HARTLAND GETS A NEW INDUSTRY

Potato Products Company Acquires
Property of Woodworking Co.
and Will Manufacture
Starch, etc.

At last Hartland is to have a new industry, and all through the energy of its enterprising young townsman, H. H. Hatfield, head of the firms of Hatfield & Scott Co., Ltd., and the Potato Products Co., Ltd.

Mr. Hatfield, for his companies, has acquired the buildings, plant and real estate holdings of the Hartland Woodworking Company, Ltd., and already has a force of men at work converting the establishment into an up-to-date plant for the manufacture of starch, potato flour and evaporated vegetables of as many kinds as the surrounding rich agricultural country can produce.

Overtures for the purchase of the woodworking plant were made some months ago, but the deal did not reach a final consummation until last Saturday. On Monday morning work started on the new plant.

Had Mr. Hatfield been able to secure the property when he first desired it the plant would today be in operation, affording a ready market for all kinds of potatoes of any grade, as well as turnips, and employing upwards of 100 hands. As it is every effort will be put forth to equip the plant for operation this fall.

River Bridge in Dangerous Condition

There recently has been placed at each end of the river bridge a sign warning drivers of automobiles against exceeding a speed of six miles an hour in crossing the bridge, and the penalty is fixed at $20. Drivers of loaded teams are likewise warned that no more than one team must be on the same span at the same time and the penalty is also $20.

The condition of the bridge is considered to be dangerous. Repairs seem not to be needed so much as an entirely new structure from the ground up. Piers that were damaged by the ice last spring have had no attention and will not, unless something is done, withstand another freshet. There is not a sound timber in the whole superstructure and now that heavy teaming has commenced great care must be taken that some of the members are not displaced with direful results. Two or three weeks ago The Observer recorded an instance where heavy timbers fell from the top of the bridge striking a passing wagon and giving the driver, John McGinnis of St. Thomas, a close call for his life. It is not known that anything since has been done to secure the loose timbers; and others may fall. Any person who doubts that the bridge needs immediate attention needs only to stand in the centre of any span, but particularly the most westerly one, to be convinced otherwise.

The speeding of automobiles on the bridge has had much to do towards racking the structure and it should not be longer tolerated by those in authority—if there be any such. The warning signs should not be disregarded, as they are every day; and those who disregard them should suffer the fine.

FLORENCEVILLE BRIDGE ALMOST BURNED

Sabbatic Quietude of the Peaceful
Village Was Rudely Shaken

A good deal of excitement centred around Florenceville on Sunday when the river bridge caught fire. Smoke was discovered issuing from the second pier out from the last side early in the morning. All efforts with the means at hand failed to extinguish the fire and dense volumes of smoke poured out increasingly. It was feared the bridge would be destroyed and the Woodstock fire-engine was sent for, and which was hastily transported to the scene by special train. Even then many hours of work was necessary to finally subdue the fire which had burrowed deep into the interior of the pier.

Many motor cars went from Hartland and other points bearing crowds who had expected, from reports sent over the telephones, to see a spectacular conflagration.

Florenceville bridge was built in 1885, of wood, and is therefore a very old structure, as the age of wooden bridges is reckoned. A few years ago, however, extensive repairs were made, and, indeed, steel superstructures replaced two wooden spans. It was a pier beneath one of these that caught fire.

FORD CARS

R. L. Phillips Returns From Trip to Plant of Ford Motor Company of Canada

R. L. Phillips returned yesterday from a trip to the plant of the Ford Motor Company of Canada. While away Mr. Phillips contracted for all his old territory, which included the counties of York, Carleton, Sunbury and portions of Queens and Northumberland, and also a portion of Kent county, which he has not had before.

When asked if the Ford Motor Company were going to follow in the steps of every other manufacturer of automobiles and advance their prices, Mr. Phillips said that they have no announcement to make, but that they were not guaranteeing him cars at present for twenty-four hours ahead and that they would have the right to advance them any minute, but that he did not look for an advance before October 1.

At the present time, owing to the great scarcity of material, every assembly branch is away behind with their orders and it is impossible to secure cars as fast as they are being sold.—Fredericton Gleaner, Sept. 6.

CENTREVILLE FAIR A GOOD ONE

Visitors Are Promised a Good Display and a Good Time

A very large number of people from Centreville and vicinity attended the Fair at Presque Isle last week. The exhibits, according to report, were not as good as usual. The racing was good and it was well worth the trip to see the immense crowd in attendance. Forty thousand people and automobiles according to some people for this section of country.

But all take notice the Centreville Fair comes off Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 19 and 20 and then everyone will see some stock and other exhibits that will make their eyes stick out. The midway will not be as extensive as at Houlton and Presque but from an educational standpoint the Fair will be excellent. People will be able to see what kind of stock and agricultural products this section of the country can raise. Farmers will be interested and helped by looking over the various exhibits of stock and products of the soil, and many will go away determined to use better methods next year on their farms and beat out their neighbours at the next show. The Ladies will be interested in the dairy exhibits, also in the splendid display of handmade fancy articles. The Red Cross are going to provide meals so this year everyone will be able to get enough to eat with quality of food guaranteed.

Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins of Fort Fairfield were visitors here Sunday, coming down by auto with Dr. George Burt.

Misses Bateman of Shediac visited their sister, Mrs. Jack Lee, last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Leland Clark spent several days at Presque Isle last week, visiting friends.

Mrs. Albert Simonson visited in Woodstock last week returning home by the Valley Saturday evening.

Miss Doris Champion is teaching a violin class at Andover.

Robert D. White of Aroostook Junction visited his mother here Sunday coming down in his "Country Club" car.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Wiggins spent Sunday in Andover with their daughter, Mrs. Joseph Scott.

Dr. E. R. McClintock left last week for his annual holiday. He may visit his parents in Portland, Oregon, before his return.

Cyril Brown spent Sunday presumably at Aroostook Junction.

Every auto in this vicinity visited Florenceville Sunday to see the fire in one of the piers of the bridge.

Miss Vera Brown left the first of the week for Montreal to resume her duties at McGill.

The very heavy frost last Friday and Saturday nights did a lot of damage. All late buckwheat and oats are spoiled and the oats will only be fit for feeding. Potatoes (the extremely few that were green) are blackened and all garden stuff frozen stiff.

Wants to Buy Ship Timber

J. E. Littlefield of Brewer, Me., was here a few days ago and visited other sections along the river seeking to purchase timber for ship frames. He has been engaged in this business for many years but hitherto had been able to get sufficient material at Maine points to fill his requirements. But now the new impetus given the building of wooden ships has driven him further afield for his supplies. It is thought much of our supply of hard woods and spruce and hackmatack can be sold at a good profit.

THE CASE OF MR. CARVELL

F. B. Carvell having declared in the House of Commons his intention to discuss the record of the Hon. Robert Rogers and the work of the McLeod-Tellier commission which recently gave to Mr. Rogers a certificate of character, the Standard newspaper threatens the member for Carleton with political extinction. The Standard has been making similar threats for some years past. At short intervals it informs its readers that Mr. Carvell's political career is run, that he is about to disappear, that his activities have been futile, and that his place in public life will soon be filled by another. Presumably the Standard means that it will be filled by Hon. J. K. Fleming, for at last accounts Mr. Fleming still was the regularly nominated candidate for the Conservative machine for Carleton-Victoria. The Standard has not withdrawn its candidate, and Mr. Fleming has not himself signified any desire to lay down the party standard, which was proudly placed in his hands by the Conservative leaders at a somewhat memorable convention. We do not present these circumstances as necessarily embarrassing to the Standard. It is accustomed to such things for it lives always as an apologist for a machine whose raw political crimes long since disgusted the better element in the Conservative party. F. B. Carvell was very recently heralded by the Conservative press, and even in the Ottawa correspondence of the Standard newspaper, as a fearless outstanding Canadian commanding the appreciation of all good citizens. Recently, however, Mr. Carvell found it necessary in pursuance of his duty to the House of Commons to expose and chastise some of the more conspicuous Conservative party idols, and because of this the Standard dutifully takes up the task of maligning him to its puzzled subscribers.

But there is another reason for the Standard's foolish malignity, and a moving reason it is, too. Recently as counsel before one or two royal commissions investigating some of the more notorious transactions occurring under the Murray-Baxter government, Mr. Carvell fearlessly dealt with some of the activities of certain directors of the Standard newspaper. Mr. Carvell is an axeman who hews to the line, and is careless as to where the chips may fall. They have fallen thick and fast before the door of the Standard newspaper.

The Carvell axe is at rest for the moment, but soon it will begin to swing once more, with what result time will tell. Mean-

WHAT CATARRH IS

It has been said that every third person has catarrh in some form.

Science has shown that nasal catarrh often indicates a general weakness of the body; and local treatments in the form of snuffs and vapors do little, if any good.

To correct catarrh you should treat its cause by catching your blood with the oil-food in Scott's Emulsion which is a medicinal food and a building tonic, free from any harmful drugs. Try it.

A Free War Map

Every home in Canada should have a map of the great war area in Europe to see where our Canadian boys are fighting. The colored map offered free with the Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal is complete in every detail. It is the best map yet published. The subscription price of the Family Herald is now $1.25 a year but to make up the difference to their subscribers this great map which could not be produced under two dollars a copy except in large quantities is given free to all subscribers new and renewal who pay a year's subscription $1.25. It is a great bargain indeed.

The Philathea Class, a group of earnest young women members of the United Baptist church, have issued "A Book of Recipes" made up of the best cooking formulae of Hartland's many good cooks. The ladies are selling the little book and devoting the money so made to Red Cross purposes. The initial cost of getting out a book like this, or any book, is a big item and the members of the class deserve success in what has been no small undertaking. The little book of 46 pages and cover contains nearly 200 recipes and should be of sufficient interest to induce a quick demand for the 500 copies that were printed. The price is 25 cents.

Near Tragedy on the Tobique

A fellow named William Gee very seriously injured Miss Barbara McKellar, at Red Rapids on Monday. It seemed that Gee had a grudge against an old man living there, and tried to hit him with a board. He did not succeed in injuring him badly enough, however, and afterwards drove his double team, at a fast gait into the man's yard. The pole of the rapidly moving wagon struck Miss McKellar in the neck, almost breaking it. Some of the ribs were also knocked from her spine, and she was otherwise terribly bruised and injured. Whether or not she will recover is not known. Warrants were at once got out for the arrest of Gee, who fled, and, as late as Tuesday had not been apprehended, although it was expected he would soon be taken. It was said that Gee was not intoxicated but that he is the possessor of a bad temper.—Fort Fairfield Review.

THE SPREAD EAGLES

By COLIN MCKAY

"Six days shalt thou labor as hard as thou art able. And on the seventh, holystone the decks and scrape the cable." —The Philadelphia Catechism

In the down east sailing ships there used to be a good deal of brutality, but it was generally all square and above-board. If the after-guards used belaying pins, they did not claim a monopoly in the business, and they never used brass knuckles or bulldozed the crew with shooting irons.

When the bucko mates from the New York or Philadelphia hell-ships got berths in a down easter and tried to introduce their dirty work they were brought up with a round turn. At Paddy West's boarding house old shellbacks yarned about the down east, "hard packet," the wild boat, —the hot craft, and the "slaughter ship"—but you never heard of a "hell-ship" hailing from a port east of Cape Ann. Only once was the queer bird seen on a down easter, and I'll tell you the yarn.

It was on the Halcyon, a large, full-rigger, belonging to Windsor, N. S. When she made fast alongside the docks of fever-harried Santos, every mother's son aboard from captain to cabin boy hailed from down east. But when she was ready for sea again, a Philadelphia skipper had to be put aboard to take her home. He shipped a notorious Baltimore bucko for mate, and a turbulent young down easter, named Sunderland, for second, and replaced the men carried off by yellow-jack with blue-nose lads.

As soon as the Halcyon crumbled blue water under her forefoot, the skipper and mate started in to haze the crew. They were holy terrors—bully boys—and no mistake. They did not use their fists like honest men, but laid about them with handspikes and iron belaying pins. They tried to drag the second into line, but he would not lift a finger against one of the crew. The skipper would inform him twenty times a day that the only way to make shellbacks stand around was to knock them down; the mate would insinuate that he was afraid to row the crew; but Sunderland put up with their badgering with the meekness of a lamb. Sunderland's conduct puzzled us greatly. In other ships he had used his fists night and day, and thought nothing of waxing through a whole watch, though, like most down east officers, he drew the line at dirty work. And now he not only kept his hands off the men, but he put up with the slurs and insults of the old man and the mate. It was not like Sunderland at all. If there was anything his wild viking spirit delighted in, it was a rough-and-tumble fight with a skipper or mate. Often we had seen him go out of his way to pick a quarrel with his superiors—often we had seen him knock down a skipper on his own quarter-deck—but now he was letting those buckos ride over him roughshod.

"Wait a while," said Sydney Sam. "That lad always balances his books. He'll break loose some of these fine days, and settle up his scores with those buckos. Ay, he'll pay them back in his own way, and in his own good time."

Sunday morning dawned fair and calm. The ship was rolling lazily over league-long, glassy swells. The sun rose resplendent from its bed of gold, brushing aside the curtains of amber, rose and sapphire that hung along the eastern horizon, and burnishing the bosom of the deep. The second, having the early morning watch, hurried through the washing-down and brass-cleaning, and then let his watch rest.

At eight bells the mate came up and gave the second half-columbia for not starting to holystone the decks. "I never holystoned decks on Sunday myself, and I don't intend to ask my watch to do so," Sunderland answered shortly and went below.

The mate, baffled and maddened by the second's contemptuous indifference, turned on Sydney Sam, who had just belleted the wheel.

"Here, you bald-headed old owl, don't stand staring there. The wheel can look after itself now. Get forward with you and tell the watch to get the holystones and sand out of the starboard locker and come aft and start on the poop."

Now, Sydney, having been left after a siege of yellow-jack with a scalp as bald and shiny as a door knob, did not relish reference to his ludicrous appearance, and so, without deigning to answer the mate, he started slowly forward. The mate, glad of the opportunity of bullying some one, was after him in a second, kicking him lustily.

"Answer me when I speak to you, you lubber," he roared. "Get a move on you now. I'm not going to allow any slouching in my watch."

"Ay, ay, sir," answered Sydney, getting a move on him.

In a few minutes the watch came aft with empty hands.

"Mr. Ryer," said Sam, who had been appointed spokesman, "we never holystoned decks on Sunday in the Halcyon before, and we don't want to now, sir."

"Well, by thunder, this beats me," roared the mate. "Get those stones and get to work or I'll slaughter you. Who cares what you don't do before. I'm mate now, and I don't want any blasted impudence. Get a—"

"Holystone the decks yourself," bellowed in Sydney. "We won't for any bucko afloat, see?"

The mate seized a handspike, but the skipper bade him forbear.

"Keep cool, Mr. Ryer. I'll deal with these men. . . . Sydney Sam, go to the wheel. Men, if you are not to be made of of a rope I'll show you how Silas P. Spinnay puts down mutiny. Mr. R., keep your hands off those."

The old man went below, but at two bells promptly he was again on deck. The men were lounging defiantly forward, but he did not seem to notice them. After taking a look all round the scurion, he turned to the mate.

"Clew up fore and main royals and t'gallants, and furl them."

When the watch were in the yards, the skipper and mate suddenly seized Sydney Sam and dragged him along to the mizzen shrouds. He kicked and struggled, but he was weak from the fever.

Realizing the intention of his captors, he raised his voice.

"Ho, shipmates! they're going to make a spread-eagle out of me. Help, help—"

The men looked down, stupefied, for a long moment, and then, with mutterings of wrath, hastily began to descend.

"Stay up there and stow those sails!" yelled the skipper, fiercely, but the men gave no heed.

The old man had a great contempt for shellbacks, but he felt those down easters had more spirit than the general run. So, leaving Sydney to the mate, he jumped below, and just as the men struck the deck was again with a brace of shooting-irons in his hands.

"Get forward or I'll plug you," he ordered.

The men went forward, routed out the second's watch, and began to discuss ways and means of saving Sydney Sam from the bitter disgrace of a flogging, tied up like a dog. But they were men of little resource. And Sunderland, the respecter of sailors' rights and hater of dirty work, was asleep in his bunk. If he would wake up and come on deck—Well, he had fought the battles of shellbacks before, he was equal to any sort of emergency, and would find a way to get round the skipper's revolvers.

In the meantime the captain and mate lashed Sydney Sam to the mizzen rigging, spread-eagle fashion.

"I'll teach you to flout my officers, d— you. I'll show you how I deal with mutineers, by—" the old man roared.

"Think I'm going to let discipline go to the devil aboard my ship, do you. I'll let you know what kind of a man Silas P. Spinnay is. I'm just as tough a man as ever sailed the high seas!"

"If you stripe me I'll kill you," swore Sydney Sam, turning yellow with the horror and shame of the thing. "I'll kill you some day—so help me! I don't care if I hang for it."

"Belay your gab!" ordered the mate as he took his knife and slit Sydney's shirt down the back.

The old man, frothing at the mouth, seized a tar-hardened rope's end and approached the helpless man.

"Won't work, hey? By—, I'll teach you," he foamed, working himself into a frenzy.

And then he whirled the rope vicious about his head, and—

Suddenly a long, lithe figure, with flying shirt tails and bare legs, leaped up the forward companionway of the cabin, and springing like a panther at the skipper, knocked him over the break of the poop, down into the waist, heels over head. And then, before the mate could move to defend himself, the wild apparition had turned on him, and with one terrific blow, sent him to the deck like a stricken ox.

Sunderland picked up the captain's pistols from the scuff, and leaned restlessly against the spanker boom. The men forward, seeing that the grim champion of down east customs, had spoiled the buckos' little game, set up a joyous shout, and started aft on the run. In a moment they would have wreaked vengeance on the prostrate bullies, but Sunderland stopped them.

"Hold on, boys! Leave 'em alone. . . . Here you, McLean, jump up and cut Sydney down."

They were rather dazed, those buckos, when they got to their feet.

"What do you mean by this outrage?" shrieked the old man at length.

"It's rank mutiny. I'll have you hung, every mother's son of—"

"Now, skipper, no gut," broke in the imperturbable Sunderland. "You ain't aboard one of your Philadelphia or New York hookers. No, sir! your dirty tricks won't go here, see. . . . Stand away there, Mr. Mate; these pistols might go off, you know. Ah, no, don't grumble, or I'll have to teach you manners." Suddenly Sunderland's eyes gleamed with a humorous light. And then he said urbanely.

"Mr. Ryer, please reach up to that swifter, hands apart, like a good fellow. Hurry up, do you hear?"

Sunderland, who was looking wickedly along a pistol barrel, and the mate obeyed perforce.

"Now, skipper, please put the selzings round his thumbs."

"What? What do you mean? Give me my pistols, and get below. I'll put you in irons for interfering."

"Don't waste your breath, old man," said Sunderland, dryly. "I'm master now. Would you like to get at him, boys?"

The men surged toward him menacingly, and he jumped back.

"Hold on, boys!" laughed Sunderland. "I guess he'll oblige us."

The old man, muttering angrily, lashed the mate to the swifter by his thumbs.

"Now, Sydney, seeing as the mate spoilt your shirt, you may return the compliment."

The mate shivered as the sheath-knife ran down his spine. Try the rope's end again," commanded Sunderland. "No bluff, old man. Hurry up, or so help me—"

The old man laid on vigorously. The mate c— and prayed for a rain, alternately, but not until his hands were stretched by a great blue web, and bleeding and raw here and there. Sunderland allowed him to be cut by the second, coolly.

"Men, you don't dare!" "Get in position for punishment!" thundered the second. "I dare anything."

Speechless with helpless rage and fear, the old man slowly spread out his arms.

"Mr. Ryer, I appoint you master of ceremonies."

It is useless gainsaying the commands of a man with a brace of shooting-irons, especially on the high seas, when that man has the crew behind him.

The mate, smarting with pain, put the selzings on the skipper's thumb, and grabbed the hard, heavy rope's end with alacrity. And didn't he lay it over that skipper's back! It was the only way he could get satisfaction, and he took advantage of it with a vengeance. At the fifteenth lash Sunderland cried hold, but he wanted to repeat the dose. The men roared with grim delight. It was a beautiful turning of the tables; a splendid revenge for the indignity they had proposed to inflict on Sydney Sam. Sunderland was a humorous man, though his jokes might only be appreciated by a Scotchman or down east shellback.

When we cut the old man down Sunderland said:

"Now, skipper, I hope you won't try any more of your dirty tricks in a down east craft."

"I'll tell you—I'll have you hanged," stormed the old man. "Spouse I kill you first," sneered the second, bringing a pistol close to the skipper's heart. The old man drew back hastily. "Say your prayers," thundered Sunderland, following him.

"Man, you wouldn't kill me. You're mad. Think of the consequences."

"I'm going to fire," said Sunderland in an awful voice.

"For God's sake—"

Bang!

The old man, clasping his hands to his heart, fell to the deck.

Bang! bang! bang! Sunderland emptied a pistol into the writhing, prostrate form.

Uttering a cry of horror, the mate fled aft, and the second, turning, blazed away at him with the other pistol, till he dropped behind the house.

Then the second threw both revolvers overboard and started to dance a hornpipe on the quarterdeck. He looked like a maniac, with his flying shirt tail, and the crew, frightened out of their wits, ran forward and hid behind the fo'castle.

Stopping his dance, he yelled, "Lay aft, you fools, what ails you?"

The men came aft sheepishly enough. They had never dreamed Sunderland could go such lengths—to murder men in cold blood. It was cowardly, horrible.

"Come here and pitch the bully overboard!"

The men stood stock-still, glaring angrily and fearfully. Suddenly the second turned on the prostrate skipper, kicked him viciously, the ribs, and, grinning from ear to ear, howled:

"Get up, you blooming idiot. The other day I saw your guns in the cabin, and for fear you might be trying to hurt some one with them, I took out the bullets and put in paper wads. Get up—you're more frightened than hurt."

The skipper, choking with rage and chagrin, got to his feet. When he found his voice, he growled:

"I'll make you suffer for this—wait till we get to port. I'll give you twenty years."

"What for? What have I done?" queried the second, innocently. "The mate rope's ended you, old man. Not me. Oh, Lord, I'd like to see you telling a jury in a down east seaport how you striped the mate, and then let the mate lash you at a leadless pistol point. Wouldn't they laugh at you?"

Then Sunderland set his face hard and shook his big fist under the skipper's nose.

"See her, captain. It isn't the custom of down east seafaring folk to appeal to any biased land-laws. No, sir, we settle our differences on the high seas. If you're anything against me, I'll fight you to your heart's content."

But the skipper did not want to fight.

"Where is the mate? Ho, there, show yourself, my bucko."

Slowly and sheepishly the mate rose from behind the house.

"If you have any grievance against me, Mr. Ryer, I'm ready to fight you, now, or any time you choose," challenged Sunderland.

The mate shook his head.

"Ah, nothing, hey? Well and good. You have been a little too flip with me, but I reckon we can let it pass. Hope you and the captain won't quarrel no more. It's disgraceful the way you've been going for each other. Well, I guess I'll go below and put on my pants."

The Halcyon was as easy as an English lime-julicer the rest of the trip. When we got to Windsor the boys told the yarn, and those buckos finding themselves the laughing-stock of the water front, lit out for New York.

And that is the story of how the queer bird made its appearance—of how young Sunderland upheld the honor of the down east sailing ships, and taught the buckos from the hell-ships to respect the down east catechism. "Six days shalt thou slave, round the decks and on the yard. But on the seventh, wash your face and walk through the afterguard."

Lord Tweedmouth erected a massive arch of Gothic architecture as a main entrance to the Chirnside Parish Church in memory of his father, Edward Marjoribanks, second Baron Tweedmouth. The memory of the late Lord Tweedmouth is cherished in Berwickshire, and amongst his many benevolences was the renovation of the old parish church, an ancient edifice which dates from the middle of the twelfth century.

A FRIEND'S ADVICE

Woman Saved From a Serious-Surgical Operation.

Louisville, Ky.—"For four years I suffered from female troubles, headaches, and nervousness. I could not sleep, had no appetite and it hurt me to walk. If I tried to do any work, I would have to lie down before it was finished. The doctors said I would have to be operated on and I simply broke down. A friend advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the result is I feel like a new woman. I am well and strong, do all my own house work, and have an eight pound baby girl. I know Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved me from an operation which every woman dreads."—Mrs. NELLIE FISHER, 1521 Christy Ave., Louisville, Ky.

Everyone naturally dreads the surgeon's knife. Sometimes nothing else will do, but many times Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has saved the patient and made an operation unnecessary.

If you have any symptom about which you would like to know, write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for helpful advice given free.

a Present for the Soldier

YOU can depend on the mothers to think of the little things which will be appreciated by the boy in the camp or trenches. And one article which many a mother has given her boy at the last moment is Dr. Chase's Ointment.

There are so many ways that Dr. Chase's Ointment is useful to the soldier that it becomes invaluable to him. It is used for chafing and skin irritation resulting from heavy clothing and equipment. It brings comfort to sore, scalded feet after the long march. Applied to wounds it prevents blood-poisoning and heals the skin. And it should never be forgotten that Dr. Chase's Ointment is the most effective treatment obtainable for piles, a distressing ailment which results from contact with the cold earth, whether in camp or trench.

The Canadian soldiers have been well supplied with this standard ointment, and, judging by their many letters of appreciation, there seems to be few things more keenly appreciated. Just try it in the next parcels you send to the front.

MOUNT CAVELL HAS ITS UNIQUE FEATURES

Glacier Upon It Remains When Robbed in Spotless White—When It Selected By Inspiration.

The mountain in Jasper National Park that separates the country of Edith Cavell, the English nurse who suffered martyrdom at the hands of the Germans in Belgium, is a thing of beauty. Its summit reaches to a height of over 12 miles south of Jasper, from where it can be clearly seen at any time when not obscured by clouds. Its northern face is covered by snows and glaciers, and when lit up by the rays of the sun or moon presents a splendid spectacle, and it is regarded as being a most appropriate monument for the unfortunate victim of Hunnish hate.

Strange Figure
Lying between Mount Cavell and a high, sombre, verdant mountain, as yet unnamed adjoining at right angles there is a remarkable glacier of immense size, which, at close range resembles the prostrate form of a woman attired in robes of white, with outstretched arms extending to the side of each mountain and the feet reaching down to the great ice bed at the foot. This figure creates in the minds of those who see it impressions of grandeur, the supernatural, and it lends an additional interest to the memorial mound.

In Mournful Attitude
On the nameless mountain, which it is proposed to call Mount Sorrow, there is another remarkable figure which nature has carved from the solid rock with wonderful fidelity. It is that of a woman in an attitude of mourning, standing over a fount-like basin. Except at the feet, there is no cleavage between the figure and the mountain, and from the point from where it can be seen best it is startlingly realistic, even to the garments, which look like buckskin, the stone being stained a brownish yellow. The very real that impressionable people will doubtless conclude that it was by no mere chance that the mountain named in memory of the murdered nurse was chosen, but by an inspiration.

CLIMATE LESS SEVERE

What Study of Larger Glaciers in S.C. Has Revealed

Dr. Charles D. Walcott, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and Mrs. Walcott recently returned to Washington on after several months' field work in Canada. Accompanied by only a packer and cook, they spent most of their time on the continental divide, which forms the boundary line between Alberta and British Columbia, in the Canadian Pacific Railway, studying the cambrian rocks, containing the fossil remains of the earliest animal life.

"Owing to the heavy snowfall of the previous year and the fact that most of the geological formations which they wished to examine were in the deep snow about the timber line, little progress was made till the latter part of the summer of 1915. Sections were examined and from the point from Mount Asiniboine region, and from there northwest to the celebrated Kicking Horse pass, where the Canadian Pacific Railway has bored a double loop through the mountain in order to obtain a feasible grade on the western side of the pass.

Some years ago Dr. Walcott found a remarkable fossil fauna in boulders which had been carried into Kicking Horse canyon by glaciers that have long since disappeared. This last trip he located the source of these boulders high up in the mountain cirque, where a portion of what must have been a great hanging glacier is still active.

Mrs. Walcott, who has studied glaciers for several years, and is well known as an Alpinist, visited Glacier, British Columbia, where she measured the position of two large glaciers, and determined that the front ice foot in each case had retreated at the rate of 100 feet a year during two preceding years. Mrs. Walcott's studies prove that the ice has been steadily retreating during the last six years. Her measurements agree with observations made in Alaska, and indicate that the climate is not as severe on the Pacific side of the continent as it was a decade ago.

PROTECTING MINERS

Canada's Death Rate High—Belgium's Low—Why?

The accident death rate among miners is greater in Canada than any other civilized country. This is due largely to the hazardous nature of the work and to the lack of labor protection for employment. The fatality rate in coal mines in Belgium has been the lowest in the world, being but slightly over one per thousand employed. In 1890, the fatality rate in Belgium was as high as it is in Canada. The decrease is the result of the combined efforts of the mine owners, the workmen, and the Administration of Mines, and is due to a great extent to the diffusion of technical and professional education. In view of its importance, the Government should direct more attention to the education of the workman, so that he may not be a danger to himself or others and that he may become better educated more skilful, and thus have the opportunity to better his position.

Dry Battery Trouble Lamp

Dry batteries, testing eight amperes, or less, will operate small electric light bulbs and doorbells satisfactorily. Four cells wired in series to any desired length of cotton drop cord terminating in a miniature pull socket, with a cord attached to a six-volt lamp, will trouble a road trouble light for a considerable period.

Many accidents may be prevented by the provision of municipal skating rinks and coasting slides.

NOWHERE SAFE FROM LIGHTNING'S FLASHES

Not Foolish to be Afraid of Thunderstorms—Some Places Safer Than Others

The question is often asked as to the location of greatest safety during a thunderstorm. In this respect it may be said that there is no place or object in the path of a thunderstorm that is not liable to a stroke of lightning. Places or objects may be more or less liable to a stroke of lightning according to their relative exposure, etc., but no place in the path of a thunderstorm is to be considered as one upon which a stroke of lightning is not likely to fall.

The location of complete safety during a thunderstorm is, therefore, one in which, even though a stroke of lightning does fall upon it, no harm will come to the occupants. Such a location may be found only in a space entirely surrounded by a metal network, in a steel frame building, or in an underground chamber.

No Absolute Safety
With the exception of places similar to those three, there does not seem to be any place where absolute safety may be obtained. The next degree of safety is undoubtedly to be found in houses or other buildings which are protected by lightning rods, but although the degree of safety which can be attained by using rods may be very high, the risk can not be entirely eliminated.

In the event of a stroke on an unprotected building there is considerable danger to life, but there is no doubt that an unprotected house is preferable to the open, under trees, or in unprotected out-buildings. When a stroke falls on an unprotected house sheltering a family of the average number of persons, the minimum chances of escape are 45 in 100. In all probability, however, the chances of escape are much greater than this.

Better Indoors
In 254 instances of casualties in unprotected houses which are given in these records, there were 117 cases of death and 137 cases of injury. From the same source it is found that in 153 cases of persons struck in open fields, 116 were killed and 37 were injured. In nine cases of persons struck near wire fences, eight were killed and one injured. It seems, therefore, that it is far better to take shelter in a house which is not protected against lightning than to take chances in the open, where everything is damp and hence the liability to shock or injury far greater than in a dry place.

IN BACKWARD CANADA

Quaint Ways and Customs of Islands in St. Lawrence Gulf

A night's sail to the north of Prince Edward Island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, one happens on the Magdalen Islands. Low-lying and scattered Amherst, Grindstone, Entry, Alright, Collin, Byron and the Bird Rocks—a group of romantic islands, which if they were better known would have visitors by the hundreds through the summer months. La Grande Demeiselle or La Petite Demeiselle are the two sumptuously rounded combinations of mountain and cliff which together with sandbars, miles in length, form the chief landmarks of the approach.

Here in these islands, whose history dates back to the French discovery and possession of Canada, one happens on rare things—women in sunbonnets riding in carts, knitting in hand; berry-pickers, ready with a pleasant smile to have their pictures taken; hay-makers, whole family groups, the women and children all helping with the hay while the good weather lasts; little boys sailing toy boats that they themselves have modelled and fitted; men and women wearing homespun garments and homemade shoes of sealskin; basket makers and hookers of gay patterned rugs.

READ INSURANCE POLICY

Householders Careless About Details That Might Mean Loss

The following, or a similar clause, appears in all policies of fire insurance: "The company is not liable for losses following, that is to say: Where the insurance is upon buildings or their contents for loss caused by the want of good and substantial brick or stone or cement chimneys; or by ashes or embers being deposited, with the knowledge and consent of the assured, in wooden vessels; or by stoves or stovepipes being, to the knowledge of the assured, in an unsafe condition, or improperly secured."

Notwithstanding this, in one year in Canada, there were 51 fires from defective and overheated stoves and furnaces; 52 from defective and overheated pipes, chimneys, etc., and 8 by live coals and hot ashes. Should the insurance companies take advantage of this clause, many victims of their own carelessness would find themselves without any recompense for their losses.

Disposal of Ashes
During the winter months the disposal of ashes from stoves and furnaces demands attention. Though many fires are caused by the disposal of hot ashes against frame buildings, wooden fences, etc., the practice is still continued. Too much care cannot be given to the disposal of ashes. Either metal containers should be used, or the ashes should be placed at a safe distance from anything combustible.

"Calf" Week

The terms "calf week," "cow week" and "bull week" are applied in many of England's great industrial centres to the three weeks before Christmas, the holiday week. In these weeks the men work time and a "calf week," "cow week" and "bull week" in "bull week" double their wages to make up for loss of night sleep by the Christmas holidays.

NEW COMPANY AT FLORENCEVILLE

B. F. Smith and J. B. Daggett Interests Are United and Dr. MacIntosh Joins

The announcement is made this week of the incorporation of a new company that will be known as the B. F. Smith, Ltd., and will be an amalgamation of the interests of B. F. Smith and J. B. Daggett & Co. The head office will be at East Florenceville, and the authorized capital is $49,000. Under the act of incorporation, the company are empowered to deal in farm produce, farm machinery, automobiles, gasoline engines, etc., to carry on general farming, and to build and operate butter and cheese factories.

The following is the personnel of the company: B. F. Smith, Harry G. Smith and I. N. Tompkins of East Florenceville, Roy Hunter of Bath, L. DeC. MacIntosh of Hartland and J. B. Daggett of Fredericton. At a meeting of the company recently held at Florenceville the following were elected as officers: J. B. Daggett, president; H. G. Smith, vice-president; Roy Hunter, secretary-treasurer; B. F. Smith, local manager; directors, J. B. Daggett, B. F. Smith, H. G. Smith, Roy Hunter and L. DeC. MacIntosh. It is their intention to establish produce warehouses along the line of the C. P. R. and Valley railroads for the handling of potatoes, turnips, hay and all farm produce.

Mending the Roads

Critics of the provincial government, especially those who discuss repair of the roads, will perhaps bear in mind the fact that the government has been in office only five months, of which at least three were quite unfit for roadwork. In other words, the department of Hon. Mr. Veniot has had not more than two months of really fit weather for good work on the roads, and yet their are some critics unfair enough to find fault because in two months he has not removed all traces everywhere of the nine years of neglect which brought the roads to such a state of disrepair. Those who are fair-minded enough to give credit where credit is due are reporting a great improvement in the state of the roads, as a result of the systematic repair work done to as large an extent as possible in so short a time and under the exceptional conditions in regard to weather and labor which have prevailed this year. Hon. Mr. Veniot does not hesitate to say that the roads are bad. He knows it, for he has been steadily on the job, inspecting them for himself and arranging for as much repair as possible this year in the worst places. The Times ventures to predict that before the present legislature has lived out its term there will be a very marked improvement in the roads, all over the province. Meanwhile let it not be forgotten that the Foster government has only been in office five months, of which only two afforded good weather for work on the roads, after an exceptionally wet spring and early summer. POTATOES MAY SELL FOR $1.25

Is the Prediction of a Well Known Shipper

"The New Brunswick potato crop is excellent this year," was the optimistic statement made by F. G. Scott, of the New Brunswick Potato Exchange to the Montreal Star the other morning. The potato crop was good everywhere in fact, he said, and the United States government predicted a surplus of a million bushels. Prices were bound to be low, and would likely rule between $1 and $1.50 per 90 lb. bag. The estimate of $1.25 made by a member of the food commission, he considered very fair.

Last year's soaring market would not be repeated this year, he said. Canadian prices followed American prices last winter, but this year the United States would rely on its own production, and consequently there would be no demand for Canadian potatoes. There was no export to Great Britain which reduced the foreign demand to Cuba and the West Indies. Shipping to these points would begin in October and continue until the weather was too cold to handle them. Prices at the present time were fictitious and a lower level was looked for as soon as shipping began in quantity. Potatoes were still too small to be marketed except for immediate use.

Apples would probably be dear, said Mr. Scott, in spite of expectations to the contrary earlier in the season. Producers in the maritime provinces looked for difficulty in finding a market when the embargo was placed on Canadian apples. The Ontario crop is pronounced practically a failure which leaves the lower province production as the sole supply of the Canadian market.

"Prices vary from $6 to $8 a barrel today," Mr. Scott concluded, "and from the present outlook they will stay there."
