I am an advocate of a better mode of dministering our Crown Land affairs. I want a liberal policy pursued towards our hardy pioneers of the forest, and would secure to them greater privileges than they greater security for improvements made on the Crown Lands. Under the present plan it often happens that improvements na fide made by one person are afterwards granted to another without adequate ompensation being made.

I am an advocate for a union of all the Maritime Provinces of the Deminion, and I feel assured that in order that we may cope with the other Provinces and hold our own in the Councils of the country, it is necessary that some combination of the lower provinces be entered into to give them more political power and influence in the general Legislature at Ottawa that we now are able to wield. The great teru ritories of the North-west will soon be oming in and asking for further representation in Parliament and if our Provinces remain disunited, maritime interests will be icopardised and sacrificed to the interests of the west. I am for lessening the cost of running the Government of the Province, for the abolition of the Legislative Council, and or the administration of the local affairs by one Legislative Assembly. These reorms, in my opinion, can only be secured by a Maritime Union.

The time is at hand when all these subjects will demand the serious consider ation of the representatives of the people, and if you think me competent to take part in these important matters and able to vindicate your interests therein, vote for me now as your representative. Thirty, to-day! Once I should have considered myself old at this age, with the best of my life passed, and little before me to enjoy; but now I am very happy, thankful, and content. Carmie Brownell was looking across the blue sea waters, her hands resting upon the railing of the balcony, her calm, sweet face grave and thoughtful. The climbing ivy and rose threw fluttering leaf shadows and sunshine upon her tall, lithe form; and people on the beach below turned to look on the unconsciou figure for a second time. Who is she. Leicester?

Miss Brownell. Is that all there is to say of her? No: I might talk a day or two of her and you would be as little acquainted You are unusally reticent. She must have incurred your lordship's displea

She has won a fair fame and considerable wealth, I believe by untiring patience and labor. She has triumphed over every obstacle, met trouble and disappointment that would have crushed a woman less brave, and now, from it all she brings, instead of a cynical, selfish nature, one so thoroughly pure that men are made better for her living.

She is wealthy, famous, but still un

They sauntered back an hour later, just as Miss Brownell tightened the John H. Lawlor & Co. reins over her high stepping blacks. Those are magnificent animals, by Jove! exclaimed Galbraithe.

Yes; she handles them perfectly, too. And Philip's dark eyes flashed, and a wonderful light swept over his face, with the smile and bow he gave Carmie Brownell! while she gave a glance at both, but a smile to only one, as she Monuments. Headstones. dashed by.

been able to do so. You must know what it is I have to tell, for no man can be with you without learning to ove and respect you. My life is not worthy to offer, but you can make me what you will. Oh, Carmie, I love you. I love you! Will you say that you love me and will be my wife? His face was pale with the great passion that thrilled his soul, his eyes were burning and bright as they searched her face for one tender look, and his hands closed upou hers with a fierce, o'ermastering grasp; but she was looking away from his face, beyond the line of harbor lights and the very sea itself, as she answered slawly. his in the moonlight, and a look of pain in her grave eyes; then, very softly, with a world of sad tenderness in her voice, I am engaged to marry Philip Leicester; we have cared for each other a long time.

And then Leicester's tall form came upon the terrace. He took Carmie's hands upon his arm, and drew her soft shawl around her with a proud air of possession; while Carmie, ever thought ful for this strong man's passion and the sorrow that had settled like dark ness upon him, led Philip down the steps and the moonlight to walk in the glory of perfect love together.
