What a Reporter Remembered of Forty Sermons*

It is told of a priest of the Boston diocese, who is now no more, that he was complimented by one of his parishioners on a sermon. The priest was curious to know what truth it was that made so deep an impression, but all his questioning elicited no reply. Finally the parishioner admitted that he remembered nothing of what was said. "But you see, Father," he urged in defence, "it's just like this. My wife puts my shirt in water, soap and blaine, and though none of those articles remain when the washing is finished, the shirt is far better off for it all. And so am I for your sermon, though I don't recall anything of it."

In many cases it must be sadly confessed that the Sunday morning sermon is like the Monday morning washing. The effects remain for some time in both cases, but the causes have evaporated. Yet the preacher is a teacher as well as a stimulant and is eager to have his lessons abide while they should also impart life and vigor in their delivery. Can one find out what it is in a sermon which will outlive the day of its preaching? Not fully, of course, because there are many strange survivals in memory as well as outside of it which seem to have no particular fitness entitling them to old age.

Still a voyage of discovery into the regions of the memory will disclose here and there some bit of land whether a tiny island of precarious volcanic origin or a more solid and greater continent not yet submerged by the waters of forgetfulness. For several years, with a view to discovering the constituents of the surviving lands, a teacher of rhetoric has had his pupils write out three of their earliest recollections of sermon truths. The experiment showed much variety and yet some marked uniformity in the traits of remembered truths. Those interested may perform the experiment for themselves and see whether it corresponds with the results obtained by the study of a reporter's memory. Mr. James Douglas made the rounds of the London churches and published his impressions of their preachers in the London Morning Leader. He afterwards gathered his remarks into a book called "The Man in the Pulpit." Here we may study the survival of the memory's fittest.

The material for the experiment is not wholly suitable. Mr. Douglas was not a normal listener. He stands on the sidelines, we may say. He has not thrown himself into the excitement of the game. He enters the church as the school-inspector does the classroom, not to learn with the docility and eager curiosity of a child but to examine and test and approve with the cold aloofness of a judge. Mr. Douglas is a journalist critic, and that renders him less suitable still as a listener. The journalist looks for the striking and arresting points, the spice for his readers. Mr. Douglas finally is a stylist of a pronounced type. Macaulay offered up sacrifices to truth on the altar of balance. Mr. Douglas looks as though he would be equally unmerciful for the sake of a metaphor. It is certainly interesting and extremely diverting to watch him working and weaving a city, a church, a voice, a face, a person into the devious pattern of a metaphor. The result is fascinating; it is Swinburne in prose (Mr. Douglas intensely admires Swinburne); it holds the reader entranced as the man does who keeps some half a dozen, sharp, gleaming knives whirling through the air, but when the breathless performance is over, the reader is tempted to say, "juggling."

The following passage gives us one out of many instances of the way Mr. Douglas likes to reduce a man or a scene to a common denominator: "Canon Barker's smile is a sermon, and his sermon is a smile. You realize that his face is carved out of joyous quietude. Its smooth surfaces are genial, untroubled. The small eyes twinkle contentment. The nose juts out with jovial bilidity. Every gesture is an incitement to a cheerful acceptance of life. The strained mouth drawn tight as a bow string to battle with an inner tide of laughter that surges for relief. The man is an incarnation of optimism." Such writing is indeed stimulating and diverting, but it is fanciful and often strained. We admire the ingenious dexterity of Mr. Douglas; we are not convinced of the embodied risibility of Canon Barker or that his photograph would serve as a substitute for a joke column.

To give an example of the London reporter as a stylist, like Swinburne, we quote his description of Father Vaughan. The criticism is better than the style. "The sermon is simple, sensuous, passionate. Glowing eloquence poured hot from the heart. No notes, no manuscript. Well-built withal. A noble edifice of emotion harmoniously balanced and richly decorated with spontaneous phrase. No taint or trace of a metaphysical microbe, no pulpit pedantry. Lyrically free from the disease of thought. Throughout it throbs with the poignant pathos of Christ and Christians crucified. It is a bacchanal of rapturous agony and ecstatic anguish, a psalm of passion, joyous saturnalia of sorrow."

But to come to the question of what was remembered by Mr. Douglas. Despite his drawbacks as a listener, it might be said because of them, the experiment is worth making. Underneath the critic, the journalist and the stylist is human nature and the man in the pulpit found in this man in a pew, a heavily armored, yet not impregnable listener. Even a reporter may on occasion be human and forget his profession.

Professors of the art of teaching tell us, and experience confirms their statements, that the teacher will make his pupils remember by repetition and novelty, or interesting presentation. Mr. Douglas confirms this truth. Rev. Silas Hooking had "reiterative amplifications of a simple phrase." "With the hammer of a phrase, he drives the nail of instruction into the board," says Mr. Douglas. Much of Father Vaughan's sermon too was hammered in by a refrain.

The first of the type of interesting presentation is the story. The example of this London reporter is hardly needed to prove that the story is a memory survival. Akin to the story are the facts and examples of history. Rev. R. J. Campbell, Father Vaughan, Monsignor Croke Robinson and others get parts of their sermons in the Morning Leader by their historical facts. Comparisons save others from forgetfulness and in that point the reporter's memory is like the more fallible memories of ordinary mortals. Comparisons are the next help for the memory. The simile is indispensable in the art of remembering sermons. "We have powder in our breasts," said Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, and we should probably never have known that way of describing our inflammable passions, had not the fluttering wings of the truth been fixed in a distracted memory by the shining point of an epigram, here crowned with the jewel of a comparison. Rev. Archibald Brown combines epigram, example and comparison and has succeeded in being very much remembered. On the page of his text "he hangs a whole wardrobe of racy aphorisms, quaint quips and homely parables." Canon Newbolt is an "epigrammatist" and proves his fitness to survive by many "flashing phrases" like, "castles in the air for the imagination to dwell in are better than pig styes on the earth for sensuality to wallow in." Rev. J. H. Jowett unites many of the qualities already mentioned. His "delightful characteristic is his rich fertility of allusion and illustration, symbol and simile. He tells an anecdote with pungent humor, but his anecdotes are always apt and apposite."

So far, it might be said, it is external qualities which make the truth survive in the journalist memory. More important as preservers of truth are the internal qualities, Personality and sincerity, directness, absence of mere phrases, avoidance of rhetorical flourishes, these are qualities which the reporter brings on again and again, as qualities too which set the truth living and quivering into his memory with vital vigor enough to survive the crash at the door after the services. Here is one statement out of a hundred very like it: "Just as his eyes save his face from insignificance, so his enthusiasm saves his oratory from conventionality. Personality can remove mountains and there is a flame in Hensley Henson's voice which sets his words on fire. He believes in his religion, his Church, and in himself. That is the one thing that completes the circuit between the pulpit and the pew. Without it sermons are corpses."

Personality, however, has its dangers for remembering and Mr. Douglas has repeatedly fallen victim to them. He remembers the man better than what he said. Is emotion better than personality as a fixer of thoughts. Dr. Lorimer, the "famous New York preacher," is conspicuous for true feeling. "He does not read his sermons, and here I may say," writes Mr. Douglas, "that read sermons ought to be abolished. No, he preaches with fresh, not stale, emotions, and his words fall molten from his lips."

Mr. Douglas is generous to the several American preachers he heard in London. The last point to be mentioned as a crystallizer of lasting remembrance is actuality. This quality is responsible for the largest number of longest survivals of the many sermons this reporter heard. His ideal preacher has his "eye on the hour." The science of the day with its difficulties against revelation, the social questions pressing for solution, the thorny points of theology now torturing Protestants, the position of the Bible, the nature of Christ, the personality of God, all these questions make the reporter forget the Morning Leader and merge himself into the larger humanity for whom the soul is more than a newspaper. Other means make phrases or passages survive in the memory; actually have preserved pages from oblivion.

What then will get your sermon beyond the Church door, into the paper and perhaps into a book? If Mr. Douglas may be taken as the type of a normal man, here is what you will have to do. Know the prejudices of the audience, if possible. They will remember what they like. Mr. Douglas is surely a Swinburnian and, it can be said with almost equal assurance, is a Scotchman. Enlist the prejudices in your favor. Embody your truth in a story; illustrate it with a comparison; condense it into an epigram; reiterate it with persistency. Gather historical facts with which to prove it. Show that what you defend is a living actual issue in the scientific, moral or religious world of to-day. Then if you have a clear order, and enforce what you say with sincerity, displayed in the flash of the eye, the swing of the arm and the ring of the voice, your truth will abide. It will set the hearts of your audience beating faster and so stimulate them as they hear, but more than that, it will enrich their thoughts with new life-blood and will continue to do good after the echoes of your voice have died away.

Tomorrow.

What a multitude of people are watching for "Tomorrow." "Tomorrow I shall be better," murmurs the invalid. "Tomorrow I shall have better luck, shall do better work, shall be sharper in my bargains, shall beware of former mistakes," thus say the unfortunate, the careless, the speculative, the remorseful. Yet, commonly, tomorrow becomes today only to find the invalid dead, the unfortunate utterly ruined, the speculator desperately disappointed, the sinner deeper in his crimes.

We are too much inclined "to reckon without our host," in regard to the illusive "tomorrow." "Tomorrow" is the enemy of the present, and we dispose of it, in advance, as though it were our own, whereas there is naught on earth so uncertain as that mysterious day that lies so near us in the future.

Charles Reade illustrates this admirably well, in his story of Noah. Skinner, the fraudulent bank clerk, who falls, the author states, into a sleeper's languor in the midst of his resolutions to make restitution "tomorrow." By-and-by, waking up from a sort of heavy doze, Noah took a last look at the receipts and murmured, "my head, how heavily it feels!" But presently, he roused himself, full of his penitent resolution, and murmured again, brokenly, "I'll—take it—tomorrow—tomorrow—tomorrow—tomorrow—tomorrow." The morning found him, and so did the detectives, dead.

Would you call that a happy death, my dear Gathic reader? It was not, so die in a dreary counting-room, the very scene of his fraudulent transactions, at the very desk where he had shouldered the sin of his life, with all its burdens of darkness, misery and dread? Dissolute? Ah, piteously so, to die alone, without a friend or comforter, without the light of a blessed candle, or the sparkling of holy water, without prayer, confession, or holy Viaticum. Yet, it is the just death of him who puts off till "tomorrow" the case of his soul, the arranging of his accounts, the making of restitution to God and man.

How is it with yourself, friend? procrastinating are you not? Next Sunday you will go to Mass; next month you will receive the Sacraments; next year you will send your children to the provincial school? Tomorrow, tomorrow, tomorrow! Never now, this hour, this instant.

On the presumption, the audacity, the barefaced impudence of this new justifiable claim on the morrow that lies in the palm of an all powerful hand which may close upon it, so far as you are concerned. Not all the wealth of the Indies can purchase for you that tomorrow, when once it has passed, or you have passed into eternity.—St. Anthony's Messenger.

Doctor Said Heart and Nerves Were Responsible.

There is many a man and woman tossing night after night upon a sleepless bed. Their eyes do not close in the sweet and refreshing repose that comes to those whose heart and nerves are right. Some constitutional disturbance, worry or disease has so debilitated and irritated the nervous system, that it cannot be quieted.

Mr. Calvin Stark, Rosemore, Ont., writes:—"About two years ago I began to be troubled with a smothering sensation at night, when I would lie down. I got so bad I could not sleep in the dark, and would have to sit up and rub my limbs, they would become so numb. My doctor said my heart and nerves were responsible. THE HERALD

WEDNESDAY, JULY 6, 1910. SUBSCRIPTION—$1.00 A YEAR. TO THE UNITED STATES $1.50 PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT 81 QUEEN STREET, CHARLOTTETOWN, P. E. ISLAND. JAMES McISAAC, Editor & Proprietor.

An Unfortunate Defalcator.

Gouldthrite the unfortunate absconding superintendent of the Government Printing Bureau at Ottawa has committed suicide. He was a fugitive from justice, and put an end to his life by jumping into the Detroit River from a steamer. His body was taken from the River Sunday afternoon. This is the intelligence brought by the wires. This is certainly a sad ending to a career of wrongdoing.

Since the first announcement of his defalcation, some light has been thrown on the methods pursued by Gouldthrite in his appropriation of public money. The total amount of the defalcations has not been ascertained, and it is doubtful whether or not it can be established with any degree of accuracy.

He was superintendent of stationery, and in that capacity controlled the purchasing of supplies, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. By charging the Government high prices for the goods purchased and paying the sellers or their agents much lower prices, he secured the difference, known as "rake off." This he divided with his accomplices, so as to preserve silence.

The length to which this levying of toll was practiced has not been altogether unearthed; but it has been discovered that paper, scheduled as first quality, charged up to the Government at the rate of five and six dollars a ream, was found to be a very inferior article, purchased for one dollar a ream. This is one way in which the swindle was worked.

In all the departments supplies are found to be overstocked; in some lines the advance supplies are sufficient for ten years to come. Gouldthrite had been twenty years superintendent of the printing bureau, and it is not known how long he has been working the game of graft; but there is sufficient evidence that he has mulcted the Government of very large amounts.

It has been discovered that Mr. Gouldthrite, in addition to demanding direct toll from vendors of supplies, practiced a subsidiary scheme for scooping in the cash. He was the inventor of a device for keeping warm baby food, and in due time he had a company formed known as the "Baby Food Warmer Company," with his son, five years old, as managing director.

The principal office of the company was established in New York, and young man formerly of Ottawa and a friend of Gouldthrite, was placed in charge of this New York Office. New York and other American firms, selling supplies to the printing bureau, were asked to subscribe for stock in this company, as a condition of doing business with the Superintendent. In this way the swindling of the Government was covered up. The New York manager came to Ottawa, now and then, and the rake off was divided between the two grafters.

This discovery led to the unearthing of the defalcation in the bureau. Gouldthrite immediately cleared out and Government detectives started in search of him. At this stage news was received that he had jumped from a steamer on which he had taken passage from Buffalo to Detroit and drowned himself in the Detroit River. This intelligence was at first regarded with suspicion. It was thought he might have caused his suicide to be rumored so as to put the officers of the law off their guard and give him an opportunity to get well out of the way. But the news that his dead body had been taken from the waters of the river confirmed the truth of the unfortunate man's self destruction.

This scandal with its gruesome denouement, is a damaging commentary on the Government's manner of conducting public departments. It also proves the correctness of the stand taken by the Opposition, after the report of the Cassel's commission regarding the Marine department. Mr. Doherty, on behalf of the Conservative Opposition, on that occasion moved the following resolution: "That in order to lift the cloud of suspicion that rests upon the administration of the various departments, to satisfy the demand of the country for honest and business like methods and to purge the public service of inefficiency, reckless waste and corrupt practices it is advisable and necessary in the public interest that a thorough and untrammelled investigation be made by a competent business commission into the workings of all the great spending departments of the government."

Instead of showing a desire to purify the public service and clean out the Augean stables, the Government used its majority to vote down this resolution. Sir Wilfrid's answer to Mr. Doherty's resolution was the typically cynical retort that "to the pure all things are pure."

Perhaps the Premier thinks what has been going on in the Printing Bureau comes under the "pure" heading. The lid is being lifted from the unwholesomeness of graft and rake off in the printing bureau, but what of the other departments? What of the departments of Interior, Militia and Defence and Railways and Canals. Even the department of Mr. Fisher might be none the worse for a little spade work being done there. And yet Sir Wilfrid Laurier has the barefaced audacity to get up in the house and say "there will be no general investigation unless a direct charge is made."

If there is nothing to hide what is Sir Wilfrid Laurier afraid of? That apostle of purity is sitting tight on the lid but even his weight cannot prevent some of the odors escaping from the Augean stables.

Borden's Ontario Tour.

The success and enthusiasm which marked the tour of Mr. R. L. Borden, the Conservative leader, through Ontario, demonstrated conclusively that the electors of that Province are determined at the next opportunity to sweep from power the Laurier administration, and put the affairs of the country into more capable and honest hands. Mr. Borden throughout the tour was welcomed as the man who could and would grapple with the dragon of graft, and no leader has been received with more striking evidences of good will and esteem. And it was no empty message which Mr. Borden and Judge Doherty brought to the electors of the banner province. The note of optimism rang throughout their addresses, and as the leader aptly put it, there was absolutely no reason for discouragement, and such a word did not exist in the dictionary of the party. Mr. Borden in his speeches took up in a masterly way typical examples of the blunderings of the government which have cost the country so dearly and which will continue so long as the reins of power remain in present hands. Overclassification on the National Transcontinental, the scandal of the Quebec bridge, the gross extravagance and piling up of the debt, the waste of natural resources with the hand of every heeler in the public treasury, the alienation of lands to the detriment of the settler, and the fattening of the friendly speculator: all these came in for stringent criticism, and it can be safely said that never has a record of any government been more ruthlessly laid bare than by Mr. Borden on the tour which has just ended. It was shown that the Laurier administration by its bungling and utter disregard of the best interests of the country was playing fast and loose with Canada's credit was placing a heavy burden of debt on the shoulders of future generations, and was playing the role of spendthrifts and profligates. And the Conservative leader had ample facts and figures to prove his assertions. Even a cursory glance at the Laurier record will demonstrate that to day it is not government of and by the people, but a Czar-like rule of one man blinded with the dust of ambition and intoxicated by the insense of idolatry on the part of his followers who under him, have been permitted to indulge in a Saturnalia of graft, and to feast unhindered at the public troughs.

Perhaps the most important declaration made by Mr. Borden on the tour was at Finch when he took up Canada's position as it was affected by recent commercial treaties and arrangements. These latter have been somewhat numerous since Mr. Fielding got the treaty making habit, and contracted the desire to go running to Albany and Washington. In each case Canada has parted with some of her independence in the matter of control of the tariff and the taxation levied under the authority of the tariff. In some of these Fielding arrangements Canada is bound to give to other powers as favorable customs treatment as she may accord to any country with which she may make conventions and she may have to do this without receiving anything in return. When the understanding was reached with the United States last spring the situation in which the government found itself was such that it had to introduce into parliament a measure that gave to all countries the benefits that on the face of things only the United States had a right to expect. The position was a peculiar one for a government which prates about its regard for Canada's autonomy. As a matter of fact Canada's fiscal autonomy is a thing of the past. Messrs. Fielding and Brodeur who reckoned themselves commercial world shakers have bartered it away. They cannot recommend certain changes in certain duties without taking heed of how that action will be received in Washington, Tokio Paris or Berlin. British trade with Canada and Canadian trade between one part of the Dominion and another will be further affected if the conference between the members of the government at Ottawa and the commissioners of the United States next autumn, brings about an arrangement that will extend to the United States the full advantage of our intermediate tariff. The situation is one of grave possibilities, and for it the insane fondness of the Laurier government for foreign splurging is responsible. Small wonder is it that the people of Canada are crying out for a change from the blunderings of this administration to sane and healthy government.

The record of the Laurier government has been one of consistent blocking of investigation. The carnival of graft has gone merrily on since 1896 and Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues have used the money and resources of the people of Canada for personal aggrandisement and not for the development of the country. Millionaires have grown and flourished under the sunny smile of Laurierism. The voice of the grafter has been heard continually in the land. The Saskatchewan Valley Land deal, the Moncton land deal, the irrigation scandals in the west and the notorious timber limit manipulation, by which the whole of the timber of prairie country was permitted to fall into the hands of speculators and political friends. All these and many other scandalous transactions have stamped this administration as being rotten to the core. But when these things are brought home to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his ministers in the house they rub their hands smilingly and exclaim "Well what are you going to do about it? It is high time that the people of Canada took the house cleaning job into their own hands. Under this administration Canada is making headway only because of her sheer natural opportunities. The government with its horde of hangers-on is a drag on the wheels of progress. Canada is prospering in spite of the Laurier clique. But with good and honest government such as Mr. R. L. Borden has pledged himself to bring into being Canada will advance by leaps and bounds not only in material things but in the esteem and good will of the world. True the money markets of the old land might not have to be visited quite so frequently under a Conservative government as under Mr. Fielding's financial rule. There would however be a check on the wilful waste, and dishonest extravagance which has marked the closing years of the moribund Laurier administration. Canada wants a change. Common honesty and straight dealing she is entitled to and that she will and must have.

Count Zappell had so far perfected the airship business in Germany that the ship Deutschland, the highest developed of all his famous models, was employed in regular passenger business, making a regular daily circuit of 300 miles, carrying some 30 passengers. On June 28th the Deutschland set out on her regular course; but a storm prevailed and presently she lay on top of the Teutoburgian forest, pierced with pine tree stems, a mass of deluged silt and twisted aluminum. The thirty-three persons aboard after a wild contest with a storm, escaped unhurt, climbing down a rope landed from the wreck on the pine tops.

Brigadier General Otter, C.V.O., C.B., paid a rather unexpected visit to Charlottetown, arriving Saturday. He inspected the camp lines generally and later inspected each unit at ordinary camp drill, and then proceeded to Summers, N. B., where he inspected the camp there. He found everything here in first class shape. It is reported in official circles at Ottawa that General Otter is to be appointed Inspector General in succession to General Sir Percy Lake, who returns to England in September, while General Drury, now district officer commanding in the Maritime Provinces may go to Ottawa to succeed General Otter as chief of the staff.

The Scott Lumber Company's saw mill at Macgregorville, N. B., was on Monday totally destroyed by fire. The mill has been in operation six weeks and manufactured about a million and a half of lumber. As Prince Edward Island did not enter the confederation till 1873, it has existed as a Province of the Dominion only 37 years.

The distance is 30 miles and the time occupied was 49 1/2 minutes. The flight was made in the Bleriot monoplane, the machine in which de Lessepe crossed the English Channel. The cars stopped on the streets, houses were emptied, business ceased, and all went out to see the flying Frenchman. A crowd of about 10,000 greeted de Lessepe when he returned to the field and made a perfect landing opposite the grand stand. He received a tremendous ovation and was called on by the shoulders of other aviators.

To Be Well Dressed at a Reasonable Cost

Let Us Make Your Suit!

Have you been giving your money away to a poor tailor for clothes that did not satisfy you? or worse still have you, thinking you were saving two or three dollars on your suit, paid your good money for a "Ready-Made"—a suit that stays good only until you wear it, and instead of adding to your appearance, will by its bad fitting qualities make you appear poorly dressed. Have you ever thought that a "Ready-Made" was the most expensive suit you could buy. Do you know that one good Tailor-Made Suit at $30.00 to $25.00 will outwear any two Ready-Made at $15.00, and that the made-to-order suit will hold its shape and its good looks until the cloth is worn out, while a Ready Made will only look good for a short time. Isn't it cheaper for you to invest $25.00 for a good suit once a year, than to invest $15.00 for a poor one, twice in that period? You will agree with us in that, won't you? Then our proposition is this: We keep a stock of all the best cloths made—we have Worsted, we have Tweeds, in all the leading shades; we have Serges and Vecunias in blue and black—in fact we have everything that's made for men's clothes. We have expert cutters, men who have spent years in studying the art of designing men's clothes, and we have a staff of workmen trained in every branch of the trade, men who put into a job work of the highest order.

You can select a suit at any price from $18.00 to $30.00. We will make it to your individual measure, we will put the best of trimmings into it, and we give you good style and the best of workmanship. In short, your money is not ours until you are satisfied with the suit in every particular.
