective participation in the great decisions that confront the world. The methods developed of arriving at private settlements between the great powers of issues of general interest are becoming a source of difficulty and even of danger, on which I have had it in mind to comment since receiving your invitation, in your telegram D. 1342 of August 1st,† to express my views on the results of the Berlin Conference.

5. You and we are confronted with a situation which, I imagine, is not much liked by either of us. The central difficulties, as I see them, do not arise from defects in our means of consultation within the Commonwealth. They stem directly from the continued use of methods improvised to meet the urgent strains and hazards of war. For instance, I felt at the San Francisco Conference that the preliminary settlement between the great powers in private meetings of matters of general concern coming before the Conference at times unnecessarily tried the patience of all the more responsible smaller countries. We have been concerned lest the Council of Foreign Ministers should continue the war-time pattern through the framing of the peace settlement and into the United Nations Organization. It would, for example, be particularly unfortunate in our view if operations of the Council of Foreign Ministers, composed as it is of representatives of states with permanent seats on the Security Council, were to lead to a system whereby the permanent members virtually settled in advance between themselves all important matters coming before the Security Council.

6. I think that I appreciate your very great difficulties as well as your desire to lessen ours. We would welcome the success of your efforts to bring about the direct participation in the Council of Foreign Ministers of Dominion representatives, and also of representatives of other closely interested smaller countries. This incidentally might have the useful result of bringing new influences to bear which at times might make agreement easier with other governments. If you are able to secure the concurrence of the other members of the Council to Canadian participation on a satisfactory basis, we shall do our best to arrange to be as suitably represented as possible on short notice. Ends.

1. United Kingdom propose to raise at first meeting of Council on Monday question of participation of representatives of Commonwealth and other Governments. They feel reasonably certain of success, although it is not clear what the exact nature and extent of that participation might be.

2. Until this matter is settled, the Dominions Office apparently have no plans for regular meetings of Secretary of State with Commonwealth representatives to keep them posted on the course of the meetings. They seem also to be waiting for Dr. Evatt to arrive today and announce his expectations. Meetings with Mr. Bevin or Lord Addison would be a valuable source of information, although they could scarcely be more than this as, according to present indications, Dr. Evatt would be the only representative able to express his Government's views with any authority. South Africa is not sending a representative from Pretoria. The New Zealand High Commissioner is in Wellington, and New Zealand representatives here have had no indication of their Government's attitude. I should be grateful for your views and any interim instructions as far as this office is concerned.

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram No. 2073 of September 8th. Council of Foreign Ministers.

1. At meeting of Commonwealth representatives with Dominions Secretary this morning, Sir Ronald Campbell was present and indicated the line the United Kingdom intends to follow with regard to the relationship of Commonwealth countries to the meetings of the Council. Evatt was not present at this meeting through illness, although he has already had discussions with Bevin and I understand pressed for full participation in the deliberations of the Council.

2. We were informed that the United Kingdom representative in the Council will take the first opportunity to endeavour to secure the assent of his four colleagues to the proposal that Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa have a "direct interest" in the questions of the Italian peace treaty and the disposal of the Italian Colonies. The United Kingdom also consider that Australia, New Zealand and Canada must be regarded as having a "direct interest" in the Far Eastern questions which may come before the Council.

3. The United Kingdom Government realise that other United Nations, i.e. Greece, Yugoslavia and Ethiopia, are also interested in Italian questions and must also be associated with the Council's work. To allay anxiety among these directly interested States, the United Kingdom representative will propose that the Council pass an early resolution expressing its intention to invite their representatives for consultation, and naming the States to whom this invitation would be sent. At the same time, the Council might formally invite the Governments concerned, as a preliminary step, to communicate to it their views in writing upon the nature of the peace settlement with Italy. This resolution would be published in a communiqué of the Council.

4. At the first meeting of the Council tomorrow, the United Kingdom hope to put their proposals forward, but it may well be that little progress will be made at the first meeting. As soon as the relation of the Commonwealth representatives to the meetings of the Council has been decided, I will inform you immediately in order that our future policy may be decided.

5. The observations of Sir Ronald Campbell conveyed the impression that the proceedings of the Council would be rather more interim and tentative than earlier communications seemed to suggest. He intimated that the meetings of the Council would probably continue for about two weeks, the subsequent work being carried on by Deputies and Sub-Committees.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D.1685

London, September 12, 1945

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. Council of Foreign Ministers. My telegram of September 11th, Circular D. 1678,<sup>7</sup> paragraph 9. Deputies discussed on morning of 12th September question which United Nations should receive invitations to discuss Italian treaty orally with Council.

2. United Kingdom representative pressed that Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India should receive invitations at same time as the three States invaded by Italy, in view of large contribution these five States made by their forces to defeat of Fascist Italy, and their direct interest in Italian settlement.

3. United States representative, while fully appreciating contribution of the five States, considered that, for practical reasons, Council should begin by consulting the three States named in their paper<sup>9</sup>, and he suggested that the other United Nations entitled to sign the treaty would have a suitable opportunity to express their views when, in due course, the draft proposals were communicated to them.

4. French representative suggested that United Nations directly concerned, including countries suggested both by United States and United Kingdom delegations, should be invited by Council first to express their views in writing.

5. Soviet representative agreed in principle that countries which had been attacked by Italy deserved to be consulted. He drew attention to omission of Albania from the United States paper. He considered, however, that question of which States should receive invitations raised issues of such importance that it would be essential for the Foreign Ministers themselves to discuss it.

6. Representative of China supported Soviet proposal to submit question to Council. This was agreed.

7. French representative raised question who would represent Austria if Austria were invited.

8. United States representative said that United States Government hoped that by then some Austrian Government would have been recognized.

9. At afternoon meeting of Foreign Ministers, which considered report in sense of preceding paragraphs, United States Secretary of State explained that United States Government had thought that it would be well to invite into consultation United Nations directly interested: they realized that many nations were more or less interested in Italian settlement; hence the proposal in United States paper to limit consultation in first place to those attacked by Italy. He recognized contribution of Dominions in war against Italy, but if list were to be extended to include all those who had made a contribution to defeat of Italy, Brazil and Poland and other States would assert that they had made a military or economic contribution equally deserving of this recognition. He foresaw that, for purposes of making progress at present meeting, this would be impracticable. The item was due to be discussed on following day and distant countries could not send representatives so soon. He, therefore, for the present dropped his suggestion as to Ethiopia, Yugoslavia and Greece. When future progress had been made, it would be possible to obtain a clearer idea as to which Governments were interested. In any case, draft proposals, when adopted by Council after consultation with such States as it decided to consult, would be submitted to all United Nations at war with Italy.

10. Foreign Secretary said that, notwithstanding withdrawal of United States suggestion, he must press claim of Dominions to be heard if they wished. He referred to their part in the war. Their connections with Europe were of vital importance to them. United Kingdom Government did not object to other Governments also being heard.

11. M. Molotov expressed appreciation of role of Dominions in war and sacrifices they had made. Principle of United States proposal for consultation with States attacked was correct. He suggested that position of Dominions should be discussed at a later stage. If everybody were to be consulted now, it would lead to great delay.

12. French Minister for Foreign Affairs, who also referred appreciatively to Dominions' share in war, suggested that interested States should be invited to submit views in writing. Alternatively, a special Commission could be appointed for purpose.

13. Mr. Byrnes then proposed that interested States should be invited to communicate their views in writing. Question which States should be invited for oral discussion could, meanwhile, form subject of consideration and report by Deputies.

14. M. Molotov said that he had already agreed with United States proposal as to countries attacked, but Albania should be included with these. He would find it difficult to discuss Istria or Trieste in absence of Yugoslavia, who had asked to be heard and had a direct interest. In principle, he also favoured participation of Greece but this question could be considered when Greece had a representative Government. At this point he circulated a paper on political situation in Greece.

15. Mr. Bevin said that United Kingdom did not demand special privileges for Dominions and was willing for other countries to be heard also, but he could not agree to participation of other countries unless Dominions participated. He had no objection to proposal to invite views in writing in first instance without prejudice to question of subsequent oral discussion, provided that views so presented were to be considered by Council so long as they were presented by a recognized Government. He could not admit that individual members of Council should discriminate among Governments.

16. Chinese representative suggested that States should be placed in three categories:

- (1) Those attacked who should be heard at Council.
- (2) Those who had made a military or economic contribution. These should, in principle, be heard but time and manner should be considered by Deputies.
- (3) Other belligerents against Italy who should be asked to state their views in writing.

17. Mr. Bevin said that he could not agree to Dominions being put in category (2).

18. After further discussion, conclusion was reached that United Nations at war with Italy should be invited to submit in writing their views on peace treaty with Italy without prejudice to any claims they might have to make oral representations to Council at a later date. Deputies should consider on 13th September how invitations under (1) could best be extended and what would be most convenient procedure for arranging which Governments should be invited to make oral representations to Council at a later stage.

Council of Foreign Ministers.

1. I am informed that at meeting of Deputies held this morning to consider how invitations to interested States should be issued, no progress was made as there was great divergence of view as to States to which invitations should be issued and the text of the invitation. The Soviet Deputy brought up the question of the inclusion of Albania, the United States representatives have taken the stand that, while they have no wish to be exclusive, they think it necessary to keep the numbers of participants down at this stage, and that the countries mentioned in their paper had a concrete interest in the settlement. The matter has been referred back to the Council.

2. Mr. Bevin was present at a meeting of High Commissioners or their representatives in the Dominions Office today and was clearly discouraged as a result of the failure of his efforts so far. He said he would press for a final decision at tomorrow's meeting, and that either the case made for the representation of interested countries should be conceded, or he would suggest the postponement of the subject to a later date, without prejudice to those concerned, in order that the Italian treaty might be proceeded with. He felt that any further time spent on questions of procedure and failure to make progress would have an unfortunate effect on public opinion. He said privately that he felt the Five-Power meeting principle was not a very satisfactory working arrangement, and he was concerned at the absence of any intermediate body between the Council of Ministers and the United Nations. He expressed himself as in entire agreement with the views in the Canadian Prime Minister's telegram No. 199 of August 28th, paragraphs 3 and 4. Bevin conveyed the impression that he had some misgivings that the meeting might prove abortive. Apparently Molotov is pushing for the meeting to end on the 20th, and Byrnes is also anxious to get back to Washington.

3. It will be of interest to you to know that at a meeting at the Dominions Office yesterday, Dr. Evatt took a rather belligerent line about Commonwealth representation. He urged that the United Kingdom representative should refuse to recognize the propriety of the inclusion of Ethiopia, Yugoslavia and Greece (the countries mentioned in the United States paper, which, I gather, was something in the nature of a surprise) without equal representation by Commonwealth countries. At the meeting of Deputies, Canadian participation had been mentioned by the United Kingdom representative. Evatt objected to this and said he felt it weakened the Dominions' case and also inferred an equality of status he was not prepared to concede. Lord Addison said Bevin had told him that he could not undertake not to press for Indian representation.

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. Addressed London No. 212. Repeated Canberra No. 17, Wellington No. 18, Pretoria No. 14. Your telegram Circular D. 1685 of September 12th. Council of Foreign Ministers.

1. In light of your report of the proceedings on September 12th it seems probable that any agreement reached by the Council at this stage for the participation of other governments in the drafting of the Italian treaty would not meet the point of view which we have expressed. We should not be interested in an opportunity to make a brief oral presentation of Canadian views to the Council, nor are we anxious to submit a general statement in writing. Effective participation in the framing of the treaty requires that interested governments should take a real and direct part in the negotiations.

2. Our interest in the Italian settlement is not so much with its particular provisions as with the end result. Since we have no specific Canadian national interest to be safeguarded our concern is rather with the sum of the decisions incorporated in the treaty than with any individual parts of it. Our desire is for a settlement which will assist in ensuring a long period of peace and security in the Mediterranean area and the establishment of such political and economic conditions in Italy as would enable a democratic Italian Government to play a useful if modest part in the community of nations.

3. It may be best to drop the idea of summoning representatives of other governments to Council meetings and instead to emphasize the preliminary and tentative nature of the draft proposals produced by the Council, which would not, if this view were accepted, be treated as binding inter se by the five powers when later considered at a larger gathering. Thus the Council might be regarded as an influential drafting committee charged with the preparation of texts for consideration by a more general conference.

4. Alternatively, it might be desirable for the powers represented in the Council of Foreign Ministers to proceed as promptly as they can to the negotiation and signature of a definitive treaty of peace with Italy which could perhaps be signed also by such other belligerents as were concerned with particular territorial transfers included in the treaty. The other countries at war with Italy which had not taken part in the negotiation and conclusion of the treaty could then bring their state of war with Italy to an end in a separate instrument or instruments.

5. We fully appreciate your problems and also the difficulties inherent in the situation itself. We hope that these suggestions may be of assistance in devising as constructive a solution as possible.

London, September 14, 1945

SECRET. Bevin won an important victory this morning at Council of Foreign Ministers. When Molotov insisted that he could not discuss the Italo-Yugoslav frontier on Monday without Yugoslav representatives being present, Bevin secured his agreement to the presence likewise of representatives of Dominions who wished to be heard on this subject.

2. At meeting of Commonwealth representatives this afternoon, there was an attitude of victory. Evatt was warm in his appreciation of the United Kingdom's support. He sees the concession with regard to Monday's meeting as an important establishment of principle. In his own words "Once we get there, it will be hard to get us out." Evatt said bluntly that it was up to the other Dominions to consider the question of their representatives.

3. Evatt and South African High Commissioner were worried on hearing the report that future of Italian Colonies was to be discussed this afternoon and possibly tomorrow, as they considered that it was much more important they be heard on this subject than on the Yugoslav frontier. Nevertheless, a message was sent to Mr. Bevin asking him to press for the same principle of Dominion representation with regard to discussions on the Italian Colonies.

4. It is not yet clear in what capacity such representatives would appear, although Evatt and other representatives this afternoon indicated that they would not be satisfied just to appear as witnesses for examination.

5. The exact nature of the principle of representation which has been established is not clear. According to Sir Basil Newton<sup>10</sup>, it was decided not that invitations should be addressed to other countries to attend, but that those countries who asked to come and who could make a case for their representation might be heard. Nevertheless, the invitations to attend Monday's session are being distributed today only to Yugoslavia and Dominions representatives in London. Presumably other countries could go if they asked and put up a case, but the Council does not seem anxious to appear as witnesses for examination.

6. In view of this uncertainty, it is not certain yet whether the principle of representation for interested countries inside or outside the Commonwealth, expressed in your telegram No. 199 of August 28th, has been admitted, or whether the Dominions and Yugoslavia by special pleading have secured a concession. There are obvious dangers in pressing unreasonably for the right of all Dominions to be consulted on all subjects. Byrnes has shown a tendency to refer to the admission of one or two Dominions.

7. I raised the question of what should be said to the press. The Foreign Office may issue a statement tonight, but general feeling is that, in order to avoid pressure from other countries, it is best not to say too much. Evatt admitted that he would probably have to make some statement, as his people are obviously interested in the results of his mission. He would express his gratitude to the United Kingdom for pressing the case but would not state specifically that an invitation had been secured. It was admitted at the meeting that Dominion Governments could make statements if they wished, but Dominions Office expressed the hope that this would be postponed until Monday.

8. The view was expressed that, if Yugoslav-Italian questions are discussed on Monday with Yugoslav representation, the Council might very well spend the week battling on related issues. Newton doubts if Foreign Ministers can stay more than another week. Deputies will continue after that time. You may wish to consider whether it is worth while sending a representative to discuss Italian Colonies and frontiers for a few days with Foreign Ministers, with subsequent opportunity of continuing discussions with Deputies. Foreign Ministers may reassemble in a month's time.

9. We shall doubtless be asked specifically whether Canada wishes to be heard and on what subjects. Dominions Office will communicate with you directly regarding invitation to be heard on Monday.

MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Your telegrams No. 2648 of Sept. 14† and No. 2659 of Sept. 15.<sup>12</sup> You should reply to the invitation received from the Chairman of the Council of Foreign Ministers in the following terms. Begins:

The Canadian Government, while appreciating the invitation to nominate a representative to attend a meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers on Sept. 17, does not desire to avail itself of the opportunity to express its views to the Council at present on the question of the Yugoslav-Italian frontier and the future of the city and port of Trieste. The Canadian Government is not in a position to put forward specific solutions of the problems of the Yugoslav-Italian frontier, or for that matter of any of the other questions affecting the future territorial boundaries of Italy which are on the agenda of the Council of Foreign Ministers. It is, however, very much concerned with the effect which the peace settlement will have on the general relationship of a democratic Italy to the community of nations. The Canadian Government therefore hopes that adequate opportunity will be afforded to Canada and the other United Nations which have played an active part in the Italian war to consider and discuss the contents of the peace treaty with Italy as a whole at the appropriate stage in its negotiation. Ends.

Meanwhile you should inform the Secretary of State for the Dominions that we are grateful for the efforts made by the United Kingdom and in particular for Mr. Bevin's advocacy of Canadian participation in the discussions of the Council of Foreign Ministers. You should, however, point out that as stated in our telegram No. 212 of Sept. 14 to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, our interest is not so much in the particular provisions of the treaty as in the character of the settlement with Italy considered as a whole. The views put forward in that telegram have not been modified by the invitation received shortly after its despatch. The arrangement under which we are invited to state piecemeal views on a particular aspect of the territorial settlement does not afford a satisfactory basis for our participation. Canada has no direct interest in the question of, e.g., Yugoslav frontiers as considered apart from the general settlement.

In view of the way in which participation in the work of the Council of Foreign Ministers is developing in practice, we should prefer to express our views at a later stage when a complete draft treaty has been prepared. Any such draft treaty will presumably be of a preliminary and tentative character, and we trust that there will be an opportunity for Canada as well as for other interested United Nations to express their views at that stage.

For your own information, it would in any event have been impossible to send a representative from Ottawa at such short notice to present views on a highly controversial question which cannot be considered in isolation.

Following is our translation of note, dated September 15th, to High Commissioner from M. Bidault, Begins:

The Council of Foreign Ministers, at present in session at Lancaster House, has decided to invite the Governments of United Nations, which have been at war with Italy and which are not represented on the Council to submit to it, in writing, their own views on the aspects of the peace settlement with Italy which are of a nature to be of interest to them.

I am, therefore, charged, in my position as Chairman of the Session of the Council of Foreign Ministers, to invite your Government to make known, if it so desires, its views on this subject. The Council requests that these communications reach it before October 1st. Ends.

I should be grateful for instructions as to reply which should be sent.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Council of Foreign Ministers.

The Canadian reply to invitation of the Council of Foreign Ministers has been received with gratification in various quarters. When note was delivered Sunday morning to Lancaster House, Brook of the Secretariat remarked informally that he thought the Canadian Government was following a wise policy and that the Council would be gratified. Lest the Council feel gratified for the wrong reasons, Holmes pointed out that the claim to the voice at the appropriate stage was quite as important as the declining of Monday's invitation. Brook assured Holmes it was the intention of the Council to allow other United Nations to consider the draft treaty, but he was not specific as to the manner in which this would be done. From informal comments we gather that Dominions Office thinks the answer sensible.

2. At meeting of Commonwealth representatives this morning I provided other representatives with copy of Canadian reply and added explanatory comments in accordance with your instructions. Evatt expressed himself as being in complete agreement with your views, which he considered impeccable. As he understood it, Canada wanted the results of the Council meeting to be provisional and the final terms to be settled when all active belligerents against Italy "sat round a table as equals." He had thought results would be achieved quicker by intervention in the Council at this point, but he did not like the way in which things were developing. It was not good enough to be heard as witnesses along with the ex-enemy itself. Our hands were always being tied by Great Power agreements as at Yalta and Potsdam. Nicholls<sup>13</sup> for South Africa and Campbell<sup>14</sup> for New Zealand expressed similar dissatisfaction.

3. There was considerable doubt and uncertainty concerning plans for next step of Italian treaty. Sir John Stephenson<sup>15</sup> said that it had been intention to submit the Council's draft to a subsequent Conference of all above belligerents, but it looked now as if Council would try to avoid this step in order to achieve a speedy settlement. The invitation to submit views in writing is apparently intended to suffice. Evatt intends to ask for a definite answer in Council this afternoon.

4. Evatt said he agreed entirely with Canadian intentions, but he thought success would not be achieved by private cabling. He suggested that Canadian, Australian, New Zealand and South African Governments should issue a joint statement expressing publicly principles in your messages. It was in this way that they had won their representation at the Paris Peace Conference. He thought the United Kingdom would support them in this matter. It was agreed that Evatt and I would draft a statement after today's Council meeting, which, when approved by Nicholls and Campbell, would be submitted as a proposal to our respective Governments. I shall send the text of this statement as soon as

At informal talks I had the opportunity of having yesterday with other Commonwealth representatives, both Evatt and the High Commissioner for South Africa appeared to me to be inclined to agree with a point I made that the technique of rushing in to the Council with an opinion when invited to do so might well weaken the whole Commonwealth case. It is clear that they are now seized with the soundness of the Canadian attitude that piecemeal participation cannot be satisfactory. I gather that Evatt had a cooling experience when he attended the meeting of the Council on the subject of the Yugoslav-Italian frontier. He seemed to be rather resentful, as he put it, of "being paraded like a witness at a trial," and being seated at an inappropriate distance from the Italian representative. When the Yugoslav delegation asked for postponement, Commonwealth representatives withdrew also and were not present at the subsequent discussions of other topics. No meeting of the Commonwealth representatives is taking place today to hear reports from either the Foreign or Dominions Secretaries.

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET.

1. Evatt called me this afternoon to discuss yesterday's meetings. He, Nicholls and Campbell had spent 11 hours in the Council of Foreign Ministers yesterday. They listened to Yugoslav and Italian statements and then were asked to make their comments. Evatt took advantage of this opportunity to put forward the Canadian view on the association of other countries with the peace settlements and to state that he supported this view. He explained to me that, like Canada, Australia was not primarily interested in details of the Italian settlement, but he considered that he should take advantage of the opportunity to appear before the Council in order to express his general views. Nicholls and Campbell also said something along these lines. Evatt was not pleased with Nicholls' comments, although he had induced him to say something on the subject of representation. The meeting did not conclude until after midnight. After the Commonwealth statement had been made, the Chairman said that the Council would consider the remarks of these distinguished representatives, including what Evatt had said about the relation of other Powers to the peace settlement.

2. As a result of this experience, Evatt asked me to send a personal message on his behalf to the Prime Minister saying that the force of the points made by the Prime Minister in his telegram No. 199 of August 28th to Dominions Office, and his subsequent messages on this subject, was becoming clearly established by what was happening in London, and that the stage was fast approaching when some action ought to be taken. He was anxious that the Prime Minister would understand that, by accepting the Council's invitation, he had been able to emphasize the Canadian view and he did not think, therefore, that his acceptance of the invitation had spoiled the Canadian argument. He respectfully hoped that, in any public statement made by the Prime Minister explaining the reasons for Canadian refusal of the invitation, it would not be considered necessary to disparage the step which he had taken. Evatt is now more than ever anxious that the four Governments concerned should issue identical statements at the earliest opportunity. Draft is in preparation and I will send text to you as soon as possible.

3. Evatt's remarks are reported in Minutes of Foreign Ministers meeting of September 18th as follows:

"The Dominion of Canada was not present at this meeting of the Council because her Government desired recognition of a broader principle of consultation than that implied in an invitation to express views on one particular aspect of the settlement. He made this claim not on behalf of Australia only, but on behalf of all countries not represented on the Council which had made a substantial contribution to Italy's defeat. They were not many in number—there were many nominally at war with Italy but only a few had taken an active part in the fighting—and he hoped that the Council would devise a regular procedure for bringing them into consultation."

MOST IMMEDIATE. After conclusion of meeting with Dominions Secretary this afternoon, Australian, New Zealand, South African and Canadian representatives met to consider draft statement referred to in my telegram No. 2702.

Text of draft is submitted in my immediately following telegram for your consideration.

2. Evatt stated that Australia would almost certainly issue some statement. He assumed Canadian Prime Minister would be making a statement and considered that the publication in each of the four Capitals, simultaneously, of identical statements would be much more effective. Nicholls agreed to submit draft to Pretoria but seemed uncertain whether Smuts would agree. Evatt is showing a copy to Dominions Secretary. Comments at today's meeting made it clearer than ever that none of those who appeared at Monday's session of the Council is satisfied, although Campbell considered Evatt was somewhat pessimistic concerning the value of his appearance.

3. Date suggested for issuance of statement is Monday or Tuesday of next week, at which time Council is expected to break up. I should be grateful if you would inform me as soon as possible of:

- (a) Your views regarding the issue of such a statement, and
- (b) If issued, what amendments you would suggest in its text.

London, September 20, 1945

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following is statement referred to in my immediately preceding telegram No. 2720, Begins:

The ..... Government has followed with close concern the proceedings of the Council of Foreign Ministers. It recognizes that these proceedings will constitute a substantial part of the peace making process. The Council is limited to representatives of the United Kingdom, United States, U.S.S.R., China and France. Such a limitation of membership reflects a wartime procedure which was improvised solely to meet the urgent requirements of the conduct of the war. So exclusive a procedure, however, cannot safely be followed in the peace settlement. Other nations have played a very notable part in achieving victory over our enemies both in Europe and the Pacific.

2. Matters to be dealt with by the Council are of direct concern to the nations, relatively few in number, which have maintained active and sustained belligerence throughout the war and who will, no doubt, be expected, when the time comes, to maintain and enforce the peace settlements. Such countries, which include Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, have, on the basis of their war effort, a comparable claim to other countries now represented by the Council to participate fully in the framing of the peace.

3. The objection that no provision had been made for associating these nations with the work of the Council was followed by an invitation to Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India and Yugoslavia to attend a meeting of the Council on September 18th, dealing with the Italian-Yugoslav frontier. Advantage was taken of this invitation by Australia, New Zealand and South Africa to present views to the Council on the particular matter at issue. While the action of the Council was appreciated as a first step in the right direction, the proceedings of the Council fall short of a procedure which gives an adequate opportunity for full and frank consultation around the table with the representatives of the five Powers, or for the effective participation in the peace settlements to which active belligerents are clearly entitled. So far, all that has been devised is a method of obtaining views on separate and isolated matters, whereas the problems of the peace should be weighed and considered as a whole.

4. In the opinion of the ..... Government, one or two alternative courses should be adopted in relation to the proceedings of the Council of Foreign Ministers. Either the active belligerents, including the nations mentioned, must be given the right of participation on a footing of equality at the Council table with the representatives of the five Powers, or it must be clearly understood that conclusions reached by the Council as to the terms of the peace settlements shall be submitted to a conference in which all the active belligerents will take part and at which it will be agreed that the draft terms of the settlement shall be open to full and free discussion and amendment.

5. This suggestion was placed before the Council when [by?] the representatives of Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, and the Chairman (M. Bidault) stated that the suggestion would receive the immediate attention of the Council. The rejection of both alternatives would be rightly regarded by the active belligerents not included among the five members of the Council of Foreign Ministers as prejudicial to the achievement of a just and democratic peace. Ends.

Australian and to lesser extent South African Declarations on Council of Foreign Ministers have had very prominent treatment in this morning's London papers. Conservative papers, Telegraph, Mail, Express, Sketch devote large front page headlines to what is usually called "The Dominions' protest." Times, News Chronicle, Herald, give slightly less prominence. Worker virtually ignores Evatt except to point out that everything is covered in Berlin communiqué.

2. Particular attention is given to press conference yesterday at which Evatt distributed Declaration with some blunt explanatory comment. (Evatt appears on front page of Sketch shaking his fist). Evatt said Australian view agreed with that of Canada, South Africa, and New Zealand, and press seems to take this fact for granted. Walter Tucker's<sup>17</sup> comments in Commons yesterday are frequently quoted as indicating Canadian dissatisfaction. Evatt listed Dominions, Greece, Yugoslavia, Holland, as countries with comparable claims. He made it clear that he did not overestimate Russia's or France's claims to voice in settlement with Japan.

3. I understand New Zealand is issuing Declaration this morning with amendment to include reference to India. A Canadian statement at this time would undoubtedly find an interested audience in this country. The fact that Council is apparently breaking up with little success seems to reinforce Evatt's argument.

SECRET. There is no denying the pessimism of those concerned with Council of Foreign Ministers as it struggles to find a formula for winding up. The Foreign Office are gloomy. Evatt tells me he got the impression, in conversation with Byrnes, that Byrnes is unhappy about the Council's procedure and thought it would be necessary to find some other means of planning the peace settlements. According to Evatt, Byrnes agrees with Evatt's criticisms of the Council.

2. Molotov seems to have annoyed everyone. Byrnes began with an obvious effort to be friendly and conciliatory, but he too is now fed up.

3. We should be glad to have, as soon as possible, your instructions with regard to invitation from the Council to express our views in writing on the settlement with Italy, the text of which was conveyed to you in our telegram No. 2659 of 17th September. The South African High Commissioner has shown me his draft reply. In this reply he referred Bidault to his Government's statement of September 27th. Without referring to the specific request to submit views in writing, the draft goes on to reiterate the request either that an assurance be conveyed to the South African Government that the draft terms of the settlement with Italy as agreed upon by the Council should be open to full and free discussions and amendment by a Conference in which they would be invited to participate, or that facilities should be granted to them to participate fully on a footing of equality with other members in the Council's discussions of the terms of the Treaty of Peace with Italy. Campbell and Evatt are recommending to their Governments replies in similar terms.

4. South Africa and New Zealand formally communicated to the Council the statements by their Governments on the Council's procedure. I am communicating copies of the Prime Minister's statement in the House of Commons<sup>18</sup> to United Kingdom Government and to other Commonwealth representatives in London.

5. The Prime Minister's statement of yesterday was prominently reported in Times and Telegraph this morning. Other papers showed more interest in his visit than in the statement. Dominions declarations have instigated wide discussion of relations of other powers to peace settlements. Sympathy with Evatt's view is expressed but the difficulties are enumerated. Surprisingly enough, while The Guardian dismisses Evatt's complaints and considers great power direction inevitable, the Telegraph gives Evatt strong support, incidentally expressing laudable views on the divisibility of Commonwealth foreign policy. The Times in a long leader admits the grievances, doubts if proposed solutions would work, and hints vaguely at the old theory that Britain should speak not for the Dominions in Europe, but at least with their interests in mind, while possibly Australia might do the same in the Pacific.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 2308 of October 3rd. Canadian views on the Italian peace settlement.

Present position with regard to Deputies to Council of Foreign Ministers is uncertain. There is some hope that they might soon be instructed to begin work intended for them, such as the draft of a treaty with Italy.

2. A member of the Council's Secretariat expressed the view that if we wished to put forward specific views on the Italian settlement, it might be advisable to have them available with the views of other countries if and when the Deputies begin their studies. He admitted, however, that in view of our interest in procedural matters, we might wish to wait and see what happened to Byrne's proposal for a Conference.

3. To date, answers have been received from sixteen of approximately thirty countries to whom an invitation was sent. Some of these were received after October 1st, and they are still coming in. Luxembourg, Cuba, Salvador, Costa Rica and Dominican Republic stated that they had no special views to express, but made various minor reservations concerning properties and reparation. Lebanon and Iraq expressed views on the future of Libya, with particular demands that it be placed under the control of Egypt or one of the other Arab States.

4. Nine States raised the procedural question in one form or another. In my telegram No. 2829 of September 28th, I outlined the South African reply. The Australian reply was similar. New Zealand has not replied formally. India outlined certain material claims, stated views on future of Italian Colonies, and expressed desire to have their representatives heard orally by the Deputies. Belgium transmitted a long statement of claims. They saw no objection to a Peace Treaty with Italy being drawn up by Powers particularly concerned, if, as they assumed, Belgium would be able to submit observations on the draft. Such a procedure, however, would not be satisfactory for the German settlement, as the losses suffered by Belgium gave her an absolute right to sit at the Conference Table. Greece stated that they would submit a memorandum, and confidently anticipated an opportunity to amplify these views orally before the Council. Yugoslavia said that they considered their appearance at the Council as preparatory. They wished to participate in technical preparations. They expressed confidence they would actively participate in discussion of those problems of peace with Italy in which they were directly interested. It would be difficult to expect that Yugoslavia could be bound by any agreement which interfered with her interests and in the creation of which she had not participated. Brazil reserved certain rights to compensation and stated that as an active belligerent she had the right to share in framing the Treaty of Peace. Mexico asked for an extension of time to prepare her views, and asked for information concerning the procedure of drafting, discussion and signature of the Treaty. Iraq stated that although they would submit a memorandum, this was not enough as they must be represented in the discussions of at least the future of Libya.

5. Ethiopia submitted extensive memorandum with no comment on procedure. No answer has yet come from The Netherlands, the Philippines, Poland, Ukraine, Byelorussia and other Latin-American belligerents.

6. In the circumstances, as there is now no urgency, I do not think any useful purpose would be served by our submitting views at present, particularly as Robertson will doubtless be discussing the question.

Dear Mr. Hudd,

With regard to our various telegrams concerning Canadian comments on the Italian peace settlement, I have just received your telegram No. 2897 of October 5th. I am enclosing a draft statement which might be presented, if after discussion with Mr. Robertson in London, it seems desirable that this should be done in the near future. Mr. Robertson took with him an earlier draft of this statement, but the draft in his possession has been revised at a number of points as a result of further consideration here.

It is not a very informative document and only alludes indirectly to the toughest territorial problems of the settlement—the future of the Italian colonies and the frontier with Yugoslavia.

I am sending a copy of this letter and the enclosure for you to give to Mr. Robertson.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

Projet de déclaration

Draft Statement

Ottawa, October 3, 1945

COMMUNICATION TO THE COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS ON THE ITALIAN PEACE TREATY

Canada as an active belligerent throughout the duration of the war is deeply interested in the terms of the peace treaty to be concluded with Italy. Moreover, the Canadian armed forces have played, from first to last, an important part in the fighting in Italy, while Canada has subsequently provided a substantial share of the relief supplies furnished to the Italian people.

With regard to the general character of the peace settlement with Italy, the Canadian Government hold the view that it should be such as to promote (a) a long period of peace and prosperity in the whole Mediterranean area; and (b) the restoration of healthy political, social and economic conditions which would enable a democratic Italy to play a useful part in the community of nations.

Approaching the peace settlement with these general objectives in mind, the Canadian Government take the view that the difficult problems connected with Italy's frontiers and colonial possessions should be considered in the wider context of the future security and prosperity of the whole area rather than in terms of national prestige among rival claimants.

As regards Trieste, in the Canadian view it is more important than the immediate fate of this City that this issue should not now become inflamed by controversy and that Trieste should not develop into a potential danger spot from the point of view of international security. The frontier delineations should, so far as possible, follow ethnic lines. In any event, in view of its importance to the trade of other countries, the port of Trieste should be a free port under conditions reached by international agreement.

The arguments in favour of transferring the Dodecanese Islands to Greece seem overwhelming in view of the Greek origin and sympathies of the populations concerned.

The Canadian Government favour the extension of the trusteeship system to the Italian colonies. The disposition of the Colonies should be decided in accordance with the principles laid down in Article 76 of the Charter of the United Nations. The Canadian Government is of the view that Italy should play a part in whatever trusteeship arrangements are established and, for this reason, should be associated with the administration of one or other of its former colonial possessions.

The territorial provisions of the treaty may, in the long run, prove less important than the establishment of conditions which will permit the populations of the Mediterranean area to attain to a reasonable degree of economic and social stability.

On these grounds the Canadian Government would not favour the introduction into the peace treaty of any provision which would impose a dangerously heavy strain on the already insecure structure of Italy's economy. It is not to be anticipated that so poor a country as Italy which at the present time is suffering from acute economic dislocation would be in any position to produce substantial reparations for losses caused by Italian aggression, and this fact should be realistically faced. The Canadian Government would be opposed to any proposals which involve stripping Italy of the industrial equipment which is essential to the livelihood of the masses of her population.

The large relief debt due from Italy to the United Kingdom, United States and Canada should be borne in mind in relation to any consideration of reparations.

The Canadian Government reserves the right for compensation of Canadian claims to all Italian assets vested in the Canadian Custodian or under his control.

On the question of post-war Italian commercial relations the Canadian Government wishes to see that no obligations are imposed on Italy which will have the effect of crippling her as a trading nation, or reducing her to a condition of poverty. The Canadian Government, however, would favour provisions to prevent the Italian Government from taking unilateral action which would prejudice the free flow of multilateral trade. In particular the Italian Government might well be required to subscribe to whatever measures are taken by international agreement for the promotion of multilateral trade. It might also be advisable to impose on the Italian Government an obligation of non-discrimination in currency matters, and that Italy should be associated with any multilateral agreements for exchange control such as the International Monetary Fund.

It will be understood that these are the preliminary observations of the Canadian Government. As pointed out in the communication of the Canadian Government to the Council of Foreign Ministers on September 15th, 1945, it is hoped that "adequate opportunity will be afforded to Canada and the other United Nations which have played an active part in the Italian war to consider and discuss the contents of the peace treaty with Italy as a whole at an appropriate stage in its negotiation." It is the expectation of the Canadian Government that the preparatory work on the draft treaty, on which the Council of Foreign Ministers are now engaged, will later be submitted to a Conference of the United Nations concerned for full discussion and approval.

Mr. Wrong, I believe, has sent on to you a copy of his letter of October 6th to Mr. Hudd, enclosing a draft statement of the Canadian views on the Italian Peace Settlement which might be presented to the Council of Foreign Ministers, if, after discussion with you, it seems desirable that this should be done.

In spite of the fact that the Council of Foreign Ministers is in a curious state between life and death there is still something in the nature of a secretariat in operation. If we were to answer M. Bidault's request for our views on an Italian Settlement at this late date the views would be mimeographed by the secretariat and circulated to the members. Whether it would at this stage receive much attention is difficult to say. My impression is that the States concerned are concentrating to such an extent on the procedural question that the actual nature of the Italian Peace Settlement does not at the moment interest them very much. The present state of trance cannot last very much longer and some new formula must be discovered for dealing with the Italian Settlement, among other things. It might be desirable, therefore, for us to wait until there is a decision on the next stage, lest we compromise our position by submitting views in writing. It might be advisable, however, to have a draft statement of this kind ready so that it can be produced without unnecessary delay if the time seems apt.

DRAFT INSTRUMENT OF SURRENDER FOR GERMANY

1. We have just received Dominions Office Circular despatch D.75 of June 9th† (copy attached) forwarding a draft instrument of surrender for Germany, together with an explanatory memorandum. This document has been drawn up after negotiations conducted in the European Advisory Commission in London and represents the point reached on May 25th. It has not been formally adopted by the Commission or by the United Kingdom Government and is still liable to modification.

2. The Instrument consists of eleven military articles and of one general article giving the Allied representatives supreme authority to present additional requirements which Germany is bound to accept. It is intended to fill out the terms by a series of directives, the terms of which are under discussion in the European Advisory Commission. It is not the purpose of this memorandum to consider the terms in themselves but to draw attention to an important question of form on which representations were made last March to the United Kingdom Government.

3. These points relate to the Preamble and Article 12(a) of the draft. The Preamble reads as follows:

The German Government and the German High Command, recognizing and acknowledging the complete defeat of the German armed forces on land, at sea and in the air, hereby announce Germany's unconditional surrender to the Supreme Commands of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America acting by authority of their respective Governments and in the interests of the United Nations, hereinafter called the "Allied Representatives."

Article 12(a) reads as follows:

The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America shall possess supreme authority with respect to Germany. In the exercise of such authority they will take such steps, including the complete disarmament and demilitarization of Germany, as they deem requisite for future peace and security.

4. On March 24th a telegram was sent to the Dominions Office stating that the draft armistice terms submitted separately to the European Advisory Commission by the Governments of the U.K., U.S.A. and U.S.S.R. were being studied in Ottawa. The telegram went on that we wished to draw attention at that time only to one point which was described as follows:

The Soviet proposal is for signature by representatives of the Supreme Commands of the Soviet Union, United Kingdom and United States, called "The Representatives of the Supreme Command of the Allies," and it provides for three signatories. The United States Government propose signature by the Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Forces, and the Commander in Chief of the Forces of the U.S.S.R. "acting by authority of the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and in the interests of the United Nations."

It seems to us essential that the armistice should be signed on behalf of all the United Nations or at the very least on behalf of all those with forces actively engaged against Germany. Neither of these proposals meets this condition. The United Kingdom proposal for signature "on behalf of the United Nations, duly authorized to that effect" would be quite acceptable to us.

The Dominions Office replied to this comment as follows on April 4th;

Your views as to desirability of signature "on behalf of United Nations" entirely accord with our own and with line which United Kingdom representative on European Advisory Commission had been instructed to take. This point has, however, not yet been discussed in Commission.

5. We heard no more of this matter until despatch D.75 of June 9th arrived. In the memorandum enclosed with this despatch it is stated (paragraph 5) "that the U.K. representative made strong efforts to secure the agreement of the U.S. and Soviet representatives to the use of the term 'on behalf of,' but the United States representative firmly resisted this alteration on the ground that the term 'on behalf of' could not be properly adopted unless all the United Nations were consulted on the detailed terms and authorized signature on their behalf." The U.K. representative finally reluctantly acquiesced in the use of the term "in the interests of." He has been told to seek to place on record the view that the Governments most directly affected should be consulted before the draft instrument is finally approved and that other United Nations should be informed of the proposed terms before they are presented to Germany.

6. The Armistice of November 11th, 1918, was made "between Marshal Foch, Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Armies, acting on behalf of the Allied and Associated powers, in conjunction with Admiral Wemyss, First Sea Lord, of the one part."

7. We were not informed in advance of the form employed in the Italian Armistice because of the very confused state which preceded its signature. Only after the event did we learn that it began "The following conditions of an armistice are presented by General Dwight D. Eisenhower, Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Forces, acting by authority of the Governments of the United States and Great Britain in the interest of the United Nations." General W. B. Smith signed for General Eisenhower who was described as "General, United States Army, Commander-in-Chief Allied Forces." The British proposal had been that the terms should be presented "on behalf of the Supreme Command of the United Nations duly authorized to that effect." This was the language used in the short armistice of September 3rd. The longer instrument of surrender of November 9th signed by General MacFarlane and Marshal Badoglio contained the following in the preamble: "The following, together with the terms of the Armistice of September 3rd, 1943, are the terms on which the United States and United Kingdom Governments, acting on behalf of the United Nations, are prepared to suspend hostilities against Italy....." The next paragraph of the preamble reads "These terms have been presented by General Dwight D. Eisenhower, Commander-in-Chief, Allied Forces, duly authorized to that effect."<sup>20</sup>

8. It would seem that the formula now proposed for the German armistice is retrogressive from that adopted in 1918 insofar as the participation of the secondary allies is concerned.

9. Doubtless the reasons for the U.S. attitude arise from the position of the French Committee, the breach between Poland and the U.S.S.R., the condition of the Yugoslav Government and other political and diplomatic considerations which make them unprepared to attempt negotiations even with all the United Nations whose forces are now fighting against Germany in Europe. They, therefore, appear to wish to impose an armistice framed and negotiated only by the three Great Powers. There is already much uneasiness among the European allies over the lack of consultation with them on the armistice terms.

10. We must recognize the reality of some, at least, of these difficulties. They are not on the other hand valid in the case of Canada and several other United Nations. It is even open to question whether an armistice in this form would legally bring about a cessation of hostilities between Canada and Germany.

11. It is suggested that a means might be found out of this difficulty which would be in accord with the proposals made not long ago to Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt for the formal recognition of the authority of the Supreme Allied Commanders by the Governments providing forces to serve under their command.<sup>21</sup> This matter, indeed, would furnish a good reason for clearing up in a formal manner the position in which we and other Allied countries have arrived. We might, therefore, suggest immediately to the United Kingdom Government that we could accept in place of the formula proposed by the European Advisory Commission the conclusion of the armistice in the name of the Supreme Commander of the forces of the U.S.S.R. and of the Supreme Allied Commander or Commanders of the forces of the other United Nations. General Eisenhower (and perhaps General Wilson if he were associated in the signature) could then sign "on behalf of the United Nations" in the course of the exercise of their commands and reference to the Governments of the United Nations could be avoided. It would be necessary, also, to rewrite Article 12(a) of the Draft Instrument.

12. This matter, formal though it may appear to be, concerns the fundamental nature of the alliance against Germany and the relationship of the three Great Powers to all the other partners in the alliance.<sup>22</sup>

DRAFT ARMISTICE TERMS FOR GERMANY

21. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS submitted and read a memorandum upon the draft instrument of surrender for Germany, drawn up after negotiations in the European Advisory Commission. The draft had not been formally adopted by the Commission or by the member governments and was still liable to modification. The memorandum submitted drew attention to an important question of form.

The preamble provided for Germany's unconditional surrender to "the Supreme Commands of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America acting by authority of their respective Governments and in the interests of the United Nations...."

It was reported by the Dominions Office that efforts of the U.K. representative or the Commission to secure use of the expression "on behalf of," instead of "in the interests of" the United Nations had been unavailing against the opposition of the Soviet and U.S. representatives.

In March we had informed the United Kingdom that we regarded it as essential that the Armistice should be signed on behalf of all the United Nations or, at the very least, on behalf of all those with forces actively engaged against Germany.

The Armistice of 1918 had been concluded with Foch acting "on behalf of the Allied and Associated Powers...." The longer instrument of surrender of Italy was signed "on behalf of the United Nations." The present proposal was, therefore, a retrograde step, the effect of which would be to impose an armistice framed and negotiated by the three Great Powers. The reasons for the U.S. attitude lay, doubtless, in the situations of France, Poland and Yugoslavia but, from the Canadian standpoint, the formula remained objectionable and it was even questionable whether an armistice in this form would legally bring about the cessation of hostilities between Canada and Germany.

It was suggested that the difficulty might be resolved in relation to the earlier Canadian proposal for formal recognition of the Supreme Allied Commanders by the governments providing forces to serve under their command. It would then be acceptable to the Canadian government for the armistice to be concluded in the name of the Supreme Commander of the forces of the U.S.S.R. and of the Supreme Allied Commander or Commanders of the forces of the other United Nations. In this way reference to the governments of the United Nations could be avoided.

The only acceptable alternative to such a course lay in consultation upon the terms of surrender and securing authority from individual governments concerned, to sign on their behalf.

This seemed a formal matter but it concerned the fundamental nature of the alliance against Germany and the relationship of the three Great Powers, to all the other partners in the alliance.

22. THE PRIME MINISTER expressed emphatic agreement with the views set out in the memorandum submitted by the Under-Secretary.

In 1939 Canada, by the independent action of her own Parliament, had declared war upon Germany. It would be intolerable to accept a formula which ignored that essential fact and which did not provide for conclusion of the armistice on behalf of Canada.

If the Great Powers were unwilling to consult the other United Nations and obtain their concurrence, the only alternative was some course such as that suggested by Mr. Robertson.

23. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, agreed that a communication should be addressed to the U.K. government in the sense of the view expressed by Mr. King and along the lines suggested in the memorandum submitted by the Under-Secretary.

Ottawa, June 16, 1944

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Your Circular Despatch D.75 of June 9th.† Draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany.

1. We have no comment to offer on adoption of a short military instrument which in general carries our judgment. We attach, however, considerable importance to the modification of the draft at two points. While our objections relate to what may superficially appear to be questions of form, in our view they concern the fundamental nature of the alliance against Germany and continued cooperation among the United Nations after the war.

2. The first point is the language used in the preamble whereby Germany would surrender unconditionally to the Supreme Commands of the three Great Powers "acting by authority of their respective Governments and in the interests of the United Nations." We appreciate from your telegram D.502 of April 4th and paragraph 5 of the memorandum† enclosed with your despatch under reference that you share our objections to this formula. The second point is the first sentence of Article 12(a) by which the Soviet Union, United Kingdom and United States "shall possess supreme authority with respect to Germany."

3. The only reference to the other partners in the grand alliance against Germany, in the Instrument proposed to end the fighting after a war in which some of them have now been engaged for nearly five years, is an assertion that the Supreme Commands of three of the Allies are "acting in the interests of the United Nations." We should prefer the elimination of any reference to the United Nations rather than the inclusion of such a formula. We think, however, that a better form can and should be adopted.

4. We feel sure that the inclusion in the Instrument of the language proposed in the preamble and Article 12(a) would cause bitter resentment in many Allied countries and would be an inauspicious start towards the general settlement. We realize the difficulty of securing agreement in advance on the terms of the Instrument of Surrender among all the United Nations or even among those with forces actively engaged against Germany. We hold strongly to the view, however, that some means should be found whereby the Instrument will be signed at least on behalf of all the Allies whose forces will have contributed substantially to German defeat.

5. The enumeration in the Instrument of the members of the United Nations might in theory be the most satisfactory method but we recognize that the task of negotiating in advance among more than thirty Governments to secure their specific concurrence would present great difficulties.

6. In our view a satisfactory solution could and should be found along the following lines. The Instrument is a military document which will be signed for the Allies by military commanders. We feel it should be signed on the Allied side only by the Supreme Allied Commanders. If the Supreme Commanders had received formal authority from the governments concerned to exercise command over the forces from various countries comprising their commands, the conclusion of the Instrument of Surrender could clearly be regarded as part of their exercise of that authority. It would certainly be desirable that such at least of the Allies as have placed forces under the Supreme Commanders should be consulted in advance on the terms of surrender and we note that you share this view. In any case, so long as the authority of the Supreme Commanders is properly recognized as deriving from the governments concerned, they could perhaps be considered as having been empowered to conclude hostilities on behalf of all these governments.

7. We feel that this gives a new importance to the question of the formal recognition of the position of the Supreme Commanders which was raised in the Prime Minister's telegram to Mr. Churchill No. 34 of March 10th<sup>23</sup>, in Mr. Churchill's reply No. 31 of April 18th<sup>24</sup>, and in the Prime Minister's further telegram No. 99 of June 6th.<sup>25</sup>

8. Failing agreement on the lines indicated in paragraph 6, we should prefer to see all reference to the United Nations and to signature on the authority of governments eliminated from the preamble and to have the Instrument concluded only between the German Government and the German High Command on the one hand and the Supreme Allied Commanders on the other hand.

9. It is even more important that Article 12(a) should be modified to eliminate the specific reference to three only of the United Nations with the omission of all the rest.

10. Having in mind that the Armistice of November 11, 1918, was signed by the "Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Armies, acting on behalf of the Allied and Associated Powers," and also the circumstances in which the various United Nations entered this war, we feel it would be difficult to explain and justify an instrument of surrender with which they were not more directly associated.

Ottawa, June 16, 1944

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Reference our telegram to Dominions Office No. 106 of June 16th. Draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany.

1. Will you please discuss with Cranborne or Eden the questions raised in this telegram, stressing the importance of finding a satisfactory solution. You should develop the matter along the following lines.

2. In view of the separate Canadian declaration of war against Germany, which occurred long before the involvement of either the U.S.S.R. or the U.S., the conclusion of an armistice by authority of the three Great Powers alone would cause us special difficulty. We assume that the reluctance of the United States to accept a formula covering participation by other United Nations is caused mainly by their preoccupation over the position of France and also by the breach between Poland and Russia. The terms of the draft Instrument, however, would render these problems more acute, especially if the intention is not to consult the other Allied countries principally concerned.

3. If it would help towards a solution we are prepared to take the matter up with the United States Government and also with the Soviet Government. Before doing so, however, we should like to receive the comments of the United Kingdom Government on the views which we have put forward in the telegram under reference.

4. Article 12(a) of the draft will, we feel, be particularly resented by some of the European allies who have the strongest sort of claim to participate in determining the treatment of Germany under the Instrument. With the Instrument in the form of a brief and predominantly military document, the other allies are most deeply concerned with the directives issued under Article 12(b) by which the surrender will be implemented. The impression of a three-power hegemony which the draft Instrument creates is most unfortunate. We regard it as necessary that the European Allies especially should share responsibility for dealing with the problems of Germany in the years after the war. The "Allied Representatives" set up under the Instrument should be vested with authority from those of the United Nations whose interests are deeply involved. Otherwise these countries, whose cooperation is essential if a stable settlement is to be achieved, may be inclined to stay on the side lines.

5. You might also point out that the French Committee is not one of the United Nations and for good measure draw attention to Article 2 of the Declaration by United Nations of January 1st, 1942.<sup>26</sup>

6. It might be useful also for you to discuss the whole question with Sir William Strang so as to be sure that he is fully apprised of our views.

London, June 28, 1944

SECRET. Your telegram No. 106 of June 16th. Draft instrument of Surrender for Germany.

We are very glad to have your comments, which have been communicated to United Kingdom representative on European Advisory Commission, and will be borne in mind here when a Draft Instrument is eventually recommended by E.A.C., though we cannot be sure how far it will, in fact, prove practicable to secure alterations in Commission's text without reopening discussions on many points which have already been subject of long and difficult informal discussions between the representatives of the three Governments on E.A.C. Meanwhile, following are our observations on your comments.

2. Guiding consideration for United Kingdom representative on E.A.C. has been to reach a text which would:

(a) Command agreement of United States and Soviet representatives whose views and instructions were at first very divergent;

(b) In practice give us the political and military powers considered by our advisers to be necessary for purposes in mind;

(c) Leave no scope for subsequent complaints by Germans that Allied demands and proceedings are not covered by Instrument.

We have always had in view interests of other United Nations but, while we recognize their desire to be actively associated with Instrument of Surrender, United Kingdom representative is bound to take account of views of United States and Soviet representatives on this question.

3. There is, we think, substantial identity of view between Canadian and United Kingdom Governments along the lines of your paragraph 6. We agree that Instrument should be a military document to be signed for Allies by Military Commanders. We think it important that there should be a British signatory but who he should be can only be decided at the time. It is debatable whether in International Law a Military Commander signing an Instrument of this kind need be described as doing so "by authority of his Government." But on broad grounds it has seemed to United Kingdom representative desirable that on the unprecedented occasion of the unconditional surrender of a whole country as is proposed the Military Commanders accepting the surrender should be described as doing so by authority of their respective Governments. Moreover, absence of such a statement might afford loophole to German authorities for argument as to which should sign on their behalf. Reason why draft does not describe Military Commanders as acting "on behalf of" the United Nations (or even of those United Nations which have placed forces under them) was given in memorandum enclosed in my despatch No. 75.<sup>1</sup> On other hand, we thought phrase in preamble "acting in the interests of the United Nations" preferable to no reference at all to "United Nations."

4. Procedure at present contemplated by United Kingdom representative on E.A.C. for consultation with foreign Governments is that:

(a) E.A.C. should now invite Allied Governments most directly affected to submit views as to surrender terms for Germany (but without communicating text to them at this stage) in light of which E.A.C. if they thought fit could make further recommendations;

(b) E.A.C. in recommending a text to United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. should explain that it is subject to modification in light of any views expressed by other Allied Governments. In any case we hope before terms are given to Germans to secure concurrence of Governments most directly affected and to give terms for information to other Governments. United Kingdom representative has put to Commission proposals on these lines.

5. Article 12(a) is considered necessary because it will be the basis for the action to be taken by the United Nations in respect of Germany for which authority is not expressly taken in other articles of Instrument. Since these other articles cover only the military field Article 12 is designed to cover the remainder of the sphere of action political, economic, financial, etc. Alternative (which we assume would have met point in your paragraph (9) of providing that "United Nations" should have supreme authority would not have been acceptable to United States and Soviet representatives while we felt it necessary to exclude qualification "acting in interests of United Nations" originally suggested by United States representative because we thought that it might expose actions of Allied representatives to challenge by Germans on ground that they were not "in interests of United Nations."

6. As regards your paragraph 10, the wording of the armistice of 1918 was not in fact based on prior consultation between all the Allied and Associated Powers. Memorandum in my despatch Circular D. 75 explains why the phrase is not used in present draft. But we hope that in fact it will be possible to provide on this occasion by some such procedure as that suggested in paragraph 4 that the United Nations are given a suitable opportunity of satisfying themselves that their substantial interests are safeguarded.

They are for instance unwilling that the draft instrument of surrender should be shown in advance to the European Allies and are generally showing a somewhat arbitrary attitude. ## MEMORANDUM ON THE DRAFT INSTRUMENT OF SURRENDER FOR GERMANY

The Canadian Government have set forth in their telegram No. 106 of June 16th to the Dominions Office their views with regard to the Draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany which is now under consideration by the European Advisory Commission. As will be seen from the terms of this telegram, a copy of which is attached for convenience of reference, the Canadian Government see objection to the language used in the preamble of the Draft Instrument of Surrender whereby Germany would surrender unconditionally to the Supreme Commands of the three Great Powers "acting by the authority of their respective Governments and in the interests of the United Nations." They also see strong objection to Article 12(a) by which the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States "shall possess supreme authority with respect to Germany."

With regard to the first of these points the Canadian Government have suggested that a solution to the difficulties involved might be found if the Supreme Commanders had received formal authority from the Governments concerned to exercise command over the forces from the various countries comprising their Commands. The Instrument could then properly be signed by the Supreme Allied Commanders as the conclusion of the Instrument of Surrender could clearly be regarded as part of their exercise of that authority. It would in the Canadian view certainly be desirable that such at least of the Allies as have placed forces under the Supreme Commanders should be consulted in advance of the Terms of Surrender, and it is noted that the United Kingdom Government share this view.

It is felt by the Canadian Government that this gives a new importance to the question of the formal recognition of the position of the Supreme Commanders which was raised in the recent exchange of telegrams between the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the Prime Minister of Canada dealing with this subject.

So far as Article 12(a) of the Draft Instrument is concerned, the Canadian Government are of the view that this should be modified to eliminate the specific reference to three only of the United Nations, with the omission of all the rest.

The Canadian Government attach great importance to reaching a satisfactory solution of the difficulties arising out of these points in the present text of the Draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany. They consider that the questions raised in telegram No. 106 of June 16th to the United Kingdom

Government are important not only from the specifically Canadian point of view, but also as affecting the other United Nations and particularly the European Allies.

In view of the separate Canadian declaration of war against Germany which occurred long before either the U.S.S.R. or the United States became involved in hostilities, the conclusion of an Armistice by authority of the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R. and the United States alone would cause the Canadian Government special difficulty. It is even open to question whether an Armistice in the form now suggested would bring about a cessation of hostilities between Canada and Germany.

It is assumed that the reluctance of the United States to accept a formula covering participation by other United Nations is caused mainly by their preoccupation with the position of France, and also by the breach between Poland and Russia. The terms of the Draft Instrument would, however, in the Canadian view, render these problems all the more acute, especially if the intention is not to consult the other Allied countries principally concerned.

Article 12(a) of the Draft Instrument will, it is anticipated, be particularly resented by some of the European Allies who have the strongest sort of claim to participate in determining the treatment of Germany under the Instrument. In view of the fact that the Instrument takes the form of a brief and predominantly military document the other Allies will be profoundly concerned with the Directives issued under Article 12(b), by which the Surrender will be implemented.

The impression of a three-power hegemony which the Draft Instrument creates, is in the Canadian view most unfortunate. The Canadian Government regard it as necessary that the European Allies in particular should share responsibility for dealing with the problems of Germany in the years after the war. The "Allied Representatives," whose powers are enumerated in the Draft Instrument should, it is considered, be vested with authority by those of the United Nations whose interests are deeply involved, otherwise those countries whose co-operation is essential if a stable settlement is to be achieved may be inclined to stand aside.

Moreover, it will be recalled that Article 2 of the Declaration by the United Nations of January 1st, 1942, specifically states that "each Government pledges itself to co-operate with the Governments signatory hereto and not to make a separate armistice or peace with the enemies."

It is also to be observed that the formula at present suggested by the terms of the Draft Instrument does not cover the case of the French Committee of National Liberation, which is not included in the term "United Nations."

The Canadian Government would be prepared, if it would help towards a solution, to take up these questions with the Governments of the United States and the U.S.S.R. Before doing so, however, they would much appreciate receiving the comments of the United Kingdom Government on the views put forward in their telegram No. 106 of June 16th.

MEMORANDUM OF INTERVIEW WITH SIR WILLIAM STRANG, UNITED KINGDOM REPRESENTATIVE TO THE EUROPEAN ADVISORY COMMISSION, ON 3RD JULY, 1944

In accordance with the suggestion contained in telegram No. 1173 of the 17th June, from the Department of External Affairs and on Mr. Massey's instructions, I called on Sir William Strang to discuss with him certain points arising out of the Draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany, as communicated to the Department of External Affairs under cover of Dominions Office despatch No. 75 of June 9th.†

Sir William had already received a copy of telegram No. 106 of the 16th June from the Canadian Government to the Dominions Office on this subject, and also had a copy of the memorandum of 28th June which was left with the Foreign Secretary. He was therefore well acquainted with the background of the Canadian Government's views.

I developed the main arguments to Sir William along the lines indicated in telegram No. 1173 of 17th June. With regard to the preamble of the Draft Instrument, I emphasised the difficulty of the formula "acting by authority of their respective Governments and in the interests of the United Nations." I said that from our point of view it would be better to omit all reference to the United Nations than to retain this formula. I pointed out that in due course the Canadian Government would have to explain to the Parliament and people of Canada how it had come about that hostilities between Germany and Canada were terminated. It would be natural to ask whether a Canadian representative had signed the Armistice. The Government would, under the proposed arrangements, have to reply in the negative. It would then be asked who had signed on behalf of Canada. Again the Government would not be able to make any satisfactory reply. They would have to say that the Supreme Commanders had signed "in our interests," but this would not be a satisfactory answer to the Canadian people who had contributed so largely to the war effort, and whose army were participating in the assault on Germany. We had strong objections to the phrase "in the interests of the United Nations." Personally, I thought it sounded more like the way in which one referred to mandated territories without competence in foreign affairs than to sovereign states.

I added that as Sir William would realise, we were not speaking for ourselves alone, but we had in mind the position of the United Nations, particularly the European Allies, who had contributed so much and suffered so much in the war, and we felt it was necessary that they, too, should be associated with the Instrument of Surrender.

I said that the Canadian authorities fully appreciated that Sir William, as the United Kingdom representative on the European Advisory Commission, shared our general view in this matter, and had been doing his best to have a more acceptable formula adopted. We also understood the difficulty of obtaining the prior assent of the United Nations to the terms of the Armistice.

Sir William said that he was most sympathetic to the point of view I had expressed, and fully appreciated our anxieties. He said that he would like to explain the steps which were now contemplated by the United Kingdom Government to ensure that effective prior consultation with the Allies principally concerned should in practice be provided for. In this connection he referred me to paragraph 4 of telegram No. 97 from the Dominions Office to the Canadian Government.<sup>28</sup> Sir William explained that he thought the first step should be to invite the Allied Governments most directly affected to submit their views as to the Surrender Terms for Germany, but without communicating the text to them at this stage. Sir William defined the "Allied Governments most directly affected" as the European Allies. The phrase, of course, includes the Dominions, who were, indeed, in a preferential position as they had already seen the text of the Draft Instrument.

The next step would be when a text had been agreed upon by the European Advisory Commission and was ready to be recommended to the Governments represented upon it, to explain that such a text would be subject to modification in the light of any views which the other Allied Governments might express.

In any case, it was Sir William's view, and the view of the United Kingdom Government, that the Allied Governments most directly affected should not only see the text but give their assent to it. The other Allied Governments should, he thought, be shown the text for their information.

Sir William said that these proposals were now before the European Advisory Commission, and he was pressing hard for their acceptance. He was getting full support from the United States Government and from Mr. Winant personally. Mr. Winant's instructions in this connection from his Government were similar to Sir William's own. Sir William thought that the United States Government were sensitive to any criticism that the interests of the European Allies might be being neglected, or that a big-Power hegemony was being established and they were anxious to avoid giving any such impression. The Russians, on the other hand, had been very reluctant to depart in any measure from the tripartite basis, but he thought, although he did not wish to be too optimistic, that they were beginning to move in the right direction.

I then called Sir William's attention to the suggestion contained in paragraph 6 of our telegram No. 106 of the 16th June to the effect that a satisfactory solution might be found by the Supreme Commanders receiving authority from the Governments concerned to exercise command over the various forces comprising their Commands, and then the Instrument of Surrender could be regarded as part of their exercise of that authority.

I also described the relationship of the Canadian Government and Armed Forces to the Combined Chiefs of Staff and to the Supreme Allied Commanders, and mentioned the Canadian Government's decision to communicate to the Allied Commanders in Chief to the effect that they exercise command over the Canadian Armed Forces in their theatres with the full authority of the Canadian Government. I rather got the impression that Sir William had not had an opportunity to give very full consideration to the Canadian Government's solution, and I think from this point of view my talk may have been useful. He said that he thought that consideration would have to be given to the Canadian proposal, and also to any other solutions which might be put forward by the Allied Governments when they had been consulted. He did not feel, however, that this was a matter which could profitably be re-opened in the Commission at the present stage.

Sir William then referred to Articles 12(a) and 12(b) of the Draft Instrument. He said he felt that this was a more difficult question than the wording of the preamble as it involved the participation of the European Allies in determining the treatment of Germany under the Instrument. The Russians were very strongly of the opinion that the treatment to be accorded to Germany was a matter for the three Great Powers to decide.

Sir William made it plain that the United Kingdom authorities shared our views with regard to the association of the European Allies in the settlement with Germany. He thought that the Americans would think much along the same lines.

I pointed out that if the tripartite set-up were maintained the "Allied Representatives" should be vested with authority from those United Nations whose interests were deeply involved, to act on their behalf. Sir William agreed that the directives issued under Article 12(b) were of the greatest importance as they would be concerned with the political and economic future of Germany. Sir William thought that it might be necessary to come to an arrangement with the European Allies so that their interests in the settlement with Germany could be safeguarded. He felt that this was really a question as between the United Nations, and might be the subject of a separate agreement, presumably between the three Great Powers and the Allies involved. It was not a matter which could be dealt with in the Terms of the Instrument of Surrender, and he thought that to write in any references to the interests of the United Nations in connection with Article 12 might encourage the Germans to try to cause trouble by asserting that the three Great Powers were not acting in the true interests of some of the other United Nations.

If it proved possible to get Russian agreement to a satisfactory arrangement with the European Allies about the treatment of Germany under the Instrument of Surrender then the next step would be to associate the European Allies with the Post-Hostilities machinery in Germany. The United Kingdom Government had in mind an Advisory Commission to the projected High Commission for Germany which would be the channel of communication between the Allied Governments concerned and the tripartite High Commission, (a proposal with which the Department of External Affairs are already familiar from the Post-Hostilities Planning papers).†

In addition, the United Kingdom Government were working out plans for associating Allied nationals (other than those of the three Great Powers) with the actual machinery of control, which would have to be set up for Germany. Sir William hoped that the European Advisory Commission would soon be able to give its consideration to the Control Machinery for Germany in the occupation period. He anticipated these questions would have to be dealt with before long by the Commission, and they would obviously have a very important bearing on the whole question of effective participation by the European Allies.

Then, too, Sir William thought there might be certain United Nations organisations of a functional character in Germany. For instance, there might be a United Nations Commission on the Restitution of Property taken from German-occupied countries. From what Sir William said it was clear that the United Kingdom authorities were giving earnest consideration to the necessity for European Allies sharing the responsibility for dealing with the problems of Germany after the war, but that they anticipated considerable resistance from the Russians over this question.

I then mentioned to Sir William the special position of France. Sir William said that while France could, of course, not at present be considered technically as one of the United Nations, it was to be hoped and anticipated that by the time the Instrument of Surrender was signed she could be included in that category. In any event, it was certainly the United Kingdom intention that the French should be consulted with the other European Allies about the Instrument of Surrender, and should give their assent to it.

So far as Post-Hostilities plans in Germany were concerned, it was still an open question whether or not France should be treated on an equality with the three Great Powers, and whether, for example, the High Commission for Germany should not be a four-nation body rather than tripartite. I asked Sir William whether he could tell me anything about the attitude of the Russian representative on the European Advisory Commission to the problem of France. Sir William said that speaking very confidentially he could tell me that the Soviet representative did not show any particular sympathy for the French. Mr. Gusev was inclined to take the line that it was questionable whether the French would be strong enough to be a great Power after the war, and it was also doubtful whether they could be fully trusted, as there were substantial elements in France which had collaborated with the Germans. Sir William said that he thought there were two views held in Moscow on the French question. There was a pro-French trend of opinion which was represented in the articles of Ilya Ehrenburg, and there was also a much more sceptical view to which Mr. Gusev seemed to adhere.

I told Sir William of the proposal of the Canadian Government to take up with the United States and Soviet Government the main difficulties which we saw in the Draft Instrument of Surrender as it at present stood, and which I had already outlined to him. He said that speaking personally he could see no objection to this course, and that it might prove helpful.

On my thanking him for his full account of the present state of discussions regarding the Draft Instrument of Surrender, Sir William said that he hoped that I would call upon him at any time if he could be of any assistance.

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Your telegram No. 1610 of June 30th. Draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany. Do you expect to receive further reply to the memorandum left with Eden on June 29th? Have you already sent text of this memorandum by bag? Eden's comments to you were more satisfactory than those contained in Dominions Office telegram No. 97 of June 28th which seemed to indicate that little support would be given by United Kingdom Government to the views that we had put forward.

2. In light of your conversation with Eden, may we expect that the "non-possumus" attitude implicit in telegram No. 97 will be modified? We are not concerned only on Canadian account since we feel that if these proposals become known in their present form to other interested Governments there will be strong and legitimate complaint that their position has been disregarded, probably accompanied by accusations that the three powers have ignored paragraph 2 of the Declaration by United Nations and paragraph 5 of the Moscow Declaration on general security.<sup>29</sup> There can be few documents of greater importance to the United Nations than the Instrument whereby the fighting against Germany is ended, and War Committee yesterday decided that we should continue to press our views strongly.

3. Before we definitely decide to take up this question with United States or Soviet Governments, we should welcome a fuller expression of the views of the United Kingdom Government, especially on the points raised in our telegram to you No. 1173 of June 16th.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 1328 July 6th. Draft instrument of surrender for Germany.

United Kingdom Government expect to let me have a full expression of their views as a result of my representations to Eden at the beginning of next week. Meanwhile Ritchie has had an interview with Strang, of which a full memorandum was sent to you by air bag under cover of my despatch A.402 of July 3rd, together with copy of my memorandum which I left with Eden.

I urged our view very strongly on Eden, not only from the point of view of Canada's interests, but with relation to the interests of the other United Nations principally affected. I do not anticipate, however, that United Kingdom policy will be much modified at this stage for the reasons given to Ritchie by Strang. The Government do not seem to wish to re-open the question of the European Advisory Commission at the present time. They feel rather that there may be an opportunity for further modification in the text of the draft instrument when the views of the other United Nations principally affected have been received, as contemplated in paragraph 4 of Dominions Office telegram No. 97 of June 28th.

I have little doubt, however, that the United Kingdom Government are in substantial agreement with our own views, and that they intend to do their best to bring about the effective association of the European Allies in the settlement with Germany. The Americans appear to share this view. (On this point Strang's observations to Ritchie are important). The Russian attitude has been stubbornly opposed to the modification of the Tripartite basis both of the signature of the Instrument and of the execution of the settlement with Germany. The United Kingdom Government appear to hope that the Russians may later be induced to modify their stand.

Would you approve my arranging an interview with Winant and discussing these questions with him informally?

We propose to await the further expression of the views of the United Kingdom Government which you expect this week before taking any other steps.

2. We note that while United Kingdom Government is anxious that effective consultation with the Allies most concerned should take place before final instrument of surrender for Germany is drafted they seem less willing that the form of the draft instrument should be changed. TELEGRAM 1746

London, July 13, 1944

SECRET. My telegram No. 1685 of July 7th. Draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany. Following is text of a memorandum which has been handed to me by Cranborne to-day, Begins:

In a memorandum of June 29th,<sup>30</sup> the High Commissioner set out the views of the Canadian Government with reference to their telegram No. 106 of June 16th.

2. That telegram was answered by Lord Cranborne's telegram No. 97 of June 28th. Since then, informal consultations have been proceeding almost daily between the United Kingdom, United States and Soviet representatives on the E.A.C. along the lines envisaged in paragraph 4 of Lord Cranborne's telegram.

3. The United Kingdom representative has impressed on the other two members of the Commission the strong feeling of the United Kingdom Government that European Allied Governments should without delay be invited to submit their views as to the surrender terms. The Soviet representative has been most reluctant to agree to this being done until the Commission can agree on a joint report to the three Governments covering the draft instrument jointly recommended. Sir William Strang has accordingly urged the other two representatives to settle with him the terms of such a report. It is the earnest hope of the United Kingdom Government that a report may be received from the Commission within the next few days and that the Commission will at the same time invite the European Allied Governments, and the French Committee of National Liberation, to submit their views.

4. The Canadian Government have commented on the wording of two passages of the draft instrument. As stated in Lord Cranborne's telegram of June 28th, these comments will be borne in mind when the recommended draft instrument is officially received from the E.A.C. The Canadian Government may be assured that full weight will be given to them together with any comments received from other British Commonwealth Governments and any views submitted by European Allied Governments. It will then be possible to reach a conclusion whether any, and if so what, alterations to the text should be proposed to the United States and Soviet Governments. It is thought that an attempt to reopen the wording of the instrument in the Commission at this stage would seriously prejudice the prospect of making progress with the consultation of other Governments, which it is clearly of the greatest importance to secure. Ends.

SECRET. We have sent you copies of all important papers concerning the representations which we have made in London on the form of the draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany. We have today discussed this question with the United States Ambassador, who is reporting this discussion to the Department of State. We read to him nearly all of our telegrams of June 16th, No. 106 to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs and No. 1173 to the Canadian High Commissioner in London, and we have told him of the nature of the replies received from London, especially in Dominions Office telegram No. 97 of June 28th and in the High Commissioner's telegram No. 1746 of July 13th.

Mr. Atherton, though aware of the general course of the discussions in the European Advisory Commission, had not seen the draft Instrument itself. He has told Mr. Wrong that he has already briefly discussed our representations with Mr. Dunn of the State Department by telephone and that he is sending a full report by bag tomorrow.

We particularly emphasized the practical importance of avoiding both the appearance and reality of a three power hegemony over Germany and of finding some means whereby the important secondary Allies, especially those in Europe, should share responsibility for dealing with the problems of Germany after the war.

Mr. Atherton stated that he hoped to be able to hold a further discussion of this matter with us after receiving the views of the State Department. He believed that this might take place before his departure on a Western trip in a week's time. Ends.

SECRET. My EX-3154 of July 29th, draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany. The United States Ambassador informed us on August 5th that, following two conversations with Mr. J. C. Dunn, he had been authorized to say that the State Department was very glad to receive our comments, which they would bear carefully in mind. They assumed that we were not expecting a definite reply at this stage as to what the United States Government was ready to do to meet our points, since the question was still under negotiation in the European Advisory Commission. They would keep us informed of developments on these points.

Mr. Atherton was informed that this reply was satisfactory. We appreciated that the United States Government could not, at this stage, state definitely what they were prepared to do. We had wished them to know what was in our minds before the negotiation of the draft Instrument between the three Great Powers had reached finality, especially as we felt that strong objection would be taken by some other Allied Governments, as well as by Canada, if the Instrument were presented in its present form.

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany.

Since despatch of my telegram of August 9th, Circular D. 1119†, United States Ambassador has informed us that President, who has unofficially seen copy of text recommended by E.A.C.<sup>31</sup>, is prepared to approve it. In these new circumstances we think it very desirable to convey to United States and Soviet Governments our own views with least possible delay. If by time we have formulated our views we are not aware of response of European Allies to Commission's request, our communication to United States and Soviet Governments would make it clear that our statement was subject to the proviso that it might be necessary for the three Powers subsequently to amend the Instrument in light of these replies. As stated previously it was not considered politic, in view of urgency of securing Soviet representative's agreement to consultation with European Allied Governments, to press earlier for alterations on lines suggested in your telegram No. 106 of June 16th, but in present examination of text His Majesty's Government in United Kingdom will pay careful attention to comments already received from His Majesty's Government in Canada, together with any others that may be received from them or from other of His Majesty's Governments.

2. It is our earnest hope that final Instrument may reflect views of all countries allied against common enemy. Since present draft is result of arduous negotiations in E.A.C., United States and Soviet Governments may well be reluctant to agree to changes. But we will, of course, take into fullest account any amendments to which your Government would attach importance. Text is being urgently studied by Departments here and by Combined Chiefs of Staff, and it would be most helpful if we could have your reply before end of next week.

3. My two immediately following telegrams† contain:

(1) Summary of report by E.A.C. and of their letter to European Allies.<sup>32</sup>

(2) Text of Draft Instrument recommended by E.A.C. as compared with text in my despatch of June 9th, Circular D. 75.†

Text is substantially the same and changes are mainly matters of drafting and arrangement.

1. We have no comments to offer on the changes made in the text since the version dated May 25th. You already understand that these revisions do not in any way meet our objections as set forth in our telegram No. 106 of June 16th and the High Commissioner's memorandum of June 29th.<sup>33</sup> The Australian, New Zealand and South African Governments have repeated to us their replies† to your telegram D.1129 of August 11th and we note that the Australian and New Zealand Governments object to the Preamble and Article 12(a) on grounds which are substantially the same as those put forward by us. Only four Governments not represented on the European Advisory Commission have had an opportunity of considering the Draft and three of them unite in criticizing strongly the language of the Preamble and Article 12. We feel that this gives some indication of the difficulties which will arise with the European allies unless the language is changed before the text of the Instrument is shown to them.

2. We have noted the emphasis placed by Mr. Hull and Sir Alexander Cadogan in their public statements at the opening of the Washington conversations on world organization on the part which should be played by states other than Great Powers.<sup>34</sup> This points once more to the desirability that the military terms imposed on Germany should in form and fact carry the authority and responsibility of all the Allied states or at least of those which have made a substantial military effort or suffered greatly from German occupation.

3. We welcome the decision to ask the views of the European Allies on the terms of surrender and related matters, although we should have preferred that this request be not confined to the European Allies so that we could have an opportunity of making our views known to the European Advisory Commission directly as well as through the good offices of your representative on it.

4. We have already made our objections clear<sup>35</sup> to the United States Ambassador in Ottawa. Mr. Atherton, after consulting the Department of State, informed us that they were glad to learn our point of view and appreciated our position but felt unable to enter into detailed discussions of the question outside the European Advisory Commission. We have gathered from informal conversations in Washington that the Department of State favours full consultation with other United Nations and may not be averse to alterations in the text. We have not approached the Soviet Government on the matter.

My Lord,

With reference to your Circular despatch D. No. 98 of August 10th† enclosing three draft Proclamations and one General Order† prepared for the guidance of Sir William Strang in the European Advisory Commission, it is desired to draw your attention to the employment in these drafts of language similar to that to which objection was taken by the Canadian Government in the Draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany. In the first draft Proclamation the Governments of the United States, United Kingdom and Soviet Union are referred to as the authority from which Proclamations, etc., will issue in Germany and in section 49 of the draft General Order the definition of the term "Allied Representatives" refers to them as representatives of the Supreme Commands of these three countries. The reasons which led the Canadian authorities to press for a wider description have been explained fully in telegram No. 106 of June 16th and in the memorandum left with you by the Canadian High Commissioner dated June 28th.<sup>36</sup>

IMPORTANT. TOP SECRET. Addressed Canada, Australia and New Zealand, repeated to Union of South Africa. Instrument of Surrender for Germany. Text recommended by E.A.C. July 25th has now been studied here and, on understanding that it is open to reconsideration in light of replies from European Allies to Commission's letter of July 25th, we are prepared to approve its substance.

2. We have also now been informed that Soviet Government approve draft text as recommended by E.A.C.

3. We have given most careful consideration, in consultation with United Kingdom representative on E.A.C., to all replies received to my telegram of August 11th, Circular D. 1129. Choice before us is either (a) to reopen discussion in E.A.C. of wording of preamble and Article 12(a) or (b) to approve text as it stands and to try to meet your criticisms in some other way. We have, therefore, reviewed course of negotiations so far.

4. Preamble. Term "on behalf of" appeared in draft terms which we submitted to E.A.C.<sup>37</sup> (my despatch of January 20th Circular D. 9)† and as stated in my telegram of April 4th Circular D. 502 United Kingdom representative was instructed to obtain inclusion of this term if possible. We should have greatly preferred it to term "in the interests of" and United Kingdom representative made strenuous and repeated efforts to secure it. This was firmly resisted by United States representative on ground that "on behalf of the United Nations" would require prior communication of text to all United Nations and their explicit authority for signature, and that this would almost certainly prove impracticable. Soviet representative supported United States arguments and was also opposed on ground that it was unnecessary to consult other United Nations. We did not admit these contentions, but it became clear that prolongation of the argument was unlikely to lead to a more satisfactory result. United Kingdom representative was therefore authorised to acquiesce in "in the interests of" provided that it was agreed in Commission that views of Governments most directly affected should be sought before draft Instrument was finally approved. Despite Soviet representative's reluctance we did, as you know, succeed in securing consultation by E.A.C. with European Allies.

5. We agree that terms of preamble in draft of May 25th<sup>38</sup> were open to criticism that Germany would be explicitly surrendering to Supreme Commands of United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. Recommended text, however, is framed on basis that Germany announces her unconditional surrender without it being stated to whom, and the representatives of the three Supreme Commands announce terms with which Germany shall comply. We think this an improvement on the earlier wording.

6. Article 12(a). "The United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. shall possess supreme authority with respect to Germany." We sympathise with view that other countries should be associated in some way with exercise of this authority. United States draft<sup>39</sup> originally contained phrase "in interests of the United Nations," but we were advised that its inclusion might leave loophole for Germans to challenge some particular action taken under it on the ground that it was not "in interests of United Nations" or that proof was required that it was. We therefore authorised United Kingdom representative to propose its deletion, and this was agreed to by United States and Soviet representatives. We assume that you would have felt same objection to it here as in preamble. On other hand, United States representative would probably have made same objections to "on behalf of" in Article 12(a) as in preamble. Course of discussions indicates that neither United States nor Soviet representative would have agreed to substitution of "United Nations" for "United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R."

7. We regret that in light of foregoing account of long and arduous E.A.C. discussions on these points, we see no prospect of securing agreement on alterations of wording of the two passages in question by insisting that E.A.C. should reconsider recommended text solely for this purpose, though should observations of European Allies lead to reopening of discussion of Instrument, we will certainly bear the two passages in mind in case suitable opportunity should then occur of amending them. Reference back to E.A.C. would, moreover, have grave drawback from our standpoint that it would delay other pressing business such as protocols on occupation of Germany and Austria, control machinery and orders and proclamations to be issued in pursuance of surrender terms, none of which Soviet representative was prepared to discuss until Instrument itself was out of the way. In these circumstances we have considered what alternative possibilities were open to us under paragraph 3(b) above.

8. We welcome suggestion that Governments most directly concerned in war against Germany should be invited to assent to terms before presentation to Germans, and to authorise signature on their behalf and to declare publicly that they had been consulted and had agreed and given authority for signature. United Kingdom representative on E.A.C. will accordingly be instructed to press for draft Instrument to be communicated to these Governments. We feel that it would be impracticable to include all the United Nations, and that if proposal is to have any chance of adoption it will need to be limited to Dominions and European Allies, with perhaps China and Brazil. We contemplate that terms would be communicated to other United Nations immediately before presentation to Germans.

9. If the proposal on these lines is adopted we think that separate statements would be preferable to a joint Declaration in view of practical difficulties of concerting terms among so many different Governments.

10. As to Article 12(a), it was never our intention that United Kingdom, United States and Soviet Governments should exercise powers with respect to Germany without consultation, as necessary, with other countries concerned. Paragraph 4(b) of our proposals on High Commission machinery for Germany (my despatch March 25th, Circular D. 32)† suggested formation of an Advisory Council, nature and composition of which were being studied. Preliminary conclusions of this study were embodied in memorandum† given to your officials during Prime Ministers' meeting in May. We think that provision for an Advisory Council would go far to meet objections expressed to Article

12(a) as it stands. Its scope and functions would need to be agreed with United States and Soviet Governments, and United Kingdom representative on E.A.C. will be instructed to press our proposal.

11. We trust that you will agree that these instructions to United Kingdom representative as described in paragraphs 8 and 10 above will substantially meet points made in your telegram,<sup>40</sup> and we hope that you and other British Commonwealth Governments will authorise acceptance on their behalf of German surrender and signature of these terms when time comes.

12. Text of communication which United Kingdom representative is sending to United States and Soviet representatives on E.A.C. is in my immediately following telegram. Ends.

His Majesty's Government wish, however, to make their approval of draft Instrument subject to an understanding on the following lines:

(i) That Instrument will still be open to reconsideration in the light of any replies received from European Allied Governments or authorities to letter addressed to them by the Chairman of the Commission on July 25th, 1944.

(ii) That text of Instrument will, at the earliest convenient date, be communicated to the Governments of the United Nations chiefly concerned, who will be invited to concur in its terms and to authorize representatives of the Supreme Commands of the three Powers to accept the unconditional surrender of Germany on their behalf, and that the Governments of other United Nations will be informed of terms at an appropriate moment before the surrender of Germany.

IMPORTANT. TOP SECRET. Addressed to Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs No. 221, repeated Ottawa No. 11, Canberra No. 153, Pretoria No. 20. Surrender terms for Germany.

1. We are grateful for the information given in your telegrams Circular D. 1247 and Circular D. 1248, regarding the present position. We regret that it is not apparently possible to secure the agreement of the United States and U.S.S.R. to the improvements proposed by other Dominion Governments and ourselves, but do appreciate the efforts that you have made in this connection. While the position may have to be accepted, we must make it clear that we still adhere to the views expressed in our telegram No. 136 of the 19th August† and, on the grounds explained therein, have considerable misgiving both as to probable acceptance by the European Allies and the future of international collaboration if the Instrument is to be completed in the form now proposed.

2. We note the instructions regarding future procedure which His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are giving to their representative in the European Advisory Commission and hope that it will result that the arrangements proposed, which represent some advance, are accepted by the other members.

We would prefer to have information on the views of the Governments who will be approached in accordance with the proposal contained in paragraph 8 of your telegram Circular D. 1247 before giving authority for signature by the Supreme Commands of the United Kingdom, United States of America and U.S.S.R.

IMPORTANT. TOP SECRET. Addressed to External, Wellington, No. 195, repeated to Primus, Pretoria, No. 77, External, Ottawa, No. 17. Following telegram has been sent to Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, Begins:

No. 225. Top Secret. Your telegrams Circular D. 1247 and Circular D. 1248, surrender terms for Germany.

We appreciate your account of the present position in this matter, and note the possibility that there may still be an occasion for reconsideration by the European Advisory Commission of the text of the preamble and of Article 12A. The request of the French Committee of National Liberation might raise such an occasion. We suggest that you instruct your representative on the European Advisory Commission to make every effort to secure satisfactory amendment of the two passages.

2. Failing this, we would, as regards the preamble, desire to follow through our suggestion referred to in paragraph 8 of your telegram Circular D. 1247. While we do not think it essential that the Declaration should be made jointly by all the Governments most directly concerned in the war against Germany, we regard a Joint Declaration by the Dominion Governments as essential.

3. As regards Article 12A, we note that provision for the association of other Governments with the exercise of authority over Germany is left merely to an understanding between yourselves, the United States and the U.S.S.R. (see paragraph 10 of Circular D. 1247 and (III) of Circular D. 1248). We think there should be an explicit assurance. In addition to any arrangements which might be found feasible, e.g., participation in the work of an Advisory Council, we regard it as of the first importance for the reasons given in paragraph 3 of my telegram No. 197 of August 19th† that there should be also a definite public statement of intention on the part of yourselves, the United States and the U.S.S.R. that other Allied Governments will be consulted in the exercise of the powers under Article 12 and will be associated directly with the agencies charged with the execution of the terms of Article 12. We hope that you will press this point with the other two Governments with all the necessary emphasis. Ends.

TOP SECRET. My telegram of September 15, Circular D. 1391.† Surrender Terms for Germany.

Soviet representative on E.A.C. has sent United Kingdom representative letter referring to letter of August 31st (my telegram Circular D. 1248) and stating that since United Kingdom confirmation of draft terms was accompanied by reservations, Soviet Government reserved to itself, in event of essential new circumstances, the right also to introduce appropriate amendments.

2. United States representative thereupon observed that these two letters left United States Government alone in accepting draft terms without reservation. Draft terms were therefore left without any firm foundation. This was disturbing because the same might apply to any other Instrument recommended by E.A.C., and the usefulness of E.A.C. as a means of reaching agreement between the three Governments is in jeopardy. He hoped, therefore, that United Kingdom would now accept draft terms without reservation and that Soviet Government would revert to their previous unconditional acceptance.

3. We have accordingly re-examined position and have reached following conclusion as regards the four points in my telegram Circular D. 1248.

(I) Reconsideration in light of Allied replies to letter of July 25th, and

(II) Communication of text for concurrence to other Governments chiefly concerned. E.A.C. have not yet officially considered replies but on a first reading it seems unlikely that they will think it necessary to amend the draft terms on account of them. United Kingdom representative has been instructed to propose that text of draft terms should be communicated to European Allies for concurrence and that if they wish they should be allowed to send representatives to discuss it with E.A.C. If E.A.C. do not accept this proposal it will still be open to us to consult the Allies ourselves.

(III) Provision for consultation with other United Nations in connection with Article 12. Soviet representative has strongly criticised proposal for an Advisory Council on grounds that:

(a) Since the members would be representatives of Sovereign States a purely advisory status in relation to the United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. would be derogatory. (Advisory Council for Italy is different as it includes United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R.)

(b) Establishment of Advisory Council as a corporate body would constitute a trespass on primary responsibility of United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. for work of control. United States representative who at first received our proposals sympathetically, later doubted wisdom of setting up a corporate Allied body and suggested instead appointment of a Liaison Mission from each of Allied countries concerned. In these circumstances it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to secure acceptance of proposal for an Advisory Council. We continue none the less to attach great importance to provision for consulting other United Nations and are therefore instructing United Kingdom representative in current discussions to press for a provision on following lines, Begins:

The necessary consultation with Governments of other United Nations chiefly interested will be ensured by appointment by such Governments of Missions accredited to Control Council and having access through appropriate channels to organisations of control. Ends.

If this formula is accepted, United Kingdom representative is to suggest that United Kingdom, United States and Soviet Government should state publicly that "in connection with exercise of powers assumed in Instrument of Surrender, arrangements will be made for consultation with other United Nations."

(IV) France. United Kingdom representative has informed Commission of his instructions (my telegram September 1st, Circular D. 1249)† to support request of F.C.N.L. that a French representative should attend when German affairs are discussed. Neither United States nor Soviet representative has yet expressed any view.

4. United Kingdom representative doubts whether we shall improve prospect of attaining our objects by maintaining conditions in his letter of August 31st, and suggests that by emphatically drawing attention to our requirements it has already had its maximum effect. Accordingly, in view of Soviet letter and

United States representative's urgent representations, he has been authorised to inform E.A.C. that we still attach great importance to points in my telegram Circular D. 1248. But in view of discussions that have opened in E.A.C. since that date, His Majesty's Government in United Kingdom do not now attach any qualification to their approval of draft terms. Ends.

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch No. 82 of 25th August regarding the draft Proclamations and General Order under consideration in connection with the Surrender of Germany.

2. It was considered necessary that the wording of these documents should be related to that employed in the Instrument of Surrender itself. It was for this reason that the United States, United Kingdom and Soviet Union, who are mentioned in Article 12(a) of the draft Instrument, were referred to in paragraph 1 of draft Proclamation No. I. Similarly, the definition of "Allied Representatives" in Section 49 of the draft General Order corresponds to the definition in the preamble of the Instrument of Surrender.

3. The views of His Majesty's Government in Canada on the wording in each passage are well understood here but the difficulties of securing alterations in the text of the draft Instrument were explained in my Circular telegram D. No. 1247 of 31st August, which crossed your despatch under reply.

German resistance collapses without the conclusion of a formal Instrument of Surrender. We unsuccessfully sought last year to have the terms of the Instrument amended so as to associate with it more effectively the countries which will have made a serious contribution to German defeat but both the Soviet and the U.S. Governments were unwilling to do more than agree to certain minor verbal changes. Authority in Germany, therefore, will stem from the U.S., U.K., U.S.S.R. and now France.

This draft preamble, however, goes beyond anything that has been submitted before in ignoring the participation of other countries in the war against Germany and the Proclamation itself, if there were no Instrument of Surrender, would be a most important document taking the place of such an Instrument or an Armistice. I think, therefore, that we should certainly register a prompt and strong objection to the wording proposed by the U.S. representative.<sup>43</sup>

The alternative wording in revised draft circulated by the United States representative in European Advisory Commission reads "Germany has been completely defeated on land, sea and air by the armed forces of the U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and the U.S.A." This alternative is presumably intended for use in event that organized resistance ceases without formal unconditional surrender by German Government and German High Command.

2. You will, I am sure, agree that this wording would be most inappropriate in that it excludes contribution towards defeat of Germany by other Commonwealth countries and other United Nations. If it were used the German people would be told in the first order issued to them after Allied victory that they had been defeated by the forces only of the three great powers. DESPATCH 247

SECRET

Sir,

In my despatch No. 1853 of December 30th† I gave you information on the methods proposed for the association with the European Advisory Commission of Governments other than the three great powers. You are already familiar with the draft German Instrument of Surrender which has been approved by the European Advisory Commission and seems likely to be adopted by the Governments concerned with amendments providing for the participation of France.

2. Consideration is being given to the possibility that German resistance may collapse without the signature by the German Government and High Command of any instrument. The European Advisory Commission has been preparing draft Proclamations to be issued by the Allied military authorities to the German people and in framing the preamble to these Proclamations the Commission has felt it desirable to include alternative wording. We have recently received from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs copies of the revised drafts of Proclamations and a General Order to be issued by the Allied representatives immediately after the signature of the Instrument of Surrender or after the cessation of organized resistance. These drafts have been circulated by the United States representative and have been taken by the European Advisory Commission as a basis for discussion. The preamble to the first draft Proclamation in this document reads as follows:

To the People of Germany:

The German Government and the German High Command have acknowledged the complete defeat of the German armed forces, on land, at sea and in the air, and have surrendered unconditionally to the Supreme Commands of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America. (Alternate wording: Germany has been completely defeated on land, at sea and in the air by the armed forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America.)

3. Your attention is directed to the alternative wording included in this extract. While the Canadian Government has not been satisfied with the form either of the Instrument of Surrender or of the draft Proclamations based thereon, it has not proved possible to secure their amendment to meet our views. The alternative wording in this Proclamation, however, goes beyond anything that has been submitted before in ignoring the participation of other countries in the war against Germany. If through the disappearance of organized authority in Germany no Instrument of Surrender were to be signed, it would seem that the alternative wording cited above might be the opening words of the first Order issued by the victorious Allies to the German people. A telegram was despatched to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs on February 17th drawing attention to these considerations and requesting that the United Kingdom Representative on the European Advisory Commission should be instructed to insist on the amendment of the draft.

4. You will note that the objectionable language was proposed by the United States Representative on the Commission who must have been acting under instructions from the United States Government. It would be advisable at present for you not to reveal to the Department of State that the Canadian Government has received from the United Kingdom Government a copy of the document in question. You should, however, take any suitable opportunity that may arise of impressing on the Department of State the unwisdom of ignoring in such documents the part played by Allied countries other than the great powers in bringing about the defeat of Germany.

Among the questions which you might consider raising with the President<sup>44</sup> is the constant tendency of the great powers to ignore the contribution of the other Allies to the defeat of the enemy. Among the worst and most recent examples of this tendency is the wording proposed by the U.S. representative on the European Advisory Commission for the preamble to the first Proclamation to be issued to the German people after the cessation of organized resistance. The Commission has wisely been considering the forms to be employed if no German authority exists capable of signing an instrument of surrender. The language proposed by the U.S. representative (which has been accepted by the Commission as a basis for discussion) is far from wise. If it were used, the first Order issued to the German people on their defeat would begin as follows:

“To the people of Germany:

Germany has been completely defeated on land, at sea and in the air by the armed forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America.”

We telegraphed on February 17th to London strongly protesting against this proposal but have received no reply. Pearson has also been authorized to discuss it with the State Department.

It would not have been difficult for the great powers publicly to recognize the difficult problems set for other Allied Governments through the necessary concentration of responsibility for the direction of the war in a few hands. So far as I can recall there has been no public recognition of these difficulties from either the President or Mr. Churchill and there has certainly been none from Marshal Stalin. A cumulative effect of this relegation of the other Allies to the role of auxiliaries has undoubtedly been to make inter-Allied cooperation more difficult and at times to make people feel that their efforts are not appreciated and that, therefore, they are not called upon to exert themselves to the full. If the full story were told, it would give plenty of ammunition to the sort of criticism of the Canadian war effort which is represented in its extreme form by Mr. Chalout.<sup>45</sup>

One does not wish to be plaintive or to ask for compliments. Few things, however, seem harder to achieve than to persuade the great powers to look at the position fairly from the point of view of the smaller responsible countries among the Allies. Once the concentration of effort on the single objective of victory has ended with its attainment, this tendency of the great powers will become more disruptive and dangerous than it is at present. This does not seem to be clearly realized in Washington and it is hardly realized at all in Moscow. In London they are somewhat more conscious of it. A word from you to the President, with the sample quoted above to illustrate the point, should have some effect.

I saw Dunn of the State Department about this this morning and told him that we objected most strongly to the proposed alternative preamble referred to in your despatch No. 27 of February 19th and which had been submitted to the European Advisory Commission by the United States representative. I went on to say that while the Government of Canada had not been satisfied with the form either of the Instrument of Surrender or of the draft Proclamation based thereon, it had not so far proved possible to secure their amendment to meet the views of the Canadian Government. The alternative wording in the Proclamation, however, went beyond anything that had been submitted before in ignoring the participation of other countries in the war against Germany. RE: TENDENCY OF GREAT POWERS TO IGNORE THE CONTRIBUTION OF THE OTHER ALLIES TO THE DEFEAT OF THE ENEMY

This is illustrated in the wording proposed by the U.S. representative on the European Advisory Commission for the preamble to the first proclamation to be issued to the German people after the cessation of organized resistance.

If the language proposed by the U.S. representative which has been accepted by the Commission as a basis for discussion were used, the first order issued to the German people on their defeat would begin as follows:

“To the people of Germany:

Germany has been completely defeated on land, at sea and in the air by the armed forces of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America.”

Canada has protested to London against this proposal but, thus far, has received no reply. Canadian Ambassador at Washington has been authorized to discuss it with the State Department.

Wording such as the above would prejudice inter-allied co-operation at San Francisco and in the years following the war. The declaration to the people of Germany would seem to afford to the Great Powers an opportunity publicly to recognize the difficult problem set out for other allied governments through the necessary concentration of responsibility for the direction of the war in a few hands, and to cause them to feel that their efforts have been appreciated.

It is all important that the Great Powers should look at the position fairly from the point of view of the smaller responsible countries among the Allies.

SECRET. Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: I have just received the following communication from Dunn, Assistant Secretary of State, Begins: My Dear Mr. Ambassador:

I have been closely considering the views of your Government, which you recently communicated to me informally, on the wording of some parts of the proposed Proclamation accompanying the draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany which appear to take insufficient account of Canada's magnificent contribution to the prosecution of the war.

I must say that these views seem to me to be well founded; and I hope that a new wording can be adopted which will be free from any implication that the sacrifices of Canada and other nations fighting with the Allies had not been adequately recognized.

We have already communicated your views to the United States representative on the European Advisory Commission, but I suggest that your Government should take up the matter formally in London in accordance with standing procedure.

A new draft is now being negotiated in the Commission which may replace the present “General Order” and “Proclamations.” Incidentally, the term “General Order” and “Proclamation” are inexact and misleading since we did not intend that they should be proclaimed to the public but that they should constitute an agreement on additional non-military requirements to be imposed by the occupying Powers.

I am very glad that you brought this matter to my attention and I am taking it up with the War and Navy Departments, which, of course, must be consulted. Ends.

Ottawa, April 4, 1945

Surrender terms for Germany. You will no doubt have seen Circular despatch D. No. 10 of January 28th† from the Dominions Office enclosing copies of the revised draft Proclamations and of a General Order to be issued by the Allied representatives immediately after the signature of the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender or after the cessation of organized resistance in Germany. You will also have seen our telegram No. 41 of February 17th bringing to the attention of the Dominions Office the undesirable character of the alternate wording of the revised Proclamation which had been circulated by the United States representative in the European Advisory Commission. This matter was also taken up informally by the Canadian Ambassador in Washington with the State Department and my immediately following telegram† contains the text of a communication dated March 30th, which Mr. Pearson has received from the Assistant Secretary of State. We, therefore, presume that there will be no difficulty in having an appropriate amendment made in the preamble to the Draft Proclamation No. 1.

2. We are not, however, by any means clear as to the procedure which is to be adopted to mark the end of hostilities in Germany in the increasingly probable event that there will be no German civil or military authority available to sign an Instrument of Surrender. It is necessary for us to have a clarification of the procedure contemplated as it will have to be explained in due course to the Canadian Parliament and people and they will have to be told the manner in which the Canadian Government is to be associated with Allied action in this regard. I should appreciate your taking this matter up urgently with the United Kingdom authorities on an informal basis. Perhaps it would be possible for a member of your staff to discuss the questions involved with Sir William Strang, along the following lines:

In view of the probability that there will be no German authority available to sign an Instrument of Surrender, we are anxious to ascertain what general Instrument will be employed to mark the cessation of organized resistance in Germany and how it is proposed that Canadian Government should be associated with such an Instrument. In particular (a) are we to understand from Circular Despatch No. 10 of January 28th that if agreed in the European Advisory Commission the text of Proclamation No. 1 will be used either in the case that an Instrument of Unconditional Surrender is signed by the German civil and military authorities or in the case that no such signature takes place but organized resistance in Germany ceases? (b) it appears from the communication which we have received from the State Department, referred to above, that a new draft is now being negotiated to replace both the present General Order and the present Proclamations. If this is the case, we should be grateful for any available information regarding the character of this new draft; (c) we also understand from the State Department that it is not contemplated that this Instrument should be proclaimed to the German public but that it should constitute agreement on additional non-military requirements to be imposed by the occupying powers. We should appreciate clarification on this point.

I may add for your guidance that it is our own feeling that the swift progress of events in Germany may have rendered previous drafts of the E.A.C. out of date. For instance, paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6 of Draft Proclamation No. 1 must already have been proclaimed to the German public in the conquered areas. It may well be that the conquest will proceed by means of a series of local surrenders and that proclamations will be issued on the spot to the people of the conquered areas. We consider, however, that in addition to these local proclamations there will no doubt be some general Instrument whether it be in the form of a Proclamation or not which will lay down Allied additional non-military requirements to be imposed upon the German people and we are still in the dark as to what form this Instrument is to take. When we have further information as to the character of this Instrument, we shall have to take up formally the question of Canadian association with the arrangements contemplated.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Surrender terms with Germany.

1. With reference to your telegram No. 794, Sir William Strang informs us that United Kingdom delegation in the European Advisory Commission have drafted a Declaration to be published in the event that there will be no German civil or military authority to sign the Instrument of Surrender. This Declaration would take the place of the Instrument of Surrender. It is being circulated through the Dominions Office and should reach you shortly. The United States and French representatives are in general agreement with this draft.

2. In the view of the United Kingdom, the two Proclamations and the General Order should also be used in this eventuality, although in somewhat amended form. The United Kingdom representative is now preparing a draft in which Proclamations 1 and 2 are combined. One amendment in this revised and combined draft provides that Proclamations issued locally by Allied Commanders would remain valid unless they are in conflict with the terms either of the Declaration or of any of the Proclamations or Orders issued pursuant to it.

3. Sir William had not heard of any draft Instrument prepared by the State Department to take the place of Proclamations 1 and 2 and the General Order. Nor did he know that the State Department wish this Instrument to remain secret. However, he did say that the United States representative in the European Advisory Commission had expressed the view that some of the provisions in the present United Kingdom draft of the General Order should not be published.

4. U.S.S.R. declares that it is not yet ready to consider Proclamations and the General Order in the European Advisory Commission and is preparing an alternate draft which has not yet been circulated to the Commission. The Soviet representative has not yet expressed his agreement even to the idea of issuing a Declaration in the event that it is impossible to obtain an Instrument of Surrender, far less to its precise terms.

5. Sir William is confident that the phrase in the United States draft Proclamation to which we object will not now be used. But he is very sceptical whether it will be possible for us to be associated with the proposed Declaration in any formula which would be satisfactory to us. No doubt, however, this would be the subject of further representations on your part after the draft Declaration has reached you.

6. A full report of the conversation with Sir William Strang follows by bag.†

SECRET. Following for Robertson from Read, Begins: With reference to my telegram D. 19 of April 24th,† regarding the draft of a unilateral Declaration proposed by the United Kingdom Government for use in the event that there is no German authority capable of signing unconditional surrender at the time of German collapse, a memorandum† has now reached us from Massey recording a conversation between LePan and Sir William Strang. A copy will be sent to you in the next bag.

Strang apparently doubts that it will be possible to have the text of the proposed Declaration altered to associate us to our satisfaction, although he is sure that the United Kingdom Government would do everything it could to meet our wishes. The principal difficulty, Strang suggests, would be the likely Soviet objection to enlarging the number of countries whose agreement on the proposed Declaration would have to be secured. Ends.

We note that the form of association in the Preamble of the proposed unilateral Declaration<sup>50</sup> forwarded from the Dominions Office under circular despatch D. No. 56 of April 10th,† is similar to that in the Instrument of Surrender to which the Canadian Government expressed its objection in telegrams to the Dominions Office, Nos. 106 of June 16th, 1944, and 140 of August 25th, 1944.

we feel that this does not justify the exclusion of appropriate association of those countries which have actively participated in the defeat of Germany, and in particular a country such as Canada which will have an army fighting on German soil at the time of the German collapse.

3. We would suggest, therefore, that a distinction be made in the Preamble of the Declaration between those countries actively participating in the defeat of Germany and the other United Nations by changing paragraph 4 to read as follows:

“The representatives of the Supreme Commands of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the French Republic herein called the Allied Representatives, acting by the authority of their respective Governments and others of the United Nations which have actively participated in the defeat of Germany and in the interests of all the United Nations accordingly make the following Declaration.”

4. We would also suggest that those countries which have actively participated in the defeat of Germany, like Canada and other nations of the Commonwealth, the other European Allies and Brazil, should simultaneously issue statements to the effect that (a) they have been consulted and concur in the Allied Declaration; and (b) have authorized the “Allied Representatives” to act on their behalf in making the Declaration regarding the German defeat and assumption of supreme authority with regard to Germany by the Governments of the U.K., the U.S.A., the U.S.S.R. and the Provisional Government of the French Republic.

5. In any event, the Canadian Government proposes to indicate its association with the suggested unilateral Declaration by making a statement at the appropriate time to the effect that it has been consulted and concurs in the substance of the Declaration although not entirely satisfied with its form.

Following for Robertson from Read, Begins: Your telegram H. 37, April 27th. Immediately following telegram contains the draft of a statement regarding the association of the Canadian Government with the proposed unilateral declaration. You will note that no reference has been made that we have not agreed with the form of this declaration and have sought the inclusion of specific reference to other United Nations which actively participated in the defeat of Germany.

This has been fully discussed in the Department and we feel that there should be a distinction between the argument which has been conducted in official correspondence and the actual statement to be made by the Prime Minister. We feel that nothing would be gained by reference in that statement to the fact that difference of opinion existed between Governments as to the form of this declaration. Indeed, we feel that something might be lost by such inclusion since such a reference might be capable of misunderstanding in Canada.

A further study of the draft unilateral declaration makes it evident that the military terms arise out of the assumption of sovereign authority over Germany by the Great Powers. It is our understanding that we do not wish to make a statement which would indicate that we had agreed to or wished to be associated with the government of Germany by the Great Powers. For that reason we have laid stress on the military terms rather than association with the document as a whole.

I wish to make it clear that the above suggestions fully carry my own judgment. I should also like to suggest that consideration might be given to delaying the issue of this statement on German surrender for a day or two. I would appreciate an indication of the procedure which is to be followed in issuing this statement, whether it is to come from the Prime Minister or the Acting Prime Minister or to be released as a press statement. Ends. Heeny has read and agrees.<sup>51</sup>

Ottawa, April 30, 1945

Following for Robertson from Read, Begins: My immediately preceding telegram. Draft text of a statement by the Canadian Government Relating to the unilateral Allied Declaration on the defeat of Germany.

The defeat and unconditional surrender of Germany has been announced in a Declaration made today by the Representatives of the Supreme Commands of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the French Republic, acting on the authority of their respective governments and in the interests of the United Nations.

This Declaration sets out the military terms with which Germany is required to comply. It states that supreme authority over Germany is assumed by virtue of this Declaration by the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic.

The four Great Powers, the three which were responsible for the direction and co-ordination for [of?] Allied strategy against Germany, and also France have proclaimed the defeat of Germany and have undertaken to assume control and authority over all German territory in order to take whatever measures may be required to ensure that Germany will not again disturb the peace and security of the world.

The Canadian Government has been consulted on these military terms imposed on Germany and has expressed its agreement.

The struggle against Germany has been fought to a victorious conclusion by a partnership of many freedom loving peoples. This combined effort of nations large and small which has given us victory must now be consolidated so that the Peace we build will endure. Ends.

Following for Read from Robertson, Begins: Draft statement continued in your telegram D-79 is approved, subject to substitution of "together with" for "and also" before France in third sentence of paragraph 2. This sentence seems to us to take in rather more territory than is covered by the actual terms of the draft unilateral declaration itself. Unless United Kingdom and United States are issuing statements in terms substantially identical with that contained in your draft, I would suggest deletion of phrase beginning "in order to take whatever measures may be required, etc." and insertion of new sentence drawn from Article 12 of Instrument of Unconditional Surrender, viz., "in the exercise of such authority they will take such steps, including the complete disarmament and demilitarisation of Germany as they deem requisite for future peace and security."

We reluctantly agree to deletion from the public statement of reference to our dissatisfaction with the form of the declaration and fully agree that statement as revised should be issued in Ottawa by the Acting Prime Minister. I think it might well be issued as soon after the declaration itself is made public as is convenient. Ends.

3. United Kingdom representative introduced United Kingdom draft of proposed declaration for use, if there is no Central German authority to sign Surrender Instrument (my despatch Circular D. 56 of April 10th).† He also put forward amendments regarding unconditional surrender (my telegram Circular D. 54 of April 16th, Saving)† and war criminals (my telegram Circular D. 60 of April 25th, Saving).† He further pressed that preamble should, as has been suggested by His Majesty's Government in Canada, be amended to read, Begins:

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, May 7, 1945

Dear Mr. Read,

As you requested this morning, I am giving you below the substance of the letter from Washington I read to you regarding the surrender instrument:

“As you know, over the months Mike Pearson with Escott Reid following up has been endeavoring to secure a modification of the surrender instrument for Germany and related documents so that the military contribution of Canada to the victory might receive greater recognition. No doubt there has been considerable feeling in high government circles in Ottawa on that subject. I gather, further, that as the matter has developed, we have acquired most of the responsibility in Canadian eyes for what they still consider to be a highly unsatisfactory situation.

Aside from one exchange of letters with Jimmy Dunn<sup>52</sup>, the Canadian conception of our position has, I believe, been gained almost entirely through the British representative on the EAC.

At this eleventh hour Strang has suddenly introduced into the EAC negotiations an amendment whereby all the Allies contributing militarily to the victory will authorize signature of the surrender proclamation by the four member powers of EAC. It has been clearly evident that he is speaking on behalf of the Dominions and India.

There seems to have been only one letter. See Documents 690 and 692.

I should doubt whether Strang had any definite hope of his amendment succeeding, but obviously it puts the British in an enviable position vis-à-vis the Dominions and is likely to put us in an unenviable position especially as the French went along and the Russians simply referred the amendment to Moscow.

In response to Strang's amendment we have told Ambassador Winant that (1) we approve letting the Canadians and the others contributing military forces see the text of the surrender instrument and the proclamation based upon it, (2) we agree to invite their adherence, and (3) we would not object to more specific acknowledgement in the proclamation of the other powers contributing military force to the defeat of Germany.

We have, however, a very practical objection to amending the text so that the four powers on EAC would be acting with the authority of the other powers. Such a position would imply that in all future decisions we would have to have the concurrence of the other powers. The task of military government shared by four powers is complex and difficult enough without adding a requirement for the concurrence of four or five additional powers. It seems to us that any reasonable person would agree that an already difficult and thorny task would be made well nigh impossible and we should doubt whether many who realize the difficulties and who do not have to be involved would really wish to be except for prestige reasons."

I was directed to emphasize the three numbered points above as a mark of our appreciation of the Canadian position, and of our desire to give to Canada the recognition to which she is rightly entitled.

Sincerely yours,

RAY ATHERTON

TELEGRAM D. 139

Ottawa, May 7, 1945

Following from Read to N.A. Robertson, Begins: You are familiar with pressure from Pearson and Reid on State Department to secure modification of surrender instrument and with general position taken by External, as well as recent approach<sup>53</sup> in respect of unilateral declaration resulting in eleventh hour attempt by Strang to obtain modification of drafting.

President Truman upon learning of this position was greatly disturbed and specially requested American Ambassador to explain American position as follows:

“In response to Strang’s amendment we have told Ambassador Winant that (1) we approve letting the Canadians and the others contributing military forces see the text of the surrender instrument and the proclamation based upon it, (2) we agree to invite their adherence, and (3) we would not object to more specific acknowledgment in the proclamation of the other powers contributing military force to the defeat of Germany.

We have, however, a very practical objection to amending the text so that the four powers on EAC would be acting with the authority of the other powers. Such a position would imply that in all future decisions we would have to have the concurrence of the other powers. The task of military government shared by four powers is complex and difficult enough without adding a requirement for the concurrence of four or five additional powers. It seems to us that any reasonable person would agree that an already difficult and thorny task would be made well nigh impossible and we should doubt whether many who realize the difficulties and who do not have to be involved would really wish to be except for prestige reasons.”

Atherton was specially directed by the President to emphasize the three numbered points above as a mark of United States appreciation and desire to give Canada the recognition to which Canada is rightly entitled.

President Truman’s urgency to get the message which was sent to Mr. King both by telephone and telegram this morning was also due in part to his desire that Mr. King would get the message before the President went on the radio (the expected hour being then twelve noon).<sup>54</sup> He wants Mr. King to understand that the American attitude in these matters was not in any sense related to any lack of appreciation of the Canadian part in the war.

(Personal comment) I rather suspect that President Truman is most anxious to maintain the same sort of close relationship as his predecessor.

London, May 11, 1945

SECRET. Repeated United Kingdom delegation, San Francisco, No. 158. My telegram of May 4th, Circular D. 744, paragraph 3.

Proposed declaration of unconditional surrender of Germany has been further discussed in a series of informal meetings of members of European Advisory Commission.

2. United States and French representatives have accepted a United Kingdom proposal to refer in first paragraph of preamble to unconditional surrender of Germany as well as unconditional surrender of German armed forces. Soviet representative awaits instructions on this point.

3. Article on war criminals proposed by United Kingdom representative has been adopted.

4. With regard to proposed reference in preamble to United Nations which have actively participated in defeat of Germany, United States representative proposed that reference should be to concurrence of such United Nations and not to their authority, on the ground that, whilst such Governments might readily concur in text, they would hesitate to give their full authority to the Allied representatives to act on their behalf. United Kingdom and French representatives were prepared to accept United States amendment on the understanding that concurrence of Governments concerned in eventual text would, in fact, be obtained. Soviet representative at first pressed for word "authority" instead of "concurrence". When United States attitude was explained, he suggested that, if proposed reference in text to actively participating United Nations caused difficulties, it would be best to omit it. Later he expressed willingness to agree to either maintenance or omission of phrase (including "concurrence") as other members of Commission might prefer.

5. United Kingdom representative then proposed that United Nations Governments, who had actively participated in defeat of Germany and should receive text of declaration before signature, should be those European Allied Governments who had already received summary of Instrument of Surrender (my telegram of December 23rd, 1944, Circular D. 1844),† together with Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India and Brazil. Even if preamble were not amended, as had been suggested, E.A.C. could recommend that text of declaration should be communicated before signature to these Governments and that, if time permitted, their concurrence should be obtained. United States and French representatives agreed to list of Governments proposed by United Kingdom representative. Soviet representative, however, pressed that Lublin Government<sup>55</sup> should be included. All three other members of E.A.C. opposed this. In circumstances, conclusion was reached that neither original amendment proposed by United Kingdom representative referring to United Nations Governments which have actively participated in defeat of Germany nor United States variant should be adopted.

6. United States representative suggested that as an alternative each of the four Governments should be free to communicate draft declaration to such other Governments as it might wish. United Kingdom and French representatives supported this suggestion, but Soviet representative resisted it. Question of communication of draft text to other United Nations Governments is, therefore, at present unresolved.

RE: THE DISPOSITION OF CANADIAN MILITARY FORCES AFTER THE CONCLUSION OF HOSTILITIES WITH GERMANY

1. A memorandum on post-hostilities problems was submitted to the Cabinet War Committee on November 24th,<sup>59</sup> describing certain problems which Canada would face in the period immediately after the conclusion of hostilities in Europe. At that meeting the establishment of an Advisory Committee and a Working Committee on Post-Hostilities Problems was approved.<sup>60</sup> These Committees have continued their study of the Allied machinery now taking shape and the plans being prepared in the United Kingdom for the Post-Hostilities period.

2. The plan described in the memorandum of November 24th for the occupation of Germany in three zones, one by United States, one by Soviet, and one by United Kingdom forces, has been approved by the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff and the Ministerial Committee on Armistice Terms and Civil Administration. It will now be used by the United Kingdom representative on the European Advisory Commission (the three-power body set up in London by the Moscow Conference to study Allied policy toward the enemy) as a brief for his guidance in presenting proposals on the matter to the Commission.

3. In the same way proposals for the setting up of a High Commission for Germany have been approved by the United Kingdom Government for consideration by the European Advisory Commission. The proposed High Commission would be subordinate to a Central United Nations organization for all Europe. It would, during the period of military control, be an advisory body to the Commanders-in-Chief on economic and political matters. When military control had been ended, it would become the supreme Allied authority in Germany to direct the armies of occupation, the Control Commission (which will be charged with seeing that the terms of surrender are carried out), agencies dealing with relief, repatriation, etc., and possibly the German central civil administration. According to present plans the High Commission would be composed of representatives of the three Great Powers only.

4. These proposals have been officially forwarded by the Dominions Office to the Canadian Government. The Canadian Government is concerned with the establishment of effective arrangements for post-hostilities control in Europe and in representation on Inter-Allied bodies wherever this may be necessary to serve Canadian interests. It may be considered advisable to claim representation in the control and direction of occupation as a condition of the provision of Canadian forces. If this claim is to be made, it would be better to make it at the time when the plans are being formulated. What is done to organize the control of Germany on an inter-Allied basis is not unlikely to influence the pattern followed in other international bodies. It is to be noted that the Australian and New Zealand Governments, in their recent agreement<sup>61</sup>, declared that their interests should be protected by participation in any armistice commission and by representation at the highest level on all armistice planning and executive bodies.

5. The plans for the occupation of Germany now before the European Advisory Commission envisage four stages of occupation. During the first stage Allied forces will be available in strength. During the second stage, when disarmament gets under way, occupation forces as such will have to be provided. This step should mean a substantial reduction in numbers. It is estimated in these plans, which have the sanction of the United Kingdom Government and the Chiefs of Staff, that the following forces will be needed for the British Commonwealth zone during this period: approximately 12 army divisions, 28 air squadrons,<sup>62</sup> a naval squadron and some shore-based naval personnel. It is estimated that the first two stages may together last two years. The principal problem is to decide whether Canadians can be provided for Stage II. <sup>63</sup>

6. The end of hostilities will presumably find a large number of Canadian air, ground and naval forces in Germany, on the continent of Europe, or in contiguous waters. In view of the continuing shipping problems created by the war against Japan and the need for supplies in Europe, and in the light of the transportation problems encountered after the last war, it may be assumed that all the Canadian air and ground forces could not in any case be repatriated to Canada in less than six months to a year after the cessation of active hostilities. Even if transportation were available, it would be difficult to withdraw promptly all Canadian forces immediately after the "cease fire," as the general forward movement of troops will continue to all parts of Germany to complete the general occupation required in stage one. Moreover, the rate of Canadian withdrawals must, to some extent, be co-ordinated with the withdrawal of United Kingdom and United States forces.

7. It is possible that there will be a considerable overlap between the ending of the operational period (Stage I) and the start of occupation by troops specially selected for occupation duties. Conditions in the occupied zone may make possible the reduction of forces to the garrisons called for in Stage II even before ocean transport can be released for return of all Canadians apart from those selected for occupation duty. Canada might, therefore, be able to provide a larger garrison in the early period of Stage II than would be possible or desirable during, say, the second year. For planning purposes, however, it is considered that the Canadian contribution should be assessed on the basis of the detachment that should be provided for the whole period.

8. The question of the extent to which Canadian forces participate in the occupation of Europe is clearly interconnected with the extent to which Canadian forces participate in the war against Japan. Mr. Churchill in the United Kingdom and Mr. Stimson in the United States have indicated that the demobilization of some of their forces might be expected at the conclusion of the European phase of the war because of the impossibility of engaging them all against Japan. A similar demobilization of some Canadian forces might be expected.

9. Another factor to be taken into consideration is the desirability of co-ordinating plans for post-hostilities military service with plans for demobilization and rehabilitation. In order to make plans, the authorities charged with rehabilitating discharged soldiers must be informed of the probable disposition of forces after hostilities.

This figure is much smaller than the figure of 128 squadrons given by the Right Hon. Harold Balfour in the discussions now in progress in Ottawa<sup>63</sup> as the number required for "policing" at the end of the war against Germany. <sup>63</sup>Sur ces discussions, voir les documents 295 et 296.

On these discussions, see Documents 295 and 296.

10. With these various factors taken into consideration, it is estimated that, of the forces for the British Commonwealth zone mentioned in para. 5 for Stage II, Canada might contribute the following:

Army:—1 Brigade Group—including

3 Battalions Infantry
 1 Field Regiment Artillery
 1 Field Company Engineers
 1 Armoured Car Regiment, etc.
 (Approximately 5,000 all ranks, in all)

Air Force:—7 Squadrons.<sup>64</sup>

(Plus headquarters and maintenance units, roughly 5,000 men, in all)

Navy:—

It is not recommended that Canadian naval participation be on other than a purely token basis.

11. It will be noted also that such a Canadian contribution to the forces required for the British Commonwealth zone would be less than might be assumed on a strict pro rata basis. In assessing the equitable proportion which Canada should contribute, the following factors should be taken into consideration. It is anticipated that Canada will be called upon to bear very considerable non-military commitments for the relief and rehabilitation of Europe. Because of the distance from Canada, Canadian forces would be faced with more difficult problems of administration and maintenance than those from the United Kingdom. These problems include the maintenance of morale, as Canadian troops in Germany could not take regular leaves at home as could the United Kingdom troops.

12. In order to provide troops with the proper intelligence, discipline, and enthusiasm for the difficult duties of occupation, it would be decidedly preferable to secure volunteers, if possible men who wished to embark on careers in the services.

13. The determination of Canadian policy towards the occupation of Germany is related to plans for the post-war permanent establishment of the armed services. The Sub-Committee on Demobilization of the General Advisory Committee on Demobilization and Rehabilitation has recommended—"That steps be taken to determine, before demobilization, the approximate post-war strength of the armed services so that the opportunities for continuing in service may be known to all suitable personnel before demobilization." Plans for providing forces of occupation must be related to plans for permanent post-war establishments, especially in view of the fact that it would be advisable if not essential, to secure volunteers for occupation duty. The question of post-hostilities activities and post-war establishments is also closely related to the problems now arising concerning the disposition of military assets.

14. It is, of course, difficult to make detailed plans for the disposition of Canadian armed forces after the end of hostilities without giving some thought to general plans for international security. The United Kingdom Government has indicated its intention of proposing discussions with the United States, the Soviet Union, and the other Commonwealth Governments on the ways and means of inaugurating a system of general security as contemplated in para. 4 of the Moscow Declaration.<sup>65</sup> Draft proposals for the organization of security have been drawn up in the United Kingdom by the Post-Hostilities Planning Sub-Committee for consideration by the Chiefs of Staff (U.K.). The recent Agreement between Australia and New Zealand of January 21st indicates that these two countries have come to broad conclusions with regard to the organization of the South West and South Pacific and are planning to study and to initiate discussions on the broader aspects of Pacific and general world security. It is probable, therefore, that the Canadian Government will find it desirable before long to express its views on the military organization of world security. It has, indeed, been indicated that this subject will be one of the principal topics on the agenda of the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers.

POST-HOSTILITIES PROBLEMS; REPORT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

22. THE SECRETARY, referring to the discussion at the meeting of November 24th, 1943,<sup>66</sup> submitted a report from the Advisory Committee on Post-hostilities Problems, regarding the disposition of Canadian forces after the conclusion of hostilities with Germany. Copies of the report had been circulated.

The U.K. Chiefs of Staff had approved tentative plans for the occupation of Germany by U.S., Soviet and Commonwealth forces in three zones, and for the establishment of a High Commission for Germany, which would be subordinate to a central United Nations organization for Europe, and which, when military control had been ended, would become the supreme Allied authority in Germany.

These proposals, which had been forwarded officially to the Canadian government, involved questions of the extent and nature of Canadian participation in the proposed occupation of Germany and in the proposed control organization. Plans for occupation envisaged four stages. During the first stage, Canadian troops would still be available in considerable numbers. During the second stage, troops would have to be provided and it had been estimated that the British zone of occupation would require twelve army divisions, twenty-eight air squadrons, a naval squadron, and some shore-based naval personnel.

The extent of Canadian participation would depend upon the nature of the war against Japan and the progress of demobilization plans. In the light of all factors involved it appeared to the Advisory Committee that Canada might contribute: from the Army, a brigade group (approximately 5,000 all ranks); from the Air Force, seven squadrons (totalling some 5,000 men in all); Naval participation on a purely token basis.

The Advisory Committee felt that determination of Canadian policy in respect of the occupation of Germany and demobilization was closely related to plans for the postwar permanent establishments of the Canadian Armed Services. These plans, in turn, were dependent upon general plans for an international security organization which might develop in accordance with the terms of the Moscow Declaration. In this connection, it might be desirable for the government, at an appropriate opportunity, to express their views on the military organization of world security.

23. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS submitted and read a departmental memorandum with regard to planning for the international postwar settlement.

Considerable progress had been made in international civil aviation and international economic policy. In other related fields, however, particularly the development of an international security organization, little or no progress had been made. Implementation of plans already agreed upon, on specific subjects, would, in many instances, depend upon the development of appropriate policies relating to security and defence, and covering the role of the Great Powers, the postwar commitments of Canada, questions of Commonwealth relations and similar important matters.

It was recommended that the Advisory Committee initiate a programme of special studies on these and related topics.

24. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, noted with approval the progress reported by the Advisory Committee and the plans for further study reported by the Under-Secretary.

General Stuart has been asked whether some Canadian officers would be available for an inter-Service planning staff which is to be set up to develop plans and preparations for the British portion of the military sections of the control machinery in Germany after the surrender of Germany.

I think this approach is a move in the right direction, which could be treated entirely as a military matter, with the assurance that appointing a number of officers to this staff would not run counter to Government policy.<sup>67</sup>

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN EUROPEAN FORCES OF OCCUPATION

5. THE SECRETARY, referring to the discussion at the meeting of May 24th,<sup>68</sup> submitted a report of the Working Committee on Post-Hostilities Problems.

The report drew attention to the memorandum submitted to the War Committee on February 11th, by the Advisory Committee on Post-Hostilities Problems, which had suggested tentatively that Canada might contribute, as follows, to the forces of occupation:

Army—1 Brigade Group (approximately 5,000 all ranks).

Air Force—7 Squadrons (some 5,000 men, in all),

Navy—purely token basis.

No changes had been made in these estimates by the Advisory Committee since the date of the memorandum referred to, nor had there been indication of any substantial change in the estimate made by U.K. authorities of the forces likely to be required for occupation.

6. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR pointed out, with respect to the Air Force contribution, that in a recent communication from the U.K. Secretary of State for Air, it had been suggested that the number of R.C.A.F. squadrons should be increased, from Canadian "nominated" squadrons, to a total of fifty-eight. Of these it was proposed that eleven would be employed in Europe and lines of communication.

(Telegram, Dominions Office to U.K. High Commissioner, May 19, 1944, and attached memorandum).<sup>69</sup>

7. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE questioned the basis of the suggested army contribution. It seemed small in relation to that of the Air Force and of other Allied forces. Before any decision were taken on this point he wished to consider the matter with General Stuart and the Chief of the General Staff.

8. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, noted the report submitted and agreed to defer any decision pending further consideration of the Army's contribution by the Minister of National Defence.<sup>70</sup>

CONTROL MACHINERY FOR EUROPE - CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

I. GERMANY

(A) Proposals for Control Machinery

1. The European Advisory Commission has not yet made a recommendation on the control machinery to be set up in Germany. Draft plans however have been prepared by the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet Governments<sup>74</sup> which are at present under consideration in the Commission.

2. The United Kingdom plans are much more detailed than the others. They provide for three successive stages—(I) the period of active hostilities; (II) the period of military government immediately after surrender; and (III) the period of effective allied control. The United States proposals seem to be confined entirely to the period of military government with no mention of a succeeding stage of civilian control. The Soviet memorandum mentions the need to consider a later stage but confines its proposals to the military period (Stage II). The question of Canadian participation in the machinery to be set up must be considered in relation to the changing situations of the three States.

3. As regards Stage I, the period of active hostilities on German soil, which has already commenced, the machinery of military government is in the hands of SCAEF. During this period it will be necessary for the Allied and Soviet Commanders-in-Chief to be the supreme authorities in the areas under their operational control. Arrangements for Canadian participation have already been worked out through normal military channels.

4. As regards Stage II, (i.e., the period following the surrender of Germany), in the light of discussions which have taken place in the European Advisory Commission, the U.K. representative has communicated to the Commission a Revised Draft Agreement on Control Machinery, dated October 3rd, 1944, a copy of which is annexed.† This Draft Agreement, for signature on behalf of the United Kingdom, U.S.A. and U.S.S.R., envisages the setting up of a supreme organ of control over Germany to be called the Control Council and to consist of three Commanders-in-Chief. It is based on an earlier draft submitted by the Soviet government, nearly all of which is incorporated in it together with a number of new clauses. As it is apparently intended that in the control of Germany maximum use should be made of German administrative machinery, the Control Council would be divided into sections which would correspond to the structure of the German administration. Thus the Divisions of the control machinery would correspond for the purposes of disarmament to the German military, naval and air authorities. Likewise there would be economic, political, finance, transportation, internal and manpower Divisions to deal with the activities of the equivalent German civil authorities. The staffs of these Divisions would consist of civilian as well as military personnel, and would include nationals of the United Nations other than the Great Powers "appointed in their personal capacity."

See United States, Foreign Relations of the United States. 1944, Volume 1, Washington, U.S. Government Printing Office, 1966, pp. 155-9, 185-8, 299-301.

5. It has been contemplated in British plans that as soon as conditions warrant a civil authority referred to as a High Commission for Germany should take over from the Military Government as the supreme allied controlling body in Germany. This would begin Stage III, i.e., the later period of effective allied control. According to the Draft Agreement, however, the question of "the Allied organs required for carrying out the functions of control and administration of Germany" in the third stage would be the subject of a separate agreement between the three Powers.

(B) Association of other Governments with Control Machinery

6. Participation in the General Direction of the Control Machinery for Germany

The original British proposal was that the European Allies and Commonwealth Governments contributing occupation forces should form an Advisory Council to the Control Commission. This has been dropped in view of objections by the Soviet and United States representatives on the European Advisory Commission. It is evident that it is the intention of the three governments to insist on a three-power pattern for the direction of the work of control. Even in the Divisions of the control machinery, corresponding to the departments of government, the Draft Agreement proposes that "at the head of each Division there will be three high-ranking officials, one from each Power." The plan for associating other governments now under consideration in the European Advisory Commission envisages that "the necessary consultation with the governments of the other United Nations chiefly interested will be ensured by the appointment by such Governments of military missions (which may include civilian members) to the Control Council having access, through the appropriate channels, to the organs of control." It is doubtful whether an Advisory Council as originally proposed would have been effective in securing a real participation in the direction of German control machinery. The right to appoint a mission to the Control Council would also not give the governments so represented any responsibility for general policy towards Germany. It should however provide a useful means of access to the supreme Allied authority in Germany which would serve to protect the national interests of the countries concerned.

7. Participation of Canadian Personnel in Military and Civil Divisions of the Control Commissions

i. Demilitarization Duties—Through military channels a request has been made for a large number of Canadian staff officers to be used inside the British zone in the disarmament of Germany. It is expected that about five thousand officers would be necessary for the British zone alone and that their duties would last for one year. These officers would form part of the staffs set up in the districts into which the British zone will be divided, charged with the duty of seeing to the disbandment of the German forces, the collection of arms and destruction of fortifications and armament plants within each district. It has been suggested that Canada might provide a share of these officers proportionate to the Canadian contribution to the occupation troops in the British zone, a number which probably would amount to between three and four hundred officers.

ii. Civil Divisions—The United Kingdom authorities also suggested last month that Canada and the other Dominions might provide personnel, both civil and military, suitable for employment as part of the British element of the Control Commissions in Germany and Austria. A detailed list headed “Appointments offered to Dominions personnel” has just been received from London. This divides the appointments into Category A, persons “with special functional qualifications” for senior posts in Berlin and Vienna; Category B, “staff officers with administrative experience” apparently to serve in somewhat lower posts at the two capitals; and Category C, less highly qualified functional personnel for service in provincial military government. The numbers sought in each category from the Dominions are as follows:

	Germany	Austria	Total
Category A (legal, financial, accounting, medical, educational, labour, and other experts, in most cases with experience in the public service)	35	22	57
Category B	8	6	14
Category C (largely for food control, public safety, legal, medical and educational duties)	326	0	326
	369	28	397

In addition, a request has been made for assistance in finding some of the 2700 German-speaking and 250 Russian-speaking interpreters (either military or civil) who will be needed in the British element of the Control Commissions in Germany and Austria.

8. It seems that the Australian, New Zealand and South African authorities have already agreed in principle to the inclusion of personnel in the Civil Divisions of the Control Commission, and have asked for more information, to which request this detailed list of appointments offered is a reply. It is evident that the personnel recruited from the British Dominions would be included in the “British Element” of the Control Commissions with duties of a functional or administrative nature. The selection would be on individual qualifications and final choice would rest with the Control Commissions. No mention is made in the detailed list given to Dominion governments of the provision of staff for the Political Division which would be responsible, among other things, for the direction of the foreign affairs of Germany and the liquidation of the Nazi organization.

C. Canadian participation in the Control Machinery

9. The question of providing Canadian staff officers for duty in the disbandment of German forces and in the disarmament of Germany (paragraph 7 (i) above) is a matter mainly for decision by the appropriate military authorities. Suffice it to say that such participation, taken in conjunction with the contribution of Canada to the occupation forces, may be regarded as a residual obligation in carrying the Canadian war effort against Germany to completion, by participation in the effective liquidation of the Germany military machine.

10. The question of Canadian participation in the higher direction of the central control machinery and in its various civil functions, however, has to be considered in relation to the balance of Canadian interests involved. It is useful, therefore, to seek to list the main Canadian interests in Germany (and in other enemy countries) during the period of Allied control as follows:

1. The pacification of Europe in relation to which the German settlement is central - this is the paramount Canadian interest which is shared with all the other Allied countries.

2. The recognition and assertion of the Canadian right to participate in the formulation and execution of Allied policy towards the defeated enemy.

3. Direct access to information on conditions inside Germany and other enemy countries as a basis for formulating Canadian policy.

4. An appropriate voice in deciding the employment and location of Canadian occupation forces.

5. The protection and repatriation of Canadian prisoners of war and civilians.

6. The furtherance of Canadian economic interests including such matters as the development of Canadian trade and the protection of property of Canadian nationals.

7. The furtherance of other direct Canadian interests in the application of the peace settlement such as the punishment of war crimes committed against Canadians, the settlement of claims for losses inflicted by the enemy on Canadians, and so on.

While the plans of the three great powers are not yet finally formulated their discussions have gone far enough to make it clear that in the main these and other Canadian interests will have to be served mainly by indirect methods, since the three powers will maintain in their own hands the formulation and execution of policy.

11. Considerations to be taken into account.

(a) The central control machinery for Germany will, in fact, become the Government of Germany. If Canadian forces participate in the occupation of Germany and Canadian personnel are allocated to staff duties in this connection, it will be difficult to draw a line between participation in respect of the civil as distinct from the military aspects of this Government, especially as military personnel of all ranks will often be employed on what would usually be regarded as civilian duties.

(b) The primary object of this control machinery is so to direct German affairs through the period of Allied occupation and control that Germany will be unlikely to make war again in the predictable future. This objective accords with the Canadian primary interest of security. Undoubtedly there are a number of Canadians with suitable qualifications who would have a contribution to make to the control of Germany to this end and who could thus serve a principal interest of Canada.

(c) While the protection and advancement of Canadian interests would be the normal function of a Canadian mission in Berlin, this would be facilitated by the inclusion of Canadian personnel in the control machinery. Allied plans and policies will to a large extent emerge from the day-to-day functions of the Control Commissions and although Canadian personnel included in the various Divisions would not be responsible to the Canadian Government, individually they could assist a Canadian mission in Berlin through personal liaison. This would apply, in particular, to the inclusion of a Canadian as a senior officer of the Political Division dealing with German foreign affairs.

(d) It is of consequence to note that the Australian, New Zealand and South African authorities have agreed in principle to the inclusion of personnel from their countries in the staffs of the Control Commissions.

On the other hand:

(e) The proposal of merging Canadian personnel into the "British element" of the Control Commissions would not give the Canadian Government any direct voice in, or responsibility for, the control of Germany. They would, in fact, become part of a British staff which would be under the direction of the United Kingdom Government. This would be less important if the staffs of the Control Commissions were to be recruited so as to include personnel from all the United Nations chosen on the basis of personal qualifications.

(f) It is evident that the direction of the control machinery will be on a three-power basis, with no advisory body or sharing of responsibility with other United Nations. As yet no suggestion appears even for French participation, although this obvious omission may be temporary.

(g) It is open to question whether, in the light of the foregoing, it would be possible to select Canadians of high qualifications, especially from the Civil Service, for the senior appointments suggested. In any case, under the plan final selection would not be in the hands of the Canadian authorities but under the direction of the British Government and the Control Commissions.

II. CONTROL MACHINERY IN OTHER ENEMY STATES

12. The United Kingdom has made proposals for control machinery in other enemy states. It is not known whether proposals have yet been placed before the European Advisory Commission by the United States or Soviet Governments.

13. The United Kingdom has proposed for Austria tripartite control machinery in three stages similar to that proposed for Germany. It is hoped, of course, that the restoration of self-government in Austria will come more speedily than in Germany. For Bulgaria, Hungary and Roumania the United Kingdom suggests somewhat simpler machinery consisting of a tripartite Allied Mission in Sofia, Budapest and Bucharest with a tripartite disarmament commission attached. The control machinery in Italy, recently rechristened the Allied Commission with the word "Control" dropped, may continue to exist for some time, with a gradual elimination of its authority through transfer of power to the Italian government.

14. Canada is undoubtedly interested in the treatment of these other enemy countries in Europe. Canadians are now serving among the technical personnel of the Allied Commission in Italy and it is not improbable that other Canadians, because of their qualifications, may find themselves on similar bodies in the other countries.

15. The fact that the United States will probably not share in the control of Southeastern Europe might cause the United Kingdom to seek assistance from Canada in that area. Whether or not we provide forces of occupation, Canadian interests in this area are indirect and do not seem to justify the seeking of any share in the direction of policy. Specific Canadian interests can probably be handled by diplomatic representation in one or more of the Balkan and other Eastern European capitals. As for Italy, it was previously decided that Canadian interests did not justify pressing for a Canadian seat on the Advisory Council for Italy, even though substantial Canadian forces were serving in Italy. The question of establishing a Canadian diplomatic mission in Rome in the near future is outside the scope of this paper.

III. UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR EUROPE

16. Earlier British proposals for control machinery in Europe envisaged as the chief political agency a United Nations Commission for Europe with a steering committee of the Great Powers and a council on which other European Allies and the Dominions, if they contributed to occupation, would be represented. For some time little mention has been made of this proposal, although it was accepted as a basis for further discussion at the Moscow Conference a year ago and was included as an appendix to the United Kingdom proposals submitted at the Dumbarton Oaks discussions. It seems likely that little more will be heard of this idea. It is possible, however, that when the European Allied Governments are firmly established in their homelands their pressure may make it necessary to develop the European Advisory Commission into a more comprehensive organ. Another possibility which was given some consideration at Dumbarton Oaks was the assumption by the new world organization of authority over the control machinery in Europe.

IV. CONCLUSIONS

1. It is not possible as yet to make more than tentative recommendations on the attitude to be adopted by the Canadian Government towards association with the control machinery in Germany. On the general policy to be pursued no final recommendations have yet been made by the European Advisory Commission, and what is known at present in Ottawa consists chiefly of draft proposals which have been placed before the Commission, supplemented by information from various sources on the attitude taken by the three Governments represented on the Commission. The negotiations, however, have advanced to a point at which it is reasonable to assume that Germany will be placed under three-power military control (with the possible addition of France as a fourth partner), and that other Allied Governments are looked upon as auxiliaries useful chiefly as sources of manpower for the work of control.

2. It is recommended that in any event plans should be made for the establishment of a Canadian mission in Berlin shortly after the defeat of Germany. It will probably be desirable in the first instance for this mission to be headed by an officer of a rank not lower than Major-General although later the chief of the mission might be a civilian with the personal rank of Ambassador. Canadian contact with the Control Council would be conducted through this mission.

3. With regard to the specific requests for Canadian personnel for inclusion in the Control Commissions, it is recommended that the request made by the United Kingdom Government, through military channels, for the selection of staff officers to undertake demilitarization duties within the British zone of occupation should be accepted, since this task is an essential part of the duty of occupation forces.

4. With regard to the request for the provision of civilian and military personnel to assist in staffing the British element of the control machinery, it is recommended that the Canadian Government should not at present undertake any commitment in this respect, but that the Canadian Government should place no obstacle in the way of Canadians with suitable qualifications seeking such employment. A number of these will doubtless be found among the Canadian officers who have passed special courses in Civil Affairs and there will be many others with expert qualifications in various branches of wartime administration whose services can be dispensed with by the Canadian Government on the cessation of hostilities in Europe. There are also likely to be trained interpreters with the Canadian forces in Europe and Censorship personnel in Canada who would wish to volunteer for duty in Germany.

5. The procedure for recruiting such personnel is not clearly defined in the information received from the United Kingdom authorities. Their suggestion, however, appears to be that a process of preliminary selection should be made by the Canadian Government, while the choice would ultimately rest with agencies of the Control Council. The United Kingdom Government are, however, building up their own element in advance of the establishment of the Control Council and presumably Canadians acceptable to them would be reasonably certain of employment in Germany. It is recommended that the Canadian Government should at present confine itself to furnishing such information as may be available on the qualifications of individual Canadians seeking such employment.

6. It is recommended that the Canadian Government should not seek to participate directly in the control of other enemy territories in Europe and should confine itself to the protection of its interests through the appointment of diplomatic missions in Allied capitals and perhaps in Rome. Should Canadian troops be stationed in Austria for a period after German defeat, consideration should be given to the establishment of a mission accredited to the Control Council in Austria.

7. The presence in Germany when fighting ends of large Canadian forces, some of which are expected to remain for a considerable period on occupation duty, will inevitably involve the Canadian Government directly in the problems of the European settlement. For this reason and for other reasons of policy, if pressure from European Allies or from other sources results in the expansion of the European Advisory Commission or the creation of a new political body such as a United Nations Council for Europe, it is recommended that the Canadian Government should seek direct representation.

- A. D. P. Heeney, Clerk of the Privy Council.
- Rear Admiral C. C. Jones, Chief of the Naval Staff.

1. Control Machinery for Europe: Canadian participation

Mr. Heeney reported that the Minister of National Defence for Air had passed on to him a telegram from Air Marshal Breadner† concerning the participation of the R.C.A.F. in control duties in Germany. Air Marshal Breadner recommended Canadian participation but pointed out that the present plans limited Canadians to duties with the rank of Wing Commander or under. Air Marshal Breadner's telegram outlined the numbers of officers of various ranks required for positions in Germany.

Mr. Wrong referred to the Working Committee's Paper on control machinery (C.P.H.P. (44) Report 6 (Final)). He said that it might be necessary to take a strong line over plans for the control of Germany at a later stage but he did not think the time had yet come. It was not certain as yet what would emerge from the discussions in the European Advisory Commission, but the trend seemed definitely to favour tight three-Power control and there was probably little that Canada could do to alter the pattern. The Soviet attitude was particularly intransigent on this subject. At present the European Allies knew much less about these plans than did Canada, but it might be expected that they would protest strongly when they were informed.

Mr. Wrong continued that he envisaged three stages in Canadian participation in the treatment of Germany. The first was the wartime stage in which Canada could, because of military necessities, accept Great Power direction. In the second stage, at the conclusion of hostilities, this acceptance became more difficult; to some extent the control of Germany in the second stage would still be a phase of military operations, but new problems of a political nature would be involved. In the third stage the situation would be still more difficult as the military phase would have ended. The Soviet Government seemed to wish to continue three-Power control into the third stage.

Dr. Clark expressed the view that on the basis of war effort the Canadian part in the defeat of Germany was probably greater than that of France. The Canadian claim to a proper share in the direction of policy was very strong. At a later stage the Canadian interest in policy towards Germany would be less pressing than that of the immediate neighbours of Germany. If Canada was to make a stand it would be advisable therefore that she do so now. Mr. Heeney said that after the end of hostilities other tests than military participation such as geographical proximity would be of the greatest importance in judging which countries should share in the control of Germany. The necessity was pointed out of attempting to calculate the stand of Canadian public opinion several years hence when planning to what extent Canada should become involved in commitments connected with the control and occupation of Germany.

In answer to a question from Dr. Clark as to whether the Canadian Government had made any protests about the trend towards three-Power control, Mr. Wrong stated that Canada was in a difficult position as the Government received its information confidentially from the United Kingdom Government and was therefore not able to express its views except to London. In June 1943, when the United Kingdom Government had first informed the Canadian Government of the nature of its proposals for control machinery in Europe, the Canadian Government had intimated in reply that Canadian participation in occupation must be related to Canadian participation in the control policy.<sup>75</sup> Canada, however, had been jockeyed out of this position by the unwillingness of the Soviet and United States representatives in the European Advisory Commission to agree to other than a three-Power arrangement. Dr. Clark expressed the view that Canadian protests should be placed on record at an early stage. If the Soviet Union was the only stumbling block in the situation, which he was inclined to doubt, should not the Canadian Government express its views to the Soviet Government—with some reference to Canadian provision of supplies under Mutual Aid?

As for the three governments represented in the E.A.C., Mr. Wrong said that the Russians took the strongest stand, objecting even to the provision of face-saving formulas. He did not think that there was a solid opinion one way or the other in Great Britain or the United States. Undoubtedly, however, the higher authorities were impressed with the convenience of three-Power control.

Dr. Clark asked if the proposed Canadian Mission in Berlin would take the place of any diplomatic or consular representation. Mr. Wrong said that it would do so during the military period, as there would be no German authorities with whom governments could treat directly.

Discussion followed as to whether the Canadian view should be expressed at this stage or whether it should await the United Nations meeting to discuss the Dumbarton Oaks proposals. Mr. Wrong said that the United States was pressing for an early conference. The Canadian Government would be forced, therefore, to formulate its policy on this matter and also press for support for its views.

There was general agreement at the meeting that the specific proposals to provide personnel for service in the control of Germany could be handled without prejudicing the Canadian objection to the three-Power arrangements. It was agreed that plans for Canadian participation in the occupation of Germany would probably go forward in any case; there would be large Canadian forces in Europe after the surrender of Germany which would have to wait a considerable period for transportation home, and it would be better for their morale to employ these men in occupation duties rather than to hold them in camps merely awaiting repatriation.

The Committee decided that it would be advisable to place before the Government immediately the proposals for employment of Canadian personnel which had been received from the United Kingdom Government. Mr. Wrong stated that the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Ottawa had recently forwarded a request† for the selection of a suitable Canadian to serve as Chief of Transportation of the Control Commission for Austria, and it was to be expected that there would be a number of further requests of this kind. It was important to establish a method of handling all such requests.

It was agreed to recommend that the Government should not undertake to furnish personnel for the "British element" of the control machinery, but that assistance might be given in the selection of individual Canadians by the United Kingdom authorities along the lines adopted for the selection of Canadians to serve with UNRRA. It was agreed that it should be made clear to the United Kingdom authorities that the reason for not accepting a commitment to furnish personnel was that the Canadian Government could not accept the principle involved.

It was agreed also that a distinction should be made between the personnel required for demilitarization duties and those required for the Civil Divisions of the control machinery. The former were required for specific duties which were not likely to last more than a year. These duties were really a continuation of military operations, and those engaged in them might be considered part of the forces of occupation; detailed arrangements with respect to numbers, ranks, conditions of service, and so on could be settled between the service authorities concerned. The work of the Civil Divisions, however was to carry on the government of Germany, a matter which involved the question of general policy. In agreeing to provide forces for demilitarization, emphasis should be placed upon the limitations of the commitments.

The Committee approved the Report of the Working Committee for submission to the Cabinet War Committee, with the additional recommendation from the Advisory Committee that in communicating to the United Kingdom Government the proposals in conclusions (4) and (5) on page 7 of the Report there should be set forth the general reasons of policy which made the Canadian Government unwilling to undertake a commitment to provide Canadian personnel as part of the British element of the Control Commission for Germany and Austria.

It was recommended also that for purposes of convenience a summary of the memorandum should be attached.

Mr. Heenev asked in conclusion if the telegram from Air Marshal Breadner referred to at the opening of the meeting should be passed on to the Working Committee. It was agreed, however, that this was a matter which was being handled by the Services and that the Minister of National Defence for Air might be informed that the matter had been reported to the Advisory Committee and that the details were being handled by the Service Departments.

CONTROL MACHINERY FOR EUROPE; CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

11. THE SECRETARY submitted a report of the Post-hostilities Advisory Committee, copies of which had been circulated.

The report, after describing the nature of proposals for control machinery, analyzed the probable position with respect to the association of other governments with the control mechanism, set forth possible methods for Canadian participation in so far as Germany was concerned, and concluded as follows:

(1) until the European Advisory Commission had made an agreed proposal to the governments of the U.S.S.R., the United States and the United Kingdom, only tentative recommendations on the Canadian position could be made;

(2) whatever the form of control machinery, a Canadian mission should be set up in Berlin soon after the defeat of Germany;

(3) the request for personnel for demilitarization duties should be accepted;

(4) and (5) no commitment should at present be accepted by the Canadian government to provide personnel for Civil divisions; no obstacle should be placed in the way of Canadians accepting such employment, but the government should confine itself at present to furnishing information on the qualifications of Canadian candidates;

(6) the Canadian government should not seek to participate directly in the control of other enemy countries in Europe, but should protect its interests by establishing some diplomatic missions in Eastern Europe;

(7) the Canadian government should seek representation in a United Nations Commission for Europe if such a body were established.

(P.H.P. Advisory Committee's report, Oct. 26, 1944—C.W.C. document 890)<sup>76</sup>

12. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS explained the general nature of the problem of associating the smaller United Nations with the proposed control arrangements. Recent developments, including particularly arrangements for participation by France in the work of the European Advisory Commission, indicated that changes in the pattern of control might be anticipated and more opportunity afforded for participation by the European allies.

13. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE expressed agreement with the conclusions set out in the report submitted.

With regard to tripartite control, it would not be a practicable arrangement to have all of the United Nations participate equally in the control machinery, nor would division into a large number of zones make for efficient operation. Canada's primary interest would be in the earliest possible liquidation of Germany's war potential and, for this reason, she should support the simplest means to that end. Arrangements should certainly be made for the appointment of a Canadian mission which would be military at first and eventually civil.

14. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved the report submitted.

Ottawa, November 15, 1944

Dear Brigadier Roome,

In connection with the visit of Major General S. W. Kirby, Deputy Commissioner (Military Planning) of the United Kingdom Nucleus Group of the Control Commission for Germany, and the discussion which took place at the meeting of the Post-Hostilities Working Committee, Monday, November 13th, on the question of the participation of Canadian personnel in this Control machinery, I attach a note prepared for the information of Major General Kirby summarizing the present position. You will observe that the note suggests, informally, that the next step might be for the United Kingdom to make an official approach to the Canadian Government as a result of which detailed arrangements could be concluded by the Department of External Affairs and the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office in Ottawa, or in certain cases between the Service authorities concerned.

I should be glad if you would indicate whether this note is satisfactory from the point of view of your Department.

Yours sincerely,

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIANS IN CONTROL MACHINERY FOR GERMANY

The present situation appears to be as follows:

1. The provision of staff and Civil Affairs officers by the Canadian Army and R.C.A.F. for employment on disarmament and military government duties within the British zone of occupation is regarded as part of the function of occupation forces. Numbers employed, method of selection, terms of service, etc., are matters for discussion through Service channels on the general understanding that officers so employed remain subject to the demobilization regulations adopted in Canada and are not required to engage themselves for a further term of service.

Similar letters were also sent to the Directors of Plans of the Air Force and Navy. All indicated their approval.

2. In addition the United Kingdom authorities desire to secure the service of qualified Canadians, both military and civil, for duty with the British element of the Civil Divisions of the tripartite control machinery. The Canadian Government will place no obstacle in the way of Canadians seeking such employment, the task of selection remaining a matter for the United Kingdom authorities. The Canadian Government is ready to furnish such information as may be available to it on the qualifications of individuals and also to cooperate in arranging the establishment of a method of recruiting personnel in Canada if this is desired by the United Kingdom authorities. In the case of persons volunteering for civil posts, this may necessitate the establishment of some central clearing agency in Canada which could receive applications and collect information. Such an agency might be attached to the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office in Ottawa where it would be in a position to secure advice and assistance from Government Departments and from private firms and individuals. In addition the aid of British technical missions in Canada and the United States could be employed.

3. In the case of persons now in the armed forces whose services are desired for employment in the Civil Divisions, certain special arrangements will doubtless prove necessary to facilitate the selection of officers volunteering for this work.

4. As censorship tapers off in Canada, there will become available a considerable number of experienced civil personnel who have long been engaged particularly in the censorship of incoming and outgoing German mail. It is believed that nearly 200 persons of this class would be ready to volunteer for service in Germany; among them are to be found persons speaking virtually every European language.

5. Consideration will have to be given to the means whereby the needs of the United Kingdom authorities can best be brought to the attention of the Canadian public in general and also members of the Canadian forces. Such publicity can best be carried out in the name of the United Kingdom Government with the cooperation of Canadian agencies concerned.

This note has been prepared in the Department of External Affairs for the information of Major General Kirby before his departure from Ottawa. Until confirmed it is to be regarded as informal. It is suggested that it would be of assistance if the United Kingdom Government were to make a general approach to the Canadian Government, as a result of which detailed arrangements could be concluded between the Department of External Affairs and the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office in Ottawa or in certain cases between the Service authorities concerned.

ARMY; PARTICIPATION IN EUROPEAN OCCUPATION

12. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE recommended that approval be now given to the Army proposal.

The Canadian occupation group would comprise approximately 25,000 all ranks, organized as an infantry formation and made up of units drawn from various parts of Canada. Personnel would be selected from volunteers and where necessary, by detailing others with low priority for demobilization. The force would be allocated to the British zone of occupation and the commitment would be specifically for Stage II, that is the period of adjustment and disarmament immediately following the operational occupation of Germany. Thereafter, personnel would be returned to Canada with all possible speed.

A further explanatory note had been circulated.

2. Provision of Occupation Forces in Europe

At the Chairman's request Mr. Wrong outlined the problem arising out of the decision made at a meeting of the Cabinet War Committee on December 11th, when approval was given to the recommendation of the Minister of National Defence for a Canadian Army occupation group of 25,000 (all ranks) to be allocated to the British zone of occupation in Stage 2, and Air Force participation to the extent of eleven squadrons.<sup>79</sup> One question to be decided was whether this decision should be communicated inter-governmentally to the United Kingdom as well as through Service channels, and whether, in connection with any inter-governmental communication, comment should be made on Canadian participation in the direction of the control machinery for Germany.

Mr. Heeney added in explanation that the Chief of the General Staff had asked in the War Committee whether C.M.H.Q. should be informed of the War Committee's decision, or whether the United Kingdom Government would first be informed by official communication to the Dominions Office. After discussion with Mr. Wrong it had been decided that the matter should be discussed in the Advisory Committee, particularly with a view to considering whether the War Committee decision should be associated with a more comprehensive statement of the attitude of the Canadian Government regarding its relation to the control machinery for Germany.

Mr. Wrong, referring to the use of the term "Stage 2," in the decision of the War Committee, suggested that this might require clearer definition, as the phrase was used in at least two different senses. In financial negotiations with the United Kingdom Government, it had been understood that "Stage 2" referred to the period between the conclusion of hostilities with Germany and the end of the war with Japan. On the other hand, in documents received from the Post-Hostilities Planning Staff in London, particularly in the report on the military occupation of Germany,† approved by the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff and by the Ministerial Committee on Armistice Terms and Civil Administration in December 1943 for submission to the European Advisory Commission, "Stage 2" had been defined as "the period between the date on which the work of disarmament begins and the time when, although disarmament and the destruction of war industries are not complete, yet such substantial progress has been made that Germany has been deprived of the capacity for any effective military action." Stage 1, the period of active hostilities on German soil and immediately after the "cease fire," and Stage 2, according to this document, might be completed within some two years. Moreover, Mr. Kirkpatrick who, it was understood, was to be head of the Political Division of the British element of the Control Commission for Germany, had suggested in conversation with Mr. Ritchie in London on October 2nd that the period of military Government in Germany "might well last eighteen months." It was therefore, important that in making any comments to the United Kingdom Government we should make it clear for what period the Canadian occupation forces in Germany were being committed.

Mr. Heeney suggested that it would be difficult to propose a precise time limit as the period would depend partly on the rate of repatriation of Canadian forces which, in turn, would be affected by limitations imposed by shipping and also the rate of repatriation of U.S. forces. The rate of Canadian repatriation should undoubtedly be pari passu with that of U.S. forces. There was also the question of the substitution of French, Belgian and Dutch troops for Canadian forces in occupation duties in the British zone. These Allies seemed to be anxious to participate and this would also affect the Canadian commitment.

Mr. Robertson suggested that, having in mind these factors affecting the rate of repatriation, it might be well to suggest a scaled commitment with an occupation group larger than the 25,000 approved by the War Committee for the first period of, say, six months, which would gradually be reduced during the subsequent period of eighteen months. It would be necessary, however, for this purpose, to have more precise information regarding United States plans of repatriation and the possible substitution of Allied forces for Canadian occupation troops in Germany. If this information was available, it would be possible to make a time-table for the purposes of Canadian commitment.

Mr. Clark suggested that it would be easier to get volunteers for the Canadian occupation forces for a fixed time, if a specific time-table could be set, and a graduated withdrawal of Canadian occupation forces could be arranged.

Mr. Heeney said that it would be difficult to ask for reconsideration of the 25,000 occupation group authorized by the War Committee, especially as there were so many unknown factors governing the desirable rate of repatriation. He agreed that we should be as specific as possible on the time commitment. Mr. Clark and the Chief of the Air Staff were in agreement with this view.

Mr. Wrong recalled that the Canadian Government had agreed to a short-term use of Canadian forces for occupation duties in Italy and Austria,<sup>80</sup> and that the use of these forces also depended on the rate of repatriation from the Mediterranean area. Repatriation from both theatres of war, therefore, depended mainly on the shipping available. He suggested that it might be desirable to obtain information on whether Canadian merchant vessels converted to carry troops on their return voyages might be used at our discretion to supplement troop ships, especially for repatriation of Canadians from the Mediterranean area, under the existing commitments to continue to pool shipping after the Armistice.

As regards the political position of Canada in relation to control machinery, Mr. Wrong said that there had been no progress. Recent indications pointed to the fact that the three Power pattern was being more clearly defined and articulated. The most lively issue at the present time in this connection was the part to be played by France. A letter just received from Canada House,† moreover, indicated that in the period of military government at least, authority was to be concentrated definitely in military hands. It appeared that SHAEF was anxious to hold on to its own authority for an indeterminate period after the close of hostilities, rather than give way as soon as possible to the tripartite Control Council after the close of hostilities as had been expected. There seemed, therefore, no prospect of securing any effective Canadian association with the direction of the control machinery and this was a further argument for limiting the commitment of Canadian forces.

Mr. Robertson referred to the United Kingdom plan to allow wives and families to follow the United Kingdom occupation troops to Germany. Mr. Wrong explained that this was in accord with the policy of avoiding any fraternization between the occupation troops and the population. This would, however, raise a further difficulty with regard to the Canadian occupation group.

Mr. Heeney suggested that, in view of the considerations which had been mentioned, it might be desirable to avoid a firm commitment for Canadian participation in the occupation of Germany beyond the end of the next fiscal year, the position then to be reviewed. This was agreed.

Mr. Robertson suggested that the Joint Staff Mission in Washington should be asked to find out what the U.S. authorities intended doing in regard to the following questions:

(a) whether a voluntary method was to be applied in securing personnel for occupation duties;

(b) whether consideration has been given to allowing wives and families of U.S. personnel on occupation duty to go to Germany;

(c) the repatriation plans for U.S. personnel from the European theatre of operations.

In connection with the latter, Mr. Robertson stressed that U.S. and Canadian forces personnel would probably be competing for the same shipping and it would be desirable to come to an agreement with the United States authorities in some pooling arrangements. A large portion of the Canadians had been overseas longer than the U.S. personnel and this made it all the more desirable that there should be no discrimination. It was agreed that an enquiry on these lines should be made through the Canadian Joint Staff Mission in Washington.

In referring to the question of Canadian participation in the direction of the control machinery, it was agreed that in stating that the Canadian Government would accept firm commitment to provide occupation troops for Germany for the next fiscal year only, mention should be made in any telegram sent to the U.K. Government that among other reasons this decision was affected by the fact that no provision had been made for effective participation on the part of Canada in the direction of policy under the proposals for the control machinery for Germany.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN FORCES IN EUROPE; OCCUPATION OF GERMANY

16. THE SECRETARY, referring to the decisions taken at the meeting of December 11th, submitted and read a draft telegram to the U.K. government regarding the Canadian Army and Air Forces to be made available, after the defeat of Germany, for occupation duty.

It had been thought desirable by the Advisory Committee on Post-Hostilities Problems to put some time limit upon the availability of Canadian personnel, after which the position would be reviewed.

17. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved the draft telegram submitted, for despatch.

TOP SECRET. We have given a good deal of consideration to the question of the provision of Canadian forces for occupational duty in Germany after the defeat of that country has been achieved. You will recall that this matter has been referred to in several telegrams between us during the last eighteen months. It was also discussed with Mr. Churchill and the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff on the occasion of the Quebec Conference last September.<sup>82</sup> There has been further consultation through Service channels. The particular matter of the possible use of Canadian troops for temporary occupation in Austria and Northeast Italy was recently dealt with in an interchange of telegrams ending with your No. 207 of 29th November.<sup>83</sup>

2. We have now decided to provide, for a period yet to be determined, one Army occupational group of approximately 25,000 all ranks for duty within the British zone of occupation in Germany and eleven R.C.A.F. squadrons to be stationed partly in Germany and partly in the United Kingdom. Both the War Office and the Air Ministry have been advised to this effect through Service channels and further details of our undertaking under this head can continue to be worked out in this way. There are however some overall considerations of policy which we feel should be communicated intergovernmentally.

5. We hold most firmly to the view that, upon the cessation of hostilities with Germany, Canadian forces should be repatriated from the European theatres as quickly as circumstances will permit. A noticeable number of our troops are now in their sixth year of service overseas. A considerable proportion have now served three years abroad. In any event, the average length of overseas service of Canadian forces must be considerably higher than that of the United States forces. Consequently when fighting against Germany has ended there will be a natural and insistent demand here in Canada, as well as amongst our troops abroad, that they should be brought home in the shortest possible time and certainly with no less despatch than that with which American forces will be returned to the United States.

4. We are well aware that the difficult problem of sea transportation will continue for a considerable time after the defeat of Germany and that the early repatriation of all our forces, no matter how much this will be desired, will not be possible of achievement. Nevertheless, we must say that it would be both unwise on our part and misleading to you were we, at this stage, definitely to undertake to furnish occupational forces for the whole period of military control in Germany.

5. In these circumstances we take the view that our present decision should be reviewed towards the end of the next fiscal year, i.e., prior to 31st March, 1946. By that time much that now is hypothetical should be clearer. We should by then be better able to assess the length of the period of full military control of Germany, the strength of occupational forces which can be provided by our European allies, and the requirements of the Japanese war for manpower and shipping. It is uncertain, moreover, for how long after the fighting ends it will be politically possible to provide Canadian occupation forces in view of the fact that the plans for the control of Germany give the Canadian Government no voice in the direction of policy.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

As you will know, Major General Kirby, the representative of the Control Commission for Germany (British element), visited Ottawa recently and had some discussion with the Department of External Affairs regarding the question of employment of Canadians in the control machinery for Germany.

During General Kirby's visit, a note which had been prepared in the Department of External Affairs on this subject was communicated to him for his information<sup>84</sup> with the understanding that, until confirmed, it was to be regarded as informal. The note suggested that it would be of assistance if the United Kingdom Government were to make a general approach to the Canadian Government as a result of which detailed arrangements could be concluded between the Department of External Affairs and the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office in Ottawa.

I have now been asked to communicate to you the enclosed revised list of appointment in the Civil Divisions† giving an indication of the appointments for which it is suggested Canadian candidates might wish to be considered.

To assist in consideration of this matter, I also enclose a memorandum† on the formation and progress of the Control Commission for Germany (British element), together with a staff memorandum† regarding the relationship between Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Force and the United States and British elements in the Control Commission-Council for Germany.

In accordance with the suggestion contained in the Department of External Affairs note of the 14th November last, I have now been asked to enquire whether the Canadian Government will be prepared, as indicated in the note, to sanction and assist in the recruitment of Canadian candidates for appointment to the Control Commission for Germany (British element), on the understanding that the actual selection of candidates as well as payment of the personnel employed will remain the responsibility of the United Kingdom Government.

If you would be good enough to let me know whether the Canadian Government are prepared to act in the matter on this basis, I would suggest that the detailed arrangements for appointment and recruitment of Canadians

Ottawa, January 31, 1945

RECORD OF CONVERSATION AT DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
BETWEEN MR. STEPHEN HOLMES AND MR. J.J.S. GARNER OF THE OFFICE OF THE UNITED KINGDOM HIGH COMMISSIONER AND MR. WRONG, MAJOR GENERAL MAURICE POPE, MR. RITCHIE AND
MR. IGNATIEFF, WITH REGARD TO EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIANS IN THE CONTROL MACHINERY FOR GERMANY<sup>85</sup>

The discussion took place on the basis of the memorandum prepared for the information of General Kirby during his visit to Ottawa dated November 14th, and the letter from Mr. MacDonald to Mr. Robertson dated January 15th. In this letter it was proposed that the Canadian Government should "sanction and assist in the recruitment of Canadian candidates for appointment to the Control Commission for Germany (British element), on the understanding that the actual selection of candidates as well as payment of the personnel employed will remain the responsibility of the United Kingdom Government." Annexed to the High Commissioner's letter was a list of appointments in the Civil Divisions of the Control Commission for Germany (British element) giving an indication of the appointments which might be available to Canadian candidates.

Mr. Wrong stated that the memorandum prepared for General Kirby's information had been based on approved Canadian Government policy. While there would appear to be no difficulty in reaching agreement with the United Kingdom Government in principle on the basis of the proposal in the High Commissioner's letter, it had been found, in the time which had elapsed since General Kirby's visit, that there were difficulties in working out the practical arrangements which it involved. These difficulties had led to discussions of this matter with the Canadian Services and it had been decided that in order that there should be an identical understanding on the procedure to be followed as between the Services, the whole question should be brought to the attention of the Chiefs of Staff Committee. The Chiefs of Staff, it was proposed, might restate Canadian policy in the light of recent developments and get into touch with the Joint Staff Mission in London, who would be invited to give their comments and furnish any additional information required to clarify any points in doubt.

The meeting took place on January 30.

Mr. Wrong then referred to the long list of possible appointments which was annexed to the High Commissioner's letter of January 15th. He said that he was at a loss to know how assistance could effectively be granted to the United Kingdom authorities in finding suitable Canadian candidates for these posts. Such persons might be in the Canadian forces overseas and in Canada, in the employment of civil departments of the Canadian Government or the Provinces, or in private employment in Canada. If the list were simply given to the Civil Service Commission they would not be likely to be able to help. Circulation to Government departments in Ottawa might produce numerous enquiries, but especially since the list contained very little indication concerning remuneration and terms of service, it could not be expected that useful results would follow. The Department of External Affairs would only be able to refer enquiries to the High Commissioner's Office, which might be faced with a large volume of correspondence and many requests for interviews from unsuitable candidates. It seemed most likely that the best initial source of candidates would be from Canadian Service personnel, particularly those overseas. This would apply, for example, to Canadian Civil Affairs officers, whose services as such would presumably terminate when the Control Commission took over from SHAEF.

After discussion it was agreed that the following procedure seemed likely to be the best way of dealing with the list of appointments enclosed with the High Commissioner's letter:

(a) as far as possible candidates for the positions should be selected from Canadian personnel of the three Services serving overseas volunteering for these duties;

(b) if persons with expert qualifications were still urgently required from Canada, Canadian Departments, both Service and Civil, might be asked to assist and efforts might also be made to discover individual civilian candidates through various channels;

(c) in the first instance the matter would have to be discussed by the Canadian Chiefs of Staff Committee in order that a common procedure should be adopted by the three Canadian Services, and the Canadian Joint Staff Mission in London would be advised of the most recent developments in connection with the problem;

(d) thereafter an approach might be made by the United Kingdom authorities to the Canadian Joint Staff Mission with a view to circularizing members of the Canadian Services overseas for suitable volunteers.

As regards the government policy involved, Mr. Wrong stated that he thought it could be assumed:

(i) that the Canadian occupation group in Germany would include the necessary staff for discharging normal occupation duties in the area occupied by Canadian troops;

(ii) that the Canadian Government was willing to contribute as its responsibility a number of Canadian officers for demilitarization duties in the British zone of occupation equivalent to the proportion of Canadian troops to British in the zone of occupation.

(iii) that as regards recruitment of Canadian candidates for the British element of the Control Commission for Germany, the policy of the Canadian Government was as stated in the High Commissioner's letter, that it would sanction and assist in the recruitment of Canadian candidates on the understanding that the actual selection and payment of the personnel employed would remain the responsibility of the United Kingdom Government.

Ottawa, February 7, 1945

SECRET. Your telegram No. 146.† Recruitment for Control Commission for Germany.

1. As stated in my telegram No. 124† matter was taken up by letter with D.E.A.<sup>87</sup> on the lines suggested in Stephenson's<sup>88</sup> letter of 30.12.† Pending a reply to this letter it was suggested that detailed arrangements should be discussed between representatives of D.E.A. and this office. Accordingly, members of my staff were invited to attend meeting at D.E.A. this week.

2. D.E.A. representatives pointed out that while there would be no difficulty in reaching agreement in principle on the basis suggested there were likely to be difficulties in working out the practical arrangements involved. For example the detailed lists contained in Stephenson's letter gave no information concerning remuneration and terms of service. They thought we should be faced with difficulties in finding suitable candidates in Canada at the present time. On the other hand there were a number of Canadian service personnel particularly those serving overseas who would no doubt be available for posts of this kind. It seemed, therefore, that best course would be initially to obtain candidates from volunteers among personnel of the three services serving overseas. This would cover Canadian Civil Affairs Officers whose services as such would presumably terminate when Control Commission took over from SHAEF. Such a course would have following advantages:

- (1) It would be likely to provide most suitable and readily available candidates for at least majority of posts involved.
- (2) Full information as to exact requirements of Control Commission and as to conditions of appointment would be available on the spot in London.
- (3) It would ensure that arrangements were handled through the one channel.

3. The Canadian Chiefs of Staff are now considering the question to ensure a common procedure in the availability of candidates from all three Services. Appropriate instructions will then be issued to Canadian Joint Staff Mission, London, with whom the Control Commission should conduct arrangements for recruitment.

4. Suggested procedure would not of course preclude special arrangements in cases where exact requirements of Control Commission were known. For instance Canadian authorities would be willing to advise Colonel Neate with regard to recruitment of interpreters. They would also be willing to invite Canadian Departments both service and civil to help in finding individual civil candidates if persons with expert qualifications were still urgently required from Canada after candidates had been sought from Canadian Joint Staff Mission. They feel, however, that circulation of lists of posts, such as enclosure to Stephenson's letter, among Government Departments, and perhaps provincial authorities, would not be productive of satisfactory results.

OCCUPATION OF BERLIN; CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

15. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE reported that 21st Army Group had enquired whether the Canadian Army would participate in the occupation of Berlin by the forces of the United Nations.

A reply had been sent stating that it was considered desirable that the Canadian Army should participate, both on national grounds and to give Canadian troops the satisfaction of having a token detachment present at the entry into the enemy capital. It was assumed that this detachment would not be of a permanent nature, and it was desired that Canadian command units so detailed should be returned to Canadian command as soon as the purpose of this participation had been accomplished.

Approval in principle had, therefore, been given to discuss the matter on these lines and Canadian Military Headquarters had been asked to submit definite proposals for consideration.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN CONTROL MACHINERY IN GERMANY

The Chairman explained that this question mainly involved the position of R.C.A.F. personnel in relation to the Control Commission for Germany. The general question of Canadian participation in the Control Commission for Germany had been reviewed at the Thirty-ninth meeting of the Working Committee to decide whether the policy set forth in the paper "Control Machinery in Europe—Canadian Participation" (C.P.H.P. (44) Report 6 (Final), October 19th), which had been approved by the War Committee, needed revision. It was recommended, at this meeting, that no additional information had come to light to justify a revision, but that it should be suggested to the Chiefs of Staff that they might agree to identical procedures for the three Canadian Services, and send a message to the Joint Staff Mission in London for the guidance of Canadian service headquarters overseas.

This recommendation had been accepted, and the message from the Chiefs of Staff had produced certain reactions from the Joint Staff Mission in London. It appeared that the R.C.A.F. in particular had adopted a procedure which did not seem entirely in accord with agreed policy. Apparently the R.C.A.F. Headquarters overseas had made arrangements with the Air Ministry that (1) the number of R.C.A.F. personnel apportioned for demilitarization duties would be in the proportion of ten percent of the total R.A.F. commitment for these duties, and would be on the basis of rank for rank, R.C.A.F./R.A.F.; (2) that the term of service for such R.C.A.F.

personnel would be for a period of two years; (3) that the R.C.A.F. personnel apportioned for occupation duties would include a number of officers attached to the Control Commission in Berlin.

The Chairman suggested that the Committee should decide whether any developments had occurred which would justify reconsideration of approved Government policy. General Murchie outlined the procedure which governed the volunteering of Canadian Army personnel for duty with the British Element of the Control Commission for Germany and it was agreed that this was in accordance with accepted policy. Admiral Jones pointed out that the participation of Canadian Naval personnel was limited to a number of individuals only. Air Vice Marshal Curtis stated that the R.C.A.F. were anxious to know whether the arrangements they had made with the Air Ministry were considered to be out of line with approved policy.

In discussion it was pointed out that it was the intention of the Government to avoid having officers serving, as part of the Canadian commitment to furnish occupation forces, on the Control Commission in Berlin, for the reason that Canada had no share or responsibility in the military government of Germany. If the service of such officers was desired by the United Kingdom, individuals might be allowed to volunteer, but they would become entirely a United Kingdom responsibility and would cease to be members of the Canadian forces. It was therefore not appropriate that Canadian personnel should be included in the Control Commission. Accordingly, it was agreed that the R.C.A.F. personnel earmarked for the Control Commission, Berlin, should be withdrawn. Otherwise, the proposals respecting the inclusion of complete Units, Officers and other ranks, do not appear to be in conflict with the agreed policy. As regards R.C.A.F. personnel employed for demilitarization duties referred to under one and two of paragraph two above, it is understood that such arrangements would necessarily be subject to

(a) the overriding reservation applicable to Canadian contribution to occupation forces, i.e., that the matter should be reviewed at the end of the 1945-46 fiscal year; and

(b) the general condition set out in the PHP paper that personnel so employed will remain subject to Canadian demobilization regulations.

The Chairman said that a further question which had been raised by the Joint Staff Mission concerned the setting up of the Canadian Military Mission to the Control Commission. A message from the Joint Staff Mission had stated that if such a Mission were contemplated there might be some merit in having this Mission formed in embryo in London at an early date. It was pointed out in discussion that the functions of these Military Missions, which were intended to act as liaison between the Control Commission and the other Governments of the United Nations, were under current discussion in the European Advisory Commission. The size of the Canadian Mission would, in all probability, be very small and there seemed no purpose at the present time of setting up a mission in embryo which would not have anything to do.

Finally it was agreed that the information available would not justify revision of the policy outlined in the Advisory Committee Report C.P.H.P. (44) Report 6 (Final) of October 19th, "Control Machinery for Europe—Canadian Participation."

A letter has been received from the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office regarding the question of recruitment of Canadian personnel for the Control Commission for Austria, a copy of which is attached.<sup>91</sup> In this connection I would draw the attention of the Chiefs of Staff to the recommendation contained in the approved paper on "Control Machinery for Europe—Canadian Participation"<sup>91</sup> in which it is stated in paragraph six of the conclusions:

"It is recommended that the Canadian Government should not seek to participate directly in the control of other enemy territories in Europe and should confine itself to the protection of its interests through the appointment of diplomatic missions in Allied capitals and perhaps in Rome. Should Canadian troops be stationed in Austria for a period after German defeat, consideration should be given to the establishment of a mission accredited to the Control Council in Austria."

In accordance with this approved policy there would be no direct participation on the part of Canada in the control of Austria. However, it would seem appropriate for arrangements to be made for Canadian Service personnel overseas to have the opportunity of volunteering for posts with the Control Commission for Austria under the same terms as have been approved governing the appointment by the United Kingdom authorities of individual volunteers for service with the British Element of the Control Commission in Germany.

It would be appreciated if you would draw the attention of the Chiefs of Staff to the letter from the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office regarding the Control Commission for Austria, and seek their views on this question in order to enable this Department to take up the matter with the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office.

CONTROL MACHINERY FOR AUSTRIA; CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

The Chiefs of Staff, at their meeting of March 27th, considered your memorandum of March 19th on the question of the recruitment of Canadian personnel for the control commission for Austria.

They agreed that there were no objections in Canadian service personnel being given the opportunity of volunteering for posts with the control commission for Austria under the same terms as have been approved governing the appointment by the United Kingdom authorities of individual volunteers for service with the Headquarters Control Commission, Berlin.

Notification of this agreement has gone forward to the Canadian Joint Staff Mission in Signal CSC-1013,† a copy of which is attached.

A further message† has been prepared in line with the suggestion in your memorandum of 19th March<sup>92</sup> and this is now being cleared with the Service departments before dispatch. This will set forth the general principles governing the selection of personnel by the United Kingdom and reference will be made to the fact that these principles apply for the Control Commission for Austria as well as the Headquarters Control Commission, Berlin. A copy of this message will also be forwarded for your files.

Not printed. This memorandum dealt with recruitment of Canadians for the Control Commission for Germany.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the question of the Allied Missions accredited to the quadripartite Control Commission to be set up in Berlin after the cessation of hostilities with Germany. It will be recalled that Article eight of the Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany, which was approved in the European Advisory Commission at its 11th Meeting (November 14th, 1944),<sup>93</sup> states that "the necessary liaison" (between the Control Commission and) "the Governments of other United Nations chiefly interested will be ensured by the appointment by such Governments of Military Missions (which may include civilian members) to the Control Council, having access through the appropriate channels, to the organs of control."

The question of establishing a Canadian Military Mission in Berlin was considered in connection with the general question of Canadian participation in the control machinery for Europe which was the subject of the Canadian P.H.P. paper "Control Machinery for Europe - Canadian Participation" (approved by the War Committee last November (C.P.H.P. Report 6 (Final), October 19th, 1944). The passage which relates to the question of a Canadian Military Mission is as follows:

"It is recommended that in any event plans should be made for the establishment of a Canadian Mission in Berlin shortly after the defeat of Germany. It will probably be desirable in the first instance for this Mission to be headed by an officer of a rank not lower than Major General although later the chief of the Mission might be a civilian with the personal rank of Ambassador. Canadian contact with the Control Council would be conducted through this Mission."

The Control Commission in Berlin will be the supreme governmental authority in Germany from which will emanate the instructions to be executed both by the armies of occupation and by the German civil authorities. It will consist of the Commanders in Chief of the occupying forces of the United Kingdom, the United States, U.S.S.R and France. The Military Missions which may be accredited to the Control Commission by other Allied Governments will presumably be sent there to look after their interests in Germany during the period of operations of the Control Commission; and when civil control is substituted for military control they may be expected to become diplomatic missions headed by Ambassadors or Ministers.

Since the draft agreement concerted in the European Advisory Commission was approved by the Governments concerned, however, we have received no further information regarding the proposed functions of these Missions, nor about the manner in which the necessary liaison between the Military Missions and the Control Council was to be carried out. It has been noted, however, that in a letter from Mr. Holmes to Mr. Ritchie of March 3rd, 1945,† reference is made to the fact that the question was under discussion in the European Advisory Commission and that it was expected that some specific proposals would be made shortly.

Having in mind that substantial Canadian forces will be employed in disarmament and demilitarization duties in Germany and also that provision will need to be made for the safeguarding of the interests of Canadian nationals who may be in Germany in the post-hostilities period, we are anxious to have available, as soon as possible, information which would enable the Canadian Government to proceed with arrangements for the establishment of an appropriate Canadian Military Mission in Berlin. It would be appreciated, therefore, if you would ascertain through Sir William Strang and other United Kingdom officials concerned the present position of the discussions regarding the position of the Allied Missions accredited to the Control Commission in Berlin.

United Kingdom representative on European Advisory Commission has proposed to Commission that public statement by four Governments, recommended by Commission in connection with Article 8 of Control Machinery Agreement, should be in following terms, Begins:

Under Article 12 of the Instrument of Unconditional Surrender of Germany, the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and France possess supreme authority with respect to Germany. The Governments of the four Powers hereby announce that it is their intention to consult with the Governments of other United Nations in connection with the exercise of this authority. Ends.

2. He has also proposed that a similar statement mutatis mutandis should be made by the four Powers at the time of issue of an Allied declaration (my despatch of April 10th, Circular D. 56)† if such a declaration is issued instead of instrument contemplated by E.A.C. being signed.

My immediately following telegram† repeats telegram No. 1208 from High Commissioner, London, dated April 27th.

With reference to D.O. telegram, para. 2, may we have instructions on any steps to be taken with regard to establishment of Canadian military mission to Berlin.

In our view statement proposed in D.O. telegram under reference would require no material change in Canadian Government's proposed statement regarding Allied declaration.<sup>95</sup> We presume, however, that it might be necessary to add a reference to future consultation of Canada in regard to the exercise of authority in Germany by the four Great Powers.

TELEGRAM H-173

San Francisco, May 14, 1945

Your telegram D-181 of May 12th, alleged [Allied?] declaration and statement regarding control machinery agreement.

I agree that the statement proposed in the Dominions Office telegram under reference requires no change in the Canadian Government's proposed statement regarding the Allied declaration. I further consider that it might be as well not, repeat not, to include in the Canadian statement a reference to the future consultation of Canada in regard to the exercise of authority in Germany by the four Great Powers. In the first place, it seems quite probable, in view of the Soviet attitude on the European Advisory Commission up to date, that the United Kingdom representative may not be able to carry the reference to consultation with the Governments of other United Nations proposed in Circular D. 804. Even if a statement is issued, such consultation may be expected to be of a purely formal character. Moreover, in the light of the considerations put forward in the third paragraph of telegram D-78 of April 30th<sup>96</sup>, we do not think it wise to convey to the Canadian public the impression that Canada will be sharing in the government of Germany by the Great Powers when, in fact, this will not be the case. For these reasons we think it would be advisable to omit reference to the future consultation of Canada in the Canadian declaration.

With regard to the establishment of a Canadian Military Mission in Berlin, it would appear that announcement of Canadian policy can wait announcement by the four Powers of invitations to establish such Mission. I shall let you know of any steps contemplated in connection with setting up such a Mission.

ARMY; PARTICIPATION IN BRITISH ELEMENT OF CONTROL COMMISSION - BERLIN AND AUSTRIA

24. THE SECRETARY reported that the Army sought authority for the retention by the United Kingdom, on loan, of nine Canadian officers and their continued employment with the British elements of the Control Commission in Berlin and Austria.

The employment of Canadian personnel with the British elements of the Control Commission in Berlin and Austria, except as a responsibility of the United Kingdom, was contrary to government policy as established by War Committee at their meeting of November 9th, 1944. The personnel in question, because of their special qualifications, had been selected prior to that date and their withdrawal at this time would, it was represented, seriously affect the efficiency of the Control organizations. On the other hand, their transfer to the British Army would be unacceptable to the individuals concerned because of the lower rates of pay involved.

Consequently, the Chief of the General Staff had recommended, with the concurrence of the Minister of National Defence, that the continued employment in their present capacities of the specified personnel be considered as a special case and that they remain a responsibility of the Canadian government while so employed.

25. THE COMMITTEE, after discussion approved the recommendation submitted, it being understood that the duration of the loan of these officers would be related to the period of service of the occupation forces and be subject, in individual cases, to demobilization arrangements.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

During my recent trip to England, I discussed a proposal to send to Germany a small Canadian military liaison section to be attached to the HQ of the Control Commission (British Element) for Germany, when that Commission became established there.

A message† has now been received advising that the HQ Control Commission will close in London on 11 July and open in the British Zone on the same date. A decision is therefore urgently required as to whether or not such a liaison section will be authorized. It is understood that the United Kingdom would welcome its establishment.

The functions of this section would be to provide continuity and to submit reports on developments pending final decisions on the setting up of a Canadian Mission in Germany. You will recall that in the PHP paper "Control Commission for Europe—Canadian Participation," the sending of a Canadian Mission to Berlin that would probably be headed in the first instance by an officer of one of the Services, was approved in principle. The establishment of a liaison section would appear to be a logical development and should facilitate the eventual setting up of a Mission, if it is finally decided to do so.

Before taking any action on this question, I would, however, appreciate having your views.

Ottawa, July 10, 1945

Dear General Murchie,

I am writing in reply to your letter of July 5th regarding a proposal to send a small Canadian military liaison section to be attached to the Control Commission (British Element) for Germany when this Commission is established in Germany.

You will recall that my letter of February 26th† explained how the question of the appointment of a Canadian military mission arose. Under Article 8 of the Agreement on the control machinery for Germany between the Governments of the United Kingdom, United States and the Soviet Union, with which France was later associated, military missions are to provide the "necessary consultation" between the Control Council (representing the four big powers) and the Governments of other United Nations.

The purpose of a Canadian military mission, therefore, would be to establish the necessary liaison between the Canadian Government and the Control Council, as well as to conduct in Germany business of the type normally discharged by any Canadian diplomatic mission. Such a mission would, therefore, not be associated with any particular national element of the Control Commission, but would be accredited to the Control Council which is the supreme body responsible for the Allied military government of Germany.

It seems to me that the establishment of a Canadian military liaison Section attached to the British Element might give the impression that Canada was sharing with the Government of the United Kingdom effective responsibility for the control of the country, which would not in fact be the case, and might somewhat prejudice the position of a Canadian military mission charged with liaison with the Control Council as a whole.

The appointment of a Canadian military mission must await an invitation from the Governments of the four Powers to establish military missions in accordance with Article 8 of the draft agreement on control machinery; no such approach has so far been made to the Canadian Government.

I am therefore inclined to think that in the circumstances it would not be desirable to proceed with any action to establish a military liaison section attached to the headquarters of the British Element of the Control Commission along the lines suggested in your letter. I assume that the necessary military liaison duties arising from the participation of Canadian forces in the occupation of Germany do not require action of the type that you suggest.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

London, September 21, 1945

SECRET. My telegram No. 2331, August 17th,† Canadian Military Mission in Berlin. We have now received formal communication from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs† stating that in view of the interval which may elapse before Allied Military Missions can be established in Berlin, the United Kingdom have been considering the possibility of making interim arrangements of an unofficial character whereby certain Allied nations with important interests in the British zone of occupation should be enabled to establish liaison officers there on an informal and temporary basis, with the object of safeguarding their nations' interests in that part of Germany. It has now been ascertained that the British military authorities would be prepared to receive parties of Allied representatives in the British zone for this purpose. Accordingly, the Canadian Government is now invited, if they so desire, to send representatives to the British zone with this end in view.

2. Lord Addison makes it clear that, owing to difficulties of accommodation, such representations would have to be on a limited scale, and whilst food and fuel (including petrol) would be provided against payment by the British military authorities, the latter's work would be greatly facilitated if the Canadian representatives could bring with them their own transport. It would also be necessary for the Canadian Government to furnish, in advance, details of the staff they wish to send, indicating the number and status of the officers and other ranks, as well as the place to which they would wish to send them.

3. The United Kingdom Government would be ready to consider the appointment of Missions in more than one locality, if satisfactory evidence of the need for so doing could be produced.

4. Similar invitations are being sent to Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India, Belgium, The Netherlands, Norway, Luxembourg and Denmark.

5. I should be grateful for your instructions as to the reply which should be sent to this invitation.

Ottawa, September 28, 1945

SECRET. Your telegram 2739 of September 21st, Canadian Military Mission in Germany.

You may reply to Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs in the following terms, Begins: The Canadian Government appreciates the opportunity afforded by the Government of the United Kingdom of making interim arrangements, on an informal basis, to protect Canadian interests in the British zones of occupation in Germany, pending the conclusion of a general agreement between the four Governments on the Control Council for Germany for the establishment of Military Missions by certain Allied Governments.

The Canadian Government considers that under the quadripartite arrangements for the control of Germany the most satisfactory representation during the occupation period would be afforded by a Canadian Mission accredited to the Control Council. Meanwhile we are glad to avail ourselves of the interim arrangements suggested by the United Kingdom Government.

The interim Canadian Mission, which will be headed by a General Officer will be predominantly of a military character, but would include two or three civil officials who, if necessary, could be given, temporarily, military rank. We shall, in due course, supply the United Kingdom Government with detailed information regarding the personnel of the Mission, and the arrangements which we propose to make with regard to its location, as well as its accommodation, maintenance, transport, etc.

As the effective protection of Canadian interests in Germany will require that Canadian representatives should be able to move as freely as possible throughout Germany, we are giving thought to the question of approaching the other occupying Powers with a view to obtaining appropriate facilities for this purpose. Ends.

For your information, urgent questions arising out of Canadian nationals and assets in Germany, as well as the reparations problem,<sup>97</sup> make it essential that the interested Canadian Government Departments should have representatives in Germany as soon as possible. We shall be cabling you shortly on the details of personnel involved.

Décret en ConseilOrder in Council

Ottawa, October 12, 1945

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 11th October, 1945, from the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs representing:

(a) That, in view of the establishment of military government in Germany, it is expedient to organize a Canadian military mission for the purpose of protecting and maintaining Canadian interests in Germany in military and civil matters;

(b) That it is not possible immediately to establish a military mission accredited to the Allied Control Authority; but that, pending negotiations for such purpose, the Government of the United Kingdom has approved the making of an interim arrangement whereby a Canadian liaison mission may be established in that part of Germany which is in the occupation of forces under United Kingdom command, and which may be hereinafter referred to as the British zone;

(c) That it is expedient that a Canadian military mission, organized in accordance with the interim arrangement referred to above, should be enabled to establish later such relationships as may be necessary to protect and maintain Canadian interests in military and civil matters, within the United States, the French and the Soviet zones, and ultimately to be accredited to the Allied Control Authority.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs (concurrent in by the Minister of National Defence) advise:

(1) That the Minister of National Defence, with the co-operation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, organize a military mission with authority to protect and maintain Canadian interests in military and civil matters within Germany and to do such other things as may be referred to it by the Minister of National Defence or the Secretary of State for External Affairs in military or civil matters respectively;

(2) That the military mission thus established function in the first instance as an interim liaison mission to operate within the British zone for the purpose of protecting and maintaining Canadian interests in military and civil matters arising therein;

(3) That the Minister of National Defence and Secretary of State for External Affairs may authorize the military mission to establish such relationships as may be necessary to protect and maintain Canadian interests in military and civil matters within the United States, French and Soviet zones, and ultimately may provide for the accrediting of the military mission to the Allied Control Authority;

(4) That the organization and establishment of the interim liaison mission be the responsibility of the Minister of National Defence;

(5) That the normal channels of communication be between the Minister of National Defence and the military mission in military matters and between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the military mission in civil matters generally, and between the Secretary of State of Canada and the military mission in special matters relating to the Office of the Custodian of Enemy Property;

(6) That Lieutenant-General Maurice Pope be named as the head of the Canadian military mission;

(7) That the personnel necessary for carrying out the work of the military mission be provided by the Departments of National Defence, External Affairs and the Secretary of State of Canada and by such other Departments as may be deemed expedient in order to enable the military mission to perform its functions.

Ottawa, October 17, 1945

Sir,

Acting under instructions from my Government and on its behalf, I have the honor to notify you that, pursuant to Article V of the statement issued on June 5, 1945, by the Governments of the United States of America, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom and France on control machinery in Germany,<sup>100</sup> the Allied Control Council for Germany is now prepared to accept an application from the Canadian Government to send a military mission to the Allied Control Council.

The mission will be permitted to come to Berlin under the following eight conditions:

(1) That each Allied Government whose application to accredit a military mission is accepted should be free to decide the composition of its own mission, but that the number of nationals of all ranks belonging to each mission should be limited to ten. This would not preclude the employment of a reasonable number of locally engaged domestic staff.

(2) That it would be possible to find accommodation in Berlin for sixteen missions provided that they are limited to ten members plus a reasonable number of locally engaged domestic staff. Houses and offices could be located for at least four such missions in each sector of Berlin, but as no suitable undamaged houses or offices are at present available, it will take some time for the necessary repairs to be effected.

(3) That each Government accrediting a mission should be asked to send one representative to Berlin immediately to investigate the accommodation available and to make all necessary arrangements with the visitors and

(4) That the members of these missions, while present in any zone or sector of occupation, will enjoy the same privileges and immunities from the jurisdiction of German courts, the imposition of German taxes, or the acts of German authorities as members of the Allied Control Staffs. All members of these missions, both military and civil, will be subject to the military or military government laws made applicable by each zone or sector commander for members of the Allied Control Staffs.

(5) That these missions should enjoy freedom of movement within the greater Berlin area and, by agreement with the Commander in Chief concerned, within zones.

(6) That such missions would have the right to communicate with their governments by bag and cypher.

TOP SECRET. Following for Robertson from Wrong and Heeney.

1. This week, a special Cabinet committee on defence questions, including Mr. Abbott, Mr. Gibson, and Mr. St. Laurent, gave consideration to proposals which have recently been made to the Minister of National Defence for Air by the U.K. High Commissioner concerning continued participation by R.C.A.F. squadrons in the European occupation force.

2. Mr. MacDonald has sought a clarification of the Canadian position so that British planning can proceed upon correct assumptions. In this connection, you will recall that our commitment, both as to Army and Air Force, was made subject to review before the end of the current fiscal year. In January, 1945, the government had agreed to provide eleven squadrons for the occupation force—four heavy bomber, four day fighter and three medium range transport.<sup>101</sup> Last July, the Cabinet, in authorizing additional commitments for the Pacific, agreed to the reduction of the heavy bomber element in Europe to two instead of four squadrons.<sup>102</sup>

3. The United Kingdom now asked that consideration be given to the adoption of one of the following courses:

(a) that four heavy bomber and four day fighter squadrons should remain available at least until the end of June, 1946, and that, in addition, three medium range transport squadrons should be available until the end of 1945; or,

(b) that four day fighter, two heavy bomber and two medium range transport squadrons should remain available at least until the end of June, 1946, and that, in addition, a third medium range transport squadron should be available until the end of 1945.

4. After discussing the position, the Cabinet committee agreed:

(a) that the request of the U.K. government should be considered in relation to the general policy to be adopted with respect to Army and Air Force in the occupation of Europe after March 31st, 1946;

(b) that the second alternative suggested by the U.K. High Commissioner with respect to R.C.A.F. participation appeared to be preferable;

(c) that it was desirable that plans should be made for the reduction of participation by Canadian forces in occupation duties after March 31st, 1946, and for the progressive return of Canadian personnel as rapidly as might prove feasible after that date;

(d) that in order to permit planning by the Services to be initiated without delay, policy decisions in respect of the occupation commitments should be taken at the earliest possible date.

4. The Cabinet committee directed us to communicate their views to the Prime Minister in London, in case the matter of Canadian participation in occupation duties is under discussion there with U.K. authorities. Meantime, the Cabinet are not being asked to make any decision upon the U.K. High Commissioner's request and no action will be taken pending a reply from you.

5. You will, no doubt, be aware that the shipping position for repatriation is very substantially improved. Indeed it would be possible under present indications to begin to move home our occupation force soon after the beginning of April, unless there are policy reasons for continuing the commitment at the present scale. In this connection, the Cabinet committee felt quite strongly that the Canadian contribution should be able to be reduced progressively as the forces of European allies were organized and strengthened to take the place of our troops.

6. We would be grateful for an early reply to this message. Ends.

ARMED FORCES; EXTENT AND DURATION OF EUROPEAN OCCUPATION

16. THE PRIME MINISTER, referring to the discussion at the meeting of November 22nd, enquired as to the position respecting the Army occupation force.

So far as the Air Force was concerned, the U.K. government had suggested the extension of the present commitment to the end of June.

17. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR observed that available shipping was a limitation upon the rate of repatriation. Air Force personnel to the numbers required for the suggested additional commitment would, in any event, have to remain in Europe until June.

In the circumstances, it was recommended that approval be given to the employment in occupation duty to June 30th of the R.C.A.F. squadrons involved. This had been the recommendation of the Cabinet Defence Committee. It should be made quite definite, however, that no further extension of the Canadian commitment would be made.

18. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE reported that the extent and duration of the commitment for the Army occupation force had been the subject of examination by the Staff. The question would be considered in a preliminary way by the Cabinet Defence Committee at their next meeting and, thereafter, would be the subject of a report to the Cabinet.

19. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY referred to the difficult problem which would be presented in the disposal of surplus equipment when the Army occupation force left the Continent of Europe.

20. THE CABINET, after further discussion, approved Mr. Gibson's recommendation as the basis of a reply to the U.K. government, on the understanding that Air Force responsibilities for European occupation would terminate on June 30th, and noted that the question of Army participation would be ready for discussion at an early meeting.

Dear Mr. MacDonald,

With reference to the Top Secret Aide Mémoire† which you left with me in October concerning an extension of the R.C.A.F.'s commitment in the Occupational Force in Europe,<sup>105</sup> I am glad to inform you that this matter has now been considered in Council.

I am authorized to inform you that it has been approved that 4 Day Fighter, 2 Heavy Bomber, and 2 Medium Range Transport Squadrons shall remain available until the end of June, 1946, and that in addition a third Medium Range Transport Squadron shall be available until the end of March, 1946, on the understanding that ten aircraft of this squadron be allotted to provide air transport requirements for Canadian Armed Forces in Europe.

It will be noticed that the request asked an extension until at least the end of June, 1946, and in the authorization the words "at least" have been removed. The Canadian government wishes it to be distinctly understood that the extension asked for has been authorized on the understanding that no further extension will be asked for or authorized.

Yours sincerely,

COLIN GIBSON

ARMY; EXTENT AND DURATION OF EUROPEAN OCCUPATION COMMITMENT

1. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE submitted a memorandum which had been considered the previous day at a meeting of the Cabinet Defence Committee.

The memorandum set out three possible courses which might be followed, namely, progressive withdrawal of the occupation force upon repatriation of the remainder of the Army, continuation of occupation duties to March 31st, 1947, and continuation beyond that date.

From the Army point of view, the maintenance of Canadian forces in Europe after April 1st, next, would involve serious administrative difficulties, particularly with respect to replacement of personnel. On the other hand, if the government were to adopt the principle of progressive withdrawals beginning in April next, as suggested in an appendix to the memorandum submitted, these difficulties would not arise. Subject to the availability of shipping and certain other variable factors, it was estimated that such a programme would permit of the repatriation of all Army personnel, including those engaged in administration, by the end of 1946.

2. THE SECRETARY reported that, having considered the memorandum submitted by the Minister, the Cabinet Defence Committee, at the meeting of December 4th, had agreed to recommend to the Cabinet as follows:

(1) that the Canadian Army Occupation Force be withdrawn as soon as the repatriation of the remainder of the Canadian Army overseas was completed and that authority be given to proceed with plans for progressive withdrawals on the basis of the appendix attached to the memorandum submitted by the Minister; this appendix provided for the commencement of movements of C.A.O.F. personnel from the Continent in April, 1946, and for successive drafts on an orderly schedule which was subject to modification in relation to shipping and other factors;

(2) that the U.K. government be informed immediately that plans were being made to the above effect;

(3) that the communication to the U.K. government include reference to the decision taken by the Cabinet on November 29th, 1945, concerning the extension of the R.C.A.F. occupation commitment to June 30th, 1946, and to its termination on that date;

(4) that the Canadian High Commissioner in the United Kingdom and the Chief of Staff C.M.H.Q. Overseas be fully informed of the considerations leading to the above decisions, with particular reference to the administrative and other difficulties inherent in the maintenance of the Canadian Army Occupation Force for any longer period.

3. THE MINISTER OF RECONSTRUCTION stated that the disposition of large quantities of Army equipment remaining abroad, particularly in Holland, was causing concern. Representatives of the Department of Reconstruction were visiting Europe to discuss the problem with Army authorities, but it was difficult to see what adequate measures could be taken upon the withdrawal of Canadian forces.

4. MR. ABBOTT said that the Army would co-operate as far as possible with authorities in charge of disposal of surplus equipment. While it would not be possible to delay the withdrawal of formations from Holland, it might be feasible to maintain a limited number of special personnel for a short time to safeguard supplies pending their ultimate disposition. The Chief of Staff, C.M.H.Q. would be instructed to do everything possible in co-operation with Reconstruction representatives.

5. The Cabinet, after further discussion:

(1) approved the recommendations of the Cabinet Defence Committee concerning the termination of Army occupation duties in Germany and, subject to the concurrence of the Prime Minister, agreed that a message to that effect be communicated immediately to the U.K. government;

(2) noted the report of the Minister of Reconstruction with regard to military equipment in Europe and that the Departments of National Defence and Reconstruction would co-operate in every way possible to prevent undue waste.

Am in possession of papers. As you surmise, it is difficult to make a firm appreciation at this stage. Extent of our need, if any, for representation in Austria is unknown to me. If of minor proportions, reasons for economy would seem to point to advisability of extending scope of our Berlin Mission so as to include Vienna. On the other hand limitation as to strength of the Mission to Germany, together with chaotic situation of central Europe, might make it difficult for the Mission now being set up, effectively to operate so far afield. Presume idea of setting up separate Mission not under contemplation. Had understood Austrian matters were now being dealt with by or through Canada House. In the circumstances, would suggest reasonable course would be to let things remain as they are, at least for the time being. Ends.

SECRET. Canadian occupation forces.

1. In our telegram No. 9 of January 9, 1945, concerning the provision of Canadian Army and Air Forces for occupation duty in Germany we stated that it would be necessary for us to review before the end of the present fiscal year the Canadian commitment to provide one Army occupation group of approximately 25,000 and eleven R.C.A.F. squadrons.

2. The Cabinet have now given careful consideration to full reports on the subject submitted by our Chiefs of Staff.<sup>1</sup> These reports have emphasized the serious administrative problems that are involved in maintaining comparatively small forces at so great a distance from Canada.

3. On the basis of the shipping estimated as likely to be available, it is now probable that the Canadian Army overseas, except for the occupation force and administrative staffs, will have been repatriated to Canada by March or April of next year. Until this movement is completed the occupation force can be maintained at full strength without substantial departure from established repatriation priorities and without encountering serious problems with respect to replacements. After that time, however, the retention in Europe of the whole occupation force would create administrative difficulties out of all proportion to the numbers involved. We would, furthermore, expect that by then some of the European Allies should be in a position to make a larger contribution to the forces which will continue to be required in the British zone in Germany.

4. The government have, therefore, decided that, beginning in April next, the Canadian Army occupation force should be progressively reduced on a schedule which would provide for its withdrawal by stages with the object of completing movements from the Continent before the end of next summer and repatriating all Canadian Army personnel now overseas by the autumn of 1946.

5. Accordingly, the Staff have been instructed to proceed with plans for the movement of the occupation force to Canada via the United Kingdom and to work out these arrangements in such a way as to permit of the orderly release of Canadian formations in consultation with United Kingdom military authorities.

6. With respect to R.C.A.F. units engaged in occupation duties, the government have now authorized the extension until June 30, 1946, of the commitment to provide a number of Canadian squadrons, in accordance with a request communicated to us through the United Kingdom High Commissioner here. It is understood, however, that no R.C.A.F. squadrons will be available for occupation duties after that date and that the personnel concerned will then be repatriated to Canada in accordance with arrangements to be made by our Air Staff in consultation with the Air Ministry.

7. We were anxious that you should have notice of these plans as far in advance as possible in order to assist you in your own planning and in order to permit the necessary detailed arrangements between our respective Staffs to be worked out jointly in advance.

In addition to points enumerated in your telegram No. 30† there is mentioned question of Petsamo which is to be left to negotiations in Moscow. If Finland agrees to accept terms Soviet Government is prepared to receive Finnish representatives in Moscow for negotiations leading to conclusion of agreement.

2. British Ambassador saw Stalin on February 28th and discussed question of Finland. Latter expressed belief that Finnish leaders, with German connivance, had sought peace expecting impossible harsh terms. This is probably the reason for Soviet decision to publish terms.

3. Stalin also told Ambassador that he saw no objection to United Kingdom participation in negotiations with Finland but thought they would only be interested in broader questions and not in such specific questions as 1940 frontier, release of prisoners and reparations. Ambassador has cabled to London for instructions.

4. No information available about probable attitude of Finnish Government or on how Armistice terms will be signed. Important point will be whether Canada should participate in negotiations in Moscow if United Kingdom participate, and if so what should be our attitude with reference to question of Petsamo.

MOST SECRET. Your telegram No. 59 March 1st. We consider that the Canadian interest in the nickel workings at Petsamo would not warrant any claim on our part to participate in armistice negotiations with Finland in Moscow. We certainly could not employ the financial interest of a Canadian company in this area as an argument for its remaining under Finnish sovereignty.

2. The United Kingdom Government informed us on February 25th that they themselves assumed that the armistice would be signed on our side only by a Soviet military representative and that it would be made clear that he was signing for five British Commonwealth Governments as well as the U.S.S.R. This would be satisfactory to us.

3. In this connection we have just received Soviet draft terms for German surrender as presented to European Advisory Commission.<sup>107</sup> These provide for signature by representatives of Soviet, United States and United Kingdom Supreme Commands "hereinafter called the representatives of the Supreme Command of the Allies." In view of this we are anxious to secure in the signature of the Finnish Armistice that it is signed on behalf of Canada, whether actual signature is by yourself or by a Soviet military representative authorized to sign on our behalf.

The Swedish Minister called on me this afternoon to enquire whether the Canadian Government had given any public indication of their attitude towards the conclusion of an armistice between Finland and the U.S.S.R. on the basis of the terms proposed by the Soviet Government. I told him that no public statement had been made by the Government on this question. As the terms had been published I informed him that we had been consulted about them at the time of their presentation to Finland and had indicated that we had no comments to offer on the Soviet proposals.

Mr. Wijkman said that he felt that the Finnish Government was ill-advised to refuse this opportunity of getting out of the war without more severe conditions. He thought that a principal reason lay in a characteristic of the Finnish people to take always an optimistic view of their own situation. This was accentuated by the severity of the Finnish censorship which prevented them from getting a realistic view of the present state of German fortunes. Many Finns were convinced that the United States would not permit them to be treated severely because of the reputation they had earned through paying interest on their war debts.

He went on to say that he thought that President Roosevelt's statement of two or three days ago urging Finland to accept the Soviet terms<sup>109</sup> would have a considerable effect although it had come rather late. The King of Sweden, who very rarely commented publicly on issues of this nature, had allowed himself to be quoted in the same sense.<sup>110</sup> Such outside expressions of opinion would, he thought, reach the Finnish people and would help to show them that their continuation in the war would only result in worse terms for them in the end. He implied that a statement from the Canadian Government would in this view be of value in educating the Finnish people coming as it would from a distant country believed in spite of the war to be not unfriendly towards Finland and known to have no axe to grind in that area.<sup>111</sup>

London, March 28, 1944

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram. Provisional list of points to be covered in any armistice with Finland, Begins:

1. Subjects already specified by Soviet Government for discussion with the Finns.

(a) Rupture of relations with Germany. This should cover not only severance of diplomatic and consular but also abstention by Finnish Government and Finnish nationals from any financial, commercial or other intercourse with or for the benefit of Germany or German nationals from firms or persons on Statutory List.<sup>113</sup> Such provision should apply also to any other country at war with any of the United Nations. Property owned by nationals of Germany and any other country at war with any of the United Nations is to be placed in the hands of a custodian.

(b) Internment of German troops and ships in Finland. Object should be to ensure that German troops are effectively disarmed and prevented from taking any further part in the war. To this end we should be ready to accept any arrangements suggested by the Soviet Government. Any German or other enemy shipping should be held and handed over by Finnish authorities.

(c) Repatriation of prisoners of war, internees, etc. Any arrangements should cover any British subject.

(d) Indemnities. Our direct interest is confined to claims to damage done to British property and persons. As amount cannot be determined at present, position of British Commonwealth countries should be reserved. We have also indirect interest, because, if the Soviet Government impose heavy demands, Finland may be rendered incapable of meeting outstanding obligations to us. We may need timber, pulp and paper from Finland and it would be undesirable that all available supplies should be diverted to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics by way of reparations.

Arrival of a Finnish delegation in Moscow.

List compiled by Board of Trade of Great Britain of persons and firms with whom trade was prohibited under the Trading With the Enemy Act.

International Nickel Company of Canada. Our preliminary view (for his Majesty's Ambassador's own information) is that we should probably not (repeat not) oppose a Soviet demand, if made, for possession of Petsamo, whether in substitute for Hango (ceded under 1940 Treaty) which would probably contribute to a satisfactory settlement, or even in addition evoke 1940 arrangements. In the event of cession of Petsamo, however, it would become necessary to consider taking up with the Soviet Government question of compensation for Mond Nickel Company in respect of both concession and sums sunk in mine.

2. Any armistice with Finnish should in our view include following additional provisions.

(a) Shipping.

(i) Operational control over Finnish ships so that they can be used to the benefit of the common war effort.

(ii) Return of all United Nations shipping in Finnish hands.

(b) British property in Finland.

All such property should be returned and pending return should be preserved.

(c) Some general provision making available to Allies available exportable supplies of Finnish material products.

(d) Rights of access.

Provision should be made for transit use of Finnish territory, waters and air by British personnel, aircraft, ships and goods, and for Finnish authorities to furnish all necessary facilities.

(e) Supply of information.

Some general provision should be included placing obligation on Finns to supply information.

(f) Armistice Commission.

We expect that a Control Commission will be set up as soon as possible to supervise and execute armistice terms with provision for our participation. Ends.

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Your telegrams Circulars D.434 and 435. Armistice terms for Finland.

The proposed draft instructions to United Kingdom Ambassador at Moscow are entirely acceptable to us. We have the following observations to offer on particular points raised in telegram D.435:

A. Reference paragraph 1(c). We have a record of only nine Canadian citizens now in Finland.

B. Reference paragraph 1(d). Claims filed with Canadian Custodian against loss of Canadian property in Finland are small. The Custodian, however has not advertised the desirability of filing such claims, but it is unlikely that there is any considerable Canadian property interest except for nickel concession.

C. Reference paragraph 1(e). We feel that the interest of International Nickel Company of Canada in the Petsamo concession could hardly be used as an argument for the retention of this district under Finnish sovereignty. In the event of its cession to the Soviet Union, however, we would be interested in seeing that compensation was paid, both for the concession and the actual investment in the mine and plant. We have had some informal discussion with International Nickel Company over the protection of their interests in Finland. The Nickel Company has informed us that a considerable number of the shareholders in the Finnish Company have addresses in the United States.

2. If an Armistice results from these negotiations, we have already informed you of our views on method of signature in our telegram No. 25 of February 21st.

Finland.

Despite breakdown of Finnish-Russian armistice negotiations in April we felt it desirable that we should approach Soviet Government in order to have leisure to examine and agree with them terms for Finland. We had at first thought that reference to European Advisory Commission would not be practicable owing to probable Soviet objections and inability of United States representative to take part in framing terms for Finland as United States is not at war with Finland.

2. Accordingly His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador, Moscow, was instructed to approach Soviet Government referring to Moscow Conference decision that cases such as that of Finland should be considered by E.A.C., adding however that for practical reasons the United Kingdom Government did not wish to suggest at this stage that question of Finnish armistice terms should be so referred. Ambassador was to ask that Soviet Government should communicate to us for our consideration a complete draft of terms for Finland in form either of an armistice or of a peace treaty, or both, as Soviet Government thought best. This approach was made on May 10th but no reply has so far been received from the Soviet Government.

3. Subsequently, however, the Russians agreed to consideration by the E.A.C. of armistice terms for Bulgaria, and United States Government, whom we have consulted, have no objection to armistice or peace terms for Finland being considered by E.A.C., though they do not expect that United States representative will participate actively in formulation of the terms.

4. Meanwhile Soviet offensive in Karelian Isthmus, and developments<sup>114</sup> reported in my telegram Circular D. 908,† make it doubtful whether there will be opportunity for discussion at leisure in E.A.C. of surrender terms, but it makes it in our view even more desirable that there should be full discussion of these terms with Soviet Government who otherwise may present us at last moment with terms which are unduly harsh or which take insufficient account of British interests. United Kingdom Ambassador, Moscow, has accordingly been instructed to remind Soviet Government of our request for full draft terms for Finland, and to suggest that in accordance with Moscow Conference decision armistice terms should be referred to E.A.C. Ambassador will mention that United States Government have no objection to proposed discussion by E.A.C., and will add that in any case United Kingdom Government feel it would be desirable that we and Soviet Government should discuss terms urgently on basis of Soviet draft, preferably in E.A.C., but alternatively through diplomatic channel.

Possibility of early signature of armistice with Finland leads us to direct attention to our views on signature expressed in our telegram No. 25 of February 21st. In this connection the observations on the draft Instrument of Surrender for Germany made in our telegram No. 106 of June 16th<sup>115</sup> should be borne in mind. In view of the small number of countries at war with Finland, the most practicable form for the Finnish armistice might be its signature by a Soviet military representative on behalf of the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, Canada, etc. This would necessitate prior communication to us of the armistice terms.

2. We have instructed the Canadian Ambassador, Moscow, to discuss the position with the United Kingdom Ambassador without as yet taking it up with Soviet Government. We should welcome your views and your support.

London, June 23, 1944

SECRET. Your telegram No. 107, of June 22nd, Armistice with Finland.

Views as to signature on behalf of Canada expressed in your telegram No. 25 of February 21st are being borne in mind here. As stated in my telegram No. 20 of February 25th they were conveyed to His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador, Moscow, who reported that he communicated with Mr. Vyshinski on April 20th as to method of participation of British Commonwealth Governments (see paragraph 3 of my telegram Circular D. 538, of 10th April)† but no indication has yet been received of Soviet views on this point.

2. We agree that there would be advantage in signatures by military representatives on both sides and, as stated in my telegram Circular D. 290 of February 24th,† we have assumed that if armistice is signed by Soviet military representative on behalf of Soviet Union and other United Nations at war with Finland it would be made clear in text that he was signing for five British Commonwealth Governments as well as U.S.S.R.: this point was brought out in letter to Vyshinski of April 20th.† We shall continue to keep you in close touch with developments but we have not yet received any fresh terms from Soviet Government. Experience of previous negotiations earlier this year gave impression that Soviet Government tend to keep negotiations very much in their own hands and are likely to expect any comments at very short notice. We feel bound to recognize major Soviet interest in Finland and think it best to confine any comments on Soviet suggestions to matters in which substantial British interests are directly affected. But when considering any new draft terms referred to us by Soviet Government we will certainly also bear in mind observations in your telegram No. 106 of June 16th, which we will answer separately as soon as possible.<sup>116</sup>

3. We note that Canadian Ambassador is in touch with United Kingdom Ambassador in the matter.

1. M. Molotov has now informed His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador that Soviet Government wish to conclude a peace treaty with Finland and has communicated to him the draft in my immediately following telegram.†

2. On receiving it, His Majesty's Ambassador pointed out that as it stood it did not provide for signature by countries at war with Finland other than U.S.S.R. and United Kingdom, and said that separate signatures would be desired in respect of British Commonwealth Governments. M. Molotov made no objection.

3. As regards Article 7,<sup>117</sup> M. Molotov stated that United Kingdom and Canadian nickel interests would be provided for by a special Protocol to effect that "industrial enterprises, including concessions situated in the Petsamo area, will be transferred to the Soviet Union free of all indebtedness, and third party claims and satisfaction of such indebtedness or claims will be accepted by the Finnish Government."

4. We are urgently considering Soviet draft and will telegraph our views as soon as possible. TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 1328

Summary of main comments to Soviet Government, Begins:

Preamble and Signature. We assume that Armistice will be signed by Soviet military representative on behalf of all United Nations at war with Finland and the fact that it is being signed on their behalf will be made clear in preamble.

Article 7 (also Article 8 of Second Protocol).<sup>118</sup> Petsamo. We should find it most difficult to accept suggestion that Finland should provide compensation for British interests in Petsamo. It is inequitable that compensation for loss of interests in ceded territory should be liability of ceding State. Necessity of compensation in this case arises not merely because territory is being transferred from one State to another: foreign interests are not necessarily affected by cession of territory and could operate under new Sovereign: it arises because of known Soviet policy with regard to industrial enterprises and foreign interests. Moreover, general principle is that a State acquiring territory from another assumes obligations of former Sovereign in connection therewith.

Article 10. Internees and Prisoners of War. We should be prepared to release Finnish internees in United Kingdom subject to there being no security objections in individual case. We have no Finnish prisoners of war.

Draft Protocols (my telegram of September 9th, Circular D. 1324). Procedure by way of Protocol would be unusual in the circumstances. Temporary provisions should be transferred to Armistice or an annex thereto; others to proposed preliminaries of peace. Ends.

FINNISH ARMISTICE ARRANGEMENTS

18. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported on the nature of proposed Armistice arrangements with Finland.

It was anticipated that the Armistice would be signed by the U.S.S.R. on behalf of all of the United Nations at war with Finland. The U.S.S.R., however, did not wish to assume liability for compensation to foreign interests upon properties at Petsamo, in which the International Nickel Company had an interest.

It would be desirable for Canada to be associated with the United Kingdom in seeking more satisfactory compensatory arrangements without, however, pressing the matter unduly.

19. THE WAR COMMITTEE noted with approval the Under-Secretary's report.

London, September 13, 1944

MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Since despatch of my telegram 12th September, No. 145 (Petsamo),† His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador, Moscow, has reported that Peoples Commissariat for Foreign Affairs have informally approached him with suggestion that Soviet Government should compensate United Kingdom and Canadian interests out of the dollars United States 300 millions compensation which they expect to get from Finland. They mention a sum of dollars United States 20 millions, but only as a guess and in no sense as a commitment, all reference to compensation would be omitted from the Protocol and matter would be subject of private arrangement between Governments. He inferred that Soviet Government did not expect to be pressed to settle any claims under such an arrangement until they had secured something from Finland, it would be essential that this should not be quoted against Soviet Government as a precedent and privacy was essential.

2. In light of this approach, His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador has been informed that we, for our part, see no objection to terms being given to Finns.

(I) Assuming that all points in draft Agreements and Protocols are satisfactorily settled with Soviet Government and that Article 1 of draft Protocol to preliminaries of peace is dropped, and

(II) Provided that he can obtain assurance that Soviet Government are making firm offer to settle matter on above lines, details as to amount and manner of payment to be settled later. He has at same time been instructed to make it clear that we cannot accept offer of settlement on these lines pending consultation with Canadian Government. He is also to warn Soviet authorities that we cannot agree to keep matter completely secret, either from firms concerned who must be consulted regarding precise amounts of their claims, etc., or from Parliament, and to promise that in latter case we would consult Soviet Government as to form of statement and would do our best to adhere to whatever was agreed.

3. In view of Soviet request for privacy we are not (not) saying anything to Mond Nickel Company and should be glad if Canadian authorities could similarly refrain from mentioning proposal to International Nickel Company at this stage.

4. We should appreciate advice by most immediate telegram whether, in circumstances, Canadian Government would agree, as far as they are concerned, to solution on these lines. They would no doubt also inform His Majesty's Canadian Ambassador, Moscow.

We are considering further procedure should Canadian Government agree to proposed solution and an acceptable assurance be obtained from Soviet Government. Our preliminary view is that we should probably be well advised to clinch matter as soon as possible by presenting claim for lump sum and trying to get this agreed. Any arrangement which necessitated itemized proof of losses for which compensation was being claimed would, we think, be less satisfactory because it would leave it open to Soviet authorities to contest individual items and to spin out discussions indefinitely.

2. We should be grateful if Canadian Government would consider question and if they share this view could give early indication of value which they suggest should be put on Canadian interests for purpose of stating lump sum.

His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador, Moscow, has reported that agreement with Soviet Government was reached on all points during evening of September 14th, but that M. MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Your telegram of September 14th, No. 173. Petsamo. Grateful for your message.

2. M. Molotov has now intimated that Soviet Government are prepared to make firm offer of 20 million United States dollars which would be maximum, and has asked whether proposal in my telegram No. 148<sup>120</sup> is acceptable. If so, he has suggested an agreement to this effect.

3. We should now like to accept this Soviet offer in general terms, and should be glad to learn by most immediate telegram whether Canadian Government agree.

4. If Ambassador could be authorised to add that eventual claim is expected to be well within this figure, we think that this might favourably predispose Soviet Government towards agreeing to whatever figure is ultimately put to them without asking for detailed statement of claim. We should, therefore, be glad to know whether Canadian Government could give a rough preliminary indication of total figure for Canadian interests which would enable Ambassador to speak as suggested.

5. With reference to second paragraph of your telegram No. 173, M. Molotov has indicated also that Soviet Government have no wish to keep this transaction from knowledge of their own people or of ours. In light of this, there would be no objection to your consulting with Canadian Company now in strictest confidence with a view to ascertaining round figure to be set on Canadian interest for purpose of a lump sum claim, and we should be grateful if Canadian authorities could pursue enquiry on this basis.

2. You should act in association with United Kingdom Ambassador in discussion of this matter with Soviet Government.

3. In meeting officers of the Company, we have assumed that Soviet offer of twenty million dollars was regarded by the Russians as generous. There is no doubt, however, that if the Company were able to retain full control of the property, its value to them would greatly exceed this sum, and that its loss may well mean a substantial depreciation in the value of their remaining assets. They now fully understand that there is no possibility of their retaining control and they are therefore prepared to take twenty millions U.S., as being the best settlement that can be secured. They do not want figures of their valuation given to the Russians but wish it understood that the Russian offer is substantially below the value of the property to them.

His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador, Moscow, has reported that he has discussed whole matter with His Majesty's Canadian Ambassador. We understand their joint view to be that it would be unwise to attempt to secure higher figure than twenty million United States dollars, and that it would be well to close at once with Soviet offer of this amount, though when time comes Canadian Ambassador would tell Soviet Government that His Majesty's Government in Canada consider acceptance of Soviet offer involves a very substantial loss to a Canadian interest.

2. We should be glad to learn as soon as possible whether Canadian Government agree, and if so whether they wish to express any views on method or period of payment.

3. Peoples Commissariat of Foreign Affairs have communicated to United Kingdom Ambassador draft agreement as in my immediately following telegram.† The period of six years suggested by Soviet authorities for the payment is presumably related to period for payment of Finnish indemnity. View here is that attempt might well be made to secure immediate payment of twenty million United States dollars or at least payment over two or three years, though payment over six years might have to be accepted in last resort.

London, September 3, 1944

MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. My telegram of September 1st, Circular D. 1250.† His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador, Moscow, has been instructed to discuss the Soviet draft of Rumanian armistice terms<sup>129</sup> on the following lines:

(a) As regards the proposed title and preamble the armistice should in our view cover all the United Nations at war with Rumania.

(b) As regards signature we consider that armistice should be signed on the Allied side by one military representative and we should be glad to authorise a Soviet General to sign on behalf of the United Kingdom. His Majesty's Ambassador in putting this to the Soviet Government is to draw attention to the Italian armistice as a precedent. The final wording of the preamble will obviously depend on the decision reached on this point.

2. My immediately following telegram contains detailed comments which are being conveyed through His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador to Soviet Government regarding individual articles of Soviet draft.

3. Should be grateful if you would telegraph as soon as possible any observations which you may wish to make on Soviet draft.

London, September 3, 1944

MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram. Following are our comments on Soviet draft, Begins: Article 1. We think explicit provisions should be made for disarming and interning enemy troops and nationals in Roumania.

Article 4. (a) First sentence. After "return" add "if desired." Reason for this addition is that many British subjects interned in Roumania may not wish to return to United Kingdom and we do not wish to give Roumanian Government pretext to deport them.

(b) Second sentence. After "citizens" add "and displaced persons and refugees."

Article 5. Delete last eight words and substitute "or because of their race and will repeal all discriminatory legislation and restrictions imposed thereunder."

Article 6. It is not clear what the Russians mean by war material. In our view it should here include all material or equipment belonging to, used by or intended for use by enemy military or para-military formations and members thereof, in connection with their operations. We do not think it should cover all enemy property (e.g. a German owned factory in Roumania). We consider that separate provision should be included specifying that enemy property (other than war material) should be held at the disposal of the United Nations.

Article 7. (a) The Roumanian Government are not concerned with the use and disposal of United Nations ships after they have been handed over and the first paragraph of this Article should accordingly stop at "may be." This does not mean that we waive any right or claim we have to British ships, on the contrary we consider that all Allied ships should revert at once to their owners. We agree that the Soviet Government should have temporary use of these ships "in the general Allied interest," but the terms and duration of such use will be matters for discussion between the Soviet Government and the Allied Governments concerned.

(b) Line 2 after "belonging" add "or having belonged."

Article 8. We assume that where enterprises, installations, etc., are United Nations property, instructions will only be given after consultation, so far as this is possible, with the United Nations Government concerned.

Article 9. Article refers only to Soviet claims. We and other United Nations have requirements, notably repairs to damage caused to property rights and interests (particularly in connection with oil). Without any indication of Roumania's capacity to pay or extent of United Nations demands, we do not feel that Roumania's liabilities in money or in kind for reparation can be finally assessed at present stage. On the other hand, we should wish provision to be made for urgent requirements to be met. We suggest following redraft. "The Roumanian Government will comply with such provisions as the Allied (Soviet) High Command may prescribe regarding restitution, deliveries, services or payment by way of reparation. In fixing the amount of reparation, account will be taken of the fact that Roumania has not merely withdrawn from the war, but had declared war and in fact waged war against Germany and Hungary." The first sentence is lifted textually from the Italian Armistice<sup>130</sup> in which Soviet Government concurred.

See Canada, Treaty Series, 1943, No. 21.

Article 10. His Majesty's Ambassador is to ask Soviet Government to confirm that this refers only to identifiable objects. We want to be certain about this as this Article will create an important precedent for restitution vis-à-vis other enemy countries.

Article 11. We suggest the following redraft—"The Roumanian Government undertakes to restore in complete good order, property rights and interests located in Roumanian territory of the United Nations and their citizens."

Article 12. We should like this article to start "Roumania will deliver commodities....." and to make good the omission by adding the following additional article.

"The Roumanian Government will make available such Roumanian currency as the Allied (Soviet) High Command may require. Roumanian Government will withdraw and redeem non Roumanian currency within such time limits and on such terms as the Allied (Soviet) High Command may specify all holdings in Roumanian territory of currencies issued by the Allied (Soviet) High Command and will hand over the currency so withdrawn free of cost to the Allied (Soviet) High Command." If, however, the Soviet Government object, His Majesty's Ambassador has been authorised to accept Article 12 in its present form provided the words "local currency" are added after "services" in the sentence we wish to add to Article 16 (see below).

Article 15. Omit words "issued by the Allied (Soviet) High Command," and add at the end of the Article "of facilitating the work of such Missions as the Allies may send and meeting Allied requirements for the re-establishment of peace and security."

Article 16. (a) Add the following sentence "Roumanian Government will furnish it free of charge with all the facilities, supplies and services it may require."

(b) His Majesty's Ambassador has been asked to confirm that powers conferred under numerous Articles on Allied (Soviet) High Command will in fact be implemented through Allied Control Commission.

Article 17. His Majesty's Ambassador is to suggest, but not to press, that contents of this Article might more suitably be couched in form of a separate Declaration.

Article 18. (a) Our comments on the preamble (see my immediately preceding telegram) apply here also.

(b) We consider there should only be two authentic texts, Russian and English. We have following further additional comments:

(a) There is no longer any reference to the independence and sovereignty of Roumania. Soviet Government is being asked reason for this.

(b) There is no mention of the Roumanian Navy and Merchant Fleet. We think it essential that the Armistice should provide for the operational control by the Allies of all Roumanian ships whether in Roumanian or foreign waters for use in the general interest of the Allies as was done in the case of Italy.

Way in which these ships should be used and their ultimate disposal would be matters for discussion and settlement between the Allies.

(c) We think a Denunciatory Article is required.

(d) We suggest additional Article similar to Article II of Bulgarian Armistice<sup>131</sup> (my telegram Circular D. 1207).†

(e) There is no mention of the Danube. We therefore suggest adding some such provision as "the Roumanian Government will comply with Allied instructions for the control of navigation on the Danube and connected transport facilities."

(f) It is very desirable that Roumania should sever all relations with Japan. We recognise that it may be difficult to include this in the Armistice itself, but His Majesty's Ambassador is to ask Soviet Government whether they agree that an instruction to this effect should immediately be issued to the Roumanian Government under Article 15. Ends.

Your telegram Circular D. 1268 of September 3rd. Draft armistice terms for Rumania. Our direct interest in these terms is small and we are chiefly concerned over their form and substance as a precedent. As to substance, we agree with your comments on Soviet draft set forth in your Circular D. 1269. As to form, we share your view that the armistice should cover all United Nations at war with Rumania and should be signed by one military representative from Soviet Supreme Command.

In this connection we shall reply separately to your telegram D. 1247 of September 1st concerning Instrument of Surrender for Germany.<sup>132</sup> In view of the position therein disclosed we refrain from pressing for any particular form of words in the armistice with Rumania.

1. This Government proposes that a reply as quoted in paragraph 3 be made to the Japanese Government's acceptance of the Potsdam Proclamation.<sup>137</sup>

2. In order that hostilities may be terminated and further loss of life be prevented, this Government hopes that the British Government will associate itself with this Government in making an early reply as quoted in paragraph 5.

3. With regard to the Japanese Government's message accepting the terms of the Potsdam Proclamation but containing the statement "with the understanding that the said Declaration does not comprise any demand which prejudices the prerogatives of His Majesty as a sovereign ruler" our position is as follows:

"From the moment of surrender the authority of the Emperor and the Japanese Government to rule the State shall be subject to the Supreme Commander of the Allied Powers who will take such steps as he deems proper to effectuate the surrender terms. The Emperor and the Japanese High Command will be required to sign the surrender terms necessary to carry out the provisions of the Potsdam Declaration, to issue orders to all the armed forces of Japan to cease hostilities and to surrender their arms and to issue such other orders as the Supreme Commander may require to give effect to the surrender terms. Immediately upon the surrender, the Japanese Government shall transport prisoners of war and civilian internees to places of safety as directed, where they can quickly be placed aboard Allied transports. The ultimate form of Government of Japan shall in accordance with the Potsdam Declaration be established by the freely expressed will of the Japanese people. The armed forces of the Allied Powers will remain in Japan until the proposals<sup>138</sup> set forth in the Potsdam Declaration are achieved." End of United States note.

Following reply has been given to United States Ambassador, Begins:

We have examined your draft. While agreeing in principle, we desire to make certain amendments on the ground we doubt if it is wise to ask the Emperor personally to sign the surrender terms, and therefore we would suggest the following:

"The Emperor shall<sup>139</sup> authorize and ensure the signature by the Government of Japan and the Japanese General Headquarters of the surrender terms necessary to carry out the provisions of the Potsdam Declaration and shall issue his commands to all the Japanese military, naval and air authorities and to all the forces under their control wherever located to cease active operations and to surrender their arms etc.(as in your draft)." This is in keeping with clause 13 of the Potsdam Declaration. This, we believe, also will secure the immediate surrender of Japanese in all outlying areas and thereby save

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the invitation conveyed in your note No. 363 of August 20th for the appointment by the Canadian Government of a representative of its armed forces to be present with the Supreme Commander at the time of his acceptance of the Japanese surrender is much appreciated. Communications on this matter have also recently been exchanged with the Government of the United Kingdom. Since the deployment of Canadian forces for action in the Far East was in its initial stages at the time of the announcement of surrender by the Japanese Government, there has been difficulty in designating a suitable representative of the Canadian forces in the Asiatic theatres.

Colonel Moore Cosgrave, Canadian Military representative in Canberra, has already been instructed to proceed to Manila as soon and as rapidly as possible, primarily in order to watch over the interests of released Canadian prisoners of war arriving there. If he reaches Manila in time, the Canadian Government would be glad if his attendance could be arranged as its representative on this historic occasion. If the necessary arrangements cannot be completed, the Canadian Government has informed the Government of the United Kingdom that they would be glad to be represented by Admiral Bruce Fraser, Commander-in-Chief of the British Pacific Fleet, who has offered to select a Canadian officer from the forces under his command to be on his staff for the occasion.

I should be glad if the information contained in this note could be communicated by the United States Government to General MacArthur. A communication in the same sense has been addressed to the Government of the United Kingdom for communication to Admiral Fraser.

London, August 13, 1945

MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Following from the Prime Minister for the Prime Minister, Begins: As soon as Japanese surrender has been accepted by Governments, the Allies will be faced with many tasks resulting from Japanese capitulation. We trust that we may rely on your assistance in these and indeed we regard your assistance as indispensable. The proposals set out below are to be regarded as replacing the suggestion for a British Commonwealth force dealt with in telegram Circular D. 1330† and connected subsequent telegrams.<sup>142</sup>

2. The tasks confronting us are

- (a) The re-occupation of key areas of occupied territories in order to secure effective control and to enforce the surrender and disarmament of the Japanese armed forces.
- (b) Earliest release of British and Allied prisoners of war and internees.
- (c) Participation in occupation of Japan.
- (d) Protection of British interests in China.
- (e) Ending our state of war with Siam.

3. Subject to your agreement we suggest that plans shall be made on the following assumptions on policy

See Canada, Treaty Series, 1945, No.19.

(a) The South-West Pacific area will pass to British and Australian command.

(b) It is highly important that British Commonwealth forces should accept the surrender of Hong Kong at the earliest possible date.

(c) A British Commonwealth force shall take part in the occupation of Japan. We suggest that it should be formed from one brigade group each of Australian, British, British/Indian, Canadian and New Zealand troops with a tactical air force contingent. Questions of command can be dealt with separately.

May we have your very early agreement in principle to these suggestions?

4. Orders have been given to S.A.C.S.E.A. and Commander-in-Chief B.P.F. to make plans for the following operations

(a) The early reopening of the Straits of Malacca, the occupation of Singapore and the key areas of Malaya.

(b) The early re-establishment of a British garrison in Hong Kong. The proposal is that Commander-in-Chief, British Pacific Fleet, should embark from Borneo an Australian force of about one brigade strength and transport it with all possible speed to Hong Kong. It will be relieved as soon as the Straits of Malacca are opened by forces from S.E.A.C.

(c) The acceptance of the surrender of Japanese forces in Java, Sumatra and French Indo-China and the preliminary arrangements for handing back these territories to the Dutch and French.

(d) The occupation of Siam.

5. Having regard to the share of Canadian troops in the earlier defence of Hong Kong we should hope to have Canadian participation in the acceptance of surrender and we trust you will agree with this. We suggest that the best way in which this could be effected is by a Canadian warship sailing with the force acting under the orders of Commander-in-Chief, British Pacific Fleet.

6. We hope also that you will agree with the proposal in 3(c) above, that Canadian forces shall take part in the occupation of Japan. We will consult you further on the detailed arrangements and should be glad of your suggestions.

7. We are inviting the Australian and New Zealand authorities to accept the surrender of all Japanese forces in Borneo and to the east thereof and we are making arrangements to provide them with the necessary shipping.

8. In view of the time factor we are informing the United States Chiefs of Staff of the proposals in paragraphs 3 and 4 above and inviting their comments. Ends.

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: Your telegram No. 170 of August 13th. Before receipt of your telegram we had given consideration to our position with respect to the participation of Canadian forces in the tasks to be accomplished in the Far East following the surrender of Japan. We are in accord with the suggestions made in paragraph 3 (a) and (b). With respect to Canadian participation in the acceptance of surrender at Hong Kong, H.M.C.S. Prince Robert, now in Sydney, is being ordered to leave as soon as possible for attachment to the force from the British Pacific Fleet detailed for this purpose in case she can arrive in time. In any event Prince Robert will carry relief supplies and will be available to assist in the repatriation of prisoners of war from camps in and near Hong Kong. At the moment, no other R.C.N. ship is in a position to join the force proceeding to Hong Kong under the orders of the Commander in Chief, British Pacific Fleet.

Since we understand that plans are being made by General Wedemeyer for a land force to proceed to Hong Kong from China, we are instructing the Canadian Military Attaché at Chungking, Brigadier Kay, to accompany this force. He would be able to look after questions affecting Canadian prisoners of war in camps in that area.

We are not prepared to furnish a brigade group for occupation or other special duties in the Pacific theatre as you suggest in paragraph 3(c). We now have considerable occupation forces in Europe and we are not ready to undertake any further commitment of this nature involving either Army or Air Force units. Ends.

Dominions Office telegrams D. 1537† and 1538† of August 24th transmit a proposal from the United States Government for the establishment of a Far Eastern Advisory Commission in Washington to make recommendations on the policies and methods of enforcing the terms of surrender by Japan. An interesting feature of the proposal is that the suggested membership of the Commission would be the five great powers and Canada, Australia, New Zealand, The Netherlands and the Philippines. This is the first instance that has come to my notice in which the United States Government has taken an initiative to include smaller countries as principals in bodies of this sort. From this point of view it is, therefore, a welcome departure from the three, four or five power patterns with which we have become so familiar during the war.

I am a little surprised nevertheless at their inclusion of Canada in the list. The other states suggested for membership all have Far Eastern territories or like Australia and New Zealand a very direct interest in the Far East. In view of the line which we have taken at various times it would be difficult to refuse an invitation to participate. If this proposal comes to fruition, the seat of the Commission would be in Washington and participation should present no great difficulties for us. The only doubt in my mind arises from the thought that Canada may have been included in the expectation that we should be providing a contingent of occupation forces since our decision not to do so is probably not known in Washington.

The proposal may fall to the ground, of course, in face perhaps of the Soviet objections. I attach a draft interim reply for your consideration.<sup>144</sup>

Sir,

Acting under instructions from my Government, I have the honor to convey to you the following message:

"The Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and China have agreed to the establishment of a Far Eastern Advisory Commission for the consideration of political matters connected with the fulfillment by Japan of its obligations under the instrument of surrender. It is the desire of these Governments that the Commission include representatives of certain other states which have actively participated in the war against Japan and which are principally interested in the area of the western Pacific. A cordial invitation is extended to the Government of Canada to participate in the Commission."

Accept etc.

Following for Robertson from Wrong, Begins: The United States Ambassador presented a note this morning, of which the text is given in my immediately following telegram,† inviting the Canadian Government to participate in the Far Eastern Advisory Commission. I told Mr. Atherton that, in my view, the Canadian Government was likely to accept the invitation, but that I would wish to secure authority from the Prime Minister before answering the note. 2. In this connection you will doubtless see in London Dominions Office telegram Circular D.1865 of October 5th,† which shows that the Soviet Government is pressing for the establishment of a control council in Japan before the Far Eastern Advisory Commission is established. Presumably the United States Government had decided to go ahead on the lines announced by the Secretary of State before he left London.<sup>145</sup>

FAR EASTERN ADVISORY COMMISSION; CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

13. THE SECRETARY reported that an invitation had been received from the U.S. government inviting Canadian participation in the Commission.

The Commission was to be composed of representatives of the governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R., China and other states which had actively participated in the war against Japan and which were principally interested in the Western Pacific area.

The Commission would concern itself with political matters connected with fulfilment by Japan of its obligations under the terms of surrender.

If Canada accepted this invitation, it would be represented at the initial meeting of the Commission by the Canadian Ambassador in Washington.

The Prime Minister had approved acceptance of the invitation.

While he was in London, United States Secretary of State told Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs that General MacArthur had a Japanese battleship, two Japanese cruisers and some Japanese submarines which he was proposing to sink, but that he intended to hold up decision as to whether to sink them or not until views of His Majesty's Government in United Kingdom, French Government and Soviet Government had been obtained. Mr. Byrnes said that his understanding had been at Potsdam that we wanted Japanese submarines to be sunk.

London, October 24, 1945

TOP SECRET. My telegram of October 16th, Circular D. 1934,† control of Japan.

Following is summary of instructions which have now been sent to United Kingdom representative on Far Eastern Commission (my telegram of October 15th, Circular D. 1921)† as regards line which he is to follow, Begins:

(a) It is difficult to lay down precise instructions in absence of information about United States ideas on activities of Commission now that U.S.S.R. appears unlikely to participate.

(b) His Majesty's Government in United Kingdom, however, attach great importance to obtaining a real voice in formulating Allied policy affecting Japan and in controlling directives sent to General MacArthur and those presented by him to Japanese Government. It was, of course, only on understanding that United States Government were ready to consider amendments to terms of reference for this purpose that we agreed not to proceed with our earlier proposal for Control Council in Tokyo and thus consented to make Far Eastern Commission principal channel for exerting our influence on treatment of Japanese.

(c) It is essential that this channel should be made an effective one. Principal means of ensuring this would seem to be to exercise maximum control over issue of directives to S.C.A.P. and over those which he in turn issues to Japanese authorities, since this is now, and appears likely to remain, only means of giving effect to Allied policy towards Japan. Our interest in nature and effect of these directives is very great for following strategic political and economic reasons.

(i) In field of strategy, while we do not doubt that present policy of United States is to prevent Japanese military resurgence, His Majesty's Government in United Kingdom cannot ignore their particular responsibility for defence of British territories and communications in Far East and Pacific and their general interest which they share with other members of British Commonwealth in preventing future Japanese aggression. It follows that we must take a full part in framing of measures designed to fulfil this purpose.

(ii) Politically we are concerned to take all possible steps to ensure that actions taken by S.C.A.P. and orders given to Japanese authorities should not defeat their own object, e.g., by causing collapse of Japanese administrative system and consequent political chaos, and it is equally important that we should have an effective voice in formulating measures to be taken to encourage development of peaceful and responsible Government.

(iii) In economic field, future position of Japan will react directly upon the interests of many members of British Commonwealth and a divergence between British and United States views is not unlikely on such subjects as nature, extent and division of reparations and nature and direction of Japanese foreign trade (both of which involve question which Japanese industries shall be diminished, which encouraged and which left unchanged), Japanese financial and industrial organization, service of Japanese loans, supply from Japan of consumer goods to British territories in Far East and source of supplies to Japan of essential food and relief.

(d) It was with these considerations in mind that United Kingdom Government prepared amended terms of reference for Far Eastern Commission (my telegram of September 30th, Circular D. 1840 refers)<sup>f</sup> and United Kingdom representative is at outset of Commission's work to propose, on behalf of United Kingdom Government, that original terms of reference be amended accordingly.

(e) It is assumed in amended terms of reference that U.S.S.R. is to be represented on Commission. If she declines to be represented and if, after due consideration of difficulties which Russian non-participation would involve, other powers concerned are prepared to carry on without Russians, His Majesty's Government in United Kingdom would be prepared to agree. But we do foresee that serious difficulties might result from Russian non-participation. U.S.S.R. might in first place strengthen her hold on Manchuria and northern Korea which she might treat as an exclusively Russian zone. This would destroy what hope there is of obtaining food and other emergency supplies from Manchuria for Japan and would thus lay a greater burden on other Allied Powers. Russian non-participation would also greatly increase difficulty of arriving at agreed decisions about treatment of Japanese in many fields such as reparations in which a unified Allied policy is badly needed. It would, moreover, jeopardize any prospect of a co-ordinated long term Allied policy on such question as strategic and economic controls which may be necessary after occupation is over to prevent re-emergence of Japan as a strong military Power.

(f) For these reasons, we consider Soviet participation most desirable and we should associate ourselves with steps taken to bring U.S.S.R. in.

(g) United Kingdom representative is to maintain closest touch with Canadian, Australian, New Zealand and Indian representatives on Commission. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-3766

Ottawa, October 27, 1945

TOP SECRET. Far Eastern Advisory Commission.

The following general instructions are intended for your guidance. They will be modified and supplemented in the light of developments. You should observe particular secrecy over the reference in paragraph 5 to an understanding between the United States and the United Kingdom Governments that the former will support certain alterations in the terms of reference which were suggested to Mr. Byrnes when he was in London.

1. In the note received from the United States Ambassador,<sup>147</sup> Canada was invited to be represented on the Far Eastern Advisory Commission as one of quote certain other states (in addition to the four Great Powers) which have actively participated in the war against Japan and which are principally interested in the area of the Western Pacific. Unquote. Canada, as a nation facing the Pacific, is directly affected by developments in the Far East. She is therefore concerned to contribute to reaching whatever settlement may be best calculated to eliminate Japan as a threat to peace, to assist in the formation by the Japanese of a stable and democratic form of government, and to provide a basis for conditions of peace and eventual prosperity in East Asia. Thus, while the absence of Canadian occupation forces in Japan and the limited extent of active participation in the war in the Far East may deter the Canadian Government from taking the initiative in bringing forward proposals, especially in the early sessions of the Commission, the Canadian representative should not hesitate to make clear Canadian interest and concern. He should also be ready to support whatever proposals are most in accordance with Canadian policy as set forth in these instructions and such others as he may receive.

2. A conflict of opinion appears to exist between the United States and Soviet Governments (and to a much smaller degree between the United States and United Kingdom Governments) as to the kind of control machinery that should be set up in Japan during the period of occupation. The United States seems to be unwilling to relinquish much of the monopoly of control which she is in fact exercising, while the U.S.S.R. has asked for a Great Power control council on the lines of that which is operating—not too satisfactorily—in Germany. It may be that this difference in view will not come up for discussion in the Commission, but whether it does or whether it is dealt with directly by the Foreign Ministers or otherwise, the Commission's deliberations will inevitably be affected by it.

3. What appears most desirable from the Canadian point of view is a combination of:

(a) Retention of a single United States military command over Japan during the occupation period except perhaps in small areas;

(b) An Allied body (preferably the Commission itself) which will lay down general lines of policy.

4. These are not necessarily incompatible although they may be so regarded by certain nations. The principle of according to the United States a position of primary military responsibility avoids the practical difficulties inherent in setting up separate zones of occupation or in other forms of four-power administration. Moreover, there is an advantage in having the United States, as a power with both the means at her disposal and a reasonable degree of willingness to cooperate with smaller nations, made responsible for the execution of Allied policy. At the same time the exclusion of other countries, particularly the Soviet Union, from any real share in the control of Japan is difficult to justify. Indeed it might well encourage the formation of spheres of influence which it is in the general interest to avoid as far as possible.

5. Proposals directed towards the strengthening of the powers of the Commission should therefore be given favourable consideration. Among the proposals of this kind that may be presented it is known that the United Kingdom Government intends to suggest certain changes in the terms of reference originally put forward by the United States. These changes are in the direction of giving the Commission more authority to make recommendations and more power to pass on proposed directives to the Supreme Allied Commander on non-military matters. Also it will be proposed that the possibility of a veto right on the part of any one member be removed. The United States Government has indicated its intention to accept these amendments when they are proposed to the Commission. They should also be supported by the Canadian representative.

6. It is altogether probable that further changes will be proposed by other states in the direction of giving added powers and authority to the Commission. Insofar as these proposals would circumscribe the freedom of action of the United States they may be opposed by that Government. It is not possible to provide specific instructions in advance but in general amendments should be considered on their merits in the light of the two objectives mentioned above. Advantage should be taken of such opportunities as present themselves to secure the agreement of the Soviet Union to recognizing the desirability of primary responsibility for the United States in matters of military administration and to secure the agreement of the United States to giving other nations a real voice in decisions affecting occupation and control policy.

7. The Canadian Government gives general support to the United States statement of initial policy as approved by the President and transmitted to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers.<sup>148</sup> The Canadian representative should be prepared to indicate this general support.

8. The position to be taken on specific proposals which the Commission may consider in the implementation of this policy will be subject to further instructions. There may be appropriate opportunity however in the early stages of the Commission's meetings to express agreement with those sections of the policy which deal with more general principles, e.g. Ultimate objectives (Part I); Relationship to Japanese Government (Part II, Section 2); Encouragement of Desire for Individual Liberties and Democratic Processes (Part III, Section 3); Economic Demilitarization (Part IV, Section 1), and the Promotion of Democratic Forces (Part IV, Section 2).

TOP SECRET. Far Eastern Advisory Commission. My immediately preceding message.

We have received from the Dominions Office a summary of instructions which have been issued to the United Kingdom representative on the Far Eastern Advisory Commission. These are repeated in my immediately succeeding message.†

2. The general instructions to you for your guidance were prepared before we received this information from London. You will see, however, that there is agreement between our views and those of the United Kingdom Government on the desirability of obtaining a real share in the formulation of policy for countries other than the United States. While the United Kingdom instructions do not specifically mention the retention by the United States of primary responsibility for military control, there is nothing in them that conflicts with this point of view.

3. It is obvious that the strategic, political and economic interests of Canada are a good deal less extensive than those of the United Kingdom and we shall therefore be less likely to take the initiative in bringing forward proposals. You will note the reference in paragraph (c)(ii) of the United Kingdom instructions to the importance of seeing that actions taken in Japan should not cause Quote collapse of Japanese administrative system and consequent political chaos. Unquote. This might indicate some anxiety in London as to whether the United States may be going too fast in breaking down the authoritarian structure of the Japanese political and economic system.

4. As regards paragraphs (e) and (f) of the United Kingdom instructions, you will note from our previous message that we share the view that it is desirable to have the U.S.S.R. participating fully with the other Allied Governments concerned. If the Soviet Government continues to refuse to be represented on the Commission and if the other members of the Commission wish to go ahead without them, we are ready to concur.

5. With regard to paragraph (g) of the United Kingdom instructions, you will be alive to the necessity of avoiding any appearance that the representatives of the British Commonwealth countries on the Commission constitute a bloc. This is especially important since half the seats on the Commission will be held by members of the British Commonwealth. On the other hand we wish of course that close touch should be maintained with the representatives of the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and India.

Following for Wrong from Robertson, Begins: My immediately following telegram contains for your information and for transmission to Pearson, text of a personal message which the Prime Minister received on October 27th from Dr. H. V. Evatt through the Australian High Commissioner's office in London. The Prime Minister is inclined to think that the chairmanship of the Far Eastern Advisory Commission would most appropriately be filled by the American representative on the Commission. The fact that the meetings of the Commission are to be held in Washington would, in any case, strengthen the arguments for keeping the United States representative in the chair.

In view of the fact that Japanese resistance collapsed before there was any important Canadian military participation in the Pacific War and of the further fact that Canada does not expect to supply forces for the occupation of Japan, I do not think that our representative should take any very prominent part in the work of organizing the Far Eastern Advisory Commission. The Prime Minister would be grateful if Pearson could thank Evatt for his message, which has not yet been acknowledged, and use his own judgment as to which, if any, of the considerations mentioned in this message should be put to Evatt in explanation of our reluctance to take the initiative in organizing the Commission. If the Commission decides to have one or more vice-chairmen we would, of course, be very glad to support the choice of the representative of Australia for such a post.<sup>149</sup> Ends.

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Following for Wrong from Robertson, Begins: Message from Evatt, Begins:

I am very concerned about the successful functioning of the Far Eastern Advisory Commission which is to commence on Tuesday. As you have so generously acknowledged on several occasions, Australia's war effort has been a total one so far as the Pacific is concerned and our very life will depend on a just and severe peace for Japan. We fully recognize United States' claims for leadership in the South West Pacific, but I know you will agree that any semblance of dictatorship must be avoided and that the active and sustained belligerence of countries like Australia should be given full recognition.

One method of such recognition would be giving Australia the Chairmanship or Vice-Chairmanship of the Commission at Washington, preferably the former. I think that this could probably be arranged if you supported such a step and instructed Pearson accordingly. Certainly it would be deeply appreciated in Australia.

I am concerned in the matter solely for the status of my country. I am ready to work hard to make a success of this experiment in cooperation between belligerents in the Pacific theatre, irrespective of whether they belong to the Big Three or the Big Five. In a broad sense, we are struggling to carry out the principles for which you have taken the lead and I feel that a step forward might be taken if this suggestion were adopted. Very best wishes. Mr. Harriman has been instructed to present to Molotov, the revised terms of reference for Far East Advisory Commission together with proposals for an Allied Military Council in Japan. IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Far Eastern Advisory Commission.

At meeting on November 9th it was agreed to set up a Commission immediately consisting of representatives from each delegation to study basic policies and objectives regarding Japan, through a review of existing Directives and orders. The initial report of this Committee is to be submitted to the Commission on Friday, November 16th.

The Committee met this morning and began its work with a rapid point by point review of the "United States Initial Post-Surrender Policy for Japan," which had been despatched to SCAP on September 6th and released publicly by the President on September 22nd. Dr. Evatt, who attended in person and was in the chair, led the discussion. At the conclusion it was decided that each delegation would submit whatever revisions it might wish to suggest by Wednesday noon. These will then be collected together and discussed by the Committee at its meeting Thursday morning. The results of this meeting will then be presented to the Commission on Friday for its consideration. Only Parts I (ultimate objectives), II (Allied authority) and III (political) will be dealt with at this time, leaving Part IV (economic) for the second report.

Copy of the Directive under discussion is included as FEAC 2 in the set of Commission documents forwarded to you with my despatch No. 2648 of November 10th.† The text is also available on page 3 of the New York Times, Sunday, September 23rd. (The last paragraph of Part III, Section 1 of this text, beginning "Laws, decrees and regulations" should be transferred to become the last paragraph of Part III, Section 3).

One broad issue raised at the outset was the question of whether this Directive could be said in certain instances to depart from the letter or spirit of the Potsdam Declaration of July 26th,<sup>150</sup> and if so, what attitude should be taken by the Commission. One of the examples cited was Part 1, second paragraph, item (d): A positive statement regarding the opportunity for developing a peacetime economy, which was also linked with Part iv, Section 1, second paragraph, which refers to the elimination of industries whose "chief value.....is in preparing for war." Dr. Evatt thought that the emphasis should be on the negative side (elimination of war potential) and that there might be a conflict with Section 11 of the Potsdam Declaration. This has the definitely limiting clause that Japan shall not be allowed to maintain industries "which would enable her to re-arm for war." This would, on the face of it, eliminate heavy industry. But heavy industry could be retained under the present Directive on the grounds that its "chief value" is not necessarily military.

 See United States, Department of State Bulletin, Volume 13, July 29, 1945, pp. 137-8.

The more important sections singled out in this morning's discussion as probably requiring revision or re-statement (other than details such as substitution of "Allied Powers" for "United States" etc.) were as follows:

1. Part I, first paragraph, item (b) and Part II Section 2, third and fourth paragraphs (beginning "this policy"). It became obvious that the whole question of political objectives and the extent to which active measures should be taken to foster or enforce them would be very difficult to formulate in a manner satisfactory to all parties concerned. Is our object not an "early" rather than "eventual" establishment of a "democratic" rather than merely peaceful and responsible Government? (India and Australia). Is "as closely as may be" to democracy good enough? What if the "freely expressed will of the people" turns out to be in favour of an authoritarian form of Government? How adequately does the principle of non-intervention, in the event of the use of force by the Japanese people in effectuating a change in Government, represent our real aim? Under present conditions the Police Force is still under the Government and without active assistance such an uprising might have little chance even though it represented a genuine popular movement. And so on.

2. Part II, second paragraph. The statement that the U.S. policy "shall prevail" will obviously be revised in any new version.

3. Part III, Section 1, second paragraph. Should merchant shipping be included among the prohibited items? (Australia)

4. Part III, Section 3, third paragraph. Should Trade Unions be included among other "democratic" institutions and practices here listed as eligible for encouragement?

5. Part III, Section 3, fourth paragraph. Might it be advisable to elaborate on the provisions for the release of political prisoners "unjustly confined," to ensure that the purpose of this Directive is achieved?

I should be grateful for any specific suggestions you may wish to make regarding possible Canadian contributions to the draft revision or our position when the report is to be discussed on Friday.

Proposals are being submitted on the basis of this United States document as a matter of convenience. The report to the Commission will be in the form of a new statement of policy, since a "revision" of the present Directive would obviously be embarrassing to the United States.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram WA-5738, Far Eastern Advisory Commission.

1. In discussing basic policies and objectives you can be guided by paragraph 7 of general instructions (EX-3766, October 27, 1945) indicating general support for statement of "United States Initial Post-Surrender Policy."

2. We believe this to be in essential accord with the letter and spirit of the Potsdam Declaration. Discussion of verbal refinements or undue emphasis at this stage on points of specific implementations would seem unprofitable.

3. Two examples to which you refer may be cited:

(a) The suggested difference between the two documents with respect to control of industries (your telegram under reference, paragraph 4) seems relatively unimportant as compared with the main emphasis on which both documents are in agreement. Decision as to which particular industries should be eliminated should await examination on the ground, without which it seems premature to attempt a theoretical solution.

(b) Similarly, the directives appear to be in essential agreement with the Potsdam Declaration regarding the revival and strengthening of democratic tendencies among the Japanese people, and the establishment of a peacefully inclined and responsible government. (Your telegram under reference, paragraph 5, section 1.) The appraisal, however, of particular political groups in Japan as to the genuineness of their liberalism and their ability to establish and maintain a democratic form of government must first be made by expert observers on the ground. The practical measures taken to encourage movements by such groups will have to depend on such expert opinion and counsel, but may well take the form of being on the alert to suppress any subtle attempts by Japanese to hinder liberal-democratic groups.

4. It would therefore seem desirable to use your influence in securing agreement on a revised statement that will be in general accord with the United States Statement of Policy, and to emphasize at the same time the dependence of the Commission on securing advice from experts on the ground. Until a decision is reached regarding the setting up of a control body in Tokyo this would seem to be as far as the present Commission will go. In the meantime we are at a disadvantage in not having first-hand reports from Japan, but press reports on the directives issued by General MacArthur would seem to indicate that in military, political and economic fields encouraging progress is being made towards the objectives laid down in the Potsdam Declaration and the United States statement.

I discussed with the Under-Secretary this morning the proposal that the Far Eastern Advisory Commission should pay a visit to Tokyo. He agreed that this seemed like a useful move to enable the Commission to assess conditions on the spot. At the same time, it was recognized that it would be most undesirable to take any step that might have the effect of making Soviet participation more difficult to secure. The present situation, with regard to the occupation and control of Japan so far as the other Allies are concerned, is not unsatisfactory. If a delay of even several months in fixing the Commission's terms of reference would make eventual Soviet participation any more likely there is a good deal to be said for such a course.

It, therefore, would seem unwise to establish the final framework of the Commission before going to Tokyo. What seems preferable is to have the Commission, as now rather loosely constituted, visit Japan with a view to obtaining experience on the spot which would assist it to chart its future course. It might even be possible to persuade the Soviet Government to associate itself with this visit in some way. We know that they have people in Tokyo and, even if they did not act as members of the Commission, they might be prepared to join in its discussions in some capacity.

As there is to be a meeting of the Commission today, I telephoned Mr. Collins<sup>151</sup> and gave him an outline of our views as described above. He will pass them on to the Ambassador and let us know the outcome of the meeting.

The Far Eastern Advisory Commission, which has been meeting in Washington for the last month, is going to Japan on a visit of inspection at the invitation of the United States Government. Members of the Commission are flying to Hawaii, whence they will proceed to Japan on a United States naval vessel, about December 15th. The visit is likely to take about six weeks in all.

Pearson has been our representative on the Far Eastern Advisory Commission, but it is quite out of the question for him to accompany it on this mission. Another possibility is Keenleyside, who knows Japan very well and who would be a valuable member on such a body. Against his going, however, are two considerations: (a) that December promises to be a busy month in Mexican-Canadian relations. The new direct shipping service is being inaugurated, a trade agreement has been negotiated and it is probable that the Minister of Trade and Commerce will be paying an official visit for its signature. For all these occasions the Ambassador should be present. (b) To justify his appointment, our representative on the Commission's Japanese trip should be somebody who would be in a position to continue to work closely on Far Eastern questions.<sup>152</sup>

With these considerations in mind, I venture to suggest that we should appoint E. H. Norman of the Department, who is now in Tokyo.<sup>153</sup> You will recall that Norman went out to Manila early in September to head the Canadian group arranging for civilian repatriation from the Orient. He very promptly went on to Japan, where the United States Army was anxious that he remain so that his extensive and special knowledge of Japanese political conditions would be available to General MacArthur's staff. For the last two months he has, in effect, been the head of the United States Army Counter-Intelligence Division in Japan.

If you approve, I would suggest that the United States be told that Norman will join the Commission, when it reaches Japan, as Canadian representative, travel and work with it there and return to the United States when the Commission completes its Japanese tour.<sup>154</sup> The experience would be useful to him and useful to the Government when he returns to his duties in Ottawa. Norman is young and will be junior to the representatives of other countries on the Commission. At the same time, he has a good manner and his really expert knowledge of the problems the Commission is being sent out to study is recognized by his colleagues in other foreign offices. I think it would be a very creditable appointment.

countries who furnish supplies to Japan. This follows the policy adopted for Germany, which has strong support of Canadian and United States Governments. Any attempt to adopt opposite policy in case of Japanese exports might have awkward reactions on German position. Our view will be explained more fully in the general instructions on reparations which are in course of preparation. There is the further question of what currencies should be regarded as acceptable in payment for exports. In the case of Germany, the only acceptable currency is the dollar, and this is reasonable since the imports Germany requires come mainly from dollar areas. This precedent should not, repeat not, be followed in the case of Japan, since the imports required by Japan will come mainly from countries which do not need to be paid exclusively in dollars. The United States of America will, of course, pay dollars for goods which are to be consumed in the United States of America, and it may well be that this alone will provide all the dollars required for imports into Japan. In default of clear evidence to the contrary we should see strong objection to any insistence on payment in dollars by other recipients of exports from Japan, and wish to establish as soon as possible the principle that "acceptable currency" should be interpreted more widely and, in particular, should include sterling. We attach the utmost importance to this point.

Paragraph 4.<sup>156</sup> The first sentence would appear to mean that only the Americans are to have commercial contacts with the Japanese. We can see no security reasons why this should be so, nor could we accept it. Further, although the United States Commercial Corporation could quite properly handle goods for consumption to the United States, we could not agree that all exports from Japan to all destinations should be handled by the U.S.C.C.

Paragraph 5.<sup>157</sup> We do not like the sound of this, but it is difficult to make detailed criticisms until we have more information about the American proposal. Will you please press the Americans to explain it as soon as possible? If it is intended that the U.S.C.C. is to be the sole Allied procurement agency in Japan, we should object. In our view Japanese exports of goods normally dealt with by the Combined Boards should come under the Combined Board arrangements, including allocations and bulk purchasing where appropriate. Combined Boards are to be interpreted as covering their successor commitments. For any other goods in short supply we agree that an Inter-Allied Supply Committee to advise on allocations might be useful, though we reserve judgment until we see the proposed details. But neither on short supply nor on long supply items should we be precluded from sending our own buyers to Japan. Ministry of Supply's view is that it is impracticable to make purchases of most commodities except by having representatives on the spot. This applies particularly to silk and timber, in which the Ministry of Supply is chiefly interested. Ends.

The United States Ambassador told me the other day that Admiral Leahy had very much hoped to have a private word with you in Washington<sup>158</sup> about a suggestion Dr. Evatt had put forward in the Far Eastern Advisory Committee, which had worried Admiral Leahy a good deal. Evatt apparently had proposed that each country participating in Japanese occupation duties should have a definite and specified area assigned to it for administration and occupation, as opposed to the American thesis that countries participating in occupation duties should pool their contribution to the policing of the whole area.<sup>159</sup> Leahy feared that if different countries were assigned separate administrative areas, they would find themselves under domestic political pressures to reduce their occupation commitments unilaterally, and would perhaps even wish to pull out altogether, with embarrassing political consequences for the other countries sharing the task of occupation.<sup>160</sup>

Another difficulty Admiral Leahy saw in the Australian proposal was that it might be taken up with gusto by the Russians, who had been advocating separate zones of occupation in Japan along the German model.<sup>161</sup>

Mr. Atherton said that Admiral Leahy had been particularly anxious that he should convey these views of his to you in case the question came up for consideration by the Canadian Government.

in your EX-4078 under reference. You will notice that a prompt reply to this present note from the State Department is requested. Text of note begins:

December 5th, 1945.

Excellency:

I have the honor to inform you that the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers has reported to the United States Government that he has located the following stockpiles of material in Japan:

Rubber—10,000 tons;

Tin—4,200 tons;

Antimony—1,017 tons.

He has also stated that, although there are important uses to which these materials can be put in Japan, some portion of them can be made available for export if they are urgently required. The United States Government proposes to request him to maximize the amounts available for export by requiring the Japanese to adopt at least as strict conservation and substitution measures in the use of these materials as were adopted in the Allied countries during the war. On this basis it is believed that the major portion of the stockpiles can be exported.

It is the policy of the United States Government and of the Supreme Commander to require the Japanese to supply exports to pay for imports necessary to maintain minimum subsistence levels. It is important that decisions be made promptly with respect to the disposition of these commodities in order that essential imports can be procured without having to use United States Government appropriated funds. In order to accomplish this, it is also necessary to export these commodities to countries which can pay for them in exchange which can be used in the purchase of imports essential to the minimum requirements of the Japanese.

The United States has important requirements for the total available quantities of each of these three items and is prepared to pay for them in dollars usable anywhere for the procurement of necessary imports. It would be appreciated if your Government can agree to immediate shipment from Japan of exportable amounts of rubber, tin and antimony to the United States, subject to future reallocation, if necessary, by the Department of State acting in consultation with the Governments represented on the Far Eastern Advisory Commission and with the International Allocation authorities operating under the auspices of the Combined Raw Materials Boards. It is our understanding that shipment of these commodities to the United States is in accordance with the current pattern of world trade and it is believed would be approved by the Combined Raw Materials Boards. If reshipment is decided upon, the United States Government will undertake to make the necessary arrangements. Because of the urgency of this matter a prompt reply from your Government would be greatly appreciated. A similar communication is being addressed to each country invited to sit on the Far Eastern Advisory Commission.

For your information, it is the policy of the United States Government that, for the present, it is unwise for security reasons for Japanese nationals to have any direct commercial contact with nationals of the United States or of other countries. Therefore, arrangements have been made for the United States Commercial Company, a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and an agency of the United States Government, to receive goods from the Supreme Commander and deliver them to consumers as directed by this Government. Its services might be available for deliveries to any other Government or country if requested.

This method for arriving at decisions with respect to exports from Japan represented by this note is considered to be temporary. The United States Government will probably propose to the Far Eastern Advisory Commission at an early date that there be set up an Inter-Allied Supply Committee, perhaps as a Sub-Committee of the Far Eastern Advisory Commission, as a vehicle for consultation between interested countries with respect to disposition of exports from Japan. This Government will probably recommend that such a Committee focus its attention particularly on goods in short world supply, permitting other types of products to be distributed to the purchaser offering the highest price, providing that exchange of goods are made available which can be used in meeting the minimum essential requirements of the Japanese for imports.

Discussions are now proceeding, looking towards the coordination of the responsibilities of such a Committee, if it were set up, with other international arrangements for allocating commodities in short world supply.

Accept Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

For the Secretary of State:

Text of note ends.

In paragraph (c) of your EX-4095 of December 1st,† you state that you are considering the advisability of sending out, with the Far Eastern Advisory Commission, an expert in the economic field and possibly a stenographer. I feel that I should take this occasion to emphasize the importance of this opportunity to send to Japan someone, possibly from the Department of Trade and Commerce, who is familiar not only with Japanese economy but also with commercial matters in that part of the world generally. I would be fearful that unless we do this, and in view of our lack of representation at Shanghai in the commercial field, our commercial interests in the Far East, post-war, will suffer. I would strongly recommend, therefore, that immediate consideration be given to the appointment of a commercial and economic expert to go with the Commission. The question of Japanese exports has already come up in the Commercial Counsellor's office here in a practical way and [been] reported on to the Department of Trade and Commerce. I would refer you in this connection to a letter from Mr. Scott to Mr. Harvey, dated November 6th last,† in which he reports on informal enquiries which he made at the State Department which resulted in his receiving, in fact, advance information that the note from the State Department quoted above would be forthcoming in the not distant future.

From this end I am inclined to agree with the comments made by the United Kingdom<sup>166</sup> on the United States' proposals for the disposal of the surpluses mentioned in the note quoted above, and I feel that it is important that we should take steps to protect our interests not only in respect of temporary arrangements which may be made in this country in these matters, but also on the spot in the Far East.

2. We feel certain, from previous discussions with United Kingdom authorities, that they have had no intention of accepting United States proposal for single British Commonwealth representation which was first mentioned in Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 2033 of October 31st.† They state that they have not deviated at all from the position outlined in Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 2077 of November 7th† advocating a Five-Power Council, on which both the United Kingdom and Australia would be represented. Nevertheless, I know that they consider it very likely that they may have to accept a Four-Power Council in face of expected insistence by United States and U.S.S.R. In such a situation they would be definitely opposed to membership of British Commonwealth representative as such. The only possibility along these lines they have considered is the appointment of Lieutenant General Northcote, who is in charge of combined Commonwealth forces, and who might be appointed strictly in that capacity. It is doubtful, however, if this proposal will be carried out because Northcote's status is not sufficiently high, and because military aspects of the Council are becoming increasingly less important than the political. Canada would not be involved in such a proposal as we have no forces under Northcote.

POLICY TOWARDS THE ZAIBATSU

The United Kingdom Government have asked for an expression of the views of the Canadian Government regarding the policy to be adopted toward the great Japanese business houses, collectively known as the Zaibatsu. The United States, Australian, and New Zealand Governments have expressed the view that the Zaibatsu should be broken up. Experts in the Foreign Office believe that if a democratic form of government were firmly established in Japan the Zaibatsu would not be likely to exhibit warlike tendencies, and that they might indeed play a useful role in preventing economic chaos.

Consideration given to the question by the Department suggests that it would be appropriate to send a telegram to the Dominions Office on the following lines:

“We are disposed to support the principle of breaking up the Zaibatsu. Although under a democratic form of Government they might not constitute a menace, it seems unlikely that they would make any positive contribution to securing such a Government for Japan. Indeed, during the formative stage, their retention might well impede the efforts of progressive and democratic groups. Similarly in the economic field, while their administrative talents would be useful, it would be too much to expect them to give leadership in effecting far-reaching reforms of Japanese economic institutions which we believe to be desirable.”<sup>167</sup>

Referring to the teletype message WA-6163 of December 7th from the Embassy in Washington and forwarded to me under cover of your letter of December 10th,† I am satisfied that the door must be kept open for us to obtain our proportion of commodities in short supply which may be available for export from Japan.

Naturally without information as to condition, grade, quantity, price, etcetera, no immediate commitments can be made. It is presumed that these materials are to be made available at or below current market values.

I would consider it most important in reply to the note from the State Department to avoid any inference that it would be satisfactory to us for the Commercial Company to transport materials immediately available to the United States for later distribution unless if re-shipment is decided upon it can be presumed that the United States will bear the increased cost and unless if retained by the United States alternative supplies and not only quota allocations will be made immediately available to the other interested powers.

Similarly it seems important that we should not limit the scope of our reply solely to measuring our interest in rubber, antimony and tin. Other materials to become available are equally interesting to us and the method of handling suggested in the note would not be satisfactory to us if experience with the Commercial Company's operations in Italy is a guide.

It is noted that the United States Government will recommend that the proposed Inter-Allied Advisory Commission should confine its attention to materials in short supply permitting other types of products to be distributed to the highest bidder. In view of the strength of the United States dollar position and of their relatively higher price levels, such marketing arrangements would be most prejudicial to Canadian interests if effected after shipment to the United States as in the case of supplies from Italy.

It is considered that the Inter-Allied Advisory Commission must review the possibilities of establishing a trading market for Japanese exports without their transference of the goods previously to the United States. In addition to other reasons given above, this is considered most important to Canadian shipping interests in the whole area for which homeward freight in the early stages of rehabilitation will be vital.

I am concerned that without the equivalent here of the Commercial Company we will be limited to bulk purchased items unless importation of materials indirectly through the United States is to be subsidized. This matter is receiving our careful attention and it may be that a government import purchasing organization will be required.

I would be very interested to know what attitude is taken by the United Kingdom Government to this note since it would appear that the course proposed would be even more prejudicial in their case.

It is considered that Colonel Cosgrave<sup>169</sup> should be kept fully advised of any immediate developments in this matter and if possible such information be forwarded to reach Colonel Cosgrave before departure from San Francisco December 27th.

Ottawa, December 29, 1945

Sir,

I have the honor to refer to my note No. 382 of October 8, 1945 and subsequent correspondence relating to the establishment of the Far Eastern Advisory Commission. Acting in the name of my Government and on behalf of the Governments of the United States of America, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom and China, I now have the honor to extend an invitation to the Canadian Government to participate in a Far Eastern Commission on the basis of the following terms of reference:

I. Establishment of the Commission.

A Far Eastern Commission is hereby established composed of the representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom, United States, China, France, The Netherlands, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India and the Philippine Commonwealth.

II. Functions.

A. The functions of the Far Eastern Commission shall be:

1. To formulate the policies, principles and standards in conformity with which the fulfillment by Japan of its obligations under the terms of surrender may be accomplished.
2. To review on the request of any member any directive issued to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers or any action taken by the Supreme Commander involving policy decisions within the jurisdiction of the Commission.

3. To consider such other matters as may be assigned to it by agreement among the participating Governments reached in accordance with the voting procedure provided for in Article V-2, hereinafter.

B. The Commission shall not make recommendations with regard to the conduct of military operations nor with regard to territorial adjustments.

C. The Commission in its activities will proceed from the fact that there has been formed an Allied Council for Japan and will respect existing control machinery in Japan including the chain of command from the United States Government to the Supreme Commander and the Supreme Commander's Command of occupation forces.

III. Functions of the United States Government.

1. The United States Government shall prepare directives in accordance with policy decisions of the Commission and shall transmit them to the Supreme Commander through the appropriate United States Government agency. The Supreme Commander shall be charged with the implementation of the directives which express the policy decisions of the Commission.

2. If the Commission decides that any directive or action reviewed in accordance with Article II-A-2 should be modified, its decision shall be regarded as a policy decision.

3. The United States Government may issue interim directives to the Supreme Commander pending action by the Commission whenever urgent matters arise not covered by policies already formulated by the Commission provided that any directive dealing with fundamental changes in the Japanese Constitutional structure, or in the regime of control, or dealing with a change in the Japanese Government as a whole will be issued only following consultation and following the attainment of agreement in the Far Eastern Commission.

4. All directives issued shall be filed with the Commission.

IV. Other methods of consultation.

The establishment of the Commission shall not preclude the use of other methods of consultation on Far Eastern issues by the participating Governments.

V. Composition.

1. The Far Eastern Commission shall consist of the representative of each of the States party to this agreement. The membership of the Commission may be increased by agreement among the participating powers as conditions warrant by the addition of representatives of other United Nations in the Far East or having territories therein. The Commission shall provide for full and adequate consultations as occasion may require with representatives of the United Nations not members of the Commission in regard to matters before the Commission which are of particular concern to such nations.

2. The Commission may take action by less than unanimous vote provided that action shall have the concurrence of at least a majority of all the representatives including the representatives of the four following powers: United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China.

VI. Location and organization.

1. The Far Eastern Commission shall have its headquarters in Washington. It may meet at other places as occasion requires, including Tokyo, if and when it deems it desirable to do so. It may make such arrangements through the Chairman as may be practicable for consultation with the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers.

2. Each representative on the Commission may be accompanied by an appropriate staff comprising both civilian and military representation.

3. The Commission shall organize its secretariat, appoint such committees as may be deemed advisable and otherwise perfect its organization and procedure.

VII. Termination.

The Far Eastern Commission shall cease to function when a decision to that effect is taken by the concurrence of at least a majority of all the representatives including the United States, United Kingdom, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China. Prior to the termination of its functions the Commission shall transfer to any interim or permanent security organization of which the participating Governments are members those functions which may appropriately be transferred.

SECRET. My despatch No. 195 of November 17th.

1. In view of the change in the Soviet Constitution conferring authority in foreign relations on constituent Republics, and in view of decision of the United Kingdom Government to proceed with organization of War Crimes Commission without Soviet participation, as outlined in your telegram No. 176 of December 18th, it would now be advisable not to reply to Soviet aide-mémoire of November 11th<sup>170</sup> as recommended in paragraph 6 of my despatch No. 195.

2. Our chief purpose is to have the Soviet Government understand our international status as an independent sovereign State. This can best be achieved by demonstrating that we follow an independent policy rather than becoming involved in debate on constitutional position. We have been assured that the Soviet Government understands the international position of Canada. Our general position will be weakened by further debate which implies comparison of position of constituent Republics with that of members of the British Commonwealth. Soviet Government can always point to participation of India in the League of Nations and in international conferences, while Australia and New Zealand publicly advocate closer co-ordination of Empire foreign policy. Participation of constituent Republics in international organizations has now become world problem with which we shall have to deal in common with other countries and no good purpose will be served by us appearing to put off the lead in opposing participation of constituent Republics which might be the inference drawn by the Soviet Government from further debate in our constitutional position in international affairs.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 29, February 3, War Crimes Commission.

1. We agree that, in view of the change in the Soviet constitution, it would not be advisable to reply to the Soviet's aide mémoire of November 11. There appears to be little doubt that Soviet Government understand our independent status and that their claims are put forward for other reasons. Further debate on constitutional question would lead to inference that we took lead in opposing participation of constituent Republics.

2. In the United Kingdom telegram December 8th<sup>171</sup> it was proposed that United Kingdom discuss with representatives of United States Government and Dominion Governments on Commission the question of Soviet claim for separate representation of Union Republics, as preliminary to bringing Soviet claims before Commission itself, and also to discuss best method of conveying views of governments represented on Commission to Soviet Government.

See Volume 9, Document 556.

3. United Kingdom now advise, in telegram February 7th,† that United States considers it essential that issue of Soviet representation should not be discussed in the Commission or with all the governments represented thereon but "should be dealt with purely through diplomatic channel between the United States, United Kingdom, and Soviet governments."

4. United Kingdom state that, in view of urgency of officially establishing War Crimes Commission, it was agreed with United States that Sir Cecil Hurst<sup>172</sup> should inform Commission that United Kingdom Government see no objection to Commission's meetings now taking place on official basis, but that he should not refer to Soviet difficulties and that if and when Soviet participation can be arranged it can be fitted into work of Commission later.

5. In view of strong views of United States, United Kingdom have agreed to make no official communication to other Allied Governments regarding reasons for Soviet abstention from Commission.

6. United Kingdom pointed out to United States Ambassador in London that issue concerned all other interested governments and not United Kingdom alone. On January 31, after consultation with Mr. Winant, and immediately before announcement of constitutional changes in U.S.S.R., United Kingdom sent reply to Mr. Gousev's Note of October 18,<sup>173</sup> stating that there was nothing they could usefully add to their earlier explanation of views, that they were not the only Government directly interested, and that it remained their hope that Soviet Government would participate in accordance with resolution unanimously adopted by Allied Governments at Foreign Office meeting on October 20,<sup>174</sup> communicated to Soviet Government on October 22.

7. Re paragraph three above, we are inquiring of United Kingdom whether United States suggestion excludes discussion with Dominion Governments, as had been originally intended. (See our telegram No. 176, December 18, 1943). We are also stating that, although Canadian interest in war crimes is relatively slight, we are greatly interested in the broad issue of representation of Union Republics on international bodies, especially in view of the possibility that the U.S.S.R. may repeat their claim to representation of the Republics on other international bodies on which the Dominions are represented.

8. Although this issue is now a world problem, the United Kingdom appears to have been manoeuvred into the unenviable position of taking the lead and responsibility for opposing participation of the Union Republics.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 6, 1944

RE: CANADA'S RELATIONS TO THE UNITED NATIONS
WAR CRIMES COMMISSION

Attached are a despatch of January 28, 1944, No. A.44,† and a telegram of March 2, 1944, No. 523,† from the High Commissioner for Canada in London dealing, amongst other questions, with the appointment of a Canadian Representative on the United Nations War Crimes Commission in London and enquiring whether Canada would wish to contribute financially to the expenses of the Commission.

I have not yet referred these communications, as I am not sure whether this raises a question of policy to be decided by this Department or whether it would be better to ask our Advisory Committee dealing with War Crimes for its views on the matter. You will remember that the question of Canadian Representation on the United Nations Commission was discussed on a few occasions by the War Cabinet [sic] but a final decision was deferred on the grounds that the conclusions reached at the subsequent meetings of the Commission would provide a clearer indication as to what participation in the work of the Commission would mean from the standpoint of Canada. It was stated that representation would depend partly on the degree of Canada's participation in the work of the Commission. I do not know to what extent our attitude was dictated by our desire to appease the sensitiveness of the Soviets.

However, being of the opinion that Canada should appoint a Representative on the Commission and should, as a consequence, contribute to its expenses, I should like to put forward the following suggestions for your consideration:

(1) Canada having associated itself with the United Nations should participate in Committees acting in the name of the whole group. Our decision should not be taken under the pretence that Canada is very little concerned in the work of the Commission, in view of the small number of Canadians who have suffered from war crimes, but should be taken on broader views, that is whether "war crimes should be punished with even-handed justice rather than by sporadic violence."

(2) Our Representation on the Commission would certainly help Canada to play an important role in post-war Europe, because the Governments of nearly all European countries are represented. If we fail now to show interest in vital European problems, I doubt that we would be welcome later on to give our views in the post-war period.

(3) If we claim at home that Canada is a Sovereign nation, we should endeavour to avoid a misinterpretation of our absence. It might be suggested that once more we preferred that the United Kingdom authorities represent Canada on an International body. The fact that Australia, New Zealand and India have Representatives on the Commission should be borne in mind when a final decision is taken.

(4) Up to now we have in practice received many advantages from the Commission, being furnished with the minutes of the meetings and general information regarding the treatment of war criminals. I do not think it is right to take advantage of the information collected by the Commission without contributing to a certain extent.

(5) The telegram from the High Commissioner for Canada in London states that the seventeen Governments which are members of the Commission have agreed to contribute to the expenses. The sum involved would be approximately £400 per annum. If Luxembourg is able to spend this sum, I do not see how Canada can refuse to do its share. It is, I think, a question of prestige and national pride.

(6) The most serious objection in our opinion is that we do not have at present in London a Legal expert. This might be true, but I think that our High Commissioner is fully qualified to represent Canada on the Commission. With him could be appointed a delegate, a member of his Office, who could attend the meeting when the High Commissioner is not able to assist or when the questions discussed are not of major importance.<sup>175</sup>

SECRET. Your telegram No. 21 of February 15th.<sup>176</sup> War Crimes Commission. Delay in replying is regretted.

1. Assumption is correct that in light of United States views on this question we do not propose to hold any further discussions on question of separate representation of Soviet Union Republics on the Commission unless and until Soviet Government themselves return to the charge. Should this occur you will, of course, at once be informed. We have borne in mind in this connection Canadian Government view (your telegram No. 197 of December 17th, 1943<sup>177</sup>) that Russians might be allowed to go their own way in the matter of dealing with war crimes without renewed effort on our part to secure their membership on the Commission.

2. As regards paragraph 2 of your telegram under reply there is little to add to information given in my telegram Circular D. 182 of February 7th.† At his interview with the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs referred to in that telegram, Mr. Winant did not go into detail about United States Government's reasons for considering that question of Soviet representation should be settled as between Governments and not in the Commission itself. We had understood, however, from United States State Department Legal Adviser that Mr. Hull was always cautious about giving confidential information to United Nations Governments as a body, as he felt that one or other of them might yield to temptation to use such information for their own interests. Moreover, State Department had indicated to His Majesty's Embassy in Washington that they felt that issues involved in question of Soviet representation were extremely delicate. It seems likely that United States Government felt some reluctance in allowing a question directly affecting relations between the major Allies to become matter for general discussion among minor European Allies, or on a Commission composed not of Government representatives but of legal experts with no mandate to decide or make recommendations upon important political issues. The United States clearly preferred not to take any initiative which might encourage Soviet Government to invite views of other Governments and more particularly of the United States Government on this question. *Honorary Counsel, War Crimes Advisory Committee, to

Toronto, November 8, 1944

Dear Sir,

I have read with some concern recently the Minutes of the Meetings of the United Nations War Crimes Commission in London which disclose very substantial differences of opinion by its members and frequent divisions in voting on various items which indicate a pretty closely split division of thought in the members representing the various countries, also a minority report of 27th September presented by Dr. V. Ecer.<sup>178</sup>

I have also read the draft Convention for the Establishment of a United Nations War Time [Crimes?] Court and recommendation for the establishment by Supreme Military Commanders of mixed military tribunals for the trial of war criminals.

These have been forwarded by Sir Cecil Hurst as Chairman to Mr. Anthony Eden as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs by letter of 6th October, 1944,† with a suggestion from the Commission that he should convene in the near future a diplomatic conference to consider and if thought fit to conclude a convention for the establishment of a United Nations War Times [Crimes?] Court. (Copy appended hereto).

Canada has not been represented on the Commission and has not attended the meetings for a very long time.

I have been somewhat concerned with the lack of progress and lack of practical results in the work of the Commission and with its varied racial and international membership I doubt very much whether the presence of a Canadian member at the Sittings of the Commission for many months past would have been able to make much difference in the result.

It does seem to me, however, that if Mr. Eden should summons in the near future a diplomatic conference as suggested by Sir Cecil Hurst and the Commission unanimously—that Canada should be represented at such conference and take a real interest in its deliberations.

In expressing my real thoughts regarding this whole matter to you frankly, I am not unmindful of the following facts:

1. The problem undertaken by the Commission is one of extreme difficulty.
2. The racial, national and linguistic differences of the dozen or more nations represented adds tremendously to the difficulty of the task in hand.

Representative of Czechoslovakia, United Nations War Crimes Commission.

3. We have only the official written text of the meetings and the official recommendations which emanate from the Commission from time to time, with the result that we are viewing the matter from afar and without the atmosphere of the actual conferences.

Let me make it very clear that I do not think we have lost anything whatever in not having had up to this stage a representative actually present at all these meetings.

Now that I have expressed my fears and doubts, I feel it incumbent upon me, in my capacity as Honorary Counsel, to submit to you, as Head of the Department of External Affairs, the following advice based upon my study of the problem over the last year and my consideration of the immediate problems which are confronting this as well as other interested countries:

1. That Canada should, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, communicate with the British Foreign Secretary with a view to impressing upon him the urgency of complying with the recommendations embodied in Sir Cecil Hurst's letter. It should be made clear that the Canadian Government considered that it was a matter of the utmost importance to insure that a practical and effective organization should be set up without delay to deal with this problem. The scope of the conference should extend beyond the mere consideration of the draft Convention. It should require the conference to provide for the organization and establishment of efficient and expeditious administration of international criminal justice based upon sound principles.

2. That this request should go forward by cable in the usual form of diplomatic communications and Canada should select someone to go over and attend such a conference.

3. That Canada should take steps to give effect to a recommendation that the Armistice or preliminary Peace Treaty or the first document which the Allied Nations require Germany to execute on the cessation of hostilities should contain a powerful clause under which Germany agrees to the arrest, trial and punishment of all Germans and all subjects of Axis countries which are now or have been allied or in co-operation with Germany and all citizens of any country who have as co-operationists or otherwise lent aid or assistance to Germany or other Axis countries in connection with the prosecution of the war, by and under the direction of such

- (a) United Nations War Times [Crimes?] Court;
- (b) Mixed military tribunals of the Allied Nations;
- (c) Tribunals set up by any individual Allied Nation.

Such document should contain a further powerful clause under which Germany agrees that the above tribunals (a), (b) and (c) have full power to release from custody whether in Germany or in any other country all persons detained in custody whether for alleged political offences or otherwise and to grant to them complete pardon and relieve all such persons from the payment of any fine or levy which may have been imposed upon them.

(NOTE: The last clause of paragraph 3 above is intended to make it impossible for German citizens or such German Governmental authorities as she may set up with the permission of the Allies for the regulation of her own internal domestic affairs—from taking exception to or feeling aggrieved by our tribunals instantly releasing any political or other prisoners who have in our judgment been unfairly and improperly imprisoned during the Hitler regime. So far as I recall, the Commission in London have never discussed or dealt with this phase of the post-war situation in Germany and it would be a wise precaution to provide for it.)

4. That Canada should respectfully submit for consideration by the Commission presently functioning and by any subsequent diplomatic conference that Mr. Eden may convene—the following amendments to the “Suggestions” contained in C.59 of date 6th October, 1944,<sup>179</sup> copy of which Commission Suggestions are appended to this letter in order to simplify the ready review of the proposed amendments:

(a) “Suggestion 3”<sup>179</sup> should have added after the last word “war” a comma, and the following phrase: “as the same shall be interpreted by and in the discretion of the tribunal trying each case.”

(b) “Suggestion 4”<sup>180</sup> should be amended by substituting “three members” for “five members” in each tribunal.

(c) “Suggestion 5”<sup>181</sup> should be amended by striking out all words contained therein after the first six words and as amended should read as follows:

“5. Rules of procedure should be framed by and governed by the particular tribunal in each case to be tried.”

The various recommendations for prompt action by Canada with reference to attendance at the diplomatic conference are made because I think it extremely desirable that the Allied Nations should be ready in all respects to set up and put into operation tribunals for trial of war criminals immediately Germany collapses. The punishment of these guilty men is amongst our war aims. The example not only to Germany and the Germans but to the Japanese

This footnote and the next two reproduce extracts from the document “Suggestions to accompany the Recommendation for the establishment of mixed military tribunals.” Suggestion 3 was as follows:

3. Each Tribunal should have jurisdiction to try any enemy national who is charged with having committed an offence in violation of the laws and customs of war, subject, however, to the conditions contained in the recommendation of the Commission (Commission Document C.52(1), 22 September 1944). The law to be applied by the Tribunals will be the laws of war, i.e., the international law to be found in treaties, in custom, and in the unwritten law of war.

Suggestion 4 was as follows:

4. For the trial of cases each Tribunal should consist of not less than five members.

Suggestion 5 was as follows:

5. The rules of procedure should be consistent with practices which are usual in civilized countries and should be framed by the Appointing Authority.

(against whom presumably we will still be fighting) would be of the utmost importance.

The long months of delay on the part of the Commission in producing a practical plan for immediate operation might precipitate a serious situation if the German collapse occurs now at any day as it might. Any steps Canada can take to put on pressure to speed up the situation and bring into being a definite convention that can act immediately should be of great benefit not only to us but our Allies.

With reference to my proposed amendments to the Suggestions that the Commission have drawn up and sent to Mr. Eden, it will be obvious to you that they are all intended to simplify the procedure and to give a wide discretion to each tribunal rather than to fetter it and hedge it round with legal restrictions. We must trust these tribunals to act justly and fairly and if we surround their procedure with all sorts of inhibitions at the outset the whole process will turn out to be very unsatisfactory.

Three members of a Court should be ample. When you enlarge it to five it becomes more cumbersome and less efficient.

Speed in setting up the tribunals and prompt functioning by them is all important.

The testimony of ex-prisoners of war will be available on the spot. Criminals can be immediately identified and arrested.

All prisoners of war will resent delay in their repatriation but some of them will have to be detained in Germany to testify before these tribunals and a lengthy detention will create great dissatisfaction.

Yours sincerely,

A. G. SLAGHT

DESPATCH 1465

Ottawa, November 16, 1944

SECRET

Sir,

A situation has arisen with regard to the position of the treatment of war crimes by the United Nations War Crimes Commission in London, which requires special consideration. In Document C.60 dated October 6, 1944,† the Chairman of the Commission, Sir Cecil Hurst, addresses a letter to the Foreign Secretary transmitting a draft Convention for the establishment of a United Nations War Crimes Court, together with an explanatory memorandum and the text of a recommendation for the establishment of mixed military tribunals, with suggestions to accompany the recommendation, which are set forth in Document C.59.†

2. In transmitting the documents, the Chairman expressed the hope that the Foreign Secretary would take the necessary steps to convene a diplomatic conference and, if thought fit, to conclude a Convention for the establishment of a United Nations War Crimes Court.

3. You are doubtless familiar with the provisions of these documents but, for the purpose of convenient reference, I am attaching copies of C.60 and C.59. The draft Convention is somewhat longer and you already have copies in your possession. (See your despatch A.589, October 3, 1944,† Documents C.50(1) and C.57; also your despatch No. A.597 October 9, Document C.58).†

4. A communication has been received from the Honorary Counsel of the War Crimes Advisory Committee† submitting proposals along the following lines:

- (a) Canadian representation at the Conference;
- (b) The necessity for adequate armistice terms dealing with war crimes and criminals;
- (c) Specific proposals for revision of the suggestions accompanying the recommendation for the establishment of mixed military tribunals;
- (d) The urgency of prompt action.

5. The first question concerns Canadian participation in this Conference. There is complete agreement with Mr. Slaght's suggestion as to the need for Canadian participation in this Conference, but it is thought that the desirable course would be for you to discuss the arrangements for the Conference with the appropriate representatives of the United Kingdom Government. It would be appreciated if you would obtain advance information with regard to the plans for convening this Conference, as the Government will want to make arrangements for Canadian representation. In discussing the matter, it should be made clear that the delay in arranging for Canadian representation on the Commission does not mean that there is any lack of interest in this question. It should also be made clear that it would be desirable to broaden the scope of the Conference. The deliberations of the Commission have resulted in a good deal of confusion. The suggestions and plans are so complicated that they cannot be understood by ordinary men, and the procedures are so cumbersome and intricate that they involve disastrous delay in the trial and conviction of war criminals. The Conference would need to take the results of the researches of the Commission and build anew a clear-cut and simple organization designed to administer speedy justice in accordance with sound legal principles. From the point of view of timing, it would be advantageous if the Conference could be held in London during the latter part of January or early February. Mr. Slaght will then be at the Privy Council. There are few members of the legal profession with as an [sic] extensive a knowledge of the practical aspects of the problem, and, if the Conference were held at that time, his services would probably be available in an advisory capacity.

6. The question raised by Mr. Slaght with regard to armistice terms is one that may need to be dealt with through different channels. His suggestions are receiving consideration at the present time, and you will be informed with regard to the action taken whether or not it becomes necessary for you to take the matter up with the United Kingdom authorities.

7. These specific proposals for the revision of the suggestions in Document C.59 are all matters which would merit careful consideration. They could only be finally dealt with at the Conference, but it would be well to bring them to the attention both of the United Kingdom authorities and of Sir Cecil Hurst, in order that they may be examined in advance by the United Kingdom Government and those who were directly concerned in the work of the Commission.

8. With regard to the question of the urgency of prompt action, the considerations advanced by Mr. Slaght are sound. It would be undesirable to have matters dragged out, especially if it involved the retaining of Canadian Naval, Military or Air personnel for an unduly long time in Europe for the purpose of giving testimony at prospective trials. There is nothing to be gained by delay and everything to be gained by the disposition of this matter with all speed that may be considered in the proper administration of justice.

Ottawa, December 14, 1944

Re: War Crimes

1. Mr. Arthur Slaght, Honorary Counsel of Canadian War Crimes Advisory Committee, expects to be in Washington Monday, December 18, from Toronto. He will be on legal business, but would like to take advantage of his presence there to talk over war crimes questions in a general way with Hackworth.<sup>182</sup> We shall tell Slaght to wire you precise date of arrival, place of stay Washington, and other details and ask him to communicate with Embassy by telephone upon arrival.

2. In the meantime, it is desired that you should bring annexed draft memorandum to Mr. Hackworth's attention. The Legal Adviser of the Department and the Canadian War Crimes Advisory Committee, as well as

Of the legal division, Department of State of United States.

Mr. Slaght, have been concerned with war crimes problems for a long time now and have been following with very much interest the proceedings of the United Nations War Crimes Commission in London. Canada has not been actively represented on this Commission and we are naturally diffident to put forward any proposals of a revolutionary character. On the other hand, we have been confused by the mass of material which has been put out by the Commission and by the lack of any simple plan and procedure. The war criminals will have to be tried by improvised tribunals and, unless there is provision for simple, speedy, and fair justice, there is likely to be a judicial scandal which will not be creditable for the United Nations. The very eminent jurists who have been dealing with this problem have shown great learning and industry and the difficulties which have arisen result from their failure to envisage the problem of speedy trials in which hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands or even hundreds of thousands may have to be disposed of in a short period of time. They are talking, for instance, of trying all the Gestapo and all the S.S. troops. If that is done, the suggestion of hundreds of thousands may not be wholly adequate to give an idea of the magnitude of the job.

3. Having in mind the urgent need for simplicity and practicability, we have ventured to prepare a very rough outline of a comprehensive plan designed to take in the whole field of war crimes. We thought it might be worthwhile to bring it to the attention of Mr. Hackworth and also of Sir William Malkin<sup>183</sup> in case it might suggest to them the possibility of a simple plan capable of being understood by the army officers who will be manning military courts and other persons who are not necessarily great jurists but who may be concerned in one aspect or another of the war crimes problem.

4. Along with this explanation, it would be appreciated if you would bring this draft memorandum to Mr. Hackworth's attention. Draft begins:

(1) The problem of war crimes has been studied by the United Nations War Crimes Commission in London, the members of which have, in turn, consulted eminent jurists. The result has been a mass of undigested proposals, counter-proposals, memoranda and opinions which do not furnish a workable policy for dealing with the criminals and which offer no comprehensible guide to tribunals and prosecuting officers.

(2) This memorandum is based upon certain assumptions:

(a) that the plan for dealing with war criminals should be simple, clear, and comprehensible;

(b) that the procedure and law to be applied should be simple enough so that it can be understood both by the prosecuting officers and by the members of the courts. It should also, if possible, be simple enough to be understood by the accused or, at any rate, by counsel for the accused;

(c) that the plan should fit in with the express desires of the countries primarily affected;

Of the legal division, Foreign Office of Great Britain.

(d) that it should be based upon easily defensible, legal, and political principles.

(3) The first clear principle which emerges in considering this problem is that a war crime committed in a particular country, e.g. Holland, can be, and almost certainly will be, a crime under Dutch law. If the victim of the war crime is Dutch, it is clear that the accused should be turned over to the Dutch authorities and dealt with by them in accordance with their ordinary laws. In dealing with the problem, the Dutch courts should have no difficulty. If the act is justified by the laws of war, the accused should be acquitted. If it is a crime under Dutch law and the act is not justified by the laws of war, the accused should be convicted. If there is a gap by reason of the Dutch law failing to assert jurisdiction in the particular circumstances, Dutch legislation could fill the gap.

(4) The second clear principle which emerges is that an act may be a war crime under the law of the place where it is committed but the victim may be a member of a military force, e.g. a Canadian prisoner in a German prison camp in France; an English soldier against whom a war crime has been committed in Belgium; a United States soldier against whom a war crime has been committed while he was a prisoner in Germany; a French soldier against whom a war crime has been committed while on German soil. In all of these cases, the essential quality is that it has been committed against a soldier (it might be an airman or sailor) of a particular nationality. They all have one thing in common, namely that the soldiers in question are members of the Allied armies and under an Allied command. Accordingly, the simplest way of dealing with these cases is to provide that, in all instances, they are to be justiciable by military courts established by the Commander-in-Chief involved. In France, Eisenhower would set up the courts; in Italy, Alexander; in the East, Stalin; in Burma, Mountbatten; in the Australian, Philippine area, MacArthur; in the Pacific, Nimitz.

(5) These courts would function as military courts appointed by an Allied leader in his capacity of being an Allied leader. They could not apply United States law, United Kingdom law, or any other particular law (although it would be impracticable to get the courts on the eastern front to apply anything but Soviet law). It would be necessary, therefore, to invest these courts with jurisdiction and to give them directions as to the legal principles which they would apply by agreement between the Allied governments who were concerned.

(6) In giving directions to the courts, they should be permitted to make their own rules of procedure subject to the following directives—in providing for procedure, charges must be presented in writing; the accused must be given copies of the charges, translated if necessary into his own language; the accused must be permitted to defend himself or to be defended either by counsel or by a fellow officer or soldier; the accused must be permitted to present evidence on his own behalf; and he must be given reasonable opportunity and facilities for making his defence.

(7) The courts should be directed, in determining whether an act complained of constituted a war crime, to treat acts as being war crimes which satisfied the following tests:

(a) the act in question must not have been justified by the laws of war as recognized among civilized countries;

(b) the act complained of must have resulted in death or serious injury to a member of the Allied forces and, for this purpose, "a member of the Allied forces" may be given the broadest construction possible under the laws of the force concerned;

(c) the injury must have been sufficiently severe to result in serious permanent disability;

(d) the act must have been contrary to the principles of humanity.

Within the limits of these principles, the tribunals should use their own judgment in determining whether an act complained of constituted a war crime.

8. The most important war crimes are political in character and the most important war criminals are the German, Italian, and Japanese political leaders who have had the major responsibility for the prevalence of war atrocities in the present conflict. They should not be dealt with by either the local authorities or the military courts. There should be established a political court before which they would be subjected to impeachment. The jurisdiction of the court and the manner of its operation should be determined by a multilateral treaty or agreement.

9. In order to give effect to these proposals, it would be necessary to provide for the conclusion of a multilateral pact, the parties being either the United Nations or those of the United Nations which have been actively engaged in hostilities. There should be annexed to this draft memorandum a draft pact (not yet prepared) designed to accomplish the following purposes:

(a) The establishment of the foundation for proceedings before military courts along the lines suggested in this memorandum;

(b) the establishment of the foundation for proceedings before the general political tribunal along the lines suggested in Section 8 of this memorandum;

(c) Ancillary measures (this part might consist largely of the provisions of the draft Convention† now under consideration or, in the event of the conclusion of the draft Convention, there might be no need for ancillary provisions).

Draft ends.

London, December 23, 1944

SECRET. My telegram No. 3372 of December 14th† concerning proposed Conference to consider a United Nations War Crimes Court.

2. Discussed question in light of your despatch No.1465 of November 16th with Sir Cecil Hurst on December 19th. Hurst told me then that he had no idea when suggested meeting would take place, and gave me the impression that he was not very fully informed about policy of the United Kingdom authorities in regard to the considerations raised in your despatch. The only point of real interest which he made was that in his view probably not more than 5% of the war criminals would be tried by any United Nations body, the vast majority being dealt with by National Courts.

3. Hurst would, of course, be extremely pleased to have Canada actively associated in the work of the Commission and, at his urgent request, I agreed that a member of my staff should attend as an observer one of its meetings, which took place on Wednesday. My representative was not greatly impressed by what this particular meeting accomplished, though admittedly an isolated meeting may not be considered a fair test of what the Commission is doing. The subject under discussion was an Australian proposal for modification of the system now in use for the collation of evidence. No important conclusions were reached. Representation at the meeting was not calculated to inspire confidence in the future of the Commission. The United States, for example, had as its spokesman an Army lieutenant.

4. A member of my staff also discussed the considerations raised in your foregoing despatch with Sir William Malkin at the Foreign Office this afternoon. Malkin gave the impression that it was highly improbable whether the suggested Conference would ever take place.

The United Kingdom authorities were not disposed to favour the setting up by treaty of a United Nations War Crimes Court. The reason he gave was that to do so would be a lengthy business and it was hoped the war would be over long before such a treaty could be concluded. The United Kingdom Government informed the United States Government of its view about 6 weeks ago and is now awaiting an answer. It is understood that the State Department agree that a United Nations War Crimes Court of the sort suggested by the Crimes Commission is not practicable. The attitude of the War Department is, however, not known. I understand moreover, that the Soviet authorities too have been consulted. Malkin thinks that they may favour an International Court, but in view of Soviet attitude to War Crimes Commission, even if the United Kingdom and the United States were to agree to the proposal, it could hardly be built on the superstructure of the Commission.

5. Malkin thinks there is much more to commend the concept of the Mixed Tribunal, which would need no implementation by treaty and which could operate under orders from the Supreme Allied Military Commanders. The fact that there is no Supreme Allied Military Command under which the Russians come, however, is considered a disadvantage.

6. The foregoing of course indicates that whole question is still most unsettled here. My representative was careful to indicate that, in the view of the Canadian Government, prompt action was highly desirable, for the reasons you gave. Malkin said that the United Kingdom authorities were of the same opinion and it was hoped that the Governments of the United States and Soviet Union would soon express their views and thus lay a foundation for early agreement.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I want to thank you for your letter of December 15<sup>t</sup> and its enclosure which I have read with great interest and which I have taken the liberty of forwarding to the War and Navy Departments.

I was pleased to have an opportunity to discuss the subject with Mr. Slaght when he called some days ago.

With regard to paragraph 7(C), it occurs to me that crimes may well have been committed which merit punishment, although they have not resulted in serious permanent disability.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, February 8, 1945

RE: RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS
WAR CRIMES COMMISSION AND CANADA

It has been the feeling of Mr. Slaght and the War Crimes Advisory Committee that Canada should be represented on the United Nations War Crimes Commission. The War Committee, at a meeting on March 22, agreed, after discussion, that a representative should be appointed on the United Nations War Crimes Commission and that Canada should contribute appropriately to the expenses of the Commission. No action to date has been taken.

Up to the time of the invasion, a very small number of Canadians suffered from war crimes, but since D-Day Canadian armed troops have become involved (I am referring to the Normandy shootings<sup>184</sup>), and it is inevitable that the Canadian public should want the Government to establish some machinery for the punishment of those responsible.

It would also seem desirable that the War Crimes Advisory Committee should be considered as a National Office, set up to collect information about war crimes committed against Canadian nationals and to submit them to the United Nations War Crimes Commission.

With this in mind, a letter to Mr. Massey has been drafted, informing him of his appointment as Canadian representative to the Commission. A Canadian Press cable from London dated February 1st announced that the newly-appointed Chairman of the War Crimes Commission, Lord Wright, was to discuss Canada's participation in the Commission with Massey during the next

My dear High Commissioner,

I informed you by telegram No. 564 dated March 30, 1944, that the War Crimes Committee had agreed that a Canadian representative should be appointed on the United Nations War Crimes Commission. In this connection, I now take pleasure in informing you that you are designated as representative to act on the Commission.

As you are aware, the functions of Mr. Arthur G. Slaght, K.C., and the War Crimes Advisory Committee set up to assist him, are to examine evidence of crimes committed against members of the Canadian Armed Forces or Canadian civilians. Very little evidence has been collected about the latter; this was also the case with regard to the Armed Forces until you transmitted to us the reports of the Courts of Enquiries into the Normandy shootings. The Canadian Government may find it necessary in the future to submit these and other cases to the United Nations War Crimes Commission. It is, therefore, desirable for Canada to have a representative on the War Crimes Commission, in order that this country may be associated with the other United Nations in working out coordinated methods for dealing with the problems of war crimes.

It would be appreciated if you would inform the United Nations War Crimes Commission of Canada's desire to have a representative on the Commission and of your appointment as such.

It is realized that it may not always be possible for you to attend all the meetings of the Commission, in which case, we feel you will be justified in designating a member of the staff of your office to attend the meetings as your representative.

Yours sincerely,

RE: TRIAL OF MAJOR GERMAN WAR CRIMINALS

1. I am enclosing a copy of a letter from the Acting High Commissioner dated August 24, 1945, enclosing a letter to him from the Dominions Secretary and also a draft note from the Foreign Office to the Governments of Norway, The Netherlands, Belgium, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Luxembourg, Poland and Denmark.

2. You will observe that arrangements are settled by the representatives of the four leading European powers for the constitution of a tribunal to try the major war criminals, for the establishment of the procedure for the staffing of the tribunal, and the control of prosecution.

3. The note in question is being sent to the European allies, giving them the opportunity of presenting statements with regard to major war crimes and also inviting accession to the Agreement.

4. In Lord Addison's note, it is suggested that, if we want to submit any evidence with regard to major war crimes, we may do so through the United Kingdom Government. It is also suggested that Canadian adherence to the Agreement would be welcomed.

5. On the question of evidence, we have nothing available for submission concerning the major war criminals so that it is unnecessary to raise the question as to whether it is appropriate for Canada to submit it through the channel which is suggested.

6. The question of adherence is a different matter. It might be considered that the dignified course would be to adhere to this Agreement. Having in mind the appalling mess made by the United Nations Commission, it is impossible seriously to criticize the Big Four for acting as a small group without consulting anybody. By adherence, we would protect our technical position and, at the same time, accept responsibility for a course of events over which we have no control.

7. On the other hand, it might be considered that we should not adhere to an agreement in the negotiation of which we had no part and in the carrying out of which we were to have no voice. It is quite a different matter from the agreement which is under consideration for the Far East. In that case, we have a voice in the negotiation and an important part in the execution of the agreement.<sup>186</sup>

Ottawa, September 14, 1945

Sir,

1. I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. A. 251 of June 28, 1945,† and subsequent correspondence concerning the Canadian interest in war crimes.

2. The Governor in Council, by P.C. 5831 of August 30, 1945,† has approved the War Crimes Regulations (Canada),† 25 copies of which are enclosed herewith.

3. The Government of Canada has, with regard to war crimes committed against Canadian nationals or members of the Canadian armed forces in the European theatre, approved the following:

(a) The War Crimes Section at C.M.H.Q., London, will act as a branch of the Canadian National Office in the preparation and submission of cases to the United Nations War Crimes Commission. There will be no reference back to Ottawa prior to listing, but the War Crimes Section will be expected to send reports to Ottawa from time to time;

(b) The Canadian authorities will, for the time being, concern themselves only with war crimes involving death or grievous bodily harm to Canadians;

(c) Once a war criminal has been "listed" with the Commission, it will be the function of the Judge Advocate General, or a representative nominated by him, to certify the case as approved for trial if he considers that it should be proceeded with;

(d) Cases so approved will be prosecuted and tried by Canadian service authorities. It is the Government's desire that the necessary military courts be convened by the general officer commanding Canadian military forces in the Canadian zone of occupation in Germany. It is also expected that Lt. Col. B. J. S. Macdonald, Head of the War Crimes Section at C.M.H.Q., London, will be charged with responsibility for the prosecutions, with the assistance of other experienced service personnel as necessary.

(e) Where a war crime was directed mainly against Canadians, but Allied and Commonwealth nationals were also victimized in the same incident, or series of incidents, the Allied or Commonwealth state should be represented on the military court, as provided for in Regulation 7 of the War Crimes Regulations (Canada).

4. With regard to Brigadeführer Kurt Meyer,<sup>187</sup> it is assumed that, on the request of the appropriate military authorities, Meyer will be handed over into the custody of the Canadian general officer commanding Canadian forces in Germany. Meyer has already been "listed" as a war criminal. It is understood that the Judge Advocate General will personally examine the case against Meyer before finally approving it for trial under the proviso to Regulation 3 of the War Crimes Regulations (Canada), although he will nominate a representative in the United Kingdom to approve other cases for trial.

5. It is expected that the contents of this despatch, together with any necessary supporting instructions, will be communicated to the appropriate service headquarters in London direct from Ottawa.

6. Within the limits of the Regulations, and subject to paragraphs 3 to 5 above, it is the intention that the trial of Meyer and other war criminals should proceed in accordance with arrangements to be made by the appropriate Overseas military authorities.

ADHERENCE OF CANADA TO THE FOUR-POWER
AGREEMENT FOR THE TRIAL OF MAJOR WAR
CRIMINALS OF THE EUROPEAN AXIS

1. Canada has on several occasions been requested to indicate its adherence to the Agreement by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Government of the United States of America, the Provisional Government of the French Republic and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for the Prosecution and Punishment of the Major War Criminals of the European Axis, signed at London on August 8, 1945.

2. In the Preamble, the Four-Power Agreement is described as having been made "in the interests of all the United Nations." Canada, however, was not invited to participate in the negotiations which gave rise to the Agreement.

3. For the following reasons you might feel that Canada should now express its adherence to the Four-Power Agreement in the manner provided for in Article 5 thereof:

(a) Canada would now appear to be the only Member of the United Nations War Crimes Commission which has not yet adhered to the Agreement.

(b) The Chairman of the United Nations War Crimes Commission and the United Kingdom Government are most anxious that we adhere.

(c) The United States Government is urging the adherence of the Latin American countries.

(d) Only those countries adhering to the Agreement are being invited to send observers to the Nuremburg trials, scheduled to begin in a week's time.

(e) It now appears that Canada will be participating in Far Eastern arrangements for the trial of Japanese war criminals similar to those in effect in Europe under the Four-Power Agreement.<sup>188</sup>

4. It may be felt that if Canada is to adhere at all to the Four-Power Agreement, it should do so without delay. The United States authorities in London would like to be informed as soon as possible as to whether an observer is to be sent to Nuremburg so that appropriate arrangements for accommodation and transportation may be made.

5. I am attaching a copy of the Four-Power Agreement and also a copy of telegram No. 3364 from the Canadian High Commissioner in London dated November 16, 1945, urging Canadian adherence.

The Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers who has received a directive in accordance with this statement of policy, has requested the designation by the interested Allied nations of suitable individuals for appointment to the international courts to be established for the trials of Far Eastern war criminals.

Accordingly, the Government of the United States is requesting the Governments of China, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union each to designate five, and the Governments of Australia, Canada, France, The Netherlands and New Zealand to designate three, military officers or civilians qualified for membership on the international military courts described in the first four sentences of paragraph 5 of the enclosure, in order to permit the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers to appoint suitable members. It is considered desirable that there should be civilian representatives on these courts and it is accordingly suggested that the selection of suitable civilians as well as military members be considered. The designation of individuals who speak English would make for substantial administrative and other practical advantages.

Although it is expected that the apprehension and trial of Far Eastern war criminals will be a subject for discussion in the Far Eastern Advisory Commission, it is hoped that the Canadian Government may see fit promptly to designate personnel for appointment to the international military courts in order that there may be as little delay as possible in this matter."

Trial of Japanese war criminals.

2. At the recent meeting convened by War Office, Chairman made the point that Canada and Australia had similar powers to convene military courts. There would, however, be no Canadian Commander in the Far East. In his view, therefore, Japanese accused of war crimes against Canadians would either have to be brought back to a place where Canadian court could be legally constituted, or be dealt with by Commander-in-Chief, ALFSEA,<sup>192</sup> under his Royal Warrant. Canadian representative at meeting was asked to advise War Office what Canadian proposals were. He replied that a satisfactory answer to this question could not be given without consulting Canadian Government.

3. Would be grateful to know what answer should be given with respect to the foregoing.

Your telegram No. 3240. Trial of Japanese war criminals.

Canadian Government understands that United States proposals, paralleling War Crimes Commission's proposals, would empower Supreme Commander in Tokyo to convene military courts from an inter-Allied panel to try Far Eastern war criminals of all grades, major, intermediate and minor, and also to set up an inter-Allied investigating and prosecuting agency.

There being no Canadian Commander in Far East, Canadian Government would prefer to associate in joint plan such as that embodied in United States proposals.

IMMEDIATE. FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION. Reference my WA-6260 of December 14th (paragraph 1).

We have now received from State Department a memorandum requesting urgently that the Canadian Government nominate a judge and an associate prosecutor by January 5th, 1946. Text of memorandum follows:

"The Acting Secretary of State refers to the Department's note of October 18th, 1945 regarding the trial and punishment of Japanese war criminals.

Inasmuch as this Government considers the constitution of an International Military Tribunal for the trial of individuals charged with crime against peace a matter of immediate importance, the Department urgently requested the Supreme Commander's views on the subject and now sets forth the following clarification of certain points raised by several of the interested Governments.

It is proposed that the International Military Tribunal to be appointed by the Supreme Commander for the trial of major war criminals will consist of not more than nine or less than three judges. The Supreme Commander will designate not more than one judge of any one country from among the nominees of the signatories of the Surrender Instrument. The Supreme Commander has urged that there shall be no alternates in view of the problems of accommodation, transportation and the difficulties of local arrangements.

The President of the Court will be designated by the Supreme Commander. It is suggested that the rank of the nominees approximate that of a Major General in the United States army or higher.

The jurisdiction of the Court will be the trial of individuals charged with 'planning, preparation, initiation or waging of a war of aggression or a war in violation of International Treaties, Agreements or assurances, or participation in a common plan or conspiracy for the accomplishment of any of the foregoing'. Those individuals so indicated who are not now under the control of the Supreme Commander will be requested from the Allied Commander concerned. It is proposed that the Court and its Rules of Procedure will be established by the Supreme Commander. The rules including those relating to the admissibility of evidence will follow the Nuremburg pattern so far as it is appropriate in the Far Eastern Theatre.

It is suggested that the prosecution staff will consist of Mr. Joseph B. Keenan, who has already been designated Chief of an International Prosecution Section at the Supreme Commander's Headquarters, and his present staff, with the addition of associate prosecutors and assistants to be designated by the Supreme Commander from nominations submitted by the participating Powers, the Philippines and India.

The Supreme Commander has indicated that the earliest date for the return of the indictment has now been estimated for February 1st, 1946. Accordingly, the Government of the United States urgently requests the Canadian Government to nominate a judge and an associate prosecutor by January 5th, 1946 because of the urgent necessity of proceeding with the trials at the earliest possible moment."

FAR EASTERN WAR CRIMES

1. Attached for your signature are letters to the Deputy Minister of National Defence (Army) and the Deputy Minister of Justice,† enclosing a draft Memorandum to the Cabinet concerning the Canadian interest in Far Eastern war crimes.

2. The United States Government is primarily interested at this stage in the early prosecution of the major criminals, whereas the Canadian interest is primarily in particular accused charged with atrocities against Canadians. The attached Memorandum covers both phases.

3. The United States would like the necessary Canadian nominations (of a military judge and associate prosecutor for the International Military Tribunal of the trial of the major criminals) to be made by January 5, 1946.

4. From a Canadian point of view, it would seem even more desirable that the particular arrangements referred to in the second Recommendation (for the trial of the lesser criminals accused of atrocities against Canadians) be negotiated as soon as possible. I take it to be apparent that these arrangements could be negotiated more readily if the United States plan, as a whole, is approved in principle. However, the Recommendation is so framed as to provide for these negotiations whether or not the United States plan is so approved.

5. The whole matter was discussed with Mr. Read before he left, and the Memorandum has the concurrence of the War Crimes Advisory Committee.

FAR EASTERN WAR CRIMINALS

1. The United States Government has transmitted to the Canadian Government, and to other Governments concerned, the text of a comprehensive plan (herein-after referred to as "the United States Plan") for dealing with Far Eastern war criminals. Canada has been invited to indicate its approval of the plan and to cooperate in its execution.

2. A copy of the text of the United States Plan† is annexed hereto. Its central features may be summarized as follows:

(a) "war crimes" will include the planning and waging of aggressive war, violations of the laws and usages of war, and "inhumane acts";

(b) the offences contemplated are any which have occurred since September 1931 (the Mukden incident);

(c) the Supreme Commander in Tokyo will have power to:

(i) appoint special International Military Courts for the trial of Far Eastern war criminals;

(ii) prescribe or approve rules of procedure for such courts (such rules to be similar to those followed by the European International Military Court, except where changes are necessitated by different conditions in the Far East);

(iii) carry out the sentences of any international courts appointed by him;

(iv) approve, reduce or alter any sentences imposed by such courts;

(d) the Supreme Commander is authorized to establish an investigating and prosecuting agency for the following purposes:

- (i) the collection and analysis of evidence;
- (ii) the apprehension and trial of suspects;
- (iii) the preparation and conduct of prosecutions;
- (iv) recommending to the Supreme Commander which individuals and organizations should be prosecuted, before what courts they should be tried, and what persons should be secured as witnesses;
- (v) maintaining a central clearing house for information concerning Far Eastern war crimes;
- (e) if authorized by the Supreme Commander, the military command of any nation "participating in the occupation of areas previously dominated by Japan" may try Japanese war criminals by their own national military courts.

3. The United Kingdom Government has already indicated to the United States Government that the United States Plan is acceptable, subject to certain reservations, the chief of which are as follows:

- (a) the United Kingdom authorities are to be left free to make their own arrangements in the Far Eastern areas under British command;
- (b) the main principles of the procedure to be followed by the proposed international military courts are to be discussed by the Far Eastern Advisory Commission with a view to reaching governmental agreement thereon prior to trial.

The procedure to be followed by the international military tribunals is now being deliberated by the Far Eastern Advisory Commission.

4. It is now advised by the United States authorities that the International Military Tribunals referred to in paragraph 2(c) above are intended exclusively for the trial of the major Far Eastern war criminals who will be charged with "planning, preparation, initiation, or waging of a war of aggression in violation of International Treaties, Agreements or assurances, or participation in a common plan or conspiracy for the accomplishment of any of the foregoing."

The members of the Tribunal will be appointed by the Supreme Commander in Tokyo and will consist of not more than nine or less than three judges. The Supreme Commander will designate not more than one judge from among the nominees of the signatories of the Japanese Surrender Instrument. The original United States Plan has been modified to the extent that Canada is now enacted to name one judge for the tribunal and one associate prosecutor, and it has been suggested that each should be at least of the rank of major-general, or equivalent rank. Each of these nominees would be eligible for appointment by the Supreme Commander.

5. The trials of the major Far Eastern War criminals are expected to follow the general pattern of the Nuremburg trials now being held pursuant to the Four Power Agreement for the trial of the major criminals of the European axis.<sup>193</sup> Canada was not invited to participate in the negotiations which resulted in the Four Power Agreement and has not adhered thereto. Canada is, however, invited to participate in negotiations with respect to the Far Eastern war criminals and it would seem desirable for the Government to express its views at this time.

6. So far as the lesser war criminals are concerned, the United States Plan makes provision for the trial of particular accused by the national military courts of states "in occupation of areas formerly dominated by Japan."

Since there is no Canadian occupation force in the Far East, it would not be possible, under the United States Plan or under the War Crimes Regulations (Canada), for particular accused to be tried in that area by Canadian military courts convened under the Canadian regulations. Again, it would appear to be impracticable to move Far Eastern war criminals to Canada (or to other areas in which Canadian military forces are functioning) for purposes of trial. Military courts for the trial of particular persons accused of atrocities against Canadians would, therefore, have to be convened either by the United States military authorities or by the United Kingdom in their respective areas of occupation in the Far East.

7. Evidence of Far Eastern war crimes against Canadian nationals and members of the Canadian armed forces is being collected and collated by a War Crimes Unit functioning at National Defence Headquarters, Ottawa. The Unit reports that there is an accumulation of evidence of atrocities committed against Canadians, both in the areas occupied by United Kingdom forces (e.g. Hong Kong) and in areas now occupied by United States forces (e.g. prison camps in Japan proper). In a number of these cases, the accused has been or can be identified. If the Canadian interest is to be protected, arrangements will have to be made for their trial and punishment.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. THAT the Canadian Government approve the United States Plan in principle, and that authority be granted to advise the United States Government that the Canadian Government so approves and is prepared to cooperate in its execution.

2. THAT the Minister of National Defence be authorized to nominate one military judge and one associate prosecutor, as requested by the United States Government, to be eligible for appointment to the International Military Tribunal as outlined in paragraph 4 above, each to be of the rank of brigadier (or its equivalent) or higher, and if possible of the rank of major-general (or its equivalent) or higher.

3. THAT, whether or not the United States Plan be approved in principle pursuant to the recommendations immediately preceding, approval be given to negotiating with the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom arrangements whereby:

(a) provision will be made for the trial of persons accused of serious war crimes against Canadian nationals or members of the Canadian armed forces by military courts convened by the United States military authorities where the accused is within the jurisdiction of the United States occupation forces in the Far East, and by the United Kingdom military authorities where the accused is within the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom occupation force in the Far East;

(b) military representatives, of a rank not less than that of Lieutenant Colonel, from National Defence Headquarters, will be sent to Tokyo and Hong Kong to act in liaison with the United States and United Kingdom war crimes offices, respectively; such representatives to be vested with and to exercise the following powers and duties:

(i) to assist in the collection of further evidence of atrocities against Canadians;

(ii) to assist in providing the United States or United Kingdom authorities with such available evidence from Canadian sources as may be considered of value to them;

(iii) to request the United States or United Kingdom military authorities to convene military courts under their respective regulations, for the trial of particular persons within their jurisdiction against whom, in the opinion of the appropriate Canadian military representative, a prima facie case of a war crime (within the limits of paragraph 4 hereunder) against a Canadian has been established;

(iv) to assist in the prosecution of Canadian cases if so authorized by the appropriate United States or United Kingdom authorities;

(v) to act in general liaison with United States and United Kingdom war crimes offices in the Far East.

4. THAT the Canadian military representatives referred to immediately above be empowered to request from the United States or United Kingdom authorities trial of the following persons only:

(a) persons charged with or suspected of having committed a violation of the laws and usages of war; and

(b) whose alleged criminality has resulted in the death or permanent disability of a Canadian national or a member of the Canadian armed forces or whose offence is in other respects considered to be of a most serious nature.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D.1050

Following on the defeat of Germany, the need for an agreed policy on reparations has become urgent and we have been under increasing pressure from the Soviet Government to appoint representatives to the Allied Reparation Commission, which was decided at Yalta should be set up in Moscow. We have telegraphed separately about the difficulties which have been encountered in reaching agreement on the composition of Moscow Commission and, though we had hoped to secure French participation from the outset, we feel, as explained in my telegram Circular D. 1039, that we now have no option but to agree to the starting of discussions on a tripartite basis.

2. Meanwhile, we have been giving much thought to the problems involved in the question of reparation, and my two immediately following telegrams† set out in broad outline our views on the principles and on machinery, respectively, which we propose to instruct our delegation to put forward. At the same time, it is not to be expected that final agreement can be reached during the course of the Moscow Conference, and in our view the main object of the Conference will be to explore the complex technical aspects of the reparations problem. We are so informing our delegation and asking them to treat their present instructions as provisional.

3. The position, as we see it, is complicated by a number of factors, including the enormous damage to German towns, the fact that Germany will need to import goods on a considerable scale in order to maintain a subsistence standard of living, the need for removal of Germany's war potential and the question of territorial adjustments. In our view it is all important to avoid a repetition of the situation after the last war in which Germany received (and subsequently defaulted on) loans from the Allied and Associated Nations greater than the reparations paid. We are also deeply conscious of the possibility of a clash between the desire to secure a continued flow of reparations from Germany on the one hand and the need to remove Germany's war potential on the other. It is clear to us that destruction of Germany's war potential must take priority, though this inevitably entails reducing the volume of reparation receipts from Germany's current production.

4. We, therefore, regard it as essential to establish at the outset that:

(a) No assistance should be given to Germany to build up other [sic] industries;

(b) Payments for essential supplies needed by Germany for subsistence standard of living should be a first charge on German resources, even though this will tend to restrict very substantially extent to which we can look for reparations.

5. It is on this basis that we have worked out proposals in my two immediately following telegrams. We should appreciate any comments which Dominion Governments may wish to make on these proposals, and in particular it would be of great assistance to us to know urgently:

(a) Whether Dominion Governments holding German prisoners of war intend to use prisoners as reparation labour and, if so, to what extent;

(b) Whether Dominion Governments have it in mind to make claims to reparation in kind and, if so, whether they would wish our delegation to be briefed with a view to securing provisional allocations for them.

6. According to the Agreement reached at Yalta, reparations are to be received in first instance by those countries which have borne the main burden of the war, have suffered the heaviest losses, and have organized victory over the enemy. On this basis Dominion Governments would, of course, be eligible to share in such reparation as may be recoverable, but no doubt there will be strong pressure (all the more so on account of Germany's limited reparation capacity) for reparation goods to go primarily to countries which have suffered most physical war damage and question arises whether, if reparation deliveries are restricted to the narrow limits which we suggest, Dominion Governments would wish to participate.

7. Position of United States is, we understand in confidence, that they probably will not in fact look for any substantial reparation for themselves (other than the proceeds of German assets in the United States) but that they propose to maintain their claim until they are satisfied that a fair distribution to countries whose reconstruction needs are greatest can be agreed at Moscow or subsequently for recommendation to Governments concerned.

8. We should be glad to know whether Dominion Governments would wish for their part to take up a similar attitude to the United States in this matter, i.e., to maintain in principle their claim to reparation and thus secure allocations which might at a later stage be waived, at any rate in part. By so doing, Dominion Governments would preserve their rights to:

(a) The proceeds of German assets in their countries;

(b) Their share of reparation ships (see paragraph 14 of my immediately following telegram), and

(c) Some reparation labour if desired.

9. We should be very grateful for earliest possible comments in view of prospect that discussions at Moscow will open in the course of next week. In the meantime, we are asking leader of our delegation (Sir Walter Monckton, Solicitor General) to keep in touch in Moscow with Dominion Ministers there and to give them copies of this and my two immediately following telegrams.

1. We appreciate receiving the statement of your views and the opportunity which you have given us of commenting on them. In the time available we have been able to give only preliminary consideration to the numerous and important questions raised in these telegrams. For the time being, therefore, we are confining our reply to answering the specific questions put to us in your D. 1050. Our answers are as follows:

2.(a) We do not intend to use prisoners as reparation labour.

(b) It is our intention to make a claim at the appropriate time for reparations in the same way as other countries entitled to reparations. We shall wish to reserve the right to deal with German assets in Canada. We are not in a position at the present time to say whether we shall ask for reparations in kind either for immediate delivery or as part of the recurrent deliveries over a period of years. We presume that an opportunity for advancing any such claims will arise later and that if the Semi-Permanent Reparations Commission is set up as proposed in paragraph 2 of Circular D. 1052, we presume that it will be the natural body to consider such claims and make appropriate allocations. We should not, therefore, think it desirable for your delegation to seek provisional specific allocations for Canada of reparations in kind unless the situation arises in which tentative allocations of this character are being made for all countries claiming reparations. If such a situation should arise, we should be glad if Sir Walter Monckton would communicate with the Canadian Chargé d'Affaires at Moscow.

3. As regards paragraph 8 of your telegram D. 1050, we are in general sympathy with the position which you understand will be taken by the United States, namely, to maintain in principle their claim to reparation and to secure allocations without committing themselves as to whether or not these allocations will be pressed in full. In taking this position we understand that we are reserving our rights to a share of deliveries from current production as well as to the items mentioned in paragraph 8 of your telegram.

4. We are reserving for a later date any comments which we might wish to make on the principles which the United Kingdom delegation proposes to put forward at the Allied Reparations Commission in Moscow. There is, however, one point on which our position has already been made clear in the course of the discussions which have taken place in Washington concerning the provision of relief supplies in western Germany.<sup>194</sup>

5. We are in full agreement that payment for essential imports from German sources should be adequately assured in priority to reparations claims. In our view the essential imports will not diminish but will tend to increase the quantity of reparations obtainable from current production over a period of years. We are not in a position to judge whether all the measures proposed in your telegrams are necessary in order to achieve this result, but it may be helpful in your discussions for you to bear in mind that the Canadian Government cannot undertake to make foodstuffs or other essential supplies available for importation into Germany without an adequate assurance that payment will be received for these supplies.

6. We favour the proposal in Paragraph 2 of D. 1052 for the establishment of a Semi-Permanent Inter-Allied Reparations Commission on which all countries entitled to receive reparations would be represented. We note that it is possible that the United Kingdom, the United States and the U.S.S.R. may ask representatives of other United Nations not represented on the Commission to participate in its work. In the event of Canada being so invited we shall be prepared to make arrangements for our representation.

London, June 29, 1945

SECRET. Reparations.

We have now received from all Dominion Governments preliminary comments upon my telegrams Circular D. 1050, Circular D. 1051† and Circular D. 1052† and are most grateful for their prompt replies. We are glad to note that so far as previous studies have been carried there is general agreement with broad lines of our approach to this difficult problem. We note also that all Dominion Governments wish for the present, like the United States, to maintain in principle their claim to reparation and thus to secure provisional allocations in common with other potential recipients but that none of them wish to use German prisoners of war as reparations labour.

2. Owing to interruptions due to victory celebrations in Moscow, work of Moscow Commission has only just been begun. Meanwhile, leader of United Kingdom delegation has explained to Dominion Ministers in Moscow general sense of his instructions and has arranged to keep in touch with them as the discussions proceed.

3. We do not yet know at what stage of agenda Moscow Commission are likely to consider in detail question of allocation of reparation between countries concerned but it is clear to us that when they come to do so it will be very difficult for them to arrive at provisional percentage allocations for Russia, the United States and the United Kingdom without having fairly close idea of size and extent of claims which could justifiably be put forward by other countries in accordance with the Yalta formula.<sup>195</sup> Otherwise provisional percentages allotted to the three Powers might be quite unrealistic. We should expect, therefore, that it would be necessary for the Commission at that stage of their proceedings to endeavour to formulate some tentative and provisional plan of allocation for subsequent agreement with Governments covering not merely possible shares of three Powers but those of all countries eligible to receive reparations under the Yalta formula. In preparation for such a possibility we feel that our delegation should be placed in the best possible position to protect interests of Dominion Governments in relation to those of other claimant countries and for this purpose it would be very helpful if we could be supplied as early as possible with statistical data in support of Dominion claims.

4. Difficulty about preparing statistics for this purpose is that apart from Yalta formula in paragraph 1 of my telegram Circular D. 364† no basis has yet been agreed as to factors to be taken into account or as to weighting to be given to different factors. So far as we are concerned we have, therefore, supplied our delegation with fullest statistical information we can bearing on the war effort and losses of the United Kingdom in war against Germany. In particular we have made calculations in respect of United Kingdom in form designed so far as possible to be comparable with statistics which may be prepared by other claimants under following heads which we believe will provide essential information for determining provisional allocations under any formula likely to be adopted:

(a) War effort against Germany including (I) Budgetary cost of the war (II) number of man years served in the forces and in manufacture of munitions respectively (III) fatal military casualties;

(b) Losses of property in the war against Germany including (I) value of physical war damage on land (II) value at pre-war prices of shipping lost (III) value of overseas disinvestment, i.e., net reduction in overseas investment and gold holdings plus net overseas borrowing.

5. We would accordingly suggest as most convenient course that corresponding figures might be prepared by Dominion Governments under above 6 heads and results telegraphed to us as soon as possible, together with any supporting comments for communication to our delegation. It is, of course, important that figures should be confined to those arising from war with Germany. This may give rise to some difficulty of assessment in some cases but rather than figures should be delayed on this account arbitrary apportionment would no doubt suffice for present purposes since at this initial stage time factor is more important than close accuracy.

RE: REPARATIONS

The more I see of these papers on reparations, the more inclined I am to think that the Canadian Government might be wise to waive its claim to reparations from the outset, on condition that Germany's current import requirements are regarded as a first charge against its current exports.

This general subject happened to come up in the discussion which I and others had with the Minister about the C.P.R.B. Report, and I think he was inclined to feel that we might be better off if we do not attempt to establish even tentatively a claim to reparations, which may involve a good deal of acrimonious bargaining and estimating of contributions to the war effort. Ilsley seemed to think this matter should go to Council at a fairly early date. I had been inclined to hold off any comment or suggestion until we saw how the figures appeared, but it may be worth while your thinking about this and perhaps mentioning it to Hume Wrong if you get a chance. I think myself that our moral claim to reparations is perhaps pretty small, even though under the Yalta formula we ought to be able to make a claim.

MEMORANDUM ON THE REPARATIONS PROBLEM

A meeting was held on 20th July to discuss the question of German reparations. Mr. Robertson was present. It was decided to postpone for the time being any decision as to whether Canada should make claim for reparations from Germany either in the form of capital equipment or annual deliveries of goods. It was clearly the sense of the meeting that Canada would have difficulty in absorbing reparations in kind from Germany, but it was recognized that to put in no claim at all might be difficult to explain to Parliament. On the other hand, it was also argued that it might be even more difficult to put in a tentative claim as suggested by the Dominions Office and subsequently to drop that claim. A decision in the matter has been left over pending (a) further information as to the policy which the United States Government may be expected to pursue, which would have a considerable influence on our decision, and (b), information which the Custodian of Enemy

Property is supposed to be collecting as to the total of German assets in this country and the total of claims by Canadians against those assets. Clearly if the claims are greater than the assets, this would be an argument in favour of our attempting to get something out of Germany, whereas if the assets are greater than the claims, this point would not arise.

Meanwhile, however, the various Government Departments have been asked to prepare claims against Germany on the basis suggested in Dominions Office telegram 1131 of 29th June. These claims will be checked and collated by the Bureau of Statistics. The information will therefore be available whether or not it is decided to make the claims.

RE: REPARATIONS POLICY

I attended the meeting yesterday<sup>196</sup> held by Robertson in Room 123 on this question which you were unable to attend. I put forward the views which we had discussed briefly and more or less agreed upon, viz: that we should confine our claims for reparations to a few simple points and should not endeavour to establish a share in the total reparations programme. The items I mentioned in which we were interested were: (1) that imports to Germany should have priority of claim on the proceeds of German exports; (2) that Canada should have free access to all patents, technical and scientific information; (3) that Canada should be able to use German assets located in Canada to meet private Canadian claims against Germany. To these I added a fourth which occurred to me after seeing you and after noting the letter from Naval Services.† This was that Canada should be free to obtain limited numbers of German items of equipment for information and research purposes as well as for current use in the war against Japan. I mentioned as well that John Baldwin<sup>197</sup> had stated that their people had been doing some work on this reparations question and they might like to get a few major items of equipment such as a wind tunnel. I said I thought all these individual items could be obtained without our having to obtain a formal share of the reparations.

There was some discussion of this view. Norman himself was inclined to feel that our line was the desirable one but others wondered whether we could justify in Parliament our waiving of possible claim on Germany under the Yalta formula. Norman felt that it would depend to a considerable degree on the attitude which the U.S. would take.

It was agreed that we should proceed to establish estimates of German assets in Canada subject to Canadian control and Canadian commercial and other private claims on Germany. External Affairs would arrange with the Custodian for this to be done. In the meantime we would also prepare the statistics necessary for establishing a claim along the lines suggested by the U.K. but we would not transmit any such figures until after further consideration of the matter. It was suggested that some competent statistician should be asked to take charge of the assembly of this material. I suggested Isbister<sup>198</sup> and External Affairs were going to approach him, possibly through Max McKenzie.<sup>199</sup>

DESPATCH A. 356

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to report that Mr. Angus<sup>200</sup> and Mr. Le Pan had a discussion on the 21st August with Sir David Waley of the United Kingdom Treasury and Mr. P. A. Clutterbuck of the Dominions Office about the form which Canada's claim for reparations should take. Sir David is the chief official in the United Kingdom Delegation to the Reparations Commission, and has recently returned from Moscow. He also attended the Potsdam Conference.

2. Sir David said that, in his view, it would not be worth-while for the Canadian Government to compile any very elaborate statistics in support of its reparations claim, since, in any case, the sum total of materials which could be used either for once-for-all or current deliveries on the reparations account from Germany would not be large, and the percentage of this small total which Canada could hope to claim would also be small. According to rough calculations made by the United Kingdom, the total percentage of reparations which might ultimately be assigned to all the nations in the Commonwealth combined would probably not be more than 5%.<sup>201</sup> Canada's share would probably be something over 2%. Under these circumstances, it would hardly seem justifiable to go to much trouble to establish that Canada's share should properly be, say, 2½% instead of 2¼%, especially if Canada expected at some later stage to abandon its claim altogether.

3. Mr. Angus drew attention to the fact that if the categories suggested in Dominions Office telegram No.1131 of the 29th June were adopted, it would appear that a country would be able to claim twice for the same segment of its war effort. The budgetary costs of the war included payment for man-years served in the manufacture of munitions. They would also cover man-years served in the production of foodstuffs for export, a category which Canada might like to include in justification of its claim. Sir David explained that it was not intended to attempt to use the suggested categories in order to form any kind of statistical total. Some effort had been made by the United Kingdom to produce a weighted total expressed in terms of a percentage; but this effort had not been very satisfactory and had broken down entirely in discussions with the American Delegation. The category of man-years spent either in the Forces or in the manufacture of munitions had been included by the United Kingdom primarily as a check against the first item, the budgetary costs of the war, which alone might give an unduly favourable picture of the part played by the United States in the victory over Germany, since costs generally were much higher in the United States than in the United Kingdom. In the initial discussions, the United Kingdom delegates had been disposed to emphasize the length of time this country had been engaged in the war, while the United States delegates had come back repeatedly to the vast wartime expenditure made by the United States. The discussion had shown signs of degenerating into a graceless debate about which country had worked and suffered more. It gradually became apparent that, as in so many other related subjects, the question was essentially not financial but political and the only way to cut the knot was by a political solution. Accordingly, the United Kingdom and the United States had agreed that their shares should be equal.

4. In answer to a question from Sir David Waley, Mr. Angus said that the amount of material which Canada would actually like to obtain from Germany would probably turn out to be very small. It would be limited almost entirely to material wanted for scientific investigation and research. Some of this material, however, might be bulky and might not be considered war material under any strict definition of the term. He had in mind, particularly, a claim which he believed would be presented for a supersonic wind tunnel to be used for aeronautical research. Sir David said that there should be no difficulty about obtaining such material. In fact, he had been given to believe that all of it which was available had already been seized by the United Kingdom and the United States military authorities in Germany without asking anyone's leave.

Marginal note:

Excluding U.K. share.

No doubt, Canada could obtain an appropriate share by applying through military channels.

5. Mr. Le Pan reported that a Canadian committee sitting in London, the Canadian Advisory Targets Committee, on which the Services and the civilian departments concerned were represented, was in the process of consolidating a list of all the material of this kind which Canada would like to obtain. Some of it had already been picked up by Canadian service investigators in Germany, while other items had been obtained by negotiating through the Ministry of Supply and the Ministry of Aircraft Production. It appeared, however, that there might be a considerable residue which could not be obtained in this informal way and about which it would probably be necessary to make representations to the Dominions Office.

6. As a sidelight on what has been happening in Germany, Sir David related that at Potsdam Marshal Zhukov<sup>202</sup> presented a long list of plant and equipment which it was claimed had been taken by the Anglo-American forces from those parts of Germany which were first occupied by troops under S.H.A.E.F. and were later transferred to the jurisdiction of the Red Army. The British Delegation were somewhat perturbed and apprehensive that the Russians were going to ask for the return of all this material. They were preparing to deliver a learned disquisition on the definition of booty, how it had been formulated in the days of Charles II and so on, when Stalin chuckled, remarked that he had no intention of asking for restitution, and said: "I only wanted you to know that you have been doing a little thieving on your own account, too."

7. Mr. Le Pan enquired if the decisions taken at the Potsdam Conference had enabled any progress to be made in reaching a definition of war booty. Sir David replied that this task had yet to be tackled. He could say confidently, however, that booty would receive a very strict interpretation, and would be closely related to articles actually used by the German Forces. An exception, however, perhaps would be made for scientific equipment. Here the definition would not be drawn so narrowly.

8. Explaining that Canada's course would be influenced almost inevitably by what the United States did in this matter, Mr. Angus enquired whether Sir David could give any information as to how long the United States intended to maintain their claim. Sir David said that he was not sure. He himself was rather worried by the possibility that once a claim had been prepared and made public by the United States Government they might be forced by American public opinion to insist on delivery of the materials they had put in a claim for. The United States delegates on the Reparations Commission did not seem apprehensive on this score, but they had not been prepared to divulge how they hoped to avoid the difficulty. Sir David was also anxious about what seemed to him an ambiguity in the course which the United States intended to follow. At one time, the delegates spoke of handing back to the common pool all materials which they might justifiably claim, while at others they dallied with the possibility of withdrawing their claim in favour of certain specific countries. In Sir David's view, the latter course would be invidious and unworkable, and he strongly hoped that the Americans would abandon it.

9. Mr. Angus said he thought it was highly probable that Canada would not be disposed to press its full claim, provided that its title to the limited amount of scientific equipment it wanted could be safeguarded. If the Canadian Government decided to follow such a policy, it would naturally be influenced in timing the announcement of its decision not only by domestic, but also by external, considerations. For that reason, he would welcome any expression of opinion as to the best stage at which to drop the claim. Sir David replied that, of course, it was not for him to offer advice; but, personally, he thought there would be a real advantage in dropping the claim earlier rather than later when some credit could be obtained from the gesture. It might also happen that the necessarily small percentage of reparations assigned to Canada might come to be regarded in the public mind as an index of the part Canada had played in the War. If this proved to be the case, resentment would be aroused. By foregoing its claim before any percentage had been worked out, the Canadian Government would avoid any such contingency. Sir David added that he himself was anxious to find some country which would be accepted as disinterested by all the parties concerned and which could act, if necessary, as an arbitrator. For example, if there were a dispute between France and Belgium for the possession of a steel plant, the arbitrating country, after listening summarily to the briefs presented by the two claimants, could assign the plant to one or the other. Sir David suggested that if Canada were prepared to renounce its claim at an early stage, she could very usefully fill the position of arbitrator. He seemed to overlook, however, the fact that the ill-will felt towards the judge by the disappointed party in a suit is usually greater than the gratitude felt by the satisfied party.

10. Sir David attached great importance to the principle which was approved at Potsdam that payment for essential and approved imports should be a first charge on the German economy. A corollary of this was that countries receiving German exports would have to pay for them in hard currencies in order to reimburse supply countries for their shipments of essential foodstuffs into Germany. France, for example, would have to pay dollars for German coal, so that the bill for American and Canadian wheat imported into Germany could be met. This, of course, would meet with opposition from the French. The matter was now being taken up with the French Government. It appeared, however, that over and above exports needed to pay for imports, there would also be some goods from current production available for reparations.

11. It would be too sanguine, in Sir David's view, to believe that the comparative exclusion of Russia from further reparations discussion effected by the Potsdam agreement would remove all the difficulties in the way of a satisfactory settlement. Some of the countries which had to be satisfied from the Western zone were reasonable; others were not. He expected trouble particularly from Greece and Yugoslavia. When Mr. Angus asked how peaceful would be the work of the Conference of countries with reparations claims to be met from the Western zone, Sir David said: "About as peaceful as the lion house at feeding time."

ALLIED COMMISSION ON REPARATION

MEMORANDUM TO VARIOUS UNITED NATIONS

1. On August 1, 1945, the heads of Government of the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics signed a Protocol on German reparations, a copy of which is enclosed.† Particular attention is called to paragraph 3 of the Protocol which reads as follows:

“The reparations claims of the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries entitled to reparations shall be met from the western zones and from appropriate German external assets.”

2. The Provisional Government of France and the Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America being the three powers with zones of occupation in western Germany invite the Government of Canada to supply by October 1, 1945, data relating to the reparation claim of the Government of Canada against Germany and the value of pre-war German assets situated in its territory. Suggestions as to the nature of the data to be included and the form in which they are to be presented are set forth in the Annexes A and B of this memorandum.

3. The data under reference may be supplied through regular diplomatic channels. It is suggested that two copies of the data requested be supplied to the diplomatic representatives of France, United Kingdom and United States respectively.

4. It is contemplated that a conference will be arranged for the conclusion of a general agreement of the allocation of reparation deliveries from the western zones of Germany among the countries entitled thereto.

Annex A. Suggestions with regard to presentation of data concerning reparation claims without prejudice to the factors which will be taken into consideration for the determination of reparation claims.

The data submitted by each nation should be such as to reflect losses of and damage to property and persons as well as the contribution of each country towards organizing the victory and its war burdens. For the sake of uniformity, damage and loss should as far as practicable be stated in quantitative units and in 1938 replacement values expressed both in terms of the monetary unit of the claimant country and in terms of 1938 U.S. dollars. So far as possible data should be reported on an annual basis. In all cases the data should relate to the war against the European Axis powers and exclude those relating to the war against Japan. Damage to and loss of property other than military equipment and installations (in the strict sense of the term) in the course of hostilities against Germany including damage and loss resulting from scorched earth policies in so far as they are not included in the figures given under paragraph 8<sup>205</sup> below:

[I.]

1. Industry and commerce (including mining and power) structures, installations, equipment, stocks of raw materials and goods, and goods in process.

2. Ocean shipping and coastwise shipping.

3. Harbor and port works and installation.

4. Railway and inland water transport, civil aeronautic and automotive transport, structures, installations, equipment.

5. Roads and highways, including bridges.

6. Agriculture productive structures, equipment, livestock, grain stocks, damage to arable lands and forests. (Indicate how long each area damaged, mined or flooded has been or will remain non-productive).

7. Public institutions and municipal enterprises.

8. Household articles and personal effects.

9. Gold, silver coins and bars, national bank notes, foreign currency, securities, jewelry and valuables, works of art or works of historical, scientific, educational and religious interest.

10. Houses and buildings not otherwise included. (Give as many details of the nature and extent of the damage as possible).

11. Other material damage and loss not included in the foregoing categories.

II. Budgetary expenditures allocatable to the war against Germany exclusive of those reported in I above or IV and V below.

[III.]

1. Man-years allocatable to the war effort against Germany.

2. Man-years lost to the national economy by the deportation of labor to Germany and forced labor at the order of Germany on national territory.

3. Loss of life or health and injuries sustained by civil and military victims of the war and occupation.

IV. Costs of German occupation (exclusive of items reported in II above or V below).

1. Forced payments and extensions of credit to the German state or to German agencies such as (a) the Reichskreditkassen and (b) the Deutsche Verrechnungskasse.

2. Other costs (specify).

In fact, paragraph IV.

V. All other claims of a governmental or private nature against Germany arising out of or during the war with Germany.

VI. And other statistical data which the claimant government desires to put forward for consideration (for each category of property lost or damaged there should be indicated for information not only the quantity and value of each category of properties lost or damaged, but also the total amount existing before the war for the purpose of furnishing a basis for a comparison between the various countries of the damage sustained in relation to their resources).

Annex B. Suggestions with regard to presentation of data concerning German assets or holdings abroad in the country concerned immediately before the date of the entry of that country into the war or its occupation by the enemy.

The following information is desired:

- I. List of firms in which Germans have interest.
  1. Total value of assets locally owned by such firms.
  2. Total value of foreign holdings of such firms.
  3. Total value of German interest in such firms.

This list should classify these firms as follows: industrial banks, insurance finance or holding companies, merchandising establishments, retail or wholesale, transport companies, travel and other service establishments.

II. German bank balances, securities, holdings, etc.

A. Bank balances:

1. Of German state in clearings or official funds of any sort.
2. Of German state-controlled institutions or companies.
3. Of German nationals (or on behalf of same).

B. Securities, accounts, safe deposits held in name of or on behalf of Germans.

C. Gold on deposit, other types of holdings.

If full information is not available by October 1 please supply such information as is available by that date and the rest later.

TELEGRAM 200

Ottawa, August 29, 1945

SECRET. Your telegram Circular D. 1131 of June 29th. Reparations from Germany.

We have given careful consideration to your request for statistical information to facilitate the working out of approximate percentage allocations to various countries entitled to reparations from Germany under the Yalta formula at the reparations discussions in Moscow.

2. It appears from the headings set out in paragraph 4 that it is intended to make a distinction between economic wealth destroyed as a result of the war and manpower and economic resources used up in war production as well as manpower losses.

3. Although it is not clear how these different categories are to be weighted in allocating percentages of reparations to respective claimants, you will appreciate that the Canadian war effort in terms of producing food and war supplies not only on behalf of ourselves but also our Allies, has been a substantial one.

4. In making the statistical calculations proposed in your telegram under reference, we have therefore included an estimate of the number of man years served in the war-time production of food for export to our Allies.

5. The relevant figures are set out below under the heads which you suggested.

(a) War effort against Germany:

(i) Budgetary cost of the war—fifteen and one-half billion dollars ($15,500,000,000).

(ii) Number of man years served in the forces—two million, six hundred and twenty thousand (2,620,000). Number of man years served in the manufacture of munitions—four million, one hundred thousand (4,100,000). Number of man years served in the production of war-time food exports to Allies above peace-time level—one million and thirty thousand (1,030,000).

(iii) Fatal military casualties—forty thousand (40,000).

(b) Losses of property in the war against Germany:

(i) Value of physical war damage on land—No estimate has yet been made of the serious wastage incidental to the rapid exploitation of mines and forests in Canada, nor is there any estimate available at the present time of Canadian properties destroyed or damaged in Allied or enemy countries. Our position is therefore reserved on these points.

(ii) Value at pre-war prices of shipping lost—sixty-two million dollars ($62,000,000).

(iii) Value of overseas disinvestment—no claim.

6. The figures quoted must be regarded as no more than careful approximations. Expenditures and losses incurred in the war against Japan have been excluded.

7. We put forward the above figures at this stage for the background information of the United Kingdom delegation to the Moscow Reparations Commission only and reserve our position with regard to making a claim on reparations from Germany at the appropriate time. Meanwhile, the United Kingdom delegation will no doubt bear in mind the general Canadian attitude towards the reparations problem as outlined in our telegram No. 149 of June 16th.

1. We have received from the Chargé d'Affaires, United States Embassy here, copy of the memorandum by the Allied Commission on Reparations inviting Canadian Government to submit its claim to reparations from Germany.† The French Government has also approached Canadian Embassy, Paris. No similar invitation has yet been received from the United Kingdom,<sup>206</sup> but United Kingdom Government asked us some time ago to furnish certain statistical data for the information of the United Kingdom delegation to the Reparations Commission in connection with reparations discussions in Moscow. My teletype EX-3144 of August 29† contains the text of our reply to the United Kingdom Government.

2. The question of whether or not Canada will claim a percentage of reparations which may be allocated to us under the Yalta formula will probably be affected by the position adopted by the United States Government in relation to its share.

3. At present, information is lacking here regarding attitude which United States Government likely to adopt. In talks Mr. Angus had in London with United Kingdom Treasury officials, he learnt that it had been agreed that the United Kingdom and United States would have claim to equal percentage share of German reparations, but the United Kingdom officials were far from clear what share, if any, the United States Government would actually claim.

4. From point of view of the United States, and to a lesser degree of Canada, the Yalta formula has the advantage of not requiring a claimant to abate his claim because of increased productivity or decreased unemployment resulting from the war. It is, however, not impossible that the United States may eventually withdraw its claim or assign it wholly or in part to other countries where the element of damage has been more considerable.

5. It would therefore be helpful to us if you could obtain for us informally an indication of the attitude the United States Government is likely to adopt regarding claiming reparations from Germany. As it is likely that we shall have to define our attitude on this question in the near future, we would appreciate it if you would treat this matter urgently.

Washington, September 5, 1945

Your EX-3176 of August 30th and EX-3189 of September 1st,† reparations claims from Germany.

1. A member of my staff had a long interview this morning with the State Department officials specifically charged with the preparations of the United States claim in accordance with the pro forma attached to the memorandum issued by the Allied Commission on Reparations. I may say at the outset that these officials have no knowledge of any definite policy at a higher level and were unable to answer your enquiry as to whether the United States may eventually withdraw its claim, or assign it wholly or in part to other countries where the element of damage has been more considerable.

2. The program at the moment is that the United States is preparing, and will file, a claim. This claim will consist of both that of the Government and that of private individuals or corporations. That part covering the claim of the Government will be worked out as required by the memorandum and will necessarily be a very arbitrary figure as it has been found almost impossible to allocate that portion of expenses, manpower, etc., related to the war against Germany as distinguished from the part related to warfare against other European countries and against Japan.

3. With respect to the claim of private individuals and corporations, the American Government does not, repeat not, anticipate at present advertising for filing of claims. The estimate of the claim on this account has been made up from the forms filed by individuals and corporations showing their foreign assets in Germany. This report was made to Treasury and is somewhat comparable to the information filed in Canada with the Foreign Exchange Control Board in September 1939, with this difference—that it does not include any property valued under $10,000. To cover claimants with property valued at less than $10,000 an arbitrary figure will be added. I am told that the full amount of the value of individual property will not be claimed as it is considered that there will not be a total loss. Exactly what proportion of the amounts will be claimed has not yet been determined because the lack of Consular representatives and other officials has precluded any detailed survey of properties owned by Americans in Germany. It was also explained as a reason for deciding not to advertise for claims at the moment that, if such action was taken, it would be necessary for the authorities to permit interested parties to proceed to Germany to survey their properties, and visits of this type are at present being prohibited.

4. In the preceding paragraph I referred specifically to claims for property. It is appreciated that there will be other claims for personal injuries and other intangibles. The American claim will be weighted to cover such items, but, again, the amount will be arbitrary as it is felt that the actual amount of the claim filed with the Allied Commission will not bear any direct reference to the total of the claims made by individuals. This may be more clearly explained by pointing out that the only step that will be taken at the moment by the Allied Commission is to agree that the various countries concerned will have a claim to a certain percentage share of German reparations, and that no actual amounts in dollars and cents, or other currency, will be fixed. It will then become an internal problem in each country as to how it will deal with the claims of its nationals. In this regard I was told informally that there was more likelihood of the individual receiving a greater percentage of his claim than, for example, large corporations. Again, the settlement of claims from American nationals by the United States Government will be an internal and political matter, and will not necessarily bear any direct relation to the actual amount of reparations which the United States may be entitled to claim as its share from Germany.

5. It was definitely confirmed that the claim placed before the Allied Commission would be that of the United States Government and that no separate individual claims would be filed with the Commission, it being the responsibility of the United States Government to satisfy the claims of its nationals.

6. During the discussion the State Department officials stated that they would appreciate being informed as to whether Canada has decided what type of reparations it would request in payment of its claim. In short, would emphasis be placed on a share in German assets now held abroad, in capital goods, or in some other form of repayment?

Reference your despatch No. A. 356, August 24th, Reparations.

We wish to clarify relation between allocation of German war materials under Allied Declaration regarding defeat of Germany and under any reparations plan that may be agreed upon for the western zone of Germany. We have noted from your despatch under reference that Waley was of the view that there would be no difficulty in obtaining certain German scientific, technical and industrial equipment. On the other hand, in paragraph 5 of your despatch A. 308 of 30th July<sup>1</sup> you refer to E.I.P.S.<sup>207</sup> paper in which definition of war materials would be restricted to cover inventories and vocabularies of

German armed forces only, all other material being treated as reparations to be assigned in accordance with the Yalta formula.

Before coming to a decision as to whether or not the Canadian Government is to make a claim for a share of reparations from Germany in accordance with Potsdam Protocol on reparations, it is essential that we should know whether we would be able to obtain the type of German war materials included in list forwarded under our despatch 1310 of August 9th† under the Allied Declaration regarding the defeat of Germany, or whether assignment would have to wait for allocation of reparations. The problem has become pressing in view of desire of Reconstruction Department for certain items of German industrial equipment, particularly aluminum rolling mills on which representative of Aluminum Company on the Canadian investigating team has submitted a report.‡

For your own information we are not so much interested in ascertaining formal categories into which the various items of German assets may fall as in taking practical measures for obtaining through the proper channels the equipment desired with the least possible delay. Please treat this matter as urgent.

Your telegram No. 2102 of September 11th, reparations.

1. Nothing in my despatch No. A. 356 of August 24th would justify the belief that it will be possible to obtain German industrial equipment as captured war material. As you will see by referring to paragraphs 4 and 7 of that despatch, the only place at which the strict definition of booty is being relaxed is in order to include scientific equipment. Industrial equipment [will] certainly be treated as reparations.

2. For example, there is no doubt that the aluminium rolling mills wanted by the Department of Reconstruction can only be obtained as reparations. They should, therefore, be added to the Canadian reparations claim which, presumably, will be presented to the international conference, forecast in my despatch No. A. 371 of August 28th,† of all the countries whose reparations claims must be satisfied from the western zones. I have been informed by the Dominions Office that there is no intention that goods available as reparations should be actually seized now to be put on a reparations claim later.

3. That is one end of the scale. At the other, there are items which can be regarded with equal assurance as booty. A good illustration would be the German small arms requested by the R.C.N. Such articles, if they formed part of the equipment of the German armed forces, are being allocated by the London Munitions Assignment Board and present no difficulty.

4. The real difficulty arises over the intermediate, border-line cases. They chiefly concern pieces of scientific equipment not included in the inventories of the German armed forces. Such items of scientific equipment are being considered by exception as booty, but are not being allocated by the London Munitions Assignment Board, which deals only with equipment used by the German forces. Such scientific equipment is being allocated by the scientific Departments of the Service and Supply Ministries here. Already the Canadian services have obtained a considerable amount of material through these channels and I have no doubt that additional items may be obtained when service claims are backed by diplomatic representations.

5. To recapitulate, there are three ways in which Canada can obtain from Germany the goods she wants:

(a) Weapons and other military equipment actually used by the German armed forces may be obtained by direct application to the London Munitions Assignment Board.

(b) Scientific equipment not directly used by the German armed forces, but nevertheless considered as booty, may be obtained through the scientific Departments of the United Kingdom Service and Supply Ministries.

(c) All other goods, including industrial equipment, are available for reparations and may be obtained only after formal claims for them have been approved by the international conference which will be called to deal with this question.

6. In view of the circumstances which I have outlined above, we are dealing with the list of war material which you sent us under cover of your despatch No. 1310 of the 9th August† in the following way:

(a) The list has been submitted to the Canadian Advisory Targets Committee and there has been supplemented by items which appear on other lists prepared by our services and by the Canadian civilian Departments concerned.

(b) This consolidated list has then been divided into two categories, the first including all items which it is believed can be directly obtained from the London Munitions Assignment Board and the second containing the residue. The Chairman of the Canadian Advisory Targets Committee has put in a claim to the London Munitions Assignment Board for all the items in the first category.

(c) We are presenting a list containing the residual items to the Dominions Office requesting them to forward it to the Service and Supply Ministries concerned and urging that Canada receive her fair share of all this scientific equipment.

(d) We are explaining to the Dominions Office that in the list presented to them we have included, by inadvertence, some items which can only be obtained as reparations. We are asking them not to take any action about such items for the time being, but to draw them to our attention. At a later date, the Canadian Government will presumably include them in a formal claim for reparations.

7. Until we hear from you, we will not take any action about the aluminum rolling mills which, clearly, can only be obtained as reparations. Ends.

RE: REPARATIONS QUESTIONS FOR CABINET TODAY

I have looked into these papers on reparations and discussed them with several officials in External Affairs and with Mr. Tolmie<sup>208</sup> here. The problem is an important and complicated one, on which I hesitate to make any snap recommendations.

I understand that Mr. Heeney is going to propose that the discussion of this subject be deferred in Cabinet until next week. As far as we have been able to find out, there is no real urgency requiring a decision this week rather than next. Some communication must be given the United States, the United Kingdom and France on October 1st, but work on that matter is going forward in any event, so that recommendations can be prepared for consideration next week.

On the questions specifically asked in the memorandum,<sup>209</sup> I would suggest the following. (See Paragraph 9 for questions.)

(a) The data requested by the other Governments should be prepared, in so far as it can be prepared, from information now at the disposal of the Government.

(b) What we have should be furnished to the other Governments on October 1st with reservations indicating that we wish to obtain further information on certain points. I think in providing such data, the Canadian Government should give notice that it reserves its position as to the assets held by the Custodian.

(c) I think, for reasons that will be indicated below, that Canada should not seek representation at the conference to be held on the allocation of reparation deliveries from Western zones of Germany.

(d) I think the Government should not advertise for claims until after it has decided on the policy it will follow in regard to reparations and has made a public statement thereon. I think it should ask for access to German records in order to establish more definitely German assets controlled by the Government and to verify Canadian claims to German assets.

 Acting Solicitor to the Treasury, Department of Finance.

 Not located.

(e) I think an Interdepartmental Committee should be established, but I think it should submit recommendations and advice to the Government as well as to the Custodian regarding the general policy which Canada should follow in regard to reparations.

In regard to general policy, I would suggest tentatively the following, although I would like more time to consider this matter:

Canada should, I believe, renounce at an early stage, when it will have most effect in improving Canadian prestige, all claims to reparations except under certain headings. These exceptions should include

(1) The right to obtain scientific and research equipment and supplies from Germany, both military and other.

(2) The right to obtain a few specified items of industrial equipment urgently needed, for example, aluminum rolling mills, which I understand the Department of Reconstruction is very anxious to obtain.

(3) German assets in Canada or controlled by the Canadian Custodian should be reserved, at least for the time being, with the intention of applying them, in whole or in part, to the meeting of private direct claims against Germany, arising out of the war. (In this connection, Mr. Tolmie tells me it is widely believed that the Custodian controls far more than $6,000,000 worth of German assets, as indicated in the statement circulated to the Cabinet.)†

If this general policy is followed, Canada need not attempt to define closely the statistics which would be used to support a claim, nor need she attend the acrimonious conferences on the allocation of deliveries from Western Germany. I believe the policy suggested can be defended on the ground that the urgent claims of European countries and the United Kingdom cannot possibly be satisfied in full, and that we feel theirs are far stronger moral claims than any which Canada can advance under the Yalta formula.

R. B. BRYCE

P.S. Dr. Mackintosh suggests that attention should be called again to our interest in ensuring that the cost of German imports is a first charge on the proceeds of German exports, ahead of reparations, and the above policy recommendations should be considered only as based on the understanding that this is the case.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, September 24, 1945

REPARATIONS FROM GERMANY

1. At the Berlin Conference the Heads of Governments of the United States of America, the United Kingdom and the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics signed, on August 1st, 1945, a Protocol on German reparations.

2. This Protocol constitutes an agreement between the Governments of the U.S.S.R., U.K. and U.S.A. with which France was later associated. By this agreement reparations claims of the U.S.S.R. and Poland are to be met from the zone of Germany occupied by the U.S.S.R. and from appropriate German external assets. The reparations claims of the U.S.A., the U.K. and France and other countries entitled to reparations are to be met from the western zones and from appropriate German external assets.

3. Canada, as one of the countries entitled to reparations from the western zones of Germany, has been invited by the governments of the United States, United Kingdom and France, being the three powers with zones of occupation in western Germany, to supply data by October 1st, 1945, relating to the reparation claim of the Government of Canada against Germany and the value of pre-war German assets situated in its territory. The invitation is in the form of a memorandum.

4. It is stated in the memorandum that a conference is contemplated for the conclusion of a general agreement on the allocation of reparations deliveries from the western zones of Germany among the countries entitled thereto.

5. It is desired to obtain the approval of Cabinet on the following matters

(1) That the Canadian Government should furnish the data concerning reparations along the same general lines as are set out in the memorandum referred to above. The information furnished should not take the form of a reparations claim. It should be a table of statistical information prepared for consideration at the Conference.

(2) The information given should consist of global estimates and it should be pointed out to the governments requesting the information that it is impossible at this stage to give more detail.

(3) The transmission of the statistical information should be accompanied by reservations

(a) that the Canadian Government reserves for the time being the question of whether a reparation claim will or will not be put in on behalf of Canada;

(b) that the Canadian Government reserves its rights in respect of enemy assets in Canada for the purpose of meeting Canadian claims;

(c) that in transmitting the statistical information, it should be made clear that the Canadian Government reserves its right to a reasonable share of German industrial equipment on reparations account.

(4) That advertisement for claims should be deferred until after the Conference.

(5) Steps should be taken without delay to obtain access to German records in order to establish assets controlled by Canada and to verify Canadian claims on German assets.

(6) That a standing interdepartmental committee should be established to study reparations questions and submit advice and recommendations to the Cabinet from time to time.<sup>210</sup>

Ottawa, September 29, 1945

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to "Memorandum to Various United Nations" with regard to the Allied Commission on Reparations,<sup>211</sup> in which the Government of Canada was invited by the Governments of the United States of America and Great Britain and the Provisional Government of France to supply data relating to the reparations claim of Canada against Germany, and to state the value of pre-war German assets situated in its territory.

2. In compliance with this request, the summary of statistical data set forth below has been prepared and is being transmitted at the same time to the diplomatic representatives of the United Kingdom and of France. The Canadian diplomatic representatives in Washington, London and Paris are being furnished with the information today and requested to communicate it to the governments to which they are accredited.

3. It is understood that this information is requested for the purpose of working out approximate percentage allocations to various countries entitled to reparations from Germany under the terms of the Protocol on German reparations signed by the Heads of Governments of the United Kingdom, United States and the U.S.S.R. at Berlin on August 1st, 1945.

4. It is further understood that a Conference is contemplated for the conclusion of a general agreement on reparations among those countries whose claims to reparations are to be met on the basis proposed in paragraph 3 of the Protocol which reads as follows: "The reparations claims of the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries entitled to reparations shall be met from the western zones and from appropriate German external assets."

5. Pending the conclusion of such an agreement, the Canadian Government reserves its position with regard to making a claim on reparations from Germany, including a share of German industrial equipment. The Government of Canada likewise reserves its right to all German assets and holdings situated in its territory, of any kind whatsoever, for the satisfaction of Canadian claims.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 2275 of September 29th,† reparations.

1. At a meeting at the Treasury this afternoon, which LePan attended, Sir David Waley announced that the United Kingdom, the United States and France are convening a Conference in Paris of representatives of all countries whose reparation claims are to be satisfied from the western zones. This will be a Conference of officials and it is hoped that delegations will be kept as small as possible.

2. The functions of the Conference will be as follows:

(a) To set up the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency, which will have the responsibility of making final allocations of reparations from the western zones. It had been hoped that this agency could be established in Berlin, but the difficulty of finding accommodation there has made this plan impossible. The present intention is to locate the agency in Brussels.

(b) To work out, if possible, the percentage of reparations to which each country with claims on the western zones is entitled.

(c) To make provisional allocations of German industrial equipment.

3. The Russians have been pressing for the adoption of some procedure which would enable them quickly to receive delivery of their share of industrial equipment from the western zones, and the present proposals have been worked out in large measure to meet their wishes. On the other hand, the U.S.S.R. will not be represented at the Paris Conference. They have been invited but evidently prefer not to be in a minority of one.

4. The allocations made at this Conference will be provisional, but whoever represents Canada should be equipped not only with the statistical data<sup>212</sup> contained in your telegram No. 2275 of September 29th,† but also with a list, if need be incomplete, of the industrial equipment which Canada might like to claim as reparations.

5. In our telegram No. 2532 of September 3rd†, we forwarded details of some aluminium rolling mills in Germany which might be useful in connection with the re-housing program in Canada, and you instructed us to obtain this equipment if possible. I suggest that these mills might be asked for as reparations at the Conference in Paris. As the result of the surveys made in Germany by the Canadian investigators who were despatched from Canada in August under the auspices of the Joint Committee on Enemy Science and Technology (J.C.E.S.T.), information has been secured about other industrial equipment which, in the view of representatives here of the Department of Reconstruction and of the National Research Council, might be of use to Canada. We will cable within the next few days detailed descriptions about this additional equipment, so that a decision can be reached in Ottawa as to whether or not it would be useful. If that is the case, a claim for it might also be made at Paris.

6. The formal invitation to the conference should reach us tomorrow and will be despatched immediately to you by bag.<sup>213</sup> A full report† on this afternoon's meeting at the Treasury will also go forward at the same time.

I have the honour to refer to the subject of reparations and to enclose herewith two notes on this subject received from the Department of State, both dated October 15.

Additional copies of the memorandum referred to in the note have been prepared and are attached.

Note from Secretary of State of United States to Chargé d'Affaires in United States

Washington, October 15, 1945

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of Canada and informs him that the Provisional Government of France and the Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America have invited the Government of Canada to supply by October 1, 1945, data relating to the reparation claim of the Government of Canada against Germany and the value of pre-war German assets situated in its territory.

The Three Governments now invite the Government of Canada to appoint a representative to a meeting of officials to be held in Paris on November 9, 1945, to consider the data supplied by the governments concerned and to prepare the way for an Inter-Governmental Agreement on the allocation of reparation receipts as between these governments.

The Three Governments further suggest that this conference of officials should make recommendations to their governments in regard to the appointment of an Inter-Allied Reparation Agency. A memorandum on this subject is enclosed which might form the basis of discussion. The Three Governments consider that the Agency should, if possible, start its work by December 1st, 1945.

*Mémoire des gouvernements de Grande-Bretagne et des

Memorandum by the Governments of Great Britain and the United States and the Provisional Government of France

I. The Governments of the French Republic, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America propose the establishment of an Inter-Allied Reparation Agency (hereinafter referred to as The Agency) to which the countries entitled to reparations from Germany other than the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Poland shall be invited to appoint members. It will be recollected that the share of those two countries has been otherwise dealt with.

II. The functions of The Agency will be:

(A) To receive from the Control Council in Germany lists (with valuation) of the industrial capital equipment available to member Governments for reparation under Articles 6 and 7 of Section IV of the Potsdam protocol;

(B) To receive from the Member Governments lists of the industrial capital equipment from the western zones which they desire to receive as reparations under the above-mentioned Articles 6 and 7;

(C) To allocate material between the Member Governments;

(D) To perform such other functions as are entrusted to it in regard to the allocation of reparation.

III. The President and Secretary General of The Agency and the Chairman of the Committee of Five referred to below will be appointed by the Governments of France, the United Kingdom and the United States of America.

IV. The Secretariat General will draw up programmes for the allocation of material between the member countries taking into account their respective needs and will submit their programmes to The Agency. In case of objection by any member of The Agency or in case two or more countries desire to receive the same material, the matter will be referred to a Committee of Five of which the delegations to The Agency representing the Governments of France, the United Kingdom and the United States of America shall be permanent members. The other two members shall hold office in rotation for a period of two months and shall be the delegates of the other Member Governments chosen in the alphabetical order of the names of the countries concerned in the French language. The decisions of the Committee of Five will be final. They shall be taken by majority vote, each member having one vote.

V. On all questions other than those referred to in the preceding paragraph and in paragraph VII The Agency will decide by majority vote, each delegate being entitled to one vote.

VI. The question of fixing the seat of The Agency in Brussels is under discussion with the Belgian Government. The Agency will also have an office at such place or places in Germany as may be agreed with the Control Council.

VII. Each Member Government will meet the expenses of its own delegation. The common expenses of The Agency (paragraph VIII below) will be borne by the Member Governments in proportion to their shares in German reparations. The annual budget of The Agency will be subject to the approval of The Agency and for this purpose the voting power of each Member Government will be in proportion to its share in German reparations.

VIII. (1) The Control Council and the Commanders-in-Chief in their several zones will be requested to ensure to The Agency, to its members, and to the staff of The Agency and of its members (other than German nationals and other persons recruited locally) the following facilities:

(A) The free provision at the cost of the German authorities of such local services and local currency as may be required in Germany for their accommodation and transport and approved by the Zone Commander concerned;

(B) Their exemption from all German taxation including customs duties;

(C) Their exemption from exchange restrictions and from suit and legal process in any German court;

(D) The inviolability of their premises and their archives subject to the right of search where a crime has been committed under Military Government law;

(E) Appropriate freedom of communication by cypher and otherwise with their respective Governments to the same extent as that enjoyed by Military Missions attached to the Control Council:

(2) The above facilities shall only be granted to any of the personnel specified in this paragraph when his name has been notified to the Control Council.

IX. All other facilities which The Agency may require in Germany shall be the subject of agreement between it and the Control Council or the Commanders-in-Chief in their respective zones.

X. Subject to the provisions of paragraph VIII the personnel mentioned therein shall be subject in each zone to the same regulations as apply in that zone to officers of corresponding rank, status and nationality in the service of or attached to the Commander-in-Chief of that zone or the Control Council.

You may wish to look through the attached note by LePan, of our Canada House staff, outlining the Canadian interests in the general problem of German reparations, which is to be considered at an Inter-governmental meeting in Paris on November 9th.

I feel that our chief national interest in the handling of German reparations is to see that it permits Germany to pay, as a first charge, for the absolutely essential imports which will be required to keep the German people alive for the next year or two.<sup>215</sup> A substantial part of these imports will be wheat from Canada. This can only be paid for by Germany if the countries taking delivery of German exports (such as coal) pay for them in hard currency, which would then be available for paying for German imports.

The western countries have been working on a formula for allocating amongst themselves such reparations payments as may be squeezed out of the western zone of Germany. They have been trying to find a formula which would give adequate weight both to physical destruction suffered during the war and to the total cost to national economies of the successful war effort.<sup>216</sup>

I am inclined to think it would be better to restrict reparations claims to compensation for actual physical damage and destruction resulting from the war.<sup>217</sup> This would reduce the total claim to something which could be brought into ascertainable relation to Germany's capacity to pay. It would also mean that the United States and Canada and other overseas allies would get no part of reparations except, say, for merchant ships sunk.<sup>218</sup>

I doubt this. K[ING]

My reasons for recommending this approach to the problem are:

(a) We are not likely, in any event, to get any appreciable sum on reparations account.<sup>219</sup>

(b) If we submit a paper claim based on the real cost of the war to the Canadian economy and then get nothing substantial from it, we may be criticized for, in effect, "waiving" a claim against Germany.<sup>220</sup>

(c) It would be easier for our people to understand why we did not get reparations if reparations were limited to compensation for physical destruction of existing capital assets, than if the scale of reparations were felt to be related to the contribution the different allies had made to the winning of the war.<sup>221</sup>

(d) Only if reparations are kept within very modest figures is there any prospect of Canada or other western countries ever being paid for the minimum quantities of foodstuffs which are essential, on humanitarian grounds, to be made available to Germany to prevent famine and epidemics.<sup>222</sup>

SKETCH FOR A REPARATIONS POLICY

1. Specific Canadian Interests.

Leaving out of account for the moment some more general considerations which will be mentioned later, it seems to me that the following specific Canadian interests are involved in this question.

(a) Payment for Canadian Exports to Germany. Canadian wheat will be required in the British Zone this winter if plague and famine are to be avoided, and we must insist on payment. At present, our interest in this regard is protected, since we have informed the United Kingdom Government that we will demand payment in hard currencies from the United Kingdom for all Canadian wheat exported to Germany. But it would seem to be only fair that even so, we w[oul]d be in the same position without having given away a claim which some might regard as an additional loss.

at all international meetings dealing with reparations we should support the United Kingdom view that German exports should be used to pay for essential and approved imports before reparations are allowed from current production. This principle was accepted at the Potsdam Conference; but it will obviously be difficult to sustain and has already been partially modified (cf. Circular Despatch D. No. 54 of the 17th October).† We should firmly resist any further attempts to restrict its application.

(b) Canadian Property in Germany. There are some industrial plants in Germany owned by Canadian nationals. For example, I believe the Aluminum Company of Canada owns at least two plants in Germany. It would seem improper that we should allow any concern over such plants to lead us to urge exceptions in the over-all policy to be applied to German industry. If it is decided by the Control Council, for example, that these plants should be destroyed or be dismantled and declared available as reparations,<sup>223</sup> we should not protest. Compensation, presumably, might be found for the Companies concerned from German assets held in Canada.<sup>224</sup> On the other hand, we should urge (a) that where only a part of any industry is to be destroyed, plants owned by Canadian nationals should be included among those to be retained for peacetime production in Germany,<sup>225</sup> and (b) that if industrial plants owned by Canadian nationals are declared available as reparations, Canada should have the first option on them.<sup>226</sup>

(c) Scientific Information and Equipment. It is of high importance that Canada should receive the maximum amount of information about recent scientific research and development in Germany. This information, however, is not usually dependent on the acquisition of any considerable bulk of equipment. I have been informed by Brigadier F. F. Fulton, Chairman of the Canadian Advisory Targets Committee (C.A.T.C.), by Dr. J. G. Malloch of the National Research Council, by Dr. J. B. Phillips of the Department of Reconstruction and by other members of the C.A.T.C. that this information is usually best obtained from papers and specifications and through examinations conducted by investigators on the spot. Small working models or, occasionally, pilot plants may be useful; but it is not necessary to take large shipments from Germany in order to extract the desired information. In any case, scientific and research equipment is being considered, by exception, as war material and not as reparations. It can, therefore, be obtained by direct negotiation with the United Kingdom Government.

(d) Industrial Plants and Equipment. Some German industrial plants or parts of industrial plants could, no doubt, be used in Canada, if they could be obtained as reparations. In particular, a representative of the Department of Reconstruction, Mr. M. N. Hay of the Aluminum Company of Canada, has reported that there are aluminum rolling mills at Hanover and Eveking, which would be useful in connection with the Canadian housing programme. A hydrazine hydrate unit has also been reported by Dr. Adrian Cambron, one of the scientific investigators who have recently been in Germany under the auspices of the C.A.T.C. But the number of plants which these investigators have found and have considered to meet Canadian needs is exceedingly small. Discussion with members of the C.A.T.C. reveals that even these few plants would not be so suitable to Canadian needs as plants built to fresh specifications; would be very expensive to dismantle and ship across the Atlantic; and would suffer sharply in efficiency as a result of the move.

2. Arguments against Making Particular Claims.

It seems unlikely that the Canadian people will regard the acquisition of a few second-hand plants of doubtful efficiency as adequate reparation for their sacrifices during the war. Besides, there is no assurance that we can obtain the material we want, even if we bid for it. The arguments over the allocations of reparations will likely be protracted and acrimonious. In any case, the amount of reparations which Canada can hope to obtain will certainly be small when the claims of other countries are considered. In view of these facts, the material rewards which Canada might obtain do not seem to me to justify us forfeiting the advantages of a disinterested position.

3. Our General Interest.

The broader context of our interest in reparations is our interest in the pacification of Europe. Any contributions to that end, however slight, would be far more valuable to us in the long run than the acquisition of a few mills, compressors, condensers, generators and pumps. Our influence will not be decisive; but if we retain a disinterested position we will at least have the chance to work for a reasonable settlement. We will be able to use our influence to moderate, so far as possible, the acrimony of these discussions, to urge that reparations should go to the countries which have suffered the most severe and widespread physical damage, and, beyond that, to try to prevent Germany from being so stripped of her possessions that the country becomes a charnel-house and centre of infection for the rest of Europe.<sup>227</sup>

4. Recommendations.

It is therefore recommended:

(a) that at the forthcoming Conference in Paris which opens on the 9th November, we should put in a general claim for a fair percentage of reparations;<sup>228</sup>

(b) that we should not put in particular claims for industrial equipment, either as advance deliveries or otherwise,<sup>229</sup> the only proviso being that we should reserve the right to receive as reparations any plants in Germany belonging to Canadian nationals which are declared to be available.<sup>230</sup>

(c) that, at a later stage to be decided on, we should withdraw our claim altogether;<sup>231</sup>

(d) that we should insist that German current production should be used to pay for essential and approved imports before being made available as reparations;<sup>232</sup>

(e) that we should use the German assets held in Canada to meet individual claims of [Canadian] nationals;<sup>233</sup>

(f) that we should use whatever influence we will have by reason of our disinterested position in the manner suggested in paragraph 3 above.<sup>234</sup>

I had a conversation with Mr. Robertson on Wednesday about reparations and he suggested that it might be useful if I were to communicate his present views to the Department. At the moment, he is in Paris, so that it has been impossible for me to submit this letter to him and to make sure that it covers all his points; but I think I remember well enough what he said. In any case, you will already be acquainted, in outline at least, with his views on this subject.

The occasion of our talk was the personal memorandum which I recently prepared and which went forward to Ottawa under cover of despatch No. A. 509 of the 25th October.† You may care to relate these observations of Mr. Robertson's to that memorandum.

On the whole, he was disposed to agree with the contention that we should not put in particular claims at the forthcoming Paris Conference for industrial plant and equipment as advance deliveries. Our general interest, he thought, was not to take anything out of Europe. On the other hand, he was doubtful whether it would be wise to enter a claim for a percentage of reparations if the present bases for reparation claims continued to be operative. He foresaw two possible domestic difficulties. If the Crimea formula were followed, whereby claims for reparations are to be based both on war damage and war effort, the Canadian people would naturally regard the percentage of reparations allocated to us as an index of our share in winning the war and might easily consider the small percentage, which is likely all that we will obtain (say, 2% or 2½%), as derisory and contemptible. If, later, we were to withdraw our claim, there might be a public outcry, partly on the grounds that we were sacrificing material benefits and, partly, on the grounds that we were being easy on the Germans; it might be represented that not only had we subsidized other foreign countries through U.N.R.R.A., Military Relief and Mutual Aid, but that we were now proposing to treat Germany with similar philanthropy. The picture might be drawn of the Canadian Government ladling out benefits with stupid generosity to all and sundry.

Our interests would best be served, Mr. Robertson thought, if, at this stage, it were possible to depart from the Crimea formula and persuade all the countries with claims on the Western Zones, with the exception of Russia, (whose proportion of the total has, in any case, been fixed) to accept physical damage as the sole basis for reparation claims. If that principle were adopted, our own claims, of course, would dwindle almost to the vanishing point. They would be based simply on our shipping losses. We could then feel free to submit without reservation our full claim in the knowledge that it would be so small that it would have virtually no effect on the economy of Europe. The Canadian public could have no cause for complaint, since the small amount of physical damage which Canada has suffered during the war, as compared with countries which have either been occupied or have been subject to attack from the air, would be easily apparent. We would also avoid any domestic difficulties which might arise over withdrawing our claim.

It is difficult to determine what reception this proposal might have at the Paris Conference. The percentages of reparations to be allotted to all the occupied countries would be obviously increased if this suggestion were adopted, although some would be increased more than others. No doubt, for this reason, all such countries would find the proposal attractive. I have sounded United Kingdom officials tentatively to see what their reaction would be. They are uncertain whether their percentage would be increased or decreased by this change, and so are unwilling to give any expression of opinion. Mr. Robertson believes that, after examination, they will find this proposal to be in their interest.

The countries whose percentages would go down are, of course, the United States, ourselves and the other nations in the Commonwealth. From conversations with officials in the other High Commissioners' Offices here, I gather that neither Australia, New Zealand nor South Africa is seriously concerned about obtaining reparations. The position of the United States is much more doubtful. Some months ago, Mr. Pauley<sup>235</sup> let it be known that, although the United States intended to claim for reparations, at a later stage their claim would be withdrawn. More recently, however, the United States delegates on the Reparations Commission, I understand from Sir David Waley, have been playing their cards very close to their vests and have given no indication as to when, or indeed if, their claims are to be withdrawn. It is clear that if Mr. Robertson's proposal is to have any chance of success, it will require support from the United States. Otherwise the argument will move back very quickly to the stronghold of the Crimea formula and it will be difficult to the point of impossibility, I imagine, to dislodge the Americans from that bastion if they choose to defend it. On the other hand, they might be prepared to follow our suggestion if we could convince them prior to the Conference that, if they intend to submit a claim to be withdrawn later, they may very probably run into difficulty with public opinion in the United States. It seems to me that they must share this particular dilemma with ourselves and, for that reason, might be willing to adopt the course which Mr. Robertson has suggested.

In any case, Mr. Robertson thought that it would be useful for the Department to have his observations while policy about this subject is still under discussion in Ottawa.

Yours sincerely,

D. V. LEPAN

Prime Minister has approved of designation of General Pope as our representative at Reparations Conference, with McPherson<sup>236</sup> and Rae to accompany him. If London arrangements permit I should like to have LePan, who is more familiar with the general background, added to the delegation. In view of the numerous uncertain elements in the whole reparation position, any Canadian representative would have largely a watching and learning brief. I think the discussions in Paris will, therefore, be a very useful introduction to the general transfer problem which will stand our Military Mission to Germany in good stead. Their presence in Paris for these discussions should not, in any way, delay the establishment of the Mission in Berlin.

I think it would be helpful to our delegation to know whether opinion in Ottawa is generally favourable to the suggestions put forward in LePan's letter of October 27th for reinsuring the priority of payments for imports by curtailing reparations claims to compensation for actual physical destruction of capital goods. SECRET. Following for Wrong from Robertson, Begins: My telegram No. 3168 of October 31st—reparations.

1. I have had a talk with McPherson about German assets held in Canada and about German patents. After further consideration I think that our policy at the Paris Conference should be along the following lines:

(a) Now that the Soviet claims have been met by a fixed percentage we should urge that the Yalta formula should be abandoned and that the claims of other countries for reparations from the Western Zones should be based solely on the destruction of capital assets which they have suffered. The reasons for this proposal are contained in LePan's letter October 27th.

(b) If we do not succeed in persuading the conference to adopt this proposal, we should accept whatever percentage is assigned to us at Paris and reserve the right to demand reparation deliveries up to that percentage. We should not ask for any advance deliveries on reparations account of industrial plant and equipment.

(c) If a proposal is made that all German external assets should be pooled, we should not object provided that payment for approved and essential imports into Germany is made a first charge on these pooled assets. Otherwise we should retain the title to German assets held in Canada.

(d) If external assets are not pooled, we should use assets held in Canada in the first instance to guarantee payment for exports of foodstuffs to Germany. If any assets remain over and above what is needed for this purpose, they should be used to satisfy individual Canadian claims.

(e) If a proposal is made to throw all German patents held abroad into the public domain we should not object. Although some Canadian firms might stand to lose, the country as a whole would gain I think. Our general interest in this matter is a consumer interest. Such a step, in my opinion, would add considerably to the real wealth of Canada. McPherson feels, however, that there are strong arguments in the opposite sense and has set these out in a memorandum to Coleman.<sup>237</sup>

Memorandum from Department of External Affairs to Cabinet

Ottawa, November 6, 1945

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN THE REPARATION
CONFERENCE TO BE HELD IN PARIS
NOVEMBER 9TH, 1945

At its meeting of October 25th the Cabinet, after discussing the questions raised in the memorandum from the Department of External Affairs of October 24th to the Secretary to the Cabinet,<sup>1</sup> agreed as follows:

(1) that the government accept the invitation to participate in the conference on reparations; representatives and advisers to be selected by the Department of External Affairs in consultation with the Departments of Reconstruction and the Secretary of State;

Deputy Custodian of Enemy Property. The memorandum was not located.

(2) that the Canadian representatives be authorized to participate in the establishment of an inter-allied agency for making final reparations allocations in the western zones of Germany and in the determination of allocations; and

(3) that, pending inter-governmental agreement, the Canadian delegation reserve decision in respect of a reparations claim on behalf of Canada and in respect of German assets and holdings under the control of the Canadian Custodian.

Since these decisions were made, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs has had an opportunity of discussing in London with the representatives of other Governments, and in particular the United Kingdom authorities, the various questions which are likely to arise at the Paris Conference.

In the light of these discussions the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs has recommended that the Canadian delegation should be given more precise instructions along the following lines:

1. That the Canadian delegation should urge that the Yalta reparations formula whereby reparations allocations are to be based both on the war effort of Allied countries as well as war damage inflicted on them should be abandoned, and that the claims of countries entitled to reparations from the western zones of Germany should be based solely on damage or loss sustained as a result of the war on land and sea. In this connection it may be recalled that the Soviet claim to reparations from the western zones of Germany has already been met by a fixed percentage of deliveries of industrial equipment, agreed to at the Potsdam Conference.

In support of this proposal it is argued that if the Yalta formula were followed the Canadian claim would be based almost entirely on the statistical indices of war effort, particularly the budgetary costs of the war. Under any formula it is almost certain that the percentage of reparations allotted to Canada would be small in comparison to the European countries devastated by the war. Public opinion here would be likely to regard the percentage of reparations as an index of the Canadian share in winning the war, and to be dissatisfied if relative war effort is used as a criterion. It would, therefore, be in the Canadian interest for the war effort indices to be omitted entirely in the working out of reparations percentages. It is recognized that this would reduce the possible Canadian share to very small figures, comprising mainly shipping losses. On the other hand, if war damage were the recognized basis for reparations, it would avoid the possibility of the kind of misunderstanding indicated above and also reduce mutual recrimination between countries claiming reparations from Germany.

2. If the proposal to base allocations solely on war damage is not accepted by the conference, it is suggested that Canada should accept whatever percentage is allotted to us at the Paris Conference and should reserve the right to demand reparations deliveries up to that percentage.

3. It is further suggested that the Canadian delegation should not put forward any particular claims for advance deliveries on reparations account of German industrial plant and equipment. The total amount available of reparations deliveries in Germany is in any case small in comparison to the total claims already put forward by the Soviet Government or likely to be advanced by other countries who have suffered from German invasion and devastation.

4. As regards German external assets, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs recommends that if it is proposed at the Conference that all German external assets should be pooled, the Canadian delegation should not object, provided the principle is established that payment for approved and essential imports into Germany is made a charge on these external assets.

5. If the external assets of Germany are not pooled, the Canadian delegation should reserve the position of Canada in respect of any German assets and holdings under the control of the Canadian Custodian.

6. With regard to German patents, Mr. Robertson recommends that if a proposal is made to throw all German patents held abroad into public domain, the Canadian delegation should not raise objection at this stage. It is understood, however, that Mr. G. W. McPherson of the Custodian's Office, who will attend this Conference, is making a report to the Deputy Custodian on this matter and the Canadian delegation should be instructed to reserve the Canadian position at this stage pending further instructions.

7. Under any formula at all likely to be adopted, it is improbable that Canada would receive more than a negligible quantity of reparations from Germany. Therefore it is desirable that the Canadian representatives should support a position that can be easily explained and defended in Canada. The basing of reparations on war damage and losses is a simple and understandable formula, the equity of which it is hard to challenge. In addition to this, we should be concerned to ensure, first, that current deliveries from German production may be used in payment of essential imports and therefore that the exportable capacity of Germany is not taken up fully on reparations account, and, secondly, that bona fide Canadian private claims for war losses inflicted by Germany can be met out of German assets.

8. It is recommended that approval be given to the proposals set forth in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of this memorandum, and that instructions in this sense be despatched to the Canadian delegation.

9. The Conference will open in Paris on November 9th and in accordance with the previous decision of the Cabinet, the following delegation has been appointed in consultation with the Prime Minister:

Lieutenant-General M. Pope, Chairman;
Major-General D. E. Dewar, Department of Reconstruction;
G. W. McPherson, Custodian's Office;
S. F. Rae, Canadian Embassy, Paris, and
D. LePan, Canada House, London.

REPARATIONS CONFERENCE; CANADIAN POLICY

13. THE SECRETARY, referring to the discussion at the meeting of October 25th, reported that the Department of External Affairs had recommended that more precise instructions be given to the Canadian delegation participating in the Paris conference.

Since the problem had last been discussed by the Cabinet, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs had discussed the position in London with representatives of other governments. He reported that whatever the formula adopted for allocation of reparations, it was improbable that Canada would receive anything substantial. Canada's interests required principally that sufficient German export capacity be maintained to pay for essential imports and that German assets be available to take care of genuine Canadian private claims for war losses.

Accordingly, it was recommended that the Canadian delegation urge the abandonment of the Yalta formula for reparations and the substitution of a policy of claims based solely on damage or loss sustained as a result of the war. This would omit any consideration of relative war efforts in assessing reparations claims.

It was also recommended that the Canadian delegation should not put forward particular claims for advance deliveries on reparations account and that they be prepared to accept the pooling of all external German assets and the placing of all German patents held abroad in the public domain.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(External Affairs memorandum, Nov. 6, 1945—Cabinet Document 103).

14. THE CABINET, after considerable discussion, agreed:

(a) that the recommendations submitted by the Department of External Affairs for further instructions to the Canadian delegation be not approved, for the present;

(b) that, in general, the Canadian delegation be guided by two principal considerations: on the one hand, the necessity of destroying the war potential of Germany, and on the other, the need for the early re-establishment in Germany of such economic conditions as would facilitate European recovery and, in particular, the importance of permitting adequate German capacity to permit payment of essential imports as soon as possible;

(c) that the Canadian delegation be instructed to report the course of discussions at the Conference and submit recommendations for consideration by the government; and,

(d) that, pending further consideration in the light of reports from the delegation, the delegates be guided by the decisions taken by the Cabinet at the meeting of October 25th, reserving the Canadian position with respect to—the filing of a reparations claim, the disposition of German assets under the control of the Canadian custodian and advance deliveries of German industrial equipment, and making no commitment, for the present, upon proposals for pooling all German external assets or patents held abroad.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Addressed Paris No. 543. Repeated London No. 2631.

Following are preliminary instructions for the guidance of the Canadian representatives at the Reparations Conference. They should note that the policy suggested in the Under-Secretary's telegram from London No. 3205 of November 3rd, which was repeated to Paris has not repeat not been approved by the Government. It is felt here that inadequate information is available on this whole complicated problem and on the attitude of other delegations to permit the Government to adopt at present a course which would be almost equivalent to the renunciation of a claim for reparations by Canada.

2. The general consideration which the delegation should bear in mind is that reparations cannot be considered in isolation from the strategic economic and political aspects of European settlement. In the interests of enduring peace we would hope for a compromise between demands for the total destruction of German war potential through removal of German capital assets and the need for the earliest possible re-establishment of economic viability in Germany to facilitate European recovery.

3. As this is a preliminary Conference to prepare the way for an inter-governmental agreement on allocation reparation receipts as between Governments from the western zones of Germany, delegation should, pending inter-governmental agreements reserve position as to whether or not Canada will make a reparations claim.

4. The delegation should participate in the establishment of an Inter-Allied Reparations Agency on the basis of the memorandum circulated by the three Governments with their respective invitations to the Conference.<sup>238</sup>

5. As regards German external assets, the delegation should reserve the position of Canada in respect of any German assets and holdings under the control of the Canadian Custodian and should report promptly on the course of discussions in support of policy of pooling or otherwise of German external assets. Private claims filed with the Custodian will need to be borne in mind in this connection. McPherson as Custodian representative will have information regarding this category of claim and its composition.

6. With regard to advance deliveries of German capital industrial equipment Reconstruction representative will have lists of equipment available for deliveries from Germany based on reports of investigators co-ordinated through C.A.T.C., London, and also information regarding possible Canadian industrial needs for immediate reconstruction period. Delegation should report promptly as to prospects of obtaining desired items before putting in request for any particular items. It is understood, of course, that if it is decided to forego advance deliveries Canadian position will not be prejudiced when the time comes for allocating capital industrial equipment available for reparations in accordance with paragraph 6 of the Potsdam Reparations agreement.

7. Payment of Canadian exports to Germany. Since the termination of military relief any relief supplies going from Canada to Germany are to be paid for by the occupying power in command of the zone concerned. Some Canadian wheat is to be exported by arrangement with the United Kingdom Government, the United Kingdom being responsible for payment. We should support the principle that German exports should be used in the first place to pay for essential and approved imports before reparations are made from current production. This was accepted at the Potsdam Conference and recorded in the Protocol. Any attempt to restrict its application should be firmly resisted.

8. Canadian property in Germany. This includes commercial, industrial and private interests. As no access to records has been possible pending establishment of Canadian Mission in Berlin, no information is available regarding claims to compensation that may have to be met. Canadian industrial properties in Germany should be treated in accordance with agreed Allied reparations policy, namely, should any plants require to be dismantled or destroyed, under industrial disarmament, no exception should be sought. On the other hand, if industrial plants owned by Canadian nationals in Germany are declared surplus to German peacetime economy, Canada should have first option on plants. Position of Canadian property in eastern as well as western zones should be clarified if possible.

9. The instructions in this telegram will be supplemented as further information becomes available from the Conference. In general you will appreciate that in view of the numerous uncertain elements in the whole reparations position and the comparatively stronger claims of devastated European countries, Canadian representative, apart from points dealt with by specific instructions above, will have watching and learning brief. The delegation should report the course of discussion and should feel free to submit recommendations for further instructions.

MEMORANDUM ON THE DATA RELATING TO THE REPARATIONS CLAIM OF THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AGAINST GERMANY

In a "Memorandum to Various United Nations"<sup>240</sup> with regard to the Allied Commission on Reparations, the Government of Canada was invited by the Governments of the United States of America and Great Britain and the Provisional Government of France to supply data relating to the reparations claim of Canada against Germany, and to state the value of pre-war German assets situated in its territory.

2. In compliance with this request, the summary of statistical data set forth below was prepared and transmitted on October 1st, 1945,<sup>241</sup> to the diplomatic representatives of the United Kingdom and of the United States of America in Ottawa. The Canadian diplomatic representatives in Washington, London and Paris were also furnished with this information and requested to communicate it to the Governments to which they are accredited.

3. It is understood that this information was requested for the purpose of working out approximate percentage allocations to various countries entitled to reparations from Germany under the terms of the Protocol on German reparations signed by the Heads of Governments of the United Kingdom, United States and the U.S.S.R. at Berlin on August 1st, 1945.

4. It is further understood that a Conference of officials has now been arranged to take place in Paris on November 9th, 1945, for the conclusion of a general agreement on reparations among those countries whose claims to reparations are to be met on the basis proposed in paragraph 3 of the Protocol which reads as follows: "The reparations claims of the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries entitled to reparations shall be met from the western zones and from appropriate German external assets."

5. Pending the conclusion of an inter-Governmental agreement on the allocation of reparation receipts as between these Governments, the Canadian Government reserves its position with regard to making a claim on reparations from Germany, including a share of German industrial equipment. The Government of Canada likewise reserves its right to all German assets and holdings under the control of the Canadian custodian, of any kind whatsoever, for the satisfaction of Canadian claims.

6. The figures given are to be regarded as preliminary and subject to later revision as further information becomes available. The figures are presented in the form set forth in Annexes A and B in the memorandum from the Allied Commission on Reparations.

MEMORANDUM ON REPARATIONS CONFERENCE IN PARIS: CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

The Government of Canada was invited to be represented at a Conference in Paris on November 9th, 1945, for the conclusion of a general agreement on reparations among those countries whose claim to reparations is to be met from the western zones of Germany and from German external assets.

At its meeting of the 25th October the Cabinet agreed (a) that the government should accept the invitation to participate in the Conference on reparations; (b) that the Canadian representatives be authorized to participate in the establishment of an Inter-Allied Agency for making final reparations allocations in the western zones of Germany and in determination of allocations; and (c) that pending inter-governmental agreement the Canadian delegation should reserve decision in respect of a reparations claim on behalf of Canada and in respect of any enemy assets in Germany under the control of the Canadian Custodian.

The question of further instructions to the Canadian delegation to the Reparations Conference was considered at a meeting of the Cabinet on November 7th, when certain aspects of general Canadian policy in relation to reparations were discussed. The Cabinet felt that the Canadian delegation should be guided by two principal considerations; on the one hand, the necessity of destroying the war potential of Germany, and, on the other, the need for the early re-establishment in Germany of such economic conditions as would facilitate European recovery. They should also bear in mind the importance of leaving adequate German capacity to permit of payment of essential imports as soon as possible. Pending further consideration of the question in the light of reports from the Conference the delegates were to reserve the Canadian position, both as regards the filing of a general reparations claim, and, any claim for general deliveries of German industrial equipment. They were to make no commitment regarding the disposal of German assets under the control of the Canadian Custodian. Instructions along these lines were cabled to General Pope in Paris.<sup>242</sup>

As the Conference progressed in its discussion it became clear that the delegation would have to define its position as to whether or not Canada would put in a claim for a percentage of reparations. The Canadian delegation also asked to be guided as to the magnitude of the percentage which they should try to secure for allocation to Canada. This question was referred by letter† to Mr. Howe on November 14th and also to Mr. Martin,<sup>243</sup> Mr. Iisley and Mr. St. Laurent. With the concurrence of Mr. Howe, instructions† were sent to General Pope to the effect that the delegation should endeavour to secure the allocation to Canada of a percentage equivalent to that assigned to countries in similar circumstances as regards war damage and war losses (e.g., the United States and countries of the Commonwealth other than the United Kingdom), it being understood that the Canadian Government would remain free to decide how much or how little they wished to claim of the percentage so allocated.

General Pope subsequently reported that the United States delegation had received instructions to waive a portion of its claim to German industrial equipment and to seek a compensatory increase in the allocation of German external assets. He also reported that South Africa was waiving its claim to German capital industrial equipment entirely. General Pope requested guidance on the attitude he should adopt.

General Pope was told that he should follow the general attitude adopted by countries in a similar position as regards war damage and war losses, and in particular the United States. In the allocation of plant and equipment located in Germany it was felt that we should also weigh the urgent needs of reconstruction of European countries against the relatively minor requirements of Canadian industry. Similar considerations led South Africa to waive its claim to German industrial plant and equipment entirely. In this connection it should be noted that the first list of German industrial equipment designated by the Allied Control Council as available for reparations from Germany, yielded, after close scrutiny by the Department of Reconstruction, no items of interest to Canada for the reason that most of these items corresponded to plant and equipment built up in Canada during the war years. Accordingly, as reported in a memorandum from the Under-Secretary of State to the Prime Minister of December 11th,<sup>244</sup> General Pope was instructed to waive a portion of the Canadian share to the same extent as may be done by the United States, and to endeavour to secure for Canada a compensatory increase in our share of German external assets.

Discussions at the Conference progressed more favourably from the Canadian point of view than was anticipated. A measure of war effort as well as war damage and losses was accepted as a basis for allocation of percentage reparations. Under the provisional scale of percentage allocations, Canada is to be offered a share larger than that allocated to Belgium or Czechoslovakia, and only slightly less than The Netherlands. Moreover, the Conference recognized that no country would be called upon to relinquish the external assets it controls.

The work of the Conference is to be embodied in a Final Act setting up a further series of recommendations to the respective Governments represented at the Conference.<sup>244</sup> These recommendations will include two scales of percentages which are annexed. One will comprise German capital plant and equipment and ships (designated in the attached table as Category B). The other will include external assets within the jurisdiction of the United Nations and of neutral countries, any recurrent deliveries from Germany that may be required by the Allies and any reciprocal deliveries of primary products from the Russian zones of occupation which may be made in exchange for the capital equipment which is to go to the Soviet Union under the Potsdam Agreement.

The basic Canadian allocation under both columns was fixed at 3½ per cent. The United States decided to accept a reduction from 28 per cent to 12 per cent in respect of German plant and equipment and ships, making the extra percentage points available to other countries. The Canadian allocation is marked in the attached table as 4.7. In accordance with his instructions, General Pope has indicated his intention of waiving both the extra allocation derived from the United States waiver, and a portion of the Canadian share in this category to the same extent as the United States, bringing the Canadian percentage under Category B to 1.5.

The United States delegation did not seek a compensatory increase in its share of reparations under Category A (external assets, etc.), and consequently the Canadian delegation did not press for any compensation either.

Apart from the percentage share of reparations worked out at the Conference, the Final Act of the Conference will include a set of recommendations. The most important of these will be the draft agreement for the setting up of an Inter-Allied Reparations Agency. The other recommendations apparently deal with the working out in detail of the principles which are to govern the allocation of the various categories of reparations, as well as with the question of restitution and other adjunct matters.

As regards the nature of the document which the Canadian delegate is to be asked to sign on behalf of Canada in Paris this week, General Pope has reported that the inviting Powers look upon the Final Act as representing the delegates' recommendations to their respective Governments, which, in due course, it is hoped, will authorize a representative on their behalf to sign a convention or some form of operative instrument.

In the light of the foregoing it is recommended:

(1) that authority be given to General Pope to sign the proposed Final Act of the Paris Conference on Reparations;

(2) that on the receipt of the recommendations of the Conference embodied in the Final Act and the report of the Canadian delegation to the Reparations Conference, these recommendations be considered by the Inter-Departmental Committee on reparations with a view to making further recommendations on the matter to the cabinet.<sup>245</sup>

London, December 20, 1945

MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. My telegram of December 19th, Circular D. 2258.† Preparation of peace treaties was further discussed at Moscow on December 18th. M. Molotov maintained position he had taken up in London. Upshot was that United States Secretary of State agreed to concede Soviet formula for stage 1 (preliminary drafting of peace treaties) and for stage 3 (final drafting) provided that Soviet Government would agree to accept United States, United Kingdom view on stage 2 (expression of views by other United Nations) in shape of a Conference composed of all five members of Council of Foreign Ministers and all States who had contributed substantial military forces and had actively waged war against any European member of Axis at which all could express their views. Mr. Byrnes circulated following list of these States, Begins:

United States of America, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, France, China, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Greece, India, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, South Africa, Yugoslavia, White Russia, Ukraine. Ends.

M. Molotov, while accepting concession on stages 1 and 3 as a return to Potsdam decisions would not agree to more on stage 2 than to consider what States should be allowed to express views in each case. He promised to circulate a Soviet list.

2. As regards States who should sign peace treaties, M. Molotov said that he saw no need for smaller Powers to sign treaties at all. Dominions would not need to sign separately as United Kingdom could sign for them. Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin maintained that every State which had declared war had a right to sign relevant treaties if it wished and Mr. Bevin made it clear that Dominions and India who had signed Versailles Treaty and had made very substantial contributions to common victory would certainly expect to be able to sign separately.

3. In reporting the above, Foreign Secretary summarizes United States position as follows:

Stage 1. The Deputies working on four: three: two formula in strict accordance with paragraph 3 (2) of terms of reference of Council of Foreign Ministers.<sup>246</sup>

Stage 2. Council of all five Foreign Ministers to call a Peace Conference composed of States listed as in first paragraph of this telegram.

Stage 3. Conference to consider and express views upon drafts prepared by Deputies.

Stage 4. Final drafts for treaties to be prepared and approved by "signatories" to armistices as defined in Council's terms of reference on four: three: two formula.

Stage 5. Signature of final treaty texts by all, repeat all, those United Nations who were in a formal state of war with a particular enemy country.

4. At a subsequent informal meeting, M. Molotov observed to Mr. Bevin and Mr. Byrnes that list as in paragraph 1 above ought to be shortened and that in particular India should be removed. India was not an independent country, had no Foreign Office and was not in relations with Soviet Union.

5. Mr. Bevin replied that Indian troops had fought in great numbers in many theatres of war, India was a member of the United Nations and had been a foundation member of League of Nations.

6. M. Molotov rejoined that if India were included he would have to claim inclusion of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania who had also fought in war and had also been members of League of Nations.

7. Mr. Byrnes said that he understood that India was only country to whom Molotov took exception and pressed for acceptance of United States list with single deletion of India. Mr. Bevin insisted that India should be retained. Mr.

According to the 4:3:2 formula, the peace treaties would be drafted by the foreign ministers of France, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States in the case of Italy, by the ministers of Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States for those with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania and by those of Great Britain and the Soviet Union for the treaty with Finland.

Byrnes subsequently informed Mr. Bevin privately that United States Government could not accept addition of the three Baltic Republics to their list.

8. Mr. Bevin comments to us that admission of the three Baltic Republics to Peace Conference might entail their recognition and perhaps their admission in due course to United Nations Organization. But he feels that if recognition of their new status within Soviet Union is inevitable sooner or later, it might be preferable to recognize them as separate States, however fictitious, rather than to recognize merely their absorption into Soviet Union.

9. Cabinet today considered situation. We think it essential that having regard to India's membership of League of Nations and United Nations and outstanding part she has played in all theatres of war, she should not, repeat not, be excluded from proposed Conference. Foreign Secretary is accordingly being informed that, if it should be necessary in order to secure inclusion of India, we should be disposed not to object to inclusion of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania; that if he desires to make this concession in order to secure inclusion of India we should wish first to consult Dominion Governments and that we are communicating with you accordingly.

10. Should be glad of earliest possible expression of your views on this issue as to Baltic Republics. Please reply by Most Immediate telegram.

11. On question of procedure set out in paragraph 3 above we feel that United States stage 4 cannot, repeat cannot, be accepted.

Ottawa, December 21, 1945

MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET Addressed London No. 270. Repeated Canberra No. 21, Wellington No. 22, Pretoria No. 16.

Your telegram D.2267 of December 20th. Preparation of Peace Treaties.

1. We note with pleasure that Mr. Byrnes joined Mr. Bevin in repudiating the suggestion made by Mr. Molotov that the United Kingdom might sign the peace treaties on behalf of the countries of the Commonwealth.

2. We appreciate the extreme difficulty of the dilemma in which Mr. Bevin has been placed by the unreasonable demands put forward by Mr. Molotov and by the readiness of Mr. Byrnes to agree to the omission of India from the states participating in the peace conference as the price for dropping the new Soviet demand for the inclusion of the Baltic states. The immediate issue raised in your telegram is whether the omission of India or the addition of the Baltic states is the preferable alternative.

3. We note that Mr. Byrnes has stated privately that the United States Government could not accept the addition of the Baltic states, whereas the United Kingdom Cabinet have indicated their readiness to agree to their inclusion in order to ensure the inclusion of India. We feel that, while the range of consequences of admitting the Baltic states to this conference is unpredictable, it would be followed almost certainly by a demand for their admission to the United Nations Organization which would be difficult to refuse. If the fictitious independent status of five Soviet republics were recognized by admission to the United Nations it would be more difficult to resist later on the admission of the entire sixteen republics.

4. We should deeply regret the omission of India from the conference and it is obvious that the Indian Government possesses a far higher degree of autonomy than any Soviet republic. We realize the great importance of doing nothing at this time which would be regarded as diminishing India's standing, and we feel that no solution can be found within these narrow alternatives. Any such solution could be readily exploited as a diplomatic victory by the Soviet Government.

5. When the Council of Foreign Ministers was established at Potsdam, we attached importance to the inclusion of the words "with a view to their submission to the United Nations" in paragraph 3(i) of the agreement.<sup>247</sup> While the current discussions appear to relate to the conference procedure envisaged in paragraph 4(ii), it is surely relevant that India is one of the United Nations and the Baltic Republics are not. We should hope that the issues would be broadened, so that the matter would be settled outside the scope of the dilemma devised by the Soviet Government.

6. We fully agree with your view that stage 4 of the United States proposals, as reported in paragraph 3 of your telegram, cannot be accepted. Indeed, the adoption of such a plan might make it necessary for us to consider the negotiation of separate treaties of peace with these enemy states. In practice at a general conference it is probable that the actual drafting of peace terms would be done by the principal powers concerned. Clearly, however, no Government can agree in advance to sign a treaty with the negotiation of which it has not been at least formally associated.

7. It was in no one's mind when the various armistices were concluded that the signatories of these instruments would be given a formal position of preference at the peace conference merely because of the fact of signature. You will recall that the Canadian Government was at pains to reserve its position at that time.<sup>248</sup> We regarded the armistices as military instruments imposed on enemy states by the Commanders of the Allied forces, and we think it can be argued that there were no "states signatory to the terms of surrender" referred to in the Potsdam Agreement.

8. It is certainly desirable to make a real distinction between the Allied countries which made a substantial contribution to victory and the late comers and technical belligerents among the United Nations. We do not agree, however, with the thesis of the Soviet proposals that the participation of the active belligerents in any peace conference should depend on whether their forces had been engaged against the forces of the enemy country in question. While we have no important direct interest in the terms of peace with the Balkan satellites and Finland (in fact Canada never declared war on Bulgaria) we consider that there is nothing in the Potsdam Agreement which warrants the narrow interpretation placed upon it by Mr. Molotov.

Dear Norman [Robertson],

D.O. Circular 2267 of December 20th on the discussions at Moscow regarding procedure for the drawing up of peace treaties includes one point which is, I think, of a somewhat disturbing significance. Paragraph 2 reports Molotov as stating that the Dominions would not need to sign separately the peace treaties as the United Kingdom could sign for them. Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Bevin replied to this reactionary and out of date suggestion by stating that, as the Dominions (and India) had made such a substantial contribution to the common victory, they had a right to sign the treaties and would expect to be able to do so. Apparently neither took up Molotov's point that the United Kingdom had the power to sign for them. It is too bad that Mr. Bevin did not go further than he did and point out to Molotov that, not only did the Dominions have the right to sign the peace treaties, neither the United Kingdom nor any other country could sign for them if they were not given the opportunity of exercising that right. The telegram may, of course, give a somewhat inadequate statement of what took place, but it would be unfortunate if Molotov still thought that the U.K. had the power to sign a peace treaty on behalf of Canada.

The difficulty of India will recur again. The Russians are clever enough to see that India's position is a card which they can continually play in order to extract concessions for themselves. In this connection Sir Girja Bajpai<sup>249</sup> told me yesterday that after many months of hammering, on the part of himself and his Government, the United Kingdom had finally agreed to the elevation of his status in Washington by withdrawing him from the British Embassy list and making him head of an Indian Embassy or Legation. When, however, the United Kingdom approached the State Department with this proposal, Byrnes objected and the matter remains in abeyance. I am surprised at this as I would have thought that in more ways than one a changed Indian status in Washington would be welcome to the Americans.

ACCEPTANCE IN CANADA OF FURTHER PRISONERS OF WAR

8. THE SECRETARY submitted an External Affairs report, copies of which had been circulated.

The large number of prisoners of war captured recently had again raised the problem of accommodation. The First Canadian Army had already taken some 25,000 in Northwestern Europe. While as many as possible were being accommodated in France, it was still necessary to move considerable numbers overseas.

The ceiling for acceptance in Canada, established in July, 1943, had recently been raised by 1,200, in order to accommodate more German prisoners. Allocation of space for 2,600 Italians under the ceiling had not been taken up.

While it would not be desirable to embark upon a new construction programme, available accommodation could care for another 3,000 to 4,000. Moreover, segregation of prisoners into categories would allow a further increase in the number of prisoners of war who could be guarded by present establishments.

It was suggested that the government might agree to accept prisoners of war up to the limit of present accommodation and that it be suggested to the U.K. government that France be asked to share the responsibility in Western Europe. French authorities, at this stage, should be able to use large numbers of prisoners in reconstruction tasks.

RECEPTION OF ADDITIONAL PRISONERS OF WAR

26. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE reported that a request had been received from the U.K. government that 50,000 additional prisoners of war be accommodated in Canada.

At present, there were some 35,000 enemy prisoners of war in Canada, and an additional 7,000 could be accommodated in existing camps without augmenting the number of guards or camp staffs. This accommodation was available because an equivalent number of prisoners of war were engaged in labour projects.

A further 15,000 could be accepted next March if Army camps were converted and some 3,000 additional guards were made available. Reception of more than 7,000 could not be recommended because of the additional strain on the already tight manpower situation and because of the potential risk involved.

(Letter, U.K. Deputy High Commissioner to External Affairs, Nov. 17, 1944;† also memorandum, Adjutant-General to the Minister, Dec. 7, 1944).†

27. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, agreed that no additional prisoners of war could be accepted in Canada and that the U.K. government be so informed.

GERMAN PRISONERS OF WAR

We quite understand the difficulties which prevented the Canadian Government from agreeing at once to our request that they should accept 50,000 more German prisoners. But I think they cannot be quite aware of the critical nature of the problem with which we are now faced. Whereas in the whole of Canada they are at present accommodating only 34,000 German prisoners (as compared with 66,000 captured by Canadian troops in North Western Europe alone apart from those captured in Italy), we in this small overcrowded island, where much accommodation for our own people has been destroyed by enemy action, are now holding 306,000 prisoners of war of whom 139,000 are Germans and no less than 22,000 British troops are required for their administration and security. 24,000 German prisoners of war are still under canvas and all prisoners have been overcrowded to 50 per cent above austerity scales. This overcrowding and use of tentage is open to serious objection not only on medical grounds but also because, being contrary to the Geneva convention, it may lead to reprisals on all Commonwealth prisoners of war in Germany. But to ease this overcrowding would cause an additional strain on British manpower.

For operational reasons, the Commander-in-Chief 21 Army Group is most anxious to be relieved of 30,000 prisoners of war but these cannot be accepted in the United Kingdom except under canvas (which is contrary to the Geneva convention in winter) and in any event their presence here would require an additional 3,000 British troops who could be found only with great difficulty and at the expense of other urgent commitments.

It is estimated that before the surrender of Germany or the break-up of organised resistance at least another 300,000 prisoners of war will be captured in North West Europe for half of which the United Kingdom Government will be responsible.

Negotiations are in progress with the French, Belgian and Dutch Governments to accommodate and guard some of these captures, but it is likely to be some time before the French are able to accept large numbers either in Metropolitan France or in North West Africa and the need for accommodation is immediate owing to the operational situation. The Belgians and Dutch have local unemployment problems and are unlikely to be able to assist.

We have appealed to the United States Government to give further assistance in this matter but they have refused and have given as their main ground that insufficient use is being made of British Commonwealth resources in general and Canadian resources in particular. It is clear that this fact has had considerable influence on them in reaching their decision. On the other hand if Canada were to decide to take the 50,000 prisoners which we have asked her to take it would make our task very much easier in reopening the question with the United States.

It will be seen from the figures which I have given that the request which we have made of Canada is actuated only by the urgent needs of a situation for which there appears no other solution. We are stretched to the utmost and we greatly hope that they will therefore see their way to come to our assistance.

London, January 18, 1945

SECRET. Acceptance of further prisoners of war.

Canada's decision not to accept further prisoners of war has proved a great disappointment to the United Kingdom and has led to a fresh approach to me from Lord Cranborne and to General Montague from the Adjutant General. While scrupulously moderate in their comments, United Kingdom authorities clearly find it difficult to believe that the manpower situation in Canada is more serious than in Britain. They point out that the retention of prisoners here not only increases the strain on shipping but necessitates the employment of thousands of men who might be used in military or productive tasks. The danger of escapes to enemy or neutral countries is also greater, especially from Northern Ireland to where many prisoners have had to be sent. United Kingdom is holding more prisoners than she has taken, while Canada is now accommodating a number far short of her own captures.

It is not an exaggeration to say that the British authorities are extremely anxious about the disposition of German prisoners. Supply and security difficulties prevent extensive accommodation on the Continent.

United States, having already relieved the United Kingdom of a large share of the British quota under the fifty-fifty agreement, now refuse further relief. One argument used by them is their doubt that Canada is carrying her share of the burden.

It is not my intention to urge my own view, however strongly held, against the decision of War Committee, based I am aware on many factors not known to me. It is, however, my duty to communicate to you as an important fact that Canada's rejection of what the United Kingdom feels to be numerically a moderate request (in proportion to the whole problem) is not easily understood by Ministers and Government Departments here.

I understand that Lord Cranborne has asked the High Commissioner in Ottawa once more to approach you on this subject. I strongly urge that War Committee, upon the basis of the evidence to be submitted by him as to the urgency of the problem in this country and the seriousness with which it is viewed, reconsider their decision.

Ottawa, January 22, 1945

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. Acceptance of further prisoners of war by Canada.

The High Commissioner for the United Kingdom has had two meetings with the Minister of National Defence on this question. The following is the text of the High Commissioner's telegram to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs. The text of this telegram has been approved by the Minister. I am sending it to you for your information and guidance in any subsequent conversations which you may have with the United Kingdom authorities on this subject.

Begins: I have now discussed this question with General McNaughton, who is Minister departmentally responsible. He appreciates the great difficulties of the situation portrayed in your message to me. But he says that there are insurmountable practical difficulties here, and that his advice to the Cabinet will be that, for the time being at any rate, no further commitments in this matter should be assumed by the Canadian Government.

2. He is anxious that London authorities should understand reasons for this. It is not that he or the Canadian Government are at all unwilling to give further help. They would do so if this did not prejudice more urgent war tasks. But any further commitments now would react seriously on the most important parts of Canada's contribution to victory over the common enemy.

3. In order that position may be fully appreciated in London he stated case to me as follows. Canadian Government's paramount purpose is to maintain and support Canada's fighting forces in Northwestern Europe and in Italy. They proposed to do this without seeking any reduction in the combatant strength of those forces. This means that an adequate flow of re-inforcements must be guaranteed. You are familiar with the main features of the recent reinforcement controversy here.<sup>1</sup> General McNaughton has succeeded so far in fulfilling his promise made to Parliament about reinforcements. More than the 10,000 men additional to those planned prior to November 1944 whom he undertook to despatch to Britain in December and January have now landed in Britain or will be included in later despatches this month. He has shipping space for more than an additional 5,000 men in near future. He is confident that an adequate flow of reinforcements can be maintained, even though it now looks as if the casualty and wastage rates at the fronts will be rather higher than was anticipated. But he is faced by certain difficulties, and in order to achieve his objective he is having to be economical in the extreme in his use of manpower.

4. At the same time the Government are anxious to fulfil completely the demands which are being made, or are likely to be made, on Canada for munitions under the Mutual Aid arrangements. This programme of munitions production will require employment of many additional workers in munitions factories. Amongst others, many hundreds of skilled men who are now or who might have been called up under N.R.M.A. in the Army will have to be released for munitions work. He is releasing them. This is a drain on his military manpower which he feels justified in authorizing because of the high importance of munitions production. But he cannot afford any further drain for a less urgent purpose such as guarding prisoners of war.

5. The manpower position with regard to prisoners of war is as follows. 5,374 troops are engaged on guard duties in connection with the 34,000 German prisoners and internees in Canada. He has given careful consideration to the possibility of reducing the ratio of guards to prisoners. But he does not feel able to do this. There are certain factors which make the ratio necessarily higher in Canada than would be the case, say, in Great Britain. For example, the camps are widely spread in different parts of the country and the guard forces are therefore not within a distance of each other which would enable them to give mutual support in case of trouble in one or other of the camps. On the present basis, therefore, some 8,000 extra men would be required to guard 50,000 additional prisoners whom you propose. Such a figure is completely out of the question under present circumstances in Canada. Even a much lower figure is impossible. The Canadian authorities cannot risk running short of reinforcements for overseas service.

6. General McNaughton says that there is no other source than the men now in training for overseas service from which he could get guards. There is not a single General Service unit available for the purpose, for these are all in training or in reserve for overseas reinforcements. The Veterans units are already all employed and the possibility of increase has been exhausted. The N.R.M.A. are the only possible source of supply of guards. But the best of these will all be required for overseas reinforcements. The others, General McNaughton said frankly, would not be sufficiently reliable for prisoner-of-war work.

7. In this latter connection the General said that he had to reckon on the possibility of serious trouble with the prisoners of war now in Canada. There is a good deal of evidence of plans amongst the prisoners to make demonstrations and to attempt mass escapes. Many of the prisoners are desperate and fanatical Nazis ready to cause trouble even though this in effect means their committing mass suicide. He is taking steps to reduce this danger. Since assuming office he has strengthened the defences of the camps and made other changes. He is also now establishing a new camp in a remote part of the country, in which several hundred of the blackest and most dangerous characters amongst the prisoners will be sent. But in the meantime he cannot afford either to reduce the numbers of the guards or to lower the quality of the men employed as guards.

8. He told me frankly that there are at present about 7,000 empty places in the camps. But this is because many of the better prisoners are out doing various jobs. He needs this reserve of space in case of trouble involving them. A situation might arise in which they all had to be rounded up and returned behind barbed wire. He would not feel justified at present in taking a risk.

9. He urged other reasons why it is extremely difficult to expand the accommodation for prisoners of war in Canada at present. For example the Canadian winter is long and extremely severe. Camps therefore need a more elaborate accommodation than is the case in gentler climates. Their construction takes much more labour. This is particularly true in the middle of winter itself. At present the labour for extra construction work could not be provided without prejudicing more urgent war tasks; similarly as regards the material required.

10. In the course of the talk, I suggested two or three means by which Canada might be able to accommodate more prisoners but the General negated all these, and the above is a summary of his comprehensive argument covering every point. The need to guarantee adequate reinforcements dominates the situation so far as he and the Canadian government are concerned. He told me that volunteering for overseas service is now higher than it has ever been. So the long term prospect is good. The short term problem can also be solved but only by rigid refusal to allow any unnecessary diversions from the reinforcement flow.

11. I said that it seemed to me that the picture which he presented indicated that the situation might be easier in some months time. Would the Canadian authorities be willing to help then, if this turned out to be the case. He replied that they would always be open to reconsider the position in the light of developments.

12. I said that it was clear from your message to me that one of the U.K. authorities' main difficulties was to persuade the Americans to take more prisoners of war. One reason for the Americans' refusal was their assertion that the British Commonwealth in general and Canada in particular were not accommodating enough prisoners. The case which he had now presented to me might persuade the Americans that Canada could not at present take more. If it would be helpful to the U.K. authorities in further discussions with the Americans, would he give the Canadian Embassy in Washington and the High Commissioner's Office in London a full picture of the situation so that a Canadian representative could help in the discussions in either capital? He said that he would willingly do this.

13. The above is a statement of the General's personal views. They represent the advice which he will give to the Cabinet. It is of course possible that his colleagues may raise new arguments or mention additional factors in the situation which would modify his views or persuade the Cabinet to adopt a rather different attitude. But in view of the General's authority and responsibility in the matter this is extremely unlikely.<sup>2</sup>

14. General McNaughton has seen this telegram in draft and agrees that it is an accurate summary of the position. Ends.

Please pass copy of this telegram to General Montague.

DESPATCH 1078

Ottawa, August 24, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the proposed repatriation of Italian civilian internees which was under discussion by the Commonwealth Civilians Committee at their meeting on August 17th; your despatch No. 1357.†

The Canadian Government is prepared to agree to the repatriation of Italian civilians and merchant seamen interned in Canada provided that the repatriation of these Italians does not put any burden upon available shipping facilities.

For your information I may say that it is estimated that there are not over 120 Italians held in internment in Canada who would be subject to repatriation to Italy. This figure comprises 60 merchant seamen and 20 civilians interned by the United Kingdom and 36 additional merchant seamen who are Canadian internments.

The remaining Italians held in internment in Canada are believed to be all residents of Canada and it is not likely more than a few, if any, of them would be subject to repatriation to Italy.

All these Italians, merchant seamen and civilians alike, are now employed on work projects. They seem to be reasonably contented and are doing good work. However, the Canadian authorities would be glad to cooperate in any arrangements which may be made for the general repatriation of Italian civilians and your representative on the Commonwealth Civilians Committee may so inform that Committee.

I have the honour to refer to your telegram No. 2171 of 31st July and previous correspondence concerning the repatriation of Italian merchant seamen now interned in Canada.

In the foregoing connection I enclose herewith three copies of a nominal roll of 95 Italian merchant seamen who, it is expected, will embark for the United Kingdom on or about the 20th of August, 1945. It would be appreciated if copies of the enclosed nominal roll were forwarded to the United Kingdom authorities concerned for their information.

The Department of National Defence (Army), state that they will inform the War Office of the date of arrival in the United Kingdom of these internees. With respect to the billing, the Department of National Defence further state that the United Kingdom Authorities will be advised in the usual manner depending on whether a Canadian or United Kingdom ship is being used for this purpose.

1,000 on individual farms. The remainder, (some 20,000) were in prisoners of war camps.

From the Canadian point of view, it would be preferable to move first those from the camps and leave working prisoners of war until the spring (say April 1st), so that winter woods operations would likely have been completed before the last of them left the country. Among those in camps it was desirable that the so-called “blacks” should be sent first, to be followed by the “greys” and “whites.”

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

POLICY WITH REGARD TO JAPANESE IN CANADA

(1) On August 20th, 1943, you made the following suggestions to the Prime Minister as to future policy with regard to the Japanese in Canada:<sup>11</sup>

(a) That all possible assistance be given to any persons of Japanese race who wish to return to Japan (including free transportation and permission to transfer funds).<sup>12</sup>

(b) That all Japanese nationals be deported whose internment was necessary during the war.<sup>13</sup>

(c) That the British status be revoked of all Japanese Canadians who had to be interned or who put themselves under the protection of the Protecting Power. Such persons would then be liable to deportation in the same way as persons falling under (b).

(d) That immigration for permanent settlement be stopped.

The Prime Minister approved the above recommendations. With regard to your further recommendation for allowing the residuum of persons of Japanese race now to reside in Canada on a basis of non-discrimination, the Prime Minister indicated that consideration of the matter would be necessary.<sup>14</sup>

Copies of your memorandum were sent to Mr. McCarthy and Mr. Atherton with a view to getting information as to the contemplated U.S. policy. The most informative statement at present available on this is contained in the following extract from a message to the Senate by President Roosevelt on Sept. 14, 1943:

“With the segregation of the disloyal evacuees in a separate center, the War Relocation Authority proposes now to redouble its efforts to accomplish the relocation into normal homes and jobs in communities throughout the United States, but outside the evacuated areas, of those Americans of Japanese ancestry whose loyalty to this country has remained unshaken through the hardships of the evacuation which military necessity made unavoidable. We shall restore to the loyal evacuees the right to return to the evacuated areas as soon as the military situation will make such restoration feasible. Americans of Japanese ancestry, like those of many other ancestries, have shown that they can, and want to, accept our institutions and work loyally with the rest of us, making their own valuable contribution to the national wealth and well-being. In vindication of the very ideals for which we are fighting this war it is important to us to maintain a high standard of fair, considerate, and equal treatment for the people of this minority as of all other minorities.”

(2) The desirability of attempting to reach some preliminary decisions as to post-war policy is indicated in the letter of Feb. 21 from the Deputy Minister of Labour,† concerning travel restrictions on Japanese in Canada. There it is pointed out that:

(a) Undertakings have been given to officials in certain localities as to entry and removal of Japanese;

(b) After the war, provincial and municipal governments will want information as to the location, numbers, occupation, etc. of Japanese; and

(c) It is probable that numbers of Japanese who are naturalized or who were born here, and who are at liberty, would declare their loyalty for Japan rather than for Canada.

All of these are cited as factors which make it difficult, if not inadvisable, to allow a relaxation of restrictions in favour of Japanese Canadians in connection with travel and movement. It is generally recognized that the existing regulations and orders in council constitute a very great injustice to many Canadians of Japanese descent. For that reason it would be desirable to have them alleviated as soon as possible. Moreover, any relaxations that could be granted gradually during the war would render less difficult the adoption of a post-war policy not too flagrantly unjust to Japanese Canadians. However, the experience with the travel regulations indicates that the officials responsible for security and for administration of Japanese affairs are especially dubious of any relaxations that would benefit Japanese persons who, while not interned, nevertheless feel a primary loyalty to Japan. In the circumstances, it seems that it would be desirable to endeavour to segregate the loyal from the disloyal as a prerequisite step toward the elimination of unjust restrictions on the latter.

(3) In the United States the following categories of persons have been segregated at the Tule Lake Relocation Center:

(a) Persons who requested repatriation or expatriation to Japan and who did not withdraw such applications prior to July 1, 1943.

(b) American citizens evacuees who have refused to pledge loyalty to the U.S.

(c) Alien evacuees who have refused to swear that they will abide by the laws of the U.S. and refrain from interfering with the war effort.

(d) Persons denied leave clearance from camps because of an adverse report from a Federal intelligence agency, or some other information indicating loyalty to Japan.

The segregation center has no punitive purpose. Any person who shows "persistent troublemaking tendencies" is sent to the isolation center at Laupp, Arizona.

It is not definitely so stated, but presumably the intention is that persons in the segregation and isolation centers may be subject to deportation after the war. In any event, it is made clear in the President's statement quoted above that the undertakings as to restoration to evacuated areas, etc. apply only to "loyal" evacuees.

(4) I would suggest that the first step toward Canadian post-war policy should be a similar attempt at segregation undertaken as soon as possible. The reasons cited in paragraph 2 support the view that it would be desirable to have such segregation now rather than after the war. There is, moreover, the probability that this would give a more accurate indication of the actual loyalties of the persons involved than would a post-war declaration. A defeated, and perhaps harshly handled Japan, would probably not attract a declaration of loyalty from many persons in Canada even of strong sympathy for Japan if it would be likely to involve their deportation to that country.

(5) If segregation were undertaken in Canada, the following basis for procedure might be considered:

(a) All persons of Japanese race whose internment has proved necessary during the war should automatically be considered to come within the segregated group unless they can show cause why they should not.

(a) All persons of Japanese race who have declared their loyalty to Japan, or who have sought repatriation to Japan during the war should automatically be segregated unless they can show cause why they should not. (A group of Japanese evacuees held at Angler have already declared their loyalty to Japan in a letter to the Minister of Justice.)

(c) All Japanese nationals not in the above groups should be asked whether they will abide by the laws of Canada and refrain from interfering with the war effort. Those who reply in the negative should be segregated.<sup>15</sup>

(d) All persons of Japanese race who are British subjects should be asked to give a declaration of loyalty to Canada and a statement denying loyalty to Japan. Those refusing should be segregated.

(e) Any persons of Japanese race not falling within one of the above groups suggested for segregation should be subject to investigation at any time, for failure to abide by the laws of Canada, for persuading persons not to co-

Marginal note:

Use indirect test e.g. refuse work.

operate with the Canadian authorities, etc. and, if adequate cause is shown, should be liable to segregation.

(6) Acceptance of the above principles (or others along the same line) would raise questions of procedure which would have to be carefully considered, such as the method of receiving declarations from persons in groups (c) and (d); the nature of the tribunal which should hear persons seeking to show cause against segregation in groups (a) and (b) or charges against persons in group (e); the nature of offences which should involve liability for segregation under item (e); the extent to which appeal to the courts should be allowed in any case to (i) Japanese nationals and (ii) British subjects; the form which segregation should take—i.e.—actual physical segregation or merely classification; etc. All of these and other problems could be dealt with once the basic decision of policy was taken.

(7) In considering the policy of segregation, it is clear that a determining factor, not only as to its usefulness, but also as to the criteria which should be adopted in deciding cases for segregation, is the nature of the consequences, which are to flow from segregation. It is suggested that, to provide a basis for operation, the understanding should be that:

(a) segregated persons of Japanese nationality will be subject to deportation whenever it becomes practicable without any further investigation or right of appeal.

(b) segregated persons who are British subjects will be deprived of their naturalization or status as British subjects (if they acquired it other than by naturalization) and will then be subject to deportation as in the case of Japanese nationals.

Decision on deportation for the categories of persons mentioned would be in accordance with the views advanced by you and approved by the Prime Minister, although wider in scope. The justification for such action would be, as you have suggested, the necessity of dealing drastically with those who have been disloyal or of a doubtful character during the war in order that it may be possible to secure general agreement on a policy which would deal justly with those Japanese who have been blameless.

If the above principles were adopted, it would involve the necessity of providing machinery for careful consideration of the case of each person prior to segregation, including whatever scope for appeal from the decision of the board of review might seem desirable. After the necessary consideration had been given to each case, which could be done over a certain period of time, it would provide the advantage that all cases would be decided and a definite group of persons whose deportation was considered desirable would be segregated and ready for such deportation at the end of the war without further delay or investigation.

(8) Approval of a policy along the lines suggested above would go beyond the suggestions set forth in items (b) and (c) of your memorandum to the Prime Minister. The essential approach would, however, be the same.

(9) With regard to deportation, Mr. Howard Green<sup>16</sup> recently raised in the House the desirability of having special consideration given to the law governing it by the committee set up to review the Defence of Canada Regulations. His amendment in this connection was accepted, and the Committee will consider both deportation and naturalization. In the course of his remarks Mr. Green stated that he believed it was virtually impossible to deport a person who has been in Canada for more than 5 years. Any policy of deportation of Japanese, will require an examination of the present law governing deportation and consideration of necessary amendments. The position appears to be as follows:

(a) Persons born in Canada

As the Immigration Act stands at present, it seems clear that it does not enable deportation under any circumstances of a person born in Canada who has not become an alien. "Deportation" is defined in S. 2(c) as the removal of a rejected immigrant or of a person already landed in Canada, or in Canada contrary to the provisions of the Act "to the place whence he came to Canada, or to the country of his birth or citizenship." If it is deemed desirable to enable the deportation of certain persons born in Canada (under group(d)) Supra provision will be necessary, not only for depriving them of their British status, but also to enable deportation.

(b) Persons who have acquired the status of British subject in Canada otherwise than by birth

Such persons will be persons naturalized here, or women who became British subjects by marriage. Such persons will have a "country of birth" outside of Canada, and there would not appear to be the same basic inability in respect of deportation that exists for persons born here. Provision could be made to render their status as British subjects null ab initio, in which case it would appear that deportation would be possible to the same extent as for aliens who have acquired domicile in Canada.

(c) Aliens

(i) S.41 of the Immigration Act provides that "Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen advocates in Canada the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of Great Britain or Canada, ... or the overthrow by force or violence of constituted law and authority, ... or shall by word or act create or attempt to create riot or public disorder in Canada ..., such person for the purposes of this Act shall be considered and classed as an undesirable immigrant."

(ii) Persons whose internment has proved necessary in the present war could probably be brought within the scope of the above, and it might be interpreted widely enough to include persons who declare loyalty for Japan during the war as by implication advocating "the overthrow by force ... of the Government of Great Britain or Canada." The latter is doubtful. It seems clear that the section is not wide enough to cover persons who merely declared a desire to return to Japan.

Member of Parliament for Vancouver South.

(iii) If the above is correct, an extension to the scope of S.41 of the Immigration Act (or a specific provision directed entirely at the problem under discussion) will be necessary before deportation is possible in the cases suggested in this memorandum.

(iv) If the procedure is adopted of extending the scope of S.41 to include additional categories of persons as "undesirable immigrants," it is necessary to consider the adequacy of existing provisions for the examination and deportation of such persons.

(v) By S.42 of the Act, persons charged with being undesirable immigrants are subject to examination by a Board of Inquiry set up by the Minister of Mines and Resources under S.13 of the Act. Persons charged have the right to be represented by counsel. Decisions of the Boards are by majority (S.17). An appeal may be made to the Minister of Mines and Resources (S.19), and the decision of the Board or Minister may be reviewed or reversed by a court if the person involved is a "Canadian citizen or has Canadian domicile." (S.23) (Presumably it is this possibility of judicial review in the case of a person having Canadian domicile that Mr. Green had in mind in his statement referred to above.) Persons held to be undesirable immigrants under the above procedure may be ordered deported.

(vi) It seems clear that the procedure and machinery established by the Immigration Act would not be satisfactory for determining cases for segregation with a view to alternate deportation or (if immediate segregation is not thought desirable) for dealing with deportation hearings involving the Japanese whose deportation seems desirable. The policy involved is not primarily an Immigration one, nor are the cases that will have to be heard of the type for which the Immigration Boards of Inquiry are designed. Appeals, if they are allowed, should probably not be to the Minister of Mines and Resources, but to the Minister of Justice or to a court.

(10) In the light of the above examination it is suggested that:

(a) The provisions of the Immigration Act are not adequate either as to scope or as to machinery to handle the deportation cases that will arise if the suggested policy is adopted.

(b) It would not be sufficient simply to extend the classification of "undesirable immigrants" or the definition of "deportation" under the act.

(c) The most satisfactory procedure would be to have a comprehensive order in council passed under the War Measures Act, or an act passed by Parliament, to provide special deportation measures to take care of the immediate post-war problem.<sup>17</sup>

Marginal note:
Preferable.

(11) A question distinct from deportation is that of depriving persons to be deported of their status as British subjects in cases in which non-aliens are involved. There seems to be no doubt but that such status should be removed before deportation is ordered.

(12) Under the Naturalization Act there is no method of depriving a British subject by birth of his status as a British subject. Persons who are British subjects by naturalization may have their naturalization revoked for:

- (a) disaffection or disloyalty to His Majesty (S.9(1));
- (b) trading or communicating during war with the enemy or with the subject of an enemy state, or engaging in any business carried on so as to assist the enemy (S.9(2)(a));
- (c) remaining, according to the law of a state at war with His Majesty, a subject of that state (S.9(2)(e)).

Naturalized Japanese refusing to give a declaration of loyalty could probably be handled under (a). A further group of naturalized Japanese in the segregated group could be handled under (c) since a large number of Japanese naturalized prior to August, 1934, did not cease to be Japanese nationals. (This was because Japanese law provides that a person who has not complied with military service requirements cannot divest himself of Japanese nationality. Since P.C. 1760 of August 13, 1934, no Japanese have been accepted for naturalization who did not have a certificate from the Japanese Minister indicating that they had complied with Japanese military service requirements.)

(13) A further provision at present in effect which enables persons who are British subjects by birth, as well as naturalized persons, to be deprived of their status as British subjects is P.C. 10773 of Nov. 26, 1942. This Order provides that any British subject (by birth, marriage, or naturalization in Canada, or by the birth or naturalization of his father in Canada) who seeks "repatriation" to a country at war with Canada "shall, as from the date of his departure from Canada for repatriation cease to be a British subject."

The Order also provides that any person of the above category who:

- (a) Makes application for protection to the Protecting Power of a State at war with Canada, or
- (b) asserts allegiance to such state, or
- (c) makes application for repatriation to such a state but is not so repatriated, may "in the discretion of the Secretary of State be deprived of his status as a British subject."

(14) Applying the provisions outlined above (paragraphs 12 and 13) to the categories suggested for segregation in paragraph 5, it appears that the following groups would not be covered:

- (a) Canadian-born Japanese interned during the war.
- (b) Possibly Canadian-born Japanese who refuse to give a declaration of loyalty to Canada and a statement denying loyalty to Japan. These would be covered if refusal to give a declaration of loyalty were deemed to constitute an assertion of allegiance to Japan under P.C. 10773. Naturalized Japanese might be covered in the same way, and almost certainly would be covered on the basis of “disaffection or disloyalty” to His Majesty.

(c) Possibly naturalized persons who failed to abide by the law of Canada, etc.

(d) Canadian-born Japanese who failed to abide by the laws of Canada, etc.

(15) From the above it would appear that provisions for depriving persons of their status as British subjects are much more adequate for the purpose in mind than are the provisions regarding deportation. Nevertheless, there are gaps. These could be filled either by an Order-in-Council to supplement P.C.10773, or by a new and comprehensive order consolidating all provisions necessary to deal with the whole problem. Some amendments in the Naturalization Act may be deemed desirable, but it is probable that for permanent purposes it would not be desirable to make these as broad in scope as the legal provisions which will be necessary to handle the immediate post-war problem.

(16) If the necessary legal provisions were made to enable segregation, revocation of status as British subjects, and deportation of persons in the categories suggested in paragraph 5, it is probable that several hundred and possibly some thousands of Japanese persons would be removed from Canada at the end of the war. It is to be noted that the suggested provisions would not eliminate all Japanese nationals from Canada. Deportation of persons merely because they have omitted to become naturalized would appear to be unjustified, especially when it is known that many persons took out naturalization papers, not because of loyalty to Canada, but simply to be enabled to engage in fishing, etc. A recent Gallup Poll, however, indicated that some 83% of people interviewed were in favour of deporting all Japanese nationals. In view of this, it might be desirable, and it would not seem unjust, to provide that all Japanese nationals not coming within the segregated categories, should be subject to deportation, one year after the conclusion of hostilities who have not<sup>18</sup>

(a) become naturalized, or

(b) made a declaration of intention to become naturalized which was accepted by the Secretary of State.

This would enable the deportation of:

(a) Japanese nationals who do not wish to become British subjects, and

(b) Japanese nationals whose credentials and record do not justify their naturalization or the acceptance of their declaration of intention.

The result of the above measures would be to eliminate from Canada all persons who were disloyal or of doubtful loyalty and, in a short period after the war, all Japanese nationals.

Marginal note:

Section a b one year limit dubious.

(17) It is impossible to know in advance how large the residue would be in respect of whom the problem of resettlement in Canada would have to be dealt with. The Prime Minister indicated in reply to your memorandum of last August that consideration would have to be given to allowing them to reside in Canada subject to no "special or peculiar disabilities with respect to place of residence, employment, civil obligations, or educational opportunities." It was, however, somewhat of a surprise to note that the recent Gallup Poll showed 59% of the people interviewed to be in favour of allowing Japanese Canadians to remain in Canada, and particularly to note that the proportion was not noticeably less in British Columbia than elsewhere. A large portion of the remaining 41% were "undecided." This suggests that most of the opposition to allowing continued residence in Canada and return to former places of residence may be coming from a vociferous minority who are loudly supporting a completely unjust policy. If the hard core of disloyal and alien elements among the Japanese could be eliminated, there would seem to be good reason to expect that it would be possible to declare firmly and without general opposition that the remainder would be allowed to continue to live here without restriction.

(18) If the suggested policy were considered suitable as a basis on which to begin consideration of the problem, there are a large number of matters that would have to be considered, such as:

(a) The detailed basis, provision for and machinery of segregation

The person to be segregated; the nature of the tribunal which should hear cases; the extent to which appeal from that tribunal should be allowed; the court to which or the person to whom appeal should be made; the nature of "segregation" in the physical sense; etc.

(b) Necessary provisions for deportation

Decision as to the nature of these provisions; whether they should be embodied in the Immigration Act or in a special Order or Act; etc. (It may be noted here that it would become necessary to impose as one of the peace terms on Japan the obligation to receive any persons of Japanese race deported from Canada, since otherwise there would be no obligation to receive persons who are not Japanese nationals.)

(c) Provisions for the revocation of British status:

Whether by amendment of the Naturalization Act, or by a special Order or Act; the possible necessity of securing the concurrence, in certain aspects of other countries of the Commonwealth; the desirability of requiring the Japanese to grant the status of Japanese national to any person of Japanese race deprived of the status of British subject. (Here it might be noted that consideration should also be given to requiring the Japanese Government to divest of the status of Japanese national any person in Canada having the status of British subject.)

(d) Wartime controls to be continued on non-segregated persons.

(e) Problems of post-war resettlement

To deal with these fully, a thorough examination would have to be made of all orders and regulations that have been passed affecting Japanese; of the extent to which such orders have been carried out, especially in connection with sale of Japanese property, removal from homes, etc.; of the agreements made with various local governments which have agreed to accept Japanese for settlement during the war; of the aspects of the problem falling under provincial jurisdiction; etc.

(f) Correlation of Canadian policy with U.S. policy.

(19) The above is by no means exhaustive, but it does indicate that many agencies of the government are involved, and that it would be desirable to have the matter discussed and as much as possible done to prepare the ground during the war. Probably it would be desirable to set up an interdepartmental committee which could deal with the details that must be examined in order to implement whatever policy is decided on. The work of this committee on matters involving deportation and naturalization problems should be brought before the committee which has been set up in the House to consider the Defence of Canada Regulations, deportation, and naturalization. Departments which will be interested in the problem appear to be:

- External Affairs
- Labour
- Immigration
- Justice
- Custodian
- Naturalization Branch
- National Defence (possibly).

(NOTE—This memorandum has dealt only with the Japanese problem.

Questions of deportation and post-war resettlement will arise, though not in so serious a form, in connection with other enemy aliens or persons of enemy descent. These groups would have to be kept in mind in considering the Japanese question. In part, some may be dealt with under P.C. 10773 (see paragraph 13). It is probable, however, that amendments will be made in the Immigration Act and also in the Naturalization Act even if a special measure is passed to provide specifically for the Japanese. If so, possibly other groups can be handled under such amendments without special measures to cover them analogous to those which will be necessary to deal with the Japanese.

MEMORANDUM ON MR. R. G. ROBERTSON'S NOTE ON

1. This note while tough and even harsh in tone is in essence not ungenerous and the same solution could be worded, if we were trying to conciliate liberal opinion instead of illiberal opinion, in very different language.

2. The number of Japanese nationals in Canada, including men, women and children, is less than 6,000 and is approximately one-half of the number of army deserters of other races present in the country. Of these it is proposed to deport only those who have in one way or another shown that their sympathy lies with Japan. Most of these would be willing to go and there would be no serious objection to the proposal.

3. Those who have become Canadians by naturalization are sometimes open to the suspicion that they have done so in order to qualify for fishing licenses, or for other reasons of the same character. This is the more probable as far fewer Chinese have naturalized. There is no comparable category in the United States which has not permitted naturalization. There is a good deal to be said for picking over this group to weed out any whose naturalization was insincere.

4. The measures considered in the last two paragraphs would be easier to defend before world opinion if they applied to Germans as well as to Japanese. These two nations could be singled out for separate treatment because of their resort to atrocities. If aggressive national policy were the test we should have to include Italians as well.

5. The second class of Canadians of Japanese race consists of those who have acquired Canadian nationality in accordance with our law by birth in Canada. I think that we should hesitate a long time before depriving any one in this category, whatever his race may be, of his nationality, although he may appropriately be banished if his behaviour in the war has been bad. It is suggested, however, that few, if any, of this group have been as bad as the deserters from the army mentioned above.

6. An exception to this statement should be made in the case of Canadians of Japanese race who are also Japanese nationals for the purpose of the Japanese law because of the registration of their births by their parents at Japanese consulates. In this instance a man may well think of himself as having two nationalities and as being free to choose where his loyalty lies. I think this is true of people of other races who have both Canadian and United States nationality. If a choice has been indicated by overt conduct in favour of Japan, then I think we are quite free to treat the man concerned as not recognizing Canadian nationality.

7. A doubtful case is presented by Canadians of Japanese race who have been interned for resisting deportation, or some other measure of compulsion which they considered unjust. They may or may not have resisted in such a way as to indicate a preference for Japanese nationality. The presumption is that they did not indicate such a preference since the Japanese Government is more arbitrary than the Canadian. Unless they indicated such a preference, their conduct is distinctly less reprehensible than that of army deserters.

8. If, in spite of the undesirability of depriving Canadian-born Japanese of the nationality which we have conferred upon them by statute, we do decide to ask them for a declaration of allegiance different in character from anything required by Canadians of other races, then we ought at the same time to indicate to them the extent to which Canada is prepared to receive them as citizens. Are they to have liberty of movement from one locality to another? Are ordinary careers to be open to them? Are they to have special rates of relief because of the lower standard of living which we sometimes reproach them with accepting? Are they to have voting rights at least in Dominion elections, no matter where they reside? If we are not in a position to guarantee these things—and I assume that we are not—it is not fair or reasonable to ask a man at his peril to declare his allegiance to Canada.

9. If we look at the broad question of policy, in this as in so many other cases, what matters most is the way in which an action is taken. Except in detail, there is little to object to in the proposals contained in the note, but the approach to these proposals is of a character to make them acceptable to certain elements of Canadian opinion not represented in the sixty per cent majorities which voted on a Gallup poll against deporting from Canada Canadian citizens of Japanese race. A more generous approach would be more congenial to this majority, more creditable to Canada and would do a great deal towards removing circumstances which tend to embitter racial relations not only in this country but throughout the world.

10. Canada would gain in international prestige by adopting this more liberal approach.

Memorandum by Third Secretary

Ottawa, March 22, 1944

POLICY WITH REGARD TO JAPANESE IN CANADA

Mr. R. G. Robertson's comprehensive survey of this subject appears to me to be both adequate and fair. The following observations are offered as amplification of some of the points already mooted:

(1) In consideration of Canada's long-term relations with the peoples of Asia it would seem desirable, if at all practicable, to draft enabling legislation in general terms so that for the record at least it will not appear to be discriminating against the Japanese as a race, but rather, against all persons in Canada of enemy nationality or origin who have been disloyal, etc., to Canada. The number of persons of German, Italian or other nationality or origin whom we might wish to repatriate may be small, but if they were dealt with by the same legislation our future friendly relations with other Asiatic countries or even a reformed Japan would not be made more difficult by a charge of "racial discrimination."

(2) As suggested in paragraph (4) page 3. of Mr. R. G. Robertson's memorandum, among other reasons for trying to reach a wartime settlement of this matter is the consideration that for economic reasons large numbers of Japanese or Japanese Canadians, who might have declared their sympathy for Japan when she was winning victories, will not do so when they contemplate the economic chaos that is certain to result from the military defeat of Japan. For that reason it would seem to be urgent that segregation be proceeded with before Japanese in Canada become convinced of the defeat of their country, else those who for political reasons would declare their loyalty to Japan will refrain from doing so for economic reasons.

(3) In paragraph (16) page 8 it is suggested that all Japanese nationals not coming within the segregated categories should be subject to deportation, one year after the conclusion of hostilities, who have not become naturalized or made a declaration of intention. This suggestion is very reasonable provided that unreasonable obstacles are not placed in the way of decent Japanese who wish to become naturalized. In this connection it would appear that the provision of Japanese law, noticed in P.C. 1760 of Aug. 13, 1934 and mentioned in paragraph (12), page 7., to the effect that persons who have not complied with military service requirements cannot divest themselves of Japanese nationality, would continue to be an obstacle to naturalization. Or would we make it a provision of the Peace Treaty that this Japanese statute be rescinded?

au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

Ottawa, March 27, 1944

At Quebec last August I submitted to you a memorandum<sup>20</sup> containing certain tentative suggestions as to the policy that should be adopted with regard to the treatment of Japanese in Canada. You agreed with the following preliminary suggestions:

(a) That all possible assistance be given to any persons of Japanese race who wish to return to Japan (including free transportation and permission to transfer funds).

(b) That all Japanese nationals be deported whose internment was necessary during the war.

(c) That the British status be revoked of all Japanese Canadians who had to be interned or who put themselves under the protection of the Protecting Power. Such persons would then be liable to deportation in the same way as persons falling under (b).

(d) That immigration for permanent settlement be stopped.

I also suggested that, if the above principles were adopted, the remaining Japanese in Canada should be allowed to remain here without any special disabilities on a basis of non-discrimination. You were of the opinion that this would require consideration.

On the whole, I think our treatment of the Japanese in Canada has not been unduly harsh and can be defended as reasonable in the circumstances. Nevertheless many of the restrictions that have been placed on persons of Japanese race work hardship upon them. The people involved are in the great majority of cases British subjects and Canadian nationals who personally are guilty of no offence other than that of having Japanese ancestry. I think it would be very desirable if we could remove as far as possible the aspects of racial discrimination that are involved. In order to do this, however, it is necessary I think to deal strictly, and perhaps more strictly than the individual cases would in themselves justify, with any and all cases in which there is adequate reason to believe that the person involved has endeavoured to assist the Japanese war effort or hinder ours, or has manifested disloyalty toward this country or greater sympathy for Japan. If such persons could be identified and segregated (nominally, for the most part, but physically wherever necessary) it would be possible to reduce the restrictions on other persons of Japanese race. Such action would have a double advantage. It would strengthen the principle on which our treatment of Japanese is based, and it would prepare the way for a post-war acceptance of innocent Japanese as proper persons to remain in Canada. A recent Gallup Poll indicated that 59% of the people interviewed were in favour of allowing Japanese Canadians to remain in Canada after the war. If this is to be done, it is desirable to take whatever preparatory steps are possible now.

I have discussed the question with members of the Department who are particularly interested in the problem. Subject to your approval, it would, I think, be desirable now to have the matter considered interdepartmentally. For this purpose, I would suggest that the following general principles, which are essentially an elaboration of the original proposals with which you expressed agreement last August, should be made the basis of consideration:

(a) Steps should be taken to achieve as soon as possible a segregation of undesirable and disloyal Japanese from those whose sympathies for this country are beyond doubt.<sup>21</sup>

(b) The segregation should be on the following basis:

(i) All persons of Japanese race whose internment has proved necessary during the war should automatically be considered to come within the segregated group unless they can show cause why they should not.

(ii) All persons of Japanese race who have declared their loyalty to Japan or who have sought repatriation to Japan during the war should automatically be segregated unless they can show cause why they should not.

(iii) All other persons of Japanese race should be subject to investigation for failure to abide by the laws of Canada for non-compliance with Selective Service Regulations, or for other indications that their sympathies are with Japan in the war and, if adequate cause is shown, should be segregated.<sup>21</sup>

(c) All cases for segregation should be examined by a commission or other special body to be established, with possibly a right of appeal to the Minister of Justice in the case of persons who are British subjects.<sup>21</sup>

(d) The post-war consequences of segregation should be:

(i) for Japanese nationals—deportation to Japan without further investigation or right of appeal.

(ii) for British subjects—loss of British status and deportation as in the case of Japanese nationals.<sup>21</sup>

(e) Any persons of Japanese race who express a desire to return to Japan should be given all possible assistance to do so as soon as it is practicable.<sup>21</sup>

If the above principles should be found feasible for adoption and segregation were instituted, it would, I think, be possible to relax some restrictions on innocent Japanese. It would probably not be possible to allow their return during the war to the protected area of British Columbia. However, if this restriction were maintained, but at the same time loyal Japanese were allowed to buy land elsewhere in Canada, it might encourage them to “take root” in approved.

Marginal note:

other provinces. Such a dispersion would facilitate a post-war settlement on a reasonably just basis by helping to meet the otherwise adamant stand of British Columbia in the face of a probable return of almost all Japanese to that province.<sup>22</sup>

It will probably be necessary to approach the provinces at some stage. However, there would be much less difficulty in reaching a sound basis of agreement with them if we could show that all doubtful cases had been carefully dealt with and only innocent persons of Canadian sympathies were involved. A carefully considered and definite program might be accepted without too great difficulty.

If it is possible, after consideration, to deal with the Japanese and persons of German, and possibly Italian origin at least formally on the same basis, it would probably be preferable. However, I think there is a real difference in the nature of the problem, and this would have to be the major consideration.<sup>23</sup>

If you approve the suggestions set forth above, I shall take steps to have the matter considered interdepartmentally in order that a complete report and plan of procedure can be submitted for the approval of Council.<sup>24</sup>

RE: POLICY WITH REGARD TO JAPANESE IN CANADA

1. Two interdepartmental meetings have been held in the past week to give consideration to recommendations which might be brought before War Committee with regard to steps to be taken toward the settlement of the problem of Japanese in Canada. The meetings were attended by the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Under-Secretary of State, the Deputy Ministers of Justice and Labour, the Director of Immigration, and the Deputy Commissioner of the R.C.M.P., and other representatives of the Departments indicated.

Noted.

2. The meetings agreed that the following appeared to be desirable basic principles for the formulation of recommendations on policy:

(a) Steps should be taken to achieve as soon as possible a segregation of undesirable and disloyal Japanese from those whose sympathies for this country are beyond doubt.

(b) The segregation should be on the following basis:

(i) All persons of Japanese race whose internment has proved necessary during the war should automatically be considered to come within the segregated group unless they can show cause why they should not.

(ii) All persons of Japanese race who have declared their loyalty to Japan or who have sought repatriation to Japan during the war should automatically be segregated unless they can show cause why they should not.

(iii) Other persons of Japanese race should be subject to investigation for failure to abide by the laws of Canada for non-compliance with Selective Service Regulations, or for other indications that their sympathies are with Japan in the war and, if adequate cause is shown, should be segregated.

It was felt that those adjudged to fall within the segregated category should be subject to deportation after the war. In the case of those who were British subjects, a preliminary step would be necessary in the revocation of such status.

The meetings also agreed that any persons of Japanese race who expressed a desire to return to Japan should be given all possible assistance to do so as soon as practicable.

It was the view of the meetings that, in following the policy of segregation and deportation, regard should be had for the policy followed in the United States. The problem there is essentially the same, and it was felt that it would be preferable if the measures taken could be kept in line with one another.

3. The underlying assumption in reaching the above conclusions was that it would be desirable at the end of the war to achieve a reduction in the Japanese population of Canada by removing all those who had shown in the war that their closest connection or loyalty was to Japan. It was felt that only by such selection and removal would it be possible to enable an elimination of the restrictions which at present apply on a purely racial basis to a section of persons of British status, as well as to aliens of the same race. It was also felt that if such selection could be made, it would be much easier to approach the provincial governments, which will have to be consulted at some stage, with a policy for re-settlement which would be just to the Japanese remaining in Canada, defensible in the interests of Canada, and at the same time acceptable to the provincial authorities.

4. Consideration was also given to the fact that it would be desirable to encourage, as far as possible, a re-settlement of loyal Japanese during the war on a basis which might achieve permanency. The wartime restrictions on entry into the protected area of British Columbia would ensure that such settlement would be outside the area of greatest controversy. If approved, Japanese would be allowed to purchase land in other parts of Canada. It was felt that this might encourage their dispersal throughout the country and thus reduce the problem arising out of their concentration in British Columbia. Any decision on this matter, however, would have to have regard for the fact that, thus far, undertakings have been given to provinces in which Japanese have been resettled to remove them at the end of the war.

5. The meetings agreed that, if the principles outlined in paragraph (2) are approved, it would be desirable to begin at once with an examination of individual cases in order to have ready, at the conclusion of hostilities, a list of persons whose deportation or voluntary removal could be instituted. This would require examination and preparation of the files in all doubtful cases by the officials of the Department of Labour and R.C.M.P., and decision on the cases, on the basis of such files and any additional evidence that appeared desirable, by a commissioner to be appointed for the purpose. Such a commissioner should preferably be drawn from the bench, and the magnitude of the problem would require that he give his full time to it.

6. The meetings agreed that the following recommendations be placed before War Committee:

(a) That the general principles outlined in paragraph (2)(above) be approved as the basis for initiating consideration of the problem.

(b) That a commissioner be appointed to review all cases of persons of Japanese race whose loyalty is doubtful in order to determine those who should be deported in accordance with such principles, and with power to render final decisions in all cases.

(c) That consideration be given to the desirability of framing the powers of the commissioner in such a way as to enable him to review cases of enemy aliens other than Japanese, and persons of enemy origin or descent other than Japanese, on the same principles.

REPATRIATION OF JAPANESE IN CANADA

26. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS submitted a report, copies of which had been circulated.

The proposal for an order to govern the travel of Japanese in Canada had, for the time being, been dropped and, with the approval of the Prime Minister, the question of the basic policy to be followed after the war had been taken up with the departments concerned.

The report proposed that steps should be taken, as soon as possible, to segregate all undesirable and disloyal citizens of Japanese race from those whose sympathies for Canada were beyond doubt. It was recommended that investigation of individual cases be conducted by a commissioner, with a view to deportation of those whose internment had proven necessary, those who had declared loyalty to Japan or who sought repatriation to Japan or had failed to comply with Selective Service regulations, or had otherwise indicated their sympathies with Japan.

(Secretary's memorandum, April 18, 1944—C.W.C. document 756).

27. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved in principle the recommendations contained in the report submitted, on the understanding that a submission to Council would be prepared providing for the appointment of a commissioner, in general terms, his functions to be further defined, if necessary, by special confidential instructions.

1. I called on Dickover this morning, the Head of the Japanese Division of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs in the State Department, in order to give him a copy of Norman's memorandum which you sent under cover of your despatch No. 1489 of October 16.† I took advantage of the opportunity to ask him to have lunch with me next Tuesday, the 31st. He mentioned that he is working on a memorandum† to be given to External Affairs through the United States Embassy in Ottawa on the treatment after the war of persons of Japanese origin in the United States. This is apparently in response to a request made by the Under-Secretary after the Prime Minister gave his speech of August 4th.<sup>25</sup> Dickover said there were two points which particularly concerned him and which had not been touched on in the Prime Minister's speech. One was the question of dual nationality. Most of the Nisei in the United States have dual nationality. He would like to have it clearly established after the war that they would have to choose between United States and Japanese citizenship. The second problem arose out of the constitutional difficulties in the United States of preventing the several States from going in for their own policies of discrimination against persons of Japanese origin regardless of their nationality, or whether they have been born in the United States. He agreed that they could use the 14th Amendment, but this procedure was cumbrous. He wondered what we were proposing to do in Canada to prevent the Provinces from pursuing their own policies of discrimination on, for example, the ownership of land.

CONFIDENTIAL. Following for Reid from Keenleyside, Begins: Reference your teletype WA-6081 of October 24 concerning post-war treatment of the Japanese in the United States.

I am glad to hear that a memorandum on United States policy is being prepared, as we have frequently sought to secure information from them concerning their plans. Your discussion with Dickover next Tuesday will be useful in raising for attention certain points which seem to us to be important.

With regard to the question of dual nationality in which Dickover is interested, no very great consideration has yet been given to the matter here. A large number of children of Japanese race born in Canada have hitherto been registered with Japanese consuls and have thereby acquired Japanese nationality as well as being British subjects by birth. According to Japanese law, Japanese children born in Canada who are not so registered do not acquire Japanese nationality. In addition to dual nationals of this type, there are some persons who became naturalized here without losing their Japanese status. According to Article 24 of the Japanese Naturalization Law No. 66 of March 1899, Japanese persons who are liable to military service in Japan do not lose their Japanese nationality on taking out naturalization in a foreign country unless they have performed the service required of them. Until 1934 no question was asked on this point when application was made for naturalization here and consequently many Japanese men became dual nationals. By Order in Council P.C. 1760 of August 13, 1934, it was provided that in future no Japanese would be accepted for naturalization who did not have a certificate from the Japanese Minister in Canada indicating that he had complied with Japanese military service requirements. As a result, since 1934 dual nationality has not arisen through cases of naturalization.

When the commission to be established here to investigate the loyalties of Japanese persons begins its work, it is not expected that a line of distinction will be drawn on the basis of nationality. It is felt that the national status is not any necessary indication of the loyalty or sympathy of the person involved.

Many have acquired Canadian nationality simply because of certain advantages it affords. Others have failed to acquire such nationality not because of any lack of sympathy, but perhaps due to oversight and sometimes because they were not prepared to return to Japan for the military service that would be a prerequisite for naturalization.

With regard to the Japanese who are allowed to remain in Canada after the war, the question will arise as to whether those who are Japanese nationals should be divested of that status and required to become British subjects. There would be some difficulty in this and if it were to be done, it would be necessary to require the Japanese Government under the Peace Treaty to divest of Japanese status any of their nationals who were to be allowed to continue to reside in any of the United Nations the government of which wished to have such Japanese status removed. One thing which it seems probable should be done is to ensure that registration of Japanese children with Japanese consuls in order to acquire Japanese nationality will not be possible after the war. This whole question will probably be considered by our commission here and I have no doubt that they will make recommendations concerning it.

A problem related to this is as to the position of persons of Japanese race who are not Japanese nationals and whom it is felt should be deported after the war. It will probably be necessary to have some provision in the Peace Treaty requiring the Japanese Government to give national status to such persons and allow them to enter Japan on a basis of non-discrimination. You might wish to raise this point for consideration by Dickover.

With regard to the second problem you have mentioned as to discriminatory treatment by the Provinces, this is one problem that will probably have to be met here through a conference with the provincial authorities. Under the British North America Act the provinces could, for example, make it impossible for Japanese persons to acquire land. This would render extremely difficult the federal policy of resettlement. In addition to the question of land, the provinces could raise barriers through their control over civil rights. Here again it will be a question for consultation and agreement, since the Federal Government does not possess any power through which it could ensure that the provinces would not discriminate.

There are several other questions which it might be useful for you to discuss. One of these is the policy with regard to Japanese persons who express voluntarily a desire to return to Japan. The inclination here is to give every assistance to such voluntary declarants. The Government may make an announcement in the near future asking all Japanese who so wish to move to give indication in writing of their desire to do so. The announcement may state that such persons will be allowed to liquidate all their immoveable property, and take all funds and generous amounts of moveables with them. It may be decided to grant re-establishment allowances to needy cases in deserving circumstances. All this would be intended as an inducement toward voluntary expatriation. No final decisions have been taken and an indication of United States views would be useful.

Another problem which the Government has to consider is a manner of preventing a post-war re-concentration of Japanese in British Columbia. Everything possible is being done to encourage a settlement east of the Rockies during the war. At present Japanese persons cannot buy land, but consideration is being given to the possibility of relaxing this prohibition in order to encourage Japanese to settle in the new localities on a permanent basis. Just exactly how control will be exercised after the war to ensure that there is no wholesale movement back to British Columbia is a difficult problem, but it may be that the Japanese will not be as anxious to move as some people think, since they will be aware that the atmosphere in British Columbia will be more unfriendly toward them than elsewhere. I am not sure what the United States policy is with regard to land purchase and re-concentration problems.

I think the above are the principal points under examination here. Any information you can get will be useful.

Ottawa, November 4, 1944

Attached is a draft recommendation to Council to provide for the establishment of the commission to investigate Japanese persons in Canada.† It has been considered by the Departments of External Affairs, Labour, Justice, Mines and Resources (Immigration Branch), Secretary of State and by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and it is thought that it would be a satisfactory basis for the commission.

At the instance of the Minister of Justice, no section on remuneration or expenses for the commissioners has been included. He thought it would be better for this to be handled in a separate Order in Council since special provisions with regard to remuneration may be needed if judicial personnel are to be included in the commission.

The personnel of the commission will have to be chosen with a good deal of care, since their qualifications and sympathies will be subject to close scrutiny, and also because of the responsibility they will have to assume in the recommendations they make. Suggestions for membership have been received from a number of sources. As they may be helpful to you, I am listing them as follows:

Major-General W. W. Foster—at present Special Commissioner in the Northwest.

Lt.-Col. C. H. Hill, M.C.—Formerly Assistant Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. and O.C.<sup>26</sup> of R.C.M.P. in Vancouver, now retired. He is a veteran of the last war, and was A.P.M.<sup>27</sup> of the Canadian Corps in the present war. He is now acting as liaison officer between the Commissioner of Japanese Placement and the R.C.M.P. in Slokan, B.C., where the largest Japanese settlements are.

Mr. Justice Fairweather—of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. There is not a great volume of litigation there, and he might be available. I understand that he is an active and clearheaded judge.

Judge McPhee—of the District Court of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan.

Chief Justice Campbell—of Prince Edward Island.

Lt. Col. R. S. W. Fordham—at present Director of Prisoners of War Labour Projects in the Department of Labour. He was wounded in the last war; practised law at Niagara Falls; was made Commandant of one of the Internment Camps at the outbreak of the present war, and later was in charge of Refugee Camps.

Capt. R. L. Haig-Brown—He was Stipendiary Magistrate and Judge of the Juvenile Court at Campbell River, B.C., before the war. He is now a member of the Directorate of Personnel Services, Canadian Army (Active), was loaned to the R.C.M.P. for four months, and is highly recommended by Commissioner Wood.

Deputy Commissioner John Shirras—of the British Columbia Provincial Police. He has been concerned with the handling of the Japanese from the beginning, and is on the Advisory Committee to the Minister of Labour in dealing with them at present.

Dr. Lyall Hodgins—suggested by Mr. J. E. Jenkins of Vancouver who also recommended Shirras.

Mr. F. C. Blair—formerly Director of Immigration, now retired.

One portion of the recommendation which has lately been introduced and which has not been placed before the other Departments, with the exception of the Department of Labour, is that which excludes from further examination Japanese persons who have declared their desire to move to Japan and makes such declarations of purpose final. I think that this alteration should be made. The result will be to reduce the number of cases that have to be considered and to make readily effective a voluntary reduction in the Japanese population of this country. It seems a fair and reasonable step, and also one that will meet a number of critical enquiries that have been made.

I am informed by Collins, the Commissioner of Japanese Placement, that the R.C.M.P. have record of 3,275 Japanese persons who have declared their desire to go to Japan. He is of the opinion that a great many more, perhaps as high as 10,000, would make similar declarations if they were encouraged to do so by the publication of definite and generous terms on the basis of which they would be assisted to leave Canada. If these declarations could be secured at an early date the work of the Commission would be simplified and we would be on the way to achieving a desirable reduction of the Japanese population. The best way to approach this might be along the following lines.

When the commission is established it would be desirable to have a statement released to the press which will help to remove some of the doubts now felt as to the feasibility of the task to be undertaken. The release could point out that there is more information available concerning persons of Japanese race in Canada than there is about any other section of the population. Part of this was secured at the registration of all Japanese persons early in the war. Later further particulars were secured when individuals were removed from the Protected Area, located in the interior camps or dispersed to places of employment in other Provinces. Further evidence is available in declarations of desire to serve in the Canadian forces, declarations of loyalty, conduct at various times, and so forth. It could be made clear that the commission has a difficult task, but has a good prospect of carrying it out with success. In addition, the press release could contain a statement of policy as to voluntary removal of Japanese. This should be published in the various Japanese settlements, and might be in the following terms:

“Any persons of Japanese race in Canada who may wish to proceed to Japan for residence after the war will be assisted to do so. In order that persons who have this possibility in mind may be in a position to reach a decision, the Government has decided on measures of assistance, to be implemented whenever transportation conditions make it feasible.

Japanese persons who voluntarily indicate a desire to move to Japan for residence will be given free transportation there for all members of their families, and will be allowed to take with them generous amounts of personal property and effects. They will also be allowed to sell such property as they are unable or do not wish to take; and will be free to take the proceeds with them, together with all other funds standing to their credit in Canada. In deserving cases certain resettlement grants may be given to assist persons or families in necessitous circumstances. Any persons who are British subjects or Canadian nationals will be divested of their status as such before leaving Canada.

All Japanese persons who wish to move to Japan for residence after the war should notify the Commissioner of Japanese Placement, or his local representative, in writing, as soon as possible. In the case of Japanese persons who are not in settlements, the notification may be given at any office of the R.C.M.P. in Canada.

It must be emphasized that the above terms apply to persons making voluntary declaration of desire to go to Japan. No decision has yet been reached as to the terms that will be made available to Japanese persons whose deportation is recommended by the Commission which will begin operation in the near future. Terms for such persons will probably be the subject of consideration and recommendation by the Commission itself.”

As soon as the Commission is appointed, I think it will be desirable for it to meet with representatives of the Departments here in order to formulate plans for procedure and also to arrive at some tentative understanding as to the basis of decision and judgement having regard to the evidence available. It should be possible to have the enquiry under way shortly after the appointments are made.

One further point you may wish to consider is a suggestion by the Minister of Labour that it might be preferable to have the Commission report to him rather than to Council. I doubt if this would be desirable, since so many other Departments are closely interested, but you may wish to examine the proposal.

On November 4th I sent to you a memorandum on the Commission to investigate Japanese persons in Canada, together with a draft Recommendation to Council,† which would establish and define the terms of reference of the Commission. I think you were of the view that action should be taken on this matter at an early date, and a development in United States policy with regard to the Japanese which was announced on Sunday makes this especially important.

General Pratt, Commander of the United States West Coast Area, announced on Sunday that the ban on Japanese returning to the West Coast is being lifted "because existing military necessity does not justify control over American citizens who have been determined not to be potentially dangerous." He stated that the return would be controlled and, in any case, officials of the War Relocation Authority have estimated that possibly not more than ten percent of the evacuated Japanese will wish to return to the Coast in view of the antipathy there is toward them on the part of many people and organizations in that area. General Pratt stated that no evacuees will be allowed to return until they have been "screened thoroughly" by a panel of about thirty officers, who will visit all W.R.A. centres, examine records and talk with the evacuees. He estimated that by January 2nd an exclusion list would have been established and that after that date all other Japanese persons would "resume their normal duties as citizens of the United States." He stated that "the information now available has led to the conclusion that the great majority of Japanese have severed all connections with Japan and are prepared to assume the responsibilities of their situation as Americans." For purposes of resettlement, Japanese persons receive transportation to their places of destination, plus $25.00 cash. Those returning to the Coast will be similarly treated.

The general screening procedure now under way in the United States seems to be similar to, though less formal than, that contemplated here through the Commission. There have been organizations in the United States, just as there have been here, that have attempted to have a policy of total exclusion applied after the war, but the United States authorities are proceeding on the assumption that the elimination of those proven disloyal will be sufficient to enable a general settlement of the remainder.

By coincidence, the United States Supreme Court handed down a decision on Monday (December 18th) on the same general subject of Japanese. Deciding a case before them, they ruled unanimously that Japanese-Americans of unquestioned loyalty to the United States could not be detained in war relocation centres. The judgment stated that "Loyalty is a matter of the heart and mind, not of race, creed, or colour."

Secretary Ickes,<sup>28</sup> under whom the W.R.A. comes, has announced that they hope to have all W.R.A. centres closed within a year. At present, out of 110,000 evacuees, 35,000 have been relocated in other parts of the United States.

18,700 Japanese are at present held in a special camp in the United States as disloyal or having expressed a desire to return to Japan. This camp is expected to be transferred to the Department of Justice. No indication is given of plans for deportation or other disposition.

The Minister of Labour is anxious to proceed with further disposition of the Japanese problem here and, under date of December 15th, he wrote to Mr. Heeney, enclosing a memorandum† asking approval by Council on the following points:

- (a) continuation by External Affairs of attempts to negotiate exchanges of nationals with Japan;
- (b) authorization to the Minister of Labour to give assurances to persons of Japanese race making voluntary application for repatriation to Japan that they will be allowed to take the value of their property with them;
- (c) authorization for the Custodian to give receipts for property left in Canada to Japanese repatriated as a result of exchanges negotiated during the war;
- (d) authorization for the Minister of Labour to segregate Japanese who are to be repatriated from those who are to remain here;
- (e) approval in principle of the transfer of authority over land purchases by Japanese from the Minister of Justice to the Minister of Labour; and
- (f) authorization for the Minister of Labour to give assurances to Provincial Governments of Federal responsibility for indigence of Japanese moved into any Province, the assurance to cover a period of ten years.

Secretary of the Interior of the United States.

A suggestion for a Government statement on point (b) was included in my memorandum to you of November 4th. The approval sought here would be compatible with it. Points (e) and (f) are desirable, I think, if the resettlement policy is to succeed. Points (a), (c) and (d) are largely administrative and I think there is no objection to them.

I have told Mr. Heeney that I think it would be desirable to have the Minister of Labour's memorandum held up until you are ready to proceed with the Recommendation covering the Commission, but the United States action has made the Department of Labour especially anxious to proceed and they would clearly like to have their recommendations considered as soon as possible, whether the Commission is delayed or not.

REPATRIATION AND RE-SETTLEMENT OF

6. THE MINISTER OF LABOUR said that his department were anxious to obtain authority to take certain administrative action in advance of the appointment of the Commission which would deal finally with the segregation of persons in Canada of Japanese race.

It was felt that, in present circumstances, steps could profitably be taken to segregate those who would accept voluntary repatriation to Japan and, at the same time, to encourage and facilitate the re-settlement of loyal Japanese.

With this in view, a memorandum describing the policies proposed had been prepared by the Department of Labour after consultation with External Affairs, the R.C.M. Police and the Department of Justice. If these policies were approved the department would be able to proceed at once with administrative action along the lines indicated.

(Letters, Deputy Minister to the Secretary, Dec. 15, 1944 and Minister to the Secretary, Jan. 17, 1945).

7. THE PRIME MINISTER said that the desirability of early action along the lines suggested by the Minister had been drawn to his attention by the Under-

Secretary of State for External Affairs in relation to the appointment of the proposed Commission.

8. THE SECRETARY read the memorandum referred to by the Minister of Labour.

The memorandum requested the approval of the government on the following points:

(a) continuation by External Affairs of attempts to negotiate exchanges of nationals with Japan;

(b) authorization of the Minister of Labour to give assurances to persons of Japanese race making voluntary application for repatriation to Japan that they will be allowed to take the value of their property with them;

(c) authorization for the Custodian to give receipts for property left in Canada to Japanese repatriated as a result of exchanges negotiated during the war;

(d) authorization for the Minister of Labour to segregate Japanese who are to be repatriated from those who are to remain here;

(e) consideration of the desirability of transferring authority over land purchases by Japanese from the Minister of Justice to the Minister of Labour; and

(f) authorization for the Minister of Labour to give assurances to Provincial governments of Federal responsibility for the costs of maintenance and medical care of indigent Japanese moved into the Provinces, such assurances to cover a period of ten years.

9. MR. KING, commenting upon the memorandum, observed that reservation should be made of the government's recourse against Japan for reimbursement of any expenditures involved in repatriation of Canadian Japanese.

As to the proposal for transfer of licensing authority for holding property, etc., this was a matter for consideration by the Minister of Justice.

10. THE CABINET, after discussion, approved the memorandum submitted by the Minister of Labour on the understanding that appropriate reservation be made of Canadian rights to reimbursement by Japan of any repatriation expenses, and agreed that, for the present, appointment of the proposed Commission be deferred.

DESPATCH 199

Ottawa, February 12, 1945

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to previous correspondence concerning the treatment of persons of Japanese race in Canada and in the United States and to inform you that Cabinet has now given approval to certain further measures to be taken in connection with re-settlement of the Japanese and in preparation for the post-war movement to Japan of such Japanese as will not remain permanently in this country.

As you know, plans have been under consideration for some time for the appointment of a commission to investigate persons of Japanese race in this country with a view to deciding which should be allowed to remain here after the war and which should be required to be sent to Japan. For your confidential information, it has been decided to defer appointment of the commission for the present. In the interim, however, there are certain measures that can be taken that will prepare the way for the commission and facilitate or reduce its work when it does come into operation. Some of these measures will be put into effect as a result of the Cabinet decisions.

Cabinet approved the continuance of efforts to negotiate with the Japanese Government exchanges of nationals. It also approved action by the Department of Labour to segregate persons of Japanese race who have been accepted for repatriation to Japan in such exchanges, or who have indicated a desire to go to Japan after the war. Such segregation on a voluntary basis will reduce the number of cases that will have to be considered by the commission, since it is probable that its terms of reference will provide that voluntary applications for repatriation to Japan will be considered to be final and only those Japanese persons who have indicated a desire to remain in Canada, or who have not given any definite indication of any desire, will be subject to examination.

To encourage voluntary applications to go to Japan and also to enable persons of Japanese race to know on what basis they will be allowed to go there, the Minister of Labour has been authorized to give assurance to voluntary applicants that they can take with them any proceeds realized from their property in Canada. In the case of those who are transferred during the war, receipts will be given for the value of their property and they will be allowed to make the actual transfer after the war. The Minister is also authorized to state that free passage will be guaranteed by the Canadian Government for repatriated persons.

To assist in the re-settlement of the Japanese persons who will be remaining in this country, the Minister of Labour has been authorized to give assurances to provincial governments that the Government of Canada will be prepared to reimburse any province or municipality for the cost of necessary maintenance, hospitalization or medical services furnished to indigent persons of the Japanese race who have been re-settled since the outbreak of war from protected areas in British Columbia. The assurances are not to extend beyond ten years from January 1, 1945. Further consideration may also be given shortly to the desirability of relaxing somewhat the present ban on acquisition of real property by persons of Japanese race. The capacity so to acquire real property is closely related to the problem of assuring that the Japanese will not drift back after the war to British Columbia to renew the pre-war concentration there.

Since the United States authorities are concerned with the same sort of problem there that we have here, they might wish to be informed on a confidential basis of the decisions that have now been taken as outlined above with regard to voluntary repatriation and re-settlement.

We have been interested here to note the steps that have been taken by the United States authorities, particularly in allowing Japanese Americans to return to the Pacific Coast area. It would be very helpful if we could receive such information as you may be able to secure about the success of the present United States program and about their plans for future disposition of the problem.

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 852 of March 31 under cover of which you forwarded a copy of the letter by Mr. Gufler<sup>31</sup> under date of March 30,† concerning the United States policy with regard to Japanese persons. The letter contains a great deal of information that is most interesting and we are very glad to have it. Copies are being sent on to the Director of Immigration, the Under-Secretary of State (who will be interested in the provisions with regard to divestment of United States citizenship) and the Deputy Minister of Labour, who has charge of general administration with regard to Japanese persons in this country. It would be very helpful if three or four additional copies could be secured to the enclosures which were sent with Mr. Gufler's letter.

I was interested to note that although there are differences in the policies being followed in the United States and Canada, the proportion of re-settlement that has been achieved there among the Japanese removed from the protected areas is approximately the same - one-third in each case. About 7,500 Japanese in Canada out of a total of some 23,000 who were previously settled in British Columbia are now located elsewhere in the country.

I do not think that there are any particular points that need to be discussed at this stage with the officials of the War Relocation Authority. When further steps are taken with regard to the Canadian policy, we shall inform you and possibly then there will be questions that it might be well to have examined with the United States authorities.

MEMORANDUM ON PROGRAMME FOR REPATRIATION AND RELOCATION OF PERSONS OF JAPANESE RACE IN CANADA

A. Introduction

In view of the sudden end of the war with Japan, it is necessary that immediate decisions on future policy re persons of Japanese race in Canada be made and given effect to by the Government.

While returns from the survey made of the Japanese in Canada who are recording declarations of intention to repatriate to Japan are not complete, a total of nine to ten thousand persons (including in the count their dependents under sixteen years of age) have so signified. While this group are mainly Japanese nationals with dependent Canadian-born children, there are included therein a considerable number of naturalized Japanese Canadians and Canadian-born persons over sixteen years of age. A limited number of these persons have since signified their desire to revoke or withdraw their declaration for repatriation. Probably many more may do likewise subsequently if they believe such revocation will be effective.

It is important that repatriation of persons to be returned to Japan should be proceeded with as soon as possible: firstly because the disposition of this group will, it is believed, enable the Government to undertake thereafter the early removal of restrictions on the remaining Japanese in this country who will be chiefly Canadians by birth or naturalization with substantial public support for so doing; secondly because the existing leases which the Department of Labour holds on the settlement properties in British Columbia, where ten or eleven thousand Japanese are presently housed, expire six months after the end of the war and it is therefore necessary to dispose of the great majority of the people in these settlements before that time if possible.

B. Policy for Repatriation of Japanese Who Have Signed for Repatriation

The following measures are proposed for repatriation or deportation of persons of Japanese race to Japan who have signed declarations for repatriation:

(1) All declarations made by Japanese nationals and naturalized Canadian Japanese for repatriation to Japan to be treated as final and as including dependent children, up to at least sixteen years of age, of the declarant father—or mother if father deceased.

(2) Where Canadian-born Japanese have declared for repatriation but have filed within a specified time limit (possibly the date of the Japanese surrender in August 1945) applications for revocation of their declarations for repatriation, such applications may be reviewed by the Loyalty Commission. The Commission, in making its inquiry, may recommend that withdrawal of the declaration for repatriation be permitted or may recommend to the contrary and for the consequent repatriation of the applicant to Japan on the grounds of disloyalty to Canada during the war. If application for revocation not filed within the specified time limit, the declaration for repatriation to be regarded as final and irrevocable.

(3) Persons who have declared for repatriation shall be liable for deportation and an order for deportation may be made, if necessary, by the responsible Minister.

(4) Repatriation or deportation to Japan of persons who have applied for repatriation to be undertaken under the direction of the Minister of Labour with the assistance of the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at the earliest possible date with the objective of completing such repatriation from Canada by December first.

(5) To this end the Minister of Labour to be given necessary authority by Order-in-Council under the War Measures Act to proceed with repatriation or deportation, if necessary, and the Department of External Affairs to undertake immediately the completion of arrangements with the Japanese Government to accept repatriates and deportees of Japanese race from Canada.

(6) To the same end the Departments of Government responsible for allocation of shipping—and including naval services—to be asked to arrange for high priority for necessary shipping space prior to repatriation and services of personnel of the Department of National Defence to be available if necessary for transport duty and, to the same end, the Immigration Department to be asked to give assistance.

(7) Financial Provision for Repatriates

Repatriates and deportees to be given free transportation for themselves and their effects and permitted to transfer their funds to Japan by arrangements to be made by the Foreign Exchange Control Board and the Custodian of Enemy Property.

(8) The Custodian of Enemy Property to be authorized to hold funds and issue receipts therefor pending transfer and, at the request of the repatriate, to take over any real property of these repatriated persons in instances where such funds or property cannot be immediately transferred or realized on—as the case may be—upon or prior to repatriation, and to arrange for transfer of such funds to the repatriates as soon as possible.

(9) Persons repatriated or deported upon their own declaration—or as part of a general group—as distinguished from persons deported for cause, to be provided with a maintenance grant upon repatriation of Two Hundred Dollars each plus Fifty Dollars for dependent children which will be charged against their own funds for transfer in this country insofar as these extend.

(10) Deportation of Japanese Nationals

All Japanese nationals who are not otherwise subject to deportation by reason of having declared for repatriation to be subject to deportation and to be deported unless, upon the application of any national made within a prescribed time, the Loyalty Commission recommend that he be permitted to stay in Canada upon compassionate grounds.

(11) Japanese veterans of the last War and this War

All restrictions relative to movement and property purchase to be removed in the case of veterans of the last war and this war and their dependents.

(12) Establishment of Loyalty Commission

A Loyalty Commission to be established at once to review

(a) Applications by Canadian-born persons of Japanese race who apply to revoke declarations previously made by them for repatriation to Japan and cases of alleged disloyalty as, for example, interned men and to have power of final decision to recommend for deportation to Japan.

(b) Cases of Canadian-born persons of Japanese race, other than internees, whose record indicated a disloyal attitude to Canada during the war. The Commission may recommend deportation and loss of citizenship.

(c) Cases of naturalized Canadians of Japanese race who have not applied to go to Japan but whose records indicate a disloyal attitude to Canada during the war. The Commission to have the power of final decision in recommending revocation of naturalization and deportation of such persons.

(d) Cases of all Japanese nationals who have not applied for repatriation and who apply to stay in Canada. The Commission to have power to recommend that any such person may stay in Canada on compassionate grounds.

In view of the fact that some four hundred and twenty Japanese, including Japanese nationals, naturalized Canadians and Canadian-born Japanese, are being retained in internment at the present time under P.C. 5637 of August 16, 1945, it is necessary that the Loyalty Commission should be established at an early date in order to initiate early consideration of these persons with a view either to deportation or release.

(13) Revocation of Canadian Citizenship Rights

Provision to be made by Order-in-Council under the War Measures Act to divest Canadian citizens, either by birth or naturalization, of Japanese race of their British citizenship rights in Canada and their Canadian national status upon either repatriation or deportation in those instances in which this is not already provided for in Order-in-Council P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942. This could be framed in form similar to P.C. 10773 as being applicable to repatriates or deportees to countries which have been at war with Canada rather than as limited only to persons of Japanese race.

Comments

(1) The policy proposals outlined above which may be considered as open to debate are:

(a) Should a naturalized Canadian who wants to revoke his declaration for repatriation be denied right of review by the Loyalty Commission as is proposed?

(b) Should a Canadian-born Japanese be deprived of Canadian citizenship and sent to Japan except upon his own request for repatriation, even if guilty of disloyal acts and interned during the war, as is proposed?

(c) Should Japanese nationals as a group and subject to exceptions on compassionate grounds, be deported against their own election to stay in Canada as proposed rather than limiting deportation to those who have shown cause for deportation on grounds of disloyal attitude, lack of co-operation with Government authorities during the war, or as otherwise undesirable?

(2) The Loyalty Commission when established, if the proposals outlined above are approved, will have a large volume of cases to dispose of as follows:

(a) Cases of interned Japanese and other cases of alleged disloyalty of naturalized or Canadian-born persons.

(b) All applications for revocation of declarations for repatriation by Canadian-born Japanese—not possible to estimate as to number.

(c) Applications to stay in Canada by Japanese nationals who have not applied for repatriation but who are liable for deportation. Assuming that they all applied, this would involve from 2400-3000 applications to dispose of.

Except in the case of the internees, the evidence available to the Commission inquiring into disloyalty of Canadian-born Japanese or naturalized persons will be largely limited to (1) a paper record built up from intercepted letters, unless acts of non co-operation with the police or the Department of Labour administrative officers re employment or controls orders are regarded as such, (2) declarations for repatriation to Japan even though subsequently revoked.

This would apply also in the case of Japanese nationals if deportation is to be limited to cases where cause is shown.

Legal Machinery Necessary to Carry out the Foregoing

1. An Order-in-Council under the War Measures Act providing (1) that all declarations made for repatriation are deemed final and irrevocable subject to right of review by Loyalty Commission in certain types of cases; (2) providing that persons declaring for repatriation are liable to deportation and giving necessary powers for deportation and prohibiting later entry to Canada except with the consent of the Immigration authorities.

2. An Order-in-Council under the War Measures Act to supplement P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942, in providing for revocation of citizenship rights in Canada of naturalized Canadians or Canadian-born persons of Japanese race who are ordered deported; (3) providing for transfer of funds and payment of grant.

3. An Order-in-Council establishing Loyalty Commission, defining its duties and clothing it with authority to make final recommendations as to deportation of persons of Japanese race in specified classes and revocation of citizenship rights of such persons.

4. Order-in-Council No. 1 above will also include provision for deportation of all Japanese nationals who are not being repatriated at their own request unless recommendation to the contrary is made by the Loyalty Commission.

The Legal Position

Assuming that the foregoing policy proposals are approved, the Department of Justice should be asked to consider whether they may be legally implemented under the War Measures Act. The proposals requiring particular examination are those for the deportation and coincident revocation of British citizenship and Canadian national rights of Canadian-born persons of Japanese race.

C. Future Policy Covering Re-establishment of Persons of Japanese Race Remaining in Canada

Assuming that repatriation of Japanese to Japan is carried through on the scale now contemplated, the great majority of persons of Japanese race remaining in Canada will be Canadian citizens by birth or naturalization. It seems obvious that the existing wartime restrictions over movement and purchase of property as applicable to this group cannot be maintained for long in the face of public opinion and without the raising of considerable legal objections thereto nor without the necessity of fairly extensive legal enforcement proceedings. The removal of Selective Service controls, which have to date assisted greatly in the control over the movement of Japanese without the necessity of relying on the special Japanese regulations, will of course make it necessary to rely in the near future entirely on the special Japanese controls and will probably increase the difficulties of enforcement. Moreover, in the repeal of the Defence of Canada Regulations relating to protected areas, a Government decision will have to be made with respect to returning Japanese to the West Coast and the enforcement of any restrictive policy will have to be carried out under special orders issued relating to the Japanese. It is recommended that the Minister of Labour be given authority to prohibit or limit movement to any area.

As redistribution of Japanese on a permanent basis can only be carried through if the Japanese are permitted to purchase property and to go into business in the areas where they are presently located, it is important that the existing restrictions on property purchase and leases should be relaxed as soon as possible.

The foregoing considerations make necessary early action on the part of the Dominion Government to dispose of the existing restrictive agreements with the provinces relating to the settlement of Japanese therein and the agreement of the provinces to co-operate in the permanent relocation of Japanese remaining in this country.

The following proposals are therefore advanced for consideration

(1) Rather than attempt initially to deal with the provinces individually, the Government to make a statement at an early date outlining the repatriation programme and advising that, while the Government proposes to retain for a reasonable time adequate controls over the movement of Japanese persons in Canada to prevent an unreasonable number of Japanese from settling in any one community and to implement the declared Government policy of relocation across Canada, it looks forward to removing other restrictions and discriminatory legislation at an early date. To enable the Government to carry out the policy, the provinces are invited to co-operate with the Dominion Government by the revocation of any existing restrictive agreements entered into during the war period and by agreeing to accept reasonable numbers of Japanese without discrimination in matters of education or business activities. The Dominion Government will retain movement controls temporarily with a view to avoiding undue concentration of Japanese in any area.

(2) The Government statement to include, also, an undertaking on the part of the Dominion to reimburse the provinces for cash expenditures made for maintenance and welfare (including medical services and old age pensions) made by the province over the next ten-year period.

(3) It is not considered that the Dominion Government could agree to any proposals for redistribution on a provincial quota basis as this would be impractical in the matter of resettlement and could not be enforced.

(4) Following upon such statement, letter to go from the Prime Minister to each Provincial Premier inviting acceptance of and co-operation in implementing Government policy as so stated or the matter to be discussed at the November meeting of the Co-ordinating Committee of the Dominion-Provincial Conference.

(5) An attitude on the part of the British Columbia Government refusing acceptance of any evacuated persons of the Japanese race will probably result in a similar attitude being taken by Alberta and possibly some other interested provinces.

REPATRIATION AND RE-LOCATION OF
PERSONS OF JAPANESE RACE

13. THE SECRETARY submitted a report from the Department of Labour setting out a proposed programme for repatriation and re-location in Canada of persons of Japanese race.

The report contained recommendations concerning financial provision for repatriation, deportation of Japanese nationals, treatment of Japanese war veterans, establishment of a special 'loyalty' commission of review, and policy with respect to redistribution of Japanese in Canada.

Copies of the report had been circulated.

(Departmental memorandum, undated—Cabinet Document No. 47).

14. THE CABINET, after discussion, agreed that the proposals of the Department of Labour be referred for consideration and report to a special committee consisting of the Minister of Labour (Chairman), the Ministers of National Defence and Veterans Affairs and the Solicitor General, with the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Ottawa, September 17, 1945

SECRET. Please ask United States authorities to transmit the following message by the most appropriate channel from Canadian Government to General MacArthur as Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers. Begins:

There are approximately 24,000 people of Japanese origin now resident in Canada. About 10,000 (including dependents) have expressed a desire to be repatriated to Japan. There are also about 500 Japanese nationals now interned whom it will probably be desired to deport. At a later date it is probable that there will be some additional deportees and voluntary repatriates who will also have to be removed. The Canadian Government is anxious to proceed with repatriation and deportation as soon as this can be done without causing you embarrassment. It is difficult to proceed with redistribution and relaxation of control over Japanese remaining in Canada until repatriates and deportees are removed.

It is proposed that repatriates and deportees from Canada should be given free transportation for themselves and their effects and provided with a maintenance grant upon repatriation sufficient to take care of their immediate needs, also that they be permitted to transfer remainder of their funds to Japan.

You will appreciate the desire of the Canadian Government to proceed with these plans as soon as possible. The Canadian Government would be grateful for your advice as to the earliest date on which you would be prepared to have these people arrive in Japan. Ends.

For your own information the whole difficult subject of repatriation and relocation of persons of Japanese race is under consideration by a special Cabinet Committee. It would obviously simplify the problem if we were able to proceed immediately to return to Japan the elements referred to in the above message and we would be obliged if you would let us know what action is contemplated by U.S. authorities in this connection. It occurs to us that if the United States have it in mind to repatriate any considerable numbers of disloyal Japanese simultaneous arrangements might be made which might expedite and simplify the problems involved.

SECRET. Your EX-3366, September 17th, repatriation of Japanese from Canada.

1. A note was sent today to the State Department requesting them to forward to General MacArthur the message contained in your teletype under reference.

2. I discussed this matter informally with Mr. Clattenburg of the State Department, who informed me that they have recently sent a telegram to the American Consul General in Manila asking him to discuss informally with General MacArthur the repatriation of persons of Japanese origin from the United States to Japan. No reply has yet been received from Manila. The State Department today sent a letter to the War Department outlining the problem and asking the War Department to take up the question with General MacArthur.

3. The State Department is very anxious to arrange for the early return to Japan of fifteen to twenty thousand Japanese now in the United States. They fear, however, that, even if they secure the approval of the military authorities in Japan, there will be considerable delay in carrying out the programme. The difficulty is caused by the fact that very many applications are being received from Japanese to cancel their previous applications for repatriation. Such letters of retraction are now being received at the rate of from 300 to 500 daily. The State Department would prefer to ignore these applications for cancellation, but they are waiting for a ruling from the Department of Justice. Mr. Clattenburg thinks it highly likely that the Department of Justice will rule that every individual Japanese slated for deportation has a right to recourse to law. If this happens, it will obviously delay the completion of the repatriation programme to a considerable extent.

4. The State Department would be very grateful to be informed what policy the Canadian Government proposes to take in respect to those Japanese in Canada who have signed applications or consent forms for repatriation to Japan and have since asked to have such applications cancelled. The State Department would also appreciate any information available concerning the organization and terms of reference of the proposed Loyalty Tribunal in Canada.

PERSONS OF JAPANESE RACE

5. THE SECRETARY submitted the report of the special Committee appointed by the Cabinet at the meeting of September 5th to consider proposals put forward by the Department of Labour (Cabinet Document 47).

The Cabinet Committee recommended to the Cabinet as follows:

“(1) that the Department of External Affairs communicate immediately with the Supreme Allied Commander in Japan (General MacArthur), through the appropriate channel, stating that the government wished to repatriate, as soon as possible, some 10,000 Japanese and enquiring how soon conditions would be such that this movement could be made;

(2) that, upon receipt of information from the Supreme Allied Commander in reply to the telegram mentioned above, immediate steps be taken to effect the repatriation of:

(a) all persons of Japanese race who had requested repatriation, with the exception of Canadian citizens who had made application for revocation of their request for repatriation prior to midnight, September 1st, 1945; and

(b) all persons of Japanese race who were interned under the Defence of Canada Regulations;

(3) that immediate action be taken to revoke the status as Canadian citizens and British subjects of all persons of Japanese race who would be repatriated under the procedure recommended in the preceding paragraph;

(4) that the proposals for financial provision for repatriates set out in paragraphs (7), (8) and (9) of the memorandum submitted by the Department of Labour be approved; and

(5) that the remaining questions dealt with in the said memorandum, including proposals for the establishment and procedure of a "Loyalty Commission" and re-location of Japanese in Canada be deferred for further consideration."

The recommendations of the Cabinet Committee had been circulated.

(Secretary's memorandum, Sept. 18—Cabinet Document 65).

6. MR. HEENEY added that, with the approval of the Prime Minister, a communication in the sense indicated in paragraph (1) of the report had already been sent to General MacArthur, and Mr. King had now indicated his concurrence in the other recommendations of the Cabinet Committee.

7. THE CABINET, after discussion, approved the recommendations of the special Cabinet Committee and agreed that action be taken accordingly.

1. With particular reference to your paragraph 4, position is as follows:

(a) Japanese nationals who have not been interned and who have requested cancellation of their applications for repatriation will be repatriated notwithstanding their change of mind;

(b) Canadian citizens of Japanese race who have similarly requested cancellation of their applications for repatriation will be repatriated unless request for cancellation was received before September 1st;

(c) All persons of Japanese race who were interned, whether Canadian citizens or not, will be deported regardless of whether or not they have opted to remain in Canada.

2. The Canadian government also proposes to take action to revoke the status as Canadian citizens and British subjects of all persons of Japanese race subject to repatriation under above procedure.

3. No decision has yet been made regarding the establishment and terms of reference of a loyalty commission and it may be some time yet before this matter is advanced further.

4. There is no objection to your informing the State Department, confidentially, of the situation as described in the three preceding paragraphs. For your own guidance we should point out that it is unlikely that government policy will be settled for some [little time] on the more controversial issues. These include the scope of the duties of the proposed loyalty commission, the rights of Canadian citizens of Japanese origin not covered by the repatriation decisions, and the steps to be taken for location of remaining persons of Japanese race in this country.

CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Mr. Pearson,

With reference to your message WA-5323 of October 15th† and earlier correspondence concerning the movement to Japan of certain persons of Japanese race now in Canada, the Deputy Minister of Labour has today expressed to me his concern over the failure to make progress in arranging for the commencement of this movement. He asked me whether there was any other method whereby we could stimulate the receipt of an answer to the request which we have already addressed through you to the Supreme Allied Commander. You passed this to the State Department in your note No. 323 of September 18th,† but the only direct indication of General MacArthur's views that we have received is that given in your message WA-5005 of September 27th, which referred solely to shipping requirements for replacements for personnel serving in the Pacific theatre as having the first priority in any movement of persons to Japan.

In later messages† you have informed us that the State Department have not been able to secure any reply from General MacArthur about arrangements for moving persons of Japanese race from the United States, and you have mentioned that they are particularly interested in repatriating Japanese diplomats and officials captured in Europe.

The position here is that we can begin the movement of the persons concerned on short notice, and we are ready to do so at any time. If shipping is the obstacle rather than arrangements for reception in Japan and related problems, we should be glad to be informed, since we might be able to arrange for the transportation of a portion of the group in Canada on Canadian ships, possibly on R.C.N. vessels. It is felt here that our arrangements may be in a more advanced stage than those in the United States, since we have a fairly large group about whose repatriation there is no question, the members of which could be moved to the port of departure on short notice. It is felt that the problem is likely to become more difficult to deal with the longer their movement is delayed, and that if a prompt start can be made we shall go a long way towards settling an old and bitter cause of controversy in Canada.

For your information, I should add that the Government is receiving a large number of appeals on behalf, particularly, of persons of Japanese origin who possess Canadian nationality and requested their movement to Japan. Some of these have asked for cancellation of their applications to go to Japan, and the pressure on the Government is really limited to making allowance for a change of mind in such cases. Quite apart from them, however, as I have said above, there remains a large group about whose return to Japan there is no question.

I should be glad to receive, as soon as possible, any suggestions which you can offer as to the methods whereby more rapid progress could be made in starting the movement. The channel whereby our request was transmitted to General MacArthur has not produced results, but I am not aware of any alternative channel which would be likely to be more productive. We should like particularly to know whether transportation is the real obstacle, so that we may consider the possibility of making arrangements ourselves.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

Further my WA-5323 of October 15th† and in reply to Mr. Wrong's letter to Mr. Pearson of October 27th respecting repatriation to Japan of persons of Japanese race in Canada. I have been advised this morning by State Department that a reply has been received from General MacArthur.

2. The reply is to the effect that he authorizes the immediate repatriation of some 160 special cases now held in the United States. In addition, repatriation of all Japanese now held in the United States and Canada who desire to return, or whose return is desired by the two Governments, is authorized subject only to provision of shipping.

At a meeting of a Cabinet sub-committee this morning the Japanese problem was discussed. Your teletype was interpreted to mean that the U.S. authorities would be prepared to make available to us a certain amount of space on vessels at their disposal for movement of some persons to Japan. This will be of great assistance, as we have not, at present, any vessels available that could be used for this purpose. In order to have a clear understanding of shipping arrangements, possible allocation of space, and other considerations it was decided to have a representative of the Department of Labour go to Washington, if possible to attend the meeting referred to in your WA-5545 of October 29. Please inform me as soon as possible when this meeting is to be held in order that arrangements can be made.

For your information, other decisions taken this morning were:

(a) To have an order in council passed authorizing the Minister of Labour to provide transportation, maintenance grants, and facilities for departure for all Japanese prepared to leave voluntarily for Japan.

(b) To select the above group and have them ready for departure as soon as transportation is available. It is hoped that it might prove possible to move some within the next two or three weeks.

(c) To appoint a committee from Justice, Labour, External Affairs and State to prepare recommendations to council for revocation of nationality and deportation of persons who are to be sent to Japan other than those coming under (b)(supra).

It will be possible for the Department of Labour representative who is to go to Washington to give some of the information sought in your teletype under reference. The remainder can be prepared as soon as plans are known more definitely.

JAPANESE DEPORTATION POLICY

Your statement of Government policy in the House of Commons in August, 1944,<sup>32</sup> contemplated the deportation to Japan, after the war, of all persons of Japanese racial origin (whether they were Japanese nationals, naturalized Canadians of Japanese birth, or native born Canadians of Japanese racial origin) whose behaviour during the war years could be considered as disloyal. At the same time it was certainly implied that all other persons of Japanese racial origin who had behaved correctly during the war years would be permitted to remain in Canada, where it was hoped that they would be free from any form of political or legal discrimination.

This statement represented a compromise between a very vocal demand for the total expulsion of all persons of Japanese racial origin, regardless of conduct or loyalty, and the less articulate feeling in the country that flagrant racial discrimination was one of the things the war was being fought against.

Since this general statement of Government policy was made, we have had a voluntary poll of all persons of Japanese racial origin in Canada, which resulted in a very large proportion expressing the wish to be repatriated to Japan at the close of the war. Steps are actively under way to effect this repatriation. No problem arises in respect of the Japanese nationals, nor in respect of naturalized persons of Japanese origin who voluntarily expressed a wish for repatriation to an enemy country during the war. Native born Canadians of Japanese race who had opted for repatriation to Japan have been given, by Cabinet decision, the right to withdraw their application to be sent to Japan.

The Loyalty Commission, which it is proposed to set up to complete the work of repatriation, will have a free hand to recommend the deportation of all Japanese nationals and of all naturalized persons of Japanese origin to whose behaviour during the war years exception could be taken. The question, however, on which the Cabinet have been divided is whether or not the Loyalty Commission should be empowered to denationalize and deport native born Canadians of Japanese origin. The policy indicated in August, 1944, was that such persons could be deported. There is much stronger feeling now that native born Canadians, regardless of origin, should not be deported to another country. The question, therefore, is whether the Government stands exactly on the position it outlined eighteen months ago or whether it should modify that position by excluding native born persons from its scope. In your statement of general Government policy in August, 1944, you said "There may also be modifications of policy which further investigation will show to be necessary." The question, therefore, is really whether this is a modification which should be made in the light of conditions now obtaining.

A second question of general policy arising out of the recommendations to Council regarding the repatriation and denationalizing of Japanese Canadians is whether or not decisions in respect of denaturalization and deportation made on grounds of disloyal behaviour during the war should apply only to persons of Japanese origin. I feel strongly that such Orders should, whenever possible, be put in general terms and be applicable to enemy aliens or naturalized Canadians whose sympathies with Naziism and Fascism were revealed during the war years.

As far as I can see, there is no possibility of taking a completely consistent, reasonable and humane line on these matters. We should, however, avoid purely racial discrimination as much as we can without at the same time unduly disturbing other alien elements in the population. I think this might be achieved by

(a) excluding all native born from denationalization and deportation proceedings, other than volunteers; and

(b) confining the scope of the Loyalty Commission's enquiries in respect of other than Japanese Canadians to persons who have been detained during the war under the Defence of Canada Regulations.

1. THE SECRETARY, referring to recent discussions of these questions, submitted a memorandum setting out specific questions upon which policy decisions were required. These related to the scope of the Commission's enquiries and to the position of Canadian-born Japanese.

Alternative draft Orders in Council† were also submitted.

2. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE drew attention to existing provisions of the Immigration and Naturalization Acts with respect to deportation of persons within certain prohibited classes and revocation of naturalization in certain cases. These provisions affected aliens and naturalized British subjects but not persons born in Canada.

If, by Orders in Council under the War Measures Act, Canadian-born Japanese were subject to deportation, to revocation of their British and Canadian status and to examination by the Loyalty Commission, the government would be going beyond existing legislation in very important particulars. On the other hand, if the proposed Orders were confined to Japanese nationals and naturalized Japanese, there would be no departure from the principles of the present law. If it were decided later to take any similar action with respect to the Canadian-born, legislation for the purpose could be introduced into Parliament.

3. THE CABINET, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that, for the present, the scope of the enquiries of the proposed Loyalty Commission should extend only to persons of Japanese nationality and naturalized Canadians of Japanese race;

(b) that repatriation of Canadian-born Japanese should be confined to those who wished to be sent to Japan; and, charges of handling shall be placed to the credit of such person and dealt with as provided in paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of this section.

(c) that Orders in Council to provide for deportation, to revoke British and Canadian status of deportees and to establish the Loyalty Commission be approved in accordance with the above decisions.

7.(1) The Minister may at or immediately prior to the time of departure advance to or for a person who is being deported to Japan or who, having made a request for repatriation, is proceeding to Japan without the issue of an order for deportation, an amount in suitable foreign exchange equivalent to the following:

(a) Where such person is sixteen years of age or over and does not possess at least two hundred dollars, the difference between the amount he possesses and two hundred dollars which shall be paid to such person;

(b) Where such person has one or more dependents under sixteen years of age and does not possess at least two hundred dollars together with a further amount computed on the basis of fifty dollars for each such dependent, the difference between the amount he possesses and the total of two hundred dollars and the amount so computed, to be paid to such person.

(2) Any amount advanced as provided for in subsection (1) of this section shall be recoverable from the person to whom it is paid, from any money to the credit of such person with the Custodian of Enemy Property.

8.(1) The Minister may make arrangements with any department or agency of the Government of Canada to assist him in carrying out the provisions of this Order.

(2) The Department of National Defence shall provide any military guard personnel which may be required in carrying out the provisions of this Order.

(3) The Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police shall give all assistance which may be required of him by the Minister in the carrying out of the provisions of this Order.

SATURDAY, THE 15TH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1945

PRESENT:

HIS EXCELLENCY

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL IN COUNCIL

WHEREAS during the war particular measures with regard to persons of the Japanese race in Canada were made necessary by reason of their concentration along the Pacific coast of Canada;

AND WHEREAS experience during the war in the administration of Order in Council P.C. 946 of February 5, 1943, providing for the control of persons of the Japanese race has indicated the desirability of determining whether the conduct of such Japanese persons in time of war was such as to make the deportation of any of them desirable in the national interest;

AND WHEREAS it is deemed advisable to make provision for the appointment of a Commission to institute the investigation referred to above;

THEREFORE His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, and under the authority of the War Measures Act, Chapter 206 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, is pleased to order and doth hereby order as follows:

1. A Commission consisting of three persons shall be appointed to make inquiry concerning the activities, loyalty and the extent of co-operation with the Government of Canada during the war of Japanese nationals and naturalized persons of the Japanese race in Canada in cases where their names are referred to the Commission by the Minister of Labour for investigation with a view to recommending whether in the circumstances of any such case such person should be deported.

2. Notwithstanding anything contained in the provisions of Order in Council P.C. 7355 of the 15th day of December, 1945, the Commission may, at the request of the Minister of Labour, inquire into the case of any naturalized British subject of the Japanese race who has made a request for repatriation and which request is final under the said Order in Council and may make such recommendations with respect to such case as it deems advisable.

3. The Commission shall report to the Governor in Council.

4. Any person of the Japanese race who is recommended by the Commission for deportation shall be deemed to be a person subject to deportation under the

5. Where any person is recommended for deportation pursuant to this Order he shall, as and from the date on which he leaves Canada in the course of such deportation, cease to be either a British subject or a Canadian national.

6. The Commission shall, for the purpose of all inquiries and investigations made pursuant to this Order, have all the powers and authority of Commissioners appointed under Part One of the Inquiries Act.

7. The Commission is authorized to engage the services of such clerks, reporters, assistants and counsel as they deem advisable to aid and assist in the performance of their duties.

8. The Commissioners shall be paid such remuneration, allowances and expenses as the Governor in Council may fix.

9. All expenses incurred in connection with the inquiries and investigation of the Commission pursuant to this Order, including the remuneration, allowances and expenses of the commissioners, shall be paid from amounts allowed from the War Appropriation to the Department of Labour for such purpose.

DESPATCH 889

Ottawa, July 17, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the question of the allocation of responsibility among the Commonwealth Governments for the relief and repatriation of British subjects in enemy occupied territories and in the territories newly liberated by the Allied forces has been under consideration in this Department. The experience of the Department during the past few years has made it clear that there is no agreed definition of United Kingdom and Dominion nationality which can be applied, and that agreement on principles to determine the responsibility of the Member Governments of the Commonwealth is therefore desirable.

It had been thought that this might be one of the first questions discussed by the new Commonwealth Civilians Committee. It is understood that the question has been put on the agenda, but so far no action has been taken. As the question is one which is of increasing importance, it has been decided to provide the Canadian representative with proposals which he should put before the Committee as a basis for discussion.

I therefore am forwarding herewith a memorandum which has been agreed to by the Deputy Minister of Justice, the Under-Secretary of State, and the Commissioner of Immigration. It has not been put before the Cabinet and it is proposed to delay doing so until consideration has been given to this question by the Commonwealth Civilians Committee and a report of their conclusions and recommendations has been received.

In presenting our proposals to the Committee, the Canadian representative should make clear that it is put forward as a basis for discussion and does not commit the Canadian Government. It might also be helpful to the Committee's understanding of the Canadian proposals if he were to suggest that the Committee should consider first what British subjects should be regarded as eligible for relief and repatriation, and second, how responsibility for those considered eligible for relief and repatriation should be divided among the Member Governments of the Commonwealth. It is recognized, however, that we must stand behind the Protecting Power, and that where the Protecting Power is affording relief to a British subject or has arranged repatriation, the Commonwealth must assume responsibility.

As regards the allocation of responsibility among the Members of the Commonwealth it is suggested that responsibility for relief and repatriation of naturalized British subjects should be assumed by the country of naturalization. This is thought to be the simplest procedure, but we would be prepared to agree that where a person naturalized in one Member country had later taken up permanent residence in another, the country of last permanent residence within the Commonwealth might assume responsibility. This proposal has not been included in our memorandum, as it is thought that such cases would be very few and could be settled individually by agreement.

As regards natural born British subjects, we propose that the country of last permanent residence within the Commonwealth should accept responsibility. It is felt that the adoption of this principle would greatly simplify the problem, as our experience has shown that a person's last place of permanent residence is the place in which his relatives, social and business connections, and property or other assets, if any, are most likely to be found, and to which he will wish to return if repatriated.

It is felt that the application of these principles would take care of the great majority of cases, and that they are sufficiently simple to be applied easily by any examining officer. It is thought that the number of doubtful cases, and of cases not covered, which would have to be submitted individually to Governments or to the Committee for consideration, would be very small.

Mémorandum

Memorandum

PRINCIPLES WHICH MIGHT BE DISCUSSED AT MEETING OF C.C.C.
IN LONDON AS A BASIS FOR APPORTIONMENT OF RESPONSIBILITY IN MATTERS OF RELIEF AND REHABILITATION

Part I

Position while matter is being dealt with by the Protecting Power

1. The governing principle is that it is necessary to stand behind the Protecting Power. It is a matter of serious difficulty for the Swiss representatives to apportion responsibility as between different classes of British subjects and it is necessary for the Swiss, as a practical measure, to accept evidence of being a British subject as a justification for giving relief in many cases. It is therefore desirable that we should stand behind the Protecting Power and apportion financial responsibility among the different Commonwealth members, notwithstanding that it may result in Canada or some other member being charged with relief in respect of a person who would not ordinarily be a proper recipient, either from the Canadian or the general Commonwealth point of view. On the other hand, it would be open to the Governments to instruct the Protecting Power to stop relief in appropriate cases.

Part II

Position arising in the case of repatriations during hostilities

2. In providing for repatriations, the Swiss are bound to include some persons who have no genuine right of repatriation to any part of the British Commonwealth. A practical problem arises in that Canada is confronted with a group of repatriates who have to be accepted regardless of whether they pass any tests which would justify us in regarding them as Canadians. The only practical measure to follow is to have the group of repatriates divided by representatives of the Commonwealth Governments on an appropriate basis and then for each member Government to accept those members of the whole repatriation group who are more nearly connected with it regardless of whether individual cases fit into the laws and regulations of the member Government concerned.

It is recognized that such a course involves the acceptance of responsibility both in permitting entry to Canada and in providing relief and other services for persons who might not ordinarily come within the scope of our federal and provincial systems.

Part III

Position arising in the event of large-scale repatriations from the continent to Great Britain

3. It seems to be certain that the military authorities will move to the United Kingdom all interned civilians. It is possible that they will move to the United Kingdom all, or a substantial proportion, of those civilians who have not been interned in order to clear the country for military operations. There will, therefore, be a large number of persons in Great Britain who will need to be dealt with. The following course might be followed in dealing with them:

(a) Persons clearly belonging to particular parts of the Commonwealth and who have not established homes elsewhere will presumably wish to return home and will be helped to do so.

(b) Upon the settlement of conditions in Europe, many persons who had established homes in Europe presumably would wish to return to the part of Europe in which they were living; they might well be encouraged to do so.

(c) The remainder might well be dealt with following the same principles as are applied in the case of repatriations arranged by Protecting Powers during hostilities. The only difference would be that there would likely be more opportunity for considering different aspects of the problem before distributing them among the member governments concerned.

Part IV

Position arising in the case of civilians in enemy and enemy-occupied countries upon the relinquishment of responsibility by the Protecting Power

4. In this case it would be possible to provide for repatriation in accordance with definite principles. There would be time for consideration and for consultation with the capitals of the countries concerned. A method of distribution might be based upon the following principles

A. Principles determining position of naturalized British subjects

(i) All naturalized British subjects who, prior to the date of enemy occupation, had returned to their country of origin for settlement (and not merely as visitors) should be struck off relief rolls and refused repatriation. The authorities might be permitted to extend limited relief on humanitarian grounds but generally such cases should be turned over to UNRRA.

(ii) All naturalized British subjects who had been ordinarily resident in any enemy or enemy-occupied country (other than their country of origin), and who had not taken action required to safeguard their right of re-entry under

Immigration regulations during the two years prior to the date of occupation, would be struck off the relief rolls and treated in the same general manner (subject, of course, to the right of the individual to prove that he had maintained his permanent connection with a member country).

(iii) Repatriation should be refused to all persons cut off relief under the provisions of the two preceding sub-paragraphs. In other cases, both relief and repatriation rights should be based upon the country of naturalization. The country of naturalization would accept primary responsibility notwithstanding that there had been loss of technical legal status under the laws of the member country.

(iv) Except by agreement no member country should accept responsibility in respect of any person who, under these rules, would be the responsibility of another member country (e.g., if the Canadian authorities were refusing relief or repatriation to a person naturalized in Canada, the U.K. authorities should not be prepared to come in and accept responsibility).

B. Principles determining position of natural-born British subjects

(i) Where such persons possess also the nationality of another country under the jus sanguinis and have returned to that country for settlement, they should normally be remitted to that country for relief and all other purposes, and responsibility should be disavowed either for relief or repatriation. Normally, settling in that country should be regarded as a waiver of the status acquired under the jus soli, and, regardless of legal technicalities, relief and repatriation should be refused.

(ii) In all other cases, it would probably be necessary to accept responsibility for natural-born British subjects.

(iii) The test for acceptance of responsibility should normally be the last place of permanent residence in a member country. In such cases, notwithstanding the intervention of residence outside of the British Commonwealth, the country of the last place of permanent residence should accept responsibility. For this purpose, a minimum residence of five years might be required to establish a "last place of permanent residence."

(iv) In cases in which there had been established a close connection with a member country which could fairly be regarded in the special circumstances as the equivalent of a permanent home, the member country concerned would accept responsibility in matters of relief and repatriation, e.g., there are many cases in which a man may be more or less permanently resident abroad under special circumstances which rebut any presumption of establishment of a permanent home abroad, e.g., missionaries and employees of transportation and travel companies, etc. In such cases, there may have been established a permanent home in Canada where the children are ordinarily sent for education, where the parents normally go on furloughs, and where they normally expect to return for retirement. In such cases, there would be acceptance of responsibility by Canada. Similar cases would arise in other member countries and the permanent home might very well be in a place which was not the place of birth of the husband. This would be particularly true in the missionary communities.

(v) In other cases, the place of birth of the husband and father would be regarded as the determining factor.

C. Principles governing families

(i) The broad principle which would be followed in matters of relief and repatriation would be the need for the maintenance of the integrity of the family. In the case of family homes under the provisions of B (iv) above, the family home would carry with it the whole family regardless of the special position of the individuals concerned. While normally the father's position would govern that of the other members of the family, there might well be other cases in which the position of the mother would be accepted as a determining factor; for example, cases in which the mother was a Canadian from every point of view and the father had died. It would, in such cases, be possible for the mother to bring her children with her notwithstanding that some of them had been born abroad. The position of children who had passed their eighteenth birthdays might well present a good deal of difficulty and it might be desirable to subject them to a discretionary authority and, in that case, it would be necessary to reserve them for determination by the member government concerned.

DESPATCH 980

Ottawa, August 8, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your telegram No. 1485 of June 16th† enquiring what action should be taken by Canada House for the assistance and repatriation of any Canadian civilians who may arrive from the Continent during the present military operations.

I have discussed this question with the Director of Immigration and he has agreed that, pending a decision by the Commonwealth Civilians Committee on the allocation of responsibility between the Governments of the Commonwealth for the relief and repatriation of British subjects, the procedure adopted for persons repatriated on the Drottningholm in the August exchange at Lisbon should be applied. Persons in the following categories are deemed to be admissible to Canada, and arrangements may be made by Canada House for their relief and repatriation, if necessary at Government expense but subject to eventual repayment by individual repatriate:

1. Persons born in Canada who have not lost their status as British subjects.

2. Natural born British subjects who had not lost Canadian domicile on September 3rd, 1939.

3. Persons naturalized in Canada whose last permanent place of residence within the Commonwealth was in Canada.

4. The wives and families of persons included in the above categories 1, 2, and 3.

Persons in category (1) and many of those in categories 2 and 3 will be admissible to Canada as a matter of right. Those within categories 2, 3 and 4 not so admissible will, however, be admitted to Canada as if they were Canadian citizens within the meaning of the Immigration Act. Their claim to come within these categories should be verified as far as possible. Subject only to this verification, persons falling within these categories should not be refused admission to Canada for other reasons such as ill-health, or lack of means of support.

It should also be borne in mind that the liberal interpretation of the Immigration Act which is provided for by the above instructions, is to be applied only in the cases of persons repatriated from enemy or enemy occupied territory by an arrangement with the enemy, by the Protecting Power, or those who may arrive from newly liberated territories in Europe during the present military operations.

Further, the High Commissioner's Office may, at the discretion of the appropriate officer, assume responsibility for persons arriving in England from the Continent who appear to have some reasonable claim on Canada or whose connection with Canada appears to be closer than their connection with the United Kingdom, until such a time as a ruling on their status can be received from Ottawa. All such cases should be reported to Ottawa as soon as possible, if necessary by telegram. Should, however, a case arise where immediate repatriation to Canada is possible and where there is not time to consult Ottawa, the appropriate officer of Canada House, in consultation with the Canadian Immigration officer, may repatriate such persons to Canada.

Mémorandum du ministère des Affaires extérieures
Memorandum by Department of External Affairs

REGULATIONS RE PROTECTION OF CANADIAN INTERESTS IN LIBERATED TERRITORIES

PART A—Payment of Relief

(It should be noted that the classes of persons to whom Certificates of Identity may be issued and the classes to whom relief may be paid do not coincide. While all persons to whom Certificates of Identity may be issued may be accorded relief if they are in need, there are some categories who would not be eligible for Certificates of Identity but who may be granted relief).

1. On first taking over, the officer in charge of relief should continue relief at the rates paid by the Protecting Power to persons who have been receiving relief from the Protecting Power.

2. As soon as possible after taking over, the officer in charge of relief should give consideration to the scale of relief and report thereon to the Department of External Affairs.

3. In principle the rates paid to Canadians should be the same as those paid by the United Kingdom to other British subjects. (The United Kingdom are instructing their Consuls to continue relief at the rates paid by the Protecting Power). The Canadian officers in charge of relief should, however, keep in touch with the British representatives in their countries and should report immediately change or proposed change of rates.

4. In exceptional cases relief may be increased by the officer in charge of relief at his discretion where circumstances appear to warrant but no general departure from the scale should be made without consulting the Department of External Affairs.

5. To begin with, all persons receiving relief from the Swiss on Canadian account should be accorded relief under the provision of paragraph one above. The examination of individual cases should, however, be begun as soon as possible and if any cases appear where the recipient of relief should clearly be the responsibility of another Government it should be brought to the attention of the Department of External Affairs in order that the appropriate Government may be asked to assume responsibility for further relief and for relief already paid. (It is anticipated that most such cases which arise will be of persons who should either be receiving relief from the United Kingdom or from the United States.)

6. All persons who are eligible to receive Certificates of Identity under Paragraph two of Part B of these regulations will be regarded as Canadian responsibility and should be afforded relief where necessary.

7. Where a person is definitely a British subject, but where the allocation of responsibility as between the various Governments of the Commonwealth is not clear, the officer in charge of relief should assume the responsibility and pay relief if he is satisfied that the applicant has a closer connection with Canada than with any other country of the Commonwealth.

8. Relief may be afforded to the following categories of person provided that they are not Canadian nationals and not entitled to receive adequate relief from another Government.

(a) Persons who were employees of the Canadian Government at the outbreak of hostilities and their dependent children.

(b) Persons who were on overseas service with the Canadian forces and their dependent children.

(c) The widows and dependent children of former members of the Canadian overseas forces.

(d) The Canadian born widows of foreigners and their dependent children.

The payment of relief to the above categories is on compassionate grounds and in many cases it will be impossible to recover it. While treating the applicants in these categories with the utmost consideration, the officer in charge of relief should bear this in mind and should not authorize the maximum rates of relief unless he is convinced of the real need of the applicant.

9.(a) Canadian War Pensioners who are eligible for relief under paras. 1 to 7 of these regulations (and this takes in all Canadian nationals) should be given relief as follows:

(i) If the amount of pension exceeds the maximum rate of relief, they should get the maximum rate of relief unless they qualify for more than the maximum under para. 4.

(ii) If the amount of pension is less than the maximum rate of relief, they may nevertheless be given up to the maximum rate of relief in the same manner as other Canadians in accordance with need.

(b) Canadian War Pensioners who are not eligible for relief under paras. 1 to 7, but who are eligible under para. 8, should be given relief as follows:

(i) If the amount of pension exceeds the maximum rate of relief, they should get the maximum rate of relief.

(ii) If the amount of pension is less than the maximum rate of relief, they should get at least the amount of the pension and may be given more on compassionate grounds up to the maximum.

(c) If there should be a case of a Canadian War Pensioner who does not qualify for relief under either paras. 1 to 7 or para. 8, he should be given relief up to the amount of his pension (but not so as to exceed the maximum rates of relief).

(d) War Pensioners should be able to present a statement from the Department of Pensions and National Health showing pension number and amount of relief payable. In the absence of such a statement, and unless the officer in charge is convinced that the person is a pensioner, the claim to be a pensioner should be cleared with Ottawa before it is used as a basis for relief.

10. Notwithstanding that an applicant may be qualified to be afforded relief under the above regulations no relief should be paid to any enemy national without reference to Ottawa in each case. Only in the most exceptional cases would relief be granted to an enemy national and unless the officer in charge of relief is convinced that very exceptional circumstances exist which will have weight at Ottawa, he should refuse to consider applications for relief from enemy nationals.

11. Until further notice the application forms and questionnaires required for Certificates of Identity under Part B of these regulations may be used as relief questionnaires. Questionnaires should be completed in triplicate for all applicants for relief. Two copies of each questionnaire should be forwarded to Ottawa by airmail.

12. Receipts in the form of promises to repay should be taken from all persons to whom relief is paid, and care should be taken that full information is given as to possible sources of repayment, whether from assets or relatives in Canada or abroad or from the source of a pension or allowance. Receipts should be forwarded to Ottawa and copies kept for local record.

PART B—Certificates of Identity

1. Until further notice, no passports are to be issued or renewed by Canadian missions in Europe. Instead they may issue Certificates of Identity, valid for 6 months.

2. The following are eligible for Certificates of Identity:

(1) Persons born in Canada who have not lost their status as British subjects.

(2) Natural born British subjects who had not lost Canadian domicile on September 3rd, 1939.

(3) Persons naturalized in Canada whose last permanent place of residence within the Commonwealth was in Canada and who have remained British subjects.

(4) The wives and children under 16 of persons included in the above categories 1, 2, and 3.

3. Not all of the persons coming within these categories are Canadian citizens within the meaning of the Immigration Act or even Canadian nationals within the meaning of the Canadian Nationals Act. However, issuing authorities should be guided for the present by the list of categories given above and not by the stricter provisions of the statutes.

4. Issuing authorities may have in mind that a person will have ceased to be a British subject

(a) if he has voluntarily become naturalized in a foreign country; or

(b) if, being a dual national, he has taken steps to surrender British nationality; or

(c) if, being a woman, she has acquired her husband's nationality on marriage to an alien; or

(d) if, having been a naturalized British subject, his naturalization has been revoked.

This list is not exhaustive.

5. In interpreting category (2) issuing authorities may have in mind that Canadian domicile is acquired by 5 years permanent residence in Canada. It is lost (except by persons born in Canada) if and when the possessor

(a) leaves Canada with the intention of taking up residence elsewhere; or

(b) remains out of Canada for six years except in certain occupations mentioned in the Immigration Act; or

(c) remains out of Canada for more than one year but less than six without protecting his Canadian domicile in the manner provided in the Immigration Act.

6. If a person is not eligible for a Certificate under para. 2 above, but has urgent need of an identity document and has a strong moral claim to Canadian protection, he may be given a Certificate endorsed "Provisional, issued subject to confirmation." If there is time, the Department of External Affairs should be consulted in advance; in other cases the Department should immediately be asked for confirmation.

7. An interim supply of application forms and questionnaires to be completed by persons desiring certificates may be obtained from Canada House. A supply of revised applications will be sent shortly from Ottawa.

8.(a) The seal or stamp of the issuing mission should be placed over the holder's photograph and over his specimen signature.

(b) Where several members of a family are eligible for certificates, separate certificates should be given to those of 16 years and over.

9. Three copies of the application and questionnaire should be made, two to be sent promptly by air mail to the Department of External Affairs.

10. If a person to whom a Certificate of Identity is given has a Canadian passport or a Canadian identity document issued by the Protecting Power, such passport or document should be impounded when the Certificate of Identity is granted.

PART C—Repatriation

1. If any person desires financial or other assistance to go to Canada, his request should be referred by air mail to the Department of External Affairs. This applies to all, whether or not they are eligible for Certificates of Identity.

2. If the Department of External Affairs authorizes repatriation to Canada, and if repatriation is arranged via the United Kingdom, Canada House should be given full information, in advance of arrival in the United Kingdom. In all cases, the Department of External Affairs should be informed before the person is due to arrive in Canada.

3. Persons eligible for Certificates of Identity under para. 2 of Part B of these regulations should be given financial and other assistance, if required, to return to their homes in Europe or the United Kingdom. Persons ineligible for Certificates under para. 2 of Part B, but who are eligible for relief under Part A, may be assisted to return to their homes in Europe or the United Kingdom. The Department of External Affairs should be fully informed, but not necessarily in advance.

4. Promises to repay the cost of repatriation should be taken in all cases. One copy of such promises should be sent to the Department of External Affairs, with information regarding assets, as in the case of promises to repay relief signed under Part A of these regulations.

Ottawa, September 14, 1944

Sir,

1. Enclosed are two copies of a memorandum dated September 11th prepared by the Department of External Affairs entitled "Regulations re Protection of Canadian Interests in Liberated Territories," which is intended to guide your activities in the Netherlands in the period following the re-opening there of the Canadian Legation.

2. The regulations are in three parts

Part A—Payment of Relief

Part B—Certificates of Identity

Part C—Repatriation.

3. You will note that these regulations have been drawn with the object of giving the Canadian representative on the spot discretion to ensure that no persons in need who have a legitimate claim on Canada for assistance, even though that claim may not be a legal one, shall be turned away. These instructions are therefore intended to apply in the early period after liberation from the enemy and are subject to revision when conditions become normal. In their application it should be kept in mind that the purpose of relief should be to enable the recipient to go without it and to support himself as soon as possible. For this reason, authority is given to provide transportation to a relief recipient to his home in Europe where he may be able to support himself and cease to be a charge on the Canadian Government.

4. Where authority is given to give relief to persons who are not Canadian nationals it should be kept in mind that this has been done for persons who appear to have some special claim—we include persons employed by the Canadian Government at the outbreak of the war; men who saw overseas service in the Canadian Forces in the last war (or in this war, if any), and Canadian born widows of foreigners and their dependent children. It is expected that some of the employees will be re-employed in their old jobs. Others will soon find new jobs. The remainder cannot be kept permanently on relief, and their cases should be brought to the attention of the Department of External Affairs at once.

5. The reason for allowing relief to non-Canadians who saw overseas service with the Canadian forces is obvious, but it should be clear to such persons that the payment of relief to them is not an obligation but an act of grace on the part of the Government. It is thought that relief to this group can, in most cases, be discontinued very soon. In cases where the recipient is obviously likely to require financial assistance for a longer period, consideration should be given as to whether this case should not be brought to the attention of the Department of Pensions and National Health. If so, full particulars would be forwarded to the Department of External Affairs.

6. Part B of the enclosed Regulations, dealing with Certificates of Identity, replaces the instructions regarding Certificates contained in my telegram No. 1661 of August 15th to Canada House, a copy of which was transmitted to you.

7. Also enclosed are two copies of a memorandum (dated March 25th, 1944)† on the actual rates of relief paid by the Protecting Power in enemy and enemy-occupied territories to distressed Canadians.

8. This memorandum contains all the information received by the Department up to the 25th March of this year. While it gives the authorized rates, it should be noted that the Swiss representatives have frequently taken advantage of the permission quoted in paragraph 5, which authorizes the representative of the Protecting Power on the spot, at his discretion and without reference to the Canadian authorities, to make supplementary payments for special reasons. It is also believed that the rates in various localities have been changed by the Swiss, presumably with the authority of the United Kingdom but without our knowledge. In such cases the increase in the rates payable to Canadians to bring them up to the United Kingdom level has been made in accordance with Canadian policy that the Canadians should not receive less favourable treatment than other British subjects.

9. The result, however, is that the Canadian representative going into liberated territories will, in many cases, find that the actual rates of relief which have been paid by the representative of the Protecting Power are at variance with the scales given in this memorandum. In such circumstances the Canadian representative will continue the rates of relief paid by the Swiss, but in the absence of the special rates, he should use the rates given in the memorandum as a guide.

10. In particular it should be kept in mind that the rates given in this memorandum are maximum rates, and that relief is authorized only in relation to need. Not all Canadians or persons who have been accepted as Canadian responsibility have been receiving from the Swiss the maximum amounts payable. Similarly, in authorizing relief to persons who have not been receiving relief through the Protecting Power, the Canadian representative should not authorize payment of relief at the maximum rates unless he is convinced that it is necessary in each case.

11. Enclosed are 100 blank Certificates of Identity, to be issued in the Netherlands pursuant to the enclosed regulations. They are numbered Series 4, No. 1 to 100 inclusive. Application forms may be obtained from Canada House pending the sending of revised application forms from Ottawa.

12. On September 7th we instructed the Canadian High Commissioner in London to attempt to make the following arrangement through the Foreign Office:

“(a) In respect of countries in which Canadian diplomatic missions are opened promptly (i.e. France, Belgium, Netherlands) Foreign Office should ask Swiss to instruct their officers not to give Canadian papers to British Consuls but to give them to Canadian Mission on latter’s request.

(b) In respect of countries in which no Canadian Legation is opened or about to be opened, Foreign Office should ask Swiss to hand Canadian papers to British Consuls at same time as British papers. Each time Canadian papers are so dealt with, we should appreciate being promptly informed via Foreign Office and Canada House.”

13. On September 9th we instructed the High Commissioner in London to try to make the following arrangement with the Foreign Office:

“(a) In any liberated country where there is a Canadian Mission British Consuls should ask Mission’s advice regarding any Canadians who come to them for assistance. In urgent cases interim assistance would of course be given by the Consul. If Consulate and Mission are in the same city, Consulate should pass Canadians to the Mission. This arrangement would apply now in France and Belgium, soon in the Netherlands and later in other countries.

(b) In liberated countries in which there is no Canadian Mission we presume British Consuls will treat all British subjects, including Canadians, alike. We do not suggest a separate regime to be applied by British Consuls for Canadians, but where a Consul is in doubt as to how to deal with an applicant claiming to be a Canadian we would be glad to be consulted. If Foreign Office see no objection British Consuls might be instructed to consult Ottawa direct, but if Foreign Office prefer such enquiries from British Consuls to go through the Foreign Office do not press this. Question of whether a person to whom a British Consul has given relief as a British subject is in fact Canadian responsibility can be settled later when accounts reach London."

14. I shall let you know as soon as I receive a report from the High Commissioner regarding these two aspects of the problem of assistance to Canadian civilians in liberated territory.

Ottawa, September 18, 1944

Sir,

My despatch No. 980 of August 8th contained instructions regarding the assistance to be given by Canada House to Canadians who may arrive in the United Kingdom from Europe during the present military operations. My despatch set forth certain categories of persons and said that persons in those categories "are deemed to be admissible to Canada, and arrangements may be made by Canada House for their relief and repatriation, if necessary at Government expense but subject to eventual repayment by individual repatriate."

My despatch also stated:

"It should also be borne in mind that the liberal interpretation of the Immigration Act which is provided for by the above instructions, is to be applied only in the cases of persons repatriated from enemy or enemy occupied territory by an arrangement with the enemy, by the Protecting Power, or those who may arrive from newly liberated territories in Europe during the present military operations."

As you know, we have recently instructed the Canadian Missions in Paris and Brussels (and will similarly instruct other Canadian Missions in Liberated Territory) to take up with the Department of External Affairs each request for assistance to return to Canada.

On reconsideration of my despatch No. 980, it seems to me desirable that Canada House should similarly consult the Department of External Affairs regarding each request of a Canadian who, upon arrival in the United Kingdom from Europe, asks for assistance in returning to Canada. It is not necessary for you to consult the Department of External Affairs in cases of persons arrived in the United Kingdom as a result of organized exchanges and if such persons have been given Certificates of Identity by the Canadian representative on the exchange. Nor is it necessary for you to consult the Department of External Affairs in any case in which repatriation to Canada has already been approved by us at the instance of a Canadian Mission in Europe. In all other cases, however, I should appreciate it if you would consult this Department before providing repatriation to Canada.

It is not of course necessary to consult the Department before granting relief to persons covered by my despatch No. 980. We should, however, be glad to receive full information regarding persons to whom relief is given.

Ottawa, October 24, 1944

Sir,

With despatch No. 109 of September 11th I sent you a memorandum dated September 11th, 1944 entitled "Regulations re Protection of Canadian Interests in Liberated Territories."

2. These Regulations were subsequently sanctioned by Order-in-Council P.C. 7855 of October 6th,<sup>1</sup> a copy of which I enclose herewith.

3. Paragraph twelve of Part 'A' of the Regulations reads as follows:

"12. Receipts in the form of promises to repay should be taken from all persons to whom relief is paid, and care should be taken that full information is given as to possible sources of repayment, whether from assets or relatives in Canada or abroad or from the source of a pension or allowance. Receipts should be forwarded to Ottawa and copies kept for local record."

4. On the recommendation of the Director of Immigration, I have amended this paragraph to read:

"12. Detailed statement of expenditure showing rate of exchange, with promises to repay from all persons to whom relief is paid, should be forwarded to Ottawa and copies kept for local record. Care should be taken that full information is given as to possible sources of repayment, whether from assets or relatives in Canada or abroad or from the source of a pension or allowance.”

5. The purpose of the change is to request you to send us, in addition to the receipts and promises to repay relief, periodical statements showing all relief paid and showing the rate of exchange. These statements should be sent monthly. They should list the names of recipients of relief and the amounts paid during the month. If a person receives relief for members of his family in addition to himself, that should be indicated. These statements are required primarily by the Immigration Branch, which is responsible for obtaining repayment of relief. Would you please send the statements in duplicate, in order that we may keep a copy and send one to Immigration. The statements should be accompanied by one copy of the relief receipts for the period covered by the statement.<sup>36</sup>

6. Turning to Part ‘B’ of the Regulations, I should like to refer to paragraph nine which states:

“Three copies of the application and questionnaire (for Certificate of Identity) should be made, two to be sent promptly by air mail to the Department of External Affairs.”

In sending these documents it would be appreciated if you would send a separate despatch for each person (or family) involved.

7. Part ‘C’ of the Regulations deals with repatriation requests. Would you please send a separate despatch for each person (or family) asking for repatriation. Each despatch should be accompanied by a copy of the applicant’s promise to repay the cost of repatriation, and should contain information regarding the applicant’s assets and income, and information regarding the special reasons, if any, for requesting repatriation. If the application for repatriation has been made simultaneously with an application for Certificate of Identity, both applications may be sent under cover of the same despatch.

Ottawa, February 2, 1945

RE: DIVISION OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR RELIEF TO BRITISH COMMONWEALTH NATIONALS

The Canadian proposals<sup>38</sup> were, as you know, first discussed by the Commonwealth Civilians Committee on August 18th, when I was present. At the following meeting on September 4th the United Kingdom Government submitted unfavourable comments on our proposals and submitted counter-proposals.

The United Kingdom counter-proposals, as altered at the meeting on September 4th, read as follows:

“1. Each member Government will accept in principle financial responsibility for those who are British subjects or British protected persons by virtue of connection with that member Government either through birth, naturalization or descent. Subject to the right of each Government to make exceptions in individual cases.

2. Authority will be given to British or Dominion consuls or agents appointed or to be appointed in the liberated territories to continue for a limited period the relief payments at present being made through the Protecting Power to British subjects in enemy territory.”

Those present at the meeting, with the exception of the Canadian representative, were in favour of the United Kingdom proposals and agreed to send them to their governments. Mr. Scott, the Canadian representative, said that in view of the Canadian proposals, he could not recommend to the Canadian Government to accept the first of the two United Kingdom proposals.

Mr. Scott now tells us that the United Kingdom proposals are to come up for discussion at the next meeting of the Committee, which will probably be held about the middle of February. He wishes to know what to say on behalf of the Canadian Government on this subject.

The second part of the United Kingdom proposal is of course perfectly satisfactory. The first part of the United Kingdom proposal is objectionable for the following reasons:

1. It is not sufficiently precise.
2. It would reject the Canadian idea that relief should be denied to naturalized persons who return for permanent residence to their country of origin.

See enclosure, Document 946.

3. It rejects the Canadian idea that, in the case of a person born in the British Commonwealth, the Commonwealth country in which he had his last place of permanent residence (rather than the country of birth) should be responsible for him.

It seems to me that it is desirable to give Mr. Scott some instructions in advance of the next meeting. The following positions<sup>39</sup> present themselves,

1. To renew the fight for the Canadian proposals. This would probably be a waste of time. I think that this fight will have to be taken up on a higher level if it is to have any chance of success.

2. To tell the Committee why the United Kingdom proposals are objectionable and simply to state that Canada does not concur in them.

3. To explain why the United Kingdom proposals are objectionable and to state that Canada cannot concur in them, but that in actual practice the course we are following in liberated countries does not differ from the course recommended by the United Kingdom Government.<sup>40</sup>

I should be glad to have your instructions as to the views we should ask Mr. Scott to express at the next meeting of the Committee.<sup>41</sup>

Ottawa, February 5, 1945

Your telegram No. 158, January 17,† division of responsibility for British Commonwealth civilians. Your telegram arrived too late for reply before January 18 meeting of Commonwealth Civilians Committee. We understand that subject was not discussed January 18 but will come up at next meeting. If it does, our views on United Kingdom memorandum P(44)25† may be stated as follows:

1. The second of the two recommendations is of course satisfactory.
2. The first recommendation is not (not) satisfactory for the following reasons:
  - (a) It is lacking in detail and precision.

The word "positions" was crossed out and replaced by "possibilities."

Marginal notes:

I prefer this course. A. R.[IVE]

I agree. J. E. R.[EAD]

Marginal note:

This should be done with Jolliffe.

(b) Unlike the Canadian memorandum it fails to provide for the denial of assistance to naturalized persons who took up permanent residence outside the Commonwealth.

(c) We proposed that, for persons born in the Commonwealth, the test for acceptance of responsibility should normally be the last place of permanent residence in the Commonwealth. The United Kingdom proposal adheres to the test of place of birth.

3. As the first United Kingdom recommendation is not satisfactory to us, we are not (not) prepared to approve it. However, in actual practice during the liberation period, our instructions to Canadian Embassies in liberated countries and our requests to British missions in liberated countries in which there is no Canadian mission, do not (not) conflict with the United Kingdom recommendation.<sup>42</sup>

Ottawa, March 12, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I should like to refer to your telegram No. 378 of February 6th† regarding assistance for Canadian civilians in Germany in the post-hostilities period.

2. Our understanding is that payment of relief, and movement of British subjects to the United Kingdom, will be in the hands of the military, but that they will consult the Foreign Office representative, Mr. Dible, regarding each case.

3. We have requested, and the Foreign Office has agreed, that Mr. Dible should discharge this responsibility for Canadians as well as for other British subjects.

4. Enclosed are six copies of a memorandum for the guidance of Mr. Dible so far as Canadians are concerned. Two copies are for him, one for you and one for the Commissioner of European Emigration. If you think it desirable, you may give a copy to the Foreign Office and one to SHAEF, or either, for their information.

5. Also enclosed are four copies of a collection of individual reports on Canadians in Germany.† Two copies are in a binder for Mr. Dible. One copy is for you and one for the Commissioner of European Emigration. I do not think that there would be any object in giving copies to the Foreign Office or SHAEF.

6. Under separate cover the Supplies Branch is sending 500 copies of our questionnaire form. If Mr. Dible is willing to use this form, I suggest that he send only one copy of each completed questionnaire to you for transmission to us. Extra copies could be made either by you or by this Department. I do not think that Mr. Dible could be expected to make extra copies, as his secretarial facilities will be limited.

TREATMENT OF CANADIAN CIVILIANS IN GERMANY
IN THE POST-HOSTILITIES PERIOD

(Prepared by the Department of External Affairs, Ottawa, for the Assistance of the Foreign Office representative in Germany.)

Internees

The number of Canadian internees is not definitely known. In addition to those listed in the volume of individual reports† accompanying this memorandum, there are probably twenty more who were transferred to Germany from the camp at Giromagny in 1944 and whose names are not available.

Of those listed almost all are acceptable to the Canadian Government for purposes of relief and repatriation. This has been noted on the individual reports. Any Canadian internees not listed and not German-born may be assumed to be acceptable.

The cases of those who are unacceptable can be reconsidered on receipt of reports from the Foreign Office representative.

The Department of External Affairs would of course like to know as soon as possible what disposition is made of each internee.

Non-interned Persons

The number of non-interned 'Canadians' in Germany is something that cannot even be guessed. Of persons who are truly Canadian there are very few. However, there are probably hundreds of the following classes.

(a) German-born persons who were naturalized in Canada, who returned to Germany and whose naturalizations have not been revoked.

(b) Canadian-born children of German immigrants (some naturalized and some not) who returned to Germany with or after their parents.

During the past few months about sixty of such persons have approached the Swiss representatives with a view to inclusion in an exchange of civilians. Doubtless hundreds of others will, after the defeat of Germany, wave their Canadian credentials and demand relief or repatriation or both.

Most of the persons in these two classes are more German than Canadian. (Many of them may be German nationals under German law.) The Canadian Government does not wish them sent to Canada except in individual cases which have been specifically approved from Ottawa.

To state the Canadian Government's wishes in a simple rule, no person who has not been interned should be started on his way to Canada without express approval from the Department of External Affairs.

So far as relief is concerned, it is realized that this will be in military hands and that it may not be feasible to ask relief officers scattered over Germany to follow special rules for those British subjects who claim to be Canadians. However, the Canadian Government hopes that relief will not be given to persons of classes (a) and (b), as Canadians, unless such relief has been expressly authorized by the Department of External Affairs.

Questionnaires

If it is feasible for the Foreign Office representative to use them, the Department of External Affairs would be glad to have the Department's questionnaire form (a supply of which accompanies this memorandum) completed by each Canadian or alleged Canadian and sent to the Department. One copy will suffice.

In addition, in the case of non-interned persons, the Department would appreciate receiving full information regarding their activities during hostilities and their exact status under German law.

Channels of Communication.

It would be appreciated if the Foreign Office representative would communicate with the Department of External Affairs through Canada House, London.

DESPATCH 450

Ottawa, March 19, 1945

Sir,

With reference to your despatch No. 551 of March 14th regarding the current civilian exchange with Germany, we are greatly disappointed at the inclusion of only three Canadians [...].

So far as repatriating Canadians is concerned, these exchanges have been a failure.

If there is any possibility of a fourth exchange we trust that the Foreign Office will agree that the Swiss should be asked to include a definite quota of Canadians. Past experience suggests that such a request to the Swiss should be made immediately even if the exchange is months away. We would suggest 50 as a reasonable quota.

We would like the Swiss to choose the Canadians from the enclosed revised list† of Canadian internees; four copies are enclosed. In addition to those listed there may be some Canadian internees who were moved last fall from Giromagny to Marlag and Milag; they also should be considered, provided that any German-born person shall be excluded from consideration. We should be obliged if the Swiss would not consider any Canadians who are neither on the enclosed list nor in the ex-Giromagny group.

As the decisions against quotas for the various countries of the Commonwealth and against the nomination of individuals for repatriation were taken by the Commonwealth Civilians Committee, it is thought that the Committee should be informed of the action we are taking. Would you therefore specifically inform the Chairman. Should there be a meeting of the Committee in the immediate future the matter might be put before them, otherwise a statement should be sent to High Commissioners of each of the governments represented on the Commonwealth Civilians Committee. However, if there is possibility of an early exchange, it will be important to get this list into the hands of the Swiss as soon as possible and the approach to the Foreign Office should not be delayed pending discussion by the Committee.

Enclosed for your information and, if you wish, for that of the Foreign Office, are two copies of a memorandum regarding the inclusion of Canadians in past civilian exchanges with Germany.

MEMORANDUM REGARDING THE SMALL NUMBER OF CANADIANS
INCLUDED IN EXCHANGES OF CIVILIANS WITH GERMANY

In the first exchange at Lisbon in the summer of 1944, there were twelve Canadians out of some 900 British subjects. In the second exchange at Gothenburg in the fall of 1944 there were 18 Canadians out of about 500 British subjects. In the third exchange, which has just taken place at Gothenburg, there were 3 Canadians out of 250 British subjects.

Most of the 'Canadians' who have been included in the exchanges were not Canadian born, but were naturalized persons, born in Belgium, France or Poland, whose naturalization should have been revoked long ago for long absence from His Majesty's dominions.

There are about 80 Canadians still interned in Germany and most of them are Canadian born. So far as we know, only 19 of these have been proposed to the German Government by the Swiss Government for inclusion in possible exchanges. While apparently forgetting about these internees, the Swiss have proposed to the Germans for inclusion in possible exchanges some 60 non-interned persons, almost all of whom were born in Germany and naturalized in Canada. We have, through the Foreign Office, told the Swiss that we will not accept such persons, and that we wish them to give more consideration to our internees.

In view of the disappointing number of Canadians included in the exchanges to date, it may be worthwhile to review the arrangements and correspondence on this point.

April 3, 1944 The Commonwealth Civilians Committee in London discussed the procedure to be followed in choosing British subjects for inclusion in exchanges. The Committee came to the conclusion that it would be impracticable to suggest to the Swiss that a quota be assigned to each member of the Commonwealth in selecting repatriates.<sup>44</sup> The Committee also came to the conclusion that there should be no nomination of individual Commonwealth civilians to be included in exchanges. The Committee agreed on a list of priorities for the guidance of the Swiss.

May 1, 1944 Following a decision of the Commonwealth Civilians Committee, the Foreign Office sent instructions to the British Minister in

The following footnote was in the original:

We had suggested, at the end of January, 1944, that there be quotas for each member of the Commonwealth. The Foreign Office opposed the suggestion, at least for the first exchange. We therefore dropped the suggestion and failed to revive it after the first exchange. (Our telegram No. 481 of March 16, 1944, to Canada House†).

Berne to give to the Swiss a table of priorities for the guidance of the Swiss in selecting civilians for inclusion in exchange. Annexed is a copy of the two telegrams sent by the Foreign Office to Berne on this subject on May 1, 1944.†

August 14, 1944 We told Canada House in telegram No. 1647† that we were greatly disappointed by the small number of Canadians who had come out in the Lisbon exchange. We requested that the Foreign Office tell the Swiss of Canada's feelings in this matter. (At that time there was a thought that Germans from Canada might be included in the second exchange, and we therefore asked that the attention of the Swiss be called to this fact.)

August 18, 1944 It was definitely decided that it was too late to get Germans from Canada into the second exchange, which was to take place at Gothenburg at the beginning of September.

September 5, 1944 Canada House told us in telegram No. 2298† that they were sending a communication to the Foreign Office expressing our dissatisfaction with the small number of Canadians included in the Lisbon exchange and asking that this be brought to the attention of the Swiss. At this date, September 5, it was of course too late to influence the exchange then about to take place at Gothenburg. It was hoped, however, that the communication would have some effect in the event of a third exchange.

September 20, 1944 We told Canada House in telegram No. 2007† that we would be glad to see a third exchange, that in that event we would like to have Germans from Canada included, and that we would like the Swiss to be told that a larger proportion of Canadians and other Dominion nationals should be selected within the limits of the table of priorities.

September 22, 1944 At a meeting of the Commonwealth Civilians Committee our representative, Mr. Scott, said that he would like the suggestion to be made to the German Government that a higher percentage of Canadian and other Dominion nationals be included. It was agreed that this suggestion should be transmitted in the event of a third exchange being proposed to the German Government.

October 6, 1944 In telegram No. 2186† we reminded Canada House of our desire that the German Government's attention be called to the small number of Canadian and other Dominion nationals included in the first two exchanges and hope was expressed that the proportion of such persons would be greater in the third exchange, which was then under consideration.

December 12, 1944 The Foreign Office sent a lengthy note† to the Swiss Legation in London regarding the third exchange then under discussion. The note included the statement that "it was requested that a higher proportion of Dominion nationals than in previous exchanges may be repatriated." When copy of this note was received in Ottawa on December 20, the fact that there was no special mention of Canadian nationals was noted. However, there did not seem to be any point in asking the Foreign Office to supplement its note to the Swiss by making a special reference to Canadians, because at that time it was thought that the third exchange might take place within a few weeks and there would obviously be no time for the Swiss to review any selections already made.

December 24, 1944 The Swiss Legation sent to the Foreign Office a copy of a note of December 23rd<sup>1</sup> from the German Government which said in part—“Should time allow, British Government’s wish for repatriation of Dominion nationals will be complied with in concert with Swiss Legation in Berlin.”

January 18, 1945 Having examined a list of non-interned German-born persons whom the Swiss had nominated to the Germans for inclusion in exchange, we informed London that we would not accept such people and that we did not understand why more of our interned genuine Canadians had not been nominated. It developed that the list to which we took objection was not for the third exchange but for a possible fourth exchange. We reiterated our objection to the list, even though it was for a possible fourth exchange, and asked that the Foreign Office take any action which might be feasible at that late date to secure the repatriation of a moderate number of interned Canadians in the third exchange. We gave a list of acceptable internees whom we wished to see included in an exchange, preferably the forthcoming third exchange.

January 26, 1945 We told Canada House in telegram No. 235† that we would like the Foreign Office to tell the Swiss of our hope that, even at this late date, it would be possible to include a moderate number of Canadian internees in the third exchange. Without specifying the quota we thought that 30 or 40 would be a reasonable number.

February 9th, 1945 Canada House said in telegram No. 436† that a fresh request had been sent to the Swiss to review its list for the third exchange to include more Dominion personnel.

London, April 7, 1945

Your despatch No. 450 of March 19th, civilian exchanges with Germany.

1. In accordance with instructions contained in your foregoing despatch, we communicated with Foreign Office in sense indicated (see my despatch No. 692 of March 30th).† Answer has now been received indicating that while United Kingdom appreciates Canadian disappointment, it is wondered whether Canadian authorities overlook fact that agreement for the exchange expressly covers both interned and non-interned civilians, and that the selection of repatriates by the Swiss had been based on a carefully drawn up table of priorities agreed to by all Commonwealth Governments. It is also stated that “.....in reply to instructions to include a large proportion of Dominion nationals in the last exchange, you will remember Swiss in their note of February 28th, 1945,† (my despatch No. 530)† stated that no more Dominion nationals in Category 1<sup>45</sup> were known to the Foreign Interests Division." It is known that the Swiss have nominated other Dominion nationals, but all of these were in Category 9.<sup>46</sup> This is the consideration which explains why so few Canadian nationals were included in the last exchange. Further, Foreign Office inform that there are still a number of Mixed Medical Commission cases who have not yet been repatriated, although there is no evidence on our files that this is the case. You will remember that repeated requests have been made to Swiss for these lists, with no apparent results.

2. United Kingdom authorities feel that the suggestion to have a quota in the event of a fourth exchange would be as unwelcome now as when the matter was originally discussed. Except in cases of urgency, Foreign Office oppose the nomination of individuals for repatriation as this means abandoning the policy of leaving the selection of individual repatriates to be carried out by the Protecting Power.

3. Preliminary steps are now being taken for the fourth exchange. It is proposed to send a telegram to Berne for transmission to the Swiss, for consideration by German authorities, (my despatch No. 692 of March 30th)† outlining the proposal for a further exchange of groups of German civilians, this time from India, Australia, Jamaica and South Africa, omitting any request for a particular group of British Commonwealth civilians, that is at our request, deleting paragraph 5 of Foreign Office telegram to Berne,† enclosed my foregoing despatch.

4. Revised list of Canadian internees enclosed your despatch No. 450, has been forwarded to Berne for consideration by Swiss.

5. You will appreciate from above that United Kingdom has strong views, and thus I wonder whether in view of the present military situation you may not feel that it would be wiser to not press for inclusion of a Canadian quota until German reaction to Commonwealth proposal is received.

6. Next C.C.C. meeting is April 12th, however, and matter could be included on agenda then if you thought desirable. Please let me have your instructions earliest.

Ottawa, April 18, 1945

Sir,

With reference to your telegram No. 989 of April 7th regarding civilian exchanges with Germany, we are of the opinion that the reasons, expressed in our despatch No. 450 of March 19th, for Canadian dissatisfaction with the results of past exchanges have not been adequately appreciated by the United Kingdom authorities who have therefore been unwilling to consider favourably, the various possible safeguards of Canadian interests which have from time to time been proposed by your representative on the Commonwealth Civilians Committee. As indicated by our telegram No. 863 of April 10th, [12] we do not wish you to press our views on the Foreign Office for the present, in view of the imminent collapse of an effective German Government with which it may be possible to deal in arranging further exchanges through the Swiss, nor would any useful purpose be served now by again communicating to the Protecting Power our dissatisfaction with past nominations for exchanges. However, should proposals for further civilian exchanges ever again appear feasible, you may wish to bear in mind the following considerations in reviewing our experience of past exchanges.

According to your telegram under reference, the Foreign Office justifies Swiss nominations on the ground that they have been based on the scale of priorities governing Commonwealth-German exchanges of civilians established a year ago (Foreign Office telegram No. 1339 of May 1st, 1944).† We agree that, so far as we know, the Swiss can claim with some justification that they have followed faithfully this scale of priorities and that there have simply been comparatively few Canadians of high priority in German hands.

Nevertheless, we still contend that, while the strict letter of the priorities agreement may have been kept by the Swiss, it has been manifest from the lists of exchangeable civilians prepared by them, that their nominations have not been made from among those persons with close and genuine ties with Canada but from among all persons claiming Canadian nationality. The Canadian argument is therefore a criticism of the Swiss policy of selection in as much as the Swiss have not adhered to the specific request (Foreign Office telegram No. 1338 of 1st May, 1944)† of the Commonwealth Governments to place in the higher categories only those civilians who are genuinely tied to the Commonwealth countries by families, homes, close business interests or long residence in the Commonwealth.

The secondary observation of the Foreign Office (as communicated in your telegram), to the effect that non-interned civilians were included on the same basis as interned civilians, is a correct statement of the agreement. Indeed it was the Canadian representative on the Commonwealth Civilians Committee in London who suggested at the second meeting of the Committee on 3rd April, 1944, that non-interned civilians should be included in exchanges since our information showed that many Canadians, including women and children, with a high claim to repatriation, had not been interned in Germany. In calling our attention to the fact that the exchange agreements specifically covered both interned and non-interned civilians, the Foreign Office does not explain why there have been so few Canadians on the exchanges.

Criticism of the Swiss nominations and selections on other grounds is severely hampered by lack of positive information. The number of Canadians repatriated by civilian exchanges to date, 33 out of a total of about 1,650 Commonwealth civilians, is certainly disappointing and gives rise to doubts as to the complete fairness of the selections. It was suggested by a Foreign Office representative at the second Commonwealth Civilians Committee, referred to above, that, as the Swiss seemed from their past selections to have less information regarding United Kingdom civilians in enemy hands than the Foreign Office, nominations for repatriation might be made with more fairness by the Commonwealth Governments concerned. The suggestion was turned down for reasons not stated in the minutes; probably the Governments concerned did not wish to lay themselves open to charges of favouritism. The Committee therefore contented itself with requesting the Swiss to be guided principally by the genuineness of the claims of civilians to Commonwealth nationality, a request which, it is held, the Swiss seem to have neglected. [...]

If the application of the priorities is to be left to the Swiss, the only safeguard which might be applied in the interest of the repatriation of appropriate numbers of Dominion nationals, is some form of quota scheme. Quotas have already been proposed by the Canadian representative on the Commonwealth Civilians Committee (at the end of January, 1944 and at the end of March, 1945) but the scheme is not well received by the Foreign Office. Doubtless, quotas in the form of a proportion of the total number to be repatriated in the exchange would cut across the priorities scale which already makes the Swiss administration of exchanges a complex problem. Our hesitancy in further complicating the Swiss standards of nomination is, however, outweighed by our conviction that in past exchanges both greater numbers of Canadians and greater care in selecting bona fide Canadians should have been exercised by the Swiss. In view of the unsatisfactory results of previous exchanges, we might well ask for a higher proportion in a quota scheme than that to which we would otherwise be entitled, though any suggestion of a definite number of Canadians before the total number for repatriation was fixed, would appear premature.

London, October 15, 1945

Sir,

I have received fresh instructions from Ottawa regarding the handling by the Canadian authorities in the United Kingdom of Canadians and self-styled Canadians who may arrive here from Germany and Austria.

2. As you know, there are a great number of persons in Germany who at one time or another have lived in Canada and while in Canada have taken out naturalization papers. Many of them later returned to Germany and identified themselves with the Nazi state. Now that Germany has been defeated, they endeavour to put themselves forward as genuine and loyal Canadians. You are also aware that it is the view of the Canadian authorities that, in general, persons in this category should remain in Germany and should have their naturalization revoked. Efforts are made to stop such persons leaving Germany, but occasionally they slip through.

3. In the past the officials of the Home Office have referred to Canada House Canadians and self-styled Canadians arriving in this country from Germany or Austria, who have no private hospitality offered them or private means of support.

4. I am now informed that the Canadian authorities have decided they should not assume any financial responsibility for such repatriates upon their arrival in this country, until in each individual case the approval of the appropriate Canadian authorities has been given. I am therefore under instructions to ask that the United Kingdom officials who receive repatriates from Germany or Austria claiming to be Canadians (even if they are documented as Canadians) should not direct them to Canada House if it is intended that they should be given immediate assistance, as it will not in some cases be possible for assistance to be given.

5. It is requested that such repatriates should be treated in the same fashion as the United Kingdom authorities treat their own nationals who are in a like financial condition. I believe it is your custom to send them to hostels or other institutions set up for the purpose, and that most frequently they go to Lintwhite Hostel, Bridge of Weir. We should be grateful to be informed, as we have been in the past, of the arrival of these repatriates, and to have them instructed to communicate, if they wish assistance, to the High Commissioner for Canada, Canada House, Trafalgar Square, London, S.W.1.

6. I am further to say that in the event of these repatriates being later accepted as Canadian responsibility, the Canadian Government will reimburse the United Kingdom for any expenses incurred in their behalf. In many cases the decision can be made in Canada House upon the basis of instructions already received from Ottawa. In others, the decision of Ottawa will have to be sought.

7. May I repeat that this new policy applies only to repatriates from Germany and Austria. For those from other countries the present arrangements are satisfactory.

8. I do not wish to close this letter without telling you how much the Canadian authorities appreciate the prompt, considerate and skilful handling of Canadian nationals on the part of officials of the Home Office upon their arrival in this country.

9. I am venturing to send a copy of this letter to the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and to the Dominions Office. I enclose a copy of a letter I am writing to the Foreign Office.†

RE: EVACUATION OF CANADIANS FROM PARTS OF FREE CHINA

I should like to call your attention to paragraph 8 of despatch No. 597 of November 22nd from the Canadian Embassy in Chungking† regarding the evacuation of British subjects, including Canadians, from parts of Free China threatened by the Japanese advance.

Paragraph 8 reads as follows:

“8. No provision is being made to evacuate British of Chinese race on the principle that their recognition as Chinese citizens by the Chinese Government provides a protection that is not available to purely British subjects.”

In our correspondence with the Canadian Embassy in Chungking and with Canada House on the subject of relief for Canadians in Free China (to be found on file 3274-A-40) this Department has taken the line that there should be no discrimination against Canadians of Chinese race.<sup>47</sup>

I do not know whether it is feasible or desirable to assert that principle at present in relation to the problem of evacuating British subjects from parts of China. We do not know how many Canadians of Chinese race there are in the parts of China from which British subjects are being evacuated. The chief difficulty in the way of asserting our own point of view is that the Canadian Embassy is dependent on the United Kingdom authorities for getting people out of China to India.

However, I thought that your attention<sup>48</sup> and the Under-Secretary's attention should be called to the above quoted statement by the Canadian Embassy.<sup>49</sup>

The following note was in the original:

See our despatch of Nov. 27 to Canada House† on 3274-A (attached) which is flagged in that file. A. V. R[IVE]

2. As you are aware, the coordination of activities on behalf of prisoners of war and civilians in Japanese hands is now undertaken as regards the Commonwealth by the Imperial Prisoner of War Committee for POW's and the Commonwealth Civilian Committee for civilians. There is also some consultation between the Post-Hostilities Planning Committees in London and Ottawa. Planning of post-hostilities repatriation of Service Personnel has been discussed direct with the War Office by Canada House but post-hostilities arrangements for civilians do not appear to have been discussed inter-Governmentally.

3. Coordination of policy between the Commonwealth Governments and the Governments of the United States and the Netherlands appears to be somewhat haphazard. As regards the Services, it is understood that there is some consultation between United Kingdom and United States Chiefs of Staff in Washington. Other matters are taken up by the U.S. Embassy in London with the Foreign Office, or by the British Embassy, Washington, with the State Department. The Canadian Government is sometimes consulted through the Canadian Embassy at Washington and sometimes through Canada House.

4. As the campaign progresses in the Pacific, it is evident that Washington is exercising more and more influence on policy regarding Allied prisoners of war and civilians in Japanese hands. It seems probable that this trend will continue and that if the Commonwealth Governments are to share in the shaping of policy, consideration should be given immediately to the setting up of an Inter-Governmental Committee at Washington to deal with problems of relief of Allied service personnel and civilians in Japanese hands during hostilities and with their care and repatriation as they are liberated.

5. It is felt here that unless immediate action is taken along these lines the Dominion Governments will find that decisions affecting their nationals in Japanese hands are being taken by the U.S. military authorities without their knowledge.

6. Our idea would be that the proposed Inter-Governmental Committee at Washington should nominally consist of the heads of the Missions at Washington of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India, the Netherlands and all other Allied countries sufficiently interested together, of course, with a representative of the U.S. State Department. It would be desirable that a reasonably senior officer of each Mission would attend the meeting for the head of his Mission together with a Service Adviser for those countries who have prisoners of war in Japanese hands. A representative of the Combined Chiefs of Staff might also be asked to attend. We would envisage also that after the organization of the Main Committee Military and Civilian Sub-Committees would be set up.

7. In our view this Inter-Governmental Committee should not only operate during hostilities but also in the post-war period as long as might be necessary for the coordination of relief and repatriation of prisoners of war and civilians.

8. It should be kept in mind that Canada is keenly interested in problems of relief for prisoners of war and civilians in the Far East, and in post-hostilities arrangements affecting both Service personnel and civilians. However, this interest is chiefly in the areas of Japan proper, the China Coast and Korea, first, because there are prisoners of war from two Canadian regiments which were at Hong Kong, as well as a considerable number of Canadian civilians, and, second because Canada is the one Commonwealth country adjacent to this area which is likely to have more or less direct communication with that area across the Pacific at the end of hostilities.

9. It follows that Canada would favour a geographical division of responsibility. Canada is well situated to render assistance in the Pacific area north of Indo-China, but not so well located with relation to Indo-China, the Dutch East Indies, Malaya and Burma. It seems probable that any possible relief for the Northern area during hostilities will have to be organized in North America, whereas the countries with access to the Southern area such as India and Australia would be in a better position to assist. It also seems probable that repatriation from the two areas would also have to be arranged in different groups, and that from the Northern area this would be affected through North America. If so, Canada would expect to have a share of responsibility. Unless we have an Inter-Governmental Committee it will be difficult to arrange division of responsibility and at the same time coordinate policy between the two areas.

10. I should be grateful if you would discuss this matter as early as possible when you have an opportunity with the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs and report his views. It might also be useful if you would inform the High Commissioners of the other Dominions of this proposal. Copies of this despatch are being sent to the Canadian High Commissioners in Australia, New Zealand and South Africa with instructions to discuss this proposal informally with the appropriate authorities. We are also informing the Canadian Ambassador in Washington, but will tell him not to approach the United States Government for the present.

11. The Service Departments of the Canadian Government have been consulted and concur in the views set forth above.

London, July 11, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 694 of May 10th concerning the proposed Intergovernmental Committee for Prisoners of War and Civilians in the Far East, and to enclose a copy of a letter dated July 6th which I have sent to the Secretary of State for the Dominions,† asking his views upon this proposal. Somewhat similar letters have gone to the Secretary of State for India and to the High Commissioners for New Zealand, Australia and South Africa.† The letters to the High Commissioners, however, were sent simply for information.

2. I do not know how urgently you wish a decision upon this matter. As you know, it has been discussed informally between the officers in Canada House and in the United Kingdom departments most concerned over a period of some weeks, and while no unfavourable views have been expressed, not much progress towards a reply seems to have been made. It will have occurred to you that the United Kingdom officials may wish to proceed some distance in their planning and in the communication of their plans to Commanders in the field, before committing themselves on our proposals. Thus they have nearly completed the drafting of a plan for the handling of prisoners of war in the SACSEA and Indian areas, and have prepared drafts of directives for the United States Commanders. These only concern prisoners of war and thus the War Office; the Foreign Office has displayed no eagerness to complete plans for civilians.

3. How far the War Office will wish to carry their own planning before expressing their views upon the proposals I do not know. They now intend to put the SACSEA plan before a special meeting of Sub Committee A<sup>50</sup> late this week; the plans for United States Commanders, of course, must in any case go through Washington. A speculation may be ventured that when the SACSEA plan has been dispatched to the Far East, and the United States Commanders' draft has gone to Washington, the War Office will express its views to Dominions Office on the proposals for a Washington Committee. Upon the basis of experience in the European field, it may be guessed that the Foreign Office will not wish to delay an answer pending the preparation of similar plans for civilians. They have never been diligent in planning this sort of thing. However, this may be a miscalculation; they have in general displayed somewhat more interest in their people in the Far East than in those in Germany.

4. It is at any rate quite likely that the Dominions Office answer may not arrive very quickly. Should this be against your interests, I hope you will let me know and send any suggestions you may have for speeding the decision. One method would be to put it before a special meeting of either (a) Commonwealth Civilians Committee and Sub-Committee A, or (b) Commonwealth Civilians Committee and the Imperial Prisoners of War Committee. This approach is slightly prejudiced by the fact that Ottawa has already sought the opinion of the Dominions Governments in their own capitals, but this handicap could be overcome by your requesting those Governments to instruct their representatives here. I fear an obstacle in the way of a speedy decision by any method is that the India Office will have to discuss the question with the Government of India. All other Governments have had time to think the matter over as a result of formal or semi-formal communications, but it was realized rather late in the day that India had not been consulted except by a completely informal talk between Mr. Scott and Mr. Swinnerton.<sup>51</sup> As I have previously mentioned (my telegram 1768 of June 22nd),† India's difficulty will be the provision of a representative of adequate seniority in Washington.

A sub-committee of the Imperial Prisoners of War Committee which dealt with policy and general administration.

5. It will not, of course, be possible to imply to the United Kingdom that there has been undue delay in their answer, as the formal communication has so recently gone.

6. So far as known here, the only reply you have received from a Dominion Government is that from Australia contained in your despatch 803 of June 2nd.

I have etc.

It is 100 percent humanitarian. All resources are being pooled and all sufferers are being treated alike. It is my desire to cooperate with General Wedemeyer and all Canada’s Allies in this same spirit. You will, therefore, consider yourself a part of the Allied effort and, subject to the directive which Captain of H.M.C.S. Prince Robert may have received as to the disposal of relief supplies which he is carrying, you will do what you can for all prisoners whom you find in need.”

4. All other resources are being pooled without question and it is my opinion that you would want what Canada has to offer added to the rest. If you approve this policy please confirm to me and to the Captain of the Prince Robert.

RE: REQUEST BY UNITED KINGDOM GOVERNMENT FOR HELP IN MOVING BRITISH PRISONERS OF WAR AND CIVILIANS FROM FAR EAST ACROSS CANADA EN ROUTE TO UNITED KINGDOM

Canada House has received from the United Kingdom Government a request for Canadian Government assistance in moving repatriates across Canada. It is not yet known how many may be moved across Canada; some will be moved across the United States and others will return to the United Kingdom by an entirely different route. However, the number across Canada might be in the thousands.

The Acting Canadian High Commissioner in London strongly recommends that the Canadian Government should agree without delay to offer this assistance in view of the work which has been done by the United Kingdom authorities on behalf of Canadian internees and prisoners of war, both in Germany and the Far East.

The Department of National Defence (Army) is willing to assume responsibility for handling the British prisoners of war and merchant seamen in transit to the United Kingdom.

The Immigration Branch is willing to assume primary responsibility for handling British civilians in transit to United Kingdom but will need help from National Defence.

The communication from Canada House† says nothing of payment. I think that the United Kingdom Government must be intending to pay the "out-of-pocket" expenses in Canada such as the cost of rail transportation. The request for "assistance" means, I think, administrative assistance.

If you approve, we will immediately do the following:

1. Ask Canada House to tell the United Kingdom Government that we will give the utmost assistance; and ask Canada House to make sure that we are not being asked to bear the cost.

2. Ask National Defence (Army) to take charge, for the Canadian Government, of giving such assistance for prisoners of war and merchant seamen.

3. Ask the Immigration Branch to take charge, for the Canadian Government, of giving such assistance for civilians. (I think we should also ask National Defence to meet any requests from the Immigration Branch for help, especially as regards billets and medical service).<sup>56</sup>

RE: MOVEMENT TO "FORWARD AREAS" OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS OFFICERS BEING SENT TO MANILA TO LOOK AFTER CIVILIANS

Our telegram no. 1834 of August 10th to Canada House read as follows:

"1. Understand Foreign Office may be sending instruction immediately to British Consul Manila to approach MacArthur's Headquarters with a view to securing permission for British Consular Officers to go as far forward as possible, (and at least as far as Chinese and Japanese ports) to handle British civilians liberated by U.S. forces. Desire is to give assistance and make a preliminary screening.

The following note was written on the memorandum:

Approved. W. L. M[ACKENZIE] K[ING] 31-8-45.

2. We contemplate sending to Manila a civilian officer in a consular capacity and may wish to send a civilian officer to Hong Kong, Shanghai, or to Japan. Please request Foreign Office to make their request to MacArthur broad enough to cover such Canadian civilian officers."

This telegram was based, I believe, on information received by telephone from the Canadian Embassy in Washington.

On August 11th, we sent EX-2931† to the Canadian Embassy in Washington, which read in part as follows:

"We have informed Canada House of the information received from you to the effect that the Foreign Office are instructing the British Consul at Manila to approach MacArthur's Headquarters with a view to securing permission for consular officers to go as far forward as possible to deal with liberated British civilians. We have told them to ask the Foreign Office to make their instructions to the British Consul at Manila sufficiently broad to cover Canadian civilian officers acting in a consular capacity. We have said we will want to send at least one such officer to Manila and may wish to send one to Shanghai, Hong Kong or Japan.

Please inform State Department of our intention to send one or more civilian officers in a consular capacity to Manila and that we may wish to have civilian officers go further forward to places where there are a large number of Canadian civilians, especially if screening is to be done before civilians reach the Philippines. Inform them also that we expect that the British Consul at Manila will be make an approach to MacArthur's Headquarters on our behalf with a view to securing permission for such officers to go forward."

On August 22nd, Canada House sent telegram no. 2388, which read in part as follows:

"Your telegram No. 1834 of August 10th. Foreign Office will comply, though now doubtful if Consular officers will go forward."

On August 23rd, we sent telegram no. 1930 to Canada House, which read in part as follows:

"Please report on outcome of Foreign Office negotiation re sending consular officers to forward areas. If this plan is approved, one or two of our team would probably visit some forward areas."

We have now received telegram no. 2482 of August 29th† from Canada House, which reads in part as follows:

"Your telegram No. 1930, paragraph 2. Forward movement of Consuls. Manila tells Foreign Office that, headquarters having now moved forward, it is impossible to get this permission. Manila advises diplomatic approach to United States and Chinese Governments and Foreign Office presumes you will make your own. Foreign Office says Chinese have been "dilatatory" in agreeing to re-opening of British Consulates."

The Under-Secretary personally approved the first telegrams to London and Washington, and I gathered from Mr. Rive that the Under-Secretary hoped it would be possible for our men, or some of them, to visit forward areas.

In view of the latest report from London, my personal opinion is that we should drop the project. I think that we can trust the United States and United Kingdom military officials to move our civilians to Manila, where our officials can take care of them. I do not see how we can go formally to the United States and Chinese Governments with a request for permission for our officials to move to forward areas under U.S. or Chinese control unless we know exactly where we want to send our men.<sup>57</sup>

Ottawa, September 1, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 1612 of August 21st† concerning the proposed Inter-governmental Committee at Washington for the handling of Allied nationals in the Far East.

Due to the recent rapid course of events and the conclusion of hostilities against Japan, there would now appear to be no useful purpose in establishing the proposed committee in Washington.<sup>58</sup>

I am sure you will agree that most of the problems with which it was suggested the committee should deal are now being solved by other means and that there is no likelihood that such a committee could be formed in time to consider any residual problems.

I should, therefore, be obliged if you would inform the United Kingdom authorities that the Government of Canada has no further intention of taking steps toward the formation of the proposed committee at Washington.

CAS. 2/17

London, September 4, 1945

Dear Mr. Rive,

On the presumption that with the despatch of the contact teams to Manila for the handling of Canadian repatriates the Special Division will soon be over the worst of their rush of business, I venture to remind you of the danger that we may have overlooked, or may in the future overlook, the obligation we are under to keep other Commonwealth governments informed of our plans through intergovernmental committees here. The arrangements of all governments with which we are concerned for repatriation from the Far East, show how much taken by surprise we all were, and the United Kingdom Government has not given us as full information of their plans as they did in regard to Germany. Nevertheless, they have not done badly by us, considering their general practice of leaving more to chance and to officers in the field than we do. I realise also that we have a cause for complaint against the United Kingdom in regard to the proposed Intergovernmental Committee at Washington. However, that plan having failed, we now revert to the status quo and become bound once more to exchange views and news. In fact up to this moment the War Office have got nearly all their information through their own officers in Washington, the channel being External to our Embassy in Washington, to B.A.S.<sup>59</sup> Washington, to War Office. In turn, our general picture in Canada House of the arrangement, so far as it exists, is derived from copies of some of the B.A.S. telegrams to War Office. The consequence is that at the moment neither Canada House nor the War Office understand our plans, nor how far we are working with the United States and how far with the United Kingdom in the general arrangements.

It is equally and in some respects more important that we should be careful to live up to any agreements we have made with other Commonwealth governments through the intergovernmental committees. I am afraid, in the haste with which we are all moving, there may be cause for reproof. We sail pretty close to the wind, for example, if, as the newspapers report, we are sending relief goods for the exclusive benefit of Canadian nationals when there is a general understanding that all relief is to be distributed without respect to nationality.

The only complaint so far raised by the War Office is in regard to the amount you propose to pay our military repatriates. We are, however, on firm ground here, as we gave Sub-Committee B<sup>60</sup> fair warning of our intentions. I have replied to the War Office to this effect and have not missed the opportunity of remarking that we tried very hard to have all such matters discussed intergovernmentally in Washington. The real purpose of this letter is to make sure that we shall be on equally firm ground if challenged on other matters.

I do not doubt that we may on occasion in an emergency have to depart from previous understandings but if we do, we should, if at all possible, seek the concurrence of other Commonwealth governments, or at the least, tell them what we have had to do.

Canada House itself would appreciate whenever possible a general statement of your plan, both for prisoners of war and repatriates, together with all the specific information which may be made available to us. It is only by such an understanding of your plan that we shall be able to avoid making mistakes here which may prejudice your policy.

I am fully aware of the stress under which Special Division has been working, and it is only in regard to the future that these remarks are meant to be applicable.

Yours sincerely,

S. MORLEY SCOTT

TELEGRAM 2572

London, September 6, 1945

Following from Scott, Begins: Far East repatriation.

Our information about Ottawa's plans is very fragmentary. It is perhaps for that reason that I feel increasingly that it is the unspoken intention of the Canadian services to bring Canadian personnel back by any available means, utilizing both British and United States resources when possible, but applying our own resources exclusively to the benefit of our own people.

On the chance that there is any justification for this feeling, I wish to indicate some arguments against such a policy.

1. By and large, the successful protection of Commonwealth prisoners of war and internees during the war and their successful repatriation by exchange, and after the close of hostilities in Europe, have been the result of close and unselfish cooperation on the part of all Commonwealth countries. It would be a pity to destroy this record at the very close of the war.

A sub-committee of the Imperial Prisoners of War Committee which dealt with financial questions.

2. We are bound by intra-Commonwealth agreements to coordinate our plans and to exchange information regarding our intentions. Specifically, we have agreed to directives for the British zone in the Pacific. We have not formally withdrawn from intra-Commonwealth arrangements for United States area.

3. Preferential treatment for Canadian nationals and exclusive application of Canadian resources to their benefit might well create resentment in other Commonwealth countries and would certainly arouse resentment among the United Kingdom departmental officials concerned in this work.

4. The Canadian services might argue that, once the men were back, bureaucratic indignation would not matter. However, External will continue for many months to need the assistance of United Kingdom officials, military and civil, in the handling of civilians. We cannot afford either to have the Consular and military officials in the field resentful or to antagonise the departmental chiefs in London who instruct those officials. By way of analogy, while it cannot be claimed that Foreign Office has done a perfect job in Europe, it would have been impossible for us to get along without their well-intentioned assistance. Ends.

Ottawa, September 13, 1945

Dear Mr. Scott,

I have for acknowledgment your telegram No. 2572 of September 6th, and your letter (CAS.2/17) of September 4th, both expressing concern that we have not fully communicated our plans in regard to Far East repatriation to the United Kingdom authorities and that we may be employing Canadian resources exclusively for the benefit of Canadian repatriates.

Since you sent these communications you have received our telegram No. 2065 of September 7th,† which was, to some extent, a résumé of our plans. I hope this may supply the answers to some of the questions you have in mind. I feel rather at a loss to know how to answer you fully because you have asked no specific questions and our "general plan" has been made clear for some time, i.e., that the British are asked to look after the repatriation of Canadians in British areas in the Far East and the United States are asked to repatriate Canadians recovered in United States areas in the same way they handle their own nationals. Canadian officers have been sent to Manila to work under U.S. authorities to assist in the latter operation.

I think that perhaps the anxiety expressed by United Kingdom authorities that they are not fully informed of Canadian plans arises because they spontaneously imagine Canadian planning is of far greater scope than it actually is. Similarly, I feel they must have exaggerated in their own minds the extent of Canadian "resources" which they fear may be used exclusively for the benefit of Canadians.

It may be of some value to comment on the paragraphs of your letter and telegram under reference.

First, the letter:

Para. 1. I am not aware of any information of possible use or interest to Sub-Committee 'A' which has not been passed to you. Again, I feel the United Kingdom is expecting more information than actually exists. I cannot imagine to what information you refer that has gone from us to War Office via our Washington Embassy and B.A.S. Beyond names and numbers of our contact personnel going to the U.S. area and transport arrangements for those people which our Embassy may have conducted, I can't see what information can have gone by this route. It is certainly not the channel by which we intend to pass information to the War Office. I fancy these messages went from B.A.S. to War Office solely as a result of the close contact between B.A.S. and our Embassy. In any case, we have not asked our Washington Embassy to take any action or pass any information regarding repatriation of Canadians from U.K. areas in the Far East. Transportation arrangements with the R.A.F. to the Phillipines for Canadian personnel was an ad hoc arrangement which fell into the Embassy's lap out of a blue sky. The only other matter connected with Canada which B.A.S., Washington, may have taken up with War Office is the arrangement to receive and move through Canada U.K. repatriates from the Far East. Our contact for this matter was the U.K. High Commissioner in Ottawa. However, through National Defence, B.A.S. learned of our willingness to help and pressed the matter, eventually getting results before Earncliffe<sup>61</sup> did. Finally, I cannot conceive that War Office really wants to learn the last and smallest detail of our arrangements with the U.S. for repatriation arrangements in the U.S. area.

Para.2. I have not seen the newspaper reports to which you refer, stating that Canada is sending relief goods solely for the benefit of Canadians. We have sent Red Cross release kits to Manila just in case the U.S. authorities do not have enough to go around—these are available for anyone who needs them. Our Red Cross workers will coordinate their efforts with those of the Amcross and other Red Cross people on the spot. All Canadian Red Cross supplies are being pooled. H.M.C.S. Prince Robert has carried Australian (not Canadian) relief supplies to Hong Kong. There, too, all supplies and efforts are pooled for the benefit of all RAPWI regardless of nationality.

High Commission of Great Britain.

Para.5. I do not think we have anything further in the way of a 'general plan' to inform you of. We shall continue to pass you specific information as it arises. Please ask any specific questions that occur to you.

Secondly, the telegram:

Para 1. I shall have to hazard a guess at what you mean by "our own resources". They are: (a) Supplies. I have already dealt with these.

(b) Personnel. Our military teams have gone to Manila to work under U.S. Direction. Their primary job is to help Canadians but they will certainly help any others as directed by the U.S. authorities.

Our External team, headed by E. H. Norman, are to assist in the repatriation of Canadian civilians. They have also been instructed to give the British Consul-General in Manila whatever assistance they can.

(c) Transport. There is no Canadian transport, as such, available. By permission of the War Office, the Letitia is going to make a trip (perhaps two trips at the most) carrying Canadians to Vancouver, after which it returns to the British pool. If there is space, U.K. P.O.W. will also be carried to Vancouver. The U.K. can hardly object to this as they have agreed to it and in any event it is a U.K. resource and not Canadian.

The Prince Robert is a Canadian naval unit, but it is under U.K. command and carried supplies for general benefit.

(d) Reception and transport facilities in Canada. The U.K. have been offered fullest facilities.

I should think that any anxiety as to Canadian intentions to use her "resources" selfishly is completely unjustified and I trust you will correct any such impression if it should arise.

All of this comment applies to the U.S. area in the Far East. Canadian interest in the British area, in terms of Canadian repatriates, is very small and we are content to have the U.K. authorities bring them home as best they can as laid down in the SACSEA Directive.

I do feel that perhaps the U.K. has been unnecessarily exercised about lack of detailed information and [sic] our plans in the U.S. area, and I suspect it has something to do with War Office dissatisfaction that they are not coordinating all Commonwealth plans in the American as well as the British area.

I hope this letter will serve to answer most of your questions and to put at rest some of your doubts. If there is anything further that remains unclear please let us know.

Yours sincerely,

ALFRED RIVE

TELETYPE EX-3701

Ottawa, October 20, 1945

Reference civilian repatriation Far East.

1. Recent information on routing of repatriation vessels makes it clear that the original plan to channel all repatriates through Manila has been superceded and that a considerable number of civilian repatriates are being routed via Okinawa.

2. As you know, our purpose in sending a team of External Affairs representatives to Manila was to insure that all alleged Canadian nationals would be processed and verified by our own officers before their repatriation to Canada was authorized. So far the majority of Canadian civilian repatriates have by-passed Manila, thus nullifying our arrangements. We realize that this change in routing has similarly upset American and British plans for handling civilian repatriates and, therefore, before taking any action to cope with the problem, we would be grateful to be informed whether the State Department or the United Kingdom authorities have made or are considering making any arrangements to meet the changed situation. It has occurred to us that it might be advisable to have one of our representatives transferred from Manila to Okinawa but before making any definite request for this, we should like to know whether the United States or United Kingdom authorities have established Consular representatives in Okinawa.

3. We should also appreciate receiving any information which you can secure of the present setup in Okinawa, including the facilities for processing repatriates, for holding doubtful cases pending authorization for repatriation and for dealing with those whose repatriation is refused.

4. As regards Shanghai, we understand that State Department officials are now established there and we should be glad to know whether reports on Canadian nationals and passenger lists of repatriates who embark at Shanghai can be expected from them. We are assuming that Shanghai being under United States control, the care or repatriation of Canadian nationals in that area is being undertaken by United States authorities. Please confirm.

5. We had considered the advisability of sending one of our team from Manila to Shanghai and have, in fact, instructed Campbell<sup>62</sup> to enquire of the United States authorities whether permission might be obtained for Power to proceed there. We have heard nothing further regarding this proposal and if, in the light of your report, it seems more useful to have a representative at Okinawa, we shall probably reconsider this plan.

TELETYPE WA-5437

Washington, October 22, 1945

Your EX-3701 of October 20th and my WA-5430 of October 22nd,† Repatriation Far East.

1. Special War Problems Division, State Department, are equally disturbed at repatriates by-passing Manila, but until they can determine how long this route will be used they do not propose to send any officials to Okinawa. In fact even the FBI, who were available at various Army Headquarters at a number of places where no State Department officials were located, are being withdrawn, and the Department of Immigration appears to be content with allowing the people to land in the United States and to screen them on arrival. S.W.P. are making strong objection to this.

2. British authorities did not believe that repatriates would continue to be sent other than through Manila and have made no plans.

3. Your paragraph 3. There does not appear to be any possibility of holding doubtful cases at Okinawa as the Army merely trans-ship the individuals as rapidly as possible, or send them right through if they are on a ship proceeding to the United States.

4. Your paragraph 4. As stated in my reference teletype, State Department have asked officials at Shanghai to send passenger lists whenever ships proceed direct to the United States. If passengers are being trans-shipped en route, such lists are of little value except perhaps to inform relatives that the repatriates have at least left Shanghai. The State Department officials are presumably in charge, not only of Americans but also apparently of British, as far as British Embassy knows. Actually the State Department officials are practically swamped as the Army has ceased to render assistance in delivering relief payments and State officials must assume this duty as well. Very little is really known of the situation and it is most fortunate that Brigadier Kay is visiting Shanghai.

SUBJECT: U.S.S.R. SUBJECTS AMONG GERMAN
PRISONERS OF WAR IN CANADA

The U.S.S.R. Ambassador has asked us to turn over to them citizens of the U.S.S.R. found among German prisoners of war in Canada. So far we have found two who claimed to be Soviet nationals and asked to see the Soviet representative. They have been released and are now on their way to Russia.

Clerk, Department of External Affairs.

The Director of Prisoners of War takes the line, in a telephone conversation, that we should not hand over to the Russians any Soviet nationals who say they don't want to be handed over. I discussed this with the Under-Secretary on Saturday and he thinks that the Soviet Embassy might hold that any Soviet nationals among German prisoners of war must fall into one of two categories: either they voluntarily joined the German forces, in which case they are deserters from the Russian Army, or they did so under duress, in which case they will want to be repatriated.

Mr. Robertson is therefore inclined to the view that the only relevant fact is whether or not any man is a Soviet national; that if so, and the Soviet Embassy want him, he should be handed over willy-nilly.

If so, the only question which gives trouble is whether we are to regard nationals of the Baltic states absorbed by Russia as Soviet nationals.

Mr. Robertson has asked me to get your views and to consult you about a letter to Defence on this subject.

IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. At Moscow Conference last October, Foreign Secretary obtained from Marshal Stalin personal assurance that every care and attention would be given to ex-prisoners of war from British Commonwealth as soon as they were freed by Red Army. Since then United Kingdom Government have tried, through their military and diplomatic representatives in Moscow, to work out with Soviet authorities plan for giving effect to this assurance. Bearing in mind probability that large numbers of Russian prisoners of war in German hands would be liberated in western and southern Europe and in view of importance which Soviet Government are known to attach to reciprocity, United Kingdom Government proposed reciprocal agreement to

The following notes were written on the memorandum:

I do not think that we can afford to break away from the position which we have held to for 5+ years; namely, that we keep on faith with the P[risoners] of W[ar] Conv[ention] 1929 and with international law.

I think that we are bound to keep a German soldier, who has surrendered, as a p[risoner] of w[ar] and that we should only transfer him to Russia, U.S.A. or England at his own request.

govern treatment during period before surrender of Germany of Soviet prisoners in enemy controlled camps when liberated by Allied armies and of British Commonwealth prisoners in enemy controlled camps when liberated by Red Army. Agreement proposed was on lines very similar to those discussed recently here between representatives of United Kingdom Departments, of Dominion High Commissioners and of S.H.A.E.F. and A.F.H.Q. Before present Russian offensives started, United Kingdom Government made clear in Moscow that they wished to reach agreement on this subject as soon as possible, but it was not till January 20th that Soviet Government communicated to United Kingdom Embassy their views in a draft reciprocal agreement. Draft very closely [follows?] lines of our own proposals except for new Article referred to in last three paragraphs of this telegram.

2. Soviet Government have been informed in reply that their proposals for reciprocal agreement are generally acceptable to United Kingdom but that, in view of integrated nature of British-American Commands in western and southern Europe, we regard it as essential that agreements on these lines should be concluded by Soviet authorities with both British and United States authorities in identical terms and should be regarded by Allied Commander-in-Chief in both theatres as workable. Further, that we attach great importance to reaching final agreement on precise terms between three Governments as soon as possible and that Foreign Secretary is in favour of this being done at impending Conference of heads of the three Governments.

3. Contact officers have been for some time in readiness to proceed to Russia, but final arrangements have not yet been approved by Soviet authorities. We hope that once main agreement has been concluded, agreement in Moscow on this and other details will follow more rapidly.

4. The Article in Soviet draft about work lays down that ex-prisoners of war (with exception of officers) and civilians may, pending their repatriation, be employed on work in aid of common war effort as to which competent Soviet and British authorities shall agree among themselves. We have given very careful consideration to this proposal (which of course has political aspect) and have reached conclusion that the Article in question should be accepted on following grounds.

(a) Separate agreement under negotiation between United Kingdom and Soviet Governments regarding treatment of Soviet nationals captured while serving in German forces and now in this country provides for employment in United Kingdom pending repatriation and many are now at work. To this extent principle has thus already been laid down.

(b) There are large numbers of Russians in similar category on S.H.A.E.F. hands and many more may be expected. Without right to put them to work, S.H.A.E.F. fear that it will prove extremely difficult to control them.

(c) Agreement elsewhere provides for access to camps and repatriation as quickly as operational conditions permit. By terms of Article in question, it will be possible to ensure that conditions of work are tolerable.

5. We, therefore, feel that this particular proposal should be accepted, subject to provisions to ensure:

(a) That British Commonwealth ex-prisoners of war liberated by Russians would on release automatically resume their status as members of His Majesty's forces under command of British officers and that, if employed on work for war effort, pending repatriation they would be so employed only on that basis and in environs of camp where they were situated.

(b) That in the case of men's camps arrangements would be made for despatch of officers to take command of prisoners of war on liberation.

(c) That repatriation of all British subjects liberated by Russians at earliest possible moment would be sole consideration to be taken into account in deciding their subsequent movements and they should not be moved, e.g., to suit labour requirements.

6. We should be grateful for very early comments of Dominion Governments, if possible before February 5th, in order that they may be communicated to United Kingdom delegation at impending Conference. Full particulars have been communicated to Dominion representatives on Sub-Committee A<sup>65</sup> of Imperial Prisoners of War Committee where matter was discussed yesterday.

Ottawa, February 3, 1945

The whole question has been considered by interested Departments and conclusions have been reached by reference to provisional redraft as referred to in Foreign Office telegram No. 884 of January 27th to Lord Halifax<sup>66</sup> and as referred to in your telegram No. 321.†

Generally, the position taken by you in discussions as reported in No. 321, met with approval. Following conclusions have been reached.

1. The Canadian Government is satisfied that negotiations at meeting of Heads of States should be handled by the United Kingdom on behalf of all members of the Commonwealth.

2. From the military standpoint, acceptance of draft proposals will facilitate the handling of the problems involved since it is clearly indicated that the appropriate military authorities are to work out detailed arrangements.

3. The fact that there is to be a single proposal on behalf of the Commonwealth and the USA and that the Commander-in-Chief in each theatre is to be consulted confirms the belief that detailed arrangements can best be worked out by our representative overseas.

4. Reference Article 1—Acceptable—Would like to make clear, that in the matter of personnel in the forces the designation “British subjects” should be as set forth in para. 3 of your No. 354 so that all those wearing uniforms of the Commonwealth Forces or as identifiable as Commonwealth Forces, should be treated as British.

5. Reference Article 2—Agreed—Feel it is essential that there should be immediate access to Camps by appropriate contact officers, also that Camp Commandants, appointed by the Military Command, be given clear instructions in order to avoid any possible conflict of authority, resulting from the clause which provides for the “internal administration and set up of internal discipline and management in accordance with the laws of the country concerned.”

6. Reference Article 3—Agree, with new Article A included.

7. Reference Article 4—Not entirely clear, but prepared to agree in principle as this will no doubt be discussed in further detail at meeting in London.

<sup>66</sup>Voir le document précédent.

See preceding document.

8. Reference Article 5—No objection—The following points might be brought to the attention of Military authorities when dealing with matters of detail.

(a) Members of the Forces should be employed under their own officers and NCO's.

(b) Status of NCO's should be clarified.

(c) Wherever possible, employment should be of normal military character, and definitely close to camp location and should conform to our normal military routine.

(d) Assume that senior Commonwealth Officer in charge of personnel would have latitude in deciding to what extent his men are capable of doing the work (physical fitness, mental, etc.)

(e) Assume that Commonwealth officers who are in charge of personnel will be briefed as to need of collaboration with Allies, in order that possible recrimination and repercussions may be avoided, when men are advised that they have to work.

(f) The suggestion has been made that there might be reservations to this article because of possible effect on public opinion. It is felt, however, that no action should be proposed that would appear to accord preferential treatment to Canadian personnel, unless similar treatment is also available to all other Commonwealth members of the Forces.

9. Reference Article 6—Agree subject to reservation (a) being discussed.

(a) Feel definitely there must be emphasized the desire of earliest possible repatriation within limits imposed by availability of transport and operational requirements.

(b) Assume consideration will be given to direct repatriation of Canadians, if this is practical and will eliminate delay. (Note: With regard to paras. 8 and 9—for reasons as already taken by you in your No. 321 and as put forward by South Africa, we are most reluctant to agree to provisions for compulsory labour but are unwilling to prejudice the successful working out of the arrangements on this issue. It is thought that every effort should be made to insure the earliest possible repatriation.)

10. Reference Article 7—Concur

11. Additional Comments

(a) Assume arrangements are contemplated for early notification of names and particulars of prisoners who are liberated.

(b) Normally, notification will be through regular channels (which might mean to War Office, thence to CMHQ, and then to NDHQ.) Is there any possibility of expediting through Canadian Embassy in USSR (even if passed for information only and subject to confirmation later by London)? Canadian contact officers working in camps would probably have to sort out names in any event and might pass extra copy of list to Military Attache for transmission.

12. We have not made any comment upon the position taken by U.S. State Department with regard to Latvians, Lithuanians, etc. serving in United States Forces although our position and interests are similar as we have recruited a substantial number of aliens in our Forces.

13. (Copies of this telegram are being sent to Moscow and Washington.) We are informing South Africa generally with regard to the position taken in reply to theirs of February 2nd.†

14. After consultation with Overseas Prisoners of War Committee please reply in above sense to Dominions Office enquiry contained in their D.193 of February 1st. They have asked reply before February 5th.

RE: SOVIET NATIONALS AMONG GERMAN
PRISONERS OF WAR IN CANADA

1. I am enclosing the following documents for consideration
  - (a) despatch addressed to the Soviet Ambassador.†
  - (b) memorandum prepared in the Special Division.
2. If this question were being considered on its own merits and without regard for action taken elsewhere, it would be difficult to avoid the conclusion that we were bound to treat the three prisoners concerned as prisoners of war and not to hand them over to any Allied Government. The departure from the principle of treating the uniform as the determining factor presents very great difficulties. If, for example, the Germans had turned over Canadian prisoners who were technically French nationals to the Vichy French for treatment, the Canadian Government would undoubtedly have raised very strong objections.
3. In view of the action of the United Kingdom Government in turning over very large numbers of prisoners of Soviet origin to the Russians, it is inconceivable that any action taken in Canada could be a determining factor in bringing about corresponding action by the Germans directed against members of the Canadian armed forces who are prisoners of war.
4. In these special circumstances, in order to avoid prejudices to the position of Canadian prisoners liberated by the Russian armies on the eastern front, it may be necessary to turn over these three men to the Soviet notwithstanding their claims of German naturalization. It is probable that the Soviet law would not recognize the legal effect of German naturalization in the circumstances.
5. The despatch as drafted does not commit the Canadian Government to turn over the prisoners, but merely commits the Government to bringing them to Ottawa to be interviewed by the Soviet representatives.

SOVIET NATIONALS AMONG GERMAN PRISONERS OF WAR

In the United Kingdom

22,000 persons of Soviet origin were discovered among the German prisoners of war taken by the British. After rather difficult negotiations which involved the treatment of British Commonwealth prisoners of war released by the Soviet Armies, the British Government agreed to turn over to the Soviet authorities the "prisoners of war of Soviet origin." 10,000 have already been repatriated and 7,000 others are destined to leave during the middle of February.

There is still some difference of opinion as to the definition of a Soviet national. Repatriation vetting has been done jointly by the Foreign Office and the Soviet authorities. A number who claimed to be Poles were not returned. Some Russians were returned against their wishes.

The Soviet view is that the Soviet nationals among German prisoners of war should be returned as Allied soldiers and all proceedings seem to equate them with Commonwealth prisoners liberated by the Soviet Armies (vide telegram No. 321 of January 31st, from Canada House, Para. 1(b)).†

In Canada

On November 30th, the Canadian authorities turned over to the Soviet Embassy two prisoners of war in German uniform who claimed to be Soviet nationals, and who wished to be returned to the U.S.S.R. These two apparently provided the names of two others who were subsequently interviewed by the National Defence authorities, who discovered a third man in the same category. [...]

Each of these three men insists that he went through a process of naturalization in Germany (though he possesses no documentary proof), and that he does not wish to return to the U.S.S.R.

The Soviet Embassy is becoming very insistent concerning the interviewing of [...] by Soviet representatives. It must be decided whether these men [...] should be made available for interview by Embassy officials.

The real question of policy will arise if the three men during the interview, reiterate their claim to German nationality and unwillingness to be returned to the U.S.S.R. and the Soviet Embassy insists on having them. It will need to be considered with due regard for;

- (a) The United Kingdom practice of returning such men against their wishes, and
- (b) The absence of documentary proof of naturalization in Germany, and
- (c) Our obligation under the Conventions.

If the Soviet authorities feel that such men "should be treated as Allied soldiers," it would be difficult for the Canadian authorities to adopt a contrary attitude, particularly as we have turned over to the Polish, French, and other United Nations Allies men of their nationality discovered among German prisoners of war in Canada.

Finally, it must be borne in mind that a failure to cooperate with the Soviet authorities with respect to men whom they regard as Soviet nationals might react to the serious detriment of the very large numbers of Canadian prisoners of war who are being, and will be, liberated by the Soviet Armies in Germany. In any case, the U.S.S.R. insist on tying the two questions together.

H. F. F[EAVER]

P.S.—The above is in conformity with the draft of an agreement between the United Kingdom and United States Governments and the Soviet Government, which is set forth in teletype WA-568 of Feb. 1st. The draft of Article I reads in part:

"All Soviet citizens liberated by the forces operating under Allied command and British subjects and American citizens liberated (?by) Soviet forces will, without delay after their liberation, be separated from enemy prisoners of war and will be maintained separately from them in camps or points of concentration until they have been handed over to the Soviet or Allied authorities, as the case may be, at places agreed upon between those authorities."

London, February 6, 1945

MOST IMMEDIATE. TOP SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 193 of 1st February. We have considered further, in light of views expressed by Dominion Governments, question of proposed Agreement with Soviet Government regarding treatment of liberated prisoners of war. Essential object of Agreement is, of course, to secure repatriation at earliest possible moment. It seems to us, however, most important that, in meantime, position of our prisoners of war liberated by Russians should be safeguarded by some definite Agreement with Soviet Government. Otherwise, there will be no certainty what will happen to them or how they will be treated. We consider that, in all circumstances, best course would be to modify proposal referred to in paragraph 4 of my telegram Circular D. 193 to provide that work by ex-prisoners of war and civilians, pending repatriation, should be on voluntary, not compulsory basis. This is in accordance with suggestion made by Canadian and Union High Commissioners in London. We are, accordingly, communicating with United Kingdom delegation at Three Power meeting asking them to try to secure agreement of United States authorities to our proceeding on this basis.

Should be glad to learn from you, most immediately, whether you would wish your prisoners of war and civilians to be excluded from Agreement on this modified basis. Pending reply from you, we are suggesting to delegation that Agreement should apply in the first instance to United Kingdom, with provision for subsequent inclusion of Dominions if desired.

We regret shortness of time available but we consider it essential to take opportunity of present meeting to reach final settlement of this matter if in any way practicable.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 16, 1945

Dear Mr. Wilgress,

I enclosed with my letter of December 4th† a copy of a memorandum† describing an interview between the representatives of the Soviet Embassy and two Soviet citizens who had served in the German army and who were brought to Canada as German prisoners of war. As was anticipated in that memorandum, the Soviet Embassy submitted to us a few days later the names of two other Soviet citizens in Prisoner of War Camps, and requested that an interview with them should be arranged.

Some delay in granting this request ensued because these two men [...] were said to have stated to the camp authorities that they were German nationals and that they did not wish to have their names disclosed to the Soviet Government. In the meantime, National Defence officers who had interviewed these two men claimed to have discovered a third man [...] whom they also classified as a Russian. In the course of the correspondence with the Soviet Embassy, who were becoming increasingly insistent, the names of all three men were communicated to the Soviet officials.

On February 12th an Agreement was concluded with the Soviet Government concerning, in part, the treatment of Soviet nationals found among German prisoners of war, in consequence of which we had three men brought to Ottawa for an interview with the Soviet officials. Prior to this interview two members of the Department of National Defence and Mr. Malania of this Department questioned them in an effort to establish their national status. A copy of the memorandum of February 26th setting forth the results of this interview is attached herewith.†

A meeting with the Soviet representatives was thereupon arranged and two of the men who had previously refused to be repatriated agreed to return voluntarily to the Soviet Union. The third man [...] succeeded in convincing the Soviet representatives that he was a naturalized German citizen, and the Embassy informed us officially a few days later that this man was of no further interest to them. I attach a copy of the memorandum of March 1st describing the interview between the Soviet representatives and these three men.†

The two Soviet citizens who were to be repatriated were returned to barracks after the interview and were at once provided with UNRRA battle dress, and at the request of the Soviet Embassy were taken to meet the Soviet Ambassador. Subsequently, by arrangement with the Soviet representatives, they were taken to Vancouver, where a Soviet official took charge of them and placed them on board a Soviet ship for repatriation to the U.S.S.R.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

1. A memorandum on repatriation to the U.S.S.R. of disputed persons has been prepared in this office and we hope to send it to you by next bag.

2. Briefly, United Kingdom policy is to repatriate to the U.S.S.R. only those persons whom the United Kingdom recognize to be Soviet citizens, that is persons who lived in the Soviet Union as it existed on September 1st, 1939. Those whose homes of origin are the Baltic States, Poland, east of the Curzon Line, or other places which were not before the war part of the Soviet Union are not repatriated unless they elect to go back. Repatriation of those whom the United Kingdom consider to be Soviet citizens is compulsory. Cruder methods of force are not permitted, but it is demonstrated to the persons concerned that resistance is useless. The United Kingdom consider themselves to be bound to this policy by the Agreement at Yalta<sup>6*</sup> (see Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 273 of 12th February).† The United States have interpreted this Agreement differently and do not use constraint. There is some uncertainty here about United States and French policy, and I think accurate answers could better be secured in Paris and Washington.

3. Best public statement is answer given by Noel-Baker in Commons on 17th October. This answer concerned Baltic States only, but Foreign Office have authorized us to use following adaptation of Noel-Baker's statement if we wish:

"The United Kingdom have agreed with the Soviet Government that each of them will arrange for the repatriation of all the nationals of the other who are liberated by the forces under its command. Persons whose homes of origin were

London, November 19, 1945

TOP SECRET

Sir,

Further to my telegram No. 3385 of 17th November concerning the repatriation to the Soviet Union of persons whose nationality is disputed, I have the honour to enclose copies of the following documents:

(i) Memorandum by Mr. Holmes of my staff, entitled "Repatriation to the U.S.S.R. of Disputed Persons";

(ii) Covering note by Mr. Holmes concerning questions on this subject which have been raised in telegrams to you during your visit to London;

(iii) A comment on the memorandum by Mr. Scott of my staff.

2. As pointed out in Mr. Holmes' covering note, when you were in London you received telegrams from Canada protesting against what was described as forced repatriation of Ukrainians from the British and American zones of Germany and from France, to the Soviet Union.† The question was investigated at Mr. Robertson's request and the memorandum is an effort to provide background information which will enable you to answer questions concerning United Kingdom policy in this regard. Any information, of course, which we receive here concerning the policy of the United States and French Governments would be at second-hand. In Mr. Holmes' covering note there is contained a draft explanation of United Kingdom policy which has been approved by the Foreign Office for our use in public statements if we so desire.

3. It might be well in this connection to refer to your despatch No. 1881 of October 30th with which you enclosed a copy of despatch No. 1248 of October 30th to the Canadian Embassy in Washington concerning the means provided by the Soviet Government for the registration as citizens of the U.S.S.R. of persons who were residents of the western districts of the Ukrainian and Byelo-

Russian Soviet Socialist Republics who are now living abroad. The information contained in this despatch has been communicated to the Foreign Office, who expressed great interest in it. Although no registration has been conducted, or proposed, by the Soviet authorities in the United Kingdom, they have done so in Italy, where apparently they let it be known that the registration was compulsory. For this reason they are particularly interested in the procedure followed in Canada. The Foreign Office state that the situation is in many ways very confused and they have promised to let us have shortly further information on the Soviet registration in Italy. This will be forwarded to you in due course.

4. Mr. Scott's and Mr. Holmes's memoranda you will note, reflect certain differences of opinion among United Kingdom officials. TOP SECRET

London, November 16, 1945

During the Prime Minister's stay in London he received two telegrams from Canada requesting his intervention to prevent what was described as the enforced repatriation of Ukrainians from British and American zones of Germany, and from France, to the Soviet Union. Mr. Robertson sent me these telegrams with the request that I should investigate the situation. After making brief enquiries at the Foreign Office I outlined the general nature of the United Kingdom policy and explained that as a good deal of the information contained in my memorandum had not been made public and had been given to me on a confidential basis I should like to check with the Foreign Office any reply which might be contemplated on the basis of this information. When Mr. Robertson left London he asked me if I would draft a reply and submit it to the Foreign Office.

In view of the fact that this situation, which is one of considerable complexity, is of obvious interest to many Canadians of Eastern European origin, and may be the subject of representation both inside and outside Parliament, I thought that it might be valuable to prepare a memorandum on the whole subject in so far as it can be interpreted in London. The attached memorandum is based on information provided by the Foreign Office and by secret and confidential documents supplied to us by the Foreign Office or the Dominions Office. Any public statements based on this information, therefore, would have to be considered carefully.

In view of the fact that the questions raised in the attached telegrams require an accurate knowledge of United States and French policy I do not think that a final answer to the questions can be drafted in this Office. It might be useful, however, for the Department of External Affairs to have a brief statement of United Kingdom policy on the general subject which they could incorporate into an answer if they so wish. I have therefore received the approval of the Foreign Office for the following statement:

“The United Kingdom have agreed with the Soviet Government that each of them will arrange for the repatriation of all the nationals of the other who are liberated by the Forces under its Command. Persons whose homes of origin were outside the borders of the Soviet Union on September 1st, 1939, are treated as Soviet citizens for purposes of repatriation only if they so desire.”<sup>70</sup>

This statement as drafted is based on an answer given in the House of Commons at Westminster on 17th October by Mr. Noel-Baker concerning United Kingdom policy with regard specifically to persons from the former Baltic States. The Foreign Office has agreed, however, that Mr. Noel-Baker's words may be applied to the larger question as well.

Along with the memorandum I am attaching copies of the two telegrams to the Prime Minister and Mr. Noel-Baker's answer on 17th October.†

London, November 16, 1945

At the Crimea Conference two separate Agreements were made with the Soviet Union concerning the repatriation of each other's citizens. One Agreement, signed by the countries of the British Commonwealth, was dated February 11th and the text may be found in Dominions Office telegram D. No. 273 of 12th February, 1945.† At the same time an identical Agreement was signed between the United States and the Soviet Union. According to this Agreement the British countries and the U.S.S.R. agreed that “all Soviet citizens liberated by Forces operating under British Command, and all British subjects liberated by Forces operating under Soviet Command" would be repatriated. The chief intention of this Agreement was to make certain that the Soviet Government did not hold up the repatriation of British subjects on the grounds that Soviet citizens were being detained by the United Kingdom.

Although under the terms of this Agreement a very considerable repatriation has taken place on both sides, differing interpretations have caused a good deal of trouble. The matter was the cause of some considerable argument at the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers in London. The difference in interpretation concerns the meaning of the phrase "all Soviet citizens." A Soviet memorandum to the Council of Foreign Ministers referred to the failure of the other Allies to repatriate persons from the Baltic States, Western Ukraine, and Western Byelo-Russia "in accordance with the Yalta Agreement." The United Kingdom in a memorandum stated clearly that they did not recognize the Soviet Government's claim that these persons were Soviet citizens, and therefore did not regard them as liable to compulsory repatriation under the Yalta Agreement. The United Kingdom Government would return to their homes persons from these territories who expressed a wish to return, but persons who declared themselves unwilling to return would, as hitherto, be kept in camps to which the Soviet repatriation authorities would not be allowed access.

Although the question raised involved nationals of the former Baltic States, the chief discussion revolved around persons from the former Polish areas east of the Curzon Line. Mr. Molotov made it clear that his Government considered that the United Kingdom and United States had agreed at Yalta that Polish territories east of the Curzon Line should become a part of Russia. Mr. Bevin and Mr. Byrnes, however, insisted that although the three heads of Government had expressed their view that the eastern frontier of Poland should follow the Curzon Line, until this cession of territory had been recognized officially by their respective Governments they could not regard the former inhabitants of these areas as Soviet nationals. Mr. Molotov complained that no question had been raised at Yalta by the British or Americans concerning the meaning of the term "Soviet citizens."

United Kingdom policy is, briefly, to interpret the term "Soviet citizens" to mean people who lived in the Soviet Union as its boundaries existed on September 1st, 1939. All citizens of the pre-war Soviet Union, whether they wish to return or not, are sent back to the U.S.S.R. However, those who in September, 1939, were resident in territories which were not at that time part of the Soviet Union, are not forced to return to the Soviet Union if they do not wish to do so. With regard to those persons who were citizens of the pre-war Soviet Union the United Kingdom has maintained that they were bound by the terms of the Yalta Agreement to use constraint in repatriating them to the U.S.S.R. In their directives they have instructed their military authorities to do everything possible to persuade such persons to return. They do not sanction the use of handcuffs or extreme measures of force, but it is the policy of the military authorities to surround the persons concerned with soldiers, and in general to make such a display of force in the background that the persons will consider resistance to be futile.

The United States policy, on the other hand, has been somewhat different, although they are bound by an identical Agreement with the Soviet Union. General Eisenhower has maintained that no force must be used in sending any persons back to the Soviet Union. The Americans make a distinction, also, with regard to Soviet citizens captured in German uniform. They maintain that it is the uniform rather than the nationality which matters, and they treat all persons captured in German uniform as prisoners of war.

Out of the United States attitude towards persons in German uniform has arisen one of the most embarrassing problems, and one in which it seems to be the view of the United Kingdom Government that the Soviet Government has some cause for complaint. There are in Italy at the present time a number of officers and men who served with the Germans under the traitor, General Vlasov. It is the view of the United Kingdom Government that these persons should be forcibly repatriated to the Soviet Union. They are, however, the responsibility of the Allied Commander-in-Chief in Italy, who accepts orders neither from the United Kingdom Government nor from the United States Government, but from the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington. In the Council of Foreign Ministers, when this matter was raised, Mr. Byrnes told Mr. Molotov that he would have no sympathy with any of Vlasov's men who were in the hands of the United States authorities. He promised to take this matter up again with his military authorities. The question has been referred to the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington. According to the understanding of the Foreign Office Mr. Byrnes has not yet been able to secure an agreement. There seems to be a difference of opinion as between Mr. Byrnes and the United States Service authorities. The United Kingdom are pressing for a decision which will result in the forcible repatriation of these men to the U.S.S.R.

One matter which has caused considerable difference of opinion is the question of the right of Soviet representatives to visit persons whom they consider to be Soviet citizens, but whom the United Kingdom and the United States do not. It is United Kingdom policy to separate from those whom they recognise as Soviet citizens those who are classified as "disputed persons." They have refused to allow Soviet representatives to visit the latter. It is their policy to give the Soviet repatriation authorities full information about, and unimpeded access to, camps and points of concentration of Soviet citizens as recognized by the United Kingdom Government in accordance with the terms of the Yalta Agreement. As for the disputed persons, the Soviet repatriation authorities are only allowed to interview them outside the precincts of the camps.

Citizens of the former Baltic States, that is, Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia, are treated as Soviet citizens for purposes of repatriation only if they so desire. In other words, although the question of the recognition of the Baltic States is a separate issue from that of the recognition of the cession of Eastern Poland to the U.S.S.R., persons whose homes of origin are in the Baltic States are treated in the same way as those whose homes of origin were in Poland east of the Curzon Line. At the Council of Foreign Ministers Mr. Molotov showed little concern over persons from the Baltic States as he said that that matter had been virtually settled in practice.

The question of French policy is one which cannot be very clearly ascertained from London. The Foreign Office do not seem to be entirely sure of the policies which are being followed in the French zone or in France. They were recently assured, however, by a representative of the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs that the French were keeping in step with the United Kingdom on this matter. At the Council of Foreign Ministers M. Bidault was chiefly insistent upon securing reciprocity with the Soviet Union with regard to Alsatians who had been found in German uniform and whom the Russians had been reluctant to repatriate.

The question of the Polish-Soviet Agreement on repatriation and nationality which was concluded on 6th July was raised at the Council of Foreign Ministers. At that time Mr. Bevin pointed out to Mr. Molotov that the United Kingdom's only knowledge of this Agreement was what it had read in the press reports. Mr. Molotov agreed to provide copies of the Agreement. It was not until very recently, however, that this text was made available to the United Kingdom. It was found to rest on the assumption that persons coming from territories which had been ceded to the Soviet Union by Poland became Soviet citizens on the incorporation of these territories into the U.S.S.R., but provided that they might opt for withdrawal from Soviet citizenship before November 1st, 1945, if they so wished. One Article in the Agreement extended application of this provision to Poles at present outside the territories in question. After seeing the Agreement the United Kingdom Government decided that they were under no obligation to recognize the Agreement or the assumption on which it rested as applying to persons coming from ceded territories who were outside those territories at the time of their recent incorporation into the Soviet Union, that is in 1944 and 1945. (There seems to be great difference of opinion over the interpretation of this Agreement, and a special memorandum will be prepared on the subject after further discussions with the Foreign Office.)

In view of the fact that the particular question of concern is the repatriation of Ukrainians to the Soviet Union the policy of the Polish Government in this regard is not irrelevant. According to the Polish Agreement with the Soviet Government, the Ukrainian population to the west of the Curzon Line is to be allowed to opt for transfer to the territories east of the new frontier. Although many of these Ukrainians wish to remain in Poland the Poles are determined to remove them in order to realise their aim of a homogeneous Polish state. It is the understanding of the United Kingdom Government that Ukrainians are being forcibly expelled to the Soviet Union or else being made to opt under duress for transfer.

*Memorandum from Attaché, High Commission in Great Britain,

London, November 17, 1945

My observations upon this memorandum are I fear purely academic. I don't think the United Kingdom negotiators at Yalta had in mind any forcible deportations except of bona fide Russians captured in German uniforms. I don't believe they envisaged the possibility of enforced return of uninterned persons at all. And I don't read the Agreement as calling for enforced return of anybody. It is clear from the surrounding documents that the Russians had uninterned civilians in mind, and they may well have envisaged compulsory return of civilians, but they did not succeed in writing it into the document. I do not think the agreement calls for compulsory return of Russians captured in German uniforms (the Americans are right). The British yielded in practice on this point partly because they did not care much, partly because their camps were overcrowded and chiefly because the Russians would not help our boys until theirs were on the boats.

However Yalta is a long way off and maybe the Foreign Office did not tell me all they were thinking.

When the Agreement was made Canada's only concern in this particular regard was that non-British persons in our uniforms should get home. For a while we supported the principle that nationality followed the uniform. However, the fear arose that if we began debating nationality no agreement would be reached at all. Hence the vagueness of the present text.

1. The following information as to American policy has been obtained from the War and State Departments and was provided on the understanding that very careful use be made of it in respect to individual enquiries. No definite statement has been made publicly, but a press release is expected in about two or three weeks. Individual enquirers are being told at the moment that, pending definite decisions, and in view of the number of people to be moved, no action is being taken to compel the return of displaced persons to their former place of residence.

2. The actual directive to the United States military forces in Germany is to the effect that no United Nations national, Stateless person, national of a neutral State, or person persecuted because of race, religion, or activity in favour of United Nations will be compelled to return to his former domicile except to stand trial for a criminal offence.

3. Special considerations exist in the case of Soviet citizens who may or may not be covered by the Yalta Agreement of February, 1945. The repatriation of these persons is disturbing the Soviet repatriation representatives who have accused some of the Ukrainians of spreading anti-Soviet propaganda. The ultimate decision as to whether such persons will be forcibly returned will be taken at Government level, and in the interval the United States authorities are attempting to identify those Soviet citizens who are subject to the provisions of the Yalta Agreement, and Boards of officers are being set up for this purpose. Pending Governmental decision, none of these persons are being forcibly repatriated.

4. Some indication of the numbers and types of persons involved is given in the section on displaced persons of the monthly report of October 20th of the Military Governor in the United States zone, forwarded to you under despatch No. 2665 of November 14th.†

5. Although not yet available, it is my understanding that the report of the August Council meeting of UNRRA contains a reference to the discussions as to the supply of relief to individuals who refuse to return to their former residence. The Russians are believed to have asked that such persons be excluded from relief, but both United Kingdom and United States stated that such action was not administratively practicable and refused to comply. During the discussion, it was evident that United States and United Kingdom did not intend, at the moment at least, to pursue a policy of forcible return.

6. Other than indirect references, I am unable to locate any public statement on the subject.

7. I am sending by bag today an extract from the London Times of November 6th relating to the attitude of the Russians to the return of persons in their area normally resident in the western areas of Germany.

Ottawa, November 28, 1945

We have been receiving a large number of representations from Ukrainian organizations and their sympathizers protesting against the forcible return of Ukrainian refugees to the Soviet Union. As you will see from the attached papers, inquiries have been made in both London and Washington in an effort to secure some definitive statement as to what actually was happening to refugees from Eastern Europe who did not want to return to Soviet territory. The replies reveal a situation which is far from clear, but I think the following points emerge:

1. The United Kingdom Government is not forcibly repatriating anyone to the Soviet Union unless he is a citizen of the U.S.S.R. as of September 1939. Persons from territories acquired by the U.S.S.R. since that date are repatriated only on a voluntary basis.

2. The United States is not repatriating anyone, Soviet citizen or otherwise, against his will, except in specific cases of persons who have to stand trial for a criminal offence.

3. No one is quite sure of French policy, which is being influenced by the desire of the French to get back Alsatians who were captured in German uniforms by the Russians.

One of the representations received is a telegram addressed to Mr. King while he was in London and signed by twenty-four members of Parliament.† In normal circumstances a specific reply should be made to this telegram and a general statement in regard to the other representations might also be issued. The Foreign Office has given Canada House a statement that could be used as the basis of a press release. This statement gives a general assurance that persons other than citizens of the Soviet Union as of 1939 are not being repatriated against their will. There are, however, certain difficulties which will arise in connection with any such statement.

1. The representations all refer to Ukrainian refugees in general, but there is evidence that Ukrainian organizations are particularly concerned about a group of Ukrainian nationalist leaders who were sponsored by the Germans. I do not think that any assurances we might give could, or should, cover the case of these persons.

2. The question of refugees and displaced persons is a source of friction between the U.S.S.R. on the one hand and the British and Americans on the other, and apparently there was an acrimonious discussion on the subject at the Council of Foreign Ministers. The Russians feel that the terms of the Yalta Agreement are not being fulfilled, and they are annoyed because the Americans are protecting people like Vlasov and his officers and other Soviet citizens whom they regard as traitors. They are also displeased because they are not given access in the British zone to camps containing displaced persons whose Soviet citizenship is not clearly established.

3. It is now clear that the question of the registration of Soviet citizens and the future of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees are both closely related to this general problem of displaced persons.

For these reasons I am not certain that it would be wise to make any statement at all on the question at the moment. I am, however, having an analysis made of the representations we have been receiving, and I will show this to you when it is completed. In the meantime I would be glad to know if there is any further action you would like me to take.<sup>71</sup>

Should we send the information we have received from London to Washington and vice versa?<sup>72</sup>

As you will see from the attached memorandum† we have been receiving a great many representations from Ukrainians in Canada and other interested parties on the question of the forced repatriation of Ukrainian refugees in Europe. Representations have been coming in on both sides of the question, the national Ukrainians basing their plea on general humanitarian grounds while the pro-Soviet Ukrainians claim that the appeal is being made on behalf of a small band of pro-German agitators.

So far no reply has been made to any of these communications, except in the case of a few of the earlier ones to which a routine acknowledgement was sent from the Prime Minister's office. I think, therefore, that we should decide the following two questions:

1. Whether some form of reply should be made to the twenty-five members of Parliament who sent a telegram on the subject to the Prime Minister while he was in London.
2. Whether a general reply should be made to the communications in the form of a press release or a statement in the House.

My own feeling is that it would be preferable to make no reply of any kind in either case and I attach for your consideration a draft note to the Prime Minister† acquainting him with the circumstances and suggesting that no action be taken. If, however, some reply is to be made to the twenty-five

During the past few months we have been receiving numerous representations from Ukrainian groups in Canada and other interested parties in regard to the forced repatriation of Ukrainian refugees in Europe. These representations are of two kinds, and contradict one another. About fifty have been received from Ukrainian nationalist organizations protesting on humanitarian grounds against the return of Ukrainian refugees to Soviet territory. Approximately a dozen have been received from pro-Soviet Ukrainian organizations claiming that the appeals we have been receiving are inspired by a desire to find refuge for pro-German Ukrainian nationalist leaders such as Skoropadsky.

One of the representations on behalf of Ukrainian refugees was in the form of a telegram addressed to you in London and signed by twenty-five members of Parliament including Mr. Hlynka, Mr. Zaplitny and Mr. Tucker.

We have made inquiries in both London and Washington and find that no Ukrainian is actually being repatriated against his will unless he was a citizen of the Soviet Union before 1939 or has a criminal record. The whole question of displaced persons is, however, one of great difficulty at the moment. I would suggest, therefore, that we make no reply to any of the representations we have received concerning Ukrainian refugees and that we follow this policy even in regard to the telegram from the twenty-five members of Parliament.

Your telegram No. 1820 October 5th, 1942,† Jewish refugee children.

The Inter-Governmental Committee for Refugees state that in view of the very great danger of deportation of the refugee children still in France the Committee had decided to make a further attempt to save them. Its success will, of course, depend on the Vichy and German authorities granting the necessary exit permits, but before an approach can be made to them, probably through the Swiss Government, the Inter-Governmental Committee wish to confirm that the various offers by Governments to take groups of these children still holds good.

2. The Committee stated that there are two possible plans, one that the children should be got into Portugal and thence to countries of asylum, and the other that they should be sent to Switzerland in the first place.

3. The Inter-Governmental Committee have asked me to obtain information from you on the following points:

(A) Does the original offer of the Canadian Government to take 500 refugee Jewish children,<sup>75</sup> under conditions laid down in your telegram under reference, still hold good. If so, they would be grateful if you would confirm the exact terms of the offer and how many children it covers.

(B) Would the offer cover children from the whole of France and not only from former Vichy France?

(C) On the assumption that it might be possible to get some of the children to Switzerland as a temporary measure, would the Canadian Government agree to the offer covering these also, if during the war it was possible and necessary to get them out of Switzerland and the children to be removed were still under eighteen years of age.

ATTENTION - MR. WRONG

I have your letter of the 20th instant† with copy of teletype WA-365 of January 19th from the Canadian Embassy in Washington, concerning Jewish refugee children from France.

The alternative proposal to first send the children to Switzerland, contained in paragraph two of the Canadian High Commissioner's telegram No. 18 of January 3rd, would create some awkward problems. No doubt the Swiss Authorities would require our guarantee of admission to Canada before accepting them in Switzerland. After some residence in the latter country a number of the children might be found to be inadmissible to Canada on medical grounds. It would not be advisable to guarantee the acceptance of children from Switzerland on the basis of medical examination which would be made in France a considerable time before the children would move from Switzerland to Canada. There has already been expressed in this country some uneasiness as to the condition of refugees coming to Canada, to which I shall refer later in this letter. I think it would be preferable if the routing via Switzerland could be eliminated and the children be brought to Canada via Portugal.

No doubt the children could be medically examined under the direction of the Red Cross Authorities in France, and I agree that there should not be a too severe insistence on high physical standards. It should, however, be made clear that we cannot accept children coming within the prohibited classes as defined in paragraphs (a) and (b) of Section 3 of the Immigration Act, that is to say, mental defectives and those suffering from tuberculosis or other contagious or infectious diseases.

We recently had some correspondence with the Canadian Tuberculosis Association respecting the medical examination of refugees, they expressing the opinion that there should be a chest X-ray examination before embarkation or on arrival in Canada. The dangers of tuberculosis through its spread, were strongly stressed. We pointed out that immigrants coming to Canada receive clinical examination by a qualified medical practitioner, but X-ray examinations were not required unless the original examination indicated tubercular trouble. The Association subsequently asked that the Provincial Health Authorities be informed of the destination of refugees so that they may, if so desired, arrange for X-ray examinations.

Thus there is some concern as to the danger to the public health of refugees coming to Canada, and it is our view that we should see that reasonable precautions are taken by not lowering the standard of health requirements to a point where children suffering from diseases of the class mentioned might enter Canada.

TELEGRAM 156

My telegram No. 20 of January 5th.† Jewish refugee children. You may inform the inter-governmental Committee as follows in reply to their enquiries given in your telegram No. 18 of January 3rd.

A. The original offer of the Canadian Government to accept Jewish refugee children from France, who are orphans or whose parents' whereabouts are unknown, still holds good. This applies to an initial movement of 500 children which might be increased by an additional 500 when it is known that arrangements for placement can be made. The children would be admitted as non-immigrants for the duration of the war without any obligation later to admit surviving parents or relatives. Satisfactory guarantees by Canadian Jewish agencies for reception, placement, costs, etc., have been offered. They are to be under 18 years and physically and mentally fit.

B. In present circumstances we are prepared to include children from anywhere in France.

C. It is not possible to give an absolute guarantee that children admitted now to Switzerland (or Portugal) for temporary domicile would later be admitted to Canada if transportation became possible. We would be prepared, however, to receive them provided they were medically fit. We should prefer their routing to Canada via Portugal with as little delay as possible on the way. We could not, for example, undertake at some later date to admit a child who while in Switzerland was found to have tuberculosis.

The question of medical examination presents considerable difficulties about which we have been in touch with the Department of State. They have informed us that their offer to receive at least 5000 children<sup>76</sup> still obtains during the lifetime of the present administration and provided that changes in the immigration laws are not made which would prevent its execution. They also cannot guarantee definitely that children sent to Switzerland would be admitted at some indefinite later date. They may ask the Red Cross authorities, if the movement is arranged, to undertake medical inspection and they do not intend to impose severe standards in view of the prevailing malnutrition in France.

We are ready to follow a similar practice but you should make it clear that we could not accept children who are mental defectives or who have tuberculosis or other contagious or infectious diseases.

No. 96

Ottawa, February 11, 1944

Sir,

Upon instructions from my Government, I have the honor to inform you that the President of the United States has instructed the Secretaries of State, Treasury and War to take action for the immediate rescue and relief of the Jews in Europe and other victims of enemy persecution.

In an Executive Order issued January 22, 1944, the President declared:

“It is the policy of this Government to take all measures within its power to rescue the victims of enemy oppression who are in imminent danger of death and otherwise to afford such victims all possible relief and assistance consistent with the successful prosecution of the war.”

The Order establishes special governmental machinery for executing this policy. It creates a War Refugee Board consisting of the Secretaries of State, Treasury and War, charged with direct responsibility to the President in seeing that the announced policy is carried out. The President indicated that while he would look directly to the Board for the execution of this policy, the Board will cooperate with the Intergovernmental Committee, United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, and other interested international organizations. The President stated that he expected the cooperation of all members of the United Nations and other governments in carrying out this difficult but important task. He stated that the existing facilities of the State, Treasury and War Departments would be employed to furnish aid to Axis victims to the fullest extent possible, and he stressed that it was urgent that action be taken to forestall the plot of the Nazis to exterminate the Jews and other persecuted minorities in Europe.

My Government is hopeful that it may be informed of the attitude of the Canadian Government in the matter.

No. 28

Ottawa, March 11, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your Note No. 96 of February 11th, in which you informed me of the measures taken by the President of the United States for the assistance of refugees in Europe through the establishment of the War Refugee Board. It is noted that the Board will cooperate with the Intergovernmental Committee and with UNRRA in measures to be taken for refugee assistance.

In reply to your final paragraph concerning the attitude of the Canadian Government, may I refer you to the statement made by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on July 9th of last year? In that statement the Prime Minister outlined the measures which were being taken by the Canadian Government to help relieve refugees from Nazi aggression. During the last ten years a good many refugees from political, religious and racial persecution have found asylum in Canada. Our records, like those of the United States, do not identify "refugees" as a separate class of entrant. Many of those admitted for permanent settlement during this period could probably be regarded as refugees, and this is probably true of a much higher proportion of persons granted "temporary admission" during the war years. In the statement already cited, the Prime Minister said that, while it was obviously impossible for the Government to give a general undertaking that all persons who had been granted temporary admission would be enabled to stay in Canada after the war, nevertheless individual applications for permission to remain would be given sympathetic consideration. A further measure intended to assist in meeting the refugee problem was taken in October of last year when the Canadian Government reopened its Immigration Office in Lisbon in order to facilitate the issuance of visas to refugee families in Spain and Portugal who might wish to proceed to this country.

In addition to facilitating the admission to Canada of refugee families who are able to leave Europe, the Canadian Government has recently renewed its offer to accept up to 1,000 Jewish refugee children from France if they can be got out. The circumstances of our offer were essentially the same as those underlying a similar offer made by your Government to receive up to 5,000 children, with the exception of the fact that we have authorized their acceptance up to the age of eighteen, while for admission to the United States they must not be over sixteen.

A third group of refugees in which this country has been interested is made up of persons who were interned in the United Kingdom in the summer of 1940 at the time when the imminent danger of German invasion compelled the United Kingdom Government to intern all male enemy aliens, within certain age groups, who happened to be residing in certain prescribed areas in the United Kingdom. Over 4,000 of these were brought to Canada under a special arrangement with the United Kingdom Government. The records and credentials of all were examined with great care and the majority have long since been released. Of those released, some have returned to the United Kingdom and some have gone elsewhere, but over 900 remain in Canada. Since December 10th, 1943, these 900 have been at complete liberty in this country and are under no restrictions arising out of the fact that they are refugees or were at one time, as a purely precautionary measure, interned. They are, of course, subject to the general regulations which apply to all enemy aliens in this country. In the majority of cases the good faith and sympathies of the refugees are beyond any doubt and in these instances they are absolved even of the requirement of reporting to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, except at very rare intervals. As your Government is aware, from previous correspondence, a number of the refugees in this group have relatives or close friends in the United States and are anxious to proceed there. Now that their release in Canada has been made completely unconditional, it is hoped that your Government can see its way clear to contribute to their further assistance by allowing those who are otherwise eligible for entry into the United States to do so.

I shall be glad to hear from you of the progress of the War Refugee Board in dealing with the refugee problem.

Ottawa, April 17, 1944

Sir,

I have the honor to refer to your Note No. 28 dated March 11, 1944, relative to the rescue and relief of European refugees.

I have now been advised by the Department of State that it has authorized American Consuls in Switzerland to issue up to 4,000 quota immigration visas to refugee children under 16, irrespective of nationality, religion, or citizenship status, and regardless of means of transportation to the United States. The purpose of this authorization is to assist in the escape of orphaned or abandoned children from enemy-occupied or controlled areas, and to assure the Swiss Government that the children will not remain in that country after the war. The authorization contains provisions for the renewal of visas until the children have been enabled to travel to the United States. To assure that the children will not become public charges, private sources in the United States have posted bond with the Attorney General.

I have been instructed to suggest a similar course of action in respect of the offer of the Canadian Government to take 1,000 children. Accordingly, I should be glad to be informed of the attitude of the Canadian Government in the premises.

I am in receipt of your letter of the 20th instant† relating to refugee children from France to be given shelter in Switzerland.

While as you indicate the wording of Note #134 from the United States Ambassador does not clearly set out the conditions under which the United States Government will accept the 4000 children under 16 years of age, I think the intention is to admit these children to the United States as immigrants for permanent residence; you will observe it is stated that quota immigration visas will be issued. Further, it is unlikely that medical inspection would be waived for quota immigrants. It is probably the intention to grant visas to children already in Switzerland as you mention, such action being expected to encourage the Swiss to admit an equivalent number of other refugees.

Canada's offer is to admit up to 1000 children under non-immigrant status for the duration of the war subject to their passing medical inspection, and I think we should adhere to these conditions. To agree to admission as immigrants, i.e., for permanent residence, would raise a number of difficult questions, such as the matter of adoption and in many instances, the admission at a later date of one or both parents and other members of the family. The question of medical examination is important for the reasons set out in the third and fourth paragraphs of my letter of January 21st last.

If arrangements could not be made with the United States authorities for the medical examination by their officers in Switzerland, the same could be performed by doctors selected by the British Embassy; the expense to be borne by the JDC<sup>77</sup> under an arrangement similar to that presently operating in Lisbon. I think it should be understood, however, that we cannot accept children unable to pass medical inspection, irrespective of the length of time they may remain in Switzerland.

With regard to the cost of maintenance in Switzerland, it is my opinion that Canada should accept no direct responsibility in this connection. Our undertaking to date is to accept a certain number of children, they to be received and placed under the guarantee of the United Jewish Refugee and War Relief Agencies. If the question of maintenance in Switzerland becomes an issue, should this not be dealt with by the Intergovernmental Committee.

I agree with the last paragraph of your letter that some additional information should be obtained from the United States Government in order to clear up the obscure points in Note n° 134; the following points occur to me,

(a) Does the authorization given United States Consuls in Switzerland deal with children before they reach that country and, if so, what machinery will be used for their selection.

(b) Will the children be admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

(c) Will medical examination be waived—if not, what will be the standards required.

(d) If medical examination is necessary before visa is issued, will a further medical examination be demanded before expired visas are renewed.

It would be well to obtain information on these various points before replying to the United States Ambassador's inquiry.

suggesting that a similar course of action might be adopted in respect of the offer of the Canadian Government to accept 1,000 children.

Since receipt of your note, an opportunity has arisen of discussing the general situation respecting refugees and the Canadian and United States offers to receive refugee children with Sir Herbert Emerson, the Executive Director of the Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees, who recently visited Ottawa. The Canadian authorities were gratified to learn from him that the offers made by the Governments of the United States and Canada to receive refugee children from France have been useful in encouraging the Swiss authorities to grant temporary admission to additional children from France, since the existence of these offers has assured the Swiss authorities that they will not have permanently to retain in Switzerland all the children for whom they have generously granted asylum.

In connection with the authorization granted to United States Consuls in Switzerland to issue visas forthwith to refugee children, it is assumed that the principal purpose of this action is further to reassure the Swiss Government that a permanent destination can be found in the United States for the children receiving visas when their exit from Switzerland becomes possible? The offer made by the Canadian Government was for the reception of refugee children in Canada for the duration of the war, and before the suggestion made in your note can be further considered, I should be glad to receive additional information on the action taken by the Government of the United States.

Information in particular would be welcomed on the following points. Is the assumption correct that United States visas will be issued only to children already in Switzerland? Will the children for whom visas are issued be admissible to the United States for permanent residence when their movement becomes possible? Is a medical examination required before a visa is issued, and, if so, will a further medical examination be required if a considerable period of time elapses before the visa can be employed?

On receipt of information on these particular points, further consideration can be given to your suggestion for action on the part of the Canadian Government.<sup>78</sup>

President, the Jewish Agency for Palestine and the World Zionist Organization to High Commissioner in Great Britain

May 22nd, 1944

Dear Mr. Massey,

I have received from Mr. Freiman<sup>79</sup> of Ottawa a copy of his correspondence with Mr. Mackenzie King of December last,† and also of a Minute of a conversation between Mr. Mackenzie King, Dr. Goldman,<sup>80</sup> and Mr. Freiman of March 27th, 1944.† I was very happy to note that in that interview the Prime Minister showed himself sympathetic to possible new developments in our favour in the Palestinian policy of H.M.G.

May I however draw your attention, and, through you, that of the Prime Minister, to certain points in his letter to Mr. Freiman of December 24th.† He speaks of our pressing "for withdrawal of the White Paper and for promotion of a larger immigration into Palestine than was contemplated in the British undertakings to the Jews as defined in the Churchill White Paper of 1922."<sup>81</sup> But we here have never asked for that. The MacDonald White Paper of 1939<sup>82</sup> does not confirm, but abrogates, the Churchill White Paper. Mr. Churchill himself saw it in that light when, during the Debate on the MacDonald White Paper on May 23rd, 1939, he described its immigration clauses as "a breach and repudiation of the Balfour Declaration,"<sup>83</sup> as "a new and sudden default," and "a one-sided denunciation of an engagement." I can say with authority that Mr. Churchill stands by these views.

The White Paper of 1939 was part of the appeasement policy of those years, and the Jews, like other victims, were assured that it was all for their own good. In reality it has prevented the rescue of thousands of Jews who have died in torture under the Nazis, it has embittered British-Jewish relations in Palestine and possibly elsewhere, and has produced very poor results on the Arab side (see the subsequent activities of the Mufti of Jerusalem and of Jemal Husseini, leader of the Arab-Palestine Delegation at the London Conferences of February 1939,<sup>84</sup> the Irak revolt,<sup>85</sup> Egyptian neutrality, etc.)

Millions of Jews have perished under the Nazis, but even so it is estimated that some 2,000,000 are likely to survive on the European Continent, outside Soviet Russia. The vast majority of them will have been completely uprooted, and the anti-Semitism fostered under Hitler will not end with him (see, as a small but instructive illustration what is happening even in the Polish Army in Scotland). It would be idle to expect, and cruel to encourage, re-settlement of these people among the ghosts of their dead, and surrounded by anti-Semitic populations. In these circumstances large-scale emigration will be unavoidable. In the past such emigration went first and foremost to English-speaking countries, which by now have a Jewish population of almost 6,000,000—that is to say, probably more than half of world-Jewry after the war. The natural tendency of people in search of new homes would be to turn to their relatives and friends whose economic basis has not been destroyed in the war. But these countries will be facing great difficulties of their own in the post-war reconstruction period, and are unlikely to welcome Jewish mass-immigration; moreover, from the Jewish point of view it is far more desirable, even from a merely utilitarian angle, to re-settle emigrants on a solid national basis in a Jewish State, rather than to send them where they are bound to create new problems.<sup>86</sup>

The last 50 years have shown what Jews can do in Palestine. We ask that the Balfour Declaration and the Mandate should now receive their logical conclusion: the development of the Jewish National Home into a Jewish State. I should be happy if that State was admitted into the British Commonwealth.

Yours v. sincerely,

C. WEIZMANN

I am looking forward to see you tomorrow morning.

Mr. Weizmann's letter to Mr. Massey raises four points of special interest:

1. He apparently hopes that through the good offices of Mr. Churchill a change may be effected again in United Kingdom policy toward Palestine. If we are to receive frequent representations on this subject it might be an advantage for us to have occasional indications from the Colonial Office as to what is going on. As a rule we are informed only when the subject is being discussed through the Foreign Office with the governments of the United States, Egypt or Iraq. We could be surer of our ground, perhaps, if we had a little more advance information.

2. The assertion that thousands of Jews have perished in Europe because a haven was not assured them in Palestine is not borne out by the testimony of Sir Herbert Emerson, who says that on the contrary the difficulty has been to obtain safe-conducts to get refugees out of Europe to any haven whatsoever.

3. Page 2, second half of paragraph 1: I believe it is true to say that the late Mr. Freiman as President of the Zionist Organization of Canada never made representations of this nature to the Canadian Government. Both as a citizen and as honorary president of the Jewish Immigrant Aid Society of Canada he hoped that this country might take a proportionate share in relieving the distress of European Jews.

Dr. Weizmann recognizes that many Jewish refugees will wish to join their kinsfolk in the western hemisphere, but instead of asking for sympathetic consideration of their pleas he reminds Mr. Massey of the "great difficulties" western countries will face after the war, suggests that the arrival of Jewish immigrants in this country would be "bound to create new problems" and offers Palestine—by implication—as a haven to which they may repair without raising difficult issues. This is Dr. Weizmann's customary approach to western governments.<sup>88</sup> Non-Zionist Jews resent it on the ground that it implies discrimination against Jewish as compared with non-Jewish immigrants and consequently affects the status of established Jewish communities. They see in it a nullification of the guarantee embodied in the Balfour Declaration that the building up of the Jewish National Home was not to prejudice the rights or political status of such communities in any part of the world.

Marginal note:

I'm disinclined to get the P[rime] M[inister] into an argument with Mr. Weizmann.

4. To ascribe Polish anti-Semitism to Nazi propaganda is to forget the whole recent history of Polish Jewry. Dr. Weizmann insists on the effectiveness of Nazi propaganda because he wishes to encourage wholesale Jewish emigration to Palestine from Central and Eastern Europe. A different spirit animates non-Zionist Jews, who are preparing with some courage to rebuild for the Jews the position in Europe which is their due. The recent creation of a Committee for the Restoration of Judaism in France is only one evidence of the active effort they are prepared to make on the basis of Allied victory.

ASYLUM FOR JEWS RELEASED FROM HUNGARY

On July 7th, 1943 the War Committee approved a draft statement on admission of refugees to Canada for presentation in the House of Commons by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.<sup>89</sup> The statement referred to the work of the Bermuda Conference<sup>90</sup> and announced the readiness of the Canadian Government to play its full part in carrying out the proposals framed at that conference, entailing the reception in Canada, until peace is restored, of a number of refugees in addition to those already admitted. The statement proceeded to enumerate contributions already made by the Dominion toward alleviating the distress of refugees, renewed Canada's offer of asylum for 1,000 Jewish children from unoccupied France whose parents had been deported to Eastern Europe, and closed with an undertaking that in cooperation with other nations Canada would do its full share to help such additional refugees as might be within reach. Later, on September 6th, 1943,<sup>91</sup> the War Committee agreed in principle to the admission of some 200 families of refugees from the Iberian Peninsula, the means for implementing this decision being referred to the Department of External Affairs and the Immigration Branch, Department of Mines and Resources.

A situation has now arisen which may place within reach of the Allies a substantial number of Jewish refugees in Hungary. Since the coup d'état of last March the Hungarian Government is said to have deported trainloads of Jews to unnamed destinations in accordance with customary Nazi policy. It has recently stopped this practice, however, and has notified the International Red Cross that it is prepared to allow the departure from Hungary of (a) Jewish children under ten years of age who possess visas for foreign countries, and (b) Jewish adults and children eligible for admission to Palestine. The International Red Cross believes that once Jews in these two categories have left, the Hungarian Government will be likely to permit the departure of further categories, provided destinations are found for them in the British Commonwealth or Empire or in the United States of America.

On August 18th a joint declaration of the governments of the United Kingdom and United States<sup>92</sup> was published undertaking (a) to accept the Hungarian offer, (b) to make arrangements for the care of Jews leaving Hungary who reach neutral or United Nations territory, (c) to find temporary havens of refuge where such people may live in safety, and (d) to request neutral countries to permit the entry of Jews from Hungary.

Two specific questions have been put to the Canadian Government in this connection:

1. The United States Government has asked whether we will extend in principle to children from Hungary the arrangements already made for acceptance of children from France. These arrangements were worked out in detail in 1942 in discussions between the Department of External Affairs and the Immigration Branch, Department of Mines and Resources.<sup>93</sup> They were based on the acceptance of a guarantee from Jewish agencies of full responsibility for costs incurred and for the reception, placement and after-care of the refugees, questions of guardianship and control being dealt with in accordance with provincial legislation. United States authorities would cooperate in determining fitness overseas and in making transportation arrangements. Children would be admitted as non-immigrants for the duration of the war without any obligation for later admission of parents or relatives. They must be under 18 and physically and mentally fit. While the Canadian authorities would cooperate in getting the children to Canada, no responsibility was accepted for getting them out of France. These provisions would be applicable, mutatis mutandis, to child refugees from Hungary, except that the International Red Cross rather than American consular agents would presumably make the first examination of children to determine physical and mental fitness. It is recommended that the War Committee should agree to accept Hungarian children in place of French children on the conditions set forth above, subject to securing from the Canadian Jewish agencies the same guarantee that they have already offered in the case of the French children.

2. The United Kingdom Government has stated that it would be grateful if other British Commonwealth Governments would consider whether there are any steps they can take toward furnishing temporary asylum for some of the Hungarian Jews. During the war years the United Kingdom has admitted a constant stream of refugees and still continues to do so, so that its own facilities are limited. It has arranged for the reception of many thousand refugees in the Middle East generally, and additional thousands have been pouring into Palestine in the past few months. The Dominions Office points out the acuteness of the problem of finding alternative destinations for any new efflux from Hungary, but adds that the solution must be found without delay, especially in view of the fact that much ill-informed pressure is being encountered arising out of ignorance of the restricted capacity of Palestine.

At this juncture an undertaking to provide temporary refuge in Canada for Jews released from Hungary ought not to involve a long-term obligation. The experience gained recently in connection with the admission of adult refugees from Lisbon and Tangier makes it clear, however, that considerations of security require the adoption of stringent safeguards along lines worked out with the Department of Justice since the arrival of the Lisbon refugees. These safeguards are based on full use of British Security Co-ordination files and the provision of dossiers on each refugee to the R.C.M.P. prior to arrival of refugees at the Canadian border.

The United States Government is apparently preparing to assume a substantial share of responsibility for placing adult refugees from Hungary, but hopes for cooperation from Canada as well as from the Latin American Republics. In the present stage of the war it seems, to say the least, doubtful whether in fact any substantial number of Jewish refugees could find their way out of Hungary.

It is recommended that the Canadian Government should agree in principle to assist in finding temporary asylum for some adult Hungarian Jews, the number and conditions to be subject to later decision when further information is available on the numbers succeeding in getting out of Hungary, the possibilities of transport and the extent of cooperation of other United Nations.

TEMPORARY ASYLUM FOR HUNGARIAN JEWS

22. THE SECRETARY, referring to the discussion at the meetings of July 7th and September 6th, 1943,<sup>94</sup> submitted a report from the Department of External Affairs, copies of which had been circulated.

In earlier decisions, the government had agreed to offer asylum to 1,000 Jewish children from Unoccupied France, and some 200 families of refugees from the Iberian Peninsula. We had also agreed to share in assistance to refugees within reach.

More recently, the U.K. and U.S. governments had undertaken to provide asylum for Jewish children under ten years of age from Hungary who possessed visas for foreign countries, and Jewish adults and children from Hungary eligible for admission to Palestine. The U.K. and U.S. governments had now asked whether Canada could provide assistance in carrying out this undertaking. It was also hoped to obtain the co-operation of the Latin American Republics.

It had been pointed out that the limited U.K. facilities had already been heavily strained, and that the Canadian undertaking should not involve a long-term obligation, although in the case of adults, considerations of security would require adequate safeguarding measures. It did not appear likely that any substantial number of Jewish refugees would be able to leave Hungary.

Accordingly, it was recommended:

(a) that Hungarian children be accepted in Canada in place of French children on terms similar to those established for the admission of French children, involving guarantees from Canadian Jewish agencies similar to those offered in the case of the French children; and

(b) that the Canadian government agree in principle to assist in providing temporary asylum for adult Hungarian Jews, the number and conditions to be subject to later approval when further and more detailed information regarding numbers, transportation and the policy of the other United Nations became available.

(External Affairs memorandum, August 23, 1944—C.W.C. document 845).

23. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, agreed that no commitments should be made at present in view of the confused political position in Hungary.

*Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre*

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

Ottawa, February 1, 1945

On Tuesday, January 30th, Mr. Wrong and I received the attached submission<sup>1</sup> from a delegation representing the Canadian Palestine Committee and the Zionist Organization of Canada. The delegation was composed of Mr. Arthur Roebuck, M.P., Mr. H. A. Mowat, Mr. S. J. Zacks, Mr. Gelber, and Mr. Dowd, who was representing Mr. Pat Conroy of the Canadian Congress of Labour. They were particularly concerned about the possibility of additional Jewish refugees finding asylum in Palestine. There are only 7,500 places left under the 5-year immigration scheme laid down in the British White Paper of 1939. These places are being filled at the rate of 1,500 per month, and when they are exhausted there is no provision under existing policy for any further Jewish immigration into Palestine without Arab approval.

The delegation felt, I think correctly, that the position of the surviving European Jews will be very difficult, even in the liberated countries. Those who have survived proscription and transportation will find their properties and professions gone. Even liberal governments determined to eradicate all trace of Nazi anti-Semitic legislation, cannot be expected to reverse transactions in which properties originally of Jewish ownership, may have changed hands four or five times in the last five years. To attempt to do so for the benefit of dispossessed Jews might itself invite a recurrence of anti-Semitism. In the present situation the case for permitting the largest possible movement of Jewish refugees into Palestine is on compassionate grounds a very strong one.

We told the delegation that the Government have every sympathy with their plea for help for Jewish victims of Nazi oppression. At the same time they themselves knew that the solution they put forward was not a simple one. The Palestine problem was in itself a desperately complicated one, and policies pursued within Palestine would affect the uneasy balance of the Middle Eastern world. The United Kingdom had great and difficult responsibilities in that area towards both the Jews and the Arabs. I did not think that the Canadian Government would wish to press a particular policy for meeting one specific problem upon the United Kingdom Government, which had a broad and direct responsibility for the conduct of affairs in the Middle East. I thought, however, you would be glad to see that a copy of the memorandum was brought to the attention of the United Kingdom Government,<sup>95</sup> which would know that there was a large body of opinion in Canada, as in the United

Ottawa, October 15, 1945

I am attaching copies of two top secret and personal telegrams addressed to the Prime Minister by the Dominions Office (Circulars D. 1911 and 1912)† and also a copy of a further telegram† emphasizing the top secret and personal character of the messages. These relate to the proposals of the British Government for dealing with the problems of Jewish refugees in Europe and the closely related matter of future policy towards Palestine. The central feature of the British proposals is that a joint Anglo-American Committee of Enquiry should be set up at once to go into all these questions. Telegram D. 1912, which contains the text of a draft communication to the United States Government, includes an interesting and able analysis of the position in Palestine and the problems of its future.

A new Zionist drive is now under way, directed towards the opening of Palestine to Jewish immigration. We are receiving here and in the Prime Minister's Office a good many representations from various parts of Canada, asking for Canadian Government support, and the editor of one of the local papers has told me that his office is flooded with Zionist appeals. It is quite likely that there will be a number of questions raised during this session. Our general line in the past has been as non-committal as could be managed, and I think that we should continue on this course. It would seem that the proposals for a joint Committee of Enquiry will be pressed strongly on the United States Government very soon, unless Lord Halifax sees objections, with a view to an announcement on October 23rd in the British House.

We are not asked to comment on the United Kingdom proposals, and I see no reason why we should volunteer any comments. The telegrams therefore are sent you only for information.

DISPOSITION OF REFUGEES IN CANADA

4. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES, referring to the discussion at the meeting of October 17th, said that approximately 3,500 refugee aliens had been admitted to Canada during the war years under non-immigrant status. At least sixty percent of these had applied for permanent admission, in many cases declarations of intention had been filed as a first step toward naturalization.

The majority of these would be an asset to Canada and it had been suggested that appropriate action be taken to provide for their permanent admission, subject to clearance from the R.C.M. Police.

In this connection, a memorandum containing the Minister's recommendations had been circulated, together with a draft recommendation to Council.

5. THE SECRETARY reported that the special committee of the Cabinet appointed at the previous meeting had received the Minister's memorandum and had agreed to recommend to the Cabinet that authority be given to provide for the permanent admission to Canada of the alien refugees admitted under non-immigrant status during the war.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

6. THE CABINET, after discussion, approved the recommendation of the special Cabinet committee and the passing of an Order in Council to give effect thereto.

P.C. 6687

AT THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE AT OTTAWA
FRIDAY, THE 26TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1945

PRESENT:

HIS EXCELLENCY

THE ADMINISTRATOR IN COUNCIL:

WHEREAS the Minister of Mines and Resources reports that during the war several thousand refugees from enemy countries and from enemy occupied territory have been admitted to Canada under non-immigrant status, of whom approximately 3500 are still in this country;

That many of these refugees had become stateless and escaped from the country of their birth and citizenship prior to the outbreak of war, others succeeded in leaving their homes prior to invasion by enemy forces, the majority having been deprived of their property and possessions;

That many have attained prominence in their professions, others being skilled artisans and technicians;

That those qualified to do so have rendered valuable service to Canada in the prosecution of the war; and

That it would be neither practicable nor equitable to compel all such refugees to return to their countries of former residence, nor is it in the best interests of Canada to defer indefinitely the determining of their status under the provisions of the Immigration Act.

THEREFORE, His Excellency the Administrator in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Mines and Resources, is pleased to order and it is hereby ordered that, notwithstanding the provisions of Orders-in-Council P.C. 695, dated the 21st day of March, 1931,† prohibiting the landing in Canada of immigrants of all classes and occupations with certain exceptions, and P.C. 3016 dated the 29th day of November, 1938,† requiring persons seeking to enter or land in Canada to be in possession of an unexpired passport, the Immigration Officer-in-Charge at a port of entry may grant a landing in Canada to any refugee who entered Canada as such under non-immigrant status subsequent to September 1st, 1939, provided the said refugee establishes to the satisfaction of the Immigration Officer-in-Charge that he is of good character and can comply with the provisions of the Immigration Act in all other respects.

Ottawa, November 7, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that consideration has recently been given to the status of refugees in Canada and that a decision has now been reached to give permanent residence in this country to some 3,500 persons who have been admitted since the outbreak of war in 1939. I enclose for your information a copy of an Order-in-Council No. P.C. 6687 of October 26th by which this decision has been put into effect.

As you will see, persons whose status in Canada is altered by this Order-in-Council are refugees who, for one reason or another, have been permitted to enter Canada since the outbreak of the war and who are now seeking permanent admission. Many of these refugees originally fled from the countries of Europe to the United Kingdom. When invasion threatened the British Isles in 1940 they were interned and were subsequently transferred to Canada for safe keeping. The group also includes a number of Poles with engineering training and other technical qualifications who were brought to Canada and employed in war industry. Many of these refugees were highly skilled technicians whose services were of great value during the war. Others have established themselves in occupations such as farming, fishing and ship-building and have become assimilated in a satisfactory manner in the communities where they have settled. Some of the younger men in the group have married Canadian women, and to return these particular refugees to Europe would be to force their Canadian wives into exile.

There has not, however, been any change in the present policy of the Canadian Government in regard to the general question of immigration, and it is not likely that any large scale movement of immigrants to this country will be authorized in the near future. The shortage of trans-Atlantic passenger accommodation, and the fact that members of the Canadian armed forces have not yet been fully re-established in peacetime occupations, make it impractical to consider a renewal of immigration at the present time. A decision on immigration policy is being postponed also because of uncertainty as to the economic situation which will prevail in Canada during the postwar period, particularly in regard to export trade.

Dear Norman [Robertson],

Last Thursday Mr. Creswell and Mr. Herzer of the Canadian Pacific Railway Public Relations and Colonization Departments called to see me in connection with the Sudeten German settlers in Northern Saskatchewan and British Columbia; a matter concerning which I have been interested ever since 1938 when I assisted at Canada House in getting them out to Canada. E. J. Tarr<sup>96</sup> of Winnipeg had already written, asking me to see the gentlemen in question.

The C.P.R. men emphasized that they were talking to me quite unofficially and informally, but thought I would be interested in their story. That story concerns the desire of some of the Sudeten settlers (who seem now to be doing well in Canada) to get relatives and friends out from Czechoslovakia, where, as you know, they are having a very difficult time, and where so many of them, although strong anti-Nazis for years, are being expelled to Germany.

Both Mr. Creswell and Mr. Herzer appreciated the difficulties in the way, financial and political, but hoped that something might be done before long to bring further Sudetens to Canada. I would not be surprised if they make approaches to the proper quarters in Ottawa. The cause certainly is a good one, assuming, of course, that the Sudetens in question are in the same political categories as those who have already come to Canada. I must say I was cheered by the story I was told of the way the original settlers (after initial difficulties and some misunderstandings) had settled down and become useful citizens. I should think that five or ten thousand more of the same type would be equally useful. The difficulties in the way of their settlement would, of course, be less than in the case of the original settlers, because they would be going to districts where friends and relatives had already built up communities.

As it happened, on the same day that Creswell and Herzer saw me, I received a letter from Miss Margaret Ray of Victoria College dealing with the same subject, a copy of which I am enclosing.†

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I have yours of December 8th† enclosing a letter received by Honourable L. B. Pearson, from Margaret V. Ray of Toronto, and also copy of a letter from Mr. Pearson to you from Washington D.C.

The proposal is an interesting one, but I imagine that the essential reference is the question as to whether these Sudeten Germans have the same point of view as those who are now in Canada. I think it is a decided mistake to transport to this country controversies of Europe.

It would appear to be difficult to understand why Sudeten Germans who left Czecho-Slovakia, because of German pressure, could have the same point of view as those who are now being forced out of Czecho-Slovakia because of Czech pressure. I presume, however, that this is a question which will not become a live one for some time, but I would hope that as the discussion goes along, greatest care would be taken before commitments are made.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Copies of your letter of December 4th concerning the Sudeten German settlers in Canada were sent under cover of a letter to the Minister of Mines and Resources and the Minister of Agriculture.† I am now enclosing a copy of a reply of December 12th from Mr. Gardiner. The guarded response which Mr. Gardiner has made to the suggestion that additional Sudeten German settlers might be admitted to Canada, is in keeping with the present policy of the Government, which has decided to post one for the time being the consideration of immigration policy. You will recall that reference was made to this decision in the third paragraph of the communication enclosed with my despatch No. 1297 of November 8th† and you may also have noticed in Hansard of December 14th a statement by the Minister of Mines and Resources. At that time, Mr. Glen said, "At this moment there can be no policy on immigration because, as has been stated by several honorable members, the first duty we have as a government at the moment is the repatriation of our soldiers and the care of the dependents of our overseas personnel. There is, therefore, no immediate long-range policy with regard to future immigration. The terms will not be known until a policy is evolved."

We are, however, receiving numerous inquiries both from individuals and organizations concerning the possibility of admitting to Canada the relatives and friends of persons who have already settled here. In many cases these representations are made on behalf of individuals or groups of people in Europe who will almost certainly never be able to return to their places of origin. I think, therefore, that we shall have to begin to make some preliminary investigation into the question of post-war immigration, even if it is possible to do so only within the limits of our own Department. As shipping becomes available, the pressure for the admission of refugees will increase, and there might be some advantage now in considering the lines along which policy might eventually be formulated. I shall keep you informed of the results of any investigation which we might make here. In the meantime, I would be glad to learn whether or not consideration is being given to similar subjects in the United States and I would be grateful for any information which you might make available in this regard.

Yours sincerely,

My dear Mr. Robertson,

May I refer to the telegram of July 24th, 1943, from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Circular D. 455)† on the subject of refugees, and to a letter of August 10th to the High Commissioner for Canada from the Director of the Executive Committee of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees,† of which you will doubtless have had a copy.

The Executive Committee of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees was constituted by the Evian Conference in 1938<sup>97</sup> as follows: the United Kingdom, United States, Argentine, Brazil, France and Netherlands. In present circumstances the last two countries cannot make much practical contribution to the work of the Committee, although it is still thought advisable to retain their representation on it. The United Kingdom authorities are thinking therefore that in order to strengthen the Committee and to bring the membership more into accord with existing conditions it should be enlarged from six to nine members. The countries which they have in mind for the three new places would be Canada, U.S.S.R. and Switzerland, all three of them being closely concerned in one way or another with the refugee problem. I may say that in this connection the passage in the Prime Minister's speech of July 9th of last year on the subject of refugees<sup>98</sup> and Mr. Crerar's statement of November 2nd<sup>99</sup> have been noted with special interest.

Before putting these ideas to other members of the Executive Committee the United Kingdom authorities feel that it would be well to sound the United States Ambassador privately: but as a first step they would like to have some indication whether, if the other countries concerned agreed, the Canadian Government would find this invitation acceptable. I have therefore been asked to make this enquiry on a purely tentative and informal basis and I shall be very grateful if you could let me have your views. It would be much appreciated if we could know them at your earliest convenience.

I should perhaps add that it is hoped that the foregoing will be regarded as entirely secret as neither the United States, U.S.S.R. or Switzerland have yet been approached in any way in the matter.

Dear Mr. Wrong,

Mr. Robertson wrote to me on the 16th March† regarding the suggestion that Canada might be invited to join the Executive Committee of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees.† You may remember that, in my letter of the 16th March it had been suggested that the next step would be to make private soundings of the United States Ambassador in London.

In the event the Foreign Office have not taken the matter up with the United States Ambassador. The reason for this is that Switzerland is unwilling to associate itself formally with one set of belligerents. It has therefore become necessary to consider what other Government should be approached in place of Switzerland. No decision has yet been taken and meanwhile a proposal is in the air to hold a meeting of the Plenary Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees in June. There is therefore some doubt whether the idea of extending the membership of the Executive Committee on the lines proposed in January will be pursued.

The Dominions Office have explained the above position to Canada House.

Ottawa, May 3, 1944

SECRET

Sir:

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. A. 219 of April 26† concerning developments that have taken place affecting the suggestion made some time ago by the United Kingdom authorities that the Executive Committee of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees should be enlarged to include among others a representative of Canada. In view of the attitude taken by the Swiss authorities, which I can quite understand, and in view also of the difficulties that might be involved in connection with the Soviet position at present, I think it is probably best that no further action should be taken on this particular suggestion. If a Plenary Conference of the Intergovernmental Committee is held this summer, as is at present suggested, perhaps some modification will be made in the constitution of the Committee which will achieve the object of enlarging it and at the same time avoid some of the difficulties that have arisen in connection with the United Kingdom suggestion.

The recent visit of Sir Herbert Emerson<sup>100</sup> to Ottawa provided a very good opportunity to discuss with him a number of questions. Sir Herbert was here from April 26 to April 28 and met members of the Department, the Director of Immigration and Senator Wilson, who heads the Canadian National Committee on Refugees. On April 28 Sir Herbert went to Montreal and I believe spoke to a meeting of the Executive of the Canadian National Committee and discussed some matters with Saul Hayes of the United Jewish Refugee and War Relief Agencies.

The information Sir Herbert gave concerning the number of refugees whose rescue is at present possible and concerning the general location of refugees was substantially in agreement with the details you had previously sent and with information we had secured from other sources. I was particularly interested to hear, however, what Sir Herbert had to say about the possibility of sending aid to distressed persons in Europe, who would be under the category of "refugees," if they could be got out, through the various underground agencies. Sir Herbert clearly contemplates that the major work of the Committee in the immediate future will be in transmitting such aid rather than assisting refugees to get out. As he said, it is possible to help one hundred refugees in this way where only one could be helped if he had to be got out.

I gained the impression that before Sir Herbert visited Washington he had some fears as to the degree of cooperation the Committee would receive from the War Refugee Board. However, he seems fairly well satisfied now that the Board and Committee will work together successfully. He seems convinced that the Board will do its utmost to justify its existence by devising plans to assist refugees in any way that is possible.

We had a number of discussions with Sir Herbert concerning the relations of the Committee with UNRRA. As he put it, the UNRRA plans are at present only in a formative state and thus it was difficult in his discussions with them to go into much detail, but general agreement had been reached on a delineation of spheres of activity. The conviction appears to be that the entire question of relief to persons in the liberated countries—even though they may be non-returnable persons of the category of "refugees," should be under the jurisdiction of UNRRA. Moreover Sir Herbert hopes that the maintenance of any camps will also be undertaken by UNRRA. The function of the Committee would be to arrange for the movement of persons who are not returnable to their countries of origin and to endeavour to secure their placement in countries where they might remain. He appears to have no doubt as to the possibility of achieving an efficient and satisfactory relationship.

According to Sir Herbert, the probability is that the Plenary Conference will be held in London probably about July of this year. Likely topics for discussion would be drawing up the constitution of the Committee, the election of a new Executive Committee, the basis of sharing of administrative expenses, contributions to operational expenses, relations with UNRRA, and the extension of assistance through the Committee to refugees in the Orient (i.e. Asiatic refugees from the Far Eastern War), as well as to refugees in Europe.

Sir Herbert stated that one of the things the Committee would most like to receive would be a statement from various governments as to the number of refugees they would be willing to receive after the war. We pointed out to him that this was a matter of policy on which no decision had been taken in Canada and which was clearly related to the general immigration problem which could not be decided on until post-war conditions were more clearly known. I think Sir Herbert fully understands this and does not expect too much from the member governments at present.

to Prime Minister*

Ottawa, August 9, 1944

A meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees will take place in London on the fifteenth of this month. We are asked to be represented at it.<sup>101</sup>

The work of the Committee has been restricted in the war years by the fact that it was almost impossible to help refugees in enemy and enemy occupied countries, since the Axis and satellite countries refused to let them go. However, from now on the work will probably increase, and it will have to be shared by UNRRA (responsible for "displaced persons" who want to return to their homes) and the Committee (responsible for refugees seeking homes in a new country).

The principal matters for consideration at the London meeting will be:

Marginal note:

Approved by P[rime] M[inister]. 14-8-44

(a) Adoption of a constitution and rules of procedure. There has been no formal constitution hitherto.

(b) Adoption of financial regulations. At present administrative expenses are shared on a basis similar to those of the League, while operational expenses depend on voluntary contributions and are underwritten by the United Kingdom and the United States.

(c) Liaison and cooperation with UNRRA, I.L.O., League High Commissioner for Refugees, and the War Refugee Board (U.S.A.), and with non-governmental organizations.

An enlarged executive committee will also be elected. Points which require immediate consideration are the following:

(a) Our representation on the Committee

I think that Mr. Massey should act as our delegate. It would, I think, be desirable to have Mr. Gordon Robertson, who has been handling refugee matters in the Department, go over to London to assist Mr. Massey.

(b) Whether we would be willing to serve on the Executive Committee

It is very probable that we will be asked to do so. Last February you approved a preliminary proposal that we should join the Executive, and I think we should do so if again asked. Mr. Massey could be our representative.

(c) Whether our representative should be authorized to agree, on behalf of Canada, to financial regulations if it is proposed to put the operational expenses on a sharing basis

At present we pay 5 percent of the administrative expenses—last year coming to £1,295. If the operational expenses were put on the same bases, our estimated share next year would be about £50,000. I think the present voluntary basis is inadequate. The work of the Committee is going to be necessary, and I think we must be prepared to meet a fair share of the costs which, in any case, will be largely in sterling. In view of this I think we should be prepared to agree to an equitable basis of sharing. Later the work of the Committee should be placed under the general direction of the new World Organization, and its activities might be reviewed each year by the new Assembly.

(d) Whether our representative should be authorized to agree, on behalf of Canada, to the constitution, as it may be amended in the Committee

All countries are being asked so to empower their delegates in order that the constitution can go into effect at once. The draft constitution is not perfect, but it is satisfactory on the whole. I think authority of this type could safely be given.

Since the meeting begins on August 15th, we should issue instructions to Mr. Massey at once.

Ottawa, October 24, 1945

Your telegram No. 3065 of October 22nd, Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees. Please discuss with Mr. Robertson<sup>104</sup> the question of our delegation at the Paris meeting. I think that we cannot send anyone from here. We expect to be represented at five different international meetings during mid-November and this particular one will probably be unimportant. I should hope that Scott would still be available and the delegation might perhaps be composed of the Ambassador or Counsellor in Paris and him.

2. We are favourably impressed by the proposals of the United Kingdom Government for merging the Committee with the United Nations Organization. Would you discuss with our representatives on the Executive Committee the instructions which might be given to our representatives at the Paris meeting and submit suggestions for our consideration?

Ottawa, November 19, 1945

SECRET. Address Paris No. 562. Repeated London No. 2736.

Your telegram No. 589 of November 3rd. Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees.

Instructions for Magann for use at Plenary Session of Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees are as follows, Begins: In general the Canadian Government approves proposals which have been made for the integration by some means of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees within the framework of the United Nations Organization. As between absorption of Intergovernmental Committee by the United Nations Organization, as defined in paragraph 1a of Memorandum of October 26th by Director of Committee, paper IC/EX/64,† or affiliation as a specialized agency as defined in paragraph 2b of same Memorandum, we have no preference. You may, therefore, support any reasonable proposal for absorption or affiliation which is placed before the meeting, especially if such proposal has the support of both the United Kingdom and United States governments. If it is possible for you to do so before vote is taken, you should refer specific proposal to us for advice, giving brief indication as to the nature of the discussion which has taken place. If either the proposal for absorption in the United Nations Organization or for [sic] the proposal for affiliation as a specialized agency is adopted by the

Plenary Session, you may then support any reasonable proposal as to procedure for approaching the United Nations Organization for the purpose of effecting the change.

In regard to questions concerning financial contributions to the Intergovernmental Committee you should accept no commitments for the Canadian Government other than those already made for administrative expenses during 1945.<sup>108</sup> You may, however, agree to submit any reasonable suggestion to your government, at the same time indicating our willingness to bear our fair share of both administrative and operational expenses. You should, at the same time, indicate that we regard the voluntary basis of financing operational expenditure as unsatisfactory and press for the adoption of a suitable method of allocating contributions to these expenses. There would be objections, however, to applying the scale used for administrative expenses. This is based on the League of Nations scale which undercharges the United States and possibly some other Great Powers. If a satisfactory allocation is worked out by the United Nations Organization, it might be applied by the Intergovernmental Committee. It is understood that a decision to absorb the Intergovernmental Committee in the United Nations Organization will probably result in postponement of consideration of future financial policy. These instructions, however, should be followed in discussions concerning operational expenses which have been incurred to date and towards which no Canadian contribution has been made.

You should ask for further instructions before accepting commitments on any proposals concerning questions raised at the meetings which have not been included in the Agenda. For example, no commitment should be made in regard to proposed travel document. Ends.

Paris, December 21, 1945

Sir,

With reference to your telegram No. 562 of November 19th, concerning the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, I have the honour to enclose herewith two copies of a memorandum by Mr. Scott regarding the Fifth Plenary Session of the I.G.C.; two copies of the resolution adopted by the Plenary Session regarding the United Kingdom's proposal for the absorption of the I.G.C. by the United Nations Organization are attached to the enclosed memorandum. Also enclosed for your convenience there are copies of I.G.C. Fifth Plenary Session, Item 5, Consideration of the Budget for 1946,† and the Report of the Director.†

2. In the absence of Minutes which I have not yet received I have forwarded Mr. Scott's memorandum covering the proceedings of the Plenary Session. The Minutes† will be sent to you as soon as these are received.

3. Owing to the large number of messages being handled by our Cypher Clerks and to the failure of the French transmitting agencies to deliver your message promptly, I regret that your telegram No. 562 which is under reference and subsequent messages† containing instructions were not received until too late for action in the Session.

4. I agree with the observations which Mr. Scott has made in his memorandum. I should like, however, to add that during the discussion of the administrative and operating budgets the United States representative and, to a lesser degree, the United Kingdom's representative displayed a marked interest in the possibility of their countries being relieved of their financial responsibility as joint underwriters of the operational expenditures.

5. In this connection, it is worthy of note that the Director of the I.G.C. emphasized very strongly the need for continued financial contributions from the Member Governments. It is unlikely that the active work of the social and economic council of U.N.O. could start before the middle of the year 1946 at the earliest. The projects already underway for 1945 and those approved, or still to be approved, for 1946 must have adequate financial support. This statement was strongly supported by the United Kingdom and the French delegates, each of whom gave an assurance that their Governments intended to continue their support. The United States delegate especially stressed this point, mentioning that the United States Congress would certainly notice what contributions from other Governments had been made when the estimates came before Congress.

6. From the files which I have read, it would seem to be clearly the intention of the Canadian Government to make a fair contribution to the operational expenses. It is understood, however, that no contribution for 1944 is now desired as the actual expenses for that year were almost negligible. I feel that the 1945 contribution should be made as soon as possible and since it must receive Parliamentary approval, I would recommend that the amount when determined by the appropriate Government Departments should be communicated informally to the Director with the intimation that subject to Parliamentary approval this is the intended contribution for 1945. I would also like to suggest that the same information might be given to the Canadian Embassy in Washington for informal transmission to the State Department whose representative at the Plenary Session showed a very keen interest in the contributions of the other member nations. To delay any intimation of the Canadian contribution until it had actually been approved by Parliament might result in the loss of nearly all of its psychological effect. I may say that several States at the Plenary Session accepted contributions which appeared not yet to have been actually approved and I have no doubt that the Canadian delegate to the Executive Committee could be trusted to handle this communication without positively committing the Canadian Government.

7. For reasons already stated, the attitude of the Canadian Government towards the basis of operational contribution, was not put before the Plenary Session. I did not myself believe it practicable to propose to the Executive Committee, at this state in history of the I.G.C., that the financial structure of the Committee be changed in respect to contributions for 1945 and 1946. There would, I think, be almost unanimous opinion that it was not worth while at this time to enter into such a difficult and probably controversial discussion, even though the present basis may not be satisfactory and the voluntary principle may have strong disadvantages in the present Session, for example, Poland asked to be excused even from their contribution for administrative expenses which is less than £2,000. It would not be satisfactory, I think, to use either the League of Nations scale or the proposed scale for U.N.O. I assume that the greater part of expenses of those organizations is for administration and the principal scale based on population and national income is suitable, but when the bulk of the contribution is for relief and the payments are to be for the benefit of various national and racial groups, some residents in their mother countries, and some others not so resident, the policy suggested in your telegram might be very difficult to apply.

8. In the proposed, but now abandoned contribution for 1944, Canada followed the quota laid down for administrative expenses. This policy, if followed by all the States which are capable of contributing, would not meet all the operational expenses since there must be some States, such as Poland, which will not contribute at all, and which will not contribute to that extent.

9. My suggestion then is that the Canadian contribution for 1945 be based upon the estimated expenditure of £1,100,000; this is half way between the lower figure given by the Director at the Plenary Session and the figure given in his letter to Mr. Morley Scott of October 30th, which was sent to you in Canada House Despatch No. A-528 of that date.† The amount which is proposed to Parliament might be communicated informally to the Directorate with the necessary safeguards. Canada House might also be instructed to ask the Director upon what figure the contribution for 1946 should be based. In my opinion, the Canadian contribution should not be less than that which would be given were the quota for administrative expenses followed, and favourable consideration could perhaps be given to the recommending of a larger amount than that, in order to balance the inability or unwillingness of some other States to contribute.

I have etc.

Memorandum by Attaché, High Commission in Great Britain<sup>109</sup>MEMORANDUM ON THE FIFTH PLENARY SESSION OF THE INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMITTEE ON REFUGEES

1. The Chairman of the Executive Committee not being present, the Brazilian Ambassador opened the Session. The French delegate was elected Chairman, the Swiss delegate Vice-Chairman and the Canadian delegate Deputy Vice-Chairman. It fell to the Canadian delegate to preside at the morning meeting on the second day when the Chairman and Vice-Chairman were absent. Most member governments were represented, although the South African delegates were prevented by fog from reaching Paris and the United Kingdom's delegation was delayed until the second day.

2. The United States was represented by Mr. George Warren of the State Department, assisted by Mr. Richard Johnston, who has been their working delegate on the Executive Committee. The United Kingdom representative was Sir George Rendel of the Foreign Office, who has been active in matters connected with refugees and displaced persons for some time. The Russian delegate was Mr. Constantine Koukin, who has been the delegate to the Executive Committee. The French substitute delegate (the French delegate being Chairman when present) was M. Raymond Bousquet, Directeur des Conventions Administratives, Quai d'Orsay. The Polish delegate was fairly vocal, obviously speaking upon instructions. Few other delegates spoke except purely formally or very briefly.

3. There was little or no bickering during the Session—indeed—there were few marked differences of opinion. The impression gathered was that the United States and the United Kingdom delegates had come with their minds well made up and the Russian delegate had been given certain general instructions which he was content to follow literally. He proved not to be obstructive in important matters, and indeed to be insistent only in regard to one. There was some reason to believe that the decisive resolution regarding the future of the Committee may have been arranged jointly by the Russian and the British delegates. The French delegate spoke frequently but was very conciliatory. His chief aim appeared to be to ensure that the voice of France was heard on every issue.

OPENING SESSION

4. The opening Session, apart from the necessary formalities, was devoted to the Director's report. As this is already in print, its substance need not be repeated here. He made a fairly long supplementary statement, mostly repetitive. He mentioned in this that there was now an I.G.C. representative at Frankfurt, with two assistants in the American zone in Germany. There was also one in the British zone who would soon be joined by a colleague, and there the Executive Committee could be trusted to handle this communication without positively committing the Canadian Government.

4. The opening Session, apart from the necessary formalities, was devoted to the Director's report. As this is already in print, its substance need not be repeated here. He made a fairly long supplementary statement, mostly repetitive. He mentioned in this that there was now an I.G.C. representative at Frankfurt, with two assistants in the American zone in Germany. There was also one in the British zone who would soon be joined by a colleague, and there was one in the French zone. It would be their duty to facilitate and encourage the voluntary return of refugees. Not many were expected to return to Germany but a number were expected to return to Austria. It is hoped soon to start the Migration and Settlement Division of the Directorate, and an officer was to visit South America to encourage settlement there. He called attention to a recent declaration of policy in regard to the reunion of families made by the British Government, the substance of which I understand has been sent to Ottawa by Canada House.

5. In regard to travel documents, the Director apologized for the delay in the circulation of necessary papers, which was due to printing difficulties.

2nd SESSION

6. The 2nd Session, on the afternoon of the first day, was devoted to a useful discussion of the Director's Report. The more important points raised included the following:

7. A number of delegates, especially the Russian, were anxious to ensure that as much as possible is being done for Spanish refugees. The effect of the discussion will probably be to stir the Directorate to fresh efforts in this direction.

8. Several delegates spoke in favour of the early return of German and Austrian refugees to their homelands. The French delegate said his Government was prepared to instruct its officials in the French Zone and to talk with the Allied Control Commission in regard to the other Zones. The Director maintained here and in other Sessions that it was inadvisable to press for the return of any refugees to their homelands until conditions exist in those lands which would guarantee them a full and free life. He supported the voluntary principle. It was the duty of Governments and not primarily of the I.G.C. to bring about these conditions. These views met with no opposition, though the U.S.S.R. delegate refrained from endorsing them.

9. Linked with this question was that of "protection." This term during the Sessions acquired the meaning of political or consular support given by the I.G.C. Committee to refugees who had returned to their homelands or to those still in other countries. In France, the I.G.C. had become the official protector of Spanish, German and Austrian refugees, and in other countries it had for a long term been acting informally as a kind of protecting power.

10. From this point the discussion moved into the question of the Committee's mandate - the most delicate subject raised during the meetings. The U.S.S.R. delegate maintained consistently that the I.G.C. had been set up to look after victims of Nazi and Fascist persecution. Insofar as these duties have been fulfilled, the I.G.C. might then turn its attention to such people as the Spanish refugees. There appeared to be some evidence, he said, that the I.G.C. was interesting itself in persons who ought to be punished rather than helped. No other delegate supported this view, and the Australian delegate (the Australian Minister in Paris) took by implication the opposite stand. The Director's viewpoint was that the mandate was sufficiently wide to cover all possible classes of refugees whose plight arose through the European situation.

It was for the Plenary and the Executive Committees to determine as a matter of policy with what groups the I.G.C. should work. The Polish representative spoke rather obscurely but apparently in favour of protection for refugees who were at present in countries where their home governments could not look after them, whether for economic reasons or for lack of consular representation. He added that Poland favoured the voluntary return of persons who wished to return to Poland, but reserved to herself the decision as to who those persons should be.

11. The U.S.A. representative suggested that in its proper zeal not to discourage financial help from voluntary societies, the I.G.C. might be expecting too much from such societies.

3rd SESSION

12. The third session on Wednesday morning was devoted to the Budgets. The only significant statement on the Administrative Budget was on the part of Poland, whose delegate asked that Poland be relieved of the need of contributing for 1946 or, if this was not possible, that her quota be lowered. The Director hoped this point would not be pressed, pointing out that as few of the expenses of the Committee as possible were included in the Administrative Budget, in order to avoid hardship to any State. The Polish quota, by the way, is £1,760. It is understood that Poland will write to the Executive Committee asking for exemption.

13. The Administrative Budget was accepted on the proposal of the U.S.A. and Brazil. The U.K. remarked that its approval was without prejudice to the whole question of the future handling of the refugee question.

14. Next came the Operational Budget. It is not necessary to repeat the figures given in the agenda paper. The Director said the expenditures in 1945 might be £1,000,000 or might be £1,100,000. He pointed out the necessity for contributions for 1945 and 1946 being paid, regardless of the future of the Committee, as the Budgets must go forward whoever sponsored them. It will be noted that this point is incorporated in the final resolutions at the last session. This was at the urgent solicitation of the U.S.A. delegate, who pointed out that the U.S. Congress would observe carefully what contributions had been made by other countries.

15. Still under the Operational Budget, the French delegate said that the figure of 70,000,000 francs subscribed by France for 1945 would be at least equalled for 1946. It was understood that this money would be spent on the refugees now in France, but it was, of course, in addition to the amount spent on French persons returned from other countries. Norway would contribute £5,000 for 1945. Switzerland and Belgium hoped soon to be able to announce their contribution for 1945, and the Director said that other States were giving consideration to the question.

16. The New Zealand delegate raised some particular questions on the Budget, including one concerning the large salaries paid to representatives. The Director replied that the most suitable officers were secured, and the salaries had regard to local costs of living and to previous remuneration of the persons concerned. The particular case cited by New Zealand, a salary of £2,800 for the Middle East representative, was exactly what he had previously been paid as an official when employed by the U.K. Government.

17. Lest Canada be conspicuous by its silence in this recital of national intentions in regard to the Operational Budget, the Canadian representative said that while he was not authorised to make any specific statement, he could say that the Canadian Government was giving active consideration to a figure which might be put before Parliament as the Canadian contribution for 1945. He added that it was not always easy for member governments to determine upon what basis these voluntary contributions were desired and he cited, for example, the disparity between the estimated expenses and the actual expenses for 1944. It was as a result of this anomaly that, in agreement with the Director, the Canadian Government had withdrawn from its earlier intention of making a contribution for the year 1944. (It should be added that when the Operational Budget was being considered, the instructions dispatched by Ottawa in External's telegram of November 19th had not yet been received by the Canadian delegate).

18. The Director took this occasion to speak well of Canadian activity in the refugee field, and especially to mention the recent Order-in-Council in which 3,500 refugees are given permanent residence in Canada.<sup>110</sup>

19. The Operational Budget was adopted upon the motion of the U.S.A. and seconded by France and Canada. The U.S.A., in a reservation, approved on condition that the policy of the I.G.C. be not changed. This presumably had reference to the mandate question. It followed an assurance on the part of the U.K. representative that there was nothing sinister and no ulterior motive in the U.K. proposals for the future of the Committee. There was no intention on the part of the U.K. of refusing assistance to Spanish refugees.

20. Reference may here be made to Article I, para. 4 of the Rules for the Constitution,† which reads in part: "No resolution adopted by the Committee imposes any specific obligation on any member, even if the representative of the member has voted in favour of the resolution, unless the member, or its delegate on its behalf and being duly authorised, has expressly accepted the obligation in question."

4th SESSION

(This subject was actually begun towards the close of the 3rd Session).

21. The Session on the third day was devoted to the U.K.'s letter† regarding the future of the Committee, and the agenda paper based thereon. There was no acrimony in the discussion, although it appeared that the Director and the Foreign Office had not reached their conclusions in concert or through the same channels. Sir George Rendel did not criticise the Committee. He hoped that the Directorate would be absorbed in U.N.O. He conceived of the I.G.C. as having been created to meet a short-time emergency. Conditions having changed, the problem having become semi-permanent and a permanent international organization being now in process of construction, it would be suitable to transfer the permanent problem to the permanent organization. The present financial structure of the I.G.C. was unsatisfactory. Its absorption by the United Nations Organization would automatically take care of this, both as to the securing and wise expenditure of funds. Projects would not need to be submitted separately and with long delays to individual States. The proposed change would remove suspicion of ulterior motives.

22. The U.K. proposal was supported by France and by Switzerland. The Netherlands delegate said that a certain autonomy should be given to the new organization.

23. The Director spoke at some length and favoured the U.K. proposal. He disputed, however, the U.K. view of the I.G.C. as an emergency organisation. It had been devised to meet the long-term problem. He favoured the scheme chiefly because of its financial advantage. He spoke strongly in favour of ensuring that the responsibilities of the I.G.C. should be safeguarded in the new scheme. He referred particularly to the kind of "protection" given by the I.G.C. to refugees, previously mentioned in this memorandum. He also referred to the particular projects already under way and to certain contractual obligations to which the I.G.C. was committed, such as that to the French Government and those to its own staff. He was anxious that the I.G.C. should itself be a party to the conversations which were envisaged with the U.N.O.

24. The U.S.S.R. delegate broke the silence he had been maintaining to say that all that was required was that the Committee should take note of the intentions of the U.K. One suspects this was his method of following the instructions he had received from Moscow. He made no objection to the subsequent amendments to his proposal. As already mentioned, it is probable that this action was concerted between himself, Sir George Rendel and perhaps Mr. Warren.

25. Sir George Rendel stated that the U.K. would support this view but would like to introduce some further points to meet the Director's observations. The U.S. representative proposed a further addition for fear that the work of the I.G.C. should suffer in the interim. He wished member governments to be encouraged to maintain their support.

26. It was then agreed that the U.S.S.R., U.K., U.S.A. and French representatives, with the assistance of a member of the Directorate, should draft a resolution for the afternoon's session.

5th SESSION

27. The Resolution as contained in the attached paper, was submitted by the delegates just mentioned and was unanimously approved with very little discussion.

28. With the formalities customary at such meetings, the Plenary Committee concluded its session.

[ANNEXE À LA PIÈCE JOINTE/SUB-ENCLOSURE]

*Projet de résolution de la cinquième session plénière, le Comité intergouvernemental sur les réfugiésDraft Resolution of Fifth Plenary Session,
Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees*

The Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees in plenary session takes note of the intention of the Government of the United Kingdom, as communicated in its letter of the 25th October, 1945, to the Director,† to take the necessary steps with a view to a recommendation being made to the General Assembly of the United Nations that refugee work should be administered within the framework of the Economic and Social Council as soon as that body is equipped for this task.

2. The Intergovernmental Committee takes note: that until information is available regarding the attitude of the United Nations Organization towards the proposal of the Government of the United Kingdom, it is not possible for the Intergovernmental Committee to proceed with the practical consideration of the implications of that proposal.

3. Wishes nevertheless to place on record the following views:

(a) In the event of the proposal of the United Kingdom Government being proceeded with, it will be necessary to ensure that the existing responsibilities, commitments and contractual obligations of the Intergovernmental Committee are properly safeguarded.

(b) Such steps should be taken as may be practicable and appropriate to secure the continuing co-operation, in the work of looking after refugees, of certain Governments, Members of the Intergovernmental Committee, but not Members of the United Nations Organization, who have hitherto been so fully associated with that work.

4. RESOLVES THAT:

The Executive Committee of the Intergovernmental Committee shall have full power to conduct such negotiations as may be required to give effect to the views expressed in paragraph 3 above; or on any other matters arising out of the United Kingdom's proposal in so far as the activities of the Intergovernmental Committee may be affected thereby.

5. Pending any reorganization of the work for refugees which may result from consideration of the United Kingdom proposal by the United Nations Organization, the Intergovernmental Committee recognizes the necessity of continuing the work of the care for refugees with unimpaired energy, and urges the Member Governments to give early and favourable consideration to the matter of contributions to its operational expenditure.

Affairs to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Ottawa, February 3, 1944

I was asked to attend a meeting this morning with Mr. Bateman, Canadian deputy member of the C.P.R.B. and Messrs. Croft and Mallory, of the Department of Trade and Commerce, to discuss certain relief problems which Mr. Bateman is encountering in Washington.

Mr. Bateman said that the United States and British military authorities are continuing to make submissions to the C.P.R.B. for relief and rehabilitation supplies for Italy. He was concerned that virtually all of the allocations have gone to the United States and United Kingdom and that Canada has been left out of the picture as a possible source of supply. He said that he was at a definite disadvantage in this respect in that there was no Canadian machinery through which any Canadian allocations could be cleared or procured. The Department of Munitions and Supply does not wish to enter into the business of procuring for civilian relief purposes. He thought that it was urgently necessary to establish some agency in Canada which could act as a claimant for relief supplies and would carry out the necessary procurement and forwarding functions. He felt that if this were not done quickly Canada would not be able to participate effectively in the provision of military relief supplies. This would be harmful to our producers and to our general interests in building up post-war export markets. Mallory and Croft strongly supported him in this view.

I explained to Mr. Bateman that there is a financial problem involved in all this, in that some one will have to pay for any relief supplies obtained from Canada during the military period. To what extent is Canada willing to pay for allocations from Canadian sources and how far is the burden to be divided between the United States and United Kingdom? This matter is in a state of confusion and at the moment there doesn't appear to be any solution. The problem of building up export markets through the provision of military relief supplies is considerably affected by the degree to which Canada will be required to carry the financial burden involved and by the fact that those supplies will be distributed by the British and United States military authorities. At present, at least, it is not clear how far Canada should press for participation in the provision of such supplies.

Mr. Bateman felt that whatever our policy is there does not seem to be any Canadian machinery for determining its application in specific instances. He urged that such machinery be established as quickly as possible and, in view of the immediate need for military relief supplies, this matter should not be postponed until UNRRA begins to function. If nothing is done the Canadian representatives with the Combined Boards will be helpless with regard to the determination or fulfilment of Canadian allocations.

This emphasizes the need for getting ahead with the setting up of a Canadian relief agency to handle requests for relief supplies from whatever sources they may be received. As it stands now, no one is responsible. If the appropriation for financing Canadian relief contributions is to be made to the Mutual Aid Board, it would seem logical that the administrative organization for the clearance of requests and the carrying out of policy should be set up under the Board along the lines we have discussed earlier.

In view of the fact that the problems of Canadian participation in the provision of relief supplies is upon us now in the form of concrete requirements by the military authorities, it would seem desirable to get on immediately with the job of building up the necessary machinery at the Ottawa end.

Ottawa, February 3, 1944

Dear Dr. Clark,

With reference to Canadian participation in the provision of relief supplies to liberated areas, I am enclosing for your information copies of three letters from Mr. Pearson in Washington† and a copy of a memorandum on Combined Board procedure for allocation of relief supplies.† These documents relate to 1. the difficult problem of financing relief supplies for distribution by the military authorities and the implications for Canada of the plans under consideration in London and Washington, 2. the relationship of the relief activities of the military authorities to UNRRA, and 3. governmental machinery in Ottawa for the administration of Canadian participation in relief.

Subsequent to the receipt of Mr. Pearson's letters, Messrs. Pearson and Deutsch have discussed some of these matters in Washington with Dean Acheson, United States Assistant Under-Secretary of State. It was evident from this discussion that, although the question of arranging for relief supplies for the so-called "military period" has to be dealt with immediately, no solution has been found to the problem of financing of such supplies. The United States authorities were greatly upset by the British proposal that their expenditures for relief supplies during the military period should come out of their 1% contribution to UNRRA. The United States Administration has already secured approval by Congress of the principle of the 1% contribution to UNRRA and it would be very embarrassing if now it became known that the British contribution would be reduced by the amount expended during the military period. The United States is putting pressure on the United Kingdom Government to withdraw their proposal. Mr. Acheson hoped that Canada would find it possible to make its full 1% contribution available to UNRRA and that the Canadian Government would indicate its approval of the UNRRA formula in some appropriate way.

The matter of financing relief during the military period is thus completely open. Mr. Acheson said that the United States authorities have suggested to the British that each country, the United States and the United Kingdom, should each pay for the supplies originating in their respective territories according to the allocations of the Combined Boards and that supplies originating in third countries should be paid for by the government which has the right of pre-emptive purchase in the territory concerned. Mr. Acheson thought that this method would work out to approximately 75% for the United States and 25% for the United Kingdom. The British, however, are not prepared to accept this formula. Mr. Acheson asked whether the Canadian Government would be willing to pay for such military relief supplies as originate from Canada in accordance with Combined Board allocations. He was told that in view of the fact that Canada did not participate in the planning of relief activities during the military phase and owing to the uncertainties concerning the length of the military period it was not likely that the Canadian Government would be prepared to undertake such a "blind" commitment.

Because of the difficulties involved, Mr. Acheson appeared to agree that the military relief period should be short and that UNRRA should be asked to take over as early as possible. It was suggested that if the military would draw up an orderly programme of their relief requirements for a minimum period so that it could be put before the United Kingdom, United States, Canadian, and perhaps other governments it would probably not be too difficult to work out an equitable apportionment of the cost. Mr. Acheson, however, was not hopeful that the military would ever draw up an orderly programme. Mr. Acheson was anxious to receive suggestions, particularly, on how it is proposed to deal with the Canadian aspect of the question.

It would seem desirable to give early consideration to these matters together with the question of governmental machinery referred to in the enclosed memorandum. I shall try to arrange a meeting for this purpose in the near future.

Yours sincerely,

TELETYPE EX-688

Ottawa, February 17, 1944

Following for Pearson from Angus, Begins: Following is a summary of the discussion, at which you were present, in Ottawa on February 8 concerning the financing of relief during the military period, Begins:

The agreement establishing the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration<sup>1</sup> and the resolutions for the first session of the Council of this Administration<sup>2</sup> provide that civilian relief during the initial period of liberation shall be the responsibility of the military authorities. UNRRA may operate in any area only after consultation with and with the consent of the governmental authority (military or civil) which exercises administrative authority in that area. Furthermore, the military authorities are generally responsible for civilian relief in ex-enemy territories, and UNRRA may operate in such territories only from such time and for such purposes as may be agreed upon with military command, the established control authority, or duly recognized administration of the area, and subject to such control as the military command, or the established control authority, may find necessary.

The military authorities, in preparation for the carrying out of their responsibilities regarding civilian relief, are presently engaged in making arrangements for the necessary supplies. Supply arrangements are being made with respect to (a) liberation of occupied countries, and (b) civilian relief and rehabilitation of ex-enemy territory now occupied by the United Nations, i.e. Italy. In this connection the military authorities, through the Combined Civil Affairs Committee in Washington, have generally followed the procedure of submitting requisitions to the Combined Boards for allocation as to sources of supply. Most of the requisitions, up to the present, have been submitted in respect of Italy, and no general programmes for relief in liberated territory have been put forward thus far.

While it would appear that arrangements have been worked out regarding the provision of physical supplies, no general arrangements have been made for the financing of such supplies. Various possible formulae have been discussed by the British and United States Governments but none have been agreed upon. The United Kingdom Government proposed that United Kingdom expenditures for military relief should come out of their contribution to UNRRA. This proposal is not acceptable to the United States Government. The Canadian aspect of this problem has been discussed only informally.

The Combined Boards in dealing with requisitions for military relief have considered Canada as a source of supply. Two questions immediately arise: How are supplies which are allocated to Canada to be financed and, if they are purchased by the United States or the United Kingdom, are the purchases of the latter to be financed through Mutual Aid? It was pointed out that no financial provision has been made in Canada for the purchase of Canadian supplies to be distributed as civilian relief by the British and United States military authorities. It was agreed that under existing legislation funds out of the War Appropriation or the Mutual Aid Appropriation could not be used for this purpose.

With respect to the question as to what arrangements, if any, should be made for Canadian participation in the financing of military relief it was felt that no conclusions could be reached in the absence of further information. In view of the fact that Canada has no direct responsibility for and does not participate in the planning of military relief activities and since supplies are distributed by the United States and British military authorities it was agreed that Canada could not enter into any general or open commitment such as would be involved in undertaking to finance whatever military relief supplies are allocated to Canada by the Combined Boards. It was thought that until a clear-cut and equitable arrangement is agreed upon supplies obtained from Canada for distribution by the British and United States military authorities should be paid for by the United Kingdom and United States Governments.

It was agreed that clarification should be sought from the British and United States authorities on the following points:

1. plans regarding the length of the period of military responsibility for relief and the general scope and nature of relief activities during this period. In the Canadian view the period of military relief in liberated territories should be as short as possible consistent with military necessity and UNRRA should be asked to assume responsibility at an early stage;
2. plans regarding the general scope of relief in enemy territory and the extent to which assistance from UNRRA will be sought;
3. plans for co-operation with UNRRA in the preparation of integrated programmes for the provision of relief supplies so as to prevent duplication and to ensure a rapid and smooth transition to UNRRA responsibility;

4. progress regarding the preparation of supply programmes for the military relief period with estimates of physical quantities required and such estimates of probable cost as can now be anticipated;

5. basis of distribution of relief and rehabilitation supplies during the military period; extent and nature of payment required from recipients and the purposes for which such payments are used or manner of their disposition; post-war claims, if any, upon ex-enemy countries;

6. arrangements regarding the provision and financing of relief supplies during the period of military responsibility in liberated territory the governments of which are in a position to pay.

When the information desired on the above matters has been obtained it would be possible to formulate appropriate recommendations regarding Canadian participation in the provision of relief during the military period. Ends.

I should be grateful if you would seek clarification of the points mentioned above from the State Department, and from the British officials in Washington who are concerned with this problem. It is hoped that it will not be necessary to make a direct inquiry from London. Ends.

DESPATCH 494

Washington, February 26, 1944

Sir,

As previously indicated, I have taken up with the Department of State and the British Embassy the points mentioned in your teletype EX-688 of February 17th, concerning the financing of relief during the military period. I hope shortly to have their replies to the questions asked. Meanwhile, I am in a position to give certain information on your questions.

(1) It is impossible, of course, to state exactly what the length of the periods of military responsibility will be, but for purposes of programming, six months has been generally assumed. During that period the activities of the military will cover all forms of relief and rehabilitation.

On these points General Hilldring, in charge of civil affairs at the War Department, testifying before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on February 10th stated:

“Senator Vandenberg. What would be the average period, if there is any pattern, that the Army would normally desire to maintain control of relief and rehabilitation behind the lines before turning it over to the civilian agencies? Is there any pattern?”

“General Hilldring. Yes, sir. If you will allow, sir, that it is going to depend more on the progress of the military operation than on any other one factor, and that there will be a considerable variation from any given number of days or months dependent upon the rapidity with which we move forward, I can say that for purposes of planning both on the Army side and on the civilian side we have taken a period of 6 months as being for planning purposes the time of military responsibility.

“If we were to get a sudden collapse in any particular quarter where there was not any hard fighting that period would be considerably reduced.”

“...it is the attitude of the War Department that its part in relief and rehabilitation is in the wake of battle; its responsibility arises from two fundamental requirements, one under international law, which visits upon the military commander a responsibility for the security of the civilian populations uncovered by the military operation; the other factor is directly operational in nature, and that is that civilian populations uncovered, and the administration of these populations, shall not be permitted to interfere with the military purposes of the operation. For those reasons we feel that there is a direct military necessity initially for the Army's having control of civil affairs. However, the instant there is no longer any military necessity for this civilian control the War Department feels that we should relinquish civil affairs, including relief and rehabilitation; and at that moment we feel there should be a civilian agency to which we can turn over relief and rehabilitation.”

General Hilldring went on to explain the nature of the Army relief programme. In doing so he very definitely played down the rehabilitation aspects of that programme. He said:

“With respect to the Army participation in relief and rehabilitation, it is a modest program. It has for its purpose the placing of the civilian populations in repose. The program consists of simple items, such as food, soap, drugs, and a little fuel, plus those items which we introduce to reduce the relief load. For example, in Italy, in addition to the items I have mentioned, we have introduced seed and fertilizer for the purpose of reducing the amount of flour that we will have to procure in this continent—that is, purchase and ship to Italy. That we call rehabilitation in the Army.”

(2) There have been no plans yet formulated regarding the general scope of UNRRA relief in enemy territories beyond paragraph 3, resolution 1, of the Council meeting at Atlantic City. I understand, however, that at the next meeting of the Council consideration will probably be given to enlarging the scope and nature of UNRRA work in enemy and ex-enemy areas.

The Army's attitude towards relief in enemy territories is, I think, sufficiently explained in the remarks by General Hilldring quoted above, and in which he makes no distinction between liberated areas and enemy areas.

(3) At the last meeting of the Committee on Supplies of UNRRA, a statement (which has been forwarded to Ottawa) was made by Mr. Acheson regarding plans for association of UNRRA with the Combined Civil Affairs Committee of the Combined Chiefs of Staff. Among other things, it is hoped that by such association, civilian and military relief programmes can be integrated. Steps are also being taken to facilitate such integration by the Combined Boards. I hope to have something more definite to report on this matter shortly.

(4) The observations under (3) above apply also to the preparation of supply programmes. Certain of these military relief supply programmes have already been sent to the Combined Boards. I hope to secure copies of them shortly. It seems fairly clear now that the military will work through the Combined Boards in relief supply matters insofar as goods in short supply are concerned. It is not certain, however, that they will take the same course in respect of goods not in short supply. Difficulties may arise here.

I have no figures yet as to the probable total cost of military relief. On this point, however, General Hilldring said to the Senate Committee:

“With respect to the whole cost of this program in Europe, plans have been completed and have been integrated with our allies’ program and are now before a committee of the Combined Chiefs of Staff. The program has not as yet been approved by the Combined Chiefs of Staff. The United States responsibility with respect to it is now being prepared in the budget office of the War Department for presentation to the Bureau of the Budget; and I think, as you gentlemen know, until we have accomplished both of those objectives, an officer of the War Department cannot say, for a number of reasons, how much a particular project is going to cost. But I think I can indicate, Senator, in this way, that it is a simple and a modest program.”

He then stated that the U.S. Army cost of civilian relief in Italy from July, 1943 to January 10, 1944, amounted to $21,000,000. The British Army cost—largely for coal and petroleum—cannot yet be determined but will probably be around $5,000,000 for the same period.

(5) General Hilldring had the following observations to make on military relief distribution and payment:

“It is our policy, it is the policy of our Government, that we soldiers are following, that we will to the greatest extent possible dispose of these relief supplies in normal trade channels and with the least cost to us; and the fact that we have been able to do as well as we have in Italy has been more or less surprising to us; a little higher percentage has gone into commercial trade than we anticipated before we went in there.” (The percentage in fact has been 95%).

“General Hilldring. We have established in Italy, sir, an allied military government, as you know. It is a combined Anglo-American Government. It is the present sovereign of the territory. The shipments of relief supplies go to that government. That government has a relief agency which operates for it, which transfers, sells, these relief supplies to dealers in Italy in these various commodities. The Government itself through its financial agency keeps the books on these transactions.

“Senator Tunnell. Does the Army get any money?

“General Hilldring. For the part that we sell, we get money for every pound we dispose of, through trade channels.

“With respect to the ultimate cost we look to the Treasury Department as our advisers on that, and if that is satisfactory to the committee I would rather have a Treasury official tell the committee the procedure by which the ultimate cost of this relief will be assessed as between the United States and the United Kingdom and the Italian Government. We are keeping complete books on this operation, Senator, and it is our present thinking that we, the soldiers, will not make the final settlement as to the ultimate cost of this. I do not know whether that is clear or not.

“Senator Vandenberg. Yes, I think so. I assume what you mean is that the value of the reimbursement will depend upon the ultimate peace settlement and the determination of accounts at that time.

“General Hilldring. Yes, sir; that is what I mean.”

(6) I hope to be in a position to send you information on this point shortly.

I am enclosing with this despatch two copies of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations concerning UNRRA.† In addition to General Hilldring, Mr. Acheson and Governor Lehman also gave very interesting statements to the Senators. In fact, this document will bear careful study by those concerned with this matter in Ottawa.

Mr. Acheson made an interesting remark concerning the use of UNRRA funds for military relief:

“Senator Vandenberg. During that period, as I understand it, the Army takes the responsibility for whatever relief and rehabilitation is essential at the moment, is that correct?

“Mr. Acheson: Yes, Senator Vandenberg. The Army is in complete command and it does whatever it thinks is necessary from the military point of view.

“Senator Vandenberg. Do they do that out of military funds?

“Mr. Acheson. I think they will have to answer that. I cannot.

“Senator Vandenberg. They do not do it out of your funds anyway?

“Mr. Acheson. No, sir; not out of UNRRA’s funds.”

In discussing the total resources that might be available for UNRRA (page 19 of the hearings), Mr. Acheson used a figure of $75,000,000 for Canada. On this point he said:

“The income of Canada for 1943 as stated in an address by Mr. Brooke Claxton, who was the alternate delegate for Canada at the Atlantic City Conference, was 7½ billion American dollars, which would make their contribution $75,000,000.”

I have etc.

DESPATCH 498

Washington, Feb. 28, 1944

Sir,

During the last few days, meetings have been held between Canadian officials here to discuss the Canadian aspect of relief questions as seen from the Washington end. Mr. Bateman, Mr. Pierce, Mr. Scott, Mr. Plumptre, Mr. Paterson, Mr. Allen and Mr. Pearson have participated in these meetings, and the observations below represent their collective view. It is hoped that they may be of some value to those considering this question in Ottawa.

1. Problems faced by representatives of Canada in Washington in dealing with relief questions.

The Combined Boards are now receiving from the U.S.-U.K. military authorities, and from UNRRA, programmes of relief supplies and requests for sources of procurement for such supplies. These questions are being considered by officials of the Boards and by the various commodity committees (farm implements, textiles, foot-wear and leather, etc.) established under those Boards.

Canadian representatives in Washington, on the Boards and their committees, have not yet received guidance from Ottawa on the Canadian Government's general policies and procedures regarding the provision of relief. Furthermore, there is no central Canadian authority on these questions whom Canadian officials here can consult when they are called upon to state whether Canada is prepared to meet a particular relief requirement which a Combined Board has recommended. Thus these officials are unable to participate as effectively as they would wish in this work and to protect and further Canada's interest in it. This difficulty is, of course, accentuated in the case of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee and the Combined Raw Materials Board on which Canada has no representation. It exists also, however, in the Combined Production and Resources Board and the Combined Food Board where the Canadian representatives are in a disadvantageous position in relief discussions in comparison with their colleagues from the United States and the United Kingdom.

An instance arose recently in which a Canadian representative on the Farm Implement Committee, (C.P.R.B.-C.F.B.), after securing in Washington the necessary information to determine a fair Canadian share of the proposed general relief programme, could only obtain approval of that programme in Ottawa by personal meetings with senior officials of several of the Departments concerned. Further, he is still unable to state whether Canada is willing for any part of its share in this programme to be utilized during the military period, and if so on what terms. Similar instances will probably arise in the near future.

It is appreciated, of course, that in the case of the farm implement relief programme, Canadian difficulties were accentuated by doubts whether the programme was for UNRRA or military relief or both. Nevertheless, if there had been no doubts on this point, certain of the difficulties referred to in the previous paragraph would have remained.

Two steps would seem to us to be urgently necessary. They have no doubt already occurred to you.

1. The establishment in Ottawa of permanent machinery for handling relief questions generally and in particular for determining what allocations for relief can be sponsored by Canada and how those so sponsored can be implemented.

2. Pending the establishment of such permanent machinery, the immediate adoption of an interim procedure covering the sponsoring of allocations. Though interim machinery for procurement may not be so urgently required, it is also very necessary.

2. Permanent machinery in Ottawa for relief questions.

In this connection, the United Kingdom organisation to handle Relief matters may be of interest. In London, the Foreign Office is responsible for Relief Policy, and the Ministry of Production for Relief operations, in particular for the detailed work of procurement.

There are two committees on operations and supply questions; a ministerial committee, under the Minister of Production, and an inter-departmental committee of officials under a member of the Ministry of Production.

When there are conflicting United Kingdom claimants for available supplies, the case for Relief is put before Ministers by the Foreign Office which also handles relations with UNRRA generally.

There will, no doubt, be required in Ottawa some ministerial body to give direction and exercise control on Relief policy matters. This might be the Cabinet, or a Committee of the Cabinet. If the latter, possibly the Mutual Aid Board might be satisfactory, though the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be a disadvantage.

There should also, of course, be an inter-departmental committee of officials. It is understood that consideration is already being given to the establishment of such a committee, consisting of representatives of the Departments of External Affairs, Finance, Trade and Commerce, Agriculture, Munitions and Supply, and Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

Such a Committee would, under the general direction of the Cabinet or Cabinet Committee, be in a position to decide what types of goods Canada was prepared to supply for relief purposes and, broadly, the amounts and values of those supplies.

In considering questions of military relief, the policy of the committee will, of course, be affected by arrangements for financing such relief. This is discussed later in this despatch. With regard to non-military relief, the Committee, in sponsoring particular programmes or spot requirements, would doubtless consider the size of Canada's financial contribution to UNRRA, the extent to which that had been drawn upon, the extent of further demands which were likely to arise, and so forth. In particular, it might decide how far Canada was anxious to supply manufactures as well as foodstuffs, having regard to the fact that additional contributions of manufactures might lay the basis for post war trade and might provide additional foreign exchange. It might also act as the advisory Canadian body to the Canadian representative on the Committee on Supplies of UNRRA.

A committee, such as that described above, would concern itself primarily with the broader considerations attaching to programmes. It might refer such programmes to other existing committees (such as the National Textile Committee and the Food Requirements Committee) for detailed analysis and recommendations. Working arrangements in regard to such detailed questions might also be made directly between the Canadian representative in Washington (e.g. on the C.P.R.B. Textiles Committee) and the corresponding Ottawa Committee (National Textile). Care would have to be taken, however, to ensure that the inter-departmental Committee in Ottawa were kept continuously informed of such direct arrangements.

In addition to machinery for sponsoring allocations and dealing with general relief matters, there should also be permanent machinery for implementing those programmes accepted by the Cabinet and Interdepartmental Committees. In the United Kingdom and the United States, the Ministry of Production and FEA respectively are responsible for implementing relief programmes. Responsibility in this regard has not yet been centralized in any department or agency in Ottawa. This should be done. If the relief vote is joined to the Mutual Aid vote, responsibility will no doubt lie in the Department of Munitions and Supply through the Mutual Aid Board. There will, however, require to be designated a particular official as administrator of the relief funds voted. He would carry out the procurement policies agreed on by the Ministerial and Interdepartmental Committees. He would also presumably be a member of the latter Committee. In fact, he might logically be its chairman.

The Administrator or Director of relief operations might also act as liaison between the Canadian representatives on the UNRRA Committees in Washington and the relief machinery in Ottawa. He could in addition have, under the Interdepartmental Committee, general jurisdiction over relief matters in Canada; such things as liaison with voluntary relief societies; the supply of suitable Canadian personnel for UNRRA operations; organizing the collection of gifts of relief materials, etc.

3. Interim procedure for sponsoring relief allocations.

Pending more permanent arrangements, an interim procedure to deal with allocations recommended to Canada by the Combined Boards is urgently necessary. The following is recommended.

In the case of commodities already under the jurisdiction of Canadian Interdepartmental Committees (e.g. textiles, and foods), it is suggested that Canadian representatives attached to the Combined Boards or their committees should present recommendations for relief allocations from Canada directly to the Ottawa Interdepartmental Committee concerned. In the case of military relief supplies, however, this procedure will be subject to decisions reached in Ottawa on the questions discussed in the section of this despatch which follows. These Interdepartmental Committees in Ottawa will presumably deal with such recommendations in the same way that they deal with other recommendations now being received from the Combined Boards.

In respect of commodities for which there are no Interdepartmental Committees in Ottawa, e.g. medical supplies and metal products, clearance for relief allocations made to Canada will presumably have to be obtained temporarily from an appropriate Cabinet Minister. It would seem that the appropriate Minister would be Canadian member of the C.P.R.B., the Minister of Munitions and Supply, or in certain circumstances, the Canadian member of the Combined Food Board, the Minister of Agriculture.

4. Military relief supplies.

These present a special problem, in so far as their distribution and financing are concerned. UNRRA supplies are planned, administered and distributed by an organization in which Canada actively participates, and to which she has agreed to contribute. Policies and Programmes regarding military relief are determined by a Combined U.K.-U.S. agency on which Canada is not represented, and the resulting supplies are distributed by the U.K. and U.S. military authorities. Any other course regarding relief distribution would be impracticable unless the Canadian military authorities were in control of a particular theatre of operations. This is unlikely. It follows, therefore, that Canada will not get from the receiving population any credit for supplies such as wheat which cannot be nationally identified by the consumers; and only partial credit for relief supplies such as farm implements which can be so identified.

In default of any special arrangements, it might appear logical to make no distinction between relief supplies and other supplies required by the military authorities. This would mean that the United States would pay for military relief supplies from Canada in the same way that she pays for nickel from Canada. It will also presumably mean that the United Kingdom will receive military relief supplies—or certainly expect to receive them—under Mutual Aid. It can be argued that the United States should not object to this, as it is merely an extension of the existing situation.

If the above analysis of the position is correct, then in discussing military relief supplies required from Canada, Canadian representatives in Washington should presumably make it plain that for the time being and until Governmental policy is clarified, Canadian allocations to military relief programmes are to be considered on the same basis as her allocations to war supply programmes generally. In other words, the United States will be expected to pay for such supplies allocated to Canada for distribution by the United States military authorities.

There remains, finally, the determination of a permanent policy with respect to military relief. The arguments for giving such relief supplies without payment are as follows:

1. Canada might thereby obtain some voice in the disposition of such supplies through membership, for instance, on the combined Civil Affairs Committee of the Combined Chiefs of Staff. If we sell such supplies, we have obviously no claim to control their disposition and a weaker claim to membership on the above Committee.

2. In so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, payment will be difficult in any case; impossible, in respect of Canadian food supplies in existing overseas stockpiles and now earmarked by the United Kingdom authorities for military relief.

Should we make a distinction between the U.S. and U.K. in this matter? Is it, in fact, merely extending the existing situation? Is there not a distinction between selling the USA a gun or a tank for her armies and food to be distributed to destitute Europeans by those armies.

3. There may be strong commercial reasons for participating in military relief. In the case of manufactured goods, the products, whoever distributes them, will be identified as Canadian and they may lay the basis for post-war trade. The fact that non-identifiable products will be credited to the Army distributing them will be an advantage to Canada when her own army is doing the distributing even if it is a disadvantage when the distribution is by United States or United Kingdom forces.

4. Arrangements can be worked out whereby Canada obtains a fair share of the local currency received from the sale of supplies. These currencies might be used for the expense of her troops in those areas. In this connection, it should be remembered that 95% of the military relief supplies distributed in Italy have been sold through commercial channels.

5. We are members of the C.P.R.B. and C.F.B. and therefore have control over any recommendations from them for military relief supplies from Canada. If our members on those Boards accept such recommendations, does not that mean we also accept financial responsibility for them?

6. If we try to sell military relief supplies to the U.S.A., this will merely result in the United Kingdom drawing more heavily and the U.S. less heavily on Canada for such supplies.

The arguments against giving military relief supplies are as follows:

(1) Canada would have no voice in their control or disposition. This might, of course, be remedied as pointed out in (1) above.

(2) The U.S.A. has never previously questioned the fairness of our policy in selling her war materials. Why should she question it in the case of military relief supplies to be dispensed by her own armies?

(3) Canada would get no moral credit or commercial advantage from the gift, which would be distributed by the U.S. and U.K. armies. (This argument is partly answered in 3 above.)

(4) The U.S. and U.K. would, if the supplies were sold in relief areas receive local currency for goods given by Canada (this argument is answered in part in 4 above).

Weighing the arguments both pro and con, the attitude of Canadian officials in Washington is that, once the State Department has answered the questions asked in your teletype EX-688 of February 17, we should make a more positive approach to the problem of participation in military relief, avoiding on the one hand, any arrangement which would commit us to contributions without conditions, and, on the other, to the accusation that we are shirking our responsibility to do what we can to relieve civilian distress in the military, as well as in the UNRRA period.

Washington, March 2, 1944

Sir,

With further reference to your teletype EX-688 of February 17th, 1944, concerning the financing of relief during the military period, I have received from the State Department an oral reply to the points which you raised and which were embodied in my letter to Mr. Dean Acheson of February 19th.† Mr. Acheson himself is out of Washington, so the information was given to me by his assistant, Mr. Wayne Jackson, who is the official immediately responsible for these matters in the State Department. Mr. Jackson stated that we had asked very pertinent and difficult questions on which it was quite impossible to give a final and definite reply at the present time. Questions regarding the nature, scope, and extent of military relief and the relations of military relief to UNRRA relief were in a very fluid state, and it was extremely difficult to come to any final decisions concerning them. As a matter of fact, final decisions at present would not be possible or desirable, because relief was bound to present a changing picture and methods for dealing with it would have to remain elastic.

So far as the specific questions you ask were concerned, Mr. Jackson commented on them as follows:

1. He had little to add to my reply to this question contained in our Despatch No. 494 of February 26th. He felt, however, that the United States military authorities were moving to the view that they should make the period of military relief in liberated territories as short as possible. He also felt that relations between the Combined military authorities and UNRRA were developing satisfactorily.

2. He stated that military relief in enemy territories would be kept to the very minimum, but that experience in Italy showed that this minimum would always be required; that there was no way of avoiding it. At present, UNRRA was not concerned with this matter, but Jackson confirmed my view that the relationship of UNRRA to relief in enemy territory might well be discussed at the next meeting of the Council.

3. Jackson referred, as I did in my despatch, to the memorandum produced at the last meeting of the Committee on Supplies which discussed relations with the military authorities. The Combined Boards are, as you know, now receiving relief programs both from the military authorities and from UNRRA, and efforts are being made to relate these programs and to keep them both flexible and tentative. Jackson confirmed that it might be difficult, and would probably be undesirable, to attempt to draw a hard and fast line between military and UNRRA relief supplies, both in respect of programs, allocations and procurement. The main thing was to build up a stockpile of supplies. This would certainly have to be done, in the first instance, by the Army and for the Army who are initially responsible; but it might well be that Army relief supplies would turn out to be more than those required for the military period, in which case it was understood that surplus supplies would be turned over to UNRRA, and the governments owning those supplies would receive a credit against their UNRRA contributions. There was, of course, a difficulty here, both for Canada and the United States, in view of the fact that the United Kingdom would be in possession of military relief supplies which she had secured by Lend-Lease from the United States and by Mutual Aid from Canada. Some way would probably have to be found by which financial credit for these supplies could be given to the countries furnishing them.

4. Jackson said that it was quite impossible to make an estimate of the probable cost of military relief. As to the estimates of the physical quantities required, some indication of this will be found in the memorandum from the British Army Staff to the U.K. Executive Officer of the Combined Food Board,† copies of which were sent to the Department on March 1st. These estimates, which are, of course, most secret and subject to change, cover only food and soap, but will give you an idea of the magnitude of the military relief problem as seen by the U.K. military authorities.

5 and 6. Distribution of relief during the military period will be made wherever possible through commercial channels. In so far as payment is concerned, the situation will be different in enemy countries than in liberated countries. In the former, payment will be secured, where possible, in the manner indicated by General Hilldring before the Senate Committee, and which I referred to in Despatch No. 494. Jackson emphasized that it was difficult to estimate now what will be realized eventually from ex-enemy governments in this way. The situation in Italy, for instance, was extremely confused. Four different kinds of currency were now circulating in Italian areas occupied by the United Nations forces. The situation in liberated Allied countries would be clearer, because governments of those countries would be established as soon as possible and would wish to take over at the earliest possible date the distribution and, where possible, the financing of military relief supplies.

Jackson confirmed that the military authorities would expect the governments of liberated territories to pay for relief supplies wherever possible. They would probably not desire to strip such authorities of all their financial resources, which would merely add to the UNRRA burden. Nor would they insist on payment for military supplies to an extent which would make it impossible for a liberated government to have anything left for reconstruction purposes. Policy in this matter would vary with circumstances.

I have etc.

Minutes of an Interdepartmental Meeting

Ottawa, March 6, 1944

MINUTES OF A MEETING HELD ON MARCH 4 AT 11:30 A.M. IN THE OFFICE OF THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Present:

Dr. W. C. Clark, Department of Finance
Mr. R. B. Bryce, Department of Finance
Mr. A. D. P. Heeney, Privy Council Office
Maj. Gen. J. C. Murchie, Chief of Staff, Department of National Defence
Mr. N. A. Robertson, Department of External Affairs
Mr. H. F. Angus, Department of External Affairs

1. The meeting considered paragraph 4 of despatch No. 498 of February 28 from the Canadian Embassy in Washington. Consideration was given to the desirability of Canada seeking representation on the Combined Civil Affairs Committee of the United Nations and of using Canadian contributions to military relief to support this claim. It was decided that this question was part of the broader question of Canadian representation on inter-Allied bodies and should be considered together with other similar matters.

2. Consideration was given to the financial aspect of possible Canadian contributions to military relief.

(a) It was generally agreed that the Canadian contribution should be made proportionate to the Canadian share in the invasion of Europe. This share might be determined by rough estimates of the numbers of men furnished by the various countries or in some other equitable manner. It was assumed that in return for this contribution Canada would receive an equitable proportion of any payments made by the inhabitants in local currency or in any form by the governments of the countries concerned.

(b) It was pointed out that in addition to this direct contribution by Canada there might well be an indirect contribution which would take the form of supplies now in the hands of the United Kingdom, which had been originally furnished by Canada under Mutual Aid, being diverted to relief purposes. It was assumed that in this case any receipts by way of payments in local currencies by the inhabitants of liberated countries or in any form by the government concerned would be credited to Canada. It was recognized, however, that it would be difficult to calculate the value of the supplies which might be diverted in this way.

(c) The third possibility would be that supplies which have originated in Canada might be made available by the United Kingdom, which had received them by way of Mutual Aid, and might either be paid for by the United States or be considered as counter Lend-Lease. It was considered that in this case also Canada should benefit by the payment or the credit. It was pointed out that in parallel circumstances the United States had expected to receive credit for the proceeds of sale of goods supplied under Lend-Lease.

(d) It was expected that supplies bought in Canada by the United States for relief purposes would be paid for in United States dollars.

(e) Supplies obtained in the future by the United Kingdom for relief purposes presented greater difficulties. It was considered that it might be easier to furnish supplies by Mutual Aid to the liberated countries if they were themselves parties to the military relief arrangements. If supplies were furnished to the United Kingdom, Canada would obviously be entitled to receive whatever might be realized eventually in local currencies from the inhabitants of liberated areas or from payments by the governments of liberated countries.

3. In summary, these arrangements treated relief in the military period as analogous to contributions to UNRRA, for which a limit is set to the financial contribution of each country, rather than as Mutual Aid contributions which are financed entirely by the country in which the supplies originate.

4. Some consideration was given to the contention that goodwill should be sought by ear-marking Canadian relief either as relief financed by Canada or as relief administered by the Canadian armed forces. The third possibility would be to identify such goods as could be identified by label as Canadian. The general view was that goodwill would depend rather on the effort of liberation than on popular beliefs as to the financial origin of the supplies, particularly as these might be distributed on a commercial basis or paid for by the recipient countries.

Note: A copy of despatch No. 541 of March 2, from the Canadian Embassy in Washington, is attached. It is self-explanatory and is closely related to the matters discussed at this meeting.

Washington, April 10, 1944

IMMEDIATE. Following for Angus, from Pearson, Begins: Your teletype EX-1495, April 8, military relief supplies. Plumptre and I had an hour's conversation this morning with Lauchlin Currie,<sup>3</sup> Harold Stein, Chairman of Joint Supplies Committee of C.C.A.C., Angell of F.E.A. and Emerson of the State Department which helped to clear up a good many matters concerning which I, for one, was in doubt. The United States officials in response to questions from us stated that they understood quite clearly that allocations to Canada by the Combined Boards for military relief had nothing whatever to do with procurement or financing of the supplies in question. After the allocations were made by the Combined Boards, they would go back to the C.C.A.C. where the United States and United Kingdom representatives would work out between themselves arrangements for responsibility for the procurement of those supplies allocated to third countries. We emphasized to Currie that so far as Canada was concerned, we would expect that whichever Government on the C.C.A.C. was made responsible for procurement of Canadian allocations, that Government would have to purchase the supplies or work out with Canada an agreement on finance. I tried to show that Canada in this regard should be treated on the same basis as Brazil or any other of the United Nations, particularly as we were not represented on the C.C.A.C. or any of its committees. Currie rather deprecated this because of Canada's special importance in these matters and said rather jokingly that he felt sure that we would not wish to be classed with "lesser United Nations." He thought, however, that there was a good deal to be said for us being invited to join at least the Supplies Committee of the C.C.A.C. I think the Government should now give serious consideration as to whether we wish an invitation to be extended. At present, as I pointed out to Currie, when the C.C.A.C. agreed on procurement responsibility for Canadian allocations, each case would have to be taken up with the Canadian Government direct and considerable delay might be caused.

It became clear in our discussion this morning that though nothing has yet been decided, the C.C.A.C. will probably divide the procurement responsibility so that the United Kingdom takes over all allocations to all parts of the British Commonwealth.

The Americans and, no doubt, the British seem to think that this will mean that the military relief supplies from Canada will be granted under Mutual Aid. We pointed out some of the difficulties for us in this procedure. Currie in his turn pointed out the political difficulties in the purchasing in Canada by the United States of military relief supplies which would eventually be distributed free or for local currency by the United States or United Kingdom armies or both. In reply to a question from Plumptre, Currie said that the 3,000 tons of farm implement machinery for military relief which it is now, I understand, proposed to procure in Canada would not be purchased by the United States.

In respect of UNRRA orders transferred to military relief insofar as the United States and United Kingdom are concerned, this would be merely a bookkeeping transaction. I pointed out that it would be something quite different for Canada and that the same problem was involved here as that which we had been discussing. Unless we were to reduce our account to UNRRA by the amounts of Canadian supplies which had been transferred, some special arrangements would have to be made. Plumptre, Geddes<sup>4</sup> and I are to see the UNRRA supplies people this afternoon and will discuss these matters from the UNRRA point of view. Ends.

Ottawa, April 20, 1944

Your WA-2298 of April 15, military relief supplies. Department of Finance advises that it would be difficult to answer this question at the present time and might even be dangerous to do so. The Mutual Aid Appropriation which the Government has decided to obtain is substantially less than the probable requirements in Canada of the United Kingdom over and above what they are able to pay for out of current receipts from Canada. If the United Kingdom accepts procurement responsibility for military relief allocations made to Canada these will have to be considered as part of the United Kingdom's total requirements in Canada and treated accordingly. It is proposed to discuss the United Kingdom's programme for the coming year at an early date but policies in this matter have not yet been adopted.

For your confidential information it is possible that the Canadian Government would be prepared to accept some direct financial responsibility for a portion of military relief and would prefer that any requirements in excess of this fraction which had to be obtained from Canada should be divided between the United Kingdom and the United States. In view of what I have already said some special method would have to be devised for financing that part of the supplies, financial responsibility for which fell on the United Kingdom.

It would appear to be premature to discuss this question with the Foreign Economic Administration or any other American agency before the Mutual Aid debate has taken place in Parliament or until some decision has been made as to the allocation of Mutual Aid funds for the ensuing year.

Ottawa, April 29, 1944

Dear Mr. Wrong,

RE: MILITARY RELIEF

You will recall the series of despatches concerning Canada's participation in the supply and financing of military relief and the desirability of Canada being represented on the Combined Civil Affairs Committee, or at least on the Supplies Committee reporting to that Committee, to which Mr. Robertson referred in his letter to me of April 11th.†

After further thought on this matter, in the light of the information provided us from Washington, I believe it would be desirable for Canada to participate directly in the provision of supplies for military relief and in the financing of them, along the general lines which were considered at the meeting in Mr. Robertson's office on March 4th.<sup>5</sup> More specifically I would suggest—and I would emphasize that I have not taken this matter up with my Minister—that the Department of External Affairs might put forward, presumably to War Committee through the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, a proposal along the following lines:

1. Canada should offer to participate in the financing as well as the physical provision of supplies for military relief, provided that she is represented on the Combined Civil Affairs Committee and its Supply Committee when matters concerning relief are being considered.

2. This financing and provision of military relief supplies would be additional to and distinct from the financing and provision of supplies for UNRRA and for enemy-occupied areas, particularly Greece.

3. Canada should offer to finance a share of military relief supplies proportionate to her share in the military effort in the Western and Southern European theatre (i.e., excluding Russia). This share might most reasonably be determined by the number of the Canadian forces in the European theatre in relation to the total number in the armed services of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada in the European theatre.

4. The financing of such supplies should not be directly related to the country of origin of the supplies. If the Canadian financial contribution should exceed the value of supplies procured in Canada, we should put up the excess in any currency required. If supplies obtained in Canada should exceed the Canadian financial contribution, we would expect the Combined Civil Affairs Committee to arrange for us to be paid in Canadian dollars for this excess—presumably at the cost of either the United States or the United Kingdom or both. It would be arbitrary and illogical to have the financial responsibility determined or limited by the action of the various Combined Boards in allocating responsibility for physical supplies, as the Boards are not concerned with financial matters and should not be expected to take them into account in their decisions.

5. The cost of financing such military relief supplies should be charged to the War Appropriation under Army allocations. Of course, a special allocation would be made for this purpose. It would also be desirable to have Parliament informed of the Government's decision to do this, preferably, I should think, before the War Appropriation Act is passed. It is suggested that one might take the attitude that this military relief is a recognized part of the military cost of the invasion, just as much as, say, tanks or engineering or medical supplies; indeed, the relief will probably be issued from the same stocks as army rations.

See Document 1031.

6. In order to facilitate the immediate placement of contracts for certain types of supplies for military relief, if the general lines of policy suggested above are approved, temporary authority might be given to the Army to enter into commitments and, if necessary, make expenditures through the appropriate agencies, up to a figure of, say, a few million dollars, which would be safely within the share which Canada would be offering to finance.

7. As yet, as I understand it, Canada has not received any direct requests for military relief supplies, and specific cases have reached us only in the form of allocations by the Combined Boards. Before undertaking any commitments, I presume, Canada will have to get a formal request of some kind from the Allied military authorities.

8. Apparently the American authorities are assuming that military relief supplies from Canada will, more or less automatically, be financed from Mutual Aid funds. While certain of the supplies provided to the United Kingdom under Mutual Aid have been and may in future be, diverted to military relief, we have not intended that Mutual Aid should be used for this purpose and have not allowed for it in the Mutual Aid appropriation that has been proposed to Parliament. Moreover, the general policy in respect of Mutual Aid has been to provide goods directly to the nation ultimately to receive them, not for re-sale or even retransfer to other nations, and it would be inconsistent with this principle for Canada to furnish military relief supplies to the United States or United Kingdom for distribution, mainly as sales, to those in liberated territories. Transfers to enemy territories could certainly not be made under the Mutual Aid Act and it would not be possible in advance to make sure that military relief supplies would not find their way to some enemy areas.

9. I understand that military relief supplies will normally or at least frequently be sold for distribution to liberated areas and the military authorities will receive local currency in payment which will be used, at least in considerable part, to meet military expenditures in these local currencies. If Canada is to share in the financing of military relief supplies then she should share in some manner in the receipts obtained from them - possibly in the form of credits to the Canadian forces in their accounts with the United Kingdom and United States forces with whom they will be cooperating. In Italy, I understand, Canada has obtained local currency from the United Kingdom authorities in return for payment in sterling, and presumably bears a portion of other local currency costs indirectly through capitation rate payments to the United Kingdom. If Canada had credits in respect of the sales of relief supplies they could be applied in determining the net amount owing by Canada in such settlements as these.

The foregoing suggestions are put forward merely to serve as a basis for further discussions.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

Dear Henry [Angus],

I was glad to get your teletype EX-1862 of May 3rd,† with the letter from Clifford Clark regarding the financing of military relief. I sent a copy of this teletype to Plumptre, among others, and have received from him today a copy of a letter on the same subject which he sent to Clark. Possibly if he had received your teletype before sending his letter, he might have changed it in one or two respects. It is, however, a clear and useful analysis of the problem, and for that reason I am enclosing a copy herewith.

I find myself in agreement with the views expressed by Plumptre in this letter, and I gather from Clark's letter that he also has some sympathy with them.

FINANCING OF MILITARY RELIEF FROM CANADA

Dear Clark,

The problem of financing military relief from Canada is one which has been actively interesting several of us here in Washington, particularly Mike Pearson, George Bateman, and myself. While I do not think that I have ever talked to you about it, Bateman has given me some indication of your views. As I understand it, your position very briefly is that it would be politically unjustifiable for Canada to provide military relief under present circumstances in which Canada has no control over the allocation, disposition or distribution of such relief, and no access to the moral credit or financial returns obtained for such relief in liberated territories. I fully concur in this attitude.

On the other hand, it seems to me that we should anticipate a position in which some or all of the difficulties and objections mentioned above were withdrawn. For example, it is conceivable that Canada might be offered a place at the meetings of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee, which, under the Combined Chiefs of Staff, is responsible (I understand) for planning and organizing military relief; further, arrangements might be made for Canada to participate in the receipts from military relief distributed in liberated territories; and so forth. In short, circumstances might arise in which it might be considered desirable for Canada to participate in financing military relief, or at any rate, in which it might be quite embarrassing for Canada to refuse point blank to do so.

This raises the question in my mind whether the Mutual Aid Bill in its present form (or any other Bill), if passed, would permit the inclusion of a certain amount of expenditures for military relief. I fully appreciate the fact that the Mutual Aid appropriation at present proposed is insufficient to meet all the demands which are likely to be made upon it, and that you naturally cannot welcome any suggestion of additional burdens on it. Nevertheless, I would like to urge upon you most strongly that the way should be left open, either in the Mutual Aid Bill or in some other financial measure, for Canada to provide some military relief under acceptable circumstances.

My reason for urging this policy is because of the difficulties which might be expected to arise in Washington if, by Parliamentary action, Canada was precluded from providing any military relief under any circumstances. As you know, the Combined Boards are actively allocating sources of supply for relief purposes. It is urgently necessary that the production and procurement of relief supplies should proceed with the least possible delay. If the Canadian Government's hand is so tied by Parliamentary action that we are forced into the intransigent and unyielding attitude that under no circumstances will we finance any military relief, it will almost certainly evoke a similarly intransigent attitude on the part of the U.S. and U.K. procurement authorities, who will state that under no circumstances will they purchase any military relief in Canada. Such an attitude might not be alarming if it were possible to distinguish clearly in advance between relief for use in the military period and in the UNRRA period. But this is absolutely impossible. Accordingly, if we take an absolutely intransigent attitude on the question of military relief, it is likely seriously to interfere with arrangements for the placing in Canada of UNRRA relief requirements.

The position outlined in the preceding paragraph is not merely my own imagination. It is a situation which is actually emerging in the field of farm implements and other relief supplies.

Let me emphasize that, in view of the considerations mentioned in the first paragraph of this letter, I am not suggesting that we should make any commitment whatever at the present time in regard to military relief. I am only urging that we should be left some freedom of manoeuvre in that field and that our hands should not be completely tied by Parliament to a policy of no military relief under any circumstances. I know that Bateman concurs with me in this attitude. I believe that Pearson does also, but, owing to his absence from Washington, I have not been able to discuss it with him.

Accordingly, I should greatly appreciate any reassurance you can give me to the effect that, under the existing Mutual Aid Bill or under some other Bill to be passed at this session of Parliament, it would be legally permissible for Canada to participate to some extent in supplying military relief.

Yours sincerely,

A. F. W. PLUMPTRE

Ottawa, May 17, 1944

MILITARY RELIEF; FINANCIAL PROVISION

13. THE ACTING UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS submitted a memorandum respecting Canadian participation in military relief, copies of which had been circulated.

It was expected that large quantities of relief supplies would be procured in Canada for use during the period of military control and prior to the assumption of responsibility by UNRRA. Such supplies would be paid for in part only in the currencies of liberated countries. Early decision was required, however, as to how procurement was to be financed and as to what part Canada should play in the administration of goods distributed by Allied forces.

As a basis for discussion with U.K. and U.S. authorities, it was suggested:

(1) that Canada should offer to participate in the cost of military relief in a proportion commensurate with Canadian participation in the military operations themselves;

(2) that supplies purchased in Canada should, in the first instance, be financed out of Canadian funds provided from the military appropriations;

(3) that Canadian participation should be dependent upon adequate Canadian representation on the Supplies Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee in Washington, and on the Combined Civil Affairs Committee when matters concerning relief were under discussion; and,

(4) that, pending the conclusion of satisfactory arrangements and to enable immediate needs to be met, authority be given for commitments for orders to be placed in Canada for military relief up to an amount of $5,000,000, chargeable to the War Appropriation.

14. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY pointed out the necessity of maximum co-ordination of plans for military relief and UNRRA.

Canada should insist upon adequate representation in the administrative machinery for military relief as a condition of the provision of supplies.

15. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE drew attention to certain difficulties attendant upon the application of the formula suggested.

16. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that the Washington Embassy be instructed to make an informal approach to the U.K. and U.S. governments along the lines suggested by the Acting Under-Secretary.

TELETYPE EX-2069

Ottawa, May 17, 1944

The War Committee of Cabinet has authorized the commencement of informal discussions in Washington with the United Kingdom and United States authorities concerned on the subject of military relief with a view to ascertaining whether a settlement of the problem along the following lines would be generally acceptable:

1. Canada to participate in the ultimate dead weight costs of military relief in a proportion commensurate with Canada's participation in the military operations themselves;
2. Supplies purchased in Canada to be financed in the first instance out of Canadian funds which, as military relief is an integral part of the invasion operations, will come from the Canadian military appropriations;
3. In making this offer Canada expects representation on the Supplies Committee of the C.C.A.C. in Washington and on the C.C.A.C. itself when matters concerning relief are under discussion.

As it is hoped that immediate effect can be given to any agreement which may be reached, it is proposed to charge orders up to $5,000,000. against an allocation from the War Appropriation. This action will require the consent of the Treasury Board and this consent will be sought if a favourable report is received from you.

The purpose of the foregoing proposals is to make it possible to place orders in Canada for all supplies which it is wished to obtain from Canada for the purposes of military relief while at the same time protecting Canada against having to pay more than a fair share of the cost of the relief. The cost to be shared will of course be the net or dead weight cost, that is to say the cost to the relieving countries after allowance has been made for any receipts in connection with relief operations. The proposal that the fair share should be computed to be Canada's share in the invasion will require some elaboration and your discussions should, if possible, determine the simplest way of calculating a fair proportion. Our tentative proposal envisages a proportion corresponding to the number of ground troops committed to the invasion in the first instance and it would appear to be important that, whatever test may be used, the share which Canada is to bear in the total cost can be computed as soon as the invasion begins; that is to say, it should not depend on the efforts which the invading countries may ultimately make.

When a minute of the decision of the War Committee is received, I shall send you confirmation of this teletype.† Ends.

TELETYPE WA-3141

Washington, May 22, 1944

IMMEDIATE. Following for Wrong from Pearson, Begins: General Pope, Plumtre, Paterson, Monture,<sup>6</sup> Allen and I discussed this morning the matters raised in your teletype 2069, May 17, on Canada's responsibility for military relief. We came to the conclusion that quicker progress would be made in discussions of this matter with the U.S. and U.K. authorities here if we could put to them a concrete proposal based on the application of the formula agreed on in Ottawa; rather than the formula itself. If we adopt the latter course, there might ensue long and somewhat complicated discussions. If we adopt the alternative course, we would merely suggest to them that we accept financial responsibility for a percentage of the military relief required by the combined forces. We would ourselves calculate this percentage on the basis of the formula which you propose namely our army share in European invasion operations. General Pope thinks that this would amount to approximately 8 percent. Military experts in Ottawa will be able to confirm or revise this. If the U.S. or U.K. authorities press us for information as to the basis of our calculation of the Canadian proportion, we can give this to them but I do not think we need volunteer it.

Furthermore, we should make it clear to U.K.-U.S. that once the percentage is accepted and if the orders for military relief placed in Canada do not reach that amount, we will make available dollar resources up to our total percentage; on the other if the amount of military relief required from Canada exceeds our percentage figure<sup>7</sup> then the excess will be procured in Canada by purchase by the United States or United Kingdom military authorities or both.

Canadian Executive Officer, Combined Production and Resources Board.

If you agree with the procedure as outlined above which is in essence exactly the same as yours except that we determine ourselves the application of the formula agreed on, I can then take the matter up at once with the United Kingdom and United States authorities here. Ends.

FINANCING MILITARY RELIEF FROM CANADA

This is to summarize the discussion which took place in your office this morning with various U.K. officials, including Marris, Holmes, and Harmer. I carried on, to the best of my ability, for nearly an hour after you had to leave.

1. Implications of the Canadian offer. It was explained to the U.K. officials that Ottawa had been approached with a suggested modification of the considerations originally sent to us in EX-2069 of May 17. Specifically, we had suggested to Ottawa that we ought to propose to the U.S. and the U.K. that Canada would undertake to finance a definite percentage, say, 8 percent of the ultimate cost of military relief.

The U.K. officials emphasized that our 8 percent (or whatever it might be) must refer only to the final settlement. Arrangements were urgently necessary for immediate procurement of military supplies, and it was quite possible that more than 8 percent might be required from Canada. They believed it was extremely unlikely that the U.S. authorities would continue placing any orders in Canada for military relief.

We had some discussion of what the ultimate net burden of all European military relief would be. Current estimates of the gross outlays involved were in the neighbourhood of $600,000,000. However, it was also estimated that something like 80 percent of these outlays might be recoverable in foreign exchange. If the Canadian contribution were to be 8 percent, this would mean an initial gross outlay of $48,000,000, but an ultimate net burden of only $9.6 million.

The problem of ultimate settlement of the account was giving the U.K. much concern, because they, like ourselves, anticipated a position in which they would be called on for physical supplies in excess of any financial responsibility which seemed fair. Thus, they, like ourselves, would expect a payment, presumably from the United States, at the "Judgment Day". They were not optimistic about getting a firm commitment regarding such payment from the United States Army or the United States Treasury, and considered that the best that could be hoped for was a definite commitment from State Department. Then, when the Judgment Day came, it ought to be possible to obtain the funds from some military appropriation. Alternatively, and far preferably, the foreign exchange received from "paying countries" might be pooled and distributed in a manner eliminating any direct obligations between U.S. and U.K.

W[ould] not be known when purchase had to be made.

2. The problem of proceeds in local currencies. The U.K. approach to this problem is now simpler and clearer than most of the thinking on the subject in the past, at least in reference to the paying countries of western Europe. The U.K. understands, although it has no formal commitment, that the governments of these countries intend to pay foreign exchange (in United States dollars or sterling) for all military relief supplies. Thus the question whether military relief supplies are sold or given away, while of concern to the national governments of the liberated territories, is of no concern to the supplying countries which expect to be paid in either case. The national government of a liberated territory is, of course, concerned with whether military relief supplies are sold or given away. Their concern was explained to us by the U.K. officials along the following lines.

The Allied invading armies will have certain general needs for local currency. These needs may be met in either of two ways: (a) The Military authorities may disburse new paper money which they will bring with them, and which, when put into circulation will become an obligation of the national government of the territory, and (b) they may disburse local currency obtained from the sale of relief supplies. Obviously, the greater the sale of relief supplies under (b) the less will be the need to issue new paper money under (a). (The U.K. officials seemed to be taking rather a legalistic view of this point, emphasizing that the national government would want to minimize its outstanding obligations. Alternatively and preferably, it might be said that, to the extent that military relief was sold rather than given away, inflationary pressures in liberated territories would be reduced.)

The U.K. apparently intends to make special arrangements with the national governments concerned for supplies of local currency needed for the local pocket money of the U.K. troops and other special purposes which are considered to be a financial responsibility of the U.K. rather than of the country concerned. The U.K. would purchase such currency for sterling. (Of course, the currencies so purchased would be indistinguishable from the supplies of currency taken into the liberated area for general purposes as mentioned above, but separate sets of books would be kept for the supplies of local currencies designed for the different purposes.) If any of the currency so purchased were still retained by the U.K. at the close of military operations, the U.K. would expect to sell this residue back to the national government for sterling. The U.S.A., however, is apparently making no such arrangement with the governments of liberated territories; instead it is leaving all such matters to be settled at a later date.

3. Implications of conditions attached to the Canadian offer. A question was raised regarding the exact status requested by Canada on the C.C.A.C. and the C.C.A.C.S.<sup>8</sup> Apparently the form of words used in EX-2069 is not quite clear. After some discussion another form of words appeared to be more appropriate—that Canada should request “membership of the C.C.A.C.S. and representation on the C.C.A.C. when recommendations of the C.C.A.C.S. are under discussion.”

In this regard it should be emphasized that the C.C.A.C.S. makes recommendations to the C.C.A.C. concerning both the sources and destinations of supplies; it is not concerned, however, with administrative matters.

When this matter was under discussion, I gained the impression that there would be little difficulty in obtaining membership of the C.C.A.C.S. On the other hand, we would be well advised to be diplomatic in requesting a place on C.C.A.C. itself.

4. Present position of U.S.-U.K. arrangements. The position between U.S. and U.K. appears to be that U.K. made a proposal some months ago to State Department that the cost of military relief should be shared with U.S. roughly in proportion to their respective contributions to UNRRA. A United States suggestion has been that U.K. should supply all military relief from the British Commonwealth and Empire, that the United States should supply all military relief from U.S. and its possessions, and that they should share equally the cost of relief from other countries. Not much progress has been made in reconciling these fundamentally divergent approaches. However, the United States Army has recently announced in the C.C.A.C. that it was going to approach Congress for funds on the latter basis (having had no discussion with State Department or with the U.K. regarding the matter). In view of the urgency of making actual purchases of relief supplies, the U.K. has acquiesced, but are trying to insist that this should in no way prejudice final arrangements.

The U.K. has not approached either the F.E.A. or the U.S. Treasury in regard to this matter, and they would advise us against such an approach. (In view of the far better relations which we have been able to maintain with the U.S. Treasury, it may nevertheless be useful for us to invoke their support at some time).

5. How should the Canadian offer be made? I raised the question whether it was desirable for a formal approach to be made by the Canadian Combined Chiefs of Staff Mission to the Combined Civil Affairs Committee. This seemed to have the following advantages:

- (1) It involved a direct approach to the parties primarily concerned.
- (2) It involved a simultaneous and identical approach to both the U.S. and the U.K.

(3) It would appear to confine to Washington all discussions of the Canadian offer.

However, the U.K. officials felt that an approach through the usual diplomatic channels was preferable. This raised the difficulty that, since Canada could not formally approach the U.K. in Washington, an approach through London or Ottawa would be necessitated, and discussions might become decentralized. Marris agreed with me that it was very desirable to centralize discussions in Washington.

After some discussion of these pros and cons, and in view of the fact that the Canadian offer had apparently been under discussion while the Prime Minister and Mr. Robertson were in London recently, it seemed reasonable that Canada should present identical formal communications on the subject to the State Department and to London through Canada House. In any case, Marris requested us to be sure to keep him informed regarding our approach to the State Department, so that he could take steps to ensure that the U.K. officers on the Combined Chiefs of Staff received appropriate instructions from London.

Ottawa, May 29, 1944

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the War Committee of Cabinet has approved in principle of inquiries being made from the authorities in the United States and in the United Kingdom in order to ascertain if arrangements along the following lines would be acceptable with regard to the financing of military relief during the period preceding the time when relief can be managed exclusively by UNRRA.

(a) Canada to provide for the financing in the first instance of all orders placed in Canada for the purpose of military relief;

(b) The ultimate cost of military relief to be apportioned in such a way that Canada's share will correspond to the Canadian share in the liberation of Western Europe as compared with the shares of the United Kingdom and the United States;

<sup>9</sup>Une dépêche semblable fut envoyée au haut commissaire en Grande-Bretagne.
A similar despatch was sent to the High Commissioner in Great Britain.

(c) Canada to have representation on the Supplies Committee of the C.C.A.C. and to be represented on the C.C.A.C. itself whenever supply questions are under consideration.

2. It has, therefore, been decided to present identical proposals to the Governments of the United States and of the United Kingdom, and I should appreciate it if you will explain the Canadian position to the State Department and leave with them the following memorandum:

“The Government of Canada is impressed with the urgency of making arrangements for military relief which will both enable the fullest use to be made of Canada as a source of supply and keep Canada’s contribution to the ultimate cost of military relief in a fair and reasonable relationship to the contributions of the United Kingdom and the United States. It is desired to ascertain if the following proposal would be acceptable in principle:

(a) Canada should make provision for financing any orders that may be placed in Canada for military relief;

(b) After account has been taken of the contributions made to military relief by Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom respectively, and of whatever benefits may have accrued to those countries as a result of the resale in Europe of military relief supplies, the ultimate or net cost of military relief should be shared in a predetermined proportion;

(c) Canada should pay for a proportion of the military relief corresponding to Canada’s proportion in the liberation of Western Europe, as measured by the numbers in the Canadian ground forces destined for that operation in comparison with the ground forces of the United Kingdom and the ground forces of the United States. A tentative estimate suggests that this proportion may be of the order of 8 per cent;

(d) Canada should be represented on the Supplies Committee of the C.C.A.C. and Canadian representatives should be invited to the C.C.A.C. itself when relief questions are under discussion.”

3. In presenting this memorandum the following points should be explained in a more informal way:

(a) The proposed arrangement is sufficiently elastic to make it possible for orders to be placed equally freely in Canada by the United States military authorities or the United Kingdom military authorities, or by some joint agency, or sometimes by one agency and sometimes by another. It would include orders previously placed by either the United States or the United Kingdom for which payment may have been made since the supplies obtained in this way would count as a contribution to military relief by the country which had paid for them and not as a Canadian contribution;

(b) Special consideration would have to be given to supplies obtained by the United Kingdom through Mutual Aid procedure and subsequently made available for military relief. It is suggested that these should count, for the purposes of the present arrangements, as United Kingdom contributions to relief.

(c) The proposed arrangement is sufficiently elastic to conform to any arrangement which it may be found expedient to make with regard to receipts from the sale of military relief supplies. These receipts might take the form of payments in sterling or dollars by foreign governments or of payments in the currencies of the liberated countries; but for the purpose of the present arrangement whichever of the three countries receives any money on this account will take these receipts into account in calculating its net contribution to military relief. It is, of course, between the net contributions of the three countries that equitable proportions are to be maintained:

(d) Although it is desirable to fix the Canadian percentage of the ultimate cost of military relief as early as possible, it would not be necessary to wait for this percentage to be fixed before putting the proposed supply machinery into operation. As soon as it is agreed in principle that an arrangement should be made along the lines proposed, a Canadian credit will be established for the purpose of financing orders on military relief account.

The following interim note has been received from the Dominions Office, under date of June 26th, Begins:

Careful consideration has now been given by Departments here to the proposals made in the memorandum which you handed to me on June 5th<sup>10</sup> and to supplementary explanations.

I need hardly say that this indication that the Canadian Government are prepared in principle to share in the cost of relief during the military period is very welcome to the United Kingdom authorities; and they are very glad to learn also that the Canadian proposals provide for the immediate financing, by means of a special credit, of any orders that may be placed in Canada for military relief.

While desiring, however, to express their warm appreciation of the Canadian Government's readiness to assume a share of the financial burden, they regret that they are not yet in a position to express their considered views

IMMEDIATE. I discussed this morning with Mitchell of the State Department at his request our proposal for financing military relief supplies from Canada. He apologized for the delay in replying to my communications to Acheson on this subject;<sup>11</sup> delays caused by necessity of securing the views of the War Department on our proposed membership on the C.C.A.C. Sub-Committee on Supplies and participation in the work of the C.C.A.C. itself when supply questions are under consideration.

2. The State Department welcomed our proposals and hoped that they would be able soon to reply by accepting them.

Mitchell added however that there might be some difficulty over the C.C.A.C. membership. At first the United States Army objected to this as they felt it would lead to similar requests from other Governments. I pointed out that this was absurd as no other Governments had made any offer to share in military relief. Mitchell said the State Department appreciated this and the Secretary of State had sent a letter to the Secretary for War supporting our position. However, a subsequent discussion with General Hildring seemed to indicate that the United States Army might attach the same kind of qualification to our membership on the C.C.A.C. Sub-Committee as we had ourselves attached to our membership on the Full Committee. I told Mitchell that it would be most unfortunate if this were done as I did not see how the Canadian Government could possibly accept any such qualification. After all we were offering to pay for eight percent of military supplies and that entitled us to full membership and not qualified membership on the Sub-Committee which recommended policies in respect of such supplies.

I hope you will approve of the strong line I took with Mitchell on this point.

See Document 1041.

3. I told Mitchell also that we had received yesterday from the United Kingdom information on methods for dividing the cost of military relief among the three countries and that I would be securing your views shortly thereon. I asked him if the illustrations given in the United Kingdom telegram as to how these methods would work meant that the United States had agreed to bear sixty-two percent of the cost and the United Kingdom thirty percent. He said that this was not (repeat not) the case and these percentages were taken merely as an example and did not represent any agreement. He himself thought they were fair enough but the United States army authorities still favour a division of the cost of military relief supplies by which the country supplying the goods finances them or makes its own arrangements for such financing. I told Mitchell that this principle would certainly receive no support in Canada. It would leave us holding a very big bag.

4. I asked Mitchell what the United States proposed to do in respect of Lend-Lease supplies from the United States sold by the United Kingdom for military relief to paying countries. He replied that the proceeds of such sales would not be credited to the United States under military relief arrangements but that they might be credited to the United States as part of the general settlement which they hoped to make with the United Kingdom covering Lend-Lease goods transferred in this and other ways.

This is a precedent which we ourselves might follow in respect of Canadian Mutual Aid goods turned over to paying countries by the United Kingdom for military relief.

5. Mitchell hopes to have a reply ready to my note to Acheson by the end of this week or early next week. I think we should decide what we should do in case that reply is unsatisfactory in respect of membership on the C.C.A.C. Sub-Committee. I personally think we ought to stand firm here and refuse to accept any compromise put forward by the United States Army. Ends.

MILITARY RELIEF; FINANCIAL PROVISION

21. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported that agreement in principle had now been reached with the U.S. State Department along the lines approved by the War Committee on May 17th.

Under this arrangement, Canada would pay a share of the financial net cost of military relief and would receive representation on the Supplies Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee. Canada would have to provide for the financing of military relief orders and a larger sum would have to be provided for this purpose than would ultimately be required for Canada's liability under the agreement. In other words, the expenditure we were making at this time would later be offset by substantial receipts.

As an immediate measure, a draft submission to Treasury Board to provide $5 million had been circulated to the Minister of National Defence and to the Minister of Munitions and Supply. A further submission would shortly be required but it was urgent that this amount should be provided forthwith.

(Letter, External Affairs to the Ministers and attached draft submission to Treasury Board, July 27, 1944).†

22. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved the arrangements described by the Under-Secretary and the immediate provision for this purpose of $5 million from the War Appropriation.

My Dear Mr. Pearson,

In your memorandum of June 2nd, 1944,<sup>12</sup> and your letter of June 17th, 1944,<sup>1</sup> you expressed the desire of your Government to participate with the British Government and with this Government in bearing a part of the ultimate cost of military relief in Europe. You suggested tentatively that the amount of Canada's participation might be of the order of 8 per cent and added that participation was conditioned upon Canadian representation on the Supplies Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee and the presence of the Canadian representatives in the Combined Civil Affairs Committee itself when relief questions are under discussion.

I am happy to inform you that this Government accepts your suggestion of an 8 per cent participation by Canada in the ultimate cost of military relief. The War Department also welcomes such participation and agrees that your military should be represented on the Supplies Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee. I, therefore, suggest that you request your military people here to get in touch with the Combined Civil Affairs Committee and arrange the details of your representation.

Sincerely yours,

MILITARY RELIEF; CANADIAN FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION

29. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS submitted a memorandum recommending that approval be given to an Exchange of Notes with the U.K. and U.S. governments providing for payment by Canada of a proportion of the final cost of military relief in Western Europe, on the understanding that Canada would be represented on the Supplies Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee.

This arrangement had been worked out with the governments concerned on the basis of the decision taken by the War Committee at the meeting of May 17th last.

Both the United States and the United Kingdom were agreeable and the result would be to apportion financial responsibility, 67% to the United States, 25% to the United Kingdom and the remaining 8% to Canada. This division represented the approximate relationship between the forces serving in the European theatre. An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

DESPATCH 2317

Washington, October 7, 1944

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my teletype no. 5711 of October 4th† and my despatch no. 2232 of Sept. 26th† concerning the financing of military relief.

2. On October 3rd a meeting was held at the State Department, attended by representatives of the State Department, the U.K. Treasury Delegation, the U.K. Embassy and an officer of this Embassy, to discuss two draft notes introduced by the United Kingdom. The remainder of this despatch consists of an informal report on this meeting and on subsequent conversations with the U.K. and U.S. officials concerned.

3. At the beginning of the meeting the U.K. representatives put forward for consideration a note which they were proposing to pass to the State Department in a form which would be acceptable to the U.S. authorities concerned and to the Canadian authorities.

4. There was a considerable amount of discussion on the note and a number of changes were made including particularly the insertion of a paragraph providing for consultation among the three Governments on outstanding claims to determine whether or not such claims should be maintained against the Government or Authority concerned, and other changes to make it clear that the "irrecoverable amounts" included not only losses due to non-payment but also operational losses resulting from imperfections in pricing etc.

5. It was noted that as of the time of this meeting the 8% responsibility which Canada assumed in the note represented a hypothetical figure and that it would have to be reviewed and confirmed by the Canadian authorities before it could be used as a firm percentage in such a note. At this point there was some further discussion of the basis on which the division of responsibility between the U.S. and U.K. had been determined. From this discussion and subsequent conversations it would seem that the 25-67 division had been worked out in the following fashion (see the copy of paper S.L.T./W./44/83† for the basic figures on which the calculation was made);

Total Supplies considered in the calculations (Plan A <sup>14</sup> + Italy, omitting "additional items" of "doubtful availability" and "unallocated" to the amount of $121,400,000.)	$642,830,000
U.S. Share
(a) initial procurement responsibility	$411,380,000
(b) Lend-Lease element in U.K. initial procurement responsibility	$29,530,000
	$440,910,000

This is an underestimate as it excludes the element of identifiable lend-lease which will be directly credited to the U.S. If this element were to be included, the U.S. share in procurement would be considerably higher than 68.5%. However as the U.K. is prepared to take responsibility for 25% of the ultimate cost the U.S. share might be estimated at 67%, assuming that Canada accepts responsibility for 8% of the ultimate cost.

Percentage-wise the U.S. share is about 68.5% say 67% (in order to bring the U.K. percentage out to 25%, presumably).

Percentage-wise the balance is, therefore,	33%
If Canada assumes responsibility for	8%
The responsibility of the U.K. would then be	25%

As is apparent this calculation is a very rough one and is justified not for the reason that the data used necessarily provide a good basis for allocating ultimate financial responsibility but rather for the reason that these particular calculations yield percentages which can probably be established on other grounds as fairly representative of the relative financial strength of the U.S. and U.K. In fact before any such calculations were made it was known that the U.K. felt unable to assume more than 25% of the ultimate cost. There was some discussion of the payments made by recipient countries to allied troops occupying or liberating those countries in relation to the payments which those same countries would be expected to make for the military relief which they receive. On this point there seems to be some difference of opinion between the U.S. and U.K. particularly with reference to payments by Italy, where the U.S. appears to be willing to offset soldiers pay (provided by the Italians) against payments due from the Italians for relief. It was recognized that the problem involved in relating these two kinds of payments will be different in the case of liberated Allied countries than it will in the case of ex-enemy countries. It is clear that these problems will have to be given more consideration and agreement will have to be reached but it is not thought that the consideration of this draft U.K. note is affected by these ancillary problems.

6. The U.K. representatives agreed to delay the submission of this note formally to the State Department until the interested U.S. and U.K. authorities should have an opportunity to consider the draft and to comment on it.

7. The U.K. representatives then introduced a draft note on the methods of calculation which the U.K. proposes to use in determining the magnitude of the lend-lease element in supplies furnished by the U.K. for relief during the military period. One of the U.K. representatives indicated that this note referred only to the unidentifiable lend-lease element in such supplies, as identifiable lend-lease goods would be credited automatically to the U.S. It was indicated that the Supplies for Liberated Areas Committee (SLAO) [sic] and Middle East Liaison (MEAL) are keeping detailed records of identifiable lend-lease items provided and the appropriate re-transfers will be made in the U.S.-U.K. accounts. The U.K. representatives were unable to decide what arrangements would be made for cases in which the U.K. provided from her own sources materials which were similar to those received by the U.K. under lend-lease.

8. The draft note suggests that the lend-lease elements in supplies of food procured by the U.K. should be estimated by taking the percentages of lend-lease foods in total U.K. supplies of various categories of food in the year 1943-44 and applying these percentages to the total for each category of food in the U.K. and Middle East stockpiles. On textiles and agricultural machinery it was found even more difficult to estimate the lend-lease element but the U.K. Board of Trade considers that the lend-lease element in these items may reasonably be written off as insignificant.

9. It might be noted that the State Dept. representatives questioned the advisability of determining on such a percentage basis the credit to be transferred to the U.S. They expressed the tentative view that if military relief supplies were to be drawn from say a $100,000 stockpile in which the lend-lease element amounted to $35,000 the U.S. might wish to be credited not with 35% of the receipts from such withdrawals but with 100% of the receipts up to the $35,000 represented by lend-lease goods in the stockpile. This view was not pressed in the discussion as it was recognized that much more consideration would have to be given to the whole note before anything like a firm view could be expressed on particular points.

10. This draft U.K. note was presented on this occasion merely for consideration, and as the subject is one of considerable complexity it is anticipated that there will have to be much more discussion before a formal arrangement is agreed upon by the U.S. and U.K. After the meeting the principal U.K. representative indicated that no similar calculations had been made for the Canadian Mutual Aid element in such U.K. supplies. He anticipated that this problem would be subject of discussion between the U.K. and Canada shortly.

11. Two copies of each of the two draft notes in the form in which they emerged from the discussion are attached.†

Dear Mr. McCloy,

With reference to your letter of September 30† on Canadian participation in the work of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee, steps are now being taken to formalize an arrangement by which the Canadian Government accepts financial responsibility for 8% of the net cost of military relief in the European theatre of operations.

One condition governing the acceptance of this financial responsibility was that Canada should become a member of the Supply Sub-Committee and participate in the meetings of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee itself when supply matters in which Canada has an interest are under consideration. I am glad, therefore, to note from your letter that this condition is acceptable to your committee.

The Canadian representative on the Supply Sub-Committee will be Colonel W. C. Beamer, a member of the Canadian Joint Staff Mission in Washington. Steps are being taken to notify the Combined Secretariat of the Sub-Committee of this appointment.

Yours sincerely,

IMMEDIATE. The following invitation to associate ourselves with the Combined Liberated Areas Committee has just been received:

“My dear Mr. Ambassador:

There has recently been established in Washington a Combined United Kingdom-United States Liberated Areas Committee of which I am Chairman. The Committee has the following terms of reference:

‘To provide a forum for the exchange of views on problems arising in liberated and conquered territories in which the two Governments have a mutual interest as a result of combined military, supply, shipping or financial responsibilities and which are outside the scope of the Combined Chiefs of Staff.’

This Committee has a Sub-Committee to handle certain questions of supply and procedure arising from requirements programs and supply operations which are outside the scope of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee.

The Combined Liberated Areas Committee, which has held several meetings, considers that in view of her position as a supplying nation it would be desirable that Canada should be associated with these arrangements. I am therefore writing to you to convey an invitation to the Canadian Government to appoint representatives to serve as members of the operating Sub-Committee and to attend meetings of the Combined Liberated Areas Committee itself when questions of concern to Canada are under consideration.

If the Canadian Government will accept this invitation I will see that notices of meetings, agenda and relevant papers of the Combined Liberated Areas Committee are circulated to you regularly in order that you may have an opportunity of indicating the subjects for discussion on the Combined Liberated Areas Committee in which you consider Canadian interests are involved. Sincerely yours, Dean Acheson.”

I should think this invitation is along the lines which you have previously declared would be acceptable. I would be grateful, therefore, if you would confirm that I can reply to it in that sense. Consideration should be given to our membership on the Supplies Sub-Committee and I shall have some suggestions to make in this regard shortly.

I am going to reply to this in detail later when I have consulted Mr. Pierce. In the meantime, I may say that I agree that the instructions for Colonel Beamer should be put in a more formal form. Discussion and correspondence here have considerably modified the crude statement that it is desirable to secure all possible orders for supplies from Canada. All that has been meant is that we should treat sales to the military relief authorities as the equivalent of ordinary exports, subject to qualifications:

(i) We may on humanitarian or military grounds be ready to accept export orders which we should not otherwise accept in view of the domestic supply situation;

(ii) Where these considerations do not obtain, there are some commercial markets which are preferable to the military relief market, either because we are supplying old customers or because we are developing markets which have potentialities. It is agreed, I think, that we should not attempt to obtain a footing in such markets by selling commodities in short supply at a time when our possible competitors are supplying their exportable surplus of these commodities for relief purposes.

It has been assumed that Colonel Beamer would consult with Scott on matters of commercial policy with a view to finding out through him from the Department of Trade and Commerce what categories of business Canada is desirous of developing.

I am sending this interim reply because it may be some days before I can send anything more explicit. Ends.<sup>15</sup>

Ottawa, December 1, 1944

Dear Mike [Pearson],

I told you that I would be discussing the financing of military relief while in Ottawa, and yesterday Dr. Clark called a meeting in his office for that purpose. Dr. Angus and Mr. Bryce were also present.

I urged all possible speed in sending to Washington instructions, as requested in Despatch No. 2654,† relating to the United States proposals for compiling relief bills (C.C.A.C. 141/1).† I stressed the distinction between (a) the procedure for compiling and presenting aggregate bills, as set forth in detail in C.C.A.C. 141/1, and (b) the steps necessary to decide on the proportions in which the bills should be payable to the three supplying Governments.

In regard to (a), I said that the Canadians in Washington were of the opinion that the proposed procedures were probably unduly cumbersome. However, the United States War Department was insisting on clearing up (a) before passing on to (b) or, indeed, before presenting Notes to the Allied Governments requesting payment. The United States military had assured us that the procedures they were proposing were not going to entail delays in billing because most of the necessary information was already being collected. I, therefore, suggested that it would be better for Canada to accept the procedures as laid down, and to follow them if necessary in a somewhat rough and ready fashion, than to urge simplifications at this date.

I explained that we in Washington (particularly Colonel Beamer) had discovered some technical ambiguities in the War Department document. These were essentially concerned with problems of averaging prices and problems of timing in respect of the applications of average prices to quantities of goods supplied. However, I thought that these matters could probably be effectively clarified in Washington, and need not delay the general approval of Document C.C.A.C. 141/1, for which we were hoping.

Before passing on to a consideration of (b)—the proportions in which bills would be payable—I raised the question whether it was desirable that the civilian authorities should communicate their decision regarding these proportions to SCAEF, who would then insert the appropriate proportions on each bill, or whether, as suggested in C.C.A.C. 141/1, it was desirable for the civilian authorities to communicate their decisions to the Governments of the liberated territories separately from the bills. I explained that the British rather favoured the separate communication of proportions because this communication might be delayed pending clarification of the proper proportions as time went on. On the other hand, this procedure was obviously clumsy, and would largely defeat the purpose of prompt presentation of bills. It appeared that the United States were not committed to the separate approach, and if Ottawa had any strong views they should be communicated to Washington.

We then passed to a discussion of the problems attaching to the determination of proportions, the final settlement of accounts, and the interim financing involved. I suggested that it might prove useful to set up a committee in Ottawa to look into these matters but the feeling of the others present was contrary.

Dr. Clark and the others expressed a number of apprehensions which I think we should do well to keep in mind pending our receipt of more formal communications from Ottawa relating to them:

1. The recipient Governments may, in the final event, refuse outright to make any reimbursement, claiming perhaps that the supplies were distributed without reference to themselves and before they were allowed to exercise any jurisdiction in their territories.

2. The recipient Governments may pay U.S.A. and possibly U.K. if these countries are in a position to exert sufficient economic or political pressure, but may be very delinquent in payments to Canada. (This would have been avoided if all payments could have been made to a central pool).

3. Estimates of the immediate and ultimate burden of military relief seem to have grown alarmingly since last summer.

4. Canada is likely to supply goods substantially in excess of 8 per cent of the total, and is therefore likely (i) to bear an unduly large part of the financing of supplies and (ii) to be in the position of trying to collect ultimately from the United States and United Kingdom, which may prove a protracted or even an impossible procedure.

In regard to (4) above, Dr. Clark at first suggested that Canada should keep down its own purchases of supplies to the 8%, and should request the United Kingdom and more particularly the United States to purchase all additional supplies when Canada was designated as a source. He said he felt sure the United States would not want Canada to be financing a part of their financial share of military relief.

However, Mr. Bryce suggested that, if the supplies were to come from Canada, the domestic financial burden would be the same whether Canada financed the supplies themselves or the sterling or United States dollars put up by one of the other countries purchased the supplies. Moreover, he and Dr. Angus pointed out that we initially became involved in military relief precisely because United States and United Kingdom refused to buy in Canada for this purpose. Moreover, it was the apparent intention, both of our discussions last summer and of our agreement with United States and United Kingdom, that each country should finance the supplies obtained from it. Therefore it would be difficult to make an approach along the line indicated.

Mr. Bryce then suggested that we should ask the other two countries for a firm commitment that they would ultimately reimburse us so that our final outlay would be only 8 per cent of the net loss. Dr. Clark did not like this idea of a final commitment, preferring current purchases in Canada by the other two countries. However, it was suggested that the U.S.A., at least, would probably be unable to give the firm commitment (despite the fact that its reasonableness can scarcely be questioned), and that the U.S.A. might, as an alternative, be willing to make some purchases in Canada. I said that now we were committed to contribute 8 per cent, the U.S.A. would probably find it easier to make purchases in Canada than when we were not contributing anything.

Would you please send the enclosed copy of this letter to Colonel Beamer; I am sending copies to Dr. Clark, Mr. Bryce and Mr. Angus.

Yours sincerely,

Special Wartime Assistant to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister, Embassy in United States

Ottawa, December 1, 1944

Dear Mike [Pearson],

Plumptre has asked me to add my comments to his letter of December 1st, concerning the meeting held in Dr. Clark's office to discuss the financing of military relief. The present stage of the correspondence on this subject is that the Department of External Affairs is awaiting a reply from the Department of Finance dealing with the United States proposals for compiling relief bills.

The proposals in question concern the preliminary procedures and, although these procedures appear to be extremely cumbersome, the fact that they are satisfactory to the United States War Department would go a long way in disposing us to accept them rather than to prolong a discussion that stands in the way of a clear agreement concerning military relief.

The principal difficulty is that these proposals, although in appearance confined to the preliminary stage of administering military relief, may have important implications for the second stage. They not unnaturally arouse apprehension lest the collection of payment from the debtor countries should be unduly postponed and even some apprehension as to whether the Canadian authorities can absolutely count on receiving their fair proportion of the receipts.

The latter point is of very great importance because of the magnitude of the Canadian contribution, assuming that Canada continues to finance all supplies originating from Canadian sources. You will remember that there is also outstanding a request that Canada should finance all supplies originating from Newfoundland.

The reaction of Dr. Clark was that we should confine our supplies to eight per cent of the total supplies, thus limiting our maximum financing to $80,000,000, even in the event of the plan reaching its theoretical limit of $1,000,000,000.

You will be fully alive to the difficulties which would arise if Canada were to adopt this position. Canada is bound to be a source of the great part of the physical supply for military relief and we should be put in the position of refusing to honour an allocation by the Combined Boards not because we were unable to supply the commodities in question but because we were unwilling to finance them, although we had formally agreed to do so.

If this position is to be avoided, the very least condition would appear to be that Canada should receive some commitment from both the United States and the United Kingdom that they would make a prompt financial adjustment, perhaps at intervals of six months or a year, so as to confine the net cost of the military relief to the agreed percentages. Canada would naturally be expected to make a similar agreement, but as Canada is a large supplier this action would be a mere formality. It would be of importance that the agreement should not merely cover ultimate payment but that it should be worded so as to avoid Canada being left to hold the bag for a prolonged period while an endeavour was made to collect payments from debtor countries which were unable to meet their obligations at once but which might ultimately become solvent.

An alternative would be that suggested by Plumptre, namely, that both the United Kingdom and the United States might purchase supplies in Canada for cash in order to reduce the initial financial burden falling on Canada so that it would not exceed approximately eight per cent of the financial burden incurred by the three countries.

It is perhaps worth remembering as a third possibility that, if the payments from the debtor countries were made into a pool from which a distribution would be made from time to time, the difficulties caused by the procedures proposed by the War Department would not arise.

It has been my contention throughout that, if a water-tight system can be established by which prompt payment is assured to Canada in respect of the supplies originating in Canada, there is no reason why we should not offer supplies to military relief as freely as we offer exports to any hard-currency destination with, of course, the exception of providing for historic markets or pioneering new ones.

The practical, or perhaps I should say the psychological, effect of the recent correspondence has however been to disincline almost everyone to making large shipments on military relief account. The reason is that payment appears dubious. It is obvious enough that out of the agreement we have to pay eight per cent of the deficit, whoever the supplier might be, and that therefore the prospective cost is not augmented by sending supplies from Canada rather than from some alternative source. There is, however, as I have explained, apprehension lest the agreement should work slowly or even not work at all.

I understand that the instructions given to Beamer are that he is not to press supplies from Canada and that he is to confine them chiefly to agricultural products. I have been told, on the one hand, that these directions were given on grounds of supply and, on the other, that they are important on financial grounds. The latter seems to me the more probable explanation as I have just come from a meeting considering how paying countries or UNRRA could be induced to buy from Canada. It appears, therefore, that the result of the negotiations at this point has been to make military relief appear a very doubtful destination for Canadian supplies. You may wish to emphasize this point, if it is necessary to do so, in order to persuade the United States authorities, whether military or civil, that the procedures which they are proposing will have harmful consequences.

In order to give this letter the same circulation as Plumptre's, I am sending a copy to Dr. Clark and Mr. Bryce, and am enclosing a copy for Colonel Beamer and a copy for Mr. Plumptre.

Yours sincerely,

DESPATCH 1737

Ottawa, December 5, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 2654 of November 23rd<sup>f</sup> concerning the financing of military relief. The memorandum by the Director of the Civil Affairs Division in the United States War Department,† of which a copy was enclosed in the despatch, has been carefully considered by the Department of Finance and has been communicated to the other interested Departments here.

2. The billing procedure outlined in the memorandum appears in general satisfactory, although somewhat more cumbersome than had been expected. It is noted that the recipient Governments are to be notified of the proportions of each bill due to the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada respectively at the time at which the bill is rendered by SCAEF. There appears to be a suggestion that the proportions might be varied subsequently or that notification might be delayed in order to make the proportions outstanding at any one time conform to the shares of the net costs of military relief which the supplying countries have agreed to bear. It is desirable that this point should be made more precise and that adjustment should be made so that the proportion of the bills to be paid to each supplying country should be properly calculated so as to give effect to the agreement for sharing net costs. In order to do this, some account would have to be taken of the ability of recipient countries to pay promptly in order that no one supplying country should have more than its appropriate share of bad or doubtful accounts. Any excuse for delay in payment that might be given to the recipient countries would be most undesirable, partly because of the uncertainty to which it would lead and partly because the burden of financing the relief should not be made unduly onerous to the supplying countries. This latter point is of particular interest to Canada because Canada is likely to be called on to supply a fairly large portion of the relief and has agreed to finance it in the first instance.

3. I fully appreciate that it may in practice prove quite impossible to secure a modification of the billing procedure in the sense suggested in the preceding paragraph and that the delays incidental to any negotiations on this point may be so serious that it would be better not to raise these issues at all in connection with the billing. It is, therefore, suggested that you should, if you see no objection, discuss the whole question frankly with the State Department, pointing out the difficulties which Canada has encountered and enquiring if any arrangement can be made to meet them.

4. The State Department might be reminded that when Canada offered to pay eight per cent of the net cost of military relief, it was anticipated that the magnitude of military relief would not be so great as it appears likely to be today. They might be reminded that what was contemplated was the initial financing incidental to procurement and not the financing over a long period of time of charges which could be more appropriately borne by the two other supplying countries because, while Canada's share in the physical supplies to be financed is likely to be large, Canada's share of the net cost is to be small.

5. It might then be suggested that the Canadian expectation had been that some pooling arrangement would be adopted so that the actual payments from the recipient countries could be distributed promptly to the supplying countries, taking account of the financial burdens which those countries had incurred. The advantage of a pooling arrangement is that bad or doubtful debts would not be assigned to any one country and that the inconvenience incidental to delay would, like the net cost of the scheme, be distributed among the supplying countries in the agreed proportions. You might, therefore, enquire whether it would not be possible to have the bills paid in the first instance in United States dollars to a pool or suspense account which need not be held by the military authorities but might be held by some civilian agency - perhaps by an agency of the United States Government which is to be the largest contributor to the net cost of the plan. When the proper division of these pooled receipts was determined, they could then be paid to whichever of the three supplying countries was entitled to them.

6. If the arrangement outlined in the preceding paragraph were adopted no difficulty need arise if the United Kingdom wished to be paid in sterling or Canada in Canadian dollars. The United Kingdom or Canada, as the case might be, would receive United States dollars from the pool but would offer these for sale to the recipient country in exchange for sterling or Canadian dollars respectively.

7. This pooling device would have the advantage of combining prompt payment by the recipients with an equitable division of payments among the recipients and the need for subsequent adjustments among the three recipient countries would be reduced to a minimum. It would also have the advantage that the recipient countries would pay on a combined basis to all three supplying countries and there would be no question of the recipient paying, for instance, the United States and not paying Canada. It appears to us that this method of pooling receipts could be combined with the billing procedure outlined in document C.C.A.C. 141/1 of November 12th.

8. You should make it clear to the State Department that Canada, acting under the proposed plan as it was understood here, has proceeded to make provision for the financing of those orders which must be placed immediately. In order to do so, an allocation of $5,000,000 was made by the Treasury Board to enable the Department of National Defence to finance the initial orders. It was expected at the time that this payment would suffice to cover the interval during which a final agreement could be concluded on the subject of military relief. It has, however, been necessary to allot a further sum of $40,000,000 to cover supplies which are said to be urgently needed. The financial commitment which Canada has already made is, therefore, substantially in excess of the maximum net cost which Canada would bear under the agreement as it has been outlined to us. This maximum would be eight per cent of $400,000,000 or $32,000,000. It is, of course, understood that in the first instance Canada must expect to make a financial outlay in excess of the net cost which Canada will actually have to bear and that Canada cannot reasonably draw a hard and fast line at $32,000,000 or any other figure and say that this is all that Canada has undertaken to provide. It is, however, as has already been pointed out, a matter of serious concern if Canada is to be called on for a very large financial outlay greatly exceeding eight per cent of the total of the goods to be supplied unless procedures are adopted for reimbursing Canada upon which reliance can be placed not only as regards ultimate payment but also as regards prompt payment. The billing and accounting procedure is so involved and so many different parties are concerned in the arrangement that it is feared that there may be a considerable length of time before any proceeds can be expected and a not inconsiderable risk of the procedures themselves being ineffective in bringing the Canadian share of the net costs to the agreed proportion of eight per cent.

9. It should be explained to the State Department that it would be very difficult to persuade Treasury Board to make any further allocations for the procurement of military supplies in Canada unless the Canadian Government can show that it has some assurance from the United States and the United Kingdom that, if the proceeds from the recipient Governments are not sufficient to reduce the net costs to the agreed shares, the United States or the United Kingdom will be prepared to settle the remainder of the necessary adjustment by direct payments. The Canadian Government, for its part, would be prepared to give a similar undertaking for the sake of uniformity. It is, however, possible that no such undertaking may be desired as it is almost certain that the Canadian share of the physical supplies will be of such a character that Canadian receipts under the plan are not likely to be excessive.

10. If the United States Government is unable or unwilling to give an undertaking of the character described in the preceding paragraph, then I think that you should request the State Department to agree to procure and pay for any supplies required from Canada over and above eight per cent of the total supplies provided by the three countries together. In other words, if there are constitutional or political barriers to the United States ensuring Canada against an unreasonable proportion of the risks, the United States Government should itself assume those risks. If the United States Government is unwilling to give us an undertaking to make a financial adjustment with Canada from time to time in order to protect Canada against bearing a disproportionate share of the financial risk, it will simply mean that the procurement of additional relief supplies in Canada would have to be undertaken by the United States rather than by the Canadian Government.

11. It has been assumed in the preceding paragraphs that the United Kingdom will be willing to furnish a guarantee. Purchases by the United Kingdom in Canada will, of course, raise new difficulties because of the difficulty of payment.

12. It has been assumed that Canada, in making provision to finance $45,000,000 worth of relief supplies, has made provision for more than eight per cent of the total relief supplies for which arrangements have been made by the three supplying countries taken together. It would be useful to have precise information on this point in order to make our arguments more effective and it would be appreciated if you can obtain any information as to the magnitude of the commitments already undertaken by the United States and the United Kingdom for the procurement of military relief supplies and the value of supplies already transferred from military stores for relief purposes.

13. You may inform the State Department and the military authorities concerned that there is no objection on financial grounds to Canada becoming responsible for the procurement of supplies in Newfoundland for military relief but that this procurement, like further procurement in Canada, itself must be subject to a satisfactory agreement being reached on the lines indicated earlier in this despatch.

14. In paragraph 5 of your despatch reference is made to the need for an agreement between the United Kingdom and Canada covering Mutual Aid supplies which may be transferred by the United Kingdom to military relief account. Careful consideration is being given to this matter which is only one of a number of similar problems connected with Mutual Aid supplies. It is probable that in the case of shipments of supplies which can be definitely identified as having been transferred to the United Kingdom under Mutual Aid, these supplies will be charged by Canada to the Military Relief appropriation rather than to Mutual Aid. It would be considerably more difficult to deal with unidentifiable Mutual Aid content of supplies provided directly by the United Kingdom and our proposals on this point have not yet taken shape. What has been said is no more than a probability as action in this matter will have to be approved by the Mutual Aid Board and possibly by the Government itself.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY
NATIONAL DEFENCE

The Board had under consideration a memorandum from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for External Affairs concurred in by the Honourable the Minister of Munitions and Supply and the Honourable the Minister of National Defence reporting:

“That the Cabinet War Committee on October 5th gave approval to an Exchange of Notes with the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom, providing for the payment by Canada of eight per cent of the final cost of military relief in Western Europe on the understanding that Canada will be represented on the Supplies Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee. The Cabinet War Committee agreed that the detailed procedure for carrying out this arrangement should be left to the officials of the three Governments;

That the Canadian Embassy in Washington reports that negotiations are proceeding with the other two Governments concerned with respect to the details of the proposed Agreement but that it is clear that all three Governments are prepared to conclude an Agreement that is, in substance, on the lines approved by the Cabinet War Committee;

That under the proposed Agreement Canada will be responsible for the financing in Canada of all orders that may be placed here;

That the Canadian Embassy reports that it is clear from all the formal and informal discussions that the United States and the United Kingdom are agreed that payment in full shall be requested of all Governments or authorities of liberated or conquered areas to which supplies are furnished and that the firm intention of the United States and the United Kingdom is to render bills monthly, if possible, or quarterly if monthly billing is not feasible. The time which would elapse between the billing and the remittance of payment by the recipient Government will depend primarily upon negotiations between the recipient Government and the supplying Governments concerned;

That the Agreement contemplates a limit to the prospective deficit to be incurred, without the Agreement being brought up for re-negotiation, at the sum of $400,000,000, Canada's share of which would amount to $32,000,000. Similarly, the total to be financed by the three Governments without the negotiation of a new Agreement would be limited to $1,000,000,000. It is, of course, impossible to say that the supplies which Canada would be required to finance initially would be limited to eight per cent of this sum or $80,000,000, since the placing of orders in Canada will depend on the availability of supplies;

That on August 17th, 1944, Treasury Board recommended that authority be granted for expenditures in an amount not exceeding $5,000,000 in connection with the Canadian participation in the cost of relief during the military period in Europe, chargeable to the Allotment from the War Appropriation for Army Services, the expenditures to be made by the Mutual Aid Board under arrangements satisfactory to the Department of National Defence;

That further important urgent orders are pending which cannot be placed in Canada until further financial provision is made.

It is, therefore, recommended that Treasury Board should make provision for these further expenditures in an amount not to exceed $40,000,000, chargeable to the War Appropriation for Army Services, and that the expenditure be made by the Mutual Aid Board in financing orders placed on account of military relief.”

The Board concur in the above report and recommendation, and submit the same for favourable consideration.

TELETYPE WA-6885

Washington, December 11, 1944

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Angus from Pearson, Begins: Our despatch No. 2317 of October 7th and teletype WA-5853 of October 12th† concerning the draft United Kingdom note on the arrangements for providing relief on a combined basis outside UNRRA.

2. In my immediately following teletype, WA-6886, I am reproducing the text of the note in the form which the State Department has now indicated would be acceptable to the United States Government.

3. This note is in two sections.

4. Section A consists of the original draft United Kingdom note with one change. In subparagraph II of the second paragraph, the State Department would insert the words “unless other arrangements are mutually agreed upon”. This provision is intended to take care of the possibility that the United States may wish to offer its share of the supplies on a Lend-Lease basis in certain cases without requesting full payment. As indicated in paragraph 6 of our despatch No. 2773 of December 9th<sup>16</sup> on the financing of wheat supplies for Greece, this provision would also make it possible for the expenses incurred in the provision of such supplies to be shared among the three Governments without the necessity of going through the formality of requesting payment from the Greek Government, if the three participating Governments should mutually agree to refrain from requesting such payment. The requirement that any arrangement to forego full payment must be mutually agreed among the three supplying Governments would seem to prevent any abuse of this provision.

5. Section B presents the United States Government's counter proposal to the original United Kingdom proposal for the treatment of the Lend-Lease element in relief supplies provided by the United Kingdom. You will note that the categories A, B, C in paragraph 2 and A & B in paragraph 3 have not yet been defined. The United Kingdom representatives here are suggesting to London that the categories in Section 2 might appropriately be confined to foodstuffs in which the Lend-Lease element is significant, as indicated in the original United Kingdom draft and they are asking London whether sugar should now be added to the foodstuffs listed if the date of March 11, 1941, rather than the later date mentioned in the original draft is to be taken as the starting point. The United Kingdom representatives expect to exclude textiles and other Lend-Lease supplies which did not constitute a significant part of total supplies during the period. They anticipate some difficulty in having trucks excluded and they are not completely confident that the discussions here have convinced the United States authorities that no credit should be transferred to the United States for relief supplies provided by the United Kingdom which though not received under Lend-Lease are, nevertheless, similar to and substitutable for supplies received under Lend-Lease. It appears from discussions over the weekend that the United Kingdom Government may regard a number of features in this counter proposal as repugnant to the general arrangements which have been made with the United States Government by the Keynes Mission for the continuation of Lend-Lease.<sup>17</sup> Although the initial reactions of the United Kingdom representatives to this United States counter proposal were quite favourable, they are now inclined to think that a considerable amount of discussion will be required before the method of handling the Lend-Lease element can be worked out to the satisfaction of the United Kingdom Government in the light of the general arrangements which have been made for continuing Lend-Lease.

6. In referring this note to London, the United Kingdom Embassy suggested that the time had now come for the presentation of a similar note to the Canadian Government, probably through the Canadian High Commissioner in London. The United Kingdom Embassy's telegram pointed out that, while the essence of Section A in the present draft note should be retained in the note for presentation to the Canadian Government, a new Section B covering the Mutual Aid element would have to be worked out with the Canadian Government in Ottawa or with the High Commissioner's office in London. Presumably you will be hearing from the United Kingdom Government to this effect if preliminary discussions have not been initiated already.

7. To complete the formal exchanges among the United States, United Kingdom and Canada, it will be necessary for us to present to the United States Government a note along the lines of Section A in the present note.

8. We are examining this note in the light of your despatch No. 1737 of December 5th and will report to you on the results of our examination and of our further discussions with the United States and United Kingdom representatives on the subject. Ends.

H.B.M. Embassy refers to its aide-mémoire of June 8th† and to the State Department's aide-mémoire in reply of the same date<sup>18</sup> regarding the sharing of the burden of the cost of provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas outside their own territories, in so far as the burden does not fall on the UNRRA. H.B.M. Embassy also refers to the memorandum of the Canadian Embassy of June 2nd on the same subject,<sup>19</sup> a copy of which was furnished to this Embassy.

In the light of the proposals which have since been considered by the U.S. Government, the Canadian Government and H.M. Government in the United Kingdom, it is recommended that the ultimate burden of the cost of provision of such supplies should be borne in the following manner:

(I) That the U.S., U.K., and Canadian Governments shall agree on the provision of the supplies required up to a value not exceeding $1 billion;

(II) That, unless other arrangements are mutually agreed upon, payment in full shall be requested of all Governments or authorities of liberated or conquered areas to which such supplies are furnished.

(III) That such amounts as prove to be irrecoverable from such Governments or authorities shall be borne by the supplying Governments in the following proportions:

By the U.S.—67% of such irrecoverable amount.

By the U.K.—25% of such irrecoverable amount.

By Canada—8% of such irrecoverable amount.

(IV) That receipts collected from the recipient Governments or authorities shall be divided as may be necessary in order that the ultimate deficit be shared in the proportion set out in (III) above.

1. All goods of identifiable Lend-Lease origin shall be treated as goods procured by the U.S. for Plan A, and the U.S. shall receive credit therefor.

2. In the case of goods unidentifiable as of Lend-Lease origin, the U.S. shall receive credit for a share of the particular goods drawn from U.K. stocks equal to the ratio which the Lend-Lease portion of the total supply of goods in any category, which have become available to the U.K. from March 11th, 1941, to the end of the calendar semester preceding the transaction, bears to such total supply. All goods drawn from U.K. stocks of goods falling into the following categories, and only such goods, shall be considered as unidentifiable as of Lend-Lease origin:

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Angus from Pearson, Begins: Your despatch No. 1737 of December 5th and teletype EX-4929 of December 14th,† financing of relief provided on a combined basis outside UNRRA.

2. It seems to us that one alteration in the general financial arrangement set forth in Section A of our teletype WA-6886 of December 11th might make this agreement acceptable to us, viz: That paragraph IV be altered to read "That receipts collected from the recipient Governments or authorities shall be paid into a central fund under the control of the three supplying Governments and that payments out of this fund shall be divided as may be necessary in order that the ultimate deficit shall be shared in the proportions set out in III above."

3. Our proposal would be that we should informally approach the appropriate U.S. and U.K. authorities in Washington with the suggestion that the above amendment be adopted. At the same time we would explain to them along the lines of despatch No. 1737 that owing to the growth of the relief burden and delays in agreement as to how it should be financed, it would be necessary for Canada for the time being to limit procurement responsibility to something like $80,000,000.

4. We are not clear whether the limit of $80,000,000 which you propose for our procurement responsibility includes the value of equipment provided to the U.K. under Mutual Aid and subsequently made available for relief purposes outside UNRRA and credited to Canada.

5. Similarly we are not certain that the $80,000,000 limit includes the value of wheat supplied to Greece after a date to be determined, as we understand that a good part of this wheat is to be financed initially under the Order-in-Council providing for the gift of wheat to Greece<sup>21</sup> although ultimately it is to be included in the general financial agreement covering the provision of relief outside UNRRA.

6. Although you might well make provision in your agreement with the U.K. for subsequent discussion of the arrangements for handling the Mutual Aid element we feel that the actual discussion of this problem should not be permitted to delay completion of the general agreement.

TELETYPE EX-4982

Ottawa, December 19, 1944

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Pearson from Angus, Begins: Your WA-7023 of December 16th, financing of military relief.

Our object is to protect ourselves on two points: (1) we wish to be sure that we are amply protected against having to pay more than eight per cent of the ultimate cost; (2) we wish to avoid undertaking initial financing in excess of eight per cent of the initial financing undertaken by the three countries in the aggregate.

2. The modification suggested in paragraph 2 of your teletype covers the first of these conditions. It virtually substitutes a pooling agreement for separate bills and it may be difficult to get the other two countries to agree to a principle which thus conflicts with the procedure for recovery proposed by the United States War Department. If the division of the central fund were made at relatively short intervals, the effect of this plan would be to keep down Canada's share of the initial financing because if Canada had been undertaking a major portion of this financing Canada would presumably receive a major portion of the dividends from the fund.

3. The procedure proposed in paragraph 3 of your teletype seems free from any objection but I do not think that we should give to the figure of $80,000,000 the prominence which is suggested. If any effective method is devised for equalizing the initial financing by the three countries in the sense of keeping the proportions of that financing in the same ratio as the proportions of the ultimate loss, the extreme limit of Canada's initial financial commitment would be $80,000,000. It would, however, be doubtful if this limit would ever be reached in practice because the division of the central fund would reimburse Canada from time to time for outlays which had been made and Canada's out-of-pocket commitment during the operation of the scheme would fall somewhere between $32,000,000, which would be our share of the anticipated loss, and $80,000,000, which would be our share of the loss if no recoveries whatever were made from the recipient countries. We should, therefore, ask the other two countries to share in the initial financing so that no one country would ever be contributing proportionately much more than another. The methods suggested for doing this were that the receipts should be divided at intervals; that, if necessary, direct payments should be made between the participating countries, or that procurement in Canada should be financed by purchases made by the United States if Canada's share of the financing were exceeding 8/67 of the expenditure made by the United States on account of the procurement of supplies.

4. The explanation given in the preceding paragraph should greatly reduce the importance of the points raised in paragraphs 4 and 5 of your teletype. In principle, we should count as part of the Canadian contribution and as part of our original financing any Mutual Aid goods made available by the United Kingdom under our Agreement with them, whatever form it may take. In the same way, we should count the value of the wheat supplied to Greece. But these would be charged against our original financing only if suitable arrangements had been made to credit us with Mutual Aid goods in the first instance or to transfer the cost of the wheat supplied to Greece in the second. Even if full account were taken of these items, it would not be likely, if the arrangements were working smoothly, that our total commitment would ever approach closely to $80,000,000. If, however, there were delays in distributing the central fund of such a character that our financing here exceeded $80,000,000 at a time when we had a recognized claim to a share in the central fund which had been collected, there is no reason to suppose that any great difficulty would arise.

5. We agree with the point in paragraph 6 of your teletype that your discussions in Washington should not be delayed by waiting for the solution of the problem of Mutual Aid goods which will be discussed separately with the United Kingdom.

6. While the use which you propose to make of the theoretical limit of $80,000,000 might simplify your discussions in the first instance, I do not think it will do so ultimately because the question would arise as to how supplies were to be procured in Canada or in Newfoundland when the limit of $80,000,000 had been reached. It is quite possible that substantial purchases of wheat and other commodities might lead to this limit being reached relatively early. It is largely for this reason that it seems to us better to take up in your discussions the possible methods of keeping the initial financing in proportions roughly resembling those in which the ultimate loss is to be shared. Ends.

*Minister in United States to Under-Secretary of State

Washington, December 19, 1944

Dear Mr. Robertson,

With reference to my teletype No. 7001 of December 15th† on the meeting of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee, I am enclosing herewith the agenda of that meeting with the attached papers.‡ I have been warned that these papers are not to be circulated and I am therefore sending them to you on that understanding. I believe, however, that most of the information contained therein will have reached you by telegram from London.

As I indicated in my teletype, the meeting on Friday (at which, by the way, we were welcomed by the chairman, Mr. McLoy) disclosed considerable differences between the U.K. and the U.S. members on the three matters on the agenda. These might be discussed item by item.

On the Italian situation, the British attitude is that the military authorities must remain responsible for relief supplies for the whole of Italy as long as there is fighting in any part of Italy or as long as it is used as a basis [sic] of operations. General Hilldring, speaking for the Americans, however, emphasized that the U.S. Army view was that military responsibility for relief should be given up area by area as this becomes operationally possible. This might be, he admitted, administratively difficult but not insuperably so. He also stated that their instructions were categorical that the bread ration in Italy should be increased even if this meant using the existing stockpile, thereby creating difficulties later when Northern Italy was liberated. As you know, instructions on this matter have been received from the President himself. Though the U.K. feel that the policy in question is unsound and may cause trouble later, nevertheless they realize it is useless to argue against it now.

We were asked to comment on this item of the agenda and took advantage of the opportunity to explain the Canadian position re participation in military relief. I said that, in principle, we hoped that military relief would be limited both in scope and in time but that since we had agreed tentatively to accept a partial financial responsibility for military relief, we found that the interpretation of what was military relief had been broadened and that this rather worried us. I also emphasized that we had nothing to do with the financing of any programme of industrial first aid for Italy or any other kind of aid outside military relief or UNRRA.

In respect of Item 2—Supplies for Civilian Population—Norway, the Americans were worried about the action taken by the British in this matter because they thought it might constitute a precedent. If the Anglo-American authorities accept responsibility for the relief of civilian populations liberated in this area by the Russian Army, they might be asked to accept similar responsibility elsewhere.

The British argued that something had to be done and done quickly. Otherwise the Norwegians would have starved. The Americans then produced a proposal that the transaction might be legitimized by turning it ex post facto over to UNRRA. This somewhat surprising solution seemed to receive general approval but, as I pointed out, UNRRA may have something to say about this later.

In respect of Item 3, Greece—the Americans made no effort to conceal their determination not to take any action which might be interpreted as assisting the British in their present difficulties with the Greeks.<sup>22</sup> Unfortunately for the British, the telegram from Allied Forces Headquarters in Italy, (Annex 'B')† by going into much detail about the financial reasons for the action taken, gave the Americans the excuse to argue that this action was not primarily determined by military considerations and that, therefore, they were not concerned with it. This was really a very illogical position to take, as a reading of the telegram in question will show, but it was stubbornly held by General Hilldring. However, he finally agreed to reconsider the matter.

au ministre aux États-Unis*

*Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, December 23, 1944

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Your letter of December 19th, concerning the meeting of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee which was held on December 15th, has been discussed with Mr. Wrong and Mr. Angus. The questions raised in it are closely related to the matters which have been discussed in connection with military relief and with the visit of Mr. Richard Law to Washington. We should, I think, endeavour to concentrate our attention on broad questions and to avoid creating the difficulties which may arise from dealing in the first instance with individual cases.

The first broad principle seems to me to be that Canadian representation on CCAC(S) and on CLAC(S) is primarily for supply purposes, and that while we may express opinions informally on related political issues we should not engage the Canadian Government, either directly or indirectly to definite views of these issues.

The second general principle is that in supply matters the onus of showing that precedence should be given to political considerations lies with the country which advocates a course of action likely to entail starvation and hardship.

Turning to the particular issue, the Italian problem consists in comparing the immediate evil of short rations in liberated Italy with the contingent evil of starvation in northern Italy should it be liberated when stocks have been depleted. My view on this point is that the existing stocks should not be depleted unless a decision has been reached as to what will be done when northern Italy is liberated. It would, however, be necessary to have much more information than is available here to form an opinion of the extent of the risk involved in depleting stocks at the present time.

As regards Norway, we consider that it is essential that supplies should be sent as expeditiously as possible, and the British plan appears to us to be the only one designed to accomplish this purpose. It would in my opinion be very unfortunate if an attempt were made later to turn over the transaction to UNRRA by a sort of fiction that UNRRA had acted in the first instance. Not only would the UNRRA officials naturally resent a course of action which left the performance of their work to others while spending their funds, but the prestige of UNRRA would suffer very greatly if the United Kingdom and the United States, perhaps with the help of Canada, undertook to explain at the next meeting of the Council that they had had to take action directly because they could not trust UNRRA to perform the task for which it was created.

It is easy to understand the difficulties which have arisen in connection with the allocation of food for Greece. I am inclined to think that the United States representatives will have to reconsider their position because whatever view may be taken of the recent occurrences in Greece it would be totally irresponsible to prolong starvation and inflation which are the conditions which are most likely to turn political disputes into violent disorders and at the same time to attach full responsibility to the authorities on the spot, who have to deal with the disorders when they occur. My view on this question is that supplies should be made available as expeditiously as possible and that should political safeguards be required they should be sought by some method less likely to accentuate human suffering than the withholding of supplies.

I am afraid that I have done little more than point out very obvious considerations affecting the questions which came before the CCAC. My only excuse for doing so is that I feel there is some danger of the obvious considerations being overlooked in dealing with immediate problems which involve extremely difficult matters of detail and which are apt to excite emotional as well as rational responses.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

TELETYPE WA-7156

Washington, December 23, 1944

Following for Angus from Plumtre, Begins: Your EX-4982,<sup>23</sup> financing military relief.

Thank you for clarifying the two points on which protection is required. We shall, of course, try to achieve both objectives. However, we suggested in WA-7023<sup>24</sup> a rather different procedure from that envisaged in your despatch No.

1737<sup>25</sup> and we still believe that there is some merit in our approach. Please forgive us if we burden your Yuletide with an elaboration of our reasons.

2. We think it very important to recognize that the Canadian position is different in regard to the two objectives and that they should therefore be approached somewhat differently. The Canadian position differs, we believe, in the following ways:

(A) Our claim to an absolute guarantee against paying more than 8 per cent of the ultimate cost is unchallengeable; our claim that we wish to avoid more than 8 per cent of the interim financing is by no means unchallengeable, particularly because the memorandum which we handed to State Department, following your instructions in despatch No. 791 of May 29th, unequivocally specified that "Canada would make provision for financing any orders that may be placed in Canada for military relief."

(B) We have had no experience of any difficulties which might be involved in getting a guarantee against paying more than our ultimate share; we have had experience of the difficulties involved in the most obvious method of transferring some of the burden of interim financing, i.e., the placing of orders in Canada by United States of America and United Kingdom. You will recall that these difficulties were partially responsible for raising the whole question of Canada's participation in military relief. Of course, the fact that Canada is now sharing in the ultimate cost would no doubt make the difficulties less than they were originally, but we cannot now claim to be unaware of them.

(C) Insistence on an ultimate guarantee can be made impartially to the United States of America and United Kingdom, a claim for relief from the burden of interim financing must be directed (and this seems to be envisaged by your EX-4982 paragraph 3) solely to the United States of America.

(D) Ultimate guarantees should be given by each participant to the other two; but it is clearly impracticable to suggest at this stage in the negotiations that each of the three partners should only undertake its percentage of the interim financing. All the arrangements so far have been based on the assumption that each will do its own domestic financing as set forth in our memorandum to the State Department quoted above; it would probably be quite impracticable for the United States and the United Kingdom to make any other arrangement. Therefore, any request on our part to be relieved of some of the burden we have undertaken must be on a special rather than a general basis.

(E) In addition to the foregoing differences which are significant from a Washington viewpoint, it appears to us that there may be another difference of considerable significance from the Ottawa viewpoint. Are we not right in believing that it is considerably more important to obtain an ultimate guarantee than to minimize interim financing? If we were unable to obtain the absolute guarantee, then of course there would be an overwhelming case for minimizing interim financing; but if the former can be obtained, surely the latter is of considerably less importance. I recall an observation by Mr. Bryce, in our last meeting in Dr. Clark's office, indicating that the aggregate burden on the Treasury was measured by the supplies actually procured in Canada, not merely by the amount directly financed, because the residue would require financing through foreign exchange. Of course, a bird in the hand in the form of United States dollars may be worth rather more than a bird in the bush even when guaranteed by the United States and United Kingdom, and it may be considerably easier to obtain funds for financing purchases of foreign exchange than for financing military relief even though the Government is committed to the latter; nevertheless, I should have thought that the ultimate guarantee was still a more important objective from Ottawa's point of view than minimizing financing.

3. In view of all these considerations (and we would not press (E) above, because it lies outside our direct concern) we believe that it is desirable to make the ultimate guarantees our primary objective in approaching the United States and United Kingdom. Indeed we feel that, if minimizing financing was given equal importance, our hope of achieving the primary objective would be diminished because our ground is so much stronger in approaching the one than the other. If we failed to reach the primary objective, which we have every right to demand, then we would, of course, be on very strong ground in demanding the other; for if we do not receive an absolute guarantee against ultimate loss we are most certainly entitled to decline to bear more than our share of the risk which would then be involved in interim financing.

4. We gladly concur in the suggestion made in paragraph 3 of your EX-4982 that we should not emphasize the limit of $80,000,000. On further consideration we believe that a realistic approach to the problem of minimizing interim financing does not lie along the line of specifying an absolute limit and then, perhaps, threatening the United States and United Kingdom with it; rather it lies along the line of tapering off our acceptance of procurement responsibilities, becoming more and more "choosy" about the types of business that we are willing to accept. Colonel Beamer would have to be guided from Ottawa as to how to pursue such a qualitative policy, and he would no doubt need to be guided also by some ultimate quantitative limit, whether in the form of a percentage of the whole or a sum of money.

5. Another approach to minimizing interim financing may lie in requesting the United States to take over the purchase of a few large items, rather than in asking them to assume responsibility for all purchases beyond a certain limit, or for a certain proportion of current purchases. These are points, however, which can only be clarified by informal friendly discussion, and we hope you will be willing to permit us a fairly wide discretion in the matter.

6. In conclusion, we would appreciate your concurrence in our suggestion that the ultimate guarantee should be our primary objective, and that we should pursue the minimizing of interim financing as a secondary objective, at least until there were signs that we were failing to achieve the former. We would also appreciate your concurrence in the text of the proposed general financial arrangement, amended along the lines of paragraph 2 of our WA-7023, if we can prevail upon the United States and United Kingdom to accept this amendment; it is of the greatest importance, if we are to minimize our ultimate losses, not to delay the necessary steps precedent to billing the recipient Governments.

7. This message has been discussed with Colonel Beamer and Ritchie. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-5079

Ottawa, December 26, 1944

Following for Plumptre from Angus, Begins: I shall discuss with Bryce your teletype WA-7156 of December 23rd when he returns on the 28th. In the meantime I should be glad to have your opinion on the following points:

(1) I agree that our claim to an absolute guarantee against paying more than 8 per cent of the ultimate cost is unchallengeable. I agree that insistence can be made impartially to the United States and to the United Kingdom but the claim is so unchallengeable that insistence should be quite unnecessary. What we would seek is not what we have already got, namely, a guarantee for ultimate repayment but some assurance of prompt repayment and, if the repayment is sufficiently prompt, it would itself take care of a good deal of the interim financing, since Canada, as the main supplier, would be entitled to receive the early payments which would keep down its out-of-pocket expenses.

(2) For the foregoing reasons I think that if you make your main objective insistence on a guarantee of prompt repayment, with the emphasis on promptitude, it will naturally lead the way to suggesting that, if a method of collection is adopted which is likely to involve delays and uncertainties, it should be coupled with action designed to relieve us of a burden of interim financing altogether beyond anything which was anticipated when the original arrangement was made.

(3) You will recall that Dr. Clark's objection was to financing the United States and, therefore, even a hard and fast guarantee of ultimate repayment by the United States would still be open to objection from his standpoint.

(4) It would also follow, as you point out, that, if for constitutional or political reasons the United States cannot give a hard and fast guarantee designating clearly the form which payment will take, there is an irresistibly strong case for relieving Canada of the burden and risk of interim financing.

(5) I do not like the proposal in paragraph 4 of your teletype that we should reject certain types of business, presumably on supply grounds. This might be difficult to do if we were financing similar supplies to UNRRA subject to reallocation by the Combined Boards. It would be impossible if the supplies asked for came from Newfoundland which offered assurances that the physical supply was available. A further objection to reluctance to supply on these grounds is that it may prejudice the whole object of the scheme by making it difficult for needy countries to secure the physical goods which they require. I think that we could indicate the great undesirability of a course of this sort in frank discussion with the State Department without appearing to threaten them in any way and I think we could make something of the very great difficulty of approaching the Canadian Treasury Board with a request for a further advance until a clear agreement has been reached of a satisfactory character.

(6) I shall reply to paragraph 6 of your teletype after discussion with the Department of Finance and I hope that by the time that discussion takes place I shall have the benefit of your comments on the points advanced in the present teletype. Ends.

Following for H. F. Angus from A. F. W. Plumtre, Begins: Your EX-5079, December 26th, financing military relief.

1. I agree that promptness of repayment has received inadequate attention in my WA-7156, and perhaps in our thinking down here; you may rest assured that this will be remedied.

2. In regard to the guarantee of ultimate repayment, I find myself agreeing with your earlier statement (EX-4982) that this is one of the cardinal points on which we need protection, rather than with your new statement (EX-5079) that we should not seek "what we have already got". As you know, no dotted line has yet been signed upon; and I feel that Dr. Clark and others are right in their apprehension that our position has become less secure during the past few months because of a number of developments, e.g.,

- (a) Delays in making the initial formal approach to paying Governments,
- (b) Further delays in billing which are likely to arise from complications in billing procedures,
- (c) Apparent inability of United States of America to make direct ultimate settlements,
- (d) Proposed introduction of roundabout procedures, which would use the paying countries as channels for ultimate settlements.

3. I well recall Dr. Clark's objection to our interim financing referred solely to the portion involving the United States; but I also recall that you and Bryce pointed out immediately the fact that we were already committed to such financing in principle. As indicated in my WA-7156, I believe we may be able to find ways and means of minimizing such financing; but, in seeking some relief, it will not endear us to the United States and United Kingdom if we begin by repudiating our commitment.

4. I agree with some of the objections, raised in your paragraph 5, to the proposal that we should reject certain types of business. However, I was not suggesting that rejection should be on grounds of supply; rather it should be (if it is necessary at all) on the perfectly valid grounds of finance which, at least until we have an absolute ultimate guarantee, simply means that we will not shoulder more than our fair share of the burden of military relief. A regrettable but necessary result of such a situation would be that needy countries might obtain less supplies. Further, if some limitation of supplies from Canada is necessary on such grounds, surely you would agree that the limitation should be gradual, and qualitative, as opposed to the only alternative: viz., that Canada should continue to supply "all out," until some specified limit was reached, after which we would presumably cease to supply at all (and perhaps abandon membership in CCAC-S and CLAC-S).

5. In view of your request for comments before discussions with Bryce, I am sending this off without clearance from Beamer or Ritchie. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-45

Ottawa, January 4, 1945

Following for Pearson and Plumptre from Angus, Begins: Your WA-7202 of December 28th, financing of military relief.

1. This whole question has now been thoroughly discussed with the Department of Finance which shares your view that the essential thing is to get an unqualified guarantee for prompt repayment from the United States and the United Kingdom. Canada would no doubt give a similar guarantee to those two countries in order to keep the agreement reciprocal in form. I have emphasized in discussion that if we begin by asking for this unqualified guarantee of ultimate repayment, we make it correspondingly difficult to demur to fulfilling our own undertaking with respect to primary financing and I have pointed out that the amount of this primary financing is likely to be very substantial.

2. If the type of pooling agreement suggested in paragraph 2 of WA-7023 of December 16th can be arranged, it would be very likely to work in such a way as to make it unnecessary for either the United States or the United Kingdom actually to pay on its guarantee to Canada and it might work so as to keep our maximum out-of-pocket commitment below, say, $100,000,000.

3. It would seem to be desirable to find some formula for the guarantee which would avoid the danger of very long delays while it was ascertained how much could be collected from the various paying countries. If this were not done, the date for payment under guarantee might be almost indefinitely postponed. Of course, no final settlement can be reached until all the information is available but interim payments could be made from time to time so that each country was out of pocket in the agreed proportions. If any further receipts came in, they would then be distributed in these proportions.

4. In addition to the reasons set out in paragraph 2 of WA-7202 of December 28th, there is one other which you might conceivably find it convenient to use. Our original offer was made before D-Day at a time when the military relief which was contemplated was incidental to the operation of armies of which the Canadian Forces were part. We thought of it at first as applying only to those areas in Europe in which our armies were operating and were a little surprised that Greece should be included. No one anticipated that the initial financing would amount to anything in the neighbourhood of $150,000,000 on the part of Canada, although it now seems possible that this amount may be exceeded. Our interim appropriation to cover the period of negotiations was, you will remember, $5,000,000. Our insistence on a precise commitment for prompt repayment can be explained in part by the increase in the magnitude of the plan. Ends.

TELETYPE WA-148

Washington, January 10, 1945

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Angus, Begins: Financing Military Relief.

1. At our suggestion a meeting was held at the State Department on January 9th at which Plumptre, Beamer and Ritchie submitted informally a draft aide-mémoire on the Canadian position and a revised draft version of the proposed note which we had sent to you as Section 'A' of our WA-6886 of December 11th. Representatives of the Foreign Office, State Department and United States and United Kingdom Treasuries were present.

2. The draft aide-mémoire was prepared here on the basis of instructions provided by you, particularly in the original despatch No. 791 of May 29th, subsequent despatch No. 1737 of December 5th, 1944, and your teletype EX-45 of January 4th, 1945. The revisions in the draft note of agreement were similarly based on the general instructions received from you in these and other messages. In introducing these papers informally for consideration at the meeting it was made clear that while the sense of these documents was known to be in line with the Canadian Government's position we could not confirm the exact language of the papers before the meeting. We indicated that we were most anxious that the United States and United Kingdom representatives should consider as a matter of urgency the changes which would be necessary in these draft papers, particularly in the draft note of agreement, in order to make them acceptable to their Governments as the basis for a formal exchange of notes. The text of the draft aide-mémoire is given in a following teletype identified as "Message A" and of the draft note of agreement in a following teletype identified as "Message B".

3. The attitude of the meeting was generally sympathetic to the problem which we raised and to the solution which we proposed. There was a general recognition that it was a common problem which should be settled immediately in the interests of all three participating Governments. The discussion indicated that the United States and United Kingdom were making very slow progress and it was evident that our proposals were welcomed not only as informal statements of our view but as helpful contributions to the United States-United Kingdom discussions as well.

4. Our specific proposal of a pooling arrangement was considered sympathetically but the general view was that a considerable amount of discussion would have to precede any formal agreement on such a pool and it was felt that as this was largely a question of procedure if the firm guarantees stipulated in paragraph V of Message B are given, no specific reference need be made to the pool in the general agreement with the understanding that the omission of such a specific reference did not preclude the possibility that a pooling arrangement might be adopted eventually as the best procedure for minimizing the burden of temporary financing and for maximizing ultimate receipts. The United States and United Kingdom sides agreed that the principle set forth in our paragraph V providing guarantees against excessive losses by any of the three supplying Governments was implicit in the agreement which they had previously approved in draft form. The United States side expressed confidence that our paragraph V would be acceptable to the United States Government and the United Kingdom representatives undertook to refer our precise proposal urgently to London as they had no definite instructions from London as to the exact nature of the guarantee. We intimated to the United States and United Kingdom representatives that we had reason to believe that the Canadian Government would be prepared to consider favourably as the basis for an immediate agreement the draft note in Message B, even with the omission of the underlined words in paragraph IV<sup>26</sup> and with the omission of the phrase "into the pool" from paragraph V, if the omission of the specific references to the pool will facilitate immediate completion of the general agreement and will not prejudice subsequent consideration of the pooling arrangement. We felt that we were within our instructions if we succeeded in getting immediately the ultimate guarantee, which you indicated as your minimum requirement in teletype EX-45 and in paragraph 9 of despatch No. 1737, while leaving the question of the pool open. The United States and United Kingdom representatives undertook to provide us in the shortest possible time with their reactions to our aide-mémoire and with the text of a draft note which would be acceptable to them and which would take account of the revisions which we had proposed and of the argument presented in our aide-mémoire and in the discussion. We are confident that a reply will be received very shortly.

5. It should be said that the United States and United Kingdom officials concerned had previously rejected the pooling proposal when it had arisen in their discussions before we came into the picture and it is reported by Beamer and Ritchie that only the persuasive exposition by Plumptre of a hypothetical pooling arrangement induced them to admit that the pool might be not only a feasible but also an attractive procedure meriting at least reconsideration. Plumptre made it clear that the views which he was expressing as to the possible nature of such a pooling arrangement were purely personal and were intended merely to provide a concrete example of how such a pool might be formed and might operate. Plumptre's notes on this subject are being sent to you in a following teletype identified as "Message C." Plumptre will be in Ottawa for a week following January 11th and will probably wish to discuss possible pooling arrangements. Upon his return to Washington Plumptre will be discussing this subject with the appropriate United States and United Kingdom officials.

6. We would not suggest that you should make a parallel approach to the United Kingdom Government through the High Commissioner's office in London but in view of the difficulty which is being encountered by the United Kingdom representatives here in getting any replies from the United Kingdom Treasury, we feel that it might be helpful if you were to advise the High Commissioner's office that proposals have been presented by this Embassy to the United Kingdom Treasury delegation in Washington for urgent consideration and that they might impress upon the United Kingdom Treasury the urgency that we attach to the completion of the agreement.

7. We should be grateful if you would confirm or revise the text of the informal papers which we have handed to the United States and United Kingdom representatives and if at the same time you would provide us with any further instructions.

8. I should add that the United States and United Kingdom representatives are being asked for the information requested in paragraph 12 of your despatch 1737, and we shall forward this information to you as soon as it is received.

9. It would be appreciated if you would pass copies of this and the following messages to the Ministry of Finance immediately for their information as Plumptre may have an opportunity to discuss the subject with them while he is in Ottawa. Ends.

TELETYPE WA-160

Washington, January 10, 1945

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Reference WA-148, financing military relief. Message A, Begins: Draft Aide-Mémoire.

"On June 2nd, 1944, the Canadian Government indicated its willingness to participate in military relief by temporarily financing orders placed in Canada and by the sharing in the ultimate net cost in proportion to Canada's military participation in the liberation of Western Europe—a proportion estimated at about 8 per cent. At that time the total gross cost of such relief was estimated at a figure considerably lower than the limit of $1,000,000,000 now established. There appeared every likelihood that recoveries from the recipient Governments would be prompt and substantial. It could be reasonably anticipated in those circumstances that Canada's liability for temporary financing and for the ultimate net cost of providing such relief would be much less than now appears to be the case. This expansion in Canada's apparent obligations under the arrangement is attributable primarily to:

A. The substantial increases in the estimate of the total gross cost of supplies to be provided by the three countries under the arrangement.

B. The delay in establishing suitable procedures for securing current payment, with the result that the total cost of providing supplies has had to be carried by the supplying countries as a cumulative financial burden instead of being financed out of a much smaller revolving fund.

2. Added to these developments which have affected Canada's position adversely are the increasing uncertainty concerning the prospective volume of repayment from the recipient Governments, the absence of any machinery for determining when the initial limit on total losses is approached, and the continued lack of provision for ultimate settlement among the three supplying Governments. These factors are of particular concern to a country which is currently providing proportionately more of the supplies than its agreed percentage of the ultimate cost, for such a country is in effect bearing an undue share of the risks. It appears that substantially more than 8 per cent of the supplies are coming from Canada.

3. In these circumstances the Canadian authorities have been compelled to examine the arrangements for continuing the provision of such relief supplies. They are most anxious that agreement should be reached on the principles governing the detailed arrangements to be made, or in process of being made, for ensuring the agreed distribution of the residual burden upon termination of the agreement and insofar as possible an equitable distribution of the "current" burden during the operation of the agreement in order that the flow of supplies may not be impeded or interrupted. Accordingly the United States and United Kingdom authorities are requested to consider as a matter of urgency the acceptability of the attached modified version of the draft statement of principles which it is thought would achieve this objective.

4. It is recognized that there are related matters of detail outstanding of only slightly less urgency; e.g., the completion and presentation of the notes to the recipient Governments and authorities, the institution of satisfactory billing and collecting procedures, and the determination by Canada and the United Kingdom of the policy for handling the mutual aid element. Although the urgency and importance of such matters may well be stressed, it is suggested that their settlement is not a prerequisite to the completion of the tripartite agreement on the general principles. The completion of the general agreement might in fact hasten the settlement of these other questions.

5. The attached draft differs significantly from the latest United States-United Kingdom draft in only two respects:

A. Sub-paragraph IV has been amended to provide for the establishment of a "pool" into which all receipts would be paid and out of which interim payment would be made from time to time to reduce the burden of temporary financing. The Canadian authorities attach great importance to the acceptance of this proposal. This arrangement has of course general advantages in facilitating final settlement among the three supplying countries. It would be particularly advantageous for any supplying country which has assumed a disproportionately large share of the financing and which at the same time might find itself in a less favourable position than the other countries for making collection. The pooling arrangement would ensure that bad or doubtful debts would not be assigned to any one country and that the inconvenience incidental to delay, would, like the net cost of the scheme, be distributed among the supplying countries in the agreed proportions.

The problems which might arise in connection with such a pooling arrangement (e.g., location and management of the pool, determination of the appropriate foreign exchange composition of the pool, etc.) do not seem to be insuperable. It is thought also that there would be no serious problem involved in associating such a pooling arrangement with the billing procedure proposed in CCAC 141/1.† The proposed pool has all the advantages but avoids many of the problems which have come to light in alternative procedures since the pooling plan was originally considered.

B. A new sub-paragraph V has been added to protect any of the supplying countries which had financed more than the agreed share of the net cost, in the event that receipts are inadequate to reimburse that country for the excess. The new sub-paragraph would provide for appropriate payments into the common pool by the other country (or countries) which had financed correspondingly less than the agreed share of the net cost. This would seem to be a necessary precaution because such a low proportion of total supplies may be provided to paying countries that receipts alone will be found inadequate for the final adjustments among the three supplying countries.

6. Concerning the other sections of the draft which have not been altered from the original version, it should be noted that the Canadian authorities are interpreting the phrase "provided on a combined basis" in the first paragraph and the sense of sub-paragraphs I and VII as limiting the scope of this proposed agreement to such supplies (up to a value not exceeding $1,000,000,000 with the proviso that this limit may not be reached if losses approach $400,000,000) as are approved (either currently or retroactively) by each and all of the three Governments and are provided to operational theatres in which the volume of participation by the military forces of each and all of the three countries is significant.

7. The Canadian authorities are hopeful that they will be able to undertake all the temporary financing involved by Canadian orders, despite the growth of the burden since their original offer was made. However, they do not feel that they can reasonably be expected to do so unless arrangements are made immediately which would unquestionably relieve them of the risk of a disproportionately large ultimate loss, and which would keep the burden of interim financing as low as reasonably possible." Ends.

(I) That the United States, United Kingdom, and Canadian Governments shall agree on the provision of the supplies required up to a value not exceeding $1 billion;

(II) That, unless other arrangements are mutually agreed upon, payment in full shall be requested of all Governments or authorities of liberated or conquered areas to which such supplies are furnished.

TELETYPE WA-162

Washington, January 10, 1945

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Reference WA-148, financing military relief. Message 'C' begins:

Some personal and informal notes on the proposed "pool" for collecting and distributing military relief.

1. The pool should be run by three trustees appointed by the Governments of the three supplying countries. These trustees might be the Central Banks or Treasuries.

2. All bills presented to recipient Governments should request payment in the form of (say) 85 per cent United States dollars and 15 per cent sterling.

3. If any recipient Government wished to pay up to 5 per cent of any obligation in Canadian dollars, and only 80 per cent in United States dollars, this should be permitted.

4. If, at the termination of the scheme, it appeared that United States and Canada had supplied a proportion less than 85 per cent of the goods and services, the recipient Governments which had paid United States dollars in amounts exceeding that proportion should be permitted to repurchase dollars for sterling pro rata.

5. If any recipient Government claimed that it could not pay 85 per cent of its obligations in dollars, as required in paragraphs 2 and 3 above, it should submit its case to the trustees. If satisfied, the trustees should make recommendation to the supplying Governments (a) to accept a larger proportion in sterling (or Canadian dollars), or (b) to accept part or all of the amount in some other currency, or (c) to waive part or all of the obligation.

6. This raises the question, what should be done with (a) the "excess" sterling and (b) the other currencies which may accrue to the "pool"? In answering this question four principles may prove helpful:

(a) It is desirable to collect as much as reasonably possible on account of military relief, even though some of the amounts received may be in currencies which are useful to one supplying Government and not to another; in other words, a recipient Government should not be released from all its obligations simply because it cannot pay some of them in a certain form.

(b) The "mixed bag" of currencies which will result may be more useful to one supplying country than to another, and this implies that it may prove impossible to share the ultimate net loss in any exact proportions such as 67:25:8. For instance, if the pool acquired a "surplus" of sterling under 5 (a) it might well prove to be a sensible policy to hand this over to the United Kingdom even though it might in a sense reduce the United Kingdom's share of the ultimate net loss below 25 per cent.

(c) It is important to distinguish, in this regard, between distributable funds to meet the net loss (accruing under paragraph 5). The former should be distributed strictly to share the net loss on a 67:25:8 basis; the latter should subsequently be distributed as seems most equitable when the problem arises.

(d) It must be assumed that the trustees of the pool will make sensible recommendations both in regard to accepting currencies under paragraph 5 and also in regard to disposing of them; experience at Bretton Woods and on other occasions suggests that this is a not unreasonable assumption where financial representatives of United States, United Kingdom and Canada are concerned with matters of foreign exchange.

7. Interim payments out of the "pool" to each supplying Government in its own currency should be made at frequent intervals so as to keep the burden of temporary financing at reasonably low levels. These payments should be adjusted by the trustees on the basis of (a) value of supplies coming from each supplying country and (b) estimates of the net loss to be sustained.

8. Each supplying country should be obliged to make payments into the pool if this was necessary in order to share the burden in a ratio of 67:25:8. A country wishing to minimize the likelihood of being called upon to make such payments would, of course, be well advised to accept no interim payments out of the "pool" but to treat it as a "suspense account." Ends.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

On several occasions the Canadian Member, Colonel Beamer, on the Supplies Sub-Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee (CCAC(S)) in Washington, has asked for instructions to enable him to give a Canadian view on matters concerning the priority of military relief. I have held the view that in such matters Canada is not in a position to judge since they relate to matters requiring decisions at the highest operational level—either Combined Chiefs of Staff or the Theatre Commanders.

The CCAC(S) has just been asked to judge the priority to be given SHAEF or AFHQ with respect to certain articles of military relief that are insufficient to meet the demands of both theatres. In this case the War Office favours AFHQ and the War Department SHAEF. The divergence of views depends on an interpretation of the relative operational necessity for this military relief in each theatre. I informed Beamer that he could not give an opinion as representing a Canadian view, as the matter was one that was impossible to judge from Ottawa.

It is recognized that by not expressing a view one way or the other the Canadian representative may be in an embarrassing position. At the same time I consider that there are very strong grounds for not giving views on matters that are not of direct concern to Canada and which should be decided by the Theatre Commander, or in cases of conflict with Commanders of other theatres, by the CCOS at Washington.

Since, by accepting membership in the CCAC(S), Canada becomes automatically associated with the final decisions of the Committee in these matters, whether or not Beamer expresses a Canadian view, I thought it advisable to keep you informed of the stand the Department is taking and I should be glad to have any comments you would care to give me on the question.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, January 30, 1045

Dear General Murchie,

I am very glad to have your letter of January 28th, concerning the attitude which the Canadian member on the Supplies Sub-Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee in Washington should take when questions of policy come before the Committee which are not of direct concern to Canada. I fully agree with your view that these should be decided by the Theatre Commander or, in cases of conflict with Commanders of other theatres, by the CCOS in Washington.

When it was decided that it was appropriate that Canada should make some contribution to the cost of military relief, representation on the Supplies Sub-Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee was sought in order to maintain the principle that financial participation implies the right to share in control. It is the function of the Canadian member to explain the Canadian position and to safeguard Canadian interests, but it was never intended that he should express a Canadian view on matters of policy which do not directly concern Canada and on which the information at the disposal of the Canadian authorities is insufficient to enable them to give useful guidance to the Canadian representative.

For these reasons I am entirely in agreement with the instructions which you have given to Colonel Beamer.

Yours sincerely,

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Financing Military Relief.

1. During the past ten days there have been a number of important developments which we have delayed reporting to you until the situation clarified. These developments are as follows:

(a) The division in the State Department with which we and the United Kingdom have been negotiating over the past several months has now indicated that, although an "ultimate guarantee" has been implied in arrangements so far, and despite what they said at our earlier meeting as reported to you in our WA-148 of January 10th, they find themselves quite unable specifically to give such a guarantee without reference to Congress. They explain that Congressional votes of monies lapse each fiscal year and they cannot be sure that Congress would vote the funds necessary for such a guarantee in a year when implementation became necessary. Their written reply to the informal documents which we left with them on January 9th<sup>30</sup> has not yet been received, but we have no doubt that when it is received it will indicate their inability to give this direct guarantee.

(b) The United Kingdom representatives have received word from London that they may give an ultimate guarantee if the United States does so and if they are satisfied that the United States will implement theirs. Unfortunately in view of (a), this is now of little significance.

(c) State Department have been attempting to meet our situation by divising some formula under which a country which had provided an unduly large proportion of supplies would have some prior line<sup>31</sup> on receipts from paying

Governments. We have expressed the opinion that no such formula can meet our ultimate problem which envisages the possibility that aggregate receipts will be inadequate to make the ultimate adjustments between supplying countries.

(d) We have raised the question whether the United States would undertake procurement in Canada in order to avoid a position where ultimate direct settlements are necessary. State Department have not yet expressed any opinion on this expedient, but the United Kingdom representatives believe that it will prove impossible. They recollect the difficulties which they encountered at an earlier date when attempting to get the United States to undertake procurement in British countries.

(e) Colonel Beamer advises us that Canada has now accepted procurement responsibility for approximately $80,000,000 (which happens to be 8 per cent of the $1,000,000,000 limit on aggregate procurement) and we understand that we have actually spent about $32,000,000 (which happens to be 8 per cent of $400,000,000). Although no really satisfactory figures are available the best informal estimates that we have been able to secure would indicate that the United Kingdom has accepted procurement responsibility for approximately $100,000,000, and the United States for something in excess of $400,000,000 (United States procured supplies actually shipped to January 1st, 1945 amounted to something in excess of $150,000,000).

(f) In our informal discussions, which have not been at the highest level, we have been far from satisfied by the attitude of the United States side which has lacked urgency and which shows no signs of producing constructive suggestions or early action. There has been rather desultory consideration of the proposal for pooling, but nothing definite has emerged.

2. Under these circumstances we recommend an approach to the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs and to the United Kingdom Embassy in the near future along the following lines:

(a) We are, pro tem, ceasing to accept any further procurement responsibility pending consideration of the situation in Ottawa and subsequent instructions.

(b) We can no longer admit of any obligation to accept procurement responsibility for supplies for which Canada is indicated as a source by the Combined Boards.

(c) We reserve the right to reconsider items for which Canadian procurement responsibility has already been accepted but which have not yet been procured, and we are reserving our right to defer action on "calls forward" received from the theatre for items which have been procured or which are under procurement. Do you concur in such an approach and in the implied policies?

3. Plumtre will be in Ottawa for a week beginning February 5th and will be in a position to inform you in greater detail on the situation in Washington, and to discuss with you the tactics to be employed.

4. There were two developments in the past day or two on which we should report and request your guidance:

(a) The United Kingdom representatives indicated that in view of the possibility that prospective losses may be approaching the initial limit of $400,000,000 they now consider it necessary to submit formally to the United States and Canadian Governments the note as originally drafted (i.e. the note given in section A of our teletype WA-6886 of December 11th, 1944 with the addition of the words "in Europe" after "liberated and conquered territories" in the first paragraph). They recognize that our acceptance of such a note would have to be accompanied by important reservations, but they feel that we might nevertheless wish to proceed with the exchange in order to formalize at least part of the arrangement if it can be done without prejudice to further consideration of our particular problem.

Unless they receive fairly strenuous objections from the State Department or us early next week they proposed to proceed with the formal submission of their note. You may find serious difficulty in accepting this note as it implies a guarantee against excessive ultimate loss (in the event that receipts are inadequate for the necessary adjustments) which we are convinced the United States would be unable to implement without action by Congress. Furthermore, acceptance of this note at this time might well be inconsistent with the action which we have recommended in paragraph 2 above.

(b) The United Kingdom representatives produced tentative proposals for the establishment of a three-party Inter-Governmental Committee to be charged with the responsibility for continuously collating the data on expenditures incurred by each of the three Governments and on proceeds received or in prospect and estimating the probable future trend of expenditures and receipts particularly with a view to advising each of the three Governments of the date on which aggregate losses are likely to reach the initial limit of $400,000,000. The outlines of this proposal are still very tentative and are now being worked over. We shall inform you of the details of the proposal well before any decision is required.

5. Finally it should be reported that as a result of combined discussions yesterday (prompted largely by a desire on the part of the War Department to improve its position with respect to the Budget Bureau) the paper on the procedure for keeping records and billing the recipient Government has been virtually agreed to, and a directive to SHAEF is now being despatched.

At about the same time the CCAC(S) appointed a working party to develop the machinery and procedures for determining combined average weighted landed costs. As a consequence of these developments it will be desirable (and possible) very shortly to present the notes to the Governments receiving the supplies informing them of their obligations. Our aim in these discussions has been to ensure that the way is left open for the adoption of procedures for joint collection and for pooling of receipts if the United States and United Kingdom authorities can be convinced of the advantages. Our view is that nothing in the statement of the billing procedure or in the text of the draft note to the recipient Governments as they emerged from these discussions precludes the possibility of joint collection or pooling. However, as indicated in paragraph 1

(f) above, the discussion on the merits and feasibility of joint collection and pooling has produced nothing definite yet. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-435

Ottawa, February 7, 1945

SECRET. Your WA-602 of February 3rd, financing military relief.

This question was discussed yesterday at a meeting in the Department of Finance, at which Plumptre was present. Plumptre explained that the procedure outlined in paragraph 2 was intended as immediate action to bring the importance of the issue sharply to the attention of the United States authorities while the ultimate policy was under consideration by the Canadian Government.

2. It has been agreed to authorize the steps which you recommend in paragraph 2, except that under heading (c) the words "we are reserving our right to defer action on 'calls forward' received from the theatre for items which have been procured or which are under procurement" should be omitted.

3. In addition, it was decided that a reference should be made to the fact that it will be impossible to add to the financial provision of $45,000,000 which has already been made by the Treasury Board until the situation is further clarified.

4. It was agreed that it is desirable that the United Kingdom should proceed to submit to the State Department the note set out in section A of your teletype WA-6886 of December 11th, with the addition of the words "in Europe" as suggested in paragraph 4 of your present teletype, although it is probable that Canadian acceptance of such a note would now have to be accompanied by important reservations.

5. These reservations would be of special importance if there is any prospect of the initial limit of $400,000,000 to prospective losses being exceeded and we should expect to have timely information which would enable us to make a deliberate decision before being committed in any way to share in losses exceeding this figure. Any excessive proportion of losses would make it impossible to adjust the financial position of the three countries by the distribution of receipts under the scheme and would, therefore, make an unqualified financial guarantee by the other participants extremely important.

6. It is hoped that in any steps which you take it will be possible to emphasize that the Canadian Government has done its utmost to make supplies available as they have been needed for relief in the liberated countries and that the steps have been forced on us by the delay of the other participants in clarifying the plan in such a way as to give us the protection to which we are reasonably entitled. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-509

Ottawa, February 8, 1945

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. This teletype is to amplify my EX-435 of February 7th on the financing of military relief.

A further discussion took place today with Plumptre, Bryce and McCrimmon<sup>33</sup> concerning some of the practical problems which will arise in view of the decision to accept no further supply responsibility and to reduce our outstanding responsibility to the limits for which financial provision has been made because no explicit guarantee to share losses has been forthcoming. The two following paragraphs deal with the situation if such a guarantee is given by the United States and the United Kingdom.

2. As the matter stands at present, Canada is still offering to finance procurement, providing that a firm guarantee is received from the United States and the United Kingdom and that the limits of the plan itself are observed, namely, $1,000,000,000 for procurement and $400,000,000 for prospective losses.

3. As it seems not unlikely that possible losses have already reached this limit or may do so very soon, it is extremely important that steps should be taken to avoid incurring any liabilities by allowing the scheme to drag on for the purposes of supplying urgent needs before a firm financial agreement has been reached. It should be brought to the attention of the United States and British authorities that no Canadian commitment can be made to share losses in excess of $400,000,000, without a further reference to the War Committee of Cabinet and that it would be useless to make such a reference unless a clear plan can be presented. It follows that care should be taken to estimate prospective losses on a cautious basis and if the United States and the United Kingdom choose to deliver supplies to any recipient countries after the current estimate exceeds $400,000,000, they should do so on their own financial responsibility and without feeling that they have any claim to Canadian participation in the additional loss if it occurs.

This telegram was sent only on February 12. See Document 1083.

Assistant Director, Mutual Aid Board.

4. We next turn to consider the more likely alternative of no guarantee being given. In discussing with the United States and United Kingdom representatives what our refusal to undertake further procurement responsibilities will involve, reference should be made to a statement on Canadian military relief,† a copy of which has been supplied to Plumtre and a copy of which is being sent by McCrimmon to Beamer by registered mail. This statement shows a tentative supply responsibility, as of February 6th, of $67,682,689, of which more than $33,000,000 is for wheat and more than $21,000,000 for trucks. The value of orders actually placed is $36,833,437, of which more than $31,500,000 is for wheat.

5. It is proposed that we should proceed with the delivery of the supplies for which orders have been placed and that, in addition, we should seek special Treasury Board approval in order to be able to include the trucks, which have already been acquired and paid for by the Canadian Government and which it is to our advantage to sell even if some risk is involved. These steps would bring our total commitment to something like $59,000,000, exclusive of any delivery of Mutual Aid goods which may be made by the United Kingdom and credited to us.

6. The supplies for which responsibility has been accepted but which have not yet been ordered amount, therefore, to about $8,000,000 and include a number of items which UNRRA will probably be glad to acquire. It may, therefore, be useful if a representative of UNRRA is invited to attend your discussions with the British and Americans and to take over any supplies which we have not ordered and which the United States representatives are not prepared to buy.

7. UNRRA, of course, may resell to Military Relief and it is possible that this device may overcome some of the difficulties which the United States authorities experience in placing orders in Canada. They may find it easier to buy goods which UNRRA has acquired from Canada and this procedure, though cumbersome, would achieve the same results as direct purchases from us.

8. In going over the list with the United States and British representatives, the line should be taken that it is in their interests to know what items Canada will not be in a position to supply in order that they may make whatever alternative arrangements seem desirable. It will also be in our interests to know whether or not these items will be bought in order that in the latter event we may offer them to UNRRA.

9. If the United States is unable to give us a guarantee but is willing to buy in Canada or to buy through UNRRA from Canada, we may be asked to increase our total financing pari passu with that of the United States and the United Kingdom until a limit of $80,000,000 is reached, provided that in the meantime the limit for prospective losses has not been exceeded. You should refer back to us before giving any undertaking on this point. It seems, however, likely that the proviso regarding total losses will protect us against having to assume any further financial procurement responsibility under this arrangement, particularly as the figure of $80,000,000 would include any supplies furnished by the United Kingdom out of Mutual Aid stocks.

10. Some consideration was given to the problem of pooling and to the currencies in which payments are to be made. As some of the paying countries may pay in Canadian dollars it is possible that the Foreign Exchange Control Board may wish to impose the same condition as in the case of purchases by UNRRA out of free funds, namely that the Canadian dollars should be acquired or purchased from a Canadian bank. In any case we wish to be amply protected against a risk, which was pointed out by Plumptre that, if the paying countries pay in United States and Canadian dollars in the proportions 67, 25 and 8, there may not be enough United States and Canadian dollars in the fund to make the payments out to which Canada, as a major supplier, might be entitled. Ends.

IMMEDIATE. FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION. Following for Angus from Pearson, Begins: Military Relief. Unless you have any change to suggest, we propose to deliver the following Memorandum to the State Department tomorrow:

1. In its Memorandum of June 2nd, 1944,<sup>34</sup> the Canadian Embassy informed the Department of State of the willingness of the Government of Canada to participate with the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom in the provision of military relief supplies to Europe by temporarily financing orders placed in Canada and by sharing the ultimate net cost in proportion to Canada's military participation in the liberation of Western Europe. This proportion was estimated at approximately 8 per cent.

2. In its reply of September 12th<sup>35</sup> the Department of State informed the Canadian Embassy that the Government of the United States accepted the suggestion of an 8 per cent participation by Canada in the ultimate cost of military relief in Europe.

3. On the basis of this exchange the Government of Canada proceeded with the measures necessary to enable the fullest use to be made of Canada as a source of supply in the confident expectation that arrangements would be made to ensure that Canada's contribution to the ultimate cost would not exceed the agreed percentage.

4. Discussions among representatives of the three participating Governments have continued throughout the intervening period with a view to reaching formal agreement on the terms of the arrangement for providing military relief supplies on a combined basis. In these discussions it has now been made known that the executive branch of the Government of the United States is not in a position to provide the assurance that Canada's contribution to the ultimate cost shall be limited to the accepted share.

5. During this period procurement responsibility has been accepted by Canada in excess of the $45,000,000 (Canadian) made available by the Canadian Treasury Board for the purpose, and supplies have already been shipped to a value in excess of the agreed share for Canada of the anticipated maximum ultimate cost.

6. In the absence of the firm assurances to which it regards itself as reasonably entitled the Government of Canada is now compelled to reconsider its position. Accordingly, the Canadian Embassy has been instructed to inform the Department of State that, pending the outcome of this reconsideration, the Government of Canada is reluctantly taking the steps necessary to protect its position:

(a) The Canadian authorities are ceasing, at least temporarily, to accept any further procurement responsibility for military relief supplies.

(b) The Canadian authorities are reserving the right to reconsider items for which procurement responsibility has already been accepted but which have not yet been procured.

7. The Government of Canada would, however, welcome any proposal which might provide a satisfactory basis for the resumption of Canadian participation in the provision of military relief supplies to Europe. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-510

Ottawa, February 12, 1945

FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION. SECRET. Your WA-744 and 741, February 12th, Military Relief.

You will probably wish to reconsider your proposed memorandum in the light of teletype EX-509<sup>36</sup> which was prepared on Friday but delayed until today for clearance with Robertson and Clark. The figures show that the Canadian contribution to military relief will be so substantial as not to require any suggestion of withdrawal from the Committees as we contemplate seeking permission to exceed the $45,000,000 in order to include some trucks not yet ordered.

I think, for instance, that the last line of Paragraph 6 of WA-741 should read: "Reluctantly taking the steps necessary to limit its commitments under the plan." In Paragraph 6(a) "procurement responsibility" might be replaced by "supply responsibility" and a similar change should be made in Paragraph 6(b).

It is Paragraph 7 which will require most modification as the words "resumption of Canadian participation" suggest that we are contemplating an immediate stoppage of participation; in fact, we should be continuing to supply a large quantity of commodities for which orders have already been placed and should contemplate supplying the trucks as well. Taking these into account we should be financing more than 8 per cent of the total supplies financed so far by the three countries and as the scheme is to be reconsidered when the prospective loss reaches $400,000,000 we should probably be financing more than our pro rata share when that limit is reached. In these circumstances continued attendance at the meetings need occasion no embarrassment. Ends.

I saw Mr. Clayton, Assistant Secretary of State, at 4:30 yesterday afternoon with Ritchie from this Embassy and Reinstein and Jackson from the State Department. I gave Mr. Clayton the memorandum which is being reported to you in final form in a following teletype.

2. The statement of our position was received sympathetically and Mr. Clayton indicated that after they have an opportunity to study our position thoroughly he will either send us a reply or will ask us to discuss the matter with him again.

3. A brief discussion of the memorandum took place at this meeting but, as Clayton prefaced his remarks with the observation that he was quite unfamiliar with the background, we realized that his preliminary comments must be regarded as non-committal. However, you will be interested to hear that upon reading the memorandum and giving some thought to it, Mr. Clayton remarked that our position appeared quite justified in equity but he observed that there might be something in the preceding exchanges between the State Department and the Embassy which made the general principles of equity not strictly applicable to the case. At this point Mr. Jackson observed that while the Canadian position appeared to be stated very fairly, he regretted that apparently the Canadians had not been informed of discussions which had taken place between the United States and United Kingdom before Canada's entrance into the arrangement in which the State Department had indicated that the arrangement would have to be so designed that cross payments from the United States to any other party to the arrangements could be avoided as the Executive Branch of the United States Government was unable to undertake to make such payments. The State Department may have stated this view to the United Kingdom representatives before we came on the scene but certainly we were unaware that such payments were definitely impossible until our discussions with the State Department during the past fortnight. In fact, as we indicated to you in our WA-148<sup>37</sup> reporting on our conversations of January 9th, at which Mr. Reinstein was also present, Mr. Merchant,<sup>38</sup> whose position Mr. Jackson is occupying temporarily during the former's absence in Europe, had indicated that the sort of guarantee requested by us appeared to him to be implied in the general arrangement. We shall remind Mr. Reinstein and Mr. Jackson that such views were expressed on that occasion in order that they may recognize that we were encouraged to expect such a guarantee as recently as January 9th. Mr. Jackson emphasized that there was one important consideration which should not be overlooked by the State Department in its examination of the Canadian memorandum and that was the fact that Canada had offered voluntarily to bear part of the burden of providing military relief supplies. He felt that the State Department could not fail to recognize the cooperative and helpful attitude displayed by Canada in offering to participate in this agreement.

Chief, War Areas Economic Division, Department of State of the United States.

4. There will be a number of questions in connection with the implementation of our memorandum on which we shall require guidance from Ottawa.

5. As continuous advice from the Canadian member will be required by C.C.A.C.(S) at least until the commitments which we finally accept have run out, and furthermore as the Committee will doubtless wish to be advised of additional availabilities of supplies from Canada in case such supplies are not available elsewhere and the United States can make satisfactory arrangements for procurement, and finally as there is at least some possibility that a basis may be provided for resuming full scale Canadian participation in procurement at a later stage, I assume that we shall be expected to continue active membership in the C.C.A.C.(S).

6. I understand that Colonel Beamer's office will be discussing with the C.C.A.C.(S) the detailed adjustments in our commitments made necessary by the action which we have taken. For this purpose his office will review our existing commitments with the appropriate authorities in Ottawa almost immediately.

7. For similar reasons I agree that it would seem in the common interest for us to continue participation in discussions in the full C.C.A.C. when supply matters of special interest to Canada are under consideration.

8. In connection with other related combined activities or discussions the appropriateness of our continued participation would seem to be established by the fact that our expenditures, even under the revised commitments, will be substantially in excess of our maximum share of the ultimate cost and we shall hope for reimbursement at least to the amount of excess out of receipts. We shall, therefore, expect to continue our participation in:

- (a) The presentation of notes to the recipient Governments.
- (b) The operation of the costing and billing procedures.
- (c) The decision as to the most efficient method of collecting and disbursing receipts and the operation of the procedures adopted.
- (d) The projected Inter-Governmental Committee on financial questions arising from the operation of the arrangement, including the determination of the point at which the $400,000,000 limit on losses is reached (reference was made to this proposed Committee in paragraph 4(b) of our WA-602 of February 3rd).
- (e) The working out of arrangements for crediting the supplying Governments appropriately for supplies transferred by the military to UNRRA when responsibility for relief operations is turned over to UNRRA in the various areas.

9. In theory the operations of the Combined Boards on military relief requirements would seem to remain unaffected by the action which we have taken. Officers of the Combined Boards will be expected, as in the past, to consider the availability of supplies or production capacity in Canada without concerning themselves with the question of responsibility for undertaking and financing procurement. In practice, no doubt, in indicating sources of supply for military relief purposes there will be a tendency to avoid recommending Canadian sources when the supplies in question are readily available also in the United States or United Kingdom. Presumably consideration will be given to this practical problem in Ottawa.

10. We are informed that the United Kingdom has now formally presented the general note of agreement to the State Department and to our High Commissioner in London. We had advised the United Kingdom Embassy that acceptance of this note by Canada would have to be subject to important reservations. Ends.

supplies on a combined basis. 6. In the continued absence of the firm assurances to which it regards itself as reasonably entitled, the Government of Canada is now compelled to reconsider its position. *Mémorandum du gouvernement de Grande-Bretagne

to Government of Canada*

London, February 12, 1945

The United Kingdom Government desire to refer to the Memorandum of the Canadian Government of the 3rd June, 1944,<sup>43</sup> regarding the sharing of the burden of the cost of the provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe outside their own territories, insofar as the burden does not fall on U.N.R.R.A.

In the light of proposals which have since been considered by the United States Government, the Canadian Government and the United Kingdom Government, it is recommended that the ultimate burden of the cost of the provision of such supplies should be borne in the following manner:

(1) that the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian Governments shall agree on the provision of supplies required up to a value not exceeding one billion dollars;

(2) that unless other arrangements are mutually agreed upon, payment in full shall be requested of all Governments or authorities of liberated or conquered areas to which such supplies are furnished;

proportions: by the United States Government, 67% of such irrecoverable amount; by the United Kingdom Government, 25% of such irrecoverable amount; by the Canadian Government, 8% of such irrecoverable amount;

I got Mr. Heeney to put the financing of military relief on the Agenda of tomorrow's meeting of the War Committee and to circulate the memorandum of which a copy is attached.

A decision in respect at least of question 2 on page 5 is a matter of urgency as I understand from Colonel McCrimmon that the military relief authorities in Washington have called forward more wheat than it has as yet been decided to supply to the extent of $1,000,000.

It is true that if separate financial provision is made for the trucks as contemplated by the submission prepared for Treasury Board, enough money would remain out of the $45,000,000 already provided to cover the cost of this wheat as well as the million dollars involved in question 1 on page 5.

In question 2 on page 5 I should have added that wheat in the amount of 82,400 long tons is included in item (c) on page 2—"supplies for which Canada has accepted responsibility and for which procurement action has not yet been taken." The million dollars above refers to part of this wheat.

FINANCING OF MILITARY RELIEF

It has become necessary to ask for direction with respect to a few problems concerned with the financing of military relief.

I. Summary of the course of negotiations

1. Discussion of military relief arose when it was clear that UNRRA would not be an acceptable agency for providing relief in the course of military operations. At one time the United States suggested that all supplies from the British Empire should be financed from British Empire sources and when objection was raised to this proposal it was suggested that Canada might offer some other form of contribution.

2. The Canadian offer to pay 8% of the ultimate loss involved in connection with the provision of military relief to liberated countries was made in accordance with a Minute of the War Committee of Cabinet dated May 17th. It was agreed that supplies purchased in Canada should, in the first instance, be financed by Canada and Canadian participation was made dependent on Canadian representation on the Supplies Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee.

3. The Canadian offer was accepted in a letter from the State Department to Mr. Pearson, reported in teletype WA-5325 of September 12th in these terms "I am happy to inform you that this Government accepts your suggestion of an 8% participation by Canada in the ultimate cost of military relief."

4. Pending a more formal arrangement, supplies were made available from Canada from time to time and authority was obtained from Treasury Board, first for $5,000,000 and then for an additional $40,000,000 to cover the cost of these supplies.<sup>44</sup> As of February 6th:

(a) Supplies shipped or ready to be shipped amounted to	$36,997,908
(b) Supplies under procurement and not yet ready to be shipped amounted to	$23,825,902
(c) Supplies for which Canada has accepted responsibility and for which procurement action has not yet been taken amounted to	$16,013,587
(d) Supplies for which Canada has been recommended as a source by the Combined Boards but for which responsibility has not yet been accepted amounted to

$49,044,642

Total

$125,882,039

5. The British Government had in the meantime developed the plan by a proposal, accepted in principle by the United States, that the United States should pay 67% of the ultimate cost, the United Kingdom 25% and Canada 8%. The arrangement was to be reconsidered if the total of the supplies procured reached $1,000,000,000 or if the losses which were anticipated amounted to $400,000,000. A formal memorandum along these lines has been delivered by the Government of the United Kingdom to both the United States and the Canadian Governments.<sup>45</sup>

6. The method of collecting from the Governments of the recipient countries the cost of the supplies furnished did not appear to the Canadian authorities adequate to ensure that repayment would be prompt or even that the Canadian share of the losses would be limited to 8% of the total loss and it was, therefore, decided to ask the United States and the United Kingdom for a firm guarantee that they would make any payments that might be necessary to bring the ultimate losses into the agreed proportions. The United Kingdom is prepared to give the guarantee if the United States will do so too, but the United States authorities, while admitting an implied liability, contend that they cannot give a guarantee without going to Congress which they are not prepared to do.

7. In view of these developments it was decided to accept no further procurement responsibility and to reconsider any responsibilities in excess of $45,000,000 for which financial provision had been made. This sum would more than cover supplies shipped or under procurement (apart from certain army trucks valued at $21,000,000).

8. In order to include these trucks which are already in the possession of the Canadian military authorities and for which it is highly desirable to find a market, a submission to Treasury Board has been prepared, asking for financial provision not to exceed $25,000,000.

9. At the same time a formal request has been made to the State Department for the firm guarantee mentioned in para. 6. and failing that, it has been suggested that the United States and United Kingdom authorities should buy the supplies to be procured in Canada now that Canadian financing of these supplies has come to an end.<sup>46</sup> No reply has as yet been received to this request.

10. The United States authorities have, however, signified their willingness to pay cash for a number of items urgently needed falling within the category of "Supplies for which Canada has accepted responsibility and for which

See enclosure of preceding document.

See Document 1085.

procurement action has not yet been taken.” These are supplies not normally produced within the United States in sufficient quantities to meet present needs. They do not include supplies which the United States might have provided had adequate notice been received but for which preparation was not made because Canada had accepted responsibility. Those of these latter items which are urgently needed would cost roughly $1,000,000 (excluding wheat which will be discussed separately).

11. In summary, if the formal guarantee were received from the United States and a like guarantee were obtained from the United Kingdom, the military relief plan would admirably fulfil the following objectives:

(a) It would make a worthy contribution to the relief of liberated countries which is essential to their political stability and, therefore, to the attainment of many of the purposes for which the war is being fought. The importance of the relief of liberated countries is being constantly emphasized. It is the subject of a recent despatch from the Prime Minister to the Canadian Ambassador in Washington,<sup>47</sup> written at the time of the visit of the Right Honourable Richard Law, and in a telegram from General Eisenhower,† of which a copy was received on February 20th, the matter is treated as one of operational urgency.

(b) It would limit Canada's financial contribution to 8% of the total loss, that is to say to $32,000,000, unless the scheme is extended.

(c) It would provide an important outlet for some Canadian surpluses, whether these are war assets as in the case of the trucks, or commodities in long supply as in the case of the wheat.

II. Immediate Questions

1. Should Canada finance the supplies for which responsibility has been accepted and for which the United States is not willing to pay because they could have been provided in the United States itself had earlier notice been received? As has been explained in para. 10 above, these amount to about $1,000,000.

2. Should any special action be taken in respect of wheat? In addition to what has already been provided, some 65,000 tons of Canadian wheat have been urgently requested for March shipment. The United States is apparently not prepared to pay for this wheat but has suggested that if it is delivered they can offer replacement in kind later in the year.

3. In addition larger quantities of wheat have been allocated to Canada as a source of supply by the Combined Boards, though responsibility has not as yet been accepted. (See para. 4 (d) above.) These allocations were made at Canadian request and in the face of some United States competition. The problem on which direction is sought is, therefore, this. Should financial provision be made for supplying wheat for military relief either in respect of the quantity which is urgently needed in April or in respect of larger quantities for which Canada may wish to find an outlet. The total involved is about 30,000,000 bushels.

See Document 1282.

III. More Remote Questions

1. If a guarantee is forthcoming from the United States, it is assumed that Canada will be prepared to resume financing of all supplies procured in Canada within the life of the present scheme, that is to say, until the total supplies provided by all three countries amount to $1,000,000,000 or until the anticipated total loss reaches $400,000,000. It is expected that the limit of loss will shortly be approached and that Canada will then be asked to continue under the plan.

As the decision to offer to pay 8% of the ultimate loss was reached and the original Canadian offer made before any limit was suggested to the total loss and as the reason given for the percentage of the ultimate loss which Canada was prepared to bear was the proportion of Canada's participation in the land operations, it is not easy to find a reason for refusing to extend the scope of the present scheme beyond the limits proposed by the United Kingdom, namely, an overall limit of $1,000,000,000 and a limit to anticipated loss of $400,000,000.

While it seems probable that the United Kingdom will wish to reduce its percentage of the ultimate loss if the scheme is extended on the ground that its share is disproportionately large in comparison with its ability to finance the procurement of supplies of which a large proportion come from outside the sterling area, no analogous argument can be employed by Canada.

In brief, the problem is whether Canada should be willing to pay 8% of the loss incurred by extending the scheme after the limit of anticipated loss has been reached. As this limit is $400,000,000 for the whole scheme, the limit for Canada would be $32,000,000.

2. Canada may be expected in the course of the negotiations to reply to two further questions which can only be stated at the present time in a hypothetical way:

(a) If orders are placed in Canada and financed by the United States or the United Kingdom to such an extent that the financial commitments of those countries within Canada and elsewhere reach the proportions 67, 25 and 8, in which it was agreed that losses were to be borne, would Canada be prepared to resume financing orders in Canada pari passu with the other two countries until the overall limit of $1,000,000,000 is reached? In this event Canada's total commitment would be increased from $61,000,000 (including the trucks) to $80,000,000, but the latter figure would include an allowance for supplies of Canadian origin which have reached the United Kingdom by way of Mutual Aid and are being passed on to military relief, and some wheat supplied to Greece for which military relief may accept responsibility. This whole question is hypothetical because it seems probable that the military relief plan will have to be re-negotiated long before the limit of $1,000,000,000 is reached because the limit to anticipated losses of $400,000,000 is likely to be reached very shortly.

(b) If Canada were to receive repayment from one or more of the countries which have received supplies so that the net Canadian commitment fell below the figure of $32,000,000, which is the share of the anticipated loss that Canada expects to bear, would the Canadian Government be willing to resume financing of supplies procured from Canada?

In the light of information received yesterday immediate question No. 2 on page 5 of the Memorandum for War Committee of Cabinet on the financing of military relief has been rewritten as follows:<sup>48</sup>

3. Should any special action be taken in respect of wheat? Responsibility was accepted under paragraph 4(c) on page 2 above for 82,400 tons to be lifted in April. However on February 27th the United States authorities called forward wheat for which provision had already been made and also part of the quantity just mentioned, value about $1,000,000. This latter call cannot be met unless authority is given to cover the cost. This wheat has probably been sub-allocated to army groups and the United States authorities say that it will be difficult or impossible to take all the steps necessary to reallocate the sources in time to meet the shipping deadline.

In addition some 65,000 tons of Canadian wheat have been urgently requested for March shipment to Italy. The estimated value is $5,571,410. Procurement responsibility was not accepted for this wheat until February 7th (i.e., subsequent to the date on which the amount of 82,400 tons was recorded) but plans had to be made some time previously and were based on the assumption that Canada could supply this wheat. It would apparently be impracticable to reallocate it in time for shipment.

The United States is apparently not prepared to pay for this wheat but has suggested that if it is delivered they will offer replacement in kind later in the year.

In the last sentence but one of question 3 "urgently needed in April" should therefore be replaced by "urgently needed in March and April".<sup>49</sup>

FINANCING OF MILITARY RELIEF

21. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, referring to discussions at the meeting of October 5th, 1944, reported on problems which had arisen in connection with the financing of military relief:

Supplies had been made available under authorities obtained from Treasury Board for $45 millions pending the more formal arrangements which were expected to follow the government's offer to accept eight percent of the ultimate loss involved in providing military relief to liberated countries. Supplies ready to be shipped or under procurement, or for which responsibility had been accepted by Canada now amounted to some $77 million, while Canada had been recommended as a source of further supplies to the extent of almost $50 million more.

Arrangements for collection and repayment had not, to date, been satisfactory and the U.S. and U.K. governments had been asked to give a guarantee to Canada against ultimate loss beyond the eight percent proportion which had been accepted. U.S. authorities, however, had been unable, as yet to give such a guarantee and, meantime, the need for immediate shipments to Europe had become very urgent.

Certain immediate questions had arisen in regard to the financing of supplies for which Canada had accepted responsibility.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(External Affairs memorandum, undated—C.W.C. document 948.)

22. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after considerable discussion, agreed that responsibility for military relief should be vested in the Mutual Aid Board whose administration should undertake procurement of supplies in Canada for this purpose, the cost of such relief to remain a charge upon the War Appropriation, and that a recommendation to Council to this end be prepared and submitted at an early date.<sup>50</sup>

With respect to immediate matters, it was agreed that:

(a) Canada should finance minor items of supply to a total not exceeding $1 million, for which the U.S. government were not willing to pay on the ground that they could have been provided by the United States had earlier notice been received:

(b) wheat be provided by Canada to the minimum extent necessary to meet immediate needs, on the understanding that replacement in kind would be made by the U.S. government later in the year; and,

(c) no further commitment of any sort be accepted by Canada pending a full examination of the situation by the Mutual Aid Board.

DESPATCH A.62

London, March 1, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 1618 of December 12th, 1944† and to my despatch No. A.43 of February 14th, 1945, regarding the financing of military relief during the period preceding the operation of UNRRA.

2. I have now heard further from the United Kingdom authorities regarding the treatment of relief supplies made available from the United Kingdom which may be of Canadian origin received by the United Kingdom under Mutual Aid procedures.

3. In your despatch No. 655 of May 29th, 1944,<sup>51</sup> you intimated that special consideration would have to be given to such supplies and put forward the suggestion that these supplies should count as United Kingdom contributions to relief.

4. The United Kingdom authorities feel that this may well be the most practicable and convenient way to treat the supplies. Apparently, however, they have no wish to receive financial benefit for themselves through the supply of goods in which there is a Mutual Aid element and they recognise that the credit for such Mutual Aid element should in proportion go to Canada.

5. They have been discussing with the United States how to deal with a similar problem of supplies made available from the United Kingdom which are of Lend-Lease origin, and I enclose for your information copy of a memorandum on this subject which the Embassy in Washington has recently presented to the State Department.† The approach now made to us by the United Kingdom authorities is in line with paragraph 7 of your despatch No. 1618 of December 12th.<sup>52</sup>

6. The United Kingdom authorities feel that the Canadian authorities may wish to consider whether some corresponding arrangement should be made for an appropriate adjustment in respect of the Mutual Aid element in any supplies furnished from the United Kingdom, either on some proportionate basis or by way of identifying wherever possible supplies of Canadian origin so that an ad hoc arrangement may be made.

7. At the same time, the United Kingdom authorities think that the amounts involved are likely to be small in terms of money while the arrangements necessary for adjustment might prove difficult and complicated. Accordingly, if the Canadian Government see fit to proceed on the basis suggested in your despatch No. 655 of May 29th, 1944, the United Kingdom authorities would for their part, be content.

2. The following aide-mémoire has now been received from the Department of State, Begins:

"The Department of State informs the Canadian Embassy that a memorandum has been received from the British Embassy at Washington under date of February 12, 1945, in which are set forth the recommendations of the British Government as to the manner in which the ultimate burden of the cost of provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe should be borne, so far as the burden does not fall on the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. The Department understands that a similar communication has been addressed by the British Government to the Canadian Government.

The Department of State has informed the British Embassy that the proposals contained in the Embassy's memorandum under reference are acceptable to the United States Government. The Department suggests that, if the proposals are acceptable to the Canadian Government, they shall be regarded as constituting an agreement among the three Governments." Ends.

3. It is appreciated by the United States and United Kingdom representatives in Washington that Canadian acceptance of the original memorandum will have to be subject to several important qualifications.

DESPATCH 385

Ottawa, March 12, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to despatch No. A.62 of March 1st, 1945,† concerning the treatment of relief supplies made available from the United Kingdom for purposes of military relief which may be of Canadian origin and have been received by the United Kingdom under Mutual Aid procedure.

2. This question has been considered by the Mutual Aid Board and it has been decided that it is desirable to have an arrangement between the United Kingdom and Canada on this subject similar to that which has been made between the United Kingdom and the United States.

3. Although the two arrangements should be similar in general character, it is desirable to state the Canadian position in some detail.

4. In general it should be a basic principle that the United Kingdom will not request as Mutual Aid from Canada any supplies intended for military relief.

5. Where it can be determined that identified shipments, or parts of shipments, of supplies furnished to the United Kingdom as Mutual Aid have been diverted or transferred by the United Kingdom to military relief purposes, such supplies shall be treated as supplies provided by Canada under the military relief agreement rather than as supplies provided by the United Kingdom.

6. Where the United Kingdom provides supplies as military relief which are estimated to contain a substantial but unidentifiable fraction which has been provided by Canada to the United Kingdom as Mutual Aid, a proportion of such supplies to be agreed between representatives of the two Governments on principles similar to those already agreed between the United Kingdom and the United States in respect of unidentifiable Lend-Lease content of military relief supplies, shall be regarded as being provided by Canada to military relief, in accordance with the military relief agreement.

7. It is intended to confine the operation of the preceding paragraph to specified commodities of which the supplies provided by the United Kingdom as military relief may be expected to contain a significant proportion originally provided from Canadian sources by way of Mutual Aid to the United Kingdom.

8. For this purpose it would be appreciated if the United Kingdom authorities would inform us of those supplies being provided by the United Kingdom as military relief which are of the same nature as supplies which have been obtained from Canada as Mutual Aid.

9. I shall appreciate it if you will bring these proposals, which conform closely with those which the United Kingdom authorities appear to anticipate, to the attention of those authorities.

Ottawa, March 12, 1945

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I am writing in reference to your note to me of February 12th† regarding the provision of civilian supplies to Germany and Austria under military auspices, the despatch from Pearson of February 6th† on the same matter, and recent discussions which have been held regarding Military Relief and its relation to the provision of supplies to ex-enemy areas.

It seems to me that these documents and discussions raise an issue of major importance which should be the subject of careful interdepartmental discussion and then of a War Committee decision. Not only are very important principles involved, both economically and politically, but also the potential expenditures involved are quite substantial.

As I understand it, the enemy needs for relief being distributed by the military forces to the populations of conquered territories as well as liberated territories are being met under the Military Relief arrangements upon which agreement has just been reached, although, as you know, Canada's participation in the financing of the supplies obtained from Canada is being suspended for the time being at least because it appears that we are bearing a disproportionate amount of the financial risks involved. These arrangements would appear to suffice in meeting the requirements for the next few weeks, but judging from the information that has been supplied by your Department recently, it would appear that the prospective limit to the deficit agreed upon, i.e., $400,000,000 will be reached shortly, and therefore the whole scheme will have to come up for revision and reconsideration by the Governments involved. Therefore we should be thinking of the policy we should wish to follow in any extension of the arrangements, and it seems to me that such policy involves, as one of its main elements, the question of how much financial responsibility we should take for providing supplies to those in conquered territories.

I understand that the Minister of National Defence stated at the last meeting of the Mutual Aid Board that the military authorities will likely have to look after the distribution of relief and other essential civilian supplies even following the close of hostilities and in liberated as well as in conquered territories. Consequently the provision of the supplies as Military Relief appears likely to go on for some time and to be a major element in the provision of supplies to ex-enemies along the lines discussed in the documents under reference. Of course, the character of the arrangements may change somewhat when the military authorities become formally occupying authorities, but the substance of the problem will presumably remain much the same.

Although this Department is without any very definite information on the matter, it seems to us that the potential requirements of an economically prostrate Germany and Italy may continue very large through this year and later. The enormous destruction being inflicted upon the enemy and all their territory and production and transportation facilities will make it exceedingly difficult for persons in enemy territory to support themselves by domestic production or provide any exports to pay for the supplies they need from abroad. For this reason, I do not believe any claim on Germany in respect of relief supplies would be worth very much even if it were possible to get priority over Russian and other claims for reparations and indemnities. It may be that Germany will have some gold or other liquid assets which can be used to help pay for the civilian supplies required, and if so, it will be worth while trying to get a claim on them even ahead of other claims. Nevertheless I do not think that we can count on this as a sure means of financing the possibly large requirements of food and other essential supplies from outside.

When we undertook to pay for 8% of the cost of Military Relief, we did so on the basis that this was a part of the cost of the military campaign in Europe, and since we were providing approximately 8% of the troops involved (aside from the Russian front), it would be reasonable to base our share of these, so to speak, overhead costs on this proportion. In doing so, I think we were going farther than could be justified on the basis of relative capacity to bear costs, since we were bearing one-eighth as much as the United States. I suppose the U.S. have some corresponding costs in other parts of the world—perhaps for liberated or conquered areas in the Pacific—but as yet, so far as I know, they have not raised these as an argument in determining their proper share of the costs in Europe. In the absence of some argument of this kind, I would think that we ought not to bear a larger proportion of the cost in relation to the U.S. than we are doing under the UNRRA arrangement, where the ratio is 1 to 17½. Certainly we ought to bear no more than the same amount per capita as the U.S., which would amount to something like 1/12 of the absolute amount which the U.S. are bearing.

If the United Kingdom can also be expected to bear a fair proportion of the cost—and I feel sure she should be expected to and, indeed, the British would probably feel they should, if that country is to maintain its Great Power status—then our share, instead of being 8% of the total of the three countries, ought to be something in the neighbourhood of, say, 5%. Indeed, in view of the relatively small part that we are able to play in determining the major matters of policy in connection with the conduct of the war and the post-war settlements, many Canadians may feel that we should not be called upon to bear any proportion at all of these costs, even though many of the goods required may have to come from Canada. If we are to share in the costs, there may also be good reason for expecting, say, France, and some other Continental countries, particularly those with substantial foreign exchange reserves, to bear some share as well,<sup>54</sup> although they may well claim that the damage they suffered themselves is so great that they should be excused this obligation. If some of the supplies required are to come from countries which have not taken an important part in the war but have joined in it either recently to get a seat at the Peace Conference, or earlier, would it not be possible to argue that the least they can do is to bear some of the cost of providing these supplies to conquered territories?

I feel that this matter should not be allowed to drift, with the result that these costs of looking after enemy territory would simply be added to the Military Relief costs being assumed under the present agreement. It may be the intention of the United Kingdom and the United States Governments that this should be the case, though the limit of $400,000,000 set on the prospective losses under the Military Relief agreement by the U.K. can hardly have been intended to cover a large proportion of the supplies required for Germany and Italy. If the experience of the past is any guide, it will take a long time to thresh out arrangements to follow on after the present Military Relief arrangements. On the other hand, I do not think we can enter a new fiscal year with a huge potential liability hanging over us on which no limit can be set and about which very little can be said. We must somehow budget for whatever provision is made, and the strain upon our budget is going to be very severe at a time when many Canadians will be expecting a considerable reduction in war expenditures. On the other hand, I do not suppose that the victorious Allied powers can let the people under their control starve to death merely because they are unable to pay for what they require.

I do not know what may be the best means of approaching a solution to this problem, whether, for example, we can get useful information on these questions quickly in Washington and London, or whether we should proceed first to work out what seems to us the best attitude for Canada to take. Possibly it would be best, after preliminary discussion amongst ourselves and reference either to the War Committee or to those Ministers most directly concerned, to use the reaching of agreement on Military Relief as the occasion to say that we have assumed it would not suffice to look after much of the needs of Germany and Italy, particularly once major hostilities have ceased, and that we do not feel that Canada should be expected to carry as much as 8% of such continuing requirements. In any event, it seems to me the first step ought probably to be to arrange a meeting of those of us most directly

Ottawa, March 16, 1945

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY
NATIONAL DEFENCE

The Board had under consideration a memorandum from the Honourable the Secretary of State for External Affairs, concurred in by the Honourable the Minister of Munitions and Supply and the Honourable the Minister of National Defence, reporting:

“That the Cabinet War Committee on October 5th gave approval to an Exchange of Notes with the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom providing for the payment by Canada of eight per cent of the final cost of military relief in Western Europe on the understanding that Canada will be represented on the Supplies Committee of the Combined Civil Affairs Committee. The Cabinet War Committee agreed that the detailed procedure for carrying out this arrangement should be left to the officials of the three Governments;

That the Canadian Embassy in Washington reports that negotiations are proceeding with the other two Governments concerned with respect to the details of the proposed Agreement but that while it is clear that all three Governments are prepared to conclude an Agreement that is, in substance, on the lines approved by the Cabinet War Committee, the United States Government has not as yet expressed its willingness to give a firm assurance that it will make any payment that may be necessary to ensure that Canada does not bear more than the agreed share of eight per cent of the final cost of military relief in Europe;

That under the proposed Agreement Canada would have been responsible for the financing in Canada of all orders that might be placed here;

That the Canadian Embassy reports that it is clear from all the formal and informal discussions that the United States and the United Kingdom are agreed that payment in full shall be requested of all Governments or authorities of liberated or conquered areas to which supplies are furnished and that the firm intention of the United States and the United Kingdom is to render bills monthly, if possible, or quarterly if monthly billing is not feasible.

<sup>55</sup>Aucun procès-verbal d'une telle réunion ne fut trouvé.

No record of such a meeting was located.

The time which would elapse between the billing and the remittance of payment by the recipient Government will depend primarily upon negotiations between the recipient Government and the supplying Governments concerned;

That the Agreement contemplates a limit to the prospective deficit to be incurred, without the Agreement being brought up for re-negotiation, at the sum of $400,000,000, Canada's share of which would amount to $32,000,000. Similarly, the total to be financed by the three Governments without the negotiation of a new Agreement would be limited to $1,000,000,000. It is, of course, impossible to say that the supplies which Canada would be required to finance initially would be limited to eight per cent of this sum or $80,000,000 since the placing of orders in Canada will depend on the availability of supplies;

That on August 17th, 1944, Treasury Board recommended that authority be granted for expenditures in an amount not exceeding $5,000,000 in connection with the Canadian participation in the cost of relief during the military period in Europe, chargeable to the Allotment from the War Appropriation for Army Services, the expenditures to be made by the Mutual Aid Board under arrangements satisfactory to the Department of National Defence;

That on December 6th, 1944, Treasury Board recommended that further provision should be made for expenditures in an amount not to exceed $40,000,000, chargeable to the War Appropriation for Army Services, and that the expenditures be made by the Mutual Aid Board in financing orders placed on account of Military Relief;

That in view of the difficulty of obtaining a firm assurance from the Government of the United States that in the event of its not being possible to distribute the payments from the Governments receiving supplies in such a way as to reimburse the Canadian Government for expenditures incurred in excess of its share of eight per cent of the ultimate loss under the proposed Military Relief operations, it has been decided to limit the procurement of supplies in Canada to those for which financial provision has already been made.

It is, however, desirable to include in this provision certain trucks which, while manufactured for operational use, have now been found to be unsuitable for such a purpose. One lot, which comprises 1,498 6-ton load carrying units, consists of F.W.D. Company's tractors with semi-trailers and is the property of the Department of National Defence; the other lot, which comprises 2,200 6-ton load carrying units, consists of the Ford Company's tractors with semi-trailers and was supplied to the United Kingdom as Mutual Aid. It is, therefore, recommended that Treasury Board should make provision for further expenditures in an amount not to exceed $25,000,000 chargeable to the War Appropriation for Army Services."

The Board concur in the above report and recommendation, and submit the same for favourable consideration.

Ottawa, March 20, 1945

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. A.43 of February 14th concerning the financing of military relief.

2. It would be appreciated if you will communicate to the Dominions Office formal confirmation of the concurrence of Canada in the proposals contained in the Dominions Office memorandum of February 12th.<sup>56</sup> The following statement of the Canadian position has been discussed informally with the representatives of the United Kingdom in Washington who have been concerned with the discussions relating to military relief and it has also been shown to the officials of the State Department:

“The Canadian Government is in general agreement with the recommendations made in the memorandum of the United Kingdom Government of February 12th, 1945, regarding the sharing of the burden of the cost of the provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe in so far as the burden does not fall on UNRRA, subject, however, to the following reservations:

(1) In the absence of a firm assurance from the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of the United States that they will make whatever payments may be necessary to ensure that the ultimate deficit will be shared in the proportions agreed on if the division of the receipts collected from recipient Governments does not produce this result, the Canadian Government cannot undertake to bear a share of the financing of the original procurement of the supplies disproportionate to the shares borne by the other two Governments.

(2) As the original offer of the Canadian Government contemplated a contribution to the cost of military relief rather than to the cost of the provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to military and conquered areas in Europe in so far as the burden does not fall on UNRRA, the Canadian Government cannot undertake any commitment in respect to any projects for furnishing supplies on a combined basis which go beyond the provision of military relief unless these projects are expressly approved by the Canadian Government.

See enclosure, Document 1086.

(3) The memorandum of the British Government does not deal with the treatment of supplies which may be made available from the United Kingdom but which may have been received by the United Kingdom from Canada through the Mutual Aid procedure. It is expected that, in general, such supplies will be treated as part of the Canadian contribution to military relief but detailed proposals on this point will form the subject of a separate memorandum.””

3. It is anticipated that the Dominions Office will furnish a reply, taking note of our reservations and that we shall then communicate the text of our communication to the Dominions Office and of its reply to the State Department in order to enable that Department to conclude the tripartite agreement.

4. The Canadian reservations were formulated at a time when it was thought that the Canadian share of the original financing had been disproportionately large and, indeed, at a time when the supplies which it was expected to procure in Canada for the purpose of military relief had an aggregate value of upwards of $125,000,000. For this reason shipments from Canada were curtailed while a request for an assurance from the State Department that if the distribution of the receipts from recipient Governments did not effect a distribution of the ultimate losses under the military relief plan in the agreed proportions, any payments that might be necessary for this purpose would be made by one Government to another. This request is still under consideration by the State Department. In the meantime, however, figures have been produced which indicate that the Canadian share of the supplies actually shipped does not amount to more than 6.1% and that by June 30th the Canadian share will not, in the absence of further shipments, amount to more than 5%. In spite of these figures, we are adhering to the original form of communication as a matter of record.

Ottawa, March 20, 1945

In the light of conversations which Mr. Angus has had in Washington in the course of the last few days, I am in a position to supply the following information concerning the status of the military relief negotiations.

1. It is hoped to present notes very shortly to the governments of the countries in western Europe which can be expected to pay for the supplies which they have received by way of military relief. There is some difference of opinion as to whether or not in presenting notes to Greece and Yugoslavia it should be indicated that the supplying countries will not press for payment. I gather that some of the American authorities feel that this is not a step which should be taken without Congressional approval as it, in substance, remits a debt.

2. In a general way it is anticipated that from the date of liberation or occupation until June 30th, 1945, the contributing Governments will have supplied relief amounting to $1,058,200,000, of which approximately $400,000,000 will have been supplied to the Balkans and Italy, countries from which payment is not expected.

3. As relief in the Balkans will shortly be taken over by UNRRA, it is not anticipated that the limit of anticipated losses set at $400,000,000 will be exceeded, except in one of the following ways:

(a) If a country in northwestern Europe which is not applying to be treated by UNRRA as a non-paying country nevertheless refuses to pay for military relief.

(b) If payment cannot be obtained for such military relief as may be supplied to Germany and Austria.

(c) If military relief is needed in Italy after June 30th.

4. These possibilities should be examined separately:

(a) It is believed that substantial pressure can be exerted on the countries of northwestern Europe, particularly if they are approached in good time.

(b) It has been tentatively agreed that the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom should be asked to raise in the Moscow talk on reparations the importance of making military relief a first charge on receipts from Germany and of devising a method by which this charge can be made available to the countries supplying military relief. It is assumed that military relief will come to an end in Germany and that some other arrangement will be made when the Combined Command terminates and separate zones of occupation are established.

(c) It is expected that military relief will come to an end in Italy and some other arrangement will be made in its place when hostilities cease and the Allied troops can be withdrawn.

5. It nevertheless seems important that discussions should take place shortly as to the re-negotiation of the arrangements for military relief which must take place when the anticipated losses reach $400,000,000. This will be desirable even if the negotiations go no further than recording formally the expectations set out in the preceding paragraph. If they do go further, presumably there will be a request that the limit of anticipated losses should be raised from $400,000,000 to some higher figure, but it is hoped that before this request is made more precise information will be available as to the probability of larger losses actually occurring. If larger losses are not anticipated there would seem to be no objection to raising the limit for total supplies which has been set at $1,000,000,000.

6. If no further supplies are financed by Canada it is anticipated that by June 30th the Canadian share of total financing will be approximately 5%. If this expectation were realized Canada would have to make a cash payment to either the United States or the United Kingdom in order to give effect to our offer to bear 8% of the losses, unless this result were achieved by dividing the receipts from the paying countries.

7. In these circumstances there would seem to be no good reason why Canada should not increase the financial contribution which has already been made, provided that the total financial commitment of Canada does not exceed 8% of the total commitment of the three countries combined. It is therefore, recommended that financial provision should be made to make available wheat in the quantities for which procurement responsibility had at one time been undertaken by Canada, namely, an amount of 82,400 long tons, together with a further amount of 65,000 long tons. It is understood that the provision of this wheat will facilitate the shipment of wheat in general to points where it is badly needed by relieving the United States of the responsibility of collecting wheat for shipment.

8. No reply has as yet been returned to the Canadian request for a firm assurance that if the ultimate losses under the military relief plan are not divided in the agreed proportions of 67, 25 and 8 by a distribution of the receipts under the plan, payments will be made to effect this distribution of losses.<sup>57</sup> In view of the fact that the Canadian share of financing does not exceed 8% at the present time and is not likely to do so by June 30th, the fact that we have not as yet received such an assurance is not a matter of importance. So long as the supplies furnished by the three supplying countries bear a rough relationship to the proportions in which they have agreed to share in the ultimate losses, the receipts recovered under the plan can be distributed so as to keep their losses in the required ratios. It can hardly be anticipated that either of our partners would seek to retain receipts under the plan to which it was not entitled in the light of its agreement that these receipts should be distributed. If, however, some assurance on this point is desired, it is understood that there would be no difficulty in obtaining from the other two Governments concerned an agreement to treat their receipts under the plan as held in suspense until an adjustment had been made, bringing the losses to the agreed proportions.

9. It might be worth seeking some such agreement because once it had been obtained it would be easy to suggest some system of combined collection by which one country would collect from each debtor and hold the proceeds in suspense until an adjustment were made. It would, therefore, be appreciated if the Mutual Aid Board would decide whether the other two Governments should be approached on these lines.

RE: MILITARY RELIEF

I have your memorandum dated March 20th, in which you set forth the status of Military Relief negotiations.

I think it would be advisable for us to request a firm assurance from the United States and the United Kingdom that they will hold their receipts in suspense until an adjustment is made which will bring the losses under the plan to the agreed proportions of 67%, 25% and 8%.

I think it hardly necessary to get the Board's formal approval to such action, but if you do not agree please let me know and I will prepare a memorandum for the next Board meeting.

TELETYPE WA-1616

Washington, March 26, 1945

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Angus from Ritchie, Begins: Your EX-1112 of March 24th, military relief. I have now received a letter from the State Department† regarding the presentation of notes requesting payment from Governments which have received military relief supplies from the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada.

The State Department intends to address the notes to the Missions at Washington of the Governments of France, Belgium, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Yugoslavia and Greece. The text of the note which they will present is reported in my immediately following teletype.† The text varies but slightly from the draft which you have had under consideration.<sup>58</sup>

On the question of the notification to the Yugoslav and Greek Governments, the State Department reports its understanding that it had been our combined intention to present the formal demand for payment even to those countries which we presumed to be non-paying, and that we would leave it to them to state their inability to make payment. After consultation with the Treasury, the State Department now indicates that, in presenting the notes, an oral statement might be made to the Greek and Yugoslav representatives, that similar notes are being addressed to all the recipient Governments, and that our purpose in presenting the notes to the Greek and Yugoslav Governments is primarily to record the fact of their indebtedness of us. The State Department representatives propose to say that they appreciate the difficulties in the financial position of these Governments and anticipate that their answer will be that they are unable to comply with the request for payment.

The State Department does not feel that any statement should be made to these two Governments, either in writing or orally, which suggests that the indebtedness is being cancelled. I gather that they are not in a position to cancel such indebtedness without prior Congressional approval.

The State Department suggests, and the United Kingdom representatives here agree, that the notes be given to the various recipient Governments on March 31st, or on the earliest date thereafter which is convenient to London and Ottawa. I shall let you know if London finds it impossible to make the presentation on that day. Ends.

TELETYPE WA-1720

Washington, March 30, 1945

Following for Angus from Pearson, Begins: Military Relief.

Beamer, Sale<sup>59</sup> and Ritchie were asked to attend a meeting in the State Department yesterday afternoon at which United States and United Kingdom military and civilian representatives were present to discuss supply problems resulting from the suspension of Canadian participation in Military Relief with particular emphasis on the current wheat difficulties.

2. Colonel Palmer from the United States War Department outlined the serious situation that they are faced with as a result of increasing demands during the next four months from northwest Europe and the inability of the United States transportation system to move much more than was accomplished in March. The monthly increase of all supplies over March, which strained their transportation resources to the limit, is in the neighbourhood of 50 per cent in April and 100 per cent during May, June and July. He could see no practical solution short of obtaining a major part of this increase from Canadian sources and through Canadian transportation channels. Of the increases, approximately 80 per cent is represented by wheat.

Member, Canadian Joint Staff Mission; secretary, Combined Relief Operations Committee, Washington.

3. Wayne Jackson, speaking for the State Department, indicated definitely that the United States could not undertake procurement of wheat in Canada. It was considered unlikely that any satisfactory arrangement could be made for United Kingdom procurement in Canada. He enquired, therefore, whether in the light of statistics presented in CCAC(S) memorandum for information Number 8 (which I sent to you with my letter of March 15th)† the Canadian Government would be prepared to undertake the financing of further procurement, particularly of wheat. He remarked that the notes would be going out to the recipient Governments in a few days and that there was every prospect of payment from the northwest European countries to which the bulk of supplies above the 400 million already shipped or scheduled for the Balkans and Italy would be going. He thought that in these circumstances the Canadian Government might feel that receipts would be adequate to distribute losses in the agreed proportions and to keep the total loss up to June 30th fairly close to 400 million. He expressed the view that if it proved impossible for the Canadian Government to finance the procurement of this wheat the only possible way of reducing the amount to be moved by United States inland transport to a volume that could conceivably be managed would be to arrange with the National Governments of certain liberated areas for them to procure wheat in Canada and contribute it to the Military Relief pool. Colonel Palmer considered it most unlikely that such an arrangement could be made in view of the fact that supplies contributed to Military Relief are not definitely committed to any specific destination with the result that, say the Belgians and Dutch, who are experiencing very great difficulties with their present supply programmes would be asked under this arrangement to provide supplies which might be distributed to other areas. He indicated, however, that the War Department would be prepared to assist in the exploration of this possibility if the Canadian Government would not undertake the necessary procurement.

4. We were, of course, not in a position to make any reply to these enquiries and we did not intimate what the reply from the Canadian Government was likely to be. We did, however, suggest that the Canadian Government's consideration of the problem might be affected if the State Department were to reply to our memorandum of February 13th to Mr. Clayton<sup>60</sup> stating the position of the United States Government formally and particularly if they were to indicate in their reply that although they were unable to guarantee us against excessive losses they were willing to assure us that collections would be made jointly and that receipts would be held in suspense pending settlement. We would recommend that the proper authorities in Ottawa consider urgently the extent to which the Canadian Government is prepared to undertake further procurement in the light of the situation as presented at this meeting. However, we feel that the communication to the United States or United Kingdom of any decision might well be delayed until we have secured a reply from the State Department along the lines suggested above.

5. Concerning the quantities of wheat involved we are expecting an estimate from CCAC(S) within the next day or so and will report it to you immediately. This figure would provide a basis for your proposed recommendation referred to in EX-1152† and would replace the figures of 82,400 and 65,000 which you previously had under consideration. Ends.

TELETYPE WA-1731

Washington, March 31, 1945

IMMEDIATE. Following for Angus from Ritchie, Begins: Our teletype WA-1720 of March 30th, military relief.

A statement has been prepared by the Canadian side of CCAC(S) providing in more detail the information mentioned in paragraphs 2 and 5 of our teletype. The following is the text of the statement, Begins: North American Wheat/Flour Shipments.

1. Military relief requirements of wheat and flour from North American sources for SHAEF and SACMED for the 2nd quarter, 1945 as approved by CCAC(S) are as follows:

March	429,950	L.T.
April	483,500	L.T.
May	563,437	L.T.
June	831,372	L.T.
Total	2,308,259	L.T.

Requirements for April are firm and those for May and June are in accordance with approvals so far given by CCAC(S). The latter are subject to revision but it must be emphasized that, if past experience is any guide, revisions will be upwards. Included in the June program is 150,000 long tons for feeding displaced United Nations nationals in Germany. Policy with respect to the supply of wheat to the German population has not yet been settled and if a decision is taken that some minimum feeding is desirable, quantities for both May and June may be substantially increased.

2. A careful examination by a special Wheat Committee of the military, transportation and shipping authorities, has indicated that during the period March-June the best possible movement of wheat and flour from the United States is as follows:

	U.S. Share		Deficiency
March	404,950	L.T.	25,000	L.T.
April	432,816	L.T.	50,684	L.T.
May	413,437	L.T.	150,000	L.T.
Total	1,682,575	L.T.	625,684	L.T.

3. Deficiencies for March and April are being taken care of from the unshipped balance of 372,239 L.T. of wheat for which Canada had accepted firm commitments prior to February 13th.

4. The Special Committee firmly believes that the only source from which the May and June deficiencies can be met is Canada and with this view the CCAC(S) concurs. Ends.

This is the most authoritative statement possible at the present time. You will, of course, appreciate that any advance estimate of this kind is bound to contain an element of uncertainty. It may, however, provide a sufficient basis for whatever recommendation you feel should be made concerning the extent to which the Canadian Government might undertake the financing of further procurement.

The whole question of the provision of relief to the German population and the arrangements for financing such relief can almost certainly not be settled before a decision will be necessary on the requirements set forth in the above statement. I am hopeful that the discussion of arrangements for providing relief to Germany will have reached a fairly advanced stage by the latter part of April and that it will be practicable to have formal discussion of the possible arrangement around April 18th if you expect to be in Washington at that time for the meeting of the UNRRA Committee on Supplies. As you will observe the quantity of wheat included in the above estimates makes no allowance for the German population.

In addition to an urgent decision on these particular wheat requirements and any further views which you may have on arrangements for financing relief to Germany, we should be grateful for some guidance as to the possible nature of a reply from the State Department to our memorandum of February 13th which would be helpful to the Canadian authorities. In paragraph 4 of our teletype WA-1720 we suggested the general lines which such a reply might take. We have as yet no assurance that the State Department will be prepared to reply in that sense. We think, however, that in the present circumstances we may be able to secure such a reply if we can give them a clearer indication of the kind of reply which our Government would find helpful. Ends.

NOTES TO GOVERNMENTS RECEIVING MILITARY RELIEF

I enclose seven notes which have been prepared for presentation on April 4th.<sup>61</sup> The message for Luxembourg is contained in a note addressed to the Netherlands Minister.

2. Interviews will apparently be necessary in the case of Greece and Yugoslavia. The policy of the State Department is to make an oral statement that the purpose of presenting these notes to the Greek and Yugoslav Governments is primarily to record the fact of their indebtedness, to say that the Department appreciates the difficulties in the financial position of these Governments and anticipates that their answer will be that they are unable to comply with the request for payment.

3. The State Department does not feel that any statement should be made to these two Governments, either orally or in writing, which suggests that the indebtedness is being cancelled.

Marginal note:

Done. N. A. R[OBERTSON]

1. The requirements from Canada for May shipment mentioned in paragraph 2 appear to be met by the recent action of the Mutual Aid Board.<sup>63</sup>

2. The large requirement for June could probably be met as far as physical supply is concerned, leaving only a financial problem. A request on this point can be made to the Mutual Aid Board. It would, of course, make the financial problem much easier if all or part of the proposed shipment could be a direct sale on credit if necessary from Canada to a paying government. It might be worth exploring this idea, although of course it may be difficult to earmark shipments and much of the wheat may go to Italy.

3. I am not quite clear from paragraph 4 whether or not the figures for June include supplies for German civilians or if it is expected that a further demand will be made.

4. I am glad to know that there is a prospect of discussing the financial aspects of relief to the German population on or about April 18th and I shall be glad to come to Washington if it is of any help in bringing these discussions to a head. Presumably something can be said at the same time of Austria and Italy.

5. I am inclined to think that if the State Department is not prepared to give the assurance for which we have asked it would be useful if it were to reply stating its Constitutional or political difficulty, assuring us that any monies actually received from recipient countries would be held in suspense for distribution among the supplying countries and that everything possible would be done to secure payment from enemy countries for military relief supplies in order that the countries furnishing these supplies would not be put in the position of indirectly financing reparations which others would receive. Ottawa, April 4, 1945

Excellency,

I have the honour to inform you that in the course of military operations on the European continent, the combined armies of the Allies are importing into Europe certain basic supplies for the civilian populations of territories which are being liberated from the German invaders. These supplies for civilian use are being procured by the Governments of the United States, of the United Kingdom, and of Canada, and are reaching the people in the several Allied countries in Europe, including those of France, through or for the account of their respective Governments. The supplying Governments expect that the recipient Governments will pay the costs of such civilian supplies which are delivered to their respective countries.

Bills will be rendered to the recipient Governments monthly or at other convenient intervals by the Supreme Allied Commander through whom civilian supplies are furnished, but in any event as soon as possible after the delivery of these supplies. While, as a matter of convenience, these bills will be presented in terms of United States dollars, recipient Governments will be asked to pay in currencies acceptable to the supplying Governments.

The supplying Governments expect the Government of France to make payment of each bill rendered to it for civilian supplies furnished to France on the basis that the amount of each bill is final for the quantities of civilian supplies covered thereby. The amounts due will be based on quantitative records of the supplies furnished to recipient Governments and on average landed costs of commodities delivered in Europe, as maintained and computed by the Allied military authorities. Costs will be so computed because of the impossibility of tracing every shipment from original source to destination.

The same arrangements will apply to supplies furnished by the combined Allied military authorities to Norway.

Average costs will be calculated so as to cover all costs of these commodities to the supplying Governments, including transportation to the point where these supplies reach the country of final destination. Should any costs be incurred by the military authorities beyond that point, such as cost of inland transport, separate billings to recipient Governments will cover such expenses.

At the time of the first billing by the combined Allied military authorities, your Government will be advised as to the procedures to be followed in making payments.

IMMEDIATE. Financing military relief. With reference to the last paragraph of your EX-1222 of April 2nd, we have now secured from the State Department acceptance of arrangements which, in our judgment, will go a long way towards maximizing receipts and minimizing the risk of our bearing a disproportionate share of the losses. The letter from the State Department is reproduced in my immediately following teletype.

We are to receive from the United Kingdom Embassy, this afternoon or tomorrow morning, a similar letter indicating their concurrence in the principles accepted by the State Department. This letter will be reported to you as soon as it is received.

We feel that these statements from the United States and United Kingdom sides will be helpful in enabling the Canadian authorities to arrive at a decision concerning Canadian participation in the initial financing of further relief supplies required from Canada at least during the next two or three months.

IMMEDIATE. With reference to our WA-1821, the following is the text of the letter received from Jacques J. Reinstein, Acting Associate Chief, Division of Financial Affairs, Department of State, under date of April 4th, Begins:

This letter will serve to confirm the statement which Mr. Gunter (of United States Treasury) and I made in our meeting of April 3rd with reference to the collection of sums owing to the Canadian, British and American Governments under Plan A.

We are prepared to handle the collection of these amounts on a joint basis, and suggest that the Governments, which are the recipients of military relief, be asked to pay the amounts due to the three Governments jointly. A decision would need to be made as to the proportion of such amounts which are to be paid in the currencies of the respective supplying countries. This decision would be made at the time of the first billing and would be based upon our best estimate at the time of the amounts owing to us and of the amounts which are likely to be uncollectable.

It is our view that the percentage of the various currencies to be requested should be subject to alteration and that any adjustments to be made between currencies should be handled by refunding excess amounts paid in one currency to the paying Governments in exchange for payment of the currencies of which the pool is deficient. In this way, the burden of the transfer problem would be placed upon the Governments which have been the recipients of relief supplies, rather than upon the supplying Governments. If any Government claims that it is unable to make payment in the currencies requested, but offers to make other payment arrangements, the matter would be made the subject of consultation between the three Governments.

It is our suggestion that the amounts collected should be deposited in suspense accounts to be established in the central banks of the three supplying countries, payment in the currency of each supply Government being made to the central bank of that country. The amounts so deposited would be held in trust for the three Governments. Disbursements from the accounts would be made from time to time by agreement of the three Governments in accordance with the loss-sharing formula.

It is our feeling that the foregoing arrangements would meet fully the desire expressed by the Canadian Government for joint collection of the sums owing under Plan A. We hope that these views will be taken into account by the authorities in Ottawa in the consideration which, we understand, they are giving to future Canadian procurement under Plan A.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Jackling of the British Embassy. Ends.

We should appreciate authorization to reply to the State Department expressing our gratification, indicating our acceptance of the proposals for joint collection and for holding receipts in suspense in trust for the Three Governments, and assuring them that these proposals, which the United Kingdom Government also has accepted, are being taken into account by the Canadian authorities in the consideration which they are giving to future Canadian financing of Military Relief supplies. An appropriate reply along similar lines would, of course, be sent to the United Kingdom Embassy.

This is all the State Department has expressly asked for in the way of a reply, but if we are prepared to treat these proposals as equivalent to the assurances for which we had been asking,<sup>65</sup> and if, therefore, we are willing to resume the financing of orders placed in Canada, the State Department and the United Kingdom Embassy would no doubt appreciate being informed to this effect in our reply.

The Canadian authorities will doubtless wish to give consideration immediately to the detailed arrangements for our part in the implementation of the proposals for joint collections and suspense accounts. Under the proposals reported in our WA-1822 the joint collection agent would remit to the Bank of Canada that part of the payment which was received in Canadian dollars. Can arrangements be made by which the Bank of Canada will hold these dollars in a suspense account in the name of the Three Governments until it is agreed that they can be released? If the account is to be held in the name of the Three Governments as now proposed, withdrawals will require the authorization of all three Governments. In all probability the Canadian dollar portion of receipts will be no more than the claims of the Canadian Government against the arrangement, and would, therefore, be released in their entirety to the Canadian Government rather than transferred to the United States or United Kingdom Governments.

In view of the large share of supplies coming from the United States it is not likely that Canada will be entitled to any considerable adjustment payments from that country. The volume of supplies from the United Kingdom is expected to be large enough to render unnecessary any adjustment payments from the United Kingdom to either of the other two countries. Transfer payments will be necessary only if too much of one currency has been received as a result of a miscalculation. As a precaution against difficulties which might be encountered in effecting transfers of sterling, or even of Canadian dollars, to the United States, it is likely that a fairly liberal proportion of United States dollars will be requested. Although Canada is not likely to be dependent upon substantial transfers from the suspense accounts held in the United States or United Kingdom, you may have some suggestions to put forward, or some conditions for which you would wish us to press concerning the form which the United States and United Kingdom suspense accounts should take.

Another question which occurs to us concerning Canadian dollar collections has to do with the regulations of the Foreign Exchange Control Board. Does the F.E.C.B. wish to impose any limitation on the sources from which Canadian dollars must have been obtained by the paying country? If there are such limitations we should presumably advise the United States and United Kingdom authorities as these limitations might affect the ability of a Government receiving relief supplies to make repayment.

This message has been drafted in consultation with Angus.

This aide-mémoire proposes that the United Kingdom share of the ultimate loss on supplies provided beyond the present loss limit shall "not exceed the proportion which the value of supplies and services made available from the United Kingdom and Colonies bears to the total value of supplies and services from all sources". In the light of the last paragraph of your EX-1492<sup>67</sup> this proposal may not come as a complete surprise.

In the discussion it was stated quite frankly that the proportion of all supplies which will come from the United Kingdom during the latter half of 1945 will be very small indeed as stocks in the United Kingdom will have been virtually exhausted, and the contribution from the Colonies can not be very significant. Although no estimate of the proportion is possible, it was suggested that the percentage might actually be as low as one per cent or two per cent. The proportion may well turn out to be considerably higher, but there is no possibility that it will reach anything like 25 per cent.

The full text of the proposed aide-mémoire is reported in a following teletype.†

The United Kingdom representatives are anxious to submit this aide-mémoire to the State Department at the earliest possible moment in order that it can be taken into account by the War Department in the request which is to be made shortly for a new Military Relief appropriation. They have been instructed to ascertain the views of the Canadian Government before submitting even the preliminary draft to the State Department. We should, therefore, be grateful to have your views on this draft by Monday, April 23rd, if at all possible.

Wheat was considered at the Mutual Aid Board meeting this morning and it was decided to finance the provision of a further 500,000 tons during May provided always that it is clear that they will be covered by the existing agreement in regard to sharing the ultimate cost even if delivery takes place after the loss of $400,000,000 has been exceeded.

TELETYPE EX-1569

Ottawa, April 23, 1945

IMMEDIATE. SECRET Your WA-2106 of April 19th,+ military relief.

The draft aide-mémoire prepared by the United Kingdom was considered today by the Mutual Aid Board and it was agreed that a reply to the request for comments should be framed on the following lines:

1. The Canadian Government agrees that the scheme in its present form should be re-examined now that the loss limit of $400,000,000 has probably been reached.

2. Such commitments as Canada has made have been confined to military relief and do not extend to procurement responsibility for "all civilian supplies furnished on a combined basis outside UNRRA in Europe."

3. In our opinion the plan in its present form might reasonably be prolonged in respect of all supplies delivered for use in liberated areas but terminated in conquered areas including Italy. It is our understanding that, with the possible exception of Albania, these supplies would be destined for countries which will pay for them. It is also our understanding that France and Belgium will make their own arrangements independently of military relief at an early date and it is our view that the Netherlands should be encouraged to take the same course as early as possible. It is also hoped that the military relief period in Norway and Denmark would, if it occurs at all, be of short duration.

4. In our view supplies furnished to displaced persons in Germany or elsewhere should be chargeable to UNRRA which has the duty of looking after these persons. It would seem to us possible that UNRRA could finance an amount of supplies estimated to be that provided by the military authorities to displaced persons, even though in fact the supplies were procured and distributed for a period by the military authorities.

5. If these suggestions are adopted the supplies at present under way can be shipped without risk under the present scheme and there is no danger of the loss limit of $400,000,000 being substantially exceeded.

6. The countries in which losses might occur are Italy and Austria and in our view no supplies should be furnished to these countries under the plan after the loss limit of $400,000,000 has been reached and in no case should any supplies be distributed later than June 30th of this year under the military relief agreement, or shipped later than May 31st for distribution under this plan.

7. It appears to us that such supplies as are needed by ex-enemy countries, including Germany, might reasonably be supplied by the Argentine which could use the enemy assets which it holds in payment for them. In our view it is important that this suggestion should be pressed as strongly as possible with a view to early action and we shall be glad to bring it forward in any discussion that may take place with officials of the State Department. It appears to us to have the double advantage of relieving the nations which have borne the weight of the fighting of an onerous charge and of facilitating the disposal of German investments in the Argentine. What is true of the Argentine may be true in lesser degree of some other Latin-American countries.

8. It should be made clear that Canada could not accept a share of the ultimate burden commensurate with the value of the supplies and services made available from Canada, as by the nature of the case Canada is likely to be the source of large quantities of supplies if these cannot be obtained from the Argentine. There is, in our view, no reason why Canada should be asked to bear a share of the ultimate burden commensurate with these supplies. Moreover, we could not participate in an arrangement under which all other major participants limited their share of the ultimate burden to what is commensurate with the value of supplies and services which they furnish, as the effect of this would be to leave Canada to finance a share approximately commensurate with the supplies having to be obtained from Canada.

9. It should also be emphasized that we feel that we should not be asked to furnish supplies if there is any doubt as to where the ultimate burden of financing is to fall and for this reason it is important that supplies should not be sent forward under the present plan after the loss limit has been reached if either the United Kingdom or the United States may have any ground for assuming that it is no longer bound to bear its agreed share of the ultimate losses.

10. It is noted that the aide-mémoire makes no reference to Germany. You might enquire informally if the reason is that it is not expected to distribute any military relief to civilians in that country or if the reason is that there is ground for believing that the cost of military relief can be given effective priority over reparations and that there will, therefore, be no loss incurred by the supplying countries.

Beamer, Sale and I met yesterday afternoon with the United Kingdom representatives for a preliminary discussion of your comments on the United Kingdom draft aide-mémoire.

Before mentioning the points on which the United Kingdom representatives requested clarification I should attempt to answer the question asked in your paragraph No. 10 concerning intentions with respect to Military Relief for German civilians. You will have seen our despatch No. 961 of April 12th† enclosing a draft cable,† which has now been approved and despatched by the Combined Chiefs of Staff, authorizing the Theatre Commander to distribute to the German civilian population the minimum quantity of supplies which may be necessary to "prevent disease and such disorder as might seriously"<sup>70</sup> endanger or impede military objectives." The volume of supplies which will be required for this purpose is of course not known.

The United Kingdom representatives at the meeting reported in our WA-2105<sup>71</sup> considered it essential that relief required for distribution in Germany both before and after the division into zones be provided on a combined basis in order to maintain some uniformity of treatment throughout the several zones west of the Elbe. They argue that the consequences would be disastrous if the food deficit area assigned to the United Kingdom were to be dependent entirely on supplies available through the United Kingdom. Concerning the likelihood of repayment for such minimum supplies as may be provided before and after the division of Germany into zones we are informed that the United States representatives submitted a paper to the European Advisory Commission recently proposing that Military Relief charges be regarded as a first claim against German assets. The United Kingdom of course support this proposal. Mr. Brand, Head of the United Kingdom Treasury Delegation here, informs us that the United Kingdom Government is not optimistic at the prospect of anything like full repayment for relief supplies provided to Germany. You will recall Sir John Anderson's views on the likelihood of repayment as reported in your EX-1492 of April 17th.<sup>72</sup>

The two principal points on which the United Kingdom representatives desire clarification are:

(a) Is paragraph 9 to be interpreted as meaning that when the United Kingdom aide-mémoire is submitted to the State Department, proposing what amounts to a reduction in the United Kingdom share of the ultimate cost above the $400,000,000 limit, the Canadian authorities would not be prepared to finance the procurement of any supplies after the $400,000,000 loss limit has been reached unless:

1. A satisfactory new agreement for the continuance of Military Relief beyond the $400,000,000 loss limit has been negotiated by that time, or

2. If such an agreement has not been reached by that time, arrangements have been made to ensure that the share of losses incurred beyond the $400,000,000 limit to be borne by Canada will not exceed 8 percent until a satisfactory agreement for the continuance of Military Relief has been completed?

The United Kingdom representatives are most anxious to have your interpretation of this paragraph today as they are withholding the presentation of their aide-mémoire until they receive your reply.

(b) Your views on the United Kingdom suggestion that the field of activities of UNRRA be extended to cover the civilian population in Italy and Austria would be appreciated. Would the Canadian Government be prepared to support such a proposal if it were to be made at the UNRRA Council meeting in July? It is recognized that acceptance of such a proposal by the Council would require additional financial contributions from the members of UNRRA but presumably your proposal that UNRRA take over the financial responsibility for furnishing supplies to displaced persons would also entail an increase in the financial contributions to UNRRA from Canada and other countries.

If an answer to this question also is possible today the United Kingdom representatives would be grateful as it would assist them in assessing the probable consequences to follow the submission of their aide-mémoire. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-1603

FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION. Following for Ritchie from Angus, Begins: Your WA-2207 of April 25th, military relief.

1. In view of the information concerning the probabilities of supplies being needed for use in Germany, I am more puzzled than ever that all reference to Germany should have been omitted from the aide-mémoire prepared by the United Kingdom.

2. You are substantially correct in your interpretation of paragraph 9 of EX-1569 of April 23rd. If Canada were to continue to finance the procurement of supplies after the $400,000,000 loss limit had been reached without any assurance that the United Kingdom and the United States would continue to bear the agreed shares of the loss, we should be in some danger of incurring 100% loss on any supplies to non-paying destinations.

3. The Mutual Aid Board did not reach any decision with regard to the suggestion that the field of activities of UNRRA should be extended to cover the civilian population in Italy and Austria. It is my personal view that any proposal of this sort would have to take a more precise form before the Canadian authorities would undertake to support it. It seems obvious that if UNRRA were to undertake these duties it would require further funds and, therefore, the merit of the proposal would depend in large measure on the willingness of member Governments to supply the funds. The aide-mémoire explains that the United Kingdom's commitment would be limited and it might well be that the only Governments offering substantial financial assistance would be the United States and Canada. It seems very likely that wheat alone which Canada would be asked to supply would exceed any reasonable contribution by Canada and would, therefore, be a strain on whatever free funds other countries might supply. Having regard to the probable magnitude of the contributions this would mean, in practice, that we should have to rely on free funds supplied by the United States for payment of any wheat sent in excess of the Canadian contribution. It must also be remembered that it would be some time after the Conference in July<sup>73</sup> before the financial commitments of the countries concerned would be definitely known. It seems to follow that even if the question of extending UNRRA's activities to cover Italy and Austria comes up for discussion at the meeting in July, it will be some time before any firm agreement can be reached. There would, therefore, of necessity have to be some interim agreement to cover the period subsequent to the loss limit of $400,000,000 being reached and the inception of UNRRA's activities. No country would be in a hurry to terminate this interim agreement if the new UNRRA agreement were to be more onerous in character.

4. The suggestion that UNRRA should take over financial responsibility for supplies furnished to displaced persons does not seem to raise the same problems. UNRRA has very definite functions in respect of displaced persons and no country has ever taken any objection to UNRRA funds being used for helping displaced persons. If supplies are furnished to those persons under military relief either no bill is presented to anyone in which case there is a 100% ultimate loss in respect of the supplies, or bills are presented to someone. Perhaps you can find out what the practice is or is expected to be. Our proposal was that bills should be presented to UNRRA for supplies furnished to displaced persons even before UNRRA itself took charge of their movements. If this charge were to result in the depletion of UNRRA's funds while its functions were still unperformed no doubt a further appeal to member countries would have to be made, but this would be an appeal in respect of UNRRA's agreed functions and not in respect of novel functions about the assumption of which there might be disagreement among the member countries.

5. You will understand that this is of necessity a rough and ready answer to your teletype given without opportunity for consultation with others. Ends.

Washington, April 28, 1945

With reference to the aide-mémoire dated March 5, 1945 from the Department of State the Canadian Embassy has been instructed to reply that the Canadian Government received a memorandum from the United Kingdom Government under date of Feb. 12, 1945<sup>75</sup> in which were set forth the recommendations of the United Kingdom Government as to the manner in which the ultimate burden of the cost of the provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe should be borne, so far as the burden does not fall on the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

In replying to this memorandum the Canadian Government informed the United Kingdom Government that the Canadian Government is in general agreement with the recommendations made in the memorandum under reference,<sup>76</sup> subject, however, to the following reservations:

1. In the absence of a firm assurance from the Government of the United Kingdom and Government of the United States that they will make whatever payments may be necessary to ensure that the ultimate deficit will be shared in the proportions agreed on if the division of receipts collected from recipient governments does not produce this result, the Canadian Government cannot undertake to bear a share of the financing of the original procurement of the supplies disproportionate to the shares borne by the other two governments.

2. As the original offer of the Canadian Government contemplated a contribution to the cost of military relief rather than to the cost of the provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe insofar as the burden does not fall on UNRRA, the Canadian Government cannot undertake any commitment in respect to any projects for furnishing supplies on a combined basis which go beyond the provision of military relief unless those projects are expressly approved by the Canadian Government.

The United Kingdom Government has acknowledged receipt of this reply, taking note of the reservations of the Canadian Government.<sup>77</sup>

The Canadian Government accepts the suggestion that the proposals contained in the United Kingdom memorandum of February 12, 1945 should be regarded as constituting an agreement among the three governments. Since, as was anticipated in the preliminary discussions, the Canadian acceptance is subject to qualifications, it will be appreciated if the Canadian Embassy might have a reply from the Department of State taking note of the Canadian reservations.

1. United Kingdom representatives report that their proposed aide-mémoire regarding further participation in military relief has been referred back to London for reconsideration on the following grounds:

(a) They are concerned about the Canadian attitude as expressed in your EX-1569 of April 23rd and EX-1603 of 25th April which they regard as somewhat extreme.

(b) They believe that it would be preferable for United Kingdom not to adopt such an extreme position as that expressed in their proposed aide-mémoire.

(c) They wish to take account of differences of opinion which they know exist within the War Department regarding the continuance of combined command in north-west Europe. Their present expectation is that further instructions will be received from London within four or five days.

United Kingdom representatives believe that London's reply may direct that they should simply express to United States their desire to negotiate an agreement for the combined provision of supplies beyond the limitations of the present agreement and a willingness to continue to make contributions during the period of negotiations. They believe that London will prefer not to include any reference to the terms on which they propose to negotiate.

until a satisfactory agreement has been reached on the provision of military relief supplies beyond that limit. I added that it is our view that the limit is being approached and will be reached very shortly and that we will be governed accordingly.

4. United Kingdom representatives propose to communicate to London the position of the Canadian Government with a view to hastening United Kingdom action.

5. In view of this we suggest, and Ritchie concurs, that we would be well advised to refrain from taking any further action for the present unless the United Kingdom reply is unduly delayed. Ends.

Beamer, Sale and I met with the United Kingdom representatives after their meeting yesterday and were provided with copies of the draft aide-mémoire† which they are proposing to present to Mr. Clayton, Assistant Secretary of State on Tuesday, May 15th. We have received also copies of the statement† of the United Kingdom position which they will hand to the State Department representatives when they formally submit their aide-mémoire.<sup>78</sup> In presenting their aide-mémoire the United Kingdom representatives will orally notify the State Department that the Canadian Embassy is being informed that such an aide-mémoire has been presented. The text of the draft aide-mémoire is reported in my following teletype WA-2512.† The statement of the position which the United Kingdom will take in the negotiation to follow is reported in my subsequent teletype WA-2513.†

Presumably we should submit to the State Department at about the same time or shortly thereafter an aide-mémoire expressing our desire, in view of the fact that the $400,000,000 loss limit has now been virtually reached, that negotiations among the three Governments should be initiated immediately concerning the basis on which relief supplies above the present limit are to be provided.

We shall be grateful to have your views as to the appropriate form and content of such an aide-mémoire. You will wish to consider also whether or not

When you have examined the statement which the United Kingdom representatives have prepared you may consider it unnecessary for us to make specific proposals at this time and may prefer to introduce the various Canadian proposals during the course of the actual negotiation.

We shall provide you on Monday with any suggestions which we may have. In addition I understand that Colonel Beamer will be in Ottawa early in the week and that he hopes to see you, probably on Wednesday. Ends.

Following for Ritchie from Angus. Your WA-2511 of May 12th Military Relief.

It would be desirable to present an aide-mémoire to the State Department shortly after the presentation of the United Kingdom aide-mémoire. It can be very brief and can place the emphasis on the immediacy of the problem as a difficult situation will arise if any supplies are furnished to non-paying countries after the limit of anticipated loss has been passed and before any new agreement has been made.

There is no need for us to produce a detailed memorandum corresponding to the United Kingdom memorandum set out in your WA-2513,† particularly as the United Kingdom proposals in their present form correspond fairly closely with our own. When the time comes we must make it clear that we should expect that our share of the risk of Germany's being unable to pay in full for relief supplies should be less than 8 percent of any residual loss and it may also be expedient to suggest that the date of the transfer of financial responsibility to UNRRA for relief in Italy and Austria should be fixed so that there will be no gap to be bridged between it and the date at which the $400,000,000 loss limit has been reached. It is the existence of gaps of this sort which would make it difficult for us to furnish supplies without reaching a clear-cut, binding agreement with the other two countries.

When you are in a position to express an opinion on the following points I would be glad if you would do so;

- (1) The probable date of tripartite discussion;
- (2) The possibility of an early approach to UNRRA in respect of financial responsibility for supplies furnished to displaced persons;
- (3) The willingness of the State Department to conclude a new and binding agreement. Ends.

IMMEDIATE. Following for Ritchie. Your WA-2548† and our EX-1842 of May 15th, Military Relief.

Please present an aide-mémoire to the State Department as soon as possible in substantially the following terms:

“The Canadian Ambassador presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour to refer to the arrangements which have been in effect covering the provision of military relief supplies to liberated and conquered areas.

These arrangements have up to the present served to maintain a flow of essential supplies to liberated areas and to conquered areas during the period of military operations.

It now appears likely that the total amount of supplies covered by these arrangements will shortly have been provided and that irrecoverable expenditures have probably already reached the stipulated figure of $400,000,000 at which point it was agreed that the position should be re-examined.

In the light of these considerations and the change in conditions resulting from the end of European hostilities, it appears desirable that discussion be initiated immediately to re-examine the position bearing in mind the continuing need for military relief supplies.”

The above was drawn up in consultation with Colonel Beamer who will develop with you the line we have suggested to be followed in the discussions.

We agree as to the desirability of having representatives of the three countries meet in Washington for the purpose of reaching agreement on recommendations to be made to the three Governments. Ends.

In accordance with your instructions I left with Mr. Mason, Deputy to Assistant Secretary Clayton, late yesterday an aide-mémoire in the terms which you suggested. Mason has been given the responsibility on the United States side for handling the negotiation of the new arrangement.

In my conversation with Mason I emphasized the desirability of starting and completing the negotiation in the shortest time possible in order to avoid any gap between the exhaustion of the resources available under the present arrangement and the completion of the new agreement. In accordance with your EX-1842 I pointed out that the existence of such a gap would make it difficult for us to continue furnishing supplies without a clear-cut, binding agreement with the United States and United Kingdom.

Mr. Mason indicated that the United States authorities appreciated the seriousness of the difficulties which would arise if agreement on the new arrangements were to be delayed. He assured me that the United States Government agencies concerned were giving urgent consideration to the proposals put forward by the United Kingdom earlier in the week together with the views which had been developed previously on the United States side. He indicated that the United Kingdom proposal concerning the transfer to UNRRA of responsibility for Italy and Austria appeared to him to present very serious difficulties. He was not at all confident that the United States Congress would be prepared to make the necessary additional contribution to UNRRA although he recognized that any alternative proposal to meet the situation might be even less attractive.

I enquired whether the United States authorities intended to negotiate the new arrangements through exchanges of papers with the Canadian and United Kingdom Embassies or whether they planned to arrange a meeting of representatives of the three Governments to reach agreement on recommendations to be made to their respective Governments. I indicated that we would be inclined to prefer the latter procedure as we feel that it would be likely to result in satisfactory agreement in shorter time. Mr. Mason said that the United States side had not yet reached any conclusion as to the best procedure for negotiating the new arrangements. I remarked that if they were to decide that a tripartite meeting to negotiate the agreement ad referendum should be held in Washington we should be grateful to receive as much advance notice as possible in order that the appropriate officials from Ottawa might make the necessary arrangements to participate in the meetings. I added that we are prepared to join in such negotiations almost immediately in view of the urgency of the problem. Mr. Mason telephoned this morning to say that he would like to meet with a representative of this Embassy and of the United Kingdom Embassy at 3:00 p.m. tomorrow afternoon to discuss the procedure to be adopted in negotiating the new agreement. I shall attend this meeting and shall report the results to you. I hope that the discussion at this meeting will enable me to answer at least partly the three questions asked in your EX-1842.

In conclusion Mr. Mason enquired what position the Canadian Government was likely to take in the forthcoming negotiations. I remarked that of course much would depend on developments during the negotiations but I had every reason to expect now that the Canadian authorities would not be prepared to accept 8 percent of the residual loss on supplies to be provided to ex-enemy areas and that we would almost certainly not be prepared to accept a share of the loss proportionate to our share in procurement in view of the fact that such a large part of the supplies required would be of such a nature that Canada might be regarded as the logical source. I added that we should hope to see some of the other United Nations brought in to arrangements for providing supplies and sharing losses. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-1912

Ottawa, May 19, 1945

Following for Ritchie from Angus, Begins: My EX-1842 of May 15th, military relief.

The following statement of the Canadian position in relation to this question has been prepared as a counterpart of the United Kingdom statement<sup>79</sup> contained in your WA-2513 of May 12th.†

1. We should distinguish as the United Kingdom does between the procurement responsibility for the provision of supplies on a combined basis and the ultimate financial responsibility. If a satisfactory settlement can be reached on the latter point we should be prepared to continue the existing procurement arrangements. It is, however, desirable to repeat that in accordance with our reservation to the original agreement the provision of civilian supplies which go beyond military relief, though they may fall within the wider formula of "Civil Affairs supplies furnished on a combined basis (outside UNRRA)," will require special consideration in individual cases.

2. If procurement arrangements continue it is necessary to consider next what arrangements should be made regarding ultimate financial responsibility. This is the same thing as considering who is to meet the various bills presented for military relief supplies and who is to meet the deficit if some of these bills are not paid or are only partially paid.

3. For convenience we may take the areas in the order used in the United Kingdom statement:

A. SHAEF area:

(I) Liberated countries in N.W. Europe

See United States, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1945, Volume II, Washington, U.S. Government Printing Office, 1967, pp. 1090-5.

As the bills presented to these countries are likely to be paid in full, with the possible exception of the bills presented to Denmark which will not be for any large amount, we should have no objection to the existing arrangements continuing in respect of these areas and we may well take the position that the plan should remain unaltered in respect of these friendly countries. As our preference is for dealing direct with recipient countries, we should prefer as early a termination as possible of the military responsibility in each area but we recognize that the date of termination must be set to meet the convenience of the military authorities and the Government of the country concerned.

(II) Conquered territory in N.W. Europe

While we agree that the cost of supplies sent to this territory should be a first charge on Germany's capacity to make foreign payments, we are not at all clear to what authority or authorities bills will be presented for supplies furnished to Germany. We agree that Germany should be dealt with essentially as a problem on its own and one of the principal reasons for taking this position is that the provision of relief in Germany is intimately bound up with other questions of policy concerning that country, such as reparations, disarmament, the division of occupation zones and the general direction of economic activities. We do not consider that it is necessary to await a decision on these questions before discussing the provision which must be made against the contingency that Germany may not ultimately be able to pay in full. We consider that as many nations as possible should share in this financial risk and that the countries receiving reparations payments from German sources cannot reasonably dispute their duty to share in it. We consider that the proportions in which it is equitable that the countries should share are substantially the same as those used for UNRRA assessments, namely, a uniform percentage of the national income of the countries, with allowance for the special economic or financial difficulties of individual countries. We should ourselves probably be willing to participate in such an arrangement, provided that there are a number of countries participating of which the United States is one. An attempt should be made to obtain special action by the Argentine and other countries holding substantial German assets by which these assets could be made available for payment for relief supplies. The same result would be achieved, of course, if the assets ultimately became available for reparations and the relief deficit was made a priority charge on the reparations. In the case of the assets in the Argentine and other countries which have not themselves substantial claims against Germany it might be a suitable arrangement if the money could be spent on buying supplies within the country in which the assets are held. We consider that the willingness of the Argentine and other countries to co-operate in this way should be ascertained immediately in order that we may form a clearer idea of the magnitude of the problem which confronts us. Account should be taken of any contributions from such sources as these in considering the size of the deficit which may eventually have to be met by the arrangements which we are considering.

(III) Displaced Persons in conquered territory in N.W. Europe

We agree that UNRRA should assume financial responsibility for all supplies provided to such persons. We think that this responsibility should be retroactive, that is to say, that UNRRA should pay all bills presented in respect of supplies furnished to these persons. We also consider that immediate steps should be taken to make the necessary arrangements with UNRRA as it seems to us doubtful if there is any need for this matter to be discussed specially at the July meeting of the UNRRA Council. Failing such an arrangement with UNRRA, it seems to us that the bills in respect of supplies furnished to displaced persons in Germany should be dealt with in the same way as bills for supplies furnished to Germans and that they should be a first charge on Germany's capacity to make foreign payments. Failing payments by Germany, bills should be presented to the countries of which displaced persons are nationals.

B. SACMED area:

(I) We agree that there is no need to deal specially with Greece, Yugoslavia and Albania since the responsibility in these countries is passing to UNRRA.

(II) Italy and Austria: We agree that it would be entirely appropriate to extend the field of activities of UNRRA both to Italy and Austria and that a proposal on these lines should be considered at the UNRRA Council meeting in July. We think that member countries might be approached in the interval to ascertain if they would look favourably on such a proposal and, assuming that it were adopted, if they would be prepared to contribute to the special fund which UNRRA would no doubt have to raise for dealing with these countries. Canada would probably be prepared to contribute to such a fund, provided that a number of countries did so and that the normal subscriptions were related to national incomes with consideration for the peculiar difficulties which may confront certain countries. We agree that countries not at present members of UNRRA should be approached on this subject and we feel that some of them may be prepared both to contribute to UNRRA's general funds and to contribute to this special fund as well. We can see that it might excite some opposition if they were asked to contribute to the latter and not to the former. It is hardly necessary to add that we do not consider that the fact that Canada is the first country to exhaust its original contribution to UNRRA by providing the necessary supplies and services should be a reason for increasing the relative scale of our contribution. If the Council of UNRRA agrees to assume this responsibility, it is hoped that the financial arrangements can be made retroactive so as to begin when the loss limit under the present scheme is reached. We agree that procurement responsibility should continue to be discharged by the military authorities until suitable arrangements can be made for UNRRA to take over. In the event of UNRRA being unwilling to take over these duties, we feel that the countries which are prepared to share in this burden should contribute to it in the same proportions in which they would have contributed had UNRRA acceded to their request. This means that the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom, together with any other countries willing to be associated with them, would contribute a uniform percentage of their national incomes, except in cases in which individual countries felt that the indicated percentage was too heavy a burden for them to bear.

4. It may be suggested in the course of the discussions that UNRRA should assume in Germany the same responsibilities as in Italy and Austria under the proposals just discussed. We should ourselves have no objection to such a course but we can see that it might occasion difficulties because of the character of the military occupation and of the problems with which the occupying powers must deal. If UNRRA were to assume this burden, we think that a special fund would have to be provided for it seems that the countries willing to contribute to the cost of relief in Germany might well not be identical with the countries willing to contribute to the cost of relief in Italy and Austria.

5. In discussions with UNRRA and with countries invited to contribute to its funds (including the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada) it will be necessary to have some estimate of the amounts involved and an attempt should, therefore, be made at once to estimate how great the cost will be of (a) relief to Italy and Austria; (b) relief in Germany and (c) relief for displaced persons.

6. Although in the preceding proposals we have endeavoured to eliminate any gap between the arrangements for dividing losses under the initial scheme for providing supplies in the amount of $1,000,000,000 and the new plans, it is possible that gaps may occur. It is also possible that physical supplies may have to move for relief purposes before any firm agreement can be reached on new arrangements. It is, therefore, necessary to consider what interim provision should be made for losses incurred during such intervals. We do not think it desirable that these losses should be shared in the ratios 67, 25, 8, since any such proposal would give the United States an interest in protracting negotiations. We realize also that it is too much to ask that the UNRRA ratios should be accepted in advance to cover an interim period since this very acceptance would assume that a new agreement can be reached somewhat on the lines indicated. We should, therefore, be ready to consider if a compromise could be found e.g. in an arrangement by which the present ratios would continue for a limited period and then be automatically superceded by UNRRA ratios. The limited period could be defined by date of shipment or, if it is more convenient to do so, by fixing a relatively low limit to the losses in excess of $400,000,000 which will be borne in the ratios 67, 25, 8. As we feel that this interim arrangement may be of great practical importance and may have to be discussed before the main issues can be explored, we think that it would be desirable if you took it up informally with the United Kingdom representatives in order to ascertain the sort of arrangement which would be acceptable to them, bearing in mind that no one of the three countries will wish to be compelled to hold up physical supplies because of the financial uncertainties. Ends.

Washington, May 26, 1945

The Department of State acknowledges the receipt from the Canadian Embassy of a memorandum dated April 28, 1945,<sup>80</sup> in which is set forth the general agreement of the Canadian Government with the recommendations which were contained in identical memorandums presented on February 12, 1945 by the British Embassy at Washington to the Canadian Embassy and the Department of State.<sup>81</sup> These recommendations, which concern the manner in which the ultimate burden of the cost of the provision of civilian supplies on a combined basis to liberated and conquered areas in Europe should be borne, so far as the burden does not fall on the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, were accepted by the Government of the United States in communications addressed to the Canadian and British Embassies on March 3, 1945.<sup>82</sup>

The Department of State takes note of two reservations made by the Canadian Government with respect to the aforementioned recommendations. These reservations relate to the inability of the Canadian Government, in the circumstances, to undertake to bear a share of the financing of the original procurement of military relief supplies disproportionate to the shares borne by the governments of the United States and of the United Kingdom; and to the understanding of the Canadian Government that the provision of civilian supplies under the terms agreed with the Governments of the United States and of the United Kingdom shall not extend beyond the provision of military relief supplies unless such extension, for the purposes of this agreement, is expressly approved by the Canadian Government.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, June 5, 1945

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I am enclosing a copy of an interim report on discussions concerning the financing of military relief which are to be resumed on June 13th. I should greatly appreciate any comments that may indicate the line that I should take at that time. It is, of course, impossible to ask for a decision under the present circumstances regarding Canada's willingness to make a further contribution to UNRRA if other countries do so too. However, Bryce arranged for me to discuss this matter with Mr. Ilsley and I asked him if I might proceed on the assumption that there was a sufficient probability of our being willing to make a further contribution to make it worth while considering proposals for turning relief in Italy over to UNRRA. He agreed.

You will see from my report that the winding up of military relief is really a matter of bridging the gap between this relief and the assumption of responsibility by some other agency such as UNRRA.

I understand that the meeting of the UNRRA Council in London is postponed at the request of the British until August 7th. I am inclined to think that an effort should be made to have the question of UNRRA's future scope and of the financial provision for UNRRA thoroughly discussed at that meeting. This would give it an importance that does not seem to be contemplated at the present time by the Director General, who speaks of a short but important business meeting. From the UNRRA Resolutions it is clear that the Director General ought to present a programme of operations though he did not do so in Montreal. It is provided by the UNRRA Agreement itself that the initiative in asking for further funds should come from the Director General. There is, however, practical difficulty. The funds which are needed depend on the functions which are assumed. The functions which are to be assumed depend on decisions of the Council. The Director General can, if he chooses, claim that the initiative in indicating the functions must be taken by the Council and that his own initiative is limited to the mechanical duty of asking for the funds which are necessary to carry out those functions.

If on June 13th the State Department officials are prepared to proceed with military relief plans on the assumption that the United States is prepared to make a further substantial contribution to UNRRA—possibly a contribution of the same magnitude as the first—I think that we should ask that steps should be taken at once to bring this matter to the attention of UNRRA and to the attention of member governments in order to ensure a thorough and effective discussion in London.

N. A. Robertson was then at the San Francisco Conference.

I am sending copies of the report to Canada House, to the Department of Finance and to Heeney.

Yours sincerely,

H. F. ANGUS

REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING THE FINANCING OF MILITARY RELIEF WHICH TOOK PLACE IN WASHINGTON
ON MAY 25TH TO 30TH INCLUSIVE

1. The discussions were initiated as a result of an approach made by the British to the State Department asking for reconsideration of the military relief plan in view of the fact that the loss limit of $400,000,000 had probably been reached. The Agreement itself would terminate when the total quantity of supplies shipped reached $1,000,000,000 and it is probable that this limit will be exceeded before July 1st.

2. The British had communicated to us in advance their general proposals. In summary these contemplated the transfer of relief operations to UNRRA wherever this course was possible and the charging of relief costs in Germany to German exports. The British contended that they were unable to contribute to the ultimate cost of further relief, except in so far as goods and services could be supplied from United Kingdom sources.

3. On behalf of Canada the contention was advanced that, while we have borne 8% of the ultimate loss in the case of military relief, we should not be asked to bear as high a percentage of the relief operations which were necessary in the period of transition from military relief to UNRRA. Indeed, in the Agreement itself we had made a reservation that we were not committing ourselves to participate in combined relief outside UNRRA and that anything going beyond military relief required special authorization by Canada.

4. The United States authorities were inclined to contend that the Agreement would continue until it was superseded but they produced proposals which went a long way to meet the British and Canadian positions. As it became evident that effect could not be given to these proposals unless additional funds were made available for UNRRA, the discussions have been adjourned in order to give the United States representatives time to explore the possibility of further support being offered to UNRRA. It emerged from the discussions with UNRRA officials that funds which UNRRA has at its disposal will be fully committed by the end of the present calendar year and that the supplies on hand at the end of the year will move forward in the first few months of 1946. All member countries will, therefore, be faced with a choice between making additional funds available for UNRRA and facing the situation which would be created if UNRRA were to be wound up early in 1946.

5. The scope of the United States proposals can be summarized as follows:

(a) As regards any loss that may occur in excess of $400,000,000, the Canadian share should be decreased from 8% to 5% and the United States share increased from 67% to 70%, the United Kingdom's share remaining at 25%. The United States definitely rejected the Canadian suggestion that the three countries should contribute as they did in UNRRA in the proportions of their national incomes, i.e., roughly in the proportions 78, 18 and 4.

(b) The present type of procurement should be maintained in the case of Belgium, Holland, Norway and Denmark where no loss is anticipated. Belgium and Holland have asked that they should not take over their own procurement until September 1st because they consider that they receive some priorities under military relief. The United States wishes its share of relief to these two countries to take the form of reimbursable Lend-Lease in order to accord to them the same treatment which has been accorded to France after the termination of military relief to that country.

(c) There should be no loss in the case of Germany as it is anticipated that the Control Council will eventually meet all bills for relief supplied to Germany and to displaced persons in Germany. It is anticipated that relief supplies for non-Russian Germany for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1946, will be largely in the form of wheat and will cost about $150,000,000. The United States proposes that combined procurement should continue as long as SHAEF continues and it is expected that when the Control Council has set up an Export-Import Board it will arrange for the necessary imports. There may be an interval during which there are separate zones of occupation, in each of which the occupying country will make its own supply arrangements, presenting the bills to the Control Council. The effect of these arrangements is that imports into Germany will be paid out of exports from Germany in priority to "recurrent" reparations. At the present time it is not clear whether such German assets as gold and investments abroad will be available to pay for German imports.

While no loss is expected in the case of relief supplied to Germany, it is obvious that the problem of initial financing will remain and it is also obvious that there is a contingent liability involved. I took the position that Canada should not be expected to share in this contingent liability if the loss were to arise on account of some agreement concerning the disposal of German assets for reparations purposes to which Canada was not a party. I pointed out that the United States and the United Kingdom might be prepared to forgo their claim to payment for relief supplies in return for some other concession on the part of claimant countries and suggested that, if they were to make a bargain of this character, they could not expect Canada to contribute to the cost of the benefits which the United States and the United Kingdom might receive. The argument which I advanced would not cover the case of a failure to collect payment from Germany resulting from guerilla warfare or general disorder in that country.

(d) A somewhat parallel proposal was made in the case of Austria, where it is anticipated that relief for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1946, will cost $40,000,000 for the area not in Russian occupation. It was suggested that payment should be obtained from Austrian sources if this were at all possible and that UNRRA should take power to go into Austria as soon as the military position makes this course practicable.

(e) It is, therefore, in Italy alone that a substantial deficit is expected. The United States proposal is that UNRRA should be asked to take over relief in Italy as from October 1st, 1945, and that even if UNRRA does not take over on this date the cut-off date for the present financial proposals should be November 1st. It is expected that relief supplied to Italy between July 1st and October 1st will cost $200,000,000. Both the British and ourselves would like UNRRA to take over at an earlier date but it would probably not be practicable to arrange for this. There is a strong objection to asking UNRRA to pay out of its funds for work which it has not itself performed.

UNRRA would have to obtain additional funds either earmarked for Italy or merged in its general resources if it is to become responsible for relief in Italy. UNRRA will also, as has been indicated, have to appeal soon for further funds for tasks which it has already undertaken.

As Mr. Mason of the State Department had asked me to suggest any way in which I thought that other countries than the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada could be induced to participate in the burden of military relief, I advanced the proposal that when the next substantial contribution is made to UNRRA by member countries those countries which will have paid for military relief in Italy between July 1st and the date on which UNRRA takes over should be allowed to count their expenditures as part of their contributions to UNRRA. I did not see that any of the other contributors to UNRRA could reasonably object to this arrangement since the three countries in question would have undertaken the type of relief which it is suitable for UNRRA to provide at a time when UNRRA was unable to act.

The British welcomed my suggestion which would, of course, reduce their share of the $200,000,000 from 25% to 17 or 18%. Assuming that the same countries as before contribute and in the same proportions, the United States share of the losses might rise by 1 or 2% over the 70% proposed, and the Canadian share might fall from 5 to 4%. If, however, fewer countries contributed, the United States and Canadian shares might rise somewhat as, of course, they would do if UNRRA were to take over relief at an early date and yet be unable to finance it out of its present funds.

From the Canadian point of view the attraction of my suggestion did not appear to me to be so much financial as political. I explained that I thought it would be easier to ask Parliament to vote money for a second contribution to UNRRA at a time when other member countries were making similar contributions than it would be to go on paying for relief in Italy out of an Army appropriation. In asking for a vote for UNRRA it would not be difficult to explain that we were including as part of our contribution money advanced for Italian relief during the period in which UNRRA was unable to act.

6. Conversations are to be resumed on June 13th. It is hoped that they will result in proposals which can be submitted to the three Governments for consideration. Canada is not at present committed to participating in relief to Italy which goes beyond military relief and if we do agree to participate in the relief to be provided between July 1st and November 1st (unless UNRRA takes over earlier) I think we should do so on the proviso that, if UNRRA assumes the function of providing Italian relief, Canada reserves the right to treat any expenditure which Canada may have incurred on account of Italian relief subsequent to July 1st as part of any second contribution which Canada may make to UNRRA.

7. In the meantime I think that careful consideration should be given to Canada's relations with UNRRA. It seems probable that a programme of operations will have to be considered at the UNRRA meeting in July or August and that UNRRA will require additional funds. The alternative to making these funds available is a very serious one. Either misery and destitution with all their economic and political consequences would have to be allowed to continue over a large part of the world, or else some alternative to UNRRA would have to be found. It is possible that the decision may be made by the United States where Congress may feel that as that country is such a large contributor it would be simpler if it put matters on a country-to-country basis and made relief available directly to China, Italy and other countries. We cannot seek to influence such a decision in favour of continuing UNRRA's operations unless we are ourselves ready to support UNRRA financially. In our interviews with UNRRA officials it was impossible to obtain estimates of the further expenditures which UNRRA may have to undertake since the scope of UNRRA's operations depends on decisions which have not yet been made. I am inclined to think, however, that the most realistic view is to think of a second contribution by member countries equal in amount to the first contribution and to hope that a third contribution may not be necessary.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING THE FINANCING OF MILITARY RELIEF WHICH TOOK PLACE IN WASHINGTON ON MAY 25TH TO 30TH INCLUSIVE

1. The purpose of this supplementary report is to record the discussions which took place concerning some suggestions which have been made by the Mutual Aid Board.

2. It has been suggested that the cost of displaced persons should be borne by UNRRA and not debited to military relief. Enquiries were made as to how this cost was, in fact, being met. It appears that most of it had fallen direct on the armies of occupation and had not been a charge on military relief. In many cases the supplies were obtained from German sources. UNRRA officials explained that they expected to take over the cost of displaced persons as they took over administrative duties connected with them. It was explained that any costs which fell on military relief, would normally be debited to Germany and be paid for in the same way as relief for the German population. It was considered undesirable to charge UNRRA with costs which it did not itself incur in the course of its operations, particularly as UNRRA's funds are quite inadequate for the duties with which UNRRA is already charged. It is possible that in some cases charges for displaced persons will be made against the countries of which they are nationals but it seems improbable that any loss on military relief operations will arise as a result of supplies furnished to displaced persons.

3. The proposal that the Argentine should be asked to finance shipments of wheat to Germany and to share in the risks of non-payment did not receive much consideration, mainly because it was not anticipated that any loss ought to result from German relief. The question of the disposal of German assets abroad, that is in the Argentine and elsewhere, was discussed only as part of the reparations problem which is being considered elsewhere. It was considered an open question whether or not German assets abroad might be made subject to a charge for German relief. The same is true of German holdings of gold. Neither the United States nor the British representatives at the meeting seemed to be prepared to go very deeply into the reparations question and this question would be a matter of interest to Canada only if Canada were asked to assume financial responsibility in the event of a loss arising out of relief operations in Germany.

4. The discussions did not proceed on the assumption that any such loss was to be anticipated. The relief required for that part of Germany not to be in Russian occupation, during the financial year ending June 30th, 1946, was estimated at $150,000,000, a third of which would be for the United Kingdom zone of occupation. Both the United Kingdom and the United States representatives pressed their determination to collect this sum from recurrent items in German exports, that is to say, from coal, potash, timber, etc. It was anticipated that the recipients of these products could, even if they were entitled to receive reparations, be asked to pay something towards the maintenance of the German population while exports to other destinations, such as Switzerland, would be paid for in cash. I particularly raised the question of whether sufficient hard currency could be expected from these exports. It is obvious that much will depend on the discussions taking place in Moscow concerning reparations and their relation to the maintenance of the German population during the period throughout which recurrent reparations are being paid.<sup>84</sup> It is hoped that it may be possible to treat Germany as a unit and to draw on food supplies in the Russian zone for people in the western zones. Even if this is impossible, it is hoped that the exports from the western zones will suffice to pay for essential imports, which are at present very narrowly defined. No doubt the countries which will receive reparations, including Russia, will be disinclined to pay for the goods which they receive but it can be pointed out to them that if they wish to obtain coal, it is necessary to see that the miner and his family are fed, and that if they wish to retain manufacturers they must see that the raw material is made available.

I enclose a copy of an Aide-Mémoire presented by Mr. Munro of the Office of the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom. It follows out of the military relief negotiations and asks that Canada should continue initial financing in the case of any relief supplies furnished for the British zone in Germany. It contains an assurance that the United Kingdom Government is determined to maintain the principle that payment in appropriate currencies for Germany's necessary imports should rank ahead of reparations payments.

While I was in Washington it was explained by Mr. Mason of the State Department that it was the intention that all countries receiving coal from Germany should be required to pay hard currency for it and that this hard currency would be available to pay for necessary imports into Germany from countries requiring hard currency payment. The cost of occupation for the most part could be paid for in marks.

See Documents 868 to 870.

In the course of the negotiations in Washington I made the point which I mentioned at the meeting of the Mutual Aid Board that no ultimate financial burden should fall on Canada if the United States and the United Kingdom Governments were to abandon in the course of negotiations the principle which they say they are determined to uphold. The same reason would apply if they were to give ground on the decision to make importing countries pay hard currency for coal.

I am inclined to think, therefore, that it would be advisable to reply to Mr. Munro that, as his Aide-Mémoire does not deal with the possibility of the United Kingdom and the United States receding under pressure from the position which they propose to adopt, we should like an assurance that in this event Canada will be relieved from any financial loss in respect of supplies furnished for relief in the British zone of occupation.

I do not know whether the question, arising as it does out of the military relief negotiations, should properly be dealt with by the Mutual Aid Board or whether it is one that falls entirely within the scope of the Department of Finance, and am, therefore, not at the present stage sending a copy of this note nor of the Aide-Mémoire to the Mutual Aid Board.

FINANCE OF PROCUREMENT FOR GERMANY

The question, how imports into Germany are to be financed after the end of administration by SHAEF, is causing anxiety to the United Kingdom authorities.

It is the view of the United Kingdom Government that the best solution of the problem would be an overall arrangement by which the requirements for Germany as a whole were determined centrally on a combined basis and the necessary supplies were made available in accordance with allocations of the Combined Boards against a claim to payment by each supplying country.

It is understood however that such an arrangement is not now possible since the American War Department has already gone to Congress on the basis of obtaining an appropriation for supplies for the American zone only. This being so, it may be necessary to contemplate and to arrange for at least an interim period before the control machinery is properly established, during which the initial financial responsibility would fall on the occupying power in each zone separately.

In this event the United Kingdom Government would greatly appreciate an arrangement by which the Canadian authorities would be associated with them in the initial financing of supplies needed from Canada for the zone which would be in British and Canadian occupation.

Should the Canadian authorities be prepared to accept this idea in principle the details of the arrangement would be for subsequent discussion. In general terms, the United Kingdom authorities suggest, not that the cost of Canadian supplies for Germany, e.g. wheat, should be met out of the United Kingdom share of Mutual Aid but that Canada would agree to carry the initial financial responsibility as a separate item and would recover payment from Germany in due course.

It is most strongly emphasized that in the view of the United Kingdom any such arrangement should be on the basis that the cost of all agreed imports into Germany would form first charge on Germany's capacity to make foreign payments, ranking ahead of reparations, and that payment should be effectively forthcoming from Germany in currencies acceptable to the supplying countries. This is a principle which the United Kingdom Government is determined to maintain, and it is understood that the American authorities are equally firm on this point.

Ottawa, July 11, 1945

In answer to your note of July 7th, enclosing a copy of an aide-mémoire received from Mr. Gordon Munro of the U.K., I would say first of all that I think this is a matter which will have to go to the Mutual Aid Board, inasmuch as if it does not fall within the category of Mutual Aid, it must be taken as coming within the category of Military Relief, for which, of course, that Board has responsibility under the Order-in-Council passed in March.†

As regards the substance of the proposal, I think it would be desirable to know, first of all, whether this division of the zones of occupation is consistent with the understandings reached in your discussions with the State Department in Washington. I had rather got the impression that these discussions contemplated Germany being treated as a unit, at least in respect of questions of imports and exports.

As regards your suggestion that the U.K. should reimburse us for the supplies provided in the event that proceeds are not available from German exports for this purpose, I think your logic is sound, but I am not at all certain that we can gain the point and get the necessary assurance from the U.K. For one thing, they may well take the view that we have some joint responsibility with them in respect of civilian supplies furnished to this occupation zone, as we are sharing in the occupation. Secondly, they may argue that in so far as the first argument does not apply, then these costs of occupation are a legitimate part of the U.K.'s war requirements and should be taken into account in determining the U.K. requirements for Mutual Aid. They might, under such circumstances, offer to reimburse us in Canadian dollars for our expenditures, but that would simply add to the amount of Mutual Aid we would have to provide in respect of other items. Consequently, the only way in which we could get reimbursement without affecting Mutual Aid would be to ask the U.K. to pay us in U.S. dollars or gold in the event that German exports were not able to provide us with such payment. I am doubtful whether the U.K. would be prepared to agree to this, despite your logic. They might well argue that their intentions were the best but that they were unable to make their views prevail against those of our other Allies.

Ottawa, July 12, 1945

Dear Mr. Munro,

I am referring to the aide-mémoire on the finance of procurement for Germany, which you handed to Mr. Angus on July 7th. In placing before the appropriate authorities the request that Canada should carry the initial financial responsibility for supplies procured in Canada for use in the zone of Germany which will be in British and Canadian occupation and look to Germany for ultimate payment, it would be helpful if I could have some estimate, however rough and ready, of the probable cost of these supplies. The only figure which I have before me is an estimate of $150,000,000, which covers the essential imports into the non-Russian zones of Germany for the financial year ending June 30th, 1946. The amount of purely Canadian supplies required for the zones in Canadian and British occupation, pending the establishment of a combined authority which would supersede the zones, would obviously be much less, and it might be possible to limit our discussions to a commitment not to exceed a definite sum.

There is a second point in the aide-mémoire on which further information would be helpful. It is stated in the final paragraph that the United Kingdom Government is determined to maintain, and believes that the American authorities are equally determined to maintain, the principle that all agreed imports into Germany should form a first charge on Germany's capacity to make foreign payments and that these payments should be made in currencies acceptable to the supplying countries. If this principle is maintained, the financial provision which Canada is asked to make will not differ substantially from an export credit. There is, however, a danger that the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States may find it impossible or inexpedient to maintain this principle in the face of the pressure which may be brought to bear upon them by countries entitled to receive reparations from Germany and by countries in urgent need of supplies from Germany for which they are unable to pay in currencies acceptable to Canada. In the course of recent conversations in Washington Mr. Angus was informed that it was the intention of the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States that payment should be required in acceptable currencies for all coal exported from Germany. While very little difficulty may be encountered in making this condition effective in the case of coal which goes to such destinations as Switzerland, it may be harder to secure payments from countries which feel that they are entitled to the coal by way of reparation, and from countries such as Italy which are not in a position to make a payment. In these circumstances, it would be useful to know whether the United Kingdom Government is prepared to undertake, in the event of the principle that imports into Germany should be a first charge on Germany's capacity to make foreign payments being abandoned or modified in the course of negotiations to which Canada is not a party, to make some other provision by which Canada would ultimately be paid in acceptable currencies for supplies procured in Canada for use in the zone in British and Canadian occupation.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, July 19, 1945

Following for Pearson from Angus, Begins: The discussions on military relief finance which I attended early this month in Washington were adjourned in order that the United States representatives might have time to find out what attitude their Government was likely to take towards further contributions to UNRRA on which, in turn, the scope of civilian relief outside UNRRA (or military relief) would depend. The time within which it was hoped to obtain an answer to this question has lapsed and information would be appreciated as to whether or not it has been possible to reach any conclusion.

As things stand at present the position is somewhat as follows:

Military relief arrangements in respect of northwestern Europe will end with the August loadings. It is assumed that these will be self-supporting financially and that the countries concerned will pay in full for the supplies which they receive. Express undertakings, however, have come forward from Belgium and Norway alone. A joint reply to the Belgian communication was under consideration and was to be drafted by Reinstein of the State Department. It is possible that this may now be ready.

With the taking over of the responsibility of displaced persons by UNRRA, any commitment in that direction will come to an end.

In Germany it is hoped that exports will pay for necessary imports and responsibilities have, for the time being at least, been divided on a basis of zones. The Canadian Government has been asked by the United Kingdom if it will accept responsibility for the initial financing of supplies procured in Canada and destined for the zones in British and Canadian occupation.

It is not clear if arrangements can be made by which Austria will pay for relief supplies and it is possible that UNRRA may be asked to accept responsibility for Austrian relief as from some future date. The cost of relief in the meantime remains a contingent liability for military relief finance.

In Italy it is hoped that UNRRA can take over perhaps as from October 1st and the outstanding American proposal is that in the meantime financial responsibility should be shared for the cost of Italian relief in the proportions 70%, 25% and 5%. Pending an arrangement on this point, it is understood that shipments are being kept to a minimum. However, there is also already a substantial deficit to be met in respect of Italy and in excess of the loss limit of $400,000,000, for which provision was made in the original agreement on military relief. It is anticipated that the total liability up to October 1st will be in the neighbourhood of $200,000,000, of which on the above proposal Canada's share will be $10,000,000.

The proposal, however, has not been accepted and I understand from Marris that the United Kingdom position is that United Kingdom liabilities should be confined to those supplies which can actually be furnished to Italy from the United Kingdom, the Colonies and South Africa. It is anticipated that these will amount for the period in question to approximately 12½% of the total in comparison with the 25% called for in the America proposal. Any failure of the British and Americans to reach an agreement on these points may have repercussions as far as Canada is concerned and from our standpoint it is unsatisfactory that the question should remain outstanding indefinitely. The British case, as it is presented, would not link this problem with UNRRA finance, except in so far as special provision will have to be made if UNRRA does not take over by October 1st. The American proposals were to terminate in any event on November 1st so that the whole question would have to be re-examined in the event of UNRRA not assuming responsibility.

The Canadian view, which, as you know, has received some tentative support from United States quarters, is that the UNRRA contributions when made should be treated as retroactive and each country should deduct from the money which it makes available to UNRRA the sums which it has spent on civilian relief after the loss limit of $400,000,000 is reached, that is to say, the contributions which it has made to the relief in recent months, or will make prior to October, of Italy and Austria. Personally, I am of the opinion that the United Kingdom will encounter great difficulty in having its proposal for the apportionment of the cost of relief in Italy accepted and will, therefore, ultimately be driven to concur in the Canadian view, which would establish in respect of this relief the UNRRA proportions in place of those proposed by the United States. It would also have the advantage of bringing in third countries which may participate in the next subscription to UNRRA. It does, therefore, seem desirable that this question should be faced in advance of the UNRRA meeting and the purpose of this summary is to bring the matter to your attention in the hope that you may be able to make enquiries from the Americans and the British as to the progress of that part of the negotiations which concerns civilian relief outside UNRRA. Ends.

Washington, July 21, 1945

IMMEDIATE. Following for Angus, Begins: Your EX-2654 of July 19th, financing of Military Relief. Ritchie and Sale met yesterday at the State Department with Thorpe, successor to Mason, of the Department and Marris of the United Kingdom Embassy together with other United States and United Kingdom civilian and military officials to continue the discussions which you attended earlier this month.

The results of yesterday's meeting are reported below under subject headings corresponding to the paragraphs in your teletype:

1. Northwest Europe.

There is nothing new to report apart from the fact that Reinstein of the State Department has not yet received from the Belgian Embassy any note similar to the one received by us. When he receives the Belgian communication he will draft a reply for our consideration.

2. Displaced persons.

Arrangements are proceeding for the transfer of administrative, supply, and financial responsibility to UNRRA. There would seem to be nothing that we can do to facilitate this transfer.

3. Germany.

There was a lengthy discussion which was not of direct concern to us relating to the procedures to be established for determining requirements and procuring supplies upon the division of Germany into zones of responsibility. As you will have seen from the document accompanying Ritchie's letter of July 18th† to you, a Combined Resources Allocation Board (CRAB) has been established for Germany on a temporary basis until such time as the over-all responsibilities can be assumed by the Control Commission. Although CRAB's responsibilities are at present confined largely to internal movements among the three western zones, the suggestion is that the United States, United Kingdom and French authorities may use this machinery for screening import requirements determined by the Zone Commanders on some common basis to be agreed upon until the quadripartite control machinery for all of Germany comes into operation. Although the arrangements are not yet firm it is expected that the three countries represented on CRAB will have full responsibility on some basis for procuring supplies required for the three western zones. Accordingly direct Canadian participation in the financing of relief supplies for Germany would be confined to the pre-CRAB period which has now been virtually terminated. We shall presumably participate in the eventual collection and distribution of payments for supplies received during this earlier period. Any losses in this earlier period will presumably be shared on the basis to be determined for sharing all losses above $400,000,000 under the combined arrangement, although if such losses occur as a result of deliberate policy decisions by the United States or United Kingdom we presumably would wish to indicate formally at some stage that we would not be prepared to share in such deliberate losses. For the subsequent period (i.e. the CRAB or eventually the quadri-partite periods) it was recognized by the meeting that Canada would have no direct automatic responsibility for financing procurement or for sharing any losses. In these later periods it will be up to the United States, United Kingdom, France, or the U.S.S.R. to make appropriate arrangements with the Canadian Government for financing procurement of supplies required from Canada.

4. Austria, Italy and UNRRA.

The United States representatives were not able to say definitely whether they could agree to the inclusion of Austrian relief within UNRRA. They recognized that while an arrangement for extracting reparations from Austria might conflict with any proposal for the provision of supplies to Austria through UNRRA, the two need not be mutually exclusive inasmuch as UNRRA could claim reimbursement as a first charge on Austrian exports ahead of recurrent reparations or other claims. Nevertheless the United States representatives could not indicate definitely that they would sponsor or support a proposal for the inclusion of Austria.

In the case of Italy, despite the fact that the telegrams coming into the State Department from Potsdam indicate that the possibility of reparations demands against Italy is being considered, the United States representatives were prepared to agree that Italy should be brought under UNRRA.

On the general question of the utilization of UNRRA for relief in these and other areas, Thorpe reported that a draft memorandum is now in the final stages of circulation among the United States Departments and that this memorandum, which has encountered no significant opposition so far, will probably be presented to us and the United Kingdom formally within the next few days. This memorandum proposes that the members of UNRRA be asked at the London Council meeting to approve a further contribution to the extent of 1 percent of their respective national incomes and that this percentage shall be subject to revision downward only if a subsequent review by UNRRA when requirements are more definitely known reveals that the full amount will not be needed. This further contribution would be represented as the amount necessary to complete UNRRA's relief operations in China and other non-European as well as European areas. Recognizing that the United Kingdom would not be prepared to undertake to subscribe more than one-half of 1 percent at the August Council meeting, Thorpe suggested that the proposal to the Council while providing for 1 percent contributions ultimately if necessary might stipulate that only one-half of 1 percent (or preferably six-tenths of 1 percent) need be subscribed immediately and that the subscription of the balance might be delayed until the subsequent review by the Administration of its requirements. The United States representatives expressed the view that they would find it much easier to secure from Congress authorization for 1 percent if they could assure Congress that this amount would represent the last call upon Congress for an UNRRA contribution than they would to persuade Congress to authorize one-half of 1 percent without any firm assurance that no further amounts would subsequently be required. If the proposal were to be adopted the United States Government would request Congress to authorize appropriation of 1 percent and to appropriate one-half of that 1 percent immediately. (As you doubtless know the United States delegation to the Council meeting is to include some seven Congressmen.) Marris was unable to comment on the general United States proposal at the meeting. He indicated that there would probably be no difficulty in representing the proposed United Kingdom contribution as one-half of 1 percent instead of stating it as a flat sum. He thought it possible that if discussion among the United States, United Kingdom and Canada could take place in London during the week before the Council meeting, a form of proposal could be devised which would provide the United States with the necessary assurance that the other Governments would be prepared to subscribe eventually a full 1 percent, if that amount proved necessary, and yet at the same time not commit those Governments to the subscription of more than one-half of 1 percent immediately. Subsequent informal conversations indicate that the United Kingdom might find it necessary to insist that some change be made in the top management of UNRRA before they would be prepared to approve even a contingent commitment of as much as 1 percent of the national income. The United States quite obviously shares the United Kingdom desire for some substantial change in the top direction of UNRRA, but neither the United States nor United Kingdom appears willing at present to propose at the Council meeting the precise change desired.

It was remarked at the meeting that it would clearly be desirable to circulate in advance the resolutions, or at least notice that such resolutions would be proposed, concerning the assumption by UNRRA of responsibility for relief in Italy and Austria. Discussion at the meeting indicated that uncertainty concerning the amount of relief required for these two countries, and the further uncertainty concerning the status of Italy (i.e. whether she is to be regarded as a beneficiary or a member of UNRRA) make it impossible to circulate in advance of the meeting even a description of the resolutions to be proposed unless they can be circulated to the delegates present in London in the week prior to August seven.

5. Losses above $400,000,000 under the Military Relief arrangement.

Neither the United States nor United Kingdom proposes to deduct from its contribution to UNRRA the amount of its share in these additional losses. They apparently feel that such deductions for the benefit of Italy and Austria from the general contributions would aggravate the difficulties in discussing at the Council meeting the further provisions for these two countries. They feel also that the making of such deductions might encourage other contributors to shade their contributions on some basis or other and thus defeat one of the purposes you had in mind (i.e. the securing of maximum participation in relief financing by countries other than the United States, United Kingdom, and Canada). The United States memorandum on UNRRA to which reference was made above will contain also a proposal for distributing losses above $400,000,000 on some compromise percentage basis. The United States representatives could not say definitely what percentages they would be proposing. Reinstein hinted in an informal conversation yesterday evening that the percentage which they will propose for Canada will be no more than the 5 percent which they originally suggested. He was still unwilling to indicate what the precise percentages in the present proposal are, in view of the fact that these percentages might be changed before the memorandum completes its circulation through the United States Department.

We shall forward to you immediately the United States memorandum as soon as it is received. The United States will make every effort to provide us with the memorandum formally before noon of Thursday, July 26th, which is the time for Marris' departure for London. Ends.

TELETYPE WA-4183

Washington, August 10, 1945

IMMEDIATE. Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: Our WA-4033 of July 31st, financing of Military Relief supplies.

The third paragraph of my teletype had indicated that the United States side would propose shortly that Military Relief for Italy should terminate on August 31st and that loadings after that date should be financed and arranged through a combined civilian agency (such as the Supplies Sub-Committee of the Combined Liberated Areas Committee) until UNRRA takes over. Informal discussions have been proceeding concerning arrangements which might be made for this hiatus period of, uncertain duration between the termination of Military Relief and the assumption of responsibility by UNRRA. For your information the following is a summary of the present position.

Although the War Department had proposed on July 19th that military responsibility for relief in Italy should terminate with the completion of August loadings and although the theatre Commander has approved termination on August 31st, the Combined Civil Affairs Committee has not yet formally advised the theatre or the Combined Liberated Areas Committee when in fact the military responsibility will terminate. A formal decision is, however, expected momentarily.

In the meantime, the Secretariat of CLAC has prepared a draft paper outlining the procedures which the F.E.A. and War Department have worked out for handling basic relief supplies for Italy through a combined civilian arrangement. The basic civilian supplies in the programme are to be certified as essential by the Allied Commission in the first instance and then are to be submitted to CLAC (S) which will review the requirements and submit them to the Combined Supply and Shipping authorities in Washington. Copies of this preliminary draft paper† will be sent to you by bag.

Simultaneously the Secretariat of the Supplies Sub-Committee of CLAC has prepared and submitted to the Combined Boards a letter requesting the Boards' recommendations as to sources of supplies for RCL<sup>85</sup> items in the programme of basic supplies for September loading. The programme as submitted to the Boards indicates, "for convenience", the quantities which the F.E.A. recommends should be supplied from United States sources. They have requested action by the Boards on this programme as a matter of urgency. A further programme of basic supplies for October-December loadings is to be submitted shortly with provision for transfer if UNRRA takes over responsibility during the period. It might be said that of the items included in the present programme of basic supplies only wheat and dried salt fish would be required from Canada in any quantity if the F.E.A. recommendations concerning supplies to come from United States sources are accepted by the Boards. In that case the wheat required from sources outside the United States would amount to something like 50,000 tons and fish 3,057 tons per month. The documents submitted to the Combined Boards also will be sent to you by bag.†

The Canadian position in relation to these developing arrangements is by no means clear and it is appreciated by the United States and United Kingdom officials concerned that we shall probably be unable to give any indication of our willingness or unwillingness to participate in these supply arrangements until we receive the formal proposals from the State Department regarding the financial arrangements. We have made it clear that any informal comments which we might provide to the United States or United Kingdom representatives concerning the proposed procedures are put forward by us without prejudice to the decision which the Canadian authorities must take when we receive formally the proposals for combined financing of these relief supplies.

The formal financial proposals have not yet been received but we are continuing to press the State Department for their formal memorandum on the subject. Pearson and Angus may have an opportunity to discuss this subject with Clayton and the United Kingdom officials while in London if we can provide the State Department's formal proposals to you in time.

It would seem that there are three possible courses open to us.

1. We might insist on termination of procurement under the tripartite loss sharing arrangement hitherto in effect upon completion of August loadings and might then withdraw from any combined arrangement for financing basic relief supplies (i.e. category A supplies) to Italy until the time when UNRRA takes over. We could, I think, do this on the basis of the reservation which we attached to our acceptance of the original United Kingdom memorandum on the financing of relief outside UNRRA in which we had indicated that while we were prepared to share losses on "Military Relief" we would not expect to share losses on other relief outside UNRRA unless we had been consulted and had expressly approved the inclusion of this "other relief" in the combined loss sharing arrangement. We might argue also that termination of the combined financing arrangement would be appropriate at this time since the extension of the arrangement to cover this interim period for Italy might result in losses outrunning receipts (from paying countries, none of which will be receiving Military Relief Supplies after August 31st) to such an extent that receipts would be inadequate to distribute the prospective volume of losses in any proportions agreed upon in advance. If we are to take this position we should presumably notify the State Department and the United Kingdom Embassy to this effect immediately (or at least as soon as the CCAC make known their formal decision to terminate military responsibility), as the arrangements to be made between the United States and United Kingdom would be affected by the position which we had taken.

2. While insisting on the termination of the tripartite loss sharing arrangement upon completion of August loadings we might offer to contribute through the combined civilian agency, but outside any loss sharing arrangement, certain specified supplies (subject, of course, to Combined Board concurrence if the commodities are on the R.C.L.) required to tide Italy over during the interim until UNRRA takes over responsibility. If we were to make such an offer we would then at least know (and be able to control) the amount (and not only the percentage) of loss involved for us. In making such an offer we should presumably make it clear that inasmuch as the supplies offered were in partial fulfilment of the programme approved by A.C.<sup>86</sup> we were reserving our right to press a claim against Italy for repayment and that we should expect the United Kingdom, on our behalf, to bill the Italian Government for the cost of such supplies. Our willingness to make this offer would presumably depend on (a) our desire to continue contributing for political, commercial or humanitarian reasons to the relief of Italy, (b) our desire as staunch supporters of UNRRA to prevent a deterioration in the Italian supply position upon withdrawal of the military which would make UNRRA's task more difficult when it eventually takes over, and (c) the desirability of disposing of quantities of wheat or other surplus supplies in this way. If we are to take this second course we should presumably advise the State Department and the United Kingdom Embassy almost immediately that we consider it proper that the provision of supplies under the tripartite loss sharing arrangement should terminate on the date to be determined by the CCAC for terminating military responsibility in Italy but that we are prepared to contribute on the basis indicated blank quantities of wheat or other supplies known to be included in the basic Italian programme. Similar notification should be given by us to CLAC (S) which would then fit our offer into the supply and shipping programme.

3. We might expressly agree to have the combined loss sharing arrangement continue during this interim period on the basis to be determined for sharing losses above $400,000,000. The arguments in favour of the continued provision of supplies in this manner are in most respects similar to those advanced above for the second course. Any preference for this course would seem to be dependent upon (a) a judgment as to the probable adequacy of prospective receipts for bringing about the agreed distribution of losses during the whole period until UNRRA takes over, (b) a judgment as to the relationship between the amount of our loss under such a formula and the amount of Canadian supplies which might have to be financed by us under such an arrangement since presumably we would prefer to lose only on supplies which we had financed than to bear part of the loss on supplies provided by one of the other countries which had procured to an amount in excess of its share of the loss at a time when our procurement was less than our share of the total loss, (c) a judgment as to the relative size of our loss under the two arrangements (under course 2 we would determine our own prospective loss and would know in advance what the maximum would be but under course 3 our loss would be determined by the percentage share to be agreed upon and by the total volume of supplies to be provided by the three countries during this interim period) and (d) a judgment as to the seriousness of the dislocation which would result from shifting to a new financial arrangement at this stage. If we expect to take this course it would seem unnecessary for us to give any formal notification to the State Department or the United Kingdom Embassy, at least until we have received and considered the State Department's financial proposals.

Apart from other objections which might be raised to the continued provision of relief to Italy we recognize that there might be difficulty in financing the provision of the additional relief supplies involved in course 2 or 3 above unless they could continue to be financed out of the Military Relief vote. In this connection you will have seen the statement of the Assistant Secretary of War which appears on page 826-827 of the hearings on the Defense Aid or Lend-Lease Appropriation which we sent to you with our despatch No. 1600 of June 28th.† In that statement the Assistant Secretary pointed out that although "The necessities of the military situation in Italy no longer support the War Department's primary responsibility for the provision of supplies...this, however, does not mean that the War Department no longer has a vital interest in the political and economic conditions which prevail in Italy." The statement concludes "The War Department supports the F.E.A. in the request which it makes for funds for use in Italy and will undertake, to the extent that funds appropriated by the Congress make it possible, to provide essential supplies to Italy to the amount of $100,000,000 until December 31, 1945." In other words although the intention is to handle the provision of supplies during the interim period through a combined civilian agency (largely to fit in with plans for civilianizing the Allied Commission and to improve the position of the U.S. War Department in requesting substantial funds for Military Relief elsewhere) the U.S. share will be financed in much the same way as part of the U.S. share of military relief in Italy and the Balkans was financed previously (i.e. through funds appropriated to the F.E.A. but usable only through transfers to the War Department). That is to say, on the U.S. side it is considered that the purpose to be served by further relief proposed for Italy is not substantially different from the purpose served by the "Military Relief" which has been going into Italy during the past few months and might therefore with similar justification be financed out of a Military Relief vote. The United Kingdom officials here have no definite information concerning the vote out of which the United Kingdom will be financing their further supplies during this interim period but understand that they will be financed on an ad hoc basis in the expectation that the interim will be of very short duration.

It may be impossible to determine the relevant merits and to choose from among the three courses discussed in a preliminary way above until we have received the State Department's memorandum on the sharing of any losses above $400,000,000. We shall, however, be grateful for any guidance which you can provide at this time. We shall keep you informed of developments in the discussions here.

I should perhaps emphasize that the relief which it is proposed to furnish to Italy under the projected combined civilian arrangement discussed above is distinct from the Category B program of Italian civilian imports which was discussed in our teletype WA-3978 of July 28<sup>87</sup> (although in their effects, of course, the two programs interact). <sup>87</sup>Document 1275.

losses on military relief above $400,000,000 including additional losses which may be incurred by mutual agreement for further relief to Italy.

1. We have now received from the State Department their formal memorandum which I am reproducing in my teletype WA-4200, together with a less formal annex which I am reproducing in my teletype WA-4201.

2. In presenting the formal memorandum to us State Department representatives made some oral remarks the sense of which I am reporting below.

3. With reference to paragraph 1(b) of the formal memorandum the State Department representatives indicated that it was their intention to have the previously existing agreements apply to all of the arrangements set forth in paragraph 1 and its sub-paragraphs with the single exception that under paragraph 1(b) the United States will be unable to finance initially any part of procurement for Italy from sources outside the United States after termination of military responsibility since the $100,000,000 available to F.E.A. were appropriated by Congress on the understanding that no part of this amount would be used for procurement outside the United States. This oral statement corrects and supersedes paragraphs 1(b) and 2(d) of the annex to the extent that these paragraphs referred to the responsibility for initial financing after end of military period.

4. With reference to paragraph 2 of the memorandum it was observed in the oral discussion that the United States Government has not yet made up its mind on the question of furnishing the indicated supplies on a Lend-Lease basis. The State Department representatives were asked, whether, in the event that the United States Government decides to furnish such supplies on a Lend-Lease basis, they would be provided as straight non-reimbursable Lend-Lease or whether they would come under the '3-C' reimbursable Lend-Lease arrangement.<sup>88</sup> The State Department indicated that from the nature of the supplies specified they would almost certainly be regarded as straight non-reimbursable Lend-Lease but even if it should be decided that they be treated as '3-C' Lend-Lease it would be the State Department's intention to have such recoveries as might eventually materialize excluded from the pool of receipts available for distribution under the relief arrangements with the United Kingdom and Canada.

5. In commenting on the penultimate paragraph of the memorandum the State Department representatives observed that this paragraph had been inserted particularly for the benefit of the Canadian authorities who might otherwise feel some concern at the absence of any specific provision for including within the arrangement losses incurred on relief to Germany and Austria in the preliminary period. They interpreted this paragraph as meaning that the arrangements for sharing losses will apply to all supplies furnished to these ex-enemy countries up to the point at which one or all of the three parties to the agreement decides (and in no case later than the completion of October 1945 loadings) that the loss on the provision of further supplies to these countries should no longer be shared among the three Governments. The intention being to relieve Canada of any share in the loss on supplies provided to Germany and Austria at least as soon as (and, in no event later than October 31st, 1945) the United States, United Kingdom and France (and eventually Russia) can bring into operation the arrangements for provisioning the respective zones, or Germany as a whole, on a basis to be agreed among the four occupying powers.

6. The annex will, I think, be found self-explanatory. From the discussion in the annex and in the memorandum it will be seen that the proposals now being put forward by the State Department are still some distance from the United Kingdom original proposals. Apart from the reduction of the United Kingdom percentage share of losses from 25 per cent to 21 per cent (see paragraph 3 of the memorandum) no concession has been made to the United Kingdom. As indicated in paragraph 2(d) of the annex (and as emphasized above in paragraph 3 of this teletype in connection with procurement for Italy after termination of military responsibility) the United States is not prepared to take over the United Kingdom's 50 per cent share in responsibility for procurement in areas outside the British Commonwealth and the United States. At the same time paragraph 2(b) of the annex rejects the United Kingdom proposal that the United Kingdom responsibility for procurement within the British Commonwealth be confined to the United Kingdom and Colonies (plus South African coal) and insists that the United Kingdom retain responsibility for all procurement from British Commonwealth sources, excluding Canada. In other words the State Department proposes that the previously existing procurement responsibilities (established by the United Kingdom Embassy memorandum of June 8th, 1944,<sup>89</sup> to which reference is made in paragraph 1 of the present State Department memorandum) shall remain in force. In these circumstances, although the United Kingdom representatives here were not prepared to indicate the probable United Kingdom reaction to the proposals when they were presented, it can be expected that the proposals will meet considerable opposition in the United Kingdom. Since the significance of the proposal that our loss be limited to 5 per cent of the excess above $400,000,000 depends on acceptance by the other two parties of the remaining 95 per cent of the loss, it will be necessary to learn the United Kingdom reaction before full consideration can be given to the proposals affecting Canada, unless the proposals affecting Canada are considered to be unacceptable even if the United Kingdom were to decide that the proposals affecting the United Kingdom were acceptable. Accordingly the State Department has arranged for the American Embassy in London to provide the text of the memorandum and annex to Pearson and Angus through Canada House in case it is considered appropriate

MEMORANDUM

Reference is made to the aide-mémoire presented to the Department of State by the British Embassy on May 15th, 1945,<sup>90</sup> proposing that negotiations be undertaken immediately by the British, Canadian, and United States Governments with regard to the financial arrangements to be made in connection with the future provision of relief to liberated and conquered areas of Europe on a combined basis insofar as such relief lies outside the scope of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. An aide-mémoire of similar tenor was presented to the Department of State by the Canadian Embassy on May 17th, 1945.<sup>91</sup>

During the past several months, representatives of the three Governments have discussed in detail the problems involved in the future provision of relief both through combined military channels and through the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

The United States Government now desires to propose the following arrangements with regard to the financing of relief shipments on a combined or other agreed basis to liberated and conquered areas of Europe which fall outside the scope of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

1. The agreement between the three Governments which is contained in the British Embassy's memorandum of June 8th, 1944,<sup>92</sup> and February 8th, 1945,<sup>93</sup> to the State Department, the State Department's replies of June 8th, 1944,<sup>94</sup> and March 3, 1945,<sup>95</sup> the Canadian Embassy's memorandum of June 2nd, 1944, and letter of June 17th, 1944,<sup>96</sup> and the State Department's reply of September 12th, 1944,<sup>97</sup> the State Department's memorandum of March 3rd, 1945 to the Canadian Embassy<sup>98</sup> and the Embassy's reply of April 28th, 1945,<sup>99</sup> and in substantially similar communications between the British and Canadian Governments,<sup>100</sup> should, subject to certain modifications set forth below, continue to apply to the following:

(A) Military relief supplies furnished on a combined basis to France, Belgium (including supplies for Luxembourg), Norway, Denmark, and the Netherlands until the termination of military supply responsibility for these countries, subject to paragraph 2 below.

(B) Relief supplies delivered to Italy under a combined or an agreed program, whether or not such supplies are furnished through military channels.

2. The arrangements set forth in the previous paragraph will not apply to the portion attributable to the United States of the following supplies in so far as the United States Government desires to furnish such supplies on a lend-lease basis:

(A) Petroleum, oil and lubricants delivered to France, Belgium, (including supplies for Luxembourg), or The Netherlands on or after July 1st, 1945.

(B) Coal delivered to France on or after August 1st, 1945.

(C) Any other supplies delivered to Belgium (including supplies for Luxembourg) or The Netherlands on or after August 1st, 1945.

3. Such amounts as prove to be irrecoverable from recipient Governments or authorities in excess of a total sum of $400,000,000 shall be borne by the three supplying Governments as follows:

By the United States	74 percent of such amount
By the United Kingdom	21 percent of such amount
By Canada	5 percent of such amount

Receipts collected from the recipient Governments or authorities shall be divided as may be necessary in order that the ultimate deficit be shared in the proportions set forth above. The three Governments shall proceed jointly in the collection of such receipts in accordance with the understandings set forth in the exchange of letters of April 4th and April 24th, 1944,<sup>101</sup> between the State Department and the Canadian Embassy, and related communications with the British Embassy.

4. The foregoing relates solely to the financial arrangements which will govern such relief supplies as are furnished by the three Governments and does not affect the scope of the supply programs to be undertaken which will be agreed by the three Governments through appropriate channels from time to time.

The United States Government will make proposals separately with regard to the financial arrangements in connection with civilian supplies furnished by the three Governments to Germany and Austria. Meanwhile, any such supplies furnished these countries by the three Governments, in accordance with mutual agreement, shall be regarded as falling within the terms of the foregoing arrangements, but this understanding shall in no event extend beyond October 1945 loadings.

For purposes of convenience, there is set forth in the attached annex the substance of the agreement between the three Governments as it would be amended by the foregoing proposals.

*Acting High Commissioner in Great Britain to

TELEGRAM 2318

London, August 14, 1945

Following from Angus, Begins: At a meeting of the Council on Monday afternoon, Mr. Clayton proposed that UNRRA should take over relief in Italy and Austria as from the end of the present calendar year. He intimated that, unless this were done, it was improbable that a further vote of money for UNRRA on the same scale as the first vote, namely one percent of the national income for the year ending in June, 1943, could be obtained from Congress.

Clayton further intimated that a vote of one percent was the most that could be expected from Congress and would be final. The United Kingdom promised a contribution, but pointed out that it had suffered more financially than any other great country and that it was not in a position completely to match the suggested vote by Congress. This probably means that the United Kingdom will give half of one percent now and further amounts as they are needed, if circumstances permit.

It seems highly desirable that the Canadian representative should be in a position to make an announcement of what Canada will do. The United States announcement was clearly made contingent on a vote of Congress, and the Canadian announcement might be made contingent on the United States contribution being forthcoming. It is very desirable to obtain contributions from as many countries as possible, and the Canadian example will exercise an important influence. It would, therefore, be appreciated if the Canadian delegation may receive as clear an indication as possible of Canadian policy, and as precise an indication as possible of the statement which it may make in the course of the present discussions. In general terms, Pearson's statement at the meeting on August 13th,† indicated that Canada would contribute commensurately with other countries.

A further point of importance arises from Clayton's remarks. He intimated that military relief in Italy would terminate with the August shipment and said that relief from the end of August until the end of the year would be provided out of funds voted by Congress, and that the United States hoped that the United Kingdom and Canada would continue to participate. In extending the period of relief outside UNRRA until the end of the calendar year, without consultation with Britain or with us, the United States authorities have, no doubt, been attempting to get as much as possible from Congress for relief purposes, namely, a vote specifically for Italy, plus a one percent contribution to UNRRA. If this is the justification for their action, it leaves Canada with the following choices:

(a) We might terminate our contributions to Italian relief with the end of military relief, which ceases with the August shipment. This action would leave us paying presumably five percent of the excess cost of military relief over 400,000,000 dollars up to date. This would be somewhat less than we had contemplated when discussing the possibility of UNRRA taking over as from October 1st.

(b) We might go along with the United States and pay five percent of the cost of relief in Italy up to the end of the present calendar year. This would involve us in rather more than we had contemplated, on the assumption that UNRRA would take over from October 1st as we should be paying five percent of three months additional relief, which probably runs around 25,000,000 a month. It is, however, very improbable that the United Kingdom will consent to pay, as the Americans ask, twenty-one percent of Italian relief for this prolonged period and it is probable that the United States would prefer to pay the whole cost itself to attempting to defend before Congress the reduced British share.

(c) We might agree to pay whatever the United States likes and deduct our payments from our UNRRA assessment. If the assessment is made in the form of half of one percent now and more later, it might be expedient to make the deduction from the later payment, in order to provide funds urgently needed by UNRRA now. The United States would have no object in itself conforming to such a plan which, as has been explained, would reduce the amount made available by that country for relief. It is, however, possible, that the British, who rejected such a plan when they thought of their own total contribution as half of one percent, might welcome it if that contribution is to become a full one percent. It may well be that our choice of courses might be influenced by a wish to keep up the appearance of a joint arrangement.

Of the three courses indicated, my personal recommendation would be that, unless new developments arise, we should adopt the first and offer to pay five percent of the deficit from military relief in excess of 400,000,000 dollars until military relief ends at the end of August, and that we should explain that we could not justify a recommendation to Parliament for a special vote apart from UNRRA designed to cover relief in Italy. It would be of great help to have guidance as to the action we should take in this matter. Ends.

1. After discussion here, we have nothing significant to add to the telephone conversation.

2. As you pointed out on the telephone, the principal argument for our continuation in any arrangement for the relief of Italy would seem to arise from our desire to protect UNRRA (and the Italians) from the sort of situation which Field Marshal Alexander envisages as developing<sup>103</sup> if the flow of relief supplies were to fall off during the interim between the termination of military responsibility and the take-over by UNRRA. You will have noted that Alexander expressed his reluctance to transfer relief responsibility from the Military unless he had an assurance that a satisfactory substitute relief arrangement would come into operation immediately upon cessation of the military responsibility. It is not known whether Alexander will consider the scale of relief which the United States can provide on their own (i.e. out of the one hundred million dollars appropriated for the purpose) adequate to meet the situation that he sees developing. I understand that the C.C.A.C. is preparing a message to Alexander reporting the existence of this F.E.A. programme.

3. With reference to choice 'A' in the message from Angus, I take it that when he refers to "terminating our contribution to Italian relief" he has in mind terminating our contribution to any and all relief under the combined loss-sharing arrangement (including Austria and Germany, as well as Italy—even though repayment is expected from Germany).

4. Concerning the date for terminating military responsibility in Italy we have learned this afternoon that the United States and United Kingdom have now virtually agreed that military authorities should cease to have any supply responsibility for Italy (except for Venezia Giulia and other small areas of possible operational interest) after completion of August loadings. A cable to this effect will probably be despatched to the theatre during the next few days.

5. Although this reason is not directly of concern to us it might be pointed out that the most compelling reason for continued United Kingdom participation in a combined relief arrangement is the necessity of maintaining their position on the (Combined) Allied Commission in Italy. They feel that their position on the Allied Commission might be embarrassing and their influence in the Allied Commission might be weakened if Italy were to be no longer supplied through a combined arrangement in which they were participants. Ends.

Ottawa, August 16, 1945

IMMEDIATE. Following for Angus, Begins: Your telegram No. 2318 of August 14th, military relief.

We agree with you in favouring termination of contribution to Italian relief with end of military relief period, August 31st. It is most unlikely that Parliament will vote funds to cover relief in Italy apart from UNRRA. All Allied countries are being required to pay for or buy on credit supplies from Canada which do not reach them through UNRRA.

The choice of deducting our payments from our UNRRA assessment would be acceptable but I assume that if we deduct, both the U.S. and U.K. will follow suit. This has the disadvantage of reducing the total United States contribution by the $100,000,000 now ear-marked for Italian relief.

We telegraphed you today copy of message from Field Marshal Alexander† seeking assurance that essential commodities would continue to be provided without interruption for Italy, particularly as regards that portion of the programme not already guaranteed financially by the United States Government. If you consider, in the light of his telegram, it is now advisable to retain the appearance of contributing, it seems to us that we could make funds available only in one of two ways; either as a deduction against UNRRA or by an extension of the military relief period beyond August 31st, which would enable us to use unexpended portion of funds allotted by Treasury Board for military relief and possibly obtain further allotments against the War Appropriation.

This would probably not add to the supplies going to Italy since examination of the proposed loadings for September through December shows that the United States can supply all but 50,000 tons of wheat per month and 3,057 tons of fish per month. There seems little likelihood of Canada undertaking any further commitments for wheat, as the export for the crop year is now estimated as low as 300,000,000 bushels. During the winter months particularly, it is not expected that Canada can supply any wheat for export if our commitments to the United Kingdom are met in full. There is no fish available unless the Combined Food Board approves a diversion. The effect of continuation of the military relief period to end of year would be merely to make us liable for five percent of the supplies furnished by others to Italy.

If you are unable or consider it inadvisable to adopt the first course which we both prefer, termination on August 31st, please advise me so that I can discuss with the Ministers concerned.

Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: Our despatch No. 1963 of August 11th† and teletype WA-4426 of August 22nd,† concerning termination of Military responsibility and transition to civilian responsibility for provision of relief supplies to Italy.

In view of imminence of termination of Military responsibility working party of CLAC (S) met this morning to examine those items in the Italian Basic Relief Programme for September loading which were not on the reserved commodity lists with a view to determining sources from which supplies might be secured.

The only item of apparent interest to Canada was wheat. It was reported that the total Italian requirements for September loading (allowing for some drain on stocks) were of the order of 115,000 tons. The United States are proceeding with plans to load eleven ships with something like 95,000 to 100,000 tons. In addition arrangements are proceeding (see our teletype WA-4310 of August 17th† and your EX-2996 of August 18th†) for the movement of the wheat which Argentina had offered as a gift to Italy, but it is understood that difficulties of inland transport in Argentina and other delaying factors will prevent the movement of any significant amount of this wheat from Argentina during September. Accordingly I have been asked to enquire whether there is any likelihood that Canada will be prepared to provide the two or three shiploads necessary to make up the expected deficit. I intimated to the meeting that, quite apart from the continuing absence of any financial arrangement, tightness of the present wheat situation in Canada made it most unlikely that Canada could supply any substantial quantity of wheat to Italy, at least during September, but I undertook to ask your views immediately.

Although wheat could appear to be the only non-R.C.L. item which might come from Canada you will appreciate that we can expect to receive similar requests to provide certain R.C.L. items as soon as the recommendations of the Combined Boards are received.

As I do not know what progress may have been made in the financial discussions with Clayton and the United Kingdom officials in London I am unable to give the United States or United Kingdom officials here any indication of Canada's willingness or unwillingness to finance such supplies to Italy during the next few months even if the supplies should be available in Canada.

In my following teletype† I am reporting, for your information, a telegram which the British Supply Council has received from the United Kingdom Supply Committee in London concerning the probable extent to which the United Kingdom will be able to meet the requirements of the Italian Basic Relief Programme on the understanding that the United Kingdom will assume procurement responsibility only for such supplies as may be available from the United Kingdom and Colonies (plus South African coal). Ottawa, August 27, 1945

Dear Mr. Robertson,

You wrote to me on the 12th July raising two questions in connection with the suggestion that Canada should carry the initial financial responsibility for supplies procured in Canada for use in the British Occupied Zone of Germany. I referred your questions to the authorities in the United Kingdom and have now received a reply on both the points you raised.

I am afraid that it has not been found possible to give any close estimate of the supplies required from Canada for the British Zone. The latest report on the food situation in the British Zone estimates the imported wheat requirements for German civilians for the year ending 1st September, 1946 at two million tons. I must, however, emphasize that this is not an approved requirement and the figure must accordingly be taken with considerable reserve at this stage. Moreover the proportion of the requirements of the British Zone, as finally determined, which will have to be drawn from Canada will depend on the recommendations of the combined boards. For the time being, however, the figure of two million tons of imported wheat is the best indication available of the order of magnitude of amounts likely to be at stake.

So far as your second question is concerned, as you are aware, the principle of the first charge on exports to secure payment for imports was agreed at Potsdam and is one of the principles laid down for the guidance of the Control Council. The United Kingdom authorities recognize that the European Allies may object to the enforcement of this principle but it is their firm determination, as it is understood to be that also of the Americans, to maintain and apply it, and the United Kingdom representative in Berlin has recently been authorized to put forward an interim scheme for beginning immediate collection of payment from the recipients of German coal and other exports. Payment under this scheme would be required for the time being in American dollars. This scheme which it is understood will have the support of the Americans, is now being examined by representatives of the four controlling powers with a view to submitting agreed proposals for approval by the Control Council. In these circumstances the United Kingdom authorities hope that machinery for obtaining effective payment for German imports in currency acceptable to the supplying countries will shortly be established.

The United Kingdom authorities appreciate the Canadian concern about the position that would arise if the first charge principle were abandoned or notified in negotiations between the four controlling powers to which Canada would not be a party. While it is considered that such a contingency is most unlikely to materialize, the United Kingdom authorities would be prepared, if the Canadian authorities accepted their proposals about interim finance to undertake to keep them informed as to the arrangements which are being worked out for securing repayment from Germany and to consult with Canada in regard to any substantial modifications which might at any time be proposed.

Under the United Kingdom proposals Canada would be associated with the United Kingdom in the interim financing of supplies required from Canada for the British Zone, and the element of uncertainty in regard to the receipt of full and effective repayment from Germany would be one more factor to be taken into account in the ultimate financial settlement between Canada and the United Kingdom.

I hope that this supplies the information you require and that the Canadian authorities will now be able to give sympathetic consideration to the United Kingdom proposals.

Yours sincerely,

R. GORDON MUNRO

TELETYPE WA-4540

Washington, August 29, 1945

SECRET. Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: Reference your despatch No. 752 of June 4th and my letters of May 30th† and June 1st,† concerning notification to the Italian Government of liability to pay for Military Relief supplies.

At long last, the State Department has resumed discussion of this subject and at a meeting this morning proposed that the draft note to the Italian Government be abbreviated and revised to read as follows, in order to take account of the detailed billing procedure and of other developments in the interval, Begins:

In the course of military operations on the European continent, the combined armies of the Allies have imported into Europe certain basic supplies for the civilian population of the countries which have been liberated from German domination. These supplies for civilian use have been procured by the Governments of the United States, of the United Kingdom, and of Canada, and have reached the people in the liberated countries through or for the account of their Governments. The supplying Governments expect that the Governments of the recipient countries will pay the costs of such civilian supplies, including, in the case of Italy, all such supplies delivered since July 10th, 1945 [1943?].

Bills will be presented to your Government by the Supreme Allied Commander through whom civilian supplies are furnished. While as a matter of convenience, these bills will be presented in terms of United States dollars, your Government will be asked to pay in currencies acceptable to the supplying Governments.

The supplying Governments expect the Government of Italy to make payment of each bill rendered to it for civilian supplies furnished to Italy on the basis that the amount of each bill is final for the quantities of civilian supplies covered thereby. The amounts due will be based on quantitative records of the supplies furnished to Italy and on landed costs of the commodities delivered in Italy, as maintained and computed by the combined military authorities. Prices will be calculated so as to cover all costs of these commodities to the supplying Governments, including transportation to the point where these supplies reach Italy. Should any costs be incurred by the military authorities beyond that point, such as cost of inland transport, separate billings will be made to the Italian Government in order to cover such additional expenses incurred for the account of Italy.

At the time of the first billing by the Combined Allied Military authorities, your Government will be advised as to the procedure to be followed in making payments.

It is understood that the British and Canadian Governments are addressing similar communications to your Government. Ends.

Could you let me know whether this version of the note is acceptable to the Canadian Government?

When the language of the note has been agreed upon it is proposed by the State Department that it be presented to the Italian Government with an oral remark to the effect that; "The supplying Governments for the present do not intend to press the Italian Government for payment but they will expect the claim to be taken up in connection with the Peace Treaty." Would this sort of oral remark be satisfactory to the Canadian authorities? Neither the United States nor United Kingdom representatives knew how the claim for payment for these relief supplies would be treated in the Peace Treaty discussion. There were hints that the United States and/or the United Kingdom might be prepared to waive their claim for payment in return for some concession from the Italians under the Peace Treaty. In the interest of protecting or preserving our claim (or ensuring that Canada participates in any benefits resulting from a possible waiver) it would seem essential that we be kept informed by the United States and/or the United Kingdom of their intentions in respect of the claims against the Italian Government for military relief supplies during the course of the negotiation of the Peace Treaty in London next month. In this connection you have no doubt seen the reference to Italian military relief in the Dominions' Office telegrams on the discussion of reparations at Potsdam.† You may desire that when we inform the State Department and the United Kingdom Embassy of the acceptability to us of the above draft note and oral remark (in their present or a revised form) we indicate our expectation that they will keep us informed of any developments concerning settlement for their shares of military relief in the preparatory discussions on the Italian Peace Treaty.

There is a further question concerning the mechanics of the presentation of the note on which I should be grateful for your advice. Since I understand that the Canadian Government does not yet have direct diplomatic relations with the Italian Government, presumably arrangements would have to be made with the United States or United Kingdom to make a presentation on our behalf. The State Department is opposed to a joint United States-United Kingdom presentation of a single note on behalf of the United States, United Kingdom-Canada. Conceivably the Canadian note might be presented through the Allied Commission, although such a presentation would seem to involve rather complicated procedures. In order that the United States and United Kingdom officials might raise this question with their Governments at the same time as they ask for approval of the draft note quoted above I should be grateful if you could let me know tomorrow or the next day what procedure you feel should be followed in informing the Italian Government of its obligation to the Canadian Government. Ends.

Our understanding is that Canadian participation in military relief ends with the August loadings. Beyond that date the situation is as follows:

Italy: We are awaiting an American proposal that we share in the financial responsibility for September. Our understanding is that the U.S. will propose that we bear five per cent of the cost of civilian relief outside UNRRA for the month of September and that UNRRA will take over financial responsibility on October 1st.

Germany: The UK has asked if we will assist them by financing procurement for the supplies available in Canada for the British zone, on the understanding that we will ultimately be repaid from the proceeds of German exports. This proposal will probably be put before the Cabinet shortly.

Austria: The situation has been very vague, because of the uncertainty regarding Austrian exports and their availability for reparations or for payment of necessary imports. No proposal has been made to us to share in the financial responsibility for any relief outside UNRRA or to finance procurement. UNRRA has been authorized to take over relief in Austria but the date will depend on arrangements made between UNRRA and the occupying military authorities. It is our understanding in the meantime these authorities will proceed with relief as they are doing in Germany, probably looking to Austria for eventual repayment.

In summary, our understanding is that we have no commitment whatsoever for military relief beyond the August loadings.

If the U.S. authorities have a different understanding of the situation, our view should be made clear to them and we should be advised of their view.

Did you hear from Angus before his departure on the subject of notification to the Italian Government of liability to pay for military relief supplies? I find a copy of a teletype to you here but the Cypher Division has no record of having sent it.

The teletype said that the note in this abbreviated form is satisfactory and so is the proposal that an oral statement should be made along the lines indicated in your teletype. It went on as follows:

“It is a good suggestion that we should ask the United States and the United Kingdom to keep us informed in the event of their intending to take any step to waive their claim for payment or any portion of it in return for some concession from the Italians under the Peace Treaty. It is obvious that any such action on their part would make it very difficult for the Canadian Government to insist on payment of its share of the joint claim and it would not be unreasonable to expect that our interests should be consulted before any action is taken which might compromise our claim.

As Canada is not directly represented in Italy the natural course would be for us to ask the United Kingdom representative to present the Canadian note on our behalf. When the terms of the note and of the accompanying observations have been agreed on and the date of presentation settled, it would be possible for us to proceed with the request to the United Kingdom authorities.” Ends.

TELETYPE WA-4666

Washington, September 6, 1945

IMMEDIATE. Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: Your EX-3164 of August 31st and our telephone conversation of September 1st, military relief.

The observance of the long weekend (Friday evening to Tuesday morning) by several of the United States officials concerned, the lack of familiarity on the part of other officials with the discussions which Clayton and Collado had with Angus and others in London, and the absorption of other officials in preparations for the forthcoming meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, have made it exceedingly difficult to secure anything like a comprehensive consideration of your message since it arrived. However I have managed to have brief conversations with Reinstein and Collado of the State Department and with Jackling and Bridge of the United Kingdom Embassy on the points which you raised.

In the first place, I have been unable to find any evidence that the United States authorities intend to submit the proposal which you apparently are awaiting concerning financial responsibility for relief in Italy during September. It is Reinstein's understanding that the general State Department proposal reported to you in our WA-4200 and related teletypes of August 10th was intended to apply to relief required for Italy in September and any subsequent months until UNRRA could take over as well as to relief for other areas and for other time periods. Far from planning the submission of new proposals concerning September relief for Italy the State Department are awaiting the replies of the United Kingdom and Canada to the general proposal which they submitted on August 10th.

In the second place, I find no expectation here among the United States, United Kingdom or UNRRA officials with whom I have been able to talk that UNRRA will be able to take over responsibility (financial or otherwise) for relief in Italy as early as October 1st. It apparently was agreed at the UNRRA Council meeting that UNRRA should take over responsibility as soon as possible but there would seem to be no assurance that they can assume any substantial part of that responsibility as early as October 1st. The United Kingdom representatives here speak of November 1st as a possible date but admit that they have no basis for selecting this particular date and recognize that the actual date may be even later.

In the third place, the State Department would regard their memorandum of August 10th as including, in the absence of any alternative agreement, a proposal to Canada for sharing in financial responsibility for relief required in Germany and Austria up to some date not later than the completion of October loadings (see paragraph 5 of my WA-4199 and the penultimate paragraph of the memorandum reproduced in WA-4200).

In view of the apparent lack of agreement on these important points of detail, it would seem necessary for us to have your comments on these points.

On the general question of the extent of Canada's commitment under the original arrangement, I do not think that we can safely assume that our commitment (even with the reservation which we made in our original acceptance and of which the State Department took note in their memorandum of May 26th) will be considered by the United States and United Kingdom to expire automatically at any particular time, with any particular amount, or upon completion of any particular type of relief programme (particularly since there is no precise and generally accepted definition of "military relief"). The Canadian reservation against extension of the arrangement beyond or outside military relief was not an absolute reservation, since it allowed for the possibility of express approval by the Canadian Government of such an extension. I am sure that the State Department would consider that they had, in their memorandum of August 10th,<sup>104</sup> requested the express approval of the Canadian Government for such an extension. Technically the absence of express approval by us of the proposal to extend the arrangement in the manner proposed by the State Department might be regarded as exempting us from any share of responsibility in the event that the United States and United Kingdom proceed with the procurement and provision of supplies under any such extension. Practically, however, it might be regarded as reasonable by the State Department to expect to receive notice of our express disapproval of the proposed extension before being required to conclude that we were not prepared to accept a share of responsibility under an extension of the previous arrangement rendered necessary by the absence of any alternative arrangement for continuing relief to Italy, Germany and Austria.

None of the United States and United Kingdom officials with whom I have talked would question Canada's right to terminate her commitment since it has always been recognized that once the limit of the original agreement (i.e., $1,000,000,000 aggregate expenditure) was reached subsequent operations were continued more or less on sufferance and that accordingly any one of the three countries could terminate the arrangement at will. To achieve a clear-cut termination of the arrangement (or at least of Canada's share therein) it would seem necessary, however, for us to advise the State Department and Dominions Office formally of our understanding that Canada's commitment terminated upon completion of August loadings. In giving such notice to the State Department I do not see how we can avoid reference to the State Department's memorandum of August 10th which had proposed an extension and modification of the original arrangement. From the fact that you desire to have Canada's responsibility terminated upon completion of August loadings I assume that you have rejected the State Department proposal as a basis for provision of supplies to Italy, Germany and Austria after completion of August loadings. I am not sure, however, whether you have accepted, rejected, or still have under consideration the State Department proposal as a basis for settlement for losses incurred up to the completion of August loadings above the old $400,000,000 loss limit.

I am taking the liberty of suggesting below for your consideration an outline of the sort of note which we might submit to the State Department (and which you might wish to transmit to the Dominions Office) within the next few days:

(a) Reference the State Department memorandum of August 10th and the exchanges referred to in that memorandum, with particular reference to the State Department's memorandum of May 26th (and the corresponding Dominions Office document)<sup>105</sup> taking note of our reservations with respect to the original agreement.

(b) It is the understanding of the Canadian authorities that their commitment for financing the provision of supplies and sharing in the ultimate cost incurred under these arrangements terminated upon completion of August loadings (and the corresponding date for completion of military distribution of petroleum products for civilian use).

(c) It is understood that the Combined Military authorities have determined to terminate their responsibility for supplying the civilian populations of France, Belgium, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Denmark, Norway, Greece, Yugoslavia, Albania and Italy on or before the completion of August loadings for all civilian supplies (except petroleum products which they will continue to distribute to Denmark, Norway, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg and Italy until October 1st). Accordingly, it is considered by the Canadian authorities that Canada's commitment to finance the procurement of supplies or to share in the ultimate cost for any of these areas under the existing agreement did not extend beyond supplies loaded on or before August 31st (and the corresponding date for distribution of petroleum products) since any supplies required for loading after that date could not properly be regarded as "military relief" and since the Canadian Government would not be prepared to approve the inclusion of such further supplies within the existing arrangement.

(d) In respect of Germany and Austria it is considered by the Canadian authorities that upon completion of the division of these countries into the several zones it became improper and impracticable for the Canadian authorities to participate in the determination of requirements for occupation purposes and that, accordingly, it became inappropriate for the Canadian authorities to retain any direct responsibility for sharing in the financing of the provision of such supplies as might be required after completion of August loadings. In the event that any of the occupying Powers require supplies available from Canada the Canadian authorities will be prepared to discuss with the occupying Power concerned, possible financial arrangements under which such supplies might be procured in Canada.

See Document 1111.

(e) For the purpose of distributing the ultimate net cost of the military relief supplies which had been provided on a combined basis up to the completion of August loadings (and the corresponding date for distribution of petroleum products) the Canadian authorities (would be prepared to accept) (are unable to accept) (have under consideration) the proposal set forth in paragraph 3 of the State Department's memorandum of August 10th for the distribution of such amounts as prove to be irrecoverable in excess of the total sum of $400,000,000 already covered in the original agreement.

(f) The Canadian authorities are willing to discuss with the authorities of the United States (and of the United Kingdom) any minor variations from the terminal dates indicated above which may be required administratively to avoid undue complication of supply arrangements or of accounting procedures.

It may be that under paragraph (c) or elsewhere in such a note you would be prepared to say something about what, if any, assistance Canada is prepared to render to Italy on some basis or other to enable the Italians to meet their minimum relief needs until UNRRA can take over.

You will recognize that the above is a very rough and hasty draft prepared without full knowledge of the thinking in Ottawa on this subject and I am putting it forward to you for your comments or for your suggestion of an alternative form of note. As indicated above I feel that we should provide the State Department with something very shortly to avoid any misunderstanding and in order to protect our position.

I might add that the United Kingdom representatives here have not yet received any indication of London's reaction to the State Department's proposal that the United Kingdom accept 21 per cent of the losses above $400,000,000. They suspect that Keynes may intend to include this subject in his discussions with the United States and Canada. Ends.

Ottawa, September 18, 1945

Dear Mr. Munro,

I refer to the aide-mémoire which you presented on the subject of "Finance of Procurement for Germany"<sup>106</sup> and to your letter of August 27th.

The question of undertaking financial responsibility for supplies procured in Canada for use in the British occupied zone of Germany was considered by the Mutual Aid Board and the decision reached that the Canadian authorities are not in a position to undertake any responsibility for relief outside of UNRRA.

It is felt that, with the announcement by the Combined Military authorities that military responsibility terminated on completion of August loadings (except for petroleum products which will be distributed to several countries until October 1st), the Canadian commitment under military relief terminated upon completion of August loadings and on the corresponding date for completion of military distribution of petroleum products for civilian use. We have so advised the Dominions Office and the United States State Department.

We, therefore, do not feel able to assume any new direct responsibility for the financing of relief supplies for Germany. You will appreciate that policy for distribution of relief is centered in the Allied Control Commission and the Zone Commanders. While it is the declared intention to recover the cost of essential imports into Germany from the proceeds of German exports, it is far from certain whether this intention can be fulfilled under the existing inter-Allied arrangements. We have no share in the determination of policy in these matters and we, therefore, feel that the United Kingdom authorities should themselves finance the procurement of these supplies in accordance with the general financial arrangements covering United Kingdom purchases from Canadian sources.

Yours sincerely,

(d) In respect of Germany and Austria it is considered by the Canadian authorities that upon completion of the division of these countries into the several zones, it was impracticable for the Canadian authorities to bear any direct responsibility for sharing in the financing of the provision of such supplies as might be required after completion of August loadings. Our EX-3265 of September 10th,† military relief.

With reference to paragraph (e) of the suggested note to the State Department will you please now advise the United States authorities that the Canadian Government accepts the proposal set forth in paragraph 3 of the State Department's memorandum of August 10th<sup>109</sup> for the distribution of such amounts as may prove to be irrecoverable in excess of the total sum of $400,000,000 already covered in the original agreement.

The above decision was taken at the Mutual Aid Board meeting yesterday. The Board also considered the question of undertaking financial responsibility for supplies for the British zone of occupation in Germany. It decided that we were not prepared to assume any responsibility for relief outside UNRRA.

Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: Your EX-3209 of September 4th, notification to the Italian Government of liability to pay for Military Relief supplies.

The United Kingdom Embassy has now informed the State Department that the modified note and the proposed oral remarks are satisfactory to the United Kingdom Government.

Accordingly discussions are proceeding on the arrangements for the actual presentation of the notes. The United Kingdom authorities will almost certainly make their presentation in Rome since they feel that the Italian representative in London is not sufficiently conversant with the subject. The telegram which the United Kingdom Embassy has received indicates that the United Kingdom Government would be pleased to present a note at the same time on behalf of the Canadian Government if you so desire. In view of the fact that the language of the note and of the remarks has now been agreed on I assume that you will communicate to the Dominions Office a request for them to make the notification on our behalf. Since the United Kingdom note is to be presented in Rome I should think that it would be desirable to provide the Dominions Office with the formal Canadian note to the Italian Government as soon as possible in order that it might be transmitted to Rome for presentation along with the United Kingdom note which is likely to be presented within a very short time. The actual date of the presentation has not yet been determined.

I should say that in advising the State Department and the United Kingdom Embassy that the proposed note and oral remarks were acceptable to us I SECRET. Reference notification by United Kingdom, United States and Canada to the Italian Government of liability to pay for military relief supplies.

I am informed by the Canadian Ambassador in Washington that the United Kingdom and the United States Governments have agreed to present their notes on the above-mentioned matter in the near future and, since Canada is not directly represented in Italy, the United Kingdom Government has indicated willingness to present a note on behalf of the Canadian Government at the same time.

The Canadian Government would appreciate it if the United Kingdom Government would present on its behalf to the Italian Government the following note which is identical with the note agreed to by the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada, Begins:

"In the course of military operations on the European continent, the combined armies of the Allies have imported into Europe certain basic supplies for the civilian population of the countries which have been liberated from German domination. These supplies for civilian use have been procured by the Governments of the United States, of the United Kingdom, and of Canada, and have reached the people in the liberated countries through or for the account of their Governments. The supplying Governments expect that the Governments of the recipient countries will pay the costs of such civilian supplies, including, in the case of Italy, all such supplies delivered since July 10th, 1943.

Bills will be presented to your Government by the Supreme Allied Commander through whom civilian supplies are furnished. While as a matter of convenience, these bills will be presented in terms of United States dollars, your Government will be asked to pay in currencies acceptable to the supplying Governments.

The supplying Governments expect the Government of Italy to make payment of each bill rendered to it for civilian supplies furnished to Italy on the basis that the amount of each bill is final for the quantities of civilian supplies covered thereby. The amounts due will be based on quantitative records of the supplies furnished to Italy and on landed costs of the commodities delivered in Italy, as maintained and computed by the combined military authorities. Prices will be calculated so as to cover all costs of these commodities to the supplying Governments, including transportation to the point where these supplies reach Italy. Should any costs be incurred by the military authorities beyond that point, such as cost of inland transport, separate billings will be made to the Italian Government in order to cover such additional expenses incurred for the account of Italy.

At the time of the first billing by the Combined Allied Military authorities, your Government will be advised as to the procedure to be followed in making payments.

It is understood that the British and United States Governments are addressing similar communications to your Government.” Ends.

The Canadian Government would appreciate it if, in the event that it is decided to make an oral observation at the time of the presentation relating the Military Relief claim to the peace treaty discussions, the Canadian authorities could be kept informed of any settlement proposed in the peace treaty discussions of the claim of the United States and United Kingdom against Italy for Military Relief supplies provided under the combined arrangement, since any decision of this nature would affect the ability of the Canadian Government to secure a settlement of its share of the joint claim.

No. 2061

Ottawa, November 14, 1945

Sir,

With your note of the 4th of April 1945<sup>110</sup> you informed me that the Canadian Government and the Governments of the United States and of the United Kingdom expected the Netherlands Government to pay the cost of supplies imported by the combined armies of the Allies for the civilian population of the Netherlands in Europe.

So far the Netherlands Government have refrained from making comments on this matter, as it was impossible to foresee or estimate what, on the one hand, would be the total cost of these military imports and the amount of foreign exchange needed by the Netherlands Government for further relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country, and what, on the other hand, would be left of the Netherlands assets and productive resources after the liberation.

Even at the present moment, it is difficult to obtain a complete survey of these factors, but it has become clear enough that the situation is far worse than could have been expected.

See Document 1102.

It may be recalled that military operations in the Netherlands lasted about eight months. Apart from the destruction caused directly by the fighting, the Germans had ample time to plan and did carry out extensive demolition and looting of factory equipment, means of transport, harbour-installations etc. Many powerstations and innumerable bridges have been blown up; extensive areas of the most fertile land in Holland have been flooded.

The flooding of the island of Walcheren, carried out by Allied bombers in September 1944 represents another major disaster. The island is still under water, and even when this has finally been pumped out, no crops can be expected for several years. The island used to produce a food surplus, but for years to come its population will have to live entirely on imported food. It has as yet not been possible to give an estimate of this damage in terms of money.

The Netherlands Government also wish to draw the attention of the Allied Governments to the consequences of the general railway strike, which was called by the Netherlands Government then in London on behalf of the Allied Supreme Command, on the 17th of September 1944. As is generally known, the call was immediately answered by all employees, who maintained their attitude unflinchingly until the very end in the face of the most cruel reprisals. Through this active and sustained assistance to the Allied cause, the people of the Netherlands have brought serious hardships upon themselves, and the German terror with its looting, murders and deportations, reached its culminating point with this strike. The distribution of food and fuel was completely dislocated, so that rations in the big cities soon dropped far below the necessary minimum. Actual starvation set in. Practically no distribution of fuel took place during the winter months of 1944, and gas and electricity failed in one city after the other. Thus, when the German collapse finally came, the situation in the Netherlands was, owing to these circumstances, incomparably worse than in any other liberated country in western Europe.

The day that the first Allied bombers dropped food over their cities, will live in the memories of the people of the Netherlands and a lasting impression was created by the efficient military organisation, which poured vast supplies into Western Holland immediately after the German capitulation.

The actual quantities of these supplies have been and had to be very considerable; they were far larger than those which had to be supplied to other countries in Western Europe. Another detrimental factor was that the special situation in the Netherlands required expensive emergency foodstuffs such as biscuits and canned vegetables, which were therefore brought in vast quantities.

The total cost—expressed in money—of these so-called “civil affairs imports” is not yet known to the Netherlands Government, but it is feared to be a very high figure indeed, and particularly in relation to the country’s diminished resources.

Now that the Netherlands Government themselves purchase and import directly all further relief brought into the country and also must find the foreign exchange for an extensive import-programme for the rehabilitation of the country's agriculture, industries, and for reconstruction in general, all available assets will have to be mobilized. At the same time, funds will have to be borrowed abroad to the limit of what can actually be repaid in the future.

The Netherlands Government therefore—fully conscious that such a request can only be founded on dire necessity—have after careful consideration decided to ask the Canadian Government and the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom to reconsider whether it would be in the interest of all parties concerned to insist on payment for the civil affairs supplies distributed in the Netherlands, taking into account the special factors and circumstances set forth above.

Similar notes are addressed to the Governments of the United States of America and of the United Kingdom.

Accept etc.

Following for Ritchie from Pierce, Begins: Military Relief.

We have received a note, copy of which is being referred to you, from the Netherlands Government asking that Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom "reconsider whether it would be in the interest of all parties concerned to insist on payment for Civil Affairs supplies distributed in the Netherlands." A similar note has been sent to the United States and the United Kingdom.

As you know, we have taken for granted that the Netherlands would pay for military relief. Our first reaction is that, if the Netherlands finds it difficult to pay for all relief, their recourse should be to UNRRA where the burden will be borne by all contributors in the agreed proportions.

Moreover, we have formally agreed to pay the Netherlands Government for supplies and services which they furnished the Canadian Army. We feel that the Netherlands Government should, in turn, pay for the supplies which the Canadian Army furnished the Netherlands.

The question will no doubt shortly go before the Mutual Aid Board. We would welcome your views and would be greatly interested in learning, if possible, the United States and United Kingdom reactions to the note.

In any event, we assume that neither the United States nor the United Kingdom would reply before there has been consultation with us with a view to agreeing on the substance of our replies. Ends.

Following for Pierce from Ritchie, Begins: My WA-5534 of October 27th,† Military Relief, with particular reference to arrangement made by United States with Belgium for transfers to Lend-Lease.

I attended a further meeting with the State Department and the United Kingdom Embassy representatives on Friday, November 23rd. The following is the gist of a report of the discussion which was approved by the State Department representatives yesterday, as an accurate record of the discussion on principal points:

(a) The State Department produced a statement showing the value of estimated deliveries to all countries in Europe under the Military Relief arrangement through August 1945. Copies of this statement† are being sent to you by bag.

(b) According to this statement estimated deliveries to Belgium, France and the Netherlands, during July and August from all sources, amounted to 31, 16 and 48 million dollars respectively. Of these totals, the contributions from United States sources amounted to 24, 16 and 31 million dollars respectively. The estimate of deliveries to Belgium is based on a statement from the Belgian Government of supplies received during this period. The estimate for the Netherlands (which does not include certain supplies furnished from the stockpile which had been accumulated for relief of that part of the Netherlands which was last liberated) was compiled from a report of the United States Embassy in The Hague on the basis of information from military authorities. The estimate for France includes no allowance for coal.

(c) The United Kingdom and Canadian representatives at the meeting pointed out to the State Department that, in the absence of details of actual issues by military authorities during July and August, too much reliance should not be placed on these estimates.

(d) The State Department agreed that any figures produced at this stage must, of necessity, represent only a best estimate but that, nevertheless, they were satisfied that the figures reflected with sufficient accuracy for present purposes the order of magnitude of the amounts in question. In the circumstances, the State Department undertook not to transfer to Lend-Lease more than $75,000,000 worth of Military Relief supplies provided within the combined arrangement to northwest European countries without further and prior consultation with the United Kingdom and Canadian authorities. In view of the lack of confidence expressed by the United Kingdom and Canadian representatives in any estimates of deliveries which might be prepared at this stage both the United Kingdom and Canadian representatives thought that a ceiling limit on the lines suggested by the State Department might be preferable to any dependence on estimates and indicated that they would request an early indication of their Governments' views.

(e) The State Department also indicated that they were considering which of the following accounting methods they should adopt in dealing with such civil supplies, delivered in July and August, as might be transferred to a Lend-Lease basis:

1. To render bills on a combined basis to recipient Governments for all materials delivered with a subsequent notification to the recipient Government concerned that a certain portion (representing either the United States dollar share of the combined bill for these two months or the value of deliveries actually from United States sources during the two months) would be dealt with by a transfer to Lend-Lease, or

2. To omit from combined billing altogether, such quantities of United States goods as, after calculation, the United States decides to transfer to Lend-Lease.

(f) In reply to the State Department's enquiry as to which method would seem most satisfactory, the Canadian and United Kingdom representatives expressed the view that the submission of a comprehensive combined bill (i.e. alternative 1 above) would be preferable but that they would ask their Governments for advice on this point. Ends.

"We have received similar communication which is reply to our note of April 3rd, 1945.

Gist of Dutch note is an appeal to be relieved of payment for these supplies. They do not claim in so many words that they cannot afford to make payment, but they state that their resources will be fully committed to meet the cost of imports on their own account and they ask us to reconsider 'whether it would be in the interest of all parties concerned to insist on payment for the Civil Affairs supplies distributed in the Netherlands.'

The United Kingdom could not of course waive their claim for payment against the Dutch nor admit in principle that the Dutch had a case for special treatment. We imagine that the Americans and Canadians will take the same view. His Majesty's Government would be prepared, however, when the detailed bills are presented, to consider as sympathetically as possible any representations which the Dutch may wish to make in respect of particular items included in the bills. The actual terms of the reply to be sent to the Dutch Government by the three Governments will, of course, require very careful consideration.

Please urgently report reactions of Canadian authorities and those of Americans as soon as latter receive Dutch note." Ends.

The discussion with representatives of the United Kingdom Embassy and the State Department on December 7th arrived at no conclusion as the United Kingdom representatives had not received a reply from London on the proposals previously put forward concerning the arrangements to be made by the United States with Belgium and other northwest European countries for transferring certain Military Relief supplies to Lend-Lease. At the meeting I reported orally the views of the Canadian authorities as set forth in your EX-4140.

The State Department officials at the meeting indicated that they had now received copies of the note from the Netherlands Government to which reference was made in my WA-5904 of November 24<sup>1</sup> and WA-5994 of November 29th. Discussion of the reply to be made to this note is likely to be delayed until agreement has been reached on the question of the Lend-Lease transfer question referred to above as it is felt that a willingness on the part of the United States to make such an arrangement with the Dutch might lessen their desire to have a reconsideration of their obligation to pay for the balance of the Military Relief supplies.

The meeting also considered the proposal which had been put forward for the establishment of a Combined Military Relief Billing Committee on which we shall send off a despatch to-day. Ends.

2. I was also asked to participate in the discussion of the site for the next meeting of the Council, because the Central Committee were considering Canada in this connection. I was asked to make informal and noncommittal enquiries as to whether the Canadian Government would favour the next meeting of the Council being held in Canada. The tentative date is June 15th, though it could be a week or so after that date if other considerations made that necessary. The next meeting will not be as formal, as large, or as imposing as the Atlantic City meeting.<sup>111</sup> Whereas there were some five or six hundred in attendance at Atlantic City, it was thought that the next meeting of the Council could be restricted to 150 to 250, including members of the Secretariat. It was also thought that the next meeting should not last longer than a week or ten days. Further more, whereas the host Government at Atlantic City had been responsible for organizing the meeting, U.N.R.R.A. itself would undertake this task at the next meeting. The Central Committee thought that possibly some place like the Seignior Club or the Mont Tremblant Lodge would be suitable, but they naturally decided not to make any further enquiries until they had ascertained what the wishes of the Canadian Government were in this matter. I asked the Director General what would be the obligations of our Government if the meeting were held in Canada. He said that all that would be required would be the goodwill of the Canadian Government, their good offices in securing a suitable hotel, and the appointment of a few persons who might act in a liaison capacity to ensure that there were adequate facilities available, telegraph, press, etc. Will you please let me know as soon as possible whether the Canadian Government would approve in principle of the holding of the next meeting of the Council in Canada, and, if so, let me have any advice that might be available as to a suitable place? My own view is that, as this would not entail much additional work or responsibility, we should welcome the holding of the session in Canada. I am of the impression that the Mont Tremblant Lodge would be a suitable place, but would be glad to have information on this point. Brooke Claxton would be able to help us on this. An informal meeting was held in Governor Lehman's office Tuesday morning and afternoon for the purpose of giving the United Kingdom and United States members of the Central Committee an opportunity to present to the Director-General their agreed views on the general conduct of the second meeting of the U.N.R.R.A. Council in Montreal. Acheson and Law attended with members of their staffs. Ritchie, who was present from this Embassy, reports as follows:

Acheson expressed the view, in which Law concurred, that there was a very great danger of panic and separatism developing at this Council meeting unless careful plans covering the scope and tone of the meeting are prepared in advance. Clearly the report and address of the Director-General will be very influential in determining the course of the discussions in the Council. There would be alarm and claims for special privileges if the view became prevalent that U.N.R.R.A.'s supplies and financial resources were not adequate to satisfy all claims. Acheson would not suggest that supplies are necessarily known to be adequate but he urged the desirability of avoiding any suggestion in the Council that supplies are known to be inadequate. There are too many uncertainties to permit of any accurate general assessment of the position at this time. Law added the remark that while the final position cannot be known now, we can at least be certain that the resources which U.N.R.R.A. has at present are quite adequate for what U.N.R.R.A. can do at present. Since Acheson and Law could see no cause for alarm in the present situation they proposed for Lehman's consideration certain measures for allaying fears at the Council meeting:

1. No precise balance sheet should be issued at this Council meeting.
2. Favourable developments in the general supply position should be stressed including references to the promising discussions now under way concerning the procurement by U.N.R.R.A. at bargain prices of Army and other surplus property in this country and to the imminent availability of supplies from occupied enemy territory.
3. The United States and United Kingdom Army Civil Affairs representatives might be asked to address a closed executive session of the Council in order that the members might appreciate the extent to which the immediate needs of their countries are being looked after.
4. Finally it should be stressed that the success of U.N.R.R.A. in getting additional appropriations and supplies at a later stage will be largely determined by the record which can be achieved by that time. It is therefore essential that this session of the Council should not create the impression that U.N.R.R.A. is a divided and ineffectual organization not deserving of further support by the participating Governments.

Governor Lehman in reply emphasized that he was anxious not to encourage alarm but at the same time he could not conceal his real concern over the position which was developing. In particular he was worried by the situation which would be created by a general collapse in Europe eliminating the usual period of military operations in which the military would have assumed responsibility for relief. The size of the requests from some of the liberated areas (e.g., Greece at something like 450,000,000 dollars) was also giving some concern even though it was realized that these requests might subsequently be reduced. In addition the continuing lack of any definite classification of the various areas as paying or non-paying left a large element of uncertainty in U.N.R.R.A.'s future plans. Finally, Governor Lehman stressed the fact that the insistence of various national Governments on their right to have 90 percent of their contribution spent on procurement at home would have a restrictive effect on general procurement, particularly as some of the countries (e.g. the United Kingdom) and some Latin American countries could not provide supplies equivalent to the remaining 90 percent of their contribution in the near future.

Governor Lehman added that it was doubtful whether complete harmony could be maintained in any case, since the subject of supplies to ex-enemy territory would probably come up under item 6 of the provisional agenda.<sup>113</sup> Acheson and Law interrupted to say that this subject, particularly in the case of Italy, is now under discussion between the United States and the United Kingdom and they expressed the hope that it would not arise at the General Council Session.

Governor Lehman concluded by saying that he attached much weight to the argument put forward by Acheson and Law, but, in view of his own concern over the position, he would require some time to think over the suggestions before indicating whether or not he would accept them. He undertook to make a decision before the end of the week. He will probably see Law and Acheson at 9.30 Friday morning, August 4th. Plumtre and Ritchie will attend.

UNRRA MEETING IN MONTREAL

1. Teletype WA-4579 of August 3rd contains some very disturbing information concerning which I think early discussion is desirable.

2. The weakness of UNRRA lies in the absence of popular support and cannot be remedied except by publicity which Governments may dislike because it will force their hands in some circumstances.

3. The United States and United Kingdom arguments are, on the whole, opposed to publicity and they represent an attempt by two member countries to influence the Director-General of UNRRA behind the backs of other member countries. This puts the Director-General in the awkward position of having to engage in discussions which other members may consider disloyal to them or to offend the representatives of Great Britain and the United States. The teletype does not make it clear whether any other countries than Canada were represented at these discussions.

4. One can hardly imagine anything better calculated to arouse suspicion and uneasiness than reticence and evasion concerning the extent of UNRRA's resources. These resources have two distinct aspects—(a) physical and (b) financial, yet the United Kingdom and United States representatives suggest that no precise balance sheet should be issued at the Council meeting. By implication this means that if members press for information on this subject they are to be put off in one way or another.

5. The United Kingdom and United States representatives also suggest that favourable developments should be stressed and by implication that unfavourable developments should not be stressed. This amounts to little more than requesting someone in a fiduciary capacity to give false information by means of suppressio veri rather than by more explicit forms of deception.

6. A closed executive session of the Council is suggested at which information will be given about military relief. I am not clear whether Canada would be entitled to attend this meeting on the ground that it affected a supply matter and I am not clear whether my status at the Conference would enable me to attend as a member of the Canadian delegation. One of the Director-General's apprehensions is that if Europe is liberated very rapidly the military relief period may be shortened. The physical supply situation would not be prejudiced by the shortening of the military relief period but the financial situation might be, because supplies which would have been paid for out of military appropriations would have to be paid for out of the limited resources of UNRRA. This question might easily be raised at the closed executive session and it is one for which we should be prepared. It seems to me fantastic that if the liberating powers find to their agreeable surprise that military operations are shortened, they should decrease their contribution to relief because of the accounting difficulty involved in using a military appropriation. It might also be pointed out that the expectation has been that 80% of the primary financial cost of military relief would be recovered in the course of the distribution of the relief.

7. The next point raised by representatives of the United Kingdom and United States is of a very defeatist character. They say that it is essential that the session of the Council should not create the impression that UNRRA "is a divided and ineffectual organization not deserving of further support by the participating Governments." No one can disagree with this observation but it is possible to dissent very sharply from its use to justify a policy of concealment and evasion. UNRRA will appear less ineffectual if it faces its problems squarely and even if it has to show that its resources will not accomplish all that has to be done, it is hard to understand why anyone should accept this disclosure as a reason for reducing the resources.

8. The Director-General's first point concerns military relief and has already been discussed.

9. His second point concerns the large requests by some countries. If UNRRA's resources are limited, these requests reduce themselves to questions of priorities and while the discussion of such questions is bound to lead to argument in support of competing claims, it is difficult to see why the Council should not deal with the principles that should govern priorities, or why the discussion of these principles should be delegated by means of evasions to the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom.

10. The Director-General's third point concerns the difficulties that may arise if a country cannot supply goods or services itself as to nine-tenths of its contribution and does not feel able to increase the proportion of its contribution which takes the form of free currency. It is suggested that the constructive solution of this question would consist in the Combined Boards advising as to how the best use could be made of what are in substance blocked balances. They might, for instance, recommend the early re-establishment of parts of the United Kingdom textile industry. Alternatively, countries in a position to make a larger physical supply than can be covered by their financial contribution might be asked to accept from UNRRA payment in blocked currency.

11. The Director-General's final point concerns the controversy which he anticipates over supplies to ex-enemy territory. If UNRRA has kept out of this field because of the rule that enemy countries must pay in full for their supplies, the practical effect will be to turn it over to military relief, the cost of which is borne in the West by the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada. If UNRRA supplies are really inadequate, there would seem to be no very good reason why these countries should not undertake expressly a burden which will fall upon them in any event and acquire at this stage the prestige which will come from doing so. One cannot say anything about the East without knowing the Russian position.

12. Two practical questions appear to face us:

(a) Should we do anything to strengthen the Director-General's position at the present time?

(b) Should we suggest that the Prime Minister's opening speech should refer directly or by implication to any of the topics mentioned in this memorandum?

CANADIAN DELEGATION AT CONFERENCE

The Second Meeting of the Council of UNRRA in Montreal was a great personal triumph for Mr. Pearson. He not only made an excellent Chairman, both of the Council and of the Policy Committee of the Council, but he was able to do a great deal behind the scenes to smooth out difficulties which might have been serious if they had been dealt with by general discussion. Mr. Pearson was also particularly tactful and efficient in dealing with the press. His achievements were amply recognized at the final meeting, both by a letter from the press† expressing great satisfaction with the way in which news had been communicated to them and by the vote of thanks moved by the member for France, which went far beyond the usual recognition of the services of the Chairman.

Mr. Claxton, as Canadian spokesman at the Council meetings, also won golden opinions and his contribution to the success of the Conference in facilitating the local arrangements made by UNRRA and in leading the Canadian Delegation received general recognition.

Dr. Fauteux and Dr. Bouchard did a great deal to maintain contact with French-speaking Canada and played a very important part in the relations between the Canadian Delegation and the public.

Mrs. McWilliams was of particular help in entertaining the women members of other Delegations and in representing Canada at the Technical Sub-Committee on Welfare. I have asked Mrs. McWilliams to send us a report of her impressions of the Conference<sup>118</sup> in order than we may be able to see if any matters have come to her attention which are not fully appreciated by the members more closely connected with the Government.

Perhaps I can describe my own services best as those of a spare tire which, fortunately, did not have to be much used.

The Technical Advisers seem to have been well chosen to cover the ground without waste of personnel.

Dr. C. P. Brown<sup>119</sup> was very active in connection with the drafting of the two Sanitary Conventions, with the progress of which I believe he is now fully satisfied. The meetings were very useful in making it possible to establish easy relations between our own Department of Pensions and National Health and the representatives of other Governments concerned with health matters.

Mr. English (Trade and Commerce) found a good deal to do in discussing the purchases which paying countries may wish to make for reconstruction purposes, whether for cash or by means of export credits.

Colonel Browne<sup>120</sup> was able to clear up some matters in connection with the position of Canadian Voluntary Agencies and, in particular, to do something to ensure that any personnel which they may supply to UNRRA will be adequately covered by insurance against injury.

Mr. Wasson and Mr. Heasman, representing the Mutual Aid Board, were able to discuss a number of contracts with the supply officials of UNRRA. Mr. Geddes of Wartime Prices and Trade Board participated in some of these discussions.

Mr. Paterson and Mr. Allen from Washington contributed to the discussion on the relationship of the Combined Boards to UNRRA.

Mr. Chapdelaine made a very efficient secretary and the stenographic work was well done by Miss Strachan and Miss Rivard.

DESPATCH 897

Ottawa, June 17, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the amount of the contribution which Canada is obligated to make under Article V of the Agreement for United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration<sup>121</sup> has been determined to be $77,000,000 Canadian, which is the approximate equivalent of 1% of the national income of Canada for the year ending June 30, 1943. This calculation conforms to the recommendation contained in Section 4 of Resolution 14 of the First Session of the Council of UNRRA.<sup>122</sup>

In accordance with Section 5 of Resolution 14, not less than 10% of the above amount is to be made available to UNRRA in such form of currency as can be expended outside Canada. I am, therefore, enclosing a cheque for $6,886,936.93 United States, in favour of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. This sum is the equivalent in United States dollars of the balance due to UNRRA after deducting from $7,700,000 Canadian the amount of $55,500 which was paid in December 1943 on account of administrative expenses. The present payment, therefore, includes the balance due by Canada for administrative expenses, namely, $250,000.

I shall appreciate it if, when you transmit this cheque to the Director General, you will inform him that, in accordance with Resolution 14, the balance of the Canadian contribution will be in the form of a credit in Canadian currency which will be available for the purchase of supplies and services in Canada. Legislation to provide funds covering this credit has been passed by the House of Commons and is now before the Senate of Canada.<sup>123</sup>

See Canada, Statutes, 8 George VI, Chapter 15. The War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act, 1944—assented to 23 June, 1944.

It is hoped that the delay which has occurred in fulfilling Canada's financial obligations under the UNRRA Agreement has occasioned no inconvenience to UNRRA. You may tell the Director General informally that, although the sum of $10,000,000 which has already been voted will not itself suffice to cover orders of any size after the present payment has been made, there should be no hesitation on the part of the Administration in placing orders in Canada as we shall be able to make arrangements to finance these orders pending the passage into law of the Mutual Aid Bill now before Parliament.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I received the other day a letter from Hendrickson, the Director of the Bureau of Supplies of UNRRA, on certain questions arising out of the last meeting of the Supplies Committee. In this letter, Hendrickson included the following paragraph:

"Incidentally, I hope that you will call the attention of appropriate officials of your Government at Ottawa particularly to the first section of my report† with respect to procurement arrangements in Canada. We are extremely proud of the fine relationship which has developed and appreciative of the cordial and cooperative attitude found not only there but in the person of the Chairman of our Committee. I hope that you will not resist in any way our calling fairly frequent attention to this to other governments because we feel that this model relationship should have a significant and helpful effect in our relationships with other governments. I have in fact asked our information people to prepare at an early date a release which relates to this subject."

I have already referred to UNRRA's feelings about Canadian cooperation in my comments on the last meeting of the Committee, but I thought you might like to have this additional expression of their appreciation.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Pearson,

We have been discussing here means of ensuring that our surplus war assets are offered to UNRRA.

The present plan is for Mr. J. H. Berry, Chairman of the Crown Assets Allocation Committee, to keep Mr. E. E. Wasson, Head of the UNRRA Procurement Division of the Mutual Aid Administration, regularly advised of the supplies which come before his Committee for consideration. It is proposed that Mr. Wasson in turn will regularly advise the UNRRA procurement authorities in Washington with a view to disposing of such supplies to UNRRA if at all possible. Is this procedure acceptable to you?

Insofar as UNRRA programs of requirements submitted to the C.P.R.B. are concerned, we will make arrangements through the Standing Committee of the External Trade Advisory Committee which will ensure that, in consideration of the possibility of meeting these requirements in Canada, account is taken of surplus war assets.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Angus,

The tentative arrangements for bringing surplus supplies to the attention of UNRRA as outlined in your letter of August 14th seem to be most satisfactory.

For the purpose of any discussions which we might have here with the U.S., U.K., or UNRRA it would be useful if we could know the priority which Canada proposes to assign to UNRRA as a purchaser of suitable types of surplus supplies.

I find from informal conversations here that the Canadian arrangements appear to have progressed considerably further than the U.S. or U.K. arrangements for making surpluses available to UNRRA. In fact I understand from the U.K. people that no policy or machinery has yet been proposed, to their knowledge, for making any surpluses in the U.K. available to UNRRA.

There is some discussion in Washington of the British White Paper on surplus property which was issued on July 18th<sup>124</sup> and it may be that the question of UNRRA's relation to the U.K. surplus disposal program will receive some attention shortly. On the U.S. side I gather that there have been some informal discussions and that on one occasion the C.P.R.B. advised the UNRRA supply people that they would be wise to set aside something like $15,000,000 for procurement of surplus merchandise provided it can be purchased at bargain prices.<sup>125</sup> The whole question of U.S. surplus property disposal is in a state of considerable flux and much will depend on the outcome of the present deliberations in the Senate. I might say that in neither of the bills before the Senate is there any specific provision for UNRRA in the priorities arrangements provided. So far as we know the only reference to UNRRA in any of the bills, hearings, reports, or debates, occurs in the Senate Small Business Committee's report on the Senate-initiated bill. In referring to the disposal of surpluses located abroad this report makes the observation that,

"Most of these goods will not become surplus until after the end of the European phase of the war. The surpluses will then include chiefly consumer type goods including vehicles and military equipment. Consumer goods will find a natural market in relief and rehabilitation as administered by the United Nations Relief and [Rehabilitation] Administration. Military equipment will be returned to this country ..."

For your strictly confidential information a discussion took place at yesterday's meeting of the E.T.A.C.,<sup>127</sup> concerning the quantity of wheat which Canada would expect to furnish as part of its contribution to UNRRA. It was emphasized that it would be politically impossible not to furnish a considerable quantity of wheat as part of Canada's contribution to UNRRA itself even though the paying countries would, no doubt, buy wheat as well. Some fear was expressed lest the orders for other commodities which have been accepted or are in prospect and which amount in the aggregate to some 31 million dollars might not reach a point at which it would not be possible for UNRRA to purchase the quantity of wheat that Canadian opinion would consider adequate without employing its free funds. UNRRA's readiness to employ free funds for this purpose might well be limited by the availability of credits in the United States which could be used for the purchase of wheat there. In these circumstances it is probable that in the near future we shall be making a request of UNRRA to agree to take a certain quantity of Canadian wheat as part of our contribution. The quantity mentioned in the discussion was 25 million bushels and if this quantity were supplied at current prices it would come near to exhausting the credit which is being established in UNRRA's favour so that all future purchases by UNRRA would have to be for cash. It might be a preferable course to follow if UNRRA were to commit itself to the purchase of a given quantity of Canadian wheat and if we, relying on this commitment, were to continue to fill other orders against the credit which we have opened. I mention this matter to you at the earliest possible moment in order that we may have the benefit of any comment which you may care to make while the Canadian position is still fluid and before a definite conclusion has been reached.

Cairns and Weintraub of UNRRA inform us that they anticipate fairly heavy demands for wheat when UNRRA takes over responsibility for providing foodstuffs to liberated areas. At the moment UNRRA is prevented from estimating its requirements or initiating extensive procurement by the uncertainty as to the date on which UNRRA will take over responsibility from the Military and the related uncertainty as to the quantities of wheat which the Military will transfer to UNRRA on that date. It is not possible to say what proportion of this unknown quantity of wheat will be procured in Canada. There are indications, however, that UNRRA may be presenting Canada with requests for some quantities of wheat very shortly. The UNRRA officials recognize that their wheat purchases in Canada may involve the payment to Canada of U.S. dollars or other free exchange as such a large part of Canada's contribution to UNRRA will have been already taken up with the purchase of other commodities. TELETYPE EX-4287

CONFIDENTIAL. Following for Pearson from Angus, Begins: Your WA-6001 of October 19th, wheat for UNRRA. The reply transmitted in your teletype is a very natural one for UNRRA to give and yet I hesitate to accept it as final because of the reactions which it may have here. If UNRRA were to proceed with other orders and exhaust its credit in Canadian dollars then when the time came to procure wheat it might easily be to UNRRA's advantage to use what are substantially blocked United States dollars for this purpose and to procure no substantial proportion of its wheat in Canada. There would be a strong disposition here to protect ourselves against that eventuality by reserving part of our Canadian dollar credit and refusing to honour UNRRA orders for things other than wheat placed against this credit. I should be very reluctant to see such a development taking place unless it had been cleared with UNRRA as an arrangement acceptable to UNRRA. However, it is fully realized that the total amount of wheat sold for relief purposes may be approximately the same whether wheat is taken by the military authorities, by UNRRA or by the paying countries. It is, however, felt that the psychological reaction might be undesirable if no substantial part of the Canadian contribution to UNRRA appeared to take the form of wheat.

I realize the difficulty that Cairns and Weintraub will have in making any firm commitment. Indeed, it may be impossible for them to do so but I think that they, in turn, should be ready to recognize the force of the Canadian argument and to agree to an arrangement by which they will begin payments in free funds for commodities procured in Canada after their procurement against the Canadian dollar credit has reached $42,000,000, leaving $25,000,000 to be expended on wheat at some time or other unless some different arrangement is reached. The effect of this proposal would be to place blocked Canadian dollars available for wheat there on a similar footing to blocked United States dollars so that UNRRA would have no conceivable incentive to purchase wheat in the United States rather than in Canada.

In any case, my hope is that some adequate understanding can be reached that will obviate the dangers of measures which might be misunderstood. Ends.

Wilson,<sup>129</sup> who was also here, is familiar with McIvor's views. As you recognize, it is the Combined Food Board, thought its Cereals Committee, and not UNRRA, which decides where UNRRA's wheat supplies shall come from within the limits, of course, of the contributions available from the various member Governments and influenced also no doubt by price considerations. I have spoken again to the UNRRA people about the difficulties that would be caused if no UNRRA wheat were purchased in Canada, and am having a further talk with them about it this afternoon. This informal view is that we need have little worry on this score, as a substantial amount of UNRRA wheat and flour will be required from Canada in any event. McIvor also does not seem to be very worried about this possible danger and gave me the impression when in Washington that we need not push for UNRRA wheat allocations at the moment because we already have our hands full supplying the existing demands. You may wish to talk to Wilson on this point, as he attended the discussions of the Cereals Committee in Washington last week. With a Canadian Chairman on that Committee, we ought to be able to ensure that an appropriate amount of UNRRA wheat comes from Canada. TELETYPE WA-6098

Following for H. F. Angus from L. B. Pearson, Begins: UNRRA food purchases.

Message referred to in my immediately preceding teletype begins:

1. Important question has arisen concerning relationship of UNRRA's procurement activities to established purchasing arrangements of C.F.B. countries particularly where preclusive purchasing agreement is in force as result C.F.B. recommendation. At Fats Committee last week it was reported that UNRRA had received offer of 5,000 tons Brazilian cotton seed oil and that price quoted by Brazilian Government was over two cents higher than current buying price of F.E.A. Although UNRRA had not accepted offer American spokesman alleged that in ensuing weeks no oil had been obtainable at current prices which were maxima and that Canada for which F.E.A. was then attempting to buy had accordingly gone short. Both Americans and Canadians protested to UNRRA in strongest terms and Committee drew executive officers attention to potentially dangerous situation.

2. Executive officers decided discuss with UNRRA whole range of their procurement activities in third countries and saw Hendrickson this week. They explained C.F.B. interests in these activities were threefold.

- (a) Avoidance of interference with any production plans, e.g., Brazilian rice;
- (b) Maintenance of control over allocations.
- (c) Price policy.

They hoped that before UNRRA missions went out there would be fullest exchange of views to cover these interests and that where preclusive buying arrangements were in force UNRRA, which had community of interest as consumer, would buy through U.S.A. or U.K. agency concerned.

3. UNRRA believed that over (a) and (b) there should be no difficulty. They would maintain constant contact with Board at official level and before concluding any purchase would seek formal allocation in considering which Board could take into account any point arising under (a). We agreed that subject to any points arising under (c) this was all we could ask for so far as countries not members of Board were concerned. We requested, however, that in case of prospective purchases in U.S.A., Canada or U.K. including Colonies, UNRRA should strictly observe practice of obtaining allocations first and proceeding to negotiations with national agencies later. This was directed largely against recent UNRRA activities in Canada and attitude had fullest support of Canadian executive officer. UNRRA agreed to follow this procedure. Please confirm it is acceptable to you in case of commodities on C.F.B. reserved list in which case you may wish consider obtaining adherence of other L.F.C.<sup>130</sup> countries.

4. On 2 (c), UNRRA stated emphatically that they could not, repeat not, contemplate use of U.S.A. or U.K. procurement agencies in third countries. Whether this negative applied to purchases in Canada or L.F.C. countries was not clear but UNRRA informed us certain of their members had raised the point with them explicitly and insisted that their contributions should be made to UNRRA direct. We believe member countries concerned included Brazil. In UNRRA's view it was inevitable that they send missions to all potential contributors to discuss nature of their contributions and that these missions would receive offers accompanied by price quotations. At this point, they would if at all interested in offers received, refer to Boards for allocations as in paragraph 3 above.

5. We pointed out that in some cases it might be inevitable to use purchasing agents of the U.S.A. or U.K. For instance it might be impossible otherwise to organize commercial operations pertaining to export and we cited Iraqi barley. In other cases U.K. or U.S.A. might have surpluses available for UNRRA arising from past purchases and we could not believe that either UNRRA or Government of country of origin would desire cost of such supplies in all cases to be charged against U.K. or U.S.A. contributions. Moreover, where U.K. or U.S.A. had already bought whole exportable surpluses of some commodity UNRRA were unnecessarily restricting flexibility of their financial arrangements if they did not admit possibility of some part of these exports being made to UNRRA's account against contribution of producing country. UNRRA admitted possibility of latitude in all these cases but we were unable shake them on question of principle. Bearing in mind attitude of Latin Americans at Atlantic City and Montreal, we cannot but admit UNRRA's political objections have some force. Please therefore consider whether point should be pressed further in which case high level approach will be necessary. If you do decide to press it you will no doubt enlist support of Dominions and consult with those present at Atlantic City as to spirit of arrangements there agreed. We were under impression Resolution 17 A III 1<sup>131</sup> gave us all we need but UNRRA take "national agencies" to mean agencies of contributing country. From remainder of paragraph their interpretation certainly derives plausibility and you may be able ascertain how wording got changed from that contained in A III 3 of report of Committee II<sup>1</sup> which was clearly designed to meet our point. Chilvers<sup>132</sup> recollection is that Australian delegation played prominent part at this stage.

6. Accepting for present that they would be adamant about co-ordinated buying we proceeded request UNRRA for assurance that they would, where appropriate, consult with our national agencies regarding prices. After lengthy argument they agreed but stipulated there should be no formal record that such consultation was taking place in any instance since otherwise greatest dissatisfaction would be caused to their contributing members. They admitted that in fact they had strong interest in keeping prices down and believed rather ingenuously that by encouraging in their contributors spirit of direct contributions to relief rather than commercial bargaining they would in fact acquire commodities at prices below existing world levels. We shall of course have formal record of meeting which will include agreement in principle to consult in cases where Board may ask for such consultation and we consider this is substantial point gained.

7. We cannot conceal, however, continued apprehensions of upset to arrangements carefully constructed over last two years especially if we remember that UNRRA officials both at Headquarters and in field of operation though well meaning tend to add impetuosity to their inexperience. Moreover we are nervous lest appearance of UNRRA as an independent buyer will prove powerful nail in coffin of co-ordinated buying arrangements which as you know important interests in U.S.G. including State Department would not be sorry to bury. UNRRA of course represent that in reality they are not buyers at all but in fact their acceptance and rejection of offers could not be undertaken except on some kind of commercial basis. Finally we doubt whether in case of commodities, e.g., fats bought on day-to-day allocation system can be effectively worked and policed except through machinery of preclusive buying.

8. You should note that opposition to co-ordinated buying does not, repeat not, extend to operations in neutral countries including Argentina while such countries remain outside UNRRA. No UNRRA missions to these countries are presently contemplated and UNRRA indicate that they would in appropriate cases e.g., Argentine meat, be glad of our assistance. Similarly we imagine U.S.A. and U.K. could make their own terms in case of third country commodities charged against their own free exchange contributions, so that present issue is confined to commodities directly borne on a third country's own contribution and is we suppose of trivial scope except in case of Brazil.

9. We have advised Embassy, Treasury delegation, and B.R.M.M.<sup>133</sup> of these discussions. You may wish to see that reply reaches us in interdepartmental series. Ends.

Washington, October 26, 1944

Dear Mr. Angus,

I had a very interesting discussion last evening with Mr. Weintraub (acting head of the UNRRA Bureau of Supplies in the absence of Mr. Hendrickson) and Mr. Cairns, mainly on two questions: (1) UNRRA's current difficulties with the Combined Food Board on their procurement activities in third countries; and (2) our desire to secure from UNRRA assurances that requests for wheat and flour will soon be made to Canada.

As to (1), I mentioned that there had been some suggestion that the difficulties in question might be brought to the attention of the Committee on Supplies and that a decision on the principles involved should be sought. I stated my view that this would be unwise and unnecessary; that it should be possible to work out this problem without reference to the Supplies Committee and that the Committee should be only a court of last resort.

I outlined the difficulty as I had had it described to me by Mr. Paterson and as stated in teletyped WA-6098 of October 25th. I found that the UNRRA people appreciated that it would be most undesirable if UNRRA and U.K.-U.S. procurement agencies competed in third countries for available supplies, the only result of which would be to force up the price unnecessarily. Both Mr. Weintraub and Mr. Cairns and I felt that such competition could be avoided by consultation between UNRRA and the particular agencies concerned before UNRRA entered into any negotiations with third countries for purchases or before supply missions were sent to them. They seem to think that arrangements could be worked out to this end. I emphasized that such consultation must be very close, continuous and confidential and that it was up to the people concerned to see that this was brought about. Otherwise there would be nothing but trouble.

I was told that UNRRA, however, could not accept the view which was being proposed by the British and by the U.S. (FEA) that they should use U.K.-U.S. agencies in third countries as the machinery for procurement of UNRRA supplies from those countries. The resolutions of the UNRRA Council were quite specific in this regard and the interpretation (I agree with them in this) being given to the resolutions by the U.S. and U.K. is a forced and unfair one. There is no question that when paragraph 3, Section 3, of Resolution I refers to "established national agencies, concerned with the procurement, handling, storage and transport of supplies" what is meant, in the case, for instance, of Brazil, would be a Brazilian agency and not a U.S. or U.K. agency operating in Brazil.

UNRRA states that the third countries concerned would be the first to object to the use of such outside agencies in their procurement relationships with UNRRA. They would object on grounds of national prestige and also because they may feel they have a better chance of getting a reasonable price for the supplies in question if they dealt directly with UNRRA. This latter point is an important one. There is no doubt that if great care is not exercised, the valuation by certain member Governments of their relief supplies will be higher than is justifiable. For that purpose, consultation with the U.K. or U.S. agencies referred to above is essential. At the same time, as the UNRRA people point out, there may be occasions when a country such as Brazil would be entitled to place a somewhat higher valuation on supplies to UNRRA in the future than has been imposed by the U.K. and U.S. on similar supplies for war purposes. I pointed out that if UNRRA felt that valuations were unfairly high, the matter could be taken up with the Committee on Supplies. Also any member Government could take similar action if it felt that other member Governments were under-valuating supplies in order to force supplies on UNRRA.

I think that my talk with the UNRRA people served the useful purpose of underlining the necessity for the most complete consultation with the U.K. and U.S. agencies concerned, prior to any UNRRA approach to member Governments on procurement questions.

The second question is of more immediate interest to us—UNRRA procurement policies in Canada. I mentioned again that we were concerned with the fact that UNRRA had already placed orders in Canada amounting to almost 31 million dollars (Cairns interposed to say that this might reach 40 million dollars if other proposals under consideration were accepted) and that no wheat or flour was included in this amount. This obviously was an unsatisfactory position for Canada and I said that I would like to get some kind of assurance that wheat and flour will be included in Canada's UNRRA supplies. This could be done by using free exchange to purchase additional non-wheat supplies in Canada for UNRRA and reserving now an amount for wheat and flour. It could also be done by Canada refusing to accept further orders unless they include wheat and flour. Cairns intervened here to express the strong hope that we would not take this latter stand. He said that they had been very greatly helped recently by getting from Canada certain goods in short supply and if they could not have continued access to Canada for such goods because of the necessity of ordering some wheat first, it would injure them very seriously. I appreciated the importance of this but told them that we should not be penalized by our understanding and co-operative attitude in this matter, by finding out later that surplus goods such as wheat would be supplied by other countries.

I think that our preoccupations in this matter are now thoroughly understood. In addition to the use of free exchange for purchasing further relief supplies in Canada, Cairns pointed out that there was another possibility which would help us, namely the sale to paying countries of a part of the supplies which had already been procured, the amount of which sale would be credited to us, thereby reducing the value of UNRRA procurements. I took this point up quickly and said that it would be an admirable thing to do and that it would help us greatly. This, as a matter of fact, was the first time I had known that any of the 31 million dollars worth of orders already placed could be used in this way. I thought they were all for UNRRA non-paying members.

Weintraub also suggested that we might begin negotiations now with UNRRA for wheat and flour supplies. We could for instance supply them with information as to how much we would like to include in our contribution and other details including the important one of price. In this connection, I understand there have already been some discussions with UNRRA on the price of relief wheat from Canada. If I am to help you in this matter, I should have full information concerning such price discussions.

Negotiations now with UNRRA would at least have the result of starting the ball rolling and would put our wheat and flour position directly to UNRRA and through them to the Combined Board. For this reason, I think it would be useful if we could take this question up with UNRRA at once and I would be glad to have your views on the matter and any necessary instructions.

One or two other points arose in our discussion which I might just mention. The UNRRA representatives accepted without reservation the position that, in respect of commodities under allocation, the Combined Boards are the allocating agencies and that UNRRA itself could not procure any such supplies except after an allocation made for that purpose by the appropriate board.

I also asked whether there had been any suggestion by any UNRRA member that its 10 percent of free exchange should have any strings attached to its use. I was thinking particularly of the U.S. I was assured that the position in this matter was as stated previously and I was told that a free exchange contribution was exactly what its name implied and could be spent by UNRRA anywhere.

Finally I enquired whether there had been difficulties with FEA over the stand taken by that agency that once an allocation had been made to the U.S.

the latter, presumably FEA, would decide when and where the supplies should be sent for distribution by UNRRA. I told the UNRRA people that this was an indefensible position and that, if the U.S. maintained it, the matter would have to come before the Committee on Supplies. It appears that there is a dispute in FEA over this matter. Emerson, of the Liberated Areas Committee and the U.S. representative on the Committee on Supplies, takes the sensible view that UNRRA is alone responsible for the time and place of distribution of the supplies which it has received. Parisius of the Food Division of FEA, feels that the U.S. authorities must retain control of their own contributions to UNRRA. UNRRA itself has no intention of yielding on this very important point but feel that there is a good chance of the Parisius position being abandoned and that they may not have to bring the matter to the attention of the Committee on Supplies at all. I hope so, because that Committee could come to only one decision, namely, that the U.S. must withdraw from this position or every other country must have the same privilege. This, as UNRRA pointed out to me, would make the administration of relief by them impossible.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

TELETYPE EX-4390

Ottawa, October 28, 1944

Following for Pearson from Angus, Begins: Your WA-6097 of October 25th, UNRRA food purchases. The text of the message contained in WA-6098 has been referred to the interested Departments because the question of prices for supplies furnished to UNRRA is one which is occasioning some difficulty here. The following comments are made before receiving the replies of the Departments and, therefore, may be modified later:

It is obviously very difficult to suggest that UNRRA should not deal with member countries direct in making its purchases, although it might be possible to ask UNRRA not to offer prices or accept goods at prices which disrupt efficient procurement arrangements, for example, by leading to hoarding. This seems to be the view which UNRRA has taken as set out in paragraph 4 of the teletype.

The reference in paragraph 3 to UNRRA activities in Canada appears to be concerned with enquiries made from UNRRA by the Mutual Aid Board, that is by Mr. Wasson. There may be no great harm in this as long as the enquiries are merely enquiries and as long as it is clearly understood that any tentative arrangements are subject to clearances as regards supplies by the appropriate Committee here and as regards priorities with the Combined Boards.

We can see no objection to UNRRA using other purchasing agencies as a matter of convenience to UNRRA and to the supplying country concerned. If, however, the supplies have already been bought by, for example, the United Kingdom or the United States, it seems rather doubtful whether UNRRA should be in a position to object to that country passing on these supplies as part of its own contribution to UNRRA without first obtaining the sanction of the supplying country which had parted with the supplies by an out-and-out sale.

These comments are of the most tentative character but it may be useful for you to have them at the present stage, since you suggest that the question may be cleared up by informal discussions. Ends.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, October 31, 1944

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I was greatly interested in your letter of October 26th dealing with (1) UNRRA's procurement in third countries and (2) our desire that UNRRA should take a substantial part of the Canadian contribution in the form of wheat.

I quite agree with you about (1) as you will see from my teletype which crossed with your letter. In the teletype, however, I did not specifically say that I agreed, as I do, that the United States and United Kingdom are giving a wrong interpretation to "established national agencies concerned with the procurement, handling, storage and transport of supplies," if they mean that the agencies established by their Governments are to be the means of procurement in third countries with national agencies of their own. Even in other countries, it seems to me the United States and United Kingdom procurement machinery should only be used if the third countries are agreeable to this course. As you point out, the question of price is important. It would be most inequitable for the United States and Canada to insist on imposing their own prices on the goods which they supply while expecting other countries to submit to the controls incidental to monopoly buying.

In the matter of price, the most difficult question seems to me to be one which has not yet arisen, namely: Can UNRRA reasonably offer a high price in order to make use of a currency which it could not otherwise employ?

I am not at all happy about the second question and I am afraid that the Canadian position is not entirely clear as yet. At the risk of some repetition, I am, therefore, going to state it again.

(a) Canada is desirous that a substantial proportion of the Canadian contribution to UNRRA should be made in the form of wheat. This proportion has been fixed at $25,000,000, which sum is to include freight charges. The quantity of wheat will, therefore, depend on the amount of these charges and on the price of the wheat.

(b) Owing to transportation difficulties and other demands, Canada will probably not be in a position to supply any considerable portion of this wheat during the winter months. It follows that some sort of reservation is necessary in order to avoid the exhaustion of our funds by other requests.

(c) Technically, the position is that the Mutual Aid Board has relatively small free funds at its disposal—perhaps $2,300,000 remain over from the original vote of $10,000,000. As regards the bulk of the Canadian contribution, the duty of the Mutual Aid Board is, by law, to supply such goods and services as it approves. This leaves it legally free to impose a veto of a sort on arrangements made between UNRRA and even the Combined Boards, with Canadian approval.

(d) It appears probable from what you say in your letter that the Canadian contribution administered by the Mutual Aid Board will shortly be exhausted since $40,000,000 worth of orders are given or in prospect and since it is expected that $25,000,000 should take the form of wheat. The problem before us is: What should happen when the remaining portion of the contribution disappears? Presumably, it consists of the $2,300,000 already mentioned and of the balance of $67,000,000 in the hands of the Mutual Aid Board.

(e) I gather that these sources may be augmented by certain sums which may be transmitted by UNRRA to the Mutual Aid Board as the proceeds of the resale of supplies obtained in Canada which has been passed on to paying countries. I am enquiring how the Board would treat these sums for the purpose of its accounting.

(f) Turning to the problem of reservation, two courses are possible. The first is that we should set aside $25,000,000 to be used later for wheat and that when other funds are exhausted we should ask UNRRA to pay for its supplies in free funds as it orders them. From what you say in your letter, I am inclined to think that this is going to be the only practicable course.

(g) The alternative which I have suggested was that UNRRA should undertake to purchase ultimately wheat to the value of $25,000,000 Canadian, and should proceed in the meantime to place orders with the Mutual Aid Board for which payment from free funds would not be required. This alternative seems to be impossible because UNRRA is not in a position to say where that wheat will be obtained as this is a question which will be decided for it by the Combined Boards.

(h) There remains, it is true, the vague possibility of persuading our agencies to accept an expression of general expectation to purchase wheat in Canada made by Weintraub and Cairns. This might give rise to the most serious misunderstanding, particularly as, in the future, purchases of wheat might be made by the paying countries and by military relief rather than by UNRRA itself. If this possibility is important, it might be possible to ask our agencies to consider withdrawing altogether from their request that funds should be reserved for the purchase of wheat.

(i) I agree with you that the question of price is extremely important. However, it is a very difficult one on which to obtain a clear statement. Roughly the position is that the quantity of wheat actually owned by the Canadian Government is not very great. It is being used for Mutual Aid supply and other Government purposes. When it is exhausted the Government will be selling as a trustee for the farmers and will be under a duty to obtain for them the best price it can. The tendency is to quote an artificial price based on the price of wheat in Chicago. I suppose it is always open to UNRRA to buy at this price but I do not know whether any progress has been made with negotiations directed to obtaining a lower price for UNRRA. I shall, however, make what enquiries I can in order to send you further information on this point. I do not know whether a similar difficulty with respect to price is going to confront us in the case of military relief both as regards wheat and as regards other commodities. As you know, Canadian exporters are not limited by the Canadian price ceiling. It may be possible for you to see how this matter is going to be treated by the United States and the United Kingdom in respect of supplies which they furnish.

Yours sincerely,

H. F. ANGUS

DESPATCH 1610

Ottawa, November 10, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that consideration has been given to the way in which Canada should discharge the obligation to supply wheat for relief purposes which arises under paragraph 2 of Article 6 of the Wheat Agreement.<sup>134</sup> After making allowance for the wheat donated to Greece, which counts as a Canadian contribution under the Wheat Agreement, there remains a residual commitment of 10,000,000 bushels. The International Wheat Council has designated UNRRA as the distributing agency for wheat to be made available for relief under the Wheat Agreement. It is, therefore, necessary for the discharge of Canada's obligation that UNRRA should take 10,000,000 bushels of wheat from Canada.

See Canada, Treaty Series, 1942, No. 11.

2. It is not entirely clear that we should fulfil our obligations if the wheat in question were to be sold to UNRRA and payment received out of the funds at UNRRA's disposal for expenditure outside the countries which contributed them. It is, therefore, essential that part of the Canadian commodity contribution should take the form of wheat.

3. It has, therefore, been decided to advise the Mutual Aid Board that in making supplies available for UNRRA by means of the Mutual Aid vote provision should be made for setting aside $16,000,000 to cover the cost of supplying 10,000,000 bushels of wheat at the Canadian Wheat Board's Class II price and for financing the transportation of this wheat to the seaboard.

4. I should appreciate it if you will inform UNRRA of the action which has been taken and of the reason why it has been taken, and if you will point out that the effect of setting aside these funds will be that UNRRA will reach somewhat earlier than would otherwise have been the case a point at which additional procurement in Canada will have to be financed out of the funds at UNRRA's disposal which can be spent outside the country which contributes them.

Washington, November 30, 1944

Following for Angus from Pearson, Begins: Your teletype EX-4752 of November 29th.† There is only one question that might make a meeting of the Supplies Committee desirable between now and the end of December; namely, the question raised in your communication to UNRRA regarding the setting aside of ten million bushels of wheat for them. This has disturbed them very much, and I will be getting a letter today or tomorrow expressing that disturbance. They feel that an important question of principle is involved, namely, whether any member of UNRRA can specifically earmark its contribution in this way. They are afraid that if this practice were followed by every state, especially South American ones, they would be in difficulties. They appreciate our special difficulty in regard to our Wheat Council Relief obligations, but this, they think, is a difficulty which should be worked out between us and the Council. I hope, myself, that this question will not be submitted to the Committee on Supplies and that, after we receive the UNRRA reply, we will be able to settle the problem between the Administration and ourselves. If this can be done, then I do not think the Committee on Supplies need meet until January. Ends.

Washington, December 1, 1944

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Thank you for your letter of 16th November† advising us that your Government has decided to set aside $16 million of its contribution to UNRRA to cover the cost of supplying and transporting to the seaboard the 10 million bushels of wheat yet to be delivered by Canada against its commitment under paragraph 2 of Article VI (Relief Pool) of the International Wheat Agreement.

While fully recognizing the circumstances which led your Government to this decision, we would like to place on record the importance we attach, as a matter of principle, to the Administration's retaining its freedom of action to negotiate with contributing member governments concerning both the type and value of their contributions in kind.

I am certain your Government will recognize the force of a precedent which would permit a contributing member to decide unilaterally the form in which contributions in kind will be made to UNRRA. If other members had followed that practice, it might have proved impossible to procure in Canada many of the items that Canada is now supplying and if the decision of your Government is permitted to stand as a precedent to be followed by others it will certainly prove very difficult to procure in Canada with free exchange commodities which might most economically be procured there.

As in the case of all other food, feed, and soap commodities under allocation, we expect to place our orders for wheat in the supplying countries recommended by the Combined Food Board in consultation with UNRRA under the agreed procedure set forth in Document CFB(44) 129,† a copy of which I enclose for your information. You will note that paragraph 13 of that document provides that "... the CFB will, on the basis of advice from UNRRA, recommend allocations from each source of supply which will ensure, to the extent possible, the fulfillment of that country's mutually agreed total contribution to UNRRA."

In view of the above I should deeply appreciate it if your Government would reconsider its decision and reopen the discussion, informally begun some time ago, concerning the quantity of wheat to be supplied by Canada as part of its contribution to UNRRA. Should your Government consider it advisable, UNRRA would welcome a discussion of the problems involved with the representatives on the Combined Food Board and the International Wheat Council of the several member governments concerned.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, December 7, 1944

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I am referring to your despatch No. 2729 of December 5th† transmitting a copy of a letter from you to Mr. Hendrickson, dated November 16th,† and a copy of Mr. Hendrickson's reply dated December 1st. Both letters refer to the way in which Canada should discharge her obligation to supply wheat for relief purposes under paragraph 2 of Article 6 of the International Wheat Agreement.

The Canadian authorities will not wish to deal with this question in such a way as to create a precedent which may be embarrassing for UNRRA and it would be in order for you to reopen the discussions concerning the quantity of wheat to be supplied by Canada as part of its contribution to UNRRA in order to see if the objects of the Canadian Government can be effected in such a way as will not embarrass UNRRA.

The first of these objects is to discharge Canada's obligation under Article 6 of the International Wheat Agreement without having to increase the total Canadian contribution to UNRRA beyond the sum of $77,000,000 which corresponds to 1% of the Canadian national income. Our understanding is that the Wheat Council has decided that delivery of wheat to UNRRA will constitute a discharge of Canada's obligation under the International Wheat Agreement. It is not clear that sale to UNRRA or sale for military relief purposes would constitute such a discharge. In the circumstances it appears to us quite reasonable to ask UNRRA to accept the Canadian contributions in such a way as to avoid increasing the total Canadian commitment. It is not considered that allocation by the Combined Food Board should interfere with this object as there would seem to be no reason why the Combined Food Board itself should not take into account the position of Canada under the Wheat Agreement.

I do not consider that Canada's action constitutes "a precedent which would permit a contributing member to decide unilaterally the form in which contributions in kind will be made to UNRRA." The Canadian action is related to a specific obligation in connection with relief—an obligation which has already been somewhat reduced by Canada's gift of wheat to Greece. It is very far from amounting to an assertion of a right to decide capriciously what commodities Canada will supply in discharge of her obligation to UNRRA. Indeed to leave the decision to UNRRA might very well have the effect of forcing Canada to make a subscription of $77,000,000 to UNRRA and of an additional $16,000,000 to cover the cost of the wheat which Canada must provide under the Wheat Agreement. Indeed, mere delay on UNRRA's part might have this effect even if UNRRA were ultimately to purchase wheat from Canada.

The second Canadian objective is that a substantial part of Canada's contribution to UNRRA in commodities as distinct from any sales which may be made to UNRRA against UNRRA's free funds should be in the form of wheat. Serious misunderstandings might arise with Canadian agricultural interests if this were not the case even though substantial quantities of wheat might be supplied for related purposes either to paying countries or on account of military relief. It appears to the Canadian authorities that UNRRA's interest in this matter is, from the standpoint of good public relations, identical with that of the Canadian authorities and that it would be very regrettable if the procedures of the Combined Food Board were to result in defeating this aim.

As has been explained earlier in this correspondence, Canada is not in a position to supply large quantities of wheat during the winter because of transportation difficulties. It occurs to me that it might meet all the needs of the case if UNRRA were to obtain permission from the Combined Food Board to place an order for wheat in Canada for delivery in the spring. The effect of this order would be to set aside funds on the books of the Mutual Aid Board to cover the cost of the wheat and in this way would protect Canada against the danger of her contribution being exhausted by orders of other types of supply in Canada so that the wheat would have to be paid for out of free funds.

I should appreciate it if, with these facts and suggestions before you, you will let me have your opinion as to the best course of action to pursue. In the meantime I am circulating your correspondence with Mr. Hendrickson and a copy of this letter to the interested Departments here. I shall await your reply before replying formally to Mr. Hendrickson and by that time I hope to have the comments of the interested Departments as well.

Yours sincerely,

H. F. ANGUS

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce<sup>135</sup>

Ottawa, December 27, 1944

I am referring to despatch No. 2729 of December 5th from the Canadian Embassy in Washington,† enclosing copies of a letter from Mr. Pearson to Mr. Hendrickson of November 16th† and Mr. Hendrickson's reply, dated December 1st. I am also referring to Mr. Angus' letter to Mr. Pearson, dated December 7th. This correspondence, which concerned the stipulation that part of Canada's contribution to UNRRA should take the form of wheat, was forwarded to you on December 7th.

No further communication has been received from Washington but when Mr. Cairns was in Ottawa on behalf of UNRRA he discussed the question informally with Mr. Angus of this Department. Mr. Cairns pointed out that it was very embarrassing to UNRRA if supplying countries specified the commodities on which their contributions were to be spent and the prices which were to be paid for these commodities. He suggested that the Canadian request constituted an awkward precedent in this respect.

Mr. Angus replied that this request was limited to the discharge of a well known obligation which Canada had undertaken and that the price was not an arbitrary one fixed specially for UNRRA.

Mr. Cairns then suggested that arrangements could be made for complying in some other way with the obligations of the Wheat Agreement. Mr. Angus pointed out that even if these were done it would not affect the Canadian wish that a substantial part of Canada's contribution to UNRRA should take the form of wheat and that it had been explained that it was politically desirable and even in the interests of UNRRA that part of the Canadian contribution, as distinct from the free funds, should take the form of wheat. He added that had a request been made in this form it would have constituted a much more embarrassing precedent for UNRRA than the request based on the Wheat Agreement and might well have been larger in amount.

This is how the matter stands at present. There does, however, appear to be a strong case for withdrawing the request which Canada has made to UNRRA. It seems more than ever evident that the big purchases of wheat will be made for military relief or for use by the paying countries and that it is not clear that UNRRA will require as much wheat as has been pledged by the various countries under the Wheat Agreement. Nor is it clear that it would be of advantage to Canada if UNRRA were obligated to buy wheat from all the countries committed under the Wheat Agreement.

A similar memorandum was sent to the Deputy Minister of Agriculture.

I should, therefore, appreciate it if you will let me have the views of your Department as to Canada's withdrawing any stipulation or request that part of the Canadian contribution to UNRRA should take the form of wheat.

If the request is withdrawn, it would remain to decide what should be done concerning Canada's obligations under the Wheat Agreement. Two courses of action appear to be possible and I should be glad to have your views as to their respective merits.

The first course would be to apply to the Wheat Council for permission to count against Canada's obligations under the Agreement (a) the gift of wheat to India of 100,000 tons<sup>136</sup> and (b) the wheat sent by way of Mutual Aid to French North Africa, amounting to 125,000 tons.<sup>137</sup> This would substantially reduce the amount of wheat for which arrangements would have to be made.

The second course would be to ask the Wheat Council to release the member countries from their commitments or, at any rate, to release those member countries which are contributing one per cent of their national income to UNRRA.

There is, of course, a third possibility. Canada might be very virtuous and point out that the Canadian contribution under the Wheat Agreement would virtually be made in addition to Canada's contribution to UNRRA. It might be suggested that the other countries should follow this course and if they supply wheat to UNRRA that they should donate it in addition to the one per cent of their national incomes which they, like Canada, are supplying.

TELETYPE EX-657

Ottawa, February 21, 1945

I am referring to your despatch No. 2729 of December 5th† concerning the stipulation that part of Canada's contribution to UNRRA should take the form of wheat and the subsequent correspondence on the same subject.

As the matter stands at present $16,000,000 is reserved on the books of the Mutual Aid Board to finance such orders for wheat as UNRRA may place. Of this sum $902,324 have already been spent and $1,600,000 are earmarked for freight, handling and possibly bagging charges.

See minutes of October 12, 1944, in Mutual Aid Board Records, Volume 46.

The suggestion that we should withdraw the earmarking was submitted to the departments most concerned. The Department of Agriculture took the view that in view of the supplies of wheat going forward for liberated areas by way of military relief, the earmarking might be withdrawn. The Department of Trade and Commerce took the view that the earmarking should be retained because an uncommitted balance of nearly $15,000,000 remained and because new requisitions for other commodities had tapered off.

The statement of the Mutual Aid Board dated February 19th† shows, however, that the unallocated balance available for further purchases has now fallen just below $3,000,000 and it, therefore, becomes a matter of some urgency that a decision should be reached with regard to the earmarking of the $16,000,000.

Before taking the matter up again with the Departments in Ottawa I should appreciate hearing from you how the question of reservation stands with UNRRA and what the expectations are as to the orders for relief purposes for Canadian wheat now that difficulties of finance may preclude the supplying to military relief of as much wheat as had been expected.<sup>138</sup> Ends.

Ottawa, March 5, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your teletype EX-657 of February 21st concerning the stipulation that part of Canada's contribution to UNRRA should take the form of wheat.

2. With my despatch no. 2729 of December 5th† I transmitted copies of an exchange of correspondence with Mr. Hendrickson of UNRRA on this subject. Since that time there have been certain developments on which I should report, although I regret that it is still not possible for UNRRA to accept formally the proposal that a certain specified part of Canada's contribution shall take the form of wheat.

3. On February 3rd Mr. Ritchie of this Embassy wrote to Mr. Angus† in reply to an enquiry and sent copies† of UNRRA's interpretation of the provision in the U.S. Appropriations legislation which might seem to provide a precedent for the action which we were proposing to UNRRA. UNRRA's interpretation of the U.S. legislation maintains that nothing in the U.S. legislation or in the Congressional discussion of that legislation imposes on UNRRA an obligation to accept definite quantities of any commodities as part of the U.S. contribution. The legislation gave a preference to stockpiled domestic wool or cotton up to a certain limit but did not require that UNRRA accept any specific quantities or values of cotton or wool from the U.S.

4. More recently we have been informed by the Supply officials in UNRRA that an arrangement has been worked out with the Canadian Mutual Aid Board whereby UNRRA has filed a bulk "request to supply" for $5,000,000 worth of Canadian wheat on which UNRRA will draw as actual requirements become known. It is our understanding that this arrangement does not make it mandatory for UNRRA to buy the full $5,000,000 worth of wheat in Canada except insofar as Canada may be indicated as a source for actual requirements. Neither does this arrangement mean that UNRRA will buy Canadian wheat only up to $5,000,000. The figure was a rough estimate of probable requirements to be satisfied from Canadian sources over the next few months. We are informed that UNRRA's purpose in getting the lump sum of $5,000,000 set aside at least temporarily for Canadian wheat purchases was merely to avoid the necessity of putting in to the Mutual Aid Board separate "requests to supply" for each lot actually required. It would appear to us that a good part of (and probably more than) these $5,000,000 will be absorbed if present plans are carried out and UNRRA takes over responsibility for Canadian wheat on hand in Greece at April 1st, or arriving in Greece on or after April 1st.

5. We have drawn UNRRA's attention to the existence of certain commitments on our part under the International Wheat Council and have enquired as to the likelihood of these commitments being discharged through the provision of supplies to UNRRA. We have spoken again today with the UNRRA official concerned and he has promised to let us have very shortly a statement of UNRRA's intentions with respect to the outstanding commitments for relief purposes under Article 6 of the International Wheat Agreement. When this statement<sup>139</sup> is received we shall forward it immediately in order that you might instruct us, in the light of this statement, as to the appropriate action to be taken through the Wheat Council, Combined Food Board and in our negotiations with UNRRA.

There are two points in your message on which I should like to comment.

(a) In Paragraph 3, the view was expressed that "the earmarking should be retained...because new requisitions for other commodities had tapered off." It is our understanding that the "tapering off" of other requisitions has been an effect of the earmarking and not a cause for earmarking. Apparently if this amount were not regarded as earmarked there would have been no difficulty in getting UNRRA to accept a substantial number of trucks and other items from Canada. The "earmarking" of $16,000,000 for wheat purchases so reduced the balance remaining that UNRRA has not been encouraged to place requisitions in Canada for these other commodities.

(b) The last paragraph in the teletype enquires as to the expectations concerning orders for relief purposes in view of the difficulties with military relief financing which may preclude the supplying of Canadian wheat for that particular purpose. We are not at the moment in a position to express any very confident expectations, but if the bulk of the military relief wheat has to come from the U.S., presumably the prospects of Canada being called upon to provide a larger share of UNRRA wheat supplies would be likely to improve. Discussions are to take place in Washington shortly concerning the detailed arrangements for handing over to UNRRA the responsibility for relief in the Balkans. After these discussions we may be in a better position to estimate the probable future demands for wheat from Canada to meet UNRRA requirements. As you will appreciate it is not possible at the moment to estimate the extent to which the U.S. may have to draw on Canadian sources for wheat supplies to meet military relief requirements if Canada withdraws finally from the financing of military relief supplies.

Ottawa, March 8, 1945

I should appreciate your advice with regard to the issue raised in despatch No. 570 of March 5th, a copy of which is enclosed. It is suggested in this despatch that the effect of reserving $16,000,000 of the UNRRA appropriation for the purchase of wheat has been to make UNRRA hesitant to order other things in Canada lest it should exhaust its credit here. As the unused margin of credit is not large, it becomes important for us to decide definitively whether to insist on the reservation of $16,000,000 or to allow UNRRA to procure against its credit whatever goods or services it may require.<sup>140</sup>

I am sending a copy of this memorandum to the Department of Agriculture and to the Mutual Aid Administration.

Ottawa, March 15, 1945

To Henry Angus<sup>141</sup> care of Canadian Embassy Washington from Elgin E. Wasson, Canadian Mutual Aid Board Administration, UNRRA Procurement, Ottawa.

Re Hon. L. B. Pearson letter March 5 covering "Earmarking sixteen million dollars UNRRA's appropriation for wheat." It is suggested in paragraph 6A that there would have been no difficulty in UNRRA accepting a substantial number of trucks and other items from Canada if the above amount had not been earmarked. All trucks allocated to UNRRA from Canadian production were purchased by UNRRA from funds available in Canadian appropriation and are now under procurement by Canadian Export Board. However, I was led to believe unofficially that UNRRA would have been prepared to use free funds had the UNRRA truck allocation from Canada required this. Although I do not choose to be quoted I feel that wheat earmarking is a healthy circumstance because UNRRA might find it politically difficult to take US funds for wheat procurement in Canada whereas procurement of other items such as meat, fish, clothing and so forth might not be a problem politically. I am mailing you the last financial statement on UNRRA procurement in Canada† and this will show you that after adequate reserves have been made our fund is so low that a discussion to handle free funds for Canadian procurement will soon be necessary. I believe UNRRA Washington is discussing the possibilities of this arising now but have not been officially advised.

TELETYPE WA-2796

Washington, May 29, 1945

Following for Pierce and Bryce from Angus, Begins: At this morning's meeting<sup>142</sup> the UNRRA representatives explained that UNRRA's existing resources would be fully committed by the end of this calendar year and that only a small part of the supplies would remain for shipment in 1946. It follows that UNRRA will have to wind up its work unless large additional resources are made available at the meeting in July.<sup>143</sup> It also follows that without these resources UNRRA cannot take over any financial responsibility which will lessen the burden of Military Relief.

I urged very strongly that the position should be explained fully and clearly to all member countries well in advance of the meeting in July in order that they may decide on what course should be followed. It would for instance be possible to make UNRRA's resources last a little longer if the scale of relief were reduced. It would be possible to allow UNRRA to be wound up and to make relief arrangements on a country to country basis. The third alternative would be to make an appeal for further funds. It is hoped that an estimate can be made next week and in the meantime it seems clear that this estimate will call for a second subscription at least as great as the first even assuming that countries now contribute which were not able to contribute last time because they had been invaded and that countries which were not members of the United Nations also make a contribution.

I also emphasized the importance of UNRRA using the short interval before the Council meeting in explaining its position to the public at large and making clear what has been accomplished or is in course of accomplishment as the result of the expenditure of the first $200,000,000.

The facts seem to come as something of a surprise to the State Department representatives and it is possible that the proposals which they are to present tomorrow will be modified. They have already indicated that they think it best that these proposals should be in tentative form and not, as had previously been contemplated, be put in the form of a formal communication. Ends.

Following for Angus from Ritchie, Begins: Military Relief and UNRRA. When Marris<sup>144</sup> saw Mason<sup>145</sup> on Saturday, Mason reported that the United States side are working on the preliminary statement of UNRRA's program of operations which had been discussed with you at the meeting with Hendrickson and that the State Department and Treasury are examining the extent to which, and the ways in which, Congress might be prevailed upon to appropriate further funds for UNRRA. The results of their examination will not have been discussed with Congressional leaders by June 13th but it is intended that they shall have been discussed with the President before that date. Accordingly, Mason expects confidently that the United States side will be in a position at our meeting on June 13th to indicate the nature and extent of the support which the Administration will give to any proposal for asking Congress to appropriate funds necessary to enable UNRRA to discharge its present responsibilities.

Marris is asking the United Kingdom Government for the best statement which they can provide concerning their intentions and capabilities with respect to UNRRA.

As I mentioned to you in our telephone conversation this morning, Hendrickson has invited Mason, Marris, Reinstein<sup>146</sup> and me to meet with his people Thursday afternoon to discuss the more definitive and detailed estimates which they had promised to produce. I shall let you have the results of this meeting as soon as it is over. I am inclined to think that the statement which the UNRRA people will present at that meeting will probably not be as comprehensive as you desire, but it may provide a preliminary basis for the consideration in Ottawa of a possible further contribution to UNRRA. TELETYPE WA-2987

Washington, June 8, 1945

Following for Angus from Ritchie, Begins: Military Relief and UNRRA.

1. As anticipated, we met with Hendrickson and his people in UNRRA Thursday afternoon to receive and discuss the "programme of operations" which they had promised.

2. The estimated programme which they presented was clearly unsatisfactory for our purposes in both form and scope. The tables indicated that expenditures on supplies and shipping through May 31st, 1945, are expected to amount to $778.2 million. Expenditures on supplies and shipping during the last six months of the year are put at $821.8 million, giving a cumulative total of $1,600.0 million by December 31st, 1945. Of the remaining $250.0 million part will be absorbed by administrative services and part represents funds not available for financing procurement in 1945. Thus UNRRA's total available funds will have been exhausted by the end of this year on this estimate. However, the estimate does not take account of the fact that allocations and actual availabilities of supplies and shipping may not permit of the volume of expenditure estimated for the last half of the year. Further, no indication was given of the probable distribution of the anticipated expenditure in terms of individual recipient countries. Finally, no projection of the programme beyond the end of 1945 was presented.

3. The discussion which followed was in very direct terms (Mason pointing out to Hendrickson, at one stage, that the "political difficulties" which Hendrickson foresaw in presenting to Council members a projection through 1946 on a country-by-country basis were small compared with the political and other difficulties which would confront UNRRA in the contributing countries if further funds were to be requested without a full explanation and justification in advance) and concluded with Hendrickson undertaking to provide at a further meeting this Saturday an amplification and projection of the estimates which will include the following statements:

(a) Estimated expenses and obligations up to the end of 1945 in terms of individual commodities and not merely broad commodity groups. This breakdown is intended to enable the supplying Governments to determine whether or not such supplies and the appropriate shipping will be available. In that way it should be possible to check the estimates from the supply viewpoint. This statement will not indicate destinations.

(b) Estimated expenses and obligations up to the end of 1945 in terms of broad commodity groups and countries of destination. The use of broad commodity groups rather than individual commodities will prevent the proposed recipients from claiming subsequently that certain particular supplies had been earmarked for them. At the same time, the table will be sufficiently precise to give supplying Governments (particularly the appropriating bodies) some explanation of the uses to which funds are being, or will be, put.

(c) Estimated expenses and obligations during the whole of 1946 (or for the remaining period of UNRRA's operations if feasible) on the assumption that UNRRA is to carry out the responsibilities assigned to it by the existing agreement and resolutions. This estimate has been requested in terms of destinations and broad commodity groups.

(d) Possibly also estimated expenses on projects or areas (e.g. Italy) which are not within UNRRA's present responsibilities but which might be brought in by action of the Council.

4. It is my impression that if we get this sort of a statement (and if it is circulated to all members at, or prior to, the Council meeting) the inquiry made in your despatch No. 749 of June 2nd<sup>147</sup> will have been satisfactorily answered. Nevertheless, we are forwarding to the Director General the letter enclosed with that despatch<sup>148</sup> in order to provide a further stimulus to the UNRRA people to produce and circulate such a programme of operations. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-2183

Ottawa, June 11, 1945

Following for Ritchie from Angus, Begins: As my visit to Washington has been postponed I should appreciate it if you can discuss with UNRRA officials the matter which I had intended to take up with them. It has been our understanding that UNRRA, in obtaining supplies for non-paying countries, would give full consideration to the needs of paying countries in respect of commodities in short supply. We have also assumed that full consideration would be given to the needs of countries receiving supplies by way of military relief.

Unless we can have an assurance that UNRRA is ready to consider the needs of the other two claimants, it will be very difficult to avoid making allocations as between UNRRA and the other two in Canada even though we may have inadequate information at our disposal as to the comparative urgency of the requirements. The tendency in such a case would be to give military relief priority because it enjoyed priority when it was active before UNRRA or a paying country could take over. Under present conditions the need may be as great in a country supplied by UNRRA or by its own devices as in a military relief area. There does not appear to be any international machinery for allocating and re-allocating commodities in short supply and we should welcome an assurance from UNRRA as to the policy which it follows in such matters. It should be emphasized that if there is no policy, it will be virtually impossible to protect certain UNRRA allocations in Canada.

I discussed this question with Sale<sup>149</sup> when he was in Ottawa and he and Beamer<sup>150</sup> are thoroughly conversant with it. Ends.

Following for Angus from Ritchie, Begins: Military Relief and UNRRA.

Further meeting of representatives of the State Department, United Kingdom Embassy, Canadian Embassy and UNRRA to which I referred in my WA-2987 of June 8th was held on the afternoon of Saturday, June 9th. Hendrickson presented the analysis which we had requested of the estimates for 1945 which had been introduced at the earlier meeting together with a preliminary estimate of the requirements which UNRRA would have to meet in the calendar year 1946.

I shall not add to the information reported in my earlier teletype concerning the estimates for 1945 as our examination of the analysis presented at the Saturday meeting indicated that further changes would be required in these estimates before they would be satisfactory for our use. The UNRRA officials have undertaken to make the necessary improvements and will let us have the results in a few days.

Although the preliminary estimates for 1946 are also to be changed somewhat within the next few days, I think you will be interested in some indication of the magnitude and distribution of the requirements set forth in the initial version. In total, the estimates would indicate that requirements to be met by UNRRA in 1946 (excluding any program for Italy even for children and mothers, and assuming that all the areas for which UNRRA has responsibility in Europe will be self-sufficient in food during the second half of 1946) will amount to something like 2,183.4 million dollars, of which 1,242.1 million dollars represent requirements for the first half year and 941.3 million dollars requirements for the second half year. These estimates cover shipping charges and the costs of services as well as the costs of supplies. It is to be noted that the estimates for 1946 are on a requirements (i.e. required arrivals) basis, whereas the estimates for 1945 were on a procurement basis. Accordingly the above total should be reduced by some 500 million dollars (to allow for that part of total 1946 requirements which will be met out of procurement initiated in 1945 with the funds available to UNRRA from the first contribution) if an estimate is desired of the new financing which UNRRA will have to undertake to meet 1946 requirements. In short the estimates would indicate that UNRRA will require a further contribution corresponding very closely to the first contribution if they are to continue to meet during 1946 the obligations imposed upon them by the original agreement and subsequent Council resolutions or Central Committee decisions.

By far the largest beneficiary, according to these estimates, is to be China. The estimates place China's requirements at 817.8 million dollars, of which somewhat less than 200 million dollars will be met out of procurement initiated during 1945, leaving something over 600 million dollars to be financed out of any new contributions for 1946. In our discussion considerable attention was given to these figures for China. While it was generally agreed that the figures appeared very high in relation to the requirements of other areas, it was noted that the Chinese program had been prepared with great care and in close consultation with UNRRA's representatives and that no reasonable basis existed for scaling down the stated requirements unless scarcity of supplies, shipping or port facilities should subsequently require a reduction in the program.

Hendrickson remarked that the estimates might have to be increased even if no action is taken at the Council meeting in London to extend the scope of UNRRA's responsibilities. He observed in particular that further assistance might be requested for areas now under the control of the U.S.S.R. and possibly for displaced persons in those areas. He reported that assurances had been volunteered by the U.S.S.R. during the past few days that their 800 thousand dollar contribution to administrative expenses would be forthcoming shortly and that visas would be granted almost immediately for the Mission to Poland.

At the conclusion of this meeting with the UNRRA officials, Marris and Jackling of the United Kingdom Embassy, Collado, Reinstein and Gilpatric of the State Department and I met informally to discuss the results of the meeting and of other related developments. It was agreed that UNRRA had done a very good job in producing fairly satisfactory figures in such a short time and that the less preliminary figures expected in the next few days would be of assistance to all of us. However, the State Department people expressed their pessimism at the prospects for a further United States contribution to UNRRA. Collado reported that he and Mason had dined the previous night with six of the key Congressman whose support would be required, and found them most critical of UNRRA although appreciative of the need for some relief arrangement. Marris enquired whether the views of these Congressmen would be affected by a change in the management of UNRRA. Collado agreed that if some outstanding United Nations personality not previously associated with UNRRA during the period of criticism (say General Eisenhower or some other military leader) were to be appointed as Director General, the opposition would almost certainly disappear. He recognized that most of the opposition in Congress was based on rumour and irresponsible remarks made by UNRRA officials in the field to visiting Congressmen. Marris indicated that his conversation with Acheson had left him with the impression that Acheson also was pessimistic.

Collado observed that the figures which had been presented would indicate that China and Italy will be the principal areas requiring relief assistance during 1946. He reported, as you probably would expect, that there would be no difficulty in getting an adequate appropriation from the United States Congress for these two countries, but he thought that Congress might prefer to provide such assistance directly rather than through UNRRA. If Congress were to insist on direct assistance to Italy and China he could not see how the needs of the remaining areas now within UNRRA's responsibility in Europe would be taken care of. He was inclined to think that there was no hope of getting a further appropriation for UNRRA unless China and Italy are left to UNRRA and the widespread support for assistance to these two countries can be brought behind the request for a further UNRRA contribution. Collado mentioned that hearings are to be held this Wednesday on the appropriation requested by the F.E.A. including an item of 50 million or one hundred million dollars for use in Italy subject to military justification and verification (i.e. for Military Relief). He felt that this item would almost certainly lead the Congressional Committee to enquire what arrangements were being made to meet the balance of Italy's obviously substantial requirements. He was not sure what answer would be made to such questions, but he thought that the discussion would provide some basis for recommendations concerning the nature of future relief arrangements for Italy.

Collado recognized the interest which the present United States Administration must have in the continued and efficient operation of UNRRA. He remarked that the Government would be in an embarrassing position in advocating the establishment of the Bretton Woods Institutions, the F.A.O. and even the United Nations International Security Organization if they were to withdraw their support from the first United Nations Organization to be established and to admit that its operations were regarded as less satisfactory than direct unilateral action. Ends.

THE UNRRA MEETING IN AUGUST

1. Two questions will come before this meeting on which the Canadian delegates should have instructions or at least an indication of policy. The first of these concerns the willingness of Canada to find further financial support for UNRRA if the United States and the United Kingdom, together with some other nations, are prepared to do so. The amount involved would be at least one-half of 1% of our national income in the base year and there may be a commitment suggested as high as 1%, namely $77,000,000 Canadian.

2. The second question concerns the scope of UNRRA's work. Even the higher of the figures mentioned in the preceding paragraph would (if Italy and Austria are placed under UNRRA's care) reduce the scale of UNRRA's contemplated operations and make it necessary to indicate cut-off dates to the various countries which are being supplied. UNRRA would have to modify its policy of meeting needs as they arise and leaving future needs to be covered by further financial provision. It might be necessary to ear-mark funds for specific countries in order to ensure that no country would be entirely neglected. The problem is how insistent Canada should be in imposing an overall limit on UNRRA's operations and at what point we should make it clear that the limit of our own commitment will be reached or closely approached. Probably the United Kingdom will go furthest in imposing a hard and fast limit on its commitment as it may well do because of the principle that no nation should be compelled to go into debt for its own relief. This could easily be taken to imply that the United Kingdom should not increase its foreign debt in order to contribute to the relief of others.

3. If our participation in the discussions is to be effective and fruitful, we should have some indication in advance of the Government's attitude on these two questions, even although it will be clearly understood that any proposed commitment would have to be referred for approval.

4. UNRRA appears to be asking for $2,200,000,000 U.S., of new funds to cover its activities up to the end of 1946. This figure makes no provision for any work in Italy or Austria. It, therefore, compares with the United Kingdom figure of $1,500,000,000, including Italy and Austria, by placing UNRRA's ultimate cost about twice as high as the United Kingdom would approve.

I had a talk with Acheson and Marris at the State Department yesterday concerning proposal for additional members to the Central Committee of UNRRA.<sup>152</sup> Acheson understands our difficulties in this matter and is going to press for a solution along the lines indicated in my letter to you of July 3rd.<sup>153</sup> He is sorry that they put forward France without mentioning Canada also. He also is somewhat afraid lest the Latin Americans may now press for membership on the Central Committee but the United States and United Kingdom are both willing to deal with that problem if and when it arises.

We also had a long talk concerning the forthcoming Council meeting especially the question of securing further appropriations for UNRRA and criticisms which will undoubtedly be leveled at the Administration itself. Acheson realizes that the members are not likely to support very enthusiastically any recommendations for further contributions unless UNRRA can be reconstituted on a new and more efficient basis. On this latter point, Acheson is sending a report to Clayton<sup>154</sup> which will suggest, I believe, that President Truman should discuss the matter with the British and then take necessary steps with Governor Lehman. I have doubts whether anything effective will result from all this.

I assume that the Canadian Delegation to the UNRRA Council will be given an indication of the general attitude of our Government to the future of UNRRA and specific instructions on items on the draft agenda. The United States Delegation to the Council is likely to be a strong one headed by Clayton with three or four others from the State Department and a similar number from F.E.A. W. L. Batt will also be attending.

I think that generally the Americans and British will support a recommendation that another 1 per cent contribution should be made to finish UNRRA's work, but that only ½ of this need be made available in the immediate future for those programmes on which there is definite information as to requirements. This leaves open the question of how and when to get the remaining ½ per cent. Marris thinks the British will be able to agree to this. The United States will support it also but anticipate considerable Congressional difficulty.

Finally we discussed the admission of neutrals to membership. There was definite United Kingdom and United States agreement that steps should be taken to get Argentina into the Administration. She is the only non-member country which could contribute anything substantial in the way of supplies, as Sweden is already doing everything she can in relief matters outside UNRRA. It is felt that the easiest way to get Argentina in would be by a Resolution of the Council inviting those States, members of the San Francisco Conference and not members of the Administration, to join the latter Organization. A resolution in this form would be difficult for the U.S.S.R. to oppose. It would also mean that Turkey could join which might be useful while it avoids the difficulty of making distinctions between neutral States, one<sup>155</sup> of whom would be covered by it. Ends.

It may be impossible to obtain detailed instructions for the Canadian delegation, although the Government's attitude towards UNRRA is sympathetic and it would not be surprised by a recommendation of a further contribution towards UNRRA's funds on the lines suggested.

Importance is attached to making any additional contribution in a form which will enable Canada to count as part of it whatever may have been spent by Canada on military relief account after the loss limit of $400,000,000 was reached. I understand that the United States authorities are generally sympathetic to this position and consider taking a similar position.

Marris would, I understand, regret any action that might lead the United Kingdom to reduce its net contribution to UNRRA beyond the figure of $150,000,000, which can be described as bringing the United Kingdom's total contribution up to 1½% of its national income. I do not understand that our proposals need have this effect. If the United Kingdom were to follow the course proposed, the only deduction which it would make from its contribution to UNRRA would be its actual contribution to military relief after the loss limit had been passed. This contribution, it is understood, will consist of goods and services supplied from the United Kingdom, the Colonies and South Africa. It should be perfectly easy to augment the proposed contribution to UNRRA by the figure, whatever it may be, at which the United Kingdom estimates this contribution to military relief. For discussion purposes, a figure of $25,000,000 had been used. There would be no decrease in the net funds available for UNRRA unless the estimate made were too low.

It is true that UNRRA might not get the full \$1,000,000,000 of new funds which Marris considers necessary but any failure to do so would be the result of deductions made by the United States and Canada from their contributions. Put a little differently, in order to secure \$1,000,000,000 of new money for UNRRA, it might be necessary to subscribe  $\frac{2}{3}$  of 1% or  $\frac{9}{10}$  of 1% rather than  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 1%, or it might be possible for UNRRA to get along with an immediate contribution of rather less than \$1,000,000,000 of new money.

These issues have been pretty thoroughly discussed with Marris and with Mason, but I am mentioning them again because I do not think that they have been brought to the attention of Acheson and Clayton.

Should the final line of your teletype be amended by replacing "one" by "none"?<sup>156</sup> If not, which is the neutral country which would be included by the proposed formula? Ends.

FURTHER FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION FOR UNRRA

1. The third meeting of the UNRRA Council began in London on August 7. One of the important questions which will be presented to the meeting will be that of a further contribution by member countries for relief purposes.

2. The latest information available is that the United States Government will propose that the members of UNRRA should be asked to approve a further contribution to the extent of 1% of their respective national incomes. This percentage would be subject to revision downwards if (which is unlikely) a subsequent review by UNRRA when requirements are more definitely known, shows that the full amount will not be needed. This further contribution would provide the amount necessary to complete UNRRA's relief operations in Europe, in China and in other non-European countries. The proposal would involve a contribution by Canada of approximately $77,000,000 Canadian. It was expected some weeks ago that the United Kingdom would be unlikely to agree to a contribution of this size at the present time and might suggest that only one half of 1% or preferably six-tenths of 1% need be subscribed immediately. The United States Government, however, considers that it can approach Congress with a better chance of success if it asks for the larger sum with an assurance that it will in all probability represent the last call upon Congress for an UNRRA contribution.

<sup>156</sup>En effet, le mot était «none.»
 In fact, the word was "none."

3. The proposal that UNRRA relief should be kept within these financial limits may well encounter some opposition from the UNRRA Administration, which has supplied figures suggesting that a considerably larger amount is needed without taking into account any operations in Italy or Austria. The inclination of the United States and the United Kingdom appears to be to insist very firmly on the limitation of expenditure.

4. Within the last ten days the U.S.S.R. has formally advised UNRRA that it would present to the Council at this session, a request for relief supplies to the amount of $700,000,000, for delivery within one year. Possible Soviet needs were not taken into account in the discussions relative to a further contribution and the amount of the contribution will certainly have to be reviewed if the Soviet request is approved in any large part.

5. It is important that the Canadian delegation, which is at present at the meeting of the Council, should be advised if the Canadian Government is willing to join with the other two Governments in a contribution of the order of $77,000,000. Naturally it is expected that the Governments which subscribed previously will do so again and that others may join with them. Relatively speaking, however, the contributions from these other sources are not large. They are certainly not large enough to affect the general validity of the proposed plan, which would be workable if the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada agree to it.

6. The Department of External Affairs therefore recommend that it be authorized to advise the Canadian member of the UNRRA Council if the Government of Canada is prepared to agree to a contribution of $77,000,000. It is understood that the Minister of Finance is prepared to agree to this recommendation.

U.N.R.R.A.; CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

10. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE pointed out that the third meeting of the Council of U.N.R.R.A. was taking place in London and that further financial assistance was required to continue relief operations during the coming year.

It was now reported that the U.S. government would ask Congressional approval for a further contribution equal to one percent of the national income and that the United Kingdom would pursue a similar course.

It was recommended by the Department of External Affairs that the Canadian representatives in London be instructed that the government were prepared to join with the United States and United Kingdom in making the necessary financial provision, the Canadian contribution to be on the basis proposed, viz. one percent of the national income or $77 millions.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(External Affairs memorandum, Aug. 8, 1945—Cabinet Document No. 23).

11. THE CABINET, after discussion, agreed that Canada agree to join with the United States and the United Kingdom in a further contribution to U.N.R.R.A. on the basis proposed and that the Canadian members of the Council be authorized to so state, on the understanding that such undertaking on behalf of the government was subject to approval by Parliament, and on condition that the U.S. government contributed on a like basis.

Your WA-6153 of December 6 concerning present status of second Canadian contribution of 1% to UNRRA.

Bill 172, "An Act for granting to His Majesty Aid for National Defence and Demobilization" passed the House of Commons on November 23. It was sent up to the Senate where it was referred to the Committee on Finance, which has not yet reported it back. It is expected that the report will come in a few days and that the Bill, being a money bill, will be reported without amendment and submitted for royal assent before the end of the next week.

When presenting the Bill to Parliament, the Minister of Finance stated:

"It will be noted that I have included a figure of $25,000,000 for UNRRA in the further amounts required for the current year but not yet provided. This is intended to enable us to furnish, before the end of our fiscal year, a portion of a second contribution to UNRRA, which the Canadian government has agreed to make, provided that the United States and other contributing nations will also make a second contribution. The total of our second contribution would be the same as our first, that is, one per cent of our estimated national income for the year ended June 20, 1943, which amounts to $77,000,000 in all."

Should more than $25,000,000 be needed before the end of the fiscal year, the Government would use its best endeavours to provide the supplies requested.

I shall advise you as soon as I am able of the stage in processing of the United States contribution when the Canadian Government will consider that "the United States and other contributing nations will have also made a second contribution."

Your WA-6305 of December 18 regarding United States and Canadian contribution to UNRRA.

1. As I have informed you, royal assent was given to Bill 172, an Act for Granting to His Majesty Aid for National Defence and Demobilization, on Tuesday, December 18.<sup>158</sup> A recommendation has now gone to Treasury Board, to the following effect, which I understand will be acted upon favourably:

“(a) to release funds now to the Department of Trade and Commerce for purchases in Canada on behalf of UNRRA up to an amount of $25,000,000 as soon as the United States have appropriated funds to UNRRA out of their second contribution;

(b) to provide that an amount of $2,500,000 may be subtracted from this $25,000,000 for transfer to UNRRA in United States dollars for use as it sees fit; or, since UNRRA may want to use this 10% in Canada, it might be best to advise UNRRA that this 10% of the appropriation is available on request, but will not be transferred unless requested;

(c) to authorize the Department of Trade and Commerce, as UNRRA needs require, to make commitments on behalf of UNRRA during the first quarter of 1946 up to an amount additional to the $25,000,000 mentioned under (a), which, together with the $25,000,000 will be the same proportion of the Canadian contribution of $77,000,000 that the sum appropriated by the United States Congress will be of the total United States contribution; and that 10% of this additional amount be allowed to be transferred or made available on request to UNRRA for purchases in or outside of Canada as UNRRA sees fit.”

A copy of the full memorandum is going forward to you by bag.

2. You will note that no funds will be provided to UNRRA until the United States “have appropriated” as opposed to “unauthorized” funds for UNRRA; that as soon as the United States have actually provided funds, an amount of $25,000,000 will be made available for purchases by UNRRA; authorization has also been sought for entry into commitments on behalf of UNRRA up to an amount which, together with the $25,000,000, will bear the same proportion to the total Canadian contribution of $77,000,000 that the amount appropriated by the United States bears to the total United States contribution of $1,350,000,000.

3. An announcement by UNRRA could be made which would state that the Canadian Government has approved a second contribution to UNRRA to the full amount of $77,000,000 and that it is estimated that $25,000,000 will be sufficient to cover actual deliveries during the first three months of 1946, but that more will be provided in that period if required and other contributors also make funds available proportionately.

4. This is strictly true, since war appropriations are global and the use of the funds is in no way restricted to the estimates made. Only the total is a maximum.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Board had under consideration the following memorandum from the Honourable the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce:

"The undersigned observes that, whereas the Mutual Aid Administration was the procurement agency for UNRRA in Canada, this function has now been transferred to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The undersigned further observes that in the War Expenditures and Demobilization Bill which the Minister of Finance presented to the House of Commons on September 28th, he included an amount of $25,000,000 for UNRRA. The purpose of this amount is to enable the Government of Canada to provide a portion of their second contribution to UNRRA before the end of the present fiscal year. This action is contingent upon the United States and other contributing nations making second contributions and

Whereas certain action has now been taken by the Government of the United States, it is expected that country will make their second contribution this week, it is desirable that certain funds be awarded the Department of Trade and Commerce in order that essential food and supplies may continue to flow to the liberated areas.

The undersigned, therefore, recommends that the Department of Trade and Commerce be authorized to enter into commitments on behalf of UNRRA and that the sum of $25,000,000 be released to the Department of Trade and Commerce for this purpose.

The undersigned further recommends that the Department of Trade and Commerce be authorized to transfer $2,500,000 of this amount to UNRRA in the United States for such use as they see fit should such an amount be requested."

The Board, having approved the estimate of expenditure chargeable to the War Appropriation and the War Expenditure and Demobilization Appropriation, and the allotment of the necessary funds, concur in the above report and recommendation and submit the same for favourable consideration.

Washington, December 22, 1945

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Late yesterday afternoon a meeting was held on very short notice in the office of the Acting Secretary of State to discuss problems resulting from the inadequacy of the tentative allocation of wheat to UNRRA. The meeting was called at the request of the Director-General of UNRRA and was attended by Director-General Lehman with senior officials from his staff, Acting Secretary of State Acheson with officials of the State Department concerned with UNRRA and commodity matters, and representatives from this Embassy (Ritchie) and the United Kingdom Embassy.

The UNRRA officials indicated briefly the extent to which present allocation recommendations failed to meet even the minimum screened requirements of the countries for which they had primary supply responsibility, particularly in comparison with the relative adequacy of provision made for the civilian population of the occupation zones of Germany, and explained that they felt bound to make representations to the diplomatic representatives of the principal countries concerned in view of the most serious political repercussions which might be expected. They felt that the Governments of the United States, United Kingdom and Canada should be made aware of the situation with all its political implications and that the three Governments should not expect UNRRA to carry the responsibility for the consequences of a distribution of wheat among various claimants which had been determined by the supply officials of the three countries (with or without consultation with the political Departments of their Governments) over the protest of UNRRA. UNRRA recognized that the supplying Governments must retain full control over the distribution of supplies among the various claimants and, for the same reasons, UNRRA maintained that those Governments must be prepared to accept full responsibility for the consequences of their decisions on the appropriate distribution of the wheat supplies. Governor Lehman mentioned that the United States and United Kingdom have been pressing UNRRA during the past several days to take over at least partial responsibility in Italy and Austria even though the assumption by UNRRA in the immediate future of responsibility for Italy and Austria could be accomplished only through diverting to those countries some of the limited supplies (including wheat) now en route to other UNRRA recipient countries. Commander Jackson, the Senior Deputy Director-General of UNRRA, expressed the view that they could not possibly undertake responsibility for Italy and Austria, at a time when in large areas of Austria the diet of the population has fallen to 700 or 800 calories a day, unless a substantial improvement is realized in the allocation of supplies (particularly wheat) to UNRRA immediately.

Several of the State Department officials emphasized that the United States authorities were impressed with the seriousness of the situation resulting from the over-all inadequacy of wheat supplies and possibly also from the presently proposed division of the available supplies. One of the State Department officials mentioned as evidence of the consideration being given to the problem the fact that 30,000 truck tires have been allocated to Argentina for the movement of wheat to seaboard despite an awareness of the probable political reaction of other Latin American countries to this allocation. Mr. Acheson added that the problems involved in the wheat situation had been discussed at the White House that morning.

After considerable discussion, Mr. Acheson undertook to meet on Monday, December 24th with Secretary of Agriculture Anderson and their respective staffs to work out arrangements which would produce immediately a re-assessment of the United States wheat position with a view to determining the possibility of making available for allocation wheat supplies additional to those covered in the original recommendations of the Cereals Committee. At the same meeting arrangements would be made to ensure that, in dividing the total supplies of wheat found to be available, political considerations would be taken into account and that the political decisions involved would be made not by the technical or supply people but by the Secretary of State. Although Mr. Acheson did not profess complete familiarity with the existing machinery for consultation among the supplying and receiving Governments on wheat matters, he recognized that the disposition of supplies from all sources would have to be coordinated to the maximum extent possible since otherwise action taken by one supplying Government might be offset by the action of other supplying Governments. As we understand the United States intention, consultation among the principal Governments concerned (probably through the members of the existing Cereals Committee acting in consultation with, or under instructions from, the Political Departments of their respective Governments) will follow immediately upon the determination by each of the Governments of the maximum amount of supplies available and of the possible division of such supplies among the various claimants taking full account of the political consequences involved.

The representative of the United Kingdom Embassy indicated that the United Kingdom Government has been giving urgent consideration to the problem and that he hoped to have some definite instructions early in Christmas week. He observed that the United States and United Kingdom officials were to meet with UNRRA within the next few hours to consider further the feasibility of transferring to UNRRA supply responsibility for Italy and Austria and that such discussions would have to take account of the position outlined by UNRRA at the present meeting.

In view of the seriousness of the political consequences which may result if the present allocation recommendations are adhered to, and in view of the fact that any revision of those recommendations will clearly involve a balancing of the political consequences of one possible recommendation against those of another, you will doubtless wish to have the situation considered by the various Departments concerned in order that we may be in a position to participate in discussions with the other countries involved and in order that the Canadian representative on the Cereals Committee may have a full appreciation of the political considerations which may have to override ordinary supply considerations.

CONFIDENTIAL. Your WA-6374 regarding allocations of wheat.

1. The Canadian allocation presented to and approved by the Combined Food Board was for a total of a hundred million bushels from January till April 1946. Of this amount, 55 million is to go to the United Kingdom, which obtains first priority, second priority going to the liberated countries of Western Europe, the L.F.C. and UNRRA and a lower priority to other areas.

2. The Canadian authorities have done all in their power to maximize the putting of wheat into position at seaboard for despatch overseas and consider that they have done the best possible job in the circumstances. Wheat in Canada is under the complete control of the Canadian Wheat Board; it directs its movement and shippers are only its agents in regard both to movement and to purchasers.

3. The Canadian allocation, approved by the Combined Food Board, was reached after consideration by a committee of officials on which this Department was represented and the Cabinet Wheat Committee; all aspects of the question were reviewed before decision was reached.

For your information I might say that some of the fall in production in UNRRA countries is likely due to land policy in those countries and in a certain way I consider that those responsible for such policy should be held responsible for its consequences.

4. The only complete allocation of supplies amongst producing countries is done by Canada; in the United States there is no set aside order as for meat, but the control of the wheat is in the hands of the trade, and market considerations apply. Moreover, the price differential is an added incentive for applicants to come to us for supplies.

5. In our allocation top priority was given to United Kingdom requirements and others treated in the order mentioned above. It is our understanding that the United Kingdom has only a five-week reserve of imported wheat, which is just about the minimum required for milling and distribution. We could not, therefore, agree to reduce the United Kingdom allocation, but would be prepared to come in on any arrangements that might be reached between the United Kingdom and other claimants for surrender by the United Kingdom of its supplies from Canada.

6. Our understanding is that there is in the United States up to a hundred million bushels of wheat which would be available for export, if certain steps were taken in trading arrangements and in inland transportation. Additional supplies could therefore be tapped there.

7. For your confidential information at the present time, a review by the Canadian Wheat Board of Canadian supplies discloses that there is approximately five million bushels of No.4 Northern wheat and from ten to fifteen million bushels of oats which could possibly be transferred from feed stocks in Canada for use for human consumption and could therefore be added to supplies for allocation in the export field. The question of relaxing these supplies is being taken up urgently with Mr. Gardiner in London and I shall advise you shortly of the decision.

Dear Sir,

I was asked to see Mr. Charles Taft and Mr. Wayne Jackson of the State Department today concerning the relationship of the Russian Protocol<sup>159</sup> and possible requests from the U.S.S.R. for relief supplies under UNRRA. Mr. Taft handed me a memorandum, two copies of which are attached, which gives the State Department's views on this important matter; also on the related question of supplies for the relief of areas which are not a part of the Soviet Union but which are liberated by Soviet military action.

My own view is that the stand taken by the State Department that, in present circumstances, all relief supplies for the Soviet Union should be made available under the Protocol and not by UNRRA, is a sound one.

I understand that a copy of the memorandum has also been given to the United Kingdom authorities in Washington, who are giving it consideration.

It is obviously desirable that if an approach is made to the Soviet authorities and to UNRRA on this subject, it should be on behalf of the three governments signatory to the Protocol. I would be glad, therefore, to receive as soon as possible your observations on the State Department memorandum.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

Memorandum by Department of State of United States

RELIEF FOR THE SOVIET UNION AND EASTERN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

This memorandum relates to the question of relief for liberated areas of the Soviet Union, to an informal statement made by the Russian member of the Supplies Committee of UNRRA that the Soviet Union already had liberated areas which should be given relief, and to an inquiry from Leith-Ross to Salter<sup>160</sup> saying that the Czechoslovakian Government had inquired of UNRRA as to whether relief could be given to Czechoslovakian areas now being liberated by making good to the Soviet Union in the future supplies which that Government might furnish to the Czechoslovakian areas.

The following seem the important considerations:

1. Under present circumstances the only supply inlets to the Soviet Union and the areas presently being liberated are through the northern route, the Pacific route, and the Persian Gulf route to the Soviet Union. Tonnage which can be shipped is limited primarily by the port and inland shipping facilities at these three inlets. It has been demonstrated that whenever tonnage beyond a certain point is employed, the turn-around time of the ships immediately increases, showing beyond doubt that only a definite amount of tonnage can be handled by ports. Therefore it would seem clear that so long as the entire capacity is being taken up with Protocol shipments, no additional tonnage can be shipped by UNRRA; in other words, UNRRA's tonnage would merely replace Protocol tonnage.

2. Although these facts are generally accepted, it has been suggested that the Soviet Union and the United States and UNRRA might find it advantageous to substitute UNRRA's tonnage to some extent for Protocol tonnage for the purpose of relief in Soviet areas. This suggestion does not seem sound for the following reasons:

(a) It has been suggested that the Soviet Union might wish to receive a certain amount of supplies which it would contend were for its liberated areas through UNRRA rather than through the Protocol, since if the goods were sent by UNRRA a final settlement would be unnecessary whereas there would always be the possibility of payment or other benefits being required for Protocol shipments. This assumes that UNRRA would determine that the Soviet Union was not a paying country. It may be that this is so, but to raise the question would precipitate a most difficult problem both for the Soviets and for UNRRA.

Senior Deputy Director-General, UNRRA.

(b) It has been said that the United States would find benefit in the above proposal since Protocol goods would be paid for by the United States whereas UNRRA's goods would be paid for only in part by the United States. This suggestion is quite unfounded. Both under the Protocol and under UNRRA, goods which were sent from the United States would be paid for by the United States. There would be no difference therefore in the financial consequences to the United States.

(c) So far as UNRRA is concerned, the advantage to it is said to be that it could immediately begin to furnish relief which is its principal function. I think that this is a shortsighted view. It would merely mean that the UNRRA appropriation would be charged for goods which could just as well move under the Protocol so that when UNRRA funds were needed later on, they would not exist. Furthermore, such a position goes counter to UNRRA's principle of not using its funds to supply goods to military forces to be distributed by them. UNRRA should only use its funds to supply goods which cannot otherwise be supplied.

3. The problem of relief for liberated areas of the Soviet Union should be looked at from the point of view of the United States, United Kingdom, and Canada—the supplying countries—rather than primarily from UNRRA's point of view. The supplies must come from these three countries in the present phase of the war in any event. It should not be regarded as a relief problem but as a Soviet supply problem, just as food sent to the UK is not regarded as a relief problem but as a UK supply problem. The fact that new areas of the Soviet Union have been uncovered should not inject relief as a separate concept into the consideration. The Soviet Union should be informed by the three countries that supplies furnished by them to the Soviet Union during the present phase of the war will continue to be supplied under the Protocol. The main purpose continues to be to enable the Soviets to prosecute the war with the utmost vigor. To do this there may be some shift in the nature of their requests, but within the limits of Protocol tonnage the shift cannot be very great and it should continue to be handled as supply for the prosecution of the war.

Therefore, the position should be taken that all relief supplies for the liberated areas of the Soviet Union will be made available during the present phase of the war under the Protocol and UNRRA should be notified accordingly. If there is a necessity for continuing relief supplies after the termination of hostilities, when Lend-Lease aid may not be available, the problem can be reconsidered in all its aspects.

4. There remains the question of supply for relief of areas which are not a part of the Soviet Union but which are liberated by Soviet military action. So long as the only access to these regions is through Soviet inlets, all the transport difficulties mentioned above apply and if any supplies were furnished for these areas, they would reduce the amount which can be furnished under the Protocol. So long as these conditions exist it may be difficult to make any satisfactory arrangement for shipping supplies directly for the use of non-Soviet liberated areas or for people of non-Soviet countries. Until circumstances change, we can continue furnishing supplies to Russia under the Protocol, leaving the question of supplies for areas liberated by Soviet action to be settled by the Russians and the particular country involved.

5. We should not foreclose ourselves, however, from being in a position to consider any reasonable proposal which governments of non-Soviet liberated areas may wish to discuss. So long as transport difficulties limit the amount of material that can be sent under the Protocol, we should not take the initiative in suggesting that Protocol shipments be displaced for relief shipments to other countries. However, if the Czechs, for example, are able to make an arrangement with the Russians by which supplies for Czech account would be delivered to Czechs, we should consider such a proposal.

It is doubtful whether we could properly enter into any arrangements which contemplated that we would, at some future date, replace under Lend-Lease supplies which the Soviets had previously made available to the Czechs. Such an arrangement would not only involve impossible accounting problems but might well not be authorized under the Lend-Lease Act.

6. With regard to UNRRA activities in non-Soviet liberated areas, we should take the position that UNRRA should not operate while such areas are under the control and supervision of the Soviet military. This would be consistent with the position which we have previously taken that UNRRA resources are not to be depleted during military operations. When and if recognized local governments are set up and UNRRA can make appropriate arrangements for the transportation of its supplies and personnel and for adequate supervision of relief operations, there would seem to be no reason why UNRRA should not take up the functions for which it was created and we should urge it to do so. It seems unlikely, however, that such arrangements can be made under existing circumstances.

We should oppose any proposal, such as that contained in the inquiry which the Czechs sent to UNRRA, that UNRRA would replace in the future supplies made available by the Soviet Government. We should take the firm position that UNRRA funds are for relief and not to replace someone else's contribution to relief.

7. When and if the transportation situation changes by the opening up of other ports, we can reconsider this whole question. Likewise we, of course, reserve the right to deal directly with recognized local governments when they have been established in the non-Soviet liberated areas.

I am enclosing a copy of a letter from Mr. Pearson of the Canadian Embassy in Washington, dated May 9th, on the subject of the relationship of the Russian Protocol and possible requests of the U.S.S.R. for relief supplies under UNRRA. I should appreciate your views on this question in order that I may give a considered reply to Mr. Pearson.

My own off-hand view is that it is probably better that Russia should receive relief supplies under the Protocol than that they should be made available by UNRRA. I am inclined to doubt, however, if the reasons given in the memorandum prepared by the State Department, a copy of which is enclosed in Mr. Pearson's letter, apply in the case of Canada, and I think that it might possibly be advisable to draw the attention of the State Department to the differences in outlook which result from differences between the administration of Lend-Lease and the administration of Mutual Aid.

The reasons advanced in paragraph 2 of the State Department's memorandum appear to me to be open to the following criticisms from the Canadian standpoint:

Paragraph 2(a) refers to the possibility of payment or other benefits being required for Protocol shipments (under Lend-Lease). Does this possibility arise in the same degree under the Canadian Mutual Aid Agreement with the U.S.S.R.?

Paragraph 2(b) points out that goods sent from the United States would be paid for by the United States, whether they went by way of Lend-Lease under the Protocol or by way of UNRRA. It appears to me that this agreement would not apply in the case of Canada since Canada's physical contribution to UNRRA is likely to exceed Canada's financial contribution; so that any addition to the physical contribution would be paid for out of the free currency funds at UNRRA's disposal. If this is true, it would follow that Canada would be paid for supplies contributed to Russia by way of UNRRA but would not be paid for supplies contributed to Russia by way of Mutual Aid under the Protocol.

Paragraph 2(c) suggests that UNRRA's funds might be exhausted if supplies were moved to Russia before a demand for them developed in other countries. Insofar as this is true, it might be necessary to call for further UNRRA contributions from the contributing countries; the burden would then be apportioned in proportion to national income and not according to the country which was the source of the physical supplies. I am not clear why the latter method of apportionment should be preferred.

Paragraph 2(c) seems to be on sounder ground when it compares the relief administered by the Russians to the military relief period in Western Europe, and paragraph 3 seems to elaborate this point.

Paragraph 4 deals with relief administered by the U.S.S.R. in countries liberated by its military forces. This appears to me to be quite simply military relief in the initial period, and I can quite see that the view which the United States has adopted of the best methods of financing military relief encounters difficulties if it is transposed to Eastern Europe. The United States suggestion is that Lend-Lease supplies can be sent to Russia under the Protocol and made available by Russia to the liberated countries.

To apply similar procedure in the case of Mutual Aid might be to run counter to the basic principle of Mutual Aid as the recipient countries would think of their supplies as coming from Russian sources when they in fact came from Canadian sources. It does seem impracticable, as the memorandum suggests, to replace under Lend-Lease, or for that matter under Mutual Aid, supplies which the U.S.S.R. had previously made available to the Czechs. It might, however, be possible for the U.S.S.R. to count relief made available in this way as part of its contribution to UNRRA were it not for the fact that western countries are precluded from counting their military relief as part of their contribution to UNRRA.

The foregoing are merely off-hand opinions which are advanced tentatively, and I should appreciate your views on the whole question.

A similar letter is being sent to the Department of Finance.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I am writing in answer to Mr. Wrong's letter of May 12th regarding the relationship of the Russian Protocol and possible requests of the U.S.S.R. for relief supplies under UNRRA. I note that it is your offhand view that it is probably better that Russia should receive supplies under the Protocol than that they should be made available under UNRRA, but that you doubt whether the reasons given by the State Department in their memorandum apply in the case of Canada.

My view—and I believe the view of the Minister of Finance—is that it would be proper for Russia to secure relief supplies from UNRRA, and that we should prefer to see relief supplies required by Russia from Canada obtained through UNRRA rather than by Mutual Aid under the Protocol. Whether the United States would prefer to furnish supplies by Lend-Lease rather than through UNRRA is, of course, a matter for the United States itself to decide. However, it does seem to me that the arguments put forward by the State Department are not at all convincing. Certainly I do not see that we should be persuaded to follow them in the case of Canada.

I do not know of any clauses in the UNRRA agreement that would appear to bar the provision of supplies to Russia, nor am I aware of any of the resolutions of the Council which would have this effect. So far as I know, the fact that the supplies might be distributed by the Russian military authorities, rather than the civilian authorities, would not alter this situation. In fact, the resolutions on policy at the first session of the Council would appear to countenance supplies being distributed by the national authorities of the liberated areas (note resolution No.1),<sup>161</sup> and presumably the provision of supplies to supplement supplies being provided by the military authorities (note paragraph IV. 2(a) of resolution No.1). It is perhaps not unimportant to note that these resolutions were recommended to the Council by a Committee of which the Russian delegate was Chairman.

I note that it is apparently the policy of the United States and the United Kingdom authorities that the relief distributed by their military authorities is not being secured from, nor financed by, UNRRA. I do not see, however, that this precedent need be binding upon UNRRA or upon us in regard to other cases, including the one under consideration.

The arguments put forward by the State Department seem to me insufficient to support their view. Point No. 1 regarding shipping does not appear really to be relevant to the question of the financing of the supplies, which is the chief matter at issue. Point No.2 (a), as you point out, hardly seems to apply in respect of Canada, at least to the same degree under our Mutual Aid Agreement, as the State Department visualizes it applying in the case of the United States. I must say I am somewhat shocked to see the State Department laying such emphasis on a "final settlement" in respect of Lend-Lease goods. It is true, of course, that the determination of whether or not the Soviet Union should pay for the supplies it receives through UNRRA may be a difficult problem both for the Soviets and for UNRRA. However, it seems to me it is the sort of problem with which UNRRA must deal at some stage, and it is wholly proper that it should do so. To retreat before it at this stage would seem to me to betray a lack of courage and confidence on the part of UNRRA which would be a very alarming sign.

The point put forward in paragraph 2(a) by the State Department seems to me unwarranted, if I understand it correctly. The implication is that the United States will probably not pay its share of the total costs of UNRRA for relief and rehabilitation, either because the United States will be unable or unwilling to supply goods or services to the value of 90% of its contribution, and will not be prepared to release its funds to UNRRA to be used in making payments to those countries that are prepared to supply more than their proportion. I should think this point might be put to the State Department, perhaps in a somewhat more delicate form, because I cannot believe that they have seen the implications of what they have said. Our understanding from the beginning has been that the financing of UNRRA supplies is to be separated from their physical provision. I know that the United States takes a different attitude now in regard to Lend-Lease generally, but I do not believe we should let them feel that they can force the same view upon UNRRA, that is to say, that those countries providing the supplies will provide them through their contributions to UNRRA, and that the contributions will be limited to what they can supply.

In regard to the arguments put forward in paragraph 2 (c), I think it is desirable to be clear that should 1% of the national income of the contributing countries, along with the receipts which UNRRA obtains from those countries able to pay for supplies, not suffice to meet UNRRA's costs, then a further contribution would be appropriate. I should think from our point of view it is more desirable that we follow this course than that we try to relieve UNRRA of burdens which we all expected it to assume, and which in our view it should assume.

The second last sentence in this paragraph implies that it is an established principle that UNRRA funds will not be used to supply goods to the military forces to be distributed by them. As I have noted above, this does not seem to be supported either by the UNRRA agreement or by any of the decisions of the Council. It may have been the tacit assumption or understanding of those who were present at the meeting of the Council or among those officials who have been concerned with UNRRA matters since that time. However, I should think there is a very great danger in trying to refuse the use of the facilities of this first great international post-war organization to the one great power which has a legitimate claim for its help, on the grounds of a tacit understanding among officials.

The argument put forward in paragraph 3 of the State Department's memorandum appears to be that there is nothing essentially different about relief needs that should occasion any departure from the practice being followed by the United Kingdom and other countries in the provision of civilian supplies. Surely this argument can hardly be maintained in view of the specific functions which UNRRA has been created to perform. I should say that we ought to be prepared to continue to supply to the Soviet Union the civilian supplies which we have been providing heretofore, but that the increased demands for relief purposes which result from liberation are a reasonable responsibility of UNRRA. Consequently I am unable to agree with the conclusions reached by the State Department in the second part of paragraph 3.

In regard to the point raised in paragraph 4 of the State Department's memorandum, I am likewise unable to see that UNRRA cannot logically function in this situation. It is true that this area will presumably be for some time under the control of Russian or Czechoslovakian or other European forces rather than British or American forces, but surely we cannot expect UNRRA to operate only in areas in which the latter forces are or have been operating.

Whether or not UNRRA could replace supplies which the Soviets had previously made available to the Czechs for relief purposes is primarily a legal matter, I suppose, and I would not venture an opinion as to whether UNRRA was able to do that. Under the existing circumstances, however, there would seem to be a necessity for getting supplies to the Czechs as rapidly as possible, and there might be great difficulty in having supplies go all the way from outside sources to the Czechoslovakian areas by the time they were required. Consequently it would seem quite possible that the most sensible arrangement would be to have Russia supply them immediately from her reserve stocks, if any, which would be replenished by UNRRA. The only important point that would seem to me necessary is to have it clearly understood by the recipient populations that these supplies are coming indirectly from UNRRA, and that the policies followed in the distribution of the supplies should be consistent with the purposes and principles of UNRRA.

In general, I would fear that the view of the State Department in this matter is another step in the reduction of the importance of UNRRA and its replacement by direct arrangements between the Great Powers. It seems to me that our understanding was that UNRRA was to serve broad relief purposes in liberated areas without all these fine qualifications which the United States is attempting to put on its responsibilities. I think the Canadian public would expect that if Canadian supplies were required for the relief of liberated areas of the Soviet Union, they would be furnished through the international relief organization which we established with such éclat last year. I should think that we ought to furnish to Russia under the Protocol only war supplies proper, and such civilian supplies as we cannot reasonably regard as relief for liberated areas.

If we follow the course of action which I am suggesting above, supplies for Russian relief secured through UNRRA will be paid for out of the general contributions made to UNRRA, and if the supplies required from Canada for this and other purposes exceed in value Canada's share of the financial contribution, then presumably the United States and other countries will be helping to finance these Canadian supplies to Russia. This, it seems to me, is exactly what we understood when we entered into the UNRRA arrangements. To avoid this by charging relief supplies directly to Mutual Aid which could be charged to UNRRA would be increasing the burden upon Canada in a manner inconsistent with our understanding on the financing of relief, or else under present circumstances might result in our being unable to furnish other supplies under Mutual Aid to countries requiring them.

I note that Mr. Pearson is inclined to agree with the State Department on this matter, but I am unable to see that he gives any argument in support of his attitude.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

P.S. There is a danger, too, that in including relief supplies in the Protocol, we should be led later to a position where the Soviet Union might expect us to include other post-war assistance on a Protocol basis. It is better to confine the Protocol to essential war aid.

RE: YOUR LETTER OF MAY 12TH REGARDING UNRRA AND THE U.S.S.R.

Based upon the premise that supplies which can be moved into the U.S.S.R. depends upon routes and shipping tonnage at the present time, may I make some observations.

On broad principles if the U.S.S.R. applies for relief through UNRRA the tonnage involved would have to replace Protocol tonnage.

For internal or political reasons the U.S.S.R. might wish to place UNRRA requirements under Protocol, replacing some military supplies. If placed under the Protocol she would receive more assurance as far as movement of supplies is concerned than if such supplies remained outside the Protocol. Other than the above we can see no special benefit to the U.S.S.R. in having UNRRA supplies included in the Protocol.

Possible benefit to Canada or the U.S.A. by having UNRRA supplies under Protocol.

If UNRRA supplies were included in the Protocol the total supplies, including UNRRA and Mutual Aid or Lend-Lease supplies, would then be limited to total North American tonnage made available to the U.S.S.R. under the Protocol and might relieve pressure by the U.S.S.R. to increase tonnage above that made available under the Protocol if it only included Mutual Aid and Lend-Lease goods.

Objections to placing UNRRA supplies under Protocol.

Possible interference with the movement of war supplies received under Lend-Lease or Mutual Aid and the danger thereby of prolonging the period of the war.

Inflexibility.

If UNRRA items are included under the Protocol without adding additional escape clauses (which would destroy the effect of a Protocol) greater need for UNRRA supplies might thereby be kept from more needy nations.

Protocol has been established for military supplies but Protocol procedure does not seem to be included in the original principles and concepts of UNRRA procedure.

With regard to paragraph 2(a) of the memorandum attached to your letter of May 12th, and the fourth paragraph of your letter of May 12th, repayment under Mutual Aid does not present the same problem as under Lend-Lease because of the variance in the wording and conditions of the Master Agreements of the two countries with the U.S.S.R. The Canadian Master Agreement with the U.S.S.R.<sup>162</sup> sets out those items which may be required to be returned or made available to Canada, whereas the U.S. Master Agreement with the U.S.S.R.<sup>163</sup> is most indefinite and leaves to some date in the future what repayment the U.S. will require.

Under paragraph 2(b) of the memorandum attached to your letter it proposes that the U.S.A. might benefit financially if UNRRA supplies were placed under Protocol.

The only way we can see that the U.S.A. might benefit by this policy would be if by such procedure the U.S.A. were thereby enabled to sell to UNRRA for payment out of the 10% pooled funds a much greater percentage than her 10% contributions to the pooled funds.

In addition to the possible financial benefit cited above, it might appear if these supplies were included in the U.S. schedule attached to the Protocol that the U.S.A. was making such supplies available to the U.S.S.R.

Paragraph 2(c). Insofar as UNRRA is concerned we agree.

Paragraph 3. Refers to only three supplying countries—should not this include all the signatories to the Agreement?

Paragraph 4. Agree.

Paragraph 5. Agree except with the possibility of moving, say medical supplies, by air transport by agreement with the U.S.S.R.

Paragraph 6. We agree with the possible exception set out under paragraph 5.

Paragraph 7. Agree.

In conclusion, it would be our recommendation that UNRRA supplies be excluded from Protocol procedure.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I am referring to your letter of May 9th, to the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, on the subject of the possible request from the U.S.S.R. for relief supplies under UNRRA.

While our off-hand opinion coincided with yours in considering that the stand taken by the State Department was in the present circumstances a sound one, further consideration of this complicated problem has led us to modify our views. Our observations on the State Department's memorandum of May 5th are embodied in a memorandum, a copy of which is enclosed. It is for you to consider how far the reasoning set out in this memorandum should be communicated to the United States authorities. The memorandum has been written in a very comprehensive form in order to give you a clear indication of how the question is viewed in Ottawa.

The Canadian authorities cannot possibly object to the United States transferring supplies to the U.S.S.R. by Lend-Lease under the Protocol for purposes connected with relief and rehabilitation in the U.S.S.R. or in other countries. Our position should be that we feel that it would be a mistake to transfer Canadian supplies under Mutual Aid for these purposes and that it would be extremely unfortunate for the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom and Canada to attempt to interfere with the interpretation which UNRRA, acting under its constitutional arrangements, may put upon its functions in relation to relief in the U.S.S.R. and in territories which it may liberate.

Yours sincerely,

MEMORANDUM ON RELIEF FOR THE SOVIET UNION AND EASTERN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

1. The question raised by the State Department's memorandum of May 5th is whether relief supplies for Russia and countries liberated by Russia should be made available; (a) under the Protocol, (b) through UNRRA, or (c) partly under the Protocol and partly through UNRRA. The State Department argues that at the present time relief supplies should not be made available through UNRRA.

2. The problem has three aspects; (a) physical, (b) financial and (c) political. Of these the political appears overwhelmingly the most important.

3. As regards the physical aspect the State Department's argument is:

Supplies to Russia are limited by shipping and cannot be increased so that if supplies were sent by UNRRA they would reduce the quantities that could be shipped under the Protocol. The liberated countries can be approached only through the U.S.S.R. and the State Department does not want to displace Protocol supplies by relief supplies for the benefit of these countries.

The most that this contention amounts to is that it is indifferent from the physical point of view whether the supplies are sent under the Protocol or through UNRRA, or partly in one way and partly in the other. Russia and the liberated countries will get the same quantity in any event, no more and no less.

4. As regards the financial aspect, the State Department points out that it has not been decided whether the U.S.S.R. would be considered a paying country by UNRRA. Assuming that it would not be so considered, the U.S.S.R. might avoid what the State Department calls "a final settlement" whereas for goods supplied under the Protocol "there would always be the possibility of payment or other benefits being required."

As no settlement of this character is likely to be required in return for Canada's Mutual Aid, it comes as something of a shock to learn that the State Department considers that as regards Lend-Lease the issue is still open in such a wide measure that the relatively small difference in the total amount of Lend-Lease to Russia, which the relief supplies would constitute, might make an appreciable difference to "the final settlement."

The State Department contends that all goods originating in the United States are paid for by the United States and that it, therefore, does not matter to the United States whether they go through UNRRA or through Lend-Lease. This argument is not valid for Canada since UNRRA supplies would be paid for after our contribution to UNRRA had been exhausted. It is only valid for the United States if that country has decided not to release free funds to UNRRA in excess of the minimum of 10%.

The Canadian Department of Finance "cannot believe that the State Department has seen the implications of what it has said." It appears to us to be contrary to the whole spirit of the UNRRA Agreement that a country in the position of the United States should limit its contribution of free funds to UNRRA to the 10% suggested as a minimum. Adherence to this view by the United States would mean in substance that Canada could not expect to furnish physical supplies to UNRRA much in excess of the 9/10 of Canada's own contribution, which is given in the form of a credit for UNRRA supplies. It will be of interest to the Canadian Government to ascertain, in a tactful manner, what the United States view is on this point. Any attempt to apply to UNRRA the doctrine that the supplying country should bear the whole cost of the supplies which it furnishes, would appear to the Canadian authorities most unfortunate and at variance to the whole plan for relief and rehabilitation.

The State Department further contends that UNRRA should use its funds only to supply goods which cannot otherwise be supplied. The effect of this contention would obviously be to increase the relief burden on Britain and Canada in comparison with the burden on the other UNRRA countries. The alternative would be a further assessment of all UNRRA countries when the original 1% of the national income is exhausted. The Canadian authorities would be interested in knowing if this alternative is something which the United States is particularly anxious to avoid facing at the present time.

5. The political considerations are not quite the same when relief for Russian territory is under consideration as they are when the relief of Czechoslovakia and Poland are concerned. The State Department suggests that UNRRA should be notified that all relief supplies for the liberated areas of the U.S.S.R. would be made available during the present phase of the war under the Protocol. If there is a necessity for continuing relief supplies after the termination of hostilities, when Lend-Lease aid may not be available, the problem can be considered in all its aspects.

In our view there is a great danger in refusing the use of the facilities of UNRRA, the first great international post-war organization, to the one great power that has a legitimate claim for its help. The resolutions on policy adopted at the first session of the UNRRA Council appear to contemplate supplies being distributed by the national authorities of the liberated areas, and presumably the provision of supplies to supplement what may be provided by the military authorities. (see resolution No. 1 and particularly paragraph IV. 2(a) of that resolution.) These resolutions were recommended to the Council by a Committee on which the Russian delegate was Chairman.

6. As regards the countries which may be liberated by Russian arms the State Department would not agree to replace under Lend-Lease supplies which the Soviets had made available to countries liberated by them.

The view of the State Department is that UNRRA should not operate in areas liberated by Russia while such areas are under the control and supervision of the Soviet military. UNRRA should take over only after recognized local governments are functioning.

The State Department objects to UNRRA replacing in the future supplies made available by the U.S.S.R. now—"we should take the firm position that UNRRA funds are for relief and not to replace someone else's contribution to relief."

In our view it is important that relief should reach the Czechs and Poles as expeditiously as possible and that the U.S.S.R. should not have as an excuse for withholding relief from either of these countries the argument that the western countries objected to supplying it through UNRRA. It also appears to us important that both Czechs and Poles should know that they are receiving the relief from an international organization of the United Nations and not exclusively as charity from the U.S.S.R.

7. In general, the State Department's memorandum lends itself to the interpretation that another step is contemplated which would reduce the importance of UNRRA and replace it by direct arrangements among the great powers. The Canadian public would expect Canadian supplies required for the relief of liberated areas in the Soviet Union, in Czechoslovakia and in Poland to be furnished through the relief organization of which they have heard so much. It is, therefore, our view that the Protocol should be confined to war supplies together with such civilian supplies as cannot reasonably be regarded as relief for the liberated areas. To include relief and rehabilitation supplies under the Protocol might well lead the Soviet Union to expect post-war assistance through similar channels. We do not, of course, wish to carry our view to the extreme of insisting that civilian supplies furnished to Russia should never be diverted for the purposes of military relief in Russia itself or in liberated territories. What we do suggest is that it would be a mistake to include specific items in the Protocol for this purpose.

Dear Mr. Taft,

Some time ago you were good enough to hand me, for the consideration of the Canadian authorities, a memorandum on the subject of a possible request from the U.S.S.R. for relief supplies under UNRRA. I forwarded this memorandum to Ottawa and have received their observations concerning it.

Their first reaction was that, for administrative and shipping convenience, and possibly for other reasons, there was much to be said in favour of sending all supplies to Russia in present circumstances under the Protocol. Further consideration, however, seemed to indicate that there would be complications involved in the adoption of such a procedure. It would, for instance, not be easy to tell the Russians that no relief supplies would be available to them under UNRRA without adopting the same attitude in respect of China and other Far Eastern territories which may be liberated. It might well be argued that if the U.S.S.R. is eligible for relief under the UNRRA Agreement it would be entitled to receive that relief from UNRRA even at the expense of supplies under the Protocol. The Canadian authorities feel that it would be unfortunate if the U.S.A., United Kingdom and Canada attempted to interfere with any interpretation that UNRRA, acting under its constitutional arrangements might put upon its functions in relation to relief to the U.S.S.R. and to territories liberated by the U.S.S.R.

If, and when, the U.S.S.R. specifically request relief supplies from UNRRA the whole question of the advisability of sending such supplies or maintaining exclusive Protocol arrangements might be discussed with the Soviet authorities.

The Canadian authorities, in short, have some doubts as to the wisdom of all the conclusions reached in your memorandum dealing with this subject. Their doubts are set out in the attached memorandum which I would be glad to discuss with you at any time.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

Memorandum by Embassy in United States

COMMENTS ON STATE DEPARTMENT'S MEMORANDUM OF MAY 5, 1944, ENTITLED "RELIEF FOR THE SOVIET UNION AND EASTERN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES"

1. The question raised by the State Department's memorandum of May 5th, hereafter referred to as the memorandum, is whether relief supplies for Russia and countries liberated by Russia should be made available; (a) under the Protocol, (b) through UNRRA, or (c) partly under the Protocol and partly through UNRRA.

2. The memorandum is of the opinion that at the present time all such relief supplies should be made available under the Protocol exclusively and that UNRRA should be notified accordingly.

3. The problem has three aspects: (a) physical, (b) financial and (c) political. Of these the political appears to be the most important.

4. As regards the physical aspect, the view expressed in the memorandum appears to be:

Supplies for Russia are limited by shipping and cannot at present be increased. Therefore, if supplies were sent by UNRRA, they would reduce the quantities that could be shipped under the Protocol. Likewise Eastern European countries liberated by the Russian armies can be approached only through the U.S.S.R. For them, therefore, the same conditions exist. The memorandum argues against displacing Protocol supplies by UNRRA supplies for the benefit of Russia and those liberated countries.

5. It appears to the Canadian authorities, however, that the present shipping situation does not necessarily constitute an argument either for or against sending relief supplies, in whole, or in part, through UNRRA. It is a matter of indifference from the physical point of view. As long as conditions remain as at present, Russia and the liberated countries will get the same quantity of supplies in any event; no more and no less.

6. As regards the financial aspect, the memorandum (para. 2a) points out that it has not been decided whether the USSR is to be considered a paying or non-paying country by UNRRA. Assuming the latter, the USSR might avoid "a final settlement" for UNRRA goods whereas for goods supplied under the Protocol "there would always be the possibility of payment or other benefits being required."

The Canadian authorities desire to point out that no settlement of this character, for goods supplied by Canadian Mutual Aid under the Protocol, is likely to be required by Canada.

7. The memorandum (para. 2b) states that all relief goods originating in the United States are paid for by the United States and that, therefore, it does not matter to the United States whether such goods go through UNRRA or through Lend-Lease. This argument is not valid for Canada. If supplies from Canada were required by UNRRA after Canada's relief contribution had been exhausted, such supplies would be paid for by UNRRA out of the free funds supplied by other Member Nations of UNRRA and conceivably, therefore, out of free funds supplied by the United States. It is not entirely clear why the USA is not in the same position or why all UNRRA goods from the United States should be paid for by the United States. Even if the United States does not plan to release free funds to UNRRA in excess of the 10% minimum (and the Canadian authorities of course do not know whether this supposition is correct) is it not possible for UNRRA to spend in the United States free exchange contributed by other countries?

8. In general, the Canadian authorities would not favour the doctrine that the supplying country must necessarily bear the whole cost of the supplies which it furnished.

9. The memorandum (para. 2c) further states that UNRRA should use its funds only to supply goods which cannot otherwise be supplied. The effect of such a principle would obviously be to increase the relief burden on some UNRRA countries in comparison with the burden on the other UNRRA countries. The alternative to such a principle, which the Canadian Government considers more equitable, would be a further assessment of all UNRRA countries when the original 1% of the national income is exhausted.

10. In so far as political considerations are concerned, these are not quite the same when relief for Russian territory is under consideration as they are when the relief of Czechoslovakia and Poland are concerned. The memorandum suggests that UNRRA should be notified that all relief supplies for the liberated areas of the U.S.S.R. would be made available, during the present phase of the war, under the Protocol; that if there is a necessity for continuing relief supplies after the termination of hostilities, when Lend-Lease aid may not be available, the problem can then be reconsidered in all its aspects.

In the Canadian view there is danger in refusing and especially in taking the initiative in refusing the use of the facilities of UNRRA, the first great international post-war organization, to the one great power that has a legitimate claim for its help.

11. The resolutions on policy adopted at the first session of the UNRRA Council appear to contemplate supplies being distributed by the national authorities of the liberated areas, and presumably the provision of supplies to supplement what may be provided by the military authorities. (See resolution No. 1 and particularly paragraph IV. 2(a) of that resolution.) These resolutions were recommended to the Council by a Committee on which the Russian delegate was Chairman.

There is, of course, no question of encouraging the USSR to use the UNRRA relief channel. It is merely a question of the wisdom of telling them that this channel is closed. The Canadian authorities have serious doubts on this score.

12. As regards the countries which may be liberated by Russian arms, the State Department doubts whether it would be possible to agree to replace, under Lend-Lease, supplies which the Soviets had made available to countries liberated by them. This, of course, is for the United States to decide. It is, however, quite a different matter to oppose, as the memorandum does in paragraph 6(b), any proposal that UNRRA might replace in the future supplies made available by the Soviet government for use in territory liberated by the Soviet army. "We should take the firm position" says the memorandum, "that UNRRA funds are for relief and not to replace someone else's contribution to relief."

13. The Canadian authorities would not go so far as this. The Canadian view is that it should be open to UNRRA to decide whether it can make an agreement with the Soviet authorities to replace relief supplies distributed by the Soviet military forces in liberated territory. The USSR is not expected to be a supplier contributor to UNRRA; its own resources in this field are so seriously diminished that it needs help itself. It is hard to believe therefore that the Soviet army would distribute relief supplies in Czech or Polish territory except as an interim and emergency measure. Is it wise, therefore, to lay down the principle that UNRRA shall not make any arrangements with the Soviet military authorities in any circumstances to replace such relief supplies?

It is recognized that there are dangers to avoid in arrangements of this kind, but would it not be better to consider each situation on its merits?

14. Linked to the above, is the argument in the memorandum (para. 2c) approving "UNRRA's principle of not using its funds to supply goods to military forces to be distributed by them." Such a principle would apply to countries being liberated by the Soviet army as well as to Soviet territory. The Canadian authorities are not aware, however, of any UNRRA "principle" which would prevent relief goods from being distributed by UNRRA and the military in co-operation during the period of military control. Resolution 1 (particularly section IV.2) contemplates, indeed it seems to encourage, the making of arrangements between UNRRA and the military for UNRRA help during the period of military control. The fact that the Allied Command on the western front does not desire such help need not be a bar to the making of arrangements between UNRRA and the Soviet military. Of course, if the Soviet military did not desire UNRRA intervention during the period of military control, or desired it on conditions unacceptable to UNRRA, it would follow that no UNRRA aid or intervention would be forthcoming during this period. In that event, it would be open to the Soviet Government to seek relief aid in some other way, i.e., by the Protocol method, and the United States, United Kingdom and Canada would deal with such a request on its merits.

15. In the Canadian view the main thing is to get necessary relief to Russians, Poles and Czechs as expeditiously as possible, and preferably through a United Nations agency, i.e. UNRRA. The alternative would be that Poles and Czechs would look on Russia as the only country which had provided for their relief even though the Russians might have obtained their relief supplies under the Protocol.

16. The Canadian public would prefer that Canadian supplies required for the relief of liberated areas in the Soviet Union, in Czechoslovakia and in Poland, should be furnished through the relief organization of which they have heard so much. The Canadian authorities therefore would be reluctant to use the Protocol, i.e., Mutual Aid funds, to furnish such relief supplies. It is the Canadian view that the Protocol should be confined to war supplies together with such civilian supplies as cannot reasonably be regarded as relief for liberated areas. Canada does not, of course, wish to carry its view to the extreme of insisting that civilian supplies furnished to Russia under the Protocol should never be diverted for the purposes of military relief in Russia itself or in liberated territories. It is felt, however, that it would be a mistake to include specific items in the Protocol for this purpose, if these items could be supplied under the UNRRA arrangements.

Whether that can, in fact, be done is primarily a matter to be determined by the USSR and the UNRRA.

IMMEDIATE. My letter July 4th to Mr. Robertson† regarding Soviet Relief requirements.

Mitchell of the State Department told me today that they are not disposed to press this issue as they appreciated the difficulties, some of which were emphasized in your letter of May 24th. They had instructed their Ambassador in Moscow to tell the Soviet Government that they assumed that the Soviet High Command would accept responsibility for relief in Soviet and foreign liberated territories during the period of military occupation, but that they would welcome from the Soviet an indication of the nature and quantity of supplies which would be required so that they would be in a better position to help later. They would also indicate to the Soviet Government that if the latter wished UNRRA to act for them, even during the military relief period, this would be very satisfactory to the United States. They thought that the British would take the same line. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-4714

Ottawa, November 25, 1944

IMMEDIATE. Your WA-6514 of November 17, relief supplies for U.S.S.R. and territories liberated by the U.S.S.R.

In regard to this problem, with its tangle of financial, physical and political considerations, we think it perhaps helpful to put forward, as much for your comment as your guidance, what we regard to be desirable objectives:

(1) During the period of European hostilities with the Soviet resources totally engaged in war, we consider that the distinction between relief and war needs of the U.S.S.R. itself need not be made; that both should be regarded as war requirements and treated on a protocol basis;

(2) Relief needs during the period of military occupation of territories liberated by the U.S.S.R. should likewise be regarded as military needs of the U.S.S.R. and treated on a protocol basis. This involves a willingness to leave with the Soviet authorities the responsibility for determining when military occupation ends but we are not, however, precluded from discussing the point on its merits with the Soviet;

(3) When the U.S.S.R. is no longer a belligerent, which may be the case following the cessation of European hostilities, then the relief requirements of the U.S.S.R. should be treated by UNRRA as UNRRA treats the relief requirements of other ex-belligerents. The procedures to be followed are a matter for agreement by the Executive Committee of UNRRA. As a Committee member, we would hold the view that the UNRRA procedures which apply generally to applicants for relief should apply also to the U.S.S.R.;

(4) After the cessation of European hostilities, or the cessation of the period of military occupation, the relief requirements of the territories liberated by the U.S.S.R. should be treated by UNRRA as it treats the requirements of other liberated territories;

(5) Adoption of such a policy does not remove the difficulty of dealing with the U.S.S.R. It does, however, leave military matters to the protocol countries and clear-cut relief matters to UNRRA. We are not disposed to support any move to influence Governor Lehman by concerted U.S., U.K. and Canadian pressure. If the U.S. feels that Lehman may make imprudent commitments they should deal with the problem as a member of UNRRA in the Council or Executive Committee. We consider that Lehman is not answerable directly to the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada, nor to C.L.A.C., but to his own organization. It is our duty as well as our safeguard against U.S.S.R. criticism to keep UNRRA an independent organization beyond the influence of the U.S., U.K. and Canada except as that influence may legitimately and openly be brought to bear in the organization's own forums. Ends.

Washington, November 28, 1944

Dear Mr. Angus,

We are glad to have your teletype EX-4714 of Nov. 25th on the complex question of relief supplies for the U.S.S.R. and for territories liberated by the U.S.S.R.

As we interpret your statement, your view, with respect to UNRRA's function, is that relief needs of territories liberated by the U.S.S.R. would become an UNRRA responsibility only after the end of the period of military occupation or after the cessation of European hostilities and that the relief needs of the U.S.S.R. itself would become UNRRA's responsibility only after the U.S.S.R. is no longer a belligerent. (In the case of both the liberated territories and the U.S.S.R. the assumption of relief responsibility by UNRRA would be dependent, of course, upon satisfactory agreement between UNRRA and the authorities concerned.)

This view would seem to be the reverse of the earlier Canadian view expressed in the enclosure which accompanied Mr. Robertson's letter of May 24th. You will recall that we discussed this memorandum when you were in Washington on June 6th and that I provided a copy of the memorandum to the State Department official concerned. At the same time we sent a copy of the memorandum to the U.K. Embassy for their information. In the light of the apparent change in the Canadian position we are deferring any statement of even our tentative view to the State Department or U.K. Embassy until you confirm that the views expressed in your teletype (in which you remark that your statement is made as much for our comment as our guidance) are recognized as diverging from earlier statements on this subject and can be regarded as sufficiently firm to provide a basis for our participation in the preparation of a U.S., U.K., Canadian paper.

In this connection I might quote an extract from a letter which the interested official in the U.K. Embassy has written recently (November 24) to the Foreign Office:

“Since October 3rd we have heard nothing from the Americans on this subject. Meanwhile, we gave a detailed summary of the whole situation to the Canadian Embassy on October 13th and they have promised to extract an expression of the Canadian view from Ottawa. We are reluctant to pursue the matter further with the Americans until we have reached an agreement with the Canadians.

You will recall that, whereas Law and Acheson suggested to the Russians at Montreal that they might do well to present their relief requirements outside the framework of UNRRA, the pre-Montreal view of the Canadians was precisely the opposite.

However, my hope is that it will be possible for the Canadians and ourselves to agree a paper which could then be presented at CLAC.”

It would be helpful to us in our discussions if you could give us some background information on the apparent transition in the Canadian view on this subject. We realize that the original statement was not so much concerned with indicating what UNRRA should do as it was with indicating what UNRRA is “legally” empowered to do under the Atlantic City resolutions. It occurs to us that the apparent change in your view may have resulted from a recognition of UNRRA’s inability in practice to undertake certain responsibilities which are within its “legal” competence. If this is the explanation, I presume that you would still assert UNRRA’s right to offer to provide relief during the military period under paragraph IV, 2a of Atlantic City Resolution No. 1, while at the same time expressing your view that in the present circumstances such relief might better be provided through the Protocol arrangement (with the U.S.S.R. determining the proportion of relief supplies to war materials within the limit of available supplies, and transport).

Apart from the general query concerning the apparent change in view we have no specific comments on your teletype pending discussion with the U.S. and U.K. It would appear, however, that the views expressed in your teletype are fairly close to the general view which the U.S. and U.K. have been inclined to support, as indicated in the U.K. Embassy memorandum and telegrams† which we have sent to you.

I note that you refer in paragraph no. 3 to possible expression of view by Canada "as a Committee member." I take it that you are referring to the Central Committee of UNRRA. As you know, Canada is not a member of that Committee. We do participate on occasions in its work but only when subjects of specific concern to Canada are under consideration or through our chairmanship on the Committee on Supplies. In either capacity, however, we would in practice be given an opportunity to express the Canadian view when and if this subject is referred to the Central Committee.

Finally, I should say that I am not interpreting the final paragraph of your teletype as indicating that you are averse to having this subject discussed in CLAC. I take it that you are concerned lest CLAC (or any other Combined Committee or agency) should exert pressure on UNRRA to gain acceptance for the collective view of the U.S., U.K. and Canada. Clearly it is most desirable that we should not be party to any "pressure group" which might attempt to determine UNRRA's policy outside the UNRRA Committees or Council. At the same time it is apparent that this subject will be further explored by the U.S. and U.K. in Washington with the intention of arriving at an agreed view, and it would probably be undesirable from all points of view for us (as one of the supplying countries under the Protocol) to refrain from participating in such exploratory discussions. Combined discussion does not necessarily mean combined pressure. In this particular case I should think that combined discussion might well produce an agreed view which, by defining the division of responsibility, would lessen the likelihood of improper pressure being exerted on UNRRA. Whether these discussions take place in CLAC or elsewhere seems to me immaterial, although my impression is that this Committee probably provides a satisfactory forum for such discussions.

As you will gather from the excerpt quoted above we are under considerable pressure from the U.K. Embassy for a statement of Canada's view which can be regarded as sufficiently firm to provide a basis for our participation in a joint discussion. Could you therefore let us have your reply to this letter as soon as possible? As I have indicated, we shall not discuss this subject with the U.S. or U.K. representatives until we hear from you again.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

Ottawa, December 2, 1944

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I refer to your letter to Mr. Angus of November 28 on relief supplies for the U.S.S.R. and for territories liberated by the U.S.S.R.

I don't consider our teletype EX-4714 of November 25th essentially inconsistent with my letter of May 24th and enclosure, if allowance is made first for the clarification in the responsibilities of the military authorities and UNRRA which has been made in the six months since the letter was written and secondly for the change in our conception of what are relief goods which has resulted from the clarification of responsibilities.

Of necessity, the protocols will contain supplies susceptible of being used either for relief or the maintenance of a productive war effort. It is hoped that with the help of protocol supplies the U.S.S.R. will be able to maintain its own population and provide military relief for the areas she liberates. But no item should be described in the protocols as for relief in such a way as to suggest a claim by the donors to ask an accounting of the Russians if the supplies are put to one use rather than the other.

If this position differs from "the pre-Montreal Canadian view" it still does not go as far as the suggestion of Law and Acheson, mentioned in your letter. When the relief needs of the U.S.S.R. emerge clearly as being for relief and not for maintenance of the war effort, they cease to be an appropriate matter for protocol supplies. UNRRA will then have a function to perform in the Soviet on the Soviet's request. Prior to the end of hostilities, protocol supplies will no doubt suffice and the U.S.S.R. is not likely to call on UNRRA for supplies as this would raise the issue of payment. If hostilities end, doubtless the protocol will end and the U.S.S.R. will have to apply to UNRRA for any relief supplies which may be needed. Presumably the U.S.S.R. will hesitate to ask to be classed as non- or part-paying and no problem arises until she does.

As to the liberated areas, no protocol supplies should be ear-marked for Poland or Czechoslovakia though protocol supplies may be used for military relief there. It seems likely that the Soviet will have an incentive to shorten the military period so as to free supplies in the then current protocol from the drain of military relief. UNRRA's duties then arise. The U.S.S.R. might be willing to surrender shipping space to UNRRA since she will prefer to give up shipping space only rather than both space and supplies. The opening of Odessa would of course ease even the shipping.

As to UNRRA's treatment of Poland and Czechoslovakia, assuming them to be non-paying, we assert now as always our belief that UNRRA should adopt an independent attitude and be free from outside pressures. We confirm your view as to the acceptability of combined discussion which you describe as "exploratory." As you put it, "Combined discussion does not necessarily mean combined pressure." Nevertheless, as you may have observed, "not necessarily," like "necessity," has a tendency to know no master. We would add therefore that we feel combined discussion should not develop in the direction of combined or individual pressure.

Your sincerely,

SECRET

Washington, December 29, 1944

Dear Mr. Wrong,

Although nothing definite has emerged from any of the recent discussions here concerning relief supplies for the U.S.S.R. and for territories liberated by the U.S.S.R., I am writing this note to keep you informed on developments. Shortly after we received your letter of December 2nd relating to teletype EX-4714 of Nov. 25th we learned from the U.K. Embassy that they had received a message from London indicating that Sir Archibald Clark Kerr, the U.K. Ambassador to Moscow, was expected in London shortly, and the message instructed the U.K. Embassy in Washington to refrain from pressing for further discussion of this subject until later instructions could be provided in the light of discussions with Sir Archibald in London. The further instructions have not yet been received.

Yesterday we were told by the U.K. Embassy that Mr. Wyndham White, the secretary principally concerned with this subject (as well as with other relief matters), was leaving for London today, and we were asked to provide him with some indication of the Canadian view. We saw a representative of the British Embassy yesterday afternoon and indicated to him that the Canadian view was developing along the lines of paragraphs numbers 1, 2, 3 and 4 of your teletype EX-4714. He made no particular comments but indicated that Mr. Wyndham White would inform London that the Canadian view was "developing" along these lines. I might add that the discussion of this subject will probably be affected by the fact that UNRRA has already approached the Combined Boards with requests for allocations for Poland and Czechoslovakia and is expected to ship some 8000 tons of supplies (presumably by way of Murmansk) in January.<sup>164</sup> The UNRRA mission which was organized for the purpose of supervising or assisting in the distribution of such UNRRA supplies in areas liberated by the U.S.S.R. have not yet been granted visas by the Soviet Government which apparently is continuing to ignore their applications for

The following footnote was in the original:

Unfortunately some doubt has been cast on U.N.R.R.A.'s ability to hold these allocations of shipping space and supplies and to make deliveries, by a statement made by Governor Lehman this afternoon: "The headquarters office of UNRRA in Washington has just completed arrangements with the Combined Shipping Adjustment Board for the assignment of a moderate amount of shipping space to carry relief supplies for Poland and Czechoslovakia—contingent upon assurances that these supplies will be accepted in ports of the U.S.S.R. and given internal transport by U.S.S.R. facilities. These assurances have not yet been received, but it is hoped they will be forthcoming shortly." A copy of Governor Lehman's full statement† is attached.

visas. The U.K. representative pointed out in this connection that the Foreign Office telegram, RELIEF NO. 20 of Sept. 24, (a copy of which we sent to Mr. Robertson with our letter of October 18th*) had stated the U.K. Government's view as follows:

"Despatch of a supervising mission raises a general question of UNRRA policy which is not special to this case. Such supervision in degrees appropriate to different countries which will be subsidised by UNRRA is obviously most desirable to avoid waste and to prevent discrimination and may be indispensably required by American public opinion. The right of UNRRA to insist on it as a condition of sending supplies is not however established by any of the Atlantic City resolutions. Russia for obvious reasons would dispute any such claim and if it came to an issue their view might be supported by other allies. If therefore they refuse to admit a mission on military grounds we feel that it would be unwise for UNRRA to refuse supplies on account of this unless general support is assured."

Mr. Gregg, who has been appointed head of the Mission, regards his function as related more closely to assistance in the distribution of supplies than to supervision over such distribution.

I might add, finally, that the U.K. Government has apparently expressed its opposition to Governor Lehman's reported intention of making a formal agreement with the Lublin Committee of National Liberation.<sup>165</sup> Apparently the U.K. Government considers that this Mission could be received and could assist in the distribution of supplies without any formal agreement between UNRRA and the Lublin Committee.

Yours sincerely,

M. M. MAHONEY

TELETYPE WA-4098

Washington, August 3, 1945

CONFIDENTIAL. Further information concerning the request which the U.S.S.R. has filed with UNRRA for supplies to the value of $700,000,000 has now become available.

This information would indicate the following general breakdown of the $700,000,000 total:

This Committee was recognized by the Soviet Union as the provisional government of Poland.

Food	$430,000,000
Manufactured consumer goods and raw materials	$123,000,000
Medical instruments, apparatus and medicaments	$ 13,000,000
Equipment	$ 97,000,000
Agricultural machinery and tractors	$ 10,000,000
Metals, cables and wires and chemicals	$ 26,000,000

It has been indicated by the Acting Council Member of UNRRA for the U.S.S.R. that these values are F.A.S.<sup>166</sup> and do not include shipping and related charges which might require something like an additional $150,000,000.

In submitting their request the Russians have made it clear that they desire to have these supplies delivered during a one year period and on a free-of-charge basis. In justifying their request they argue that all the supplies listed are indispensable for meeting the most important needs of the population of devastated areas in the U.S.S.R., and that in fact the total supplies requested would meet only to a small extent the immediate needs of those areas which have been liberated from the enemy. They have requested urgent consideration and full compliance with their request on the basis of "the great losses incurred by the Soviet Union in this war as well as its exceptional part in the war against Germany and her satellites."

Preliminary discussion among representatives of UNRRA, the State Department, the United Kingdom Embassy, this Embassy and representatives of the Combined Boards would indicate that at least some of the following preliminaries would have to be completed before action could reasonably be taken on the program:

1. The Committee established under UNRRA Resolution 23<sup>167</sup> to determine the ability of countries to pay for supplies requested will have to examine the financial resources available to Russia and decide whether supplies could appropriately be provided on a free-of-charge basis.
2. The Intergovernmental and National Supply authorities will require more detailed specifications for the items indicated.
3. Information may be required concerning the end uses for the various supplies if a fair comparison is to be made with requests received from other claimants.
4. It would be desirable to receive some fairly detailed indication of the extent to which comparable or identical (e.g. textile equipment, etc.) supplies are to be received by Russia from the western zones of Germany under the Potsdam arrangements.

See George Woodbridge, et al., UNRRA: The History of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. Volume III, New York, Columbia University Press, 1950, p. 67.

5. Similarly it would be desirable to have an indication of the disposal of eastern European surpluses (e.g. possibly foodstuffs comparable with those included in the present Russian request).

6. Arrangements for allowing an UNRRA Mission to observe the distribution of these supplies would presumably have to be initiated at some stage.

In my immediately following teletype† I am reporting a more detailed statement of the items included in the Russian request. This statement as you will observe is expressed in a mixture of values, weights, and units which will have to be amplified considerably before the statement will appear completely intelligible. This statement has been provided to UNRRA formally by the Acting Council Member of UNRRA for the U.S.S.R. I am not certain that the itemized statement includes everything represented by the $700,000,000 total or by the general breakdown given above. For instance it is considered by the Supply authorities here that the 850,000 tons of foodstuffs itemized in this statement would hardly be valued at the $430,000,000 total indicated for food above. It is understood that Sergeev, Deputy Commissar for Foreign Trade and Council Member of UNRRA for the U.S.S.R. will have more detailed information with him at the London Council meeting.

I am reporting this information to you by teletype in case you may wish to transmit it to the Canadian delegation at the UNRRA Council meeting with your preliminary comments. I shall send you by tomorrow's bag copies of the available documents,† which have been summarized in these two teletypes. Ends.

U.S.S.R. REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FROM UNRRA

Attached are two teletypes<sup>168</sup> giving details of the U.S.S.R. request for supplies from UNRRA. The total amount is $700,000,000, more than half of which is for scarce foods; no wheat is included.

I have referred copies of the teletypes to the following Departments for information:

I do not know that any other action is necessary at the present time. My recollection of Mr. Angus' views was that if the U.S.S.R. fulfilled the conditions required for UNRRA help, including satisfying the Committee established under Resolution 23 to determine ability to pay, UNRRA could not refuse to assist; the scale of assistance would have to conform to bases of requirements.

Please advise if you think that some instructions should be transmitted to Messrs. Pearson and Angus in London on this question.<sup>169</sup>

London, August 9, 1945

Following from Pearson, Begins: UNRRA Council meeting. It is quite clear now that the main business of the meeting will be the request for a further contribution to enable UNRRA to complete its work, and whether the U.S.S.R. request for seven hundred million dollars relief supplies can be met. The Russians are bringing strong pressure on us to make some kind of statement at an appropriate moment supporting, in principle, their claim to help from UNRRA on the ground that, though they may have sufficient resources in foreign exchange for the supplies requested, nevertheless their relief and rehabilitation problem arising out of the war is so enormous that they are entitled to some help from UNRRA, especially as UNRRA may be extending this to Italy and possibly to Austria. Have you any views on this Russian request or the line we should take regarding it? My own feeling is that this is primarily a matter to be settled by the United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. and that we should remain as aloof as possible, though it might be desirable to express, on some appropriate occasion, general sympathy with Russia's needs and relief requirements. There is no doubt that the Russians expect from us what they call "a friendly understanding of their position."

Considerations likely to affect the views of the United States and United Kingdom are:

(a) If the Russian claim to receive supplies from UNRRA without payment is met without requiring the Russians to undergo the same financial examination as other claimants have been required to undergo, or is met in spite of Russia having means of payment, which in the case of any other country would be a disqualification, there is a possibility of a parallel claim being made by other countries which are at present paying for their supplies.

(b) If the Russian claim is met in full, or in large part, one of two consequences will follow. Claims which have been regarded as the minimum claims of other recipients will have to be reduced or the funds which UNRRA will require will exceed the one per cent contribution contemplated in the draft recommendation under consideration by the United States and United Kingdom. Ends.

TELEGRAM 2419

London, August 23, 1945

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins:

1. UNRRA discussions have been very lengthy and very sticky due to obstructive tactics of Soviet Delegation and their friends in the hope, obviously, that such tactics might force a sympathetic consideration of their request for 700 million dollars worth of supplies.

2. First, they held up Resolutions on Italy and Austria and Displaced Persons and when these were passed, argued that it would be undesirable to proceed with Financial Resolution until they could get some assurance regarding the 700 million. Position now is that a draft Financial Resolution has been agreed on, after long discussions between United States, United Kingdom and ourselves, which provides for another one per cent contribution to UNRRA and, to please the Russians, includes the following paragraph:

“That in carrying out the programmes of operations of the Director General, as approved from time to time by the Central Committee of the Council, supplies shall be equitably distributed on the basis of the principles laid down in the Resolutions of the Council and in particular in Resolutions 7 and 56.”<sup>171</sup>

See George Woodbridge, et al., UNRRA: The History of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. Volume III, New York, Columbia University Press, 1950, pp. 47-48, 134.

This Resolution was taken up with the Russians yesterday by our three Delegations and Clayton<sup>172</sup> informed them, also, that if they supported it he would recommend to his Government favourable consideration for a claim, which might be submitted by the Ukrainian and Byelo Russian Republics, for a relief programme not to exceed 250 million dollars. Noel-Baker and I supported this. Russians are taking it up with Moscow and we expect an answer by tomorrow. We will go ahead with Financial Resolution in any event and try to wind up UNRRA Friday night. It is more likely, however, that we will not complete our work until Saturday.

3. Discussions have been long and exhausting for us because we have been used a great deal by Russians as mediator between them and United States and United Kingdom Delegations. Incidentally, the Russians are holding up a decision in the Council on the Resolution of the Committee on Procedure making Canada a member of the Central Committee in the hope that this will influence our attitude toward their other proposals. I have let them know, however, that they have no bargaining power here because we would not object if Central Committee were left unchanged. Ends.

DESPATCH 2307

Washington, September 26, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose herewith a communication from the Secretary of the UNRRA Sub-committee under Resolution No. 23 which was appointed by me as Chairman of the Committee on Supplies to consider applications from the Byelorussian and Ukraine Soviet Republics for free relief supplies. The background of this matter is, I think, known to you and I do not need to go into it in this despatch. These applications replace one previously made by the USSR for relief supplies from UNRRA up to the value of 700 million dollars.

The Sub-committee in question consisted of members from the U.S., U.K., Norway, France and Canada and met Monday last under the chairmanship of Mr. Harold Glasser of the U.S. Treasury. Other members were Mr. R. H. Brand (U.K.), Mr. Valensi (France), Mr. Colbjornsen (Norway), and myself. Representatives from the two Soviet Socialist Republics produced memoranda which gave voluminous details regarding the destruction inflicted on those republics by the enemy but had practically nothing to say about their ability or inability to pay for UNRRA supplies. Questioning by members of the sub-committee, and more particularly by Mr. Brand, produced little information beyond the obvious fact that the two Republics had no resources in foreign exchange. They had none because under the Soviet constitution they needed none.

The attached draft report to the Director General of UNRRA on this matter has been agreed to by the 5 members of the Sub-committee and will be incorporated in the minutes of the meeting.

I have etc.

My dear Mr. Ambassador,

Attached are the drafts of two recommendations of the Subcommittee Under Resolution No. 23 dealing with the ability to pay of the Byelorussian and Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republics.<sup>173</sup> Their wording is identical except for the amount of their requirements which differ.

These drafts have been prepared by the Chairman and the Secretariat of the Subcommittee in accordance with the procedure agreed upon at the meeting yesterday, and are now being circulated among the Chairman and other members of the Subcommittee so that each member can telephone his comments either to me or Mr. Varley at Decatur 7300, extension 355. If the drafts are agreeable to the members of the sub-committee they will be incorporated in the minutes of the meeting.

Attached also are copies of the two memoranda submitted by the representatives† of the Byelorussian and Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republics concerning the question of their respective ability to pay which they prepared for the use of the Subcommittee. In accordance with the procedures established for the operation of the Subcommittees Under Resolution No. 23, these copies are being sent to you for your personal use only as a member of this Subcommittee.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID WEINTRAUB

Resolution No. 23 of UNRRA*

Washington, September 25, 1945

The members of the Subcommittee unanimously agreed that the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic should be considered at this time unable to pay, and adopted a recommendation which reads as follows:

"1. The Subcommittee appointed under Resolution No. 23 had before it the request by the government of the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic dated 15 September 1945, for relief and rehabilitation supplies and services in the amount of $61,000,000. The Subcommittee has been requested by the Director General to advise him with respect to the ability of the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic to pay in foreign exchange for such supplies in accordance with Resolution 14, Section 17. The Subcommittee understood that this request, together with the request from the government of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic supersedes the one in the amount of $700,000,000 previously made by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

2. Information supplied to the Subcommittee by the representatives of the Byelorussian Soviet Social [sic] Republic indicated that in accordance with the constitutional provisions of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, this constituent republic has no foreign exchange assets of its own, such assets being entirely in the hands of the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Nevertheless, in view of the great destruction in the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic the Subcommittee recommends that the Government of the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic be considered at this time not to be in a position to pay with suitable means of foreign exchange for relief and rehabilitation supplies and services which the Director General will make available to the Government of the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic in accordance with resolutions and policies of the Council and within the limits imposed by UNRRA'S resources."

Ottawa, August 31, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to a letter dated July 15th from the Director General of UNRRA to Mr. L. B. Pearson,† then Chargé d'Affaires ad interim at the Canadian Embassy in Washington. This letter transmitted a note from the Director General to the Secretary of State for External Affairs† also dated July 15th enclosing for the consideration of the Canadian Government two draft Agreements† which had been prepared by Committees of the Council of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration as a first step toward carrying out the recommendation of the Council set forth in paragraph 2 of Resolution 8 of its First Session.<sup>174</sup> The two Agreements were entitled respectively "Emergency International Sanitary Aerial Agreement" and "Emergency International Sanitary Maritime Agreement."

The draft Agreements have been considered by the Canadian Department of Pensions and National Health in consultation with the Department of Transport and with the Departments of National Defence for Air and Naval Services. The discussion of the Agreements has not resulted in any technical questions being raised which need be brought to the attention of the Director General of UNRRA prior to the meeting in Montreal on September 15th.

From the correspondence it appears probable that Canada will be asked to become a signatory of the two Agreements at the time of the Second Session of the Council or shortly thereafter. No objection has been raised to Canadian signature of the Agreement concerning Maritime Measures which was drafted by a Committee at which the Senior Medical Officer in England of the Department of Pensions and National Health, Dr. Howard B. Jeffs, was present.

The Agreement concerning Aerial Measures presents greater difficulty. Canada has never been a signatory to the International Sanitary Convention for Aerial Navigation because it was felt that Canada should not undertake obligations concerning standards of aerodrome construction, equipment and control until Canadian air services were more fully organized. The present Canadian Quarantine Regulations provide full authority for the control of aerial navigation in Canada and give reasonable protection.

While it would not be appropriate for Canada at the present stage to question in any way the authority conferred on the Committees of UNRRA by Resolution No. 8, paragraph 2, it was perhaps not in contemplation at that time that the Committee should proceed as an emergency measure to draft an agreement applicable to North and South America as well as to Europe, Africa and Asia. An agreement in these wide terms hardly seems to be incidental to the relief and rehabilitation activities which are the primary purpose of UNRRA.

However this may be, Canada will have to say "yes" or "no" to the proposed agreement in the course of the next few weeks. It would be appreciated if you can make enquiries in Washington and advise us as to the extent to which the proposed agreement is likely to be supported by the United States and by other countries in this hemisphere.

In the meantime we are referring the Agreement concerning Aerial Measures back to the Departments which have already considered it, with a request that if they are still of the opinion that it is not acceptable as an emergency measure they should indicate how closely the present Canadian Regulations, in practice, conform to those required by the Agreement.

Ottawa, November 17, 1944

The attached telegram, Circular D.1684 of November 15th, has been sent to me without any distribution having been made. It raises some difficult questions about international organization in the field of health and also touches on issues of general policy towards the United Kingdom and France and on the future of League technical bodies. The scheme proposed by the United Kingdom does not seem objectionable to me but I do not like their request in para. 5 for "an assurance that the foregoing proposals meet with the approval of Dominion Governments." This seems to be asking rather a lot.

We could answer perhaps merely by saying that we do not object to these proposals being put forward by the United Kingdom Government but are not prepared to give any assurance that they carry our approval. Before doing even this, however, I think that some consideration should be given to the substance of the proposals which involves a knowledge which I do not possess of the various bodies and conventions which are mentioned. It does not seem to me that any Government can be expected to accept a fairly detailed outline of policy in an important technical aspect of international relations on a basis such as this.

I am sending the original telegram and file to Mr. Angus since it is an UNRRA matter which started the business. I am sending copies of the telegram and of this note to Messrs. Renaud, Rive and Holmes. Would Mr. Angus consider what interdepartmental distribution should be made as well as the questions of policy involved? Mr. Renaud may be able to elucidate the position respecting the international bodies and conventions mentioned in it, and Mr. Rive might comment particularly in the light of his considerable experience in League health matters. Mr. Holmes might meditate on how the U.K. proposal would fit into the Dumbarton Oaks plan. Next week, perhaps, we might put together the results at a Departmental meeting and frame a reply.

London, November 15, 1944

SECRET. As you will be aware, it was agreed at the Montreal Conference that there should be a special meeting of the UNRRA Health Committee to prepare final drafts of the two Sanitary Conventions drawn up under the auspices of UNRRA. This meeting is now to be held at Washington December 5th.

2. Before the outbreak of war, administration of International Health Conventions and Agreements was controlled by the International Office of Public Hygiene in Paris. Now that Paris has been freed, the French authorities are anxious that the future of this office shall not be prejudiced, and in commenting on the draft Sanitary Conventions they have objected to the substitution for the Paris office of another organisation. In view of the forthcoming meeting of the UNRRA Health Committee, it is important that an understanding should be reached with the French which will induce them to sign the Agreements in their present form, accepting the administration of the Sanitary Conventions by UNRRA as a temporary arrangement. But it is clear that there is no prospect of securing French agreement to this unless some assurance is given about the future of the Paris office.

3. For this and other reasons, we have been considering what form of permanent International Health Organisation we should like to see established, and following proposals have been formulated as our long term aim for the creation of an International Health Organisation:

(a) An International Health Commission which would be associated with a constituent body of the proposed Economic and Social Council of World Organisation. The Commission would be responsible for determining the scope of other international health bodies and preventing overlap between them. It would also be responsible for promoting international research for the collection and dissemination of technical information and for advisory services. Its Secretariat might be in Washington, but no decision on this point should be taken until the location of other international bodies contemplated under the Dumbarton Oaks proposals has been considered.

(b) The continuance of the Paris office as an Epidemiological Bureau responsible for the administration of International Health Agreements, including the Sanitary Conventions and the collection and the dissemination of epidemiological information.

(c) The creation of a new Standards Bureau preferably in London.

(d) The continuance, if desired, of the Pan American Sanitary Bureau, an endeavour being made to bring the conventions administered by the Bureau into harmony with those administered by the Paris office.

(e) The discontinuance as such of the Health Section of the League, its records, equipment and staff being transferred to the new organisation provided suitable arrangements can be made.

(f) Membership of the Commission and its associated Bureaux would be confined to expert members of the public health services of the countries participating in the organisation, but this would not prevent the employment of other expert advisers.

(g) The method of financing the Commission and its associated Bureaux would require further examination. It could be based either on single contributions from the participating countries to the Commission or perhaps to the Economic and Social Council, or on separate contributions to each Bureau.

4. In the light of this long term policy, we should like to approach the French Government as soon as possible and, in any case, in advance of the meeting of the UNRRA Health Committee on December 5th indicating:

(a) That the proposal that UNRRA should administer the Sanitary Conventions was first mooted in good faith before Paris had been freed, that it is now most difficult to alter these temporary arrangements which have been agreed to in principle by the United Nations, and that it is in any case doubtful whether the conventions could conveniently be administered as yet in Paris, where communications are still difficult, or by the Paris office which has been disorganised by war and has been out of touch with the world for four years.

(b) That we are, nevertheless, anxious to safeguard the future position of the Paris office and that this is, in fact, in the new draft Sanitary Convention.

(c) That, in order to make the position plain, we should be prepared if the French Government would support the temporary administration of the conventions by UNRRA to promise our support for the retention of the Paris office to administer Sanitary Conventions, though we could not, of course, give absolute guarantees as to the precise position which the office would hold in the permanent international set up.

(d) That we should also be prepared to support a suggestion that the International Conference which will be required to create the permanent International Health Organisation should be held in Paris.

(e) That, if agreement on the above lines is reached, we should be glad to resume at once the payment of our contribution to the Paris office in order to enable it to rebuild its organisation.

(f) That we should also be prepared to resume sending to the Paris office epidemiological information in our possession.

5. Before making an approach on the above lines to the French Government, we should welcome an assurance that foregoing proposals meet with the approval of Dominion Governments.

6. We are inquiring through His Majesty's United Kingdom Ambassador, Washington, whether United States Government will be prepared to take a line with French Government similar to that which we propose in paragraph 4 above.

Memorandum from Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, November 24, 1944

I sent you a note on November 17th concerning British proposals for international health organization which have to be taken up immediately because temporary UNRRA sanitary conventions will be prepared at a meeting of the UNRRA Health Committee beginning on December 5th. The French have lodged objections because of their fears for the future of the International Office of Public Hygiene in Paris.

The question was considered yesterday at a meeting attended by Messrs. Angus, Read, Renaud and myself of this Department and Dr. Davidson of National Health and Welfare. We decided that the British proposals were in general sensible. Renaud has prepared a long memorandum<sup>1</sup> on the various conventions and bodies which would be affected by them. Davidson wished to check with Chisholm before an answer went out and promised to let Angus know today.

I think we can answer London without consulting Ministers. Angus' reply to the Dominions Office<sup>176</sup> will be found hereunder for your concurrence and also a teletype to Pearson.† If you agree, will you return the papers to Angus for despatch when he hears from Davidson?

Dr. Brown is our representative on the Health Committee of UNRRA and is quite unfamiliar with the international questions involved in this issue. It was agreed in the meeting that he should be accompanied during its discussion by someone from the Embassy in Washington, perhaps Ritchie. Angus is preparing a despatch conveying the requisite information as indicated in his teletype to Pearson.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, November 24, 1944

Dear Mr. Wrong,

In reply to your confidential letter of 20th November,† and following meeting held 23rd November which was attended by Dr. Geo. Davidson of this Department, with respect to international health organization in immediate relationship to work to be undertaken by UNRRA, our attitudes are as follows:

1. Sanitary conventions conducted by UNRRA may be accepted as a temporary expedient.

2. The formation of a permanent international health organization is essential.

3. The international health organization should be responsible for the collection and dissemination of epidemiological and technical information and for the provision of technical advisory services.

4. It is not considered advantageous to continue the Office internationale d'hygiène publique at Paris for the collection and dissemination of epidemiological information including the responsibility for conducting sanitary conventions, as this may well prove to be a duplication of the work of the international health organization leading to differences of opinion and confusion.

5. It is the opinion that all matters relating to public health should be the responsibility of one internationally constituted body.

6. It is suggested that the Department of Biological Standards for the National Institute for Medical Research of the Medical Research Council, Hampstead, London, England, should continue to act as custodian and for the purpose of distribution of biological standards until such time as this question has been determined by international agreement.

7. The continuance of the Pan-American Sanitary Bureau would be advantageous to Canada. Its activity should be confined to health matters relating to the Americas and should function in collaboration with the international health organization.

8. It is not agreed that records, equipment and staff should be automatically transferred to the new health organization. Before a decision is reached in regard thereto, the question should be thoroughly discussed.

9. Membership of the commission should be confined to members of the Public Health Services provided that expert advisers may be engaged when needed but that such expert advisers shall not have administrative responsibility.

10. The method of financing may be determined by agreement of signatory countries.

11. There would be no advantage in administering conventions through the International Paris Office. The Health Organization of UNRRA might administer pending the creation of an international commission.

12. In view of the fact that the duties and responsibilities of the Office internationale d'hygiène publique have materially changed since its creation and its value to Canada is not established, it is not thought that special provision should be made to safeguard the existence of such office.

13. In view of the fact that the Office international d'hygiène publique has been of so little use to Canada particularly since the creation of the Health Section of the League of Nations, it would not appear that the Dominion should make any commitments respecting the retention of the Office internationale.

14. It is suggested that the international conference required to create the permanent international health organization should be held in Switzerland rather than in France.

15. It is not recommended that the payment of our contribution to the Office internationale should be resumed.

16. It is suggested that epidemiological information in our possession should be provided UNRRA rather than the Office internationale d'hygiène publique.

Yours sincerely,

BROOKE CLAXTON

TELEGRAM 226

Ottawa, November 25, 1944

SECRET. Your circular D. 1684 of November 15th. The Canadian Government concurs in the view that it is important that the Sanitary Conventions prepared by UNRRA should be adopted as a temporary arrangement and considers that the suggestions contained in your telegram should prove useful as a basis for discussion with the French. As regards the permanent International Organization, it is not clear to us that there is any reason for placing its secretariat in Washington. In general, we have no objection to make in connection with the proposal which the United Kingdom is prepared to advance. It is, however, the view of the technical authorities here that the separation of the administration of the Sanitary Conventions from other international health activities does not make for efficiency. There have, in the past, been many criticisms of the work done in Paris and it is felt that in any post-war re-organization attention should be given to securing more effective and more expeditious action there. The immediate problem is to secure the signature of the temporary Conventions requisite for the maintenance of health in Europe during the next eighteen months. Our view is that in doing this as few commitments as possible should be made regarding the Permanent International Health arrangements.

DESPATCH 1688

Ottawa, November 27, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my recent teletype, concerning the draft Sanitary Conventions which are to be considered by the Technical Committee on Health of UNRRA early in December, and to the proposals of the United Kingdom concerning a permanent International Health Organization. In my teletype a request was made that a member of the Embassy staff should attend the meeting of the Committee in order to be able to report on the broad questions of policy which may arise there.

2. It appears to me that the immediate problem is to secure the adoption of the Sanitary Conventions which will safeguard public health in Europe during the period immediately following the end of the war. The two Conventions which have been drafted by the Committee of UNRRA are designed for this purpose and, so far as the immediate problem is concerned, there seems to me to be no practicable alternative to their adoption. This then should be the primary purpose of Canadian attendance at the Technical Committee.

3. The question raised in the Dominions Office Circular telegram D. 1684 of November 15th is whether, in order to secure the adoption of the draft Conventions, it may not be necessary to give certain assurances to the French representatives concerning the permanent International Health Organization which should be set up after the war. The result of this telegram has been to force consideration at very short notice of a problem which has very wide implications. It is hoped that it will not be necessary to give consideration to the details of this larger problem at the present time but it may be helpful that you should have before you the views of the Canadian Department of Health and Welfare which have been set out in a letter from the Minister to Mr. Wrong, dated November 24th. A copy of this letter is enclosed. I also enclose copies of two memoranda on the general history of health organization, prepared by Mr. Renaud of this Department.†

4. It may well be that it is impossible to secure the assent of the French to the draft Sanitary Conventions without giving some such assurance as that set out in Circular D. 1684 and the Government of the United Kingdom has been informed that in a general way the Canadian authorities have no objection to such an assurance being given. It would, however, be preferable if the adoption of the Conventions could be secured without paying this price for it.

5. In the meantime I should appreciate an expression of your views on the subject and any information which you can give concerning the attitude of other Governments towards the Sanitary Conventions and the problem of permanent organization. It is understood that the source of the difficulty lies in the unwillingness of the U.S.S.R. representatives to acquiesce in any continuance of the existing Conventions as a basis for the operations of UNRRA.

Washington, December 11, 1944

Sir,

With reference to your despatch No. 1688 of November 27th, 1944, concerning the draft Sanitary Conventions prepared by UNRRA, I have the honour to submit the following notes on the meetings of the standing Technical Committee on Health, which were held in Washington to discuss these drafts.

2. The first meeting was held on December 5th and was attended by Dr. Brown as official Canadian representative. Mr. P. A. Beaulieu<sup>177</sup> also attended the meetings in accordance with your suggestion that a member of the Embassy be present in order to report on questions of policy.

3. After the usual routine matters, comments, received from a certain number of governments on the draft conventions, were brought to the attention of the meetings. Copies of these documents were forwarded to you on December 4th.† It was suggested by the Chairman of the Committee that it might be advisable to refer the modifications to a special committee for discussion and report. Professor Lebedenko explained that his suggestion was prompted by the fact that only a few governments would be directly concerned in these modifications. The meeting agreed to the suggestion, and a sub-committee was appointed. The governments which had made suggestions for modifications were invited to attend the meeting of the sub-committee.

4. The French representative then put forward a proposition for a resolution dealing with the relations of UNRRA and the Office international d'hygiène. A copy of the resolution† is attached herewith. As you will note, this document was very carefully worded and it implied more or less a recognition of the

Second Secretary, Embassy in United States.

Office international d'hygiène as the main international agency on health. However, this proposition was discussed and amendments were suggested mainly by the British and the Netherlands representatives. Finally, the Chairman stated that, as a question of principle was involved, he was of the opinion that the Committee was not competent to discuss it, and suggested that the matter be referred to the sub-committee already appointed. This suggestion was agreed upon by the meeting.

5. Dr. Brown attended the meeting of the sub-committee which was held on December 5th at twelve o'clock. He informed me that the meeting went over the various submissions, and, as far as Canada is concerned, everything seemed to be solved satisfactorily. With respect to the French resolution, which is divided into two parts, he reported that the first part, all the "Whereas," will be included as a note in the minutes of the meeting, and the second part, dealing with liaison between UNRRA and the Office internationale d'hygiène, was treated as a technical part which will be included in the other technical submissions to the main committee. He added that everyone seemed to be satisfied with the conclusion reached.

6. Another general meeting of the Standing Committee was held on Saturday afternoon, December 9th, which was attended by Mr. Beaulieu. The sub-committee appointed to prepare final drafts of the Sanitary Conventions reported to the meeting. The sub-committee, after considering the amendments submitted by the various governments, accepted the revisions of the drafts and recommended that the Draft International Sanitary Convention 1944, as modified, and the Draft International Sanitary Convention for Aerial Navigation, as modified, be approved. The meeting unanimously agreed.

7. The sub-committee also reported on the resolution submitted by the French Delegation. A revised resolution was proposed to the Committee, copies of which are enclosed. This text is only an understanding that UNRRA may secure information from the Office internationale d'hygiène if such a step might prove to be useful, but does not in any way place UNRRA before a fait accompli and leaves the future of the Office internationale d'hygiène open for post-war arrangements. The French Delegation declared that this document was acceptable to their government.

8. The Chairman of the Committee stated that it is hoped that the Conventions on Health would be open for signature by the 15th of December, and that all the nations represented would sign them. It was also stated that there will be a meeting of the Central Committee of UNRRA on Monday the 11th to consider the question of making arrangements for some government to be depository for the Conventions. It is expected that the United States will be recommended in view of the central location of Washington.

Ottawa, January 16, 1945

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report dated 13th January, 1945, from the Secretary of State for External Affairs,† stating that through the instrumentality of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, an International Sanitary Convention, and an International Sanitary Convention for Aerial Navigation, have been negotiated to the end that effective safeguards will be provided against the spread of disease during the period of relief and rehabilitation in countries which have been invaded by the enemy;

That the Conventions, copies of which are annexed,† are open for signature by the Government concerned until January 15, 1945; and

That it is expedient that Lester Bowles Pearson, Ambassador Designate to the United States of America, be authorized to sign the Conventions on behalf of the Government of Canada.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, concurred in by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, advise that the two annexed Conventions be hereby approved and that Lester Bowles Pearson be authorized to sign the Conventions on behalf of the Government of Canada with the representatives thereunto empowered by the other Governments concerned.<sup>178</sup>

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Mr. Read has asked me to refer to you the question raised in WA-2643 of May 18th,† a copy of which I enclose. Apparently the United States wishes to propose France for membership on the Central Committee of UNRRA and the United Kingdom proposes to reply that it is willing to support this proposal but only if the United States will support the United Kingdom proposal that Canada should also be a member of the Central Committee. Personally I think that we should agree to this proposal. If France were added to the membership of the Committee there would be three members who are contributing nothing to the cost of UNRRA's supplies and these three would constitute a majority. Canada's standing in UNRRA is very high at the present time and I think that our membership in the Central Committee would be generally welcomed. I am not in a position to judge of the view which Russia would take of either proposal. I also enclose a copy of WA-2644<sup>179</sup> concerning the possible postponement of the Council meeting because of the difficulty over Polish representation.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Angus,

that if France is appointed to the Central Committee, Canada should also become a member, is a good one. Among other things, it would maintain the balance between the producers and receivers of relief.<sup>180</sup>

In so far as the question of postponing the UNRRA Council Meeting is concerned, I think that this should be done, if the Polish question has not been satisfactorily resolved in time to hold the meeting on July 16th; and if the postponement would not in fact interfere with the actual work which UNRRA is now doing and which should become increasingly important in the forthcoming weeks. Certainly, until the Polish question is cleared up, the London Polish Government should not be forced out of UNRRA and replaced by representatives of the Provisional Government.

Pearson is sending a copy of this letter direct to Washington.

DESPATCH 1162

Ottawa, July 19, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Canadian delegation to UNRRA will consist of:

- Chairman—L. B. Pearson, O.B.E., Canadian Ambassador to the United States;
- Major-General the Hon. L. R. LaFlèche, D.S.O., Canadian Ambassador designate to Greece;
- H. F. Angus, Chief of the Economic Division, Department of External Affairs;
- Lieut.-Colonel A. Murray McCrimmon, Mutual Aid Board Administration.

In addition it would be helpful if one of the Canadian officials in London can be made available—perhaps as adviser to the delegation rather than as a delegate—in order that there may be someone in London during the next year who is familiar with Canada's relationship to UNRRA. Perhaps, in view of his experience in supply matters, Mr. Bower<sup>181</sup> might be a suitable choice. Perhaps,

TELEGRAM 2209

London, August 4, 1945

We attended a Commonwealth meeting yesterday at the Foreign Office to discuss the forthcoming UNRRA Conference, presided over, in the absence of Noel-Baker, who had not then taken up his duties, by Sir George Rendell.<sup>183</sup> Nothing of particular interest to us arose at the meeting, except a reference to the fact that the item on the agenda nominating France for membership on the Central Committee had been withdrawn by the United States so that it could be amended to read "France and Canada."

2. The United Kingdom people showed me afterwards the list of nominations they had agreed on with the United States for membership on the Steering Committee and the other Committees of the Conference. They felt that they could not put us forward for the Steering Committee in view of the fact that we have been a member of that Committee twice before. This time they think that South Africa should be represented on it. Of course, on strictly functional grounds, we should not be asked to withdraw from this Committee and, no doubt, if we insisted, we could be included, but I assume that you will have no very strong views on this point and that we should make no efforts to get the slate changed, especially as our election to the Central Committee would, I think, automatically put us on the Steering Committee. With this in view, I asked Marris yesterday to see that the item regarding election of France and Canada to the Central Committee be put at the top of the agenda.

Following from Pearson, Begins: At the UNNRA Council meeting this morning and after a great deal of jockeying behind the scenes, Sir Girja Bajpai was elected Chairman. The Czechoslovak representative was elected member of the Committee on Policy and the Polish member Chairman of the Committee on Procedure. It will be recalled that at Montreal the Chairman of the Council was also Chairman of the Committee on Policy. Bajpai's election was due to the unwillingness of the leader of the United Kingdom delegation to act as Chairman of the Council, though the USSR and the USA would have preferred this. Contrary to arrangements reported to you earlier, Canada was elected a member of the General or Steering Committee and to Vice-Chairmanship of the Committee on Policy. It looks as if we will also be elected to Chairmanship of the Central Committee tomorrow or the next day.<sup>184</sup> It promises to be an important Council session and a busy one for the Canadian delegation, as we have already been engaged in a good many informal conversations with the United States and the United Kingdom on matters that are likely to come up. Should this proposal be adopted, membership would probably be accorded to Australia, Brazil and some receiving country in Europe acceptable to the U.S.S.R. London, August 25, 1945

Dear Mr. Robertson,

The Third Session of the UNRRA Council terminated with the meeting of August 23rd and the Canadian delegation is now in a position to advise you of what has been accomplished.

Very early in the proceedings it was decided, against the wishes of the USSR, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, that displaced persons who were unlikely to return to their country of origin might receive relief from UNRRA, whether or not the Governments concerned approved of this course. It was recognised that UNRRA could not continue to give relief indefinitely and that eventually the displaced persons who were unwilling to return to their former homes would have to be looked after by the Committee on Refugees. However, UNRRA has a free hand until the next session of the Council.

It was also decided on the initiative of the United States and the United Kingdom that Italy and Austria could be included within the areas in which UNRRA may act. No date was set for the assumption of responsibility by UNRRA in these areas. The United States representative informed the Session that military relief would terminate at the end of August but that the United States had made available $100,000,000 from Lend Lease funds which should meet the needs of relief in Italy until the end of December. He explained that it was hoped that the United Kingdom and Canada would also contribute to the cost of relief during this period.

<sup>185</sup>La proposition australienne pour l'addition de trois autres membres au Conseil central n'a pas été acceptée à cette réunion du Conseil d'UNRRA. Voir J. W. The Australian proposal for the addition of three further members to the Central Committee was not accepted at this meeting of the UNRRA Council. See J. W. Holmes, The Shaping of Peace: Canada and the Search for World Order, 1943-1957. Volume 1, Toronto, University of Toronto Press, 1979, pp. 43-44.

Owing to the unwillingness of the Russian delegates to commit themselves before receiving an informal assurance from the major contributing countries that something would be done to extend free assistance to the USSR, definitive conclusions on other important topics could not be reached until the final meeting of the Council. The arrangement made with the Russians, to which of course no reference was made in the course of the UNRRA proceedings, was to the effect that the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada considered that the statements made by the Russian delegates concerning Russia's need for supplies and her inability to pay for them would justify those countries in taking the line in the Committee appointed under Resolution 23<sup>186</sup> that the Ukrainian and Byelo Russian Republics were eligible for free assistance in the amount of $250,000,000. This assurance is being given in the form of a letter to which I have added my signature.<sup>187</sup>

The result of this arrangement was that the agenda of the final meeting of the Council was dealt with rapidly. Korea and Formosa were recognised as areas in which UNRRA should operate. France and Canada were included in the membership of the Central Committee and the report of the Committee of Financial Control was adopted. The USSR was made a member of the Committee for the Council for the Far East and a resolution was adopted concerning the repatriation of displaced persons outside Europe and the Far East.

The USSR abstained from voting on a resolution produced by the Australian representative which would have enlarged the membership of the Central Committee by three, namely, Australia, Brazil and Yugoslavia, and the effect of this abstention was that the motion which altered the Constitution of UNRRA could not be carried. Mr. Bruce<sup>188</sup> expressed great indignation on the grounds that the Russians had given no notice of their intention to oppose it and had assigned no reasons for doing so. Later in the proceedings the Russians explained that they had given as their reason that no notice had been received for the meeting or of the intention of Australia to propose a motion of this importance. Mr. Bruce explained that Australia was not represented on the General Committee at which this statement of the USSR's position had been made. This closed the incident while removing misunderstandings and it was agreed that the proposal should come before the next session of the Council.

The next important business to come before the last meeting was of course the resolution concerning further contributions to UNRRA,<sup>189</sup> a copy of which is attached. This resolution had been very carefully drafted by the United States, the United Kingdom and Canadian delegations. As you will see, it recommends a further contribution of 1% and provides for approval of the Director General's programmes by the Central Committee of the Council. The resolution was carried with no dissenting vote although some countries have abstained from voting. A great many delegations spoke on the resolution in explanation of the position of their respective countries but the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada were the only three which gave the meeting grounds for expecting a contribution in the full amount of 1% of their national incomes.

The United States delegate explained that the provision of funds could be made only by a vote of Congress which he could not guarantee. The United Kingdom delegate explained the financial difficulties with which his country was faced and the great effort which would be necessary to make its full contribution. In speaking on behalf of Canada, I explained that as soon as the question of contribution of 1% was brought up I asked my Government for authorisation to state that it would be willing to contribute and that I was fortunately now in a position to inform the Council that authorisation had been received. I emphasised the fact that when Parliament is asked to provide the funds, it would be important to convince Parliament that they will be equitably administered, that the receiving countries will co-operate to the full in rebuilding their economies so that no further help would be required, and that all contributing countries are bearing their fair share of the burden. In particular, I explained that the Canadian contribution could not be made unless it was clear that the United States Congress was willing to provide the United States contribution. The full text of my remarks will, of course, appear in the Journal of the conference.<sup>190</sup>

The last item of business to come before the meeting concerned the next session of the Council. Under the constitution a second session should be held in the present calendar year. The Central Committee has in effect been given discretion to postpone this session for a few months if it appears expedient to do so.

Although the proceedings of the Third Session of the Council have been very protracted, the final results appear likely to give general satisfaction and

NOTES ON THE THIRD SESSION OF THE UNRRA COUNCIL

1. The first important business to come before the Council concerned Displaced Persons. The Director General recommended that UNRRA should extend relief to these persons even if they were not willing to return to their countries of origin and even if those countries objected to the relief being given. This recommendation was strongly supported by the United Kingdom and the United States, both of which produced alternative resolutions to that proposed by the Director-General. It was opposed by the U.S.S.R., Yugoslavia, Poland and Czechoslovakia. The U.S.S.R. based its case on respect for its sovereignty; Czechoslovakia on the danger of groups of political opposition forming outside the country and intriguing against its Government. The Poles, on the other hand, presented a very moderate argument, suggesting that they recognized groups which might properly wish not to return to Poland, but that they felt that their Government should be consulted before any decision was reached in particular cases. After much debate and many delays the matter was put to a vote and the decision reached that, until the next meeting of the Council, relief should be extended to all Displaced Persons in need of it. On behalf of Canada,

General LaFlèche had supported the motion, basing his recommendation on humanitarian grounds. The United Kingdom had stressed the continuation of the right of political asylum and the United States had argued that Congress would not vote any more money if it thought that UNRRA were being used for political purposes.

The repatriation of Displaced Persons has hitherto been handled by the Armies and has proceeded with unexpected speed, and the result has been that the expense which will fall on UNRRA in respect of these persons will be very much less than had been anticipated.

2. The second important item of business concerned the report submitted by the auditors, who condemned very severely the accounting methods that had been used by UNRRA. The U.S.S.R. delegation practically forced the Secretary to read this report publicly. It appears on page 26 of the Fourth Financial Report of UNRRA. A resolution was eventually passed approving the report of the Committee on Financial Control on the understanding that the Director-General would put into operation the reforms recommended by the auditors. (Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths and Company).

3. The programme of operations produced by the Director-General disclosed that a very large sum of money would be needed to carry on the work of UNRRA for the year 1946; and the need for funds was increased by the prospect of a demand from the Russians, who had applied for $700,000,000 and by the proposal of the United States and the United Kingdom that UNRRA should take over relief in Italy and Austria. A third resolution made Korea and Formosa eligible for relief.

4. The proposal with regard to Italy encountered very strong opposition. The South African delegation opposed it very strongly on constitutional grounds and on the ground that the United States, in asking at the Montreal meeting for special relief for Italy which was not to constitute a precedent, had substantially undertaken not to make a more extensive recommendation concerning Italy. The other countries objected strongly to the Italians receiving relief on the assumption that it meant that they would receive less. The United States attempted to counter this assumption by saying that Congress was not likely to vote any money at all unless relief in Italy were to be included. The United Kingdom representatives took a similar line, although they stressed more strongly the general desirability of relief being extended to Italy. Eventually the proposal was carried and UNRRA's financial requirements thereby increased by about $500,000,000.

5. The proposals concerning Italy had important repercussions in respect of military relief, to which Canada had been contributing. Mr. Clayton announced in the course of debate that the United States had secured an appropriation of $100,000,000 for relief in Italy after the cessation of military relief at the end of August. He considered that this would finance Italian relief until the end of the calendar year and hoped that the United Kingdom and Canada would continue to participate. This would have substantially increased the burden which those two countries have to bear because they had anticipated that military relief would end on October 1st. This matter has formed the subject of separate correspondence<sup>191</sup> and it does not, of course, concern the other matters of UNRRA.

6. It was arranged by private negotiation between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada on the one hand and the U.S.S.R. on the other that the U.S.S.R. should withdraw its request for $700,000,000, which would be replaced by two requests from the Ukrainian and Byelo Russian Republics for $125,000,000 each. After taking these into account, the smallest sum with which UNRRA could be expected to complete its work on an unambitious scale appeared to be an equivalent of the first contribution, namely 1% of the national income of those countries which could afford such a contribution and smaller contributions by other countries. The recommendation providing for these funds was formulated by consultation among the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada. The United Kingdom was very reluctant to make so large a contribution but was under some pressure from the United States to do so on the ground that a Congressional vote would be hard to obtain if the United States were bearing more than 75% of the total cost of UNRRA. It was an unfortunate coincidence that this pressure on the United Kingdom to contribute, if not foreign exchange, at least goods and services which could easily be converted into foreign exchange, came at a time when Lend-Lease shipments were terminated. However, the United Kingdom did agree to the larger contribution largely because it was recognized that even on a country-to-country basis (supposing that UNRRA came to an end), the United Kingdom would have to contribute a very large sum. The Canadian contribution was made conditional on contributions by the United Kingdom, the United States and other countries, and the attention of UNRRA was called to the fact that, if the assumption of relief burdens in Italy were to be postponed, the Canadian Government might have to deduct from its contribution to UNRRA whatever sums it was compelled to pay for relief in Italy after the termination of military relief there. It was rather disappointing that no fourth country was in a position to promise, even conditionally, a contribution of 1%. The Australians and New Zealanders, who did not participate in the debate, hoped that such a contribution might be authorized by their Governments but felt that it would be extremely difficult to make it because they had no foreign exchange available and it was difficult to find commodities acceptable to UNRRA. A large number of countries, most of them Latin-American, explained that they would do their best, although they thought it very unlikely that they would be in a position to make so large a contribution as 1%. It should, perhaps, be added that the United States in pledging 1% insisted on choosing the same base year as before, thereby saving $200,000,000. The reason for this choice was not an inability to make the same percentage contribution as other countries but the belief that Congress could be persuaded to repeat its former contribution but could not be persuaded to enlarge it merely because the national income had increased.

7. The election of France and Canada to the Central Committee of the Council was postponed by the Russians who were in a position to veto it until their financial claim had been compromised. Finally, it was the Russians who seconded the motion for enlarging the Council. They did, however, oppose a proposal of the Australians to enlarge it further still by the inclusion of three countries which were not Great Powers. Their opposition, which was fatal to the motion, was not explained or foreshadowed and this caused the Australians to express themselves very strongly. The Russians eventually explained that their reason for opposing the enlargement of the Council was that it constituted an important change in UNRRA's constitution and that notice of the proposal should have been given well in advance of the meeting of the Council. The Australians accepted this explanation and the incident closed as a misunderstanding.

Washington, January 14, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to previous correspondence concerning the meetings of the Inter-departmental Committee on Greek Relief, ending with my despatch No. 90 of January 13th† forwarding the Minutes of the last meeting of that Committee held on January 10th, 1944.†

At that meeting the question of the continuation of the present Greek relief scheme under the supervision of the Swedish Government following the partial or total liberation of Greece from Axis occupation was raised. One of the two members of the Canadian Embassy attending the meeting asked how much correspondence had been exchanged on this matter, and between what countries. There was a moment of uneasiness when the British Representatives stated that early in November the matter had been taken up with the State Department, but the Canadian Embassy had not been kept informed. Our interest in this matter was readily recognized by all those present, and the State Department has now made available to the Embassy copies of certain correspondence with the Hon. Leo T. Crowley, Administrator of the Foreign Economic Administration, and with the Secretary of State and the British Embassy. The documents (copies attached) are as follows:

Telegram No. 7311, from Mr. Eden to Sir R. Campbell dated October 26, 1943.†

Letter to Mr. Crowley, dated December 7, 1943, from Mr. Hull.†

Reply of Mr. Crowley dated December 18, 1943.†

The reply from the Secretary of War dated December 18th,† which was marked secret, was not made available, but a member of the Embassy read it. It merely stated that the proposals put forward by the Secretary of State were agreeable to the War Department, subject, of course, to military necessities on the spot.

Memorandum from the State Department to the British Embassy, dated January 7, 1944, presumably.†

Letter from the Secretary of State to the Secretary of War, dated January 7, 1944.†

Letter to Mr. Crowley from Mr. Hull, dated January 7.†

Letter to the Hon. Herbert H. Lehman from Mr. Hull, dated January 7, 1944.†

You will note that in his letter of December 7th to Mr. Crowley, Mr. Hull pointed out in the 6th paragraph that after UNRRA begins to operate in Greek territory, the expenditure connected with Greek relief should be borne by that Administration. The same point is raised in paragraph 2, subsection 2 of the State Department's memorandum to the British Embassy. The beginning of the State Department's memorandum refers to the representatives of the British Embassy having raised the question of the continued functioning of the present Greek relief scheme at a recent meeting of the Committee on Greek relief. So far as the Canadian Embassy is aware, no reference was made to this question before the meeting of January 10th. It is obvious, therefore, that both the British and the United States members of that Committee discussed that question outside the Committee. However, the Canadian Embassy was not in possession of the correspondence, at the time of the last meeting.

It is our intention to raise the point at the next meeting concerning this matter, and to enquire why Canada has not been consulted before approaching the Swedish authorities. Since the bulk of the relief supplies to the Greeks comes from Canada, it would seem to be the least we can expect to be consulted before final arrangements are made following the liberation of Greek territory. It may be, however, that you have been kept informed by London. In that event, the Canadian Embassy would appreciate being supplied with any correspondence exchanged concerning this matter as soon as possible.

This whole question brings up once again the desirability of clarifying the relationship of Canadian contributions to UNRRA and those made for Relief outside UNRRA. You will note that in respect of Greek relief, the United States policy provides for the absorption of its contribution to that relief by UNRRA only after UNRRA begins operations in Greece. Our attitude has been that Canada's contributions to Greek relief should be included in her total UNRRA obligations from the date of UNRRA's establishment. If that is still the policy of the Canadian Government, it might be desirable to put it formally on record by a communication to the Director General, copies of which could be sent to the United States and United Kingdom Governments. Consideration might also be given to the desirability of broadening this formal statement to include other relief contributions outside UNRRA, such as that to the International Wheat Council Relief Pool.

Ottawa, January 19, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 99 of January 14, on the subject of Greek Relief.

2. I have read with much interest the correspondence between the United States and British authorities concerning the possibility of continuing Greek relief under Swedish supervision following the partial or total liberation of Greece from Axis occupation. No knowledge of these discussions had reached this Department either from London or Washington. I share your view that it is extraordinary that the Canadian Embassy should not have been kept informed while correspondence was in progress.

3. We are, however, not in a very strong position to protest because we have not been consulted. Canada's part in Greek relief has from the outset been of a passive character and we have had very little to do with the military aspects of the problem. As regards the blockade policy, we have conformed entirely to the views of the authorities in the United Kingdom and in the United States, and the negotiations with the Swedish Government have been in the hands of the United Kingdom.

4. It was provided from the outset that Canada's contributions of wheat for Greek relief should count as relief contributions under the International Wheat Agreement<sup>192</sup> and it is, therefore, assumed that they will count as contributions to UNRRA, at least from the date of UNRRA's establishment. We agree that consideration should also be given to the desirability of bringing contributions under the Wheat Agreement into the UNRRA Relief Pool, in which event Canadian contributions of wheat for Greek relief would count from the outset as part of Canada's contributions to UNRRA.

Ottawa, May 26, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to teletype WA-3219 of May 25th,† from Mr. W. F. Bull<sup>194</sup> to Mr. H. F. Angus, on the subject of Greek relief. In this teletype it is reported that the Lend-Lease Division of the Foreign Economic Administration is hopeful that Canada will undertake the purchase not only of 1,000,000 pounds of dried salted cod, to be supplied from Canada, but also of 13,400,000 pounds of dried salted cod to be supplied from Newfoundland, and it is stated that in the case of the previous allocation there was considerable difficulty in obtaining approval for the purchase of cod fish from Newfoundland by Lend-Lease for Greek relief.

2. I am inclined to think that it would be advisable to explain to the Lend-Lease Division of the Foreign Economic Administration how the suggestion which they are advancing is regarded in Canada. A special vote would be needed to finance the purchase of fish in Newfoundland as this is not a transaction which could be brought under our Mutual Aid procedure. That procedure is intended to deal primarily with war material, and while it has been possible to argue that civilian supplies for the United Kingdom, for Russia and for China had a direct bearing on the ability of those countries to continue fighting, it is not easy to contend that there is a strategical advantage of similar importance to be obtained by the shipment of food to Greece, which lies within the blockade area and is in German occupation.

3. The quantities of fish which have been allocated from Canadian sources have hitherto been paid for out of charitable funds and we have it under consideration at present to make special provision, analogous in character to that made for the purchase of Canadian wheat, to cover outstanding allocations in respect of the 1943 catch, together with the allocation of 1,000,000 pounds referred to earlier in this despatch. It would, in the circumstances, not be practicable to make a sum of the order of between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 available in this way for the purchase of fish in a third country. There do not appear to be any other ways in which such a purchase could be financed by Canada.

4. In drawing attention to the constitutional and political difficulties which lie in the way of Canada's meeting the wishes of the Lend-Lease Division of the Foreign Economic Administration, it is not intended to rest our case entirely, or even chiefly, on such grounds. The essence of the situation appears to us to be that it is necessary for the relief of famine in Greece that a considerable quantity of fish should be bought in Newfoundland. The Commission of Government can hardly be expected to finance a transaction of this magnitude. The problem appears to us to be whether it is more appropriate that the United States should finance it or that Canada should do so. We realize that in both instances political difficulties exist. We do not believe, however, that there is any basic difference between the general willingness of the Canadian people to make sacrifices to relieve starvation in Greece and the general willingness of the people of the United States to make sacrifices for that purpose. Canada, as appears from your teletype WA-3220 of May 25th,† has already contributed $14,000,000 for Greek relief. The United States has contributed $18,000,000. In proportion to population and wealth, Canada has made by far the greater contribution, and we are strongly of the opinion that, if a special financial effort must now be made by one or other of these two countries to relieve famine in Greece, it is the United States rather than Canada which should make that effort.

5. It would, of course, be as gratuitous for Canada to urge the United States to extend Lend-Lease aid to Greece in this matter as it would be for the United States to urge Canada to buy Newfoundland fish for the benefit of the Greeks, but if the need for extending relief to Greece is mutually recognized and we are discussing in a friendly way who should provide it, I think the case that can be made out for the assumption of the burden by the United States is overwhelmingly strong. If, therefore, you see no objection to such a course, I should appreciate it if you will discuss the question frankly with the Lend-Lease Division of the Foreign Economic Administration.

TELETYPE EX-2863

Ottawa, July 10, 1944

Following for Pearson from Robertson, begins: Wheat for Greek relief.

The Greek Minister told me a few days ago that his Government was very worried about the interruption of the supplementary wheat supplies for famine relief in Greece which have been received from the Argentine Government. I have been informed by a telegram from our Chargé d'Affaires in Buenos Aires<sup>t</sup> that the first 50,000 tons of relief wheat offered by the Argentine Government under Ramirez have been sent to Greece but that the present Argentine authorities have held the decree authorizing the promised second allotment of 50,000 tons in abeyance. This suspension will apparently continue until the Greek Government reopens diplomatic relations.

The Greek Government, taking its lead from the Governments of the United States and United Kingdom, is not recognizing the present Argentine Government and, in the circumstances, cannot very well ask the Argentine Government to continue assistance to Greece. Argentina appears to regard the resumption of the wheat shipments as a consideration which may affect the general question of recognition.

I understand that the Greek Minister has been instructed to inquire whether Canada could increase its supplies of wheat to Greece but that he is very reluctant to take the matter up officially with us since he felt that Canada had already done a great deal to aid his country.

Situation as outlined in preceding paragraphs is being reported to Cabinet Wheat Committee today and will be brought informally to attention of International Wheat Council which is only appropriate body on which Argentina is represented. I think Combined Food Board should also be informed of present position, since any further allocation of relief wheat to Greece that may later be agreed upon would in any case have to be cleared through Combined Food Board. Ends.

Dear Mr. Depasta,

I am referring to your telephone conversation of July 27 with Mr. H. F. Angus of the Department of External Affairs regarding the interruption of the supplementary wheat supplies which have been supplied from the Argentine Government for famine relief in Greece, and to my earlier discussion of this subject with you on June 29.

The Canadian Embassy in Washington has been informed by the Inter-Agency Committee on Greek relief that only three shiploads of wheat totalling not more than 25,000 tons have gone to Greece from the first Argentine allotment of 50,000 tons. In addition one ship is now due in Buenos Aires and a second in early August. Therefore the first allotment is not likely to be completed until September or later.

Meanwhile the Canadian Government is arranging for the inclusion of the question of supplies of wheat for Greece on the agenda either of the Executive Committee of the International Wheat Council which is to hold a meeting in late July, or of the Council itself which is to meet early in August. The Argentine delegate attends both the Council and the Executive Committee and the Canadian representative will avail himself of the opportunity to request the Argentine delegate to ascertain from his Government their intended programme regarding continued shipments of relief wheat from Argentina.

If the Argentine Government should be unwilling to ship the second allotment of 50,000 tons, the Canadian Government would then consider the question of the procurement of an additional amount from Canadian sources.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Angus,

With reference to our earlier correspondence concerning the continued shipment of relief wheat to Greece from Argentina,† Dr. Wilson<sup>195</sup> advises that this matter was discussed at the August 28 meeting of the International Wheat Council and at the meeting of the Council's Executive Committee on August 30th.

Mr. Viacava, the Argentine delegate, stated that it was the intention of his Government to complete the shipment of the first 50,000 tons of wheat from Argentina, of which about 28,000 tons has now been shipped. Mr. Viacava was not aware that any plans had been made by his Government to continue shipments to Greece beyond the exhaustion of the first 50,000 tons. Dr. Wilson pointed out that the problem was one of maintaining average monthly exports of 15,000 tons from Canada and 9,000 tons from Argentina to meet the Greek requirements of 24,000 tons per month.

Mr. Viacava undertook to consult his Government about the principle of continuing shipments from Argentina beyond the 50,000 tons and the Executive Committee regarded this a matter within its competence to either allocate further quantities to Greece from the remaining 150,000 tons which Argentina has agreed to make available to the Wheat Council for relief allocations, or if for any reason the Argentine Government desires to discontinue shipping to Greece, the Executive Committee would then recommend an alternative source of shipment.

This matter is to be discussed at the next meeting of the Executive Committee, which will be held some time in September, at which time Mr. Viacava will be able to report on the views of his Government.

Yours faithfully,

Following for H. F. Angus from Bull, Begins: With reference to the Argentine gift of wheat to Greece.

It was reported at last week's meeting of the Inter-Agency Committee that this question had been discussed with the International Wheat Council, and that the Argentine representative had agreed to take this matter up with his Government. As no reply had been received from the Argentine by September 15th the Argentine representative on the International Wheat Council followed up his original inquiry. The prospects are good that the second 50,000 tons of wheat will be forthcoming; if not, the United States will supply this wheat. The shipment of the first 50,000 tons will be completed in November.

On the question of Greek relief supplies from Argentina, the Swedish Commission recently asked for an increase of 1,000 tons per month in the supply of fats. The Ministry of Economic Warfare suggested to the Greeks that they ask F.E.A. to obtain 1000 tons of sunflower oil in the Argentine for shipment to Greece. In the course of the discussion it was reported that the State Department had requested the Greek Government not to ask the Argentine Government for any further grants of food stuffs, and that the Greeks have concurred. F.E.A. will increase the shipment of lard and soya oil by 400 tons to compensate in part for the sunflower oil which might have been supplied by Argentina. Ends.

Dear Mr. Prime Minister,

I have been requested by Mr. Papandreou, the Greek Prime Minister, to submit to you the following telegram:

I am happy to assure you once more, Mr. Prime Minister, that the Greek people will always remember gratefully the generous help given to them by the Government and people of Canada during the most critical period of their history. This gesture has proved the humanitarian feelings of the Canadian people towards the Greek Nation and largely contributed in saving the Greek people from starvation.

Thanks to the common efforts of the Allies the liberation of our country is imminent. The question of feeding the Greek people, however, who have suffered so intensely, is still our principal concern. The military plan to send supplies to Greece for another six months, in spite of all, is inadequate as you will readily appreciate, in view of the nation's requirements with regard to the daily bread ration which is their principal sustenance. The harvest of the local wheat crop will require some time before it could be marketed and, therefore, we appeal to the generosity of the Canadian Government to continue their help in the meantime so that by this additional supply a sufficient bread ration could be assured to the Greek people.

We feel confident that you, Mr. Prime Minister, will once more come to the aid of Greece and thus acquire the renewed gratitude of the Greek people.

We should appreciate any information that you can obtain as to the probable future of relief operations in Greece. Under cover of circular despatch D. No. 138 of September 29th† we have received from the Dominions Office a copy of a Memorandum of Agreement† which it is proposed to conclude with the Greek Government. Clause 5 provides that the Commander of the British Military Force will bring supplies and provide relief. Clause 17 provides that in distributing supplies and otherwise providing relief, the Commander will use the services of UNRRA. These two clauses suggest that the relief supplies will be of the nature of military relief.

It is this suggestion which puzzles us. We have understood the military relief agreement to apply to Western Europe. Is it expected that it will be applied to Greece as well? We have also understood that after the date on which UNRRA personnel take over the administration of relief, wheat shipments from Canada will count as part of Canada's contribution to UNRRA. If supplies were to be provided by way of military relief, the position of the wheat which Canada is supplying would have to be considered. Would it be:

- (a) a sale of Canadian wheat to military relief authorities in an area in which Canada is not contributing to the cost of military relief;
- (b) a sale to UNRRA;
- (c) as at present a gift to Greece;
- (d) a Canadian contribution to military relief in an area to be included in the agreement on this subject?

In the course of your enquiries it may be useful for you to know that the Greek Prime Minister had addressed a telegram to the Canadian Prime Minister asking for the continuation of Canadian help for Greece in addition to the relief which has been promised under the military plan. It is difficult to reply to this telegram unless we know what the military plan is and what part, if any, UNRRA will take in providing supplies. If the Canadian shipments of wheat to Greece are to count as part of the Canadian contribution to UNRRA as from the date on which UNRRA takes over relief, it would rest with UNRRA and not with the Canadian Government to decide what wheat, if any, should be sent after that date.

If a prolonged period of military relief is anticipated before UNRRA takes over, it might be rather much to expect Canada both to pay eight per cent of the net cost of the military relief and to continue to donate wheat to Greece because the military relief was inadequate. Ends.

Ottawa, October 17, 1944

The Greek Minister came to see me yesterday, with a copy of his letter to you of September 30th, in which the Greek Government had asked whether the Canadian Government would be willing to continue shipments of relief wheat to Greece, to supplement the provisions which Greece will receive under military relief arrangements.

I told Mr. Depasta that I thought there would be no stoppage of Canadian wheat shipments to Greece. In fact, if shipping permitted, they would probably increase, but the wheat supplied from Canada would be made available under the military relief scheme. It would not be feasible to continue direct Canadian Governmental relief to Greece over and above the relief furnished during the next six months under military relief, to which Canada was contributing directly. I saw no reason to fear that the bread rations under military relief scheme would be inadequate. The limiting factor in deliveries during the next months would be shipping, and the quantity of shipping available for moving wheat to Greece would be the same whether the wheat was being made available under the military relief scheme or by direct gift from the Government of Canada.<sup>196</sup>

GREEK RELIEF

Mr. Depasta called on me this morning to confirm his understanding of his conversation with you yesterday concerning the telegram from the Prime Minister of Greece on this subject. I explained to Mr. Depasta that my expectation was that the shipments of wheat from Canada would continue to be made but that instead of being a gift from Canada to Greece they would be a contribution from Canada to military relief which would, in turn, give them to Greece. Later on, they might become a contribution from Canada to UNRRA which would, in turn, give them to Greece.

I pointed out to Mr. Depasta that it made no difference whether the gift were kept separate from military relief or integrated with it so far as the quantities of foodstuffs which the Greeks might expect to receive were concerned. The military authorities would, in the latter case, supply the wheat, together with what other foodstuffs they considered necessary. In the former case, the military authorities would take account of the stocks of food in Greece and of the wheat from Canada and would then consider what additional foodstuffs it was necessary to send.

I informed Mr. Depasta that before replying to the Prime Minister's telegram we were endeavouring to find out what the exact arrangements would be, but that so far as the prospects of the Greek people receiving food were concerned, we did not think that the form of the arrangements or the technical channels used would make the least difference.

Dear Mr. Depasta,

I am instructed by the Prime Minister to acknowledge and thank you for your letter of September 30th, 1944, transmitting to him a telegram from the Greek Prime Minister requesting the Canadian Government to continue their shipments of relief wheat to Greece during the military period.

We understand from recent discussions held in Washington that the military programme will provide supplies of flour and wheat for Greece. Canada expects to contribute directly to the military relief programme and any wheat sent to Greece by Canada after the commencement of that programme would normally count as part of Canada's contribution to military relief. Shipping facilities are strictly limited and even if Canada continued to supply wheat to Greece independently of the military programme, it could hardly be expected that the military authorities would disregard the supplies from Canada in calculating what further supplies it would be necessary for them to provide.

It is uncertain at the present time if Canadian wheat will actually form part of the wheat sent under the military relief programme. Inquiries are being made to ascertain if the Swedish ships will be available for this purpose.

In view of these circumstances you will appreciate that the Canadian Prime Minister is reluctant to reply to the Greek Prime Minister until he can speak with greater assurance about the future. Meanwhile, I am sending the information which we now have and which you may wish to convey to your Government.

Yours sincerely,

Following for H. F. Angus from Bull, Begins: With reference to your EX-4544, November 10th†—cargo for Swedish vessels, Saggat and Formosa, on Greek Relief Fund—I have had several discussions with State Department, F.E.A., and the British Embassy officials concerned with Greek relief, on the question of cargo for the above vessels. In my letter of November 1st† I provided you with a schedule of Greek relief shipments for the balance of this year. Out of this schedule F.E.A. can provide some 10,000 tons of cargo, including 40 motor vehicles, for loading at St. John in November—early December. This leaves five or six thousand tons of space, and Wijkman,<sup>197</sup> in a telephone conversation with the Chairman of the Inter-Agency Committee, yesterday, suggested that we provide wheat to complete the loading of these two vessels.

The Tamara is due to sail from Greece on November 18th. There is a balance of some 20,000 tons of United States cargo covered by 1944 Lend-Lease requisitions, and it is hoped that sufficient cargo out of this balance will be available in St. John to load the Tamara. However, at the last moment we may be again asked for a limited quantity of wheat to complete the loading of this vessel.

Although this cargo is not being called forward by the theatre commander, in view of the safe conduct arrangement reported in my WA-6380 of November 9th,† there is no reason why any Canadian wheat shipped to the Relief Commission in Greece on the above and future Swedish vessels should not be charged against our overall military relief contributions. This wheat would, of necessity, be consigned as in the past, to the Relief Commission. However, the necessary accounting entry could be made at a later date.

The position of Lend-Lease shipments to Greece has not yet been determined. These materials continue to move on straight Lend-Lease requisitions. However, it is possible that these shipments may eventually be charged to military relief. We have been promised a report on this subject which we will forward to you. In the meantime we would appreciate your reaction to the proposal that Canadian wheat be made available to complete the loading of the three Swedish vessels listed above.

With reference to gasoline, oil and grease, Wijkman advised the Chairman of the Inter-Agency Committee on Greek relief that Cancross<sup>198</sup> is anxious to complete their shipping programme. We consider this method of shipping gasoline most uneconomical, and in the absence of information to the contrary, no longer necessary. However, if Cancross have commitments they cannot get out of, the Inter-Agency Committee would have no objections to the continued shipment of gasoline, oil and grease in drums, on the deck of the relief vessels so long as this movement does not replace any essential cargo. Ends.

The suggestion made in your teletype that 6,000 tons of wheat should be provided for the Saggat and Formosa to be consigned to the Relief Commission in Greece but to be credited on arrival as a military relief contribution has received very careful consideration. It seems to us out of the question that if the safe conduct precludes a consignment to the military relief authorities we should secure the same result by indirect means designed to evade the terms of the safe conduct.

It would probably be possible to make the required quantity of wheat physically available, provided that the financial terms on which it is supplied can be made clear. Apparently a straight-forward sale for military relief purposes is out of the question because of the safe conduct conditions. The Canadian-Greek Relief Fund, as you know, is in debt and an appeal to the public cannot take effect before the proposed shipment. Is there any other source from which a shipment of wheat for relief purposes in Greece could be furnished consistently with the safe conduct conditions? It might be worth while for you to explore in Washington the possibility of UNRRA undertaking such a shipment. In the meantime we can examine whether it would be appropriate to make a further shipment for Greek relief under the plan for providing wheat for Greece through the Swedish Commission. It has been assumed here that work through this Commission has terminated.

It is also proposed to finance through Lend Lease fund, food stuffs for shipments in the first quarter of 1945 based on the quantity to be supplied during the fourth quarter of this year—see my letter of November 1st,† in which I enclosed a schedule of proposed shipments during the fourth quarter, 1944.

We estimate that we will have approximately 35,000 tons of Swedish shipping per month, in January, February and March, 1945, and only 15,000 tons of United States relief cargo to move under the safe conduct agreement to Greece. DESPATCH 2773

Washington, December 9, 1944

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to our teletype WA-6847 concerning the provision and financing of wheat supplies for Greece.

2. As anticipated in the last two paragraphs of that teletype we have had a discussion of the general subject with the appropriate United States and United Kingdom representatives in Washington. An informal memorandum on this discussion is enclosed. This memorandum has been checked with the representatives of the U.K. Embassy who confirm that it reports accurately the sense of the meeting. We are circulating the memorandum to the other U.S. and U.K. representatives who participated in the discussion with a request that they indicate whether or not the memorandum accurately expresses the views put forward at the meeting.

3. You will wish to note particularly that the F.E.A. representative indicated his understanding that the F.E.A. expected that expenses incurred by them in the provision of such relief supplies after a date to be determined will be shared along the lines of the general agreement.

4. Pending completion of the formal agreement concerning the financing of relief supplies provided on a combined basis outside UNRRA it would seem that we shall be unable to secure a firm commitment providing for the inclusion of these particular wheat shipments under this general agreement. On the basis of this discussion however we are confident that the U.S. and U.K. representatives in Washington will be in sympathy with any suggestion which we might make for the inclusion of these shipments in the general financial arrangement.

5. If it is your intention that wheat supplied to Greece through the neutral Swedish-Swiss Commission during the military relief period shall not be a straight gift from Canada, we are convinced on the basis of this discussion that you can now proceed with the provision of the necessary quantities of wheat with the confident expectation that expenses incurred after an appropriate date will be shared among the three governments who will be parties to the general relief agreement, if payment is not received from the Greek Government.

6. I should perhaps add that if it would be found somewhat embarrassing for us to include these shipments subsequent to a certain date in our bill to the Greek Government for relief provided under the arrangement, there is now a suggested provision in the proposed agreement which would make it possible for the expense to be shared among the three governments without the necessity of going through the formality of requesting payment from the Greek Government, if the three participating governments mutually agree to refrain from requesting such payment. The relevant provision in the proposed agreement reads as follows:

“that, unless other arrangements are mutually agreed upon, payment in full shall be requested of all governments or authorities of liberated or conquered areas to which such supplies are furnished.”

7. The method employed in the initial financing of these wheat supplies (i.e. whether the wheat is to be procured under the Order-in-Council covering the gift of wheat to Greece,<sup>203</sup> or whether it is to be procured under the general “military relief” Order-in-Council)<sup>204</sup> would seem to be a matter of concern to the Canadian Government alone.

FINANCING OF CERTAIN RELIEF SHIPMENTS TO GREECE DURING

SWEDISH SWISS RELIEF COMMISSION

In view of the proposal to continue the Swedish ships in the Greek Relief Service, a meeting was called to discuss the possibility of arranging for financing the continuation of this Greek Relief Scheme under the general agreement among the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada, covering relief provided on a combined basis outside UNRRA.

The meeting was held in the Pentagon Building, at 3.15 on December 8th, 1944.

Order in Council P.C. 92/4430 of May 27, 1942.

A quantity of wheat up to 25,000 tons per month will be required to complete the loading of these relief vessels and Canadian wheat authorities have indicated that these quantities can be made available for shipment out of St. John. The Canadian representative inquired as to the method of financing such wheat shipments and the other relief cargoes provided by governments, and not by voluntary relief societies.

The F.E.A. representative indicated his understanding that it was F.E.A.'s expectation that the Lend Lease expenditures incurred, after a date to be determined, in the procurement and shipment of relief supplies to Greece would be brought under the general arrangement for combined financing.

The representatives of the British Embassy stated that they had already raised with London the question of future financing of supplies, under the Swedish-Swiss Relief Scheme and had reported that it was likely to be the view of the Canadian and United States governments that future financing should be within the framework of the overall scheme for the finance of relief outside the scope of UNRRA, and had requested London's view as to this proposal and as to the date from which shipments under the Swedish-Swiss Scheme should be brought into account.

The military representatives of U.S., U.K., and Canada agreed as to the desirability of retaining the services of these ships and expressed the view that the provision of sufficient approved cargo to fill these ships should be encouraged.

Pending settlement among U.S., U.K., and Canada on the precise terms of the formal agreement to cover the financing of relief provided on a combined basis outside UNRRA it was recognized that no formal provision can be made at this stage for the inclusion of these shipments in the general arrangement. It was observed, however, that the general agreement, in the form now proposed, would permit of the inclusion of these shipments.

If necessary, it was considered that specific provision could be made in the formal agreement, or in an annex thereto, for the combined financing of these shipments. It was noted that the proposed agreement is so worded that it could be agreed among U.S., U.K., and Canada that no bill be presented to the Greek Government for these particular relief supplies, if it is agreed among the three supplying countries that the financing of these shipments be borne by the governments who are parties to the agreement. It was observed further that as this general agreement covers not only "military" relief but is rather an arrangement for the financing of general relief, the suggested arrangement for financing these shipments could scarcely be interpreted as contravening the safe conduct agreement so long as supplies are consigned to the neutral Swedish-Swiss Relief Commission, as in the past.

TELETYPE EX-4914

Your WA-6847 December 7th. Wheat supplies for Greece.

The balance of $2,700,000 in the present War Appropriation would probably cover expenditures on an additional 54,000 tons of wheat. Since 8,400 tons have already been ordered for shipment in December, this would leave a balance of 45,600 tons for shipment from January through March.

I understand from Dr. C. F. Wilson that at a CCAC(S) meeting held on December 8th, the United States, United Kingdom and Canadian representatives took the view that the cost of providing wheat, lease-lend freight, etc., could be covered within the terms of the military relief agreement shortly to be concluded. No formal action could be taken until the conclusion of the agreement but it was anticipated that there would subsequently be no difficulty in bringing the shipments in Swedish vessels as from a date to be agreed within the framework of the new relief agreement.

It is therefore probable that at least the remaining 14,400 tons needed to make up the 20,000 tons monthly could be covered by our National Defence Appropriation for Military Relief.

I also understand from Dr. Wilson that the Cereals Committee of the Combined Food Board has concurred in the view that any shipments to Greece in Swedish vessels could be treated as supplementary to the amounts provided for in the Military Relief programme to Greece.

Dear Mr. Depasta,

You will recall that in my letter of October 30th, 1944, regarding the continuation of Canadian relief wheat shipments to Greece, I stated that the Canadian Prime Minister was reluctant to reply to the Greek Prime Minister's telegram until he could speak with greater assurance about the future.

Arrangements have now been completed by which the Canadian Government will continue to send wheat for the relief of Greece in the cargo space on the Swedish relief vessels which is not required for other relief supplies. So far as the physical supply of wheat is concerned the Canadian Government is thus doing all that is possible to aid the Greek people.

The Prime Minister would be grateful if you would convey this information to Mr. Papandreou.

Yours sincerely,

As now suggested April 1st is envisaged as target date for UNRRA to take over responsibility for Greek relief and has been accepted as such by UNRRA.

You are aware that our present arrangements, although nominally a gift under the Joint Relief Scheme, may be brought retroactively under the military relief plan. We should now like to know what plans are proposed as to the eventual financing of the wheat for Greek relief when delivery is taken by UNRRA after April 1st and where financial responsibility will lie for wheat cargoes arriving in Greece after that date.

Washington, February 23, 1945

Following for H. F. Angus, Department of External Affairs, from Bull, Begins: Reference your EX-579 of February 16th and your EX-654 of February 21st,† we have discussed with UNRRA, Greek Division, FEA, and members of C.R.O.C.,<sup>205</sup> the taking over of Greek relief programme by UNRRA. As indicated in your EX-654, UNRRA proposes to assume financial responsibility for:

- (1) All relief supplies reaching Greece after April 1st, 1945.
- (2) All relief supplies in Greece the ownership of which has not passed into the hands of the Greek Government or other distributing agencies.

The above proposal does not cover charitable gifts contributed by such relief agencies as the Greek War Relief Fund of Canada.

With reference to Canadian wheat, supplied under the joint relief programme and carried by Swedish vessels, the figures available in Washington indicate the following shipments and proposed shipments:

December, 1944	7,000 tons
January, 1945	6,000 tons
February, 1945	9,300 tons
March, 1945	20,000 tons?

Only one of the February vessels has sailed—the Virginia with 1,500 tons. The Suorva and the Boolongena are at present loading a total of 5,500 tons and should sail early next week. The Nagara is to load 2,300 tons and should also sail next week. As these vessels are averaging a month in transit, the wheat on the Suorva, Boolongena and Nagara will not clear Greek storage depots before April 1st.

Six of the largest vessels are due in Saint John for loading in March and these six vessels - the Formosa, Pedro Christopherson, Saggat, Tamara, Parramatta, and Akka—have a combined cargo capacity of 48,400 tons. FEA estimates as an outside possibility that they will be able to deliver 23,700 tons of general food cargo from the United States and 4,000 tons of fish from Newfoundland for March loading. This leaves a requirement of some 20,000 tons of wheat required for Greece in March, all of which will arrive after the UNRRA period commences.

According to the latest report from the Theatre Commander, the Joint Relief Commission had 8,200 tons of grain and 1,530 tons of flour in store on December 18th, 1944. It is possible that this figure was higher than normal due to a breakdown in distribution resulting from the civil war and it would be more accurate to estimate the average storage position at 5,000 tons Canadian wheat in the hands of the Joint Relief Commission.

The above figures indicate an over-all total of some 43,000 tons of Canadian wheat shipped or to be shipped from Canada for Greece during the military relief period, of which some 35,000 tons will be taken over by UNRRA.

After consultation with my Canadian colleagues, it is my opinion that it would be advisable to negotiate direct with UNRRA rather than through military relief, as recovery under military relief on 43,000 tons would probably be at a reduced and uncertain percentage, whereas recovery under UNRRA on 35,000 tons would be 100 per cent of the Canadian cost of delivering this wheat to seaboard. UNRRA is prepared to negotiate directly with us and although we have indicated that the Canadian gift of wheat, under the joint relief scheme, at some agreed date might be brought under the military relief plan, we are not necessarily committed to do this. So far as I have been able to learn, FEA is still covering the United States share of the joint relief programme by Lend-Lease requisitions and it is their understanding that UNRRA will take over the cost of the ships on April 1st, and will repay Lend-Lease for goods in store on April 1st and goods arriving after that date.

UNRRA reports that they have set up a credit of $5,000,000.00 to cover the purchase of Canadian wheat to ensure full cargoes by the Swedish vessels. Mr. Wasson<sup>206</sup> is familiar with this arrangement which appears to have the flexibility necessary to cover the situation. We are to have a further discussion with UNRRA when their plans for taking over Greek relief are further advanced. In the meantime, we would appreciate your comments on the above proposal.

The tons in the foregoing are long tons—2,240 pounds. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-820

Ottawa, March 5, 1945

Following for Bull from Angus, Begins: Your WA-997 of February 23rd.

Your proposal that you should negotiate directly with UNRRA rather than through military relief has been discussed with other Departments and the following suggestions have been received, with the approval of the Canadian Wheat Board, from the Department of Trade and Commerce:

“1. Re wheat procured by the Department of Trade and Commerce under Canadian Government aid to Greece on vessels arriving at Greek ports after the end of March, reimbursement should be made by UNRRA to the Canadian Government at the Canadian Wheat Board's Class II price for the particular grade of wheat prevailing on the afternoon of the last bill of lading date, plus freight and handling charges, etc., from an in-store basis Fort William/Port Arthur, to an f.o.b. basis West Saint John;

2. Re stocks of Canadian wheat in store in Greece on April 1 to be turned over by the Joint Relief Commission. Inasmuch as the identity of these stocks by cargoes will be lost, the quantity in store should be reimbursed by UNRRA to the Canadian Government on the basis of the Canadian Wheat Board's Class II prices, plus forwarding charges as above to an f.o.b. basis West Saint John, to be determined by the Class II prices prevailing on the last bill of lading dates on the latest cargoes arriving in Greece prior to April 1st up to the necessary quantity;

3. UNRRA to undertake procurement through the established channels; that is, Mutual Aid Administration, UNRRA Division, and Wheat and Grain Division of the Department of Trade and Commerce, for such quantities of wheat as are required for the Swedish vessels as soon as the proposed agreement takes effect.”

<sup>206</sup> Adjoint du directeur de l'administration, la Commission d'aide mutuelle.
Assistant to Director of Administration, Mutual Aid Board.

These suggestions do not deal with the general question of whether it would be preferable to limit our negotiations to 35,000 tons with which UNRRA is concerned rather than attempt recovery under military relief of the larger quantity of 43,000 tons. No doubt we shall have later the comments of the Department of Finance on this proposal.<sup>207</sup> I do not myself see why the two should be alternatives or why negotiations with UNRRA concerning the 35,000 tons should preclude negotiations with military relief concerning the 8,000 tons which UNRRA will not have received. If this is practicable, it would seem to be the best arrangement. As you point out we are paid in full for any supplies accepted by UNRRA, while if the supplies pass through military relief they enlarge the ultimate loss in which we have agreed to share to the extent of 8% and, in addition, the time of payment will be deferred. I cannot, however, understand how a claim against UNRRA should in any way constitute a waiver of our claim against military relief for supplies shipped from Canada to Greece during the military relief period but not taken over by UNRRA. Following for H. F. Angus, Department of External Affairs, Ottawa, from Bull, Begins: Reference your EX-820 of March 5th, the following letter is going forward to Wasson, Mutual Aid Board, from Weintraub, Acting Deputy Director General, UNRRA, covering procurement of Canadian wheat for Greece:

“This Administration has undertaken to assume full distribution and financial responsibility for relief supplies to Greece beginning 1st April, 1945. In accordance with this responsibility we have agreed that relief supplies arriving in Greece on and after the above date will be charged to this Administration by the military authorities and other agencies now delivering such supplies to Greece. This arrangement is necessary in order to assure a continued flow of supplies to Greece until this Administration has made the necessary arrangements to assume the entire responsibility for the procurement and shipping of all supplies programmed for Greece.

In this connection, it has been generally agreed that there should be no disruption in the present procedure and consignment to the Joint Relief Commission known as the ‘Commission de Gestion pour le Secours en Grèce.’ Under this procedure arrangements have been made to continue without change the loading of Swedish vessels at St. John, with a portion of the cargo coming from the United States and the balance consisting of wheat from Canada.

This is to confirm the telephone conversation between yourself and Mr. Karl Borders of this office by which UNRRA undertakes to have debited to the UNRRA account of the Canadian Mutual Aid Board Administration all Canadian wheat placed aboard these vessels under the arrangements with the Joint Relief Commission which arrives in Greece for the quarter beginning 1st April 1945. Upon receipt of information as to the amounts of wheat to be loaded under these arrangements for delivery in Greece during the second quarter of 1945 UNRRA will authorize debits through its customary procedure.

For reasons of security it is highly important that no information be released which would indicate any change in the present program of the Joint Relief Commission.

A copy of this letter has been handed to Mr. A. E. Ritchie of the Canadian Embassy for his information.

With great appreciation of your always ready cooperation, I am,"

We interpret this letter to mean that UNRRA authorizes Wasson to charge in the usual way against the UNRRA account, wheat loaded on vessels for arrival in Greece on and after April 1945. This takes care of the question of financing wheat shipments to Greece during the remainder of this month. We have not as yet worked out arrangements covering the payment by UNRRA for stocks of Canadian wheat in store in Greece, your paragraph number two. Ends.

TELETYPE WA-4906

Washington, September 20, 1945

Following for S. D. Pierce, Department of External Affairs, Ottawa, Canada, from Scott, Begins: Repeat to: W. F. Bull, Export Permit Branch, 220 Queen Street, Ottawa, C. F. Wilson, Director, Wheat and Grain Division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa.

Regarding UNRRA responsibility for Canadian wheat taken over from Greek Joint Relief Commission stocks on March 31st.

Bull and Allen have discussed a problem which has arisen regarding the submission of an account by the Mutual Aid Board to UNRRA for the wheat in stockpile in Greece, which was last the subject of correspondence from Washington in Bull's letter of July 10th to Wilson,† copy of which was forwarded to Angus on July 11th.

2. The officials in F.E.A. concerned with getting UNRRA to assume responsibility for payment for United States supplies in the stockpile as of that date, have not been able to satisfy UNRRA that the latter is responsible financially for payment. Leading to submission of an account, F.E.A. has been endeavouring to get from UNRRA receipts for the supplies in the stockpile of March 31st, which it is assumed went into UNRRA distribution channels subsequent to that date. There is apparently nothing in UNRRA's Washington records to indicate that they had assumed responsibility or that they actually did take possession of the stocks. UNRRA's contention seems to be that the stocks were handed to the Greek Government (or Military authorities) for distribution and that their part in the transaction may have involved no financial responsibility. The problem is complicated by the absence from Washington of Norman Gould and other UNRRA officials who clearly understood the arrangement at the time it was made. UNRRA is cabling Gould in London for a report on the basis of which a satisfactory settlement of the whole problem may be possible.

3. We have learned from Bull that the Canadian account covering wheat in the stockpile on March 31st, properly chargeable against UNRRA, has not yet been submitted to them by the Mutual Aid Board. Although it would be desirable for this account to be submitted as soon as possible, we feel it should be based on the latest figures available on the stockpile position on March 31st. Only yesterday F.E.A. informed us that the figures contained in Chadbourne's letter to Bull on July 7th† have been revised as follows:

(a) The total in warehouse on March 31st was 19,620 long tons (not metric tons). Argentine wheat figure to be deducted becomes 7,974 long tons, leaving a balance of Canadian wheat of 11,646 long tons.

(b) The flour figure of 5,750 is also in long tons. Adding the equivalent in wheat, i.e., 6,778 long tons gives a total for the Canadian inventory of 18,424 long tons instead of 18,296 metric tons.

(F.E.A. has been requested to confirm these figures to us in writing and they are being pressed for this information.)

4. In Bull's WA-1348 of March 13th to Angus, he pointed out that "arrangements covering the payment by UNRRA for stocks of Canadian wheat in store in Greece" had not yet been worked out. The only written record we have of UNRRA's understanding regarding payment is Bull's file memorandum† covering his and Ritchie's conversation with Borders and McAnsh of UNRRA of March 14th. This reads as follows, Begins:

"Accompanied by Mr. Ritchie, I called on Karl Borders and James McAnsh of UNRRA to discuss the procedure for the taking over of Canadian wheat supplies in Greece as of April first.

Messrs. Borders and McAnsh confirmed UNRRA's policy to assume the financial responsibility for this wheat. Roy Hendrickson<sup>208</sup> has been in Athens for the past ten days negotiating with the Military Relief authorities and the <sup>208</sup> Directeur général adjoint, UNRRA.

Deputy Director General, UNRRA.

Joint Relief Commission for the taking over of their supplies, and we can assume that he has worked out a procedure with these agencies.

Pending receipt of a report from Mr. Hendrickson, UNRRA does not know what arrangements have been made. They anticipate no difficulty in arranging with Mr. Wasson to debit the UNRRA wheat account immediately the inventory is received showing the position of Canadian wheat in store in Greece on April 1st." Ends.

5. To our knowledge the question of payment by UNRRA for Canadian wheat taken over by them from the March 31st stocks of the J.R.C.<sup>209</sup> was never discussed subsequent to this date on a specific basis, as in line with the agreement concerning the taking over of Military stocks, it was assumed that UNRRA recognized a similar responsibility for stocks taken over from the J.R.C. even though the responsibility in the case of the J.R.C. stocks had not been explicitly acknowledged by UNRRA on paper.

6. While we assume that any misunderstanding between UNRRA and F.E.A. will be cleared up shortly we feel that prompt submission of the Canadian account on the basis of the new figures would be a desirable means of settling our claim at the earliest possible moment. Henry, of the Mutual Aid Board, is at present in Washington and is being provided with a copy of this teletype in order that he may discuss the matter with Wilson on his return. Ends.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I wish to acknowledge receipt of material† forwarded this Department on December 22nd, January 2nd, January 5th, January 12th and January 15th,† regarding the furnishing of civilian supplies to Italy and bringing up the question of means of financing such shipments as are outside the scheme of Military Relief.

I understand Mr. Bryce has furnished Mr. Angus with figures on the amount of the Canadian obligation accrued in respect of Allied military lire obtained for the pay of Canadian troops in Italy, and has indicated verbally to your Department and the Department of Trade and Commerce that they might consider the possibility of Italy being able to obtain Canadian dollars to meet the cost of essential purchases in Canada as a charge against the obligations assumed by Canada in respect of these lire. We have been holding such obligation as an offset against any claims which we may have on Italy.

This question has been discussed with the Minister of Finance, who feels that it involves sufficiently important implications, particularly in respect of general principles of dealing with ex-enemy countries, to justify reference to the War Committee. I believe Mr. Bryce has already communicated this view to Mr. English, of the Department of Trade and Commerce, who raised the question recently in connection with a meeting being held in Washington to discuss the programming of civilian supplies for Italy.

I would suggest that either the Department of Trade and Commerce or the Department of External Affairs should prepare a recommendation on this matter, which would be communicated to this Department and placed before the War Committee of Cabinet at an early convenient date.<sup>211</sup> Our view here is that funds should only be furnished to Italy to procure in Canada supplies the furnishing of which can be justified on important social and military grounds, or in order to build up a post-war trade of importance to Canada. Supplies in general are sufficiently short and there are sufficient strains upon our manpower and financing, that we should not seek to facilitate trade now which cannot be justified for either of the reasons indicated above. I do not think we should facilitate trade the only justification for which is that it is in the immediate interests of certain Canadian exporters.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

Dear Mr. Angus,

With reference to our earlier correspondence† concerning possible arrangements for enabling the Italian Government to finance procurement of supplies in Canada, I am now enclosing three copies of a memorandum prepared in the Italian Division of F.E.A.† and submitted to CLAC(S) earlier this week. This memorandum outlines the facilities available and the procedures which have been adopted for procurement in the U.S., U.K. and Canada of civilian supplies for Italy. The memorandum distinguishes between Category 'A' supplies for which the military are responsible and category 'B' supplies required for the rehabilitation of Italian industries and for essential civilian supply beyond the military responsibility. In the provision of Category

No such recommendation was located.

'A' supplies we are already participating through our military relief arrangements. In the case of Category 'B' supplies, however, the memorandum reports (page 3) that no funds are at present available for the financing of such supplies from Canada. To the best of our knowledge this memorandum correctly states the position with respect to procurement of supplies from Canada. If Canada is to participate (for commercial or other reasons) in the rehabilitation of Italian industry or in the programs for supplementing civilian supplies brought in by the military, the time has clearly arrived for the making of whatever arrangements the Canadian authorities consider desirable and for the notification of these arrangements to CLAC(S), the Allied Commission and presumably the Italian Government.

I think you will find this memorandum helpful as a statement of the nature of the facilities which have been made available by the U.S. and U.K. authorities for enabling the Italian Government to finance such procurement in those countries.

It is intended that this memorandum shall be transmitted to the Allied Commission for guidance as soon as it is approved by CLAC(S). If, therefore, the Italian Government (through the Allied Commission) is to be informed of the arrangements for procuring supplies from Canada it is essential that we be provided with a statement of the changes necessary in this memorandum to take account of any decisions which the Canadian Government has made, or may make, to permit the use of Canada as a source of imports. If this information is not received in time for incorporation into this memorandum we shall not be in a position to participate in the extensive supply programs which the Allied Commission is submitting.

The interested Canadian officials in Washington will be discussing these arrangements within the next few days and may have some suggestions to make but we feel that the decisions in Ottawa should certainly not be delayed until our suggestions are received as clearly any suggestion which we may make will relate more to procedure than to policy.

Yours sincerely,

NON-MILITARY SUPPLIES FOR ITALY

A procedure has been developed for handling Italian essential imports other than those furnished by the military. The requisitions covered are those submitted by the Italian Government with the approval of the Allied Commission and thence forwarded to the Combined Liberated Areas Committee and those rejected by the Combined Civil Affairs Committee and forwarded by them to CLAC.

These goods are outside military relief and the financing of their purchase accordingly outside the scope of the tripartite agreement regarding costs of military relief.

Before Canada can accept recommendations as a source of supply, it will, therefore, be necessary to determine how the exports of such goods should be financed.

The United States Government proposes to finance them out of troop pay, returns from Italian exports, and personal remittances. The United Kingdom, for the time being at least, will carry them as a book memorandum.

The Department of Finance has indicated that the military lire account for pay advanced to Canadian troops, which on December 31, 1944, amounted to 837,835,227 lire ($9,362,808.66) could be utilized to finance the exports of these goods to Italy and recommends that if it is so made available it should be for supplies whose export could be justified on military or social grounds.

The Department of Trade and Commerce agrees with the above opinion, but in the absence of up-to-date commercial intelligence it does not venture any recommendations as to which of the commodities in long supply here are particularly required by Italy. The Department refers to its proposal that Colonel Cosgrave<sup>213</sup> might be transferred from Australia to Italy as a military officer with special instructions to investigate and report on commercial matters.

With regard to the Trade and Commerce comments it does not appear that the question of determining Italian needs on the one hand and Canadian possibilities on the other, should alarm us, since the machinery of Combined Boards, Combined Committees, etc., may be expected to handle the problem satisfactorily.

It is suggested that a submission regarding the financing of non-military supplies for Italy out of the Canadian military lire account be prepared for the War Committee at an early date, since allocations cannot be accepted on behalf of Canada in Washington until a decision on the matter has been reached.

SECRET. Your letter of March 24 regarding methods of financing procurement by the Italian Government of supplies in Canada.

Canada's position is different from that of the United States and the United Kingdom in that accruals to her Allied military lire account have now ceased owing to the withdrawal of Canadian troops from Italy. This account stood at about $10,000,000 as of February 28, 1945. The total of Italian assets held by the Custodian as of November 30, 1944, amounts to about $7,500,000. We are not anxious to make any firm or continuing commitments against these sums since we do not yet know the total of Canadian claims that will be filed with the Custodian. Advertisements for claims have not yet been issued but those voluntarily filed as of November 7, 1944, amounted to about $5,500,000.

There is therefore a very limited credit for the financing of supplies for Italy and we should prefer to consider requests for goods which may be needed for social, humanitarian or pressing economic reasons on an ad hoc basis, with a view to ensuring that any limited credits available may be put to the best possible use. This position may be modified if we find any alternative method of financing procurement. Ends.

DESPATCH 895

Washington, April 5, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch no. 386 of February 12th† transmitting a copy of the new directive on Allied policy towards Italy.† That directive had included an economic section providing for the preparation of a supply program designed to rehabilitate Italian industry. This program was to be in addition to the supplies which were to be provided as a military responsibility.

2. There has been a considerable amount of correspondence between this Embassy and the Department concerning possible arrangements for Canadian participation in this supply program. We have now received your teletype EX-1234 of April 3rd indicating that a very limited credit is available in Canada for the financing of supplies for Italy and advising us that you would "prefer to consider requests for goods which may be needed for social, humanitarian or pressing economic reasons on an ad hoc basis, with a view to ensuring that any limited credits available may be put to the best possible use."

3. In order that the interested Departments of the Canadian Government might be informed of the extent and purpose of this supply program I am now enclosing a paper prepared by the Italian Government in collaboration with the Allied Commission on "The Program of Essential Italian Imports 1945." This report contains a letter from Prime Minister Bonomi to the Chief Commissioner of the Allied Commission indicating that the program is accepted by the Italian Government as a proper charge upon its funds. The purpose of the program is to "attack" the three factors at present limiting production in Italy:

- (a) transportation
- (b) electric power
- (c) imported production materials and equipment

4. The present report summarizes and discusses briefly the standards and levels of economic life implied in the program.

5. The individual requisitions comprising this program have now been received in Washington and are being classified and assembled for consideration by the Operating Subcommittee of the Combined Liberated Areas Committee and by the supply authorities of the U.S., U.K. and Canadian Governments.

Ottawa, April 25, 1945

I wish to refer to Mr. Pearson's despatch of April 5th, on the subject of Allied Policy towards Italy, a copy of which you so kindly supplied me.

It is noted that the proposed policy provides for the preparation of a supply programme designed to rehabilitate Italian industry apart from supplies to be provided as a military responsibility.

The officers in my Department directly interested in this phase of our export trade have given careful study to the programme of essential Italian imports as prepared by the Italian Government in collaboration with the Allied Commission. Under the three main headings for which supplies will be required to assist Italian industry, we find that there are many commodities which Canada might supply not only as a relief measure, but as a means of introducing Canada as a source of supply and Canadian manufacturers to a postwar market. I am informed that the requisitions covering this program have been received in Washington for screening by the supply authorities of the U.K., U.S. and Canadian Governments. We may possibly find ourselves ignored as suppliers unless the Italian Government is, by one means or another, placed in funds.

This prompts me to refer to my memorandum of March 31st† on the subject of making available, for the procurement of civilian goods in Canada for Italy, the funds which have accrued on account of the Canadian troops in Italy. I believe the conclusion was reached by your Department that because of the necessity of earmarking a substantial proportion of these accruals to cover possible indemnity claims, it would be impractical to make available for trade purposes any more than say, $5,500,000. Moreover, I understand that the provision of even this amount was regarded with some doubt in view of possible additional claims against Italy. While it is appreciated that such a sum would be insignificant, in comparison with the total requirements for trade purposes, nevertheless, we feel that unless some funds are placed at the disposal of the Italian Government for the purchase of Canadian goods at this time, there may be danger of Canada being completely overlooked as a supplying country.

Even if circumstances make it possible to provide at this time as little as $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, we are of the opinion that it would be desirable, in the interests of Italian rehabilitation and of the recommencement of our trade relations with Italy, to make some funds available. It is our belief that to leave this matter on an ad hoc basis would be most unsatisfactory and would probably result in Canadian exporters and importers being denied an opportunity of re-engaging in trade with Italy for some considerable time.

I would appreciate it, therefore, if some reconsideration could be given to this matter and if you agree, in a recommendation being made to Council along the lines indicated above.<sup>214</sup>

Yours faithfully,

TELETYPE WA-3978

Washington, July 28, 1945

SECRET. Your EX-1234 of April 3rd and related communications regarding methods of financing procurement in Canada of supplies for Italy outside military relief.

The following is an outline of our understanding of the present Canadian position:

<sup>214</sup>Aucune recommandation de ce genre ne fut trouvée.
No such recommendation was located.

(a) The procedures for seeking Canadian advice on supply availabilities and for initiating procurement have been established. (See letter No. 34413 of January 2nd from the Acting Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs;† and paper CLAC(S) 18/2† enclosed with Ritchie's letter of April 19th to Angus.)†

(b) The program of Italian requirements has been submitted to the Canadian departments concerned (see our despatch No. 895 of April 5th to External Affairs and subsequent related communications to Trade and Commerce).†

(c) Advices have been received by the Commercial Counsellor of this Embassy from the appropriate authorities in Ottawa as to the availability of certain supplies in Canada, subject in some cases to Combined Board consideration.

(d) The amount of funds available for the purchase in Canada of supplies for Italy outside military relief, and the precise method for financing such purchases remain undetermined apart from the indication in EX-1234 that "there is a very limited credit for the financing of supplies for Italy and we should prefer to consider requests for goods which may be needed for social humanitarian and pressing economic reasons on an ad hoc basis with a view to ensuring that any supplies available will be put to the best possible use."

(e) In Combined Board operations there would appear to be some reason for reluctance in showing Canada as the sole source of supply for a particular item on the basis of known availability in Canada since for financial reasons it may develop that Canada is unable to supply and the Italians may therefore be deprived of an essential commodity which might have been secured elsewhere.

(f) The Italian authorities and the Allied Commission remain apparently unable to secure supplies from Canada even though the valid urgent Italian requirements and the probable availabilities from Canada are known to the Canadian authorities.

We have been approached informally by Sacerdoti, head of the Italian Technical Delegation in Washington, and the Commercial and Supply representatives of the Italian Embassy who wished to enquire whether there was anything that they could do to facilitate the procurement of supplies from Canada. They referred to the urgent need for certain supplies to be loaded in September and the last quarter of the year. They outlined the limited facilities available to them for procurement in the United States and United Kingdom (on which you were advised in considerable detail in the enclosure which accompanied our despatch No. 1817 of July 24).† They mentioned that up to the present, to the best of their knowledge, none of the funds available to them in the United States could be used for procurement in third countries and similarly none of the United Kingdom funds could be used outside the United Kingdom and Colonies. They expressed an interest in knowing what, if anything, Canada proposed to do concerning troop pay equivalent, but we refrained from giving them any indication of possible developments in Canadian policy on this point. They indicated that at some stage their Government would probably wish to discuss with the Canadian authorities possible arrangements for commercial credits. They did not raise the question of drawing on any balance of Italian assets which might become unfrozen and be made available to them.

We appreciate the fact that obstacles remain in the way of direct formal discussion between representatives of the Canadian and Italian Governments at this stage. It is our understanding from the documents transmitted with our despatch No. 386 of February 12,† despatch No. 1292 of May 23rd,† and despatch No. 1624 of June 30th† that it would be appropriate in the absence of direct diplomatic relations for a representative of the Allied Commission to discuss these matters with the Canadian authorities. As Mr. Harlan Cleveland, Executive Director of the Economic Section in the Allied Commission, is expected back in Washington for a few weeks upon completion of the U.N.R.R.A. Council meeting before going on to Rome, it occurs to us that you might wish to consider the desirability and feasibility of inviting him to visit Ottawa and discuss the financial arrangements with you if they have not been settled by that time. In the meantime, or at the same time, it might be useful, if proper, for Mr. Ortona (who was an active member of the original Quintiero-Mattioli Mission which worked out financial arrangements with this country prior to United States recognition of the Italian Government and who has remained in Washington at the Italian Embassy) to go to Ottawa to discuss even informally possible financial arrangements and you might wish him to bring with him Mr. Sacerdoti to explain the technical details and urgency of the Italian non-military relief requirements. In the event that you consider it useful to have Cleveland or any of the Italian Officials visit Ottawa it would be desirable to give them as much notice as possible to enable them to get approval and guidance from the Allied Commission or from Rome before proceeding to Ottawa.

In venturing these informal suggestions for your consideration we recognize that there may be insuperable obstacles in the way of such discussions, or that such discussions may be unnecessary particularly if the deliberation in Ottawa on financial arrangements is already proceeding satisfactorily. Nevertheless we have thought it desirable to draw your attention to the presence of these officials in Washington in case you might feel that consultation with them would be feasible and would be of assistance in the consideration of this somewhat urgent problem in Ottawa.

Finally it might be remarked that the success of the Allied Commission and the Italian Government in securing supplies required under the category B or non-military relief program has a significant bearing on requests which will be made to Canada and other contributing countries for the continued provision of basic relief supplies to Italy through military relief, UNRRA, or other civilian channels. The category B program is, as you know, designed to restore the Italian economy to the extent necessary to reduce and finally eliminate the need for basic civilian relief from outside sources.

Ottawa, August 11, 1945

I refer to your letter of August 1st† and attached teletype No. WA-3978 respecting relief supplies for Italy.

With regard to the proposed visit of certain Italian officials and Mr. Harlan Cleveland, Executive Director of the Economic Section in the Allied Commission, we see no objection in principle. However, we do feel that perhaps it would be advisable before making definite arrangements for such a visit to obtain more precise information as to the nature of the procurement or other difficulties now being encountered and any specific proposals the Italians intend to suggest.

The question of relief for Italy has so far been the joint responsibility of Canada and the other Western Allies. We would not want to take any action that would imply acceptance by Canada of any increased share of responsibility in this regard though we do not wish to avoid any that now devolves upon us or to refrain from taking a proper share in what must be done for Italy.

We notice that the despatch from Washington was dated July 28 and although we have not had definite word we understand that since that time the commission has withdrawn from the field of foreign trade which now comes under the jurisdiction of the Italian Government. This might have some bearing on the nature of the discussions.

As you know we are desirous of having some trade representation in Italy as soon as possible, but have not yet been able to get a trade commissioner into Italy since the war. The whole subject of resumption of private trade with Italy is obscure and we should like to obtain further light upon it. Would the proposed delegation be able to contribute any such light?

There are some commodities (viz. cherries in brine and raw silk) which Canadian importers are desirous of importing from Italy. We have not yet been able to ascertain whether they are available, from whom, on what terms, and how transactions can be concluded. We are not in a position to answer many such questions that are now beginning to be asked of us.

Your WA-3978 July 28th. Financing procurement of non-military relief supplies for Italy.

We are interested in exploring further the situation with regard to procurement of non-military relief supplies for Italy, and before seeing the Italians themselves should be glad to talk the problem over with Harlan Cleveland. Will you ascertain whether it would be possible for him to pay a brief visit to Ottawa on his return from UNRRA meetings?

DESPATCH 2244

Washington, September 19, 1945

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my teletype WA-3978 of July 28th and related communications regarding possible methods of financing procurement in Canada of supplies for Italy under the so-called 'Category B' or Transitional Program distinct from, but designed to supplement, the basic relief program.

2. I am enclosing three copies of the informal report which Mr. Harlan Cleveland, Executive Director, Economic Section, Allied Commission, Rome, has made to Mr. Hunt, Chief, Italian Division, Foreign Economic Administration, on his discussions of this and related subjects with officials of the Canadian Government on September 4th and 5th. I think that this report will be of some interest to a number of the Departments concerned, particularly as an indication of the interpretation of the Canadian position which is prevalent in Washington. I should perhaps say that copies of Mr. Cleveland's report were made available by his office to the State Department, the Allied Commission, the Chief of the UNRRA Mission to Italy, and to the U.K. Embassy in Washington.

3. It will be noted from Mr. Cleveland's covering letter that he would appreciate information on developments in the field covered by this report and particularly on the results of the meeting referred to in paragraph 10. Since this letter was received a number of oral enquiries have been addressed to us for information concerning any decisions taken at that meeting of the External Trade Advisory Committee. In order that we might be able to provide appropriate answers to these enquiries and to the other enquiries reported in our teletype WA-3978 of July 28th, we should be grateful to receive any information which you can give to us at this time.

SUBJECT: LETTER FROM OTTAWA NO. 1 (AND ONLY)

Dear Ed [Hunt],

I have spent yesterday and today discussing with officials of the Canadian Government supply and economic questions relating to Italy. These discussions are summarized in the following paragraphs:

1. After checking in at the U.S. Embassy, my first meeting was with Sidney Pierce, Chief of the Economic Division of the Department of External Affairs; it was he who had cabled to London asking that I return to Washington via Ottawa. With him were Miss Burwash of his Division, Mr. G. P. Glazebrook, Chief of the 2nd Political Division (Europe), Mr. C. S. A. Ritchie, Chief of the 1st Political Division (International Affairs), and Mr. G. Ignatieff, a member of Mr. Ritchie's Division. The discussion turned into a rather detailed explanation, in reply to questions, of the whole history and setup of the Allied Commission and the military government operation in Italy. It appeared to be the first time that the group had received any first-hand report on the situation or organizational relationship in Italy.

2. Yesterday afternoon and today I had meetings with Mr. C. M. Croft, Director of the Commercial Intelligence Service of the Trade and Commerce Department, and members of his staff—including Mr. John English, in charge of Export Planning, and Mr. R. T. Young, who handles their work on Italy. Mr. Young was not only familiar with our various programs, but seemed to understand the distinction between and among them—which reinforces my opinion that while our business has become rather complicated, a person who really goes through all the papers should know what is happening even without oral explanations. Later in the afternoon I met with Mr. Karl C. Fraser, Director of Administration, Canadian Mutual Defense Board. (This Board is composed of the Ministers of Reconstruction and Supply, National Defense, Finance, Agriculture, and Justice, and corresponds roughly to FEA. Mr. Fraser is what we would call “Executive Director”—similar to the position Milo Perkins had in BEW.<sup>215</sup> Like FEA, it administers both the Mutual Aid money and the Canadian contribution to UNRRA; unlike its U.S. counterpart, it also has been responsible for the military relief program from the start. It is a programming and check-signing agency, working through the regular procurement services of the Government just as FEA does.) Today I had a further talk with Mr. Pierce, and Mr. Bryce of the Department of Finance, on the money problems.

Program of Basic Supplies—Financial Problems

3. For some time, the Canadians have been quite clear, and they emphasized again yesterday, that they have only two methods of financing relief supplies to Italy or anywhere else; through authorizations for military relief or through UNRRA. Italy presents a difficult problem, of course, because there is a hiatus period in which (at least as far as the U.S. is concerned) a third method is required. The Canadian proposal for handling this problem is roughly this: for September loadings, they would carry their five percent of the loss by stretching the military relief concept for an additional month. Beginning October 1, they would charge the cost of any Canadian supplies to their UNRRA appropriation. Mr. Fraser, who is the official most directly responsible for the funds involved, emphasized that even a month of stretching military relief would necessitate his going back on a commitment which had already been made to the Cabinet: namely, that the military relief program was ending with August 1945 loadings. (He has ordered all shipments on military relief account frozen as of August 31, and anything that had not actually been shipped by that date will not be sent at all under his present ruling.)

4. As you know, the British have taken a similar position on the financial problems, although they have indicated their willingness to stretch military relief until UNRRA signs a new agreement with the Italian Government, which would probably mean stretching it for a couple of months rather than one month.

5. I have explained, both in London and in Ottawa, that use of the UNRRA fund to finance retroactively the supplies furnished to Italy during the interim period (September-December, 1945) would (a) be objected to in principle on the theory that UNRRA should not become just a financing device; and (b) would have the effect of reducing the total amount of funds available in the U.S. for European relief, since it would use up United States UNRRA funds unnecessarily and would render unavailable a considerable part of the $100,000,000 already authorized for interim relief to Italy.

6. I do not believe that we can go on much longer with the endless negotiations on this question. I think that we and the British and the Canadians should now agree to disagree: i.e., we will run a combined CLAC supply program to Italy for the four-month period in question, the U.S. will use the FEA $100 million, and the British and Canadians will use whatever funds they care to use. If they agree with our point of view, it makes political problems for them which are far more serious than the relatively small amounts of money involved in the U.K. and Canadian shares of this interim program; on the other hand, if we go along with them, we throw away money which we are already authorized to use for this particular purpose. If we go our separate ways the financial problems will not (as they are doing now) inhibit the continuing flow of basic supplies to Italy.

Program of Basic Supplies—Supply Problems

7. After looking into the availabilities of Canadian supplies against the Basic program, I am beginning to wonder if the financial problems are not a little academic anyway. The unanimous opinion of the people I have talked to (including Mr. Calder who handles wheat in the Department of Trade and Commerce) is that Canada has so many commitments and such a relatively small supply of wheat this year that it will be quite impossible to ship any wheat during September and even shipments after that are highly doubtful. For September even the two or three cargoes which had been mentioned as a possibility in Washington seem to be out. They are going to look immediately into the possibilities of shipping wheat thereafter (at a rate of at least 20,000 tons a month, or 80,000 before the end of the year), but the tone of the discussions on the subject was not encouraging. I find it difficult to believe that with a prospective crop of around 300 million bushels and a carryover of 258 million bushels, Canada is really as short of wheat as had been indicated; but a determination on how to approach them on this question must await a review of their total supply and the commitments against it, by somebody competent in the field. We should I think follow this up in Washington as soon as possible.

8. I explored briefly the possibility of a Canadian contribution toward meeting Italy's monthly requirements of a little more than 3,000 tons of dried salted fish. However, it appears that the entire Canadian allocation of dried salted fish for "relief" destinations (i.e., UNRRA and the paying countries) amounts to 3,000,000 pounds for the "fish year" starting in July—which is just half of Italy's requirements for a single month. Mr. Gilbert, the Trade and Commerce Department's expert on these matters, said that we would have better luck drawing on Newfoundland's supply, since that source was expected to make available for relief purposes 24,000,000 pounds during the same period. Also, it may be that Italy could come into the picture when the allocations of canned fish for relief purposes are divided up among countries by the Fish Committee of the Combined Food Board, sometime next week. These allocations are: from Canada, 14,300,000 pounds, from the U.S. 26,000,000 pounds.

9. The possibility of Canada supplying farm machinery to Italy rests on two factors: whether some method can be found to finance its purchase, and whether the orders get in soon enough—during the next month or so. Unless the U.K. deliveries are cut back as a result of the termination of the Mutual Aid Program (there are rumors that they may be), the manufacturers' order books will be filled up within a relatively short time. Though tractors are not produced in Canada, the supply of grain binders, plows, and spare parts might be feasible. Supply of machinery from the Massey-Harris plant in France might also be looked into. However, nothing can be done on this until the financial questions, on either the Basic Program or the Category B program, have been settled definitely and it is known whether or not there is any money available for the purchase of supplies in Canada. (Incidentally, their farm machinery man, Mr. McLeod, says that UNRRA may miss out on its farm machinery too, unless they come up very soon with either (a) firm orders, or (b) commitments that when the new 1% is appropriated to UNRRA by the Canadian Parliament firm orders will immediately be placed for specified quantities and types of machinery. Since such an action would commit only the Canadian Government, and would be taken through the Canadian Government, there does not seem on the surface to be any reason why UNRRA should not do it.)

Category B Program.

10. Partly as a result of this visit, the question of financing Category B purchases is being raised this week in a concrete form. The Trade and Commerce Department had received the Transitional Program, 2nd Section (October-December 1945), and had investigated possible Canadian availabilities of the materials requested. The result is the attached list (Appendix 'A')† which indicates what might be supplied from Canada against this program. The estimated cost of all these materials is 2½ to 3 million Canadian dollars. Tomorrow the Export Trade Advisory Committee is to meet and consider whether these materials ought to be supplied and what financial arrangements would be involved. We will hear the result of this and subsequent meetings on this subject through the Canadian Embassy in Washington.

11. The financial picture is substantially as I stated it in my Progress Report No. 1 to the Allied Commission, dated 26 June 1945. The seized Italian assets amount to around $7½ million, and the troop pay conversion would amount to about $10 million. Satisfaction of Canadian claims against Italy (not counting the cost of military relief, which is assumed to be a dead loss) might use up the whole of this amount, but it is quite possible they wouldn't; therefore, without prejudice to the claims it might be possible to make available to Italy for current purchases of supplies some part of the troop pay equivalent. I explained in some detail the way in which our troop pay account was set up and administered, and if it is agreed to make some funds available in this way, the Canadian system would probably be analogous to ours. One thing is clear; if they do release the funds, the Canadian Government has no objection to doing the actual procurement on behalf of the Italians—they have the Canadian Export Board which is set up to do just that sort of procurement, and they are already doing it for several other European countries (I take it the procedure is comparable to our cash Lend-Lease transactions).

12. In addition to the conversations with the Canadian Government people, I have discussed these questions with Col. Bankhead, Mr. North, and Mr. Homer Fox, of the U.S. Embassy; Mr. Fox (whom I had met before in Rome as a member of the Culbertson Mission to the Mediterranean area)<sup>216</sup> sat in on most of the meetings with the External Affairs and Trade & Commerce Departments. I also spent a couple of hours with the Ambassador, Mr. Ray Atherton, going over the whole Italian picture—with which he was at one time very much concerned as Chief of the State Department's European Division.

Sincerely yours,

IMMEDIATE. Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: You may have seen from the press that Law<sup>217</sup> is arriving in Washington over the week-end primarily to discuss relief supplies for the liberated areas of France, Belgium, Holland and Greece. The British are extremely worried about the difficulties in getting in any civilian supplies and attribute much of the current European unrest to that fact. They feel also that the main difficulty is American reluctance to devote any shipping to European relief purposes at the expense of Pacific operation. The British think that a short delay in Pacific operations would not be of any great importance but that the shipping thereby released could be used for bringing in civilian supplies, and that this would make all the difference to Europe both now and in the post-war period. During Law's visit, I may be brought into conversations on relief supply matters and hope that you will agree that I should support any reasonable proposal to relieve the European situation by getting in more supplies.

Of course, I appreciate the sensitiveness of the United States about proposals of this kind, and how essential it is that they should be reasonable themselves and that any support by us for them should be carefully expressed. Nevertheless I feel that the British position on this matter, which is supported by the European Governments, is the right one and I think it deserves support. Ends.

Following for Pearson from Angus, Begins: Your WA-6986 of December 15th, relief supplies for liberated areas. The subject which Law is to discuss in Washington is one of very great importance and I agree with you that relief supplies for liberated areas in Europe should receive a very high priority. It is, no doubt, difficult to compare the urgency of this situation with that of military operations in the Pacific. Because it is difficult to forecast, with precision, the political consequences of additional civilian supplies furnished to the liberated areas by the diversion of shipping, the question appears to me to be intimately related to that of finding adequate quantities of those physical supplies which are most needed - a question which is coming before the Combined Boards very shortly in the case of sugar and meat. I hope to be able to deal with this whole question in an early despatch.

For various reasons Canada can play a very important part in the discussions. The United Kingdom is handicapped, partly by the suspicion that it may be tempted to give too much emphasis to the European problems close at hand and partly by the stockpiles of certain commodities which have been accumulated in the United Kingdom. These stockpiles have in the past been considered as reserves against intensive submarine blockade and against bombing. Happily at the moment both of these contingencies seem more remote than they were but it is very understandable that the United Kingdom should wish to keep important reserves against two other related contingencies. The first is an urgent demand on the continent of Europe which it may be necessary to meet in order to avoid political chaos there. The second is profound dissatisfaction in the United Kingdom itself with the continuance of the restricted diet imposed in wartime.

The discussion between the United Kingdom and the United States may, therefore, raise very easily the question of the comparative hardships in the two countries. Canada, however, is not expected to make much greater sacrifices than those which are acceptable in the United States itself and, therefore, we are not open to the same degree of reproach if we advocate measures designed to relieve the situation in Europe. It is, however, important to consider how far we are prepared to go in making sacrifices ourselves, provided that the United States make similar sacrifices. This is the subject which I hope to deal with in the despatch which I have in mind. Ends.

Ottawa, December 18, 1944

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to teletype WA-6986 of December 15th concerning the visit of the Right Honourable Richard Law to Washington to discuss relief supplies for the liberated areas of France, Belgium, Holland and Greece. An immediate reply has been sent by teletype. The object of this despatch is to give a more detailed statement of the Canadian position.

2. The importance of this question is fully appreciated. A continued shortage of food, of clothing and of other civilian supplies in areas which have been liberated may have the most serious political consequences. The expectations of the liberated populations have been aroused. They are often conscious of having themselves made heroic efforts to drive out the enemy. They are welcoming troops who are well equipped and well fed. The moment is not one in which it is easy to call upon them to reduce the scale of living which they have been able to maintain during the period of enemy occupation. Countries which are themselves experiencing some degree of war weariness, although they have not actually been invaded, are not in a strong moral position for making such an appeal. This point may be put somewhat differently if we consider the populations of the liberated areas as partners in a general war against Germany and Japan. We may appear to be calling upon them for sacrifices in day-to-day life utterly disproportionate to those which the civilian populations of the United States or Canada are making or are prepared to make.

3. Nothing could be more serious than political disturbances approaching the character of civil war in liberated areas. While these disturbances may often be superficially of a political ideological character, one of the basic conditions which promotes their development is the inability of any Government, whatever its political complexion, to provide for the immediate needs of the people in food and clothing. Once a conflict starts it is extremely difficult to settle and while it is in progress the statements which are made about it, whether true or untrue, may have serious political repercussions within each of the principal Allied countries and may affect their relations with one another. It is hardly necessary to emphasize how serious such developments may be in impeding those peaceful political settlements which are essential if a lasting peace is to be secured which will maintain the values for which such great sacrifices have already been made in the course of the war.

4. This general situation has found expression in two inter-related problems. The first, as indicated in the teletype under reference, concerns transportation; the second concerns physical supplies. The first of these problems has the greater immediate urgency because in many cases, particularly in the case of meat, physical supplies are being provided up to the limit for which transportation is available without impinging seriously on civilian consumption. The second problem, however, will become one of equal urgency as soon as shipping space is released because military supplies for Europe will cease to have their present importance. When plans are under consideration which cover the provision of food supplies for the year 1945 and perhaps the year 1946, the question is bound to arise whether or not the United States and Canada are prepared to lower their standards of civilian consumption in order to meet the needs of Europe. The question has already arisen with respect to sugar and has been under consideration here by the Food Requirements Committee which has given instructions to the Canadian executive officer of the Combined Food Board. It appears probable that a similar issue will arise in the case of meat, as the Canadian authorities have before them at the present time a Combined Food Board allocation for 50,000 tons, together with the U.S.S.R. requirement of a similar amount and with the United Kingdom demand for increased shipments. It would seem to me convenient that these two related problems should be considered at the same time.

5. It is not easy to persuade people to face these problems in advance because there may be some scepticism as to the intensity to which they will arise in practice. Another difficulty is that any country which is called on for an immediate sacrifice has no difficulty in pointing to some corresponding sacrifice in another country which should, in its view, take precedence over that which it is asked to make. The United Kingdom, for example, is vulnerable in maintaining large stockpiles and by the time an explanation has been given of the purpose of these stockpiles and of the reductions which the United Kingdom are willing to make, that country has been thrown on the defensive in any discussion. Canada is similarly vulnerable as a high per capita consumer of butter and meat, particularly as during the last six months the nominal Canadian butter ration has been maintained at 8 ounces a week, although in practice it has been cut to 7. For the first few months of 1945 it will be cut to 6, but again it is possible that in practice the cut may be for a longer period. In other words, our practice has been to minimize rather than to emphasize the sacrifices which civilians are called on to make for the purpose of meeting wartime demands and relief demands. The United States, in turn, is vulnerable because it has not always made its nominal allocation effective as, for instance, in the case of sugar and because it maintains a higher military ration than its Allies. The position of the United Kingdom is also weakened in discussion by the fact that it is considered politically necessary to increase some rations at a time when other countries may be asked to reduce them.

6. In Canada the policy of minimizing sacrifices may have to be superseded by the policy of emphasizing them. Canada's population is small and the contribution to the general supply situation which can be made by sacrifices in Canada is, therefore, also small. It may be the moral effect of making sacrifices which will carry most weight both in inducing other countries to follow the same course, and in making it clear to the liberated areas that everything possible is being done to meet their desperate needs. It is largely for these reasons that it would not be easy to place before the Canadian Government a programme calling for drastic sacrifices. This could only be done if an authoritative statement were forthcoming, showing that these sacrifices were essential as may well be the case, if not to success in the war, at least to the prospect of securing many of the important objectives for which we have been fighting. The second condition would be that corresponding sacrifices should be forthcoming from the United States and from the United Kingdom. It is probable that the situation in the United States is somewhat similar, although, of course, its people have undergone only three years of wartime shortages as against five years in Canada and the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom, in turn, may be able to forgo an increase in its rations but it can only be expected to do so if the people can be assured that the sacrifices which the United Kingdom has made and is making in the matter of civilian consumption are likely to have a genuine counterpart in the United States and in Canada.

7. The considerations set out in the foregoing paragraphs have been brought together in order to suggest that any real achievement with regard to the supply situation for relief purposes in 1945 will require a thorough-going agreement among the three countries most concerned, although this agreement may be of an informal character. I feel that it would be a great mistake to place any proposals before the Canadian Government which are of a piecemeal character. There is a very big issue to be faced and a correspondingly strong case should be prepared if we are to face it. The position with regard to sugar is peculiar because a substantial and easily-justifiable reduction of consumption in the United States could meet those requirements for which it is expected that shipping can be provided in the course of 1945. The position with respect to meat is one of greater difficulty. Large supplies can be obtained in one way only, namely, by a reduction in United States consumption. There is, however, some reason to suppose that the Canadian per capita consumption of meat is higher than that of the United States and, although a reduction in Canada's per capita consumption can only have a very small effect on the general supply position because of Canada's small population, nevertheless, such a reduction would have to be faced if the United States were expected to take drastic action. Any reduction in Canada's consumption of meat would require a political decision at a very high level and the case for such a decision would have to be of overwhelming strength.

8. It is for these reasons that I consider Mr. Law's visit of very great importance and consider that it may well be that the time is ripe in Washington for facing a very important question and making very important decisions. It would be appreciated, therefore, if you will keep me fully informed of the progress of the discussions particularly of the disposition of the United States authorities to take effective action. You will naturally wish to know how far you can go in stating or assuming that Canada is willing to make substantial sacrifices which, to be of importance, cannot be merely financial but must take the form of forgoing actual physical supplies of food and clothing. It is, however, not possible to give a more precise answer to this question than has already been given by implication. A very strong case would have to be made for submission to the Canadian Government. There would have to be indications that the United Kingdom and the United States were showing full awareness of the gravity of the situation and were prepared to meet it. It would also have to be shown that parallel action by Canada was necessary in order to secure the full co-operation of the United States.

I have etc.

Minister, Embassy in United States, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I mentioned in my teletype WA-6986 of December 15th that the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Mr. R. K. Law was arriving in Washington over the week-end to discuss with the United States authorities ways and means of getting relief supplies into Europe. Mr. Law has arrived and I saw him yesterday and again today at luncheon at my home. He is accompanied by Coulson of the Foreign Office, Stopford of the Treasury, and I think one other official. They are very concerned over their inability to convince the United States authorities that it is of vital importance, not only for the immediate conduct of the war, but for the successful organization of the peace, that relief supplies and raw materials be got into Europe with the least possible delay in order to restore the economy of the countries concerned and put people to useful work. They feel that not only is action of this kind essential for military operations, but that it is even more essential from the point of view of post-war political stability. I have no doubt that this feeling is inspired somewhat by their present difficulties in Belgium and in Italy and in Greece. As I have stated before, I think the British thesis on this matter is a pretty sound one but there are very considerable difficulties in the way of carrying it into effect. These difficulties are both political and technical. The technical difficulty is the lack of shipping and congestion at the European ports. I asked Law today whether, if additional shipping could be spared, it would in fact mean that relief supplies could be got in, because they would naturally have to take second priority to military supplies, which already overtax harbour and inland transportation facilities. Law admitted that this difficulty would have been insuperable a few weeks ago, but thought the situation was now such that, if ships could be diverted, the supplies could be got to those who needed them. The Americans, however, are reluctant to divert shipping for this purpose because it might be at the expense of Pacific operations, and this is a matter about which they are very touchy. My own view—and I have expressed it before—is that some diversion of shipping from the Pacific at this time would be very much worth while if it could be used for European relief purposes; that the postponement of the Pacific victory for a month or two is comparatively unimportant when compared with the long-range effect on Europe of disease, discontent, and undernourishment. Nothing could be worse than to have the liberated peoples feel they were better off materially under the Axis. In any case, Law himself thinks that enough shipping could possibly be secured without drawing on the Pacific pool, if the Americans were in fact convinced that shipping should be used for the purpose in question.

The political difficulty arises out of the fact that the Americans now will undoubtedly think that any move to rush in relief supplies for the purpose of alleviating political and economic unrest, will be interpreted in this country as a move to help the British out of their present difficulties in Greece and in Belgium; difficulties which many Americans think are of their own making. I mentioned this to Law, and he admitted the force of this argument.

Law has been here less than two days, but he is already very genuinely distressed at the feeling he has encountered against present British policy in Europe. As you know, he is far from being reactionary. He would have no sympathy whatever with a policy designed to restore reactionary regimes in Europe, but he sincerely believes that, while British tactics may have been wrong and their publicity deplorable, their fundamental policy has been right and that they have been guided only by war considerations. He pointed out, for instance, that the present Greek Prime Minister, who is being built up in the United States as the reactionary tool of British imperialism, is in fact a Socialist and anti-monarchist, whose views on political and economic questions, if expressed in this country in respect of United States institutions, would probably land him in jail.

Law, while not very optimistic, hopes that he will be able to work out some arrangements with the authorities here to get more relief supplies into Europe quickly. He also hopes that it may be possible for him in some way to explain the British position in these disputed matters. He has already seen Harry Hopkins, whom he found rather irritable and unhelpful. Hopkins' irritation, however, was due more to the attitude of the Senate toward his State Department protégés than it was to British policy in Greece or Italy or Belgium. However, his concern with this State Department trouble, I gather, made it difficult to arouse his interest over the relief supplies question. Law also hopes to see the President, though he is not sure whether this can be arranged.

Finally, he gave me a pessimistic account of the operations, or lack of operations, of UNRRA; to which I replied that the U.S. and U.K. Governments had done very little to make those operations more effective. He admitted that this might have been the case, but felt that if UNRRA had been better handled from the beginning, they would have encountered a more sympathetic and co-operative attitude in London and in other places.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

Washington, December 29, 1944

SECRET. Following for Robertson, Begins: Your despatch No. 1819 of December 18th and our earlier teletypes on the subject of Richard Law's discussions in Washington. We have told the appropriate United Kingdom officials informally of the proposal in your despatch, indicating at the same time the conditions which you attached to any action along these lines by the Canadian Government. Although Law's party have been experiencing considerable amount of difficulty in getting discussions started with the proper United States authorities, they have now succeeded in persuading Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Stettinius and the other interested Departments to participate in a general survey of shipping requirements. When the survey of shipping requirements is eventually compared with the estimates of shipping availability, it is the intention of the Law Mission that the necessary scaling down of the shipping requirements figures shall be done methodically through the whole range of requirements for moving civilian supplies. The Law Mission will argue that such civilian requirements should not be regarded necessarily as the marginal element in the requirements estimate but should be considered alongside the military requirements and that necessary cuts should be made in both categories of requirements in accordance with best available judgement as to the relative importance of the particular requirements.

2. As indicated in Mr. Pearson's letter of December 18th, Mr. Law's initial conversation with Hopkins was most unsatisfactory but subsequent conversations, for which the way had been prepared by an excellent statement of the British case in a letter from Law to Hopkins, were considerably more productive as indicated by the willingness of Hopkins and other United States officials to participate in the general survey which Law regards as the essential preliminary to the discussions of basic policy.

3. The subject of the physical availability of supplies necessary to meet these civilian requirements is not expected to arise until a later stage in the discussions. In the meantime, the United Kingdom representatives expressed their gratification at the attitude of the Canadian Government and also expressed the view that this Canadian attitude would be most helpful when the discussions reach the stage at which supply questions arise.

4. In the meantime, we shall endeavour to keep you informed on the discussions.

5. It occurs to us that when the time comes for a more formal expression of this Canadian policy we may find some difficulty in reconciling the Canadian policy expressed in this despatch with the apparently more restrictive views to which we have been instructed to give expression in connection with the proposed limitation on Canadian responsibility for financing so-called military relief. At first glance it would seem that some at least of the moral effect which is expected from the general Canadian proposal in this despatch may be lost if, at the same time, we are arguing in other quarters that our responsibility for financing civilian supplies provided on a combined basis outside UNRRA must be curtailed. We should appreciate guidance as to the relationship between the proposal presented in this despatch and the policy governing Canadian financial responsibility under the general arrangement for providing relief outside UNRRA. You may wish to discuss this subject with Mr. Pearson while he is in Ottawa. Ends.

TELETYPE EX-14

Ottawa, January 2, 1945

SECRET. Following for Pearson from Angus, Begins: Your WA-7227 of December 29th. Mr. Law's discussions in Washington. I am not quite clear about the difficulty raised in paragraph 5 of your teletype. The Canadian authorities have not as yet declined to go beyond military relief in the narrow sense but have not undertaken to do so. The question is an important one and before it is submitted to Council it is desirable that we should be able to give clear answers as to the extent to which it is probable that Canadian advances for military relief will be recovered and the probable magnitude of these advances. It is also necessary that we should have some idea of how extensive the financing of civilian supplies provided on a combined basis outside UNRRA is likely to be. You will remember that in our conversation of this morning you did not think that any such supplies would be included in the plan which provided for a maximum of $1,000,000,000 of supplies for military relief.

The relation of this question to the topics likely to be discussed during Mr. Law's visit appears to be that the discussions should provide background material which should accompany and, indeed, serve to justify any recommendations which may be made to Council for Canadian participation in any combined relief outside UNRRA which goes beyond the military relief to which we are already committed. Ends.

DESPATCH 173

Washington, January 23, 1945

TOP SECRET.

Sir,

I have the honour to report on the discussions which have taken place between the representatives of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, headed by the Right Honourable Richard K. Law, Minister of State, and the United States Government over the period December 15, 1944—January 14, 1945 concerning the urgent necessity of increasing the volume of civilian supplies provided to liberated areas in Europe and, more particularly, of enabling the National Governments and Authorities of these liberated areas to institute immediately their own programmes for importing raw materials and other supplies required to start the restoration of their economies. This Embassy has now been informed in considerable detail concerning the circumstances which gave rise to the discussions, the objectives sought by the U.K. representatives, the nature of the discussions, and the results achieved.

2. The decision to send this U.K. delegation to Washington resulted primarily from three related but conflicting developments:

(a) General Eisenhower and his staff, in the light of their experience after turning over the Zone of the Interior to the French authorities, had encouraged the National Governments of Western Europe to prepare their own import programmes for those materials most urgently needed to put their industrial and agricultural capacity to work within the limits of the port capacity which could be made available to them. The Supreme Commander of the Allied Expeditionary Forces transmitted the appropriate recommendation to the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington as early as November 3, 1944. (The text of this telegram—SCAEF 122—was sent by this Embassy to the Department of External Affairs for information on December 2.)

(b) The U.S. and U.K. Governments at that time, and in the subsequent month went far in discussions with their Western Allies to commit themselves in the same direction.

(c) Ministers of H.M. Government in the U.K. learned with concern, therefore, that the President of the United States had, on November 22, expressed to Prime Minister Churchill the view that the import of supplies into these liberated countries must be limited, until after the German collapse, to those supplies for which the Combined Chiefs of Staff can obtain shipping in the light of shipping required to carry out current and projected operations. The President had added that, in his view, these possible operational shipping demands would permit them, until the collapse of Germany, to provide shipping in operational areas for only those basic essentials necessary to avoid "disease and unrest" which would interfere with operations or with lines of communication and supply.

3. Accordingly in mid-December, after some delay resulting from a change of plans as a consequence of Mr. Macmillan's inability to leave the Mediterranean area, a delegation was dispatched from London headed by the Right Honourable Richard K. Law, and including the Honourable T. H. Brand, from the Ministry of Production; Mr. R. J. Stopford, Deputy Director for Civil Affairs in the War Office; and Mr. D. E. Coulson from the Relief Department of the Foreign Office. Assisted by the U.K. representatives already in Washington (including representatives of the British Ministry of War Transport and British Army Staff), the delegation immediately opened discussions with Mr. Harry Hopkins, representing the President; Mr. Stettinius, Secretary of State; Mr. Acheson and Mr. Clayton, Assistant Secretaries of State; Mr. McCloy, Assistant Secretary for War; Captain Conway of the War Shipping Administration; and representatives of the Navy and other interested Departments.

4. On December 17, Mr. Law outlined to Mr. Hopkins the purposes and objectives of his mission in the following language:

"His Majesty's Government in the U.K. believe it to be essential that the following points of principle should immediately be recognized and agreed by the U.S. and U.K. Governments:

A. Civil Affairs supplies requested by the Theatre Commanders (for distribution by the armies) and accepted by the Combined Civil Affairs Committee of the Combined Chiefs of Staff shall be given the same priority as other military supplies with respect both to procurement and shipping allocations.

B. The National Governments shall be recognized as entitled to prepare and themselves submit their own import programmes to the appropriate civilian supply and shipping authorities.

C. These programmes shall be entitled to favourable consideration for the following reasons:

(a) supplies additional to the civil affairs programme are essential for the maintenance of civilian economies and for the gradual restarting of industry without which unemployment and disorder are unavoidable;

(b) unless such supplies are forthcoming no National Government will be able to maintain its authority.

(c) unrest and instability in the countries concerned would have far-reaching and incalculable effects on the social fabric and political security of Europe, and might well gravely hamper military operations.

(d) the National Governments putting forward these programmes are fighting allies, who have placed at our disposal troops, ships, supplies and now industrial facilities and they are entitled to expect a proper share of the Allied pool of resources.

D. That the established requirements put forward by the National Governments are fully eligible for inclusion in any study of the world supply and shipping picture, and that they shall not be regarded as merely the marginal element in the total world position.

If the U.S. Government agree with these principles, it would appear to be immediately desirable that,

(a) These principles should be communicated to all the U.S. and U.K. Departments concerned;

(b) That steps should immediately be taken to ensure that they shall govern the survey about to be undertaken by direction of the Combined Chiefs of Staff;

(c) Instructions should be given that this survey be completed by January 1st;

(d) The United States and United Kingdom Governments should together notify the Allied Governments of the acceptance of these principles; and

(e) Arrangements be made, in advance of the completion of the survey referred to above, and of the allocation of tonnage thereunder for the next six months, to put at the disposal of the French and Belgian Governments some amount of tonnage for each of the months of January and February so that they may lift some portion of the supplies most urgently needed by them over and above the Civil Affairs programme."

5. On December 29th the Combined Chiefs of Staff directed that an overall review of combined cargo shipping requirements and resources for the period January 1, 1945—June 30, 1945 be undertaken. The directive stated that the war in Europe should be assumed to continue throughout this period. The survey of requirements was to cover: requirements for military operations; governmental civilian programmes (including programmes for civil economy and for maintaining the war-making capacities of the United Nations, programmes for neutral countries, such desired national civil import programmes as are submitted directly by the National Governments concerned for areas liberated or likely to be liberated within the period involved, and U.N.R.R.A.'s programme for Italy); and estimated programmes of civil affairs requirements in all theatres which have a period of military responsibility for civil relief operations (including direct civil affairs requirements and any further portions of civil import programmes submitted by the Theatre Commander). The Combined Military Transportation Committee of the Combined Chiefs of Staff, "in conjunction with" the Combined Shipping Adjustment Board, was instructed to "submit recommendations (upon completion of the survey) as to possible adjustments in the use of shipping in order to minimize the divergence between stated requirements and available resources." The report was to be submitted to the Combined Chiefs of Staff as soon after January 1 as practicable.

6. Concurrently with this investigation of the shipping position discussions continued between the U.K. delegation and the representatives of the U.S. Government concerning the basic policy which should be established for acting upon the findings of the shipping survey. In these discussions the position of France was generally regarded as illustrative of the problems for which a combined policy was required. The U.K. side introduced into the discussion at an early stage a report which had been received on December 30 from the U.K. Ambassador in Paris reporting an interview with M. Alphanth the French Director General of Economic Affairs. In this interview M. Alphanth expressed the view that France was heading rapidly towards a major crisis. He reported that General de Gaulle and the Minister for Foreign Affairs considered the provision of shipping for imports and the improvement of inland transport facilities as the most urgent of all matters now before the Provisional Government. It was General de Gaulle's opinion not only that the war was not yet near its end but also that there would be a long period of guerrilla warfare in Germany even after a substantial proportion of that country had been occupied. M. Alphanth reported that the French Government therefore regarded the early restoration of a reasonable ration standard and resumption of a minimum of industrial production in France as of vital military importance to the Allies. He added that the Minister of Foreign Affairs was preparing communications to the U.S. and U.K. Ambassadors on these questions. The U.K. Ambassador supplemented his report on this interview with remarks (based on reports received recently, and on investigations conducted early in November by the U.K. economic representatives in France) expressing his confidence that the position had been accurately described by M. Alphanth. The U.K. Ambassador concluded that the lack of raw materials with the consequent increase in unemployment at the moment when rations and heating are sorely deficient is bound to create discontent and render the task of the Provisional Government more difficult during the period requiring maximum war effort. In the discussion of this message Mr. McCloy and Mr. Law indicated that they had separately conferred with M. Monnet in Washington recently and that they had been given to understand that a firm programme for January, February and March was required. M. Monnet had indicated that if the French authorities could be told what they could confidently expect for at least one quarter of the year they could make some plans, but short of that they could not plan at all. Although the position of the other liberated areas differed from that of France in some important respects, and although their case had not been presented as forcefully as the French, there was every reason to expect that the conditions developing in their countries would reinforce policy decisions taken on the basis of the position in France.

7. The U.S. War Department argued throughout that the liberated areas must be regarded for shipping purposes as advance military bases and not as colleagues or partners. The representative of the U.K. War Office and other members of the U.K. delegation on the other hand indicated that the War Office had accepted the policy of National civilian import programmes because the prolongation of the war in Europe had made the scope of the military supply responsibility too narrow. Raw material needs now had to be covered as well as the primary needs of food, clothing, fuel, petroleum, soap and medical supplies. In the opinion of the U.K. War Office the problem had now grown to a point at which it passed beyond what should be regarded as a strictly military responsibility. It had become a question for the Governments concerned, including those of the liberated countries. It was pointed out that this view seemed to be shared by the Theatre Commander (see reference in paragraph 2a above to the message from SCAEF). In brief the view of the U.S. War Department (which prevailed, at least for the time being, on the U.S. side) was that the provision of supplies to France must be limited to:

- (a) civil affairs supplies necessary to prevent "disease and unrest",
- (b) raw materials for processing in France into finished war materials for use by the U.S. Army (i.e. supplies for the repair and salvage of army stores, vehicles, etc., and raw materials such as rubber, cotton, wool, and cement for use in French factories producing military materials),
- (c) "spot" or "ad hoc" allocations of supplies and shipping to fill requests of the French Provisional Government on occasions when the military position might warrant, but with no firm advance guarantees to the French on which they could base a production programme of their own.

8. The U.K. objections to these limitations were:

- (a) the quantities permitted by this arrangement would not be appreciable, in fact, and would certainly not permit of any substantial restitution of French industry and employment.
- (b) the quantities would be far less than the 1,000,000 tons of materials which the Germans had provided to French industry each month.
- (c) the flow of such supplies, in addition to being small in volume, would be uncertain and intermittent with the result that production and employment, at even a low level, could not be continuous, and the orderly development of French political institutions might well be seriously affected.
- (d) the realization by the French that their country was regarded merely as an advance base, and that they were not considered as colleagues or partners, would have most unfortunate results on French relations with the U.S. and U.K.

9. From a review of the detailed discussion it is apparent on the U.S. side that the views of the Service Departments clearly dominated. Although there were numerous indications that Mr. Hopkins, and the representatives of the Department of State and the War Shipping Administration were sympathetic with the views of the U.K. Delegation, Mr. Hopkins made it quite clear that in his opinion the view of the War and Navy Departments would govern any immediate decisions which might be taken. A number of reasons have been suggested to explain the dominant position occupied by the Service Departments on the U.S. side in these discussions:

- (a) The coincidence of these discussions with the landings on Luzon and with the new German threat to our military position in Northwestern Europe combined to emphasize the eminence of military requirements in U.S. policy.
- (b) At the first meeting Mr. Hopkins remarked that there had been so far only one general discussion of the subject under consideration at which all the interested U.S. Departments were represented. As a consequence no generally accepted U.S. policy had been formulated and the Service Departments found themselves in a favourable position in relation to the other Departments of the Government. The effect of this lack of policy was particularly apparent in the discussion concerning the status of France. On that point the representative of the War Department is reported to have said that unless the White House were to say that France was a full partner the War Department would not now agree to an allocation of ships to the French which might later prevent the mounting of an operation because ships were not available. He added that if, however, the White House were to say that France was a full partner and was to receive an allocation of ships, the soldiers would obey (as they had done in the case of the U.K. and the U.S.S.R.).

(c) One participant in the discussions expressed the opinion that the pre-eminent position occupied by the Service Departments on the U.S. side (in contrast to the role of the War Office on the U.K. side) was not merely a transitory feature, but resulted from the mistaken view which he had found prevalent in the U.S. Administration for some time to the effect that wars are waged by the Service Departments and not by the Government as a whole; implying a persistent refusal to regard war as "the continuation of policies by other means." In any case it was explicitly stated in the discussion that the U.S. Service Departments held the view that "he who manages the ships, manages the war," and that control over shipping could not be relinquished by these Departments. Mr. Hopkins was also reported to have expressed the opinion in the closing stages of the discussion, that if there was the slightest conflict between the military demands and those of liberated areas for Civil Import Programmes, the civilian shipping agencies would soon discover which Department had the real control.

10. In these circumstances it was apparent that any further progress towards the achievement of the objectives sought by the U.K. delegation could be achieved only by stages and over a longer period of time than had originally been envisaged.

11. The first stage would be the completion of an interim arrangement which would represent the best compromise possible at this time. On January 14 a memorandum of Agreement was concluded between the U.S. and U.K. Governments embodying this arrangement.<sup>218</sup> A copy of the main sections of this memorandum† is attached. It is to be observed that the agreement was completed with the clear understanding that the "allocation" of ships specified therein was for the three months period only, (particularly as the shipping authorities anticipate serious reductions in the availability of shipping for even their present programmes after the first of April), and that it was subject to adjustment on grounds of military necessity with Mr. Hopkins (clearly against his will) acting as arbiter if the Service Departments wished to appeal for such an adjustment. It was only on the basis of this compromise formula, proposed by Mr. Acheson, that the U.S. Service Departments were induced to make any concessions. The resulting agreement was described by Mr. Hopkins as a "mild document." The extent to which this agreement falls short of the objectives sought by the U.K. delegation is apparent from a comparison of the agreement with the statement of objectives in paragraph 5 above.

12. The next important stage will be reached at the forthcoming Staff Conference between Prime Minister Churchill and President Roosevelt.<sup>219</sup> Before Mr. Law's arrival the U.S. Government had not proposed to include representatives of the War Shipping Administration in the U.S. party. At the conclusion of the discussions Mr. Hopkins urged the State Department representatives to see that appropriate advisers attended the Conference to ensure that the claims of the liberated countries of Europe had a fair hearing, and he expressed his conviction that Admiral Land and Captain Conway of the War Shipping Administration should attend. Mr. Hopkins remarked that it was not possible to discuss operational shipping plans if the claims of liberated countries were left out. Mr. Law reported that Lord Leathers of the U.K. Ministry of War Transport would attend the Conference. Mr. Hopkins continued his discussion of the Conference agenda by stating that he would try to arrange to have the general question of U.S. and U.K. policy towards liberated countries discussed. He noted that it would probably be necessary to leave the Russians out of this particular discussion. He concluded by saying that only when the general question had been discussed and the lines of policy established would he wish to see the shipping aspect of the problem discussed.

13. In the interval between the completion of the interim arrangement and the date of the Staff Conference discussion is continuing in Washington concerning the Theatre Commander's recommendation referred to in paragraph 2a above, and the U.K. Missions in Washington are circulating among the U.S. Departments a lengthy paper in an attempt to influence the thinking of the U.S. Departments on this subject (three copies of this paper are being sent to you with our despatch no. 172).†

14. It might be noted that the question of the availability of supplies did not occupy a prominent place in the discussions which have taken place here during the past month. Insofar as supply questions arose they were overshadowed by shipping considerations. The question of making available from U.K. stockpiles larger quantities of food for consumption in the liberated areas was raised but only in connection with the possible economies in shipping which might result therefrom. In the discussion of this question Mr. Law indicated to Mr. Hopkins that, in no small measure, any decision concerning U.K. stocks, particularly food stocks, would be governed by the guarantee of availability of further supplies from the U.S. Mr. Law reported that it had now been agreed that a combined survey of the food stockpiles should be made, and he expressed the hope that this survey would result in agreement on minimum stock levels with the resultant agreement on the import programme necessary to sustain them. If this review showed an excess of U.K. stocks over the minimum essential that excess could of course be made available for other purposes, or, to avoid uneconomic "double handling" of supplies, the U.K. import programme could be correspondingly reduced. Mr. Law assumed that the civilian programmes of the U.S. and other countries which called for the use of shipping would be reviewed at the same time.

The Malta Conference, January 30 to February 2.

15. As a result of the neglect of supply questions (or their deferment to a later stage when the shipping questions have been more satisfactorily resolved) there was no occasion in these preliminary discussions to present formally the proposal put forward by the Government of Canada in despatch No. 1819 of December 18, 1944.

16. Although the outcome of the discussions on this subject at the Staff Conference cannot be anticipated, it is apparent that the result will be of great significance to a country such as Canada which is already participating in the provision of Civil Affairs supplies and which must be regarded as an important potential supplier of the import requirements of the liberated countries. The completion of the interim arrangement and the imminence of more comprehensive policy decisions by the U.S. and U.K. would seem to emphasize the desirability of determining at an early date Canada's policy concerning the national civil import programmes (for raw materials and equipment, as well as foodstuffs) of the liberated countries, and of completing the necessary supply and financial arrangements to implement these policy decisions.

Ottawa, January 29, 1945

TOP SECRET.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 173 of January 23rd, concerning the discussions which have taken place between the representatives of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom and the United States Government on the subject of the necessity of increasing the volume of civilian supplies provided to liberated areas in Europe. I am very glad to have this admirably clear account of the lines which the discussion has followed. It is disappointing, though not altogether surprising, that the United States War Department should take a narrowly military view of the situation and should not be as sensitive as the Government of the United Kingdom to the necessity of providing for the welfare of the civilian population in the liberated countries in order to forestall disturbances which may prejudice military operations and even imperil the objectives for which we are fighting. It is fully understood that the question of availability of supplies could not occupy a prominent place in the discussion until the question of shipping priorities had been settled. It will be at the later stages of the discussion when the provision of food, clothing and raw materials is under consideration that Canadian interests will be most affected. For the present you are quite right in thinking that there was no occasion to present formally the contents of my despatch No. 1819 of December 18th.

Although the discussions which have taken place may not have had any great immediate effect, it is probable that they will influence policy in the long run as the vital problems of the liberated areas will have been brought very forcibly to the attention of the Government departments in the United States.

As a wide circulation was given to my despatch No. 1819 of December 18th, I am giving a correspondingly wide circulation to your despatch under reference and, in addition, am sending copies of both despatches to the Canadian Embassies in Paris and Brussels.

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

Ottawa, March 22, 1945

As a proposal for meat rationing will come before Council on Friday, March 23rd, it may be convenient to have the following memorandum on the international implications of the proposals.

1. It appears from the memorandum submitted by the Food Requirements Committee† that unless drastic action is taken by the supplying countries little or no imported meat would be available for relief purposes in the liberated countries in Europe.

2. The information at the disposal of the Department of External Affairs indicates that in many of these countries food shortages are extremely serious and that the discontent aroused, in part, by these shortages is likely to have the most serious political consequences. Some writers go so far as to suggest that the prolongation of resistance in Germany is inspired by the hope of creating conditions of utter confusion throughout the whole of Europe which will deny to the victors the objectives for which they have made so many sacrifices.

3. While it is true that the additional amount of meat which may be made available for export by the restrictions on consumption suggested by the Food Requirements Committee will not of itself be a big factor in relieving distress in Europe, it would nevertheless be a serious matter if world public opinion looked on Canada as the only one of the active belligerents which had not seriously curtailed its civilian consumption of meat in order to come to the help of the distressed nations.

4. Repeated advice has been received from the Canadian Embassy in Washington of the criticism of Canada appearing in the United States because of the absence of meat rationing in this country. It is true that measures have been taken to increase the export of certain meat products to the United Kingdom with the effect of reducing our consumption here but the importance of these measures is not generally appreciated either in the United States or elsewhere and it is not possible for our representatives to do much to emphasize the effect of these measures as long as the plain fact remains that Canadians are free to buy as much meat as they can find in the stores while Americans are limited in their purchases by an irksome system of point rationing as well as by some shortages in distribution.

5. It is, therefore, inevitable that Canada will be criticized, in part fairly and in part unfairly, in the United States as long as serious shortages of meat exist in liberated countries while rationing prevails in the United States but does not prevail in Canada.

6. The figures of civilian per capita consumption, whether taken from the year 1944 or from the current year or cited by comparison with those for an average pre-war year indicate that both absolutely and relatively to pre-war, Canadians are consuming more meat per head than Americans. These figures will continue to be quoted as long as there is no rationing, but if rationing is instituted, publicity will turn to the quotas allowed under the respective rationing plans.

7. It follows that even if rationing were to be ineffective in reducing actual consumption, the mere fact of its institution would help to avoid a serious alienation of United States public opinion. There seems, however, to be little doubt that the type of rationing proposed by the Food Requirements Committee would result in a substantial reduction of meat consumption by civilians in Canada.

8. The discussions which have taken place concerning meat rationing, whether between officials of the Combined Food Board or in the public press of the various countries, have led to serious misunderstanding. The belief is widespread in the United States that the United Kingdom has amassed large stocks of food which ought to be consumed before any further sacrifice is imposed on American civilians. The United Kingdom representatives contend that United States officials have been supplied with complete information concerning the magnitude of these stocks, that in any case very substantial reductions in these stocks will take place during the calendar year 1945, and that some reserves are justified in the common interest either to meet the exigencies of war or to furnish emergency supplies to menaced populations on the continent of Europe.

As long as the figures are not publicly known however, these arguments, sound as they may be, can have little influence on public opinion.

9. In this, as in other matters, a dispute which is initially one between the United States and the United Kingdom is apt to involve Canada. The United States has announced a cut of 87½% in shipments of meat to the United Kingdom in the forthcoming quarter in order to compel the United Kingdom to consume its stocks. The United Kingdom contention is that this action will result at no very distant date in the reduction of the meat ration in the United Kingdom which, both absolutely and relatively to pre-war standards, is lower than that of the United States.

10. The United Kingdom, therefore, is apt to turn to Canada in the hope that we may make good, in part, the shortage of supplies from the United States. The United States press, on the other hand, is apt to point with scorn to Canadians as unwilling to curtail their consumption of meat in order to assist the United Kingdom. An even more embarrassing line of criticism already apparent in the Hearst-McCormick press, consists in praising the Government of Canada for turning a deaf ear to outside plans which might call for sacrifices from its own citizens and to criticize the Government of the United States for being too soft-hearted.

11. It may be well be that the United States authorities, in order to make further restrictions acceptable politically, have coupled them with a reference to military needs and with a tough demeanor towards the United Kingdom. While this approach spares Canada from immediate denunciation, our best course seems to be to use this respite to render ourselves immune to legitimate criticism.

12. The conclusion suggested is that it is important that Canada should take energetic steps to curtail the civilian consumption of meat both in order to contribute to the avoidance of political unrest in liberated Europe and in order to maintain abroad the high reputation which Canada, in virtue of her war effort, has achieved.

Ottawa, March 23, 1945

A meeting of Cabinet was held in the Privy Council Chamber on Friday, March 23rd, 1945, at 12 o'clock noon.

The Minister of Mines and Resources
(Mr. Crerar) in the Chair.

MEAT SHORTAGE; RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE FOOD REQUIREMENTS COMMITTEE

1. THE SECRETARY submitted a memorandum from the Food Requirements Committee concerning the world-wide shortage of meat, and suggested action by Canada.

After describing the present critical position, involving an excess of requirements over supply of more than 4½ billion pounds, the memorandum recommended that certain steps be taken, including the rationing of meat in the event of the government deciding to reduce civilian consumption in Canada.

The Prime Minister had been over the memorandum from the Committee and had communicated his concurrence in the action recommended by the Committee.

(Food Requirements Committee memorandum to the Cabinet, March 22nd, 1945;† Chairman's letter to the Secretary, March 22nd, 1945.)†

2. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES read to the meeting a memorandum to the Prime Minister from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs upon the international implications of Canada's policy with respect to meat.

3. THE CABINET, after considerable discussion, agreed to defer further consideration of the problem until an early meeting the following week, it being understood that meantime;

(a) the Wartime Prices and Trade Board would prepare a report upon the practical problems involved in acceptance of the Committee's recommendations; and,

(b) the Food Requirements Committee would examine and report upon the effectiveness of the action proposed in increasing the supply of meat to the United Kingdom and European countries, with particular reference to the adequacy of inland transport, storage facilities and ocean shipping.

Ottawa, March 27, 1945

A meeting of Cabinet was held in the Privy Council Chamber on Tuesday, March 27th, 1945, at 11.30 a.m.

The Minister of Mines and Resources
(Mr. Crerar), in the Chair.

MEAT SHORTAGE; RATIONING

1. THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE submitted comparative figures for civilian and military consumption of meat in various countries, including those for the United States and Canada.† It was to be noted that without rationing the Canadian figure was substantially below the American.

Experience in this country had already shown that rationing and the imposition of restrictions upon slaughtering failed to produce additional supplies for export and resulted in the over-burdening of facilities. Labour shortage in the packing plants was an important deterrent.

In the circumstances, the recommendations of the Food Requirements Committee should not be accepted.

2. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES spoke of the serious prospect of severe shortages in European countries which threatened starvation and civil disturbances in the not far distant future. The question for decision was whether or not the Committee's proposals would enable Canada to provide additional meat where it was needed.

3. MR. CRERAR submitted and read a supplementary report of the Food Requirements Committee upon the points referred to them by the Cabinet at the last meeting.

The report expressed the view that the degree of rationing proposed would make meat available for export at a rate of approximately 200 million pounds a year more than could be effected if the present controls were left unchanged.

(Letter, Chairman Food Requirements Committee to the Secretary and enclosed memorandum to the Cabinet, March 24, 1945.)†

4. MR. CRERAR also read a statement made in the House of Commons by the Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), on February 29th, 1944, stating that meat rationing was being suspended until the congestion in both storage and transportation was cleared up.

5. MR. GARDINER spoke of the misrepresentation and misunderstanding of the Canadian position in the United States and suggested that it was important that the facts be made public concerning Canadian consumption levels.

6. THE CABINET, after further considerable discussion, agreed to defer decision upon the Food Requirements Committee's report until discussions with the United Kingdom Ministers of Food and Production had been held at the beginning of the following week; the Minister of Agriculture, meantime, to concert with the Department of External Affairs concerning the issue of a statement explanatory of the Canadian meat consumption situation.

The United States Ambassador telephoned me this afternoon to invite the Canadian Government to be represented at discussions of the world supply position which will begin on the technical level in Washington on Tuesday, April 3. Mr. Atherton expected to have further details of the arrangements for the meeting on Monday morning. I assume that this invitation is preparatory to an invitation to Canada to be represented in the top level ministerial consideration of the same problem which is to begin when Messrs. Llewellyn and Lyttelton return to Washington on Wednesday.

WORLD FOOD SITUATION; WASHINGTON CONVERSATIONS

A meeting was held, at 12.00 o'clock noon, on April 2nd, 1945, in Room 123, East Block, between representatives of the U.K. and Canadian governments, as follows:

Canada

The Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe), in the Chair,
The Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley),
The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner),
The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon),
The Minister of Justice (Mr. St. Laurent),
The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Robertson),
The Deputy Minister of Agriculture (Dr. Barton),
The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Heeney).

United Kingdom

The Minister of Production (Mr. Lyttelton),
The Minister of Food (Mr. Llewellyn),
The High Commissioner (Mr. MacDonald),
The Acting Head, British Food Mission in Ottawa (Mr. Croome).

1. MR. LYTTTELTON described the reasons underlying the present U.K. Mission to the United States and the course of their preliminary exploration of the situation in Washington, in preparation for later discussions on the Ministerial level.

A first question was whether the Canadian government would be a party to these discussions. This was most important and it was very much hoped that Canadian Ministers would be able to participate. The meetings would take place after the experts had settled a statistical basis from which to proceed.

2. MR. HOWE suggested that the matter of Canadian representation at the Washington talks would be taken up later in the Cabinet.

3. MR. LYTTELTON, outlining the nature and magnitude of the problem, spoke of the imminent danger of a condition of near starvation in Western Europe, in contrast with a relatively tolerable situation in areas liberated by Soviet forces. If reasonable subsistence and employment could not be secured for the peoples of France, Holland and Belgium, no stable governments could survive, and the morale of the populations would be destroyed. The restoration of reasonable levels of consumption had therefore become a major political objective of U.K. government policy. In their view, it was absolutely necessary to demonstrate to the people of the liberated countries that the Western Allies were doing everything possible for their assistance.

The United States, faced with an internal problem of some difficulty, had criticized the size of stockpiles maintained in Britain. The heat had been taken out of this criticism to some extent by the recent statement of the facts by Mr. Churchill.<sup>220</sup> U.S. opinion had now turned to making unfair and unfavorable comparisons with Canadian conditions. It was, therefore, important that anything that the Canadian government were inclined to do should be done before the Washington talks began. Any lead from Canada would have an important effect in the United States and in Europe.

4. MR. LYTTELTON said that there were certain sources from which additional foodstuffs might be secured:

(a) Soviet requests for including foods in the forthcoming 5th Protocol<sup>221</sup> should not be regarded as so imperative as heretofore. Russian Armies had now overrun large surplus agricultural areas and the U.S.S.R. should no longer be able to obtain supplies from the Western Allies without a demonstrated need. Further, it might be suggested that responsibility for supplying Poland and Czechoslovakia might well be assumed by the Soviet Union.

(b) The scales of rations for the Armed Forces should be scrutinized very carefully, including those for prisoners of war and displaced persons. There was some ground for thinking that Army stocks were higher than need be in present circumstances. No longer could we afford the luxurious levels which had previously obtained. Whenever possible, the scale of the military effort should be cut back as the need decreased.

5. MR. LYTTTELTON repeated the opinion that any action by the Canadian government, whether it were rationing or otherwise, would be doubly effective psychologically if taken before the Washington meeting, before the "crunch" came. It would be definitely helpful with U.S. authorities—one more case of giving twice by giving quickly.

6. MR. LLEWELLIN said that one of the most serious aspects of the situation was the threatened breakdown of the mechanism of the Combined Food Board. In the face of an overall shortage amounting to perhaps 1½ million tons of meat, of shortages in oils and fats and in sugar, the Combined Food Board had failed to cope with the problem.

There was a wide gap between the U.S. Army field ration (meat), which approximated that of the United Kingdom-Canada, and the amounts delivered to the Army, which ran at the rate of from 420 to 450 pounds per head per annum. It was hoped to find out what was happening to this large spread.

Prisoners of war scales, under existing interpretations of the Geneva Convention, were ridiculously high in contrast to those of civil populations of liberated countries and of the United Kingdom herself.

As to the United Kingdom, without help, they would face a cut in the meat ration in severe circumstances, which would widen even farther the disparity with other countries.

No meat allocations at all had been made by the Combined Food Board to France, Holland or Belgium. The French wanted to make their own contracts with the Argentine by exception to the general agreement under which the U.K. government were the sole meat contractors with that country. This, however, would have unfortunate effects upon price and control of distribution.

7. MR. LLEWELLIN spoke briefly of the position with respect to other foodstuffs:

Wheat was the only commodity in sufficient overall supply. The United Kingdom had diverted shipments of wheat and flour to Europe; her own minimum requirements were eight weeks' wheat and four weeks' flour.

The sugar position was complicated by Cuba's refusal to contract on a two-year basis.

Oils and fats were another great difficulty. U.K. stocks were running down sharply. An attempt was being made to obtain increased supplies of flax seed from the Argentine in return for coal. The United States were using substantially increased quantities of fats for soap; a reduction here would help.

Canned fish and all dairy products were also short.

8. MR. LLEWELLIN said that the principal immediate objective was to achieve genuine combined planning with the United States, to make reasonable and prompt allocations designed to meet best existing deficiencies. The United Kingdom had released from their stocks large quantities for the European countries. There was no more to be had from these sources.

As to Canada, it was not for them to suggest policies, but he hoped that the Canadian government would agree to be represented at Washington, so that Canadian Ministers would sit down with them and U.S. representatives to look at the general situation and see what could be done. There would be no decision taken until all relevant facts had been stated and agreed, and until there had been opportunity for full consideration by the governments concerned.

There was no doubt that, at the moment, the United States were using the Canadian position as an excuse for their own reluctance to do more.

9. MR. GARDINER suggested that it might be better for Canada to await the results of the meeting between officials, and the initiation of discussions on the Ministerial level, before deciding what action, if any, should be taken.

The Canadian government had done everything possible to get the greatest quantities of the required meat products to the United Kingdom in the face of a number of difficulties.

Increased meat production in Canada could only come at the expense of wheat, and, to this end, every effort had been made to switch acreage from wheat. Last year, a reduction of some 8 to 10 million acres had been achieved, but this had now slipped back to about 4 million acres. The large wheat carry-over was an embarrassing factor.

Increased meat shipments to Europe would not be obtained merely by introducing rationing or requisitioning supplies from the packing plants. When rationing had been in effect last year and when Canadian production had been at its height, surplus supplies had backed up and large quantities could not be shipped. Farmers had concluded against sending their meat to the plants. The principal difficulties were those of distribution and plant capacity.

It might be possible, without imposing rationing and slaughtering restrictions, to increase Canadian shipments by perhaps 100 million pounds, but it was doubtful whether the actual methods could be decided upon at this time.

10. MR. GARDINER, referring to U.S. criticisms of the Canadian situation, observed that the facts had been distorted in the U.S. press. Canadian methods and Canadian conditions were quite different to those obtaining in the United States. U.S. per capita meat consumption had been, in fact, higher than the Canadian level. Their difficulties resulted from maldistribution and disregard for rationing regulations (black markets). It would not do for Canada to change her own policies merely to meet criticisms on the part of the United States.

11. DR. BARTON suggested that the overall statistical position was unlikely to be altered substantially as a result of the official discussions now proceeding in Washington.

12. MR. LLEWELLIN felt that a settled factual basis would do much to clarify the position in preparation for talks on the Ministerial level.

13. THE MEETING then adjourned, at 1.30 p.m., it being understood that the question of Canadian representation at the Washington talks would be considered by the Cabinet, that Mr. Llewellyn would have an opportunity of discussing individual food contracts with Mr. Gardiner and his officials, and that another meeting would be held the following morning.

4. THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE, referring to discussions at recent meetings, reported that, with Mr. Ilsley and Mr. Howe, he had conferred with the Chairman of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. Mr. Gordon had made it clear that the Board were not recommending the imposition of rationing, but if the government decided to put it into effect, then the Board were of the opinion that slaughtering restrictions were essential; they were not prepared to undertake coupon rationing without control of slaughtering.

5. MR. GARDINER said that, in the circumstances, he did not recommend rationing which would, in his opinion, produce nothing additional for export, but a continuance of the present system with the prospect of getting 60 to 70 million pounds additional meat for the United Kingdom, without a dislocation of domestic supply.

6. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY mentioned the possibility of a preparatory appeal to the public on a voluntary basis, with the object of reducing consumption. Rationing might be introduced later on, if voluntary methods failed in their objective.

7. MR. GARDINER, in answer to enquiries, spoke of the impossibility, under existing circumstances, of allowing lower gradings for hogs, and of the influence upon meat production of the figures stated in contracts with the U.K. government.

8. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE said that it was necessary to decide what attitude should be taken by the Canadian representatives at the Washington discussions; it was also necessary to decide what statement of policy the government should make at home.

9. THE CABINET, after further considerable discussion, agreed that, in representing the government at Washington, the Minister of Agriculture should take the line that Canada would do her just part in helping to meet the food shortage in Europe, that an increase of meat shipments from Canada would be obtained by methods other than rationing, in respect of which no commitment would be made; Canada would undertake a voluntary campaign, including the naming of a meatless day and, if these expedients failed, the government would be prepared to consider the rationing of meat.

CONVERSATIONS IN WASHINGTON CONCERNING FOOD

At the official level conversations concerning foodstuffs were very protracted, largely because of the difficulty of the various United States agencies in reaching agreement among themselves. The principal foodstuffs in short supply were considered one by one and when we left substantial agreement had been reached in the case of sugar and meat, while it was not anticipated that the other commodities would present much difficulty at the ministerial level.

Sugar was taken first because it was thought that it was a simple matter which might set a pattern for other negotiations. In spite of its simplicity, it remained a matter of contention at the official level throughout ten days of preliminary discussion and occasioned a fairly sharp controversy at the ministerial level. The difficulties were of three kinds.

The first concerned the figures to be used for anticipated supplies and for anticipated demands. Generally speaking, the British were much more conservative than the Americans and contended that there should be a reserve for contingencies when the time came for apportioning the prospective supplies of sugar.

The second difficulty concerned stocks. The United States contention was that the year-end stocks in the United Kingdom, estimated at 659,000 tons for the end of 1945, were higher than pre-war and too high for present conditions. A reduction of these stocks would yield  $\frac{1}{10}$  of 1 pound per annum for the consumers in the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada. The United States, however, advanced the ingenious suggestion that they should be allowed corresponding stocks with liberty to consume part of them if they chose to do so. This device would have greatly increased consumption in the United States at the expense of consumers in the United Kingdom and Canada and could have been renewed year after year.

The third difficulty concerned apportionment. It was agreed to dispose of the thorny problem of military supplies by treating one military consumer as equivalent to two civilian consumers. The United States representatives steadily raised the number of their military consumers until a total of 16,000,000 was reached. This should represent a weighted average of the numbers to be fed for a complete year. It was agreed that the sugar should be equally shared on a per capita basis among the three countries but the United States contended that the agreement should speak as from the end of the first quarter, during which United States consumption had been high, rather than as from the commencement of the year. This contention ran directly counter to an agreement made at the Combined Food Board Sugar Committee in November, 1944, but the United States representative in the final meeting, speaking with the authority of Mr. Crowley,<sup>224</sup> made it clear that if they were expected to adhere to this agreement they would be very cautious in committing themselves as regards meat.

The supplies of meat had to be considered as if canned meat and carcass meat were distinct commodities. The greatest difficulty arose out of the inability of the United States to furnish any information that would enable a critical judgment to be formed of their military demands. If the military demands of the United States and of the United Kingdom are treated as absolute, there would be no canned meat available for civilians in the liberated areas unless its consumption in the United States could be eliminated and its production in the United States substantially increased. At the official level it was suggested that both these steps should be taken in return for elimination of civilian consumption in Canada and the United Kingdom and on the understanding that production would be increased in Canada by 50,000,000 pounds (the equivalent of 90,000,000 pounds of carcass meat). In the final discussion, however, Mr. Marvin Jones,<sup>225</sup> who apparently had not been kept in touch with the discussions at the official level, insisted that 220,000,000 pounds of canned meat was the maximum additional quantity which could be produced and insisted that canned meat could not be withdrawn from civilian supply without inflicting unreasonable hardship on the inhabitants of some American cities, whose consumption, he said, had fallen as low as 67 pounds per annum. In these circumstances all that could be done was to ask the Armies to decide what quantity of canned meat, if any, they could spare for the civilians in the liberated areas in view of the fact that total supplies are 100,000,000 pounds less than the initial stated requirements of the Armies and in view of the fact that they show a disposition to exceed their original estimates. Mr. Lyttelton contended that the Armies must have a reserve against submarine risks which could be distributed when the submarine danger ceases and it was decided that the Armies should be asked for information on this point.

Of the Foreign Economic Administration.

The problem of carcass meat was faced on the optimistic assumption that the Armies would either make no reduction in their requirements of canned meat or that, if they did, they would not ask for additional supplies of carcass meat to replace the canned meat which they agreed to forgo. Taking this as a point of departure, the immediate problem was how to maintain the United Kingdom basic meat ration of 106 pounds per head per annum after the points rationing had been sacrificed by turning over all canned meat to the Armies. The United States began by pointing to their low consumption figures and by professing to be unable to supply any carcass meat to the United Kingdom this year in addition to what has been allocated for the first two quarters. Mr. Gardiner stated that Canada would like to go as low as the United States in per capita consumption figures, whatever reduction this might mean, but that it was futile to reduce consumption unless at the same time more meat could be made available for export. He contended that measures designed solely to reduce consumption might actually reduce the quantities of meat available for export. He ended by offering to do his best to supply 50,000,000 pounds of meat in addition to the canned meat referred to above, making Canada's contribution in carcass meat 140,000,000 pounds over a nine-month period, which is the equivalent of furnishing additional meat at the rate of 200,000,000 pounds per annum.

The United States representatives, after consultation, agreed to make available to the United Kingdom in the fourth quarter, if the surplus which they anticipated were realized, 268,000,000 pounds of carcass meat, which would include 111,000,000 which they are said to owe to the United Kingdom by way of replacement of supplies which the United States Armed Forces in the Pacific have received from Australia and New Zealand. These offers left the United Kingdom with a prospective deficit of 118,000,000 pounds of meat and it was suggested that an endeavour should be made to obtain this additional quantity from the Argentine. On this understanding the United Kingdom Ministers "agreed to be good boys" about sugar, meaning thereby that they would agree to equal per capita sugar allocation with the United States for the remaining nine months of the year.

War Food Administrator of United States.

This method of allocating sugar presses rather heavily on Canada where the consumption in the first quarter of the year is seasonally low. It was, therefore, agreed that an additional allocation of sugar of from 6,000 to 9,000 tons should be made to Canada. It should perhaps be noted that, while the per capita allocations of all three countries are equal, the amount available per capita for civilians in the United States will presumably be lower than the amount available for civilians in the United Kingdom because of the higher military consumption of the United States Army.

We did not remain for the discussions on fats and oils, in which it seems probable that each of the three countries would be asked to make a sacrifice of some 15% of its requirements.

Canada practically agreed to forgo the civilian consumption of rice in order to make this food available for countries in which it is the basic foodstuff. Rice presents peculiar difficulties because it may prove to be a limiting factor on the time-table of military operations in the Pacific and it may be that the Armies will have to be asked to take care not to liberate the rice-consuming countries before they liberate the countries in which rice is produced.

It was not expected that a discussion of dairy products would occasion any difficulties.

Some consideration was given to wheat although it is not in short supply. The difficulty is one of transportation and comprehensive plans are being worked out to move as much as possible to Europe. These can be successfully carried into execution only if Canadian and United States wheat can be made available if and when required for loading. This decision has some implications in the case of the financing of military relief and its importance was fully recognized by the Mutual Aid Board at its meeting on the morning of April 23rd when authority was given to ship 500 tons additional wheat in May.

In general it should be borne in mind that the recent discussions were not concerned with finance but with physical supply and that even so far as physical supply is concerned they dealt only with overall allocation. They will, therefore, have to be supplemented by detailed decisions as to destination and source of particular parcels of supply so as to give effect to the overall allocations which have been accepted. This is work which will be done in the main by the Commodities Committee of the Combined Food Board.

Washington, April 26, 1945

Dear Mr. Angus,

TRIPARTITE DISCUSSIONS ON FOOD

I am enclosing herewith the only three spare copies I have of a note for Dominions' Representatives, which was handed to us this morning when Messrs. Lyttelton and Llewellyn explained the outcome of the present discussions on world food supplies with the Representatives of the Dominions. Mr. Mahoney and Mr. Ritchie were also in attendance from the Canadian Embassy.

I think the note is probably complete, except that it does not indicate sufficiently the seriousness of the position which was brought out more clearly in the discussions with the British Ministers.

The Tripartite Committee is meeting again this afternoon on the Ministerial Level in what may prove to be a final discussion. Briefly, the position as I see it, subject to further amplification following today's meeting, is as follows:

1. Sugar—The arrangements are as complete as can be, as indicated in my teletype WA-2175 of April 24th.† Following discussions with Mr. Taylor by telephone yesterday, I inserted in the minutes of yesterday's meeting, when we finalized the sugar position, the condition that we had asked to be included in the early stages of our discussions, that is, that when the matter is again looked into prior to the first of June due consideration should be given to the Canadian request to have the underusage in the first quarter partially offset by an additional 6,000 to 9,000 tons allocation. At the meeting I pointed out that the present cutback in consumption of the three countries would leave us with the biggest percentage cutback.

2. Oils and Fats—The deficit is substantial and it was indicated at this morning's meeting that the position might be further jeopardized by the newest estimate of the ground nut crop in India and increased demands in that area. Briefly, however, on the basis of our knowledge of the position up to yesterday, by a severe reduction in the United Kingdom stocks and a decrease in consumption of about four per cent over the year 1945, we can meet the present requirements and still give the liberated areas reasonably useful quantities.

3. Meat—The meat position has not been resolved to the satisfaction of the United Kingdom. The problem is still one of canned meat and so far the United States military authorities have not indicated any willingness to discuss their requirements or offer any of their supplies. The United States War Food Administrator is unwilling to go further in civilian reduction in the United States, and in any event additional supplies from the United States will not likely be available until the last quarter of the year.

4. Rice—This is an extremely difficult problem, completely incapable of solution insofar as I can see unless the military authorities concerned are promptly advised of the position and agree to consider ways and means of liberating rice producing areas in the Pacific at the earliest possible opportunity. Insofar as Canada is concerned, I think we can expect that there will be no further supplies of rice available for civilians, except for the small oriental population.

5. Dairy Products—The main shortage is in evaporated milk. The problem in the United States seems to be largely one of providing containers, i.e., boxes. I feel we may be asked to forego some of our present rate of civilian consumption, and in any event I am confident that any quantity we can provide will be used to advantage by UNRRA and the paying countries. Cheese supplies and requirements do not quite balance either, and any contribution we can make in that direction would be extremely useful. The United Kingdom expects to have to cut their winter ration of three ounces to their present two-ounce ration per week. There is some hope of increased supplies from New Zealand as compared with last year. Liberated areas have small demands, providing they can take soft cheese, and you may want to think of ways and means of making as much available as possible from Canadian production this year.

As you are aware, I am sending forward the reports as they are received.

Yours sincerely,

G. R. PATERSON

TRIPARTITE DISCUSSIONS ON FOOD

SUGAR

The U.K., U.S. and Canadian representatives have examined world supplies and world requirements for 1945. These showed a deficit of 910,000 tons. To eliminate the deficit, they first reviewed the requirements of liberated areas, neutrals and Russia.

After scrutiny the requirements for liberated areas were fixed at 936,000 tons giving an average rate of consumption far lower than pre-war. Requirements of European neutrals have also been reduced and it appears unlikely that further supplies will be available for the U.S.S.R.<sup>226</sup>

Even after these steps have been taken a substantial deficit remains. The U.S., U.K. and Canada have agreed to reduce their requirements to achieve equality of consumption between the three countries. This will result in a rate of consumption for civilians in the three countries of 70.8 pounds per head compared with pre-war levels of consumption of 104 pounds per head in the U.K. 96.5 in the U.S. and 95.5 in Canada. In addition, the U.K. will contribute from its stocks 310,000 tons during 1945 with a possible additional 50,000 tons in so far as other countries in the L.F.C.<sup>227</sup> area are unable to make their appropriate contribution to the common savings.

Although these arrangements substantially eliminate the deficit, there is a serious danger that the estimated supplies will not be achieved. Latest reports from certain producing countries (e.g. Cuba) suggest that the expected output will not materialize. This would involve further falls in the rate of consumption in the three countries unless corresponding economies can be achieved elsewhere.

Moreover, in preparing the estimates of supplies and requirements, the U.K. representatives have undertaken to appeal to the countries covered by the London Food Council to make corresponding contributions to meet the deficit, in the hope that a contribution in the neighbourhood of 140,000 tons can be made available from these territories by reduced consumption. This would be equivalent to a reduction in current consumption of something between fifteen and twenty per cent. Unless economy on this scale can be achieved, the U.K. will have to face further cuts in its consumption or the minimum needs of the liberated areas which are particularly short of food at present, will have to be reduced. Any reduction in standard of consumption in L.F.C. countries would thus be a direct contribution to helping the liberated areas.

OILS AND FATS

The deficit in oils and fats (excluding butter) for 1945 was estimated to be 1,247,000 tons. As a result of reduction in supplies to the liberated areas, the elimination of certain duplications, the reduction of exports from the U.S.A. to Latin America; the reduction of exports to the U.S.S.R.; and taking certain optimistic estimates of production and liftings, the deficit was reduced to approximately 545,000 tons.

To meet this deficit, the U.K. is reducing its stocks during 1945 by 245,000 tons and has undertaken to make a further reduction of 100,000 tons during the period from 1st July, 1945, to 1st June, 1946. This is on condition that a new allocation programme shall be prepared covering the twelve months beginning 1st July, 1945, which provides for any necessary reduction in levels of consumption of the three countries on a basis of equality. But although the deficit had been eliminated, no contribution has so far been asked for from the countries of the London Food Council Areas. It is clear that supplies will not be achieved and further reductions in consumption will be necessary. The U.K. has undertaken to approach the countries of the London Food Council area with the most urgent plea that they will contribute to this position. In addition, it is hoped that an extra 200,000 tons of ground nuts will be provided from India. It is hoped that this will be forthcoming. The supply and demand position for the first half of 1945 appears particularly difficult. Early in 1946 stocks will have been reduced to around their lowest point. It is therefore essential that all countries should make every effort to achieve the maximum economies and [in?] consumption from the present up to at least the middle of next year. In addition, it is essential that producing countries should do everything in their power to increase their production.

MEAT

The total meat deficit is estimated at 2.5 billion pounds. Over ninety per cent. of this deficit is in the form of canned meat which is mainly required for the military. The question of a reduction in military requirements is still under consideration.

As a contribution towards meeting the deficit, the U.K. has expressed its willingness to reduce its standard of consumption to an average of 106.4 pounds per head as compared with a pre-war figure of 133. As 106.4 is the annual average rate, the actual rate of consumption during the latter part of the year will be under 100. Canada has undertaken to make substantial additional quantities of meat available for export by reducing her civilian consumption. The domestic supply position in the U.S.A. is such that U.S.A. consumption will be heavily reduced in 1945 as compared with 1944, although the average rate throughout the year will still be over 125 pounds per head with a figure of approximately 120 pounds for the balance of the year. The U.S.A. has found it necessary very substantially to reduce the amount of meat available for export during the whole year, and can make nothing available during the third quarter.

In addition to the reduction in the level of consumption in the U.K., meat stocks there will be run down to their absolute minimum. It is likely to prove very difficult to maintain the meat and bacon rations, particularly during the third quarter when no supplies will be available from the U.S. The U.K. need for additional imports will therefore be great throughout the remainder of the year, but especially during the third quarter, and any contribution which the producing countries can make, either by reducing their own consumption or making extra quantities available from their stocks, will be most gratefully accepted.

The provision of meat for the liberated areas is linked with the question of military requirements. Until a review of military requirements has been carried out, it is impossible to say what quantities will be available for liberated areas.

OTHER FOODS

The other main foodstuffs in critically short supply are rice, and dairy products.

As regards rice, the present position is that, without any large demand from liberated areas in the Far East, there is already a severe shortage in Ceylon for example. Unless additional supplies can be secured in the very near future, the rice ration will have to be halved, with a consequent risk that the production of rubber, tea and vegetable oils will decline. Similarly, in the sugar producing countries of the Caribbean, which are traditionally rice eating, the difficulties of assuring adequate supplies are very great.

Consideration is being given to the complete elimination of the consumption of rice in the U.K. and in Canada. Australia has already removed rice from normal civilian consumption. Every further economy that can be made in the consumption of rice by countries which are not dependent upon rice as a major standard article of diet, is urgently needed in order to maintain the position of those countries to which rice is essential.

As regards the possible future Far Eastern demand, there appears to be no possibility of meeting this until the pre-war rice export areas, i.e., Burma, Siam, Indo-China and Formosa, have been liberated and their rice industries rehabilitated.

As regards dairy products, the main shortage is in evaporated and condensed milk and in cheese. Here again, every possible contribution that can be made in the direction of decreasing consumption or increasing production will be of the greatest assistance to the normal importing countries and particularly to the liberated areas.

TELEGRAM JS.28

Washington, June 4, 1945

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. 1. The Combined Chiefs of Staff have requested that the following be communicated to the Cdn. Dept. of External Affairs.

2. The Supreme Commander, Allied Expeditionary Force SCAEF has reported that the non-availability of certain foodstuffs, other than wheat and flour, for the population of liberated countries of Northwest Europe and for displaced Allied nationals in Germany is causing grave concern. He estimated that there would be a deficit of those foodstuffs amounting [to] 126,000 tons in respect of Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force minimum needs for the period May, June and July. The principal items are fats, pulses, milk and canned meat.

3. As the result of adjustments and of emergency measures to meet this situation, it is anticipated that a part of the deficit will be made available in the United States for loading in June and the first half of July. The remaining deficit is estimated at approximately 78,000 tons of which a considerable portion will be fats and the remainder pulses, milk and canned meat.

4. Every effort within the competence of the combined military authorities is being and will be made further to reduce the deficit, but it must at present be assumed that a substantial deficit will remain as the result of the present inability of the appropriate supply authorities of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada to indicate availabilities of supplies to meet the remaining deficiencies.

5. As a consequence, there is likely to be an inadequate supply of items of food other than cereals for the minimum needs of liberated countries of Northwest Europe and for displaced persons of the United Nations in Germany under the control of SCAEF. SCAEF has recommended that, if remedial action cannot be taken, the Allied Governments concerned should be notified of the facts through diplomatic channels at the earliest possible moment. The Combined Chiefs of Staff are in agreement with this recommendation.

6. You may, therefore, consider that it would be desirable, unless through your assistance further effective availabilities can be indicated, to warn the Allied Governments concerned of the general situation and of the consequent probable inability of the military authorities to meet civil affairs requirements of their respective countries and of United Nations displaced persons in Germany.

7. SCAEF has been instructed to keep the Allied Governments informed of the details of anticipated deficits so that they may make such adjustments in rations as may be necessary. You may wish so to inform the Allied Governments. At the same time, it is recommended that in any communications you may make to the Allied Governments, you should stress the importance of their doing everything possible to meet the present supply shortage by making the fullest use of indigenous production.

SECRET. Following for Ritchie from Angus, Begins: Your WA-2934 of June 5th,† General Eisenhower's telegram.<sup>228</sup> The communication from the Combined Chiefs of Staff has been received. In paragraph 6 this communication suggests that the Canadian Government may consider it desirable to warn the Allied Governments concerned of the general situation. We should appreciate being informed whether the United States and United Kingdom authorities contemplate issuing such a warning.

If a warning is to be given it is our view that the best course would be for the United States, as the largest financial contributor to relief supplies, to write on behalf of the other two countries. We should be prepared to authorize the United States authorities to say that they were writing with our concurrence if the United Kingdom authorities were prepared to give their concurrence as well.

We consider that it would be very cumbersome for the three countries to send identical notes as they did when they informed the countries receiving military relief that they would be expected to pay for it.<sup>229</sup> In the present case we do not think that there is anything to justify the use of this cumbersome procedure. If, however, the other two countries prefer to write identical notes, we should probably follow the same course.

The worst solution of all would be to communicate three different versions of the story to the Allied Governments concerned and if the United Kingdom and United States Governments are not prepared to agree either on a joint note or on identical notes we should probably pass the matter over in silence on the ground that an adequate warning had been given by the other two contributors. TELETYPE WA-2964

IMMEDIATE. Following for Dr. G. S. H. Barton, Deputy Minister, Department of Agriculture, and H. F. Angus, External Affairs, from Paterson, Begins: With reference to our telephone discussions this morning regarding the London Conference to be held on June 12th and 13th, I am quoting herewith in full a letter which I have just received from Hutton, Head of the British Food Mission, confirming his telephone call to me last night and my outline of the position to you this morning:

“Last night I telephoned you to inform you that the Ministers of Food and the Ministers of Agriculture of a number of European countries have been invited to attend a Conference to be held in London on June 12th. The invitations were sent to the Belgian, French Provisional, Netherlands, Norwegian, Danish and Luxembourg Governments, and subsequently (with slightly different wording) to the Greek, Yugoslav, Czech and Russian Governments.

The purpose of the Conference, which it is believed will take not more than two days, is to impress upon the representatives of European Governments the extreme gravity of the international food situation and the imperative necessity that each European country should do all within its power to mobilize its own food supplies and thus to reduce its import requirements.

I have been asked by the Minister of Food to inform you of this meeting and to suggest to you that the presence of a Canadian representative at the London meeting would be most welcome.

I must here insert an official apology for the very short notice in advising you of this meeting. I realize that it will be a matter of very great difficulty for the Canadian Government to send a representative to London in time for the meeting, should the Canadian Government decide that it would wish to be represented. It is not, of course, for me to make any suggestions as to who might represent your Government, but it may not be improper for me to state that the presence of Dr. Barton at the London meeting would be most welcome to the Minister of Food. I realize, however, that Dr. Barton is a busy man, and that he probably cannot be spared from Ottawa at this moment. It might be that you yourself would be able to go to London for a very brief visit. Your knowledge of both of the Canadian and American food situation and the fact that you were present at the recent tripartite discussions constitutes, of course, a most valuable background.

I should add that the United States Government has been invited to send a representative to the meeting also.

There is one other development which I should draw to your attention.

At the end of May, the European Emergency Economic Committee held its first meeting. This meeting seems to have gone fairly well. As I understand the position, at that meeting there was some talk of the establishment of a Sub-Committee on Food and Agriculture. I believe that at the meeting which was held in London yesterday, consideration was to be given to the terms of reference, constitution, purpose, and so forth of the Sub-Committee. From advice I have received from the Ministry of Food, it seems pretty certain that the Sub-Committee will be established, although I have not had any official confirmation to that effect as yet.

This development occurred at a time when British Ministers had themselves been considering the desirability of explaining the international food situation, as they saw it, in the light of the Washington discussions, to the Ministers of the Executive Departments of the various European Governments who were concerned with food and agriculture. The short notice at which the meeting of Ministers has been called is, I understand, due to the desire of British Ministers to infuse vigour from the outset into the deliberations of the E.E.E.C. Sub-Committee.

Finally, I should tell you that as far as the Ministry of Food is concerned, they are determined that the E.E.E.C. Sub-Committee will deal only with general matters of common interest. It will not deal with the allocation of particular commodities. In no way will it, so to speak, poach upon the work of the Combined Food Board. The main idea will be to see that each country helps itself and helps its neighbours to the maximum possible degree by the pursuit of domestic policies which are appropriate to the circumstances of today.

Let me close by advising you that if the Canadian Government should decide to send a representative, our Embassy in Washington will do its utmost to assist in securing air passage, if this should be desired.

In closing, let me repeat the apologies for the very short notice which you are being given regarding this Conference. I believe that official information is being sent to the Government of Canada by the Dominions Office."

Hutton has arranged for air priority for me on B.O.A.C. leaving Saturday. I anticipate receiving priority for passage returning at the end of next week in order to keep my engagement at Guelph during the following week.

I shall be pleased to have from you tomorrow any information or instructions that would be useful in my participation in this Conference. Ends.

TELEGRAM 1341

Ottawa, June 8, 1945

On instructions from the Minister of Food, Maurice Hutton on June 7 informed the Canadian Executive Officer of the Combined Food Board, George Paterson, that the presence of a Canadian representative would be welcomed at a conference to be held in London on June 12th of the Ministers of Food and the Ministers of Agriculture of a number of European countries. Paterson has been authorized to attend in his capacity as Canadian Executive Officer of the Combined Food Board.

Action in this matter has had to be taken without receiving the official information which Hutton says is being sent to the Government of Canada by the Dominions Office. As some of the phrases in Hutton's letter suggest that Canadian governmental representation is desired, it would be appreciated if you will make it clear to the United Kingdom authorities that the brevity of notice made it impossible to arrange for governmental participation at the level contemplated in the case of the European governments. Paterson will be attending rather in the capacity of an observer, who will be in a position to supply information concerning the food situation in Canada and Canadian ability to export food. It is hoped that this explanation will avoid Paterson being placed in an embarrassing position. He cannot, of course, be expected to enter into any commitments on behalf of Canada.

Following for Angus from Ritchie, Begins: Your EX-2111 of June 6th, General Eisenhower's telegram concerning inadequacy of supplies available to him for feeding liberated countries of northwest Europe and displaced Allied nationals in Germany.

Following your conversation with Paterson concerning the proposed meeting of the Allied Food Ministers in London on June 14th<sup>230</sup> we suggested to the United Kingdom Military and Civilian representatives that this meeting might satisfactorily serve the purpose for which the letter requested by the Combined Chiefs of Staff had been intended. As indicated to you in our telephone conversation this morning the United Kingdom Embassy and the State Department agree that this will provide a suitable occasion for the issuance of the warning desired by SHAEF. You will doubtless wish to advise our representatives at this meeting.

The following is the text of the telegram which the United Kingdom Embassy has addressed to the Foreign Office on the subject, Begins:

“We have discussed with the State Department the question of a statement to be made to the Allied Governments on the lines proposed in this letter from the Combined Chiefs of Staff. We suggested that the meeting to be held with the Allied Food Ministers in London on June 14th might provide a suitable occasion for the issuance of the warning desired by SHAEF, which we suggest might take the form of a statement on the lines of the first three paragraphs and the first sentence of the fourth paragraph of the letter from the Combined Chiefs of Staff. The State Department agree and will so inform Mr. Fitzpatrick, who is to represent the United States Government at these discussions. The Canadian Embassy also consider that the meeting in London could suitably be used for this purpose.

We propose to arrange a meeting with the State Department and the Canadian Embassy at which we would seek to agree [on] reply to be sent by the three Governments to the Combined Chiefs of Staff.

Subject to your concurrence we would suggest that the reply which might be made would inform the Chiefs of Staff of the meeting shortly to be held in London and of the agenda proposed for this meeting. It would go on to state that the supplying Governments were themselves doing everything possible to maintain the flow of supplies to the Allied Governments and would emphasize the importance which the three Governments attach to an early statement by SHAEF to the Governments concerned of the supplies which they can expect to receive from him in the course of the next three months.

Please telegraph urgently whether you concur

- (a) In the suggestion that the meeting to be held in London can appropriately be used to give the Allied Governments the statement requested by the C.C.S.;
- (b) That such a statement might be as suggested in paragraph 2 above,
- (c) In the reply suggested in paragraph 4 above to the Chiefs of Staff.” Ends.

The notification will probably take the form of a statement on the lines of the first three paragraphs and first sentence of the fourth paragraph of the letter from the Combined Chiefs of Staff.<sup>231</sup> It will be in order for you to concur in this warning.

It is probable that the three Governments will agree on a reply to the Combined Chiefs of Staff, informing them of the London meeting, stating that they are doing everything in their power to maintain the flow of supplies to the Allied Governments and asking SHAEF to inform those Governments of the supplies which they can expect to receive through SHAEF during the next three months. Washington, June 18, 1945

Dear Dr. Barton,

I am enclosing herewith in duplicate copies of the statement by Colonel Llewellyn made at the Conference with Allied Ministers of Food and Agriculture in London on June 14th.<sup>232</sup>

At the end of the conference these statements were given to the press with certain omissions which I have marked on the copies. The omissions, you will note, for the most part refer to material dealing with military requirements.

The meetings were quite successful from the standpoint of putting across to the European countries represented the present position insofar as the member countries of the Combined Food Board find it. A special emphasis was placed upon the need of continuing co-operation in order to divide up the available supplies as equitably as possible, taking into account availability of shipping, etc.

I am also enclosing in duplicate a statement made by United Kingdom authorities on wartime agricultural marketing policy in the United Kingdom which was submitted to the allied governments present.†

At the conclusion of the conference the allied governments were asked to make a statement for the press covering the position in their respective countries. Unfortunately these statements were not ready by my departure time and therefore I was only able to make arrangements for Mr. Broadley to forward same as soon as possible by diplomatic bag. As soon as I have received them I will let you have copies.

Briefly the position indicated by the European countries present was as follows:

Netherlands

Fertilizers and feedingstuffs needed very badly. Pigs at present only 15% of prewar in total live weight. About two-thirds of the dairy cattle left—no beef cattle. Their biggest problem is to reverse the black market procedure which was considered patriotic during the time of occupation. Once they can get to the point where bread and potatoes can be de-rationed they believe that the morale of the people will be greatly improved. They are very much concerned with the problem of getting the indigenous production of the country into equitable distribution.

Czechoslovakia

No precise figures but indicated that it has not been possible to sow grain and plant potatoes this year, and that their livestock numbers were greatly reduced.

Belgium

Biggest problem fertilizers and feedingstuffs. Small farms, as you know, and again the difficulty of black marketing. In private conversation with them, I believe the position has very much improved in recent months. There is still need of food however.

Cattle population reduced from 2 million to 1.4 million, and dairy cattle reduced from 1.2 million to .8 million. Weight of animals and production capacity very much reduced. Pigs reduced from 1.5 million to .5 million; Sheep from 900,000 to 210,000.

They need 50,000 tons of feedingstuffs per month; fats position bad; sugar serious; cheese very bad.

Luxembourg

Largely a matter of feedingstuffs and machinery. Their 1945 production only about 50 to 55% of normal capacity. Labour is a problem. In the late offensive they lost about 3,500 horses and 35,000 head of cattle, which they would like to have at least partially reinstated. They need wheat for two months, and they figure their 1945 harvest will be good for 50% of their requirements. Given the tools they believe that 1946 will see them 90% self-sufficient.

France

The French delegation were not very direct in their discussion of the problem. They seemed more concerned with pointing out that the Combined Food Board was not performing its functions satisfactorily and that liberated areas were only considered by the Board as residual claimants. They urged priority for liberated areas. However, they did agree that such things as competitive buying should be avoided as far as possible.

They spoke of fertilizers and machinery as being very important, but in private conversation they told me their wheat requirements were now raised to 4,000,000 tons in view, principally, of the North African crop failure. They don't seem to realize that it was completely impossible to move this quantity in the time specified.

Norway

No comments, but in private conversation with their Minister I was led to believe that the position was much better than they anticipated. They have apparently commandeered a lot of German stores and this will help them over a short period of time—probably until this harvest, but they will need certain types of commodities very badly.

Greece

Greece normally produced commodities of certain types for export such as currants, and depended on imports for 35% of their wheat, 90% of their rice and 50% of their beans and peas. Production now only 25% of prewar due to a great displacement of agricultural population. Transport and communications very bad. Very urgently require road transport.

They spoke particularly of insecticides and fertilizers. They stated that 65% of their cattle had been lost, 50% of their horses, 65% of their sheep and 90% of their poultry and pigs. I understand there is some item in the armistice terms whereby Bulgaria is to replace livestock stolen, but there seems to be some difficulty in having this replacement implemented.

Denmark

This, as probably to be expected, was the one bright spot in the whole picture as far as foodstuffs are concerned. They stated that they had been able to retain most of their cattle population, and although production was down, given feeds they could soon increase for export. Their pig population was about 60% of prewar; poultry well down. They stated they require feedingstuffs to make yields greater, and their Minister of Commerce stated that the Danish Government was going to reduce the rations in order to augment foods in the needy countries. They will do their best to get down to British levels, with due reference to climatic conditions and customs of the people. They are afraid of the black market if drastic cuts are made.

Their producing machinery is intact; the yields of their herds about 25% below prewar. Out of the 1944-45 crop year they estimate surpluses for export as follows:

Butter	37,000 tons
Bacon and Pork	25,000 tons
Meat	7,500 tons
Cheese	700 to 800 tons
Eggs	4,000 to 5,000 tons
Horses	7,000 head

They are asking for 200,000 tons of oil cakes and 200,000 tons of grain, and figure that, if given same, their increase for export will be significant.

I have only one copy of the agenda of the meetings and I am enclosing it herewith.†

Yours faithfully,

G. R. PATERSON

FOOD POSITION IN CANADA; MEAT RATIONING

1. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE referred to the memorandum which had been submitted to the Cabinet at the meeting of June 26th regarding international allocation of food, with special reference to meat and to the Belgian request for assistance in procuring meat.

This memorandum had been prepared by the Chairman of the Food Requirements Committee as the result of a number of questions which had been raised by different Ministers as to the effect and functioning of meat rationing in Canada, if and when the government decided to impose it. The reasons in favour of such a decision were—humanitarian, i.e., in the interests of the liberated countries in order that our obligations to the other members of the Combined Food Board could be fulfilled, that the good name of Canada should be maintained in the United States, and, from the purely domestic viewpoint, to prevent maldistribution within Canada and a serious deterioration in the price situation.

(Memorandum for Cabinet, June 25, 1945, Cabinet document 9.)†

2. MR. ILSLEY said that the whole problem involved difficult and complicated questions, many of which could only be answered by officials concerned. This was particularly true of slaughter control, and it was, therefore, suggested that Ministers meet with the experts in order to get a clear conception of what was involved.

3. THE CABINET, after considerable discussion, agreed that a special committee be appointed, to consist of the following Ministers:

The Minister of Finance (Convenor),
The Minister of Justice,
The Minister of Labour,

<sup>234</sup>Dans le projet original, le paragraphe commençait comme suit:

In the original draft, the paragraph began as follows:

 The Minister of National War Services;

FOOD POSITION IN CANADA; MEAT RATIONING

16. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE, referring to the decision of the Cabinet on Thursday, June 28th, submitted and commented upon recommendations from a sub-Committee of the Cabinet, appointed to report upon policy in respect to meat rationing.

(Report of sub-Committee of Cabinet, June 30, 1945.)†

17. MR. ILSLEY pointed out that while arrangements for rationing could not be ready for two months or more, an early government announcement was desirable, and submitted a draft statement prepared in this connection.

18. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE pointed out that, if meat rationing should be introduced, the amount of the ration could be left undetermined for the present, since there appeared to be a possibility that larger quantities of meat might come on the market during the next two months.

19. THE CABINET, after discussion, agreed, subject to the concurrence of the Prime Minister:

- (a) that slaughter control be established immediately;

TELEGRAM CSC 18

Ottawa, July 4, 1945

SECRET. For CJSM Washington from CSC Ottawa.

Your JS. 28.<sup>236</sup> The Department of External Affairs have requested that the following be communicated to the Combined Chiefs of Staff. Begins:

We refer to the letter of the Combined Chiefs of Staff of June 2nd, on the subject of the inadequacy of supplies available for feeding liberated countries of Northwest Europe and displaced Allied nationals in Germany.

It was agreed, in consultation with the authorities of the United States and of the United Kingdom, that the Governments of the liberated countries of Northwest Europe be informed of shortages of supplies at the meeting of Allied Ministers of Food, which was held in London on June 14th. At that meeting Colonel Llewellyn, United Kingdom Minister of Food, made the following statement with the concurrence of the United States and Canadian Governments:

“Owing to shipping and other problems there have been considerable difficulties in providing the total quantity of food which SHAEF requires for distribution through its civil affairs organization in the liberated countries during the coming months. It is estimated that the quantities due for shipment during May, June, and July will fall short of requirements by about 126,000 tons. The principal items in which there will be a deficit will be fats, pulses, milk and canned meat. I should point out that the bulk of these shipments would be due for arrival in July and August, when the new harvest is ready for collection. Every effort will be made to hurry on such supplies as are available. The fact that the quantities are not shipped in May, June and July will not make any difference to the total quantities of food which have been set aside for the liberated areas in 1945. They will be allocated and shipped as soon as possible. Insofar as SHAEF has ceased to be responsible for food import requirements for particular territories, the quantities will then be allocated to the national governments concerned.”

The supply authorities of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada are making every possible effort to provide supplies to the Allied Governments, either directly or by assisting the military authorities to meet the sustenance of the civilian population. To integrate the supply programmes of the national governments with civil affairs programmes and to facilitate the transfer of military responsibility to the liberated countries, it is of great importance that the Supreme Headquarters Allied Governments Expeditionary Forces should inform the Allied Governments concerned as soon as possible of the supplies which they can expect to receive in the next three months from civil affairs programmes. Ends.
