Watches!

Our sales this year have been larger than last, although there has been more competition. A good many who have purchased trashy watches are waking up sorry, and the reaction will have the effect of creating a better demand for reliable goods.

We have no fault to find with honest competition so long as right goods are sold but do think the sale of dishonest goods ought to be prohibited.

Items of Interest to Catholic Readers in the Magazine.

Across the Rio Grande.

(From the Sacred Heart Review.)

In the "Editor's Study of the June Harper's the reader finds some interesting gossip and descriptions of the sort of life led by the Catholic people who dwell on the other side of the Rio Grande, and in the opening paragraphs he learns that the average New Englander of non-Catholic faith who visits Mexico and tarries there for any length of time does not usually show himself so particularly averse to certain Spanish-American customs as he pretends to be at home. For the writer of these Mexican descriptions marvels how it comes to pass, unless the explanation is to be found in the fact that crossing the tropics changes one's character, that a man who here in New England, as he alleges, would never dream of such a thing as staying away from the Sunday morning service in his meeting-house, or of dodging the contribution box when it is passed around, no sooner crosses the tropic of Cancer than his conscience permits him to take in a bull-fight and afterwards to be present at a cock-fight. The same writer pleasantly describes a visit which he and his party paid to the Indian village of Jutepeque—a place about seven or eight miles distant from Cuernavaca—on the way to which from the latter town they passed by the famous hacienda of Cortez, which is said to be probably the oldest sugar establishment on this continent. This hacienda, which is described as an enormous structure, adorned with many arches, arcades and columns, was granted by Cortez to the Hospital of Jesus in the Mexican capital, which noble charity, the writer informs us, derives an annual revenue from it of from $40,000 to $50,000. It was on a feast day that this party of Americans visited Jutepeque, and they naturally found their way to the village church where High Mass was said. They saw the sacred edifice crowded with kneeling worshippers, an organ which was playing side by side with the rap devotion of the worshippers, it is admitted, no doubt could be entertained. Some of the features of the celebration of this Mass—such as the military salute at the consecration—seemed strange to the "Editor's Study," which says of the Mass that it was very different from the New England meeting-house service, that one usually attends, he adds, "to criticize the choir or sermon." Let this remark, however, be construed into an admission that the Mexican Mass impressed him as a better Sunday service than the one held in the average New England meeting-house, our writer hastens to qualify it by saying that he does not assert that the Mexican religion is better than New England Protestantism, though he is forced to acknowledge that there is more to it.

In a Mexican Churchyard.

The churchyard at Jutepeque evidently impressed the "Editor's Study," for it asserts that the Indian village church, like all other Mexican ones, is surrounded by a noble churchyard; and the architect of the church appears also to have pleased the American visitor, for he asks why our American architects do not visit Mexico and learn how to make picturesque facades and towers. After the celebration of the Mass in the church a number of the Indians who assisted there held, outside the edifice, a tribal dance. The "Editor's Study" admits that this dance was a very gorgeous and solemn performance, but it also characterizes it as a mixture of pagan rites with Christianity, thus implying that Mexican Catholicism is not wholly free from pagan practices. Why should a dance, though, be called a pagan performance whenever it is in any manner connected with a religious celebration? King David was assuredly not a pagan, and yet he danced before the ark; and isn't a "decorous and solemn" dance more befitting such an occasion as was the celebration of this Mexican Indian festival than some of the absurd antics which characterize at times Protestant revival services? The "Editor's Study" takes a more correct view of this Indian dance, however, when, regarding it as an old Aztec custom, it says that its performance under the shadow of the Jutepeque church may be considered a tribal tribute to the religion that is now observed therein.

In Medieval Times.

Herold Frederic, the well known European correspondent, has a novel running in the Cosmopolitan, and in the instalment that appears in a recent number of that publication he makes one of his characters speak in praise of the Middle Ages and certain medieval ideas. There are two sides, Mr. Frederic asserts, to the medieval shield, and of the history he says: "It was the age of the cathedrals, of the Book of Kells, of the great mendicant orders, of the saintly and knightly ideals. It was in its flowering time that craftsmanship attained its highest point, and the great artisan guilds, proud of their talents and afraid of nothing but the reproach of work ill-done, gave the world its most magnificent possessions among the applied arts." The bishoprics of feudal England were as often as not the sons of swineherds or strolling clerks, whereas now no such a thing could happen to the (Anglican) hierarchy. Above all, it was the age of human character. Men like Thomas More, with all their bewildering circle of attainments and their extraordinary individual force, were familiar products." The educational system which prevailed in medieval times, Mr. Frederic also thinks, had many superlatives over our much-boasted modern one. Universal education, pushed to the extreme limits which certain individuals now demand for it, he pronounces "the worst offense of modern civilization," and he continues in this vein: "The race has fairly gone mad over this craze for stuffing unfit brains with encumbering and unfit twaddle. In the Middle Ages they knew better. The monks of a locality picked out the children whose minds would repay cultivation, and they taught these as much as it was useful for them to know." If the system was an honest operation, he adds, it made no difference whether the children who were thus chosen were the offspring of the lord of the manor or those of the poorest peasant; and he thinks that those days were rational times when human institutions were made to fit human beings "instead of his modern lopsidedness of instead shaving down and mangling the human being, or else blowing him up like a bladder, to make him fit the institution."

is unchanged.

The House of Savoy is at the Quirinal, and intends to stay there. Several Catholic sovereigns, out of respect for the Holy See, pay visits to his Holiness, but that is the utmost recognition he has been able to obtain. The Pope of the Vatican is treated as a sovereign at Rome. His person is inviolate; ambassadors are credited to him, and if he does not go out it is because he will not. There is hardly one statement in the foregoing passage that contains even a grain of truth. The predecessor of the present Pope acted in no such manner as described above when the Piedmontese forces entered Rome, and the House of Savoy took possession of the papal city. He had no need to hurl anathemas at the Sardinian king, for that monarch, by despoiling the Church of its estates, excommunicated himself. Neither did Pius IX. issue any frantic appeals to the European Catholic powers. He contented himself with protesting, in a dignified manner, to all Christendom against the wrongs done the Church. The House of Savoy is still at the Quirinal and it doubtless intends to stay there if it can. But during recent years, and particularly in very recent days, events have occurred in Italy, which, in the estimation of all thinking men, make it very problematical if the House of Savoy will long remain, not at the Quirinal alone, but in royal authority even; and the Roman question is very far from resolved, as these writers assert, by the fact of Italy's present occupation of Rome. That occupation has never yet been sanctioned by any European international agreement, much as "United Italy has sought such a recognition. Not only Catholic, but non-Catholic Sovereigns consider it beneficial to their interests to call at the Vatican when in Rome. The Russian Tsar and the Prussian Emperor have done so; and the latter, in rebuking an officious individual who wrote from Rome to him lately, to complain of the conduct of the Prussian minister in attending a banquet where the Pope's health was toasted, informed that writer that Leo XIII. had the Pope, as a sovereign, rank as a sovereign ruler. All the world knows that prudence as well as policy, requires the Pope to remain within the Vatican, for were he to appear in public in Rome, it is almost certain that he would be treated as contemptuously as were the remains of his illustrious predecessor when they were being taken to their last resting place in the church of San Lorenzo. A government which allowed that affront to a dead pontiff would hardly concern itself to protect a living one from insult or personal injury.

The Principle Correct.

Speaking through the character in his story aforementioned, our novelist contends that the medieval system of education, if it did not always operate perfectly and successfully, was right in principle; and he asserts, furthermore, that it will be only by getting back to the basal ideas upon which that system rested and by operating upon them with the added light which experience has since afforded us, that any real progress can be achieved. This is tantamount to a declaration that our present methods, despite all the loud claims which are made for them, are not truly progressive ones, a declaration which other observers and students of those methods have at different times also made. Mr. Frederic's conceptions of the church of England and its clergy, as they are shown in the conversation which he puts in the mouths of the personages who figure in his story, are rather amusing. "The church of England," it is stated in one place, "drives with an extreme loose rein. You can do anything you like in it provided you go about the thing decorously." And in another passage a certain class of Anglican ministers are described as men who possess "an irreducible minimum of dogmatic theology and an artistic elaboration of the ritual," a characterization which will hardly please the "High" churchmen for whom it is plainly intended. Still, any one who is conversant with the queer occurrences that so frequently take place within the pale of England's established church, or who has observed the vagaries of those members of its ministry who are given to advanced ritualism, will have little difficulty in recognizing the justice of this novelist's descriptions or in making their proper application.

The Prisoner of the Vatican.

The latest number of the English Illustrated Magazine presents to its readers an article, the joint production of Andee de St. Andre and George Gale Thomas, who write upon "Men Who Would be Kings." The only portion of this paper which concerns us is the paragraph wherein the following mention is made of the Holy See and its two latest incumbents: "One can recall the face," say these literary collaborators, "the old Pope Pio Nono male when they took away from him his pontifical estates. He hurled anathema after anathema, excommunicated Victor Emmanuel and called to his aid all the Catholic sovereigns of Europe, but to no purpose. . . . Nearly thirty years have passed, and the position is unchanged. The House of Savoy is at the Quirinal, and intends to stay there. Several Catholic sovereigns, out of respect for the Holy See, pay visits to his Holiness, but that is the utmost recognition he has been able to obtain. The Pope of the Vatican is treated as a sovereign at Rome. His person is inviolate; ambassadors are credited to him, and if he does not go out it is because he will not. There is hardly one statement in the foregoing passage that contains even a grain of truth. The predecessor of the present Pope acted in no such manner as described above when the Piedmontese forces entered Rome, and the House of Savoy took possession of the papal city. Neither did Pius IX. issue any frantic appeals to the European Catholic powers. He contented himself with protesting, in a dignified manner, to all Christendom against the wrongs done the Church. The House of Savoy is still at the Quirinal and it doubtless intends to stay there if it can. But during recent years, and particularly in very recent days, events have occurred in Italy, which, in the estimation of all thinking men, make it very problematical if the House of Savoy will long remain, not at the Quirinal alone, but in royal authority even; and the Roman question is very far from resolved, as these writers assert, by the fact of Italy's present occupation of Rome. That occupation has never yet been sanctioned by any European international agreement, much as "United Italy has sought such a recognition. Not only Catholic, but non-Catholic Sovereigns consider it beneficial to their interests to call at the Vatican when in Rome. The Russian Tsar and the Prussian Emperor have done so; and the latter, in rebuking an officious individual who wrote from Rome to him lately, to complain of the conduct of the Prussian minister in attending a banquet where the Pope's health was toasted, informed that writer that Leo XIII. had the Pope, as a sovereign, rank as a sovereign ruler. A government which allowed that affront to a dead pontiff would hardly concern itself to protect a living one from insult or personal injury.

One View of the Higher Criticism.

Judging from the articles which he contributes to Longman's Magazine, Mr. Andrew Lang has no very high opinion of that higher criticism which it is the fashion with so many Protestant scholars nowadays to apply to Holy Writ and the study thereof. Neither is Mr. Lang greatly impressed with that "Polychrome Bible" which is now being brought out. He likens that production to a coat of many colors; and of the average Protestant process of higher criticism he says: "It hath been my lot, lately, to read a good deal of Biblical criticism made in Germany. The method is simple and Teutonic. You have a theory; you accept the evidence of the sacred authors as far as it suits your theory, and when it does not suit, you say that the inconvenient passage is an 'interpolation.' It may be, for if not what becomes of your theory? So you print the inconvenient passage in green, I presume, or what not; and then the people know all about it." This may not be a very exhaustive criticism of the higher criticism in questions, but it covers the subject pretty thoroughly and describes very accurately, even if rather flippantly, the methods of the average Protestant biblical higher critic. And Mr. Lang's witty description is applicable also to the methods of other Protestant polemics. It fits very accurately, for instance, those which Henry C. Lea employs in his "Chapters from the Religious History of Spain connected with the Inquisition," and in other of his works. It applies also to Doctor White's methods as shown in his "Warfare of Religion and Science"; for both those writers have queer theories of their own, and anything that conflicts with them, no matter how well attested it may be, they have no hesitation in pronouncing fictitious and false.

Thackeray in Rome.

William Makepeace Thackeray, the famous novelist, said in one of his later works: "There must be moments, in Rome especially, when every man of friendly heart, who writes himself English and Protestant, must feel a pang at thinking that he and his countrymen are isolated from European Christendom. An ocean separates us. From one shore or the other one can see the neighboring cliffs on clear days; one must wish sometimes that there was no stormy gulf between us, and from Canterbury to Rome a pilgrim could pass, and not drown beyond Dover. Of the beautiful parts of the greater Mother Church I believe, among us, many people have no idea. We think of lazy friars, of pining cloistered virgins, of ignorant peasants worshipping wood and stone, bought and sold indulgences, abominations and the like commonplace of Protestant satire. Lo! yonder inscription, which blazes round the dome of St. Peter's so great and glorious, it looks like heaven almost, as if the words were written in stars. It proclaims to all the world that this is Peter and on this rock the Church shall be built, against which hell shall not prevail. Under the bronze canopy his throne is lit with lights that have been burning before it for ages. Round this stupendous chamber are ranged the grandest of his court. Faith seems to be realized in their marble figures. Some of them were alive but yesterday; others to be blessed as they walk the world even now, doubtless; and the commissioners of heaven here, holding their court a hundred years hence, shall authoritatively announce their benediction. Tens of their power shall not be wanting. They heal the sick, open the eyes of the blind, cause the lame to walk today, as they did eighteen centuries ago. Are there not crowds ready to win to their wonders? Is there not a tribunal appointed to try their claims; advocates to plead for and against; prelates and clergy and multitudes of faithful to believe them? True you will kiss the hand of a priest

All Covered With Eruptions—Could Not Work, the Suffering Was So Great—Hood's Has Gured.

"I was all run down with complaints peculiar to my sex, and I broke out in sores on my body, head, limbs and hands, and my hair all came out. I was under the doctor's treatment a long time without benefit. They called my trouble eczema. Finally I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after I had used three or four bottles I found I was improving. I kept on until I had taken several more bottles and the sores and itching have disappeared and my hair has grown out. I was advised to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I did so and it benefited me so much that I would not be without it." Mrs. G. I. BURNETT, Central Norton, N. B.

Progress of the War.

It can scarcely be said that any new features in connection with the war have manifested themselves since our last issue. Rumors have been equally as false as in any week since war was declared, and reports have been equally as contradictory as the prospects of a genuine battle on sea or land, seem about as remote as ever. Additional reports regarding the encounter at Guantanamo say that the Spanish sharpshooters, in their encounter with the United States marines, fired with deadly effect, and that a number of Americans were killed and wounded. Following close on this intelligence, we are informed from Washington that the administration has decided upon an aggressive plan to drive the Spaniards out of Cuba. We are told that large forces will be landed in all parts of the island and that they will force a junction and battle from one coast to the other. We were to believe all the reports of the bombardment of Cuban batteries, we should be obliged to conclude that along the whole coast. We are once more informed that Rear Admiral Sampson's fleet bombarded the batteries at Santiago de Cuba at daylight on the 16th; that for two hours the ships pounded the batteries at the right and left of the entrance, only sparing El Morro, where Lieut. Hobson and his companions of the Merrimac are imprisoned; that the western batteries, against which the main assault was directed, were badly wrecked; that one was completely shattered, and in the others the guns were dismounted. We are further told that, at first, the Spaniards replied passionately and wildly; impudently, then most of their guns were deserted. Of course, according to this account, not a ship was struck nor a man injured on the American side. What an extraordinary immunity from danger these Americans possess, to be sure! Other equally unconfirmed reports have been circulated to the effect that Admiral Sampson had been reinforced by several hundred Cubans, and that his forces at Guantanamo were in a very satisfactory condition.

had been occupied by the troops under General Ballester, that the men under General Garcia were operating with the American forces; that the United States marines and Cubans attacked the Spanish camp situated five miles from the American entrenchment; that they completely routed a force of 4,000 Spaniards breaking up their camp and destroying the well which supplied them with water. We are informed that, in this wonderful undertaking, only one American was slightly wounded and two Cubans were killed and four wounded, but that the Spanish loss was believed to be forty killed. On Friday last, we were told from Washington, that it was doubtful whether or not any movement upon Havana could be inaugurated till the autumn; that General Miles was expected in Washington, and that he was likely to receive a serious rebuke; for his conduct of affairs at Tampa, had been such as to raise a decided doubt as to his ability as an executive officer. Friday's advices from Washington also contained the following: A vital blow at Spain is to be struck, and sensational developments are reported scheduled to occur in July. While the army is engaged with movements against Santiago and Porto Rico, the navy will be getting in readiness to descend upon the coast of Spain and the Canary Islands. This plan first developed in the President's mind. When it became apparent that the prospects of peace were extremely remote they at once felt the necessity of striking a fatal blow at Spain, which would compel her to sue for peace without the necessity of sending a large army to Havana and sacrificing thousands of lives. Important steps have been taken towards preparing the fleet which will either bombard the seacoast cities of Spain or capture the Canaries. Right on the heels of this comes the information that the naval service at Washington got another scare on the 17th. The report was received that the Cadiz fleet had sailed. The report was a surprise, as all advices for the previous week warn that the fleet was not to sail for several weeks. Later in the day trustworthy reports came that the squadron consists of twenty vessels and that shortly after leaving Cadiz the fleet was divided, part going westward and part passing into the Mediterranean. Reports all come from reliable sources and among the naval men the belief is equal to conviction that fears are to be realized and an attempt is to be made to bombard the New England Coast. A Madrid despatch of the 18th said: Fresh contingents of troops are being constantly called to the colors, and there is great activity in the War and Navy departments. Work on the fortifications at the different ports of Spain is being actively pushed and it is asserted that a third squadron of warships is to be sent to the Mediterranean.

It is the general opinion here that a protracted war is ahead. A Washington despatch of the 20th informs us that the first American troops were landed on Cuban soil on Sunday. This is the first contingent of the troops sent forward from Tampa. The landing place is said to be Anguadores, a town eight miles from Santiago. Advices of the same date from Santiago says a flag was flying at half mast at Morro Castle, conjecture was rife as to whether it meant the death of some prominent Spanish officer or the death of Hobson and his companions who were imprisoned there. From the other side of the Atlantic comes the information that the Spanish Admiral Camaras, with his squadron had arrived at Cartagena, on Saturday evening. The destination of the fleet was said to be unknown. Other rumors are going the rounds as to the presence of Spanish ships in different places.

This closing chapter in the story of the Behring Sea claim, running over a period of several years, was enacted in the office of the Secretary of State Washington on Thursday last, when Judge Day delivered to Sir Julian Pauncefote, a draft drawn on the treasury of the United States, for $473,151.26, as payment in full of the award of the joint committee convened in accordance with the terms of the Paris tribunal of arbitration of 1892. It was the last day allowed for payment under the terms of the award and the payment was made in pursuance of a special act of Congress passed by that body on Wednesday and approved by the President of the United States on Thursday morning.

In consequence of the lamented death of Judge Reddin, the office of County Court Judge, for Kings County, became vacant. No doubt, there are several applicants for the position; at least we may reasonably assume that there are several. It is not probable that any one of them would be willing to take the job. If the Government should insist upon filling the office, it is not probable that any one of them would suggest that they cut the gordian knot by giving the office to a Conservative. We observe that the Patriot has nominated a prominent Washingtonian for the position, and it is not impossible the announcement was inspired. Were any sense of proportion to be observed, the office, other things being equal, should go to a Catholic. But the present Government is not given to observing proportions of any kind.

The commencement exercises of St. Dunstan's College, took place in the hall Monday afternoon. There was a large attendance, including His Lordship, the Bishop, his Honor the Lieutenant Governor, the Chief Justice and other leading citizens. An interesting musical and literary programme was rendered by the students. The degree of B. A. (Latin), was conferred on John A. McDonald, Angus McDonald, G. O'Neill, P. F. Doyle, Real Miller and Wilfrid Sullivan. Mr. John J. McGowan read an essay on "Novels and Novel Reading." The address by Rev. F. K. Gallant, of Bloomfield, in the course of his remarks he pointed out the excellence of the work done in St. Dunstan's College, as shown by the high standing of its students when they entered higher institutions of learning, such as McGill and other universities. Mr. P. F. Doyle delivered the valedictory address. It contained the usual references to college days and pointed out the duties of citizens and rulers. The question of war was then discussed from different points of view, the offensive, the defensive, the just and the unjust. War, the speaker claimed, was under certain conditions permitted both by divine and human laws. Want of space prevents us in this issue, from publishing the prize list or from making any more lengthened references to the exercises, which were much enjoyed by all present.

Rev. J. M. REARDON occupied the pulpit of St. Dunstan's Cathedral on Sunday last and preached his first sermon. His theme was the Divinity of Christ, and his text was the words of the Centurion, as recorded in the Gospel: "Indeed this was the Son of God." The Rev. gentleman is a fluent and pleasing speaker, and his sermons was admirably in every respect. It was most logical, was couched in choice language and was listened to with the closest attention by the large congregation present. He showed that the two natures, the divine and the human, were united in the one person of the Redeemer; that this of itself was sufficient to prove that the Redeemer was none other than the eternal Son of God. The Rev. preacher then drew from the sacred Scriptures numerous proofs of the Divinity of Christ. Our dear Lord Himself proved during His sojourn on earth this by many miracles, and crowned these by the miracle of raising Himself from the dead after He had been crucified. This God-man, begotten of the Father before all ages, conceived in the chaste womb of the Virgin Mary by the power and operation of the Holy Ghost, and born in the stable of Bethlehem, had purchased for us the reward of eternal life. It is our duty to make good use of the means placed at our disposal to attain to this happiness purchased for us at such a great price.

Mr. BLAIR, Minister of Railways, with his family has gone on a holiday trip to Europe. Mr. Tarte also crosses the Atlantic ostensibly to inspect, at the expense of the Dominion, the great harbors of England some time ago. The travelling expenses of the gentlemen and their families on this vacation trip will constitute quite an item in the public expenditure. But they will have it sufficient to tell the people they are economists.

The will of the late William Dodd has been admitted to probate. The estate consists of personal and real property, the estimated value of which is $60,000. The following charitable bequests have been made: $500 to each hospital, $500 to St. Vincent de Paul Society, $500 to poor fund of Methodist (Irish) church, $500 to the Bible Society, $500 to F. M. C. A. library fund. The residue of the estate after the payment of one or two special bequests, will be divided among his brother and sisters and the legal representatives of a deceased sister. The will is dated Nov. 27, 1892, and is witnessed by Robert Campbell, and P. W. Carver, Messrs. E. L. Hazard and H. J. Cundall are the executors.

Mr. WILLIAM DODD, whose death notice appears in this issue, was found dead in his room on Thursday morning last. Mr. Dodd was a widower, his wife having died a few years ago. He had no children. He had been living in the city during the winter, and had moved to his residence on Mount Edward Road only a couple of weeks previous to his death. It appears that he had been drinking, and fell face downwards, in which position he was found dead by the domestic in the morning. Mr. Dodd was for many years the leading employer of this city, and had accumulated considerable wealth. He was a broad-minded and public spirited citizen.

A very sad and shocking accident occurred at St. Dunstan's Mills, about eight miles from this city on the Loyalist Road on Saturday morning last, by which Mr. Martin Hogan lost his life. He is in company with his nephew, Arthur Hogan, and two others drove out to St. Dunstan's Mills to fish trout. Martin made a raft of logs and went out on it to the middle of the mill pond. The raft then parted and he was precipitated into the water. He soon sank to the bottom and was unable to get up. He was notified, and he proceeded to the scene of the accident. He made a raft and recovered the body, which was found in about eight feet of water. The coroner was then notified and a jury being empanelled a verdict in accordance with the above facts was returned. Deceased was about 35 years of age and a journeyman. His funeral took place from St. Dunstan's Cathedral on Sunday afternoon and was very largely attended.

A sad accident occurred in Sturgeon Bay near Georgetown, on Wednesday last, by which Mr. John J. Jeffrey of Georgetown lost his life. He, in company with his two sons, Edward and Robert, was returning from the fishing grounds, when a squall overtook them and capsized the boat. Edward was a good swimmer and succeeded in placing his brother on the spar which remained over water. He then turned to save father, but was hurried to see his apparently helpless boat a short distance away floating low downwards. A few minutes later it sank from view. Edward then made his way back to the boat where his brother was and there both perished. Mr. Jeffrey was recovered. Deceased was 60 years of age; was a native of Portsmouth, England. He leaves a widow and three sons to mourn.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

The work of the session was practically completed on Saturday, the 11th. A few items were discussed on concourse, including the Crown's Nest troubles. A point was given to this discussion by the discovery that J. B. Charlton, an employee of the public works department, was engaged during a good part of the session in cutting up and hiring men to work on the Crown's Nest railway. This Charlton is represented as having held out inducements to laborers, who found the promised money, and besides members could not see why a man of his position in the country could be acting as the agent of a railway corporation. There was also a good deal of discussion over the Dr. Borden provision contracts which were being held by Mr. Borden. Mr. Mills of Annapolis objected to the vote to the Halifax Banking Company of $4,000, due in subsidies to the Nova Scotia Central railway. He asked that the money be held until the courts decide privately whether or not Mr. Borden or Mr. Mills of Annapolis should be the bank or to other claimants. Mr. Kaulbach contended that the money properly belonged to the laborers, who never got any claim for their work. Hon. Messrs. Fielding and Blair denied that there was any claim for labor since the last adjustment. After some discussion it was arranged that the money should be voted on the understanding that Hon. Mr. Blair should hold it six months and should then part with it in accordance with the result of an accounting which should take place before that time. On Saturday morning the senate took the grip with the government. After a discussion occupying a large part of Friday, the motion for the second reading of the bill authorizing the advance of $500,000 of school trust funds from the Dominion to the Manitoba government came to a vote. The bill was defeated by the decisive vote of 28 to 8. The ground was taken that the proceeds of the sale of western school lands must be regarded as a trust fund of which only the interest ought to be used. The action of the senate of appointing the judge bill so as to make the compulsory retirement of county court judges at seventy-five years of age applicable only to future appointments, does not appear to be resented by the government. Hon. Mr. Mills announced in the senate, and Premier Laurier in the house, that the government would withdraw altogether that part of the bill referring to the retirement of county court judges. The remainder of the bill, increasing the number of judges in Ontario and Quebec and adding to the salaries and allowances of certain judges, will become law. The bill providing for the retirement of judges, some interest attaches to the statement of the minister that he had the authority of Mr. Chamberlain that the colonial secretary approved of the course of Lord Borden in his election. Sir Wilfrid said that there was correspondence on the subject, but it was confidential, and he could not reveal the same. The opposition would prefer to see the Chamberlain's view in his own words rather than Laurier's interpretation of it, but they have not been able to get it.

plan by which sawdust would be used in the manufacture of calcium carbide. He proposed to give the lumbermen another year to try the experiment. The house resumed in the afternoon and continued during the evening the discussion of the Montreal harbor loan bill.

Hon. Mr. Foster again called attention to the action of Hon. Mr. Tarte in consulting the Montreal harbor board to accept his plans for improvements. He was forcing on the people of Montreal, as a condition of the loan, a costly series of harbor works, to which the business men of business organizations of that city are opposed, and which are not now needed in the public interest.

Mr. Tarte replied with warmth that his plans were in the true interest of Montreal and the whole country, and that the board of trade, harbor board, and other exchange, shipping interests and other opposing elements were controlled by a few men, as Thompson, Thompson, Allag and McLearn, who consider only their own selfish interests.

Mr. Tarte declared that he represented the people of Canada and proposed to rescind the trade of Montreal from the after to pay his commissioners without vouchers or itemized accounts, as was done in the case of William Wilson, one of Mr. Blair's party leaders.

Hon. Mr. Fielding said that Mr. Foster should have supported a joint bill. He said it was not his fault if the government was more careful in their appointments. Mr. Blair had been allowed $15 and his other commissioners only $10.
