Legal Decisions. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office—whether directly or through an agent—or whether he has subscribed or not—is responsible for the payment.

If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay up all arrearages, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and leaving them uncollected for a period of six months, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

POETRY.

Two Worlds.

'Tis but a step betwixt this world, where
Men's hearts, with doubt, disquietude,
And that bright world, of certainty most blest,—
Between the two hangs but the thinnest veil.

Whence do we come, and whither go?
What is our life, and why so full of pain?
Evermen ask,—and ask of men in vain.
Faith solves some riddles,—we in part may know.

Heaven's anvers all; and heaven alone
Life's severer ties and broken threads will bind.
Earth's bright hopes their full fruition find.
And men, adoring, know as they are known.

SELECT STORY.

The Legend of the May-flower.

It was in fair Acadie years and years ago, when the old forest still stood in their pride. Like fond friends the tall oaks beside the sea, and waved and beckoned to the Indian fishing in his canoe out on the harbor; while inland, beside the silver lake, like grey haired mourners the moss covered hemlocks kept their silent watch over the graves of departed chiefs.

O, the dear old forests of Acadie! They and the dusty friends they loved and sheltered shall soon have passed away.

Then Acadie was beautiful. It is still so; for it is not well known that when tourists pass along its coasts, as they behold the many charms slowly unrolling before them, continually pause to exclaim, how beautiful! how charming! how exquisite!

But it is a faded beauty they look upon—a beauty like that which in the soft dim twilight lingers over hill and dale, long after the sunset of a glorious summer day. A strong hand has smitten the faithful grey-headed waters, and they lie lifeless upon the graves they watched; the wildbirds have long ceased to sing those sweet Indian airs which often cheered the dazed-eyed maiden as she watched through the leafy shades for the coming of her brave lover; and all is so changed now.

And still Acadie is beautiful. But there is one spot whose charms contrast strangely with all other Acadian scenery. This is the enchanted Mahone, the home of sweet Wenola, daughter of the Indian brave, Gatoekwa. Every lover of beauty who has visited this spot, confesses that there is something in the beauty of Mahone which he cannot explain. Yes, there is something in the tender grace that clothes the hills which holds the admirer spell-bound; something in the soft pale moonlight which often hushes to silence the merry laughter of the tourist party rowing over the harbor, and stirs from their hearts strange feelings of mingled awe and pity never felt before; something in the whippers of the wind which often makes the light-hearted stranger mused and sad, and she weeps and wonders why she weeps.

But it is only strangers who are thus moved. Those who have lived there since childhood have become accustomed to those sad sights and sounds, and lightly laugh while around them unnoticed the few remaining pines are in their sorrow, and all upward are the plaintive moans of the east wind, and the long gasping sobs of the ocean. Ah, no wonder the ocean sobs here forever, for this was the home of the lovely Wenola.

On the south-west side of the bay, a little distance from the shore, dwelt this sweet-hearted maiden with her father, the brave Gatoekwa. Anyone may easily find the exact spot, for the three oaks which shaded the door of the wigwam where Wenola sat at sunset, and awaited the coming of Gatoekwa from the hunt, are still standing. They are old and grey now and bent with age; but with their feeble strength they will stretch out their skeleton arms, and beckon to the fishermen in the little skiff, and the lovers and barefooted lads and lassies on the shores, to draw near and listen while the wind whips the story of Wenola's love, and the waves sob afresh at the tale.

But the fisher is thinking of the fond wife and rosy-cheeked little ones awaiting his return, the lovers hear only the music of each other's voices and see only the loveslight beaming in each other's eyes, and the little lads and lassies are busily seeking among the sand and smoother, round pebbles, so that few ever hear the tale that is told again and again over the spot where Wenola lived and died.

Let me tell you the story as I heard it in the dusk of the twilight from the lips of the old, dumpy, cast-wind.

O! Wenola, Wenola! When she was sad, dark and deep were her eyes as the calm silent lake at even; when she was merry they were bright as the glittering river when the stars dance on the light ripples. But there shone in them an unearthly beauty, which at even before she lay her down to sleep, she gazed toward heaven till the long dark lashes lay upon her brow, and with her hands clasped over her breast, she prayed in her simple way for Gatoekwa, and the forest trees, and always ended with "O Great Spirit, take care of Wenola's friends the flowers."

O! Wenola, Wenola! That prayer had the sad melody that is heard in the faint strains that are wafted to us in the evenings of the Indian summer from the Land of the sunset, the Indian's hereafter, when out of pity the Great Spirit parts the curtain in the west, and lets some of the rich hues of glory shine in on the autumn leaves!

They and the dusty friends they loved and sheltered shall soon have passed away. Then Acadie was beautiful. It is still so; for it is not well known that when tourists pass along its coasts, as they behold the many charms slowly unrolling before them, continually pause to exclaim, how beautiful! how charming! how exquisite!

ful silence beside his dying daughter. His sinewy arm had often sped the arrow to the heart of the king of the forest and the foe of his tribe. He had gloried in his strength. Here stood stern death before him, with his cold, greedy eyes fixed upon Wenola, demanding her life; and Gatoekwa stood powerless to refuse. As he looked pityingly at his daughter his heart was bleeding, and his strong frame was convulsed with agony. Must he give to the cruel monster his only child? O! Wenola, Wenola!

He bent over her as if to shield her from the blow death soon would deal. He gazed anxiously upon her face, and noticed that her half-closed eyes were turned toward the door of the wigwam. He had laid it open that the bright rays of the setting sun might cheer her last moments. The flush of the soft pink clouds in the west was reflected upon the snow-rift at the door and it was upon this that the eyes of Wenola were resting. A faint smile parted the pale lips, and slowly she raised her wasted hand and pointed to the right and then feebly motioned him toward it.

Bowed beneath his weight of anguish he staggered to the door to see what it was his child desired, that he might gratify her last wish. When he reached the spot, brushing his dimmed eyes to clear his hind sight, Gatoekwa beheld instead of the flushed snow, a bed of beautiful pink blossoms. Eagerly now he bent forward to pluck a spray for Wenola, for he knew that the sight of them would restore her. With all the heavy weight suddenly lifted from his heart, he hastened to her side, and placed the blossoms in her hand. But she did not smile to thank him as she had always done. Her eyes remained closed. Suddenly the truth flashed upon him. He raised his hands over his grey head, and cried aloud in his bitter agony, "O! my Wenola, my Wenola!" But she remained unmoved. The breast heaved no longer. She was dead.

He knew it. O! Wenola, Wenola! The monster death had struck the blow in that short time that he had left her side.

The strong brave chief first stood erect, with arms on which the muscles suddenly became swollen to great knots stretched heavenward; he set his teeth while his eyes glowed like coals and looked defiantly upward as if he was standing before some foe he meant to conquer. Then the proud head slowly bowed, the eyelids drooped, the arms fell, and trembling with agony he sunk powerless beside the couch of Wenola, his head bowed upon his knees and in silence.

In the hush that succeeded, a warm fragrant breath floated from the blossoms at the door and gently stirred the chieftain's long grey locks, and fanned his fevered brow, while sweetly but faintly were borne to him the words, "Farewell, my father." 'Twas Wenola's breath that floated over him; 'twas Wenola's spirit that bade him farewell. Her spirit had passed into the snow-rift and changed it to the beautiful fragrant blossoms.

Gatoekwa neither felt the soft breath, nor heard the sweet farewell. He sat motionless and silent. Four days and nights he sat thus, thinking of his beautiful daughter. Now he saw her standing by the wigwam at sunset awaiting his return; now as he paddled or in the lake she sat behind him and talked in her childish way to the white lake lilies; now she sang snatches of gay Indian airs; and now—O! now he saw himself returning to his silent wigwam with no one to greet him. But he must bury his child. O! Wenola, Wenola!

He must lay her to rest in some spot where she had loved to stay. He knew all her favorite paths and haunts. Carefully wrapping her in a cloak of ermine, Gatoekwa lifted her in his arms and softly stepped out of the wigwam. But a great change had been wrought in the forest while he sat by his dead daughter. The snow had disappeared, and all Wenola's loved paths had become covered with the fragrant pink blossoms her eyes had rested on while dying. Carefully he stepped led he should tread upon one of them, for he knew how tenderly Wenola had cherished even the smallest flower. At last he found a spot beside a lake where he had often seen her sit at evening. It is a spot where the sun always lingers longest to kiss good night. It is to the grey-haired chief tenderly lay his burden down in the sunlight. First kneeling he carefully plucked the blossoms that grew thickly there and lay them on Wenola's breast, and then dug her grave. Trembling he lay her softly down in her new resting-place, looked down long and sorrowfully upon her, and covered her from his sight. Then with grey hair streaming he madly rushed into the forest and was never after seen. The same pink blossoms soon grew thickly over Wenola's grave, and have since spread not over Acadie alone but far west in other countries. Little children now in their May-day rambles gather the beautiful clusters and tress them into the crown they place upon the brow of their May Queen. They call them Mayflowers but they are Wenola's spirit. O! Wenola, Wenola!

This is the story you will hear from the lips of the cast wind, if you visit the enchanted Mahone, and answer the beck of the three old trees that watch over the spot where Wenola lived and died. —Lunenburg Argus.

From the Humblest Beginnings.

Shoemakers have produced Admiraj Sir Cloudy Snow, Sturgeon the cleric, trian, Samuel Drew the essayist, Bloomfield the poet, and Thomas Edwards the naturalist. Eldah Buritt, famed as "the learned blacksmith," was the son of a shoemaker. Tailors have been distinguished in the person of John Stow the historian, Sir John Hawkins, Admiral Hobson and President Andrew Jackson. Cardinal Walsey, De-Foe, Akenside and Kirk White were sons of butchers. Banyan was a tinker, Joseph Lancaster a basket maker and Richard Cobden's start in life was equally obscure. The greatest names identified with the invention of the steam engine were those of mechanic; Newcomen, a blacksmith, Watts, a maker of mathematical instruments, and Stephenson, an engine fitterman. Sir Thomas Lawrence was the son of a tavern-keeper, Sir Humphrey Davy was an apothecary's apprentice, and Michael Faraday, the son of a blacksmith, was a book-binder. Among those who have given the greatest impulse to astronomy was Copernicus, the son of a Polish baker, Kepler the son of a German inn-keeper and himself a waiter at the tables, d'Alombert, a founding, Newton, the son of a farmer in a small way, and La Place, of a poor peasant. At one time in his life Abraham Lincoln thought seriously of learning the trade of a blacksmith, and Andrew Jackson was apprenticed to a tanner. All honorable work is manly. Boys, whatever you find to do, do it well. And while you work, study without ceasing, and some day, some of you, to my beams famous and helpful to others, which is a good deal more to the point.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY.—The K. D. C. Company wish the public in general to know and appreciate in particular to test the wonderful merits of K. D. C.—the Greatest Cure of the Age for indigestion and dyspepsia in any form.

The City Newsboys.

I have often heard the expression Mr. Editor that good nature is apt to be imposed upon. Perhaps so, but why should we take advantage of those who have shown us kindness and good will?

You will see by my heading that I intend speaking of the newsboys. I will not, however, restrict myself to the boys alone, but will speak in general of all who sell the daily papers.

Strange to say, while I feel for and pity the boys, yet I buy my papers from two old men. One of them, who has one leg of flesh and blood and the other of polished hard wood, has his stand on City Hall Park near the entrance to the bridge.

dumb, but Jim quickly relieved him by ordering mutton chops. I need hardly say he had no more use for fish cakes that night.

I think I have said enough about the newsboys, and now I wish to have a few words with our boys. When I say our boys I mean the boys at home, and of course when I speak to the boys I never exclude the girls, for if I did they might feel a little slighted.

My boy, if you have a good, comfortable home in the country never long for a life in the city. There is ten pounds of evil on every side in the city to one in the country. And remember this, no matter what work you do, if it is honest work, it is also honorable, even though it be no higher than a newsboy.

Goodbye boys, I often think of the good times we had together when I was a boy with you. I think of home every day, and I want to impress it on your minds to do the same.

Free Farms in the Canadian Northwest. Manitoba. Assinibola. Alberta. Saskatchewan. The Government gives one quarter section (100 acres) free to every bona fide settler. A second quarter section can be pre-empted by deferred payments. The Canada Pacific Railway Company has a large quantity of the best farming lands for sale at $3.00 PER ACRE, with easy terms of payment. The Canada Northwest has the most productive soil in the world. Its wheat fetches the highest price; its live cattle are admitted to the English market, while United States cattle are not. There is a market for the farmer at every station; and there are schools and churches wherever there are settlers. It is not subject to drought or floods, to grasshoppers, or to cyclones or tornadoes. Ask any Canadian Railway Agent for books and maps concerning it; ask for "Farming and ranching in Western Canada," or the "Free Farms" map, or "Actual Experience," and read the testimony of men who have gone there from Eastern Canada. Young women are in great demand; they find occupation as domestics directly they arrive, and readily get married to prosperous young farmers. Young men or young women can start life there almost without money. They make the money there; an independence is gained in a year few years by the thrifty. The old settlers of Prince Edward Island should use their influence with the young men who intend emigrating to keep them within the Dominion, where they are offering better advantages than in the United States and do not lose their nationality. Lose no time in getting to the West and choose your location. First come, first served. Apply for particulars, price of tickets, &c., to your local ticket Agent or to J. HEIDER HASLAM, Special Agent C. P. R., Moncton, N. B. Feb. 8, 1892.

Local and Provincial. Mr Joseph E. Eaton, of Kentville, for several years postmaster at that place, died very suddenly on Wednesday night of last week, from the bursting of a blood-vessel in the head. Next Sunday, the 10th, there will be service at three o'clock in the afternoon in St John's church. Next Friday, the 15th, being Good Friday, there will be service at three o'clock in the afternoon. Remnants of Room paper at Bergin's. Wolfville Bookstore. Mr J. R. Davis, of the College, occupied the Presbyterian pulpit last Sabbath afternoon, and preached a very pleasing discourse. Paterson's building, and will begin at once to erect a building thereon. It is here at last. Greatly feared, and formerly organist of St Paul's, at Halifax. He was well known in Wolfville. A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. V. Rand, druggist. A Daughter's Tribute. Dear father, thou hast passed beyond The vale of tears and pain, And joined the loved ones gone before, With God to live and reign. Full four score years, and more, have passed With varied scenes, since thou Hast travelled on thy joyful way With peace upon thy brow. The poor, who often came to thee In sore distress and need, Found comfort and relief—to them Thou wast a friend indeed. And hast thou gone? Can this be death Without a sigh, or moan, to tell Thy weary soul has died? Ah! I would I call thee back again, Answer life's ills to bear: "Who giveth his beloved sleep" Will make thy soul His care. And yet it breaks my heart that I Shall see thy face no more, Nor hear thee speak again of him Who all thy sorrows bore. Thou art not dead—but gone before To join the angels throng, Who, in their robes of spotless white, Praise Him in endless song. Wolfville, E. P. J. "Give it the benefit of the Count and call it mine. How many inches would it require to pile those $500,000,000 in?"

"How many feet would that be?" "8,333,333 feet."

"How many rods is that?" "505,050 rods."

"How many miles is that?" "1,578 miles."

"Miles of what?" "1,578 miles of silver dollars, laid down, packed closely together, our national liquor bill would make. That is only one year's grog bill."

Reader, if you need facts about this temperance question, nail that to a post and read it occasionally. It would take ten men with scoop shovels to throw away money as fast as we are wasting it for grog.—United Notes paper.
