A DISCOVERY—THE NEWSPAPER PARA-GRAPH.

Joe having delivered up his burden was about to retire, with a feeling of proud satisfaction at having been the ans of giving a poor thing such delight, when an accidental glance at her face made him pause and look again. The se ond glance was one of curious, startled, astonished enquiry, and he swung

'No, no. I cannot-I will not,' And immediately there came a great outburst of violent bitter grief, which shook her girlish frame with terrible vehemence, and it seemed as if her heart would break under it.

The captain and the rest stood gazing at each other, not knowing what to do. 'This is a case of betrayal and desertion,' whispered Donaldson, looking towards Eustace.

'It looks only too like it,' responded the latter.

'Jessie,' remonstrated Joe, 'vou wont hide the thing from me like that. It's years since we met before, and I don't know anything that's happened you all that time. I thought you were in Edinburgh. 'Do not nrge her further now, Joe. said Eustace.

Jessie started at the sound of his voice, and looked towards him. He stepped forward at the same moment from the corner in which he was standing, and the lamp shone upon his face.

The instant Jessie obtained a glimpse of his countenance she uttered a shriek, and rushed to the opposite side of the cabin-an action which produced in every one not a little astonishment.

Eustace was as much amazed as the others, and regarded her with a look of puzzled wonder.

As Jessie gazed at him, the look of wild terror passed slowly from her face, but was followed by one of puzzled won-

'Who is this gentleman,' she faltered, 'This is Mr. Eustace Grahame,' said Joe, 'one of my best triends.'

Ah,' exclaimed Jessie, with a long drawn breath, 'this accounts for it.'

The days that followed were days of happy enjoyment to all the inmates of the farm house-even to the stranger who had come so mysteriously among them, and in circumstances so peculiar, yet regarding which she would give no explanation. She was deeply grateful for the kir dness she received, and anxious to speak her thanks and show her gratitude in every possible way, but persistently shrupk from any allusion to the osition she was in when rescued from a watery grave, Naturally she was pressed with questions on this point, particu larly by Lilias. These, however, she invariably met, not with evasion, but by plainly expressed refusal to give any information. One day as she and Lilias were alone, she flung her aims round her neck and tearfully exclaimed-

'Oh, do not ask me anything more about that dreadful night, for I must, must keep silent. It is my sacred duty to do so, and if you knew the agony it causes me to allude to it in any way, 1 know you would spare me. If you knew all, dear Lilias, you would not blame me for saying nothing. Oh, were you placed in my position you would keep silence too. Pray, therefore, urge me reading the Courant which arrived that no further, and plead with the rest to ask me no more.

Lilias kissed her, and promised she would, and from that hour Jessie was molested by no more questions. It was evident to all, however, that the secret she cherished produced in her mind the deepest melancholy. Her heart had received a shock which it could scarcely sustain-a black, hopeless shadow had come over her young life, and taken away have not sinned in this. I have not its brightness forever. From the pure, sweet social life by which she was surrounded at the farm she found cheering and soothing influences; and in the prattle of her bright boy she enjoyed brief feelings of maternal delight, Yet suddenly the smile called forth in her wan face by the exuberance of the child's infantile glee would merge in a spasm of pain, and she would snatch him to her bosom and give way to a vehement burst of grief-as if the child's happy prattle reminded her of the terrible sorrow of who he is, Jessie, that I may pay him her life. But while so uncommunicative on her side, she manifested great interest 'Never, Joe, his name I will never in the story which Lilias freely communicated to her-the story of her own love and marriage. She listened to all the particulars with the utmost eagerness, time, and you may as well tell me at and hung with a strange fascination over the tale of Randolph's deceitful selfishness and villainy. To this theme she was never tired of listening, and at almost every opportunity she led Lilias to converse about it, and plied her with questions, which showed how keen was her interest in the matter. Lilias, nothing loath, confided to her everything that had taken place, and Jessie heard her with breathless attention, sometimes shuddering at the baseness and cruelty of Randolph, so ruthlessly practiced in furtherance of his deep laid plot. These private conferences between the two girls took place chiefly in the mornings, for the after part of the day Lilias generally spent with Eustace in rambling among the beauties of the neighborhood.

Frequently at the approach of evening he would steal away from the house and pass over the heights, till in the sweet solitude of the lovely bay he met with Marion Gilbertson, who had left Jessop's mansion about the same hour to join him. Marion and he now loved each other truly and deeply, and their love was approved of by the friends of each. behind than it does in front. The West Huron, for the following figures :-Middlesex election trial has proved to be a Chinese gun in the hands of Mr. Alick Johnston, the defeated Tory candidate. One hundred and twenty-seven charges were thrown out on the evidence for the petitioner, and Justices Ferguson and Galt dismissed the case without deeming it necessary to call a witness for the respondent. During the examination of the petitioner's witnesses, the following facts came to light:

John Killestine was offered $25, by one McKay, of Wendigo, to vote for Johnston.

D. J. Bodman, hotel-keeper, was paid for refreshments by Alex. Johnston, the Tory candidate, during the election. Joseph Sabine was offered money by members of the Tory party, in West Middlesex, if he would vote for John-

L. Westbrook was asked to vote for Johnston by Michael Leech, who offered him $10 if he would do so.

Wm. Harrison was "approached" by

J. C. Higgins, who was willing to pay him liberally if he voted for Johnston.

The above cases are sufficient to show that a hoomerang has been at work up in West Middlesex, and that the recoil allan complains that business in his line came so sudden that "Jumbo" Johnston hadn't time to step from under. A peculiar feature in connection with the printed ed evidence is that the Toronto Mail scrupulously avoided publishing any statements made by the electors who had been "approached" with the idea of having them vote for Johnston. The Mail pretends to give a report of the trial, but the report published by that journal is garbled from beginning to end. The Mail also suppresses the remarks of the judges in dismissing the case, for fear the respondent would be is dull, in fact absolutely ruined, as he turned the last prisoner out yesterday. THE SCOTT ACT PETITION.

We are this week able to lay before our readers the number of names, by municipalities, on the petition for the submission of the Canada Temperance Act in the county of Huron. Ashfield was only partially canvassed, owing to a misunderstanding. The canvassers generally are hopeful of a vote much larger than that represented on the petition. There are some 16,000 names on the voters' lists, but the average vote polled is not higher than 10,500 or 11,-000, owing to duplicate names, absentees, etc. The number of names appended to the petition is 5,000, and it is not expected that the entire vote will exceed 10,000. The temperance men are confident of a majority as large at least as that of Oxford. The anti-Scott Act advocates express no opinion as to the probable vote. The list has been carefully revised during the week. We are A CHINESE gun is a dangerous weapon indebted to Horace Foster, of Clinton, -when it goes off it usually kills more the secretary of the Scott Act party in

R. R. REMINISCENSES.

To the Editor of The Huron Signal

DEAR SIR,—I find that it is being loud-ly whispered in the by-ways and at the street corners that it is utterly useless and exceedingly bad policy to bring for-ward a proposition for another railroad at the present time, because of the un-conquerable (?) opposition it will receive from the Grand Trunk and other imaginary omnipotent bodies; but is it not lamentable, sir, to know (as we well know) So says the Vung.

It is lamentably behind the times. It is is amentably behind the times. It is is amentably behind the times. It is is amentably behind the times of the Advance of the that in 1864, when the Government of the day was opposed to the amalgamation of the Grand Trunk and Buffalo & Lake so it was decided to put him out of his misery. It was a hard task, and caused Mr. Whiteley, a bitter pang to consent to the only, if heroic, remedy for his suffering. Every precaution had been taken to prevent just the thing that had occurred at the time of the accident, but considerably less from port to port on the late of the accident, but the time of the accident to the time of the accident, but the time of the accident to the time of the water, repair, and launch her out of the water, launch her out of the water

1852, which I have already alluded to. 4 I was unanimously named as chairman resolved to have a committee of fifteen in number (something like our present big "baker's dozen" in high places.) at once refused to be one in a committee numbering over "five." however, persisted in trying 15, 13, 11, 9, 7, having a wrangle on each down-ward step, and some of them began to soundly abuse me for my "stubborness and self conceit;" but, on my moving towards the door they stopped me, and agreed to number "5." asked of them to nominate Mr. Moderthey would not do so, but appointed Messrs. Lewis, Wallace, John Clark, the then Crown land agent, and last of all, John Longworth, with whom they all knew I had been at loggerheads for many years, and for many good reasons; and he was put amongst us for the ex-press purpose of "snuffing" me out of the chair, by his overbearing and bully-ing manner. I therefore, at once saw that if we tailed to secure the railroad, I would receive all the blame for it, because I had refused to have a greater number of advisers. I, however, called meeting in my own room, and no sooner had we met than Longworth drew a chair to the table, took a handful of unreadable manuscript from his pocket, spread it on the table and addressed us saying, that "the first thing we had to do was to petition the Govern-ment to take the harbor from the Canada Company," from whose employment he had but recently been dismissed; I at once replied that we had been ap-pointed for a special purpose, and could have nothing to do with either the Canada Company or the Government; and my companions agreeing with me, John pocketed his papers, and never attended another meeting. I shall not attempt, sir, to fill your columns with a rehersal of the many difficulties with which we had to contend, until we come to approach the June meeting of the ounties Council, about a month before which, I published and circulated the somewhat lengthy address to the settlers -which you have lately seen-which was immediately followed by a 12 x 14 nch-four columned handbill, addressed to the same parties. by one of the county officials, who invariably desired himself to be looked upon as the "biggest toad in the puddle.' This gentleman attacked me in the most scurrilous and insult ing manner, told his readers that I thing else. And so he did; but unfor-tunately for himself, he put eighteen change of times and circumstances of the country than our meeting was then. After a number of rousing speeches in favor of our scheme, and just as we were about to bring forward our prepared resolutions, Mr. Duggan jumped upon a waggon and harangued the meeting at great length, speaking against time, for we were in imminent danger of a heavy thunder storm, which would have utterly ruined our whole proceedings. He trained the rather think I did; but at any rate you deserve to have a few words of remanders, and will no doubt be glad to hear how we are all getting on. But we had a current division and the wave of a hat to the one side or the other—from the hustings—sent the whole crowd running at "double quick." In short, sir, we carried the meeting most successfully, and then ran for it; and just in time, too, for it was a tremendous shower. We had a big supper in the "British" that night, sir, and it may be, nearly as big a drink; but, however that may have been, before noon next day the united councils, with one exception, had unanimously agreed to take $500,000 stock in the railway—being $5,000 than double what we had led the Buffalo folks to expect.

And now. Mr. Editor, I must crave your indulgence, that I may go a little farther back in my story; to show you and your readers, the mislignancy of our opponents at that exciting time. The theo and your readers, the malignancy of our opponents at that exciting time. About five or aix weeks hefore the above named meeting, Mr. Commissioner Widder sent the above named George Duggan here, to try to break us down. Sin—If the harangue delivered by the Rev. C. R. Morrow on behalf of the Scott Act on Monday evening of last week s to be taken as a fair sample of the arguments and logic of its advocates
It spin arsto me as a disinterested observThat we have never been, and er, i at they are very poorly off for argument to sustain their cause. If they ical gesture, emotional appeals to the bings, and highly-colored pictures draw from a still more highly colored.

Trade, either in rid one of all engaged in a legitimate business, and interspersed with slang expressions and bad grammar, are the stock arguments of the Scott Act advo-cates, it would be a vain task to answer cates, it would be a vain task to answer them, and I, for one, would not make the attempt. I would merely suggest that the legal adage "When you have no case, abuse the opposing counsel" appears to hold good here, and it must be a weak cause whose chief argument is abuse and ridicule of its opponents.

To vilify all connected with the liquor business in slang terms, such as "the true temperance chaps," "them chaps." &c., and in the presence of ladies to make what must be called an indecent allusion to a recent outrage, may seem allusion to a recent outrage, may seem to Mr. Morrow convincing and unanswerable srgument. I fail to see it. Such may be the language and taetics of a Methodist minister, or a paid temperance lecturer, I maintain that they are not those of a scholar or a gentleman, or of an honest and candid opponent. I call them those of a bully and a mountebank, and it ill becomes Mr. Morrow to sneer at the "true temperance chaps" for engaging speakers to defend their position, for is he not a hired lecturer, paid for the purpose by those whom I will term, is contradistinction, the "sham temperance chaps." As Mr. Morrow is kind enough to conce e to his opponents the title of "true temperance chape" we accept it with artitude, thankful for this implied admission of the correctness of our posi-as to the evils of intemperance,—all must equally deplore them. The remedy, however, is not by attempting to enforce a cast-iron sumptuary law—which punishes the innocent more than the guilty—but by moral sussion and the power of the Gospel, which these gentlemen seem to forget when they forsake their proper sphere, the pulpit, for the lecture platform, and I will here quote a pertinent paragraph from a recent letter in the

"Whe a vast amount of morbid ed on the ideal drunkard. This mythical being interpresented on the prohibition platform in all the gorgeous coloring of a fervice of the teated in agination, in order to ever the markid approach in order a fervice of heated in agination, in order to eye the morbid sympathies of a class of rople who flop over on reading a harring tale of fiction, as easily and naturally as a kitchen swid-pail. Yet hese same individuals who expend so much gush on the platform will pass by sons alould be contaminated by lending a helping hand to the poor unfortunate who lies wallowing in the gutter. It is so much easier to cure, or rather to affect to cure, the evil effects of intemperance by displays of platform oratery and acts of Parliament, than by actual deeds of charity and benevolence, but it won't

No, it certainly won't. Prohibitionists or self-styled temperance men are actually the most intemperate and dogmatical of any class of would-be reformers of the present day, and in their intemperate zeal would brand all opposed to them in opinion, however moderate or abstemious as drunkards, etc. Some of these loud-mouthed "reverend" temperance orators, however, are not quite so teetotal in their practise as they would have us believe, as witness the case of the reverend Flour-Bag Hunter. during the Dunkin Act campaign in Toronto in 1877. This pillar of the Methodist church, who was one of the leading temperance orators of pillar of the Methodist church, who was one of the leading temperance orators of the day, was proved on the sworn testimony of a baker, to have had his keg of beer sent to the baker's and taken home from there in a flour bag to avoid suspicion; hence his soubriquet. When thinking of such fellows I fell irresistibly reminded of the song in Olivar Goldamith's minded of the song in Oliver Goldsmith's comedy, "She stoops to conquer!"

"When Methodist parsons come down A preaching that drinking is sinful, I'll wager the rascale acrown. They always preach best with a skinful." Perhaps these geniuses lean to the opinion expressed in another verse of the

"Let schoolmasters puzzle their brain,
With grammar and nensence and learning
Good liquor I stoutly maintain Gives genus a better discerning."
And it is a significant fact that many of the shining lights of the temperance platferm, "discerned" the evils of excessive drinking, from practical experience, and apropos of these gentry, I will quote another paragraph which recently came another paragraph which recently came under my notice.

'Paid temperauce lecturers talk about insanity verb glibly. Well, D. B. Chisholm was a paid lecturer. He went crazy and skipped out, cheating widows and orphans out of thousands of dollars. D. I. K. Rine was a paid temperance lecture. He did a paid temperance in an experimental statement of the statement o lecturer. He died a raving manuac in an Illinois asylum. Marvin Knowlton was a paid temperance lecturer. He went crazy and skipped out, leaving his credi-tors by hundreds to mourn his loss. Rev. Mr. McColl, of Beverley, who elop-ed with his church organist, leaving his wife and children in shame and poverty, was a paid temperance lecturer. "Where Oh! where," is he now, is the sone his Oh! where, "is he now, is the sone his creditors sing. But, why go on, the ranks of the noble army contain no brighter lamps than those who, under the thin garb of temperance, have violated friendships, ruined happy homes, and fleeced hard-working people from one end of the country to the other. Let temperance people purify THEIR ranks before they undertake to dictate to their meighbors what they shall eat or what neighbors what they shall eat or what they shall drink."

GODERICH, ONT. DEAR SIR,-

We have received the KITCHEN CABINET you shipped to us some time ago, but have delayed writing until now in order to find out how we would like it. My wife says it is a gem-a household friend. It is compactness itself. For convenience it has no equal in the kitchen, as it saves expense, time and labor. No kitchen is complete without it. As the price is within the reach of almost anyone, the KITCHEN CABINET is sure to meet with a very speedy sale.

The following is a briefly put compila-tion of the main feature of the law gov-erning ordinary husiness transactions. We are convinced it will be of use to our I have already talked about the etiquette of visiting. An observance of the rules is especially necessary when staying in a farmer's house during the sum mer months. It is a busy time, and anyrelease the maker; he must pay it if the consideration for which it was given and thing which breaks in upon the ordinary household arrangements is a greevous burden. Unlike city homes where the income is but moderate, these country houses are rarely supplied with servants, and the added labor must fall upon the weary housewife. Not to come to the morning meal, even if it is at what wear an unconscionable early hour, means the getting of another one by your hostess. To keep your room in disorder, to scatter your belongings over the house where they have no business to be, to leave doors and windows open which are desired to be shut, to act as, if the place was merely a convenience and nothing else, all these things are boorish in the extreme and yet are not unfrequent.

Another way in which city visitors to the country sometimes make themselves offensive is in showing off their superior familiarity with the world, atiring, their finery in order to arouse envy, and finding fault in manner; iffluot, in words with the plain arrangement of the ever-day living. They do not stop to think that

There is apparently some mistage in the despatch from Sydney, N. S. W., published in the papers last week stating that Champion Hanlan had sailed for New York. Mrs. Hanlan stated Tuesday that a week before the despatch was printed she received a letter from her husband stating that he had three engagements in the shape of matches still on, and it would be late in the year before he would sail for England, not for New York direct. There is either a mistake or the champion has suddenly can-celled all his antipodean engagements.

THE ARCTIC ADVENTURERS

A Public Welcome and Celebration at Portsmouth, N. H

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Aug. 5.-Never before in the history of Portsmouth has there been so grand and imposing an event as the celebration of the return event as the celebration of the return of Greely and party. If thousands of people, numerous bands and boundless enthusiasm could make a celebration a success, this was successful. The day was refect. The buildings were handsomely decerated, and "Welcome to Our Arctic Heroes" imprinted everywhere on flying bunting. Greely landed about 11 o'clock, and was heartily greeted, as were all the men from the relief ships. They were placed in coach es and driven to the Rockingham to review the procession. Upon two large stands in the market square were gathstands in the market square were gathered many prominent persons and a number of ladies. At 11.20 the proces sion began to move along the packet streets. Thunderous applause greeted the sailors of the relief squadron, and the ovation continued through the en tire route. Commander Schley, Lieut. Emory an Commander Coffin were received with tremendous applause as they passed in an open carriage. As the procession neared the Rockingham house the crush became terrific. Greely and his com-rades were seated upon the balcony and when the head of the procession appear-ed cheer after cheer greeted him. As the crews of the Thetis, Bear and Alert passed, Greely bowed and seemed to look the gratitude to the men who rescued him. Much emotion seemed to pre vade the entire throng and many brush ed tears from their eyes. The relief crews respectfully raised their caps. Greely was kept busy bowing acknowledgments as the procession passed.

After the review was over Greely and his party entered the hotel and remain ed a short time.

The London Advertiser contains a letter from Hon. David Mills on the boundary case, from which it is seen that nothing is now needed but Imperial legislation to render the Award binding. legislation to render the Award binding. The Lord Chancellor remarked that this is necessary, as otherwise the party who did not like the conclusion would say that he was not bound by it. Christopher Robinson said he supposed no one felt any apprehension on that score. The Lord Chancellor retorted that he did not express apprehension, but he supposed no one had any apprehension before, when the Award was assented to.

The Presidental Election.

The presidential campaign in the Unit-ed States has opened, though the earnest-ness and zeal of partisanship will not be fully developed until after the State elec-tions of Maine in September, and Ohio and Indian in October. This year several changes in the appointment of presidential electors, based on the nation-The Conservative journals, call Mr.
