

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580
(716) 872-4503

CIHM/ICMH
Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH
Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

© 1982

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

- ☐ Coloured covers/Couverture de couleur
- ☐ Covers damaged/
Couverture endommagée
- ☐ Covers restored and/or laminated/Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée
- ☐ Cover title missing/Le titre de couverture manque
- ☐ Coloured maps/
Cartes géographiques en couleur
- ☐ Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/ Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)
- ☐ Coloured plates and/or illustrations/Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur
- ☒ Bound with other material/Relié avec d'autres documents
- ☐ Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distortion le long de la marge intérieure
- ☐ Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.
- ☐ Additional comments:/ Commentaires supplémentaires:

- ☐ Coloured pages/
Pages de couleur
- ☐ Pages damaged/
Pages endommagées
- ☐ Pages restored and/or laminated/Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
- ☒ Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
- ☐ Pages detached/Pages détachées
- ☒ Showthrough/
Transparence
- ☐ Quality of print varies/Qualité inégale de l'impression
- ☐ Includes supplementary material/Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
- ☐ Only edition available/Seule édition disponible
- ☐ Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/
Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

10X	14X	18X	22X	26X	30X
<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
12X	16X	20X	24X	28X	32X

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

University of British Columbia Library

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

University of British Columbia Library

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ▼ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

rrata
o pelure, n à

AN ADVENTURE IN CARIBOO.

HAVING in my time wandered over no small part of the globe, and being now laid up in ordinary, it is my chief delight to toss over the sere and yellow leaves of my memory by the help of travelled visitors. Such wayfarers are the most honoured and welcome guests of my old oak-panelled smoking-room, on whose walls hang many an antlered trophy of the chase; and many a weapon, from my own well-used English guns to the "curst Malayan kreese" from Perak and Salangore, serves, if not to point a moral, at all events to invite or suggest many a tale.

My old friend Captain P—— was here at the end of last year for a week's visit and the reversion, in the matter of pheasants, of my more modern friends' leavings. Those young gentlemen are not satisfied with anything less than twenty brace a day to each gun, but we old stagers are not such epicures,—we who know what it is to shoot for our suppers, and to go hungry then. P——'s best stories, I think, hail from the West; though there are few of the parochial divisions of this planet that would not furnish him with a text. But he handles the West as if he loved it, as Izaak Walton bade us handle the frog. He is at home anywhere there: on the Prairies, the Rocky Mountains, the Pacific Coast from Alaska to Panama. He had been, many years ago, a Government officer, magistrate, gold-escort captain or the like, in British Columbia.

On the evening which I will take as an epoch to start with, our party consisted of a certain Chancery barrister, who shot well, drank fair, and had the sometimes provoking gift of summing up the merits of one of our tales of outland with a judicial neatness often not to be anticipated from their wild ingredients: the parson of the parish, who might sometimes, I fancy, have preferred whist, short or even long, to our everlasting travellers' tales: P—— and myself.

We had been conversing on the subject of flies. Our remarks had been severe on those works of Nature, and devoid of any shade of Brahminical charity. Their splendid impudence had been dealt with, and the barrister had even cited Mr. Ruskin against them. The rector had reminded us of the etymology of the title, "Beelzebub." I, for my part, though certainly against the grain, had assumed the brief of devil's advocate, and pleaded that some doctors (names unknown) had held that mosquito bites (in quantity unknown) will act (in circumstances not precisely stated) as a prophylactic against fever.

"Although," said P——, after meditatively filling up his long tumbler and cramming a fresh charge of kanaster into his vast meerscham, "although flies once did help me to a little fortune (it was over seven thousand dollars), yet they must not call me as a witness to character. I'm dead against them: 'La mort sans phrase' is my verdict."

We waited, for indeed he was the last speaker on the subject, and we were quartering the ground to flush a story, or some subject to shoot a story at.

"The best fellow, the very best out and away, of my acquaintance in the French army—and in the Crimean days and before that I knew many—was Hector Cardee, a squadron-leader of Macmahon's out there in the mud in Algeria—as good a soldier and comrade as ever slapped a sword home in scabbard. He was mighty quick at pulling it out, too, by the same token."

We thought a story was to the fore now,

the fl
"V solem
he di fly on fate fo
his bo
shake yonder mented
And P.
vates sa indigna seemed person
utteranc
All ti
clearly and the
by sayin
case for seven the
"We'
1860, or pay of ou
no small
it, in her Columbia
and had so tifarious maintenan
the gold-e
fall of tha
and in th
the colony to speak b winter beg frostily to that it was boxes, and ing their f
done well b ties of the Victoria; if even 'Frisco
while men w
quick wings balance the road only to after a lon hibernating
tree-martins
"It cost

now, but none of us could think how the flies were to come in.

"Well," resumed he after some solemn puffs of his calumet, "well, he died—of the bite of a bluebottle fly on the sands of Boulogne! A queer fate for such a fire-eater! Poor Hector! his bold soul must have made the air shake over those meadows of asphodel yonder, when he realised it, and commented there on it in his free fashion!" And P——, in the character of Hector's rates sacer, here blew out so vast and indignant a volume of smoke that it seemed to be that hero's shade in person and in the very act of the utterances suggested.

All this was very moving, but we clearly had not yet flushed the story; and the barrister found voice for us by saying drily, "Let us have the case for the flies, such as it is—the seven thousand dollars."

"Well," said P——, "in the year 1860, or thereabouts, I was taking the pay of our Sovereign Lady, and giving no small share of very hard work for it, in her Majesty's colony of British Columbia. I was a justice of the peace, and had somewhat indistinct and multifarious duties connected with the maintenance of order generally, and of the gold-escort in particular. In the fall of that year I was in the northern, and in those days extreme, limits of the colony—at the Forks of Quesnelle, to speak by the the card—as an early winter began to whisper hoarsely and frostily to the various mining-camps that it was time to be pulling up flume-boxes, and for prudent folk to be turning their faces south. Men who had done well began to think of the amenities of the saloons and billiard-halls of Victoria; if very well, they dreamed of even 'Frisco as a place of hybernation; while men who had been avoided by the quick wings of Fortune were fain to balance the prospect of taking the down road only to re-measure its weary miles after a long winter, against that of hibernating in the society of icicles and tree-martins.

"It cost money then to insure the safe transport of 'dust' from the mines to the lower country. The smart red jackets of the gold-escort had to be paid for as smartly; nor, if the truth must be told, was the security so provided altogether equal to that of a Chubb's safe in a bank-cellar. The escort boys were only men of mould. They could fill a pit like other men; and though there was never a serious attack in my time, we had plenty of alarms to season our excursions with, and one abortive ambuscade. Many owners of 'dust' wouldn't trust it to the escort, and some didn't like the toll; and so it came to pass that many a little Jew trader, of furtive proclivities and frugal mind, would sneak down the forest-trails carrying his wealth himself, and make his way (ay, marry, and sometimes fail to make it!) in a hunted sort of fashion to the lower country. And many a stout Californian with buckskin belt well filled, or heavy saddle-bags, preferred his own insurance to that of 'the petticoat government' it was often his ungallant humour to rail against. Between these two sorts of wayfarer, the one fleeing like a partridge on the mountains, and the others in jovial Chaucerian sort of cavalcade, banded together for safety and good company, swaggering and ruffling through the primeval woods, there were many grades of travellers. These fellows, however, stick to one's memory—gay with the glow of anticipated pleasures, pleasures to be all the sweeter by long and forced abstinence from them, comfortable and secure with a fortunate season behind them, with the bravery of bright revolver-butt and scarlet shirts, in hard training from successfully 'bucking at the tiger' of Nature in her most primitive form like men who had been warring with mammoth and mastodon and had come off winners—these boys made bright pictures enough. If there was no soldierly clash of stirrup and scabbard, no jingle of consecrated romance, no feather and flourish of war, yet the tin drinking-cup clinked gallantly against frying pan or kettle as they rode, and these paladins of pelf were, to do them bare justice, as full of fight as any soldiers who ever wore their country's colour.

"Part of the way I happened (having a duty just then to be performed in a quiet, non-official way) to join such a party as I have described going from the Forks of Quesnel's down to Williams's Lake. These two points are some hundred and fifty miles apart, and thirty miles a day in the woods was very good travelling. Slow it was, but not monotonous. If there were a monotone, it was of the dark and sombre twilight of the constant ceiling of pines through which the sun and upper air reached us arrow-wise. Below, there was a variety of travel: here a wet bottom of mud, deep enough and thick enough to pull an animal's shoe off: there a big fallen tree across the trail, to be negotiated with cattle which could fly as soon as jump; and these would be relieved by a red-wood tract of cedars, with a slippery carpet of needles so clean, so sweet, and in all weathers so dry, that it used to seem a shame not to off saddle and camp then and there instead of leaving it. At times the road would climb over a hogsback, or divide, and the travellers would toil and struggle up hill, to emerge in time upon some bare scalp of mountain—granite, syenite, or metamorphic rock—where the berberry or kiinni-kinnick enamelled the white quartz with its scarlet berry and glossy leaf, or where the sole vegetation the snow-water had to trickle through was composed of peat and patches of moss-hag. There was no game, nothing to shoot at here; unless, which Saint Hubert forbid! foul murder were done upon the chipmunks, a friendly gracious little race of striped squirrels, who frisk and flirt, and play at hide-and-seek with the human traveller along the wayside trees, or upon the whisky-jacks, portentously tame birds in Prussian colours of white and black, in size between a magpie and a wagtail, who enjoy all the immunities of our robin, and will perch on a man's knee while he is eating his dinner. No: there is nothing for the sportsman on these trails. What game there is listens to the freeborn accents of the white man, and shrinks deeper within the forest shades, and no traveller has leisure to seek it there.

"Well, we got down in time to Williams's Lake, a broad valley with two ranches or farms, about a mile apart, where onions, at fifty cents apiece, and milk (those two anti-scorbutic longings of the man of pork-and-beans) were to be obtained—a foretaste of the luxuries of the lower country. The houses were both well filled with guests, for other mining-districts were swelling the downward stream of travel. I will spare you a description of the manners and humours of these caravauserais, and go on to say that, having secured a tolerably promising corner for my blankets, I had rolled myself up in them, with my saddle for a pillow, and was well in the first dreamless sleep of the tired man, when—it was only about ten o'clock—a galloping horse suddenly pulled up outside, and loud cries—'Oh, Williams! you've got the judge there! We want the judge!'—waked me up. In that country it doesn't take much to open the weariest man's eyes, nor, on the other hand, is undue excitement fashionable among Anglo-Saxons; so, while the slight discrepancy between night and day dress was being rapidly adjusted, the whole story was told in a few curt sentences to this effect.

"At the other house a little difficulty had occurred—a shooting scrape. The victim was not dead yet, but as the manner of it—a felon shot from behind—had alienated the sympathies of the boys, it had resulted in the offender being 'corralled' and detained, and the judge, who was reported to be at the other ranche, being sent for.

"The interior of the other house, which was soon reached, to eyes fresh from the picture large l into ro caverno nocturn vaster came fr endwise red upo company "The in these and bea sphere. dwindle, as little cynical, of what fact, but about i phatic f as such, the feeli Few of "Hamle thought- come; if now; if come: t the har Nature b as divine rather h mouse sq "Before propped weak, vi had been was bleed The mur with his by a lon two silent revolver a similar him. Li true mine of the to of a gam the open had been by this r entrance v unities of a man's dinner.

e sports-
me there cents of s deeper and no t there.
time to lley with about a at fifty ose two of the
were to
of the
ry. The lled with ripts were stream of escription nours of
on to say rably proankets, I nem, with l was well p of the only about
orse sud-
and loud ve got the e judge!
country it
e weariest er hand, is ble among the slight
and day justed, the
a few curt little diffi-
ing scrape.
yet, but as shot from sympathies ted in the d detained, eported to
g sent for.
her house,
eyes fresh from the cool dark night presented a picture that I well remember. The large log-building was not divided into rooms and passages, and the cavernous glooms and abysses of its nocturnal condition made it seem vaster than it was. The chief light came from the fire of pine logs stacked endwise up the chimney; and it flashed red upon a strange and numerous company.

"There was, as a matter of course in these womanless lands, an efficient and beautiful manliness in the atmosphere. Death! What is death to dwindle, peak, and pine about? Still as little a thing to be frivolous, or cynical, or to bluster about. A fact of what we call life, like any other fact, but with the gravity of finality about it: one of the more emphatic facts, and to be reckoned with as such, but no more. Such was the feeling that animated these men. Few of them, probably, had read "Hamlet," but his thought was their thought—"If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all." And if the hard life at close grips with Nature brings about the same results as divine philosophy, who would not rather hear the lark sing than the mouse squeak?

"Before the fire, not unskillfully propped up, was the victim—a poor, weak, vicious-looking creature. He had been shot through the lungs, and was bleeding fast to death internally. The murderer sat a little way off with his back to the wall, fenced in by a long table. Opposite him sat two silent guards, one with his cocked revolver in his hand, the other with a similar weapon on the table before him. Like the other's, his was no true miner's face. He looked a villain of the town, like the understrapper of a gambling hell; not a villain of the open air at all. The crowd, who had been withheld from their sleep by this red business, welcomed my entrance with a grave silence.

"Good evening, gentlemen, where is the owner of this house?"

"He stepped forward and quietly said that the two men had arrived together from the northern road on the evening before, and had rested at his house the whole day; that about nine that evening he observed them come in from outside together; that they had a drink of whisky at his bar, and he now remembered that they seemed sulkily disposed to each other. They must have gone out again, for half-an-hour later he heard a pistol shot close outside, and, the door opening, the wounded man staggered in, and fell on the floor, bleeding freely at the mouth. It was found on examination that the shot had entered the back and come out at the breast. The poor wretch was unable to say more than, 'Let—the—old—man—take—care!'

"To my request for further evidence, a respectable-looking man, Joe Davis of Antler, deposed that he was coming in from doing up his mule in the barn when he saw in the dusk two figures near the house door: he heard words of apparent dispute, then the report and flash of a pistol shot: then a man ran almost into his arms, whom he seized and disarmed of a dragoon revolver (produced). The man sat there (pointing to the prisoner).

"I then approached the victim, for whom there was obviously no aid in surgery, and, having improved the position in which he lay a little, could get nothing from him but a faint answer, by sign and look, to the effect that the prisoner was the man who had shot him.

"I then asked the prisoner, 'What is your name?'

"James Connor.'

"Where of?'

"Shirt-tail Cañon, Cariboo.'

"Did you shoot this man?'

"That's for you to find out, if it's your business.'

"Do you know his name?'

"Silence. 'James Connor, you are my prisoner in the Queen's name, on the charge of attempting to murder a man here present, name unknown. You will be good enough to hand over any concealed weapons, or papers you have about you, or I shall take them from you by force.'

"The men opposite him deliberately covered him at two feet distance with their revolvers as he slowly produced a common butcher's knife from under his coat, and a derringer from his trouser-pocket, and further, with some reluctance, a rude little pocket-book or leather case (which, by the way, contained nothing of any importance as evidence), and a very artistic bowie knife, with a scientifically proportioned blade and a haft of green shell-work, such as San Francisco cutlers are proud to make. My volunteer constables then civilly informed me that they, though not British subjects, had been moved by the special nature of this 'difficilty' to act as they had done; but that beyond 'clinchng' the prisoner for me with their experienced hands, they could do and would do no more. Accordingly, a couple of stout raw hide lariats were produced, with one of which Mr. Connor was very neatly and quickly bound, while the end of the other was so arranged round his neck that, while he could in no wise slip his head out of it, the holder of the other end of it, passing as it did over a hook in the roof of the room, could strangle him incontinently at will with a slip-knot well lubricated for the purpose. The situation was not agreeable for me, and scarcely dignified. The duty of a constable or jailer thrust upon a magistrate: the surrounding persons, at the best cold assentors to 'British justice;' at the worst, when the indignation of the original witnesses should have subsided (and Mr. Davis refused to wait voluntarily, and carried his summons as witness, scrawled by me on an old envelope, down country with him), too probable sympathisers with, and perhaps rescuers of, the criminal. The only hope I had was in a rumour that the judge of the Criminal Assize was reported to be somewhere in the neighbourhood. He, at all events, would have physical force of some kind, and would relieve me of my prisoner. Him, whatever might betide, I determined to hold while hand and hilt kept together, and while the tired eyelids of my tired eyes could be induced to keep apart. Looking back now on what did happen, I hardly know if I should so have determined could I have foreseen it.

"Gentlemen! I never slept for five nights and four days from the moment of that capture! They tried to bribe me: first with one gold watch, then with three, all of the huge American pattern: then with leather bags of 'dust,' also increasing in value. At last I had to threaten that I would hang the man, with the lasso that never left my hand, if they did not cease. At length, on the evening of the fourth day, when I positively believe I was light-headed, but keeping a firm grip on the lasso, nevertheless—(whether the poor devil, Connor, was light-headed, I did not perhaps too curiously consider)—without even a rumour from the road to prepare me, dear old N., the magistrate of the district we were in, having heard of my strange plight, sent two special constables to relieve me of my man. They did so, and let him escape within the hour. 'Bribed?' you ask—who knows? Connor's friends, or the law's enemies, were many and rich. They had had relays of horses on more trails than one for several days, I learned afterwards. As for me, I slept for six-and-thirty hours without a break, and have now arrived at the point when I can introduce the promised flies into my narrative.

"The foregoing unsatisfactory episode being ended, with the only good result that my sometime jaded mare was now as fit as a four-year-old, I went about my business, having received a cheerful message from Mr. Connor that he intended to shoot me 'on sight.' This stereotyped warning of the West generally means business, and is considered by the party receiving it as a legitima

anticipa
I never
and I l range of

"On m
from Wi
a waysid liar, and belongin looking r two of hovered
as if desi appeared having ta was, how very teet
He appe
barely ex
with each
next mor waited t
roads. V
sort of r
the beam looking o
in the cor
with som
of his fa
strange r tween th
the eiphe
sort of s
were trou gating al
in the p twitched
and I, wi assumed t frightenin give him a
of uncons

"Soon I
moved, t
fastened u
a few se
'Jedge, I
to lay out
don't laff,
me of m
There's a
here work myself—w

legitimate warrant for any extreme of anticipatory reprisal and defence; but I never expected to see Connor again, and I blew his message out of the range of practical politics.

"On my way down, some fifty miles from Williams's Lake, I encountered at a wayside house a face that was familiar, and presently remembered it as belonging to an elderly and feeble-looking miner, who, in the first day or two of my acting as constable, had hovered about me in a diffident way, as if desirous of speaking, and yet disappeared without any actual parley having taken place. The strange thing was, however, that he was now in the very teeth of winter, going up country! He appeared still very shy, and we barely exchanged half a dozen words with each other till about eleven the next morning, to which hour I had waited to let the ice melt off the roads. We were sitting together in a sort of rude verandah that gathered the beams of the morning sun; I looking over some notes, and he dozing in the corner of the settle. I noticed with some compassion the deep lines of his face, and idly wondered what strange matters might be read between them, had any one the key to the cipher. The flies, the meanest sort of all, the common house-flies, were troublesome, and perhaps investigating also the strange matters writ in the poor deep wrinkles. He twitched and moaned pathetically; and I, with the end of my long glove, assumed the humble negro function of frightening away the blue-tail flies to give him a little more of the sweet rest of unconsciousness.

"Soon I was aware, though he never moved, that his weary gaze was fastened upon my proceedings. After a few seconds he spoke slowly:— 'Jedge, I take it mortal kind of you to lay out on me for that there stint: don't laff, but it seems to kinder mind me of my mother forty years ago. There's a pesky sight of flies in this here world. I mostly skeer 'em off myself—when they don't—bide!'

"There was an indescribable pathos in the old man's nasal drawl. He spoke as one who had got his death wound in his heart, as he went on: "I reckon you remember me in the crowd yonder, when you corralled that critter, Connor? I had reasons to be grateful to you, jodge, and with my poor sister's son, Dave Crow (that was him as was shot by Connor), with him—God's mercy on him even!—out of my path, and Connor chained up in your British calaboose, or, may be, hanged for good and for all, I guessed the last of my troubles was over. I was wrong though. I was half in the mind to let on up yonder and tell what I had to do with it all; but it seemer to kinder fix itself so's I'd better not—and I let out for the down trail, wall, not lighter—there ain't much lightness left me, I reckon, naow—but feeling I'd better not meddle with the way things was fixed up for me. This yer was my second season in a creek, 'way over between Antler and Yaller Jacket. Last year I made a little under ten thousand dollars in coarse gold, much of it fossicked out in Australian fashion. I was too sad a man to be much raised by that or anything in this world; but I each'd half of it under the floor of my cabin, and tuk the rest down last winter. I wrote to America to Dave, a bad boy, but all of my blood then above the grass roots—nothin' left naow—nothin'! I told Dave to come on and be a son to me. He came—sure he came. I wonder he spared the money for that naow. We come up together last spring, and the luck held—both ways, jedge, the luck held. The gold panned out well, and Dave's ill-luck, in the shape of James Connor, rejoined him up here. I guess it was a sorry record bound them two boys in sech a tight cahoot together; but I needn't reckon that over to you naow, if so be I knowed it all. I haven't been so much alone—I've not marched the most of my days to the sorreful tune I hev—not to be able to read men's hearts, you kin lay your bottom dollar on that, jedge. Them men meant murder!—they meant it for weeks, and meant it for months. Seems to me now I've raked some in, that money ain't so very much in this world as they make of it; yet to a man who's bin powerful poor for sixty year, it figures large when it seems like he'd lose it, and then—the nat'ral contrayriness of human natur'! I worked and watched agin them two wolves enough to eat a man's heart out. We shared up evens three weeks agone, and let out together for Victory. You know what happened at Williams's Lake, and you kin put a meanin' to it now. Two days ago I heard Connor was broke loose. He don't know where the dust is buried, but he reckons putty straight that some is buried, and may I'—here the old man, to my astonishment, exploded a train of some six of the most terribly ingenious oaths I ever heard in British Columbia—'if he does find it, and does keep it on this side of hell!'

"We had some conversation about the hardships and dangers of the w^h of which he made light; and then after some simple allusion to my tender sympathies with him as evinced by my keeping the flies off him just before, he begged me with great urgency to see him again at a camping-place in Cariboo, which I should pass through in some eight or ten days on my last journey up. He said it was important, and promised to explain why when we should meet; and so we parted for that time.

"You will be pleased to suppose that these ten days have elapsed, and that I am back in the snow and sitting in a rude, deserted wayside cabin, with the old man again for companion. My horse has been coaxed within the cabin, too; and the deep silence of the snow world lies on us as if we were the last survivors of an era.

"I told you, jedge, I wanted you to take some kinder statutory declaration, and to make some sorter inventory as would make an old man pass in his cheeks with some sorter peace of mind. I told you there was a bit of Cinnabar prospectin' as nobody but me did know, or was like to know. I told you, jedge, that this was the last favour I reckoned to ask of livin' man, and now I beg and implore you this very night to come. I know the trail as well as the rifles in my own flume. Five miles, five hours, and a road (the way I'll take you) fit for the Governor's lady.'

"The weird fascination of the man's appeal borrowed nothing from his words, or even his manner in the ordinary sense; but there was a magnetism in it that reminded me of old German ballads, and that, at any rate, gained his point.

"That night's march over those mighty metamorphic rocks, through that gigantic volcanic ruin now frozen so stiff and cold, though I shall never forget it, would require a Dante to sing and a Doré to depict its awful beauties. At last we reached the claim. The snow had clothed the torn and riven banks and heaps of boulders, the ordinary ravages of mining, with its smooth and pure outline; and the cabin door, deftly and speedily opened by the owner's familiar hand, let us into its neat and orderly precincts. Materials for light and fire were ready prepared for use, though we had antedated the matter by a whole winter, and having used them we sallied forth again to stable my horse in a somewhat distant shelter. On our return some coffee and crackers (biscuits, that is) lent a sense of fragrance and festivity to the little shanty; but I was shocked to observe the weakness of the old man when he was thawed from the cold. He waived aside, however, all notice of this, and showed me how to supplement the scanty comforts of the lowest of three bunks with a nondescript collection of coverings, old sacks, and even planks and dry branches, till my future bed looked like a wood-pile into which I was to creep feet foremost.

