MRS. FRED PRATT IS DEAD.
 A Sad Ending to a Family Dispute Which Went Through the Courts.
 Mrs. Pratt, wife of Fred Pratt, the York Township farmer, who was tried at the last assizes on a charge of manslaughter, died yesterday at the home of her brother, John Buchanan, in York County, N.Y. Mrs. Pratt was taken ill shortly after the three brothers were charged with the murder of her husband. A fight ensued and Mrs. Pratt received severe injuries from the effects of which it was alleged she died about a month later. During the trial Chief Justice Meredith ordered that the charge of manslaughter against the three brothers be changed to one of common assault, to which the two pleaded guilty, and were heavily fined. After the brothers were released Mrs. Pratt laid a charge of criminal neglect against her husband, and the charge has been hanging over Fred Pratt's head awaiting the result of the complaint's illness. There is much sympathy expressed on all sides, because Mrs. Pratt's infant child died on Thursday last, followed soon by the death of the mother.
 About a month ago Fred Pratt, accompanied by a minister, went to see his wife in order to effect a settlement of the disagreement, but the result of the interview was no made public.

 A Demand for $10,000 by Certain Holders of Compromising Secrets Made on His Excellency.
 Cairo, Egypt, Dec. 17.—The native organ "Mokattam," referring to the reported demand on the Khedivé for $10,000 by certain holders of compromising secrets, advises the Palace not to pay, as it may rest assured that the alleged secrets are already in the possession of those whom they concern. The Mokattam adds that if the Palace declines to give money away it had better give it to the people who are working for the elevation of the Khedivé's subjects.

AFFILIATION OF VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS.
 Mr. Lawrence Baldwin contributes an article in the current number of The Canada Educational Monthly, advocating the affiliation of voluntary schools with the Public school system of Ontario. The proposal is, briefly, that voluntary schools may be established by anyone, under certain conditions and restrictions, and that these schools should be entitled to an annual allowance per pupil, equal to the cost of educating a pupil in the Public schools, minus the item of school accommodation, which it is proposed the voluntary schools should supply at their own expense. Mr. Baldwin says it involves a capital outlay of $50 to supply accommodation for each pupil in the Public schools of Toronto. The pecuniary benefit resulting from the affiliation of voluntary schools, under the scheme proposed, would be a saving of $50 capital on every pupil educated by these schools. But this, according to Mr. Baldwin, is not the principal advantage to be derived from the affiliation of voluntary schools. It is pointed out that the Public school system is inefficient; that it is purely mechanical, and does not enjoy the confidence of a large part of the community. The voluntary school would be more under the control of the parents; it would be subject to official inspection and would maintain a standard at least equal to that of the Public schools, while moral and religious training would be imparted to the pupils, as well as such supplementary secular education as the parents of any particular school might desire. We can readily admit that most of the advantages claimed by Mr. Baldwin, and we have not enumerated them all, would result from the adoption of his scheme, but, on the other hand, there are some serious objections to the scheme as well as to its acceptance by the people.
 If Mr. Baldwin's idea were carried out in this city within the course of two or three years every Sunday school would be turned into a day school. Each denomination would have its own teachers, just as the Roman Catholic schools now have theirs. The control of the whole system would pass from the hands of the people into those of the clergy. The tendency would be to make each denomination a close corporation for school purposes, subject only to inspection of teachers and pupils by the Public school officials. The Public schools would attract only such pupils as the denominations could not secure. The whole Public school system would be jeopardized. This is the weak point in Mr. Baldwin's scheme. He assumes that the present system would not deteriorate and that it would always be available to those who might desire to take advantage of it. As a matter of fact, our Public school system would dwindle away to a vanishing point. The proposal is a retrograde one, and we have no idea that it will ever be seriously entertained by the people of Ontario.
 The separate schools are managed on the lines laid down by Mr. Baldwin, yet he will surely not contend that they prove his case. If the people are being charged too much for their public education, the remedy is not to follow Mr. Baldwin's system, but to limit the Public school system to fewer subjects and to make the higher school as nearly self-sustaining as possible.

ST. LAWRENCE MARKET IMPROVEMENT.
 The most important feature in connection with the improved market project is the effect it will have on the extension of the wholesale and export trade. There is no reason why Toronto should not become a collecting centre for all the products of this province. We have already centralized the cattle and hog industries in Toronto, and in the same way we may make this city a great centre for cheese, poultry, fruit, butter and various other products. We have the necessary railway connection for carrying our trade in these products, but we have not the necessary local facilities. We need an enlarged market. The retail grocers of the city now realize that the improvement of St. Lawrence Market is going to benefit rather than injure their business. The enlarged market will be a centre at which they can purchase all their supplies conveniently and economically. It will enable them to do better for their customers and for themselves. The project will have the support of the retail grocers, as well as of citizens generally.

NICKEL AND ITS POSSIBILITIES.
 From a recent report prepared by Prof. W. A. Parks, Instructor in Geology, University of Toronto, we obtain some interesting facts concerning nickel and the nickel industry. Nickel appears to have been first produced for commercial purposes in 1840. For the twenty years between that year and 1860 the annual production for the whole world varied from 150 to 250 tons. The output for the next ten years averaged 900 tons. From 1870 to 1889 the production was 1500 tons a year. In 1890 2000 tons were produced, while in 1894 the production had risen to 5000 tons. The price of pure nickel has decreased from $2.25 per lb. in 1860 to about 33c per lb. in 1898.
 Prof. Parks states that the Sudbury district has produced in the last six years nickel valued at $8,798,125 and copper valued at $2,947,162, both metals being computed at their present prices. Speaking of the properties and uses of nickel, Prof. Parks describes it as a white metal, resembling silver in appearance, but much harder, being of greater hardness than iron. It is less malleable and ductile than iron; it is also less malleable but more ductile than copper; takes a fine polish, and may be rolled into sheets or drawn into wire. Nickel is scarcely affected by the action of the atmosphere or by salt water; it alloys with copper or with iron in all proportions, as also with most of the useful metals, adding the properties of hardness and toughness. It is the important constituent in German silver and various white alloys, the whiteness being regulated by the per cent. of the metal present.

 Pure nickel and many of its alloys are used in Europe for numerous articles, both useful and ornamental, as saddlers' supplies, instruments, culinary utensils, statuettes, etc., but its actual application bears no proportion to the possible uses of the metal. The reason for this has been its previous high price. Now, however, that the output has risen to such an extent as to bring the price of the raw metal within reach of more numerous industries, there is scarcely a limit to its application in the near future. All decorative ware at present plated will be immensely improved by being made of the pure metal; tinware will be entirely displaced and electrical fixtures, where high resistance is important, will be made of nickel. In a word, all articles where resistance, non-corrosive properties, resistance to abrasion, hardness and toughness are desirable must eventually be manufactured from this metal. Another very important use of nickel grows out of its power to add great toughness to steel when alloyed with it in certain percentages. This property has led to its use in armor-plate for battleships, in structural steel, in heavy shafts, in flange rails, etc. This industry was delayed for some time owing to numerous tests of such products by different governments, but at present its applicability has been undoubtedly established, and we confidently look for an immense demand in this direction.
 The possibilities of the nickel industry in Canada are simply stupendous. There is no reason why the price of nickel, if produced in immense quantities, may not be reduced to the same price as copper. Every cent reduction in price enlarges the sphere of its utility. Whatever kind of a deal may be made at Washington, it is to be hoped our hands will not be tied up in regard to nickel. We must be free to develop this industry for the greatest advantage of the country. Its export in the form of matte must be absolutely prohibited and its use for manufacturing purposes extended to the utmost.

WHO WAS THE VEILED LADY?
 She Gave Evidence in the Druce Case and Passed as Mrs. Hamilton.
 London Daily Mail, Dec. 6.
 The mystery of the Druce case is its facility for development. The main issue happens to be unproductive of sensations for a day or two.
 The latest mystery is the identity of the "veiled lady" who gave evidence before Sir Francis Blandford on the 11th inst. to express an opinion as to the opening of the grave. She declared that she knew Mr. T. C. Druce well, and that she saw him and conversed with him some time after the date of supposed death. Her story was unshaken by cross-examination. The judge attached weight to her statement, and said the grave ought to be opened.
 By special request the name of the "veiled lady" was not mentioned. She said she had been annoyed by people who sought to divert her from giving evidence, and she did not wish to be molested further, and the judge thought the request reasonable, and it was acceded to.
 "Mrs. Hamilton" she has remained, although everybody concerned knew that this was a repetition of the name of the woman who had been seen at the scene of the crime. Mrs. Druce's mother, a statement too absurd to require contradiction.
 The next accused here is a more distinguished lineage. She was, said a newspaper, a fair or two ago, none other than the Dowager Duchess of Devonshire.
 This was distinctly a new sensation. But it does not happen to be accurate. The Mount-Edgcombe, the Duchess's son-in-law, says there is no truth in the statement; for Grace is not his wife, and he knows no more of the Druce case than she has read in the papers.
 The next accused here has been discovered. Messrs. MacArthur & Co., Mrs. Druce's solicitors, express annoyance that the statement should have been made. It may be taken that Mrs. Hamilton is of noble family, but the family is not that of the Duke of Devonshire. Hamilton is the Duke's family name, but there are other Hamiltons in "Debutant."

OTHER TOWNS SEEM TO BE AWAKE
 To the Necessity for Good Market Facilities—Why Not a Cheese Auction?
 Editor World: Having recently spoken with a number of city merchants and business men upon the subject of a modern market for Toronto, I have found the opinion of these men so strong and general in favor of the project that I ask you to allow me to place before the reading public certain facts that may help to make plain the importance of a new market to the city. There are some who oppose the scheme; there are others who have not thought anything about it. Both these classes may, if they are more fully informed upon the matter, come to much the same conclusion as the various business men cited above.
 A Provincial Centre.
 Toronto is a provincial centre—the capital city. She has railways spreading out from her like the fingers of an outstretched hand, and she will in time have more electric tramways outside her borders. These various roads already bring, and in the future will bring, to the city more largely the products of field, orchard and vineyard, not from the County of York alone, but from places much more distant. They will bring these products, that is, if we provide in Toronto the proper facilities for handling and disposing of them. If not, the products will go to some other place or places, where better arrangements will be made to receive them.
 Other Towns Planning.
 Half a dozen towns in Western Ontario are awake to the modern necessity for good market facilities, and are planning to get them as well as to improve transportation for farm products, and to secure cold storage. Surely, if Provincial towns and smaller cities in our western peninsula expend money and effort in these directions, and think the object a desirable one, Toronto, with her great population and industrial activities, her network of connections by rail or water, is well fitted to maintain a first-class modern market, and should strain every nerve to secure it.
 A Sample Instance.
 Take as an instance or two from different towns as showing what service a compact, up-to-date market might do us. A man came to Toronto from a distance this autumn to buy some hundred tons of poultry for shipment abroad. He was told Toronto was the centre, but he could not get the quantity, and had to visit half a dozen other places, picking up small lots.
 The fruit auction is a recent and important development in this city, and fruit men, handicapped, as they have been, are longing for a properly equipped "place in Toronto" to make proper arrangements for control and having the facilities for free and prompt handling that are so vital to this business.
 Why Not a Cheese Auction?
 Again, why should there not be a good cheese auction in Toronto? A dozen towns west of the city have each their own thousands of boxes of cheese boarded and sold week by week. Of course, those districts at the eastern end of the Province, which make for export, could hardly be expected to ship to this city, but in the future it is very possible that Toronto may, if she be not made ready for the occasion, handle much of the cheese that is now boarded at South Ontario points.
 Field and Forest Produce.
 Other cases might be cited. Anyone who watches the trade returns must be struck with the small figure Toronto cuts in exports of field produce and forest produce. There are many reasons for this, but we have market arrangements equal to the transportation facilities we already possess, to say nothing of those which electricity is likely to provide in the future. Far and away the largest item of Toronto's exports is meat, mainly from one establishment—the Davies Packing House. We should handle far more field and animal product than we do. Considering the rich and productive country around us, if we only had the sort of market arrangements that Boston, Cleveland and other American cities possess, we might with care add to the number and variety of our establishments, and to the hands they employ, and make this city a really great entrepot for the produce of Southwest Ontario. A sure result would be the increase of our foreign exports and an advance in the reputation of Toronto as a centre not only of manufacture, but of distribution.

PRESENT ACCOMMODATION INADEQUATE.
 The present market accommodation at Toronto for farmers everywhere is antiquated and altogether insufficient. And as a result the attendance of farmers at the market has fallen off, and we are getting back to the village method of being served by farmers' and hucksters' wagons going about the streets. This is not the way in which the householders of a large city can best be served. If we are to increase our market attendance we must improve the market. This is true if we regard the matter from a merely retail or local standpoint, as well as in the larger sense relating to through or export trade. Nor must the proper administration of the market be overlooked; modern methods as well as modern premises are necessary. There are, indeed, scarcely any limits to the activity that would arise should a properly equipped modern market be secured and well managed.
 Any man who is not secured, but direct surplus revenue, is not secured. The persistence of other cities shows what can be done in this direction.
 With your permission I shall in another letter make some reference to the features of the scheme as planned, how it will affect different lines of trade, and how it is likely to justify the outlay proposed to be made. I do not recall any project put before Toronto's citizens of late years which promises better returns for the amount proposed to be spent upon it than the market improvement scheme.

MORE SHIPWRECKED PEOPLE.
Schooner Deerhill of St. John, N. B. Abandoned at Sea—Crew Ficked Up by British Steamer.
 New York, Dec. 18.—The British steamer Pawnee arrived to-day from Mediterranean ports and brought ten shipwrecked men and two women, who were taken from the disabled schooner Deerhill in mid-ocean. Capt. Alkenhead reported that on Dec. 8 at 10.30 a.m., he sighted a three-masted top-sail schooner in evident distress and needing assistance. The name of the schooner was Deerhill, and she was seen on the stern. A heavy gale was blowing, and the schooner was running. The schooner was seemingly unmanageable and the rudder disabled and carried away. The Pawnee stayed by, and at 2 p.m. succeeded in getting a tow line aboard. The line parted, however, and a boat was launched in charge of the chief officer, and sent to communicate with the Deerhill. The boat had nearly succeeded in getting on board the schooner, where they were obliged to remain all night. On the following morning the weather had slightly moderated, a towline was sent on board and the Pawnee towed the Deerhill towards Bermuda. After towing about six hours the line again parted. The wind and sea was increasing, when the line parted and was found impossible to get out another. The captain of the Deerhill signalled that he wished to abandon the wreck, and requested the Pawnee to stand by. The gale continued throughout the night, and on the 10th, 11th, and 12th, the rescue was effected, and the Deerhill was abandoned. The rescued people were taken aboard the Pawnee. The crew of the Deerhill consisted of the captain, three mates, three deck hands, and seven of the crew of the schooner. When Capt. Burns was seen at the wreck he said that the schooner was a three-masted schooner owned by W. H. Merritt and others of St. John, N.B. The schooner sailed from St. John on Nov. 22 for Seaton with a cargo of lumber.
