A. H. S. MEMORIAL TABLET UNVEILED.

On Thursday evening last the tablet in the High School erected in memory of the students who paid the supreme sacrifice for their service to their country during the war, was unveiled. The tablet has been erected by the students and graduates of the High School, assisted by the generosity of their friends.

The following fifteen names are inscribed on the tablet: Helen Brown, M. Johnston, S. Curtis, L. McConnell, B. Connerty, L. Scott, H. Young, L. Woods, A. Teth, C. Kirkland (Military Medall, D. Spence, E. Sexton, E. Gallagher, G. Hughes, C. Mainse.

Mr. Burchell was in the chair, and Rev. Boyle unveiled the tablet and gave an address, speaking of the great sacrifice of those who died, and said that we should always keep their memory green, and should not only remember them but also do our best to make the country for which they died a better and finer one.

After the tablet had been dedicated, all stood and sang the National Anthem. After Mr. Boyle's address, a short programme was presented: Vocal solo, "In Flander's Fields," by Miss Vera Topping; recitation, "The Reckoning," by Raymond Steele; and was concluded by a chorus of girls singing "O Canada," after which light refreshments were served to the guests of the school.

The assembly room where the tablet is placed, was crowded to the doors, over two hundred and fifty being present.

It was then announced that a memorial scholarship would be given by the Literary Society in the future, valued at $50, and is to be given to the student having the highest average on the lower school examinations.

INQUIRY.

Blest be the tie that binds
Where kindred spirits blend,
But is there need to find
A servant in a friend?
Is there no comfort found
In brooks and songs of birds,
Or do they only sound
To us like "empty words?"
Is service all we need
In this low vale of tears
To cheer our spirits, heal our wounds,
And drive away our fears?

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Catarrh being greatly influenced by constitutional conditions requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Medicine is taken internally and acts through the blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in the curative power of Hall's Catarrh Medicine that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

"Why should I not speak of it?" cried Barry. "I have been thinking of it all this time. Of course I can understand it. He is far superior to me. You can look up to him, not down, as you do to me. He is a man after your own heart. He has all the glamour that his work for the poor can give him. His self-denial. His nobility. It is just the sort of thing that would appeal to you, I know. While I am an ordinary kind of fellow. With nothing in me worth the loving."

"Do you know what you are saying?" broke in Una. She only spoke in the shaking whisper. Her face was white.
 "Yes," he cried quickly. "I'd forgotten for a moment, it's true. But Spanking Doesn't Cure!"

It may as well come now. It would have come anyway some day. I've begun. "I guessed somehow," you would be here. And I wanted to say good-bye, since we shall never perhaps see each other again."
 Never again! Then there would never be another chance of explanation. This was the last, her only chance. She thought darted through Moya's mind, but close on it went another. "I can't explain," went that thought. "It's impossible. It's best that there should be no more chance. That he should go right away—and never know."

"We can say good-bye—as friends," went on Guy, quietly. "We have been friends. And we will forget everything else. I felt I could not go away without saying that—without feeling we were friends again, even if we do meet no more."
 Moya stared down at the smooth sand. She was wrestling with two impulses, and each seemed as strong as the other. The struggle was such pain that she could not speak. "Tell him," urged one impulse. "And the other protested fearfully: "I cannot."
 Suddenly Guy's quiet voice deepened and quivered. "I wish I could wipe yesterday afternoon out of your memory," he said, passionately. "I was false to myself in those few moments—false to honor, and false to my love for you. That is why I would have you forget. I would I could only forget it myself!"
 Then Moya looked up. She heard the struggle in his voice, and she saw it now on his face. The keen regret of an honorable nature.
 And as Moya, with those lines of Moya gave a little gasp as if she had thrown up an oppressive weight away from her. If anyone had to suffer it should not be Guy, torturing himself with self-reproach.

 "Oh, it is my fault," she gasped. "You—must not blame yourself so. It is all my fault—"
 "No, Moya, don't say that. Anything but that."
 She was strung up to confession. It would mean losing his love and respect—what she valued so highly and felt she prized more than anything in life. Yes, after all, there was one thing she found more precious still. Guy's own peace of mind. He had fallen in his own eyes, he had hurt his own sense of honor. Then she must be willing to fall in his eyes, too. It was the price she had to pay.
 And, bending low her head, Moya faltered out her confession.
 It sounded so childish, so foolish, as she did so. In actual words it was so futile a thing. Well, he would know her for what she was—not the girl he had loved and thought worthy—but just a silly child.
 But being such a foolish, silly confession, it was strange it was so hard to make. Yet it was desperately hard. So hard that Moya could never have made it but for one thought—Guy's going away blaming himself, fallen in his own self-respect because he had fallen in honor. And so Moya was willing that her own self-respect should be laid in the dust instead. It was the one reparation she could make. And she made it.

 There followed silence. Of course, he would be angry—scornful. He was so upright himself. Such little crooked dealings were repugnant to that largeness of mind which knew nothing of deception and pretence.
 Moya awaited the visit of wrath, and gave a cry with an emotion so sharp Una smiled. Her head leaned against Barry's shoulder. His cheek touched hers. He was looking into her clear, steadfast eyes, but her eyes were on those clear, sunlit ripples of the river, glinting towards the west.
 "I expect they liked love stories," was all she said. "Even if they had none of their own. And who knows? I begin to think differently. I believe there is some love even in the loneliest life, if only one looks for it."
 Who knows? Even if it is the love that gives, and does not receive. That sows and does not reap—at least, in this life. Who knows? But we all know there is a world to come where love is perfected and finds its selfless, spiritual life, and for that world we who lose love in this world will wait, even as, so perhaps, unselfish desire that Moya might be happy, her gentle hints that Barry was despondent, that they were missing the best life could bring about.

CHAPTER VII.
 "There is nothing in me to love," stated Una, with the utmost candid conviction. "Now, Moya is so bright, so lovable. There's beauty in her to love."

 Barry tucked his arm in hers with an air of proprietorship, and agreed quite gravely that there was nothing at all in her to love.
 The boys and Una had been out for an early morning bath, and Barry had met them coming back. The boys were ahead now and out of sight, but these two had engrossed enough subjects for conversation that necessitated a strolling pace and an unhurried progress.
 And they talked on, discussing on those subjects which are so very uninteresting to outsiders and so unthrilling to the two who make one complete little world to themselves.
 "Why, here comes Moya," said Barry. He tucked his arm more firmly in Una's. "Now or never for it!" he decreed, blithely. "We may as well tell her now."
 He laughed as they came level with Moya. "I've taken matters into my own hands, you see, Moya. Not very chivalrous of me, I'm ready to own it's generally considered the lady's province to break off an engagement, isn't it? At least, it looks better that way. However, you have your remedy. You can prosecute me for breach of promise! You look surprised. Well, I simply couldn't stand it any longer. And that's just about all!"
 Not a very comprehensive statement, perhaps. But Moya, looking from Barry to Una, seeing the linked arms, the happy faces, understood easily enough "just all about it."
 "Oh," she gasped. "I am—I am so glad about it."
 Barry laughed again. "I thought you were going to say you were sorry," he said. "But it's no good crying over spilt milk. It's been and gone and done, you see. After all, someone had to do it—to take the plunge. I don't believe you would ever have had courage enough to take it yourself."

 And that, perhaps, was Moya's thought at that moment. Barry had had courage to cut the Gordian knot. She was the coward. If she could have had his courage, his simple straightforwardness.
 "You always said you would never get married, but liked your freedom too well," she said, reproachfully. She could not help a little hit at Barry, she was feeling so sore and wounded herself just then.

"So I did," he laughed. "But I lost my freedom when I became engaged to you. And so I made the best of a bad matter. You're not going bathing now, are you, Moya? Everyone is out of the water and gone home to breakfast."
 "Oh, I had breakfast early," she returned. And did not add that she had slept very little, woke with a headache, and breakfasted little, too, in her wish to avoid Guy. She would be out, away from the house—not even say good-bye to him. It was so much the best.
 "I'm going for a walk," she told

HARLAN FULTON.
 "You always said you would never get married, but liked your freedom too well," she said, reproachfully. She could not help a little hit at Barry, she was feeling so sore and wounded herself just then.

Barry, and nodded good-bye smilingly enough to the two.
 But the smile faded as they parted. So Barry had had courage. He had done the right thing undoubtedly. And Moya was glad he had done it. She went on thoughtfully till she came to her favorite seat on the old, worn arm of the breakwater. The tide was ebbing. Little rivulets wound away to the waves, coursing down from rocky pools. The sand was gloriously smooth and white—a fair, unwritten page for the day to write on what it willed.
 "I was wrong," she sighed. "Not only foolish, but wrong. I should have known I could not do a thing like that without influencing other lives. And there was Una, too, after all."
 That also cut into her heart with reproach. Una! Looking back, she could understand what she had been blind to before. Una's pained grey eyes, her sweet, unselfish desire that Moya might be happy, her gentle hints that Barry was despondent, that they were missing the best life could bring about.
 "I might have ruined Una's happiness as well as my own," thought Moya, fearfully. "And all with one foolish, thoughtless step."
 Her eyes were on those footsteps in the sand. But all at once a little wave ran up, higher and more boldly than the other. It ebbed away, it is true, sinking back into the falling tide. But its crystal, shining ripples had swept over those footprints. As Moya watched that wave ebb and ebb, she looked—and lo! the footsteps were gone, as if they had never been.

THE SECRET OUT.
 "Don't you think Mildred has perfectly wonderful teeth?"
 "Yes. But they are false."
 "How do you know that, my dear?"
 "Why, she told me she inherited them from her mother."
 NO WONDER.
 Doris—Yes, she was furious about the way in which the newspapers reported her marriage.
 Helen—Did it allude to her age?
 Doris—Indirectly. It stated that Miss O'Connell and Mr. Y were married, the latter being a well-known collector of

PROPER SAUCES
 There is nothing that adds to the "just-rightness" of a nice juicy roast than the proper sauce as, every good cook knows. And there are some sauces that seem to belong to one kind of meat and no other. Who would ever think of serving mint sauce, for example, with anything else but roast lamb? It could go with boiled mutton, but oh, how much better this dish is accompanied with caper sauce. To make this cream two tablespoonsful of flour with half a cupful of butter and add to it a pint of boiling water. Cook until thick, stirring constantly. Season well with salt and pepper; add a tablespoonful of lemon juice and three tablespoonfuls of capers, and serve.
WITH BREADED VEAL CUTLETS.
 Tomato sauce is usually served with breaded veal cutlets. A very simple sauce is made by cooking a slice of onion in half a can of tomatoes till soft, straining and thickening with flour and butter creamed together. For less. He thought he ought to have one of them books as they were bits of paper out of it. Naturally we asked him why he had not had one before?

 "Well"—and a mouth that smelt more of Eau-de-Burton than of Eau-de-Cologne approached my ear—"he'd pinched out of the asylum that morning, and didn't want to be copped again."
 A few minutes in the waiting room was the treatment I prescribed for him while the police were communicated with.
 A pathetic plea came from the father of sixteen, who also kept two lodgers—they do these things in the less exclusive neighborhoods. Could he have more sugar to make jam, he could he have it cheap? He thought he had done his duty to the country by helping to maintain the population, and he was also easing the housing problem.
 Two very laudable pleas, but how do they affect food? Just as well ask the coal controller to give you a ton of coals because you have an allotment and keep pigs.
 More sugar certainly is obtainable, but only on production of a doctor's certificate, which is also required for permission to exceed the butter ration.
 Among the applications for the new ration cards for a small family came one for Bob Brown. A member of my staff who knew the family persisted that there was no Bob amongst them. So one of our secret-service agents was deputed to call on the head of the house. Bob was duly brought forth—a magnificent Newfoundland dog. Protests were in vain. Pitiful tales did we hear that Bob was better than any son, and he did so enjoy a good bit of beer. Nothing doing. Women and children first in our line of business. Carry on without the dog, madam, and consider yourself lucky not to be in prison.
 We haven't finished chucking yet over the puzzled parents who came in a week ago to ask if it was true—because the minister had told her so—that triplets counted as only one for ration books.
 I should like to meet that varron. He would be a valuable acquisition to any staff.—London Ideas.

"Got any nail for Mike Howe?" asked the stranger at the small town postoffice.
 "No, nor anybody else's cow," retorted the indignant postmaster.

The Shah Travels.
 The Shah of Persia is on his travels. London will see him and keep him, apparently, for some little time. Europe has memories of the peregrinations of other shahs. They are quaint memories, some of them. There was Nasr-ed-Din, in 1872, and there was Ahmed Mirza, many years later. There would have been a visit, in 1894, on the part of Nasr-ed-Din, but for a Brussels Journalist. It happened that, on the Shah's traveling programme becoming known, a Brussels daily published an article which seemed in Belgium. The Minister of Justice of the period thought fit to give the article the publicity of judicial proceedings. The writer was summoned before a Brabant tribunal, but he was exonerated. But the verdict had the immediate effect of keeping Nasr-ed-Din at home in Teheran.

Fun for Food Controller
 "It must be horrid to be a food controller!"—tunny. How we humble officials get this lordly title—said a pompous, old lady, who ambled into my office the other day. "It must be so dry and monotonous!"
 Dry, forethought!
 Our collection of unheard comedies and mysterious happenings is daily growing in bulk. Mrs. Harris was so kind to know if she can "have some more sugar, coz' this 'ere loger of mine 'as gotten sich a appetite." Refused, with compliments.
 A little girl peeps suspiciously into the office. "Please can mother have seven new ration-books, because she's burnt all hers?" She is asked to take home one of our magnificent array of forms—the choicest selection outside London—and if she will bring it back properly filled in, possibly new books will be issued. The end of another abortive attempt to pull our leg. Neither the mother, the step-mother, the mother-in-law, nor the girl adorn our offices again.
 Possibly the lost books have been recovered from the ashes. Possibly—I cannot help leaning to this view—it was not worth the trouble of filling in all the forms to have fourteen ration books instead of seven.

 The other day a quaint looking character jumbled in, coatless, hatless, not quite shirtless, but nearly boot-primates and the carnivora. As a matter of fact, these formidable teeth have nothing to do with alimentation, but are as purely weapons of war as are the bayonet and the maxim gun. In practically every emergency demanding unusual energy, obstinacy and courage they come into play.

 In every conflict with the world, the flesh and the devil—as such things are understood in pithecothic society—the temporal and masseter muscles are the chief arbiters of war. To become a great and powerful anthropoid it is absolutely and brutally necessary to have a jaw and strong jaw, to give them attachment to the teeth and good leverage to the muscles. That for an immense epoch our prehuman ancestors achieved success in life in like manner is clear as the print of "ga" to those who have learned to read nature's handwriting.
 Since those days of true Arcadian simplicity our life has become bewilderingly complex and our methods for settling social difficulties have changed generally for the better. But here, as in so many other instances, the habits of a past age have left an indelible impress on the nervous system.—Blackwood's Magazine.

OLD FOLKS' COUGHS, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS QUICKLY CURED
 This Tells of a Method That Cures Without Using Drugs

Elderly people take cold easily. Unlike young folks, they recover slowly. That is why so many people past middle life die of pneumonia.
 Cough Syrups seldom do much good because they upset digestion. Any doctor knows that a much more effective treatment is "CATARRHOZONE," which heals and soothes the irritated surfaces of the throat.
 In using Catarrhose you do not take medicine into the stomach—you simply breathe into the throat, nose and lungs rich, piney, balsamic vapor, so full of healing power that colds, catarrh and bronchitis disappear almost instantly.
 The germ-killing balsamic vapor mixes with the breath, descends through the throat, down the bronchial tubes, and finally reaches the deepest air cells in the lungs. All parts are soothed with rich, pure medicinal essences, whereas with a syrup affected parts could not be reached and harm would result through numbing the stomach with drugs.
 A Catarrhose inhaler in your pocket or purse enables you to stop a cold with the first sneeze. Large size costs $1.00 and supplies treatment for two months; small size, 50c; trial size, 25c; all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhose Co., Kingston, Canada.
