

DEFIANT UNDERWORLD KING IS GIVEN $30,000 FUNERAL

"Bloody" Angelo Genna, Suspected Murderer of Many, Buried At Chicago.

CIVIL WAR TOLL

By OWEN L. SCOTT.
(Copyright.)
Chicago, May 30.—They buried one more king of Chicago's gangland today amid a lavish $30,000 display of flowers and costly trappings that rivalled anything the gold coast has seen in the past.

At the time "Bloody" Angelo Genna was being laid in his final resting place, friends of Dion O'Banion, the underworld ruler whom Genna had been suspected of removing by gun tactics, unveiled a $20,000 obelisk which they have placed at the head of his grave in honor of his revered memory.

Police say that these are two more good gangsters. They are vivid examples of the toll that civil war is taking among the rivals for power in the underworld since Genna's death a few months ago were bridling themselves on being stronger than the law.

Genna, like O'Banion, had been a power in the vice rings of Chicago, a leader of the illicit liquor trade, suspected of murders galore but never convicted. His death has caused the police department to show what's happened to the gang leaders of the city since it answered the threat that a whole underworld kings would go their own sweet way without bothering about the police.

POLICE SEEK GIRL SLAYER

Young Woman Brutally Attacked and Killed in Brooklyn.

Associated Press Despatch.
New York, May 30.—Search continued today for the brutal slayer of Miss Florence Kane, who was identified by Detective James A. Kane of Brooklyn as his sister when in the course of duty he had to review the body.

The body was found by a milkman yesterday in a vacant lot near the girl's home. An autopsy revealed that the assailant forced his fingers down her throat in an effort to choke her screams. He battered, bound and gagged her and tore her clothes to ribbons. The body was lying face downward. On the bare back was a crucifix inscribed with "Father forgive me." In some weeds nearby was found a religious medal, but the young woman's rosary and crucifix chain are missing.

Miss Kane, having eight women friends after attending a musical comedy, was hurrying home to her husband's mother's when she was attacked. She was 30 years old. The crime is the second of a similar nature committed on the empty lot in six years. For the first a negro was executed. Several weeks ago near the same spot three girls fought off a man who attempted to attack them.

PURSE PRESENTED REV. A. THOMSON

Centennial Methodist Congregation Bids Farewell To Pastor—Welcomes Rev. Agnew.

A unique event was held at Centennial Methodist church last night, when the congregation met to bid farewell to their pastor of four years, Rev. A. E. M. Thomson, and Mrs. Thomson, who are moving to Ridout street church, South London, and also to welcome to their church the new pastor, Rev. J. A. Agnew, who has exchanged pulpits with Mr. Thomson.

The occasion took the form of a banquet, at which some 250 members of the congregation sat down to a delicious supper prepared by the women of the church, under the direction of Mrs. George Sinclair and Mrs. Joseph Calk.

Flowers Presented. J. W. Showler was the chairman of the evening and presided over the toasts. Rev. W. E. Milson presented the toast to Rev. A. E. M. Thomson, as the new president of the London conference, after which the following spoke for the various departments and organizations of the church: T. R. Wright for the trustees; Ed. G. Tuffa, superintendent of the Sunday school; Mrs. A. Russell, the W. M. S.; Mrs. A. E. Leth, the ladies' aid; Miss Edna Lancaster, young ladies' mission circle; A. Oldham, young people's league; and T. Leah, junior congregation.

A pleasing departure from the speeches at this time was the presentation of a lovely bouquet of flowers to Mrs. A. E. M. Thomson from the junior congregation. A. F. Clarke then spoke on behalf of the choir.

Farewell Address. The following address to Mr. Thomson was read by W. J. Wilkey: "Dear Pastor,—It is with real satisfaction that we avail ourselves of this special occasion to say to you how we have enjoyed your pastorate at Centennial.

"You have been a true leader in every sense. Under your guidance we have enjoyed a substantial progress in all departments. You helped to solve our financial problems so that the burden is much lighter to bear. The story of it all is a happy memory to us.

"We have valued highly your faithfulness as a pastor. Your sympathy and optimism were effective as you leave a city fifty years old. Truly a merry heart doeth good like a medicine.

"We have enjoyed your splendid ministry in the pulpit. Your inspiring messages have never been without an earnest evangelistic appeal and forcible application of the gospel to all the problems of life. We find ourselves as a church and people strengthened and established as a result of your four years' ministry.

"While you are to be no longer our pastor, we are grateful to remember that we can claim you always as a friend, and you will always have a high place in our affection.

"Will you kindly accept this gift as a slight token of our esteem and love for you?"

"We hope you will be long spared to continue in the holy work of the ministry, and that you and your family will greatly enjoy your new charge on the other side of the city. We will follow you with prayerful interest, and be assured you and yours will always have a welcome here."

Mr. Thomson was then presented with a purse of gold by George St. Clair, on behalf of the congregation.

A reception was tendered to the incoming pastor, Mr. Agnew, who gave an inspiring and excellent address. The evening was also featured with a very pleasing program. Miss Edna Lancaster, Miss Ruth Tuffa, and Miss Muriel Lancaster sang delightfully, accompanied by George Winterbottom, who presided at the organ. Miss Alice Dunlop gave a clever reading.

THREE BANDITS' ROB OFFICE IN DETROIT

Secure Over $2,000 From Private Bank—Escape in Stolen Cab.

Special to The Advertiser by a Staff Correspondent.
Detroit, May 29.—Three armed bandits, all apparently under 21 years of age, this afternoon held up the private bank and steamship agency conducted by Dan Poloshan, at 3137 Franklin street, and escaped in a stolen taxicab, with an amount believed to be in excess of $2,000, after knocking down a clerk and a customer.

The clerk, Christopher Gotolu, 22 years old, was alone in the bank when one of the thugs entered and, drawing a pistol, commanded him to throw up his hands. The others then entered and guarded front and rear doors. The first without warning struck Gotolu with the butt of his pistol, knocking him to the floor. He then turned his attention to the safe, the inner door of which was locked, and demanded the key from Gotolu, who explained that the owner keeps it with him at all times. This maddened the thug, who apparently had thought the safe was open, and he again struck Gotolu. At this point a customer, Theodore Comon, entered. The thug stationed at the front door ordered him to throw up his hands and keep his eyes behind the counter. Comon gave up his efforts to open the safe, and seized the currency and silver in a cash drawer. The amount in the drawer is estimated at between $2,000 and $2,500.

OLD-TIMERS WILL ATTEND MEETING. Canadian Manufacturers' Association Plans For Big Attendance of Veterans. Toronto, May 30.—As this year marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the reorganization of the Canadian Manufacturers' association on a national basis a special effort has been made to secure the attendance at the annual meeting, which opens in Hamilton, Ont., on Monday, June 1, as many as possible of those manufacturers who have been members for the quarter-century. The response to the invitation to the old-timers has been gratifying and a considerable number of the veterans will be on hand. At the luncheon which opens the convention on Monday, T. Russell, Toronto, who represented the association 25 years ago, will tell the story of the early days and trace the progress of the association since the reorganization.

Attendance at the convention will be representative of all parts of Canada. Among prominent members from a distance are J. W. McDonald, New Westminster, chairman of the British Columbia association; A. F. Andrews, Medicine Hat, chairman of the Alberta branch, and W. H. Fisher, St. John, N. B., a former president, who will be chief spokesman for the maritime delegation.

Montreal and the province of Quebec will be strongly represented. Toronto manufacturers are planning a motor parade to the convention city in decorated cars. On the outskirts of Hamilton they will be joined by motor contingents from Guelph, Ingersoll, Preston, Woodstock, Kitchener, Brantford, Galt and other Western Ontario cities. The combined fleet of cars will tour the principal streets of the city before arriving at convention headquarters.

ZIEGLER IS LATEST FOR COURT CLERK

Prominent London Dentist Declared To Be Sir Adam's Decision.

Dr. C. Hallman Ziegler, a life-long friend of Sir Adam Beck is now predicted to be the next clerk of the first division court in London.

Several prominent Conservatives and personal friends of Sir Adam state that this is the latest decision of the London provincial member as to the appointment.

It is well known in Tory circles that the appointment will be given to someone who is one of the old time supporters of the Conservative banner and fortunes in London and that the younger school of politicians will not be considered by the grand old man.

A week ago Tom Jones, another contemporary of Sir Adam, was considered to be well up in the running but now the odds are being laid on the doctor who is generally conceded an easy victory in the first division court stakes.

BRITISH OVERSEAS TRADE ON DECLINE

Coal and Iron Exports Show a Big Decrease For April.

Associated Press Despatch. London, May 30.—The British overseas trade for April was most disappointing, says the report of the American chamber of commerce in London. Imports declined by £2,500,000, and exports declined by £2,000,000. There has been acute depression in the coal trade, many pits being closed, and 139,375 miners idle, with the outlook pointing to labor trouble when the wage agreement expires in June.

Coal shipments for April were 4,568,568 tons, against 5,344,918 tons for April, 1924, this in the face of the report by the committee of inquiry, which showed a loss of one shilling, six pence on every ton of coal sent out of the country at the average export price of twenty shillings, nine pence.

The April production of pig iron was 569,900 tons, and of steel 597,600 tons, against 607,900 and 634,700 respectively in March, and the exports of iron and steel were 301,027 tons, against 341,222 tons last year.

The price of goods and trade in the cotton industry have been disturbed by the budget proposals for taxing silk. The index number for the general average of cotton prices is 23.9, the lowest recorded in six months, but the export trade is improving.

The number of unemployed in the country is placed at 1,185,000, or 163,968 more than a year ago.

Mrs. Mary C. Kordes, his wife, and one daughter, Mrs. S. H. Ross of this city, are the survivors.

The funeral will be held from his daughter's home, 941 Princess avenue, on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. Canon Gunne of Christ church will officiate. Interment is to be made at Woodland cemetery.

STEAMER IS RELEASED FROM REEF IN SUPERIOR

Keewatin Went On Rocks During Fog Early Yesterday Morning.

Canadian Press Despatch. Port Arthur, May 29.—The steamer Keewatin of the Canadian Pacific Railway's great lakes service, which went on the rocks at Passage Island, 43 miles from Port Arthur, during a dense fog at 3:45 this morning, limped into port at 6 o'clock this afternoon in tow of the tugs Whalen and Bowman of the Dominion Towing and Salvage Company, and will go into drydock tomorrow.

The steamer had a narrow escape, passengers say, and disaster was probably averted by the fact that the reef on which the big steamer struck was so far submerged as to prevent the stowing in of the bow.

The steamer struck twice, the first time about midships, the second time near the stern, which carried away the ship's rudder and rudder frame and did injury to the bottom.

CLOSE LONGWOODS ROAD NEXT WEEK

Paving From Delaware To Strathburn To Start—22-Mile Detour.

The Longwoods road between Delaware and Strathburn, a distance of 19 miles, will be closed to traffic early next week for paving operations, the London motor club has been informed by H. A. Brazier, one of the contractors.

This will necessitate a route of 22 miles, which means that motorists will only travel three miles more by using the detour.

Signs are being placed by Mr. Brazier along the detour, which goes from Delaware to Mount Brydges, westerly to Glencoe, and south to Strathburn.

Paving operations on the Hyde Park highway will not commence until about June 15, County Engineer Charles Talbot states.

ANTICIPATED BEER RUSH FAILS TO MATERIALIZE

London Parlors Not Crowded By Decoration Day Tourists.

The expected rush on London beer parlors today with the coming of hundreds of American tourists on Decoration Day jaunts did not materialize to a marked degree. Most of the 44 depots did a fair business this morning, but no difficulty was encountered in giving fast service to thirsty visitors.

Most of the tourists came from Michigan and Ohio points, easily accessible to Canadian border cities, where the new beverage has been sampled during the past week. The absence of a general virgin interest in the city today is attributed to this fact.

NEW TRAFFIC SYSTEM WORKS SATISFACTORILY

Less Confusion At Richmond-Dundas Intersection Since Tower in Operation.

Little difficulty is being experienced by Londoners at the Richmond-Dundas street intersection, where new traffic signals were put in operation last week. The system, according to the police, is a great advantage in direction of traffic and auto confusion.

No left-hand turns are allowed at the intersection during week days, and on Saturdays and holidays turns are eliminated altogether. Abolishing left-hand turns has caused little inconvenience, the police say.

ASSERTS FRENCH LOAN OVERPAID BY $250,000

Senator Borah Cites Official Records of Amounts Borrowed in 1875-76.

Associated Press Despatch. Washington, May 30.—Official records to substantiate his statement that the United States paid France $250,000 more than it borrowed from that government in 1875-76 are cited in a letter addressed by Chairman Borah of the senate foreign relations committee to the editor of the London Observer.

The communication was occasioned by the publication of a letter from the author of a biography of Beaumarchais, expressing surprise over the senator's assertion that the loan, which was made by the French government through Beaumarchais, had been over-paid by a very considerable sum.

ALL TRADES TAKEN BY "U" STUDENTS

Wide Range of Vocations Chosen For Summer Months.

Cattle boats, life insurance companies, railroad construction gangs will be graced by the presence of students of the University of the University of Western Ontario this summer.

As soon as the convocation was over yesterday students of all departments began preparations into the unknown of summer occupation. The plans for two or three months' work have been taking form even during the rush of final examinations. Today they are being put into operation.

At least two students, W. E. Baginall, and J. J. Talman, both of Huron college, will see Ireland via the cattle boat route. Mr. Baginall's home is in Birt, Ireland. Mr. Talman comes from Toronto. They will leave next week. It is expected that three others will go with them.

One other student is going to manage his father's farm while his parents take a trip to Ireland. Some are going to Windsor to help with the telephone census of that city. Another will be seen in the role of bell hop on one of the great lakes steamships.

The railroad construction trains will employ a few. One of the arts goes out with a gang that will spend the summer painting the small town stations. One ambitious man will sell life insurance.

All trains out of the city today carried university students. London's population has decreased by hundreds in the last week. Of the 700 students registered in the local colleges many come from outside points. Practically all the provinces are represented as well as the United States.

NINE-MILL RATE SEEN FOR COUNTY

Estimate Committee Recommends Cut—Council Meets Monday.

The Middlesex county council, meeting for the June session at the county council chambers on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, will likely reduce the tax rate from 11 to 9 mills, if the councilors follow the recommendations of the committee appointed to prepare the estimates for the year.

The council will consider the revision of the county road system as recommended by the department of highways earlier in the week, which will mean that 70 miles of county roads will be known in future as township roads.

The equalization of county assessment will be one of the important matters to come before the council, while the Lambeth school petition, divided, will provoke some warm discussion.

The council will also decide whether or not to issue debentures for last year's provincial highway expenditures amounting to $61,142.30. Of this amount $9,349.51 was expended on maintenance, which must be paid this year. The payment of the balance, however, may be spread over a period of years.

NINE BLOCKS OF AUTOS AWAIT WINDSOR FERRY

Travel From Detroit to Ontario May Establish New Record.

Associated Press Despatch. Detroit, Mich., May 30.—Ferry travel across the river from here to Canada gave indications of establishing a new record when early last evening automobiles were lined up in a double row for nine blocks at the foot of Woodward avenue waiting to cross to Windsor. Ferry company officials said this year there is the double incentive of 44 beer across the line and an opportunity to have two holidays successively. Most of the automobiles were filled with baggage, indicating their passengers did not expect to return to the U. S. before late Sunday night or Monday morning. Because of the Sunday closing laws in Canada it will be impossible to buy beer on Sunday except in connection with meals in hotels and restaurants.

A party of 31 golfers, representing the London Hunt club, went to Windsor in a private car on the 11:15 C. P. R. train this morning. A series of games will be played this afternoon. The party will return by special sleeper tonight.

HEART WAS WEAK NERVES ALL GONE

Mrs. J. H. Hallenbeck, 117½ Wellesley avenue, St. Catharines, Ont., writes:—"I was in a gas explosion; it left me with a weak heart, and my nerves were all gone. I suffered everything; couldn't sleep, or endure any excitement, and when left alone I felt as if I could scream. I took dizzy spells, often falling and bruising myself. My mother read about your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and thought I had better try them. I took one box of H. & N. Pills, and felt so much better I continued with them until I had used five boxes and after I had taken them I did not need any more. I can not praise or recommend Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills too highly after all they have done for me."

DUCHESS OF YORK. "I would like to arrange with my brother-in-law, the Prince of Wales, for a stay at his ranch in Canada. This was one of the many observations appreciative of the lure of Canada made by the Duchess of York, who, with the Duke of York, this week, paid a surprise visit to the British empire exhibition at Wembley."

TOO SOON TO SEND OUT EXPEDITION

Nansen Declares Months of Waiting Justified in Case of Amundsen.

Associated Press Despatch. New York, May 30.—Months of waiting are justified before considering an expedition for the relief of the Amundsen-Ellsworth polar fliers, in the opinion of Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, noted Arctic explorer.

Berlin dispatches show that Dr. Nansen is among those who believe that a relief expedition is premature now—only a little more than a week after Amundsen's departure from Spitzbergen.

Commander Donald B. MacMillan, however, reiterates that if no word is heard from Amundsen and his five companions within three weeks, when MacMillan's expedition leaves for the Arctic he will devote himself to a search for the missing explorer.

PROTESTS $5,000,000 ADVANCE TO QUEBEC

G. G. Coote Takes Stand Against Passage of Resolution at Ottawa.

Canadian Press Despatch. Ottawa, May 30.—Protest against the passage early yesterday morning in the house of commons on a resolution authorizing a further advance of $5,000,000 to the Quebec harbor commission, was voiced in the house by G. G. Coote, Progressive member for MacLeod. The resolution was adopted in the house after midnight, and a bill passed on it was given this morning.

Mr. Coote claimed that he was on his feet and had asked a question when Deputy Speaker G. N. Norden, who was presiding over the committee of the whole, began to put the question to the house. Chairman Gordon then ruled that "ayes and nays" had been asked for, and debate was closed.

Speaker Lemieux overruled this decision. The speaker said that an appeal from the decision of the chair might be taken at the time and not later.

The bill has yet to pass several stages of the house, and further debate on it seems fore-shadowed by yesterday's appeal. The preliminary resolution was debated some six hours yesterday, and was passed on a committee vote of 107 for and 57 against, all members present of both opposition parties opposing it.

Mr. Cluff was born in McKillop in 1838, and came to Seaford when quite a young man. For a number of years he was contractor and builder, and in company with S. Bennett, now in Victoria, carried on a planing mill in the north end of town. Some years ago he took his son into partnership under the firm of N. Cluff & Sons, which firm now carries on one of the largest planing mills, lumber and coal businesses in the county. At his death he was the oldest living member of the Methodist church. He was a councillor for many years, and for two terms occupied the mayor's chair. He is survived by two sons, J. J. and A. F. Cluff, who were associated with him in business, and one daughter, Mrs. J. J. Grieve, also of Seaford. One son, Lieut. Cluff, was killed overseas.

WOMEN and THE HOME

NOW SHE WEARS WOVEN SLIPPERS

Sand Dune and Caramel-Tinted Stockings Go With Them.

New York, May 29.—Hang a South Sea seaweed skirt about the shoulders and you have an accurate picture of the design of the latest ostrich plume neckpiece. The ostrich ruffle is so voluminous that it hangs almost to the waist like a cape and in front is garnished with an additional apron which falls well below the knee. No cautious ostrich in South Africa can afford to turn its head nowadays much less bury it.

Spring pastoral scenes are not confined to the fields and farms. The newest lingerie is frequently decorated nowadays with barnyard motifs, embroidered in a contrasting shade on sheer Milanese silk garments. Dainty chicks just emerging from their shells gamboling lambs and waddling ducks are among the figures which adorn the fronts of chemise vests and step-in drawers.

Woven Shoes
The woven shoe is being selected by many women to fill the need for dainty and cool summer footwear. The latest English models are woven of extremely narrow leather strips in the brown and biscuit shades. With them are worn specially designed stockings of sand dune and caramel tints.

There is no end to what dress-makers today are doing with pleats which are becoming more elaborate constantly. One imported frock seen on the avenue today had the entire skirt front covered with fan-shaped pleated aprons of taffeta, superimposed one above the other in varying sizes from the hip line down. Another frock had the front and hem adorned with a taffeta ribbon four inches wide worked into narrow pleats.

Crusader Shoes
The old English crusader frequently had only one suit of clothes and that of steel. But nevertheless that fact is sponsor for the latest London footwear which employs the linked rings of the old Hauberk to decorate the one-strap pumps. These rings are usually of dark brown superimposed on glass kid of a cinnamon shade.

with the passing of college days and fair women in white convocation frocks and the black gowns of the faculty of arts. Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Fox, Mrs. John Detwiler, Dean and Mrs. Paul McKibbin, received the many guests, while tea was passed by members of the junior year. Attractive tea tables had been arranged in two of the large classrooms, and showed purple tins and purple tulips, as well as purple candles in silver sticks, for decorations. Special guests of the occasion were Dr. and Mrs. Oscar D. Skelton and Chancellor W. J. Roche of Ottawa.

A charming trousseau tea was held at the home of Mrs. Albert Courtis, Bruce street, yesterday afternoon and evening, when she entertained in honor of her daughter, Miss Marjorie Courtis, whose marriage takes place shortly. Mrs. Courtis was dressed in navy silk, was assisted in receiving the many guests by Miss Courtis, who wore a pretty frock of almond green chambray and Mrs. Hutchinson, the mother of the prospective groom, who wore a gown of sand silk. The house was most attractive with tulips and large bowls of pansies, and the tea table, over which Mrs. William Courtis presided, was centered with a bowl of pansies and lily of the valley. In the evening Miss Maude Norris acted out tea. Miss Clara Courtis the youngest sister of the bride-elect, attended the door, while Miss Marjorie Piercy displayed the trousseau, and Miss Myrtle Foster took charge of the lovely wedding gifts. The Misses Alfreda and Elsie Courtis, sisters of the bride-to-be, also assisted in looking after the guests.

Convocation hall was the scene of a happily arranged dance given last night in honor of the graduates by the alumnae and alumni of the University of Western Ontario. About two hundred were present, dancing the evening away to strains of music provided by Pudney's orchestra, Dean and Mrs. Sherwood Fox, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Little, Mr. and Mrs. K. P. R. Neville, Rev. A. A. Bice and Mrs. Bice, and Dr. and Mrs. H. R. Kingston lent their patronage to the event, which was one of the most enjoyable of convocation week. Arrangements for the dance were made under the direction of an able committee, including Miss Maude Norris, Miss Marjorie Piercy, Miss Helen Bice, Miss Helen Bice, Mr. Percy Simpson, Mr. Cecil Carrothers, Mr. J. McMillan, Mr. Bill Hume, Mr. Donahue, Mr. Campbell, Miss Helen Davey, Miss Doris Liddicoat, Miss Jennie Weir, Miss Dorothy Walter, Mr. Charles Houghtby. Several new dances were arranged, including an eclipse of the moon dance, during which the dancers wore rose-colored spectacles to view the eclipse. A Japanese parasol dance was also a pretty feature, while the chief number of the evening was the graduates' dance with special number prizes, a handsome silver-mounted cigarette case for the man and a pretty French compact for the girl.

Jenny Wren Discovers Mrs. Robin's Secret About the White Baby Robin

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.
Welcome Robin's babies knew, as only bird babies know. Every day brought more feathers and every day made it more and more clear that one of these babies wasn't right. At least that is the way his father and mother regarded the matter. He was queer, and if he was queer of course he couldn't be right. He was queer because his coat wasn't like the coats of the others. Instead of being dark it was white! Yes, sir, that young Robin was growing a white coat!

It is funny how people seem to think that there is something disgraceful in being different from other people. Welcome and Mrs. Robin tried not to have that feeling about this white-coated youngster, but just the same they did their best to keep their neighbors from knowing about it. One or the other was always near the nest, and when any other of the feathered folk chanced to alight in the tree the white baby was covered by father or mother wing.

But such a secret cannot be kept for long. Jenny Wren was the one who found this out. She is so small and she is so quick about it, sometimes it is difficult to keep track of her. She had noticed that that nest seldom was left by Welcome or Mrs. Robin at the same time, and she began to suspect that there was something wrong looking into there. You know she is a busybody, full of curiosity. So one morning when Mrs. Robin's back was turned Jenny Wren slipped up and peeped into the nest.

"Tut, tut, tut, tut!" she exclaimed. "What have we here? As I live that poor child hasn't a colored feather on him! How queer. How very queer. I've heard of such a case, but I've never seen one before."

Mrs. Robin flew. Jenny Wren and drove her away. But the mischief was done. That lively tongue of Jenny's would soon spread the news all through the Old Orchard. Such news as that couldn't be kept. Not two minutes later Mrs. Robin heard Jenny Wren telling Mrs. Chipsey the Chinpin about it.

"Tut, tut, tut, tut, my dear, you never have seen such a sight in your life," declared Jenny. "I tell you that young Robin is as white as the Duckling's downy downy. There isn't a colored feather on him. I'm sorry for the poor thing, for I don't believe he'll live long. He will be easy to see that he'll soon be caught by one of his enemies. You should have seen Mrs. Robin fly into a rage just because I happened over there for a neighborly call."

Mrs. Robin knew now just what would happen. And it began to happen right away. That apple tree in which was her nest became the most popular tree in the Old Orchard. There was a steady procession of feathered folk to stare at the white young Robin and talk about it. They even came over from the Green Forest to stare and make remarks, and wonder what would happen to it and inquire if it had a good appetite or acted at all strange. Poor Mrs. Robin was driven almost crazy. At least that is the way she felt. And it was much the same with Welcome Robin. They didn't at all enjoy being the parents of a queer child, and queer is what everybody said that young Robin was.

"Tut tut, tut, tut," she exclaimed. "What have we here?"

Perhaps it was because they felt that he was queer and that he would have a hard time when he went out into the Great World that they fed him the fattest and choicest worms. They intended that he should have a fair start even if he didn't have a fair chance.

Can Speculation Be Curbed?

Toward the latter part of January wheat for May delivery was $2.05 a bushel. In two months the same wheat had gone down to $1.36. There is not a man in existence who could produce sufficient reason from crop conditions or from world supply to justify either one of these prices. That is the question which U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Jardine is turning over in his mind. He would like very much to know where this 70-cent difference went, and also what caused the fluctuation. He could go on asking the same questions all over again, because a similar process has been in operation since the first of the year.

Judging from the tone of U.S. papers it is possible to get opinions as to what should be done that are as far apart as the spread in the high and low prices of wheat itself. The Philadelphia Inquirer believes that the law should step in and stop the sending out of false crop reports by grain speculators. The Inquirer remarks: "It is a jailable offence to peddle worthless stocks and bonds through the mails. Then why not make it a crime for grain speculators to raise up world-wide fears through false crop reports and trade conditions? Such wide speculation as that last winter, followed swiftly by a terrific tumble in wheat, could hardly occur without world-wide propaganda about crop conditions, supplies and demand."

If the mails are being used for any such purpose, the remedy is very simple—stop it. In fairness to the grain exchange it should be said that its membership, scattered all over the continent, sends out weather and crop reports that are based on actual facts, and any deviation from this would cause a forfeiture of all standing or membership.

Some of the papers discussing the subject refer to the protection of the public. What is needed is a realization on the part of the public that dabbling in wheat or any other commodity for future delivery is pure speculation, and not investment. Putting it at its best it is plain guesswork. A man follows crop reports, weather conditions, etc., and he guesses that in July wheat will be selling at a certain figure. It is on his own idea of things that he bases his dealing. He buys at a lower figure, expecting to sell out later for more. In the meantime other conditions turn up that he never anticipated, and the result is he finds out that his guess was no good and pays accordingly for the discovery.

As far as the actual producer of wheat is concerned, the Nebraska Farmer maintains that he is neither helped or injured by the fluctuations in the price of wheat. The New York Journal of Commerce does not believe legislation can change the manipulation of the wheat market, if there is manipulation. The Journal considers that there will always be an element in every community "ready to take a chance in a game it knows nothing about in the hopes of getting rich quick." The Journal adds that "those who suffer most are those gullible sporadic speculators who permit themselves time and again to be drawn into the markets at the wrong time," a truth so painfully obvious that it hardly needs to be stated. The closing statement of this financial paper has a degree of truth that cannot be overlooked: "These have a perfect remedy at their disposal. All they have to do is to attend to their own business."

Peter Made Progress.

Sunday school lessons are human documents just now, when they deal with such men as Paul and Peter. Especially when the teachers and students come to study Peter they find themselves faced with one of the most interesting characters in the New Testament. Many a man, watching Peter, can see in his life somewhat of a reflection of his own. Peter, or rather Simon, as he was at the start, was not a tower of strength nor an example to others.

The observer might not be very wide of the mark if he were to regard Peter at the start as being a man of impulse rather than of reason, one who might even be given to bragging of the things he would do rather than demonstrating the point by actual performance and leaving it to others to give an opinion as to its worth. It was Peter who, when aroused by the attacks on his Master, was ready to fight; it was Peter who, when Christ predicted that His followers would forsake Him in the hour of His greatest need, remonstrated, "Though all men forsake Thee, I will not forsake Thee," and it was this same pledging, protesting Peter who proceeded a short time after to deny with curses that he knew anything of the Nazarene.

As students look at that side of Peter's character there is not much to attract, very little to stimulate. A person might very easily say he knew plenty of people like Peter—he was of the type that wanted to elbow his way to the front, his voice must always be heard first, in the center and last. If people are honest with themselves they may see in Peter many traits of character that run a close parallel to their own—assertiveness, aggressiveness that centers on self-assertion, and a willingness to say things on the spur of the moment, the fulfilment of which requires a reserve of determination they do not possess.

But that was Peter as the Master found him. He was then the diamond in the rough, before had passed through the hands of the Master.

The Peter of the after-years was a changed man. The fire was there, but it was a consecrated flame rather than an irresponsible flash; sacrifice had taken the place of assertiveness, and zeal for the upholding of Christ had left no room for idle self-boasting. If proof were needed of the way in which the divine nature made use of Peter, it is found in the fact that to him was given the distinction among the apostles of working the first miracle, of preaching the first sermon, and with John to be the first to be put in prison for the cause of Christ. It was under Peter's ministry that the first divine judgment was passed upon members of the early Christian church in the person of Ananias and his wife.

Small wonder that there have been so many Christian people, weak in their own strength, conscious of their own errors, stumbling along at times with the knowledge of failure borne in upon them—they have found in Peter a counterpart of themselves. They have also seen how mightily he was used, with what fortitude he endured suffering, and with what irrepressible power he delivered his masterpiece, the Pentecostal sermon. The story of Peter is a remarkable record of what the Almighty can do with a piece of very unpromising material.

Spending the People's Money.

St. Catharines council has been looking over accounts in connection with the investigation into election irregularities, and finds that the affair and the extra election cost the city $7,726.

One alderman was not satisfied with the way the probing had been done. He held that it was not thorough enough and was in favor of another rattling of the dry bones even "if it cost another $10,000." He was alone in this view, and the rest of the aldermen considered that they had gone deep enough.

It is not difficult to talk of probing to the limit, and taking off the roof in civic matters, but the bare fact is that the probing business costs money. If St. Catharines was able to get out of its muddle for $7,726, its council was well advised to jump on the idea of tossing another $10,000 into the fracas.

Still the Age of the Horse.

The fine old days of horses and horse trading are not yet departed. Some of those who do not look around sufficiently might imagine that this generation indulged in trading nothing but motor cars, and that such terms as heaves and spavins had given way entirely to differentials and cracked piston rings.

But the horse buyer continues. He is still in existence, willing to stack his wits against a horse's heels. Thus the Exeter Times-Advocate tells of a stray horse that fell into the hands of Charles Harvey. In a sale held by Frank Taylor, the auctioneer, this horse was listed with the other goods and chattels, and the auctioneer, being a horse fancier himself, bid him in, and became owner. Being owner and taking possession are two things, separate and far removed at times. The Exeter paper makes local history when it tells what followed:

"An attempt was made to halter him, but he did not take kindly to the process, and oh, how that horse did kick, with both heels out for business every time. Talk about the Kentucky mule, he could not produce a shadow beside this fellow, and had he been in front of a mill-wheel instead of where he was he would have pumped enough water out of the river to supply our waterworks system for thirty days or more. He kicked himself down, got up again, took a breathing spell and started afresh. He took a slam at an old sow and pretty near put her to sleep, wrecked a pig pen of large dimensions; kicked a broom out of the hands of H. Elworthy and it has not been seen since; lambasted a barrel and it is said that staves, splinters and hoops are hourly falling yet. Then he ran about an old mare in a stall, her head and part of her body going through a window. After this they succeeded in getting his horseship roped, but all the kick was not out of him yet, and the hangers-on dropped off like a lot of ten-pins. Then the horse started northward. He jumped fifteen fences, and Frank Taylor vouches for the fact that he went over as many houses in his course as he did fences, and he finally landed in Russell Hedden's flats on the river, where he spent a couple of nights, when he lit out for parts unknown."

This horse rebels against the spirit of the age which is all toward the glorification of the motor car. He has demonstrated that the horse is master of the situation, that he can smash things to pieces just as effectively as the wildest mad motorist ever did. What's more, he can jump fences, make for the river flats and then take to the great open spaces without a scratch on him, which is quite a heap more than any motor car has been able to do yet and come out under its own head of steam.

Our Statesmen

Recountin' of the load they bear,
enough to crumple up their backs,
a-lookin' and a-squintin', too, for things what they can go and tax.

The work of governin' the land must be a fierce yet solemn thing, the duty great and awful too as being an ancient fightin' king. It makes men gray to bear the load of ruin' of rebellious folk, who struggle hard to shirk a bit and get their shoulders from the yoke.

Strong men have cracked beneath the strain of writin' laws upon our books, great wrinkles camp upon their jaw a-changin' much their handsome looks. It must be hard upon the nerves decidin' what be best to do, and workin' out this plan or that and then a-followin' of it through.

And when the rulers meet in state they lock the door to keep folks out, so come no sound of poundin' fist or echo of a warrin' shout.

Just now these mighty men of ours who run this province as they please has had a job that's big enough to make them crooked at the knees. Small wonder if before they're through they faint and stagger for a drop, since now they're etickin' stamps upon each bottle full of fizin' pop.

They need more money so they say to keep the province out of debt, they've chased the gambler to his den and tax him for his every bet, and them what puts their money up, a-bettin' how a horse will win, they put a derick on his wad and haul the rubles out of him.

The man who takes his kids along and wanders to a picture show, the government be there ahead, expectin' how he'd likely go. Before he gets inside at all to watch the pictures on the screens, the government has shook him out and took the ducats from his jeans.

And thirsty souls who wander forth to drink new euds to stop their thirst, they find as how the men of state has been a-landin' down there first. These rubin' men has got to see as how our debt be not too big, and so they take some shekels toll with every long and gurglin' swig.

The government has likewise looked and put a check on every man, and made a target out of him what circles in a pink sedan. For every time he takes his hack and buys a quarter's worth of gas, the government has grabbed him there afore he had a chance to pass.

No wonder bein' in parliament puts gray hairs on a statesman's dome, and makes him long for peaceful hours when he be sittin' in his home. They're taxin' dances, shows and beer, they've put their taxes through and through, a-thinkin' of new things to grab's enough to make them bust in two.—ARK.

To the Editor

Needs a Spirit of Love.

Writer Resents Charge That Any Section of Presbyterian Church Does Not Assist in Fight For Temperance.

Editor of The Advertiser:

Sir,—Would you kindly allow me space in your paper for a few remarks regarding an article that appeared in the columns of your paper a few days ago, in which Dr. Chown was accusing the Presbyterians of intemperance.

My Methodist friends are very much humiliated to think that the head of their church would make such remarks, as such statements will have a tendency to hinder the spirit of union in the United church. We who went into the United church understood it was to maintain a spirit of brotherly love, and thinking that the world had taken a sudden change for the better we did not wish to be a stumbling-block to hinder its course.

We did not leave the Presbyterian ranks because we hated them or because we thought they were upholding intemperance. Oh no. We knew we were upholding intemperance, and we still be far from a spirit of intemperance, and know that love our Presbyterian brethren and know that they are still struggling on against the sins of intemperance. It has always been said of the Presbyterians that they do not carry their religion on their shoulder but deep down in their hearts. They are fighting against intemperance and every other sin with Satan might place before them.

Now where has this brotherly love gone? If we cannot love our brethren in the continuing Presbyterian church, can we love our brethren, the Anglicans and Baptists, who would not even consider our invitation to unite with us, and we know these to be Christian churches.

We Protestants have reason to be ashamed of the antagonism that prevails in our churches. Are we as a United church going to try and crush out these weaker churches by accusing them of evil?

Now we who have left the Presbyterian ranks have reason to feel sore if the Methodists (who have played the game all the way through, as Dr. Chown puts it) are going to throw such things in our face. But we are sure that the Presbyterians will still retain their Christian hospitality and open their doors to us who may see our folly and let us sneak back into the fold of the Presbyterian church, which they say will continue from one side of Canada to the other.

Sarnia Wants More Information About Bayview Park Allegations.

Special to The Advertiser by a Staff Correspondent.

Sarnia, May 29.—A resolution requesting the information and its source, on which the allegation of the existence of immoral conditions at Bayview park, here, was made at the London Methodist conference last Monday, has been passed by the local parks board and forwarded to Rev. W. E. Millson, of London.

A reply is asked in time for the monthly meeting of the board on Tuesday next. Bayview park was coupled with Rondeau park on Lake Erie in the resolution passed at the conference, and it was decided to send a delegation to interview the provincial attorney-general regarding the alleged police supervision at these parks during the summer months.

Heirs of The Seventeenth Century Tradition Still Carry The Cross to Indians as of Yore—Priests Spend Lives in Ministry to the Redskins—Father Desautels Seen at Wekwikong

By F. G. GRIFFIN

It is indeed an old tradition as traditions go in Canada. Since the first members of the Society of Jesus came up the St. Lawrence in 1625, three hundred years ago, the Jesuits have conducted missions to the Indians. Though there was a break of some sixty years after the conquest.

So that it is not surprising to find Jesuit missionaries, living in the tradition, still devoting their lives to saving the souls of the Indians. The Indians have changed. These peaceable modern Redskins, farmers, trappers, fishermen, living subdued existences on reserves as wards of the white man, are very different from the savage Iroquois of the seventeenth century.

But the missionaries have not changed. They are as full of zeal to serve, as willing to bear hardship and isolation, as their forerunners in the Society of Jesus. Even though the crown of martyrdom and the seal of beatification can scarcely come to them as they came to Lalement and Brebeuf.

These Jesuit priests are men who have gone through a long and severe novitiate of study and preparation to achieve a priestly culture of wide proportions. Perhaps no priesthood in the world fits its members in more scholarly fashion for their special task of ministry. Having this in mind, their scholarship and mental attainments, I asked a Jesuit missionary on Manitoulin Island why he and his fellows should think it worth while to bury themselves for years and years among the ignorant, unsocial, unresponsive Indians. He replied simply: "They have souls to save."

Yet he admitted that the Indians were little better than children; that in the main little could be done but lead them by example and teach them to perform "acts of devotion." He spoke of the difficulty of speaking to them, of teaching them, of their total lack of response. You might plead with them, argue with them, talk logic. They just sat there with dull, emotionless faces that gave no hint of effect or understanding. It was necessary to preach and talk in the simplest words. Only when you talked in terms of the things of their ordinary lives was it possible to get the slightest reaction.

"But it is indeed well worth while," said the Jesuit, his face lighting. "The first Friday of the month is a day of special devotion, and they will come twenty miles to attend the services. I have seen them coming in from their work in the bush, on the farms, wherever it may be, tramping a whole day, to perform their religious duties."

The Jesuit missionaries one found on the Manitoulin missions were all French, natives of the province of Quebec, except for a Belgian at Wekwikong. Another link with the past. In their service to the Indian they even forget the language of their youth. "I never thought a man could do that," declared Father Eugene Papineau, S.J., "but now I know he can."

Priests Link Past and Present

He has been nearly twenty-five years on Manitoulin, preaching in English at Little Current and in Ojibway to his Indian people. So that the French that he learned to talk on his father's farm near Montreal has actually become rusty through disuse. To achieve this Indian tongue in the first place Father Papineau spent months on the Wekwikong reserve before ordination studying with his "professor of Ojibway."

Father Desautels, S.J., whose whole intercourse and preaching is practically all in Ojib-

way, declared that he even thought all the time in this Indian tongue. And frequently, when he had occasion to preach in French or English, he found himself breaking into the native speech, only discovering his lapse when the astonished looks of his hearers became evident.

It was Mr. J. M. Bennett, well-known inspector of separate schools in part of northern Ontario, who suggested that someone should come with him on one of his inspection trips to the Indian schools of Manitoulin Island and write about it. It was on such a trip recently with Mr. Bennett that I had several interesting days' contacts with the Jesuit missionaries. That I happened to have been born and brought up a non-Catholic made this none the less interesting or their courtesy in providing me with beds and meals any the less kindly.

On the way we called at a separate school in Baldwin township, outside Espanola. Fifteen years ago here was a hardwood bush. In 1912 George Deguire and two other French-Canadians came and settled. To-day Deguire has thirty-nine acres cleared. His sons have cleared a similar number. Altogether there are fourteen families living there on good cleared land that is now where the bush was so recently. A good road has been cut in. In brief, here is a cameo of the way the French-Canadians are colonizing and developing large sections of northern Ontario.

"Number one soil," as Deguire called it, lay in the valleys between the rocks. Beyond spread the Spanish River limits. There was lots of work in the bush during the winter. Now, well, to-day they were still stumping, still clearing, still making land. Compare this with what Father Papineau said of the farms on Manitoulin Island: "You can't get the young people of to-day to clear an acre of land. They are satisfied with what they inherited from their fathers. Yet making land to-day is easier for the colonist in this generation than in the past. To-day he can find a ready market for his wood and earn money where in the past he had to burn it all up and perhaps wait for five years before he had produced land. It seems as if the English speaking settlers have not the instinct for colonization that the French have."

The separate school in Baldwin township was built in 1921. The people had a building bee and quickly put it up. "In two years," said Deguire proudly, as chairman of the little school board, "my children learn to speak and write both French and English."

Manitoulin's Peculiar Position

We went into the small, white, neat school-house, with its spotless floor of squared cedar. It was cold enough for a May morning, and Mr. Bennett sent two of the older boys out for some wood. Soon a lad of fourteen, biggest in the school, was kneeling in front of the big box stove whittling off chips to start a fire which was presently cheerily crackling and filling the room with warmth. The children were a clean, frank, healthy group of youngsters whom the inspector was presently putting through their small gamut of knowledge in the English tongue. It must be difficult for such French children as some of these small boys and girls of five, six and seven who have to learn English in addition to acquiring the usual load which their years must face.

So much for this little school in the hardwood bush. To reach Manitoulin you must take the train from Espanola on the Sudbury-Soo line of the C.P.R. and travel by the Algoma Eastern to Little Current, which is the terminus on the northeast tip of the island. This is the only way of reaching it except by water. Manitoulin island is in the peculiar position of having over a thousand miles of excellent roads, but there is no way of getting your car on to them unless you carry it there by train or boat. For no road runs to Little Current. It is a great, and apparently a just, complaint of the islanders—isolating them in a sense and, worse still, preventing the motor touring outsider from reaching there. A road has been begun from Espanola, but for some reason or other operations have been halted, and the partly made road has been hung up in the heart of the bush.

The day after our arrival we spent on the Manitoulin unceded Indian reserve, driving past Manitowaning to Kaboni school, where a twenty-year-old girl, Miss Kelly, was trying to instill knowledge into youthful Indian heads. As we waited for the school to open an Indian woman of intelligence came along and talked. "I do want the Indian children to get an education," she said. She discussed the question of compulsory attendance. She was indeed anxious that the new generation of Indians should receive the best possible training. She longed to see native teachers. There was a sadness in her liquid brown eyes. There was a longing in her soft pleasant voice. She seemed to express, for me, all the tragedy that lay in the lost glories of her race. And yet—

I asked Father Desautels if the Indians ever thought regretfully of their past or suffered from any feeling of conquest or inferiority at the hands of the white man. "I don't think," he replied, "that their lost land or departed glory ever comes to them a thought. For me, I find them a very happy, care-free people. They suffer nothing. They take no unhappiness. They are satisfied with little in living."

Indians Lacking in Ideals

"Oh, yes, they feel their inferiority. They know it. They are easily hurt. And they have an ambition to rise, but the development is very late. Though they can learn as easily as white people. What is missing in them then? It is the lack of ambition in life. They have no ideals. They would like success, but provided it cost nothing. There is no constancy in their efforts."

"But were not the Indians of the past of a higher, finer type? Are not these Indians to-day mere shadows of what the race once was?"

"I don't know," replied Father Desautels. "I think the old-timers were all the same. I've seen them in the north, Indians who never knew civilization, and, on the whole, they are a race lacking the qualities which we are proud of. There is no purpose in their lives. If we read history carefully we see that the Indian has always lacked something. Even their speeches, if we read them carefully, we find them written by missionaries. They are people of nature. They have not very strong reason. They have no logic. They destroyed themselves without knowing it. They were always at war for no reason. Short-sighted. They drew on their youth and weakened it."

Yet as one passed from Kaboni to Buzwah and then to Wekwikong, which is the capital of the reserve, and later to West Bay and Shegwaning, visiting the Indian schools and missions, the idea of underlying sadness in the Indians persisted. They were so shy and speechless, these brown-eyed Indian children, like scared animals that were afraid of man as they stood up to answer the unusual ordeal of the inspector's questioning. Not that all of them were so stolid and emotionless as they seemed. Young Dominic, a tall boy in a brown sweater, broke down reading in Kaboni and was soon rubbing his eyes as tears trickled down his cheeks.

Hopeless, sad little people. They sang in sing-song, some of the boys not moving their lips. Then little Louise, a quaint, tiny figure in a grey print dress and with bright black eyes and bobbed hair, recited brightly with a bravery that must have cost a tremendous effort, "Sleep, my baby, sleep." She was not much more than a baby herself. Followed Josephine, a tall dark girl with hair as black as night, who mumbled some passage in a formless monotone.

It was strange to hear these Indian children mouthing the pretty harmless songs of the white child instead of some saga of their own barbaric past. Though the effect of their singing "O Canada" in one of the schools gave a certain thrill. And one or two of the schools finished up with "God Save the King." I asked Mr. Bennett to ask a couple of classes if they knew who this king was for whom they had been asking salvation. Several members of a senior third class at Wekwikong were more or less conversant with His Majesty's status, but another class to whom the question was put seemed very hazy indeed about exactly who or what the king was. Though you could not judge from that, for some of the Indian children might know much more than they said and not wish to speak, through hesitancy or shyness.

A Chief's Massive Monument

WEKWIKONG is a considerable village that faces on Manitowaning bay, capital of the reserve. Here is a school for Indian children conducted by the Nardene sisters; the Roman Catholic church, a fine stone building; and the great building, also of stone, where live the Jesuits. Once this last was a boarding-school for Indian boys and was alive with activity. But now this school has been removed to Spanish on the mainland, and the big building of many rooms is empty except for the occupancy of Father Desautels and the Belgian priest and two Jesuit lay brothers.

Between the church and the Jesuit house is the old massive stone mission built in 1838 in which the first missionaries nearly a century ago resumed the work of the Jesuits among the Indians. It is now a general workshop, cluttered up with tools, benches and small machinery. "Over there one of our old missionaries died," said Father Desautels, pointing to a corner. Thus is the whole place sacred. He led the way into the beautiful church, the altar, the pulpit and the other fine work all done by the hands of Jesuit brothers and the Indians whom they trained.

Then he conducted one into the adjacent cemetery, now full, where under the shadow of a tall, thin cross stand eight similar headstones to mark the quiet resting place of Jesuit priests and lay brothers who had died serving the church, far from home, among these distant Indians. Here lay Du Ranquet, 87 when he died in 1900, a nobleman of Alsace, a strong man of remarkable physique, first of the Jesuit missionaries of the last century, who had for fifty years traveled up and down the northland, winter and summer, carrying the cross to the scattered Algonquins.

Here, too, slept Jean Pierre Chone, another native of France, seventy when he died in 1878. And under this stone was the body of a young Jesuit priest, Father Rodrigus Roy, who was only thirty-two when he died of consumption. And under that one Fremiot, drowned on one of his mission trips in the rapids of the Mississauga river away back in 1854 and brought back here to rest with these others. And here was Brother Jeuneux who came as a lay teacher with Father Du Ranquet.

A hallowed spot indeed to the Jesuit father who stood beside me looking at the graves and who was following in the footsteps of these men. Overhanging the Jesuit headstones was a more massive monument to William Kinohamec, chief here for twenty-two years, son of a man who had fought against the Nodomanish ("Big Knives"—the Americans) in the war of 1812. So said the lettering cut in Ojibway on the face of the stone.

Priest's Stirring Adventures

MISS FEX and Miss La Victoire, Nardene sisters, gave us lunch. The sisters of the order do not wear distinguishing hoods and habits as do most of the Roman Catholic orders. I was told that during the time of the French Revolution, when members of the religious orders were harried and persecuted in France, this sisterhood got into the custom of proceeding alone in mutli, ministering at the risk of the guillotine; and that they have dressed thus ever since.

After lunch Father Desautels told me something about his work since he came among the Indians at the beginning of the century. He made many trips in the north each year into the country of the Albany, one summer as far as Fort Osaburg right up to Lake St. Joseph. The missionary was accompanied by two daring Indians, the best he could find. They encountered some nasty rapids. For sixty miles going up they had to pole mile after mile. There was no rest, no let up while the canoe was in the water. Sometimes they crawled along a foot at a time, fighting by sheer force of their arms from stone to stone.

Coming down they encountered a long stretch of terrible rapids which they had avoided by portaging on the way up and with which the Indians were not very familiar. "Can you make it?" asked Father Desautels. "At a little risk," answered the Indians. "All right, go ahead," said the priest.

They shot ahead, zipping down shooting waters, gliding past the edge of treacherous rocks. Suddenly, loomed up a waterfall. They looked for some place to shoot. There was none. Yet they could not make the shore to land. About 300 feet from the bank they say a rock about twelve feet square on the very edge of the fall. The Indians steered the canoe close. As it swept by in the current the three men jumped, scrambled on the rock and held the canoe with a rope. They pulled up the canoe and their baggage on the rock. They figured out their stranded position. Finally they lowered the canoe over the fall with ropes; and then the missionary and one of the Indians in turn. The second Indian had to jump.

The only mishap was a small hole in the canoe, which they plugged with a little pork.

On such trips winter and summer Father Desautels carried his vestments and equipment of the mass in a box. This last was built so that it could be split in two and set up as a table. Sometimes it was under a tent; frequently it was just under the trees.

In his work in the north Father Desautels met numbers of pagan Indians who had never heard of God. He spoke of the difficulty of instructing them. He always used the objective method. At night he would walk out among them and ask them to look at the stars. As they looked he would try to drive home his conception of the God who made them.

Bishop Gets a Thrill

NOT that the work had not its lighter moments. Some two or three years ago Bishop Halle, of the new diocese of northern Ontario, made a trip north with Father Desautels. The father told with evident delight of the thrill they gave his lordship on a northern lake when the Indians came up with a moose swimming and threw a noose over its head, so that the animal, driven by their shouts, towed them speedily down the lake, until as they drew close to the shore they despatched it with a blow of an axe.

The mission work among the Ottawa-Ojibway Indians of Manitoulin was begun in 1838 at Wekwikong, not by the Jesuits, but by a secular priest, Father Jean Baptiste Proulx. In that year he performed his first baptism of Madeline Assinive. Strangely enough, Father Desautels buried her last year. Her life of 86 years had completely spanned the history of this mission. By a coincidence the first male whom Father Proulx baptized, Pierre Lamorandiere, also died last year, though at Killarney on the mainland, not like the woman, at the spot where he had been first blessed by this early priest.

The Jesuits came to Wekwikong in 1844, the year in which the order sent out two missionaries from France to resume their traditional ministry to the Indians of Canada. Father Jean Pierre Chone came to Wekwikong; Father Dominic Du Ranquet made his headquarters on Walpole Island.

Father Desautels, a grave, kindly, bearded man of scholarly aspect, wearing glasses, has given nearly twenty-five years of his life to lonely life among these Indians. In a sense, his headquarters at Wekwikong, while not isolated from the viewpoint of mileage, are actually as far away from civilization for him as if he lived at Herschel Island. "I do not go out," he said simply. "I see few visitors. I have no time."

Except for his Belgian colleague and the Jesuit lay brothers Father Desautels sees none of his kind. His whole intercourse is with the Indians, of whom he has charge of some 1,700 souls. He is their priest, their father confessor, their mentor, their leader. He writes their letters. He keeps track of the casualties who go off to the lumber camps. He settles their domestic tangles. He advises in their land difficulties. Always he preaches and talks in the Ojibwa, tongue, walking miles and miles up and down his reserve or driving behind his Indian pony.

He is scholarly even in the Indian tongue. He has just concluded the translation of a book of devotion and hymns into the Ojibway, one of several native devotional books which he has prepared.

In Canada's Only Big Private Game Forest Deer Are Winter Pets and Autumn Targets

Unique Hobby of Merner Brothers Who Live All Year in Their 800-Acre Hunters' Paradise in Northern Ontario — Hunters' Parties Regulated Yet Unregulated

By MADELINE FRASER

TOWERING, densely wooded hills. Deep valleys. A turbulent river rushing through at breakneck speed. A gently flowing creek meandering from a side-long direction and mixing its placid waters with the torrent. A few acres of cleared land where stream and river meet. A large house, built and furnished after the style of an English hunting lodge. Such is a sketchy picture of the home and hunting grounds of the Merner family near Trout Creek village in the township of Himsforth, district of Parry Sound, Northern Ontario. South River has its headwaters in Algonquin Park and its outlet in Lake Nipissing, while Trout Creek, called so because it is full of speckled trout, is one of the many thousands of clear water streams for which the district is famous.

In eight hundred acres of land, surrounded by a wire fence eight feet high, two hundred or more deer find their homes in what is popularly known as the "Merner Deer Preserve." It is the only private deer preserve of its kind in Canada where the owners make a hobby of breeding, feeding and then killing for sport the deer in its precincts. At a stated time set by the Ontario game and fisheries department, which applies to privately owned preserves—usually in the fall of each year—the Merner brothers have hunting parties when those who are lucky, enough to be friends enjoy the thrill of hunting the deer when it is strictly against the game laws to kill these animals in most parts of Ontario.

For eleven years deer have run wild in this enclosure. Absalom Merner, the now deceased father of

The ELK WERE NOT A SUCCESS AND HAD TO BE KILLED

200 Deer in Enclosure

At first he and his wife thought that they would just build a little bungalow, enclose the land for the deer and live there only in the summer and fall. But eventually they decided to erect a suitable home and try living there for at least one winter. This venture was so successful that Mr. and Mrs. Merner made it their permanent residence. Five years ago Absalom Merner died and his sons took over his estate and have kept up his hobby of breeding deer ever since.

"My father had twenty deer to begin with and now we own over two hundred and we have been killing them every year," one of the sons, Harry Merner, told me as we sat in easy chairs before the huge open fireplace in the family living-room.

"Shortly after my father commenced the breeding of deer he got a pair of elk calves less than a year old and some moose about the same age," Mr. Merner proceeded. "He figured he ought to be able to carry his hobby of breeding Canadian wild animals further than deer so as to provide some variety for his hunting friends. All went well until the two moose reached five years of age. Then a big fight was staged between them and the deer, with the result that the deer, who largely outnumbered the moose, came away with all the honors. We found the carcasses of the moose a day or so later. Their bodies had been punctured by the deer's horns. That's a fact which is not generally known, I believe—that deer attack moose. These moose weighed about seven hundred pounds and were five years old.

"The elk never prospered," said Mr. Merner. "They were very destructive and we had to kill them. They ruined the trees and generally destroyed the property. They really are not suitable for this country."

As I sat talking to Mr. Merner I kept glancing out of the window, hoping I might see a deer flash by in the bush on the other side of the river. Almost as if he discerned my thoughts, Mr. Merner said that at this time of the year the deer became particularly wild and would not venture near the house.

Tame Only in Winter

In winter, when they have to be fed, a few come to the cleared land near the house and occasionally they follow members of the family and burrow their noses into their pockets looking for food. But immediately the snow disappears and they again become self-supporting they get very wild.

In the winter, when the bush in the enclosure lies smothered in snow and ice the Merner brothers have hay, alfalfa and corn carried out by teams and sleighs and dumped at intervals on top of the snow where the deer collect and feed.

After lunch, partaken of in a dining room partially enclosed by glass through which one could glance out over the rivers and hills of the preserve, Mr. Harry Merner took me for a tramp with the hope that I would see some of his deer. And I was not disappointed.

After crossing the river by a swinging bridge and passing through a dense section of bush, we came to a runway. Mr. Merner drew my attention to some half burnt logs to the right. "A salt lick for the deer," he whispered. "In the summer evenings they crowd around it and if you can get close enough without disturbing them it is a great sight. Salt seeps into the logs and the deer can still get it by licking the wood when it has apparently disappeared.

Stalking stealthily down the runway as if we were hunters on the trail we soon came to an intersection. Here we separated, Mr. Merner making off to the left while I continued on down the runway. We had planned that he would scare up the deer, who sleep in the bush in the daytime and rise about four o'clock to graze.

Soon—a rush like a sudden, very strong wind. A loud crackling of branches like sticks on a fire. A deer facing me on the runway not twenty-five feet ahead. Hesitation. Ears cocked. Soft, beautiful eyes started. Then he was off in a flash, white flag hoisted like a sail in a stiff breeze.

Watching on Runway

Then, when all was still, another startling crackle. A second deer shot out from the thicket and darted across the runway. But he did not stop to look and listen—which is invariably the undoing of the deer that is being hunted. He followed his companion's trail at such speed that I only caught a glimpse of him as he shot by.

When, later, I met Mr. Merner at the end of the runway, he said that he had seen several, and thought he had succeeded in frightening them in my direction.

We came again to the river and there on its high bank was a small lodge where visitors sleep while on hunting parties. There were stoves and bunks, blankets, tables and cooking utensils.

"Here are some tracks," and Mr. Merner indicated some deer marks in the mud as we climbed another steep hill, "and there are some deer on the hills across the gully—see them?"

But they had heard us at that great distance and were off in a cloud of dust. Seen so far away they looked exactly like large collie dogs bounding through the brush. Looking back over other hills we saw several more in the distance.

"Could you shoot one at that distance?" Mr. Merner questioned. "How far is it?" I wanted to know. "Oh, a couple of hundred yards or so."

"That would be a guess," I replied. As we retraced our steps housewards the thought struck me: "What would happen to these animals in case of a bush fire?" I asked the question.

"They would seek safe shelter in the river, I feel sure," Mr. Merner answered. "Before we bought the land this part of the enclosure had been burnt over twice and this is all young growth. About one-third of the property is virgin bush of maple, birch, hemlock and pine."

Baby Fawns Scentsless

"We have never sold our deer," he continued, "although I am of the firm conviction that if deer raising was put on a commercial basis and the venison sold out of the regular season it would create a new industry in the north country—if the game laws would permit. Venison is at its best in September, and the usual open season comes in November. However, I never bothered to suggest this commercializing of game because this preserve is only a hobby with us."

It was fascinating to listen to Mr. Merner as he told story after story of the deer. Like people, they are all different though the general impression is that they are the same. One will have white hoofs. Another black. One is taller than another. One has a black nose. Another a white. The expressions of their faces are totally unlike.

When the tiny fawns are born, about the middle of May, their mothers hide them under logs or in brush piles where they leave them while they go to look for food. Because the fawns are born without scent they are not able to follow their parents into the bush. The babies are nursed by their mothers until November, and when they change their coats from a spotted, mottled color, to grey, they get their scent.

At the end of ninety days their horns are full grown, and about Christmas time they fall off. "Then we are picking them up all over the property," laughed Mr. Merner. "They do not grow on again until the following spring. Nature, the wise provider, sees to it that the deer lose their horns in the winter. If they did not it would be a cause of the survival of the fittest, for when the food supply is slim they would be fighting continuously."

"Are you ever troubled with other wild animals in the enclosure?" I asked him.

"Only lynx," came the reply, "and I have shot several. They jump over the fence after the fawns."

There are plenty of partridges and rabbits in the preserve. Dogs are never used for hunting in the Merner preserve.

LURE OF BEEHIVE

ONE of the cleverest birds in the world is the "honey guide" of Africa, which has learned to entice men to open beehives for him.

The "honey guide" has a sweet tooth, as well as a liking for the larvae of bees. But he is a small bird and beehives are hard for him to crack. So he seeks out a man, and when he finds one, perches in a tree and begins to chatter. This means that he knows where there is a hive and that he wants the man to follow him. He leads his human assistant to the hive, stopping at intervals to wait for his slower partner to catch up.

These birds are highly valued in Africa, and to kill them is a misdemeanor punishable by law.

TODAY YOUR LAST CHANCE TO SEE DUMBELLS REVUE

Oh Yes! Will Be Presented
Tonight For Last Time
At Grand.

ENTIRELY DIFFERENT

The world-famous Dumbells company, under the personal direction of Captain Merit Plunkett, will offer their latest and most successful revue, "Oh, Yes!" at the Grand theatre matinee and night today.

Among the outstanding features of this new revue are Al Plunkett's songs, "Do Shrimps Make Good Mothers?" "Cross-words" and a new "fly" song, "Ross Hamilton sings 'The Kiss That I Got In the Moonlight' and 'My Dream Boy.' "Red" Newman has two great songs, "Let's keep the Money in the Country" and "How Does the Milk Get Into Cocoa-nuts?" Another great comedy song is Pat Rafferty's "Lips That Touch Kippers Shall Never Touch Mine." Stan, Bennett has a couple of delightful songs, one of them being "Colonel Lipstick of the Coldstream Guards." "Jock" Holland leads the beauty chorus in "Where Are the Girls of the Old Brigade?"

There are two great comedy sketches, one called "Red Justice" and the other "A Home from Home." In these humorous travesties "Red" Newman, Pat Rafferty, Morley Plunkett, Stan, Bennett and "Jock" Holland are afforded ample scope for their individual characterizations, which are so well known and liked by the Dumbells patrons.

Captain Plunkett and his Dumbells orchestra provide a half-hour of harmony and syncopation, including in their repertoire a bit of everything from jazz to classical selections.

"Oh, Yes!" is a splendid successor to "Ace High," which broke all Canadian records in its twenty-six weeks on the road. The company remains exactly the same, but the revue is entirely new from start to finish—not a line, song or setting of "Oh, Yes!" ever having been used here before.

PAT RAFFERTY FUNNIEST ACTOR OUT OF MOVIES

Inimitable Character Has Two Individual Numbers in "Oh, Yes!" At Grand

If asked to name the funniest man outside of Hollywood, the majority of us would promptly say, "Pat Rafferty." He has the melancholy wit of Charlie Chaplin, the acrobatics of Harold Lloyd, the size of a peanut, plus the personality of—Pat Rafferty.

Rafferty first came into the vision of Canadian audiences when he joined Captain Plunkett's fourth division party, the Maple Leafs. The next season he was out with a musical comedy, and three years ago he rejoined Captain Plunkett as a member of the then newly organized Dumbells company, where he has become immensely popular.

Rafferty's humor is a sort of the boisterous brand that send the audience into guffaws and gales of laughter. It is rather the subtle kind that grows on one. A smile at the time, a grin the next day and a hearty laugh two weeks afterwards, when telling some one about the funny things in the show.

Those of us who enjoy his burlesque songs so keenly will be glad to hear that he has been given two individual numbers in "Oh, Yes!" in addition to his usual prominent parts in the sketches. His newest songs are "Lips That Touch Kippers Shall Never Touch Mine" and "Oh, How I Hate Women."

Captain Plunkett and his Dumbells company and orchestra, the same invincible organization that scored so heavily with "Ace High" earlier in the season, will offer their latest and, from all reports, greatest revue success, "Oh, Yes!" at the Grand twice today, matinee and evening.

This new revue is just that—new from overture to finale. Not a line, song, sketch, setting nor idea has been given here before.

"IF I MARRY AGAIN" AT LOEW'S ON MONDAY

Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes in Star Production.

Endless days and nights of steady rain, a tropical fever that racks the body and befuddles the mind—would all this be enough to kill the spark of love of a husband for his wife? This interesting situation arises in If I Marry Again, which will be the first National attraction at Loew's theatre, beginning Monday. The story concerns a young man who is sent to a tropical isle by his father because of his marriage to an undesirable girl, in the hope that his love will die and that he will return to his father. Doris Kenyon, Anna Q. Nilsson, Lloyd Hughes and Hobart Bosworth are in the cast.

CRUMPLED FENDERS MADE LIKE NEW AGAIN
Reliable Metal Repair Turns Out Work of Highest Order.

"Here's where I absorbed a real bump a few minutes ago," lamented a London motorist the other day, and he pointed to a crumpled-up fender that looked as if it had been in too uncomfortable juxtaposition with a steam roller.
"It's an awful job to tackle, but will you see what you can do with it?" he asked R. H. Gregory of the Reliable Metal Repair at 354 Wellington street. The owner's tone of voice implied that he wasn't overly optimistic as to the prospects of the fender ever looking the same again.
"Sure, we'll fix it up," was Mr. Gregory's reply. And he did.
When the man who owned the machine returned for it, he evinced real surprise with the perfection of the repairing. "I can't see even a wrinkle," he commented. "How did you ever do it? If it weren't for that new paint you put on, I would think it was a brand new fender."
That is the sort of work turned out by the Reliable Metal Repair Shop and the reason it is of this standard is that Mr. Gregory is an expert of many years' experience in this field. He does all manner of welding and brazing, as well as makes a specialty of panelling new bodies for automobiles.

All Pipes Repaired At Blakey's Shop
B. D. Blades Known Throughout District As Expert.

"Come on, now, kid; mosey along," was the gruff command a burly policeman directed at a youngster standing before a shop window in Boston many years ago. The boy's nose was flattened against the glass, all a thrill, he watched a workman inside making a pipe.
A pipe, of course, was no novelty to him. Didn't his father keep four or five of varying sizes around the house and didn't he have to "get a straw out of the broom" for dad about every day?
But this was different. It wasn't every day that a fellow had the opportunity of watching a pipe actually being made. Usually such things were done far from the ken of the then rising generation and not right in a window where each movement could be seen.
"Are you going?" broke in the officer again.
"Yep," was the reply as the youngster shuffled slowly away.
Ten minutes later the same policeman chased the same boy away from the same window, again with a muttered imprecation against "such doggone contrary kids that can't take a hint."
As soon as the youth had reached the corner the time he raced around the block and was back in front of the window again by the time the policeman had returned—just as he had done before.
"Well, if you're so all-fired stuck on seeing that man make that pipe I guess I'll have to forget about the sidewalk bylaw and let you stay here," was the way in which the officer finally disposed of the case.
That boy, who showed such persistence, is today B. D. Blades, manager of Blakey's cigar store on Richmond street between King and York—a man who has become known far and wide as the one person who is an expert in repairing pipes. Yesterday Mr. Blades was working on a pipe sent all the way from Chapleau, in northern Ontario, and a number of years ago he was sent to Winnipeg. Mr. Blades for the last fourteen years has been repairing pipes for smokers of London and the West, and it has been because of the satisfaction he has given them that his reputation has spread.

London Auto Painters' Work Always Reliable

"The great secret of a good finish for an automobile body is in the quality of material used and knowing how to use it," P. A. Manross of the London Auto Painters, Ruggles building, Dundas street, points out.
"There is no use in an owner bringing his car to us today and telling us that he wants to have it in three or four days. A proper job cannot be done in that time. Most efficient methods call for two weeks' time on a car body, so that it may be given the correct amount of drying and the right number of coats of body paint, so that the car will not sweat."
It has been demonstrated by the London Auto Painters that if body finishes are put on by their method the car, provided it is given attention, will retain its lustre for two years.
It is improper care that causes the varnish and finish to crack. Supposing, for instance, that you have had your car out in the hot sun. You decide to wash it and turn it into the garage and start in by throwing a stream of fairly cold water on it. The water causes the metal of the body to contract and this shrinking loosens the paint and varnish, chusing it to crack.
A machine does not go out of our paint shop until we know that it is right," said Mr. Manross, and patrons will support this statement, for they have seen the results of their painting and they know the capabilities and the policy of using only the very best materials obtainable.

Satisfactory Service Aim Of Tanner Bicycle Stores

With an aim to meeting a greatly expanded trade to which at present every indication points, the main bicycle store of the A. T. Tanner concern, at 665 Dundas street, has recently been completely renovated, and the interior and equipment rearranged to enable Mr. Tanner and his staff to give their customers still more efficient and satisfactory advice.
This motto of "efficient and satisfactory service" has been one of the main reasons for the phenomenal growth of the Tanner business. Eight years ago Mr. Tanner first located in London at the Dundas street address, and within a remarkably short time his establishment had attained the reputation of being one place where owners of bicycles and motorcycles were sure of receiving prompt and courteous attention at all times.
Within the last year or two Mr. Tanner has expanded his stock to include auto parts and accessories, tricycles, wagons and other wheeled toys for children, as well as a complete range of radio sets and appliances.

Two years ago a second store was opened at 402 Clarence street, where perfect bicycle service is the other leading line of the main shop in London East are handled.
With the establishment of a third store on Hamilton road in December, the Tanner firm is now able to provide bicycle and motorcycle service that covers the entire city of London. Mr. Tanner assures his hundreds of customers that the new shops will in all respects adhere to the standard of rapid and efficient repair work and service of the better class for which the original shop has become noted.

EFFICIENCY IS RESULT OF GOOD BOOKKEEPING

Alex. R. Morrison Audits Books and Prepares Tax Returns.

Alex. R. Morrison, public accountant and auditor with offices in the Westervelt building, Richmond street, has gained a splendid reputation in London and district during his six years' work in this city.

Businessmen are now realizing the importance as never before of having a reliable system of bookkeeping and this kept in such a manner as to permit taking off a monthly statement in order that the condition of the business can be studied and one month's business compared with another. In this way small leaks are often detected, expenses are checked with sales and income and any changes for the betterment of the business can be quickly and readily made.

Mr. Morrison makes a special practice of installing systems and working on plans that can be most easily followed and understood by his clients. After a suitable system is installed it should be checked up or audited either monthly or quarterly. In addition to making a thorough audit and compiling all necessary municipal returns and reports, an accountant service department is also run in connection with the above. This service takes care of the man whose business does not warrant a full time bookkeeper. A suitable system is installed by which Mr. Morrison can write up the books once or twice a week or monthly or whenever it is convenient or necessary.

Copp Supply Firm Assures Quality
Known As One of Leaders in Building Material Field.

When a firm of contractors undertake to build a house or some more imposing structure they always go to a reliable supply company where they are assured they will receive quality for their money. The William Copp Building Supply firm at 85½ York street is recognized as one of these. For this reason they are known as one of the leading corners of this nature in the city. Long before the time when London had reached its present size and importance, this firm was serving London contractors and individuals with materials necessary for construction work.

Hundreds of local factories, churches, schools, residences and other buildings have been erected with materials from this company's yard, and today the business of this establishment has attained great proportions.
"The building supply business," says William Copp, the manager, "is one in which the dealer cannot appeal to the public by resorting to frills. Instead, he must depend upon plain, everyday methods to better his trade. That is our aim here. We have always maintained a standard of keeping only thoroughly reliable lines of building material, and it is to this that we attribute our constantly increasing trade."
All classes of lime, cement, tile, pressed brick, fireproof wallboard and all other material needed in construction work are handled by this firm.

Woodstock, May 29.—A check

FINANCE MINISTER BLYTHE

WILL REDUCE THE EXPENDITURE NOW MADE ON UNEMPLOYMENT DOLES.

Debate in the Dail on the land purchase finance has greatly strengthened public confidence in the government's handling of money matters. Thirty millions are to be raised for land purchase. Landlords will be bought out with 4 1/2 per cent stock, which Great Britain is guaranteeing. Objection was made to the British guarantee,
and both farmers and labor members
urged the government to refuse it.
The stock, they said, would fall much below par, and the government could recover it by purchase in the open market.

Safe

President Cosgrave denounced this as a dishonest proposal, and said he would sooner leave public life. One of the members of the government
learned from Great Britain,
he said, is that they honor their bond. Any sentiment that would reject a British guarantee, he declared, was false pride.

W. A. HALL NAMED STANDARD-BEARER

Popular Physician Chosen at Walkerton Party Convention.

Special to The Advertiser by a Staff Correspondent.

Walkerton, May 29.—Dr. W. A. Hall of Walkerton will be Liberal candidate for South Bruce in the forthcoming election. Of nine prominent Liberals nominated at an enthusiastic convention held in Walkerton hall today, Dr. Hall was chosen to contest the riding. William Krug of Chesley tied with Dr. Hall on the first ballot.

More than 400 took part in the convention, one that gave assurance of a Liberal victory in South Bruce, because of its enthusiasm and the spirited manner in which all guaranteed true support for the winning candidate. It was the greatest political rally witnessed here in years.

William McConnell, president of the South Bruce Liberal association, opened the meeting with remarks of welcome and forecast of a successful convention.

Nine Are Nominated.

The first business of the convention was the calling for nominations for a candidate to carry the banner of the Liberal party in the coming election. The following were nominated: Otto E. Klein, Dr. Hall, R. E. Truax (Walkerton), John A. Johnston (Mildmay), Wm. Krug (Chesley), Dr. D. Finleyson (Ripley), Chas. Baechler (Kinloss), William McDonald (Chesley), and George Anderson (Lucknow). Each of the candidates was given ten minutes to address the convention. Those who retired were Wm. McDonald, R. E. Truax, Dr. Finleyson, J. A. Johnston and George Anderson. The balloting was proceeded with.

It took only two ballots to decide, and the choice of the convention fell upon Dr. Hall, a leading physician of Walkerton. Mr. Wm. Krug of Chesley was the runner-up.

Dr. Hall briefly thanked the delegates for making him their choice, and promised that he would leave no stone unturned to return the riding to the Liberal fold.

Marshall Plays Tories.

The Hon. Duncan Marshall, the dominion organizer, has delivered many able addresses, but by his effort this afternoon he surpassed himself, making an address that was full of fight and full of vision. He touched upon agriculture and its needs, and pointed out that unless markets are found for the products of the farm a government that is not a government. When the Mackenzie King government came into power, it was found that the basic industry of Canada was suffering as never before in its history. There were no markets and the country was never in such a condition of stagnation. The first thing found necessary was to look around for markets for the farmers and manufacturers. They had started out to raise the cattle embargo. This problem had been one of the most difficult, but after a strenuous fight, entry for Canadian cattle had been secured.

Another matter that was of vital importance was the great shipping industry. It was found that there was a combine which was detrimental to the shipping of products from Canada. The Hon. Thomas A. Lowe, minister of trade and commerce, had tackled this octopus, and was trying to secure better conditions in shipping by offering a contract to Sir William Petersen, and guaranteeing government support if this combine can be broken, and Canadian goods can find reduced freight rates, which will go into the pockets of the producers.

S. D. Cameron presented resolutions expressing confidence in the administration of the Right Hon. Mackenzie King and his government, also that the convention express its appreciation of the dominion government's efforts to effect a reduction in ocean freight rates. This matter had been taken up by the minister of trade and commerce, the Hon. T. A. Lowe, in an aggressive manner. The farmers are particularly interested in the reduction of ocean freight on cattle, as it is necessary to the success of agriculture.

A resolution that met with tremendous approval was as follows: "Resolved, that the Liberals of South Bruce, in convention assembled, place on record its high appreciation of the valued services rendered the party by Mr. Reuben E. Truax, during his political career extending over a period of 35 years; during that period Mr. Truax has carried the Liberal standard in twelve election campaigns, and whether in victory or defeat, the party always had a candidate of whom they could well feel proud. We desire on this occasion to reaffirm our confidence in Mr. Truax, and to tender him our hearty thanks for his self-sacrificing work in the interests of the Liberal party in this riding, and in the cause of government in this country. It is our earnest wish that he may yet be spared for many years of usefulness, and that the Liberals of this county may continue to have the benefit of his mature judgment and his active influence on behalf of Liberal policies and principles."

BOB-LO STARTS REPRISALS WHEN FERRY BOAT CUT OFF

Will Force Examination of Luggage of American Visitors.

CUSTOMS MEN BUSY

Canadian Press Despatch.

Amherstburg, May 29.—Bois Blanc Island (Bob-Lo) on Saturday, Memorial Day in the United States, will experience something never before known on the island.

Canadian customs and immigration officials will stop every passenger disembarking from the Detroit and Windsor ferry steamers, bound from Detroit to the island, for minute inspection and examination, even to lunch baskets. Canadian police, probably officers of the provincial force, will also do duty.

That, in a nutshell, is Amherstburg's answer to the cutting off of the steamer Papoose, which for years has carried passengers from Amherstburg to and from the popular island resort. The discontinuance of the ferry from the town to Bois Blanc was announced yesterday by A. H. Bartlett, K.C., of Windsor, Canadian attorney for the ferry company.

A veritable storm of protest was in evidence everywhere in Amherstburg last night. Everywhere the topic of conversation was about the latest move of Captain Simpson of the ferry company, who, as Reeve W. C. Inch of the town stated, "has been so long accustomed to give the two toots and seeing everything jump out of his way that he expects Amherstburg to do the same."

Reeve Inch today stated that Amherstburg has for some time expected just this move. It was Mr. Inch who today stated that official word had been received that the Canadian customs and immigration men would take up their positions at the Bois Blanc dock tomorrow, when thousands of American holiday amusement-seekers would visit the island.

"The ferry company is using the immigration angle merely as a cover-up to their real reason," Reeve Inch said. "What the ferry company fears is the competition of the border hydro-electric railways, who would probably carry three thousand people

MRS. EDWARD SEAGRAM PASSES AT WATERLOO

Wife of Noted Sportsman Is Stricken With Heart Failure.

Special to The Advertiser by a Staff Correspondent.

Kitchener, May 29.—Mrs. Edward F. Seagram, wife of Waterloo's best-known manufacturer and sportsman, passed away suddenly shortly before noon today at her home on Will street in Waterloo from heart failure. Mrs. Seagram had not been well for a few weeks, but she appeared to be much improved today, and Mr. Seagram was on the train going to Toronto when she took a bad turn. He was finally located at Brantford, but the end had come before he again reached Waterloo.

The late Mrs. Seagram, whose marriage took place on October 8, 1902, was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander C. C. McLaughlin of Guelph. Survivors include Mrs.

A New Shipment of Bath Towels in Well Known Quality

Even the staple field of Bath Towels has felt the fancy for brilliant color flashes. Borders in vivid shades, or in delicate pastels, add interest to the new shipment of Galt towels. And striking effects are gained by the use of two-tone jacquard designs.

A quality that is already famous remains steadfast, whether towels are colored, white, or in the familiar natural shades with colored stripes.

Have the Galt assortment shown you, when you are selecting for trousseau, bridal gifts, or replenishing your own supplies.

THE LITTLE HATS

"pour le sport," as Michael Arlen would write it) are as popular as ever. Smaller than ever, in some cases! They cuddle down far enough to shade the eyebrows, even though they cannot be said to have brims. And embrace the back of the neck closely. In wool, suede, corduroy, seudine, velours, silk, and all the crushable, kindred materials, they are as popular as ever, for all sorts of travel, and all kinds of weather.

WIDE-SPREADING RIVALS

are beginning to make their appearance. Summer hats, gracefully painted, with painted scarfs to match, are coming into favor. And the handkerchief that takes its walk abroad with them should match of course!

A NEW WHITE WAY

is being opened by the Bathing Suits. Too early to talk of them? If you could see them, you couldn't wait! And it's just as well to be prepared. You can have one in white wool jersey, if you have the figure to wear it. Or in taffeta with "crawled pleats." Or in white satin that looks like the most adorable young ball dress, with little curving frills and delicious knickers that peeker at the knee. And with these you wear white silk stockings, and white satin bathing shoes like a Ballerina's, to complete the picture.

AFTER THAT

you add a white beach parasol, and a beach bag of lustrous waterproof to match. And perhaps a sunbathing cap with a neck frill. It won't be Great Men only that will leave footprints on the sands in that case. Every man-jack of them will be making tracks there. (Especially if you add a black and white cape, a miracle of mystery.)

THE LITTLE TWO-PIECE DRESSES.

pleated skirts and jumper tops, are the most all-round popular garment at the moment. They can appear at breakfast, and stay well on into the afternoon. The skirts are pleated all round—in front only—or have kick pleats. But they are uniformly as short as the wearer can bear them. The jumper bodices may be slipovers (in most cases they are), with opening collars, stand-uppers, buttons, ties, tabs, jabots, but they are all girl in tightly about the hips.

THE THREE NEW GRACES

on the horizon are Long Sleeves, Bustle Backs, and Normal Waistline. Long sleeves, of every conceivable shape, are on many of the newest frocks. The great fashion houses abroad are experimenting with the other two. But the results are as yet uncertain.

Its erection at Sunshine park marks

the realization of the aim of Bishop Fallon after thirteen years of effort.

Laying of Corner-Stone At Seminary Tomorrow Afternoon To See Reward Of Bishop Fallon's 13 Years' Effort

Ceremony At Sunshine Park
Will Be Attended By All Priests of Diocese.

TO COMBINE SCHOOLS
Seminary Proper and School of Philosophy Will Be
As One.

On Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock
the thirteen years' work of Rev. M.
F. Fallon, D.D., bishop of London, in fostering St. Peter's seminary of this city, will have reached fruition
when his lordship lays the cornerstone of the new seminary now in course of construction, at Sunshine park on Huron street.

Ever since the day in September, 1912, shortly after he was made head of the London diocese, it has been the constant aim of Bishop Fallon to erect some day a commodious building. Since that time this seat of learning has sent out 49 priests to the diocese of London, four to the archdiocese of Edmonton and one to the diocese of Saint John, N.B. At present there are 24 young men studying at the seminary proper and 20 at the school of philosophy, a preparatory institution on Queen's avenue east, teaching university working in the seminary proper.

When the new seminary is completed these two schools will be combined into one, thus permitting a more efficient teaching system, because of the elimination of the necessity of teachers moving back and forth from the two establishments.
The new structure, when finished,
will have cost $500,000, and of this sum no less than $30,000 has been donated by the 90 priests of the diocese
since February of this year.

At 3:45 Sunday afternoon the procession of clergy and laity of the diocese will form at the south end of Sunshine Park and then proceed to the seminary building. In the procession will be altar boys of the city, seminarians, local and district priests to the number of 90, his lordship the bishop, and laymen of the diocese. Previous to the laying of the cornerstone a procession will be sung by the St. Peter's choral choir, under Brother Stephen. Then Bishop Fallon will bless the cornerstone and preach the dedicatory sermon. The ceremony will be concluded by his lordship conducting the benediction of the blessed sacrament on an altar erected on the first floor of the new structure.

Those assisting the bishop will be:
Very Rev. Dean Downey, Windsor,
assistant priest; Very Rev. Dean
Stanley, London, P. R. C.; Rev. J.
White, Dublin, deacons of honor;
Rev. J. J. Gnam, Chatham, deacon;
Rev. P. Heureux, Belle River, sub-deacon; Rev. W. T. Corcoran, Mount Carmel, cross bearer; Rev. B. Gaffney,
Ottawa, thurifer; Rev. J. Emery, Big Point; Rev. J. Quigley, Tillsonburg;
Rev. W. Roy, Staples, and Rev. E.
Weber, Hesseu, acolytes; Rev. L. M.
Forristal, William Morrison and William Bourdeau, of London, masters of ceremony. Rev. Joseph Cook of this city and Rev. J. Fogarty, who will be ordained to the priesthood in St. Peter's cathedral Sunday morning, will act as mitre bearer and crozier bearer respectively.

Preserve Names.
In the copper box, which will be placed in the center of the cornerstone, there will be put the names of the present spiritual and temporal rulers—the pope, the king, the papal delegate, the governor-general of Canada, the lieutenant-governor of Ontario, the prime ministers of Canada and Ontario, the bishop and the mayor of London, as well as the names of all the priests in the diocese. There will be inserted also current coins, and copies of the Border Cities Star, the Catholic Record,
the London Free Press and the London Advertiser, a history of St.
Peter's seminary, the city of London year book, and the names of the architects, engineers and contractors working on the new building.

Laymen from every one of the 72 parishes in the diocese are expected to visit London for Sunday's ceremony.
The silver trowel with which Bishop Fallon will lay the mortar, has been presented by J. E. Boyde, architect, and the copper box is the gift of J. M. Pigott, architect.

Talks On Health

Rheumatism Has Many Causes, May Enter System Through Teeth or Tonsils—Is Not Caused by Eating Fruit—Near-Sightedness Cannot Be Removed.

In this column, published every Saturday, there appear discussions of subjects related to health, hygiene and the prevention of disease, and condensed statements of articles written for Hygeia, the official organ of the American Medical Association, for the public; also answers to questions provided by authorities through the association. Requests for specific medical advice or diagnosis, which can be given only by the physician on seeing the patient, will be answered by a note to that effect.
This department is especially prepared for The Advertiser and other members of the North American Newspaper Alliance, with the consignment of Hygeia. All questions should be accompanied by a stamped addressed envelope.

RHEUMATISM.
Any and everything that may affect the human body and produce pain is called rheumatism. For this reason, as is pointed out by Dr. Solomon Strouse in a current review of the subject, medical students are requested to inquire particularly into the history of any patient who complains of "rheumatism." Medically,
the definition is limited to constitutional or general disease, in which there is inflammation of the muscles and joints, obviously accompanied by pain. The most common form, of course, is inflammation of the joints,
since the muscles are rarely affected by general inflammation. One form of inflammation of the joints comes on suddenly, usually attacks the joints between the fingers and this is known as acute rheumatic fever. Such persons have chills, fever and painful, red and swollen joints. In almost one-half of the cases the heart also becomes affected, and although people may recover from acute inflammation of the joints, the heart disease may become chronic.
In some cases, inflammation of the joints may also become chronic, but this is not so frequent.

Probably the germ that causes such inflammation enters the body through the tonsils or through infections at the roots of the teeth. If a physician finds that the tonsils or teeth are definitely affected, he will recommend that they be removed. There are, however, many instances in which the teeth and tonsils are not the only causes. There may be infections in the tonsils, the appendix,
the gall bladder, or in other organs
from which infectious material passes into the blood stream. There may be infections exist, as to whether or not the teeth and tonsils are responsible. Obviously, it is just as important to find out whether such infections exist, as to know whether or not the teeth and tonsils are responsible.

There is one type of infection of the joints in which the whole body becomes deformed, the fingers swell and the joints become crooked. This condition is called arthritis deformans, or deforming inflammation of the joints.

Fruits Not Acid.
For many years there have been numerous superstitions as to the relation of food to rheumatism. It has been said that rheumatism results from eating too much meat, from too much acid in the food, from too much fruit; or from similar causes. Dr. Strouse points out that meat is not acid, because after they are burned up in the body their residue is acid and occasionally an excessive meat-eater may complain of pains in various parts of the body.
On the other hand, fruits are not acid, because fruit juices, when burned in the body, yield chemical substances that are the opposite of acids.
It is probably safe to say, therefore, that food never causes true rheumatism. A properly-balanced or an inadequate diet may be a factor in the disease. Over-eating is harmful in many ways to the sufferer from rheumatism, since the extra acid may be an extra strain on the chemistry of the body, and since the habits of the body in ridding itself of excess material are interfered with by the vast amount of material that is consumed.
The physician who sees a patient with rheumatism endeavors, therefore, to find out first, if possible, any specific cause that may be responsible, and to eliminate that factor. He then applies remedies that are of value in alleviating pain and in overcoming infections in the spots where they exist. Untold harm may be done by manipulating or massaging a joint that requires rest—not to mention the possibility of spreading infection by such methods.

Harm may be done also by overlooking such serious conditions as tumors or malformations of joints by self-made diagnosis of rheumatism.
Relief of pain is possible by the proper use of remedies, including not only drugs, but also heat, bandages and suitable physical methods. When a patient with rheumatism is thus carefully studied and thoroughly treated, the results are usually good.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Bright's Disease.
F. A. M. writes: "I am a young man 21 years old. Two years ago because of a quantity of albumin in the urine a doctor diagnosed my ailment as acute Bright's disease. At the present time albumin is still present in small quantities at intervals, but in all this period there has never been noticeable a trace of it in the urine I pass immediately upon arising in the morning. Neither have I ever had one single symptom such as are said to accompany Bright's disease: swelling, dizziness, shortness of breath, high blood pressure, or dark spots before the eyes.
There are also times, but not every time by any means, when after being upon my feet for a long period, I have a dull aching feeling in the vicinity of my kidneys. This ache disappears at such times immediately after I sit down. Would you say that I have chronic Bright's disease, keeping in mind, of course, that my main symptom is albumin; and, if so,
is it utterly impossible to effect
a cure, no matter how long I try or what I do?"

Answer.—From the facts stated, the patient probably does not have Bright's disease, nor any type of true kidney disease, but the condition

known as orthostatic albuminuria—in which albumin passes through the kidneys when one is in the upright position, but not while he is lying down. This occurs in persons of the type described—thin, tall, weedy persons who grow rapidly. The disease is usually accompanied by the signs of fatigue mentioned, drawing and aching in the abdomen, as well
as general fatigue.
Usually the pulse pressure—that is,
the difference between systolic and diastolic blood pressures—is lower in the upright than in the recumbent position, contrary to the normal situation, and almost always, the albumin fails to appear in the upright position if the urine is maintained alkaline. In present, the so-called albumin consists more of globulin and less of true albumin than in Bright's disease.
These tests, as well as absence or presence of casts, should aid in reaching a true diagnosis.

Near-Sightedness.

L. J. R. writes: "I have read somewhere that near-sightedness, or myopia, can be cured by muscular exercises, and that one does not need to wear glasses. Is this true?"
Answer.—Myopia (near-sightedness) is that condition of the eye in which parallel rays of light come to a focus in front of the retina. The ordinary form of myopia is associated with an elongation of the front to back axis of the eye, so-called axial myopia.
Myopia is rarely congenital. It develops during the period of youth
when the body grows most rapidly.
A predisposition to myopia which is anatomical is a factor in its development. Conditions requiring the use of the eyes for close work over a long period of time also cause near-sight-edness.
If we accept the above definition
as correct (and it is generally accepted by authorities on the eye and its diseases), it is inconceivable that exercise of either the muscles of the eye within or outside of the eye ball can modify the degree of near-sightedness present in a given case.
Myopia cannot be "cured" or removed by any known medical or surgical procedure. This defect of sight may be corrected by the use of concave glasses. Proper hygiene of the eye can do much, however, in the prevention of the development of myopia, and in retarding its progress
when once established.

HOUSE SUPPORTS PAINLEVE POLICY

Procedure in Morocco Trouble Given Full Approval by Deputies.

Associated Press Despatch.
Paris, May 29.—The government of Premier Painlevé was sustained in the Chamber of Deputies by one of the biggest votes ever given to a French ministry—537 to 23.
The vote came as a climax to three days of debate on the government's Moroccan policy, which in effect, as explained by Premier Painlevé, is that the French government seeks not a single inch of additional Moroccan territory, but is prepared to defend to the bitter end every inch which France holds under the treaties.
The premier declared that his government was willing to consider peace overtures accompanied by sufficient guarantees presented by responsible representatives of Abd-el-Krim, leader of the Rifian tribesmen who have invaded the French zone in Morocco.
Both Premier Painlevé and Foreign Minister Briand fought hard to raise the debate to a question of national interest, but during the three days of discussion necessary for the government to set forth its policy, the shadow of party politics lurked continually behind the patriotic utterances of the majority of orators.
The vote is regarded more as a defeat for the Socialist party in the French Chamber than as a victory for the Painlevé government's viewpoint. The Right and Centre parties supported M. Painlevé without qualifications. The Socialists, facing exclusion from the ruling majority, were manoeuvred into supporting the government at the last minute, having changed their decision taken at a party caucus last night to abstain from voting. The Communists, whose opposition to all bourgeois governments cannot be changed under any circumstances, voted against the government.

Diplomacy Is Trained Service

Foreign Office Has a Widespread Organization With a Hand on All Corners of the World.

By HENRY SOMERVILLE.

LONDON—Diplomacy is a much abused word; it has become associated with ideas of war, plotting, and finesse. It has no necessary connection with any of these things. The word is derived from the diploma or parchment which bore an agent's credentials when he was sent to transact business with a foreign government. Diplomacy is simply the conduct of business between different governments. Every country that has relations with other countries must employ diplomats. Diplomacy is an indispensable branch of the public service of the smallest as well as the greatest countries.

The British foreign service must be understood as including all its diplomatic workers abroad as well as the staff in the foreign office at London. There is no real division between the work that is being done at what may be called the head office in London and the branch establishments, called embassies, legations or missions, scattered all over the world. There is no difference between entering the foreign office as a first division clerk and adopting diplomacy as a profession. The same examination has to be passed by all candidates and a young man may be put in London or Paris or Tokio or Prague and changed from one place to another as his superiors see fit. A good deal of interchange is made as a matter of policy in order to train men of wide and varied experience.

Far-Reaching Service.
The foreign office must not be considered simply as being concerned with deciding matters of high international policy. The foreign service, or diplomatic service, of Great Britain is doing a world-wide, day-to-day work for the whole of the empire. If Canadians visit a foreign country, or buy or sell goods in a foreign country, it is inevitable that circumstances will occur in which they will need some official representation before the government of that country. The high commissioner's office in London is, in effect, a diplomatic establishment. Canadians know something of the work and the cost of that office, and this will give them some idea of the service represented by the British diplomatic organization all over the globe.

Besides the nine embassies—Paris, Madrid, Tokio, Washington, Berlin, Brussels, Constantinople, Rio de Janeiro, Rome—which are diplomatic establishments of the first rank, there are over thirty legations, each with its minister and his attaches. There is, in addition, the enormous consular service under the administrative control of the foreign office, though it deals primarily and principally with trade, not with political or diplomatic questions.

Constantly in Touch.
Every diplomatic center is, of course, in constant communication with the London foreign office. The men on the ground in Bulgaria or Poland or China or Peru have to keep London informed of everything important that is going on, and they must also consult London whenever necessary and possible. It is a nice question for members of the service to discuss whether diplomats abroad are as important as they used to be. At one time the foreign office could only reach them by sending a messenger on horseback who might be weeks on the journey. Today the office can send instructions by telegraph to the most distant embassy within an hour. It is often said that an ambassador at the end of a telegraph wire is deprived of initiative. It is said that he is bound hand and foot by instructions. The question might be debated by those who know the relations between Ottawa and the high commissioner in London. Ottawa naturally depends on the high commissioner for its knowledge of questions that arise in London. The high commissioner must supply not only information but recommendations when he asks for instructions.

Working under pressure, as busy politicians and officials do, they are glad of assistance in having their minds made up for them, and they almost inevitably delegate as much power of decision as they dare to the man on the ground, provided that he is a man in whom they have confidence.

Victoria and the Typist.
Lord Salisbury was a man, too, as foreign secretary, liked to encourage initiative, yet he took infinite pains to give personal encouragement and advice to his subordinates abroad. The colossal private correspondence which he carried on with his ambassadors is a monument to his industry and a revelation of his policy. It was also Salisbury who was daring enough to introduce a lady typist into the foreign office. This did not please Queen Victoria. To the end of her life she insisted that papers sent to her from the foreign office for inspection—and all important papers were sent—should be handwritten, if they were not printed.

It is the business of the foreign office to obtain from its agents abroad all important political information available. Spies have been very often employed by diplomats, and the administration of a bribery fund has been a duty of ambassadors. There is no reason to suppose that the British foreign office relies on any spy service for obtaining information in times of peace. Count Herbert Bismarck once expressed inability to understand how British diplomacy worked at all because it never bribed. Sir Horace Rumbold, who has served at Madrid, Berlin, Tokio and Constantinople, states from his own personal knowledge that a British ambassador refused to accept absolutely reliable information because it did not come from a clean source. One is reminded of the Zinovieff letter. How did it come to the foreign office? The guess may be hazarded that it came through Scotland Yard. It is unlikely that the admiralty and the war office would refuse to employ spies to obtain military and naval information.

Protested to Gladstone.
An important question is the relation of the prime minister to the conduct of foreign policy. Mr. Lloyd George almost ignored the foreign office and its secretary and he tried the expedient of diplomacy by conference. Mr. MacDonald took the portfolio of the foreign secretary himself, which was regular enough from the point of view of the foreign office, though it now seems to be proved that the combined work of the premiership and foreign secretaryship is too much for the strength of any man. Mr. Baldwin has returned to the old tradition of leaving the foreign office to do its own work. Gladstone in his first premiership was prone to give interviews too freely to foreign ambassadors in London. The foreign secretary of the day, Lord Granville, was moved to write a tactful protest to Gladstone laying down the constitutional principle: "The prime minister has an undoubted right to communicate directly either with our representatives abroad or with foreign ministers in London. But I think that it is in his interest as much as in that of the foreign secretary that he should only appear as deus ex machina."

The relations of foreign minister and prime minister are relevant to the question of the relations between the dominions and Great Britain with regard to foreign policy. The tendency in the dominions appears to be for the prime minister to take the leading part in the conduct of foreign policy. The Australian prime minister now has a personal representative in London in constant touch with the foreign office. On the other hand, the dominions have successfully claimed the right of access to the prime minister, without paying much attention to the foreign office because they became accustomed during the Lloyd George period to the prime minister being the real controller of foreign policy. The prime minister has no longer such control, and therefore the dominions must become more interested in the foreign office.

HOME BANK DEPOSITORS WILL BE GIVEN RELIEF

50 Per Cent of Losses Will Likely Be Compensation of Government to Depositors—Relief Will Amount to More Than Five Millions—Policy Will Be Defined Next Week—May Eventually Get Complete Reparations.

LIQUIDATORS WILL RAISE MORE FUNDS

Canadian Press Despatch.
Ottawa, May 29.—The government's policy on Home Bank relief will be revealed early next week, it is understood, by the introduction in the House of Commons of a resolution preliminary to a bill to authorize relief to the depositors in the defunct bank to the extent of about $5,500,000. It is freely rumored about the Parliament Buildings that this will be the extent of the government's assistance to the losers by the bank's failure, and that the sum will be raised in the form of a loan. Added to what the government has already advanced in temporary relief and to what it is believed the liquidators will be able to raise from realizable assets of the bank, it is said that the Home Bank depositors will eventually receive most of the money lost through the failure of the bank nearly two years ago.

Not Yet Defined.
The government's policy has not yet been officially announced, but the matter has been thoroughly discussed here, and it is generally believed that this will be the government's contribution to the relief of the depositors.

On June 23, 1923, the total deposits in the bank's books amounted to $19,295,735. Of this amount $12,087,454 were in the savings accounts and $7,208,281 were commercial deposits, and when the bank closed its doors in August these figures were little changed.

There was 25c on the dollar paid on the savings, which left a balance unpaid of approximately $9,000,000.
WOULD GET 50 PER CENT.
Special to The Advertiser by a Staff Correspondent.
Ottawa, May 29.—The acting minister of finance failed this week to bring in the bill for compensating Home Bank depositors. It is practically certain to be presented next week. It is believed that the government will propose compensation to the depositors to the extent of 50 per cent of their loss.

MORE FRONT SEAT ROOM FOR OWNERS

Local Dealer Explains New Plan To Allow More Space.

"The motor car owner is entitled to more space in the front seat," declares Frank McLachlin, local Studebaker dealer.

"The manufacturer," he declares, "has no right to deprive the owner of any space through failure properly to build the car, or just to save the necessity of giving his product betterments and conveniences as they are developed."

"For instance, in the driving compartment: Since cars were first given left-hand drives, there have always been two iron rods, the gear shift and the emergency brake lever, in the very center of the driving compartment, taking up 10 per cent of the available space right at the most important place in the compartment."

"Now the emergency brake is used rarely, except for parking a car on an incline. Yet, because it is easier and cheaper to produce, manufacturers have insisted on invading this driver's space with that extra lever, taking up needed room and endangering occupants when a passenger's knee gets in the way of the lever in an emergency."

"Studebaker has eliminated this. It has done away with this space-consuming. Instead, the emergency brake lever projects out from under the instrument board, having a pistol-like grip. It is grasped even more readily than before: it pulls straight back, a natural operation, and it looks with a turn of the wrist. "It is out of the way. That 10 per cent of space now belongs to the owner. So inconspicuous is this new emergency lever where not in use, indeed, that it serves a new purpose. When left locked, it will stand out and be seen readily, so that the driver won't attempt to start up while the engine "bucks" the emergency brake."

"Moreover, instead of applying a second pressure to the same spot in the wheel as the normal brake, this new emergency brake applies its force to a drum on the propeller shaft. Thus it has the equalizing effect of the differential gear, as well as the rear gear ratio, which is about four to one, to aid the driver in applying space for which the car owner pays, and which he has a right to enjoy."

PERMITS GRANTED TO SHOPKEEPERS

About 2,000 Have Been Sent Authorizing Sale of 4.4 Beer.

Special to The Advertiser by a Staff Reporter.

Toronto, May 29.—Probably about 2,000, was the estimate made by Attorney-General Nickle today of the number of beer permits granted to shops throughout the province. Another 10 licenses were granted to clubs today, which will bring the number of that type of permits up to between 40 and 50. Adding standard hotels, an unofficial calculation is that well over 3,000 permits have been issued all together.

To this date, 100 shop permits for the sale of 4.4 beer have been issued for Toronto city. Hon. W. H. Price, provincial treasurer, stated this afternoon, that considerably more than half the soft drink manufacturers were collecting the beverage tax for the government. Arrangements, he added, were proceeding satisfactorily.

A bowling and soft ball tournament will be held in the afternoon, the proceeds going towards equipment for the children's playgrounds and hospital equipment in Ingersoll. Every Kiwanis club in Western Ontario is proud of its ball club and there will be some warm battles staged in the Ingersoll tournament. John Nash has been busy rounding the London club into condition and promises to trot out a team that should make Ingersoll, St. Thomas, Brantford, Hamilton, Kitchener and Galt hustle every inning.

The Kiwanians will gather at Mason's Arena gatherings at 6 o'clock sharp for their evening repast and will then journey to Memorial park to stage the greatest open-air garden party ever held in Ingersoll or any other town.

The vaudeville and side show events will be put on by the various clubs and preparations are being made to take care of at least 5,000 visitors. Admission to the park will be 25 cents, children with their parents being admitted free.

President John McHale of the London club, with such well known and famous entertainers as Sam Amoro, Vincent Colgan, Frank McLachlin and Bev. Hay have a number of surprise stunts in store for the evening and will be well worth the price of admission all by themselves.

The London club is also taking along a Kilty band as well as that musical collection of gentlemen who call themselves the "Band of the House of David." This aggregation of musicians will devote special attention to the entertainment of the children who are expected from every concession and sidewalk of Oxford and Middlesex counties.

Members of the Ingersoll Kiwanis club have had the matter of entertainment in hand for several weeks and have finally completed their arrangements. Residents of Ingersoll and vicinity know that when Ingersoll Kiwanis put on an entertainment that they get a good deal more than full value for their money.

George Naylor, president of the Ingersoll club, is at last satisfied that all the program needs to be a success is good weather, and the weatherman, being an honorary member of the club, has promised his very best brand for June 3.

George Beck is chairman of the entertainment committee and is the right man in the right place, as is

GEORGE NAYLOR, president of Ingersoll Kiwanis club, who has arranged with the mayor and council of Ingersoll to extend the freedom of the city to visiting Kiwanians, their friends and the people of the entire district, next Wednesday afternoon and evening.

George Mason, chairman of the stunts committee.

The evening banquet will be held under the chairmanship of Jack Gayler. Tom Dun, treasurer and keeper of the gate, states that the free list has been entirely suspended for the afternoon and evening and that every cent taken in at the gate will be used for playgrounds and hospital equipment.

Sam Gibson and George Sutherland are looking after the provision of prizes and have already begun to chuckle over the prizes that will be received by their hard-working fellow Kiwanians.

Ingersoll is only 20 miles from London, over paved roads, so don't fail to take in this garden party. It will be the best staged in Western Ontario this year.

RUSSIANS REFUSE PRISONERS TRIAL

Scottish Commercial Spy Released When Reds Fear Trouble.

By F. A. MACKENZIE.

Riga, May 29.—A Scotsman, arrested as a spy by the Russian secret police in February, crossed the Latvian frontier the other day, dressed in rough Siberian clothes, unkempt, rough bearded, with Red guards watching his exit. He was John A. Cook, for many years a mining accountant in Siberia, then attached to military headquarters at Vladivostok, and later assistant to Major Feymonville, American military observer at Chita. Cook elected to remain behind after the American expeditionary force had left, acting first as assistant to a gold mining concessionaire, and then as language teacher.

His main work for some time was sending regular reports secretly over the Chinese frontier by Chinese couriers to international business houses. The reports detailed every aspect of life, military, social, economic, under the Bolshevik regime. The writer met him when in Eastern Siberia in 1923, and suspected then his real occupation.

Reds Respect England.

The secret police finally caught him when, after police suspicions had been aroused, he endeavored to escape via Vladivostok. They extracted a confession and then expelled him. Cook says they told him he was not shot because Russia did not want trouble with England over a British subject.

Cook describes conditions in Eastern Siberia as one ruin. Chita, exceedingly prosperous under the Far Eastern republic, which encouraged foreign enterprise, now has collapsed. Industrially and commercially, he says. Over half the population is unemployed. The most prosperous businessmen all the prisons. The mining industry in Siberia is practically wiped out, except for a few placer gold, coal, silver and copper mines. Two American companies with old-time concessions are doing practically nothing. The British American Tobacco Company, which was threatened at one time with the closing of its Chita factory, still continues. Government industrial and commercial undertakings, which absorbed nearly all the original companies after killing off the original companies by high taxation, now are in a state of inanition, due partly to wholesale bribery and pilfering, which every effort of the police fails to control.

The peasants are disgruntled over taxation. Last year many peasants were arrested. Their discontent will seriously limit this year's harvest.

Cook describes his own treatment in prison as good. Medical treatment, he says was admirable, but the sanitary conditions were shocking. This is due to tremendous overcrowding. Butirsky prison at Moscow, for instance, is so overcrowded that the authorities find it impossible to try many cases before the prisoners die. Others have been waiting for two years unheard. Many go on hunger strikes to force attention upon themselves. There are two rooms in the prison devoted wholly to treat-
