Lord Somerton's Ally.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

"Noel, what nonsense are you talking? It is your right."
"When my uncle is dead, Noel, he will be dead," he replied, quietly. "And I am sure that I have no desire for the old gentleman's death. Old, did I say? He is only fifty-five, and may live twenty or even thirty years longer. I sincerely hope that he will!"
Mrs. Campbell stared at her son in astonishment.

"I do not understand you, Noel," she said, in growing alarm. "Lawyer Grant has complained of your peculiarities. It is utterly absurd to suggest that we may yet be defrauded out of what belongs to us. My wicked and unnatural brother was dying when he fled from England to escape the extreme penalty of the law for murder. You do not know him as I do. If he does not die on the voyage to India, he will end all by suicide. He is as proud as Lucifer, and as implacable as death. He killed my husband—he killed your father, and wronged me cruelly. My father intended a jointure for me of five thousand pounds per annum. Sir John knew this, but because there was no will, he has practically starved us. That has been his revenge because I opposed him. To further defraud you, he attempted to foist upon the world some base-born mix, whom he introduced as his daughter. My only wonder is that it was not a son. You would then have lost all, had his devilish schemes been successful—had not an avenging Nemesis in the shape of Captain Castlemon—to whom he has paid thousands of pounds for twenty years—followed closely upon his heels. We owe all these discoveries to Mr. Grant, and no wonder that he is annoyed that you should slight him upon the very eve of success. Your conduct troubles me also. Why should you talk of working hard, when you have two fortunes within your grasp?"

Noel listened patiently until his mother had finished, albeit he had heard the same story many times before.
"I have ever treated you with gentleness, mother," he said, gravely. "Even with deference, when my own judgment has rebelled. I have hardly paused to consider the course that we were pursuing by the advice of Mr. Grant; I did not estimate one tithe of the rascality that was afoot. My uncle may have been cruel and remorseless, but he was an angel compared with Mr. Grant and some of his associates. You cannot be in possession of the facts, my dear mother, or of the ostentatious cordials between you and the lawyer could not possibly exist. I do not believe that Sir John killed my father, and there is no proof that Sir John's lovely daughter is illegitimate. In any case, he left a will leaving all that was unentailed to his daughter, and that will has been stolen, by whom I cannot say at present, but I shall get to the root of it."

"His mother stared at him in undisguised bewilderment and horror. Her face was ashen, but her eyes snapped viciously.
"You would undermine your own interests!" she cried. "You would keep me poor! You side with this nameless creature, after all the bitter wrongs that I have endured. Shame upon you, Noel Campbell! It is easy for you to be chivalrous, because your future is assured. You will marry a wealthy woman, while I remain a creature living upon your wife's charity or yours."
"I am not so sure of the wealthy wife," he replied, coldly, "and you cannot live upon charity when you have a thousand a year for life. Don't forget that this was the gift of the brother whom you would hunt so mercilessly to his death. Let me not be misunderstood. I will have no hand in bringing misery upon my uncle and his child. I have arrayed myself on their side. I was a fool to permit things to go on so long without troubling myself to think and to investigate. Mr. Grant would secure a nest-egg for himself—a high position for his stepdaughter—so that the disgraceful affair would be all in the family; hence no subsequent exposure. In a few days the scheme would be exploded, and my mind is definitely formed. I shall never marry Miss Adelaide Cleveland. Shall I tell you why, mother? It is because I love my cousin, Elsie Sterne, the girl upon whose head we have heaped so much misery. She knows me only as Colin Erncliffe, but when the exposure comes, God help me and her."
He bowed his head for a moment, then glanced at the clock.
"It is nearly ten. My cabman must not be kept waiting," he said. "I am going to my chambers first, then to Lawyer Grant's office."
"You will tell him what you have been saying to me?"
"Certainly. You know that when once I have decided upon a course, which I consider to be a right one, I never draw back."
"I know that you have all the stubbornness and stupidity of your uncle, for whom you have suddenly developed so great a fondness," she sneered.
"Noel, I beg of you to pause and consider. You dare not make Mr. Grant your enemy. He has it in his power to ruin you—even to blast your reputation. You cannot break with Adelaide."
"I have thought of all this," he said, "and am prepared for contingencies. We may have to move to cheaper quarters; I may even have to read my name in the bankruptcy columns of the morning papers. Still nothing will alter my determination. The money she has advanced shall be repaid some day. I will work for this—I will work for this. Ah! my cab is at the door. Good-morning, mother."
He pressed his lips to her cold cheek, and hastily left the room, while she sat clapping and uncapping her fingers in impatient rage.
"And this is the end of it," she whispered, hoarsely. "He takes sides against me—I who have done so much for him! He would help the brother who has spurned me—who has treated me as an outcast! He deserts me for the pretty face of this cousin who has no claim to the name she bears! It is cruel—cruel! I have ever been ill-used by my father—my husband—my brother, and now by my only son!"
She broke down and sobbed weakly.

CHAPTER XXXVII.
Noel found that it was incumbent upon him to further assist his confidant, Mr. Martin, when he reached his office in Temple Court. He had recommended Martin to an eccentric, but valuable client, and was anxious that his case should be won, because he never instituted or defended an action without very good cause.

Matthew Martin had chambers on the same floor, and he welcomed Noel with feverish delight.
"My dear boy," he said, "I am glad to see you, and that confounded brief, too. I was just going to cab down to your place; endless new complications have arisen, and I am like the fellow between the devil and the deep sea!"
Noel listened to him, and replied: "Being a good case, and a case that ought to be won, Mat, I will appear for you. I have mastered the whole thing, and feel sure of winning. It is the last time that I shall don the wig and gown, because my soul revolts from making an eloquent defense alias with black lies for the purpose of shielding some scoundrel, or, on the other hand, prosecuting some worthy man to the verge of distraction, and very often financial ruin, because I am paid to do it."
"Ah, it is all very well for you, who have something better," Martin said, ruefully, "but to me it is all in the way of business. I am pleased that you will conduct this case, and though I am sorry to lose you in court hereafter, old man, I shall love you all the better for not being my rival."
He laughed, and Noel dashed off a note to Mr. Grant to the effect that he would call and see the lawyer in the afternoon.

There was a bulky package from Captain Castlemon, which appeared to please him very much, and after glancing hastily through the papers, he locked himself in one of Martin's rooms for an hour, to make himself familiar with every detail of the suit which was set down for hearing at twelve o'clock.
At the appointed hour he was in court, and after the opening speech of the plaintiff's counsel, which appeared to cage the defendant in a hopeless middle, Noel Campbell jumped to his feet to reply.
Never before had the echoing court rang with greater eloquence. Every thread of the opposing counsel's case was picked to pieces bit by bit, and with a final peroration to the electrified jurymen, his voice, now pathetic, now appealing, or ringing with fierce anger and denunciation, he closed a masterly speech that had occupied upward of an hour, and he left the courtroom exhausted and trembling.
In fifteen minutes a messenger brought him the verdict. He had won the action, and saved his client many thousands of pounds worth of property from the clutches of a rapacious corporation.
The successful litigant insisted that Noel lunch with him. He was a millionaire merchant, and begged of the young man to remember him in case of need.
"I may want a friend some day, and thank you, Mr. Bordered," he said.
"I can never do enough for you, Mr. Campbell," the merchant declared; "and it is a real misfortune that you are retiring from the bar."

commented Martin to an eccentric, but valuable client, and was anxious that his case should be won, because he never instituted or defended an action without very good cause.
Matthew Martin had chambers on the same floor, and he welcomed Noel with feverish delight.
"My dear boy," he said, "I am glad to see you, and that confounded brief, too. I was just going to cab down to your place; endless new complications have arisen, and I am like the fellow between the devil and the deep sea!"
Noel listened to him, and replied: "Being a good case, and a case that ought to be won, Mat, I will appear for you. I have mastered the whole thing, and feel sure of winning. It is the last time that I shall don the wig and gown, because my soul revolts from making an eloquent defense alias with black lies for the purpose of shielding some scoundrel, or, on the other hand, prosecuting some worthy man to the verge of distraction, and very often financial ruin, because I am paid to do it."
"Ah, it is all very well for you, who have something better," Martin said, ruefully, "but to me it is all in the way of business. I am pleased that you will conduct this case, and though I am sorry to lose you in court hereafter, old man, I shall love you all the better for not being my rival."
He laughed, and Noel dashed off a note to Mr. Grant to the effect that he would call and see the lawyer in the afternoon.

Lion of Lucerne

TYPICAL VALUE OF THE SWISS GUARDS.

By LORINDA MUNSON BRYANT.

As we sit by the tiny lakeside in Lucerne and look across the still water to the Lion hewn out of the living rock, the terrible tragedy of that awful day in Paris comes vividly to mind.
"As brave as the Swiss Guards!" is synonymous to-day for any great act of heroism. No story in all war history is more pitiful than the one the Lion of Lucerne commemorates. Certainly nothing short of a sacrificial offering could equal the devotion of the 700 young Swiss soldiers who remained that day to guard King Louis XVI and his royal family in the Palace of the Tuilleries. And why? Because some one neglected to send word to them that the royal family had already fled from the palace.
No passing years can excuse the tragedy of it. Carlisle was right when he wrote: "Hail to you, brave men, honorable pit, through long times! No martyrs were ye; and yet almost none. He was no king of yours, this Louis... ye were but sold to him for some poor stipend to-day; yet would ye work for your wages, keep your plighted word. The word now was to die; and ye did it. Honor to you."

You will recall in the progress of the French revolution, that Louis XVI was deprived of one prerogative after another until he was king in name only. His last residence was the Palace of the Tuilleries.
When that place of refuge was attacked by the armed populace under the leadership of the Paris mob, who were still there, the Swiss Guards of 26 officers and 650 soldiers stood firm. But what was a handful of men against the fury of a mob?
The King fled to the Assembly for protection. He did send a written order—he it said to his credit—to his Swiss protectors to "cease firing." What could avail such an order, even if it had reached them, which it did not?

The King, however, was receiving no happier a lot than his brave Swiss Guards. He reached the Assembly only to be told that the monarchy was abolished and that he was a prisoner.
Just five short months after his faithful hired protectors were murdered, the King, Louis XVI, at 10 o'clock in the morning of Monday, Jan. 21, 1793, mounted the scaffold in the Place de la Revolution, was bound to the executioner's plank; the knife descended; his head slipped away, and all France was thrown into a confusion all but hopeless.
Even to-day, more than a hundred years later, we look back on that tragedy with a feeling of horror. What will our children's children think of the terrible events started in 1814?

An officer of the Swiss Guards, who had escaped before the attack from the Paris mob, when the revolution had spent itself retired to his home in Lucerne. Thirty years later, comparatively quiet, this officer, Gen. Pfyffer von Altshofen, proposed that a memorial be erected to his martyred comrades at arms. He offered the rocks in his garden for a monument.
All Switzerland answered the call, and the Danish sculptor, Albert Thorwaldsen, was solicited to do the work. The sculpture, though far from well, came to Lucerne in 1818. He suggested that instead of bronze figure, the committee had planned a lion be cut from the natural rock that rises sheer from the little lake in the garden. A wide niche, 32 feet by 9 feet high, was marked out on the face of the rock.
Thorwaldsen modelled a colossal lion in plaster, and Lucas Alton copied the model in the native rock under the eye of the master. Thorwaldsen had never seen a live lion. He, therefore, turned to the antique for his inspiration.
The simplicity of conception places the monument among the masterpieces of memorial sculpture. The pain and sorrow on the face of the wounded lion as he still holds the escutcheon of France, typify the sorrow of the Swiss people over the loss of their beloved sons.
As a lion pure and simple, the Lion of Lucerne cannot compare with Barry's "Lion Crushing the Serpent" in the Tuilleries Garden, but as an expression worthy the chivalry's devotion of the true soldier it commands our greatest respect.

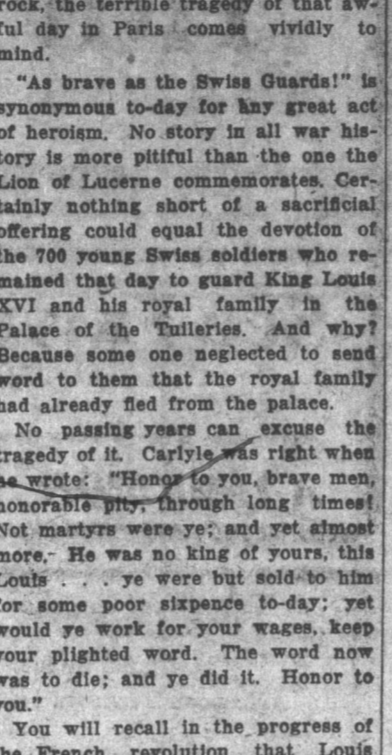

I notice with regret that the lion is becoming weather-worn from its century of exposure to wind and rains. I certainly hope measures are being taken to prevent decay. We might suggest that the same methods be used that is preserving the own great treasure—The Egyptian Obelisk—from wearing away.
Nothing could be a more picturesque setting for the Lion of Lucerne than the little park with its tiny lake overshadowed by great forests trees and towering mountains there in Lucerne.
Scrub potatoes with a stiff brash and cook with the skins on. If you wish to get full nourishment from them.

Justice Given to New State in East Africa

GENEVA.—The realm of Ruanda has come into its own again. The story reveals how the machinery of the League of Nations often turns to mete out justice to almost forgotten peoples. But Ruanda does not think it has passed out of the thought of the world, for it believes in its greatness and the blessedness of its destiny as one of the states of East Africa.
When the "Big Four" sitting at Paris sliced up the map of Europe and fashioned new states out of big empires, they did a little ribbon work with African colonies. One result was to place the native community of Urundi and the "Kingdom of Ruanda" under the mandate of Belgium. Formerly they formed a part of German East Africa. But it was arranged that the northeastern part of Ruanda should pass under British mandate, because England wanted to construct a railroad connecting North and South Africa.
Later it transpired it would have been quite possible to build this line without cutting up Ruanda. Complaints began to be received by the permanent mandate commission of the league. With his kingdom cut in twain, the proud native ruler cried out that his prestige was crumbling. Families owning pasture lands on both sides of the new frontier complained they were unable freely to pass from one territory into the other. Cattle thieving became the vogue. Internal conflicts arose, and Ruanda threatened to be red with blood. French and Swiss missionaries warned the mandate people that conditions were dangerous.
The mandate commission brought the matter to the council of the league, and the whole affair was submitted to the British and Belgian governments. These governments were induced to open direct negotiations, and the result was an agreement rectifying the frontier and reconstituting in its entirety the kingdom of Ruanda under Belgian mandate. All Ruanda is now rejoicing, and civil war has been avoided throughout the land.

WILL BRING NEW ZEPPELIN TO AMERICA.

FRIEDRICHSHAFEN, Germany.—Among the Germans who opposed as impractical the idea of Count Zeppelin, when his dirigible airship plans were announced some 20 years ago, was Dr. Hugo Eckener, now one of the chiefs of the Zeppelin company here which is building the ZR-3 for the United States navy.
According to the present schedule Dr. Eckener, it appears, will act as the pilot of the ZR-3 when the big ship starts her trans-Atlantic flight next spring. He will have under him a German crew of about 24 men; all expert in their respective lines, and including several officers who saw much Zeppelin service during the war.
The Zeppelin company will have the responsibility of delivery of the ship to American officials. As soon as she alights upon American shores the ZR-3 will be turned over formally to Captain G. W. Steele, who is now here, to inspect the ship in the various stages of her construction. Captain Steele was designated by Secretary Denby some months ago as commander of the ZR-3 when she lands in the United States.
Dr. Eckener, tall and dignified, has more the appearance of a college professor than the builder of huge airships. He speaks English, is wrapped up in his work, and smokes an English pipe when off duty outside the Zeppelin sheds.
Dr. Eckener says the task confronting him at the time is to get the ZR-3 ready for the air, and that climatic conditions will bother him but little once the ship is launched. One of the first trips of the ZR-3 will be a flight to Berlin and then back to the sheds here which, after her departure for America, must be demolished in accordance with the terms of the Treaty of Versailles.

INSULIN LABORATORY
AT TORONTO UNIVERSITY AND ITS DISTRIBUTION.

TORONTO, Nov. 23 (Can. Press). Tucked away in an obscure corner of the University of Toronto grounds overshadowed by the new Electrical Engineering building and flanked by a row of venerable elm trees stands a two-story, red brick building formerly occupied by the University Y.M.C.A. A year or two ago it was planned to remove the building as it was not suitable for any University purpose. To-day, housing, as it does, the only "Insulin Laboratory" in Canada, the building, together with the recently installed equipment, is worth upwards of $35,000. The Insulin Laboratory is one of the latest chapters in the romance of insulin. It stands as a confirmation of the success of the research of Dr. F. G. Banting and his fellow-inventor, Charles H. Best, M.A. Its management and operation are in the hands of Mr. Best, who has from the beginning been in charge of the large scale production of insulin. The laboratory is operated as a division of the Connaught Anti-Toxin Laboratories, of which Dr. J. G. Fitzgerald is director and Dr. E. D. Defries associate director. The business administration is in charge of Dr. Fitzgerald and Dr. Defries. Mr. Best is assisted in the new laboratories by D. A. Scott, M.A., an assistant director, and a staff of 26 persons working day and night shifts. The erection of such a completely equipped plant was made possible through the Ontario Government's grant of $25,000, the remaining $10,000 to $15,000 being secured from funds of the laboratory and from private donations. The plant is now producing in the neighborhood of 250,000 units a week for distribution throughout Canada, Ireland, South Africa, Central and South America, New Zealand, Australia, and other countries where plants have not been established. The average dosage for the diabetic patients for whom such a large quantity of insulin is being prepared varies from 15 to 30 units a day. The price for which insulin is distributed is, as with other products of the Connaught Laboratories, governed entirely by

There is a laboratory in which two chemists are employed on research work in connection with insulin. Clean, well-ventilated rooms are provided for the animals used and a small operating room is near at hand. The preparation of insulin is controlled by patents applied for in various countries in the world by the original investigators. These patents have been assigned to the University of Toronto and a committee, appointed by the Board of Governors, is responsible for the administration of patent and other rights and for the promotion of efficient production and distribution of insulin in all countries of the world. The original investigators, Drs. Banting and Best, receive no financial benefit from the patent but desired to prevent the filing of other patents which might restrict the preparation of insulin. In Great Britain complete patent rights have been assigned to the British Medical Research Council, and in the United States an Indianapolis company has been licensed by the University of Toronto to manufacture insulin. The licensing of other firms in the United States is at present under consideration. Rights in all countries except Great Britain have been retained by the University of Toronto. The patents for the insulin have been obtained largely through the efforts of C. H. Richey, a patent lawyer of Toronto, who has given his services to the University without charge. In addition to carrying out his duties as director of the Insulin Laboratory Mr. Best is continuing the fifth year of his course in Medicine, which he interrupted in 1921 to collaborate with Dr. Banting in the researches which led to the discovery of the insulin treatment of diabetes. Agents have already made contracts with manufacturers for next season running into several millions of pounds, and one or two manufacturers of the real, honest value-for-money type of vehicle have been relieved of their entire output for 1924. At the exhibition post office, adjoining the Morris-Cowley stand, a queue of men is constantly waiting to telegraph fresh orders to their works. In the gallery, where the accessories are to be found, salesmen are far from complaining. It is generally found that most purchasers, after spending £300 or £250 on a car have still a few pounds left to spare for rugs, mats, spotlights, mirrors or the hundred and one "gadgets" that make modern motoring a thing of joy.—Daily Mirror.

A Royal "Mystery"

SECRET THAT WAS SHRIEKED FROM THE ROUSTOPS.

(By W. K. L.)

"Weekly Post" Special.

Hist! There is mystery abroad.

It is June, 1791, and Louis XVI, King of France, and the lovely Marie Antoinette are still in their capital city of Paris. Nor may they go elsewhere if they would; a suspicious, hostile and party-frightened populace is everywhere around them, and will not let them go hence. But Hist! all may yet be well if—

III
"For about a year," writes Carlyle, "there has hovered a project of flight before the royal mind. . . . but this or the other family always vapourised it again. It seems so full of risks, above all, it cannot be done without effort."

That explains Louis XVI. Usually, it was even too much of an effort for him to make up his mind. Marie Antoinette often had to do that service for him.

The Marquis de Bouille, a royalist French soldier in command of certain troops (including foreign mercenaries) that might be relied upon, "is making a fortified camp at Montmedy, gathering Royal-Allemand and all manner of other German and true French troops together." And why? "To watch the Austrians." It is gravely announced. One does not shout a secret from the rooftops. No!

But Hist! With the aid of the Swedish Count Ferson (and others) the King and his family are by night to the brave but distant Bouille, "to whom, on the day of meeting, a Marshal's baton shall be delivered by a rescued King, amid the shouting of all the troops."

The magnificent Alexandre Dumas in all his glory could not have conceived a more dazzling project; the talented Mr. Charles Chaplin and all his comedians could not have staged a greater whirlwind of tulle than turned out to be—alas!

But, again, Hist!

A Queen's Whims.

"Now clothes were needed," explains the sardonic Carlyle, "as usual in all epic transactions. . . . There is a clipping of frocks and gowns, upper clothes and under; such a clipping and sewing as might have been dispensed with. Moreover, her Majesty cannot go a step anywhere without her necessary of inland ivory and rosewood, which holds perfumes, toilettes, implements, infinite small gilded furniture necessary to terrestrial life. . . . All which, you would say, augurs ill for the prospering of the enterprise. . . . But the whims of women and queens must be honoured."

"Count Ferson does seem a likely young soldier," we read later; "he circulates widely, seen, unseen; and has business on hand. . . . Ferson has got a stupendous new coach built of the kind named Berline."

"That fatal, ponderous Berline. . . . Eleven o'clock, Monday night, on the 20th of June, 1791, a coach stands in a side street by the Tuilleries. . . . hooded dame with two hooded children comes stealthily along and nips into the coach. We wait awhile and then another hooded dame arrives, and enters the coach. Now let us fly!

But the coach still waits. By and by, a thick-set individual also arrives, and cautiously smuggles himself into the coach. Now, are we ready? Not yet!

The coach still waits. The thick-set individual is the King; we yet await the Queen. In leaving the side door of the palace, she turned to the right instead of to the left. . . . Neither she nor her courier knows Paris; he, indeed, is no courier but a loyal stupid bodyguard disguised as one. They are off, quite wrong, roaming disconsolately. . . . far from the coachman who still waits."

"Flight."
At long last, the lost ones return, join the coach, and away we go. On! On! quick as the wind, and quiet! the action; but, for heaven's sake, On!

"The new Berline. Huge leather vehicle. . . . It lumbers along, lurching with stress, at a snail's pace; noted of all the world. The bodyguard couriers, in their yellow liveries, go prancing and clattering; loyal but stupid; unacquainted with all things. Stoppages occur, and break-ages to be repaired. With eleven horses, and all the furthurances of nature and art, it will be found that Royalty, flying for life, accomplishes sixty-nine miles in twenty-two incessant hours. Slow Royalty!"

Three miles an hour.
But Hist!

At various points on the road ahead, perplexed military escorts, constantly awaiting them, hour after hour, "it is four hours after the time, and still no Berline!" As equally perplexed, but not equally royalist, populace gapes at this unusual military activity. Thus is the secret preserved inviolate.

"It was of his Majesty's ordering, this military array of escorts, a thing soiling the Royal imagination with a look of severity and respect, yet, in reality, creating only where there was otherwise no danger, danger without end."

Jean Baptiste, At the village of Sainte-Menehould lives one Jean-Baptiste Drouet, "an acrid and choleric man." Already waiting of the anxious, badgered, and wailing escort, he becomes convinced when the prancing yellow bodyguard finally spurs into sight, along with the great lumbering Berline. But wait! We may not get Hist!ly. One must make absolutely certain.

He follows in pursuit. We have no space here to include the amazing chapter of accidents and mischances that befall the various local bodies of awaiting escorts. The hunt is up; the countryside suspicious. Suffice it that these willing troops get into a frightful mix-up, and are of no avail to the hurried fugitives.

On! On! to Varennes, where young Bouille, own son to the gallant Marquis, awaits us; and rescue is assured. Ha! Varennes at last; our troubles are over. But where is young Bouille?

He is not to be found. "It is six hours beyond the time," says Carlyle, "young Bouille, silly strippling, thinking the matter over for this night, has retired to bed, and so our yellow couriers, inexperienced, must rove, groping, humping, through a village mostly asleep."

But quickly awakened. Arrives the acrid, choleric Drouet, who whispers a few thrilling words to the village Procureur. The Berline is stopped by hostile National Guards (citizen soldiers of the Revolution).

"Your passports!" No avail. The respected "travelling party" must "please rest here in the village of Varennes till the dawn. A-d help, rescue, lie, and life, is just across the bridge there—waiting!

Here Carlyle lashes out.

Burgundy, And—

"O Louis," says he, "O hapless Marie Antoinette, fated to pass thy life with such men. Phlegmatic Louis, art thou but a lazy semi-animate phlegm; then, to the centre of thee? King, Captain-General, Sovereign Frank! if thy heart ever former since it began beating under the name of a heart, any resolution at all, be it now then, or never in this world!"

Alas! it was in him.

They walk to the Procureur's house "mount into his small upper story, where straightway his Majesty demands refreshments. . . . gets bread and cheese with a bottle of Burgundy; and remarks that it is the best Burgundy he ever drank!" So ended the famous and futile flight to Varennes. So began a new chapter in the history of France, written in bright red ink, by a new author. His name? Dr. Gullioth!

Fawnette and Tesori Make Their Biggest Hit

These popular artists at the popular Star Movie last evening registered their biggest hit for their entire repertoire, and the applause that greeted them was fully appreciated by those people. When it is considered that Miss Fawnette performed with a bandaged leg her work was nothing less than marvelous, whilst Mr. Tesori was, as he has been, highly pleasing in his classy selections. In their rendition of "Oh Gee, Oh Gosh, Oh Golly," they give an interpretation of both dancing and acrobatic feats, which seldom, if ever, has been seen in this city, and at both performances were obliged to respond to encores. They will repeat those numbers this evening, and all who can should make an effort to see them. The feature picture "Trifling with Honor," was followed with the keenest of interest from beginning to end. For Wednesday there is a complete change of program, with Agnes Ayres, in "The Lane that has no Turning," whilst for Friday the best episode of the "Leather Pushers" will be given, and which is to three reels, and the famous Harold Lloyd will be featured in a super comedy in five reels entitled "A Sailor Made Man."

Sunflower Seeds a Valuable Crop in Three Western States

WASHINGTON—Sunflower seeds, 14,000,000 pounds of them, worth almost three-quarters of a million dollars. That is this year's crop of the three important producing states, Missouri, Illinois and California, according to the Department of Agriculture.

The yield this year is about 4,000,000 pounds more than last year. From four to six million pounds are imported annually, principally from Holland, Argentina and Russia.

"The poor man's peanuts" are what sunflower seeds are called in some sections. In New York many Russians buy and roast them to eat. They are used principally, though, in poultry feed mixtures and for parrot feed.

Kansas, the "Sunflower State," produces practically no sunflower seeds for commercial use but in the three principal producing States they are considered a profitable crop as about 500 pounds per acre can be produced and sold for around $4 per 100 pounds.

Your Own Pearls

Are the finest—pearly teeth Millions find them by combating film

No pearls which hang about the neck compare with pretty teeth. Don't leave them coated by a dingy film.

Look about you. Note how countless teeth now gleam. Mark what they add to beauty and to charm. Then make this test and learn how people get them.

The cloud is film. You feel on your teeth a viscous film. Under old-way brushing, much of it clings and stays. Soon it becomes discolored, then forms dingy coats. That is why so many teeth lose luster.

Film also holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Thus film is the greatest enemy of tooth beauty and tooth health.

Dental science, after long research, found ways to combat that film. One disintegrates the film, the other removes it without harmful scouring.

ABLE authorities proved that Pepsodent is effective. Then a new type tooth paste was created to apply them daily. The name is Pepsodent.

To the careful, dainty people of some 50 nations, this method has brought a new dental era.

Some sad mistakes Research also proved that soapy tooth pastes had brought undesirable results. They reduced the alkalinity of the saliva, reduced its starch digestant. Pepsodent brings just opposite results. It multiplies the alkalinity, multiplies the starch digestant. And they are Nature's agents for fighting acid and tartar deposits.

Watch for 10 days Watch for ten days the Pepsodent effects. They will amaze and delight you. They will convince you that all in your family should get them every day.

Send the coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth become whiter as the film-coats disappear.

It will be a revelation to you. Cut out coupon now.

Protect the Enamel Pepsodent disintegrates the film, then removes it with an agent far softer than enamel. Never use a film comb that which contains harsh grit.

KID NORFOLK GETS DECISION OVER BATTING SIKI IN FIFTEEN SLASHING ROUNDS. SENEGALISE BADLY PUNISHED.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Kid Norfolk, Harlem Negro, to-night received the judges' decision over Battling Siki, Senegalese conqueror of Georges Carpentier, in a slashing spectacular 15-round bout at Madison Square Garden. Siki proved a wild, free-swinging batter but he was badly punished by Norfolk's relentless attacks.

Siki wearing green tights, started the first round with a spectacular rush but his blows were wild, while Norfolk landed several stiff jolts to the head and body. Siki drove Norfolk to the ropes in the second round with a savage attack that stirred the crowd to an uproar. Norfolk drew blood from the batter's nose but took a shower of rights and lefts to the head. Siki set a fast pace in the third, rocking Norfolk with two terrific swings to the jaw. Norfolk's jaws kept blood flowing from Siki's nose. Norfolk opened a cut over Siki's left eye in the fourth and battered the Senegalese about the head. Siki's face was a crimson smear as the bell rang. Siki connected with two wild swings in the fifth that sent Norfolk staggering back but during most of the round the Kid beat a steady tattoo on his opponent's head. Norfolk sent Siki half way across the ring in the sixth but the batter came back and exchanged stiff jolts with the Kid as the round ended.

Siki withstood a battery of rights and lefts to the head in the seventh. He seemed to be weakening under the punishment but, occasionally, flashed a furious attack that slowed up Norfolk. Siki staggered Norfolk with a couple of smashing rights in the eighth, once driving the Kid to the ropes; they battled in rough and tumble fashion at close quarters.

Siki landed a terrific left at the start of the ninth and punished Siki with a left jab; both slowed their pace but the batter retained his smile as he went to his corner. Siki was rocky under a battering attack to the head in the tenth, blood streaming from cuts on his eye, nose and lip. He made several returns to Norfolk's attacks.

Norfolk had Siki in distress in the eleventh, lashing the batter with right and left hooks. Siki stood unshakably under the punishment and lunged out wildly in return but his blows seldom found their mark. Twice Norfolk's blows seemed low and he was cautioned. Siki was battered around the ring in the twelfth but managed to knock some of the Kid's blows and hung on.

Siki staged a savage comeback for a few minutes in the thirteenth until checked with a left to the jaw. Most of his punches, however, rattled harmlessly off Norfolk's rugged jaw. Siki landed two smashing lefts in the fourteenth but took a battery of rights and lefts in return.

Siki started a wild rush in the final round and rocked Norfolk with a succession of smashing lefts to the chin. Both missed wild blows and Norfolk rushed Siki to the ropes battering him about the jaw. Siki tried hard to connect with a wild swing but the Kid ducked away and came back with a smash to the head. Norfolk jolted Siki on the chin as the final bell sounded.

MILLERAND SEEKS NEW DUTIES.
FARIS—M. Millerand president of France, wants the duties of his office increased. He is an active and a prodigious worker, and his present duties, restricted mainly to receiving official visits, inaugurating movements, laying corner stones, welcoming ### heavyweight-championship in 1922, has died in Copenhagen following a contest.

He was a member of the English team which met a team of Danish boxers, and had been sent down twice for counts of nine in the third round before he was knocked out.

A doctor at the ringside examined him, and stated he was suffering from slight concussion. He was taken to hospital and died shortly after being admitted.

HAS BROUGHT FRUIT.

The fact that Dempsey stood directly over Firpo during the several times he was on the floor in their recent bout has resulted in the New York Boxing Commission adopting a rule requiring publicists who have felled opponents to retire to a neutral corner while the referee lolls off the count. The rule provides that counting shall not be started until the knockdown has moved away from his fallen opponent.

The rule has been on the books since the days of the London prize ring rules, that a contestant who has knocked down his opponent must immediately walk to his own corner. Through a matter of custom of boxers being allowed to practically stand over their opponent, the rule has been ignored as though it were not on the books. The action of the New York Boxing Commission in reviving the rule should be followed everywhere.

This is an average speed of 186 miles an hour.

FRANK GODDARD IS ENGLISH CHAMPION.

Won Decision When Jack Bloomfield Fought Him in Bout For Title Formerly Held by Beckett.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—Frank Goddard to-night became heavyweight champion of Great Britain when he was fouled in the second round by Jack Bloomfield, who hit Goddard while the latter was down.

The men were to have fought twenty rounds for the title, held until recently by Joe Beckett, who retired from the ring following his sensational defeat at Olympia by Georges Carpentier, who knocked him out in the first round. To-night's fight was held in Albert Hall. Bloomfield, who was disqualified, held the light heavyweight championship of Great Britain.

In the first round Goddard took the aggressive and endeavored with his right to land a knockout blow. Bloomfield, however, was too elusive for his opponent. In the second round Goddard again rushed, but Bloomfield measured him neatly with a hard right, and Goddard went to the floor. He stayed down only momentarily, however, and when he rose made another rush toward his adversary, only to be sent to the canvas with another hard right. This time he stayed down for a longer count and when attempting to rise was struck by Bloomfield. The referee immediately disqualified the light heavyweight champion, and Goddard thereby succeeded to the heavyweight crown laid aside by Beckett.

Merchants Consider Raising Own Force to Thwart Robbers

RECENT CRIMES IMPEL ACTION BY ASSOCIATION—WILL CONFER WITH CHIEF OF POLICE BELANGER—PROPOSE ARMING THE GUARDSMEN WITH WINCHESTER REPEATING RIFLES.

Drastic measures to smash the criminal gang operating in the downtown business sections, involving armed guards and the expenditure of substantial sums of money are being actively planned by the Merchants of Montreal.

The crime wave which has swept the city during the past two weeks resulting in two major payroll robberies, a series of smaller outrages and one $200,000 fire has impressed the necessity for immediate protective action with the result that a series of conferences between officials of the Merchants' Association and Chief of Police Belanger will be held during the week.

Two Guardsmen.

The merchants of St. Paul Street West, between St. Lawrence boulevard and McGill, taking the initiative, originally planned to co-operate with the civic police to the extent of securing the services of two guardsmen for duty during the night hours, but the sudden increase in the number of hold-ups and burglaries, pointing to the increasing gravity of the situation made an expansion of these plans necessary. Yesterday the St. Paul Street Merchants, in conjunction with the Merchants' Association, arranged to enlist a minimum of six men, with a provision for doubling the number, in order to secure a maximum or safety for their businesses. It is estimated that the move will cost the St. Paul Street merchants affected, at least $1,000 a month, but the premium on doing business in the area of crime is not considered excessive.

Although arrangements have not yet been completed it is understood that the movement will spread to include the other firms situated in the downtown area and that a merchants' special protective police force will soon be a reality. The estimate as to the cost of this business firm in the event of this plan reaching fruition will, it is expected, be in the neighbourhood of $30 a month.

While the Merchants' Association is not acting in co-operation with the Montreal Board of Trade or the Montreal branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' in the prospective movement, it is understood that the plan has the sympathetic support of both these powerful business bodies, the members of which appreciate that the activities of the criminals must be stopped in the immediate future.

At the conference with Chief of Police Belanger two main points, it is understood, will be under consideration. First the general protective scheme, and secondly the augmentation of the Montreal police force to a strength where, during crisis such as the present, it could supply snarls to payroll messengers and to men engaged in the transportation of the large sums through the city streets. The protective move, it is explained, was entirely in co-operation with the civic police. Officials of the Mer-

chanta's Association emphasized the fact that Montreal and New York ranked as the two most difficult cities in America to police.

Escape Detection.

Criminals, it was stated, were better able to escape detection in Montreal than in any other city in Canada because of the diversity of the population. The metropolitan types of practically every race in the world and keeping criminals separated from the respectable sections of the community presents a tremendously difficult task.

The armed guards, supported by the Merchants' Association, will, it was said, be supplied with Winchester repeating rifles, and will be sworn in as constables in order to provide them with the necessary authority.

The robbery of the Walter Lowrey and Co. payroll on Saturday morning, which netted the hold-up men approximately $9,000, and the attack on the cashier of the Daves Brewery Co. on November 15th, resulting in a similar loss have, merchants consider, supplied sufficient evidence of the need of the protective measures they propose.—Montreal Star, Nov. 20.

Somewhat Premature.

The following article taken from the Toronto Bureau Mail Service is a deplorable confession of ignorance of Geography, or it is a presupposition which there is nothing, so far as we know, to warrant Rumors have been in circulation recently regarding the disposal of Labrador, but until the question of ownership is definitely settled by the Privy Council, or a bargain satisfactory to us has been struck with the Dominion Government, we are the possessors; possession is nine points of the law, and not even the tenth has been or is likely to be submitted to the learned Doctor for an opinion.

OTTAWA, Ont.—(Canadian Press)—Thirty-one of the best years of his life Dr. Wilfrid Grenfell has given Labrador, and in the course of an address here recently he observed that he saw few possibilities in the country every day. Why should so frozen a region not be abandoned, people asked. His reply was, why should it? Canada had not made a bid for Alaska years ago, and as a result had lost a precious heritage. Britain would have taken Greenland for Canada at one time. Canada had the Labrador now, thousands of square miles, some of it unopened by a white man, with untapped waters waiting for the day of wireless transmission of electricity, extensive forests, great fisheries and the prospect of great industries. Unfortunately as reindeer experiments had proven, this was no cause for discouragement, and if present work out there would be a profitable reindeer industry in the country.

The Encouragement of Shipping.

We referred some time ago to the necessity for providing better facilities to meet the requirements of ships visiting St. John's and to scrutinize our port charges in order to ascertain whether they were excessive or not. In this connection, the experience of Bristol, with which the past history of Newfoundland is so closely interwoven, is interesting and illuminating. The latest annual report of its shipping shows that the register tonnage was the largest recorded in the commercial history of the port. In 1922-23 the balance carried to net revenue showed an increase of over $20,000, and the decrease in what is known as the rate-in-aid represented a relief to the taxpayers of a penny in the pound.

matter of improving Australian Commerce. That the conditions affecting shipping in St. John's should be made more attractive is undeniable; the question is to what extent we can improve them. This port was naturally intended to be the haven of refuge for disabled ships in the Atlantic, and if we would but combine business acumen with the geographical advantages which we possess, the various trades employed along the waterfront would be materially benefited, and freight and passenger rates would automatically decrease.

Our Public Message Service.

The following is taken from the Halifax Chronicle of the 22nd inst: "Mr. Frank Hodges, British Labor leader who recently toured Canada, is contesting the Lichfield Division of Staffordshire, in the British election."

LONDON, Nov. 26. "Frank Hodges, the Secretary of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain, is standing for Parliament in this election for the first time. He says he is concentrating his efforts on Nationalisation of the Mines, because Trade Unionists had exhausted all possibilities of getting uniformity in the coal industry, which was essential to both owners and miners. A short time ago we had a similar instance of this kind, when a news item taken from an English periodical corresponded with the cabled message for the day. Whatever restrictions may be imposed by the Government on the News Service, we are unaware that a censorship over such important (?) messages as the above is enforced, nor does it appear that our cables are kept so busily engaged as to necessitate a delay of nearly two days in transmitting a message.

B.I.S. Dance Season Opens Wednesday.

The first dance under the auspices of the B.I.S. Ladies' Auxiliary takes place in the club rooms to-morrow night. Already a large number of young folks have signified their intention of following the B.I.S. dance this season as they proved very enjoyable in the past. The Princess Orchestra has arranged a programme of dance music which will be heard for the first time to-morrow night. The ladies will serve appetizing teas and everything to make the affair a success has been considered by the Committee. Popular prizes will be charged, the admission fee being collected at the door. SUMMER WEATHER.—The climax to a period of exceptionally mild weather was reached to-day when the thermometer registered 60 degrees.

Star of the Sea Association.

PAST PRESIDENT JAS. T. MARTIN HONOURED. The monthly meeting of the Star of the Sea Association was held Sunday at 2.30 p.m., President W. H. Jackman presiding. Eleven applicants were enrolled. The first meeting under the direction of the newly appointed President Jackman and officers proved very interesting. Several matters of importance to the Association were discussed. An amusement committee was formed to assist the Ladies' Association, and an elaborate programme for the coming season outlined. A pleasing incident of the meeting was the appointment of Past President Jas. T. Martin as Honorary President of the Association. This well merited honour comes to Mr. Martin after nine years of unexcelled service during a critical period in the Association's history, and the Star of the Sea Association highly appreciate the magnificent services of the recipient.

Judging by the large number of tickets already disposed of, it is anticipated that over 150 couple will be present. The catering which consists of a hot turkey supper, will be supplied by the Ladies Auxiliary. A Scotch concert which gives promise of being highly interesting will open the proceedings at 8 o'clock. Lloyd George In His Element.

BALDWIN OUTLINES HIS POLICY.

LONDON, Nov. 27. Lloyd George's gift for apt phrases and political catch words is serving the reunited Liberal Party well while his extraordinary energy in campaigning shows not the slightest diminution. Speaking at Edinburgh to-day he alluded to Premier Baldwin's prediction on Saturday that the people will win. "That," said Mr. Lloyd George, "is not his confidence. The Premier's hope is that the people will be beaten by the triangular contest. His song of victory is played on a triangle." This was an allusion to the fact that there will be two hundred or more such three-cornered contests. Curiously enough the candidates formally nominated to-day numbered almost exactly the same as those nominated for the last general election, namely 1442, distributed as follows: Conservatives, 528; Liberals, 456; Laborites, 435; Conservative Free Traders and Independents, 15; the Independents including two Communists and one Prohibitionist. Possibly owing to the failure of most of the women candidates to win in the last general elections, when only three out of a dozen more women were nominated to-day than last November. Premier Baldwin in a speech at Bristol to-day repeated that he would have nothing to do with an inflationist policy, and defending his tariff policy said, "we know how many industries depend upon partly manufactured goods and raw materials. We shall take no step without consultation with those industries. If any monopolies result they will be at home and we can deal with them."

SPECIAL SQUADRON STARTS TO-DAY FOR WORLD CRUISE.

PLYMOUTH, Eng., Nov. 27. The special service squadron under command of Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick Field sails to-day for the three hundred and seven days round the world cruise which will take the vessels to the British Dominions, United States, and South America. The ships comprising the squadron are battle cruisers Hood and Repulse, and light cruisers Delhi, Dauntless, Dragon and Dana. The itinerary is briefly Sierra Leone, Cape Town where the squadron will spend Xmas, India, Singapore, Australia, Honolulu, At Whitsunday, Esquimaux and Vancouver and San Francisco for July the fourth. The Hood and Repulse will pass through the Panama Canal on the start home while the light cruisers will go to Callao, Peru.

DR. ALBERT UNABLE AS YET TO ASSUME CHANCELLORSHIP.

BERLIN, Nov. 27. Dr. Heinrich F. Albert up to a late hour last night had not officially accepted the rank of seventeenth Chancellor of Germany. Objectivist tactics by the Reichstag leaders have so far prevented him from winning over sufficient support and available candidates for cabinet posts to warrant his appearance in an official capacity before Reichstag, or otherwise vouchsafe him Reichstag's tolerance as he had none of the tolerance of the political ministry. (Dr. Heinrich Albert is a non-partisan who was associated with Count Von Bernstorff when Bernstorff was Ambassador in Washington. Dr. Albert was German fiscal agent in the United States and later became Secretary of the Chancellery and Secretary of the Treasury under Chancellor Cuno.—Ed.)

U.S.A. TAKING NO FURTHER ACTION NOW TO COLLECT WAR DEBTS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27. There is no immediate prospect of further action by the United States Debt Commission looking to the collection of war loans to foreign countries, a high official of the Treasury said last night. A renewed demand upon France, he said, would be hard to justify at this time when that government faced unusual charges against her income and any such demand might easily be considered as an unfriendly act.

Magistrate's Court.

A German sailor from board the Danish schooner Pak, was arrested at Port Blandford by Sgt. Nugent and a posse of police, arrived by yesterday's express. Owing to the Crown not being ready to proceed the case was postponed for eight days. In the meantime the defendant's were not asked to plead, but were required to furnish a substantial bond before being liberated.

Shipping.

S.S. Earl of Devon left Little Bay Islands last midnight, coming south. The tern schr. Flowerdew has left Philadelphia for this port with a load of hard coal. Schr. Roy Bruce, Capt. R. Hollett, arrived at Seville on Saturday after a run of 22 days from St. John's. S.S. Rosalind will probably sail on Wednesday evening or Thursday morning for Halifax. S.S. Jan leaves Charlottetown to-day for here, via Halifax. The ship, it is stated, is due here on Dec. 3rd. Schr. Vignetta is loading at Rameau for Halifax by Penny & Sons. Schr. Astraxa has entered at Little Bay Islands to load fish for Malaga. S.S. Watuska sailed from Hearst's Content at 10 a.m. to-day for Sydney. Schr. Poseidon has sailed from Marytown for Oporto, taking 2,968 qtls. codfish shipped by Jas. Baird, Ltd. S.S. Canadian Coaster sailed from Montreal on Sunday and is here here on Thursday. S.S. Canadian Sapper sails from Charlottetown on Dec. 3rd for St. John's direct.

Pulp Wood and Pit Props

District Inspector Peet and a number of police are now at Port Blandford in connection with a report that pulp wood had been unlawfully taken from the place by men in schooners. As far as can be learned the authorities here were advised that some 14 or 15 schooners were in Clyde Sound and it was thought apparent intention to load them with pit props or pulp wood. When the police arrived the fleet, it appears, made off. Three masters of vessels from Safe Harbor and Newtown, which were at anchor about a mile outside of Port Blandford, were placed under arrest. They were brought to the city last evening, and appeared in court this morning. For more than twelve months past the authorities have been taking action in reference to the stealing of pit props and pulp wood, and at present some serious matters in this connection are sub judice.

C.M.B.C.L.A. Debate

PARIS, Nov. 27. Owing to the fact that Sir John Bradbury, the British delegate has been detained in London, the session of the Reparations Commission to-morrow will be devoted to routine business. The examination into the financial and economic situation of Germany, and the motion providing for creation of the experts committee to examine into Germany's capacity to pay are expected to be taken up on Friday.

COASTAL BOATS DETAINED

A heavy wind-storm with raging sea swept over the West Coast as far as Port aux Basques yesterday and last night. The Kyle was detained at the Western terminus for several hours, and did not get away for North Sydney until 3 o'clock this morning. The Argyle and Gloucester were compelled to remain at Argentina until the storm abated sufficiently to enable them to sail on their regular routes at 10 a.m. The Meigle, which ship is engaged freighting between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, must have received a severe drubbing while on her way to the former port yesterday. The Meigle after loading at North Sydney will come direct to Argentina, and after unloading her freight, will take up the Gloucester's route on the West Coast.

Alberta Falls off the Water Waggon

The reasons assigned by prohibition newspapers for the complete reversal of public opinion in Alberta as indicated by the referendum of the fifth instant are to say the least weird.

There is no ground for the supposition that Canadians and settlers from the United States gave any whole-hearted support to the prohibition plank in the recent referendum.

With Alberta in the "wet" column this leaves only Saskatchewan on the water wagon between the Great Lakes and the Pacific Ocean, and it is not too much to expect that the latter Province will join the "wet" group.

Clause D of the referendum which carried by such a large majority in Alberta calls for sale of all liquors through Government vendors on the permit system in limited quantities.

Santa Barbara Skull Another Link in Progress of Man

(By JACK JUNGMEYER.) SANTA BARBARA, Calif.—Timing his posthumous reappearance to jibe with efforts in several states to squelch the teaching of human evolution, the "Santa Barbara Man" emerges from his 25,000-year sleep to level a stone-eyed challenge to those disputants.

John P. Harrington, Smithsonian archeologist, unearthed him here a few days since, buried from time immemorial under what was recently the courtyard of a fashionable hotel. About all that is preserved of "Homo Barbarensis" is his thick, low-browed and prognathous-jawed skull.

Indian Progenitor? Considered the most magnificent archeological find of years, the skull is said to be another of those "missing links" long sought and occasionally accidentally found to bolster the theory of man's transmutation from beast.

Pending more careful study, this primitive is believed to be the progenitor of the American Indian and the cousin of those races which roamed the glacial steppes of Europe when the world was young.

And so that Mr. Barbarensis, greatest of American grandfathers, may not have to bear alone the scrutiny of scientists and the eventual curious gaze of the world's young folk, his wife has come out of the crypt with him.

Her skull lay beside his, differing just enough to be pronounced female by the exhumers. Her jaws remain open, widely distended, as if to forewarn her mate from the terror which may have laid them down to become the riddle of another age.

Both skulls are extraordinarily heavy—nearly twice as thick of cranium as the present-day man. In profile, they show no forehead whatever.

The slope from frontal bone to the back of the head is more pronounced than that in the famous relic of the Neanderthal man who is asserted to have lived in Europe more than 25,000 years ago.

The upper jaw juts from beneath the nose at an angle seen to-day only in the apes. But the teeth, fat and square like those of a cow, prove their owners humans, though far down the transitional scale, according to Harrington.

Not Apes. The Santa Barbara pair were short and squat, presumably feeding largely on seeds and herbs that needed vigorous grinding.

They came somewhere between the two of a "sub-man"—a link apparently between the father of the American Indian and the early human beings of the European Continent, for which the scientists have long been searching.

The life of Mr. and Mrs. Barbarensis was the precarious existence of Stone Age folk in the red dawn of the race. Prowling the coastal beaches with them were fierce carnivora, notably the saber-tooth tiger, who also left his remains in the La Brea pits near Los Angeles.

Over the eastern horizon hung the fiery glow of volcanoes. Even in those days southern California, as its boosters might boast, was nice and warm, while much of the world was shivering in glacial rigor.

But the climate which nurtured its early human beings also brought hordes of predatory beasts. A man had to be thick skulled to survive.

Haled forth from beneath their tombstone of marine reef rock, these phantoms of remote time will compel a modification of H. G. Wells' assertion in his "Outline" that "Man was fully man when he entered America. But the old world was the nursery of the sub-races of mankind."

For they are, apparently, as valid ethnological foundation as the fragmentary evidence from which prehistoric life in Europe has been reconstructed.

It is quite easy to understand a yearly collection such as we have been in the habit of tendering is all but a small tax on those who have benefited so much from the untiring care and admirable educational training that the brothers have given them. So it is that the old boys do not feel a bit reluctant in coming forward on the occasion of the annual collection and yielding up generously the few shillings they feel they owe to tender. Up to a few years ago the annual collection had been increasing a steady increase, caused by the contributions from those exiles who had been gradually accumulating their earnings and by the additional number of boys yearly going out into the working world.

Remember the Cause

The one day of the year which is of special significance to the thousands of scholars who have passed out of the class rooms at St. Patrick's Hall at Holy Cross is near again, and that day is Sunday next when the annual collection on behalf of the Christian Brothers at Mount St. Francis will again be taken up.

It is an offering that is freely and cheerfully made and that is fully recognized it is but a just though not so generous as many of them would desire it were the sum available to make it so. Since the Christian Brothers sent their representatives here to impart their excellent system of education mainly to the boys of our Roman Catholic diocese they have accomplished a noble and a glorious record of good and faithful service.

ARE THE BRITISH CARS MADE SUFFICIENTLY POPULAR? (By R. P. HEARNE).

Here is an analysis of cars at the Olympia Show: British 56 per cent.; French, 22; American, 13; Italian, 6; Belgian 2; Dutch 1.

Many visitors to the Motor Show, when they see the above figures, will ask themselves, "Why so many foreign cars? What is the motor manufacturer doing to let his home market be invaded to this extent?" The subject is very interesting, but is complex.

Our first cars were imported from Germany and France, and for many years we suffered from restrictive and antiquated legislation, whilst in France the Government did everything to develop the motor.

Handicapped thus, the British motor industry was slow in getting into its stride. But, despite this, we have now the largest motor industry in the world after the United States, and, barring America, we have the most important market.

The American Continent, of course, has made all the other producers of countries look small by reason of colossal output, to meet the demand.

As it is, the European market is cut up between a number of competitors, and the war has left us impoverished and with a relatively small number of potential buyers as compared with America. In the States one person in eight owns a car. In Great Britain one person in a hundred owns a car, and for the rest of Europe the figure is very much lower.

All the more reason, then, you will say, for keeping the foreign car out of your own market.

The American Market.

Well, there is 23 1-3 per cent. tariff against foreign cars coming into England, but the barrier is surmounted by a goodly number. In addition there are cars of American origin now made in Canada; and furthermore there are a great many Ford and other cars built up in England from imported cars.

Nothing short of prohibition would keep out all foreign cars. America now has the Rolls-Royce factory; and other British cars could get into America if the Americans wanted them. But the Americans are very well provided with their own cars; and mass production brings about prices that no British manufacturer could compete against.

A good deal of the foreign competition is in cheap cars. The Americans can compete on account of mass production for their gigantic home market; the French and Italians are helped by the rate of exchange, and by the fact that in the last few years, instead of paying away money in dollars, they have re-organized and equipped many of their industries, and set them going vigorously.

Foreign competition is good up to a certain point. It is disquieting, however, to learn that nearly half the cars sold on the British market are of foreign origin. Both at home and abroad the British car should do better.

The best and biggest market in the world is America. If the British trade made a bold bid for it they could capture a big slice of American trade with our high efficiency cars, just as Rolls-Royce have done.—Daily Mirror.

Gone by Default

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—(By Can. Press)—After seventy-one years of controversy, involving appeals to Congress and legislation, the Supreme Court has decided that William E. Woodbridge, deceased, had abandoned his invention for firing projectiles from rifled cannon, and that his estate was not entitled to any compensation from the government for its use. Woodbridge, in 1852, filed his application in the Patent Office, and his claims were allowed, but it was not until December, 1861, that he sought to have the patent issued. The Supreme Court ruled that this delay nullified Woodbridge's rights.

Says Careful Diet Should Accompany Insulin Treatment

New York, Nov. 25.—In an article in the current issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, Dr. Frederick M. Allen, director of the Physiatric Institute, Morristown, N.J., gives an authoritative review of the treatment of diabetes with insulin, based on its use at the institute for a period of more than a year, or since the discovery of insulin by Dr. Frederick G. Banting and his associates. The impression has gained much headway with the public during the past year, according to Dr. Allen, that insulin is a cure for diabetes and that regulation of diet is not necessary. This is far from the truth. The use of insulin without a regulated diet is a dangerous error. Continuing Dr. Allen writes: "The purpose of insulin treatment is to improve the nutrition of patients with severe diabetes and to add a safeguard against downward progress. Mild cases, which can be kept symptom-free on adequate diets, ordinarily do not require insulin. Insulin does not offer a cure of diabetes or a license for carelessness."

"The insulin treatment should be carried out in conjunction with accurate diet under laboratory control to assure that patients remain sugar-free. It involves the inconvenience of frequent subcutaneous injections, and other disadvantages, does not simplify diabetic treatment or justify careless methods; and is not the final step in diabetic research. Nevertheless, the discovery of Dr. Banting and his associates in the first replacement of nature by positive therapy in diabetes. It affords the possibility of regulating emaciation, progressiveness, acidosis, and most of the disabilities and fatalities of diabetes to the past. It therefore stands as one of the greatest achievements of medicine for the relief of human suffering. Its theoretical and indirect consequences may ultimately outweigh the immediate and practical ones."

"Insulin must nearly always be injected by the patient or some member of the household, since the physician can seldom spare the time, and few persons can afford the continuous service of a nurse. Patients have experienced no difficulty in learning the hypodermic technique, and, somewhat to our surprise, not a single one, ever among the ignorant, has refused an abscess. The frequency of the injections, which at first, thought seems formidable, has likewise proved compatible with the living and working habits of all patients, and is a trivial price to pay for the improvement of health."

"Hypoglycemia (loss of sugar in the blood) is ordinarily emphasized as the chief danger and the reason for allowing more or less glycosuria (presence of sugar in the blood); but properly prepared patients can readily avoid both these extremes. As one takes a little orange juice or sugar if they ever experience the warning symptoms of weakness, tremulousness and perspiration. We instruct every patient to carry a one-ounce package of powdered glucose for emergency purposes. This is convenient, and less of a temptation than candy or other food."

"Now that there is an abundant supply of insulin and sufficient experience in its use, we find two to four weeks to be about the average duration of institutional treatment required for uncomplicated cases. This institutional care, comprising the study of the individual needs of diet and dosage and the training of the patient in both these phases, is somewhat more important with insulin than under the former treatment by diet alone."

The Old Order Changeth

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—(By Canadian Press)—Declaring that "the downtrodden man is having his inning in New York," the Wall Street Journal says: "We know of the bricklayer who wears a top hat at work, and everybody in the building trade had his lanned music, wireless and automobiles. Now we learn of a $180 a week plasterer, who has bought his wife a $800 seal coat at a leading Fifth Ave. department store. "Now we know why it is fashionable for those who form the so-called upper-crust of society to sport their old clothes."

High or Low?

New York, Nov. 25. (By Canadian Press)—Samuel Miller, hawking German marks at 10,000 for 1 cent, was fined the equivalent of 15,000,000 marks recently by Magistrate Oberwieser in Essex Market Court, when it appeared Miller did not have a license to plunge in German high finance.

Tar Sands for Pavements

Great interest was attached to the experiments carried on during the Edmonton Exhibition to establish the feasibility of the tar sands for road-making purposes. At the exhibition grounds a strip of pavement was laid, the new tar sands being used for the purpose, just as they were taken from the ground. A crushed gravel base was laid, and on top of this a mixture of from 80 to 75 per cent crushed gravel, with the heated tar sands rolled on. In a few minutes the pavement was hard enough to walk on, and appeared to make a very satisfactory road.

Another set of experiments is being carried on at the Alberta University. In these experiments the tar is being extracted from the tar sands, and then mixed with different classes of road material. The object of this is to establish the feasibility of successfully extracting the tar from the sands, which would eliminate the necessity of paying freight on the road from McMurray. Both experiments appear to be successful, but some further time will be required to establish their permanent success.

If the experiments prove that the tar sands can be used successfully for road making, the cost of road pavement in Alberta will be greatly reduced. The officials of the provincial government, as well as of the cities of the province, are watching the results with considerable interest, as it concerns the development of one of Alberta's best resources.

Popular Step-Dancer Scores at the Crescent

APPEARS AGAIN IN CHALLENGE DANCE TO-MORROW NIGHT.

As an added attraction at the above theatre this week, Martin Day, the popular local step-dancer appears. At last night's show he was given a hearty reception and his dances were put over in good style. Dan Delmar, the minstrel man, sang several songs, which literally took the house by storm.

Those who love adventure stories, thrilling pursuits on land and sea, fights between strong men, battles between women, sacrifices on the altar of affection, in their secret entertainment, cannot afford to miss the sensational motion picture, "Yellow Men and Gold." Interest never lags in this picture. Events happen too quickly and too vigorously to let the blood cool. Scarcely has the hero or the heroine overcome the obstacle of one melodramatic situation when he or she is confronted with another. It is a conflict of relentless villains and doughty heroes, a heroic struggle that takes many forms and ranges over a quarter of the earth's surface.

As published elsewhere in this issue, Mr. Martin Day, the step-dancer, has accepted the challenge of Mr. Walter Lewis to a championship dance to take place in this theatre at 9 o'clock to-morrow night. This is an attraction of unusual interest.

What Price the Tips?

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—Three stewards accompanied each of the six men and women who comprised the complete passenger list of the National Greek liner Gladstone, formerly the Themistocles, when she docked on her last trip from Patras. The six, all Greek-Americans had each a third class passenger, had the big vessel to themselves, with the service ordinarily accorded a passenger list of 2,000 concentrated upon them. The passenger search was due to the fact that Greece's immigration quota had been exhausted for this fiscal year.

DOCTORS WANTED TO OPERATE

Monkton, Michigan.—"After doctoring for eight or nine years with different medicines, which gave me no relief at all, they said that I should have an operation. I had heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and often saw it advertised in different papers where some women had suffered just as I did and got well and strong again by taking the Vegetable Compound. I decided to see what it would do for me, and before I had finished the fourth bottle I was much better, the weakness stopped and the severe pains in my sides left me. I am now much stronger and do my own work and work in the factory besides. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound and give it all the praise."—Mrs. M. H. QUILLON, 17 Maple St., Monkton, Mich.

Women should heed such warning symptoms as bearing-down pains and weakness, for they indicate some female trouble, and a prompt and faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will seldom fail to help.

"Trifling Women" Scores Great Success
IMMENSE AUDIENCES DELIGHTED WITH MASTERPIECE.
One of the best photoplays of the season yet presented on the screen of the Nickel Theatre is "Trifling Women," the Rex Ingram production for Metro which was seen for the first time yesterday. The remarkable young director, whose recent photoplays have lifted him to the front ranks of picture producers, has in his latest work maintained the high standard of his earlier photoplays. "Trifling Women" should enjoy widespread success wherever it is shown.
The story of "Trifling Women" was written and adapted by Mr. Ingram himself. It concerns a mysteriously fascinating siren, a crystal gazer—Zareba by name—who lures men on by her beauty. Father and son enter competition for her favors, and friends conspire against each other for her love. An illicit affair between the woman and her young suitor is brought to a terrible end when her husband discovers them in the embrace of each other. They are imprisoned in the Herover's Tower, a weird room to which they have been led by a vision which Zareba saw. It is here, too, that the wronged husband meets his end, when the desire for revenge has been satisfied.

Mr. Churchill and the Dardanelles Campaign

Mr. Churchill, quantum mutatus ab illo of the first volume of The World Crisis, in which he was brilliant and generous, is in this second volume querulous and mean. The first volume was the main a triumphant exposition of how and why the Navy was ready and at its stations when war came. This volume is in the main a poor attempt to defend the indefensible. "So through a Churchill's excess of imagination, a layman's ignorance of artillery and the fatal power of a young enthusiasm to convince older and slower brains, the tragedy of Gallipoli was born," writes the Australian official historian, and in the first part of this book Mr. Churchill sets out to prove that this judgment is crude, inaccurate, incomplete and prejudiced. He succeeds in showing us that the judgment of the Australian is not unfair. True, he produces ample evidence to show that he had the support of naval opinion for an attempt by the Fleet alone to force the passage of the Dardanelles. True, he shows that no less an authority than Sir A. Wilson believed that the fifteen-inch guns of Queen Elizabeth would have overwhelming effect upon the forts in the Straits. But he makes it as clear as daylight that the sailors agreed to the attempt as an experiment which might succeed and could be stopped if unexpected obstacles were encountered. Every soldier and sailor worth his keep knows that the unexpected in the rule in war and is prepared for it; none would make a plan on the supposition that it could or should be carried through without modification in agreement with the action of the enemy. Contrary to anticipation the chief obstacles to the progress of the fleet proved to be not the forts, but the mines and the mobile gun craft concealed from the observation of our ships on the broken shores of the Dardanelles. To-day no one would build forts to close that narrow channel. Yet to-day Mr. Churchill writes: "The defences with which our Fleet was confronted after the fall of the outer forts, and on the morning of March 18th consisted of four factories—forts, mobile howitzers, mine-batteries and minefields—all well combined but all mutually dependent." On the ground that on March 18th, when the naval attack failed with heavy loss, the supply of ammunition in the forts had run low, he accuses Admiral de Robeck of moral cowardice in not persevering in the attack. The fact is that Mr. Churchill was blinded by the brilliant prospect which the successful forcing of the Straits opened up. Consciously or unconsciously he stressed every argument in favour of the plan, minimized or concealed every difficulty. "The layman's ignorance of artillery" was fatal because the layman would not prophesy smooth things. In the letter in which he parted company from Mr. Churchill, Lord Fisher wrote: "You are bent on forcing the Dardanelles and nothing will turn you from it—nothing." The old sailor was right. He left the Admiralty, and in so doing was the prime cause of the fall of Mr. Asquith's Government, a fact which Mr. Churchill conceals, one may charitably assume, from ignorance. But it is in his dealing with the soldiers that Mr. Churchill is at his worst. He attacks all the generals, British and Allied, save only Hamilton, with impartiality and with a subtlety of truth, a misstatement of fact which defy complete answer within the limits of a review. "Good, plain, straightforward front attacks by valiant flesh and blood against wire and machine guns killing Germans while Germans killed Allies twice as often, calling out the men of forty, of fifty, and even of fifty-five and the youths of eighteen, sending the wounded soldiers back three or four times over the shambles—such were the sole manifestations now reserved for the military art. And when at the end, three years later, the things of uniformed functionaries, who in the seclusion presided over this awful process, presented victory to their exhausted nations, it proved only less ruinous to the victor than to the vanquished." The beastliness of this attack is nauseating, but Mr. Churchill knows well that the number of mourning, wives and parents, the number of crippled men, is great, the number of the soldiers whom he attacks is few. He has worn the King's uniform, he has been Secretary of State for War, but he has the political sense of the value of an appeal to the many against the few, and so he dips his hands in the dirt to sink this filthy. What were the attacks on the narrow peninsula of Gallipoli but frontal attacks? There, as the published figures show, the wastage of human material was proportionately far greater than in any other theatre of war. This man who accuses the generals of a horrible callousness would, he tells us, after eight years of mature consideration, have flung untrapped troops into the most difficult operation of war which soldiers can be called upon to perform. He sees, as we all see now, that the attack on the Dardanelles, if it were undertaken at all, should have been a combined effort by Army and Navy, while with sublime inconsistency he accuses the admirals for not persevering with the Fleet alone. Kitchener said he had no troops at the beginning of 1915 for a military attack. "All right," answered Churchill, "I will do it with the Navy alone." Now he says that Kitchener had the troops and should have used them. He says that at the end of November, 1914, there were two Australian divisions in Egypt. The first Australian soldier killed in Egypt was on December 3rd and not one had then, or until some time later, ever manoeuvred in a division. He gives a list of troops numbering an army of 150,000 men whom he says were ready in January to be moved to the Dardanelles. Not 10,000 of them were so ready. Mr. Churchill would have us believe that to this day he is unaware of the difference between a number of men brought together to make a division and a division ready for battle. He accuses Sir John Cowans (he has no scruples about attacking the dead) of ruining the plan by sending out the 28th Division in transports not packed in readiness for the landing. He is, then, still ignorant of the rudiments of the methods of making a landing in the presence of an enemy. First the landing place has to be chosen and reconnoitred, then the plan has to be prepared in complete detail, then the ships have to be packed so that each article is in order from top to bottom as required by the plan. The 28th Division began to sail from England on March 16th. Sir Ian Hamilton, who had to make the plan, did not arrive off the Dardanelles until March 17th, and until March 23rd Mr. Churchill still believed that we could force the Dardanelles with the Navy alone.

Old Time Travelers Seemingly Content With Few Comforts

Hamburg, Nov. 24.—Seventy-five years ago the Hamburg-American Line established its first ship, the Deutschland, in the service between Hamburg and New York. This was a sailing vessel of 771 tons, and was regarded as a monster craft in those days. This liner was so successful that two others, the Elbe and the Rhein, soon were put into service. Steamships were operating then, but because of the clumsy and space-consuming nature of the machinery and the heavy costs of fuel, they were not regarded as a good commercial proposition. Adolph Geffroy, director of the German steamship company, at a meeting of the directors in 1918, told with great pride of the high character of the accommodations which its three ships were affording trans-Atlantic travelers who passed 42 days on the trip from Hamburg to New York and 30 days on the eastward trip. On one occasion the return trip was made in 23 days, a monumental achievement. The Deutschland had 20 cabin seats and 200 seats on the lower deck. And what was especially notable, a bed was placed at the disposal of each passenger, with sufficient linen for the trip. "The Deutschland had a 'kiosk book' which was handed to passengers at the end of every voyage so they could register their grievances. In the ladies' compartment there were some engravings, a gold-framed looking-glass, gorgeous pieces of furniture and a substantial carpet which formed a 'fine background for the crinolines of the female passengers,' in the opinion of the well-satisfied director. The men's compartment also was very elaborately furnished and harmonized well with the colored vests and the high collars of the male cabin passengers. It was lighted by a 'smug' petroleum lamp attached to the mast which passed through the room. The ship also had a small library. 'Friendly' officers and seamen with 'attentive and sociable behavior' had been chosen for the service so as to make the trip of the passengers as pleasant as possible.

"Turkey was placed in a position simultaneously to threaten Egypt and to reinforce Mesopotamia. The thirteen evacuated British Divisions, having been rested and refitted, were required to guard against the last two of these new dangers. The whole of the new army sent by France and Britain from the French theatre amounting to seven additional divisions was assigned to the defence of Salonika. Apart from the Anzacs, scarcely any of these twenty divisions even fought against the Germans during the rest of the War."

Literal Translations

OFTEN BRING FORTH RIDICULOUS IDEAS. WASHINGTON, (A. P.)—"Harness full of bugs, for a bachelor horse," was the true literal translation for a single-horse buggy harness which a Spanish translator used in an American exporter's advertisement according to the Department of Commerce. The department used that as an illustration of how faulty and incorrect translations of circulars and advertisements not only fail to convey the meaning intended, but frequently make a company ridiculous in the eyes of prospective purchasers. Other translators, have been as ridiculous, the department says. Vacuum cleaners have been made "cleansers of emptiness"; monkey-wrenches, "wrenches for monkeys," and iron-washers, "machines to clean iron."

PUTTING YOURSELF TO SLEEP.

I have been gradually compiling a little list of things which I have learned to say to myself at night when I have difficulty in sleeping. Doubtless you have the same discoveries in your mind but it strengthens one's own discoveries, and conviction in applying them, to hear other folks have had the same difficulties and have come to the same conclusions as to how to deal with them.

There are my various formulae for getting that recalcitrant self of mine to do what I want it to do when it doesn't behave sensibly.

Give The Bed A Chance. You are acting as if you thought you couldn't hold you up and you had to do it by holding onto yourself. Really you needn't worry, this is a good strong bed and it can hold you up perfectly without the slightest help from you. Give it a chance.

"Don't try so hard to go to sleep. It really doesn't matter half so much as you think whether you go to sleep or not. You are resting and if you stop struggling to go to sleep your rest will do you almost as much good as sleep. (Whereupon if I take my advice and stop trying to go to sleep, I generally float off. Truly that comparison which has been applied to woman, Woman is a shadow, pursue her and she eludes, elude her and she pursues," could well be applied to sleep.)

Nothing is ever half so bad as it seems at night.

The Worst Time To Play. "You really haven't got to plan your whole future right now, and what is more you are in the worst possible shape to do it.

"If it is still raining in the morning you can decide just as well then, as now whether to put off your plans for the day or not. And if you let it alone now and go to sleep you will be in much better shape for deciding it intelligently. (This has to be modified. Isn't it silly of you to take this to suit the occasion of course.)

time when you should be sleeping or at least resting, to construct imaginary scenes with people and decide how you will speak and act in them. In nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand the scenes will never come to pass. In the one thousandth you won't act or speak the way you plan how to speak or act."

Of course I don't often have to say all these things in any one night.

That Heavenly Drowsiness. And of course there are plenty of nights I don't have to say any of them, nights when my dropping off to sleep is the perfect pattern of that which Leigh Hunt has so beautifully described:

"It is a delicious moment, certainly that of being well nestled in bed and feeling that you shall drop gently to sleep. The good is to come, not past; the limbs are tired enough to render the remaining in one posture delightful; the labor of the day is done. A gentle failure of the perceptions creeps over you; the spirit of consciousness begins to disengage itself and with slow and hushing degrees like a mother detaching her hand from that of a sleeping child, the mysterious spirit has gone to take its airy rounds."

Truly it makes me feel sleepy just to read that. Not a bad thing to read just before going to bed whereby to ease yourself into slumber, is it?

THE PROPHET.

WALT MASON.

The prophet is not without honour so long as his guesses come true, but he is a complete goner, as soon as he misses a few. The splendid success of the prophet, who was a wizard so long as his guesses been right; he looked on James Jamm as a wizard so long as his guesses been right; he gave us the date of the blizzard, and told when a rain was in sight. His word was the law of the grangers; they thought him the blue ribbon seer; we showed off our prophet to strangers, and bragged of his rest-dance here. At last he predicted dry weather, this man who predicted the goods, and we went coveting together a picnic to hold in the woods. And while we were sipping our cider, and eating our succulent pies, some clouds with an ebony outline, assembled themselves in the skies. The following rain was a scandal, it gave us a horrible shock; old Pivius twisted the handle, and sent all the water in stock. The wizard left town in the gloaming, he measured five yards at a stride, and somewhere to-day he is roaming and hunting a good place to hide. Oh, somewhere the prophet is seeking, a figure of sorrow and care, a lodge in the wilderness seeking, and combing the bricks from his hair.

Some fruit cakes are really better steamed than baked.

Squad of U.S. Army Aviators

PLANNING TO ENIRCLE THE GLOBE.

DAYTON, O., Nov. 23.—(A. P.)—Some time in the early summer of 1924, four or possibly six airplanes will hop off from Bolling Field, Washington, and turn their noses to the west. Before their pilots will again have glimpsed the nation's capital, they will have travelled 30,000 miles, crossed two oceans and almost a score of countries and encircled the globe in the air for the first time in the world's history.

Such is the picture in the minds of officials at McCook Field here, who, under the direction of Army Air Service headquarters at Washington, are making plans for the first 'round the world aerial cruise.

Tentatively, a route has been laid out and two air officers are going over it with the idea of making recommendations for necessary changes and completing other preparations.

Lieut. C. E. Crumrine, of the local field, now is in Iceland heading eastward, while a member of the Philippine aerial force is working in the opposite direction. They will meet in Europe and after comparing data, return to their home stations.

The flight, designed primarily to demonstrate the ability of planes to operate away from their regular supply stations during war times, will be made in comparatively short jumps. The distance between most of the stations will be 500 miles or less, the longest hop being approximately 800 miles.

As laid out at present, the route to be taken would not necessitate any sustained flight over open water. After crossing the country from the capital to Seattle, Washington, the squadron would head northward through Canada after touching at Wrangell, Alaska, would hop to the Aleutian Islands and then to the Japanese archipelago where several stops would be made. The mainland of Asia would be reached at Shanghai, China.

For the trip across the Atlantic, alternate routes are available. One itinerary calls for hops from Aberdeen, Scotland, to Faroe Island, to Iceland, to Greenland and to the mainland of North America at Frederikdal-Hamilton, Inlet Canada. The other provides for the European take-off at Dunmore Head, Ireland, and the more direct course to Newfoundland, and thence to Quebec.

Through continental Asia and Europe the tentative itinerary would carry the aviators to Shanghai, China; Mandalay and Delhi, India; Chortiban and Bagdad, Persia; Damascus, Syria; Aleppo and Constantinople, Turkey; Angora, Asia Minor; Bucharest, Roumania; Belgrade, Serbia; Budapest, Hungary; Vienna, Austria; Munich and Strassbourg, Germany, and Paris and London.

The cruise must start either late in June or early in July, officials here believe, because of the fact that in crossing the Pacific and Atlantic, the aviators must push far northward where cold weather might otherwise be encountered. No estimate of the time required for the trip has been made.

While most of the stations where stops would be made under present plans, could furnish little other than food and fuel for the aviators, preparations will be made for the overcoming of motor or mechanical troubles. Probably every third station will have a supply of spare parts of various kinds and several spare engines will be sent to points where it is deemed possible they may be needed.
