ITALIAN NAVY EX-PIRED AT WORK

Was Stricken Suddenly While on Construction Work.

ON INTERNATIONAL.

Angelo DeMarco, an Italian laborer, working on construction work on the International railway, expired Tuesday at one of the camps and was brought here for burial. He had been working as usual Monday, but Tuesday was not well, and he expired suddenly during the day, heart failure being the cause of his death. He was brought here and taken to Undertaker Graham's room. Deceased was 32 years of age.

UNION PICNIC WAS LARGELY ATTENDED

About Three Hundred Parents and Children Enjoy Day.

BEAUTIFUL SPOT.

The annual union Sunday school picnic was held at New Mills on Wednesday and a very large number went to that beautiful picnic place for the day. Wednesday dawned fine and clear and the spirits of young and old rejoiced that nature had been kind and was about to favor them with a fine day among many rainy ones. But about 8 o'clock their spirits fell to zero on beholding the heavy rain which fell in torrents for a short time. About 8:15 the sun struggled through the clouds and the more courageous ventured forth, and later more put in their appearance, until at 10 to nine o'clock seven cars were well filled. The weather looked unpromising, but young and old were determined to have a good time.

The beautiful picnic grounds at New Mills, owned by Mr. B. Windsor, and so kindly placed at the disposal of the committee in charge of the picnic, were reached about ten o'clock, and soon all were comfortably settled in the beautiful grove. The weather conditions improved rapidly until by noon it was a perfect picnic day, partly a cloud in the sky and just enough breeze to cool the air.

After refreshments were served a game of ball was played, at which some of the old timers showed their skill. Ingram with his latest American battery was too much for the batsmen and many were struck out. Bynes and Wren were slow at getting to

COMMITTEE HAS SMALL SURPLUS

Celebration Was Financed And Eight Dollars Remain To The Good-A Good Showing.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

These total expenses in Campbellton's banner celebration were just $229.86, which with the Town grant and other minor receipts was more than met, there being $8.26 to the good.

When the celebration was first considered it was estimated that between four and five hundred dollars would be necessary to pay expenses, but by good business principles and careful management this amount was cut down to the above amount, and nothing was neglected because of scarcity of funds. The Committee is to be congratulated on the good showing made.

The following is the financial statement issued by the Secretary Treasurer:

CONVICTS GETS AWAY FROM JAIL

Climbed Fence With Aid of Plank and Are Free.

HIDING IN WOODS.

For some time there have been a number of cases of typhoid fever in Campbellton, in fact more than should prevail, and the Board of Health is investigating the cause of the outbreak.

A meeting of the Board was held yesterday afternoon, when various matters were discussed. A number of complaints were made that pipes were kept within the town without a license from the Board of Health, contrary to the Public Health Act of the province. These persons were notified to remove same forthwith or they would be prosecuted.

Complaints were also made of the condition of a number of back yards and closets and the owners were notified to give them proper attention at once.

Complaints were laid against five property owners that their property was in a very unsanitary condition and they will be compelled to make proper sanitary arrangements at once, and to enter the sewer according to subsection 11 of By-law No. 22.

A number of cases of typhoid fever were reported, and on examination it was found that in nearly all cases they were in houses not connected with the sewerage system.

Although the Board was of the opinion that the water supplied to citizens is free from fever germs, yet

It appears that the engine was at a considerable distance from where the accident happened and that the parties in charge of the engine had no knowledge whatsoever that there was any horse in danger.

British Craft in Collision Went to Bottom With Crew.

SOME SAVED.

LONDON, July 15.—A wireless message received at Portsmouth states that a submarine torpedo boat C 11 was in collision last night with an unknown steamer near Lowestoft and was sunk with its crew of sixteen men. Another submarine boat C 12 was damaged in the collision but the crew was saved. It is understood that the crew of the C 11 had no chance of escape, being inside the submarine and went to the bottom with it.

No complete report of the accident has yet been received, but the latest advice from Sherborne, whose assistance was sent, indicate that some members of the crew of C 11 were saved.

GRANDSTAND IN SUMMERSIDE RINK COLLAPPED

CHARLOTTETOWN, July 15.—Shortly after the big London show started up in the skating rink, Summerside, last night, the grand stand gave way. About 500 persons were precipitated to the floor and a number hurt, but for the most part escaping injuries. Amongst the number was W. S. Garrison, a well known fruit agent, who did not fare so well. Speaking of Gloucester county at Midford Tuesday evening Hon. Mr. Morrisy said Robinson had been supported by three Conservatives from Gloucester of last election and still talked about party lines. They were ready to hammer the life out of Morrisy because he was a Liberal!

SMITH LAKE WATER
There has appeared from time to time in the Tribune criticism of the so called Smith Lake water. Does the Editor of the Tribune and others know that the water has always had to pass through Smith Lake before it could reach the reservoir, even before Smith Lake was acquired by the town. The water from Parker or Pritchard's Lake passes through Smith Lake on its way to the town reservoir.
NATIONAL MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN
The Laymen's Movement to Conduct District Meetings Throughout the Dominion—Denominational Secretaries to Co-operate—A Call to Prayer.
The Canadian Council of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which has the direction of the work throughout the Dominion, has just issued a statement as to its policy and plans for the immediate future.
The Policy was adopted and then submitted to the different Denominational Committees and heartily endorsed by them. The Denominational Secretaries who agreed that the best results come to their work through the larger inter-denominational meetings will therefore all co-operate in the campaign of the fall and winter. This will include district meetings covering two days each, in every Province of the Dominion, so located that every church may be able to send one or more delegates without great outlay of time or money.
It is expected that invitations will be received from different centres, and the Council will make selections with the best interests of the entire work in mind. The first meetings will probably be held in Ontario in September and those in the western provinces in October and November.
An earnest call to prayer for wisdom in locating and planning these meetings has been issued to cooperating clergy and laymen throughout the Dominion.
DANCED HIGHLAND FLING AT 99
Mrs. Janet McCorkindale, Strathroy, Ont., who has passed her 99th birthday, was given a party the other day by the London pipes, who were there for a celebration. They were escorted to her house, where they played several times. After which the good old lady lanced the Highland fling. The pipes were highly amused.

WOULD YOU CONVICT A PRISONER ON CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Mate's primitive as in the age of crawling things brought the two young men, with tense, ready muscles and cut thrust jaws, face to face and eager for battle. A motive old as life itself impelled them each toward the other's throat—the disputed favor of a woman. And here intruded the note of a higher development and civilization, for instead of standing aside in savage content the woman threw herself between the two.

With hands outstretched she mumbled motions them apart. For a second they hesitated, then obeyed the pleading, imploring gesture. Thereafter each took his leave formally and left her, white-faced and alert, among the shadows of the porch. Tyler was the first to go, and he awaited Bell at the garden gate. Their figures stood clear in the moonlight and the girl watched anxiously, but the red hood of instant rage had left their throats cold and restrained.

"George Bell," said Tyler, "this is no place for a settlement, but I'll make it my business to see that you move to some time."

The other, without pausing, moved past through the gate, but turned at the other side.

"I reckon you know where to find me when you're ready, John Tyler. We'll arrange our little differences where you won't be interrupted and whenever you're lookin' for some trouble."

"That's me," remarked Tyler briefly. They parted, one walking toward the town, the other toward his tethered horse at the post, without a backward glance. The girl, who had listened intently, remained until the footsteps of Tyler had died away down the path and Bell's mount had vanished over a swelling rise. Then, filled with a dread she felt powerless to remove, she hurried into her home, closing the door.

It was a Sunday night when the fear of defiance, in accepted Kentucky manner, was exchanged between the rival admirers of Ella McDonald. The quarrel had been a matter of slow growth, the outcome of the Blue Grass begonia's enmity and frequent meetings on contested ground. She had given neither particular encouragement, but each grew to believe himself obstructed and a'ndged by the other, after the common persistence had driven other confidantes from the field. The cause of their enmity had played the familiar game, and at first with secrecy. But these were men of the sell, virile, masterful, impatient, and the inevitable sparks had been struck.

Tyler lived in the town, on the outskirts of which stood the McDonald place. Bell recently had been to a considerable estate and breeding farm, occupied his family mansion a few miles distant along the country road.

Early on the following Thursday morning the employes on the Bell farm, awaiting to work from breakfast, found the favorite horse of their employer, the one he most frequently rode, standing outside the gate of the stable yard, lathered and exhausted. The animal was spattered with mud, and the bridle had been torn away. The girl had loosened and the saddle hung awry against one flank with dragging stirrups. The stableman, stepping by force of habit to adjust the displacement even before he had exclaimed upon the singularity of it, cried out as he placed a hand upon the animal. The saddle leather on the right side was streaked and spashed with blood.

The alarm spread with scarce a word spoken, and men about the place were being collected by the overseer of the farm, Mason, before the stableman had removed the broken bridle. It was a matter calling for instant action, and action was something that Mason understood. A few sharp questions brought out that young Bell had started out on the preceding evening about seven o'clock, heading at a brisk gallop toward the town.

"There's only one place he'd be like to go on that road," less he passed the stableman's comment.

"And that's to the McDonald's," added the overseer. "He hasn't missed a week time out of mind sparkin' that girl."

"Four of the farm hands, under the lead of Mason, quickly saddled and mounted, and the group made off down the highway at top speed. They drove rein before the McDonald's house while the family were still at breakfast, and the overseer, hat in hand, walked into the room without ceremony.

"My parson, Miss McDonald," he asked abruptly, "but did Mr. Bell come to see you last night?"

The young woman, startled and coloring under the sudden question, answered that she had not seen Bell since Sunday night. The man turned to her father, with his word of explanation.

"He started, I suppose, for your place last night. His horse came home this morning with blood on the saddle. There's been some deviltry between them and here."

McDonald instantly volunteered his services, and the men left the house. The girl, alone with her mother, sat with compressed lips and flushed cheeks. For her the affair had a greater significance than she cared to acknowledge. There was an element of fear and self-reproach in her reflections, but she was not given to subtleties and she set herself to await the outcome of the search.

While one of the farmhands pressed forward into the town to notify the authorities of the facts the rest of the party was split up under the direction of Mason, and the laborious work of investigation along five miles or more of road was begun. It was evident that Bell's thoroughbred had travelled far and through rough country, but the natural suspicion was that its wanderings had been those of a riderless steed. The thought of foul play was uppermost, and the highest spot for violence was along the highway. Within a few hours nearly a hundred of the townsmen, mounted and on foot, came to aid the searchers. The day closed barren of results.

The task was resumed the next day and the next. Public excitement, which had raged high with the first word of murder, began to subside. It was advanced as possible that the wealthy young landowner had left the country on a lark, or perhaps was being held for ransom. No one could suggest a feud in which he might have been involved. The residents of the village returned to their accustomed round, only Mason and his handful of assistants clinging to a wearying and seemingly hopeless search.

The first few fruitless days wore out Mason's impatience and it became after that a matter of dogged loyalty. He let it be known that he would pursue his tactics for a month if there were need, or until some word or a clue to the whereabouts of Bell came to light. One other member of the community, Ella McDonald, followed the progress of Mason's work with an interest equal to his own.

It was a full week after the Thursday on which the horse had returned without his owner when the discovery was made. Mason himself came upon it. The body of George Bell was found in a heavily wooded section about a hundred rods off the road and midway between his own home and that of the McDonalds. It had been divested of coat, shirt and boots. There was a wound almost as large as the palm of a hand upon the left shoulder blade. Subsequent medical investigation showed that the contents of both barrels of a shotgun had practically torn away the left side.

Rigid examination of the spot failed to reveal any clue. The revolver which Ella had been known to carry was missing, as was the belt from which the holster had hung at the back of the right hip. No trace could be found of the missing garments. A small sum of money and a pocket knife, emptying the inventory of what the young man was known to have had, still lay near by. The autopsy established that death must have been instantaneous. The corpse taken by the shot had been on an upward angle toward the opposite shoulder. From this it appeared beyond all question that the victim had been murdered while riding his horse and obdured of danger.

Mason made a close inspection of the features of the surrounding ground. He found that almost in a straight east to the highway a thick clump of bushes grew on both sides of the ditch affording a close cover, against which wagon wheels brushed in transit. There could have been fastened no better place for the ambushing of an unsuspecting traveler. He sought for marks that might have been left by a concealed assassin, but could discover none. He was more successful in finding proof that the body had been dragged from the road to its hiding place. In the dirt of the wagon track stains were easily obliterated, but through the thick, close woven underbrush he discovered fresh marks of blood. He noted as worthy of remembrance that the Wednesday night in question had been rainy and overcast. When he left the spot the overseer had a clear picture of the method by which the murderer had accomplished the crime.

While the coroner's jury was hearing the case the next day a buggy drove up to the town hall. From it alighted Ella McDonald, and the crowd made room for her as she moved into the building and sought entrance to the room in which the inquest was being held. She was agitated and under stress of deep emotion, but there was no hesitation in her manner. During the time since the disappearance of Bell she had taken her seriously to task. She had formed the resolution to tell everything she knew if there should prove to be a fatal outcome to the mystery, and she was now present to keep that resolve. The coroner had been notified of her desire to appear as a witness. She was called to the stand without pose or sentimentalism she related the sources of differences between Bell and Tyler and the scene on the porch. She repeated the phrase with which the men had parted, holding her breath in a steady, clear-eyed quality. Her recital was brief and dramatic, and the crowd sat breathless while she described her postponement of a furious quarrel by stepping between the enemies. When she came to an end with Tyler's phrase, "You'll have to answer to me sometime, there was a stir in the room, and several men started quietly and unobtrusively for the door.

The movement did not escape the quick eye of the Sheriff. He whisked a moment with three of his deputies and despatched them hurriedly. After further testimony by Mason and members of his party the coroner called for Tyler. There was no response. One of the Sheriff's men returned and the coroner was informed that despite his visits the Tyler home, but could not find the young man. It further had been learned that Tyler had not been at his home for about a week.

Mason was a man whose most marked characteristic was a need of rendering absolute fidelity to some one. His relations with Bell had been closer than those of master and man and he had accepted his employer unreserved devotion. The tragic death of the young landowner filled him with slow burning rage and the unreserved determination to devote himself to applying what assistance lay in his power toward the ends of justice. His mind was rather narrow but intensive and he possessed an admirable power of application. Meanwhile he was just and clear headed and was not the one to allow one set of appearances to outbalance another in favor of opinion. He did not merely demand of himself that some one must suffer for this thing, but that the guilty man must suffer.

It was this quiet, strong, forceful personality that now became dominant in the case. He followed the obvious track indicated by the testimony of Ella McDonald and applied himself to tracing Tyler's relations with Bell. He learned, in the first place, that there had been no opportunity for a meeting between the rivals after the throwing down of the gauntlet up to the time when Bell left his farm on Wednesday evening for the purpose, so far as could be judged, of visiting the girl. Neither of them had been seen at the McDonald house after Sunday night. His inquiry was then directed toward discovery of any communication that might have been passed between them for it ran in his mind that a place of meeting had been appointed at which they were to submit their quarrel to the arbitrament of personal combat. The association with which Bell had been widely argued, to Mason's mind, that Tyler knew where and at what time to expect his enemy.

There was some possibility of aid in the man instinctively found its complement in Ella McDonald before he had taken many steps into the affair. Her attitude toward Bell was much the same as his own, and although she had not loved Bell she felt a loyalty to his memory not unlinked with a desire to remove the shadow of reproach cast by her unthinking aggravation of a quarrel. If Tyler were innocent it was in her interest to prove him so. In any event she wanted the truth as keenly as did Mason.

The overseer visited her immediately after the inquest and obtained from her all details that might have a bearing on the crime. She supplied one fact of great importance. She said that on Tuesday she had received a note from Bell announcing that he would call to see her on Wednesday in the hope of settling her at home. Might it not be that some one had obtained word of the young man's movements from the note? She added that she suspected one of her servants, a negro, of aiding Tyler in his courtship toward the McDonald family and its affairs.

Pursuing the investigation, Mason questioned the negro and elicited the fact that he had been employed in some capacity by Tyler. Under pressure he admitted that the kitchen of the McDonald place was a cozy clearing house for gossip; that rumors of an impending quarrel between the suitors had been discussed and that one of the middle hall maids of Bell's intended visit to her mistress. This bit of news, he said, being of the kind which he had communicated to Tyler on several occasions, he had sought that young man on Tuesday night and informed him concerning the note.

Here was an important advance into the surrounding circumstances. Tyler, already stamped as Bell's enemy, was now clearly indicated as one of the very few persons who could have known beforehand of the plans of the land owner and the time at which he would be likely to be passing along the road.

While engaged in these preliminaries the overseer had not been idle. He was being pushed by the Sheriff and his aids. There had been no result. No one had seen him leave the town, nor could any member of his family give information as to the exact time of his departure or his present whereabouts.

Gaining no further result from inquiry into the complications that had preceded the murder, Mason now threw his own work parallel with that upon which the Sheriff was engaged. He was some possibility of aid in the man who had acted as Tyler's spy. The man had been discharged following the revelation of his secret transactions, and the overseer sought him out.

"Have you any idea what has become of Tyler?" was his direct question.

"No more'n you" came the sullen answer.

"Look here, you're out of work, aren't you?"

"Yes, I am, cause I couldn't find my blamed tongue. I ain't goin' to make no more plays like that."

"Well," said Mason, "it's pretty clear you haven't got much to expect from Tyler now. Here's fifty dollars. You get it the minute Tyler is landed in jail. I don't know and don't care, just now, whether he's innocent or guilty. What I want is to get him."

The negro glanced at the money but made no reply. The next day he sought the overseer.

"Have you looked for him at his uncle's house, about ten miles down river?"

"Ten minutes later Mason was galloping, rifle in hand, down the river road in the direction indicated by the negro. He had known in a vague way that Tyler's uncle lived in the country, but no one among the authorities had thought to look for him at such a place. They inclined to the belief that he had taken to the mountains or had headed for Louisville.

Mason rode up to the house of Benjamin Tyler, a tobacco "batter" in the early afternoon. He did not dismount, but thrust the horse close to the steps, thus bringing himself on a level with the porch and directly before the door. He waited until the clatter of his arrival should bring him a response, alert for danger and with his weapon ready in the crook of his elbow. There came lazily from the porch a hand inside, and a figure appeared in the doorway. Max's rifle came to his shoulder in a flash, and it was along the cross-sights that he looked the newcomer in.

"Just keep your hands where they are, John Tyler."

"The young man stood leaning with a hand on either side of the doorway, and starting at the warlike apparition thus suddenly projected from the sunshade of a summer day. Finally, having nothing to say, he turned to the situation, he spoke with a hard smile.

"What's wrong, Mason? taken to stidin' folks up for a livin'?"

"I ain't tryin' to work that game with me," said the overseer, sharply. "You know well enough what I'm here for. I'm a deputy sheriff, and I arrest you for the murder of George Bell."

Tyler started slightly and then sneered.

"I don't know what you're talkin' about, neither do you, I reckon. If you'd gives me half a chance you wouldn't be stidin' there so easy with

MAY SWEAR AT. CENTRAL, SAYS JUDGE

NEW YORK, July 15.—The Court of Appeals of Iowa has handed down a unique decision regarding the rights of the user of the telephone. A man "swore" at a young girl operating a central, whose celerity did not please him, and his phone was cut out by the company.
 He remonstrated, and was told that if he would promise to be a gentleman in the future he might have a phone, but he must eschew bad language, and moreover, must not listen to other people's private conversation.
 The subscriber refused to give any pledge, and took the case to court, where he did not have to deny the bad language or make any pledge, the higher court holding that telephone companies were in business to supply phones, and not to dictate the quality of the language used over them.

JOKE ON ROGERS

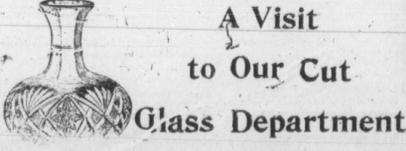

One of the characteristics of the late H. H. Rogers, his love of a joke, even at his own expense. The humorist nothing by that in Mr. Rogers' opinion. This was one of his favorite stories.
 He, William C. Whitney and several other friends were discussing the succession to the presidency of Yale, then vacant before the election of Prof. Hadley, who then held the chair of economics. Another professor, junior at the university than Dr. Hadley, was a candidate, and his chances of winning the honor were under discussion.
 "Well," said Mr. Rogers, "if I had been as long ground Yale as Prof. 80 and so I'd be president."
 "No, Henry," retorted Mr. Whitney, "you would probably own the ground and the buildings, but you would not be president."
 Mr. Rogers always told that story with a chuckle.
 "You can print that some time," he said.
