ROME.

The Roman Correspondent of the N. Y. Tablet, furnishes the following account of an attack upon a Church in Rome, by the Italian Nationalists:—

Early on Friday morning crowds began to gather round the Gesù, which greatly increased as the day advanced towards noon. As early as 10 a. m. the Piazza and adjacent streets were filled with people, yet not a single policeman was on the spot.

At this moment the authorities were allowed to riot to their heart's content. While the rioting was going on, those of the Papalists that could, took advantage of the confusion and absented themselves, so that in a short time the Carabinieri were left in sole possession of the field.

ITALIAN SKETCHES.

It was a grievous oversight on my part, and I ought to have known better than to make it. On my book-shelf lay a calendar for the current year, with the feast of St. Michael marked in prominent characters, and I heard as I was dressing, the far-off peals of the Rocca bells, floating musically down the Tuscan hills in the air of that mild September morning, announcing to neighboring villages that the festival of the Guardian Archangel had dawned.

With all these remembrances of the day, and ten years experience of the generally successful efforts of Lucifer and his pupils, to create the direct confusion in the elements on the feast of their annual antagonist. I was to be seen splashing into the little village of Aricia in the midst of one of the fiercest thunderstorms anyone ever had the misfortune to be abroad in. My ears were deafened by the peals, my eyes dazzled by the lightning, and my whole exterior agitated by the deathly pale that pervaded unintermittently. It certainly was a grievous oversight on my part, St. Michael, and here was I enjoying the consequences, seated before a huge fire in the wine shop of a miserable country village, and clad in a suit of fine blue velvet, while my own drenched garments hung around in every conceivable fashion. When I was on my feet, I was weighed, my present grievances were of a nature to form but light offsets to the amount of pleasure that day enjoyed. The Greek monks in the ancient monastery of Grotta Ferrata, were chanting matins as I started on my walk. As I passed along the vineyards accompanying their task, as in their wont, with hymns sung sweetly in concert; groups of workers responded to each other, far away along sunny slopes, from the midst of olive groves, or from shelving valleys where the vines hang dripping from tree to tree, affording a grateful shade to weary labourers. The low hills, heavily on the dusty road, and from every bush and tree hung elaborate gossamer webs, sparkling in the sun like silver net work. As the morning seemed to promise a day of unclouded brightness, I directed my steps towards the wooded uplands of the Alban hills, where among the lily and stalk chestnut trees—the growth of which, one can almost, only the rays of an Italian sun, direct my steps to old Charlottetown way, up which the Roman companies, whom Rome refused to honour, marched in stately triumph, with drawn swords, rushed in the pursuit of the confederate multitude, and with horrid imprecations and impenable to describe. The people ran screaming in all directions, the soldiers brandishing their swords in the pursuit. The confusion was horrible to a degree. One poor boy ran screaming within the Sanctuary, where a priest was saying Mass. This, however, did not save him, the police followed him, and with horrid imprecations and impenable to describe, dragged him forth, helping him along with thrusts from their swords. The priest, also, who was at the altar, was dragged from the altar. It was with difficulty he prevailed on them to let him finish the Mass. When he had finished it, he arrested him, and carried him off, amidst the jeers and howls of the rabble, to Monte Citorio, where they kept him until about four in the evening, when he was liberated, not having tasted food since early in the morning, and then only having taken a few ounces that are allowed on fasting days. When arrested, he at first refused to unvest, but wanted them to take him as he was; but the officers, who were so horribly that at last he complied.

In the evening the scenes at the Gesù were repeated at the Church of St. Andrea delle Fratte, near Propaganda. And later on in the night the Carabinieri forming themselves into procession, marched through the streets crying:—"Down with the Jesuits," "Hurrah for the King," "Down with the Colleges," "Hurrah for Prince Umberto," "Hurrah for Princess Margherita," "Death to the Priests," "Down with the Vatican," "Down with the religion of Christ," "Hurrah for Protestantism," "Down with Catholicity," and a hundred and one other cries of the same sort, hurled up with a host of blasphemies so horrible that they bear not the mentioning. This procession paraded the greater part of the city, passing on its march the palace of their Royal Highnesses and drawing up before the Gesù, which they proceeded to attack. But while they were engaged in their assault, an indignity was offered to their tri-colored flag, a vessel of low degree being emptied on it from a neighboring window. This at once drew their attention from the Gesù, to a private house, which at first they determined on demolishing, but on further consultation, they concluded on separating peacefully, and on laying their cause before Parliament, and demanding the immediate expulsion of the Jesuits. After breaking up the windows, etc., the Gesù, they dispersed peacefully, crying as before.

SEVEN HUNDRED.—In the Police Court Yesterday, a boy named George Stammers was sentenced to three years in the Reformatory for stealing money from his mother.

THE morning sun glared horribly on the ghastly form of the young duke, as it lay there exposed to the view of the ravenous citizens. Conspicuous held men made an effort to restrain their whippers. The bells rang the alarm—the guard ran to arms—the gates were closed, and ingress or egress forsook the city. The duke's attendants in fiery haste to bear to Rome the fatal tidings. With what crushing force these fell upon the parents, is painful even to imagine. The hope of their house was gone, and they were childless. Paul the Third had just begun his Pontificate; and as Lord Superior of Aricia, he instantly despatched a judicial commission to investigate the circumstances of the murder, and bring the culprit to punishment. The track of blood along which the body had been dragged, and the disappearance of Lamentano, pointed clearly to the author of the crime. The property of the fugitive was confiscated; his house ransacked, and his furnishings destroyed; the very wine was brought from the cellars, and poured out upon the street, as if contaminated by its owner's guilt. He was outlawed, and a high price set upon his head. A young girl named Nina, whose "fatal gift of beauty" had caused all these disasters, was dragged from the house of her mother, which she had fled on the night of the murder. Exiled with her mother, she was carried to Rome and thrown into prison. As was the custom of those times, torture was employed to force from her an acknowledgment of complicity in the murder. All that could be elicited was the bare fact that her husband had made her his dupes, and used her as the unwitting means of bringing about his own death. In the absence of the real murderer, however, a victim was needed to repair the injury and the grief caused to a noble family. Sentence of death was therefore passed upon Nina. But the Duchess of Parma, changing her mind, had made such urgent remonstrances with the Pontiff in her behalf, that her life was spared. She passed into the service of her benefactors; and on the death of the duchess, some years afterwards, she found an asylum and a home at the Court of Modena, where she ended her days. Of her husband nothing was ever more heard. Reports ran that he had been seen at one time in Turkey, and at another among the islands of the Levant. Be this as it may, certain it is that human justice never overtook him.

In the Autumn of the same year in which these direful events took place, there was to be seen in one of the public squares of Rome, closely confined in a species of cage, an emaciated and haggard madman. A single glance at the restless wildness of his eye was enough to convince you that reason's light was quenched. At times he would utter a low, wailing sound, like what you may have heard produced by an animal when deprived of its young. As the old fit grew, the sound would increase to a wild and agonizing howl. Outside the cage sat an elderly lady, who essayed her best to humour his will in a novel experiment. On arriving at the once magnificent Duke of Savelli; or in that gregarious attendant, his accomplished and fascinating Duchesse. Yet so full of grief had swept over them unrelentingly, and they were there, the shattered wrecks of his fury. Yet a few weeks, and the cage and the seat beside it were both empty. The family burying vault had closed upon the last of a race—the Savelli of Aricia were extinct.

AN ANTIQUARIAN DONKEY AND A DUCHESSE GOSSETTE.—There is some local interest in a story which has been told in India. The gun is to be mounted and fired from a camel's back, the latter kneeling down at the word "action." At present this idea is not even in an experimental stage; but in all probability such trials will take place. This reminds an English writer of an amusing story connected with the Ordnance Select Committee, who had been decided to fire mounted guns of the backs of mules that carried them. It was urged that this would obviate the necessity of dismounting the gun from the mule's back and mounting it on its carriage. A mounted battery could thus come into action in less time. The proposal was warmly taken up by the committee, who forthwith proceeded to test its feasibility. A mule or donkey was procured, and a small gun strapped firmly to a crate resting on the pack-saddle, so that the muzzle of the weapon pointed over the donkey's tail. The animal, so the story goes, was then led into the marshes at Woolwich, accompanied by the committee and several "big wigs," who were attracted by such a novel experiment. On arriving at the butt, the gun was loaded, the donkey turned with its tail toward the earthen mound, and the usual preparations made for firing by means of a lanyard and friction. Hereupon, however, one of the committee remarked that this mode of firing might possibly damage the aim by the jerk on pulling the lanyard. A discussion followed, and it was finally arranged to fix the gun by a piece of soft mackintosh tied to the vent. This was accordingly done, and the match duly lighted. Herbert the donkey had taken rather a sleepy interest in the proceedings, but somehow the firing of the match on his back caused him first to prick his ears, then to lay them back, and finally to begin to turn around. The committee was thunderstruck and stampeded in all directions; the secretary threw himself flat on his face; there was a moment of agonizing suspense, then—bang—the shot went flying straight in the direction, while the wretched donkey turned a complete somersault to the other.

PARIS.

Paris correspondent thus writes of the massacre of the citizens:—
The clock in the afternoon, an immense crowd assembled, composed of the better classes of Paris, all completely unarmed.

in them but hats and bodies. I am thankful, on closer inspection, to observe that a good many of those lying prone are not dead or even wounded, but have only taken that attitude for safety, and many have managed to lie in a line behind a lamp-post, or quite under the arch of a doorway.

Execution of Gen. Thomas and Le Cour. The Daily News despatch, dated Paris, March 19, says:—
Two members of the Belgian Ambulance were arrested as police spies, and taken to the Rue Roquier, where the Central Committee sat.

was not killed at once with the volley fired first. He received one shot, and shook as he received it, but he remained upright. Then there was another shot, and another convulsion of the fine old man's frame, but still he was erect, and so shot after shot was fired, but all did not take effect.
