Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

Influenza, Coughs, and Colds.—In diseases of the throat and chest, so prevalent in our changeable climate, nothing so speedily relieves, or so certainly cures, as these inestimable remedies. These disorders are too often neglected at their commencement, or are injudiciously treated, resulting in either chronic or dangerous consequences. Whatever the condition of the patient, Holloway's remedies will restore, if recovery be possible, they will retard the alarming symptoms till the blood is purified and nature consummated the cure, gradually restoring strength and vital nervous power. By persevering the use of Holloway's preparations, tone is conferred on the stomach and frame generally. Thousands of persons have testified that by the use of these remedies alone they have been restored to health after every other means had failed.

Miscellaneous.

The Late Railway Accidents.

Further Particulars.

New York, Jan 14

It is reported that Paris Valentine and wife, who were killed, were married only on Wednesday last. Valentine is a nephew of Hon. George W. Park. His wife was Miss Gloyd, of North Adams, Mass. They were en route to Florida on their wedding tour. About fifty persons were on the train, embracing noted men of both political parties. Mr. Spinney, of the "Times," is missing, but Wagner undoubtedly the accident appears to be due to the failure of a brakeman to signal a following train properly.

New York, Jan 15

The "Times," whose reporter was on the train, says: "It is the old story of collision and fire. The first was due to imperfect signalling and the second to the use of coal stoves to heat the railroad cars, both being the direct result of the greed of the railroad directors. It is nothing short of a piece of criminal neglect that within the municipal limits of the city of New York it should be possible and it is no less discreditable to the railroad corporation in the county that the loss of life attending such an occurrence should be increased by the presence of coal stoves in its drawing room cars."

Plot to Kill the Czar—Arrest of the Conspirators.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan 3

I have just learned on undoubted authority that a plot had been discovered which had for its object the assassination of the Emperor of Russia in the Karavaiastreet, which it was expected he would have traversed on his way from the Palace to the Michael Riding School on the occasion of the recent fete of St. George. It was anticipated that the Czar would have come to St. Petersburg for the day and would have followed the ordinary custom of personally reviewing the troops in the Riding School: I have not yet been able to obtain full details as to the plans of the conspirators, who were all arrested a few days ago at an assembly of Revolutionists in the outskirts of the town. From the information of which the police are now in possession of it is authoritatively stated that nothing could have saved the life of the Emperor had he passed along the street when he was expected.

Massacre in Sahara.

TRIPOLI, Jan 3

THE KING OF BAVARIA.

Louis Secretly Leaves His Court.

Strange, but not surprising, news comes from Bavaria. King Louis, it is affirmed, has secretly left his court at Hohenschwangau, and is travelling in the strictest incognito. It is not unusual for princes and sovereigns to go about in this way. As duke of this or duchess of that every crowned head occasionally finds it desirable to travel incognito. But the true position of the illustrious traveller is known to everybody. This is not so in the present case. The king of Bavaria has disappeared and left no trace of his whereabouts. The direction, duration, and purpose of his journey are, we are told, equally unknown; even the highest circles are left in the dark. Here is matter for speculation. A young man of thirty-six, unmarried, highly cultured, and a sovereign ruler to boot, is on his wanderings. Is he, like Prince Charles, when he made his romantic journey into Spain, in search of a bride? or is he travelling merely to inform himself of the ways of men as they present themselves to ordinary eyes? Perhaps, after all, Louis has not left Bavaria, and is now living in some hut among the mountains. But, then, again, perhaps, he is in Paris, or in London. May not the whole story be, indeed, a fabrication? The sudden disappearance of a king without leaving a clue with anybody as to where he is not a daily or yearly occurrence. What if Louis has been made away with? The announcement that he is travelling incognito, and without wishing anyone to discover him, would be just a tale to allay suspicion indefinitely. Had it been any other sovereign, means would immediately be taken to trace the Royal fugitive. Doubts, surmises, and apprehensions would be felt, if not expressed, by all classes of the people. But it is King Louis II. of Bavaria who is the hero of the adventure, and his latest act is what we should expect of him. For some time to come eligible young ladies should pay close attention to any strange gentleman of romantic character who may be introduced to them.

THE "JEANETTE."

INTERESTING LETTERS FROM AN OFFICER OF THE "ROGERS."

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.

Charles F. Putnam, a graduate of the Annapolis Naval Academy, in '73, who joined the U. S. steamship Rogers in search of the Jeannette, writes an interesting letter to his mother in this city. The first section of the letter is dated U. S. Steamship Rogers, Arctic Ocean, August 20, 1881. In it he speaks of being at St. Michaels in the Pacific Ocean, from August 3rd, to 11th, and hearing nothing of the Jeannette or her party, and on the 11th sailing for Plover Bay on the Siberian coast.

This contradicts the despatch that the Chasseur met the Rogers on the 9th of August and that the Rogers was steering for Herald Island. In point of fact the Chasseur could not at that time have been in the Arctic, and the Rogers, which certainly had not, was steering not for Herald Island, but a small island in Plover Bay. The Rogers reached Plover Bay on the 16th of August, and Master Putnam says did not find the Russian man-of-war Strellock, and therein he again contradicts Mr. Soylovski. That vessel, he says, had left on the 13th, leaving word that it would meet the Rogers at St. Lawrence Bay. They did meet the Strellock on the 18th, and on the 19th passed through Behring's Straits in company with her into the Arctic ocean. Master Putnam says: "We have heard of several sledge parties both on the northern coast of Siberia and on the coast near Point Barrow, and some think it may turn out that some of the Jeannette's party had left the ship and started back by sledge. We shall investigate the stories, first going to Cape Sardze Karen on the north coast of Siberia, and thence eastward, where we will find the whaler and learn from them what they have heard. He speaks of the fine weather, the thermometer being 40° all day, with no ice anywhere. The Rogers was prepared to remain two years, he says, to find the Jeannette, but he expects they will be in San Francisco by October, 1882. On the 20th they had lost sight of the Strellock. On September 14th he writes; We surveyed Wrangel Land and are now about to start north, looking for more land where the Jeannette might possibly be found. On September 27th he writes that their work for the year is about finished, and they are going to the St. Lawrence bay to winter. He refers to a party to be left at Cape North in Siberia to make sledge journeys along the Coast. It was Putnam himself who was left in charge of this party subsequently.

PERILS OF THE DEEP.

The five men picked up in an open boat yesterday morning by Captain Saunders are receiving all the care that can be bestowed on them at the boarding house of a Mr. Pierce. They are still in a very enfeebled condition and are still suffering more or less from frostbites. It is almost a miracle that they lived through the terrible storm and the bitter cold which prevailed along the Massachusetts coast since Sunday. The Almon Bird sailed from Winsor, N. S., a week ago, for Alexandria, Va., laden with plaster. She encountered no heavy gales or particularly bad weather until Sunday, but all that day heavy seas and high winds assailed her, and the men had hard work to keep from freezing. As the evening set in the storm increased, and when off Boone Island the schooner lost her topmast and shipped a heavy sea. The ropes and sails were frozen stiff, and there seemed to be no possibility of saving the vessel. Still the men worked all through the night and kept her afloat. Monday morning dawned and there was no encouragement in the appearance of the weather; the wind had increased and the sea had risen. By 8 o'clock a heavy wave tore off the schooner's bulwarks and flooded the decks, freezing almost instantly. The hatches were torn away and the doomed vessel began to fill with water. She was now unmanageable and the crew at length decided to abandon her.

IN THE BOATS.

Hastily collecting some articles of food, they took to the large boat. No extra clothing could be procured and not even an oar was to be had. There was no time to be lost, too, and the boat was pushed off, amid a roaring tempest and seething sea. She drifted about, climbing from billow to billow and receiving an occasional bucketful of water which swiftly froze the clothing of the castaways. The vessel labored for over an hour and then sank. The boat without oar or sail, contained 8 men—Captain C. A. Packard, William Hariman, Alex. Small, E. B. Henderson, Ferdinand Hamilton, Horace Small, Charles Chapples and a man whose name cannot now be ascertained. They had no hope of ever reaching land, but the instinct of self-preservation was strong, and they huddled together for shelter, while the icy spray fell over them, chilling the very marrow in their bones. They had no means of telling whether they were drifting toward land or out to sea before the gale. They and their frail craft were tossed about like a cork all day Monday, and then the darkness set in. The moon was obscured by the drifting clouds and the heavy snowstorm, and no man in the boat expected to see the sun rise again or look on aught of life. When one of them attempted to picture the feelings of himself and fellows this afternoon a shudder ran through his frame, and the recital was stopped for prudential reasons. Tuesday morning found them still alive, but suffering from the cold. The sea had gone down somewhat and the storm had abated. Their stock of provisions was fast giving out and the terrible picture of death by starvation and thirst rose before their minds.

HOPE FADING AWAY.

During the afternoon they saw a sail and made frantic efforts to attract the attention of those on board, but they failed, and as the second night approached they saw the unknown vessel pass out of sight below the horizon. Another night of horror and darkness closes in on them and hunger, cold and exhaustion were fast-taking away all hope.

The pangs of hunger and thirst and the terrible exposure to cold were unsettling the minds of the survivors. There were no provisions of any sort, furtive glances were cast at the dead bodies of their dead companions.

When Captain Saunders saw the ghastly crew he was struck with horror. Their faces were purple, their lips and hands stained with blood and their throats so parched that hardly a sound could be omitted.

THE CARBONEAR HERALD

"Donesi labor—our noblest heritage."

CARBONEAR, JAN. 28, 1882.

THE CLOTURE.

Late despatches are authority for the word which we have put at the head of these remarks. They are further authority for the assertion that Mr. Gladstone intends to introduce the custom which the word indicates, into the deliberations of the Imperial Parliament. This will be a novelty of that character which always brings punishment to the author.

Mr. Gladstone's object however is pronounced and definite. Parliament, he maintains, cannot overtake its work, if every Bill be subjected to treatment like that which the Land Bill received last Session.

The question now arises whether it be judicious to change a time honored custom, solely because a few members, or even a single member, can if he absolutely so determines, cause a great amount of annoyance and obstruction?

not sustain them for having done so. Members cannot run counter to the feeling of the country;—they may do so once, but will scarcely repeat the experiment. Better leave parliamentary privileges as they are than introduce a change which can be afterwards abused to the general detriment of the nation.

In England, Parliament has long been elastic enough to represent public feeling without being the mere creature of popular whim and sudden impulse. No government can rely on a venal majority to carry legislation which does not commend itself to the deliberate favor of the vast body of voters.

Correspondence

(To the Editor of Carbonear Herald.) New Harbor, Trinity Bay, January 21st, 1882.

Dear Mr. Editor,—Within the past few months several cases of diphtheria have been reported, both here and in Green's Harbor, but none of them, so far, resulted serious. This disease has been confined totally to children and half grown persons.

pauper relief, and that very few will look for it during their natural existence. The people of this side of the Bay are, despite what may be said to the contrary, ardent supporters of Sir William and his Railway policy.

PROSPERITY.

(To the Editor of Carbonear Herald.) Western Bay, Jan. 5th, 1882.

I have to congratulate the Loyal Orangemen of Carbonear on the very fine day that they had for their procession. The only impediment was that they could not keep open their banners and flags owing to the force of wind.

PLANTER.

(To the Editor of Carbonear Herald.) Western Bay, Jan. 5th.

On Saturday evening, 14th inst., Michael Forristal of Gusses' Cove left his house to go to Adams Cove, it being about four o'clock, p.m., he returned to Gusses' Cove again before midnight.

I am, Dear Sir, Yours, very truly, JAMES EVANS.

(To the Editor of Carbonear Herald.) Harbor Main, Jan. 24, 1882.

I have for some time read with disgust the childish twaddle of the Telegram, in reference to our district as well as the uncalled for attacks on Mr. Little, Q. C.

if it ever had such, passed out of this district on Monday, when we saw our district held up to ridicule for the second time, under the head of "The man from Harbor Main."

Dear Mr. Murray I now take my leave of you for the present, but in doing so I would advise you to bake your hard bread a little softer and not to tar the poor fishermen with hard tack.

Local and other Items.

times collided with it—because, in our opinion, that paper was one of the best, if not the very best, journal published in the city. It was well got-up, well-printed, and generally well edited, and furnished with good selections and above all, it was an earnest advocate and supporter of the Railway, and could have proved a grand counter-piece to the opponents of that grand public work.

Nevertheless the Evening Mercury is a decently printed sheet, and coming out punctually every evening, professing acceptable principles quite the reverse of its daily contemporary,—having TRUTH for its guidance and a staff of respectable contributors it is probable that it will take a large proportion of the cents hitherto wholly raked in by its fellow-daily, as well as enjoy a substantial popularity altogether different from that bastard, evanescent article founded upon false proofless assertions "again the Government" AND THE RAILWAY. The new paper based upon the grand unit it proclaims, has our best wishes for its success—Ibid.

A horse belonging to D. J. Green, Esq., while crossing the beach on Wednesday, took flight, throwing its occupant a considerable distance, and dashed across the beach at full speed, until checked near the Telegraph Office. We congratulate Mr Green on his very narrow escape.

We are informed that Mr James Munn, and a Mr Parsons are making an effort to enforce the Permissive Act in Harbor Grace. The Requisition, which is the first step towards it, is now in course of preparation.

Alfred Penny, Esq., M.H.A., for Bay-de-Verde, has been visiting his constituents the past few days. By last advice he was at Northern Bay, up to which place he received a very cordial reception. He may be expected to return to town to-day. What do you say to that Mr Telegraph?

The steamer Lady Glover yesterday towed the Terra Nova, belonging to John Munn & Co., clear of the slob, which was very heavy at the time. The Outton, Captain Layton, and also belonging to John Munn & Co., arrived to-day.

LITERARY.

MY OWN HOME.

"My how come!" how soothing
The words to my ear,
What magic lurks in them
My spirit to cheer!

My own home, though humble
Thy rose-covered walls,
Thou art fairer and dearer
Than marble-built halls.

My own home, my own home,
My haven of rest,
My heart lieth to thee
As bird to its nest!

Grey and Gold.

CHAPTER IV.

Continued.

"So soon!" said the doctor
"The old lady then, is getting tired of our quiet little nook.
And you—you like Scaurbeck,
I think, better than Cardham, he added, with a spice of rail-lery in his tone.

But there was none in Katie's eyes, as she replied, "Better than Cardham, Dr. Rayleigh?
I should think so. Going back there is like going out of freedom into prison—out of sunshine into a dungeon. Though I lived in the country when I was at school, it was not like this, and I had never seen the sea. I shall never forget it, I am sure, day and night, til I will see it again. I shall love Scaurbeck to the end of my life. I have been so happy here," said Katie, gazing sur-rowfully over the glittering sea, all dimpling in the Autumn sunset.

Cecil Rayleigh looked at her as she sat with clasped hands and parted lips, gazing over the water, and after a moment's pause, said gently,
'Could you love Scaurbeck well enough to always live in it, Miss Stewart? It is very pleasant in the Summer, but we consider it dull in the Winter.'

Without looking round, she replied quickly, 'Oh, Doctor Rayleigh, my aunt loves dingy old Cardham far too well ever to leave it.'

Cecil smiled and his blue eyes sparkled mischievously.
'Is it then incumbent on me to model their likes and dislikes on their aunts? You have not answered my question Miss Katie.'

Katie's eyes fell beneath the young man's glance, and she continued, 'Katie,—let me call you so once, at least—could you like Scaurbeck well enough to live in it with me?'

Katie started; it was a sudden declaration, and an unexpected one, for in all her day-dreams of Cecil Rayleigh, while realizing her own affection for him, she had not thought it possible that he, handsome, clever, popular man, could loop to care for the quiet insignificant girl who had no thing to bestow in return, except that love which she believed he had only to sue for from the noblest and the fairest, and must win. But no; it was she he wanted, none other, and with one glance at his earnest face, in which she read only truth, she covered her face with her hands and said not a word.

But it was not enough; in that action Cecil read his answer, and only after a few minutes had passed did he gently unloose the clinging hands, and holding them both fast in his own, with tender force compel the blushing girl to look up and confirm with her own lips the answer he had read in her eyes.

Grey days, where had they vanished to? Golden days, how suddenly had they dawned!
Katie was blinded as by a sudden burst of sunshine.
Was not such happiness far too great to be true?

But it was true; and, little by little, Katie came to herself, and by degrees Katie was able to listen to Cecil's outpouring of his thoughts and feelings, his hopes and fears, since the day when he first met her in her aunt's sick chamber; and so they talked on while the sunset glowed and faded over the waters, and the gold and purple and crimson paled into the soft evening grey, and the moon came forth in her brightness, warning them that, even for lovers time will not stand still, and that Miss Rycroft would be growing uneasy at Katie's prolonged absence.

The old lady was not half so much astonished as Katie had imagined, and, what was better, she did not offer the slightest objection to the new state of affairs. During the time Katie had been with her, she had learned to love the bright presence that cheered her lonely home; but now her better nature prevailed, and she only begged that Katie might be left to her for the Winter.

'I am an old woman, Dr.
Rayleigh,' she said, 'and I may be called hence at any time.
Leave me my companion till the Winter is over, and then, if I am still spared, I will gladly give her to you in the Spring, thankful that she will have one to love and care for her when I am gone.'

So the matter remained and another week found Katie and her aunt settled again in the old home.

Katie was one when Doctor Hawkston paid his first visit, but returning just before he left, the old man called her to him, and gravely regarding her with a merry twinkle in his eyes, while Katie's drooped, and crimson rose over her cheeks, he at length took pity on her, and raising from his seat, hat in hand, said, 'I see my prescription has been of great service to you, Miss Katie, at all events. Yes, Scaurbeck roses are very pretty, quite as much so as the lilies my thievish young brother of the medicine-shop seemed to admire so much. Ah, ah, Miss Katie I have heard the news.
Mind, I am to give you away, and Miss Rycroft and I will open the ball together'
